

Technical and Bibliographic Notes / Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming are checked below.

L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

- Coloured covers /
Couverture de couleur
- Covers damaged /
Couverture endommagée
- Covers restored and/or laminated /
Couverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée
- Cover title missing /
Le titre de couverture manque
- Coloured maps /
Cartes géographiques en couleur
- Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black) / Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)
- Coloured plates and/or illustrations /
Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur
- Bound with other material /
Relié avec d'autres documents
- Only edition available /
Seule édition disponible
- Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin / La reliure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la distorsion le long de la marge intérieure.
- Blank leaves added during restorations may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming / Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.

- Coloured pages / Pages de couleur
- Pages damaged / Pages endommagées
- Pages restored and/or laminated /
Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées
- Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/
Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées
- Pages detached / pages détachées
- Showthrough / Transparence
- Quality of print varies /
Qualité inégale de l'impression
- Includes supplementary materials
Comprend du matériel supplémentaire
- Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata slips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to ensure the best possible image / Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuillet d'errata, une pelure, etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.
- Opposing pages with varying colouration or discolourations are filmed twice to ensure the best possible image / Les pages s'opposant ayant des colorations variables ou des décolorations sont filmées deux fois afin d'obtenir la meilleure image possible.

- Additional comments /
Commentaires supplémentaires:

Various pagings.

Pages 23, 348, 855 & 1185 are incorrectly numbered pages 2, 48, 845 & 722.

DEBATES

OF THE

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OF THE

DOMINION OF CANADA.

REPORTED AND EDITED BY A. M. BURGESS.

THIRD SESSION—THIRD PARLIAMENT,

OTTAWA:

PRINTED BY MACLEAN, ROGER & CO., WELLINGTON STREET.

1876.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

—:0:—

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

—:0:—

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 10TH.

MEETING OF PARLIAMENT.

PAGE.

THE MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS attend at the Bar of the Senate to hear the Speech from the Throne by HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.....	1
CERTIFICATES FROM JUDGES relating to Elections.—Mr. Speaker.....	1
INTRODUCTION OF MEMBERS.—Practice of—Observations by Mr. Speaker	1
SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.—Of which Mr. Speaker reported that he had received a copy.....	1
VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS.— Resolved , That the same shall be printed.....	2
SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES	3
INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT.—Resolution respecting—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	3
DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS PRESENTED.—Respecting Public Works, the Baie Verte Canal, Trade and Navigation, and Militia and Defence.....	3

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 11TH.

INTRODUCTION OF NEW MEMBERS.....	3
DEPARTMENTAL REPORT.—Inland Revenue	3
The Address—Motion—
“That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to the Speech from the Throne.”—(Mr. Casey, seconded by Mr. Taschereau.)....	3
After debate, the resolutions were carried; referred to a Select Committee; Address drafted and reported; ordered that the Address be engrossed and presented to His Excellency	49
Supply—Motion—
“That the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply, on Monday next.”
Also—
“That the House resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means.”— Hon. Mr. Cartwright.	49
NEW BRUNSWICK SCHOOL ACT.—Message from His Excellency the Governor General, transmitting despatches from Lord Carnarvon.....	49

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 14TH.

COUNTY OF TWO MOUNTAINS.—Resignation of Mr. Globensky—Announcement by Mr. Speaker.....	49
STANDING COMMITTEES.—Motion for a Special Committee to draft—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	49
THE RULES OF THE HOUSE.—Motion that a Select Committee be appointed to consider certain amendments to the Rules of the House—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	49
THE LIBRARY.—Appointment of Committee to assist Mr. Speaker in the management of.....	50
FISHING LICENSES IN LAKE SIMCOE DISTRICT.—Motion for an Address to His Excellency—Mr. Dymond.....	50
WHARVES AT MALBAIE.—Motion for an Address to His Excellency—Hon. Mr. Langevin	50
SURVEYS IN CHARLEVOIX.—Motion for Address to His Excellency—Hon. Mr. Langevin	51
VIOLATIONS OF DECK LOAD LAW.—Motion for an Address to His Excellency—Hon. Mr. Mitchell.....	51
INLAND WATERS OF CANADA.—Motion for an Address to His Excellency—Mr. Kirkpatrick.....	52
THE BAIE VERTE CANAL.—The Minority Report—Inquiry by Mr. Burpee (Sunbury); Answer by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	52
DEPARTMENTAL REPORT.—Public Accounts	52

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 15TH.

STANDING COMMITTEES.—Report of Select Committee appointed to draft.....	53
THE DEBATES.—Committee to manage.....	53
VETERANS OF 1812-15.—Motion for an Address to His Excellency—Mr. Delorme	53
DEPUTY COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS AT CHICOUTIMI.—Motion for an Address to His Excellency—Mr. Cimon.....	53
MINISTERIAL CHANGES—Explanations by the Premier	53
MISCELLANEOUS RETURNS.....	64
THE BUDGET—Inquiry by Sir John A. Macdonald; Answer by Hon. Mr. Cartwright.....	64

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 16TH.

Assistant Inspector of Penitentiaries Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	64
-----------------------------------	----

Criminal Statistics Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	64
-----------------------------------	----

THE OTTAWA CANAL—Inquiry—Mr. White (Renfrew); Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	64
---	----

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

v

REGISTERED LETTERS—Inquiry—Mr. Little; Answer—Hon. Mr. Huntington	64
THE CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT—Inquiry—Mr. Irving; Answer—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	65
The Financial Depression—Motion—
“That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the causes of the existing Financial Depression.”— Mr Mills	65
And a debate arising thereon, the discussion was adjourned.....	85

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17TH.

PRIVATE BILLS—To incorporate the National Exchange Company—First Reading	85
Criminal Law Amendment Act Amendment Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	85
Suits against the Crown Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	85
The North-West Territory Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	86
BRITISH COLUMBIA SUBSIDY—Inquiry by Mr. Bunster; Answer by Hon. Mr. Cartwright	87
TELEGRAPHIC EXTENSION—Inquiry by Hon. Mr. Langevin; Answer by Hon. Mr. Smith.....	87
EXEMPTION OF CANADIAN SHIPPING FROM OPERATIONS OF IMPERIAL SHIPPING BILL—Motion for an Address to His Excellency—Hon. Mr. Mitchell... And a debate arising thereon, the motion was carried.....	87 102
IMPORTS FROM THE UNITED STATES—Motion—
“That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before Parliament a statement shewing the total value of all articles imported from the United States into each Province of the Dominion during 1871, '72 and '73 paying 15, 10 and 5 per cent. duty respectively, and also a similar statement for 1874 and '75 of articles paying 17½, 10 and 5 per cent., together with such remarks and further facts as the Commissioner of Customs may be able to add touching the increased importation of American manufactures into Canada.”— Mr. Young	102
Motion in amendment—
“That an Order of the House do issue, requiring the Minister of Customs to cause to be laid before Parliament, &c., with such explanatory remarks and further facts as he may be able to add, touching the increased imports.”— Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	102
Amendment carried.....	102
The Financial Depression—
Resumption of the consideration of the Motion of Mr. Mills for the appointment of a Committee to enquire into the causes of.....	102
The Debate again adjourned.....	118

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 18TH.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—Reference to the Select Standing Committee.....	118
SALARIES OF COUNTY COURT JUDGES—Notice of Motion—Hon. Mr. Blake....	118
ASSISTANT INSPECTORS OF PENITENTIARIES—Notice of Motion—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	118
CRIMINAL STATISTICS—Notice of Motion—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	118
THE ESTIMATES—Message from His Excellency transmitting—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.....	119
THE BUDGET—Question—Hon. Mr. Tupper ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.	119
SUPPLY—House in Committee of.....	119
The Financial Depression—
Resumption of the Debate on the Motion of Mr. Mills for a Committee to enquire into the causes of.....	119
After debate, Moved in amendment that all the words after “ that ” in the original resolution be struck out and the following inserted instead thereof:—
“ That the early revision of the tariff is very desirable, and that a revised tariff discriminating to a greater degree than the existing tariff in favor of home industries and manufactures, but not unduly stimulating one section of the country or one industry against other sections and industries, would be productive of great benefit to the whole Dominion.”— Mr. DeCosmos	125
The amendment of Mr. DeCosmos having been withdrawn, it was moved in amendment—
“ That the word ‘ financial ’ be struck out of the resolution, and the words ‘ manufacturing and commercial ’ be inserted in lieu thereof.”— Mr. Blain	143
After debate this amendment was agreed to.....	148
It was then moved in amendment to the resolution as amended (by Hon. Mr. Tupper) that the word “ Mining ” be inserted, which was also agreed to	149
It was moved in amendment (by Hon. Mr. Mitchell) that the word “ Shipping ” be inserted, which was also agreed to.....	149
The resolution as amended was then agreed to.....	149

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 21st.

Boards of Trade Amendment Bill—

First Reading—Mr. Wood.....	149
-----------------------------	-----

Transportation of Cattle Act Amendment Bill—

First Reading—Mr. Charlton	150
DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS—Marine and Fisheries (Supplementary).....	150
SHIPPING INTERESTS—Question—Hon. Mr. Mitchell ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Smith	150
GUYON ISLAND LIGHTHOUSE—Question—Mr. Mackay (Cape Breton) ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Smith.....	150
PATENT ACT—Question—Mr. Landerkin ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	150
PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY FENCE—Question—Mr. McIntyre ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	150

CONNECTIONS WITH THE PACIFIC RAILWAY—Question—Mr. Masson ; Answer— Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	150
INSPECTORS OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES—Question—Mr. Gordon ; Answer— Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	150
HARBOUR OF REFUGE, LAKE ONTARIO—Question—Mr. Gordon ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	151
PROPERTY AND CIVIL RIGHTS—Question—Mr. Blain ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Blake	151
LIGHTHOUSE ON BALD HEAD ISLAND—Question—Mr. Biggar ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Smith.....	151
HARBOUR OF QUEBEC—Question—Mr. Fréchette ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mac- kenzie	151
QUEBEC GRAVING DOCK—Question—Mr. Fréchette ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mac- kenzie	151
RAILWAY RETURNS—Question—Mr. Irving ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie....	151
BRANCH RAILWAY—Intercolonial Railway—Question—Mr. Blanchet ; Answer —Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	152
MAILS TO OCEAN STEAMERS—Question—Hon Mr. Tupper ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	152
ALASKA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA BOUNDARY LINE—Question—Mr. Roscoe ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	152
TRADE WITH THE WEST INDIES—Question—Hon. Mr. Mitchell ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	152
Fishery Privileges—Motion—
“ That an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General for all Orders in Council, instructions to officers, reports from officers, with all correspondence to or from officials or private individuals or public bodies in connection with the attempt of the Government to compel the occupants of Fisheries in the Maritime Provinces to an enforced attornment to the Government and a depriva- tion of their rights which have for at least a quarter of a century been used and enjoyed by them.”— Hon. Mr. Mitchell.	153
After debate, motion agreed to.....	166
Newspapers and Periodicals—Motion—
“ That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General praying that there be laid before Parliament a statement setting forth the total number of newspapers and other periodicals in each county and city of the Dominion which have paid postage on papers ‘ sent from the office of publication,’ with the total revenue received therefrom during the three months ending the 31st December last.”—(Mr. Young).....	166
Motion carried.....	166
Great Western Railway—Motion—
“ That the copies of correspondence relating to the refund of duties to the Great Western Railway Company laid on the table of this House on the 6th of April last be referred to the Printing Committee.”—(Hon. Mr. Tupper).....	166
After debate, motion carried.....	177
QUEBEC MEDICAL OFFICERS’ BOAT—Motion for an Address to His Excellency —Hon. Mr. Langevin.....	177
Charlevoix Election—Motion—
“ That an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of the instructions issued to Mr. Talbot, one of the employés or Sub-Inspectors of the Post Office Department in relation to his visits to the Electoral District of Charlevoix during the Dominion Election in the month of January last.”— Hon. Mr. Langevin.	177

After debate, motion carried.....	181
Intercolonial Railway—Motion—
"That an Address be presented to His Excellency for correspondence between the Government and the Hon. Ambrose Shea, respecting a claim in connection with a supply of labour for the construction of the Intercolonial Railway."—(Hon. Mr. Tupper).....	181
AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS—Motion for a Select Committee on the Agricultural Interests of the Dominion—Mr. Orton.....	181
After debate, the discussion on the motion was adjourned.....	188

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 22ND.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION—Notice of Motion—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	188
Assistant Inspectors of Penitentiaries Bill—
Second Reading—Mr. Blake.....	188
Criminal Statistics Bill—
Second Reading—Hon Mr. Blake.....	189
North-West Territories Separation Bill—
Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	194
County Court Judges' Salaries (Nova Scotia) Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	200
AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS—Resumption of the Debate on Motion of Mr. Orton for a Committee.....	201
The Debate was again adjourned.....	204

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 23RD.

Criminal Procedure Bill—
First Reading—Hon. J. H. Cameron.....	204
Inspection Law Amendment Bill—
First Reading—Mr. Forbes.....	204
The Crime of Abortion Bill—
First Reading—Hon. J. H. Cameron.....	204
Enquiry into Corrupt Practices at Elections Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	207
Corrupt Practices at Elections (More Effectual Administration) Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	209
THE INSOLVENCY ACT—Question—Mr. Delorme; Answer—Hon. Mr. Blake...	212
THE CULBUTE CANAL—Question—Mr. White (Renfrew); Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	212

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ix

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Question—Mr. Fiset; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	212
POSTAL EXTENSION AT MONTREAL—Question—Mr. Desjardins; Answer—Hon. Mr. Huntington.....	212
CUSTOM HOUSE AT LEVIS - Question—Mr. Fréchette; Answer—Hon. Mr. Burpee	212
COMMERCIAL AGENCIES—Question—Mr. Bernier; Answer—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.....	212
BEACON LIGHTS ON THE SAGUENAY—Observations—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	212
PACIFIC RAILWAY SURVEY—Question—Mr. Dewdney; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	213
PRESQU' ISLE HARBOUR—Question—Mr. Biggar; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	213
COMMISSION OF FINANCIAL AGENTS OF THE DOMINION—Question—Hon. Mr. Tupper; Answer—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.....	213
REFUNDING DUTIES ON STEAM FIRE ENGINES—Question—Mr. Stephenson; Answer—Hon. Mr. Burpee.....	213
TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH THE GULF—Question—Mr. Fiset; Answer—Hon. Mr. Smith.....	213
ST. LAWRENCE RIVER IMPROVEMENTS—Motion for the production of papers—Mr. Blain.....	214
FISH AND FISH OILS—Motion for correspondence relating to admission of Fish and Fish Oils of British Columbia to United States—Mr. DeCosmos...	215
ISLE AUX COUDRES LIGHT HOUSE—Question—Hon. Mr. Langevin; Answer—Hon. Mr. Smith.....	216
OFFICE OF AGENT-GENERAL—Motion for papers respecting the creation and termination of—Sir John A. Macdonald.....	216
PURCHASE OF LANDS OF HUDSON BAY COMPANY—Motion for papers relating to—Sir John A. Macdonald	216
CULLERS' OFFICE—Motion for an Address respecting—Mr. Macdougall (Renfrew).....	217
After debate, motion carried.....	219
BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT—Motion—
" That an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General for all Orders and Minutes of Council, papers and correspondence with the Imperial Government relating to the introduction and passage through the Imperial Parliament of an Act chaptered 38 Vic., 38 and 39, intituled 'An Act to remove certain doubts with respect to the Parliament of Canada under Section 18 of the British North America Act, 1867.'—Mr. Kirkpatrick.....	219
ST. PETER'S CANAL—Motion for Papers and Reports regarding enlargement of—Mr. Flynn.....	220
Debate adjourned	222

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 24TH.

TRANSLATING THE REPORTS—Observations by Mr. Masson.....	222
Banks and Banking Bill—
First Reading—Hon. J. H. Cameron	223

Examination of Engineers Bill—
First Reading—Mr. Cook.....	223
Protection of Life on Wharves and Docks Bill—
First Reading—Mr. Cook.....	223
INSOLVENT LAW—Question—Mr. Béchard ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	223
FOG-WHISTLE ON THE SAGUENAY—Question—Mr. Cimon ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Smith.....	223
BEACON LIGHT ON THE SAGUENAY—Question—Mr. Cimon ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Smith.....	223
RECIPROCAL USE OF CANALS—Question—Mr. Cuthbert ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	224
PENSIONS TO VETERANS—Question—Mr. Thompson (Haldimand) ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Vail.....	224
CERTIFICATES OF MASTERS AND MATES—Question—Mr. Wood ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Smith.....	224
THE LAWS RESPECTING INDIANS—Question—Mr. Cunningham ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Laird.....	224
COAL MINING INTERESTS—Motion—
“ That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General for a Return of the number of tons of coal imported into Canada during the past year from the United States, and for the Correspondence between the Canadian and the United States Governments regarding the removal by the latter of the duty imposed on coal exported from Canada to the United States.”— Mr. MacKay, Cape Breton	224
After debate, motion carried.....	239
THE WELLAND CANAL—Motion for Correspondence—Mr. McCallum.....	239
—
FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 25TH.
DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS—Interior Department Annual Report—Geological Survey Report.....	240
Private Bills—
First Readings—To incorporate the Canada Fire and Marine Insurance Co.—To authorize the Shareholders of the Union and Permanent Building Society to change the Society's name—To enable W. Smith Amies to obtain Letters Patent for a new and useful article of artificial manure—To amend the Act respecting the Citizen Insurance Investment Co.....	240
EXPENSES OF ELECTION TRIALS—Notice of Motion—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	240
Salaries of County Court Judges Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	240
Assistant Inspectors of Penitentiaries Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	241
Criminal Statistics Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	241
The Budget—
Motion that the House go into Committee of Supply—Hon. Mr. Cartwright	241
Debate thereon adjourned.....	288

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xi

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 28TH.

TRANSLATION OF THE DEBATES—Observations by Mr. Masson.....	288
Private Bill—
To incorporate The Mail Printing and Publishing Company—First Reading	291
Supreme Court (Further Provision) Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	291
DEPRESSION COMMITTEE—Motion for leave to engage Shorthand Writers—Mr. Mills.....	292
HARBOUR OF CASCUMPIQUE—Question—Mr. Perry; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	292
QUEBEC RAILWAYS—Question—Mr. Cimon; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie...	292
DUTIES OF POSTMASTERS—Question—Mr. McIsaac; Answer—Hon. Mr. Huntington	293
THE OFFICIAL GAZETTE—Question—Mr. Fréchette; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	293
PAYMENT OF PENSIONS—Question—Mr. Rouleau; Answer—Hon. Mr. Vail...	293
PALMER'S POINT—Question—Mr. Domville; Answer—Hon. Mr. Smith.....	293
MILITIAMEN OF 1812—Question—Mr. Fréchette; Answer—Hon. Mr. Vail...	293
COMPENSATION TO ST. JOHN CITY—Question—Mr. Palmer; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	293
STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH THE WEST INDIES—Motion—
" That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that there may be laid before the House of Commons a statement shewing what steps have been taken by the Government touching the opening up of regular steam communication between Canada and the British, Spanish and French West Indies, with a copy of the tariff of any of these Islands which may be in possession of the Government, with such other information, if any there be, calculated to increase the interest in, and promote our valuable commerce with these prosperous Islands."— Mr. Young	293
After debate, motion carried	299
WINTER COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—Motion for correspondence relating to—Mr. Perry
Debate adjourned	306

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 29TH.

Private Bills—

First Readings—To amend St. Lawrence and Ottawa Railroad Act—Extension of Patent for Welland Vale Manufacturing Company.....	306
--	-----

The Budget—

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion to go into Committee of Supply	306
---	-----

Motion in amendment—

"That all words after "that" be struck out, and that it be Resolved, That this House deeply regrets to learn from the speech of the Hon. Minister of Finance on Friday last, that the Government has not proposed to this House a policy of protection to our various and important manufacturing industries; and that the large amount of capital now invested in these industries, and their present depressed condition, render such a policy necessary to restore them to a condition of prosperity.—Mr. Workman.....

318

After further debate, the House divided, when the amendment was negatived—3 votes to 174.....

341

Debate again adjourned.....

341

THURSDAY, MARCH 2ND.
Private Bills—

First Readings—To incorporate the Scottish Canadian Loan Company—Respecting the Mechanics Bank.....

342

Winding up of Insolvent Banks Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.....

342

The Indian Bill—

First Reading—Hon Mr. Laird.....

342

TRANSLATION OF THE DEBATES—Question of Privilege—Mr. Masson.....

343

Crossing of Navigable Waters (Better Provision) Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....

344

MONEY IN THE HANDS OF FINANCIAL AGENTS—Question—Hon. Mr. Tupper; Answer—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.....

345

SALE OF PUBLIC PROPERTY—Question—Mr. Fréchette; Answer—Hon. Mr.
Mackenzie.....

345

TERMINUS OF THE QUEBEC GOVERNMENT RAILWAY—Question—Mr. Masson; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....

345

BEACH LOTS ON THE ST. LAWRENCE—Question—Mr. Casgrain; Answer—Hon.
Mr. Smith.....

345

EXTRADITION OF CRIMINALS—Question—Mr. Dymond; Answer—Hon. Mr.
Blake.....

346

GRANT TO QUEBEC RAILWAYS—Question—Mr. Cimon; Answer—Hon Mr.
Mackenzie.....

346

BOATS BETWEEN QUEBEC AND LÉVIS—Question—Mr. Rouleau; Answer—Hon.
Mr. Mackenzie.....

346

THE IRON STATION AT HALIFAX—Question—Mr. Domville; Answer—Hon.
Mr. Mackenzie.....

346

SNOW SHEDS ON THE INTERCOLONIAL—Question—Mr. Domville; Answer—
Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....

346

TRANSLATION OF THE DEBATES—Motion—

"That the Report of the Select Committee on reporting the Debates of the House, be now concurred in"—Mr. Masson.....

346

Motion in amendment—

"That the House adhere to the mode of translation proposed by the First Report of the Committee, and that the Committee be instructed to secure such assistance as may be necessary to ensure the prompt execution of the work"—Mr. Delorme....

346

After debate, the amendment was carried—96 votes to 64.....	356
DAMAGE TO LAND BY THE GRAND RIVER —Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. McCallum for correspondence relating to.....	356
Motion agreed to.....	356
WINTER COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND —Resumption of the debate on Mr. Perry's motion respecting.....	357
Public Bills—
Second Readings—Incorporation of Boards of Trade—Conveyance of cattle by railways or otherwise—To amend the Inspection Act.	357
Licensing of Engineers Bill—Motion—
That the Bill be read the second time—Mr. Cook.....	358
Debate adjourned.....	359
Private Bill—
Second Reading—To Incorporate the National Exchange Company.....	359
Assistant Inspectors of Penitentiaries Bill--
Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	360
DUTY ON TEA. —Motion for Correspondence relating to—Hon. Mr. Mitchell...	360
PIER AT BAIIE ST. PAUL. —Motion for an Address to His Excellency for copy of contract, &c.—Hon. Mr. Langevin.....	360
QUEBEC CITADEL. —Motion for an Address to His Excellency for copy of contract, &c.—Mr. Caron.....	360
DISALLOWANCE OF PROVINCIAL STATUTES. —Motion for correspondence with the Colonial Secretary regarding—Mr. Mills.....	360
INSPECTORS OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES FOR CHARLEVOIX. —Motion for copies of the commission of appointment (which motion was finally withdrawn)--Hon. Mr. Langevin	361
MONTREAL CUSTOM HOUSE. —Motion for return of superannuations—Hon. Mr. Tupper.....	361
SIX NATION INDIANS. —Motion for correspondence relating to payment of accrued interest—Mr. Paterson	361
DREDGING THE MIRAMICHI. —Motion for copy of instructions to officer in charge—Hon. Mr. Mitchell.....	361
THE STEEL RAILS PURCHASE. —Motion for all the papers, correspondence, and data regarding--Hon. Mr. Tupper.....	362
PACIFIC RAILWAY AND TELEGRAPH. —Motion for a statement of amounts paid --Hon. Mr. Langevin.....	362
ST. LAWRENCE CANALS. —Motion for return of moneys paid or agreed to be paid in connection with--Hon. Mr. Langevin	362
MAILS AT FATHER POINT. —Motion for return of copies of circulars sent to shipowners, regarding, and tenders for construction of steam tender to transport mails to ocean steamers—Hon. Mr. Tupper	363
MR. SHEA'S CLAIM —Motion for a Select Committee to enquire into—Hon. Mr. Tupper.....	363
DISMISSAL OF MR. COLLET. --Motion for correspondence in reference to dismissal of Postmaster of St. Henry--Mr. Fréchette.....	363
FISHING LICENSES IN ONTARIO. --Motion for return--Mr. Kirkpatrick.....	363

IMPORTS OF GYPSUM—Motion for a return—Mr. Goudge.....	363
MILITIAMEN OF 1812—Motion for correspondence showing names, occupations and places of residence.—Mr. Rouleau.....	364
TORONTO HARBOUR—Motion for Copies of Instructions to Engineer.—Mr. Macdonald (Toronto).....	364
REMISSION OF DUTIES UPON TEA—Motion for a return of—Hon. Mr. Mitchell..	364
FISHERY LICENSES—Motion for correspondence with L. J. Loranger—Mr. Baby..	364
IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF THE NORTH-WEST—Motion for a statement showing amount (which motion was withdrawn)—Mr. Schultz.....	364
INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY WORKS AT RIMOUSKI—Motion for copies of correspondence relating to—Hon. Mr. Langevin.....	365

FRIDAY, MARCH 3RD.

PRIVATE BILLS—

Extension of time for receiving petitions for.....	365
--	-----

Private Bills—

First Readings—To extend the time of the commencement of the Great Western and Lake Ontario Shore Railway.—To incorporate the Mutual Insurance Company of Canada.—To extend the time for the commencement and completion of the Canada and Detroit River Bridge.—To authorize the shareholders of the Permanent Building and Savings Society to change the Society's name.—To amend the Act incorporating the Credit Foncier du Bas Canada.—To amend the Acts incorporating the Canada Shipping Company.—To incorporate the Trust Company of Canada.—To amend the Act incorporating the Clifton Suspension Bridge Company.—To amend the Charter of the Canada Landed Credit Company.—For the Capitalization of certain charges and liabilities of the Great Western Railway Company.—To incorporate the Royal Albert Bridge Company.—To amend the Act incorporating the Canada Gas Lighting Company.....	365
--	-----

CASK MARKS—Notice of motion—Hon. Mr. Laird.....	366
---	-----

DOMINION LANDS ACT—Notice of motion—Hon. Mr. Laird.....	366
---	-----

MANITOBA SUBSIDY—Notice of motion—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	366
---	-----

PRECEDENCE OF GOVERNMENT MEASURES ON THURSDAYS—Motion—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	366
---	-----

Criminal Statistics Bill—

Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	367
-----------------------------------	-----

The Budget—Resumption of the Debate on the Motion to go into Committee of Supply.....	367
---	-----

After debate, motion agreed to.....	429
-------------------------------------	-----

PRIVATE BILLS—Second Readings—To incorporate the Canada Fire and Marine Insurance Company—To authorize the Shareholders of the Union Permanent Building and Savings Society to change the Society's name—To amend the St. Lawrence and Ottawa Railroad Act.....	378
---	-----

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

PRIVY COUNCIL ESTIMATES.....	430
------------------------------	-----

MONDAY, MARCH 6TH.

Private Bills—

First Reading—To incorporate the charter Bank of London and North America	430
Second Readings—To amend the Acts respecting the Citizen's Insurance and Investment Company—To amend the Act incorporating The Mail Printing and Publishing Company—Respecting the Mechanics Bank—Respecting the Capital of the Great Western Railway Company	430

Public Bill—

First Reading—To amend the Weights and Measures Act of 1873—Mr. Oliver	430
HALIFAX STATION—Question—Mr. Domville; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	430
INSTRUCTIONS TO GOVERNOR GENERAL—Question—Mr. Mills; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	430
THE GEORGIAN BAY BRANCH—Question—Mr. White (Renfrew); Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	431
SUPERVISION OF BANKS—Question—Mr. Casgrain; Answer—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.....	431
THE PACIFIC RAILWAY—Question—Mr. Thompson (Cariboo); Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	431
BAIE VERTE CANAL—Question—Mr. Macmillan; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	431
GRAVING DOCK AT QUEBEC—Motion for all reports, correspondence and Orders in Council relating to selection of site—Mr. Blanchet.....	431
After debate, motion carried.....	440
TRURO AND PICTOU RAILWAY—Motion for correspondence relating to—Mr. Mackay (Cape Breton)	440
After debate, motion carried.....	446
OBSTRUCTIONS IN NIAGARA RIVER—Motion for correspondence with the United States Government—Mr. Charlton.....	446
RELIEF OF MANITOBA SETTLERS—Motion for Orders in Council and correspondence respecting—Hon. Mr. Pope.....	447
After debate, motion carried.....	450
AGRICULTURE AND IMMIGRATION REPORT—Question—Mr. Masson; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	450
THE DAWSON ROUTE—Motion for copies of Reports and Communications regarding—Mr. Masson.....	450
After debate, the motion was carried.....	460
PACIFIC RAILWAY—Statement by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	460

TUESDAY, MARCH 7TH.

Private Bills—

First Readings—To incorporate the British Canadian Investment Company—To incorporate the National Loan and Life Insurance Company of Canada—To amend the Act incorporating the Commercial Travellers' Association—To amend the Act relating to the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company.....	461
--	-----

Public Bill—

First Reading—To amend the Bankruptcy Act of 1875—Mr. Bourassa.... 461

North-West Territories Separation Bill—

Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie..... 462

Criminal Law Amendment Act Amendment Bill—

Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake..... 462

Suits against the Crown Bill

Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake..... 463

Third Reading..... 471

The Tariff—

Motion in amendment to the motion of Hon. Mr. Cartwright that the House go into Committee of Supply—

“ That all the words after ‘that’ in the original motion be struck out and the following inserted instead thereof:—‘ This House deeply regrets that the Government has not proposed to Parliament a policy of increased protection to our various and important manufactures, the large amount of capital now invested therein, and the present depressed condition of the country rendering such a policy necessary to restore them to a condition of prosperity.’ ”—Mr. Workman..... 472

After debate, the House divided, when the amendment was negatived—119 nays to 64 yeas..... 504

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE ESTIMATES..... 504

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8TH.

Private Bills—

First Readings—To incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Mutual Fire and Marine Insurance Company—To empower the Canada Southern Railway Company to issue preferential Stock..... 504

Public Bills—

First Readings—To amend the Criminal Law relating to offences against the Person—To amend the Election Act of 1874..... 504

Intercolonial Railway Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie..... 504

TRANSLATION OF THE DEBATES—Question—Mr. Blanchet; Answer—Mr. Bowell. 505

HALIFAX STATION—Question—Mr. Domville; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie... 505

DECK LOADS LAW—Question—Hon. Mr. Mitchell; Answer—Hon. Mr. Smith. 505

PORTAGE ISLAND—Question—Hon. Mr. Mitchell; Answer—Hon. Mr. Smith... 505

JUDGE AT SOREL—Question—Mr. Gill; Answer—Hon. Mr. Blake..... 505

CHEVAL ECARTE—Question—Mr. Stephenson; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie. 505

INLAND REVENUE LAWS—Question—Mr. Béchard; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie..... 506

SUPREME COURT—Motion for a return of suits instituted —Mr. Blanchet..... 506

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xvii

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE —Motion for a statement of loss to Post Office in respect of Local Legislatures (Dropped)—Mr. Oliver.....	506
GLACE BAY HARBOUR MASTER —Motion for return of moneys paid to Mr. Henry Mitchell—Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton).....	506
THE SALT TRADE —Motion for a Select Committee to make enquiry into the condition of—Mr. Farrow.....	507
Motion carried.....	509
TRANSLATION OF THE DEBATES —Question---Mr. Blanchet; Answer---Hon Mr. Cauchon.....	509
THE THOUSAND ISLANDS —Motion for a Return of all the names of holders and occupiers of Land—Mr. Brouse.....	509
BRITISH COLUMBIA MAIL SERVICE ---Motion for copies of Tenders received in 1875---Mr. DeCosmos.....	511
LOSS OF THE PACIFIC ---Motion for all papers and correspondence respecting---Mr. DeCosmos.....	513
PACIFIC RAILWAY SURVEY ---Motion for Return of cost of transporting freight and passengers---Mr. DeCosmos.....	513
DUTIES ON LOCOMOTIVES ---Motion for a Statement of---Mr. Thompson (Weland).....	514
THE PATENT LAW ---Motion for the Second Reading of the Bill to enable William Smith Amies to obtain a Patent for a new and useful Artificial Manure---Mr. Irving.....	515
Private Bills--
Second Readings---To grant certain powers to the Canada Landed Credit Company---To amend the Act incorporating the Canadian Gas Lighting Company---To amend the Act incorporating the Canada Shipping Company---To amend the Act incorporating the Clifton Suspension Bridge Company.....	516
THE AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS—
Resumption of the Debate on the Motion of Mr. Orton for a Committee to enquire into.....	516
Motion adopted.....	524
Examination of Engineers Bill —Motion for the Second Reading (afterwards withdrawn)—Mr. Cook.....	524
Criminal Procedure Amendment Bill—
Motion for Second Reading—Hon. J. H. Cameron.....	524
Motion carried.....	532

THURSDAY, MARCH 9TH.

Private Bill—

First Reading—To enable Ozro Morrill to obtain a Patent for certain inventions and improvements in Sewing Machine Shuttles.....	532
---	-----

Felonies and Misdemeanours (Speedy Trials) Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	532
-----------------------------------	-----

POSTAL IRREGULARITIES—Observations—Mr. Ross (Middlesex).....	532
---	-----

CRANBOURNE POST OFFICE—Question—Mr. Rouleau; Answer—Hon. Mr. Huntington.....	533
LAND PURCHASE ACT OF 1875—Question—Mr. Perry; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	533
ESQUIMALT AND NANAIMO RAILWAY—Question—Mr. Dewdney; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	533
NAVIGATION OF THE SAGUENAY—Question—Mr. Cimon; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	533
CARRYING THE MAILS IN DORCHESTER—Question—Mr. Rouleau; Answer—Hon. Mr. Huntington.....	533
DISTRICT MAGISTRATES IN QUEBEC—Question—Mr. Taschereau; Answer—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	533
GOVERNMENT DREDGES—Question—Mr. Flynn; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	534
VOLUNTEER DRILL—Question—Mr. Pelletier; Answer—Hon. Mr. Vail.....	534
COUNTY COURT JUDGE FOR NEW WESTMINSTER—Question—Mr. Cunningham; Answer—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	534
FRAMES FOR THE CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION—Question—Hon. Mr. Tupper; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	534
CIVIL SERVICE EXPENDITURE—Motion for a Statement of—Mr. Rouleau.....	534
GROSSE ISLE BUILDINGS—Motion for Documents relating to the construction of—Mr. Cimon.....	534
SUBMARINE TELEGRAPHY—Motion—
“ For a Select Committee to enquire into the possibility of establishing a Submarine Telegraphic System, and into the advantages and necessity of such a system of telegraphy in the waters of the Gulf and River St. Lawrence, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time; also, to enquire into the best mode of improving the present lighting of the said River and Gulf.”
—Hon. Mr. Robitaille.....	535
After discussion—Motion carried.....	540
WINTER NAVIGATION OF THE ST. LAWRENCE—Motion for Committee to consider—Mr. Fréchette.....	540
THE POSTMASTER OF CHRISTMAS ISLAND—Resumption of the consideration of motion of Mr. McDonald (Cape Breton), for copies of papers regarding dismissal of Mr. Macdougall.....	545
Motion agreed to.....	554
THE ST. PETER'S CANAL—Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Flynn, respecting.....	555
The debate again adjourned.....	557
Private Bills—
Second Readings—To incorporate the Trust Company of Canada.—To incorporate the Royal Albert Bridge Company.—To incorporate the National Loan and Life Insurance Company.....	557
Dominion Notes (Extension) Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.....	558
County Court Judges (Nova Scotia) Bill—
Second and Third Readings—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	559
Supreme Court (Further Provision) Bill—
Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	559

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xix

THE SUPERANNUATION ACT—Resolution to extend the provisions of the same to the officers and servants of the Supreme Court—Hon. Mr. Blake.... 560

Extension of Acts to Prince Edward Island Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Laird..... 560

Grant to Manitoba Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie..... 560

FRIDAY, MARCH 10TH.

Private Bills—

First Readings—To incorporate the London and Canadian Loan and Agency Company—Respecting the Canada Southern Bridge Company. —To incorporate the National Trust and Investment Company of Canada.—To incorporate the Chartered Bank of London and North America 561

Corrupt Practices at Elections (More Effectual Inquiry) Bill

--Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake..... 561

Bill, having been referred to Committee of the Whole, is reported..... 566

Insolvent Banks Bill—

Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright..... 566

The Indian Bill—

House in Committee of the Whole to consider—Hon. Mr. Laird..... 566

Private Bill—

Second Reading—To incorporate the Crédit Foncier du Bas-Canada 567

The Tariff—Motion—

“That the House go into Committee of Supply.”—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie..... 568

Motion in amendment—

“That the Speaker do not now leave the chair, but that it be resolved that this House regrets His Excellency the Governor General has not been advised to recommend to Parliament a measure for the readjustment of the tariff, which would not only aid in alleviating the stagnation of business deplored in the gracious speech from the throne, but would also afford fitting encouragement and protection to the struggling manufactures and industries, as well as to the agricultural products of the country.”—Sir John A. Macdonald..... 573

After discussion, the debate on the motion and amendment was adjourned 601

MONDAY, MARCH 13TH.

Private Bill—

First Reading—To amend the Charter of the St. Lawrence Bank, &c..... 601

WANT OF CONFIDENCE MOTIONS—Decision of Mr. Speaker in regard to their precedence of other business 601

Private Bills—

Second and Third Reading—St. Lawrence and Ottawa Railway Bill—Respecting the Commercial Travellers Association of Canada—Respecting the Canada Southern Railway Preference Stock..... 603

MAIN-A-DIEU BREAKWATER—Question—Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton); Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	603
DELIVERY OF LETTERS—Question—Mr. Pelletier; Answer—Hon. Mr. Hun- tington.....	603
INDIANS OF NEW BRUNSWICK—Question—Mr. Costigan; Answer—Hon. Mr. Laird.....	608
MAIL FACILITIES—Question—Mr. Blanchet; Answer—Hon. Mr. Huntington.	603
SUPPLY OF RAILS—Question—Hon. Mr. Mitchell; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	604
GRAND NARROWS, N.S.—Question—Mr. Tremaine; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	604
BRAS D'OR LAKE—Question—Mr. Tremaine; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie..	604
SHIPPING CERTIFICATES—Motion for correspondence between Imperial and Dominion Governments—Mr. Forbes.....	604
GATINEAU BOOM CONTRACT—Motion for copy of the Senate Report respect- ing—Hon. Mr. Tupper... ..	607
WHARFAGE CHARGES—Motion that House go into Committee of the Whole to consider a resolution respecting—Mr. Robillard.....	608
FISHING LICENSES IN NEW BRUNSWICK AND NOVA SCOTIA—Motion for returns— Mr. Gillmor.....	609
GUYON ISLAND LIGHT-HOUSE—Motion for copies of tenders, correspondence, &c.—Mr. McDonald (Cape Breton).....	610
SHIPPING INTERESTS—Motion—
“ That an Address be presented to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen praying that any legislation affecting British merchant shipping which may be adopted by the Imperial Parliament should not include in its operation Canadian tonnage, or if such legislation should be applied to Canadian tonnage, it should also include foreign tonnage, in order that no advantage should be had by the latter over the former by the effect of such proposed Imperial legislation.”— Hon. Mr. Mitchell...	611
Motion in amendment—
“ That all words after ‘ that ’ be struck out and the following substituted :—‘ The despatch forwarded by the Government of the Dominion to Lord Carnarvon, dated the 8th February, 1876, is approved, and that the House express a hope that the views therein contained will be adopted by the Imperial Parliament in any legislation affecting the British Merchant Shipping.’ ”— Mr. MacLeod.....	619
Debate adjourned.....	624
—
TUESDAY, MARCH 14TH.
BRITISH CANADIAN LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY—Reference back to Committee on Standing Orders.....	625
Private Bills—
First Readings—To incorporate the British Canadian Loan and Investment Company—To amend the Act incorporating the Ottawa Gas Company— To incorporate the Maritime Savings and Loan Company—To change the name of the Security Permanent Building and Savings Society of St. Catherines, &c.—To incorporate the Synod of the Church of Eng- land in the Diocese of Rupert's Land.....	625
Militia and Defence—
To amend certain acts respecting—First Reading—Hon. Mr. Vail	525

Railway Act Amendment Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie..... 625

Criminal Law Amendment Act Amendment Bill—

Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake..... 625

Crossing Navigable Rivers (Further Provision) Bill—

Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake..... 625

Intercolonial Railway Bill—

Second and Third Readings—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie..... 626

Summary Trials (Other Provisions) Bill—

Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake..... 626

Corrupt Practices at Elections (More Effectual Enquiry) Bill—

Discussion in Committee of the Whole..... 626

The Tariff—

Resumption of the debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, that the House go into Committee of Supply, and the motion of Sir John A. Macdonald in amendment thereto .. 626

The debate again adjourned..... 651

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15TH.

Extension of Criminal Law Act Amendment Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake..... 652

Witness at Criminal Trials Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake..... 652

THE MEMBER FOR TWO MOUNTAINS—Question of Privilege—Motion—

“ That the entry in the Journals of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Canada for the Session of the year 1866, relating to production of certain papers in the case of the Queen vs. Daoust be now read.” — (Mr. Taschereau)..... 652

Motion withdrawn..... 654

The Tariff—

Resumption of the debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, that the House go into Committee of Supply, and the motion of Sir John A. Macdonald in amendment thereto..... 654

After long debate, the House divided, and the amendment was negatived —116 nays to 70 yeas..... 684

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

MILITIA ESTIMATES..... 685

THURSDAY, MARCH 16TH.

Private Bill—

First Reading—To incorporate the England and Canada Mortgage Security Company..... 685

JOURNALS OF THE HOUSE—Motion to adopt Fourth Report of the Committee on Printing—Mr. Ross (Middlesex)..... 685

THE MEMBER FOR TWO MOUNTAINS—Motion of Mr. Taschereau renewed..... 686
Motion carried..... 695

Corrupt Practices at Elections (More Effectual Inquiry) Bill—

Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake..... 695

Corrupt Practices at Elections (Other Provisions) Bill—

Consideration in Committee of the Whole 695

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE..... 696

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR..... 696

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE..... 696

DEPARTMENT OF CUSTOMS..... 697

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS..... 697

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT..... 698

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE..... 698

DEPARTMENTAL CONTINGENCIES 698

STATIONERY OFFICE..... 699

READJUSTMENT OF SALARIES..... 699

CHARGES OF MANAGEMENT..... 699

MISCELLANEOUS (JUSTICE)..... 699

MISCELLANEOUS (NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES)..... 699

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE..... 699

POLICE..... 699

PENITENTIARIES..... 699

MANITOBA PENITENTIARY..... 702

PUBLIC SERVICE—SALARIES AND CONTINGENCIES..... 702

PARLIAMENTARY LIBRARY..... 702

PRINTING PAPER AND BINDING..... 703

LEGISLATION 704

FRIDAY, MARCH 17TH.

Insolvency Law Amendment Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake..... 704

Distressed Settlers in Manitoba—Message from His Excellency—Motion to refer to Committee of Supply—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 705

Corrupt Practices at Elections (More Effectual Provisions) Bill—
Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.	706
Grant to Manitoba Bill—Motion for Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	707
Motion carried.....	712
Private Bills—
Third Readings—Respecting the Capital of the Great Western Railway Company—Respecting the Permanent Building and Savings Society—Respecting the Canada Shipping Company	712
Second Readings—To incorporate the British Canadian Investment Company—To amend and extend the Act relating to the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company — To incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Mutual Fire and Marine Insurance Company—To enable Ozro Morrill to obtain a patent for certain inventions and improvements in Sewing Machine Shuttles—To amend the Act Incorporating the London Loan and Agency Company—Respecting the Canada Southern Bridge Company—To incorporate the National Trust and Investment Company of Canada—To incorporate the Chartered Bank of London and North America—To amend the Act Incorporating the Ottawa Gas Company—Respecting the Security Permanent Building and Savings Society of St. Catharines—To amend the Charter of the St. Lawrence Bank.....	712
W. B. O'DONOGHUE—Notice of Motion—Mr. Costigan.....	712
COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—
RELIEF OF DISTRESSED SETTLERS IN MANITOBA	712
THE ARCHIVES.....	716
THE PATENT RECORD AND COMMERCIAL STATISTICS.....	718
PHILADELPHIA EXHIBITION	718
MILITIA PENSIONS.....	719
GENERAL MILITIA ESTIMATES	722

MONDAY, MARCH 20TH.

Private Bills—
First Readings—To incorporate the British Canadian Loan and Investment Company—To amend the Act Incorporating the London and Canada Bank—Respecting Loans by British American Land Company.	724
THE LIBRARY—Motion for adoption of Report of Committee—Hon. J. H. Cameron.....	724
Insurance Bill—
First and Second Readings—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.....	726
THE PACIFIC RAILWAY—Question—Hon. Mr. Tupper; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	727
Private Bills—
Third Reading—The Canadian Fire and Marine Insurance Company.....	728
Second Reading—Respecting the City and Royal Canadian Banks.....	728

ELLICE VS. NOEL, DUGUAY ET AL—Question—Mr. Robillard; Answer—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	728
SEIGNIORIAL CLAIMS—Question—Mr. Caron; Answer—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	728
COUNTRY POSTMASTERS SALARIES—Question—Mr. Horton; Answer—Hon. Mr. Huntington.....	728
BANK STATEMENTS—Question—Mr. Young; Answer—Hon. Mr. Cartwright...	728
VETERANS OF 1812-15—Question—Mr. Brouse; Answer—Hon. Mr. Vail.....	728
THE RULES OF THE HOUSE—Notice of Motion—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	729
THE NORTH-WEST COUNCIL—Motion for copies of Acts passed by, &c., Mr. Schultz	729
SANITARY STATISTICS—Motion for a Select Committee to consider—Mr. Brouse	731
After debate; Motion carried.....	737
STEAM FIRE ENGINES IMPORTED—Motion for returns—Mr. Stephenson	737
THE CHARLEVOIX ELECTION—Motion—

“ That the Honourable Hector Louis Langevin, the Member representing the electoral district of Charlevoix in this House, having stated from his place in this House that he is credibly informed and believes that he can establish by satisfactory evidence that the Honorable Joseph Edouard Cauchon, the Member representing in this House the electoral district of Quebec Centre, and the President of the Privy Council of Canada, was instrumental in hiring, or causing to be hired, a number of men who are employed in summer as members of the River Police at Quebec, and in sending them or causing them to be sent to the electoral district of Charlevoix during the recent election of a Member to represent that district in the House of Commons; and that the said men were headed or accompanied by one Edmond Trudelle, an officer or employé of the Customs Department at Quebec, and that the whole or a large portion of said body of men were conveyed to said district in vehicles, the cost of such hire being charged to the said Honourable Joseph Edouard Cauchon, who has promised to pay, or directed or caused the same to be paid, the said men so headed or accompanied being sent to said electoral district to interfere illegally in said election, to disturb said election, and thus to deprive the electors or a portion of the electors of said district of their freedom as such electors; and the said Honourable Joseph Edouard Cauchon having denied these charges; it is ordered that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections do enquire into all the circumstances connected with the above charges, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and with instructions to report in full the evidence taken before them, and the proceedings of said Committee on the subject.”—Hon. Mr. Langevin.....

737

Motion in amendment—

“That all the words between ‘charge and enquired’ be struck out, and that the following words be substituted:—‘A select Committee be appointed to.’” (Mr. Fréchette.)

738

Amendment adopted, and Committee struck.....

747

TUESDAY, MARCH 21st.

Insolvent Banks Bill--

Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright..... 748

Grant to the Province of Manitoba Bill—

Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie..... 748

Dominion Lands Act Amendment Bill--

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Laird..... 748

Weights and Measures Act Extension Bill--

Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie..... 748

Militia and Defence Bill—
Second and Third Readings—Hon. Mr. Vail.....	748
Railway Act Amendment Bill—
Second and Third Readings—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	748
Criminal Laws Extension Act Amendment Bill—
Second and Third Readings—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	749
The Indian Bill—
Motion for Second Reading	749
Motion carried.....	754
Manitoba Road Bill—
Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Laird.....	754
COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—
NAVIGABLE RIVERS.....	754
DAWSON ROUTE.....	755
PUBLIC BUILDINGS THROUGHOUT DOMINION.....	755
HARBOURS AND BREAKWATERS IN ONTARIO.....	761
HARBOURS AND BREAKWATERS IN QUEBEC.....	763
HARBOURS AND BREAKWATERS IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.....	766
SLIDES AND BOOMS.....	766
DREDGES.....	767
SURVEYS AND INSPECTIONS.....	768

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 22ND.

BEACON LIGHT ON RED RIVER—Question—Mr. Schultz; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	768
PENSIONERS OF 1812-15—Question—Mr. Blain; Answer—Hon. Mr. Vail.....	768
VICTORIA POST OFFICE—Question—Mr. DeCosmos; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	768
PUBLIC RESERVES AND BUILDINGS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—Question—Mr. DeCosmos; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	768
LAND RESERVES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—Question—Mr. DeCosmos; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	768
LINGAN HARBOUR—Question—Mr. McDonald (Cape Breton); Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	769
NAVIGATION OF AMERICAN CANALS—Motion for correspondence—Mr. Jones (Leeds).....	769
DEEP WATER RAILWAY TERMINUS AT ST. JOHN—Motion for Return of expenditure—Mr. Palmer.....	770
HUDSON AND JAMES BAY IMPORTS AND EXPORTS—Motion for Returns respecting—Mr. Schultz.....	772
CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—Motion for Reports of 1874—Mr. Bunster.....	773

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITS IN BANKS—Motion for a Statement of—Mr. Bowell.....	774
Debate adjourned.....	781
Private Bills—
Third Readings—Respecting the Canada Fire and Marine Insurance Company—Respecting the Citizens' Insurance and Investment Company—Respecting the Great Western and Lake Ontario Shore Junction Railway—Respecting the incorporation of the Clifton Suspension Bridge Company—Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada.....	782
Second Readings—To incorporate the British Canadian Loan and Investment Company—To incorporate the Maritime Savings and Loan Society—To incorporate the Synod of the Church of England, Diocese of Rupert's Land—To incorporate the England and Canada Mortgage Security Company	782
Transportation of Cattle Bill—
Third Reading—Mr. Charlton.....	782
Boards of Trade Bill—
Third Reading—Mr. Oliver.....	782
Inspection Act Amendment Bill—
Third Reading—Mr. Forbes.....	782
ST. PETER'S CANAL—Resumption of the Debate on the Motion of Mr. Flynn for Papers and reports, &c.....	782
Motion agreed to.....	788
Insolvency Law Amendment Bill (No. 2)—
Motion for Second Reading—Mr. Bourassa.....	788
The House divided, when the Motion was negatived—69 votes to 55.....	789
Criminal Law Amendment Bill—
Second Reading—Mr. Baby.....	789
Dominion Election Law Amendment Bill—
Second Reading—Mr. Taschereau.....	789
COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—
OCEAN AND RIVER SERVICE.....	790
—
THURSDAY, MARCH 23RD.
THE MEMBER FOR BAGOT—Question of Privilege—Mr. Desjardins.....	791
THE MEMBER FOR SOUTH HURON AND THE PRESS—Question of Privilege—Mr. Greenway.....	791
Crossing of Navigable Waters (Further Provision) Bill—
Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	792
Supreme Court (Further Provision) Bill—
Consideration in Committee—Hon. Mr. Blake	793

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xxvii

Roads and Road Allowances in Manitoba Bill—
 Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Laird..... 794

Dominion Notes Bill—
 Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright..... 796

Attendance of Witnesses at Criminal Trials Bill—
 Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake 796

Insurance Bill—
 Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright..... 796

W. D. O'DONOGHUE—Motion—
 “That the House go in Committee of Supply.”—Hon. Mr. Cartwright..... 796

Motion in amendment—
 “That the Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved that whereas this House did on the 13th day of February, 1875, vote an Address to Her Majesty praying that a full amnesty should be granted to all persons connected with the North-West trouble, for all acts committed by them during the said troubles, saving only Louis Riel, A. D. Lepine and W. D. O'Donoghue, and that a like amnesty should be granted to L. Riel and A. D. Lepine, conditional on five years' banishment from Her Majesty's Dominion, thereby excluding W. D. O'Donoghue from the benefits of such amnesty—and whereas the said W. D. O'Donoghue has since written the following letter, &c. In the opinion of this House the Government should at one institute a thorough enquiry into the statements contained in said letter, in order that justice may be done in the premises.”—Mr. Costigan..... 797

After Debate, the House divided, and the amendment was negatived—136 votes to 30..... 816

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

FISHERY ESTIMATES 816

FRIDAY, MARCH 24TH.

Retiring Allowances to Judges, (Court of Error and Appeal) Bill—
 First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake..... 819

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

INDIANS..... 819

COLLECTION OF CUSTOMS 823

INLAND REVENUE 829

CULLING OF TIMBER..... 831

POST OFFICE ESTIMATES..... 832

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES 839

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES..... 839

Private Bills—

Third Reading—Respecting the Canada Landed Credit Company..... 827

Second Reading—Respecting Loans by the British American Land Company 827

SATURDAY SITTINGS—Observations—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie..... 840

PACIFIC RAILWAY ENGINEER'S REPORT—Question—Mr. Kirkpatrick; Answer— Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	846
ESQUIMALT BRANCH RAILWAY—Question—Hon. Mr. Tupper; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	840
GEORGIAN BAY BRANCH SURVEYS—Question—Mr. Wright (Pontiac); Answer— Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	840

MONDAY, MARCH 27TH.

Convict Labour Bill—

First Reading—Mr. Robinson.....	841
---------------------------------	-----

Private Bills—

Third Readings—To incorporate the Scottish Canadian Loan Company— To incorporate the Trust Company of Canada—To amend the Act incorporating The Mail Printing and Publishing Company—Respecting the Canadian Gas Lighting Company—Respecting a Patent for the Welland Vale Manufacturing Company—Respecting the London and Canada Bank	841
--	-----

DORCHESTER ELECTION—Question—Mr. Rouleau; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mac- kenzie	841
--	-----

HARBOUR IMPROVEMENTS IN NOVA SCOTIA—Questions—Mr. Church; Answers by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	841
---	-----

STEAM TUGS—Question—Mr. Domville; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	842
--	-----

SABBATH OBSERVANCE—Motion—

- "1. That the interest of public morality and the physical well-being of all classes of the community alike render it desirable and necessary that there should be a strict and uniform observance of the Lord's Day on all public works which are under the control of the Dominion Government.
- "2. That in the conduct of the Government surveys and explorations, Government employes should be enjoined to abstain from the prosecution of labour on the Lord's Day.
- "3. That in the opinion of this House there should be an entire closing and cessation of labour on all canals, railways and other public works which are under the control of the Dominion Government, during the twenty-four hours comprehended in the Lord's Day—save and except only such services as may be of absolute and unavoidable necessity."—Mr. Gordon.....

Motion withdrawn	857
------------------------	-----

ST. CHARLES AND ST. JOSEPH DE LEVIS RAILWAY—Motion for copies of Corres- pondence, Reports of Engineers, &c—Mr. Blanchet.....	857
--	-----

THE SLATE INDUSTRY—Motion for a Return of Importations from the United States—Mr. Aylmer.....	858
--	-----

THE JESUIT BARRACKS—Motion for copies of Correspondence, Orders in Council, &c—Mr. Masson.....	860
---	-----

After debate, Motion agreed to.....	864
-------------------------------------	-----

THE PLIMSOLL MOVEMENT—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution :—
---	--

- "That in the opinion of this House the right of Legislation to affect Canadian ships and the rights and liabilities of the owners thereof belong exclusively to the Parliament of Canada, and that any Legislation on those subjects by the Imperial Parliament (except so far as may equally affect Canadian ships with the ships of all other countries in ports of Great Britain, and such as may affect Imperial interests) would be inconsistent with such exclusive right of the Canadian Parliament, and a violation of responsible Government as conceded to Canada"—Mr. Palmer.....

After debate, Motion withdrawn.....	867
-------------------------------------	-----

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xxix

THE CASE OF JUDGE LORANGER—Motion for reception of the Petition respecting	867
PICTOU AND TRURO EXTENSION RAILWAY—Question of Privilege—Mr. McDonald (Cape Breton).....	868
Supreme Court (Further Provision) Bill—
Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake	869
Inland Revenue Bill—(From the Senate)—
Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.....	869
The Indian Bill—
Consideration in Committee—Hon. Mr. Laird.....	869
The Pacific Railway—Motion—
“ That the House go into Committee of Supply ”—Hon. Mr. Cartwright	872
Motion in amendment—That the Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be
“ Resolved , That in 1871 the public faith and honor of Canada were pledged in the most solemn manner to British Columbia, to secure the commencement, simultaneously, within two years from the date of Union, of the construction of a railway from the Pacific towards the Rocky Mountains, and from such point as might be selected east of the Rocky Mountains towards the Pacific, to connect the seaboard of British Columbia with the railway system of Canada; and further, to secure the completion of such railway within ten years from the date of Union.
“ That owing to divers causes the construction of the said railway was not commenced in British Columbia or elsewhere at the time agreed upon.
“ That in 1874 the Government of Canada applied to British Columbia for and afterward secured and accepted, through the intervention and upon the recommendation of Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, an agreement for the relaxation of the railway clauses of the terms of Union; and the public faith and honour of Canada now stand pledged to carry the said agreement respecting the said relaxation of the railway clause of the terms of Union, forthwith into operation.
“ That notwithstanding the public faith and honour of Canada stand twice solemnly pledged to construct the said railway and commence the actual construction thereof in British Columbia and elsewhere, and notwithstanding nearly five years have passed since the date of Union, and nearly three years have elapsed from the date at which Canada agreed first that the actual construction should be commenced, and nearly eighteen months since she agreed the second time to commence the construction, yet the Government have not, up to the present moment, commenced the actual construction of the said railway in the said Province.
“ That, therefore, this House is of the opinion that the Government should forthwith promptly commence and vigorously and continuously prosecute the work of the actual construction of the said railway within British Columbia in accordance with its solemn pledges to that Province.”—(Mr. DeCosmos).....	873
After debate, the House divided, when the amendment was negatived 154 votes to 7.....	904
COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY.—INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.....	904

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29TH.

Public Accounts Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright	904
Indemnity Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	904
Québec Ice Bridge Bill—
First Reading—Mr. Langlois	904

ANTIGONISH HARBOUR—Question—Mr. McIsaac; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	905
DORCHESTER ELECTION—Question—Mr. Rouleau; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	905
RULES OF THE HOUSE—Committee of the Whole to consider.....	905
Resolutions read the third time and passed.....	910
TRUST AND LOAN COMPANIES—Motion to refer several bills for the incorporation of, back to Committee	910
Private Bills—
Third Readings—To incorporate the National Exchange Company—To incorporate the Scottish Canadian Loan Company—To incorporate the Investment Company of Canada—Respecting the Ottawa Gas Company—Respecting the Mechanics Bank—Respecting the Consolidated Bank of Canada—To incorporate the London and Ontario Investment Company—Respecting the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company—To incorporate the National Trust and Investment Company—Respecting the Canada and Detroit River Bridge Company—Respecting the Canada Shipping Company—Second Readings—To incorporate the British Canadian Loan and Trust Company—To incorporate the Banque St. Jean Baptiste	912
FISHING LICENSES—Motion for returns—Hon. Mr. Langevin	912
RAILWAY FREIGHTS IN NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW BRUNSWICK—Motion for a return of special rates granted—Hon. Mr. Tupper.....	912
TRANSFER OF PORTAGE ISLAND—Motion for Correspondence — Hon. Mr. Mitchell.....	913
INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY CONTRACTORS' CLAIMS—Motion for returns—Hon. Mr. Robitaille	913
WALLACE MAIL CONTRACT—Motion for returns—Hon. Mr. Tupper.....	913
MALAGASH MAIL CONTRACT—Motion for returns—Hon. Mr. Tupper.....	913
COMPLAINTS IN REGARD TO POSTAL SERVICE—Motion for correspondence—Mr. Desjardins	913
VACCINATION OF INDIANS — Motion for returns and correspondence — Mr. Cimon	914
EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY IN QUEBEC—Motion for correspondence—Mr. Masson	914
DAMAGES FROM INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Motion for returns—Mr. Domville	914
HALIFAX PASSENGER STATION—Motion for copies of tenders—Mr. McKay (Colchester).....	914
PACIFIC RAILWAY TELEGRAPH—Motion for copy of contract—Hon. Mr. Langevin.....	914
MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY—Motion for correspondence—Hon. Mr. Mitchell	914
VALUATORS ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Motion for return of names—Mr. Fiset.....	915
THE BARQUE "N. CHURCHILL"—Motion for copies of correspondence, &c.—Hon. Mr. Mitchell.....	915
THE DEBT OF CANADA—Motion for copies of the statement issued in London —Mr. Bowell.....	915
NATIVE WINES—Motion for correspondence between the Government and the Vine Growers Association—Mr. Smith (Peel).....	915

THE " SIR JAMES DOUGLAS " —Motion for correspondence—Mr. Dewdney.....	915
COUNTY COURT JUDGE, NEW WESTMINSTER —Motion for correspondence— Mr. Cunningham.....	915
OLD RAILS IN NEW BRUNSWICK —Motion for a return of quantity on hand— Hon. Mr. Mitchell.....	916
AID TO PRIVATE RAILWAYS —Motion for correspondence—Hon. Mr. Mitchell	916
SEIGNIORY NICHOLAS RIOUX —Motion for correspondence—Mr. Fiset.....	916
LAACHINE CANAL CONTRACT —Motion for copies of tenders for section 3—Hon. Mr. Tupper.....	916
CUSTOMS AT MONTREAL —Motion for return of expenses of collecting—Hon. Mr. Tupper.....	916
BEAUCE MAIL CONTRACT —Motion for correspondence—Mr. Rouleau.....	916
RAILWAY TRAFFIC RETURNS —Motion for reports, &c.—Mr. Irving.....	916
GEORGE ROCHESTER'S CLAIM —Motion for production of the evidence—Mr. McDougall (Renfrew).....	916
FISHING RIGHTS IN L'ISLET —Motion for correspondence, &c.—Mr. Rouleau...	916
BURLINGTON BAY FISHERIES —Motion for return of licenses issued—Mr. Bain	916
Boards of Trade Bill—
Consideration in Committee	917
GOVERNMENT DEPOSITS IN BANKS —Resumption of the debate on the motion of Mr. Bowell for a Statement of.....	917
Motion carried.....	925
Weights and Measures Law Amendment Bill—
Second Reading—Mr. Oliver.....	925
BRITISH MERCHANT SHIPPING —Withdrawal of the Motion of Hon. Mr. Mitchell and the Motion of Mr. McLeod in amendment thereto.....	925
CONCURRENCE—
PUBLIC PRINTING.....	925
CONSOLIDATION OF THE LAWS	926
—
THURSDAY, MARCH 30TH.
QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS —Notice of motion—Mr. Mackenzie.....	926
Trade Marks Bill—
(From the Senate) Second and Third and Readings.....	926
Retiring Allowances to Judges Bill—
(Ontario) Second and Third Readings.....	926
Witnesses at Criminal Trials Bill—
Second and Third Readings.....	926
The Indian Bill—
Further discussion in Committee.....	926
Discussion again adjourned.....	935

DUTIES ON PETROLEUM—Motion—
“ That the House go into Committee of Supply.”—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.....	935
Motion in amendment—
“ That the Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved that it is expedient to consider the duties imposed on imported petroleum.”— Mr. Colby	935
After debate, the House divided, and the amendment was negatived—120 votes to 60	942
DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC MONEY—Observations—Mr. Cimon	942
COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—
INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.....	948
PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY.....	949
LACHINE CANAL	952

FRIDAY, MARCH 31st.

SATURDAY SITTINGS—Motion—Mon. Mr. Mackenzie	954
THE STEEL RAILS PURCHASE—Motion—
“ That the House go into Committee of Supply.”— Hon. Mr. Cartwright	955
Motion in amendment—
“ That the Speaker do not now leave the chair, but that it be resolved, that the purchase by the Government of 50,000 tons of steel rails, without the previous consent of Parliament, was an unconstitutional exercise of the Executive power, and that such purchase was premature and unwise, and has caused great pecuniary loss to the country.”— Mr. Bowell	956
After debate, the House divided, and the amendment was negatived—124 votes to 54.....	979
Private Bill—
Third Reading—respecting the Security, Loan and Savings Company.....	970
The Pacific Railway.—
Explanation of the Government policy, (in Committee of Supply)—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	979
Committee rose and reported	1000

SATURDAY, APRIL 1st.

North-West Railway Lands Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Laird.....	1001
RETURNS—Observations—Sir John A. Macdonald	1001
Insolvent Act Amendment Bill (No. 1.)
Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	1001
QUEBEC TRINITY HOUSE—Resolution—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	1002
Dominion Lands Act Amendment Bill—
Second and Third Readings—Hon. Mr. Laird.....	1002

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

CANAL ESTIMATES.....	1003
ST. PETER'S CANAL.....	1004
THE PUBLIC BUILDINGS.....	1006
MILITIA ESTIMATES.....	1007

MONDAY, APRIL 3RD.

Insolvent Law Amendment Bill (No. 3.)—

Motion for Second Reading—Mr. Caron.....	1008
--	------

Private Bills—

Third Readings—Respecting Sewing Machine Shuttles—Respecting the St. Lawrence Bank—Respecting the National Loan and Life Assurance Company of Canada—Respecting the Canada Assurance Corporation—Respecting the chartered Bank of London and British America—Respecting the British American Land Company.....	1011
--	------

DOICESE OF RUPERT'S LAND BILL.....	1011
------------------------------------	------

BRAS D'OR LAKE LIGHTHOUSE—Question—Mr. Tremaine; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	1011
---	------

VETERANS OF 1812—Question—Mr. Barthe; Answer—Hon. Mr. Vail.....	1011
---	------

QUEBEC POST OFFICE—Question—Mr. Caron; Answer—Hon. Mr. Huntington.....	1011
--	------

MINERAL RESOURCES OF CAPE BRETON—Question—Mr. Tremaine; Answer—Hon. Mr. Laird.....	1021
--	------

DUTY ON BRITISH COLUMBIA FISH—Question—Mr. DeCosmos; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	1011
---	------

ST. OURS LOCKS TOLLS—Question—Mr. Cheval; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	1011
--	------

REPRINTING OF THE STATUTES IN FRENCH—Question—Mr. Pozer; Answer—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	1012
---	------

RAILWAY TOLLS—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions respecting—Mr. Oliver.....	1012
---	------

After debate, motion withdrawn.....	1018
-------------------------------------	------

THE SUGAR REFINING INTEREST—Motion for correspondence, memorials, petitions, &c.—Mr. Desjardins.....	1018
--	------

Motion carried.....	1028
---------------------	------

THE WALLACE ACCOUNTS—Motion for a statement showing condition of—Mr. Bertram.....	1028
---	------

Motion carried.....	1032
---------------------	------

SEIZURE OF NETS BY INDIANS—Motion for documents—Mr. Cook.....	1032
---	------

HALIFAX STATION IRON ROOF—Motion for copy of contract—Mr. Caron.....	1032
--	------

TREATY OF WASHINGTON—Motion—

“Address to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of all correspondence between the Government of the Dominion and the Government of the United States respecting the alleged violation of the Treaty of Washington—Mr. Jones, Halifax.....	1032
--	------

Motion carried.....	1034
---------------------	------

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—Motion for correspondence, &c.—Mr. Ouimet.....	1034
HARBOUR ON LAKE ERIE—Motion for copies of Engineer's reports—Mr. Stephenson	1034
VANCOUVER TELEGRAPH LINE—Motion for correspondence—Mr. Bunster.....	1034
Apple Barrell Bill—
First Reading—Mr. Oliver.....	1034
THE POSTMASTER AT BLOOMSBURY—Motion for correspondence—Mr. Wallace, (Norfolk).....	1035
DOMINION LANDS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—Motion respecting—Mr. Bunster.....	1035
OFFICERS OF THE HOUSE—Motion for a Statement giving information respecting—Mr. Bowell	1035
EXPENDITURES IN AND REVENUE OF THE DIFFERENT PROVINCES—Motion for a Statement of—Mr. Bunster.....	1035
Boards of Trade Bill—
Third Reading—Mr. Oliver.....	1035
Returns—Observations—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	1035
—
TUESDAY, APRIL 4TH.
Montreal Harbour Commissioners Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	1036
Customs in Manitoba Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	1036
Desjardins Canal Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	1036
Bill Respecting the Northern Railway—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	1036
Railway Statistics Act Amendment Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	1036
RAILWAY LANDS IN THE NORTH-WEST—Notice of Motion—Hon. Mr. Laird.....	1036
ORDER OF BUSINESS—Precedence of Government Measures—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1036
The Indian Bill—
Further Consideration in Committee.....	1036
Bill, with amendments, reported	1041
Public Bills—
Third Readings—An Act to amend the Act 31 Victoria, Chapter 5, as respects the Public Accounts—An Act to amend the Act 31 Victoria, Chapter 3, respecting the indemnity to Members of both Houses of Parliament—An Act to remove doubts under the Acts therein mentioned respecting the Corporation of the Quebec Harbor Commissioners (from the Senate).....	1041

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

MILITIA ESTIMATES.....	1041
MILITARY COLLEGE.....	1044

CONCURRENCE—

VETERANS OF 1812-14.....	1046
THE DAWSON ROUTE.....	1047
MISCELLANEOUS.....	1050

Private Bill—

Third Reading—Respecting the London and Canada Loan and Agency Company.....	1051
---	------

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5TH.The Indian Bill—

Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Laird.....	1051
-----------------------------------	------

The Pacific Railway—

Resumption of consideration in Committee of Supply.....	1051
Item agreed to.....	1092

Private Bills—

Third Readings—To amend the Act of Incorporation of the Banque St. Jean Baptiste—To amend the Act Incorporating the London and Canada Bank—To incorporate the British Canadian Loan and Investment Company.....	1065
---	------

THURSDAY, APRIL 6TH.Public Bills—

Third Readings—To remove doubts under the acts therein mentioned respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, and to amend the same—To amend the Railway Statistics Act—To amend the Act 38 Victoria, chapter 23, respecting the Northern Railway of Canada—To amend the Act respecting the Desjardins Canal.....	1092
--	------

Insolvent Law Amendment Bill (No. 1.)—

Consideration in Committee—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	1092
--	------

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

MILITIA ESTIMATES—District Staff.....	1093
---------------------------------------	------

Private Bills—

Third Readings—To incorporate the Maritime Savings and Loan Society—To incorporate the England and Canada Mortgage Security Company—To incorporate the United Empire Trust Company (Limited).....	1097
---	------

Bill to amend the Criminal Law—

Withdrawn—Mr. Robinson.....	1097
-----------------------------	------

Quebec Ice Bridge Bill —Motion for Second Reading—Mr. Langlois	1097
COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—
MILITIA ESTIMATES—District Staff (Continued).....	1098
IMMIGRATION AND QUARANTINE—The Agent General, &c.....	1104
THE MENONITES	1109
INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—
Spring Hill Branch.....	1110
Windsor Branch	1112
Pictou Branch.....	1113
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES—Question—Mr. Kirkpatrick; Answer—Hon. Mr. Cartwright	1114

FRIDAY, APRIL 7TH.

The Insolvent Law Amendment Bill —Motion for Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Blake.....	1114
Motion in amendment—
“ That the bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole to make certain amendments with reference to the application of the law to non-traders.”— Mr. Caron	1115
The House divided, and the amendment was negatived—86 votes to 62....	1115
CONCURRENCE—
INLAND AND MARITIME WATERS	1116
CUSTOMS—Canadian vessels in American waters.....	1117
EXCISE	1118
CULLERS' FEES.....	1119
POST OFFICE.....	1119
WEIGHTS AND MEASURES, GAS INSPECTION AND TELEGRAPH LINES.....	1120
INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY TELEGRAPH LINES—Question—Mr. Goudge; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	1120
THE CARNARVON SETTLEMENT— Question—Mr. DeCosmos; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1121
SOREL CUSTOM HOUSE—Motion for correspondence, &c.—Mr. Barthe.....	1121
ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—Motion for correspondence, &c.—Mr. Ouimet	1121
MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION—Motion for a statement of salaries, &c.—Mr. Ouimet	1121
LICENSING OF ENGINEERS—Motion for correspondence, &c.—Mr. Cook.....	1121
TONNAGE DUES IN AMERICAN PORTS—Motion for correspondence—Mr. Norris	1122
PACIFIC RAILWAY—CONTRACT No. 15—Motion for copies of—Mr. Higginbotham	1122
INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—SECTION 8—Motion for copies of correspondence between the Workmen and the Government—Mr. Fiset.....	1122
THE CHARGES AGAINST JUDGE LORANGER—Discharge of the order—Mr. Bechard.....	1122

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xxxvii

RAILWAY STATION AT BIC—Motion for correspondence—Mr. Fiset.....	1122
ALASKA BOUNDARY LINE—Motion for correspondence—Mr. Roscoe.....	1122
DISTRESS AMONG FISHERMEN—Motion for correspondence—Mr. Cimon.....	1122
GOVERNMENT PROPERTY AT SOREL—Motion for correspondence—Mr. Barthe...	1122
DREDGING OF LAKE ST. CLAIR—Motion for a return of expenditure—Mr. Stephenson.....	1123
GLENCOE POSTMASTER—Motion for correspondence and evidence—Mr. Ross (Middlesex).....	1123
COUNTY OF LOTBINIÈRE.....	1123
CONCURRENCE—
WELLAND CANAL.....	1123
PUBLIC BUILDINGS, OTTAWA.....	1125
MILITIA CLOTHING.....	1125
Pacific Railway—Motion—
That item 83 (Pacific Railway construction) be concurred in—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1126
Moved in amendment that there be added the following words :
“But while granting this sum this House desires to record its view, that the arrangements for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be such as the resources of the country will permit, without increasing the existing rates of taxation.”— Mr. Ross, Middlesex	1126
The House divided, when the motion of Mr. Ross was carried—149 votes to 10.....	1130
Motion—That item 84 (Pacific Railway Survey) be concurred in—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.....	1137
Motion in amendment—
That the following words be added to the resolution :—
“That while concurring in this vote, this House desires to record its opinion that the country is pledged to the construction of the Pacific Railway in its agreement with British Columbia, and that it is in accordance with that agreement and with the public interest that the surveys be energetically proceeded with, in order that the construction of the road should be prosecuted as rapidly as the resources of the country will permit without adding to the burthens of taxation.”— Mr. Plumb	1137
The House divided, when the motion of Mr. Plumb was negatived—89 votes to 36.....	1138
INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Question—Mr. Goudge ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1138
FISHERY REGULATIONS—Observations—Hon. Mr. Mitchell.....	1139
THE “GLENDON” —Observations—Mr. DeVeber.....	1139

SATURDAY, APRIL 8TH.

OLD RAILS ON GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS—Resolution—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie....	1139
The Supplementary Estimates—
Motion that the House go into Committee of Supply—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.....	1139

Motion in amendment—
" That the Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved that this House regrets that any Imperial legislation affecting the British North America Act of 1867 should have been sought by the Executive Government without the previous assent of the Parliament of Canada expressed in the usual manner by addresses from both Houses of Parliament to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen."— Mr. Kirkpatrick	1141
Amendment withdrawn.....	1143
THE BAIE VERTE CANAL—Observations— Mr. Burpee (Sunbury)	1143
Debate adjourned	1146
COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—
THE NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE	1146
PARLIAMENTARY LIBRARY	1147
MILITIA DRILL	1149
STEAMBOAT COMMUNICATION, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.....	1150
Liquor Traffic in the North-West Bill—
Third Reading.....	1150
—
MONDAY, APRIL 10TH.
RAILWAY LANDS IN THE NORTH-WEST—Order discharged.....	1150
LENDING IRON RAILS—Motion that the House go into Committee of Supply to consider resolution respecting— Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1150
Motion in amendment.
" That the resolution be not now concurred in, but that it be referred back to the Committee of Whole for the purpose of amending the same so as to provide that the iron rails removed from the Government railways shall be sold to the highest bidder, after due notice shall have been given of such intention to sell the same."— Mr. Bowell	1153
After debate, the House divided, when the amendment was negatived—87 votes to 37	1154
NEW BRUNSWICK FISHERIES—Observations— Hon. Mr. Mitchell	1154
BAIE VERTE CANAL—Motion withdrawn.....	1155
COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—
CLAIMS OF HON. AMBROISE SHEA	1156
CHANGE OF GAUGE ON RAILWAYS.....	1156
WHARVES ON LOWER ST. LAWRENCE.....	1156
MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES.....	1157
MONTREAL EXAMINING WAREHOUSE.....	1158
RAILWAY LANDS IN VANCOUVER—Question— Mr. DeCosmos ; Answer— Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1161
THE DEBT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—Question— Mr. DeCosmos ; Answer— Hon. Mr. Cartwright	1161
FISHERIES IN THE ST. LAWRENCE—Motion for a statement of the licenses granted since Confederation— Mr. Pouliot	1161
THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC—Motion for copies of correspondence between the Government and the Lieut.-Governors of the different Provinces with respect to jurisdiction— Mr. Ross (Middlesex)	1162

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xxxix

MR. ROCHESTER'S CLAIM—Motion for a Committee to enquire into— Mr. McDougall (Renfrew)	1164
Motion withdrawn.....	1166
THE AGRICULTURAL INTEREST—Motion that the House do now adjourn—Mr. Orton.....	1166
Motion withdrawn	1170
COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—
BURGOIN—LAMONTAGNE CONTRACT	1170
STEAM COMMUNICATION TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.....	1171
INDIAN ANNUITIES	1172
THE ARCHIVES.....	1172
THE DAWSON ROUTE	1172
THE MENONITES	1173
THE PACIFIC RAILWAY.....	1174

TUESDAY, APRIL 11TH.

FEES ON PRIVATE BILLS—Motion for certain Refunds—Mr. Blain.....	1174
THE PACIFIC RAILWAY—Motion—
“ That the Government be authorized to enter into contracts during the Recess with parties sending in the lowest available tenders for the works of construction of the following portions of the Canada Pacific Railway, viz:—From Fort William westward towards Lac de Mille Lacs and the crossing of Steel River from Rat Portage to Cross Lake.”— Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1175
THE JESUITS' BARRACKS—Question—Mr. Masson; Answer—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1175
CONCURRENCE—
FISHING LICENSES IN NEW BRUNSWICK.....	1176
THE ARCHIVES.....	1177
WAYS AND MEANS—House in Committee of—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.....	1177

EVENING SESSION.

Bills sent down by the Senate	1177
-------------------------------------	------

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12TH.

TRUST AND LOAN COMPANIES—Borrowing Powers	1178
THE OFFICIAL REPORTS—Motion for the adoption of the Report of the Committee—Hon. Mr. Cauchon.....	1179
Motion ruled out of order	1181
BILLS ASSENTED TO by His Excellency the Governor General.....	1181
HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH	1183
PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT	1184

ERRATUM.

In the Proceedings of Tuesday, February 29th, Page xii of this Table, the motion of Mr. Workman in amendment to the motion of Mr. Cartwright that the House go into Committee of Supply, is represented as having been negatived by 174 to 3. Mr. Workman's amendment was ruled out of order, and the following was that upon which the division took place:—

Page.

“ Resolved, That this House in maintaining the policy adopted by the present and past Governments in limiting the rate of duties upon the importation of these classes of articles which are produced in the country, to the extent required to meet the wants of the revenue, fully appreciates the national benefits arising from the degree of protection to the existing manufacturing industries of the Dominion afforded under that system, but observes with regret that the fluctuations in price, resulting from the uncertain condition of foreign markets, affecting the Canadian markets, and incapable of being foreseen by the Canadian manufacturers, exposed our manufacturing interests to unfair competition, and this House, while now ready to record its approval of the general policy of the present Administration, is nevertheless of opinion, that the said manufacturing interests deserve the continued fostering care of Parliament, and that the time has arrived when the Government of the Dominion should inform the Imperial Government that the Parliament of Canada deems it necessary to revive some of the features of a former policy by imposing differential duties; and to indicate, further, that in order to meet the difficulties against which Canadian manufactures are struggling, and in the general interests of the Canadian public, and to bring the British and foreign manufacturer on nearer terms of equality in the Canadian market, this House would be prepared to approve of any measure to be submitted to them by the Administration whereby a rate of not less than ten per cent. should be added to the existing importation tariff against such articles of foreign manufacture, of which the same classes are manufactured in the Dominion by way of difference to that extent in favour of like classes of productions of the Mother Country.”—Mr. Irving.....

311

CANADA.

DEBATES OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

FOR THE

THIRD SESSION OF THE 3RD PARLIAMENT OF THE DOMINION OF CANADA CALLED FOR THE DESPATCH OF BUSINESS
ON THE 10TH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1876.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 10.

The Parliament which had been prorogued from the 8th day of April, 1875, and thence from time to time to the 10th day of February, 1876, met this day for the despatch of business at three p.m.

A Message from His Excellency the Governor General, by R. E. Kimber, Jr., Esq., Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, was received commanding this honourable House to attend immediately in the Chamber of the Senate. Accordingly Mr. Speaker with the House went up to His Excellency, and having returned, REPORTS RELATING TO ELECTIONS.

Mr. SPEAKER read certificates from Judges relating to Elections in the following constituencies:—

For the Electoral District of Gaspé; for the Electoral District of Centre Toronto; for the Electoral District of Hamilton; for the Electoral District of the County of Monk; for the Electoral District of Napierville; for the Electoral District of the North Riding of the County of York; for the Electoral District of the North Riding of the County of Perth; for the Electoral District of Dorchester; for the Electoral District of Montreal West; for the Electoral District of Montreal Centre; for the Electoral District of Argenteuil; for the Electoral District of Chambly; for the Electoral District of the North Riding of the County of Renfrew.

INTRODUCTION OF MEMBERS.

Mr. SPEAKER then referred to the practice inaugurated at the opening of the present Parliament with regard to the introduction of members. He thought at the time that at ensuing Sessions that practice would create unnecessary confusion, and, as all were aware, very serious inconvenience had arisen from its adoption. Nothing had been done in regard to the matter, but he presumed there would be no difficulty in determining what ought to be done. His own impression was that it would be better to revert to the old practice; at all events hon. gentlemen who had been a Session out of the House must be introduced. Hon. gentlemen who were members during the last Session, and who had since been unseated and re-elected might take their seats without the formality of an introduction. But any gentleman who had been one Session out of the House must be regarded as a new member and ought to be introduced. It would be better, however, to revert to the old practice and have everybody introduced.

The new members were then introduced and took their seats.

THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Mr. SPEAKER reported that the House had this day attended his Excellency the Governor General in the Chamber of the Senate, when His Excellency was pleased to make a most gracious speech from the Throne, of which he had for greater accuracy obtained a copy, as follows:—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I have much pleasure in again calling you together to attend to the business of the country.

Since you last assembled it has been my happiness to visit the Mother Country, and to have had the opportunity while there of calling public attention to the remarkable progress of the Dominion, and of giving expression to the feelings of attachment to the person of Her Majesty and the interests of the Empire which animate the Canadian people.

The great depression which has prevailed throughout the neighboring countries for several years, and which has more recently been felt in the old world, causing a general stagnation of business, has extended to Canada and has seriously affected our trade. At the same time, we have reason to be grateful for an abundant harvest; and while I deeply regret the suffering which exists among certain classes and in particular localities, I believe nevertheless that the great bulk of our people continue to enjoy a condition of reasonable prosperity.

I am happy to be able to congratulate you on the fact that the great railway undertaking, connecting the former Province of Canada with the Maritime Provinces, provided for by the Act of 1867, is approaching completion. Early in the coming summer, the small portion of the Intercolonial line not already in operation will be opened, when the connection with other systems of railway will be formed, so as to enable passengers and traffic to pass over continuous lines of railway from Halifax or St. John to the extreme Western railways of Ontario.

The opening of the Prince Edward Island Railway during the past year marks an epoch in the history of that Island, and cannot but exert a beneficial influence on the people, and add to their material prosperity.

Every effort has been made to obtain an early settlement of the claims of Canada for compensation for the use of her Fisheries by the United States, as provided by the Treaty of Washington. Her Majesty's Government in the early part of last summer, at the instance of my advisers, appointed the British Commissioner, but I regret to have to state that the United States Government have not yet appointed a Commissioner, and that consequently no progress has been made.

I have given effect to the Supreme and Exchequer Court Act of last Session by issuing the proclamations, and by appointing the Judges and officers of the Court.

A Bill to simplify and amend the law relating to Common Carriers will be submitted for your consideration.

Mr. SPRAKER.

A Bill will be brought before you containing provisions for affording greater security to policy holders in Life Assurance Companies.

The want of reliable and systematised information relating to the several classes of crime and the importance of collecting and classifying criminal statistics have engaged my attention. A Bill will be introduced to provide for what is most essential in this direction.

You will be asked to make provision for the commencement of the work of consolidating the Statute Law.

The Acts relating to the enfranchisement of Indians and the management of Indian affairs have been fully considered, and steps have been taken to ascertain the views of the Indians themselves. A measure on this subject will be submitted for your approval.

A measure will be introduced to provide for the better administration of the estates of insolvent Banks.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

The accounts for the past and the Estimates for the next financial year will be laid before you. The Estimates have been framed with every possible economy consistent with the public interests. I regret that the depression in trade to which I have alluded, has seriously affected the revenue. It will be necessary in view of this circumstance to curtail the expenditures in the several branches of the public service.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

Correspondence, Reports, and other Papers regarding the construction of the Pacific Railway will be laid before you.

During the recess, a deputation from the Government of Manitoba visited Ottawa to invite the attention of the Government of the Dominion to the circumstances of that Province. They represented that the income of the Province was insufficient to provide for its ordinary governmental expenses. The papers on this subject will be laid before you, and certain propositions will be submitted for your consideration. The Legislature of Manitoba has in the meantime adopted some measures to reduce the expenditures of the Province.

I invite your earnest attention to the several subjects mentioned, and to the general business which will come before you, and I trust that your deliberations may be guided by wisdom and moderation.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE it was resolved that the Speech of His Excellency be taken into consideration to-morrow.

PRINTING OF VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved:
That the Votes and Proceedings of the House be printed, being first perused by Mr. Speaker, and that he do appoint the printing thereof; and that no person but such as he shall appoint do presume to print the same. Carried.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved:

That Select Standing Committees of this House for the present Session, be appointed for the following purposes:—1. On Privileges and Elections.—2. On Expiring Laws.—3. On Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.—4. On Miscellaneous Private Bills.—5. On Standing Orders.—6. On Printing.—7. On Public Accounts.—8. On Banking and Commerce.—9. On Immigration and Colonization, —which said Committees shall severally be empowered to examine and enquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House; and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon; with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Mr. MACKENZIE said—I would mention to the House, with reference to this motion, that the matter of reporting the Debates should be assigned to the Printing Committee as part of their duties, and that they should be named the Standing Committee on Reporting and Printing. I mention this at present as I find it will be necessary immediately to refer the reporting of the Debates to them.

The motion was carried.

INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the following:—

That if anything shall come in question touching the Return or Election of any Member, he is to withdraw during the time the matter is in Debate; and all Members returned upon double Returns are to withdraw until their Returns are determined.

That if it shall appear that any person hath been elected or returned a Member of this House, or hath endeavoured so to be, by bribery or any other corrupt practices, this House will proceed with the utmost severity against all such persons as shall have been wilfully concerned in such bribery or other corrupt practices.

That the offer of any money or other advantage to any Member of the House of Commons, for the promoting of any matter whatsoever, depending or to be transacted in the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, is a high crime and misdemeanor, and tends to the subversion of the Constitution.

Mr. MACKENZIE said it might be more convenient, if, instead of moving these resolutions at the commencement of every Session, they were made a standing order of the House and incorporated in the Rules.

The motion was carried.

DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE laid on the Table the Report of the Department of Public Works; also the Report of the special commission appointed to investigate the nature and extent of the Baie Verte Canal.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE presented the Trade and Navigation Returns for 1876.

Hon. Mr. VAIL brought down the Report of the Militia Department.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 11.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

NEW MEMBERS.

Mr. John Short, the Member elect for Gaspé, was introduced by Hon. Mr. Robitaille and Mr. Caron.

Mr. John Beverly Robinson, Member elect for West Toronto, was introduced by Sir John Macdonald and Hon. Dr. Tupper.

INLAND REVENUE REPORT.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE laid on the Table the Report of the Inland Revenue Department.

THE ADDRESS.

Mr. CASEY—I rise to propose the adoption of the Address which has been placed in your hands, and which is the customary answer to His Excellency's speech from the Throne. In doing so, I feel that I have a right to claim, as is frequently done in such a case, the indulgence of the House. The member to whom this task is allotted can very generally plead inexperience in Parliamentary speaking. He has also other difficulties to contend with. His functions, which are chiefly those of an echo, are not of such a nature as to excite any lively enthusiasm either in his own mind or in the minds of his audience. However, I consider that on the present occasion I am very fortunate in some of the topics I have to speak upon. This is particularly so with the one which first catches your eye, namely, that relating to His Excellency's visit to the Mother Country, and the manner in which he brought before the British public the resources of Canada. Not only did he on that occasion picture our material resources and the feelings of loyalty which he found to exist here, in the brightest colors, but he paid us a number of compliments which I fear we cannot at all times feel that we deserve. In his speech at the dinner given by the Canada Club in July last he used language which I hope it is not amiss to quote. He referred to us as "that noble community, their kinsmen and fellow citizens, who on the other side of the Atlantic are engaged in building up a nationality cognate to their own, instinct with the same high spirit of constitutional freedom, and determined to prove itself a worthy member of the British Empire." We can endorse all this, but when he goes on to pay a high compliment to us for the invariable moderation, wisdom, and good feeling which characterizes political warfare in this country, we cannot, I am afraid, receive it without a feeling of modesty. That modesty, however, cannot make us less grateful for the kindly spirit which prompted the expression. But, Sir, His Excellency is careful to repudiate in very strong terms the idea that our loyal attachment to the Mother Country arises from an unworthy feeling of dependence. He says:—"So far from this being the case, no characteristic of the national feeling is more strongly marked than their exuberant confidence in their ability to shape their own destinies to their appointed issue, their jealous pride of the legislative autonomy with which they have been endowed, and their patriotic and personal devotion to the land within whose ample bosom they have been nurtured, and which they justly regard as more largely dowered with all that can endear a country to its sons than any other in the world." These are manly words, and though they would have sounded strangely enough from the mouth of a Governor General not so long ago, they now find an echo in every heart. It is felt by all that without a love for our native land and its free institutions, and without that determination to preserve our legislative autonomy to which His Excellency refers with so much approval, we can never be worthy the name of a nation, or attain to that grand destiny which awaits us, if we have not the courage, self-reliance, and patriotism to deserve it. It is well then that this national feeling should be encouraged, and it is a happy omen that this encouragement should come from a quarter where there can be no suspicion of disloyalty. It is well that the Governor General should be one of the first to take a public occasion in the Old Country to encourage a national feeling among us and point out that we have a destiny not only as a colony but as a nation. His Excellency, however, has been careful to guard against any suspicion of a wish on our part to separate from the Empire, by assuring his hearers of the desire of Canadians to remain a part of the great British Empire, to share its destiny, and to fulfil all the obligations that such a position may imply. There is no use denying that as part of the British Empire we will be under certain obligations; that as a part of the British Empire we will have to make concessions and sacrifices, and will have to undergo a certain amount of inconvenience that we would not otherwise have to undergo. But I think this House and the country are unanimously of the opinion that these obligations are such as we can sustain, and that the advantages which we derive from the connection will counterbalance anything we may suffer on account of it. His Excellency no doubt had in his mind some great scheme of individuality combined with union. He has considered it his duty to assist in developing such an idea amongst us, and I have no doubt it will be his privilege to assist in carrying it out—to assist in carrying off the idea of a Canadian nationality, combined with a wider and more comprehensive nationality as members of the British Empire. His Excellency has touched upon this subject, not with the cold reasoning of the political economist, but rather with the sympathetic insight and hopeful warmth of imagination which are often more correct in predicting the destiny of nations than mere logic ever can be. I am sure the House will join in thanking His Excellency for these expressions and in hoping that his aspirations may be realized, and that the people of Canada may long remain as in his own words, "not only the kinsmen, but the fellow citizens" of those from whom on the other side we derive our political existence. But a picture cannot be bright all over. We cannot look at the state of business in the country since last year without very serious thoughts; the wonderful prosperity we have had for years has led us, perhaps, into extravagance in living, over production in some lines and over importation in others. This has brought about an inevitable depression in trade, and although the depression has been sufficient to cause difficulties, it is hardly sufficient to cause anxiety, much less alarm. The evil is producing its own cure. Those who have spent or produced too much have been obliged to curtail their expenditure and production. The result will be an accumulation of money in the country and a stoppage of that waste of our productive powers that has been going on too largely for the good of the country: The depression of trade will be only temporary. The country is not poor, it is only in such a position that it is not able to realize and employ all its capital. Another reaction must soon take place and set the wheels of commerce again in motion; and probably by the time His Excellency favors us with another speech, he will be able to tell us that this state of things has passed away, and prosperity again prevails throughout the country. This depression in trade has naturally caused a decrease in the national income as pointed out in the speech. The decrease like its cause must be only temporary. With increased imports the revenue must become again elastic, and it is highly creditable to His Excellency's advisers that, instead of recommending any rash attempts to force on the prosperity of the country or artificially increase the revenue, they have recommended a course of economy in public expenditure that will be acceptable to the country at large. If this remedy proves good in the commercial world there is no reason to suppose that it will not also be successful in that of politics, and if commerce be restored to its ordinary condition the same will take place with regard to revenue. It is also noted in the speech that this depression has not prevailed to such a great extent in the agricultural districts. This is quite correct; the crops have been unusually good throughout the country, and the markets have been very fair also. Even where this has not been the case, the abundant crop has prevented any possibility of hardship or suffering among the agricultural classes. The next item of importance that requires our attention is the reference to the completion of the Dominion railways in the east. It is a cause for congratulation that the final opening of the Intercolonial Railway will next summer mark the completion of an undertaking which we commenced at Confederation for the purpose of binding ourselves somewhat more closely to the people of the Eastern Provinces. It is to be hoped the railway will have that effect. We must also hope, and hope strongly, that although its route was not chosen for commercial purposes, it will secure sufficient communication between ourselves and the Eastern Provinces to accomplish fully its political object. The railway on Prince Edward Island is also a great boon to the people of that Province, and will enable them to start afresh as members of the Dominion with the prospect of a prosperity which they never had in other days. It is only to be hoped that some link may be provided between that railway and the mainland so that communication may be uninterrupted all the year round. Another subject of importance naturally connected with this is the production of the papers and correspondence in reference to the Pacific Railway. I think I would not be far astray in supposing that the correspondence will refer to the negotiations between our Government and that of British Columbia, with regard to the building of the railway on Vancouver Island. A Bill for the construction of such a railway passed this House last Session. The building of that road was part of a proposal from our Government in consideration of the inevitable delays in carrying out the bargain which the late Government entered upon. This Bill did not pass the Senate, and it remained for the Government to consider what was to be substituted. The offer of a lump sum instead of a railway on the Island was decided on. With regard to the remainder of the proposal, for the work on the mainland, the obligation of the Government remains the same as ever, and there is no reason to judge that they have given up their intention of going on with the road. But it must be remembered that the former proposal, as well as the latter, was subject to the resolution adopted by this House that we should not be bound to increase the rate of taxation for the completion of this railway. It appears then that we were never bound, nor are we now bound, to lay additional burthens on the country for the building of this railway, but only to go on with it as rapidly as possible. Other reports by the engineers engaged in the survey of the Pacific Railway will, I understand, show that very considerable progress has been made during the recess. They will show that in the Cascade and Rocky Mountain ranges explorations have been made in hitherto unexplored districts, and more favorable routes have been discovered. They will show also that there are still large unexplored regions in that country which it will perhaps be well to look into before finally adopting a route for some parts of the road. However, considerable progress has already been made in the location of the railway, and it is understood that further explorations will be made next year. Mr. Selwyn, Director of the Geological Survey, has visited a portion of the country known as the Peace River district, considerably north of the first place chosen as the route of the Pacific Railway. He reports that where the river cuts through the Rocky Mountain region the mountains practically disappear, and only a district of rolling country covered for the most part with prairie soil appears. On the Pine River there is a pass whose elevation is not more than two thousand feet above the sea, scarcely half the altitude of the Tête Jaune Cache, which was considered formerly so favorable. This extends not only through the Rocky Mountain Range but up to the very edge of the Cascade Mountains. Through this an outlet could probably be obtained to some point on the Pacific Coast—to Bute Inlet or Gardener Channel, for example. The climate of this country Mr. Selwyn reports on very favorably. Even as far north as Lake Arthabaska, he obtained specimens of wheat of fine quality which were produced there from grain sown in May and reaped in August of this year. When the House remembers that this point is over 600 miles north of Fort Garry, it will be seen that the country there is better than we ever expected to find it. Mr. Selwyn's reports point to the conclusion that the country is well worthy of consideration. We are also called upon in the Address to note that the Government has taken all necessary steps to secure the settlement of our claims in regard to the Fisheries under the Washington Treaty. It is well-known to the House that the settlement of these claims was postponed simply on account of negotiations with regard to reciprocity. Now it appears that our Government has taken the necessary steps by appointing a Commissioner, and we may hope the matter will soon be brought to an issue. I cannot help, on behalf of myself, and perhaps some other Members who feel as I do, expressing a wish that some more definite basis might have been established for the settlement of this matter. We all remember that it was in order to ascertain the extent of our claims in regard to those Fisheries that the High Joint Commission was first asked for by our Government. It is also known that this Commission broke up without having come to any decision on that matter, so that the question of the extent of our as well as of the American claims remains exactly as it was before the Commission sat. There are, consequently, certain embarrassments.

Mr. CASBY.

Mr. CASEY.

in regard to those claims which would never have existed if the Washington Commission had fulfilled its original design and given an authoritative expression of opinion thereon. I have every confidence, however, that the present Government will use its best efforts to obtain justice for us, but the House will remember that the Government is subject to embarrassments and difficulties which it would not have experienced if affairs had turned out differently at the time the Washington Treaty was arranged. We can join very heartily in his Excellency's congratulation on the subject of the establishment of the Supreme Court for this Dominion. It is a Court representative of all parts of the Dominion—a Court composed of Judges of great authority, which by its personnel, by its representative character, will be able to give decisions which will meet with general acceptance throughout the country. It is also worthy of notice that it was intended to be, and is, a Court of final decision. It was felt by the Government, no doubt, at the time of the passage of the Bill, that the right of unlimited appeal was unjust to poor suitors as compared with wealthy ones in great cases, and that some means ought to be provided by which final decision might be obtained without leaving our own country. This was no doubt one of the objects intended by the establishment of the Supreme Court, and we have every reason to suppose, from its composition that its decisions will be willingly accepted as final by all who have occasion to come before it. It has been asserted that there was an intention in the establishment of this Court to take away one of the innate rights of British subjects—that of final appeal to the foot of the Throne. This, the House knows, is a right which no Act of ours can take away, and it is not attempted to take it away by this Bill. The Bill merely provides that those who choose to ask the judgment of the Supreme Court on their cases must accept that judgment as final. They have still, as before, the right to appeal to the Privy Council, or to the foot of the Throne, as it is called, instead of to our

Supreme Court; but those who appeal to that Court are asked to accept its decision. That was the understanding when the Bill was introduced, and I think the House and the country are in no different frame of mind concerning it this Session. The attempt to represent this clause of the Bill as an attack upon the close relations which exist between us and the Mother Country, I think the House will feel to be unpatriotic, and calculated to arouse ill feeling between us and the Mother Country, and not to realize the prospects alluded to in the early part of the Address. We have further to consider the application of our friends in Manitoba for better terms, and the action of the Government connected therewith. The circumstances of that Province have been from the beginning rather peculiar. To use a common phrase, they have never had "a fair start." Their increase in population has been great, the expenses of government have naturally increased along with it, and there seems to be no impropriety in their asking for some better terms than they formerly had. Their case is further strengthened by the fact that they have shown a disposition to economise in local expenditure and not to waste the subsidies they have received from us. There are several other Bills in the Address which I might refer to at greater length had I not already spoken so long. The Bill to regulate the responsibilities of Common Carriers; the Bill in regard to Life Assurance Companies; the Bill in regard to Criminal Statistics, and that in regard to the enfranchisement of Indians, are all subjects which the House must feel to be of very great importance. If I were even to speak on those subjects at considerable length I could probably give few details which would enlighten the House. I therefore pass them over with this brief reference. Perhaps in regard to some of these and other matters in the Address, the House may be favored with some remarks from the gentleman who is to second the Address, and who will probably make up for any omissions of mine. I will conclude by saying that I believe the bill of fare laid before us contains quite enough work for a busy session of moderate length, and I believe the House cordially joins with His Excellency in hoping that our deliberations may be guided by prudence and moderation, and that his compliments to us may be well deserved during the session. Mr. Casey concluded by moving the following resolutions :

1. That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, to thank His Excellency for his gracious speech at the opening of the present Session; and further to assure His Excellency,—

2. That we are grateful to His Excellency for calling us together to attend to the business of the country at this early and convenient season.

3. That we learn with the greatest satisfaction, that since we last assembled it has been His Excellency's happiness to visit the Mother Country, to have had the opportunity while there of calling public attention to the remarkable progress of the Dominion, and of giving expression to the feelings of attachment to the person of Her Majesty and the interests of the Empire which animate the Canadian people.

4. That we have been grieved to observe that the great depression which has prevailed throughout neighbouring countries for several years, and which has more recently been felt in the Old World, causing a general stagnation of business, has extended to Canada and has seriously affected our trade. But, at the same time, we feel with His Excellency, that we have reason to be grateful for an abundant harvest; and while we deeply regret the suffering which exists among certain classes and particular localities, we believe, nevertheless, that the great bulk of our people enjoy a condition of reasonable prosperity.

5. That we receive with much pleasure His Excellency's congratulations on the fact that the great railway undertaking, connecting the former Province of Canada with the Maritime Provinces, provided for by the Act of 1867, is approaching completion, and his assurance that early in the coming summer, the small portion of the Intercolonial line not already in operation will be opened, when the connection with other systems of Railway will be formed, so as to enable passengers and traffic to pass over continuous lines of Railway from Halifax or St. John to the extreme Western Railways of Ontario.

6. That we agree with His Excellency, that the opening of the Prince Edward Island Railway during the past year marks an epoch in the history of that Island, and cannot but exert a beneficial influence on the people, and add to their material prosperity.

7. That we are well assured, that every effort has been made to obtain an early settlement of the claims of Canada for compensation for the use of her Fisheries by the United States, as provided by the Treaty of Washington; and we are sorry to learn that although Her Majesty's Government in the early part of last summer, at the instance of His Excellency's advisers, appointed the British Commissioner, His Excellency has to state with regret that the United States Government have not yet appointed a Commissioner, and that consequently no progress has been made.

8. That we have seen with great satisfaction that His Excellency has given effect to the Supreme and Exchequer Court Act of last Session by issuing the proclamations, and by appointing the Judges and officers of the Court.

9. That we shall give our most careful consideration to any Bill to simplify and amend the law relating to Common Carriers which may be submitted to us, as well as to any Bill that may be brought before us containing provisions for affording greater security to policy holders in Life Assurance Companies.

10. That we thank His Excellency for informing us that the want of reliable and systematized information relating to the several classes of crime and the importance of collecting and classifying criminal statistics have engaged his attention; and we shall willingly consider any Bill which may be introduced to provide for what is most essential in this direction.

11. That we shall cheerfully make such provision as may be found necessary for the commencement of the work of consolidating the Statute Law.

MR. CASEY.

12. That we are glad to learn that the Acts relating to the enfranchisement of Indians and the management of Indian affairs have been fully considered; that steps have been taken to ascertain the views of the Indians themselves, and that a measure on this subject will be submitted for our approval.

13. That any measure which may be introduced to provide for the better administration of the estates of insolvent Banks will receive our earnest attention.

14. That we thank His Excellency for the assurance that the accounts for the past and the Estimates for the next financial year will be laid before us; and that the Estimates have been framed with every possible economy consistent with the public interests. That we regret to learn that the depression in trade to which he has alluded has seriously affected the revenue; and that it will be necessary, in view of this circumstance, to curtail the expenditures in the several branches of the public service.

15. That we shall consider with the deepest interest the correspondence, reports, and other papers regarding the construction of the Pacific Railway which may be laid before us.

16. That we thank His Excellency for informing us that during the recess, a deputation from the Government of Manitoba visited Ottawa to invite the attention of the Government of the Dominion to the circumstances of that Province; and represented that the income of the Province was insufficient to provide for its ordinary governmental expenses. That His Excellency may be sure that any papers on this subject which may be laid before us, and any propositions submitted to us on the subject, shall receive our most serious consideration; and that we are well pleased to know that the Legislature of Manitoba has in the meantime adopted some measures to reduce the expenditures of the Province.

17. That His Excellency may rest assured that we shall give our earnest attention to the several subjects he has been pleased to mention, and to the general business which will come before us, and we trust, with His Excellency, that our deliberations may be guided by wisdom and moderation.

Mr. TASCHEREAU—(in French)
—I rise to second the motion of my hon. friend, the member for Elgin West, requesting this House to present to His Excellency the Governor General an Address in reply to his gracious speech from the Throne. If I had only to lend my name to this proposition and only to give to it the silent assent of the seconder, I would have an agreeable duty to perform, which I would be most happy to assume at the present moment; but constitutional usage exacts from a member in my position something more, and at this point my hesitation begins, and I crave the indulgence of this House to supplement the weakness of the appreciation with which I may offer it. Further, I may remark that I will only occupy the attention of the House for a few moments. His Excellency makes allusion in the opening of the Speech from the Throne to the visit which he has made to the Mother Country since the last Session of Parliament, and to the opportunities he has had of drawing public attention to the remarkable progress of Canada, and of making known the sentiments of attachment entertained by the Canadian people for the person of Her Majesty and the interests of the Empire. Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people could not have a more faithful interpreter of their sentiments near Her Majesty than her worthy representative, our popular Governor General, whose presence has been coveted by each city, each town, and each part of the Dominion since his arrival in our midst, and who has known how to make himself beloved simultaneously by all races, all creeds, and I may add, all the political parties of our country. Our feelings, as well as our needs, our aspirations and our regrets, could not be expressed by lips more eloquent, more sympathetic, or more just in our regard, than the lips of the representative of Her Majesty here. Lord Dufferin has, so to speak, changed his role on the other side of the Atlantic, in making himself the representative, the advocate, the defender, and almost the panegyrist of the people confided to his administration; and in order to fulfil more fitly this role, and do so with a full knowledge of the circumstances, he has prudently visited all parts of the Canadian Empire, familiarizing himself with our history, and with the past of our public men. He has studied thoroughly the genius of the Canadian people, noting its peculiarities, and he made this study in the quality of a savant, man of letters, philosopher, and statesman. For my part, Mr. Speaker, as a French Canadian, and as a member of this House, I cannot forget or pass without special mention what he has done for my countrymen in one of his speeches delivered on the other side of the Atlantic, in pointing out to the admiration of the English people all the qualities which he observed amongst us; and in particular our aptitude for thoroughly comprehending and understanding, as well as assisting in the proper working of the magnificent political institutions which we have inherited from England—our disposition for enjoying, as loyal and enlightened citizens, the constitutional regime so long refused to our fathers. I have only one wish to express, and that is, that my countrymen will continue to merit so flattering a eulogy, and that by their loyalty, as well as by their moderation, their conciliatory spirit in their relations with other races and other creeds, and their respect for the civil authority and the State, they may ever be known as models to be followed by the different nationalities of which, with them, the people of Canada is composed. A commercial depression such as has seldom been felt, has visited the New World as well as the Old, and has not spared Canada, having seriously affected her commerce. It is a cloud that darkens for a moment the sun of our prosperity. Mention of this trying period could not be omitted in the speech from the Throne. Let us hope with His Excellency, that the omens which we now witness are but the forerunners of a great commercial revival—of a salutary and lasting activity in business; and let us thank Providence for having saved us from the extreme consequences of this crisis, which fortunately has left the germs of our national prosperity intact. The approaching completion of the colossal enterprise which, according to the Act of 1867, is destined to unite the Old Province of Canada with the Maritime Provinces, is an event which we shall all welcome with delight. We can all appreciate in anticipation the tremendous results which will follow for the whole Dominion by the completion of the Intercolonial. By going back less than 20 years, when ordinary communication was so long and difficult between the Province of Quebec and New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, when the commercial relations were almost nil, we can better understand the importance of this great railway when it shall be open for traffic, and when, with the assistance of other branch roads, merchandise and produce will be transported without interruption from Halifax and St. John to the most distant railways in Ontario. This enterprise, which is the necessary complement of the work of Confederation, was long retarded by inevitable causes, or rather causes that were preventible, but in regard to which little trouble was taken to overcome. The activity and supervision of the Hon. Minister of Public Works since he has been in power have greatly contributed to hasten the day of inauguration, and I hope this day next year, our friends the Members for Halifax, St. John, Richmond, Inverness, Northumberland, Sunbury and other counties in the Maritime Provinces will be able to say that they are come to fulfil their legislative duties without having had to pass through our neighbours' territory, and that they have made the journey entirely on Canadian soil. Our young Province, the Island of Prince Edward, to which Heaven has denied nothing in respect of climate and natural beauty, had not until last year the advantage of an iron road throughout its length. Let us, with His Excellency, congratulate it on the opening of the Railway. I am told it is troubled with détours and caprices. But an alley too straight through a beautiful garden would spoil the garden's picturesqueness. Our lovely little Island of Prince Edward, which is nothing less than a garden surrounded by water, did not want a direct alley, which would have destroyed the poetry of the thing and suppressed the picturesque. And this is why its little railway, which is hardly more than an unpebbled alley, is a little longer than other lines, and why it winds a little and—let us say the word—is a little more crooked than are generally the railways in countries which are not gardens. It costs me a pang to leave this little terrestrial paradise to speak of other questions which form the subject of the Speech from the Throne. But constitutional usage, of which I am the slave at this moment, does not leave me a choice. The House will be happy to learn that if there is some delay in the settlement of the compensation that we have a right to receive from the United States for the enjoyment of our Fisheries, in virtue of the Washington Treaty, this delay is not the work of our Government, which has already caused an Imperial Commissioner to be named. We shall probably know during the present Session the reason why the American Government holds back from naming its Commissioner. It is exceedingly to be regretted that such a delay should have occurred in the settlement of this international question, and in the interest of a good understanding, and of the harmony which should continue to exist between the Canadian and American people throughout these negotiations, resulting from the Treaty of Washington, it is important that such temporizing action should not be renewed. Good bargains make good friends, but, on condition that both parties to them are prompt in settlement, and that the time agreed upon is not allowed to pass by. Two of the most important events of the recess were the publication of the two proclamations giving effect to the Supreme Court and Court of Exchequer Act. The first of these proclamations, dated September last, puts this Act in force so far as relates to the appointment of the Judges and Officers of the Court, whose tenure of office in fact dates from the beginning of October. The second proclamation, dated the 11th January of this year, has allowed suitors to address themselves to this tribunal, which since then has commenced to exercise its jurisdiction in every way. The establishment of this High Federal Court has been viewed favorably by the public, and the necessity of its existence understood. The most eminent men or both sides of the House have united together to achieve the triumph of this measure. The doubts which have been expressed by some members as to the constitutionality of some of the provisions of this law (and I must add I was one of them) were not shared by those hon. members who had for the moment agreed to a truce of their party quarrels with a view to come to an understanding as to the provisions of this measure. Thanks to this understanding, we were enabled yesterday to see ranged around His Excellency—draped in their robes of office, combining richness with severity, and which, had it not been for the ermine and scarlet, I might almost describe as monastical—those distinguished men, of whom some have passed through the successes, the storms and the reverses of political life. It is not my province to congratulate the Government upon the choice of those magistrates. I will content myself with saying that public opinion has been fully satisfied and has been struck with the strict impartiality shewn in making these appointments. As for the officers of the Court with whom I have the pleasure of a personal acquaintance, I can say that their talents, their character, and their position at the bar fully justify the choice made by the Government. Let us wait with confidence until the proceedings of this tribunal, which we can call our Court par excellence, shall have commenced, and hope that its decisions and decrees will meet the expectation of the public, and will give satisfaction to every Province, to every race, and to every creed. A work of the greatest importance, and one which is becoming imperative, is pressed in the speech from the Throne, to wit:—the consolidation of the Statutes. Scattered here, there and everywhere, rendered confusing by the mass of amendments accumulated during a number of years, these laws have become somewhat difficult of reference, and we require a classification and compilation which will facilitate researches and make the interpretation more certain. The enfranchisement of the Indians and the equitable administration of their affairs are among the subjects to which the Government has given its attention, and the House will be happy to learn that, following on the steps that have been adopted among the Indians themselves to discover their sentiments, a measure will be brought before it for the purpose of defining and regulating the civil and political rights of the red race. It is a work of Christian charity and philanthropy which, if it had been accomplished in time in other countries, would have prevented terrible wars and unheard of cruelties. The Government, up to this time, has looked at the question in a proper light, and its policy of conciliation and patience towards our brethren of the woods has been such as to attract them to us and render comparatively easy the definition of their rights and privileges.—We must expect a diminution of our revenue. The commercial prostration which has affected all Governments cannot but affect us too. But I am happy to see that by a wise reduction in the expenses of the several departments of the public service — which the whole country will applaud—the Government hopes to re-establish the equilibrium of our finances. Anyhow, we shall not be long before we are able to render an account of the exact state of things; and it is probable that in a few days the Hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Cumberland will have thrown across the Chamber a sufficient quantity of figures, that members of this House who, like myself, are not financiers, may not find themselves astray more than three millions.—The Province of Manitoba has attracted the attention of the Government in respect to its financial position. Whatever the nature of its wants and demands may be, we should, in any case, felicitate it on the manner, eminently practical, in which it has been able, before presenting its case to us, to reduce its ordinary expenses by the suppression of a part of its administrative machinery. The abolition of its Legislative Council is, under the circumstances actually existing, an act of the highest prudence and, at the same time, of the purest abnegation. To save one of its diseased arms it has courageously amputated the other, and this latter has lent itself to the operation in the most gracious manner possible. Here is a good commencement, and one which permits us to take a favorable view of the case of Manitoba. I know a certain large Province where a similar amputation would be at the present moment impossible. It would prefer to lose the Federal subsidy rather than sacrifice the right arm of the local constitution, the immortal Legislative Council, the deliberations of which are the delight of the ancient capital. So let us speak of it no longer, that impotent arm will remain bandaged yet a long while, and will not be cut off if that depends on itself.—The House eagerly awaits the correspondence, reports and other documents relative to the construction of the Pacific Railway which are promised it. The Speech from the Throne does not announce to us any change in the policy of the Government in reference to this enterprise. I am glad, for my part, and I would say to the Government: continue to follow the tactics of Fabius, and take the council of the wise Festinan Lente! The other subjects which are mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and which I have not touched, as I must keep myself within due limits, are of great importance, and the measures in connection with them will doubtless be pressed forward with all the diligence that the want of complete legislation in their regard warrants. In concluding, His Excellency hopes that wisdom and moderation will preside over our deliberations. Mr. Speaker, we will not disappoint that expectation. There are in this Chamber many conflicting principles, and, unfortunately, yet more prejudice in full ebullition. It cannot be otherwise in a House issuing from the popular will of seven distinct Provinces, which but a short while since had no common tie, and little or no points of resemblance with each other. But we have nothing to fear in the matter of excess of language, dangerous recriminations or appeals to passion in a Chamber such as ours, which has already shewn in the past so much moderation in its acts, and so much wisdom in the settlement of questions the most difficult. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the House for the kind attention it has given me.

Mr. TASCHEREAU.

Mr. TASCHEREAU.

Mr. SPEAKER—Having read the motion, asked whether it was the pleasure of the House to adopt the Address en bloc, or to have it read paragraph by paragraph.

Hon. Members—Dispense! dispense!

Mr. SPEAKER—Having read the first paragraph, asked if it was the pleasure of the House to adopt it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Mr. Speaker, my hon. friends, the mover and seconder of the Address, cannot claim exemption from criticism, for although they are young members they are not new members. We have the right to exercise stern criticism in our remarks to-day, and in the character of an appreciative but stern critic allow me to offer to both my felicitations on the happy and eloquent manner in which they have done their duty. As to the speech itself, to which they have moved a response, I can say that it is a most harmless and innocent printed document. I hope that there is no torpedo under it which will create an explosion before the Session is over. However, it looks so amiable on its face, that I certainly do not propose, nor do I suppose, that any of my friends on this side of the House will offer an amendment to it; and so the millenium of which my honorable friend has spoken, has happened already. This Address will, I hope, receive the unanimous assent of this House. In the first paragraph a very proper allusion has been made to His Excellency's late visit to the United Kingdom, and I cordially agree with everything that has been said by these two gentlemen respecting this paragraph, and in laudation of the illustrious individual who represents Her Majesty so well and so gracefully in this country. We can say here what they have said, and we can supply what he could not say in his speech, that his efforts in the way of explaining the position of Canada to the people of England, and in calling the attention of the people of England to the feeling prominent in Canada, was done with the view of benefitting this country, and with the usual happy eloquence and excellent tact which have always distinguished His Excellency. My hon. friend the leader of the Government, after a review of his speeches in West Ontario on a former occasion, said that he would not want a better emigration agent than His Excellency the Governor General. That agreeable and useful duty he performed in a more marked manner while in England, and I have no doubt that his speeches and remarks, and the influence which those remarks will carry with them, from his high position and from the able and eloquent manner in which they have been presented to the English public, will go far to counteract the effects of the utterances of the official Agent-General. The next paragraph is one which we cannot afford to smite upon—that is, the stagnation which exists in this country. We must all deplore that this stagnation exists. It may be our duty to enquire whether it is created altogether by sympathy with the depression existing elsewhere, or whether there have not been causes, or there are not now causes, which will continue that depression unless by a ministrative or legislative action it is removed. I have no doubt it will be our duty to address ourselves calmly, seriously and zealously to the consideration of that subject. The completion of the Intercolonial Railway is a matter for congratulation in this House, and in this country. I believe when that road is in full operation we will have one of the best railways, if not the very best, on this continent, and, considering the excellence of the road and the high class of the work we have in that line, it will be one of the cheapest in America. I will not now, as we are resolved to have no dissension on this millennial occasion, enter into the question as to location. I have always contended, whether as a military work or as a railway which will have the effect of developing one of the great industries of the Maritime Provinces, the fishing interest, or as a road which will have the effect of encouraging and developing a great section of the Maritime Provinces, which without this Intercolonial Railway would continue comparatively in a state of stagnation, that the location of this road cannot only be defended, but can be successfully justified. We were informed that in the early part of the coming summer the road will be not only completed but actually in running order. I hope—indeed, I am sure—my hon. friend at the head of the Government will early direct his attention (if he has not already done so) to the best mode of running that road, and that he will be in a position, before the conclusion of the Session, to inform this House and the country whether it is the intention of the Government to work it directly as a Government road, or to make running arrangements with other roads. Whether he does so or not, I will venture to call his attention now, as I have on a previous occasion privately done, to the necessity, when that road is in actual every-day use, of taking steps to protect water-borne freight coming from the West from undue competition by this line.—I have no doubt the Island of Prince Edward is already enjoying great advantages from the opening of the Prince Edward Island Railway. It is true we see in the newspapers that there are some faint grumblings in the Island regarding the manner in which the road has been constructed and is now being conducted; but I have no doubt the Minister of the Interior will cast oil on the troubled waters, and those murmurs will be confined to the Island and not extended to our quiet arena. With respect to the clause connected with the Fisheries and compensation for their use, I can only say I regret that any circumstances have prevented the appointment of an arbitrator by the United States, and retarded the progress of the reference and final settlement of the question. I presume the United States have reasons for the delay, and if so, that they will be submitted to this House. With respect to the establishment of a Supreme and Exchequer Court, all I can say is this—that I congratulate the country and give due praise to the Administration for the selection of the bench for that court. I believe on the whole it is a strong and efficient bench, that it has given confidence to the country, and as sometimes it may be our duty to criticize, and perhaps animadvert strongly upon the conduct of the Administration, it is but due they should receive praise from my hands and from the hands of us all, when they are deserving of it. I was glad to see yesterday the lively proof of the consummation of that Act. It brought to my mind associations of Westminster Hall, and to use an old joke, I have no doubt experience will show that although the garb of the judges is bright scarlet they will show themselves to be "deep read." The measures that are propounded, so far as I have been able to understand the Address, are merely details of what has happened. There is no indication of what the action of the Government is to be for the present Session. The measures that are mentioned here are all of a practical character. They are not of overwhelming importance, and I think the country will not suffer much in prosperity, credit or happiness, if not one of them should be passed this Session. Still they are practical, and as we cannot always be in heroics, we must be satisfied with every-day business. The measures respecting Common Carriers, Life Insurance Companies—giving greater security to policy holders—and systematizing statistics about criminals, are all very well in their way, and I have no doubt they will occupy us but a short time. I think that gentlemen on this side—especially those belonging to the late Government—must thank most gratefully the present Administration for the testimony that they are about to give to the value of the legislation of past years. They do not speak of reforming that legislation. They are going to continue it, consolidate it, put it in wax, embalm it for the benefit of posterity. The legislation of the past, we are assured, is to be put into a volume and preserved as a monument of wisdom for future generations. The Acts relating to the Indians that are promised, will be of very great importance indeed. Of course, until we see them, we cannot say what their extent may be, or what their nature. From the manner in which they are to be introduced, and from the fact stated that the Indians themselves are to be consulted as to their view of the legislation, I imagine the measures to be proposed are of considerable importance. The financial clause is not as coulour de rose as the beginning of the speech. We are told that the stagnation in trade has seriously affected the revenue, but we have the consolation of knowing it is only temporary, and that by due attention to economy the depression will be speedily removed. Whether the economies which are announced in this clause will affect the efficiency of the service or not, depends, of course, on the details, and we can only judge of that when we see them. I notice by the paragraph that it is proposed to curtail the expenditure in all branches of the Government. If so, there will be a most serious and extensive bill of economy. When we have these details we will be better able to judge the extent to which the economies are to be carried. I would deeply regret if this depression should induce the Government to impede or seriously obstruct or postpone the development of the country, as they believe that the depression is only temporary. We have already experienced some of the measures of economy. I presume that the abolition of the office of Agent-General is one of them. It is an economy which has been loudly called for in the country and has been at last completed. The Government deserve the credit of having stopped the leak, but at the same time they must remember they are chargeable with having made the auger-hole. At the time the Agent-General was appointed I think, from this side of the House, there were sundry warnings of what the result would be. In my place, standing where I do now, I predicted the disappearance of the Agent-General before long. He has gone, but I am not at all sure he has disappeared from motives of economy. We have it almost directly from him (because we see it in a Dundee newspaper with which he is connected) that it was the result of a diabolical plot of the Ultramontanes of Canada—that these Ultramontanes—who hate the introduction of Englishmen, Irishmen and Scotchmen if they are Protestants (and I am not sure whether he says they would not object to them even if they were Catholics)—were resolved to have the Agent-General turned out of office, and although his hon. friend and my hon. friend the Premier stood by him as long as he could—and we all know how long he will stand by his friends when they are in the wrong—he was obliged by the Ultramontanes to sacrifice one friend and abolish the Agent-General of Canada. So while we must thank the Administration for this economy, we cannot at all applaud the motives to which their late employé attributes his removal. Another economy, I have no doubt, will be carried out, and if so, it will be in accordance with the suggestion of this side of the House. When the Bill for the inauguration of the North-West Government was proposed last Session, I said until there is a larger body of people to be ruled, the constitutional Governor of Manitoba might still be entrusted with the management of the North-West. As the constitutional Governor of Manitoba he has little to do, and he might very well have given his spare time—and he had plenty of it on his hands, and, as I understand, did not grumble at the labor—to the administration of the affairs of the North-West Territories. But my hon. friend the Premier, in his usual incisive way, said it was absolutely necessary that the Government should be established without delay, and stationed far away from Winnipeg and its influences. I was not convinced, but I was silenced, and the Bill passed; but we do not see that the Government has been established after all. I flatter myself in the calm consideration of the subject which my hon. friend gave it after the prorogation, and in his own chamber, that he began to feel there was no such imminent necessity as he at first thought for the immediate appointment of a second Governor. At all events no appointment has yet been made, and as we have no complaint from the North-West, and have saved a considerable amount from the delay, I presume the hon. gentleman will make the saving a permanent one by continuing the masterly inactivity which he has shown hitherto with respect to this Government. We are told that correspondence, reports, and other papers regarding the construction of the Pacific Railway will be laid before us. We will, of course, be exceedingly happy to receive all this information, and to give it every consideration. No indication, however, is given in the speech, (and I must say it is a serious omission), as to the course to be taken by the Government either administratively or by means of additional legislation on this important subject. No intimation is given of any kind, but I presume it will be forthcoming when we get the ministerial explanations, which we may hope for at an early day, in relation to the reconstruction of the Government when it was thought necessary to add to its strength by the selection of my hon. friends the Minister of Justice and the President of the Council. When we receive this explanation, then, most likely, we will be informed in what manner the divergence between my hon. friends the Premier and the Minister of Justice on this important subject has been settled. I presume that they will give us some information as to what the future course of the Government will be. The last clause of the speech, which refers to Manitoba, shows that the hon. gentlemen opposite are falling into our mistake about better terms. There was a great deal of talk about the unconstitutionality, etc., of some of our legislation in that direction. But still, such is life; my hon. friend has fallen into our mistakes. Experience has shown him we were not so far wrong in our previous breaches of the constitution and assaults on the revenue as he then alleged we were. I think it is Benedict who says, "when I declared I would die a bachelor I did not think I would ever be married." The same with my hon. friends: they did not think when they were in opposition they would ever be ministers. I hope the longer their experience extends, and the more they feel the cares and responsibilities of government, the more sympathy they will have with their predecessors; and when the day will come when they return to this side of the House—

Mr. BLAKE—That will be the millenium.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—That

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

will be the millenium. I do not think he enjoys a millenium at the present time. I think that there are some thorns, some tares, whether sown by their own friends or by enemies I know not, and I think it is wrong for us to enquire; but my hon. friends will admit it is not a bed of roses. It is not proposed to move any amendment to this Address. Unless any hon. gentleman desires to move an amendment, perhaps it will not be necessary to move it paragraph by paragraph, and it can be carried en bloc.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am sure the Government have no reason to complain of the line of criticism or any of the criticisms of the hon. gentleman. He has indicated that in all probability beneath the smooth surface of the speech delivered by His Excellency, there is some terrible torpedo that will damage the country. The hon. gentleman has made allusion to the speech delivered by His Excellency in London. I can only say, as a Canadian then in England, his knowledge of the country, and the exertion he made to bring that knowledge prominently before other portions of the world, were of great service to Canada, and I have no doubt that the country at large appreciates the efforts of His Excellency in the speeches referred to, both in England and during his tour in Canada the previous year. As to the hon. gentleman's expression, that he hoped His Excellency's efforts in England would counteract the efforts of the Agent-General, I think it would be better not to have made that remark. Mr. Jenkins was a most zealous and devoted friend of Canada; and whatever fault may have been found by the hon. gentleman opposite, by newspapers in the interests of the Opposition, and by other public bodies and individuals, there can be no doubt whatever that he was extremely anxious and zealous in endeavouring to promote the interests of Canada, and I feel bound to bear testimony to the character of his efforts. The Government will not at present enter into explanations with regard to the course that they have pursued in connection with immigration matters, as the subject will come up at the proper time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Quite right.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I would not have referred to the Agent General at all at present, but for the remarks of the right hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman's remarks with regard to the railway are quite to the point, and the subject has occupied my serious attention and the attention of the Government. The running of the railway is a matter of great consequence to the country and serious embarrassment to the revenue; but such measures must be adopted by the Government and this House as will utilize to the best advantage the great public work for the benefit of the Provinces and the country, and no former difference between the hon. gentleman and myself respecting the route can be considered for a moment as determining our action with regard to this road. The immediate question to which he has called my attention now has especial reference to the terminus of the road at the western end, and that also has occupied the attention of the Government. The hon. gentleman regrets, in common with all others, the delay which has taken place in connection with the Fisheries Arbitration at Washington; but he seems to think that it will be possible for us to give some information to the House and to the country concerning the reasons which prevent the United States Government from taking the only step necessary in order to insure some progress being made. With reference to that I can only say we have no such information to communicate, and the allusion to it in the Speech from the Throne covers all that we have to say at present. The hon. gentleman says, in looking over the Speech he finds in this and other Speeches since our accession to office, that we have borne testimony to the wisdom of the late Administration, as we have not repealed their acts. He forgets that many measures of the late Government were measures that were really modelled and fashioned by ourselves when sitting on that side of the House. The hon. gentleman asserts, however, that some of his measures are now embalmed. An hon. gentleman behind me suggests that they cannot be embalmed until they are dead, so if the gentleman's measures are not in such a state it is due to the present Government, as they only remained as printed documents until passed by us; but it is not for me to find fault with the statement of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman points to the Speech from the Throne as a very innocent and harmless document. The hon. gentleman last Session also commented upon the meager bill of fare presented, but if he will observe the volume since printed he will find that the bill of fare was a large one, and an exceedingly important one, and I think if he compares our first volume with any of his own he will find that it was not exceeded in value by any volume during the time the hon. gentleman lead the House himself. I have anticipated some of the hon. gentleman's objections and have taken the trouble to look over former Speeches, and I find that there are very important, very remarkable things to be found therein. I find that the hon. gentleman during seven consecutive Sessions brought down a General Election Law; it never came up but once; then it disappeared like magic and never appeared again except in the Speech. As my hon. friend remembers, the Election Law was promised seven times in the Speech; the Court of Appeal was promised three times, the Insolvency Law was promised three times, the Inspection Laws were promised three times; a Dominion Board of Agriculture was promised three times; a measure on Banking was promised three times, and during the last Session of the hon. gentleman's Government he did not bring in a single new measure. They were all a mere repetition of former promises, and the hon. gentleman actually missed the only event of importance that took place during that Session. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman expresses the hope that the economy we have promised in controlling expenditures in every branch of the public service will not be of such a character as will retard the execution of works necessary for the prosperity of the country. The great public works commenced by the hon gentleman himself and his administration are in course of execution, and necessarily swells the interest on the public debt; and there will be a constant increase of taxation to meet that debt. But in all other matters I shall endeavor to see that no public interest shall suffer, although we are bound in a season like the present to avoid any expenditures that can be avoided and to curtail any expenditure where the revenue really fails, rather than impose taxation on the people in order to meet it. The hon. gentleman has referred to my remarks last Session regarding the latest Territorial Act, and he has expressed a hope to-day that having made a saving for this one year I need not put that Act into operation, or appoint a Governor to undertake the government of these Territories in the way provided by that Act. The right hon. gentleman would unfairly interfere; and implies that the Territory might remain in such a condition permanently, as it need require no supervision but that of the Government of Manitoba. But my impression of our duty is that we ought to have that country settled as fast as possible, with the great hope of making a transcontinental railway pass through there to throw in a large population into these Territories. We have been at a very great expense in maintaining British supremacy in these Territories, and we believe that it is absolutely necessary to have an authority within that section for the guidance of its affairs. Last season very nearly two thousand people settled outside the boundaries of the Province, and it is time we should consider how the Government of Manitoba can be relieved of the supervision of such a vast country. The seat of Government is too far distant, and in order to reach remote districts, it is necessary to have some supervision in the Territories. I may mention, for instance, in regard to these Territories, that we found a great deal of difficulty in preventing intoxicating liquors being introduced from the United States. We have succeeded, I believe, in that, and for the last six or nine months, we have reason to think that no liquor has been introduced by the Southern boundary.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.

The Mounted Police have effectually checked that illicit trade, but, singular as it may seem, we have actually found that United States traders have reached the district of the Peace River with large quantities of intoxicating liquors from Alaska, and have succeeded in that way in turning our flank, and producing the usual demoralising effects among the Indian tribes. I think it is of the very greatest importance that the British authority should be formally recognised and established among all the tribes of that country, and that they should be assured of our thorough and efficient protection of them, and the justice and liberality of the Canadian or British authorities. Therefore, we have considered this act so desirable. The reason for not placing it in operation I shall give on a future occasion, when I have to address the House on matters connected with that subject. My right hon. friend was somewhat jocular in his remarks upon the Manitoba terms. He thinks that he was right on former occasions, and that we are wrong because we propose to make some alterations in the terms of union of that Province. Well, Sir, the circumstances are not the same. I never took the ground that it was not desirable to consider the circumstances of any Province in such cases. What I wanted to urge at that time was upon entirely different ground, which I need not enter upon now. Suffice it to say that the Government feel it necessary to bring before Parliament the representations of the ministry of that Province. I am happy to say that they have shown the utmost desire to meet the views of the administration here in curtailing the expenditures. Canada has made very large outlays in that Province and neighboring territories year after year, and it is impossible to consider the position of a small Province struggling under financial difficulties, and having little local revenue of own, without also considering what is necessary for us to do in order to enable them to conduct the government. Great abuses undoubtedly prevailed in that Province some years ago, but these abuses, we have reason to believe, are not carried on at the present time—I mean as to expenditure; and if the Province will endeavor, as it seems inclined to do, to limit its disbursements to the smallest possible amount; and Parliament should be satisfied with their exertions, and that the representations they make are correct, then it is fair to consider what should be done under such circumstances. I don't know that I have anything further to add to-day. Upon all the measures of the Government I shall endeavor to be as explicit as possible in giving explanations; and while it may be quite true, as the right hon. gentleman remarked, that we are not lying upon a bed of roses, his statement, which of course he makes with the greatest possible regret, that troublesome thorns are causing us some uneasiness, will not hold. At any rate, I hope the right hon. gentleman's prediction will not seriously affect our peace, or seriously disturb the bed of roses which it seems, although his remarks would make it appear otherwise, he was very loth to leave when in power. I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman for the terms of his speech, and hope we shall endeavor to conduct the business of the session with that moderation which the right hon. gentleman has initiated to-day.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON — Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of my honorable friend, the First Minister, to a matter of very grave importance which has stirred the public mind, in the Province from which I come, to its very depths during the last two weeks; and before the first step in the business of legislation is taken in response to the speech, I think it but fair to him and to those who support him on the floor of this House, that he should be given an opportunity of making the explanation, which I am satisfied in my own mind he will be able to give, and which will be received by the country, or, at all events, by his friends, with the utmost satisfaction. I allude to the speech, which I cannot but characterize as an unfortunate one, made by the Postmaster-General in a neighbouring county not many weeks ago. The Postmaster-General was undoubtedly, and it was quite proper, detailed by my hon. friend, the First Minister, to explain the policy of the Government and to promote the interests of the Government in an important election then pending in the County of Argenteuil. Nothing can be more proper, Sir, than that a prominent public man should go into a county on an occasion of that kind to explain the policy of the Administration. It is perfectly consistent with the whole course of politics in this country and in other countries enjoying constitutional government. Well, if the Hon. Postmaster-General had defined or explained the general policy of the country (I had not the good fortune to hear him), we have never been made aware of it. But a passage of his speech was carefully reported and sent to the press of the country, by telegraph, in which he is represented to have made a very offensive attack upon the dignitaries of the Church of the great majority of the people of the Province of Quebec, and constituting a very large proportion of the people of this whole Dominion. He is reported to have made an appeal to the Protestants of Lower Canada, not as politicians or on political grounds, or the approved policy of the Government of which he is a member, but as Protestants, to effect objects I need not further describe. And he wound up that speech, Sir, by a declaration that these were his opinions, and that he was satisfied that they were the opinions of his party; and if he were not sustained in the expression of those opinions he would resign his position. Now, Sir, the whole importance of that speech arises from the circumstance that the hon. gentleman is a member of the Administration. If it had been made by a private member of either political party, certainly I, for one, would never have challenged the attention of the House to it. The whole importance of the hon. gentleman's utterance arises out of the fact that he is a member of the Administration. Two questions arise, and I desire to put them to my hon. friend with the utmost directness, being persuaded that he will answer them with the utmost directness. First, whether when the Postmaster-General left Ottawa, he had any inclination or had given to the Postmaster-General any instructions to take the line of remark to which I have now called the attention of the House; and, secondly, whether, not having given it, as I am satisfied is the fact, not even having any such inclination, he now approves of the substance of those remarks, or of the good taste, good judgment, and statesmanship of the Hon. Postmaster-General in making this utterance. These are the questions to which I desire to call the attention of the First Minister and of the House.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—My hon. friend from Chateauguay only mentioned a minute or two ago that he intended to put some questions to me, and I was not aware of their precise nature. He has put it specifically—whether the Postmaster-General had any conversation with me before leaving to take part in the election at Argenteuil regarding that particular passage of his speech? Well, Sir, if we had any conversation upon any subject affecting the Administration's policy in any way, I should say at once I would not under any circumstances mention anything about that conversation. It so happens, however, that we had no conversation about that or any other subject affecting the policy of the Administration, and that I was not aware of what subjects my hon. friend intended to speak upon. In fact, I did not know that he would go to Argenteuil at all. He went to Montreal on other business, and proceeded there as a political friend of the hon. gentleman who is now Member for the county. As to the second question—whether I approve of the speech, I have simply to say that I do not approve of anything that has a tendency to bring religion into public discussion in the politics of this country. I have a very strong opinion myself as an old Liberal, that as far as it is possible to do so, questions relating to Churches should be entirely separated from any discussion that may arise in Parliament. I am a believer, Sir, in the entire independence of each church, no matter by what name it may be called, and I am a believer in having Parliament in this country relieved from the discussion of any subject which may provoke reference to any religious questions. I think that is the right course to pursue, and, as I remarked in a published letter, the constitution of the country is eminently favorable to that procedure being carried out. I can only, therefore, express my regret at the remarks of my hon. friend, and the tone and interpretation given to them by many. So far as that interpretation and tone are concerned I have no sympathy with it, nor have I taken any part in public affairs which would at all involve my entering into a discussion on these subjects. I hope I have sufficiently expressed my own views as a member of the Administration. I believe that every Member of this House has a perfect right to discuss politically in his own Province local questions which may come up, that he may consider it a duty to do so, and that for their share in any such discussions members of this House are not to be held responsible here. With regard to the views enunciated by my hon. friend, the Postmaster-General, in his published letter, addressed to Mr. Power, of Halifax, in which he explained that he did not design any attack upon the Catholic Church in his speech, I have no doubt that this was the case, because I have too much faith in his own generous disposition, and correct appreciation of the public affairs of this country to believe that he could be a party to a desire to assail any religious denomination in the country. I hope Sir, that my hon. friend from Chateauguay is entirely satisfied with the explanation I have given.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON.—In reply to my hon. friend, the First Minister, I will say that I am entirely satisfied as to the good faith of his exposition of his own views, as they are my own views, but I venture to remind my hon. friend, that there is a solidarity of responsibility among Ministers, and that the declarations or utterances of private members of the House, or of private citizens, come within a very different category from the utterances upon public questions of Ministers of the Crown, especially when these utterances are clinched with the strong declaration that these opinions are shared by his Party, and that if they were not, that he could have no further connection with that Party. That was the point and the only point. I did not require, and I am sure that the House or the country did not require any explanations from my honorable friend of his own personal views on a matter of this kind. His career—his distinguished career, of many years standing, and the ground he has uniformly taken in public life, would have forbidden me supposing for one moment, that he could personally have been in sympathy with the attempt—the unfortunate attempt made by one of his colleagues to stir up religious strife in the Province of Quebec; and all that I felt at all interested to know was not whether my hon. friend shared these opinions, but whether he approved of the hon. gentleman's statement, that if his utterances were not endorsed by his Party, then his connection with that party must cease, and to say whether these utterances were really approved of by the head of the Administration. I infer however, and everybody will infer, from what my hon. friend has stated, that he does not approve of that speech—of the doctrine of that speech, and of the line of tactics which were, perhaps, to be inaugurated by that speech; but my hon. friend has stopped just a little short, and I should not have said so if he had not called me to my feet. He stopped just a little short of saying what I think he should say—whether he approved or disapproved of the substance of that speech, or of the time and occasion, and circumstances under which it was delivered.

Mr. MASSON (Terrebonne) — Mr. Speaker, I need not say, that I am exceedingly happy to find that my hon. friend, the member for Chateauguay, is not satisfied with the explanation given by the Hon. the Postmaster General in a letter which he lately published in the papers, and which letter was endorsed by a part of the French Canadian Liberal press of the Province of Quebec. And I am also happy to see that he, belonging to a ~~cred~~ different from ours, thinks that the action of the Postmaster General should be repudiated by every well-thinking Protestant in this community. I am sorry to see, Mr. Speaker, that in an explanation of this matter, the Prime Minister, after one of his colleagues had taken upon himself to state at a public meeting, that though not authorized to speak in the name of his colleagues, nevertheless, he was so sure of their opinion in favor of his views as to say, that he would leave the Government if his speech was not endorsed. I am sorry to see, that the Hon. Minister of Public Works, the Leader of this Government, the gentleman to whom we are obliged to look up, should have stood up in his place to discuss such a question, instead of avoiding the difficulty of coming before Parliament and discussing this question by dealing characteristically and immediately with the offence, or else his place should not be at the head of affairs in this country. It is necessary in a country so situated as ours, and a matter of the highest importance, that men of the greatest moderation should manage our affairs. Mr. Speaker, it might not have been the proper time on the debate on the Address, as my right hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, said, and with our strong sympathies, to discuss this important question, but it has made a great noise in the Province of Quebec, and has stirred up the whole people; and we, the French Canadian Conservatives of the Province of Quebec, have been accused of being a priest-ridden population. Well, Sir, there are in every party, there are in every creed, there are in every nationality, fanatics; and there are also men who, though they are not fanatics, are sometimes carried away by their passions, or by the peculiar circumstances in which they are placed, and say things which they would not say under other circumstances; but certainly we could never have suspected that a Minister of the Crown would have made use of such expressions as the hon. gentleman has employed in the Province of Quebec. That hon. gentleman next sent forth a letter, with the aid of what we would call a compère in French, stating that his attack on Conservatives and on the Ultramontanes of Lower Canada—of the Province of Quebec—was not a religious attack, but that it was a political attack. Well, Sir, did Mr. Huntington say that the time had come when the English-speaking Liberals—no, but when the English-speaking Protestants should ally themselves with the French-speaking Liberals of Lower Canada—and this was the only reason given, that it was in the interest of free thought, and of free speech. Now, if the hon. gentleman can say after using this phrase, in whatever letters he may have written for the public, and in whatever speeches he may make, that this was only a political speech I leave it to the good sense of this House to decide whether these expressions, coming from a public man who is discussing public questions on their merits, does not show a desire to introduce religious controversies into our political discussions. Now, sir, the hon. gentleman says in his letter,—whatever complaint might be made of his personal views—the party with which I act was controlled by a power which declared that free thought was a cardinal sin. Well, sir, I say that this is no more nor less than a slander on the Conservative party; and as a Conservative, and as an Ultramontane,—or, as I am called by the hon. gentleman on the other side of the House from the Province of Quebec, as the Leader of the Ultramontanes—I say, that the Conservatives in the Province of Quebec—and I speak advisedly—are ready to give to the Clergy of the Province, in religious questions, that submission and that confidence which according to our creed we are obliged to give to them; and regarding questions relating to the material progress of the country, and the political affairs of the country, we are ready, and shall always be ready, to give to the opinions of these gentlemen that respect to which they are entitled, owing to their high intelligence, their great virtue, and their disinterestedness; but we are not ready to give any more. It has been stated by the Liberals of the Province of Quebec, the allies of the honourable gentleman—and I am sorry for it—and it has been repeated by the honourable gentleman, in other words, that the clergy of the country had nothing to do but remain in their vestries; but we, the Conservatives of Lower Canada, say boldly, that we do not believe in that doctrine at all; and we appeal to the members of this House, and to the whole country, to both Liberals and Conservatives, Catholics and Protestants, whether, under certain difficult circumstances, this principle would be right, and whether, if the clergy of Lower Canada had remained in their vestries, we would belong, to-day, to the noble Empire of England. I ask you, gentlemen, belonging to different nationalities as you do, and to different creeds as you do, whether if these gentlemen had not come out of their vestries, and told the people of Lower Canada, not only what was their right towards Him to whom they are obliged to pay worship, but also what was their duty towards their Queen and towards their country, this country would form a part of the British Empire; and I say that it does not become any Protestant coming from the Province of Quebec, who is acquainted with that circumstance, to reproach us for being priest-ridden, and declare that our priests should remain wholly in their vestries. Now, sir, I say more—and let us consider the matter in that sense—whether we are priest-ridden or not; I tell the Hon. the Postmaster General, that this is none of his business; and and that it is not the business of any man who does not profess our creed, no more than it is any of our business to interfere with your opinions, or the opinions of those who profess a different creed from ours; and the way in which they form those opinions, so long as our brethren of different creeds, notwithstanding the high attainments of their clergy, do not wish to follow their instructions and do not wish to follow their guidance, is their own lookout. So long as they wish to follow the guidance of another class of men, it is, again, their lookout. The only thing that we have to do is to see that the influence exercised does not result in anything that may be detrimental to us, but further we have nothing to say. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I will appeal to the Protestants of Lower Canada to tell us whether this is not the case. It is nothing to you who influences our opinions, and it is nothing to you whence we take our instructions, so far as these instructions result in that liberal and tolerant policy which every French Canadian and every Catholic in the Province of Quebec is ready to give to all our fellow-countrymen to whatever creed or nationality they may belong. Sir, I remember a fact in my political life, which has not been very lengthy, and that is, that I have never had occasion to speak of religion on the hustings but once in my life, and are you aware under what circumstances this occurred? It was not on an occasion when I appealed to the religious feelings of my countrymen against a Protestant—that I have never done; but it was when I was appealing to the feelings of my Catholic fellow-countrymen in favour of a Protestant. I was telling them what was their duty with reference to a gentleman who was accused of being a Freemason, and of having in consequence no right to sit in this House. I then told them that in this country we were bound to live amicably one with another, and that we must take the Protestants as they are. You must take us with our Catholicism, with our feelings, with our principles, and with our prejudices, and we are to do the same thing with you. I told my fellow-countrymen of the Catholic creed it is understood that a Protestant should be elected—a Protestant who is to be chosen possessing his own ideas and principles; and that if his own creed and his own belief does not forbid him being a Freemason, they had no right to look further than at his political career, and so you must elect him on his own merits. And by whom was I opposed, Mr. Speaker—by the Liberals of Lower Canada, who said, that it would be a disgrace to elect a gentleman who was a Freemason, and I am happy to say, sir, that these Ultramontane prelates, of whom the hon. gentleman speaks in such a flip-pant way, have endorsed the position which the Ultramontane Catholics took at Montreal in connection with the election at which Mr. White was a candidate.

Mr. MASSON.

Mr. DEVLIN—Will the hon. gentleman explain what he means by the term Ultramontane Catholics?

Mr. MASSON—I think that the hon. gentleman had better ask that question of the Hon. Postmaster General, or the hon. member for Halifax: Now, sir, in the speech of the hon. gentleman, we find this phrase: "The great battle was imminent; it undoubtedly would be fought, and fought soon." A great battle between whom, gentlemen—between the Conservatives, and the English Liberals of the Province of Quebec? No, sir, but a great battle, which is to be fought between the Conservatives of the Province of Quebec, and the Protestants of the Province of Quebec; that is the way in which the speech of the hon. gentleman was worded and he can never get out of that position, and I dare say that the Government cannot get out of it. But there is more in the speech of the hon. gentleman than appears on the surface. There is more—and this is ingratitude, coming from a Protestant of the Province of Quebec, ingratitude towards the Conservative Party; these are his words: "the intolerance displayed by the Conservatives of Lower Canada during the last few years, was the result of the fealty, by which the English speaking people had strengthened the Ultramontanes." Well, Mr. Speaker, I will ask any Protestant of the Province of Quebec; I will ask my hon. friend, the Member for Chateauguay, who represents a constituency composed of Catholics and Protestants, and he is a gentleman equally beloved by both; I will ask him as a gentleman of the Province of Quebec—he is a party man, and will be ready to give his opinion for the Protestants of the Province of Quebec—have the Protestants a right to reproach the Conservatives of that Province with intolerance, have they a right to reproach such men as the regretted Sir George Etienne Cartier, our lamented Leader, with intolerance? I will tell him this, that since Confederation the Protestants of Quebec have received justice from the Conservative more than they would have received from the Liberals, and I can prove it. At the framing of the Confederation Act the Protestants were apprehensive that their rights and privileges would not be secure, and they asked beforehand that the representation of the Province should not be changed by less than a three-fourths vote of the legislature. They feared that the Protestant population might be deprived of a certain number of their representatives. They did not grant that request, but Sir George Cartier and my hon. friend the member for Charlevoix came forward and said: "It is humiliating that we should have special terms proposed to us, but we will do anything that we can to prevent your privileges being interfered with." And what did the Liberals do? They voted that the Protestants of Quebec should not have that privilege, and one Conservative member abandoned his party allegiance, refusing to follow Sir George Cartier, and voting against the Government, who were desirous of meeting the wishes of the Protestants. I ask the Postmaster General if, after such an act on the part of the Conservatives, he has a right to reproach them as he has done? Then, with regard to immigration, the Leader of the Opposition has spoken of Mr. Edward Jenkins. When the Confederation Act was framed, Sir A. T. Galt, who was then the leader of the Protestants of Quebec, believed that if the immigration question was left entirely to the Local Legislatures, we in Quebec, would discourage it. He required that it should be left to the concurrent jurisdiction of the Dominion and Local Legislatures. Our leader, Sir George Cartier, submitted to this second humiliation, and agreed to give them this right, which was more than a right, and I say it is ungrateful of the Postmaster General to say what he has said. There was another question of vital importance—education. Again Mr. Galt had apprehensions if the Protestant minority were left to the tender mercy of the Catholics that they would not be fairly treated. He required, before the Confederation Act was passed, that a Bill should be enacted giving to the Protestants all the rights they desired in case they should not get them later. The number who moved to give them that right was the hon. gentleman from Charlevoix, another of those reactionary Ultramontanes. The whole thing failed only because a member from the Province of Ontario moved that similar rights be given to the Catholics of that Province. The measure was lost on account of the opposition of the Liberals of Ontario, and not of the Conservatives. On that occasion the present Leader of the Opposition, while being unflinching in guarding the rights of Ontario, when the interests of his co-religionists in Quebec were at stake, was willing to give us equal rights. He stood by us when Mr. Howland and Mr. McDougall abandoned us. Even lately, only a few months ago that reactionary, that Ultramontane ministry of Mr. DeBoucherville, has given the greatest proof of its liberality to the Protestant population of this country, A deputation of Protestants went to Quebec and asked that ultra-Catholic Government to give them a special asylum for the insane. The Protestant ministers and medical attendants came forward and signed letters showing their co-religionists had all the liberty they wanted and were put on the same footing as the Catholics in that Catholic institution. Mr. DeBoucherville said, notwithstanding, that if they were not satisfied he was ready to do the utmost he could for them. I say, then, it is unkind on the part of the hon. gentleman to use such an expression towards the Ultramontanes of Quebec and call them reactionary. The Hon. Premier has tried, in a letter sent to the public, and he is still trying to-day to smoothe down this speech. In his letter he says hardly any question involving religion can arise in this country. If that is the case why did he allow or why does he not disapprove of the speech of the Postmaster General, who to-day, comes and makes an appeal to the Protestants of Quebec against the Conservatives. If there is nothing to separate as on religious and spiritual grounds, how is it that the Postmaster General comes before the public and calls upon the Protestants to unite against the Conservatives? And how is it that the hon. gentleman, knowing the feeling of the Protestant population of Quebec and of the whole Dominion, instead of saying he disapproves of the Postmaster General's remarks, says the hon. gentleman was not understood? If he was not, it is because the English language cannot be well understood. The Prime Minister has given as his political belief that equal justice should be extended to everybody in this country irrespective of creed or religion. This is not the first time I have heard the sentiment; but I may add, if we wish peace and harmony to exist among the different creeds that divide this country, we must make up our minds to attend to our own business. When difficulties arise among Protestants, let it be well understood among Catholics that we are not to interfere with them unless the discussion affects us, and Catholics humbly require that when things relating exclusively to their creed are debated, Protestants shall not interfere so long as there is nothing in our opinions or actions that can be detrimental to the Protestant population of this country. Thereby, there will be tranquility in this country; but so long as there is interference like that of the hon. gentleman with matters that he does not understand, there will be discord. In his speech he knew everything about what is Ultramontane and what is not. He told us that the Ultramontanes are dwindling down every day, as, for instance, in Charlevoix. He receives a rebuke from the Catholics, gets frightened, and says: "I made a great mistake. The Ultramontanes are all the Catholics. I was not attacking Catholics, but Catholic politicians." There is no difference of opinion among the Catholics of Quebec. We signed the famous Programme, but in that we expressed our willingness to give to our fellow-countrymen of all creeds everything that we asked for ourselves. This is the tolerance shown to our Protestant fellow subjects, and what is granted by the Conservatives of Quebec. So long as our views are followed, the interests of the Protestants in Quebec will be as safe in the future as they have been in the past, or as they could be among the Protestants themselves.

Mr. Masson.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON (in French)—On my arrival at Ottawa, towards the middle of January, I presented myself without delay, at the office of the First Minister to inform him that the discourse of the Hon. Postmaster General, at Lachute, placed me in a false position as a Catholic; that I could not admit the doctrines enunciated, as I understood them, and that in consequence I desired to know whether the Hon. Minister, on that occasion, did or did not convey the sentiments of the Government, and if the latter was responsible for the words he there uttered. The First Minister replied, without hesitation, that the Hon. Postmaster General had spoken for himself only, at Lachute, and not as the mouth-piece of the Government, and that consequently the Government was in nowise responsible for what he had said. Thus the responsibility of the Government as a whole, and the solidarity of each of its members was found to be disengaged. The Hon. Postmaster General is evidently mistaken as to the meaning attributed to certain expressions used in this country. The words Ultramontanism and Gallicanism, which belong to another epoch, have no longer their raison d'être, since Catholics, without exception, recognize the sovereign authority of Rome in matters of religion. But Catholic Liberalism, which is more modern, at least in name, is the affirmation of the right of discussion in the Church. But this doctrine I, as a Catholic, ought to repudiate, and I do repudiate it with all the solemnity and all the energy of which I am capable. As a Catholic I must also say that I allow to the Church all authority in spiritual questions, all rights in its necessary relations with civil society, its absolute independence in its sphere of action, the superiority of its character by reason of the superiority of its object, and its right to the protection of civil society in the exercise of its functions. Liberal—or, if you will, Reformer in politics, I am not so in religion, where, for me, everything is unchangeable; and when my title of Catholic shall become incompatible with that of Minister of State, the choice will for me be easy. But happily we have not yet come to that, for at the side of religious society exists civil society with its own distinct attributes. On this neutral ground, men of all creeds and origins can meet and work together for the material well-being of the country. One may remain Catholic, as well as one's neighbor, without, for all that, partaking of his opinions upon the administration of public affairs; one may differ with him upon questions of canalization, of railways, of tariffs, and of general commerce, without ceasing to be with him in religion. This is, in short, the view I take of the two orders of things and their relations with each other, and if I am wrong I have on my side common sense, the nature of things, and even the Church itself, which proclaims the independence and distinctness of the two societies for their respective ends.

Mr. MASSON—Does the President of the Council approve or disapprove of the speech, made by the hon. the Postmaster General? Does he approve or disapprove—yes or no?

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—The hon. member makes a great deal of noise. My declaration has been clear and distinct, and he will get nothing further from me. If he does not understand it that is not my fault.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—The Hon. President of the Council has not made his speech in English. The great majority of the Members of this House have heard the remarks of my hon. friend, the member for Terrebonne, but the great majority of the members do not understand French. The Premier, in English, in his own language, has made a declaration, and the hon. the President of the Council, but not in English, has declared that when he came to take his place in the Cabinet he read the speech of the hon. the Postmaster General, and was so greatly scandalized, and took the matter so much to heart, affecting as it did the principles to which he was attached, that he went at once to the Hon. the First Minister, and telling him that this statement placed him in an excessively false position as President of the Council, and that he could not accept the doctrine enunciated by the Hon. the Postmaster General, demanded whether the Hon. the Postmaster-General, had spoken in his own name; and the Hon. the President of the Council informs this honorable House, that the First Minister replied, that the Postmaster General had spoken for himself alone, and that consequently he did not accept the responsibility of what he said.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON.

Also, that under these circumstances, the President of the Council was perfectly satisfied from the moment he learned that the responsibility rested solely upon the shoulders of the Postmaster General; but why did the Hon. the President of the Council say to this House, and say to the country, and especially to the Province of Quebec which he represents, or is supposed to represent, in the Government—that the First Minister repudiated the language used by the Postmaster General; but he does not repudiate it. The First Minister did not say that he would not accept the responsibility of the speech made by the Postmaster General, but simply that the Postmaster General spoke in his own name. The First Minister has not said that he repudiated this language, or disavowed any sympathy with the insult levelled at the Catholic population of the entire country. No, he has not done so; and the First Minister has, moreover, to-day, only declared that the Postmaster General spoke in his own name; but, nevertheless, the President of the Council, the representative of Lower Canada in the Council, for he is supposed to represent the population of the Province of Quebec in the Cabinet, has not properly resented the insult aimed at the Catholic population of the Dominion and the Bishops of Lower Canada, and abandons the great principles which he professes at least to entertain and support. An attempt is made to interrupt me, but hon. members would do well to remain quiet. When the Hon. the President of the Council spoke, no one interrupted him, and when others take up the debate, they should not be interrupted. I hope that in this House there is freedom of speech, and that my countrymen from the Province of Quebec will be granted a fair hearing. Of course, hon. members, when they think that the argument is going against their leader, the hon. the President of the Council, may be inclined to interrupt and to prevent members from seizing the ideas which I am placing before the House, but they may depend upon it that nothing will be lost. Mr. Speaker, as I was stating when interrupted by hon. members, the hon. the President of the Council, despite the great principles which he at least professes to hold, has expressed these opinions and remains in the same Cabinet at the side of the Hon. the Postmaster General who has insulted the Roman Catholics of Lower Canada, and the Bishops of Lower Canada, for whom he says he has so great a respect, and, I hope that this sentiment of respect is as strong as he pretends. At all events he remains in the Cabinet at the side of the Postmaster General and of the First Minister, who does not repudiate sympathy with that which has been said by the Postmaster General at Argenteuil, and he does not show to the prelates of the Province of Quebec the respect which he pretends to feel for them. Mr. Speaker, I cannot approve of the course taken by the Hon. the President of the Council, who does not say, that because the First Minister declared that the Postmaster General spoke in his own and in his private name there is no responsibility attached, for at least the President of the Council should have shown enough respect for the population of Lower Canada, which he is supposed to represent in the Cabinet, to say to the First Minister—"If you keep this man in the Cabinet—if you retain as your colleague him who has insulted my countrymen and my co-religionists and the Roman Catholic Bishops of this country, I will be compelled to resign the position I hold in the Government." But has the President of the Council done this? No! he intends to act as he has acted in the past; he finds himself on the Ministerial benches, and there he intends to remain, for this position has cost him dearly enough, and he is determined to retain it. Mr. Speaker, the population of Lower Canada will know how to appreciate at his proper value the Hon. the President of the Council, their only present representative in the Cabinet, for the other representative of the Province of Quebec in the Government is absent from the House through illness—a circumstance which I am bound to add I infinitely regret, but the responsibility of the Hon. the President of the Council is not, on that account, less great, because he alone represents his countrymen and co-religionists of Lower Canada in the Cabinet, and more particularly with reference to a question so important as this. Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to find the hon. Member for Chateaugay raising the question without delay and asking the Leader of the Cabinet whether he repudiated the language his colleague the Postmaster General made use of in the county of Argenteuil, and I regret the fact, that notwithstanding all the influence which the hon. member for Chateaugay has with the First Minister and with the hon. Members who sit beside him, he has been unable to obtain a direct answer from the First Minister, for the First Minister does not give a satisfactory answer to the question put to him; and there is but one conclusion to draw from this circumstance, and this is, that the First Minister in his soul and conscience does not condemn the principles held and language used by the Postmaster General in the county of Argenteuil. There is no other conclusion to be drawn from the language of the hon. the First Minister, and this is confirmed by his silence now, for if in point of fact he really has no sympathy with the Postmaster General's speech, why did he not say so frankly and firmly, and tranquillize the Catholic population of the entire country, repudiating sympathy with the Minister who has disturbed the minds of the population of this country by his language and sought to excite a religious war in Lower Canada, and declaring that he does not echo these sentiments. Has not the First Minister in this relation a duty to fulfil; and has not the Hon. the President of the Council a duty to fulfil? The President of the Council explains what he understands as the meaning of the words Catholic and Liberal Catholic; and he tells us, that he recognizes for the priests and bishops of Lower Canada, and priests and bishops generally, the absolute right of taking action with reference to religious affairs, but not of interfering with reference to the construction of public works and matters of that kind; and, he states, that we can differ in opinion with our neighbors touching these questions, without ceasing to be Catholic. There is no difficulty about that, but the Hon. the President of the Council is playing upon words, for he knows that the reason why the Postmaster General spoke as he did in the county of Argenteuil, was because he pretended, that the Catholic clergy—the priests and the bishops—interfere in the elections; and why should they not interfere in the elections? As citizens, they have the right to take part in elections, and they simply claim the right of exercising a citizen's privilege I would like to see the Postmaster General or the Cabinet take away from the Catholic clergy the right of counselling citizens respecting public matters in their capacity as citizens of this country. But, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member goes further: the Hon. the President of the Council says that the priests cannot express opinions regarding material questions, such as the making of canals, and the construction of other public works. It is well known, however, that at all sessions of this House, other questions than these are submitted for consideration—questions with which religion has certainly some connection, and regarding which priests have assuredly something to say, if the priest have the right to interfere in and make known to his co-religionists his opinions upon matters touching the doctrines of the Catholic Church. But there is another and a stronger reason why he should take part in and exercise his influence upon elections, and this is the right they all claim, and this is the right which I am convinced my co-religionists of Lower Canada and my co-religionists of the other Provinces, will never withhold. Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives are attacked, and it is alleged that we are not as well disposed towards the Protestants as the Liberals who sit on the other side of the House, but on all occasions and at all periods in our history have we not only granted to the Protestants of Lower Canada their rights, but even more than their rights, and we have done so with the greatest pleasure and the greatest good-will in the world, while the clergy of the country—the Catholic clergy—have always been disposed to sustain the same doctrine and do justice to the Protestant population of Lower Canada. I would refer, in this regard, to a time when neither Conservatives nor Liberals, Bleus nor Rouges existed, a few years after the conquest of this country by England, when we had but recently emerged from a great struggle between the two great nations, France and England, and this country had been transferred to and placed under the rule of England. At the period to which I make allusion the American revolution was raging, and the French King had sent an army to the assistance of England's revolted colonists. The word of command was given on our frontier in the struggles with the British troops, in the French language, and the White Flag of France which had floated over this country and over the walls of Quebec thirteen years previously, waived over the French reinforcements sent to the aid of the Americans. A prelate of the Roman Catholic Church over the frontier further made an appeal to the Roman Catholics, the French Canadians of Lower Canada, to range themselves under the banner of France and fight for their religion, and for their former King. What was the answer which the French Canadians—my ancestors and our ancestors—returned to that appeal and to the French commands? What did we do when we saw the White Flag of France on the other side of the frontier? Did we hasten to betray our King? Were we eager to betray the flag which then floated over us, and which now floats over us, and I must say I am glad that it does float over us. What was the reply of the hierarchy, and the Catholic Bishop of Quebec? What was the reply of the Roman Catholic Bishops of the present Province of Quebec? Did they say that they would follow the advice of the venerable prelate who made such an appeal from the country which became the United States? No, sir; they said to their flocks: the King of England now rules over you, and your flag is the flag of England; that King and that flag you must defend. And, Sir, that King and that flag were defended, and we remained a British Colony. The country remained in the possession of England, and remained under the flag of Protestant England; yet we are told that we have done injustice to the Protestants, and that we are not inclined to grant them their rights. Mr. Speaker, on each occasion when the rights of the Protestants have been in question, we have recognized them—we have acted with the greatest liberality in their regard, and we have never regretted it.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN.

At this point, the hour being six, the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN continued in English as follows: I think that under the circumstances it is fair that the House should know what was the substance of what the hon. gentleman has stated in French. The Hon. President of the Council says that after his election he came to take his seat in the Privy Council, and that on his way up to Ottawa he read the speech made at Argenteuil by the Hon. Postmaster General. He said that he was shocked with the remarks of the Hon. Postmaster General, and he went immediately, on his arrival at Ottawa, to the First Minister and told him that the speech of the Hon. Postmaster General had placed him, the President of the Council, in a very false position, and that he could not accept the doctrines propounded in that speech. He requested the First Minister to say whether the Postmaster General had spoken in his own name or in the name of the Government. The President of the Council goes on to say that the First Minister told him that the Postmaster General spoke for himself and himself only, and that consequently he, the Premier, did not accept the responsibility of what had been said by the Postmaster General. Now, Mr. Speaker, compare that declaration with the statement made just now by the First Minister. We found that the First Minister in his explanations says that he did not approve of anything that would bring religious matters into the political discussions of this country. That was about all he said, as far as I could catch his words. Well, that is the only objection made by the First Minister to the speech. He did not say he did not take the responsibility of the speech. He did not answer squarely the member for Chateauguay whether he approved of the tenor of the remarks made by the Hon. Postmaster General. No, he would not answer although the member for Chateauguay reiterated his question and declared that he was not satisfied, and also that there should be a plain answer to a plain question. Notwithstanding the answer was not forthcoming we find from the President of the Council that the First Minister told him that the Postmaster General had spoken for himself, and consequently he, the First Minister, did not take the responsibility.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—That is quite correct.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—Of course I did not say that it was not correct; I assumed that it was correct. The First Minister just said what I have read, and his friend, the President of the Council, made another statement. Of course I only compare the two statements to show what the opinions of the two gentlemen are; I did not attack their correctness. It is very important that we should know whether these utterances are the utterances of the Government or those of the Postmaster General only. He has attacked the hierarchy of Lower Canada, and the hierarchy of the whole Dominion, and he has attacked the Catholics from one end of the country to the other. He has made an unfortunate attempt to stir up religious strife. As the hon. member for Chateauguay has stated, he has made a very offensive attack on a large body of the citizens of our country. He has made an appeal, so says the hon. member for Chateauguay, to the Protestants of Quebec; and that hon. gentleman, the Postmaster General, sits alongside of the First Minister of the Crown, and the Hon. President of the Council sits on the other hand, that great, that old defender of the religious rights of the Roman Catholics in times past. He is ready to reap all the benefits of the war which the Postmaster General wants to excite against the Roman Catholics. Mr. Speaker, why should we be so attacked and insulted by the Postmaster General; why should he try to have us placed under suspicion and excite feelings of hostility between us and the large body of Protestants of this country? I was glad that it was a Protestant from Lower Canada, the hon. member for Chateauguay, who brought up this question, and that on behalf of the Protestants of that section. I have no doubt that he could not sanction such doctrines as those propounded by the Postmaster General, and that he wanted his friend, the First Minister, as the Leader of the Liberal party, to disavow the doctrines. What have we done to his co-religionists to be insulted? Have we done him any injustice or refused the Protestants anything to which they are entitled? Have we not, on the contrary, always with great pleasure given them more than they asked for? Did we not, long ago, give them the same rights as we had for separate schools? Can they not educate their children with as much ease as we can? Is it not a fact that three or four weeks ago the Government of Lower Canada gave to the Protestants a Council of Public Instruction for their own Schools, and a President of the Board separate from the Roman Catholic Board. They have control of their schools, and we have given them everything they wanted; and yet, the Hon. Postmaster-General, in his speech at Argenteuil, says that will not do; he must put the Church under his feet—he must destroy the influence of the Roman Catholic hierarchy and the Roman Catholic clergy of Canada. Mr. Speaker, we remained a British Colony; we remained a dependency of a Protestant country, and yet we are told that we are fanatics, that we want to put down, Protestants, and that we are such firebrands that we must be put down; we must be trampled upon; that the power of this Government must be used to put us down. That is what the Postmaster General says in his speech, and it is not denied by the President of the Council nor the Premier. The former sits there with the Postmaster General, and he must share the responsibility of that speech. Mr. Speaker, in our days we have had to deal with questions in which the Protestants of Lower Canada were also interested. When Confederation was about to take place, the Protestants of Lower Canada—some of them—were afraid that in the division of the country into Provinces, and the powers about to be given to the Local Legislatures, being in the minority, they would be at the mercy of the French, and they asked for protection in the Confederation Act. They asked that twelve counties should be considered as British counties—English Counties—and that the limits of these Counties should not be disturbed without the consent of a large majority of the members for these counties. Mr. Speaker, that law was considered offensive in the view of many. That it was so we were convinced. It was an unjust suspicion; but, notwithstanding that, in order to show our liberality, in order that they would come into the Confederation, and to assure them that their rights would be protected under the new regime by the the Federation Act, and that they might not fear the religious legislation of Quebec, we assented to it. The Conservatives that were supporting us assented to it; but there were exceptions. The hon. gentleman, the present President of the Council, if I am not mistaken, voted against that clause, and I think it was the first Liberal vote he gave in his life. Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, a good many Liberals of Lower Canada voted also against that clause, but we, the Conservatives, supported it, and I can say we regarded it ever since, so that we never had a complaint from either party, but all was unanimity with them until the Postmaster-General raised the cry the other day that the Protestants in Lower Canada were in danger. The hon. gentleman for Terrebonne called attention to another fact, that previous to Confederation the question of education for Lower Canada came up. Sir A. T. Galt, at that time Finance Minister, desired that a measure might then be adopted in order that the separate school question might be completed, although separate schools already existed in Lower Canada. I introduced the bill in this House, and my colleagues would have supported it if another measure had not been brought from the Province of Ontario which prevented the Lower Canada measure from being passed, because in Ontario a large majority did not wish that bill to pass,

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN.

although it would have quieted the minds of a large portion of the people of Quebec. My late lamented friend, Sir George Cartier, pledged his word of honor that when the Province of Quebec would be constituted he would see that a measure, similar to that introduced by me in this House, would be introduced in the Lower Canada Legislature and that it would be passed. The Protestants of Lower Canada were not afraid of the word of Sir George Cartier; it was as good as law to them. Confederation took place. Unfortunately Sir George Cartier was absent during the whole session in which this measure should have been introduced; he was in England, but in that measure did we break faith with the Protestants of Lower Canada? No, the bill was introduced by the Chauveau Government, and it was supported by me and opposed by the hon. gentleman who is now President of the Council; that measure which the Protestants wished to have was supported and defended by us to redeem the word of Sir George Cartier and to do justice to them. Mr. Speaker, this is not all. How many times have we not seen the Lower Canadian counties, Roman Catholic counties, French Canadian counties elect members of other origin and of another faith, and even elect them against Roman Catholics and French Canadians. The other day, in the county of Chicoutimi and in Saguenay, there was a Roman Catholic—a French Canadian—who came forward, and he was supported in that county by the late member for Charlevoix. Mr. W. Price, brother of the senator, came forward—an English Protestant—and he was supported by a large majority of the Catholic votes of that county. Mr. Price himself was elected by Chicoutimi and Saguenay, and also by Charlevoix and Montmorency—elected by that immense division, to the Legislative Council, over the Hon. Letellier de St. Just, a French Canadian and Roman Catholic. And this is the persecution we carry on against the Protestants of Lower Canada. But, Mr. Speaker, there is an hon. member sitting on the other side of this House, the hon. member for Beauce, he is not a Roman Catholic, he is a Protestant and has been elected by a Roman Catholic constituency. Is that persecution by the Roman Catholics? My hon. friend the member for Three Rivers is also elected by a large majority. He is not a Roman Catholic, but he is elected by a French Canadian Catholic constituency. Then the leader of the Liberals in the Province of Quebec. By whom is he elected? By a Protestant constituency? No, by the county of Lotbiniere, where I suppose there are not ten Protestants, and he has been repeatedly elected by acclamation. Then there is the Hon. Mr. Nelson elected repeatedly by Roman Catholics, and Mr. W. R. Ross elected by Beauce two or three times. I am sure my hon. friend the member for Chateauguay also thinks that he is not persecuted by the Roman Catholics of Lower Canada. He has been elected repeatedly by a large majority of Roman Catholic votes. Then the hon. gentleman who was introduced this afternoon—the member for Gaspé—he is not a Roman Catholic and he is elected by a Roman Catholic constituency, and no doubt he will be elected for it as long as he wishes to take his seat in this House. In order to destroy the impression of that “unfortunate speech,” as the hon. member for Chateauguay calls it, I mention this. I think it is a speech that the hon. gentleman will regret as long as he lives—this attempt to destroy the harmony that has continued so long, not only in Lower Canada but throughout the Dominion. At all events the Government of Lower Canada were determined that the Protestants should have justice and they will not endorse the sentiments of the Hon. Postmaster-General but will repudiate them as sentiments that should never have been uttered. Mr. Speaker, we have not claimed anything that is not right; we have not claimed as rights anything that should not have been claimed. What do we ask? The hon. gentleman says the Roman Catholic Clergy interfere in elections; that is the basis of his argument; that is the reason why he scents “war” in Lower Canada. But what do the hierarchy, what do the Priests, what do the Roman Catholics of Lower Canada do? Do they act differently from what the Roman Catholic Priests in Ontario do? Are they not citizens of Canada, with the rights of citizenship? Does any one wish to deprive the hon. gentleman of his rights as a citizen? Then why does he wish to deprive our Bishops and Priests of their rights? Surely the Government will not try to do such an injustice as to deprive a large and respectable body of gentlemen of their rights; those rights they must have and must keep, and no doubt shall keep. But the hon. gentleman the President of the Council gives the support of his voice, his name and his position to this; he wishes to make a separation between Church and State; he wishes to show that the Priests and the Bishops must confine themselves to religious matters; that is to say, all these matters that belong to the Church, and that are treated in the Church, in the pulpit and in the vestry. But he says when you are to build canals or legislate on matters of public works surely you can differ from your neighbour and be a Catholic the same as before. I know, and he knows that in this House, and in the Local Legislature, we have not only to deal with canals, railways and public works, but we will have other matters—for instance, the question of divorce, which is considered by our Church as a matter in which the Church has a great deal to say. Will the hon. gentleman say that the Priests shall have nothing to say in this matter which is against the teachings of his Church? Surely as a citizen he should recognize the Roman Catholic clergy and their right in this question, in which they exercise so much influence for the good of their country. You have never seen the Roman Catholic clergy of Quebec disloyal; they have always upheld the supremacy of Great Britain in this country, and the Mother Country never had, and never will have, more thoroughly loyal and devoted subjects than the priests of Lower Canada and of the Dominion. I do not want to detain the House much longer, but I must repeat that it is unfortunate that the Hon. the First Minister of the Crown should not come down and say openly whether the doctrines propounded by the Postmaster General are the doctrines that he professes. As long as the Postmaster

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN.

General sits alongside of him in the same Cabinet he is responsible for his opinions as a Minister of the Crown. These statements have been made by the hon. gentleman, and he has stated that they were the views of his colleagues, that they were the doctrines of his colleagues, and if they were otherwise he would certainly resign his seat. Has he resigned his seat? Has he gone out of the Government? Has he repudiated these doctrines? No, he has not; he remains there, the same doctrines remain there, the same wish on the part of the First Minister to retain the Roman Catholics in Lower Canada is there, yet the President of the Council remains and supports him. He has been called upon by the hon. member for Terrebonne to say whether the First Minister accepts these doctrines or not; but I need not say a word more than the written declaration that he read to the House. He was so afraid of uttering a word that would compromise his colleagues about these doctrines that he would not risk himself otherwise than by a written speech. It is a proper thing the country should know that the Hon. President of the Council, when called upon by members of this House and of his own Province—when called upon to speak—could not give an answer. Mr. Speaker, Lower Canada will know it, and the answer from the people will, no doubt, be of the same character as the answer Lower Canada has given since the speech of the Postmaster General. The first answer was given in Chambly, where the people said it was an unfortunate speech, and sent to this House a member to oppose the Government. The county of Charlevoix has given the same answer. They repudiated the member who had so long supported the hon. gentleman opposite, brought down his majority of 700, and elected me by a majority of 211.

Mr. DEVLIN—The question submitted by the hon. member for Chateauguay has evoked a discussion which imposes upon me the obligation of offering a few remarks on the subject before it is finally disposed of. I am not surprised at the question submitted by the honourable gentleman. I am aware that the speech of the

Hon. Postmaster General has evoked a very strong feeling in the Province of Quebec, that it has not subsided up to the present moment, and I think all things considered it is well these matters should be fairly ventilated on the floor of this House. It should not be left in the power of those who are so ready and willing to profit by every word spoken in order to damage the Reform party in this country. I say at once as an Irishman and a Catholic that I do not concur in the remarks of the Hon. Postmaster General, and I am obliged to say that it was a most unfortunate speech. I have no hesitation in adding that it has placed a weapon in the hands of our opponents which they have, up this moment, very successfully used, and one which they will continue to use until it has become so worn out and effaced that they will be ashamed to use it any longer. Now I believe I am justified in saying there is not a Catholic in Quebec who respects the pastor of his church who can give any adhesion to the opinions enunciated by the Postmaster General. It is impossible for Catholics to stand up in this House, in my humble judgment, and defend that speech, but I say plainly, that the hon. gentleman who spoke last looks upon it as a Godsend to the Opposition, because really without that speech I do not know what subject the hon. gentleman could address himself to in this House that would be palatable to his readers outside of it. I do not know any subject which could excite his eloquence except the speech which I call unfortunate, but which he ought to call very fortunate indeed. It would seem, from the remarks of the hon. member for Terrebonne, that he styles himself leader of the Ultramontane Catholics. Now the question will be decided very shortly who is the leader—whether it is the hon. member for Charlevoix or the hon. member for Terrebonne. It strikes me very forcibly, from certain indications which are quite remarkable here this evening, there will be some rivalry in the Opposition ranks, and that some one will not have exactly a bed of roses to lie upon on that side of the House. However, I think it proper to say I was surprised when I heard the hon. member for Terrebonne describe himself as the Leader of the Ultramontanes.

Mr. MASSON—I did not.

Mr. DEVLIN—Then I am in error, but I know no such Catholics in Quebec or elsewhere. All who belong to the Roman Catholic Church are of the one faith; there are no sections. You cannot call a Catholic by any other name and, therefore, when we are spoken of as Ultramontane Catholics we are spoken of in a manner which is not understood by those who are Catholics. It would seem from the remarks that have been addressed to this House that a huge conspiracy was organized by the Government of this country, having for its object the annihilation of the Catholics of Quebec. I have unlimited confidence in the justice and fairness of the hon. gentleman who leads this Government. I believe the Catholics of this country have no reason to fear hostility from that quarter.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings)—You have more confidence than Father Dowd has in you.

Mr. DEVLIN—I believe the hon. member for Hastings is a leader of the Orange Brotherhood. He sits very near the hon. member for Terrebonne, and shakes hands with the hon. member for Charlevoix. He has, on more than one occasion, nodded his head approvingly when he heard that our religious institutions were in danger. It must be a great consolation to the leader of the Ultramontanes, and still greater for the hon. member for Charlevoix, to have their speeches, their Catholic speeches, endorsed by a Grand Master of the Orangemen. I wonder if that hon. gentleman, who has spoken so loudly and so zealously in defence of Catholic rights, would go down to Charlevoix tomorrow or next day and stand on the platform addressing himself to the honest French Canadians, and say: "I spoke that speech in the House, and the man who applauded me loudest was a leader of the Orangemen." It is well known, and it may be as well to say it now, that all the vitality, or nearly all of it, that is to be found in the Opposition ranks emanates from the Orange Society of this Dominion. They could not exist a week if it were not for the support they receive from that quarter; and yet some Catholic leaders of the Opposition have had the temerity to rise in this House and proclaim their Catholicity and our anti-Catholicity. As a Catholic I have unbounded confidence in the justice and fairness of the present Government, and I believe that at the present day the Catholic religion and every religion which is known in this Dominion is surrounded by all the safeguards which can possibly be required at the hands of those who desire to exercise it in this country. I think there is not, perhaps, in the wide world a country that can boast such freedom as we enjoy, and I believe that no one, whether he be a Minister of the Crown or simply a member of the House, will be permitted to create religious turmoil and confusion in this country. I believe the good sense of the country would stamp out any attempt of that kind the moment it is made, and that the people of this country understand well that the man who would seek to embroil us in religious animosities would be regarded as the worst enemy of the Dominion. I believe so far as the present Government have gone on, they have conducted the Government of this country with impartiality and integrity. I ask any gentleman on the other side of the House in the ranks of the Opposition to point to one single measure, emanating from the present Government or their supporters, having for its object the overthrow of the Catholic religion, tending to impair its usefulness, or tending in any manner or form to cast impediments or obstructions in its way? It is impossible for any gentlemen to do so. Therefore I feel that I am justified, so long as the Government is conducted as it is now, in raising my humble voice on the floor of this House in defense of a Government founded upon justice and impartiality. I might be permitted to say that all the difficulty which we labour under in the Province of Quebec, all the discussions which have taken place there for some time back in religious matters of an acrimonious nature, have been begotten by the leaders of the Opposition in that Province. I tell them they trade in this, that they know in their hearts they dare not stand up in this House and say the Catholic Church is in danger from any act of this Government. The difficulties in Quebec have been inspired by the leaders of the Opposition, and to such an extent has it been carried out, that a man who is called a Reformer and a Catholic is pointed out by these gentlemen as a very dangerous individual who ought to be muzzled or put into that lunatic asylum which the hon. gentleman says the DeBoucherville Government was willing to grant to the Protestants. Speaking of that subject the hon. gentleman from Terrebonne said, "See how liberal we are in Quebec! A deputation went to the Capital of the Province and asked for a Lunatic Asylum. Mr. DeBoucherville said, "If you don't want to put your patients in the lunatic asylum we will give you one for yourselves." And, why not? Is not that the right of the Protestants? One would suppose from the way the Protestants of Quebec have been spoken of by the leaders of the Opposition, that they were a body of paupers depending upon the charity of the party with which the hon. member for Charlevoix is associated, and when any justice is done to them in Quebec the hon. members for Terrebonne and Charlevoix raise their hands and say, "see what we have done!" They forget there are others besides Tories among those who have done acts of justice to the Protestants of Quebec. I deny that the Protestants of that Province have got more than their rights. They have the privilege of educating their own children, so have the Catholics in Ontario; and so, I hope, will the Catholics of New Brunswick at no distant day.

Mr. DEVLIN.

Mr. PICARD—They have it now.

Mr. DEVLIN—I heard the hon. member for Charlevoix say that the Leader of the Government is in accord with the speech delivered by the Postmaster General. I understand from what he said he is not. It is possible, even if the Premier were to swear to it, that the hon. gentleman opposite would say there was some reserve. I understood the Leader of the Government to say he was not in accord with the speech, and further, that he would countenance no act or measure calculated to create religious difficulties in this Dominion; that he was in favor of equal rights to all, and that he was prepared to protect, as far as he could, the citizens of the Dominion in the exercise of those rights. I understood him to say that, and I shall conclude by reiterating my confidence in the Government, and expressing my regret that the Postmaster General delivered the speech he did deliver.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings) — Every Catholic in this Dominion will be pleased to hear from the Irish gentleman, the leader of the Canadian Catholics, that the Government is not prepared to introduce legislation injuriously affecting them; yet that gentleman who would not hear a Minister of his Church insulted is the same who stood up here last session and said the statement of the Bishop of New Brunswick was not correct, and who had recently insulted Father Dowd. The hon. member says the hon. gentleman from Terrebonne is my leader. I will admit that I would ten times sooner acknowledge him as my leader than sit in company with the hon. member for Montreal Centre.

Mr. DEVLIN—The hon. gentleman may rely upon it, he will never be in my company, nor I in his. The gulf that separates us is too wide.

Mr. WHITE—Let me tell the hon. member, I have no desire to be in the company of one who sympathises with those who are rebellious to the British Crown. I will tell the hon. gentleman another fact, that I want no association with a man who was accused by the public press of this country with being in sympathy with those who took the life of an eminent Irish statesman because he stood in his way.

Mr. DEVLIN—Oh!

Several Members—Order! shame! etc.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings) — Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the hon. gentleman that when he interrupts me I will defend myself. I did not intend to say anything to injure the feelings of any party.

Mr. DEVLIN—You cannot injure me, Sir.

Mr. WHITE—The hon. gentleman, I presume, is beyond injury.

Mr. DEVLIN—I have no doubt, I am beyond injury from you.

Mr. WHITE—The hon. gentleman must bear in mind that he has no right to say anything against the society that I have the honor to be a member of. The sentiments of that society are the sentiments which have just been uttered by the hon. member for Terrebonne. I want to tell the hon. member for Quebec Centre, who interrupted me, that the Globe once said his dishonest acts smelled to Heaven. I want to tell the Hon. the President of the Council that it was necessary for the members for Montreal East and Jacques Cartier to drag him through the Lachine Canal to so cleanse him as to——

Mr. SPEAKER—I shall have to call the hon. member to order.

Mr. WHITE—I will apologise if I said anything which is out of place. Let me just say, that so far as the member for Terrebonne is concerned, I made a remark, and then the hon. gentlemen opposite raised some hisses at the sentiments I uttered, which I believe to be correct, and for which he worked in every part of the country, impressing upon people to attend to their own Church and opinions. That is the sentiment of the Orange institution. They are ready to defend and maintain their own right and give every man the right to worship according to his own conscience. I ask you, now, if I am wrong? That was the explanation, Mr. Speaker, I was going to make when interrupted. This discussion is unfortunate, but it was brought on by the hon. member for Chateauguay. The hon. gentleman complains that I should get up and not endorse the remarks of the Postmaster General. Who can do that what he has not got the courage and independence to say that "those are my sentiments and I will stand by them." He said they were the sentiments of his colleague. The Protestant horse has often been set up by the ministerial parties of this country.

Not long ago the Globe rode the Protestant horse, but where is it now? And, Mr. Speaker, who can forget the time when the hon. member for South Ontario ran in Lambton, when the present Premier made it a charge against him for standing in the streets of Quebec and looking at the Host as it passed? Who can forget the time when the hon. member for Bruce brought in his resolutions in the Local House to give a reward for the apprehension of the murderers of Scott, and that he was the first in this House to support a motion for granting the same murderers an amnesty? All these matters can be brought up plainly before the people of this country, and now the Protestants of Upper Canada say that the Postmaster General has denounced the Church of Rome, and must keep within bounds. Before I take my seat, I desire to say that I did not intend to say anything offensive or out of order. This is the first time, Mr. Speaker, you have risen to call me to order, but I intend, when any hon. gentleman interrupts me, to strike back as hard as I know how.

Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON — Mr. Speaker, I think at this stage of the discussion a few remarks from me will be in order. I made a speech in Argenteuil which has been very generally discussed. It was not a religious speech; it was a speech which, so far as I was concerned, had no reference to religion. It was a speech which opened up subjects which I had no intention to discuss in this House, because I should be sorry to follow the example of those who preceded me and enter so largely into a religious disputation. It was a speech pronounced by myself in my native Province of Quebec to the people whom I may call my own people, upon what I regard important subjects in which they are concerned. No member of the Government is responsible for that speech, and I have the right to express my individual opinions there to my own people. The opinions which I expressed are my opinions; they were my opinions then and are my opinions now. And when I hear gentlemen like my hon. friend from Montreal Centre expressing his grief, I feel regret that he has never seen my letter, by which it is made plain that my speech went no further than his. In the province of Quebec there is a great deal of bitterness in politics, and matters had come to such a point that it was a reproach to be a Liberal Catholic. I do not know enough of theology to discuss the point, but I think Chief Justice Dorion is just as good a Christian and a better leader than the hon. member for Terrebonne, who is styled the leader of the Ultramontanes. Looking at the great conflict going on in Lower Canada, and being among my own people—the people over whom I desired to exercise a certain influence—which intention I then and there described, I spoke to them of the dreads I had of the Ultramontanes, and I asked them to give to the Liberals their aid. This is the head and front of my offending, so far as I am concerned. I said, what I say now, that they ought to do it, and I believe they will do it. And I hope that the Liberals of Quebec will not be frightened by the almost universal expression of this House, that such sentiments are to be repudiated. I repeat that I am not ashamed of my alliance with the Liberals of Quebec. They, like me, have held up free institutions against influences so powerful that the hon. member for Charlevoix dare not down in his own county, make a speech like the one the hon. member for Montreal Centre made. I don't wish to enter upon any further discussion of my speech. It was a simple appeal to my own people, telling them what I believed to be the dangers of the country and asking them to support those who upheld the views I believe to be sound in politics. I am not ashamed of that speech, but I deeply regret it has caused this discussion, and I regret more still that it has placed such a friend as the hon. member for Montreal Centre in an embarrassing position. I was not speaking as a Minister, but as a Lower Canadian and a citizen of that Province. I said there what I repeat here. I repeat that the true course of the British population in Quebec to-day is to ally themselves with the Liberals in their effort to maintain free institutions.

Mr. WHITE.

Hon. MALCOLM CAMERON—It is time a little common sense entered into this discussion. I am proud that my hon. friend has spoken exactly. He did not go there to preach religion; he was there talking politics, and said, what everyone knows, that there were two parties in Lower Canada, and that one party he considered were ultra in their views and under the influence of Ultramontaniam. There was another party who were Liberal; and they were his bosom friends. What has been the tone and theme of these discussions, that he had abused the Catholic Church and thrown contempt upon it. Was there any allusion of the kind in the speech? The Postmaster General very properly drew his opponents into it. Does any man of common sense suppose a man goes to a public meeting to abuse his own friends—to abuse that large body of Catholics all over the country who are at his back and always supported him. The House was evidently carried away by the speech of the member for Charlevoix, which was certainly very able; but its whole object was to endeavour to do what the newspapers thoroughly enough do outside—throw dust into the people's eyes. It is like that clause of the Supreme Court Bill that ran the round of the whole Conservative Press. It is like the resignation of Mr. Cartwright the other day, and there is just as much justification, in truth, to believe that the hon. member for Shefford went to Lower Canada and abused the Catholics. Any one who runs away with such an idea of the speech, labours under some extraordinary hallucination, and although it may make amusement in the House to have a discussion about Orangeism and other things which are pleasant enough in the beginning of the session, no member believes it will lead to any desirable result.

Mr. WORKMAN—I do not wish to intrude upon the House, but the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. White) said something concerning myself. I have very lately been returned from what I conceived to be a very close and bitter political contest. The constituency I have the honor to represent is composed one-half of Protestants and the other half of Catholics. I am an extreme Protestant; probably my religious views in the Protestant faith go to the same extreme as those of the hon. member for Terrebonne go in the Catholic.

Mr. MASSON—I deny it entirely.

Mr. WORKMAN—Very well; I merely mentioned this question of religion to point my explanation. It is quite true one or two bitter political enemies attacked me in the newspapers, which fell entirely dead and produced no result. I have very great pleasure indeed in stating that my Roman Catholic fellow-citizens, both French Canadians and Irish, came forward and supported me with unanimity and sincerity of feeling, for which I feel deep gratitude. It was through their exertions that I am present in this House to-night, and I can say that the constituency which I represent is entirely free from religious intolerance and religious bigotry. I regret that this question has been brought up here. With regard to the speech of the Hon. Postmaster General, none of us are perfect, and may make remarks in speeches we may regret. It would probably have been better that the speech had never been made, and I think the Opposition are delighted to take hold of it in the hope of using it to the injury of the Government. On this question of religion, I have the utmost faith in the Government of the day. I am satisfied so long as the Hon. Premier, who at present conducts the business of this House presides over the Council, that every religion will receive that justice and impartiality to which it is entitled. The hon. member for East Hastings stated that I had used my influence in bringing out a charge against my opponent of being a Freemason. I want to explain that I knew nothing about that document, or the printing and publishing of it.

Mr. WHITE—I did not say that.

Mr. WORKMAN—I beg pardon; you said the member for Montreal West.

Mr. WHITE—I said it was used for the member Montreal West.

Mr. WORKMAN—I accept the explanation, and will not detain the House further.

Mr. RYMAL—The Roman Catholics, Mr. Speaker, are too important and powerful a body to be trampled under foot in the Dominion of Canada. They have had concessions made to them, which were nothing more than justice to both parties; they know their strength, and have no fears depend on it. That is not the cause of the attack upon my hon. friend from Sheffield. That is not the cause of the onslaught on him to-day. He performed something, less than three years ago, which rankles in the bosoms of his opponents even to-day. The flesh-pots were withdrawn from their custody and they wish once more to revel in them. So long as the Liberal party is united they know very well their chances are small and that the bones they have to pick will be hardly worth taking up. It is because he was instrumental in formulating charges which led to their overthrow that they seek to wreak their vengeance upon him at this time. I have privately heard that members of the Opposition have said they will pursue him to the death I mean political death and they are on his track now. He knows full well who are seeking his downfall, and they know as well as he knows that they do not fear for the fall of the Catholic Church. As I said before, that is an excuse, for the Roman Catholic Church, if they have had anything, have had more than justice done them from each party. As a Protestant, I say they stand in a favored position, and they know full well there is no danger of the Church. I rejoice at the manly, out-spoken manner in which my friend uttered the remarks he made. If there is anything I dislike more than another it is one of those mealy-mouthed politicians who, when he has spoken, one hardly knows what he thinks. I have long admired my hon. friend, and he has raised himself in my estimation for his manly utterances to-night.

Mr. GORDON—Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to offer on this subject. The hon. member for Terrebonne, in opening his speech, said that the sentiments he entertained with regard to the religious subject, were exactly in accord with the opinions expressed by the Hon. Leader of the Government: that was, that every religion should be permitted to exercise its freedom in this country. Now, Sir, I beg to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman, the Member for East Hastings, to what he stated when he said that the hon. member for Terrebonne expressed on that occasion precisely the same sentiments that he entertained concerning this matter; and I charge the hon. gentleman with giving utterance to what he must know is incorrect, to use the mildest term, for he professes to be in alliance with a powerful body which, in its constitution, is entirely antagonistic to the body of which the hon. member for Terrebonne claims to be the leader.

Mr. RYMAL.

Hon. Members on the Left—No! No!!

Mr. GORDON—I repeat that it is entirely antagonistic.

Hon. Members—No! No!!

Mr. GORDON—I say so, Mr. Speaker, and I speak advisedly; I do not speak at random, because that hon. gentleman knows as well as he knows that he is sitting in his seat at the present moment, not only that he makes a vow, but that he is actually sworn—for such is the case—that he has actually taken an oath to oppose the Roman Catholic religion; and the hon. member for North Hastings well knows the form of that oath, for that gentleman is a Grand Master. I see the hon. member for Carleton smiling, but they are actually sworn, in place of supporting the sentiments to which they have given utterance by implication to-day, to oppose the very body with which they are now allied; and when I find gentlemen rising and for the sake of clap-trap, professing to oppose the sentiments to which the Postmaster General has given expression, in order to make political capital against the Leader of the Government, I think that if they are capable of such a feeling they ought to be ashamed of themselves, for on the 12th of July they make violent orations on these subjects against the Roman Catholic Church, while here they express sympathy for it. If they had a particle of honesty in their composition, they would applaud to the very echo the sentiments uttered by the Postmaster General, but they are far from being honest in the sentiments which they proclaim, and they show that the organization with which they stand immediately connected, is not what it pretends to be. If we desired evidence to establish that it is an organization used for political purposes, we could want nothing further than the action which these gentlemen have taken to-day on the floor of this House with regard to the sentiments which have fallen from the Postmaster General.

Mr. BOWELL—I am sure that everyone is amused at the sentiments uttered by the hon. member, who has just taken his seat. I wish simply to draw attention to the fact that he knows as little of the Orange Association as he does of the institutions and system of government under which we live. Public men have a good right to draw a distinction between a religious body organized for religious purposes, and a body organized for political purposes, and when the hon. gentleman is capable of making that distinction between these two bodies, it will be time enough for him to lecture us on our duty, either as Orangemen or as Protestants. I should like to know what I have done during this discussion to have brought forth from the hon. member the remarks to which he has given utterance in regard to myself. I have sat, amused, I must confess, with this little family quarrel which has^d drifted altogether away from the question raised by the hon. member for Chateaugay, and so happily responded to by the hon. member for Terrebonne. I look upon this question as being one involving a great deal more than a matter merely affecting the religious opinions of the hon. members for Shefford and Terrebonne; a great principle of constitutional government is at stake in this relation, and if I understand aright, and if I understood the hon. member for Chateaugay aright, when he repudiated the sentiment uttered by the hon. member for Shefford, he raised such a constitutional question. I hold that under the English system of Responsible Government, as laid down by the great constitutional authorities—and by no one, perhaps, more forcibly than by the eminent statesman, who has been most successful in having that principle established in this country—that no honorable member of the Government has the right to enunciate a principle, speaking on behalf of the Government, as did the hon. member for Shefford in this instance, unless he was speaking on behalf of the Administration, and that if the Cabinet repudiated his doctrines, he should resign his portfolio. This is what I understand to be the principle which controls our constitutional system in this respect. Now, Sir, what is the spectacle presented here to-night? The hon. member for Chateaugay, in a statesman-like manner, rises in his place and calls the attention of the Premier to the sentiments uttered by one of his colleagues, and asks him distinctly and pointedly whether they are the views of the Government, or whether he repudiates them. The Hon. Premier rises and tells the House that when the hon. member for Shefford left Ottawa, he—the Premier—was not aware that he was going into the county of Argenteuil; also, that the sentiments he uttered there were not enunciated at the instance of the Government, but he took good care, notwithstanding the fact that the question was put to him repeatedly, to refuse to say whether he was in accord with these opinions; and, to use the forcible language of the hon. member for Chateaugay, the Premier stopped at the most essential portion of the explanation he should have given. Now, Sir, when the hon. member for Montreal Centre spoke—he is not now in his place, and I do not intend to refer to him at length, but I may remark that his speech to-night is quite in accord with all those he has made since he occupied a seat on the floor of this House—and charged the members on the left of the Speaker with having taken advantage of the explanation, or half explanation given by the Premier, and trying to make political capital out of it; he forgot to mention that the first hon. member of the House who refused to accept the statement of the Premier as a full and explicit explanation, was one of the gentlemen most prominent in his party, and I do not hesitate to say one of the most valuable supporters of the Government. I think, Sir, that under these circumstances it is but quite right and proper that the gentlemen on this side of the House, from a constitutional point, should be at least permitted to take the same ground as the hon. member for Chateaugay. It was most gratifying to me, as I believe it was to every member on this side of the House, to find, when a great constitutional principle was being violated, that the hon. member for Chateaugay, had the manliness and independence to rise and denounce it; and, when those gentlemen who have argued at such length and with such eloquence and force for the establishment of the great principle of Responsible Government in this country, have settled their little matter between themselves, then we shall be prepared, on this side of the House, to give an opinion upon their utterances, and draw conclusions as to the influence of their political sentiments upon their policy, when in or out of the House. It matters very little politically, whether the members on this side of the House and the hon. member for Terrebonne hold different religious views, or whether the hon. member for Montreal Centre thinks it just to throw a firebrand, as it were, into the House; but the discussion has gone further—and this main point has been overlooked altogether by everyone except by the hon. gentleman who raised the question—than was intended; the whole question respecting the introduction of religious topics into political discussions, and the attitude of the different political parties in this country, have been dragged into this debate, and very unfortunately, in my opinion. I am quite sure that the hon. member for Chateaugay never anticipated that this discussion was going to take so wide a range. When the hon. gentleman who represents so very unworthily the North Riding of Ontario—speaking in a political sense—dares to throw a slur upon the Conservative party in the contemptuous manner in which he has done to-day, I say it is but another display of the utter ignorance of that gentleman concerning the political past of this country; it becomes no one in political life, to have forgotten the difficulties through which politicians in Canada, and particularly the Conservative party in Ontario, have passed in times gone by. Now, Sir, you must be aware of the fact—and what member who has watched the course of politics during the past few years does not know—that the Conservative party of Ontario, and more particularly that section which belongs to the Orange body, was condemned from door to door by the party now in power, for daring to advocate equal rights to all. I have myself been personally attacked as a “green-backed Orangeman,” and “a white-livered Protestant,” when the Protestant howl was raised in Ontario by dishonourable politicians, because I defended my worthy predecessor who occupied a seat in the old Parliament of Canada, and advocated the endowment of all classes with equal rights and privileges, simply because I then echoed the opinions uttered to-day upon this question by the hon. gentleman who leads the Government, everyone knows, who knows anything of the politics of Canada during the last ten or fifteen years, that it was made an electioneering cry in every shanty, from every stump and every barn in Ontario, against Protestants and Orangemen in particular, who were condemned in the most violent manner possible, and against whom the most opprobrious epithets were hurled, simply because they refused to record their votes in favour of taking from their Roman Catholic fellow subjects the rights granted them by the Parliament of this country. Had the members on the opposite side of the House who applauded so vociferously a sentiment to which my hon. friend the member for East Hastings gave utterance, allowed him to complete his sentence, I am sure that many of those who raised the laugh would have completely changed their tone. He simply claimed equal rights and privileges for every subject of Her Majesty; and when the hon. member for Montreal Centre talked to this House about the member for Hastings, I know he meant his remarks for me, under the impression, I suppose, that I interrupted him, instead of my hon. friend for East Hastings. I tell that gentleman that it was due to the exertions and leadership of the right hon. member for Kingston that the Roman Catholics enjoy the rights they now possess in Ontario, as proved by the votes recorded in the journals of this House, of the hon. gentleman who now leads the Government of this country.

Mr. BOWELL.

Hon. Members—No! No! and it is true.

Mr. BOWELL.—I do not think, I repeat, that the hon. member for Chateauguay intended this discussion to go quite so far as it has done; but the hon. gentleman himself when he thought that he could make a point with reference to certain individuals, has not hesitated to prey upon the prejudices of a certain class of Her Majesty's subjects. He did not hesitate when he was canvassing in the City of Montreal to single out a gentleman contesting the constituency of Montreal West, as the personal and political friend of myself, who had taken such a prominent part, as he stated—in the expulsion and bringing to justice of a certain man in the North-West for a crime there committed, knowing well at the time that no statement which he could possibly make, could arouse the ire and prejudices of a class of the electors, so quickly as the declaration, that Mr. Thomas White was the personal and political friend of that fire-brand, Bowell, of North Hastings. I have his speech here, but I was not at all annoyed by it.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—I wish you would send it over; I would like to see it.

Mr. BOWELL—I will read it to you. The hon. gentleman said "I will ask Mr. White, if he will have the manliness to deny that he would not have done so"—that is, done as I had done in reference to the expulsion of Louis Riel.—"There," continued Mr. Holton, "can be no doubt of it, because he is bound in his daily utterances to his readers to give expression to his views in the paper which he owns; and there he lauded the course pursued in Parliament by Mr. Bowell, who brought before the House the motion for the expulsion of Riel." I do not find fault with the hon. gentleman for saying this.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—I should think not.

Mr. BOWELL—I only point out to the House the fact, that the hon. member who took so much umbrage at the speech of the hon. member for Shefford, did not hesitate, when he could gain anything by so doing, to drag in all questions into the discussion calculated to excite opposition to one of the gentlemen engaged in that electoral contest.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—That was a practical question in the then election.

Mr. BOWELL—It was not only a practical, but so far as I was concerned, a true position, but scarcely so correct with reference to Mr. Thomas White, the editor of the Montreal Gazette, who went no further, so far as I have any recollection—and I watch very closely the articles which appear in the Gazette—than to compliment me upon the manner in which I had conducted the case on that question, in having avoided, as much as possible, the introduction into the discussion of that acrimony and ill-feeling which I might have done. This was as far as that gentleman went, and for so doing he was held up as a bug-bear and a scare-crow, quite equal to myself, before the French Canadians of Montreal. I have no doubt but that the manœuvre had its desired effect, but that is not all!—If the hon. gentleman will refer to a late election contest, that took place near this city, in the County of Prescott, I believe, when Mr. Boyd was a candidate, he will find—what? That the Liberal party had at the time entered into a bargain with the Catholic League, by which they bound themselves by solemn covenant to assist in securing the election of a certain number of gentlemen, not on account, mind you, of their political views, but because they happened to belong to a certain nationality and a certain religion; and what Mr. Boyd afterwards declared was this: that although he was a Reformer, and although he had supported with all his energy and all his talents the then Government of the day in Ontario, he could not refrain from denouncing this Government as corrupt for introducing national and religious questions into the political contest then going on. He said that he had been offered, with the consent of Mr. Mackenzie, who was at the time in the Ontario Legislature, the services of Mr. O'Donohoe, to be sent down into the County of Prescott in order to organize a Catholic League with the view of arousing the religious and national prejudices of this section of the population in favour of the candidate of the Government. He went further when he brought them to book regarding this matter, and he stated distinctly and positively that a letter was written him by his brother-in-law, the present Speaker of the Ontario Legislature, from the office of Blake, Kerr & Co., on this subject.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I think that if the hon. gentleman will look at the speech in question, he will find that this is a misstatement.

Mr. BOWELL—I have the speech, and will give the hon. gentleman the benefit of it, and we will see whether I have misstated that speech or not.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—At any rate, if it is not a misstatement, it is untrue.

Mr. BOWELL—That is quite another thing. Now, I see the advantage of keeping a scrap-book; no doubt, if I did not have it by me, he would have said that it was a misstatement and a misrepresentation, for such is my past experience of the Hon. the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Members—Order, order.

Mr. BOWELL—What he stated was this—

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Oh!

Mr. BOWELL—In support of the charge which had been made, and the charge was that the Government had offered to send Mr. O'Donohoe into the Riding in order to raise the religious cry—Mr. Boyd explained, that he could not in all conscientiousness support the Blake-Mackenzie administration, because they are corrupt, and because they had been engaged in an attempt to stir up religious animosities among the people in an underhand manner. In support of the charge, Mr. Boyd proceeded to read a letter which he then held in his hand, and which he said was written to him by a prominent Reformer, and without disclosing the name of the writer he had no objection to let the Postmaster General, or any other gentleman, see the signature and satisfy himself as to its genuineness. The letter was dated in 1871, when the contest for the Local House was going on, and the writer, with, as he said, Mr. Mackenzie's approval, proposed sending down to the county of Prescott Mr. O'Donohoe to organize a branch of the Catholic League, which organization, the writer said, would materially aid him—Mr. Boyd—in the contest, and advance the interests of the Reform party. That he, Mr. Boyd, had refused to be a party to such a proceeding, calculated as it was to stir up religious animosities in a county hitherto free from them. He also charged the Blake-Mackenzie Government with having in two instances in the county of Prescott, offered conferred appointments as land valuers upon political opponents, &c. He also attacked Mr. Hagar. But we will let him go.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL—“Mr. Boyd, after loud calls on him to name the writer of the letter, said that it was addressed to him by a leading Reformer who is now the first Commoner in Ontario, the Hon. R. M. Wells, his own brother-in-law, and at the time the letter was written a member of the law firm of Blake, Kerr and Wells.”

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The hon. gentleman has stated that the letter was written from the office of my firm. As a matter of fact, Mr. Wells had ceased to be my partner for some years.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—And as another matter of fact, there is not a word of truth in Mr. Boyd's statement.

Mr. BOWELL—I suppose the fact that Mr. Boyd was not in accord with the gentlemen who have formed the Catholic League, and who were then sending emissaries into every county and every Riding in the Province, would be quite sufficient to have him read out of the party of the hon. gentleman, and I have no doubt that they have read him out accordingly. That it should be denied at this late day that the gentleman mentioned told the truth, is not at all surprising to me.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I always denied it.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. BOWELL—I have only to say that I never heard the denial before, and that this is but another instance of the manner in which elections have been attempted to be carried in the Province of Ontario during the past ten or fifteen years, and also that these gentlemen when they attempt to hurl at this side of the House, and at the Conservative party, the introduction of religious animosities into political contests, forget their own actions, and their own manner of proceeding, precisely as the hon. member for Shefford has acted in this instance, making a speech for political effect, and the moment he is taken to task for it, they deny the real signification of these utterances, and say that he meant something else. It really must be amusing to every gentleman in the House, who knows the hon. member for Shefford, to find that he pleaded ignorance as to the meaning of the word Ultramontane; it was a source of great amusement to myself. I must confess, if the statement had come from a more humble member of the party, one could have excused him, and one might have supposed that he had not written that letter for political effect; but when an hon. gentleman, so well read as he is, and who takes a very prominent part in religious discussions, if my recollection serves me, in connection with his own church in Lower Canada, says that he does not know what is the meaning of the word Ultramontane, it was a source to everyone of my friends who read it of nothing but amusement, and I must confess, sir, that it created a feeling of utter and thorough contempt for him in the mind of those who approved of the sentiments which he proclaimed in that speech.

Mr. MILLS—What does it mean?

Mr. BOWELL—I refer my hon. friend to the Globe of the 8th of the present month, which contains an article of about two columns in length, giving explanations as to the differences between Ultramontanism and Gallicanism; and he will find out all he wants to know. I am quite satisfied that the hon. member is not as ignorant as he pretends to be, in assuming the role that has been taken by the hon.

member for Shefford, and in trying to make the House believe that when he uttered an appeal in order to stir up religious feelings against Mr. White of Montreal, as an ally of the Roman Catholics, he meant something else. If he is really ignorant of the meaning of the words, I am quite prepared to tell him if he will meet me on any occasion. If I supposed for a moment that he was ignorant of, or that a single man in the House did not know the signification of the term Ultramontanism, then I should be prepared to explain it to him now. The hon. member for Montreal Centre says, that there is no such thing as Ultramontanism at the present day, that they were all Catholics and hold the same religious views, though we find by the letter written by the member for Halifax, that all Catholics at the present day are Ultramontanes, and The hon. member who has written that letter can explain what Ultramontanism is, so that there must be at least not a unity of sentiment among themselves as to the meaning of the word. The position of the Postmaster General to-day is precisely the position of every member of the Liberal party in Ontario. They go into a constituency where they know that a violent tirade against Roman Catholicism will have its effect, and they do not hesitate to denounce Ultramontanism and the Catholics of Quebec; but the moment they go into a constituency where the Roman Catholics predominate, they preach a different doctrine. Why did the Hon. Postmaster General make that speech in Argenteuil? Does not every member know that Argenteuil is largely a Protestant constituency; that a very large proportion of the electors hold extreme views upon this subject? And did he not know when they raised the Freemason cry in Montreal, that it was to prey upon the prejudices of the Roman Catholics? Both being used in order to stir up the prejudices of the people. The Roman Catholics hold extreme views on the question of Freemasonry; but they may be honest in their belief that Freemasonry is not right. But, when the hon. member for East Hastings said that the sentiments uttered by the hon. member for Terrebonne at the dinner in Montreal, were the sentiments of every honest man in the country, and of every Liberal man; that, while he condemned Freemasonry, he was prepared to elect Protestants who joined that society, and that no Liberal Catholic should refuse his vote on that account; I say, as a Conservative of Ontario, and as an Orangeman, and I do not hesitate to announce on behalf of that body, that these are the sentiments we entertain in reference to that matter. If Ultramontaneism becomes a question, in the battle which the Postmaster General speaks of, there will be no difficulty in placing myself, and those I am connected with in this country; Roman Catholics are one all over the world, and there is no distinction; Liberals and Blues, as well as Rouges, all declare they are Ultramontanes; the Protestant Conservatives of Ontario have the right therefore to select the candidate whom they think is most in accord with their political views, without being accused of prostituting their religious opinions. One gentleman is an advocate of protection in this country; another holds the same religious views, but he differs from him in his views on political questions, being in fact a Free-trader, does it follow that because I hold different religious views from him, we cannot agree on a trade policy? I select that member who, I believe, holds views most in accord with my political sentiments, and, as long as religion is left out, I am quite willing and prepared to work harmoniously with him. But there is no difference in sentiment between my hon. friend from Terrebonne, and the Liberal Catholics of Lower Canada, on the question of religion, at least the Liberals say so; and as long as they are one on that question, Protestants are at liberty to ally themselves with those most in accord with their political sentiments without being accused of inconsistency; but when the time for that battle comes, spoken of by the Hon. Postmaster General, it will be found that I shall be ready to do battle with the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman might possibly have been selected as one of the leaders, and he might have succeeded me in the Orange Society if he had not backed down so ignominiously from the position taken in his Argenteuil speech, when called to book by the member for Halifax. I like a man to have positive sentiments on any subjects, whether political or religious, and when these sentiments are attacked to stand up and defend them. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say that he spoke on his own behalf; it is all very well for the Premier to say the Postmaster General spoke only on his own behalf, but that doctrine is not that which should govern a great party in this country. It is a direct blow—a second or a third one—that these hon. gentlemen have made at the true principles of Responsible Government since they have held office; last year, in abnegating their right to advise upon great state questions as in the North-West difficulty by preventing discussion in adjourning the House over and over again to evade the motion of the hon. member for Frontenac. The Hon. Postmaster General says he always preached these sentiments, but he says he was not fairly reported. The hon. gentleman should not repudiate the speech as reported in his own organ, the Montreal Herald. But it is always the same; whenever their speeches, as reported in their own organs, are calculated to do injury to their party, they get up and repudiate their own utterances. The hon. gentleman said the sentiments that he uttered at Argenteuil were his sentiments, and further that if the Government, of which he is an important member, did not hold these sentiments, and were not prepared to maintain them at all hazards, he would be prepared to resign his seat in the Cabinet. The Hon. Premier has refused to answer the question of the Member for Chateauguay, and the Postmaster General is prepared to keep his place in the Cabinet. If the hon. gentleman had the feeling which ought to characterize and govern an adviser of His Excellency, he would have thrown up his position long ago and made way for a gentleman more in accord with the views of his leader.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. BECHARD—If the House would be so indulgent, I would like to make a few brief observations on the question before the House, as a Catholic, as a French Canadian, and as a member of the Parti National of the Province of Quebec. My hon. friend from Terrebonne has attacked the speech delivered in the County of Argenteuil by the Hon. the Postmaster General, which has become so famous during the past few weeks; and he regards this speech as inopportune, imprudent and dangerous; and I must say that I share this opinion with my hon. friend. I cannot approve of a certain portion of the speech delivered in the county of Argenteuil by the Hon. the Postmaster General; and, although after the explanations he has given, I am quite convinced that his intention was not to say as much as his words implied, yet I must tell him that he said too much, and things of which I cannot approve. But, I am free to say, that while I repudiate the speech of the Postmaster General, I believe it was, to some extent, provoked by the conduct of the leaders of the Conservative party and the writings of the Conservative press. My hon. friend for Terrebonne has not forgotten, and will not deny the correctness of the statement, that for some years past the Liberal party and the Parti National of the Province of Quebec have been denounced by the Conservative press, and upon the hustings at each election, as composed of men hostile to the Roman Catholic Church; and at the greater number of the elections, the Parti National, and the Liberals of the Province of Quebec, of which I am a member, have been represented—and for many years back—by our political adversaries, the Conservatives or their writers, as composed of men unworthy of being entrusted with the interests of the country. My hon. friend has expressed the opinion that it was a dangerous thing to mingle religious questions with the discussion of political questions, and I am entirely of his opinion. My hon. friend has expressed such an opinion, and I admired him for giving utterance to such views. He made the same declaration at St. Croix on the occasion of the local elections in the Province of Quebec, and I would be exceedingly happy if my hon. friend could induce the party of which he is leader to make the same professions.

Mr. MASSON—I represent faithfully the views of the Conservative party regarding this question.

Mr. BECHARD—Very well. I am extremely pleased with the statement of my hon. friend. I do not doubt that this is his personal opinion. He made the same statement at St. Croix regarding this point, and I am quite sure that this is his real opinion; the only thing I regret is the attitude of the Conservative party and of the Conservative press, which do not profess the same opinions or, at least, do not put them into practice. It has been pretended that the Conservative party of the Province of Quebec has been friendly to the clergy, and that the Conservatives of the Province of Quebec have given to the Catholic clergy of Lower Canada that respect and obedience to which, owing to their virtues, they are justly entitled. Granted: but further, this is exactly the position taken by the Parti National of the Province of Quebec. This party does not refuse to the clergy that high esteem, respect and obedience to which they have a just right. The Parti National of the Province of Quebec does not deny that the priest possesses the rights of a citizen—a matter in which my hon. friend for Charlevoix is largely interested. In point of fact this doctrine is not only shared in by the Conservative party, but also by the Parti National. But, I must infer from the remarks of my hon. friend from Charlevoix, that he thinks the priest has the right to speak in favor of such and such a candidate from the pulpit? I do not think so,—else it would be necessary to believe that the priests have alone the right to control the politics of the country, and at the elections to impose their will upon the electors; and it would be also necessary to conclude, if the pretensions of the Conservative party in this respect were admitted to be well founded, that to be a Catholic it is requisite to be also a Conservative. But, Mr. Speaker, I hope I will never be placed in the alternative of becoming a Conservative or else of ceasing to be a Catholic. I am a member of the Parti National of the Province of Quebec, and I believe I am as orthodox and as sincere a friend of the religious institutions of that Province as my hon. friend from Terrebonne, and even the hon. member for Charlevoix. I would repeat my hope that the hon. member for Terrebonne will endeavour to impose upon his party, and the Conservative organs, the opinions and the principles he professes, and that they will no longer denounce and point out as worthy of public animadversion, the members of the Liberal party of Quebec. During a number of years past it is well known that a great many of the elections in Quebec have been carried on on that basis, and that many French Canadian Conservatives have spoken more of religion than of politics on the hustings, and have denounced the members of our party as being hostile to the Catholic Church, to sustain whom or elevate to power would be to materially damage the interests of the Church. This is the manner, Mr. Speaker, in which the Conservatives have been conducting the elections. My hon. friend for Terrebonne in his speech, made allusion to the fact that, on the occasion of the recent elections, he sustained and advised his French Canadian Catholic friends to sustain a man who was a Freemason, although on this point he was not in accord with the principles held by the religious press of Quebec and the articles published a few years ago by the Nouveau Monde against Freemasonry. My hon. friend is well aware that the Catholic Church has denounced the system of Freemasonry, and he also well knows that his principal organ, the Nouveau Monde, publicly denounced Freemasonry as being antagonistic to the interests of the Church, though it is true that in connection with the election to which they have referred, the Nouveau Monde was silent and even sustained the candidature of Mr. Thomas White, whilst the candidature was repudiated by the Journal de Trois Rivières, also an organ of the religious press.

Mr. MASSON—Do I understand the hon. member to say that he himself repudiates the position I have taken, which I took at Montreal, which was that when a Protestant presents himself before the electors we are obliged to take him as he is, and if he is a Freemason, that we have a right to vote for him? I understand that he opposes this view.

Mr. BECHARD—Not at all. The hon. member does not comprehend me if that is his impression. I do not disapprove of his conduct, for under the same circumstances I would do the same thing. I never make an appeal to religious passions when I am called upon to discuss political questions, and I am certain that the opinions I hold with regard to religious questions are as liberal as those entertained by the hon. member. No matter what views a man may entertain, if he hold them conscientiously he is entitled to my respect—it is his business, not mine; and with reference to purely political matters, it does not matter with me whether a man be a Catholic or Protestant, for I hold that religious questions should not be introduced into the discussion of politics. The Hon. the President of the Council has made allusion, in his reply, to the duty of submission to the Catholic Church on religious questions under certain circumstances, and I am of the same opinion. With regard to such occasions, I am of the same opinion—as that to which my hon. friend from Charlevoix referred.—For instance; the American war for independence, or on such occasions as when the social system is threatened with anarchy. On such occasions, I hold it is not only the right, but the duty of the clergy, as well as of all honest men, to aid in the maintenance of public order; and, at the same time, I agree with my hon. friend the President of the Council, that when mixed questions present themselves, the Church has the right to receive from the State what she considers proper legislation. But when purely political questions are at issue, as in connection with the elections of members for this House, I hold that I have the right to sustain the candidate belonging to my party, whether he be a Catholic or a Protestant, without being obliged to enquire into the question of his religious belief. His belief is neither an objection, in my opinion, to his candidature, nor does it bind me to work for him, for I look at his position from a practical and political stand point, and that suffices. It is not sufficient to tell me that such a man is a Catholic to make me believe that he is an honest man; he may be an honest man, or he may be a thief. Neither is it sufficient to say he is a Protestant to make me believe that he is a wretch (un misérable), for he may be a Protestant and still be a perfectly honourable man. This is the position taken by the Parti National on this question. It is to be deeply regretted that in the Province of Quebec, the religious question has been introduced into political discussions. It is well known that the Conservative press, or, at least, a part of it, has treated the members of the Liberal Party during the past fifteen or twenty years in the character of Communists, Communards, and Nationards; and they have endeavoured to establish a comparison between the members of our party and the most wretched beings in the world, the French Socialists. This is what they have sought to make the electors of Quebec believe, representing that a member of the Liberal party sympathises with the subversive and utterly absurd doctrines of the French Socialists; at each election this is a plank in the Conservative platform—a deplorable state of things. With reference to the speech pronounced by the Postmaster General in Argenteuil, I maintain that it was provoked to a certain extent by the conduct of the Conservative press in constantly introducing religious questions into the discussion of political matters whenever opportunity offered. I trust that my hon. friend from Terrebonne, will, as I have already remarked, induce his party to adopt his personal opinions; and I am certain that if they had been held and observed by the Conservative party no such speech as that which I regret to have been made in Argenteuil would have ever been delivered.

Mr. BECHARD.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—If no other hon. gentleman has any observations to offer, perhaps, as I incurred or assumed the grave responsibility of giving rise to this discussion, I may be permitted to say a very few words in connection with the discussion on this paragraph, or rather avail myself of the right of speaking on the subsequent paragraph. I have very little, indeed, to say; the object I had in view was to obtain the explanation which I did from my hon. friend, the First Minister, and to ascertain from my distinguished friend whether he approves of this speech of the Postmaster General in the County of Argenteuil. I felt that this speech was a deadly blow at the existence and the very life of the party, which I have spent my whole political life in endeavouring to build up and sustain according to the measure of my humble ability. I felt, Sir, that we the members of the Liberal party of the Province of Quebec, were entitled to know, and to know at the earliest possible moment, whether the sentiments of that speech had the approval of the head of the Government, or of the Government at large, of which the Postmaster General was a member. The answer, although not quite so explicit on the constitutional point concerning the general responsibility of Ministers for each other's views as I could have desired, I take to be a satisfactory answer to this question, and the Hon. the First Minister has not ventured to give his assent to the doctrines of the Argenteuil speech. I assume, therefore, that he condemns those doctrines, because that condemnation is implied in his statement of his individual views, supported as his statement is by his uniform line of conduct as a public man. That part of his statement, as I had occasion to say, was entirely satisfactory to me, and growing from that is an implicit, if not an explicit condemnation of the speech of the Postmaster General in Argenteuil. So far for the First Minister. Then as regards the party in Lower Canada. Not one of the supporters of the Government from Quebec has ventured to offer even an apology for the Argenteuil speech, not one. The leading French Canadian Minister in this Government has told us, in the most explicit terms, that he was alarmed when he read that speech, and that he took the earliest possible opportunity of ascertaining—feeling that his own position was deeply involved in the matter—whether the Government approved of the speech. All the hon. members on this side of the House who have spoken—the member for Montreal Centre, and the member who has just taken his seat—all the members who have spoken have united in condemnation of the speech. I therefore find, sir, that this is the result of the discussion to which I gave rise by a very direct enquiry—an enquiry I thought I was entitled to make—and not only entitled to make but which it was my duty to make, in the position I occupied as a public man who has represented a constituency for very many years, and various constituencies for very many years, in Lower Canada. I say, Sir, that I have attained substantially the object I had in view; that, the speech was condemned by the First Minister, and is condemned by all the supporters of the Government from the Province of Quebec. Of course, Sir, it is not for me to indicate the logical result that must flow from that in view of the declaration of the hon. gentleman at the close of his speech in Argenteuil. The hon. gentleman himself calls hear, hear. Of course, he says that it is not necessary for me to indicate; but, Sir, I desire to say one word as to my own position in this matter. For twenty-two years I have been fighting this battle against very great odds, with very great difficulties in my way; and I have been exposed, as all public men are, to misrepresentation and to injustice even, and to rigorous criticism always. During the whole of these twenty-two years, Sir, I have ever had occasion to affiliate myself with Englishmen or Protestants, and Roman Catholic electors; but I never have been reproached by Roman Catholic electors for doing anything hostile to them, their opinions, their sentiments or their feelings. I have not, therefore, conducted the battle, so far as I am concerned, during these twenty-two years, in any shape or form upon the burning questions of race and creed; but, Sir, I am not disposed, as I am growing old, and as the time when I shall actually retire from public life is drawing to a close—I am not disposed to engage in a new departure at the bidding of an hon. gentleman, who chooses to go into a county, and who, as a member of the Government of this country, proposes a new departure to his party, including myself. I say, at this stage, and I say it frankly, I am not disposed to take part in any such new departure, and I felt that it was due to my own position, due to those friends who have stood by me during these many years, that I should repudiate and protest against the attempt to import a new element into our midst which, if successful, would render all legitimate politics in Quebec and throughout the Dominion impossible, and transform that which, I may say, is the pleasantest society in the Dominion if not in America, to wit, the society of Quebec, into a pandemonium. This is my vindication of the course I have taken.

Mr. ROCHESTER—This discussion has taken a very wide range in many ways, a range that certainly may be regretted by all parties. If the Postmaster General was honest in making that speech he was very wrong in writing the apology he wrote. I say distinctly that every man, whether he be Catholic or Protestant, should be consistent in his views. If he is, he will be respected by all, even by those with whom he disagrees, but the man who truckles to both parties will be respected by neither. My hon. friend from North Wentworth says the Opposition have made a great deal of this speech. I am inclined to think there has been as much talking and as hard things have been said on one side as on the other. It was rather unfair for the hon. member to attribute anything to past differences. He alluded to what occurred two or three years ago, and also to some private conversation with a member of the Opposition, and said the memory of the past rankled in our hearts at this time. If the conversation he speaks of was private, it should never have been repeated here. I think the hon. member was wrong in attributing anything of the kind to the Opposition. The hon. member for North Ontario alluded to me as an Orangeman. Before he attempts again to give advice to those who are his seniors, as far as Orangeism is concerned, he should be careful not to make assertions that he is not prepared to substantiate.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON.

Mr. RYMAL—I am sorry if I have hurt the feelings of my old and respected friend. He is the last person in the party that I would charge with harbouring a vindictive feeling; but the proverbial ferocity of the she bear, robbed of her whelps, is tameness itself when compared with the feeling which animates the Tory party generally when they are deprived of office.

The Address was then carried.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that said resolutions be referred to a Select Committee to prepare an Address to His Excellency.—Carried.

The Select Committee reported the Address which was adopted.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that the Address be engrossed and presented to His Excellency.—Carried.

SUPPLY.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT moved that the House do resolve itself into a Committee of Supply on Monday next.—Carried.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT moved that this House resolve itself into a Committee of Ways and Means.—Carried.

NEW BRUNSWICK SCHOOL ACT.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE presented a message from His Excellency transmitting a copy of a despatch from Earl Carnarvon respecting the New Brunswick School Act.

The House adjourned at 10:35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 14th, 1876.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

TWO MOUNTAINS.

Mr. SPEAKER announced that Mr. Globensky had resigned his position as the representative of the County of Two Mountains in this House.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that a Special Committee of seven members be appointed to prepare and report a list of members to compose the Select Standing Committees ordered by this House. He said:—I mentioned on Friday that some arrangement would have to be made immediately to authorize the printing, or some other Committee to take charge of the reports of the House. On thinking over it, I believe it is much more convenient that a Committee of our own, and not a Sub-Committee of the Joint Committee on Printing should take charge of the matter of reporting the debates, and I shall therefore move, seconded by Sir John Macdonald, that a Select Committee of seven be appointed to assume the direction, under orders of this House, of the reporting and printing of the debates.—Carried.

THE RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the appointment of a Select Committee to consider certain amendments to the rules of the House. He said—In making this motion I may add that some of the rules to be considered are connected with the legislation of last Session. Hon. gentlemen will see by the 53rd section of the Supreme Court Act, that it shall be the duty of the Judges of that Court to give opinions upon certain measures that may be submitted by Parliament, and it was necessary that we should adopt the rules that should govern us in so submitting them. It is also proposed to make some change, not perhaps exactly to the same extent but in the direction of the change made in the House of Commons of England last year, assented to by the Government as to notices of motion and the order in which they should be proceeded with. The right hon. gentleman on the other side of the House mentioned on the last day of the Session of last year, that he would give early notice this Session of his intention to have the rules of the House, as they now stand, strictly enforced with regard to taking up notices of motion and disposing of them as they came up. It would be desirable, I think, to consider this by a Select Committee. The Legislature of Ontario, and I think the Legislature of Quebec, have adopted certain rules with regard to the printing of private bills, and the payment of the fees before the meeting of the House. It has facilitated the transaction of business very much. I propose to submit to this Select Committee the question whether it would be advisable for us to adopt the same rule here to its full extent or not. There is another rule in the English House of Commons with regard to the exclusion of strangers. At the will of any member of this House, strangers may be excluded from the galleries. This has been felt in England, in consequence of recent events, to be an intolerable power placed in the hands of any member of the House, and a change has been made there which practically puts it out of the power of any one man—although it leaves it in the hands of the Speaker—to enforce such a rule at any time. I propose to leave it to the Committee to consider whether something of this kind should not be done here.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD suggested that the Committee should be empowered to report from time to time.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was a very good suggestion, which he would adopt.

Hon. Mr. BLANCHET said perhaps it would be more courteous to the Chair to follow the usual custom and appoint this Committee to assist Mr. Speaker in revising the Rules of the House. Perhaps the Hon. Premier would see fit to change the motion in this way.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE thought it had never been the practice of Parliament to put the Speaker on any Committee, and this was a matter appertaining so entirely to the government of the House that it ought to be left in their hands. The recollection of the hon. member for Levis was about the Library, a Committee being appointed every Session to assist the Speakers of the two Houses in its management.

Hon. Mr. BLANCHET said the custom in this House had always been to appoint such Committees to assist the Speaker. He appealed to the right hon. member for Kingston to say whether this had not been the rule.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said his recollection was not clear on the subject. He knew that a good many Committees had been appointed to assist

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE,

Mr. Speaker, but forgot whether this was one of them. Perhaps the hon. member for Chateauguay could give some information on the subject.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said his recollection rather ran with the hon. member for Levis, but he might be mistaken.

After some discussion the motion was carried.

THE LIBRARY.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the appointment of the usual Committee to assist Mr. Speaker in the management of the Library. He said the names were the same as those of last year.

The motion was carried.

FISHING LICENSES IN LAKE SIMCOE DISTRICT.

Mr. DYMOND moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for a return of all leases or licenses for fishing stations in the Lake Simcoe District; and of all fines and forfeitures inflicted in the years 1874 and 1875 by the Inspector of the said District, with the names of persons convicted and character of offence;—also number and aggregate amount of licenses to kill fish in the winter months issued by the said Inspector in the years mentioned.

The motion was carried.

WHARVES AT MALBAIE, ETC.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for:—1st. Copies of all accounts and pay-lists presented to the Government and also of all accounts and pay-lists paid by the Government for the construction or repair in 1875 of the wharves at Malbaie, Les Eboulements and Bay St. Paul; 2nd. A list of the foremen and clerks employed in connection with such construction or repairs; 3rd. A statement in detail of the travelling expenses and salary paid to each of the said foremen and clerks; 4th. A list of the schooners and barges employed for the said work, or in connection with the said work, shewing their tonnage and the amount paid for each trip, and the system of calculation of such payments; 5th. A separate statement of the cost of the work done on each of the said wharves and an estimate of the cost of what remains to be done on each of them; 6th. A statement shewing the total cost of the timber purchased for each of the said works, shewing the price of such timber per foot, the name of the person from whom it was purchased, and what quantity was purchased for the purpose; 7th. A statement shewing the total amount paid by the Government for the said works; 8th. A statement shewing the amount claimed and remaining to be paid for the said works; 9th. The report or reports of Henry R. Symmes, Esq., and also the report or reports of Frederic Baillargé, Esq., Assistant Chief Engineer of the Department of Public Works, on the subject of the said works in the years 1874, 1875 and 1876.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I have no objection to the adoption of the motion, but I cannot promise all the information that the hon. gentleman asks. I will give it as far as possible. The hon. gentleman is aware that Mr. Symmes died during the execution of this work from a sudden illness, and left some of these matters in such a state that it is impossible to give all the information that he wants, but I will give all I can.

The motion was carried.

SURVEYS IN CHARLEVOIX.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, praying him to cause to be laid before this House the report of Henry R. Symmes, Esquire, in reference to his surveys in the Parish of St. Irénée in the Electoral District of Charlevoix in 1874 or 1875, also a copy of the instructions issued to him on that subject, and of all petitions and correspondence which may have been sent in or exchanged in relation thereto.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I may say to the hon. gentleman with regard to all these subjects that there is some very interesting correspondence. Would he like to have it all?

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—Of course, this matter interests me, and I have no doubt the correspondence will prove most interesting.

The motion was carried.

SURVEYS IN ST. FIDÈLE AND ST. SIMÉON.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of the report or reports of Frederic Baillargé, Esquire, Assistant Engineer to the head of the Public Works Department, on his surveys in the Parish of St. Fidèle and St. Siméon in 1875; the instructions furnished him in relation thereto, and of all petitions and correspondence presented or exchanged on the subject.—Carried.

VIOLATIONS OF DECK LOAD LAW.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and any of its officers or with any individual or public body in relation to violations of the Deck Load Law, and also in relation to violations of the Port Wardens Act, with any instructions that may have been given by the Government to its officers for the enforcement of the Laws referred to. Mr. Mitchell said: My object in making this motion is to call the attention of the Government to the fact that two very serious violations of the laws to which I have referred have taken place within the past year. This matter is of the greatest importance in view of the Legislation of the Imperial Parliament, which seriously affects our shipping interests, and a very strong remonstrance should be made that at a crisis like the present any violations should occur of the character at which English legislation strikes so directly and desires to have strictly enforced. I may state, for the information of the Hon. the Minister of Marine, that the cases to which I refer came within my own knowledge. There may have been many more violations which have escaped observation. One was a steamer of one of the steamship lines which was loaded with grain, and finding by the report which the Port Warden is required to make, that she could not be passed, went to sea in defiance of the law and without the certificate necessary before clearing. The other instance was that of the N. Churchill, which, after loading with a cargo of grain, proceeded to Quebec and took on board a deck load of timber—a fact which came out in the evidence of the case now under examination. Where cases of this kind arise it is the duty of the Government to make a stringent enquiry into the facts, and an example of any ship-owners or agents of ships who deliberately violate laws established for the purpose of saving life and property, and which to some extent justifies legislation which we looked forward to as Canadians with some apprehension, on the ground that the Imperial Parliament should not by its measures interfere with our shipping. I make this motion purely for the purpose of drawing attention to the matter in order that some decided steps shall be taken in regard thereto. I should like to know what correspondence, if any, has been presented to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I am very glad that the hon. gentleman has called attention to this matter. There was some correspondence with regard to those violations of the laws.

The motion was carried.

INLAND WATERS OF CANADA.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for all Orders in Council, papers and correspondence between the Government of Canada and the Imperial Government or any public body or individual in relation to the extension of the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court to the Inland Waters of Canada. Mr. Kirkpatrick said—In making that motion, Sir, I have no intention to do more than remind my hon. friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that it is now two years since it was distinctly promised that this matter should be brought before the authorities in England and the necessary formalities gone through to get the Vice Admiralty Court extended to the inland waters of Canada. Last Session, too, the then Minister of Justice, in answer to a question from this side of the House, stated that they were in correspondence with the Imperial Government on the subject, and that a measure had been brought before the Imperial Parliament to effect the object sought. I hope to receive some assurance from the Government that this long delayed matter will be attended to.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—There has been some correspondence on the subject, which, however, is incomplete, and not in a condition to be presented to the House. If the hon. member will withdraw his motion for the present, I will give him private notice when the correspondence is in such shape as to be brought down, and of course we will assent to a renewal of the motion.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—Of course, if the correspondence is incomplete, I shall withdraw the motion. I hope, however, that other two years will not pass before the matter is settled.

THE BAIE VERTE CANAL.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury), enquired whether a minority report of one or more of the Commissioners appointed by the Government to report upon and investigate the nature and extent of the commercial advantages to be derived from the construction of the proposed Bay Verte Canal has not been made; if so, whether it will be printed and circulated for the information of the country?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—In reply to my hon. friend, I may say that no such report has been made to the Government. I was informed however, by the Chairman of the Commission that one of the Commissioners proposed to make a minority report, and I received yesterday a copy of a printed pamphlet purporting to be such report, but no communication has been received from Mr. Lawrence to identify that pamphlet as his production. The presumption is that it is the minority report. The pamphlet is printed in a shape not suited for our journals. Such as it is, the pamphlet, of which there are a number of copies, will be distributed among the members.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT laid the Public Accounts on the Table.

The House adjourned at 3:50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, Feb. 15, 1876.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE presented the Report of the Select Committee appointed to prepare lists of members to compose the Standing Committees.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON presented the first report of the Committee on Reporting and Printing of Debates.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that the name of Hon. Mr. Blanchet be substituted for that of Hon. Mr. Holton on the Library Committee.—Carried.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the concurrence of the House in the report of the Committee appointed to prepare a list of members for the Standing Committees, so far as regards the Committee on Standing Orders. He said this was the only Committee that required to go to work immediately.

The motion was carried.

THE VETERANS OF 1812-15.

Mr. DELORME moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, praying for a Return shewing the names, age and residence of the Veterans of 1812-15 who have applied for and who have received a gratuity from the Federal Government of Canada, the number of those Militiamen having commissions as officers, and how many such applications have been made by persons living out of Canada.

Hon. Mr. VAIL—I have to some extent anticipated the desire of my hon. friend. The papers have been in the hands of the printer some weeks. I hope in the course of eight or ten days to be able to lay on the Table of the House the fullest information on the subject.

The motion was carried.

THE DEPUTY COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS AT CHICOUTIMI.

Mr. CIMON moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for—1st. Copies of the commission of Damase Hudon, Esq., as Deputy Collector of Customs at Chicoutimi; 2nd.

Copies of all correspondence in relation to the appointment of the said Damase Hudon, Esq.; 3rd. Copies of the Order in Council or other document fixing the salary of the said Damase Hudon, Esq.; 4th. A statement shewing the several amounts collected by the said Damase Hudon, Esq., in his said capacity, from the 1st May, 1875, to the 1st November, 1875, and the amounts paid by him in consequence.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—With regard to the first and second parts of the resolution, I think there has been no commission issued to the officer, nor has there been any correspondence on the subject. The information asked for in the third and fourth parts will be furnished as soon as possible.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD suggested that the first and second parts be struck out.

The suggestion was adopted, and the motion as amended was carried.

MINISTERIAL CHANGES.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—Before proceeding to the orders of the day, I think it would be gratifying to the House if my hon. friend would give some explanations with respect to the reconstruction of the Government by the addition to it of the Minister of Justice and the President of the Council.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The House is entitled to explanations regarding the introduction of new Ministers into the Cabinet, especially where there may have been a divergence of opinion between any of those introduced into the Government and those who previously constituted it. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice, it is well known, took a different ground from the Administration in reference to one measure last Session—the Bill relating to the construction of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway. The ground upon which that difficulty arose was plainly stated in the House, and fully understood by myself prior to and after the introduction and passage of the Bill. The defeat of that Bill in the other branch of the Legislature rendered it necessary for the Government to adopt some other policy with regard to that particular part of the arrangement made upon the recommendation of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Lord Carnarvon. That policy will be developed in the papers to be brought down, and is, I may say, practically known already to the public, although not formally before the House at this time. Upon no other point was there a divergence of opinion between my hon. friend and myself, and this matter being arranged he accepted the offer I made him of the portfolio of the Department of Justice. Upon the resignation of the late Postmaster General, the former Minister of Justice, now a Judge, took his place, and the Hon. Mr. Blake was appointed in accordance with my offer as Minister of Justice. At a later period, when the late Postmaster General was appointed one of the Judges of the Supreme Court a vacancy thereby occurred in the Cabinet, and I made an offer of that office to my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Huntington), Mr. Cauchon assuming the portfolio of President of the Council. I have nothing to say with regard to that, as there is no explanation necessary, such as I have made with reference to the Minister of Justice. These two appointments are, therefore, made upon the grounds I have stated—the one by an agreement on all matters of policy of the Administration, and in the other there was no divergence of opinion requiring explanations to the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—If I may be allowed to make a few remarks, as is usual in such cases, if not according to parliamentary rules, at least in accordance with parliamentary practice, I will thank my hon. friend for the explanation which he has given, but must say that perhaps it is not very accurate. It is, however, pretty much what we looked for. I don't think he was strictly accurate in stating that there had only been a divergence between himself and the Hon. the Minister of Justice on the Nanaimo Railway. If I remember rightly, there was another point which is of much more importance than that measure. It was as to the duty of the Administration to lay before Parliament contracts of considerable size and importance made on such public works as the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway. I think it is within the recollection of every member of this House, that when the motion for the passage of the Bill was made, the hon. gentleman who sits near me, with the Hon. the Minister of Justice, felt they could not vote with the Government of the day and withdrew from the House.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—No, Sir, I did not. I voted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Oh! I beg pardon, it was on the telegraph question my hon. friend withdrew. He was at variance with the head of the Government on that point. It would be satisfactory to know whether it has been agreed between my hon. friends that in future this House of Parliament has the right to have a voice in the approval and submission of contracts before they are finally considered and ratified beyond recall. With regard to the telegraph question, I should like to know—I suppose we will know during the Session—whether the contracts are going on notwithstanding that the line has not been located. With respect to my hon. friend, the President of the Council, it is true, as the First Minister said, that we were not aware of any divergence of opinion during the last Session between them. My hon. friend has acceded to the position of Messrs. Dorion and Fournier. Their mantles have fallen on his shoulders, and no doubt he will fill the representative position of leader of the French Liberal, or Rouge party, in this House as ably as the present Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Fournier did. However, Mr. Speaker, it is my recollection that my hon. friend, the President of the Council, has been a life-long Conservative—that he was a member of a Conservative Administration and elected to a high position, and for all I know he is a strong Conservative yet. Now, one of three things must have happened. Either my hon. friend has become, if I may use the familiar phrase, a Rouge, or represents that party, or the Rouge party has become Conservative; or if he is not a Rouge, we have a coalition, declared to be immoral and corrupt by the united voice of the whole Liberal party in Lower Canada. I think, under such circumstances, we ought to have an explanation on this point; and I have no doubt the President of the Council will eagerly seize an opportunity to give such explanation.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The right hon. gentleman has not accurately remembered the discussion with reference to the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway. I think I am able correctly to state the course I pursued in connection with that question. I pointed out that those persons who held that it was essential to observe to the full the arrangement which Lord Carnarvon suggested to the Government of this country, were, in my opinion, logically bound to support the motion of the First Minister for the second reading of the Bill containing, as it did, a provision that the contracts should not be proceeded with at once. There was no difference of opinion at any time that I was aware of upon the general policy of the submission of such contracts; in point of fact, in the Pacific Bill of 1874 the submission of contracts was provided for. It was justifiable for all those prepared to accept the Carnarvon terms to support the measure, which passed with a clause reserving the contracts for the approval of Parliament. I explained this to those who called upon me for advice, and it was upon that view I voted with the hon. member for Cumberland, and at the same time stated that those who sustained Lord Carnarvon's terms were logically bound to vote for the measure. Had that Bill been carried—had it become an Act of Parliament—other considerations would have arisen as to my duty in accepting the offer of my hon. friend on my right. But, as he says, the Bill was lost, and the consideration arose what should then be the policy of the Government. That policy is before the public and practically before the House already. With regard to the telegraph contracts, it is perfectly true that I abstained from voting on that question, because I did not comprehend thoroughly the observations made on this side of the House, or in point of fact what had been done in reference to those contracts. I would have voted according to my judgment if I had had information which would have enabled me to arrive at a clear conclusion. I may add, however, with reference to that and other matters, that I do not understand it is the duty of every person invited to join the Government to arrive at a theoretical agreement as to past transactions so that something of the same nature may not occur in the future. In such a case, however, one may honestly accept the position if he conceives such past acts to be errors in judgment. Under the circumstances, it is not for my hon. friend to complain because I have joined the Administration after what has been already said upon the subject by the press of his own party.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—I can give a satisfactory answer in a very few words to the question put by the right hon. gentleman. I have been acting for about four years with the party on this side of the House; and during that period I did all in my power to break down the late Administration; hence I do not think it at all strange that I should have come into the Government. At the same time I think that it would be very interesting to learn what the right hon. gentleman understands by the words Conservative and Liberal. I remember when I was a Ministerial colleague of the right hon. gentleman—and that was long ago;—that was a Conservative Administration, but to-day, a head or a tail—you may regard it either way—has been pre-fixed or added to the title, and the party is known under the name of Liberal Conservative or Conservative-Liberal. There is another fact I recollect. When the right hon. gentleman attempted to introduce into his Cabinet the gentleman who at present fills the position of Chief Justice of Lower Canada, I may ask, did he then desire that gentleman to abandon his principles as a Liberal, or did he intend to abandon his own principles as a Conservative? And in another instance, at the very same time, the right hon. member for Kingston endeavoured to prevail upon the present Premier to enter his Administration. Were his intentions similar? Did he purpose persuading the present First Minister to forsake his political principles, or to renounce his own? I thank the right hon.

gentleman for the kind manner in which he put his question.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—If I might be permitted to make a few observations, I would address the House upon this most important question—than which I contend, Sir, there is no matter of greater moment that can come under the consideration of Parliament, or one in which the whole country is more deeply interested; namely, the reconstruction of the Government. I think that the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat misunderstood the remarks of the right hon. gentleman who preceded him. He did not attack my hon. friend the President of the Council for having taken the course he did. It was quite right I contend, Sir, for the Hon. President of the Council to take the course he has; but one of the great questions in controversy from the first moment I had the honour of taking a seat on that side of the House—one of the leading questions forced upon the attention of Parliament by the hon. gentlemen opposite, was the difference in opinion which existed in relation to coalitions. My right honourable friend never claimed that there was anything wrong in the mere fact of joining coalitions—such coalitions being a combination of gentlemen of different political opinions in order to carry on the Administration of the country—provided they could agree with respect to questions of general interest that came under the consideration of the Government. And holding these views, he did not attack my hon. friend the President of the Council for going into the Government. It was quite in accordance with the views and sentiments he and his party had held, and it was for the hon. gentleman who leads the Government to explain to this House and to the people of this country, why it was that when he sat on this side of the House he contended that coalitions were vicious and corrupting; yet, when he changed his place, his doctrines were just the reverse; and that he found such a coalition offered quite sufficient ground for him to call upon this House to drive the Conservative party out of office. We have been in this House too long, Sir, not to know that the Hon.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON.

the Premier and the Hon. the Minister of Justice have urged upon Parliament the corruptness of the action of the Administration upon that occasion, and that coalitions were denounced by them in this House and out of it in the strongest possible terms. They said that parties who came into the Government for the mere purpose of governing the country compromised themselves. But, Sir, I do not complain particularly of the accession of the President of the Council, although the necessity for it is one of the strangest instances that could be given of the inconvenience of coalitions under certain circumstances. There is, perhaps, no means by which the leader of the Government could say to this House and to the country, so clearly that he has entirely abandoned all past principles, and that all he has stated on the subject of coalition was stated, not because that was a principle of which he honestly disapproved, but was a means by which he hoped the Government might be displaced. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman, if he had searched all over Canada for the express purpose of giving to this House and the people of this country evidence that he had entirely abandoned his views and principles on that question, could not have done so more effectively than by taking into his Government the Hon. President of the Council. He (Mr. Cauchon) and the Leader of the Government in respect to their political views—at least, so far as they are known—are as wide as the poles asunder; and the fact that my hon. friend the Prime Minister availed himself of the aid of the Hon. the President of the Council on a certain occasion, is not a sufficient reason why a cardinal and anti-coalition principle which the Leader of the Government has impressed upon this House should not be observed. I say that the presence of the Minister of Justice in this Government is not only an illustration of a coalition Government; but, I contend that tried by the principles which these hon. gentlemen have professed, and by the doctrine they for so many long years have endeavoured to force on the attention of this country, it is an extremely vicious combination. The hon. gentleman will not misunderstand me in the use of these terms. I am using them simply in the way in which they were used by those gentlemen themselves, as representing a compromise of principle. Now, Sir, the course taken by my hon. friend who holds the very high position of Minister of Justice has been a very remarkable one, and we cannot suppose that a gentleman of his talents and high standing in the country can take a prominent part in the management of the public affairs of this country, and it be all forgotten in an hour. He is a gentleman of too much mark and consideration in the estimation of the people of Canada, for us to suppose for one moment that the public would be indifferent to any step he may take. Now, Sir, what was the step taken by the hon. gentleman before the formation of this Government, when the late Government were about to be displaced? My hon. friend stated, and I have no doubt he did so with the utmost sincerity—lending additional weight to the great power he wielded with reference to the deplacement of his predecessors in office, that he would gain nothing by the change—that he was quite an impartial and disinterested public man—that if the Administration were driven from power, nothing could induce him to accept office. That, Sir, was the manner in which the hon. gentlemen lent additional weight to the arguments he addressed to this House when he asked it to displace his predecessors. I know the hon. gentleman too well to doubt for a single moment his entire truth and sincerity when he made that statement to the House, but in spite of a declaration of that kind, he became a member of the Government the very next day. I do not say, Sir, that it was not right or unwarranted in view of the speech he had delivered on the day previous; but I do maintain that never was there an instance in which great political principles were more thoroughly left in abeyance than when the hon. gentleman subsequently admitted that he went into the Government of Canada without any intention of remaining in it; that the hon. gentleman, in fact, presented a Mackenzie-Blake Administration to the people for their acceptance or rejection, having, at the same time, determined that he would continue a member of the Cabinet only until the victory had been secured, and public approval had been obtained with regard to the character of an Administration of which he was one of the most prominent Ministers,—abandoning the high position he had accepted and retiring into private life the moment a verdict was secured in favour of the Ministry. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman, I presume, had sufficient reasons for retiring from the Government, but what I blame him for is because it was never satisfactorily explained to the people of this country why he took office without the intention of serving the country in that high position which he had accepted as a member of the Government of Canada. I believe that he had sufficient reasons for the course he pursued; and further, that if he had based such retirement upon those reasons, instead of lending his powerful aid to the Administration in order to carry the elections, without any purpose as to giving the Government and the country the benefit of his services, I consider that his position would have been much stronger as a public man, to-day. Those reasons, however, were not made known to the House, though I believe they were communicated to the Leader of the Government; at least I assume so, not having the honour and pleasure of having the confidence of these gentlemen, and my assumption is based upon the public acts of the hon. gentleman who left the Cabinet. One of the most striking events that was perhaps ever presented in our political history occurred a short time afterwards, when my hon. friend the Prime Minister took an opportunity—a very out-of-the-way opportunity—to address a public meeting at Prescott, although not in connection with a Dominion election, but with reference to the Local Administration of the affairs of this Province. I have understood that it was another leading principle held by the gentlemen opposite, that Dominion Cabinet Ministers should keep entirely aloof and preserve an entire independence from that Administration; but my hon. friend the Prime Minister gave the country the benefit of a recess Address upon that occasion, and everyone was astounded on account of the character of that speech. What did he do? Why, Sir, no one could read his remarks addressed to the people of Canada—for a Prime Minister cannot otherwise speak in public—without perceiving that he seized this opportunity for the purpose of denouncing in advance the views and sentiments entertained by the Hon. the Minister of Justice. These opinions had not as yet been so publicly announced; but, I assume, as I have a right to assume—

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—That he went out of the Government, because he differed in his views with the Hon. the Prime Minister who, unable, regarding such radical, progressive and liberal sentiments, to agree with my hon. friend, accordingly denounced in advance the very principles which my hon. friend the Minister of Justice subsequently avowed as his own. To use the emphatic language employed by the Premier—"He warned the Liberals of this country strongly against those politicians who are taking up these vagaries"—designating in the most contemptuous terms he could possibly find the theories a short time afterwards promulgated by the Hon. the Minister of Justice in his celebrated speech at Aurora. Why, Sir, the moment that speech was made, every person in this country at once understood the position taken by my hon. friend the Prime Minister at Prescott, in crying down extreme Liberal tendencies and forestalling the language in which the Aurora speech was couched. These sentiments the First Minister held to be vagaries, and matters which had no relation to the proper conduct of public affairs, warning the country against them. And what do you suppose, Sir, were the strong reasons which my hon. friend the Prime Minister gave for seeking to crush out any attempt of such a nature. Why, Sir, it was that such a policy on the part of the Liberals would bring back the Tory Administration at a very early day into power; and he quoted history to show that these differences of opinion had uniformly had a similar effect; that the views of the member for South Bruce threatened the country with chaos, and that a Conservative Administration, as a consequence, would be restored to office.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Would that make chaos?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I say, Sir, that this is one of the functions of the Conservative party; when gentlemen produce a state of chaos such a state of chaos as reigns at the present moment in this country—then it becomes the duty of the Liberal-Conservative party to bring the country out of that chaotic condition. If I am allowed to proceed, I will observe that this is a grave matter and that it is so regarded by the House, and by the people. My hon. friend for South Bruce delivered what he himself called a disturbing speech. He boldly took up the gauntlet thrown down by the Hon. the Prime Minister, who declared a few days previously that the Liberal party should stamp out proceedings of this kind, and he became the great tribune of the people of this country. He put himself forward, as a man who had felt it necessary to relieve himself of the trammels of office for the purpose of vindicating principles, which, however the Hon. the Prime Minister might disapprove of them, he regarded as being so important as to warrant the severance from him of one of his closest political allies, and his assumption of an entirely independent position. My hon. friend must not suppose that he could make such a speech as he delivered at Aurora without exciting the public and inspiring the advanced Liberals of this country with the hope that a new departure was imminent, and with gratification because there was one man calling himself a Reformer who had sufficient independence and spirit to say that he was a Reformer and that he refused to follow a party which could find nothing to reform. These are the words, I think, though they were probably more elegantly expressed. Therefore, Sir, my hon. friend assumed a position which created great expectation on the part of certain people in Canada, and having made this disturbing speech, as was avowed by himself, with the full knowledge of the consequences, he came back to this House and took his seat, as several other very independent gentlemen have done, on that side of the House. Was it to support my hon. friend, the Leader of the Government? Why, Sir, I declare in the presence of both sides of the House, that no opponent with whom the Administration had to contend during the past Session, gave so much trouble and so much anxiety as my hon. friend, who now occupies the seat of the Minister of Justice; because, Sir, he was disposed to pursue the same independent line of conduct, which he publicly declared to the people of this country he, as in duty bound, intended to pursue in the interests of Canada. He says, however, that it was only a mere difference of opinion with reference to the construction of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, but my hon. friend can scarcely sustain such a pretension; for he charged the Prime Minister of this country with having been false to the duty he owed Parliament, in making an agreement with the Colonial Minister and entering into a compact with British Columbia without any reference to the representatives of the people of Canada. He charged him with having exceeded the privileges which the Prime Minister of any Government ought to possess. That was a pretty wide divergence on a great question, on one of the most important transactions in which the Government had been or can be engaged with relation to the material prosperity of this country. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice challenged the action of his leader—Does he shake his head?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I do.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Does he mean to deny that he challenged the right of the Premier to enter into a compact with Lord Carnarvon with relation to the Pacific Railway, without previously submitting the terms to Parliament?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I was prepared then, as I am now, to declare that no Ministry can bind the country to any terms without the assent of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—My hon. friend, I know, is very astute in points of that kind, but he must not suppose that he can lead the House to enter into the nice distinction that he has now raised. I ask if the Ministry try to do what they have no right to attempt and what they had not previously the power to do, whether he should sustain them? The Premier stated in so many words that he made the agreement, and expected Parliament to ratify it. I say that is a pretty wide divergence of opinion. Then came the question of the terms themselves. Why, every person knows that the Hon. the Minister of Justice, at Walkerton, South Bruce, West Toronto and other places, where he afforded the public the pleasure of hearing his voice, in Parliament and out of Parliament, has been the loudest to denounce the late Government as having imposed an intolerable burden on the people of this country in undertaking to build the Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I do so now.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—And yet my hon. friend knows that all the burden which the late Government ever intended to impose upon Canada was an agreement to give $30,000,000 money and 50,000,000 acres of land to any company that would construct, at their own cost, risk, and responsibility, the Canadian Pacific Railway. And, Sir, my hon. friend knows that, not content with making this provision, there was a formal declaration by the then Opposition, that the road should not be built by the Government; but in spite of all this my hon. friend the Prime Minister entered into a solemn compact with Lord Carnarvon, binding the Government to build a road from the shores of the Pacific to the shores of Lake Superior in fifteen years, without any reference to Parliament, and without any qualification whatever, as to whether it was within the power or resources of the country or not. As I said before, that was another point on which, if there was not divergence of opinion, there was a very remarkable disagreement between the two hon. gentlemen. The one by his acts and the other by his words have placed themselves in the strongest possible antagonism. Well, Sir, my hon. friend is a very distinguished and a very acute lawyer, but I must confess I feel sorry for him—although my sympathies are not as easily excited in that direction as may be supposed—in the position he occupies when he tells the House that the reason he could not vote on the motion then before the House, in relation to the telegraph contract, was that he could not make up his mind on which side to vote, and this after two such distinguished legal gentlemen as the hon. member for Cardwell and the right hon. friend from Kingston had moved and seconded a resolution, declaring that the contract made by the Government was utterly at variance with the Statute and should be annulled. And yet, Sir, the Hon. the Minister of Justice was not able, after the discussion on this subject by these distinguished legal gentlemen, to decide which of the two was the right side to vote upon. The House knows that the same gentleman withdrew from the Government, and made a disturbing speech at Aurora, and attacked the terms made by Lord Carnarvon at one of the most critical moments in the Government of the country. Having assailed the Government for having violated the law and made a contract involving the expenditure of over one million of money; in the teeth of that, and at a time which was really a very critical moment for the Government, my hon. friend put on his hat and walked out of the House rather than compromise his high position as a lawyer by sustaining the administration. Now, Sir, I think the House and the country naturally came to the conclusion from the moment the Aurora speech was delivered, that my hon. friend had placed himself as far asunder as the poles from the Leader of the Government on a question of very great political importance. I do not refer to the Nanaimo Railway, although my hon. friend took the ground that the Government had unnecessarily placed very heavy additional burdens on the shoulders of the people in connection with that railway, independent of anything binding upon them by the action of their predecessors. On that question—one that would involve the expenditure of millions—my hon. friend took and maintained his ground, notwithstanding that he did so against the Government, and after the declaration of the Prime Minister in his place in Parliament that the honour of the Government was involved in the carrying out of the contract which he had made. I think it would be difficult to imagine that an hon. gentleman who had placed himself in such a position, and who would lead the people to suppose that it was impossible for him to consent to a great sacrifice of principle, would take his place in the Government. But we find that, with wonderful tact and power, the Prime Minister seems able to overcome all opposition on the part of those holding different views, and to draw them within the magic circle of his influence. He exercised his wonderful mesmeric power—for I suppose nothing else could account for it—on the hon. member for South Bruce, and what is the consequence? I deplore the result—in the interests of public morality I was going to say, but I won't say that for fear my hon. friend may think I am quoting from him—in the interests of the political status of Canada. I deplore it because it strikes down a great tribune of the people and leaves him a simple place-man, although the position he holds is one of the most important and distinguished in the country. He has rendered it impossible, without a great sacrifice of principle, that he should ever take the place he formerly had. If we ever had in this country the spectacle, not only of a coalition, but a vicious coalition, it is that formed by the Premier and the Minister of Justice. Who, that has read the speech delivered by the hon. member for South Bruce, at Aurora, pored over it with delight and admired the stand which he took as the tribune of the people, but feels regret that such an hon. gentleman should place himself in a position that compels him to take back everything which he advocated in the interests of the people. He told us he was one Reformer who would refuse to take a position in a Government that had nothing to reform. Well, he has gone into the Cabinet. Have we got any of those "idle vagaries," as the Premier at Prescott styled the measures for compulsory voting and the representation of minorities? Have we got any of the other foibles held up to ridicule by the Premier, as evidence that the hon. member for South Bruce has not only gone into the Cabinet of Canada, but gone there to carry out the principles he advocated at Aurora? He goes there to adopt the policy to which he stood so strongly in antagonism before the people of Canada. I don't know that there can be anything very radical or reforming in a Bill to regulate the relations to the public of common carriers, or a consolidation of the laws that my right hon. friend with so much industry and ability placed on the statute books of Canada. I fail to find in these that the hon. gentleman has gone into the Cabinet on other grounds than any of his colleagues—to carry out the policy of his leader. My hon. friend the Premier has a happy knack of relieving himself of the responsibility of his anti-coalition sentiments, which he urged with so much force and eloquence as almost to convince us unsophisticated people on this side of the House that he was sincere. He says, "I am the embodiment of Reform; anybody who comes to me must be a Reformer, and therefore there can be no coalition." That may be very satisfactory to the hon. gentleman, but he should have thought of it when he was assailing those who, while they differed twenty years ago, were united in their views at a later period. He should have reflected that it was time to assail coalitions only when the vicious results of them were apparent. I say a vicious result appears in this Government because the tribune of the people scatters to the winds all the reforms he advocated, and his followers are led to sustain a Government that calls itself a Reform Administration, but can find nothing to reform.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. member for Cumberland has come out in a new role—as champion of public morality—and I am sure the House cannot but feel gratified that they have found one so appropriate for the position, considering his antecedents. The hon. gentleman has declared himself in my presence a Reformer, and said it was a malignant falsehood to style him anything else. He has also declared himself a Conservative. Now, I have never been anything but a Liberal, and I have been elected as the Leader of the Reform party. There is no member of the Administration that is not cognizant of and in accord with the action which gave me that position, and there is no member of the Administration to-day holding office in any other way than as a representative of the great Liberal party of Canada. The hon. gentleman, Sir, seems to think that by an ingenious distortion of historical facts—not wilful of course—he can convict me, not of anything wrong, but of a possible divergence of opinion from my hon. friend the Minister of Justice on certain speculative opinions with regard to cumulative and compulsory voting, although I never delivered any speech on the subject. The hon. gentleman says I condemned all the subjects mentioned in my hon. friend's speech at Aurora, a few days before, at a dinner. I went to Prescott, not to deliver opinions on these subjects, but simply at the request of an hon. friend, spoke for a time on general topics, and I do not think I touched on the topics of the Aurora speech at all. But, if I did, these are subjects we are not expected to have exactly the same opinions on; we may view them, not from a party stand-point, but from an individual point of view. I was delighted at the speech of my hon. friend at Aurora, and I had the pleasure of writing to him shortly afterwards, expressing my delight at the ability with which he handled the subjects. The hon. gentleman seems to think that the Minister who had accepted office in the Government when formed in 1874 and left it a few months afterwards, did so because there was a difference of opinion—in fact he was accused very lately by the principal organ, an organ that is the property of the right hon. gentleman to a certain extent, of defrauding the public in having entered the Cabinet and given the country the impression that he meant to continue a member of the Government, but when the elections were over he retired. That organ was obliged to admit its incorrectness when it admitted that the hon. member for South Bruce, before the election of 1874, announced his attention of retiring at an early period, so that the whole country had the knowledge that he did not intend to remain in the Government at that time—not because there was any divergence of opinion between himself and his colleagues, because there was none—but on account of private circumstances which made that particular action necessary on his part at that time. I have only a word to say regarding the hon. gentleman's discussion of the terms arrived at with British Columbia—commonly known as the arrangement made by Lord Carnarvon. I never meant, nor could I mean by any possibility, that the assent of Parliament was not required to the Esquimault and Nanaimo Railway, and if I made the House or any person believe that I could proceed without legislative authority, I regret that such should be the case for a moment. I introduced the Bill, and it is well known I repudiated the Order in Council of the hon. gentlemen opposite to make the terminus at Esquimault. It was also well-known, if we carried out the terms of Earl Carnarvon, we must submit a Bill to Parliament to obtain their sanction for the expenditure of the money. I do not think there is any necessity for me to say anything more on this subject; the Government as constituted now is simply representing the Liberal party of the country, and I hold precisely the same views of the viciousness—the word is preferred to any other—of the viciousness of coalitions I always did, and gave practical illustration of by myself refusing to be a member of a coalition.

Mr. BUNSTER—I heard the hon. Leader of the Government say he was delighted with the Aurora speech. I say the hon. gentleman who delivered that Aurora speech did wrong, and I assure the House it surprised me terribly when I read it. I ask the present Ministry whether they adhere to the Aurora speech as well as to the hon. gentleman who delivered it? I think that they do, as they have taken the hon. gentleman into the Cabinet who has always been against the interests of British Columbia. The Government has done wrong to take hold of a gentleman who has said so much against our Province, when he called it an inhospitable country. I will not allow any hon. gentleman to vilify my country. I think it is as hospitable a country as any in Canada, and I think it is very unstatesman-like to run down any part of the Dominion as the hon. member for South Bruce has done. Notwithstanding what has been said of British Columbia, we find the Finance Minister was willing to go to England and pledge its credit for money to build the Pacific Railway, but the Government are now using the money in improving and building canals in Ontario, instead of using it for the purpose for which it was borrowed. British Columbia requires no sympathy from this House. All we want is simple justice, and we are not getting anything but abuse by such gentlemen as the hon. member for South Bruce, who alludes to our Province as an inhospitable country and a sea of mountains. But I can tell the hon. gentleman that we have as good gentlemen living there as in any other Province in Canada. It is the only Province in Canada that has an agent in Great Britain to attend to its immigration matters.

Mr. SPEAKER—The question before the House is, an hon. gentleman has called for explanations as to the reconstruction of the Ministry. When the hon. gentleman has any observations to make on the reconstruction of the Ministry, or any further information to ask for from the Ministers, he will be in order, but I think his remarks are entirely outside the scope of this subject.

Mr. MASSON—Our attention up to the present point has been directed to the Minister of Justice, but we of Quebec have more fault to find with the accession of the President of the Council to the Ministry. That hon. gentleman said a short time ago that there was really no difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives, but there was between the Liberals and the Radicals. I have read the expressions of the hon. gentleman, which I will here recite. He says:—"Conservatism does not exclude liberality. It only excludes radicalism which destroys, and which has become extinct in Canada by its own excess. All that is not Radical will be bound to ally itself to the great Liberal-Conservative party." I would like to know who the hon. gentleman was then calling Radicals in the Dominion of Canada? I can tell this House who they were. The hon. member referred to the Grits of Ontario and the Rouges of Quebec, with whom there could never be any union or fusion. Some hon. member has been saying—I think the Premier himself—that it is not a coalition because the hon. member came into the Government without any following. I will now show that the Radicals are really the great branch of the Liberal party of Ontario, led by the Premier. The Hon. the President of the Council thus writes:—"As to the Radical opposition of Upper Canada, everyone knows the uncertainty and instability of the elements that compose it. How long would it follow Mr. Mackenzie if, perchance, he was one day to come into power? It is sufficient to recall to one's mind what the Radicals did to Baldwin in 1850, to Hincks in 1854, and to Sandfield Macdonald in 1863, when he was saved only by the Conservative Opposition." And yet the hon. gentleman calls this no fusion. He continues:—"The future belongs yet for a long time to the Conservatives, and it is towards them that we must turn all the aspirations that wish to have success." The hon. gentleman, when he asks what difference there is between Liberals and Conservatives, evidently means what difference is there between Conservatives and Radicals. I want to show that this fusion with the Government to-day is a union with what he then believed to be the Radical party. The Rouges in Quebec believe that there is no difference between Conservatives and Liberals. The hon. gentleman said on the 9th of June, 1868, that the Radicals of Quebec were Annexationists. He was then supporting the Government, as he generally supports Governments, and he said at the time, "It is not right to advise people to throw down the barriers and allow the enemy to enter and take possession of the country." These are the gentlemen that he is allied with today, and the question is whether the hon. gentleman himself is more to blame for entering the Cabinet, or those with whom he has allied himself for taking him in. The hon. member for Cumberland has said there was no fault to find with the Hon. the President of the Council. But I say this to the Liberals, that I do not believe there is a political party in any country in the world that has shown the example which the Liberal party of Lower Canada has shewn lately. They promised to take a stand on morality, but in accepting the Hon. the President of the Council as leader they have confessed that they have no understanding of morality as it is felt in this country. I remember a fact. The very week that the hon. gentleman took the oath as a Privy Councillor, the Liberal party of the Province of Quebec repudiated a gentleman, of whom, although he is not working with us, we must all be proud. I allude to the Hon. Mr. Joly, the Leader of the Opposition in that Province. Those who know and have followed the history of Lower Canada, must understand that before many months are over, the verdict of the people will be against a party that has lowered itself so far as to accept for a leader a gentleman whom they have always abused. Nothing is more demoralizing than to see a great party taking into its ranks a man whom they have always taunted—I do not say justly—for his corruption when he was working for the Conservatives. They used to say that the great fault of our party was that they were corruptionists—that they robbed the public funds of the country. The gravest accusation made against the party was not that they had enriched themselves at the expense of the country, but that the hon. gentleman had so enriched himself. I do not say that that is true, but those who have made the allegation have certainly lowered the sense of public morality to an extent which it is impossible to surpass.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—When I complied with the demand for an explanation which the hon. member for Kingston made, I was entitled to suppose that the subjects he mentioned were those which I was to explain, and it was not fair for the hon. member for Cumberland to wait until that explanation was made and then proceed to a general review of my public career. I shall not answer him now, but will say shortly that he has advanced some things which are very old, some which are very new, but all with one common quality that they are invariably incorrect.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT laid upon the table the return of expenditures under special warrant for settlers' relief; return of expenditures under special warrant for mounted police; statement of loans and gratuities under 338. Vic.; and an order in Council relating to increased annuities to Indians under Treaty 4, at Qu'Appelle Lakes.

THE BUDGET.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD enquired if the Finance Minister could state when he was likely to come down with the Budget.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT replied that he could not at present.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked if the Finance Minister proposed as usual to bring down to the latest period that he could, previous to the Budget speech, the revenue and expenditure.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT — Certainly.

The House adjourned at 5:45.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, February 16, 1876.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at ten minutes past Three o'clock.

ASSISTANT INSPECTOR OF PENITENTIARIES

Hon. Mr. BLAKE introduced a Bill to provide for the appointment of Assistant Inspectors of Penitentiaries in Manitoba and British Columbia. He said the House was aware that there were no regular penitentiaries in those Provinces, though buildings were in course of construction. Owing to their great distance from head-quarters and the great expense of travelling to them, it was thought advisable to provide Inspectors for these Provinces, who shall receive small salaries, not exceeding $200 a year each, and travelling expenses from their residences to the penitentiaries.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE,

The Bill was read the first time.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE introduced a Bill to provide for the Collection and Registration of Criminal Statistics. He said the House last Session unanimously agreed with the suggestion of the hon. member for North York, respecting the obvious importance of such a measure as this. The Bill now introduced was very simple and elastic in its provisions. He would not now trouble the House with the details of it. The general principle was that such schedules as may from time to time be approved by the Governor in Council, shall be furnished to the Department of Agriculture, which has charge of statistics, to collect information with regard to the criminal business conducted in the courts and the number of prisoners in the jails for the year preceding. The Bill proposed the establishment of a fee for the officers discharging this duty, it being, in his opinion, not merely justice, but policy to pay some small sum to ensure the collection of these statistics. He would give fuller information at the second reading.

The Bill was read the first time.

THE OTTAWA CANAL.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew), asked whether it is the intention of the Government to take steps at an early date for the improvement of the navigation of the Ottawa, Mattawan and French Rivers, so as to enable vessels to pass from Lake Huron via the said rivers to tide-water on the St. Lawrence; and if so, on what scale as to draught of water and size of locks it is intended to construct the said works.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the intention of the Government to take any steps to prosecute any further works than those now under contract, for the present.

REGISTERED LETTERS.

Mr. LITTLE asked whether the Postmaster General intends to make such arrangements as will prevent registered letters being tampered with, and if loss is sustained by the sender of such registered letter, whether compensation will be allowed by the Post Office Department?

Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON—It is not the intention to make any radical change in the existing arrangements, but the Department will exercise every precaution to prevent the evils indicated in the hon. gentleman's question.

THE CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT.

Mr. IRVING asked whether it is the intention of the Government to propose any Legislation during the present Session of Parliament upon the subject-matter of the several Acts known as the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1872, and the amendment thereof passed at the last Session of Parliament?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I hope to be able to introduce such a Bill to-morrow.

THE FINANCIAL DEPRESSION.

Mr. MILLS—In rising to move for a Select Committee to enquire into the causes of the present financial depression, said—I assume that there exists at the present time a very considerable extent of financial stringency in the country. I don't think, Sir, that it is necessary to enter into any discussion with the view of establishing that particular fact. When we notice in the newspapers from day to day the failure of men engaged in manufacturing or commercial pursuits in various parts of the country,—when we observe statements that a very large number of men formerly employed in the service of those who were engaged in the lumber trade, and in other pursuits, are out of employment—I think that it is unnecessary to bring before the House any array of facts for the purpose of establishing a proposition which I suppose will meet with general assent. I assume, therefore, that there is a very considerable amount of depression in the various branches of industry and trade, and I purpose asking the House for a Committee to enquire into the causes of this distress. We observe that those who have failed are of the commercial as well as of the manufacturing class—that it is not only those engaged in producing various articles of industry within the country who have suffered, but that merchants engaged in the importation of goods have suffered quite as much, so far as we can gather from general reports. I dare say by enquiring of official assignees in different parts of the country, we can ascertain with a considerable degree of precision the total amount for which parties who are engaged in manufacturing and commercial pursuits have failed. That, however, is a matter of information to be obtained by the Committee.

We find, Sir, that there have been failures of large houses engaged in manufacturing pursuits in the adjoining Republic, and the right hon. member for Kingston observed in discussing the Address a few days ago—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Order!

Mr. MILLS—I know it is not customary to refer to a debate, but this rule is not essentially observed in reference to debates upon the Address. If I am out of order in that particular, and it is quite possible that I may be, I may not say what the member for Kingston said; but I will say this, if the rules of the House permitted me to refer to the hon. gentleman's observations upon the Address, in which he stated that it was very important to enquire into how far the depression in Canada—

Mr. SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is hardly in order.

Mr. MILLS—Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think I shall trouble the House with any allusion to, or discussion of, the observations made by the hon. member for Kingston, if the rules of debate of this House will not permit it. I will say this, however, that I am of opinion that we are suffering to a very considerable extent from commercial depression in consequence of our intimate commercial relations with the trade of the adjoining Republic. I think it was a sound principle which was laid down many years ago by a distinguished English Statesman, that one nation had the same interest in the commercial prosperity of another nation with whom it is carrying on trade to a large extent, that a merchant has in the welfare of his customers. It is not very easy for the merchant to remain prosperous while his customers are impoverished, and it is not very easy for the people of this country who are engaged in commercial pursuits to be in a highly prosperous condition while those with whom they are dealing are suffering from financial depression. It is said by those who are in favour of seeking relief from the present depression by legislation in this House, that we might improve our condition by an alteration of the fiscal policy of this country. I am not going to say, Sir, whether that is the correct observation or not; I am not going to say whether we might restrain our importation — if there has been over-importation — by a protective tariff. I am not going to discuss that question; I am free to say that I believe that high duties upon imported articles have not always secured that object elsewhere; but whether they would do so in this country or not, I will not, in anticipation of any information that may be obtained on this subject by the Committee, pronounce an opinion. There is one thing I may notice here, that the balance of trade has been for a number of years very largely against this country. I do not attach the importance to this fact that is sometimes attached to it; but it is, nevertheless, a fact not without importance. In 1868 the balance of trade against this country was $16,000,000.

In 1869	$10,000,000
“ 1870	1,250,000
“ 1871	22,000,000
“ 1872	28,750,000
“ 1873	47,000,000
“ 1874	38,860,000
“ 1875	45,000,000

That is, from 1868 down to June 30th, 1875, there was a balance of $209,000,000 against this country. Now this is a very large amount, and if that represented the actual condition of things as between this country and other countries with whom we deal, it would be a matter for very serious consideration. But we find in looking at the trade of England since 1868 there has been a large balance continuously against that country, without producing any of the disasters which it is supposed that a large and continuous balance of trade will produce. The balance of trade against England was

In 1860	£ 75,000,000
“ 1865	105,000,000
“ 1870	103,000,000
“ 1874	130,000,000

It greatly increased with the increased exports and imports of the country, but in considering the balance of trade in a country we are bound to see who does the carrying, and who reaps the profits; who controls the capital by which that trade is carried on. I have no doubt whatever, in looking at the trade of Great Britain, that the capital by which it is carried on, the tonnage and marine of England enjoy the profits upon the carriage of both the imports and the exports of the country, and that the profits upon the products exchanged accrue to the capitalists of Great Britain. What that amount is I do not know, but it must in a very considerable degree exceed the difference between the value of the imports and the exports of the country. In the United States for a number of years the balance of trade has been against that country. In 1855 the value of the exports of the adjoining Republic over their imports was $13,688,000.

In 1856	$12,000,000
“ 1857	2,000,000
“ 1858	42,000,000
“ 1859	18,000,000
“ 1860	11,000,000
“ 1861	30,000,000

Thus we observe that, while in England, the balance of trade is apparently against England under a non-protective tariff or free trade policy, in the United States, under a non-protective tariff, the balance was directly in favour of the Republic, regardless of any advantages which it may have from the carrying trade or on the profits of that trade. Since 1861 we all know that in that country they have had a highly protective tariff, a tariff that has averaged 48 per cent. upon the articles taxed, or 44 per cent. upon the entire imports of the country. In 1862 the balance of trade against the United States was sixty-two millions in round numbers.

In 1863.....	$12,000,000
“ 1864.....	87,000,000
“ 1865.....	52,000,000
“ 1866.....	28,000,000
“ 1867.....	77,000,000
“ 1868.....	20,000,000
“ 1870.....	93,000,000

I have not had time to look at the relative values of the imports and exports from the last period down to the present, but there can be no doubt whatever, while in England the carrying trade, being in the hands of England, more than compensates for the difference between the value of the imports and exports, in the United States the carrying trade, having gradually passed into foreign hands, the balance of trade instead of being less is very largely increased above the amount indicated by the figures quoted. The balance of trade is an important matter for consideration, but it is not absolutely conclusive as to the prosperity or non-prosperity of a country. Adam Smith observes—

“ The balance of produce and consumption may be constantly in favour of a nation, though what is called the balance of trade be generally against it. A nation may import to a greater value than it exports for half a century, perhaps, together; the gold and silver which comes into it during all this time may be all immediately sent out of it; its circulating coin may gradually decay, different sorts of paper money being substituted in its place, and even the debts, too, which it contracts, in the principal nations with whom it deals, may be gradually increasing and yet its real worth, the exchangeable value of the annual produce of its lands and labour, may during the same period have been increasing in a much greater proportion.”

The state of our North American colonies and of the trade which they carried on with Great Britain before the commencement of the present disturbances, may serve as a proof that this is by no means an impossible supposition. The condition, Sir, of England with a large balance of trade against her, verifies the principle laid down by Adam Smith, which I have just read. We may very fairly conclude that the exports of the country are a much safer basis for estimating its prosperity than the increase of its imports, and that it can scarcely be considered that a country is in a highly prosperous condition if its exports are continuously diminishing. I might here observe that we have had frequently pressed on the attention of this House the propriety of adopting a highly protective tariff with a view to prevent over-trading. I am not saying that is an improper proposition to submit to this Parliament. I will not say that such a tariff applied to some industries will not promote their development or increase their profits, but I will say that we have no evidence that such will be the result. There is no principle or well established collection of facts to show that such a policy will be followed by such results; on the contrary, we have instances in which a protective tariff, instead of doing what it is generally supposed to accomplish, and which I am free to admit it does sometimes accomplish—diminish the importations—has on the contrary largely increased them. This was the case in the United States. After 1862 the duties were greatly increased—from a tariff averaging 13 per cent. to a tariff averaging 40 per cent.—but instead of importations being checked by the high tariff they were largely increased. And this always will be the case where the circumstances of the country are such as to cause an increase in the cost of subsistence greater than the additional amount added to the foreign products in the form of increased duties. It is said that ships were built in St. John, New Brunswick, in 1868, for $40 per ton, while in Maine they were costing $70 per ton. Look at the tariff charged on the articles entering into the composition of ships. You will find that the difference between the cost in St. John upon these products of Maine is a difference of only $4.60 per ton, while the difference, you will observe, in the cost at which they are respectively disposed of per ton is $30; thus you have $25 to account for in some other way, so that it is easy to see that under these circumstances, notwithstanding the high tariff, if there was no provision in the United States for the prevention of the registration of foreign vessels, they could import much more cheaply than they could build. I do not say what would be the result here, but I give this instance for the purpose of showing that you cannot lay down any rule by which you can be perfectly sure that an increase of tariff would diminish importations. I apprehend that so far as suffering from depression of the manufacturing branches of the industries of this country is concerned, they must desire one of two things: either a larger market or increased prices for the articles to be sold. It is only in one or the other of these ways that they can obtain relief. I do not say that such a tariff might not give relief in these ways, but I think it is important to enquire whether that would be the consequence, and also to what extent it might affect other branches of industry and other portions of the population. One thing Sir, we do know, both with regard to the commercial histories of England and of the neighboring Republic, and it is this—that there is a close relation between the imports of a country and the volume of its currency; that whenever you increase the volume of currency circulation, you increase in almost exactly the same proportion the imports, and that when you diminish or restrict the amount of money in use you reduce in the same proportion the imports. In the United States, when the currency averaged $6 per head the imports averaged $4 per head; when it averaged $7 the imports averaged $5, and so on, a close relation being found not merely for a short period, but during the whole history of the country from 1790 to the present day. Then in 1860 the currency of the United States averaged $14.50 per capita, and the imports averaged $10.80 per capita, bearing the same proportion to each other as in the earlier period I have mentioned. Now it will be an important matter into which the Committee should enquire—how far this rule will hold good in this country. It is of great moment to ascertain this fact, in order to know precisely to what extent the commercial and financial depression are within the control of the Legislature. I state these matters and might instance many others, with the view of indicating the scope of the enquiry which will present itself to the Committee for which I ask the House. I do not desire—I am not anxious, Sir, to express any opinion which would anticipate the conclusion at which I might imagine the gentlemen composing it should arrive; but I think that it is of the highest importance to become acquainted with the facts. I have endeavoured, in selecting the members of the Committee, in the motion which I purpose putting into your hands, to represent the various views entertained regarding questions of trade in this country.

Mr. MILLS.

Mr. SPEAKER—It is moved by Mr. Mills, and seconded by Mr. McDougall, that a Select Committee composed of Mr. Burpee (Sunbury), Mr. Carmichael, Mr. Currier, Mr. Charlton, Mr. Dymond, Mr. Delorme, Mr. Platt, Mr. Sinclair, Mr. Workman and the mover, be appointed to enquire into the causes of the present financial depression, with power to send for persons, papers and records—to report from time to time?

Mr. MILLS—No.

Mr. SPEAKER—Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Mr. PLATT—I beg leave to move that Mr. John Macdonald, of Toronto, be placed on the Committee in my stead.

Mr. MILLS—I must say that I spoke to Mr. Macdonald, and he informed me that he would not have time to give the necessary attention to the matter. I therefore asked for Mr. Platt. I certainly have no objections to Mr. Macdonald being placed on the Committee.

Mr. SPEAKER—Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I rise for the purpose of calling the attention of the House and of the Administration to the purport of this motion. My hon. friend was a little out of order in one portion of his speech, to which I good-naturedly directed his notice. I have remarked in some of the newspapers of the country the statement that a torpedo had been thrown on the floor of this House, but certainly my hon. friend has thrown a torpedo to-day, for this amounts in every respect to a motion to enquire into the state of the nation, and is therefore a motion of want of confidence in the Administration. No matter how it is expressed, or whether advanced by a supporter or an opponent of the Government, the effect is the same, and it is invariably so considered. If my hon. friend had moved to enquire into the best mode of promoting the interests of trade or agriculture, this would have been quite germane, but when he asks for a Committee to make enquiry into the state of depression of the nation, it amounts to what I have stated. In 1826, Mr Hume made almost precisely the same motion, and although he said in his speech that he did not want to affect the Ministry by his motion, it was held, considered and treated by the House of Commons, by the Ministry and by the Opposition, as being in effect a resolution for a vote of want of confidence. I am surprised also that my hon. friend makes this motion, because it is as much as to say that he really does not believe any of the causes put in His Excellency's mouth by his advisers is the right one. We find in the Speech from the Throne it is alleged that "the great depression which has prevailed throughout neighbouring countries for several years, and which has more recently been felt in the old world, causing a general stagnation of business, has extended to Canada and has seriously affected our trade." His Excellency has been advised to state the cause. My hon. friend is not satisfied with that statement in the Speech, but he asks for a Committee for further information,—a Committee empowered to send for persons and papers and take evidence, in fact to assume the power of the Government, and to make enquiries which, I presume they, in accordance with their duty, have already made. Rumour says—very improperly no doubt—that outside advisers have been called in to consider the financial affairs of the Government. Now, here is an outside adviser taking a certain ground,—although in the Ministerial ranks, he is not yet on the treasury benches. What would be the consequence of voting this motion? If it passes, it will be an assertion by the House that we are not satisfied with the alleged causes of the depression, and that we must take evidence to find out what the causes really are. The logical consequence of passing this motion would be that no steps would be taken by the Finance Minister until the committee reported. He could not bring down the Budget, and we could not know whether the reductions promised in the Speech are called for at all or not. This evidence is not for the Committee, but for the opinion of the House and, through this House, of the country. If we pass this motion, we cannot approach the subject with the Committee sitting behind our backs collecting the evidence, before the result of the solemn enquiry is laid before us. In the English House of Commons in 1826 Mr. Hume moved "that an humble Address be presented to His Majesty praying that he will be graciously pleased to take into consideration the present state of the nation, and to direct immediate enquiry to be made into the causes that have produced such wide spread disasters, and that he will be pleased to direct such measures to be adopted as shall as speedily as possible terminate the existing embarrassment." That motion was held to be a want of confidence motion in the Administration, and was treated accordingly, being lost by a large majority. It occurs to me, if the Government will say they really desire a Committee to collect the evidence, that they cannot collect it themselves, and that they, like the House, require more information, then we have nothing to say except that the Government ought to have collected it, and that they were not in a position to make this statement in the Speech from the Throne. When the Finance Minister makes his Budget speech, I have no doubt he will perform his duty, and prove that he has collected information showing the nature and causes of the distress alluded to, and the steps which the Ministry propose to take to alleviate it, to make revenue and expenditure meet and to remove the stagnation. It seems to me this motion ought to be postponed until after the Finance Minister makes his Budget speech and states all the facts on which his financial arrangements are based. What good will this report do after we have had the Budget and considered what reductions or increases are to be made in the taxation of the country? It will be a day after the fair. It will be closing the stable after the steed is stolen. And, besides, I think it is an ill-considered interference by a Ministerial supporter with the functions of the Government for which we must hold them responsible, and for which, I have no doubt, they are prepared to accept the entire responsibility.

Mr. YOUNG—This is, undoubtedly, a very important question at the present time, and I am sure the country expected that the matter would be brought before Parliament at the very earliest moment. I have no doubt the gentlemen on this side of the House have abundant faith in the Government, and know that they have considered the question. At the same time, no harm, but a great deal of good, can be done by having this Committee appointed for enquiring into the true cause of the financial depression. I am very much surprised at the Leader of the Opposition taking objection to the appointment of this Committee, because, if I am correctly informed, he has recently made a new departure in politics, and come out as a Protectionist instead of the Free-Trader that I had reason to believe he was in the past. I am of opinion that this existing commercial depression is a very proper thing for this House to consider, and I don't think there need be any great delay in bringing down the Budget or making changes in the tariff, if such are required, on account of the appointment of this Committee. It can meet promptly, and very speedily report to this House. The causes which have led to the present financial depression are various, but in my humble judgment they are very easily understood. History shows clearly that the commercial progress of a country is never regular year by year. You find three, four or five years of great commercial expansion, and then contraction follows. That is precisely our position at the present time. Since Confederation we have had four or five years of unusual expansion in a commercial way. In 1869 our total imports and exports together amounted in round numbers to $127,000,000. In 1873, four years after, they had expanded to $217,000,000, being an increase of $89,000,000. We know there had been a great influx of capital from Great Britain for the construction of railways, and as the country could not go on expanding its commerce at the rate of $22,500,000 per annum, of course a lull was inevitable. In 1874 we find instead of an increase of $22,500,000 in our trade, it had decreased about $1,000,000, and last year there was a decrease of over $19,000,000. Coming after widespread over-importing, over-trading and over-production, the contraction is inevitable, as also many of the failures and losses which have taken place during the past year. No doubt our prosperity has been affected by the state of things in the United States. They have had undoubtedly the most extended period of commercial depression which that great country has ever experienced, and it has affected this country, especially in our lumber interest. Then another cause of the financial stringency is that a large portion of our floating or business capital (if I may so call it) has gone into fixed capital—that is, into railways and other public works, which will not, for some considerable time at least, return much interest on the investments. My hon. friend from Bothwell has also pointed out another cause—the excess of our imports over our exports since Confederation, but more particularly during the last four years. The figures, as I recollect them, do not quite agree with those of my hon. friend from Bothwell, but the returns being made up somewhat differently in the Customs Department, they are to all intents and purposes similar. Not to go back further than 1872, the excess of imports over exports that year was $25,000,000; the following year $37,000,000; the next year $38,000,000; and last year $41,000,000, making an excess of $142,000,000 in the short space of four years. Now, I agree with my hon. friend that the balance of trade is not a matter very deeply affecting the wealth of nations. It is possible that a country may have ostensibly a balance of trade against it, and yet continue to progress in wealth and prosperity. The very best evidence of this fact is to be found in our own history, because we have rarely, if ever, had the balance of trade in our favour, and yet we have steadily grown in wealth and prosperity. However, I may say the ostensible balance of trade as given in our trade and navigation returns, appears greater than it really is, in consequence of the earnings of the shipping not being included. An adverse balance may be no evidence of a nation being unprosperous, but when it is even ostensibly so large as $142,000,000 in four years, as in our case, it may trouble the country to make the payments in the short time given to do it. We are like a man in a solvent position, who has bought a large stock of good value, but finds some trouble in paying for it; but there can be no doubt the Dominion as a whole, though suffering from temporary depression, was never in a sounder or more prosperous condition. The depression that has been talked about so much, is confined principally to three interests—the manufacturing, lumbering, and mercantile.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—That is every possible interest but the agricultural and ecclesiastical interests.

Mr. YOUNG—It may by a wide interpretation be held to have that meaning, but I contend there are tradesmen and other classes that are not necessarily included under these heads.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Does not the hon. gentleman include the coal interest, which is a very large one in this country as one suffering the most severe depression at this moment?

Mr. YOUNG—I do not intend to go into a particular classification of every branch of trade affected. I refer more particularly to those interests coming under my own notice and observation. So far as agriculture is concerned, I have no hesitation in saying that it never was more prosperous than it is at the present time. I believe everybody agrees with that view. We know very well the cause of the depression in the mercantile interest, and we know also that they have taken the course which is necessary to place them in a more prosperous condition—that is, by contraction, as my hon. friend the Finance Minister is aware by the decrease in imports during the current year. So far as our lumber interests are concerned, they have also acted with great wisdom, and there are undoubtedly wise men in the neighbourhood of Ottawa. They decided to decrease the production, and that was the proper course to pursue, because, in 1873, as any person looking at the figures will see, the manufacture of lumber and timber in this country was extraordinarily large, and that it would only be under uncommon circumstances we would expect to produce at such a rate and find a market for it. I am also informed that we may expect to see, before very long, a revival of the lumber trade in the United States, which is the financial market for our lumber. So far as our manufacturing interests are concerned, I am sorry to say that up to this time there is little or no improvement, and I take the opportunity of saying that I regard our manufactures as one of the most important industries we have in this country. I am one of those who have always taken an interest in the advancement of our manufactures, because I believe that this country will never be able to occupy the position it ought to on this continent unless we are a manufacturing as well as an agricultural people. We have undoubtedly a very considerable amount of depression existing in this branch of industry in Canada at the present time. The most common reason given for this state of things has been this—that during the last few years a very large introduction of American manufactures has taken place into this country and have been sold here at sacrificial prices. I have given notice of a motion which will, I think, bring before the House and the country the extent to which American manufactures have been brought in and sacrificed in our markets during the last two or three years. I have reason to believe that the extent of these importations, however, has been very much exaggerated. I have here a statement which throws a little light upon the subject, and I may say that—taking the 15 per cent. and the 17½ per cent. lists, which are nearly analogous, for the past two years—the excess of manufactures brought in from the United States in 1874 was something under $2,000,000, and for last year about $1,500,000. It actually decreased last year instead of having increased. I think, therefore, it is quite apparent that it is not the quantity of American goods which have come into the country during these years which is really the cause of the depression at the present time amongst manufacturers. The real cause is, that during the period of prosperity we enjoyed, our manufacturers expanded their operations until their products were more than the country could consume. I have no doubt whatever that that is the prime cause of the depression which exists amongst them at the present moment. However, I am free to admit this—and I desire to bring it clearly before this House—that the goods brought into Canada from the United States during these years, coming at a time when our manufacturers were depressed—undoubtedly tended very much to increase the difficulties of our manufacturers. I have no hesitation in saying—looking at the state of this interest—regarding it as I do as one of great importance to this country, and feeling that the whole of Canada is interested in seeing it restored to a position of prosperity—that it would be well if the practice of what is called slaughtering, by the Americans, were checked, if that can be done without committing this country to a dangerous commercial policy. The difficulties are serious in the way of providing a remedy and attaining the object I have referred to, without getting into difficulties. On the one hand there is the danger of our falling into an absolute protective policy—and what I mean by that is this: protection resorted to for the purpose of protection, and not with a view to secure a revenue. I have no hesitation in saying, that no greater calamity could befall this country, and no worse thing could happen to the manufacturers themselves, than that a Chinese Wall of protection should be thrown around Canada to entirely keep out competition by other countries. The effect would be that in a very few years we should have such a rush of capital and labour into these branches of trade that business would be completely clogged, and we should see the manufacturing community suffering to a far greater extent than it has ever yet done. The true policy for Canada is not one of absolute free trade or of absolute protection. My idea is we ought to give the manufacturers the raw material at the cheapest possible rate—that we ought to keep down the cost of production to the lowest possible point. We ought to be able to place them (the manufacturers) in such a position that they would be able not only to control our own markets, but to go to the West Indies, South America and other foreign markets with their goods. Will any one tell me that by shutting ourselves in to our four million of people for customers, we could build up large manufacturing industries? We want to keep down the cost of production, we want to take a leaf out of the book of the Mother Country, and go to foreign nations with those manufactures, which we have the necessary facilities for carrying on successfully. I do not intend to enter into a discussion of the vexed question of free trade and protection. Believing the fiscal policy of the Government should be based upon the general principle of free trade, I have never held, and do not now, that exceptional circumstances should never be taken into account. There is no use in denying the fact that, situated as we are, both geographically and politically, as regards the United States, we occupy an exceptional position; and as I stated before, if we were able to devise a policy to prevent what is regarded as unfair competition in manufactures from the United States, without being landed into a policy of absolute Protection or a struggle of retaliatory tariffs, it would be in the public interest to do so. It happens that, in the case of not a few articles with which we have the greatest competition with the United States, they are largely produced among ourselves. I believe it would be possible to arrange our fiscal policy in such a way as to prevent what is called "slaughtering," while at the same time not materially interfering with our trade with Great Britain or raising the prices of articles to consumers in this country. If, after careful deliberation, it were found it could not be done without adopting an absolute protective or retaliatory policy I would say:—

"Better endure the ills we have Than fly to those we know not of."

But I believe a middle course is possible in this case. I have sufficient faith in the Hon. Minister of Finance to believe that he would be able, after careful consideration, to draw up a policy in the direction to which I have pointed. I am not aware positively whether the hon. gentleman has really decided upon any changes in the tariff during the present Session or not. I hope that the economy the Government promised us in His Excellency's Speech will be so extensive that very little change will be needed so far as the revenue is concerned. But if we are to have the tariff altered, and if my hon. friend can so frame his measure that some relief can be given to manufacturers from the unfair competition of the United States, whilst he avoids the Scylla and Charybdis I have pointed out, he will merit, as he will no doubt receive, the approval of this House and the country. I hope, Sir, that no serious objection will be made to the appointment of the Committee which has been moved for by my hon. friend from Bothwell in the able speech to which we have listened. I think such a Committee can do much good, and even help the Government in bringing down a measure which will receive the support of all classes of the community.

Mr. IRVING—As I represent important manufacturing interests, I may be allowed to say a few words on this subject. I think we could meet the difficulty my hon. friend has pointed out as to steering between Scylla and Charybdis, by transplanting my hon. friend from his present position to that of Finance Minister. My hon. friend has pointed out with a great deal of appropriateness the position of Lord John Russell in some cartoons in Punch. Well, Lord John had the fortune to figure often in that paper. I remember that he was represented as writing "No Popery" on the wall, and then running away. My hon. friend has written "Protection" on the wall, and ran away. My hon.

friend has a very valuable manufacturing interest in his own constituency, and I listened with all attention to ascertain whether he was a Free-Trader or a Protectionist. I think the country generally is pretty well informed of the cause of the commercial depression, and I have confidence enough in the Ministry to think they will not require a Committee to enlighten them on this matter. It is patent to everybody except, perhaps, to the philosophers. They probably have not yet seen that which is seen all over the country. In the Imperial House of Commons they have indeed a philosopher, who unfortunately is blind, but in our House the philosophers are not only blind but deaf. Now, Sir, I am not disposed to encourage the appointment of this unnecessary Committee, because I am not sure they will not trifle with the subject. I am not prepared at this late day to refer the matter to a Committee to relieve the Government from the responsibility of dealing with the general distress throughout the country.

Mr. WORKMAN—When the hon. member for Bothwell asked me to allow my name to be placed on the Committee, I had some hesitation in agreeing, because I was of the same opinion as the hon. member for Hamilton, who has just sat down. I was of opinion that the report that the Committee would submit might be a foregone conclusion. But he (Mr. Mills) assured me that it would not be so, that the utmost impartiality should prevail, and that every information possible to be obtained would be solicited. I therefore allowed my name to go on the Committee, although my spare time is now fully occupied with that important question—the tariff. The gentlemen who have already spoken have viewed the subject from a different standpoint than I should. I have just come to this House from the counting-house,—from the bankers, the merchants, and the manufacturers; therefore I know how very great the depression is in those three most important branches of the industry of the Dominion. For the last eighteen months there have been a gradual shrinking of values and curtailment of trade, until we have now arrived at a condition which in forty years' commercial experience I have never seen equalled. We have therefore arrived at a point when it is very important that the gentlemen who have charge of the administration of the affairs of this country should fairly look the question in the face, and do anything and everything that is in their power to remove, as far as possible, the causes that have brought about this state of things. I shall not enter particularly upon these causes at present, but I know this, that the manufactures of the country are now in a most depressed state; that this depression has been gradually going on and increasing until at present, nearly one half of all the manufacturing establishments in and around the city from which I come are closed up, and the other half are working on half or perhaps two-thirds time. Any number of hands have been discharged and are idle to-day, while those who are employed are only earning wages of from 75 to 80 per cent. of what they earned before. A vast amount of misery and distress prevails round Montreal in consequence. That arises, Sir, in some measure, I am willing to admit, from over-production, but if we had only that to contend against we could soon remove the evil. We are living near the United States, with a very enterprising and progressive people, whose manufacturing interests have within the last ten or fifteen years made marvellous strides. During the rebellion, wages in the United States were high, and it was difficult to produce goods anything like as cheaply as now; but since the war the industries of the country have been very progressive, and there is now in the United States manufactures an amount of money, skill and perseverance, which if continued, will in a very short time leave even old England in the shade. They have adopted a policy in that country, the results of which have been most beneficial in building up the manufacturing industries there. There is a great outcry made against protection, but if we wish to judge of its beneficial effects we have only to look to the United States. That country's manufactures are not yet a century old, yet look at the position they occupy in the world to-day. They are able to send goods to Manchester and compete with the manufacturers there; they are able to deluge our markets as well as other countries with their goods at prices ruinous to us. An American manufacturer finds his stock accumulating, looks over to Canada for a market, where he slaughters them for whatever they will bring. The consequence is that these goods—even to the small amount my friend from Waterloo has stated—are forced into our markets, until the effect is disastrous to our native industries. I have seen it and experienced it myself every day. I can tell the hon. gentlemen who are Free-Traders in this House—and I regret there are a great many of them—that the manufacturers' interests, if not soon protected, with the other industries of the country, will suffer very much. The mercantile interests are also very important, and they depend for success upon the success of the mechanic and the manufacturer. I have no doubt that my hon. friend from Bothwell will prove a great deal from figures, as figures will prove almost anything, but practical experience is far better than figures or anything else. I have had experience, and I speak from the experience of every manufacturer in Lower Canada. I am happy to say that the views I entertain are in harmony with the great majority of the people of Canada, and they are strongly impressed with the conviction that a certain amount of protection to our manufacturing interests is absolutely necessary, and they look to the Government of the day for that protection. I hope that the Government will give this subject—before they bring down their Budget—their calm and careful consideration, for I wish to tell them that although they have the confidence and support of a large majority of this House, if they do not deal with this question in a fair, straightforward and candid manner, they will lose the support of their best friends. My hon. friend from South Waterloo has stated that he did not wish to see the introduction of any dangerous commercial policy into this country; by that I suppose he meant protection to our manufactures. I do not conceive that this is a dangerous policy. I think it is a policy that will tend to build up our Dominion and place it in the proud position which the United States occupies to-day as a manufacturing country. There has been a very large amount of money invested in the manufactures of Canada, and that capital, I regret to say, is almost unproductive. Some of the largest capitalists were induced to invest very heavily, and what is the result? Their manufactures are nearly all closed up, or, if working, their returns are nil. I am quite willing to serve on the Committee which the hon. member for Bothwell has moved for. He is at least assured, that gentlemen of my opinion, although differing from him on this point, will take part in obtaining the required statistics, and the report when hereafter submitted to this House will not be a partial or one-sided affair.

Mr. WORKMAN.

Mr. DYMOND—I will follow the example of the mover of the resolution, and not discuss those subjects which will more properly come before the Committee itself, as I find that he has done me the honour to place my name upon the list of its members; but I rise to make an observation or two with reference to the remarks of the hon. gentleman opposite. I should have thought that the right hon. gentleman, so far from blaming my hon. friend from Bothwell for the course which he has taken, would have been grateful to him for doing that which he should certainly have done himself. The right hon. gentleman has delivered during the last two months a succession of speeches; his friends have thought them brilliant; but his opponents might have given them a very different designation. The right hon. gentleman has insinuated that the Government of the day are responsible more or less for the prevailing distress; and we are told he is still leader of a great party—he is at all events the leader of a very respectable minority in this House. The hon. gentleman when he came down here, I presumed, would have forthwith flown to the Clerk's Office with a notice of motion for a Committee to prove the allegations he had been making so frequently before the House met, but he has failed to do so. I think that we might very properly have had some enquiries into several of the allegations he has made. For instance, there was the statement that the weevil came in with the Grits, Well, Sir, he might have thought proper to have an enquiry as to whether that was true, or whether the non-existence of the weevil at the present time had been due to the fact that the Grits and the weevil did not agree together. He also said something about the evil doings of the present Government with reference to banks, and made a positive allegations; that they had tampered with these institutions for corrupt purposes, but to one of the patriotic members on this side of the House it has been left to do that which the right hon. gentleman does not seem to take upon himself to do, although so alarming an allegation struck completely at the basis of our confidence in the Administration that we had a right to expect he would make such a motion, in order that we might know - not whether what he said was true or false from his point of view, but whether he spoke on that point, as I must assume in courtesy he does on all occasions, with a special sense of his responsibility as a member of this House and Leader of its Opposition. But, Sir, the right hon. gentleman was wrong with regard to the statement of facts only occurring so far back as a week ago, and of course if he is not correct with reference to what happened a week since, he may not be accurate with respect to the weevil, or what the Government of the day is supposed to have done in 1872 or 1874. Now, Sir, the subject-matter of my hon. friend's enquiry—the cause of this depression—is not alluded to in His Excellency's Speech from the Throne, in which no intimation is given to us as to how it comes to pass that depression exists at the present time. The Speech contains the statement that there is depression; and my hon. friend is perfectly logical in asking for a Committee of this House to ascertain how this depression has come to pass. What His Excellency said was this—in the third paragraph—"The great depression which has prevailed throughout the neighbouring country for several years, and which has more recently "been felt in the Old World causing general stagnation of business, "has extended to Canada, and "has seriously affected our trade. "At the same time we have reason "to be gratified for an abundant harvest." The depression is regretted, and once more reference is made to it in these words:—"The accounts for the "past and the estimates for the next "financial year will be laid before you. "The estimates have been framed with "every possible economy consistent "with the public interests. I regret that "the depression of trade, to which I have "alluded, has seriously affected the "revenue." Now, Sir, here are two statements—one that there is depression, and the other that the depression has affected the revenue. Well, we do not require an allusion to this fact in the first portion of the Speech from His Excellency to be aware of its existence, for we already know it, and with relation to the effect on the revenue. I have no doubt that at an early day we shall have had this melancholy information from my hon. friend the Finance Minister; but, Sir, there is not single statement in the Speech which at all anticipates the motion of my hon. friend. We are, however, told that British precedent is against us with regard to the appointment of such a Committee. I do not know that the naming of a Committee to enquire into the causes of the depression in trade necessarily involves an enquiry into the state of the nation, because the condition of trade, of course, is a question applying only to a portion of the nation; and although it is quite true that Mr. Hume's Committee pointed specifically to prevailing distress, this may have arisen from a great number of causes. It may have been due to mis-government; and it had, in point of fact, arisen from a century of mis-government, or to causes of a temporary nature relating to the administration of affairs. Long after 1840, enquiries were had into the mis-management, for instance, of the army showing the influences which were at work, and which had a most unglorious effect upon the interests of the whole country, involving an enormous outlay of money and an enormous sacrifice of life; but, Sir, I pre-sume that, even supposing that

Mr. Dymond.

British precedent, quoted by the right hon. gentleman, is against us, we are at liberty so refer to precedents of our own, and I find that only two years ago, at the very moment my hon. friend was framing a policy with respect to the tariff, involving very important fiscal changes, this House granted an enquiry—and for what purpose? To enquire into the state of the manufacturing interests—a parliamentary mode of saying that we were to make an investigation into the question of the increase of the tariff. My hon. friend from Hamilton, I am sure, will bear me out when I say that the distinct object of that Committee was to show that an increase in the tariff was necessary, and concurrent with its sittings, which were protracted during nearly the whole of the then Session, my hon. friend the Finance Minister was carrying through this House an Act of Parliament which was in accordance, to some very limited extent, with the views of my hon. friend opposite. No objection was made to this increase being granted; and I am not aware, Sir, that by the action of that Committee, if it ever had any result at all, the Constitution was put in danger. It had, Sir, however, one beneficial effect—for I noticed that when my hon. friend, the Chairman of that Committee, was running for Hamilton, he took credit for the increase in the revenue, as a consequence of their investigation into the subject; and I believe, Sir, that his majority in Hamilton was very greatly increased owing to these representations, although if I had happened to have been in Hamilton I would have had to correct him on that point.

Mr. IRVING—The majority was decreased because the rate was not put up higher.

Mr. DYMOND—Then we have one member for Hamilton contradicting the other member; because I remember, I think, that my hon. friend, now the junior member, congratulated the Finance Minister in 1874 upon the fact that he had adopted a somewhat protective policy.

Mr. WOOD—He had taken a step in the right direction, but he had not gone far enough.

Mr. DYMOND—He went quite far enough for some people at any rate. There is another point. I would just submit to the House as a reason for the appointment of this Committee, that it is exceedingly difficult to obtain from any sources at our command, anything like an authoritative statement of what is the state of public opinion on this subject. Now, Sir, everybody who wants an increase in the tariff comes down to the Finance Minister, while those who do not want it stay away; but I have no doubt that if we were to poll the country at the present time—particularly the agricultural population, which is our greatest interest after all—and our friends from the Maritime Provinces, with a great many of our friends in Ontario—and notwithstanding what my hon. friend from Montreal says, I hope many from Quebec also—we should find a large majority probably opposed to protection. Well, Sir, we look then for light on this subject to the meetings of commercial men, and we find them to be almost equally contradictory. In connection with the Dominion Boards of Trade, which have been sometimes mentioned with disrespect, although I consider they are justly entitled to that amount of respect which is due to thirty or forty gentlemen having particular interests at stake when they come together and discuss questions from their own point of view—we observe progressive changes in their line of action. Now my hon. friend from Montreal will not, I am sure, be offended if I quote as a high authority upon the views of the Board of Trade—I think as recently as 1873—a gentleman whom he had the honour of defeating only a few weeks since. A resolution proposed by Mr. Thomas White, Jr., in that year, concludes thus:—“That “this Board of Trade is further of “opinion that permanence in the fiscal “policy of the country is most important, alike to its commerce and its “manufactures”—at that time we had a fifteen per cent tariff—“and “that no change should be made in “the tariff not demanded by the absolute necessities of the revenue.” That was the opinion of the gentleman who is held in the highest esteem by his friends opposite, who was the recipient lately of a dinner, and who had in addition to the dinner the delight, the intellectual treat, of listening to the speech to which I have already referred, and whose name, I suppose, will go down embalmed in Conservative history in connection with that remarkable utterance. Well, Sir, we have progressed, it seems, since that time; because a year afterwards the same gentleman appears to have proposed something of this sort:—“That in the “opinion of this Board the principle of “protection to the manufacturing interests of the country should be embodied “in such a revision of the tariff, so far “as the same can be carried out consistently with the commercial and revenue requirements of the country.” In 1873, we were to have a tariff for revenue purposes only; but in 1874 we were to embody in the tariff the principles of protection. Now it may be said that opinions alter, that things have got worse, and that Canada was made, to use a common and popular phrase now-a-days, the slaughter market of the Americans. But a wise man and a great statesman, the hope of the Conservative party, must have been aware in 1873 of what was coming to pass, and I will not insult the gentleman by supposing that he had not all the prescience, all the wisdom, and all the foresight that his friends expect of him and give him credit for. I am bound to suppose, therefore, that he really believed, in 1873, that we only wanted a revenue tariff; and that in 1874, by some strange change of ideas, but without any real alteration in the situation which he could not have foreseen, he came out as a Protectionist, and demanded that we should embody in our tariff the principle of protection. Matters have, however, gone further since that date; for when, in the present year, the Board of Trade met together, they asked, not for incidental protection, and not simply protection for infant industries, but they demanded absolute protection and a retaliatory tariff; they asked that to which my hon. friend from Waterloo alluded when he said that with regard to certain articles which are prejudiced by American manufactures, it was desired to build up a Chinese Wall around us. Well,

Sir, that may be right and fair, but as I am going to sit on this Committee of the House if granted, and desire to act as an impartial judge in this matter, I shall not say a single thing as to whether the one policy be right or the other policy be right. Again, I come back to this point. Here is a divergence of opinion between wise men and men having the same interests, and a divergence of statement, if not of opinion, among those who are regarded as the exponents of the opinions of large numbers of their fellow countrymen, not only Conservatives but Reformers; and it must be exceedingly difficult for any Government, as it is for any individual, to ascertain what is the truth touching this matter. Here, too, is the great manufacturing interest crying out for relief. Well, Sir, I am not very much surprised after all to find that the right hon. gentleman opposite should have thrown cold water on this enquiry, for there was a time when, if he had all the prescience he is credited with and if he had kept the pledge he made on the hustings, he would have done something to avert the state of things which everyone saw was impending—that is, if protection could have averted it. In 1872 the right hon. gentleman stumped the country as the friend of the manufacturers, and when he went to convert the people of Hamilton and of Toronto, or other great manufacturing cities, to his views, he told them that there must soon be a re-adjustment of the tariff, and of course the interests of the manufacturers would be considered; and we all know what the interests of the manufacturers from their point of view meant. He went, besides, a little further, and in opposition to a former member of this House, and in favour of the candidate whom he was supporting, I remember that he held up to contumely and scorn men like my hon. friend from Montreal Centre, and my hon. friend from Centre Toronto, before the elections, as caterpillars, and said that merchants simply preyed upon the rest of the community. He then espoused the cause of the manufacturer, but we know, Sir, that nothing was done in 1873, and we had no pledge of a new tariff in the manufacturing interest, when the House met at the end of that year. Possibly the hon. gentleman had then heard his doom, and thought that, after all, it was not worth his while to take any action. We heard nothing of the kind from the right hon. gentleman when in Opposition in 1874; but the hon. gentleman who sits next to him attacked my hon. friend for increasing the tariff, using every argument that these figures, which my hon. friend from Montreal Centre says can prove anything—and never was there a truer saying with reference to the hon. gentleman opposite—could supply, mixed—I would not say cooked, because that would be unparliamentary—and confused together to show that it was a wrong thing to give our suffering manufacturers an additional two and one-half per cent. Well, Sir, last year the Government asked us for $80,000 in order to assist the manufacturers of this country, the great producing class, to advertise their goods at the Philadelphia Exhibition, and I remember that the right hon. gentleman, although I think that he did not divide the House, opposed it. I am not very much surprised after that to find, in spite of all his fondness for the manufacturers when their votes are wanted, and all his interest for the labouring classes, when they were invited to vote for my hon. friend for West Toronto, on somewhat similar grounds, and in spite of all the universal benevolence which he has felt for every one in this world, not excluding himself, that he entertains the secret conviction that the attempt to import into this country a protective tariff would place him in the absurd position he occupied in 1871, of repealing at the end of twelve months what he had passed a year before. As to what is the true position of affairs, it will be for this Committee to enquire. I hope that we shall lift the right hon. gentleman and his friends out of a difficulty by means of this Committee. I trust that we shall be able to present to the House a fair and important statement of facts relating to late events, and that while we cannot expect that the financial arrangements shall be suspended at the present time, any more than they were in 1874, until we make a report, the evidence we collect will enable us on all future occasions to discuss the question of the tariff, and any similar measures affecting the great interests of the country with calmness and deliberation, and with more information than at all times we are able to bring to bear at present on these subjects.

Mr. DYMOND.

Mr. WOOD—I do not intend to discuss the question of the Tariff at present. I think the commercial men of this country have a right to be thankful to the hon. gentleman for the anxiety he is manifesting in their interest. If the hon. gentleman, instead of asking for a Committee, would go among the manufacturers of this country, he would get all the information he requires before the end of the session. If he goes to the hon. member for South Leeds and asks why his manufactory is closed, he would learn that the country is flooded with American manufactures, which are sold at prices that render competition impossible. If he goes to the hon. member for Cornwall and asks why the cotton factory there is idle, he will find that it is because they cannot compete with American cottons. Is the hon. gentleman aware that the Americans are sending furniture into Hamilton and other Canadian cities and having it auctioned for what it will bring? And this is not confined to furniture, but in almost every class of goods manufactured in the United States it is the same. I ask the hon. gentleman why it is, if that country has been protected to death, as he says it has, that its manufactures are taking the place of English goods? In 1872 we imported from the United States of cabinet-ware or furniture, $122,070; in 1873, $220,497; in 1874, $311,476; and in 1875, $328,536. And yet this does not represent the amount of furniture coming into the country. The increase is not shown by the values, because there has been a large reduction in prices. A person going to the United States to buy furniture is given a certain price; but when he says "I want to take it to Canada," the manufacturer will take off 25 per cent. I am speaking now simply of the importations from the United States. The imports of cotton into Canada in 1872 amounted to $525,709; in 1873, to $491,809; in 1874 to $905,894; and in 1875, to $1,350,308—showing that the manufacturers of the United States, protected as they have been, are able to drive their English competitors out of our markets, aided though the latter have been by large capital and the best machinery. How can we expect, with our infant manufactures, to compete with them? Are we to be told by hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House that we must import all our goods and not manufacture what we can for ourselves? Have we got no patriotism? Shall we drive our manufacturing population away from the country to find work in the States? In the articles of spades, shovels, etc., in which the hon. member for Leeds is engaged in, we imported from the United States in 1872, $56,000; 1873, $64,547; 1874, $80,494, and in 1875, $114,115, showing a continual increase. In fact the American manufacturers are doing everything they can to crush out of existence our manufacturing industries. In manufactures of wood we imported from the United States, $273,890 in 1872; $395,367 in 1873, and $454,582 in 1874. In spikes, nails and brads, $55,693 in 1872; $113,092 in 1873; $139,442 in 1874, and $232,390 in 1875. In stoves and all other iron castings, $149,364 in 1872; $275,665 in 1873, and $360,503 in 1874. In manufactures of hardware—and I am now referring to Ontario only—we imported in 1872 from England, $1,719,000; from the United States, $1,350,000; in 1873, from England, $1,917,000; from the United States, $1,665,000; in 1874, from England, $1,527,442; from the United States, $2,043,179; in 1875, from England, $1,527,000; from the United States, $2,201,000. So here we have evidence of the utility of protection, which enables the United States to manufacture so cheaply as to drive out English goods from this country. In bar-iron, Ontario imported from England $175,324; from the United States, $438,738. In the article of pig-iron, Ontario imported from England only 266 tons, valued at $6,758, while from the United States we received 20,000 tons, worth $502,345. There are other articles I might enumerate, but I wish to refer to the balance of trade which the hon. member for Bothwell spoke of. From his description of the subject, we must come to the conclusion that the more a person spends the richer he is. I would like to read an extract from the pen of one of the ablest men of his day—the late Horace Greeley—who understood this question thoroughly. This is not a hundred years old, like the extract read by the hon. member from Bothwell. It is as follows:

“But the fact that there is such a balance is put beyond doubt by the rates of exchange, the movement of specie and stocks, and the negotiation of loans. If we were paying Europe in our products (including California gold) for the goods we are buying of her, we should not be sending stocks to London for sale at the rate of millions per month, and sending agents thither to negotiate the sale of Railway bonds, State bonds, County or City bonds, and every possible manufacture of paper, which implies payment with interest by-and-by for foreign products eaten, drank and worn out by our people to-day. The correctness of the statement is undeniable, that as a people, we are running rapidly and heavily in debt to Europe, and mortgaging the earnings of our children to pay it off. And the excuse that we are building railroads, &c., does not avail us. Europe is also building railroads; Great Britain is chequered with them; but she does not owe their cost to the capitalists of other countries, because her people produce more than they consume, sell more than they buy, as ours do not. We have labour enough standing idle from month to month, and anxiously looking for employment to make all the iron, cloth, wares, &c., for which we are running giddily in debt to foreign capitalists; yet our Free-Trade policy tends to keep that labour idle and run our country deeper and deeper in debt for the fabrics we ought to produce. Can this be right?”

I shall not trouble the House any further with remarks on this subject. When the question of protection per se comes up, as I presume it will on the tariff, I think the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House will be prepared to discuss it on its merits.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—I would not have been tempted to enter into this discussion if it had not been for the wonderfully dignified way in which the hon. member for North York, who admits he is a novice in Canadian politics, undertook to speak of a gentleman who had not an opportunity to reply to him. He did not tell us anything of the causes which led to the present discontent in the country, but if we could glean anything from that speech the cause is the absence of the right hon. member for Kingston on the Government of the country. I do not intend to follow him on that part of his speech. The remarks of the hon. member for North York are well known to us all. They are but a rehash of stale editorials. He might have saved the House the trouble of listening to him if he had simply done like the man who, instead of saying his prayers, pointed to the printed formula and said, “them are my sentiments.” If the hon. gentleman had taken a file of the leading Government newspaper of the country, and said “them are my sentiments,” it would have been enough. While he had a right to refer to the right hon. member for Kingston, he had no right to speak of another gentleman whose remarks and opinions have nothing to do with the discussions of this House. It was neither fair nor manly to criticize the remarks of the gentleman who opposed the hon. member for Montreal West.

Mr. DYMOND—I made no mention of that gentleman's speeches. I quoted from the published resolutions of the Dominion Board of Trade, circulated by that body for the information of the public from year to year.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—He quoted the opinions of Mr. White, who is not in a position to reply to him in this House. I guarantee this—if the hon. member for North York chooses his subject and any platform he likes in the country, that gentleman will meet him and discuss the affairs of this country with as much ability, as much intelligence, and with much more satisfaction to his audience than the hon. member who has assailed him. The hon. member for Montreal West says he goes on that Committee on the understanding that the report is not to be a foregone conclusion. I would like to know if he does not think from the speech of the hon. member for North York that his opinion is a foregone conclusion? The hon. member for South Waterloo, in a very glib manner, tells us he knew all the causes of the present discontent and dis-ness, and it was perfectly unnecessary to appoint this Committee. It is only necessary to summon him to learn all about it. The hon. member says these periods of depression happen periodically; they had happened before and therefore must happen again. Like Newton or Galileo observing the regularity of the solar system, he regards it as inevitable, and therefore we should do nothing but sit still and see the country struck by the wave of depression. The hon. member told us something about Scylla and Charybdis, and gave us to understand that he could effectually sail the bark between these two rocks.

Mr. Wood.

Mr. YOUNG—Oh, no!

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—Well, no matter. He told us that the other cause of the depression was over-importation, and he quoted some figures in reference to this. I should like to call the attention of the House to the fact that figures are not at all times to be relied upon, as my hon. friend the Finance Minister will be able to tell us. In the figures with reference to the expenditure of the first six months of the financial year, published in the Official Gazette—a fact to which I should like to direct the attention of the Finance Minister—a discrepancy of $2,000,000 occurs when compared with the amended return down to date. This circumstance warrants me in reminding my hon. friend that perhaps the returns he has found in the Blue Books are equally erroneous, and cannot be relied upon altogether. This question of over importation may be looked at in another way. Upon examining the returns it will be found there was an increase in the imports of dry goods, silks, &c. Now, we may blink at the fact as we like, but it is known that a great quantity of these goods pass through Canada into the United States and are not consumed in this country. When that fact is taken into consideration, it will be understood that the imports to Canada are not so great as my hon. friend would make us think. We were told that only three interests were suffering from depression. My hon. friend alluded to four interests, and I may mention another, that of shipping, which has not been in such a depressed condition for years as at present. Ship-owners and others are looking to the Government for some measure to revive it, and I hope they do not look in vain. The hon. member for Montreal West (Mr. Workman) has told us that he was so busily engaged on the tariff as to give the Finance Minister very little to do, and if this Committee is granted would it not, under the circumstances, be better to place the office of Finance Minister in commission? What use is he if we have to appoint a Committee to collect facts and figures which I am sure, from his known ability and industry, he has already obtained?

Mr. THOMSON, (Welland)—It occurs to me that when a man is sick it is better to get him well first, and then discuss the process by which he is to be kept from relapsing. This panic was brought about by natural causes, such as over-trading. It is gradually disappearing, and when trade gets back into a wholesome condition will be the proper time to discuss the causes of our commercial ailment. I think it was Lincoln who said that it was "no time to swap horses when we are swimming for life across the river," and that remark applies to our present condition. Entering upon this discussion here on principles of detail, it occurs to me, is beneath the dignity of this House, which is not a trade establishment, a house of merchants, manufacturers or agriculturists, but a House to make laws for those interests in the aggregate. We have to decide upon great general principles and make laws which will do justice to all. I take ground at once as a thorough Free-Trader. I object to doing one wrong to prevent another; two wrongs will never make a right. If the principles upon which trade and commerce in this country are based make free-trade impossible, it is not reasonable or proper to try and remedy matters by adopting a wrong principle; but if this House legislates in perfect harmony with the laws of nature, free-trade must be possible. We ought to have education and intelligence enough to find out a process by which we can secure cheap goods, prosperity, and free-trade with the rest of the world. As long as I am a Liberal politician, I must be a Free-Trader, but we cannot have free-trade unless other things are free—unless we have free minds. Is it necessary to retain that wrong principle of dear money? Is it necessary to establish that principle which makes trade expensive and almost impossible? I say no. It is the duty of this House to make money cheaper. There is no manufacturer, no process of human industry which will not be ruined by 7, 8 and 10 per cent interest; it is only a question of time. It is ruining the United States, which owes over $7,000,000,000, while the assessment is $1,400,000,000. That country has grown by immigration, by its climate and soil, and liberal principles of Government—it has grown in spite of those conditions. In the United States to-day, in England, and in Canada, I hope, there are a great many men struggling for free trade and free money. And are we going to throw cold water on their energies by saying that this free, rich country of Canada is retrograding and adopting principles which are obsolete? The great difficulty in Canada, as in England and the United States, is that the servant is governing the master—that the working interests are governing the industrial interests of the country; and until this thing is changed we shall always have panics, which will grow worse every time. It is no business of ours whether the merchants fail or not; they are mere speculators, buyers and sellers, the mere agents of the interests of the country. We should not stultify the agricultural, mechanical and other interests for the purpose of supporting their speculations and amending the difficulties they have created by their speculative ideas. They talk about the United States sending goods here to slaughter in our market. England does the same thing; she sends her surplus goods to New York, &c. Why, we sell oil at home for 30 cents per gallon and send it out and sell it for 15 cents. Everybody acts on this principle. The great evil, as I before said, consists of the money system, which ought to rest on the good faith of the nation. The people owing it should make it, and it should be the duty of the Government to regulate it. When that time arrives money will be the rule instead of the exception; at present credit is the rule and money the exception.

A system based upon ready money is honest, and a system founded upon credit is dishonest. The whole of the panic to which we have been subjected, has related to the mercantile portion of the community; for in point of fact the farmers in Upper Canada are as well off as ever; and if every merchant in the country were to fail, it would not at all impoverish the agricultural classes. But if the grasshopper or the drought came to Canada and destroyed twenty or fifty per cent. of the agricultural productions, the entire country would suffer. I believe in free-trade—and in direct taxation, which would be levied, if in existence amongst us at the present moment, at the rate of $6 per head. A labouring man who earns at least $300 per annum, probably expends $200, paying in reality on his purchases a duty amounting to about $50, while, under the system of direct taxation, he would not be required to contribute more than $5 or $6 per annum to the revenue. The result of the present state of things in this relation is that the country is inconveniently and very heavily taxed, and the system is a bar to the success of the lower strata of society, while direct taxation gives these classes a chance, and enhances the prosperity of the people. I hear that there is a deficit; well, suppose that there be a deficiency of a few millions of dollars during the present year, it is simply due to this condition of affairs, and it is useless to attempt to recover this loss by means of additional taxation at the present time, although I will likely support any measure the Finance Minister may bring down. I hope that trade will not be disturbed, and changes in the tariff even affect traders; and I trust that the tariff will be let alone, in which event, a surplus making up for the existing deficit will be secured. I imagined that we had obtained a satisfactory tariff last year, though I did not examine it very carefully, and I consider that if the present conditions be continued—instead of a deficit, we will have a surplus during next year, or at all events within a short period. I strongly deprecate any change in the tariff, unless it be for the introduction of free-trade and free money. I would rather hear this subject discussed in the House, than in a Committee composed wholly of extreme or incidental Protectionists.

Mr. MACDONALD (Toronto)—I was a good deal amused, Mr. Speaker, by the remarks of the hon. member for Welland. He said this was a House in which in the interests of all were to be protected, and yet, in the same breath, he announced himself as a Free-Trader—which means the extinguishment of all the capital that every manufacturer has invested in the country. I intend in the discussion of this question to keep in my mind simultaneously three thoughts the manufacturer, the consumer, and the revenue, and if I do fairness to the one I am bound to do equal fairness to the other. It is perhaps due to the House that I should say a word or two as the hon. member for Bothwell did me the honour to ask me to sit on the Committee. It is some years since I sat in this House, and I must confess that from last time to this, I have not been reading the debates or looking up parliamentary figures. But certain Blue Books have been placed on the table since I entered the House this time, from which I have collected certain figures and have endeavoured to reach rational conclusions. I find that in 1868 the imports from all sources amounted to $73,459,644, and five years afterwards those imports had grown to $128,000,000. Is there any cause for enquiry with such an exhibit as that?

If I am rightly informed the increase in the population, as taken in the decennial census of 1871, was about 12 per cent. I have here, then, a lapse of five years only. Now, if I assume for the purpose of putting this case before the House that the increase during the next decade will be 15 per cent., we have then an increase in these five years of seven and a half per cent., an increase of imports of 75 per cent. No country in the world but Canada could have stood such an enormous strain, and no better proof of the wonderful elasticity of the country could be produced than that it could maintain such a strain without injury to its credit. Several gentlemen who have preceded me have stated that American goods have been slaughtered in this country. That may be right. I don't pretend to express an opinion about branches of trade that I know nothing about, but I have reason to believe that American and other manufactures are not slaughtered in this country. My reason for making this statement is this: that the large houses of the United States publish their prices, and no man, no matter what his wealth or influence, or what country he comes from, can buy them cheaper than the price list. In certain places in the United States goods are sold cash before delivery. The fact is that silently there is a work going on that has been unobserved. Any man that takes the trouble to carefully look at the following figures will be astonished at the result. Take from 1872 to 1875, and the result is startling:

Comparative statement of the imports into Canada from Great Britain and the United States, for the financial years 1872-73, and 1874-75:—

	1873-74.	1874-75
Cigars—	Value.	Value.
Great Britain, $	37,378	$ 20,732
United States,	104,221	204,757
Meats of various kinds—
Great Britain,	1,584	5,785
United States,	909,535	1,776,485
Cabinet Ware—
Great Britain,	19,808	18,981
United States,	122,070	326,536
Coach and Harness Furniture—
Great Britain,	50,941	45,425
United States,	89,365	96,834
Lard—
Great Britain,	2,328	74
United States,	36,027	335,401
China Ware—
Great Britain,	531,397	496,788
United States,	29,970	43,417
Gunpowder—
Great Britain,	40,127	33,563
United States,	18,372	29,585

Hardware, Spades, Shovels, &c.—
Great Britain,	31,398	37,208
United States,	56,659	114,115
Spikes, Nails, Brads, &c.—
Great Britain,	94,015	66,036
United States,	55,693	232,590
Manufactures of Iron—
Great Britain,	1,719,629	1,517,913
United States,	1,350,509	2,201,446
Leather—
Great Britain,	195,382	119,830
United States,	103,208	127,901
Sheep, Calf, Chamois Skins—
Great Britain,	23,972	95,965
United States,	18,592	47,460
Manufactures of Marble—
Great Britain,	19,345	22,090
United States,	27,459	60,238
Manufactures of Leather—
Great Britain,	241,688	202,589
United States,	67,349	100,459
Boots and Shoes—
Great Britain,	142,709	68,954
United States,	122,359	168,803
Harness and Saddlery—
Great Britain,	21,958	24,930
United States,	23,958	53,083
Manufactures of Wood—
Great Britain,	9,611	12,005
United States,	273,890	424,624
Paper—
Great Britain,	196,916	188,114
United States,	91,399	243,825

Here are facts I wish to bring before the House, that while the importations from Great Britain have been steadily declining, those from the United States have been as steadily increasing. Take the time between 1872 and 1875, and imports from Great Britain have decreased three millions, while the imports from the United States have increased fifteen millions. Go further back and take the imports from 1868, and you will find that the increase of imports from the United States during that period is nearly twenty-two millions. These quotations are very significant I don't pretend to say what they point to. No gentleman in this House, or in the country, no matter what his commercial ability is, can tell what they point to. I can only say if the same facilities for obtaining money were afforded in the United States that are afforded in Great Britain, these figures would be so changed in six months, that they would astound every man on the floor of this House. When the time comes for this debate I shall be able to show the causes which have led to this wonderful excess of importation. I hold that the slaughter has come from Great Britain; I hold that the over production has been due to the cheapness of credit obtained in Great Britain; I hold that it is the excess of the goods of Great Britain thrown on our markets that has paralyzed our manufactures, and that the depression of trade has not been the result of the tariff, but of the injudicious use of credit and lack of business ability. While it shall be my duty to do everything that I think right for the manufacturers to have, and for the manufacturers to ask, I will also hold it to be my duty to guard the interests of the consumer and pay due deference to the revenue of the country, and to the suitable protection of those energetic men who have invested their means to develop the resources of the country. I think if we were to utilize the markets in the British Islands in the West Indies we would have another outlet for our surplus manufactures.

Mr. MACDONALD.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—My right hon. friend from Kingston opposes the motion of my hon. friend from Bothwell because he alleges that his motion is to enquire into the state of the nation; but he will remember that during his own reign he had no objection to any number of Committees of a similar character. No longer ago than in 1873 the right hon. gentleman consented to a Committee to report on the extent and condition of the manufactures of the Dominion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—To all intents and purposes that is the object of my hon. friend from Bothwell.

Hon. Gentlemen—No!

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—By the terms of his motion he did not propose to enquire into the state of the nation, but into the causes of the depression of trade, and the financial distress affecting a certain portion of the nation. Our records are full of motions similar to all intents and purposes, and I have not the slightest doubt if it is the opinion of the House that this Committee should be appointed, it should be granted in the shape the resolution has recommended. Still, I beg to say that there is really no difference whatever between a Committee to enquire into the condition of the community, and the commission alluded to in his remarks. I am not going into a general discussion of the policy of the Government at this time. I will simply say that the right hon. gentleman will find at the proper time that this Government are not disposed to shirk one iota of the responsibility that belongs to them. We understand how to frame our policy and know how and when to bring it down to this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I do not object to the motion of my hon. friend, but I say it is a motion of want of confidence, as every motion of this kind is. I have not the slightest objection that this Committee should be appointed and that my hon. friend should sit in judgment on the acts of the Government.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—As this matter stands over until after six on Wednesday, I think I shall be prepared at that time to show that the right hon. gentleman has somewhat different views of motions of want of confidence.

The House adjourned at Six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 17, 1876.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Ten minutes past Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL.

Mr. SCATCHERD introduced a Bill to incorporate the National Exchange Company.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE introduced a Bill to amend the Criminal Law relating to violence, threats and molestations. He said—A Bill on this question was introduced last Session by my predecessor, to ameliorate the existing condition of the law on that subject. Since then it has been extensively discussed, and legislative action has been taken by the Imperial Parliament. The present Bill comprises the points of that of last Session as well as new matter, which the discussion in England has shown necessary with reference to the law of conspiracy. I propose to introduce one new provision. With some slight modifications I propose to combine the provisions of the law in England with those of the Act introduced last Session, and will enter into a full explanation on the second reading of the Bill.

The Bill was read the first time.

CASES AGAINST THE CROWN.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE moved for leave to introduce a Bill "To make further provision for the institution of cases against the Crown by Petition of Right." He said—You will recollect that last Session the hon. member for Hamilton framed a Bill on this subject which became law. At that time it was the general sentiment of the House and country, while willing to accord to British subjects that remedy they enjoyed in England in matters in which the Crown in Canada was concerned, that the Court created by this Parliament, and whose procedures were controlled by this Parliament, should be the tribunal to administer this remedy—a delicate and new one in this country. There is also another reason for introducing an amendment. Provision was made by which the right of the subject was restricted to a greater degree than in England, a class of cases which under the English law can be referred to arbitration, are excluded from being cognisable by our Court. That clause embodied a very large class of cases in which the subject, according to the English law, has the right of complaint against the Crown. I propose by this measure to give the subject the right to apply for a petition in all those cases in which he can file a petition in England, and to give to the Minister the right within two months from the presentation of the petition of determining whether the subject-matter should be referred to arbitration, or whether he will permit the trial to be granted. The other portions of the measure are almost entirely matters of detail. The old Bill was copied from the English law, and is very prolix and somewhat obscure. I have endeavored to simplify and transform it into a more intelligent shape.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD thought the amendments introduced were desirable. He enquired if there was any provision in the Bill for an appeal from the arbitration.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—No; there is no appeal.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Then I will ask if it is proposed that the Supreme Court, to whom the petition will be referred, will have the power of judging of matters of fact as well as matters of law.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Yes. In view of possible difficulties arising, I have inserted an express provision that evidence may be taken partly at one place and partly at another. I propose to try the cases without juries.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I am very glad to hear that. My experience in such matters is, that where the Crown is one party, and a private subject the other party, seeking for compensation, the Crown always goes to the wall. There is one more question I wish to ask. Is there a clause defining the discretionary power of the Minister?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—There is no such clause. The subject is given precisely the same rights as he had in England at the time the Rights Act was passed.

The Bill was read the first time.

THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORY.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved for leave to introduce a Bill respecting the North-West Territory, and to create a separate territory out of part thereof. He said—We find that there is likely to be a good deal of inconvenience from the North-West Territories, including all that portion of our country east of Manitoba and west of the boundary of Ontario. The Province of Manitoba wishes to increase its boundaries northward, westward, and eastward; but until the question is decided as to where the limits of Ontario may ultimately be fixed, it is impossible to take any steps towards enlarging the boundaries of that Province without the risk of having it reconsidered, probably, at the very next Session. I have thought it advisable on the whole, to detach a portion of country immediately north and east of Manitoba, from the North West Territories proper, and to have its affairs administered by the Governor of Manitoba without the intervention of any council, and without incurring any expense whatever. The boundary proposed in the Bill is to commence where the western coast of Lake Manitoba intersects the northern boundary of that Province, proceeding northward along the western coast of that Lake to the portage between its waters and Lake Winnipegosis, thence proceeding on the eastern shore of Lake Winnipegosis to Mossy Portage, a small neck of land between the Saskatchewan River and this Lake, and thence due northward from that point. The Bill recapitulates certain provisions of the North-West Territories Act of last Session, which will be made applicable to that Territory. As soon as the boundary between the Dominion and Ontario is settled in that quarter, the probability is, Manitoba will have its limits enlarged. The Government of that Province have sought to have its boundaries enlarged at the present time, but we felt it would be inconvenient to have this done in the east at the present time without knowing the precise place to where we would go. If the conclusions of the hon. member for Bothwell be correct, Manitoba and most of the North-West Territory will belong to Ontario. As I judge it, a more reasonable conclusion may probably be safely predicted, that will send it a considerable distance east of the present boundary. This is simply a provisional arrangement, which will come to an end as soon as we have that boundary settled. My first thought was to make Lake Winnipeg the limit, but it seemed more convenient to have that portion of territory—where there is a considerable settlement already, and where the telegraph line has been built and the railway located east of the other two lakes (Manitoba and Winnipegosis)—attached to the Government of Manitoba than to a Government situated several hundred miles west of that Province.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. DEWDNEY suggested some special provision should be made for the government of the country lying north of British Columbia, in which valuable diggings had been discovered, and to which there would be a large emigration next spring. He had a petition from the miners of Cassiar regarding the matter, and he thought it might be convenient for the Premier to include a clause in this Bill respecting it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I will consider any representation the hon. gentleman may make before the second reading of the Bill, although I fear it would hardly do to insert such a provision.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—The territory referred to belongs to the Government of Fort Pelly, and my hon. friend suggests that a provision should be inserted in the Act conferring upon the Government of British Columbia the power of administering the affairs of that place, analogous to that conferred on the Government of Manitoba for the eastern section.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I shall be happy to consider the question before the second reading.

The Bill was read the first time.

BRITISH COLUMBIA SUBSIDY.

Mr. BUNSTER asked whether the Dominion Government have stopped any and what portion of the subsidy due British Columbia in January 1876, and if so, why? And whether the Dominion Government have informed the Local Government of British Columbia that they will retain any and what portion of the future subsidies due the Province, and if so, why?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—With respect to the first portion of the question, the whole of the January subsidy has been paid to the Government of British Columbia. With respect to th second portion, an advance was made charged against the subsidy payable on and after the 1st of July, the ground urged being the necessities of the Government.

TELEGRAPHIC EXTENSION.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN asked if it is the intention of the Government, in the interest of the Fisheries and Navigation, to give or recommend the grant of a subsidy to aid in the prolongation of the Telegraphic Line from Malbaie as far as the County, or the eastern limit of the County, of Saguenay?

Hon. Mr. SMITH—There is no intention at present to construct the line to which the hon. gentleman refers.

EXEMPTION OF CANADIAN SHIPPING FROM THE OPERATION OF THE IMPERIAL SHIPPING BILL.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Mr. Speaker, I beg to move that an Address from this House be presented to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of all papers and correspondence which have passed between the Government of Canada and Her Majesty's Government in relation to legislation which may be under consideration of the Imperial Parliament in relation to British Shipping, and affecting Shipping registered in Canada; also all correspondence between the said Governments in relation to the exemption of Canadian Shipping from the operation of the Imperial Bill: also any correspondence between the said Governments in relation to the Legislation passed by the Canadian Parliament for the inspection and classification of Canadian vessels, and as to how far the British Government will accept the Canadian classification and inspection, if the Law passed by the Canadian Parliament is put in force as equivalent to the inspection by Imperial Officer or British Lloyds. Sir, I may state to this House that the object I have in moving for this Address at this time, is one of purely national interest. I may say that I am not inspired by any party or political feelings of any kind whatever, as I know that on former occasions, when a kindred motion was made by myself, it was partially at least looked on by gentlemen on the other side of the House, as in some way likely to be tinged by political antagonism, or by a desire to forward special and personal views. In relation to the treatment that this question should receive, my hon. friend the Premier, remarks that it was most unreasonable to consider it a party question, and I grant it. Such an opinion never ought to be entertained, and I hope that, with regard to the statements I made to-day, no misunderstanding of that kind as has existed in the past will prevail among the hon. gentlemen, and particularly that my hon. friend, my worthy successor in office, will disabuse his mind of any such feeling. Sir, it will be recollected that in the year 1870, when I had the honor of occupying the position my hon. friend opposite so ably fills, it was thought necessary to consolidate the laws affecting Canadian tonnage, and a measure was introduced into the Parliament of Canada for that purpose. The Imperial Parliament had, however, during the previous two or three years been vainly endeavouring to do the same thing in reference to the consolidation of the laws, the Merchants' Shipping Act and measures generally affecting the tonnage of the British Empire, and, at the special request of the Imperial Government, our legislation was permitted to stand over, the reasons given in the despatches which were submitted to the Government of Canada being, that it was most desirable that any legislation had relating to the tonnage of the Empire, and especially the tonnage of the great colony of Canada—a colony which stands on the same footing with many nations, and indeed above many in the world—being so important a portion of the British Dominions, should bear as nearly as was admitted by circumstances, a similarity with the legislation of the Imperial Parliament. It accordingly stood over, and at the next Session of Parliament I came prepared with a Bill for submission, but again the Imperial Government not having sufficiently advanced their legislation or matured their views as to be willing to accept the opinions entertained by their Parliament, again asked us to let it stand over; and this was again done. However, the former undoubtedly thought it unfair to the people of Canada that if defects were found in British legislation in this connection, any delays to which they were subjected should for so many years retard our action. And as the Parliament of Canada adopted legislation upon the subject, as is shewn on the Statute books of the country, and in particular regarding the Merchants' Shipping Act, which I think is no discredit to Canada. Sir, I may say at this stage that the great English agitator concerning shipping, Mr. Plimsoll, in a recent letter addressed to the Earl of Derby, on his own return from the examination of the ports on the Black Sea and Mediterranean, in relation to their methods of shipping grain, the character of the vessels engaged in the trade, the methods of loading practised there, and the treatment seamen generally received, he distinctly referred to the legislation of the Parliament of Canada as a model worthy of being followed. Sir, I take it that this was a great compliment to the Parliament of our country; that its legislation in connection with a matter of such extreme importance, which at the last Session of the Parliament shook the British Government to its centre, owing to the power exercised by a single independent and determined man, and the right it appeared his cause possessed, that he made it tremble for its existence, compelling the Administration to change its policy and reverse its line of conduct indicated by their assertions made upon the floor of the House, and pass a temporary Act, which whether owing to the sensational views propounded by Mr. Plimsoll, or the necessities of the cause he advocated, enabled him to call forth. It cannot be denied that the Bill adopted has affected the whole shipping of the British Empire during the past year. And, Sir, when we look back on the authority we possess—I will say, that we are independent in everything except the name—and when we find that regarding all matters concerning the Internal Government of Canada, we have practical independence, Great Britain having magnanimously and nobly said—make your own arrangements; endeavor calmly to consider your measures in a Parliament, which is as free and as intelligent as any in the world; and pass your own laws with the sanction which the Crown gives to the Acts of Colonial Legislatures—I maintain, that we have the internal arrangement of our own affairs, having every liberty, right and power, which any Colony should demand. I contend therefore that England has given to us the control of legislation affecting the management of our maritime affairs, and as much power to this Parliament in this regard as we exercise upon land. Sir, some years ago, when we desired to obtain the right of examining and controlling the class of men who were acting as Engineers of Canadian Steamships, we passed a Bill, which received the sanction of England; and in this measure, the same standing was given to the Canadian classification of Engineers, as to the Board of Trade rating. At a more recent date, and since Confederation, we adopted a law, relative to Canadian masters and mates, feeling that it was necessary to give them a certain status; also that it was unfair to our masters and mates to oblige them to go to England to secure certificates with relation to their ability and capacity to enable them to take vessels across the Atlantic and to foreign seas, their examination before the British Board of Trade being requisite. One of the points which struck me at a very early stage in my administration of the Department, was the injustice with which such an arrangement operated upon our own seamen, and I at once reported to the Council on the subject, asking that our classification should have the status as that of the British Board of Trade. This report was sent by the Government to the Colonial Secretary, who referred it to the Board of Trade, which Board at first refused to give to the certificates, that might be given when we had established a system of examining masters and mates, the same power and status as to their own certificates, the Imperial Government doubting whether the standard of examination would be as high in Canada as in England. They felt that it might open the door for men rejected there, or found incapable owing to some infirmity of acting in the responsible position of master or mate, and they denied us the privilege on that ground. The arguments they used were in my opinion unfair and unjust, and the matter was again brought before the Imperial Cabinet; and after nearly three years' negotiation, they conceded the right we claimed, and the law was passed. The experience of the last four years, with reference to the Board of Trade examinations, thus established, has given universal satisfaction, and I now appeal to the gentlemen in this House interested in our marine. I see several of them before me, and I ask whether these examinations have not only obtained the confidence of the mercantile and shipping interests on this side of the Atlantic, but also on the other this result was due to the judicious application and exercise of the powers bestowed by the Canadian Parliament, I might enumerate a number of instances, but I may merely say, that during my administration of the affairs of the Department, I found particularly on the part of high officers in England connected with the Board of Trade, a disposition with relation to our shipping legislation to meet us half-way, and I am confident that they will endorse the opinion I entertain, that such confidence has not been misplaced. Sir, the notice of motion I have placed on the Table of the House to-day, is one than which there is no question coming before us, or any other Parliament, of greater importance, touching, as it does, the success of our shipping and the prosperity, expansion and increase of Canadian tonnage. The farming interest engages a larger number of people, but I maintain that no other interest should receive at our hands any more careful deliberation than matters concerning the shipping of our country. We stand, as I have already said, in this regard, at the head of a great many nations, and by some it is held that we occupy the position of the fourth greatest mercantile power in the world. This is my opinion, although according to others, we are seventh on the list, but at all events the other three are very slightly, if at all, in advance of us. I would venture, Sir, in the humble position I occupy, assuming the possession of no influence beyond that exercised by my own voice, and the facts I may be able to submit, and as having had some experience touching these questions, to call the attention of the people of Canada through this Parliament to the necessity of considering whether the time has not arrived when we should ask the Imperial Government to put us in all matters affecting our tonnage in no worse position than the shipping of the various nations with which both her ships and our own have to compete. I lay this statement down as a broad, bold platform, the correctness of which I presume, none would hesitate to dispute, and if we can accomplish this, we will have made a great stride towards our mercantile success. I do not wish to exempt the shipowners and masters of the Dominion from regulations protecting life and property, but I claim that we are empowered to adopt such legislation as we may consider necessary for the protection of our seamen our ships and the guardianship of our property. It is known that during the last year, after some five years' delay, Mr. Plimsoll forced the British Ministry to adopt an admittedly temporary measure for the then current year, until Parliament could again meet and adopt more practical legislation, and I notice in the cable despatches that since the meeting of the House of Commons it is proposed to adopt that measure, with the addition of many clauses, some of which are considered very objectionable to Canadian shipowners. The hon. member for Kent has submitted a petition from the shipowners of St. Johns, calling attention to the difficulties which are likely to arise, as well as referring to many which have already occurred, through the operation of the temporary law to which I have referred, affecting very seriously our tonnage and affecting its prosperity, and it is known as a fact, that this measure was passed under the influence of the greatest excitement, the Ministry having been shaken to its very centre by the bold and violent attack made upon them by Mr. Plimsoll. I felt at the time as I still, and as all ship-owners, both in the House and in the country, must feel, that legislation concerning a special industry which forms an important element in this nation's prosperity, and which is worth, as ours is, about fifty millions of dollars, ought not to be endangered by sentimental enactments, inspired by the sensational enthusiasm of any man, however philanthropic and honest his intentions may be, who, without sufficient experience, takes hold of the question in the British Parliament. I am not going to reflect upon Mr. Plimsoll. I think that he has accomplished a great work; but I consider that whenever sentimentalism is brought into play in a matter so serious and important to the prosperity of the country, we are not likely to secure the most judicious or prudent legislation, especially when as under these circumstances, passed, as the act referred to was, in eight and forty hours, without that consideration and reflection to which such a subject is entitled. Shipowners should have the opportunity of being heard before any such measure is passed; and since that time Boards of Trade in many cities of this Dominion, and other public bodies as well as ship-owners, particularly in the Maritime Provinces, have called attention to the character of that enactment, and the dangers to which our shipping was in consequence liable, if some steps were not taken to prevent them. Some asked for one thing, and others for another. My own idea was, as I mentioned last year to my hon. friend opposite on several occasions, that our own legislation being defective in this relation, in one point alone we could not fairly ask for exemption of our tonnage from the effect of British enactments until the Act passed in 1873 for the classification and inspection of Canadian tonnage, and which remains inoperative until the issue of an Order in Council was made to give it effect, or until some other measure of a similar character was adopted. We passed the Portwarden's Act some few years ago, and its excellent effect was proven by the fact, that the year previously eight steamships, grain laden, left the Port of Montreal, of which but one was ever heard from, and she was wrecked in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, while since that time not one ship of that class has been allowed to go to sea unless provided with a Portwarden's certificate, stating that she is properly loaded, under his supervision and in accordance with the Law referred to.

Very few accidents have occurred to grain laden steamers since that time owing to the method of loading or the character of storage. The Dominion Line lost a steamer by running against an iceberg, an accident which no legislation can control or guard against. The evils which exist in the British Islands do not and have not existed in Canadian ports for the last four years, and there is only one single link wanting to make our appeal for the exclusion of our tonnage from British legislation complete, and that can be remedied by an order in Council. This question is of sufficient importance to elicit remarks from the several ship-owners and other gentlemen interested in this House, and I trust they will express their opinions. I have heard it put forward as an objection that we ought not to ask England to exempt colonial ships from the operation of Imperial Laws—that when our vessels go abroad they are now under the protection of the British Flag and their masters have the advice of British Consuls—and that there is no reason in withdrawing from these privileges. The same remark will apply to the exercise of our powers over the soil. We have all the advantages and protection of the British flag here with the advice and council of the British Government, and yet we govern our internal affairs, free from the legislation of the Imperial Parliament. Then why should we not control our property on the sea? I believe if we were to ask in a proper manner and put our reasons in a logical shape we could secure this exemption. Look at the consequences which will follow if our ship owners are subject to that legislation now going on in England. Two vessels may be loading side by side, as happened the other day in Cardiff, the one an old American, the other a nine-year's St. John's ship. They loaded in much the same way with the same cargo. The St. John's ship was ready to go to sea when a Board of Trade officer stepped on board and ordered 100 tons of the cargo to be taken out, and she had carried the same amount of cargo for years. The American vessel had just the same cargo, and was no better fitted to carry it than the other, but she was allowed to depart. What will be the remedy sought if our ship-owners are denied exemption from this law. It will be a simple one, but one which will reflect no credit on our country. They will say—"If our registering in Canadian ports renders us liable to Imperial legislation, we will transfer our tonnage to some foreign nation—we will hoist the Belgium, Spanish or some South American Republic flag—and we will thus save ourselves from the operation of this harsh legislation." Some ship-owners have already made this change. I had sent to me the other day from London a copy of the Shipping and Mercantile Gazette, which is one of the two leading maritime papers of England, and consequently of the world. With the permission of the House I will read its editorial on this very subject:—

"The memorial presented on the 1st of October last to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the Dominion of Canada, by Canadian Ship-owners and Merchants resident in England, complaining of the operation of the Unseaworthy Ships' Act so far as Canadian Shipping is concerned, has produced considerable sensation in the Canadian Ports, and in the adjacent Province of New Brunswick—the two portions of British North America most directly interested in the working of the new law."

I may state that so important do the ship-owners of Liverpool regard it that Canadian ships should be exempt from the operation of the Imperial Act that they sent a petition to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries asking the Government of Canada to use its influence to secure such exemption:—

"The memorialists, it may be remembered, before stating their objections in detail, took a preliminary exception to any Act which empowers the Board of Trade in this country to interfere with colonial vessels, as containing a violation of conditions which preserve to the colony the right to legislate upon all questions not involving Imperial interests; and the Canadian Minister of Marine was requested to consider whether such an Act as that of last Session was not strictly local, and not Imperial in character, and as such, therefore, should not apply to Canadian vessels. The portion of the Act objected to by the Canadians are those which relate to detention and survey, and to the loading of grain cargoes. They say, and no doubt truly, that these provisions place their ships at a disadvantage as compared with the foreigner. It is complained that the Surveyors appointed by the Board of Trade to pronounce upon the seaworthiness of ships are, as a rule, men selected from the Royal Navy, without any special training to qualify them for the discharge of the special duties required by the Act. At a meeting held at St. John, New Brunswick, on the 12th of November, it was stated that a very small minority of the Surveyors appointed were competent to pronounce upon questions of seaworthiness, while on the same occasion it was agreed that the scale of three inches to the foot was the maximum which ship-owners could be expected to concede in the matter of loading. The Master of a ship arrived at St. John complained to the local journal there that at Cardiff his vessel was detained just as she was going to sail, after she had been four days loaded, and when the tides were at the springs. This correspondent asserts that he lightened his ship some ten inches before he was allowed to sail, although an old American ship which had been lying alongside, loaded much more deeply, was not, of course, interfered with. Mr. Henry Fry, of Qu-bee, recognized, and deservedly so, as a high authority on shipping matters—has addressed a letter to the Montreal Gazette in which he points out that the restrictions upon grain loading imposed by Section 3 of the new Act are calculated to produce a serious effect upon the shipment of grain from Canada to England, and Mr. Fry's views are endorsed by the journal in question as but too well founded, while the working of the Act is stigmatised as having already inflicted a heavy blow upon the trade of Montreal. No doubt the Canadians understand their own affairs, and it may be conceded that in this matter of grain loading and other interference with colonial shipping, they have ground for their complaint. But it is clear that, if they continue to suffer, the fault lies with their own Government. Our readers are aware that Mr. Mitchell, late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, had secured an arrangement with the Imperial Government that Canadian vessels, or vessels loading within the Dominion, should be exempted from the operation of the Imperial Statute, provided the Canadian Parliament should pass an Act regulating the loading and classification of ships."

This part of the article is not strictly accurate, though in spirit it is so, but it is accurate so far that negotiations for that purpose were opened, and I do not doubt that the British Government would have conceded what we want.

"The Act was passed with a clause authorizing the Governor in Council, by proclamation, to give it effect. But it would seem this has not been done, and a strong feeling as to the remissness of the Colonial Government has been created, more particularly in the ports of the Dominion. If the Canadians have the power—as unquestionably they have, and ought to have, of regulating their trade and the mode in which it is conducted, and take no steps to do so, they cannot surely complain if their ships, when they come to discharge in the United Kingdom, find themselves within the provisions of the Imperial Statute. It is competent for the Colonial Parliament to pass any law they may think proper, regulating the loading and classification of colonial ships, and such an Act would be accepted here without question. We do not bring this subject, and the position of the Canadians in respect to it, for the first time before our readers. In our impression of the 17th of September last, we set out the provisions of the Port Warden's Act of May 1874, in which the duties of these officials in respect to the superintendance of grain loading are clearly defined. But this Act does not meet the provisions of the Imperial Statute of last year, and, because it does not, the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries in Canada, had procured the arrangement with the Home authorities, that Canadian vessels loading in the ports of the Dominion should be exempt from the operation of any Imperial law on the terms above stated. It would seem, therefore, that if the Canadians have any ground of complaint, it is neither against the provisions of the Act of last Session, nor against those to whom its administration is entrusted in this country, but against the colonial authorities, who have not brought the recent Colonial Act, regulating loading and classification into force. It is said that these authorities have been openly charged in this matter with indifference to the interests of the shipping and commerce of the Dominion. We have not yet seen their answer, but, if the charge is well founded, it certainly would seem to deprive the Canadians of any valid complaint against the provisions of the Unseaworthy Ships' Act, so far as Canadian shipping is concerned."

Now, Sir, I am not going to endorse the statements against the Government of Canada there referred to; it would be very unfair if I should do so; but the object of the motion is to find out what has been done on the subject and to have the papers laid before the House. I may say that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has favoured me with an advance copy of a very important document which has been transmitted to the Colonial Minister, containing a great deal of valuable matter, but which does not go so far as I should like. Perhaps, after the discussion of this subject, my hon. friend will see reason to add to the valuable Report he has already made with a view to getting an expression from the Imperial Government. Any legislation affecting this important interest should only be adopted after due deliberation, and should not be subject to sensationalism or the views of unpractical philanthropists, men who simply look at one side of the question, and care nothing for the interests of the shipowners. I therefore move the resolution which I have placed in your hands, and I trust that any legislation which may be consummated will place our shipping on an equality with ships of foreign nations trading with the Empire. That course will be best attained by asking that Canadian tonnage be excluded from the operation of Imperial legislation.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I must express my gratification to my hon. friend for bringing this matter forward and discussing it in this clear and dispassionate manner. I generally agree with the hon. gentleman's observations, and it affords me great pleasure to say that his administration of the office I now hold met with my approval, for I was generally in sympathy with his propositions in relation to our Marine. I agreed entirely with his previous efforts towards the classification and inspection of Canadian vessels. But my hon. friend is blind to the fact that whether right or wrong—and I think entirely wrong—the shipowners of this country have been almost unanimously opposed to it. I have listened to everything they have said, and they have failed to convince me that there is any argument in their objections to this classification. The House will understand in a question of such importance as this it would be unwise, contrary to the wishes of those interested in this matter, to enforce the measure. I think in a little while the ship-owners of this country will see the wisdom of it, and I have reason to believe now, that their feeling is rapidly changing in consequence of the English legislation. If they do not see now, they will soon see it will be wise in us to carry into effect the law passed by my hon. predecessor. I understood my hon. friend to say that he took the ground that England had no right to legislate for Canadian shipping.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I did not say that. She has both the right and the power, but what I do hold is that Canada, having already provided all the safeguards for life and property that are required, and there being none of the abuses complained of in England, if we make proper representations to the British Government of these facts, our shipping will be exempted from this severe legislation, and such I believe to have been the object of the Imperial Parliament when they passed the British American Act which gave to the Dominion Parliament the exclusive power to deal with navigation and shipping.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—In Canada we take the ground that vessels in our waters are subject to our laws, and we cannot take the ground that Canadian vessels in English waters should be exempt from British legislation; but we ought to take the ground that our ships should be placed on the same footing as foreign tonnage in British ports. We make no distinction between British and foreign vessels, and we cannot expect anything more than to be placed on the same footing as foreign nations in British waters. I am not disposed to go to the extent that some people do in condemnation of Mr. Plimsoll. He stands on a sound basis. He is an enthusiast, undoubtedly, and unreasonable in some of his demands; but after all there is something in his contention which challenges the sympathy and approbation of most people. He takes the ground that the Government of England should be responsible for the seaworthiness of a ship before she is allowed to go to sea. The Government of England have hitherto taken the ground that the owners should be responsible for unseaworthy ships, both civilly and criminally. Now, in this country, we have to a certain extent adopted very nearly, in relation to the loading of grain, what Mr. Plimsoll asks for in England. He asks that no ship shall be allowed to go to sea until she has received, from an accredited officer, a certificate that she is seaworthy. My hon. friend from Northumberland says by his legislation that no vessel shall go to sea from our ports until she has a certificate of seaworthiness; and during the loading of the ship she shall be subject to the superintendence of the Port Warden. More, that official has the arbitrary power, if the vessel requires repairs, to compel her to be made seaworthy. Unless the ship-owner complies with his requirements the vessel cannot go to sea.

During the discussion of this important question in the Parliament of Great Britain, the legislation of Canada was frequently referred to in the highest terms of approbation. I know that Mr. Primssoll, in private as well as in public, has expressed his warm admiration of our laws, and has not hesitated to affirm that they are what he desires in England. In the Act of the Imperial Parliament, passed last Session, there are but one or two sections which the Government placed there; the balance was forced on them by Mr. Primssoll. So strong is public opinion on this subject and so popular the movement, that no less than one hundred amendments were proposed while the Bill was under discussion in the House. Now, this Act follows British ships to foreign ports. That seems to me highly improper. Half the time the crews are foreigners, and when the correspondence is brought down it will show I have taken the ground that this should not be, but that a vessel should be subject to the laws of the country in whose waters she is.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—The law regulating foreign ships, except in the loading of grain, and timber on deck, are now the laws of the country to which the ship belongs, at least so far as the discipline and control of seamen is concerned.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—My hon. friend is mistaken in that. He knows that foreign vessels are subject to our law respecting the shipping of sailors, and I may add that law has worked admirably.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I think my hon. friend is wrong.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—No. The Act passed in 1873 is not confined to British ships; it extends to all vessels, and we do not find the Consuls of the countries to which they belong make complaints.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I think my hon. friend will find on reference to the records of his Department that the Consul of Sweden and Norway complained to the Canadian Government of an attempt on the part of our officers to control the seamen sailing under their flag.

Hon. Mr. SMITH.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I think there has been some slight complaint, but on the whole it has worked admirably. If we can legislate for foreign ships here, why can't they do so in England. I have heard that the British Government are afraid if they do that, foreign countries will legislate for British vessels. Let it be so. It seems to me that England, the first Maritime Power in the world, should take the lead in such legislation. She should have no apprehension in legislating for foreign as well as Canadian vessels. I shall be gratified to receive suggestions from my hon. friend on a subject with which he is so thoroughly acquainted. We shall use all the power and influence we have to frame legislation which will promote the maritime interests of the people of Canada.

Mr. McLEOD—I know in the Province of New Brunswick, and I believe in the other Maritime Provinces, there is a widespread disapproval of the establishment of a Canadian Lloyds. I am satisfied it would not cure the evils of which our ship-owners complain. The hon. member for Northumberland, I think, makes a mistake as regards the remedy he proposes. A mere repetition of such classification could not be a defence, for this reason—that our vessels when built are classed, and going on voyages to foreign countries do not return to our ports for years; and when they come back to the ports of Great Britain, before they are permitted to load or go to sea they require to be examined and passed upon by the Board of Trade Officers of Great Britain. Well, Sir, I am convinced of this—that if it were possible to obtain certificates from a Dominion Lloyds, to carry the machinery in detail, we should have the same system in operation as is in force in England under the Board of Trade—officers appointed by our Government to act in the several ports of Great Britain. The great feeling against the establishment of a Dominion Lloyds arises from a fear that, under such circumstances, political influence will influence the appointment of the officials who are to inspect our ships and that we will have political ship-building. I do not think that this would be in the interest of this country, and I am satisfied that even were a Dominion Lloyds established, such action would not cure the evils of which complaint is made on the other side of the water. We have at present two classifications, in force for years—English Lloyds and Bureau Veritas—whose certificates are received by the underwriters in Great Britain as elsewhere, as guarantees of the character of our shipping; and I am confident that it would take some time for a Dominion Lloyds classification to obtain the same standing. I do not think, moreover, that Government control would enhance such classification. There is no doubt that the agitation arising from the Plimsoll movement is very widespread; but I think that the point about which our ship-owners more particularly complain, is this—and the Hon. the Minister of Marine has very ably made reference to it—the application of the Act in favour of foreign vessels as against our own. I believe that if it applied equally to the former, the one great evil of which complaint is made would be removed; and if the policy was adopted which the Minister of Marine has mentioned—the enforcement of the same laws in Great Britain with regard to foreign as to English vessels—as is done in this country, I think our ship-owners would be satisfied. A foreign vessel in Canadian ports can no more take a deck load than a British ship, but I notice in the evidence taken before the Royal Commission, the fear was expressed that if the law was applied to foreign vessels, foreign Governments would retaliate against British ships in their ports. If that principle, however, be still followed, and foreign vessels be given such advantage, they can ship British crews; and for my part, I cannot see what difference it would make to poor Jack, whether he is drowned on an English or a foreign vessel. Ships should not be permitted to load beyond a certain depth, in order that lives may not be sacrificed. I am convinced that if a Dominion Lloyds, so highly favoured by the hon. member for Northumberland, were established, that it would not cure the difficulty at all, for this subject has received considerable consideration from the ship-owners in the Maritime Provinces, and I believe that they, with many such owners in this House, agree with me that its classification would not exempt our tonnage from examination in the ports of Great Britain, and that is the great trouble at present. We have our vessels classed in Bureau Veritas, and in the British Lloyds.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—But they are not exempt from Board of Trade certificates.

Mr. McLEOD—That is true.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—They are on the same footing.

Mr. McLEOD—They are exactly on the same footing. This Government would require to have a staff of officers in the several ports of Great Britain to carry out the machinery of a Dominion Lloyds' classification; and this would entail great expense. If the system was made non-compulsory, it would then be found that it would be necessary to make it compulsory, in order to secure sufficient fees to pay these employes; and I hold that they never could carry out the Dominion Lloyds machinery without providing this machinery. Ship owners complain, in connection with the administration of Board of Trade laws, of interference by officers appointed not so much because they are qualified for such posts, as from political influence possibly, and they may not in consequence be fit for these positions. That was the evidence taken before the Royal Commission. Of the surveyors in the ports of Great Britain only seven or eight had a practical acquaintance with wooden ships, the others being merely familiar with iron ships, and the great difficulty experienced regarding the former is, that their classification is restricted for loading and equipment, and consequently they are placed at a disadvantage. Iron ships are allowed to load more deeply, being considered of a better character. The point of the whole discussion is simply this: The object of the Address is to try and obtain the establishment of a Dominion Lloyds, the certificates of which shall be received by the British Government as equivalent in character to those of the English Lloyds. It must be apparent to everyone who knows anything about shipping, that when a ship is launched she of course gets her character, and it may be years before she comes back. How is such a system then to be carried out, unless the machinery is provided in the ports of Great Britain.

Mr. KILLAM—I must confess that the suggestion of the hon. member for Northumberland has taken me, Sir, by surprise but I would not at present give my opinion, as to whether the suggestion he makes should be carried out or not. Speaking of the general question of British legislation as to ships, I must confess that I am to a great extent in favor of Mr. Plimsoll's ideas. The difficulties which have arisen under the English law are not, as the hon. member who has just spoken observed, so much in the legislation itself as in the way it has been carried out. Undoubtedly some cases of injustice have arisen, but with regard to the cases that have been quoted, I am bound to say that there has been a great difference of opinion. I remember reading of the case of the American and St. John ships. Some said that the former was loaded too deeply, and others the contrary; but at any rate, if she were, I think that the legislation was good. Ships should not be allowed to go to sea too deeply loaded, and if the rule did not apply to the American ship, so much the worse for it. I should like to know, by the way, what became of the old basket; also, whether the insurance on her cargo was as light as on the ship of St. John, from which one hundred tons were taken? I do not think that our friends should contemplate with so much anxiety the legislation likely to take place in this regard, in the English Parliament, during the present Session, because I find that the ship-owners in England, being precisely on the same footing as ourselves, are wide-awake, and that as long ago as November, they had taken action. They have placed their views, which are almost the same as ours, fully before the House, and I have no doubt that their representations will receive sufficient consideration. On the 29th of November a meeting of the United General

Mr. McLEOD.

Conference of Ship-owners was held at Glasgow, when it was unanimously resolved:—

“That the basis upon which all shipowners may unite is, that the time has arrived when a general codification of the Merchant Shipping Law may be pressed for, when all obsolete and unnecessary portions of the existing statute law relating to shipping should be struck out, and a definite code fixed, which may prevent the perpetual and harassing changes in the law, as now made, or proposed, in each Session of Parliament.”

There is no doubt that last year's legislation was sensational, and we have no reason to fear that the British Parliament will continue in the state of excitement under which it was at the hour when Mr. Plimsoll made his celebrated speech in the House, but will settle down into a calm and cool view of question.

This Central Committee went on to say that the means to be adopted for carrying out the object required, was, 1st. “By explaining and adducing evidence to members of Parliament and the public, in such manner as may be deemed best, that grievances do exist, so serious as to imperil the existence of the business of ship-owning as a trade in this country, and tending unmistakeably to throw the whole carrying trade of this country into the hands of foreigners to the consequent injury both of masters and men in the ship-building, engineering and other trades more immediately depending upon the ship-owning trade, and to the country generally, by the efficiency of the navy being threatened by the supply of seamen being reduced; and by directing the serious attention of the Government to the necessity of providing for the marine legislation of the country, being originated and carried out by officials and members of the Government really conversant with the subject. By the general conference appointing an influential representative Committee to watch the course of legislation in the ensuing Session, to press on Government the necessity of fixing the statute law relating to merchant shipping by revising the existing statutes and striking out all that is obso“lete and unnecessary, and there after to confer with the Government upon the proposed code after the statutory law has been dealt with.” I think, Sir, that the remedy for the evils which exist is to be found not so much in any legislation with regard shipping as to seamen; and that in most cases where difficulties have arisen,—when ships have put back, seamen have complained, surveys have been made and sometimes the discharge of the ship or the ordering of considerable repairs have been the consequence—the fault has lain indirectly with the seamen. And yet it is not really the fault of the seamen, but of the system under which seamen are procured and placed on board vessels. The English laws are not so good and stringent as our own concerning the offence of crimping, while the system of payment by advance notes is at the bottom of one-half of this difficulty. A ship starts to sea with sailors, who have never previously seen her, and know nothing about her cargo, while probably they have been on a drunken spree; the mate has perhaps had a parting glass or two himself, and is not in the very best humour, being perhaps, moreover, a man who does not believe in sailors’ brains; a difficulty at once arises, and the next thing is the laying of a complaint by the sailors.

The proper regulation for the system of shipping sailors will do more to remedy Mr. Plimsoll’s grievances than any legislation regarding ships. At any rate, I do not feel at all alarmed that the united action which is now being taken by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, by the Canadian Government, with the assistance of my hon. friend from Northumberland, and in England, will be injurious to the true interests of the ship-owners.

With regard to the matter of a Canadian Lloyds, I am bound to say that ship-owners have somewhat changed their views on the question, and a great many of them very lately. I had the honour of presenting a petition two years ago, I think, when some hundred of ship-owners strongly protested against the establishment of a Lloyds; and the hon. member for Kent has just mentioned that they have in some degree altered their opinions on the subject. I believe that if a Dominion Lloyds is established, in a very few years its classifications will become as good and as generally recognized by underwriters and business men generally throughout the world as any classification existing at the present day.

Mr. DAVIES—Mr. Speaker, as a member coming from a ship-building Province, allow me to say a few words on this question—the establishment of a Dominion Lloyds under government control—which is looked upon with great disfavour in my Province. It is well known that the English and French Lloyds are associations of merchants, not, however, under government control, but purely private in their character, and there would be no objection to the establishment of similar associations in the Dominion; and, as the hon. member who has just sat down has said, I dare say that in a few years, their inspections would be found equal to the English or French examinations. The British Lloyds is an old-established institution, and its report carries great weight with underwriters, &c. The Bureau Veritas is of more modern origin, but it now stands very high.

With reference to Mr. Plimsoll’s legislation, I suppose, Sir, it will be generally admitted that some such action was necessary to protect the lives of seamen from the greed of ship-owners, who sometimes overload their vessels, and from designing persons who send unseaworthy ships to sea with the intention of losing them. This legislation took place beyond question under a good deal of excitement, but I suppose most people will admit that some such enactment will apply to our ships as well as to vessels built in England.

The late Minister of Marine alluded to the examination of masters and mates, and spoke of the measure as having given great satisfaction. I certainly know, Sir, that it has not been so in the Province from which I come, for this reason: We build a great many new ships to sell, and it has limited the number from which ship owners can select their masters. Some who were old and skilled, were very ignorant, and were consequently unable to obtain certificates.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—They should have shown certificates of service.

Mr. DAVIES—But still, many of them could not get these certificates, so this narrowed the selection to the masters and mates who were otherwise situated. I am quite aware, Sir, that this defect will cure itself in a few years; but I simply speak of it as rather hard on ship-owners at present, particularly as we have not had a Board for the examination of masters and mates in our Province. I hope that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see fit to establish such a Board immediately.

Mr. MILLS—I do not propose to say anything regarding the merits of the legislation in question, whether in Canada or in England, for the classification of vessels is a matter on which those gentlemen who are familiar with the shipping interests of this country are much more competent to express an opinion than I; but I think that every member of this House ought to understand what our jurisdiction and our rights are with reference to the matter of shipping. Now, Sir, it seems to me, looking at the provisions of the British North America Act, under the authority of which we are sitting in this House, and undertaking to deal with important questions, there is none more clear than this—that so far as Canada is concerned it has an exclusive right to legislate upon the subjects of navigation and commerce. We are, Sir, not an ordinary Colonial Legislature, but a Parliament, and perhaps the first Parliament that ever existed in the British Empire outside of the British Isles. We possess the rights of Parliament, and the Queen assists us in our legislation, for Her Majesty, by and with the advice of this House and the Senate legislates for the peace, order, and good government of this portion of the British Empire, to the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Great Britain on all subjects designated in the British North America Act. Now, among the subjects so mentioned are those of navigation and commerce; and what does his mean? That we shall have the power to legislate for the shipping upon our internal waters; and will not our legislation reach our shipping beyond our coasts. I say that such a position is allowable.

Mr. DAVIES.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Can we negotiate, independently, commercial treaties?

Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman asks if we can make a commercial treaty with another country? Certainly not Sir.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—It will come. We will have that power yet where Canadian interests are concerned.

Mr. MILLS—Not unless the Imperial Parliament chooses to confer on us the right, but it has given us every right with regard to legislation on the subject of navigation and commerce, and it is quite clear, then, that we are as much entitled to deal with our shipping interests upon the sea, as we are to take action touching such interests on the rivers and lakes of this country. If the Imperial Government undertakes to assume any other interpretation, it undertakes to withdraw from us those rights which have been conferred on us by the British North America Act. The Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has alluded to the attempt of the British Government to reach their ships in foreign ports. Well, Sir, that cannot be done, whether it is attempted or not. A ship does not stand on different footing from other property.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Suppose we isolated our shipping from Imperial legislation, what protection would our vessels have in foreign countries? We have no Consuls, and, as a reference to the law on the subject will show, very important powers are conferred on those officials. Masters and crews look to them for protection when abroad, and to settle difficulties arising between them. I think it is utterly impossible to adopt a policy of isolation.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—With permission of the hon. member for Bothwell, I should like to follow the conclusion of the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries a little further. Could not the Consuls be authorized to execute the laws according to Canadian legislation, and thus protect our seamen. Canada would not object to share the cost. Imperial Parliament, in my opinion, will grant anything that is reasonable, if asked in a proper manner.

Mr. MILLS—With regard to the objection of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I don't see the difficulty which presents itself to his mind. The Chief of the Executive in this country is also Chief of the Executive in England, and Consuls in foreign ports are just as competent to enforce the legislation of Canada as that of Great Britain. But I was going to say, when interrupted, that there is no difference in the rights of shipping and other property. As a matter of comity, a contract made between two gentlemen here will be in force in the State of New York, if they happen to reside there; and as a matter of comity, an obligation existing between the captain and sailors of a vessel, according to the Bottomry Act and other laws relating to shipping, will be enforced in another country, so long as there is no law in that country which will operate against its enforcement. In this matter I set aside every consideration as to what may be the effect of Mr. Plimsoll's labours. I am inclined to think there is a very great deal of force in the objections which he has made to the existing Maritime Law of England. But whether his policy is wise or unwise, I hold that he is entirely out of court with regard to the rights of the people of this country. He has no right to touch them. The Imperial Government, I do not question, has the power to repeal the British North America Act and put an end to the authority by which this House has been convened—but until that is done it has no more power with reference to this question of shipping than in regard to any other matter upon which we are authorized to legislate. The fact that we are authorized to legislate precludes the possibility of concurrent legislation in Great Britain. You cannot have one shipping policy there affecting Canada and another in Canada itself; and if we have the power to make police regulations for the government of ships in our har-bours, to regulate the manner in which they are constructed and loaded in our ports, our laws have just the same force beyond our territory as the laws of England beyond the limits of that country with regard to the ships constructed there. I think it is high time that the Parliament of this country, which possesses a shipping amounting to some millions of tons, should assert the rights of self-government conferred upon it. It is high time for it to cease to declare over and over again that it is incompetent to deal with those matters with which it is authorized to deal. If that policy is persisted in it would be better to say to the Government of England—"You have given us more power than we ought to possess, and we are incompetent to deal with the rights of property so far as the shipping interest is concerned, and we wish you to withdraw that power from us." I do not hold with this view, however. I am very anxious myself to see the rights of this Parliament maintained to their full extent, and I have no doubt in such event our maritime interests will be quite as well cared for, and our registration quite as highly regarded abroad as that of any other country.

I have one observation to make in answer to the hon. member for Kent (N.B.), who said that ships leave our ports after inspection and sometimes remain away three or four years, and therefore they ought to be inspected in England. But suppose they were cruising and carrying on commerce in the Mediterranean, I see no more reason, why the English Government should interfere in the matter than France, Spain or any other country.

Mr. McLEOD—I should like the hon. gentleman to explain how it is possible for our vessels, as British ships, to be exempt from the operation of the laws in the ports of Great Britain?

Mr. MILLS—They should be placed on the same footing as foreign ships. Foreign law is always respected as a matter of comity, and we should have the same rights as a foreign nation in this respect.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I am gratified to notice that there is no differ-once of opinion between the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and myself except on one point—in regard to placing our ships on the same footing as those of other countries. According to a statement by the hon. gentleman, the British Government seem to object to legislate in that direction.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—J think the hon. gentleman misunderstood me.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL.—We agree on every point, except as to the remedy. The House may rest satisfied that the British Parliament will not take that character of legislation which the hon. gentleman suggests. One of the principles of the Merchants' Shipping Act of 1854, which with amendments has been the only law on the subject up to the present, is not to touch foreign ships or sailors.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Foreign sailors are subjected to our laws in Canada.

Mr. MITCHELL.—So far as I remember that Act has been the only legislation on this point, and under it there is no power to arrest foreign sailors or take cognizance of their deserting their ships. I have no hesitation in saying, from the place where my words possess some importance, and speaking to the ship-owners of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec, and all Canada, that if we don't take a stand and secure from the British authorities this needed concession, our efforts will be futile. That is my deliberate opinion. The hon. gentlemen from Kent and Prince Edward Island have referred to the question of Canadian laws. As I stated at the opening of the debate, I am not at all tied to the question of Government survey by a Canadian Government Lloyds. If any other remedy can be devised which will supply the link, we are bound to supply it before we ask England to exempt us. I shall give it my support. By establishing an association such as Lloyds—and there is certainly enough intelligence, wealth, and talent in the country to effect such an organization—which would receive Government countenance, great good would be effected in this direction. If the matter is properly represented to the Home Authorities we will obtain our demands. Nothing has been asked of

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL.

England which has not been granted, until from a small colony we have risen to a people with an Independent Parliament.

I was pleased to hear the views of the hon. member for Bothwell with regard to Treaties. I believe the day is not far distant when we will have the power of making Treaties. What is the Washington Treaty? Who made it as regards the portion affecting Canada? I admit the English representatives had a great deal to do with it, but let a question come up affecting Canada alone, and England would not attempt to settle it without consulting us and asking us to assist her. Hon. gentlemen may not approve of those views, but they will before long, and the time is not far distant when we will not be content that questions affecting Canadian prosperity shall be controlled entirely by people who may not understand or specially care for our interests.

I will show you how this legislation will affect us with relation to deck-loads. You will remember the hon. member for St. John, the Minister of Customs, resisted my efforts to regulate and limit the carrying of deck-loads. He fought it after everybody else had assented to the measure. I may inform him that the legislation now under consideration in the British Parliament proposes to sweep away all deck-loads, although we in Canada, who are practical men and understand the rights of sailors and ship-owners, regulated the system. I will just read a most ridiculous paragraph from a speech delivered by Mr. Plimsoll at Derby very recently. He said:—

“ I have, however, seen a statement in the report of the Royal Commission on Unseaworthy Ships, 1875, to the effect that the law against deck-loading had ceased to become operative, owing to evasions; that a ship would load in a Canadian port according to law, and crossing the river St. Croix, which divides Canada from America, would then take on board the deck cargo which was prohibited on the other side of the river; also that vessels loading in the St. Lawrence and the Bay of Fundy would proceed down to Eastport in the United States, they having loaded in Canada in compliance with the law, and then availed themselves of the second point of departure to load in a manner prohibited by the law. Supposing these things to be so, &c.”

Now, upon the faith of such information, as that they are going to sweep off all deck-loads, have we not reason to be apprehensive? The hon. member for Yarmouth, while he approves of everything else I have uttered, has no fears on this score. He knows well that take the shipping owned and registered in British America, and it will be found there is no country in the world—I say it advisedly—where the uniform character of the tonnage stands as high as our own, and yet the legislation which they are going to pass is to be based, not upon the character of our vessels, or the capacity of their officers, but upon a state of things which has existed in England where rotten ships have been sold and sent to sea until the abuse has given rise to Mr. Plimsoll's movement. I warn hon. gentlemen in this House who are more interested in tonnage than I am, that no half-way measure in relation to their interests will do in a crisis like this, and unless this Government boldly ask the English Ministry and Parliament to exempt Canadian vessels from legislation that has grown out of English abuses and has no existence in our trade, that they will fail in getting the protection that is desired.

The hon. member for Kent's remarks in relation to inspectors are just. I believe four-fifths of the inspectors appointed under the Plimsoll Act do not understand or appreciate the quality of wooden ships, and therefore our vessels will not get justice from them. Let our Government adopt a manly course and tell the English Government what our rights are, and ask that our vessels be exempted from legislation to which they should not be subject, inasmuch as we have passed laws for ourselves, and that nation which has ever been a liberal and just mother to her colonies will not refuse compliance.

Hon. Mr. VAIL—We should not ask anything unreasonable. The British Government has conceded to Canada the right of legislating for our own vessels and all others in our waters for the last three years. We should be cautious not to ask for what they would not be willing to grant to us under the circumstances. What Canadian ship-owners mainly require at present is, that their ships in British ports should be placed in the same position as foreign vessels; and if that be granted, we want nothing beyond it except that no legislation in the British Parliament shall have any effect upon our ships in foreign ports.

The hon. member for Northumberland says we should ask the British Government to instruct their Consuls in foreign ports to carry out Canadian laws in relation to Canadian vessels. That is almost asking what a nation might expect. If we should make such a request the British Government would be very likely to require us to pay our share of the expense of keeping up these officers. I hope the day is far distant when a line of distinction will be so drawn between Canadian and British ships that a British Consul cannot act in a foreign port for our tonnage as British ships.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—We have had a right to legislate for our own vessels for over forty years.

Hon. Mr. VAIL—This Act referred to has been only three years in force.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—We have had it in New Brunswick and you in Nova Scotia for many years.

Hon. Mr. VAIL—Not in regard to the loading of grain.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—That has been the Port Warden's Law for years in Quebec and Montreal.

Mr. CARMICHAEL—I agree almost entirely with the remarks made by the hon. member from Kent with respect to the Canadian Lloyds. I have great respect, also, for the opinion of the hon. member for Yarmouth, who represents, perhaps, more than any other gentleman here, the shipping interest. In establishing a Canadian Lloyds we seek to do that which no other country has yet attempted to do. We are an important maritime people, but we surely may consent to follow in the track of England, France and the United States, and none of those countries have established by law a Government Board of Classification. We have now all the benefit of the most important Boards of Classification existing—English Lloyds and Bureau Veritas. Those classifications are used through all parts of the world. As was well stated by the hon. member for Kent, we will require for a Canadian establishment a staff of officials, danger of political influence being exercised in their appointment. We will also have to establish agents in all the principal ports of Europe where ships require inspection and reclassification. This country would not be prepared, particularly in the present depressed state of the finances, to create such a staff and sustain such expense. It is also proposed not to make this law compulsory, and I therefore fail to see what good it will effect. We may succeed in driving away English Lloyds and Bureau Veritas from our midst without obtaining a compensating advantage.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPORTS FROM THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. YOUNG—I beg to move, Sir, that in order to ascertain to what extent Canada has been made a sacrifice market for American manufacturers during the last two years, it be

Resolved,—That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before Parliament a statement shewing the total value of all articles imported from the United States into each Province of the Dominion during 1871, '72 and '73 paying 15, 10 and 5 per cent. duty respectively, and also a similar statement for 1874 and '75 of articles paying 17½, 10 and 5 per cent., together with such remarks and further facts as the Commissioner of Customs may be able to add touching the increased importation of American manufactures into Canada.

I hope, Sir, that my friend the Minister of Customs will consent to the adoption of this motion. Its object is to obtain a statement, bringing out, if possible, to what extent American goods have been sacrificed in our market since the commencement of the crisis in the United States in the fall of 1873; and I have purposely worded the latter portion of the resolution in such a way as to enable the Customs Department to bring down the returns in the most effective manner. My motion is seconded by Mr. Workman.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I would just suggest to my hon. friend, with reference to this resolution, that the information for which he moves is in the possession of this House. The Trade and Navigation Returns contain the information he desires, in an official and condensed form; not down, perhaps, to so late a period as the present day, but to the end of 1875. He might move for the additional statement, but I rather question, Sir, the propriety of asking for the opinion of any person in this country. The hon. gentleman demands a return of certain official data already in the possession of this House; and in addition, the views of the Commissioner of Customs.

Mr. CARMICHAEL.

Mr. YOUNG—No!

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Then I misunderstood the terms of the motion, which I thought contained the words:—and any remarks the Commissioner of Customs may choose to add.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is quite evident this phrase is to be understood in the ordinary sense, for the hon. gentleman will find that in the returns a column is left for remarks,—incidental, of course, to the extent of the subjects embraced; and this is all that can be obtained in such a relation.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—This is a motion for a return of certain data, and I imagined that his object was to get the opinion of the Commissioner of Customs—a subordinate—concerning the bearing of these figures, which will be otherwise contained. Now, I object to this, if that is his object.

Mr. YOUNG—That is not my intention.

After a brief discussion the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie altered the motion as follows:—

“That an Order of the House do issue, requiring the Minister of Customs to cause to be laid before Parliament, &c., with such explanatory remarks and further facts as he may be able to add, touching the increased imports.”

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—That will do.

The motion being carried, and the hour being six o'clock, the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

The debate on Mr. Mill's motion for the appointment of a Select Committee to enquire into the causes of being resumed—

THE FINANCIAL DEPRESSION

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said: Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech on the present occasion. After what has fallen from the Hon. Minister of Finance, I think it would hardly be fair to go into a general discussion of the questions raised by the motion before the House. I rise, Sir, for the purpose of giving my hearty and emphatic support to the motion of the hon. Member for Bothwell. I agree with the hon. gentleman in the opinion that the condition of this country is a very deplorable one. I am not old enough, and my acquaintance with public affairs will hardly allow me to go as far back as the hon. member for Montreal West, who says that in 40 years he has never seen anything like the commercial depression or suffering in the country which exists to-day; but I agree with the hon. member for Bothwell that the country is in a condition requiring the serious attention of Parliament. His Excellency has provided us with a Committee to deal with precisely such questions as these. The gentlemen who now sit on the Treasury Benches have been placed there for the very purpose of making such enquiries, bringing the result to the House and submitting them for the approval of Parliament. They are there not only for the purpose of analyzing the condition in which the country is now placed and the cause of the depression, but they are there also to present such measures to the House as may tend to relieve the country. I agree with the hon. member for Bothwell in the inference that his motion presents to every intelligent member of this House—that the time has come when we must have another Committee—that the Committee which His Excellency has provided the country with, to deal with such measures, have shown themselves entirely inadequate for the emergency. I go further, and will be prepared at another time to show to the House my reasons for entertaining the opinion that the hon. gentlemen to whom public affairs have been entrusted have entirely failed in devising such measures as were necessary to relieve the country in such emergency. If the combined talent of the Administration had been devoted, from the time of their acceptance of office to this, to cause the exact condition of affairs we are now suffering from, they could not have discharged that duty with greater ability or success. Under these circumstances I accept the motion as one equal to the emergency. The time has come when we must have another Committee, to deal with this important question, and I have no doubt that when that motion receives, as I think it will, the support of a large majority of this House, and after that constitutional action has followed which must inevitably follow its passage, my hon. friend the First Minister will be able to suggest to His Excellency the Governor General the names of a Committee adequate to the duty proposed by the resolution.

Mr. NORRIS—I am not opposed to the appointment of this Committee. It is our duty to make enquiry into the present state of the country—provided it is not to burk the question. If it is the intention to go to work and prepare a report, I cannot see why there should be any objection to it. In my opinion it does not require a great deal of time to determine the causes of the stagnation of trade. All will agree, I think, that the lumber interest is suffering, not from any fault which rests with the country, but because other nations with whom we trade are experiencing financial stringency. That trade cannot possibly be benefitted until the cloud clears away from our neighbours over the borders. With regard to the agricultural interest, I think it is also depressed to a certain extent. It is said to be sound and prosperous; I believe it is sound, but I don't know that it is prosperous. This interest cannot flourish when the nations which we usually supply raise so much bread-stuffs as they have lately done.

Secondly, I think that no Government, no matter who they may be, can possibly furnish better prices for our agricultural interests. When crops fail in other countries we may expect to see our farmers flourish, by reason of the increased demand there will be for their produce.

Another drawback can be prevented a great deal. Our manufacturing interests are in a deplorable state; this has been admitted by every member who has spoken. I am not what you would call a Protectionist; neither do I believe in discriminatory duties, because I believe we should not disturb our relations with our friends across the borders. Without going into statistics or a discussion of the questions of free-trade and protection, which have been agitated long enough by the ablest men of all countries, I will merely refer to two nations with which we are intimately acquainted, and show that what suits one will not suit the other. I believe what gives prosperity to England is not suited to Canada. England to-day can be called a free-trade nation. She has prospered under that policy very largely, but how long has she been a free-trade nation? Her policy has been free-trade just as long as it was necessary. It is not 100 years ago since she took the duties off timber from this and other countries. And why? Because her home supply was growing scarce. It was the same with corn; she took off the duty to feed the people she had employed in her factories at small wages. When England had her manufacturing establishments and could compete with the world, she became a free-trade nation.

Take the United States, on the other hand. The policy of that nation has been protective from the commencement, and yet it has prospered even to a greater extent than England. I merely cite these two instances, to show that under different circumstances, a difference in policy was necessary and successful. The hon. member for Bothwell stated, in moving his resolution, and the hon. member for South Waterloo, in seconding it also stated that so long as we have the balance of trade against us we cannot possibly be prosperous.

Mr. MILLS—I did not say that.

Mr. NORRIS—I think it is a general opinion, at all events, that it must be so when the balance is so much against us as the trade and navigation returns show. I find that in 1873, we imported into this country $117,500,- 000, and only exported $89,000,000, which leaves a balance of $37,000,000 against us. In 1874 we imported $127,000,000 and exported only $89,000. In 1875, we imported $119,500,000 and exported only $77,500,000, leaving about $42,000,000 to be provided for, the balance against us. I think these figures must convince every person that so long as we have so large a balance against us, it is utterly impossible we can be as prosperous as we should be. I am sure the country is looking for an increase of the tariff or something of the kind. This must be evident to the gentlemen who are leading the House. The impression in the country is that the revenue will be short about $3,000,000. If that is the case, I think it will tax every energy and ability of the Government to meet the deficit, and carry on the public works of this country, the abandonment of which would only intensify the depression. The only way to raise this revenue, that I can see is by increasing taxation. For the last year the people of this country have been getting wiser and decreased their importations instead of increasing them. I hope they will continue this. I have no doubt for a year or two our imports will fall very far short of what they have been. If we have not a higher tariff, I do not see how this large revenue is to be raised.

I know some will say that it is no matter where we get our goods; if we can get them a little cheaper, we are all the richer. I decidedly cannot agree with them on this point. I think it would be far better for this country to manufacture our own goods, or at all events a portion of them; that would leave within the country the money we have to send to foreign nations. Statistics have been furnished in this debate to show that since 1872 the importations from the United States have nearly doubled, while the imports from Great Britain have decreased on nearly every article. It is plain the manufactures of the neighboring nation are supplanting English goods in this market, and I have no doubt they will continue to do so, and in the end, to a certain extent, find their way even into the markets of England.

Mr. NORRIS.

Although largely interested in wheat and flour, I would say, at the present time at all events, I do not believe it is discreet that we should impose a duty on provisions going into the Maritime Provinces. We feel the injustice, however, of admitting them free into our country while a duty of 20 per cent. is placed on flour and grain we send to the United States. There could, however, be a duty placed on corn. By the trade and navigation returns, I notice that we imported 3,679,000 bushels of Indian corn last year, and exported 2,050,000 bushels, leaving 1,700,000 of a balance against this country. None this corn is imported to feed the people, but to make whiskey. Why should this not be taxed? If we must have whiskey, the coarse grains of our own Province could be used for the purpose, and there is also a large section of country along Lake Erie where corn can be successfully raised. A duty on this product would benefit our agricultural interests. I think it is time for this country to take a decided step on this matter, and put an end to such unjust and unfair competition with our own people.

I am very much pleased to find that gentlemen who were Free-Traders a few years ago, are Protectionists now. I remember how the hon. member for Cumberland rated the Finance Minister soundly because he increased the duty $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., but now, if I understand him, he wants more. He says the policy of the Government is ruinous to the country, and the manufacturing interest is depressed for want of protection. But if the late Government had not reduced the tariff in 1867 to fifteen per cent. I am inclined to think this country to-day would have been in a more prosperous condition than it is.

But, Sir, if the country is ruined, as the hon. gentleman has said, certainly this Government is not responsible and it is hardly necessary to say anything more on this occasion. I am sure that the Government of the day would not ignore—what I do not believe they can—the cry for protection that has gone forth in this country. What do we find? That from every city in Ontario and Quebec—I will not say anything about the Maritime Provinces, I presume they are free traders and I respect their opinions—but in every city in Ontario and Quebec, and in every town—not a man would be elected unless he avows himself in favour of incidental protection to our manufactures. Commencing at Quebec and coming to Montreal, Toronto, London and Hamilton, every candidate that would dare to avow himself a Free-Trader would be elected to stay at home. I think it is the time, and I am sure I think it is my duty to speak and tell this hon. House that these are the views of the people.

Mr. BOWELL—The question before the House, like the one under discussion a few minutes ago, has drifted to the general question of protection and free-trade. It is not my purpose, however, to discuss that question now. When the right hon. member for Kingston rose at the moment it was supposed that the motion was to be carried without debate, and called your attention and the attention of the Government to the fact that the resolution was worded so as to be to all intents and purposes a vote of want of confidence in the Administration, I supposed that the question, would have been settled between the gentlemen occupying the Treasury Benches and the Leader of the Opposition. However, the Hon. Minister of Finance took exception to the constitutional point which had been raised by my right hon. friend from Kingston, and in endeavouring to substantiate the position which he took, he cited a motion which had been moved in this House, and carried at the time when that gentleman was in the Government and Leader of the House. I was surprised after his attention had been called to the fact that the motion for the appointment of the Committee to enquire exclusively into the state of the manufacturing interests of this country was substantially the same as that which is now before the House, the right hon. gentleman permitted it to be carried, thereby admitting the force of the objection taken at the beginning of the debate. However, my present intention is more particularly to call attention to the remarkable speech of my hon. friend from North York. My hon. friend the member for Frontenac designated that speech as an unmanly one. I shall not use that term, but I do say, after looking into that matter, I must express my surprise and give utterance to the strongest expression when I say that if it were not unmanly it was certainly a most unfair and one-sided speech towards the gentleman to whom he referred, and a mutilation of that gentleman's resolution and speeches at the Board of Trade. I shall endeavour to show that what I have asserted I can substantiate by the public records. I know that the hon. gentleman excused himself by stating that he had a right to refer to a gentleman out of the House with reference to his public acts, more particularly when these resolutions were moved in a public body like the Board of Trade. Had he confined himself to that, in all probability no notice would have been taken of his remarks; but he said this gentleman was the rising hope of the Conservative party in this country, therefore I suppose it was necessary for him to bring down upon that gentleman's head his displeasure and the weight of his great intellect. I do not doubt that he felt humiliated ever since that speech was delivered. I question whether he will be enabled to raise his head any more in any constituency where he may present himself; but what had the dinner given to Mr. White in Montreal to do with the proceedings of the Board of Trade? What had the speech delivered by the right hon. member for Kingston at the dinner to do with Mr. White's utterances and speeches at the Board of Trade? What had the defeat of Mr. White by my hon. friend the member for Montreal West to do with that gentleman's utterances at the Board of Trade? The fact is he thought it was necessary—to use a very familiar expression—to “squellch” that gentleman out of existence, and in doing that he evidently had bottled up in his mind an onslaught on the right hon. member for Kingston; and the member for Kingston also, I suppose, was completely annihilated by that hon. gentleman's utterances. That Mr. Thos. White, at the Board of Trade meeting, moved a resolution in favour of free-trade in 1873, and then in 1874 moved a resolution in favour of protection, and that the course suggested itself to him to carry out because his friends were in power at one time, and because at the other that his political opponents were in power, is certainly not borne out by the facts.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. DYMOND—I beg that the hon. gentleman will allow me to correct him. I made no suggestion about any such motive having influence with the gentleman he has referred to. I quoted simply from the resolutions which were moved; I did not refer to any speech of his; I quoted simply from the record here word for word as it appears in this book. I made no suggestion whatever as to his motive.

Mr. BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has forgotten himself, I think.

Mr. DYMOND—No.

Mr. BOWELL—It is very fortunate for the hon. gentleman to forget sometimes, although it is not an excuse for any hon. gentleman to forget anything. I suppose he has the same frailties as other people; but I say to the House that the hon. gentleman did not quote the whole resolution, but a portion of both resolutions, and by a quotation to this House of only one-half, he left a false impression on the minds of hon. members; a proceeding which should be beneath the dignity of a gentleman occupying his exalted position in this country. With your permission, I will read the resolution, and I wish to explain that it was an amendment moved to a resolution which had been proposed by Mr. Robert Wilkes, a former member of this House—I think I may use the term—in the direction of free-trade, pure and simple, and one that would have met with the approbation of my hon. friend from Welland, provided that it included in it his pet theory of free money. Then I shall quote a few remarks made by Mr. White upon this motion, and also the view that was taken of it by Mr. Wilkes, who had moved a free-trade resolution; and I ask whether he was justified in attributing free-trade principles to Mr. White on that occasion:

“Mr. Thomas White, of Montreal, moved, seconded by Hon. Robert Read—who is certainly not a Free-Trader, as anyone who knows him is aware, and I think I know him as well as any man in the country)—“that, without offering any opinion upon some of the details of the present customs’ tariff, or upon the anomalies which are inevitable in all tariffs, this Board is of opinion that no change should be made in it unless the exigencies of the public service demand a larger revenue.”—

Mr. DYMOND—Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL—

“And in such case, any increase that is to be made should be in accordance with the principles of the present customs’ tariff, which, while not interfering with the commerce of the Dominion, will afford incidental protection to the manufacturers.”

Mr. DYMOND—Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL—

“That this Board is further of opinion that permanency in the fiscal policy of the country is most important alike to its commerce and manufactures, and that no change should be made in the tariff, not demanded by the absolute necessity of the revenue.”

Mr. DYMOND—Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL—If it pleases the hon. gentleman I am quite satisfied. Now, Sir, what did Mr. White say in introducing that motion?

Mr. DYMOND—Never mind what Mr. White says.

Mr. BOWELL—I have no doubt the hon. gentleman would like that suppressed, as he suppressed a portion of the resolution referring to incidental protection of our manufactures. Mr. White said:

“I wish to adduce some reasons for voting against the resolution proposed by Mr. Wilkes, which was a free-trade motion, and why I think the Board ought to accept the amendment I have placed into your hands. I have no hesitation in saying that I am a Protectionist to that extent. I believe that it is possible for the Government to adopt a fiscal policy to nurture, protect and promote the industries of the country. The free-trade principle on the contrary says that the Government should not interfere to this end, and that, just in proportion as it does interfere it injures rather than benefits the manufacturers’ interest. From this doctrine I entirely dissent.”

Then, Sir, he says further:

“The resolution, therefore, while it professes to be in the interest of native industries—(that is Mr. Wilkes’ motion)—is really an extreme free-trade resolution put forward by the advocates of free-trade in terms which they hope may catch the vote of the Protectionists of this Board, with clap-trap phrases about the cost of living, and at the very time, when by its general policy it seeks protection for the largest interests of the country.”

Now, Sir, how did Mr. Wilkes take that motion in amendment to his own. He says the end of all such resolutions as Mr. White advocated is protection all round. Surely he was as capable of judging of the intentions of the mover, of the effect which the resolution would have had had it been carried—as the hon. gentleman who condemned and attempted to distort this motion to-day. “One man wants his raw material free, and his raw material is the manufactured article of some other person; therefore they must be protected all round.” Now, Sir, that is the view taken of that resolution by the gentleman who was then advocating an extreme policy of free-trade. Let me call the attention of the House to the resolution moved by Mr. White in 1874, and I ask you to pay particular attention to this to see wherein it differs from the other resolution in principle; in principle it is essentially the same as the resolution offered in 1875. You will observe, and this House will observe, that it is almost word for word. The resolution which he then moved, and which my friend from North York has designated as a protective resolution, is as follows:—

“Owing to the fact of the large obligations already assumed by the Dominion, and also that during the first half of the present fiscal year the expenditure has exceeded the revenue by a considerable sum it is probable that some revision of the fiscal policy of the Dominion will become necessary during the approaching Session of the Canadian Parliament; be it Resolved, That in the opinion of this Board the principle of protection to the manufacturing industries of the country should be embodied in such revision of the tariff, so far as it can be carried out consistently with the commerce and revenue requirements of the country.”

Mr. DYMOND—Hear, Hear.

Mr. BOWELL—I was waiting for that “hear, hear.” This is precisely the same language used in the resolution which the hon. gentleman declared was a free-trade resolution, while this other was a protection resolution, and yet in that case he declares that enquiries should be made in accordance with the principles of the present customs tariff, which, while not interfering with the commerce of the Dominion, affords incidental protection to these manufactures. Why does not the hon. gentleman cry "hear, hear" again? It brought a "hear hear" at least from the hon. gentleman when I read it in connection with the former resolution. The last four lines are precisely the same as I read in the former resolution, also the language is precisely the same with that used in the resolution moved in 1873, which the hon. gentleman declared to be a free-trade resolution. I am not now going to defend Mr. White any further; there were reasons which induced him and every thinking man in this country to take the position he did in 1873. This country was flourishing in 1873; there was no necessity for raising the tariff upon any article then manufactured simply because the manufactures of our country were flourishing; and I think that the hon. member for Lincoln knows that as a manufacturer as well as any other man in this House.

Mr. NORRIS—Yes, yes.

Mr. BOWELL—And when he alludes to this state of things, or to what a former Administration did under different circumstances altogether, and with a different state of trade in every branch of our industry in this country, he certainly had to go a long way to find a cause or subject for attack upon an Administration that is no longer in existence. I know that it was a favourite theory with many that the ultra-Protectionists in the late Administration did wrong in reducing the tariff from 20 to 15 per cent., and it must have been amusing to this House, and particularly to those who knew the circumstances under which it was reduced, to listen to the hon. member for Lincoln's remarks upon that subject. In one sentence he condemns the late Administration for having reduced the tariff from 20 per cent. without adverting for one moment to the circumstances which surrounded that Government and the necessities of the country at the time; and in the very next sentence he pats the hon. gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces on the back, because he knows that they are opposed, and have been ever since they have been in Confederation, to high tariffs. At that time Confederation had just been consummated; it brought into this Dominion Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, two Provinces in which the highest tariffs—if my recollection serves me right—were 12½ and 10 per cent., the former in New Brunswick and the latter in Nova Scotia. At that time it was necessarily the bounden duty of any man or any number of men in directing the destinies of this country, to cement as closely as they possibly could all sections of the Dominion, and not to carry any principle to such extreme lengths as to make them more dissatisfied than they were. At the time when that policy was adopted, all knew that they raised the duties 5 per cent. in Nova Scotia, and it created intense feeling in that country. We know that the Anti-Confederates in New Brunswick also used it as a great lever against those who supported the principles of Confederation before it was consummated; and I repeat that it was exceedingly wise statesmanship on the part of those who were then in power to adopt the policy they did. There is one other point to which I desire to refer before we argue the propriety of appointing the Committee. My own opinion is, from my experience of Committees in this House, they result in very little, and when the hon. member for Montreal West states that he only consented to become a member of that Committee because he had been assured by the member for Bothwell that the report of the Committee was not a foregone conclusion, I should like to ask if all the gentleman in this House or in the country could change the free-trade theories or the opinion of the member for North York; or whether there is sufficient in this House or out of it to convince my hon. friend from Bothwell that the theory of free-trade, I was almost going to say "pure" and simple—is not the true policy for all countries?

Mr. BOWELL.

When you take that in connection with the speeches of the same hon. gentleman made in Montreal, it seems as if there must be something behind the scenes. If I recollect aright, he stated that he had the assurance of the Prime Minister before consenting to become a candidate that there would be a change in the direction of incidental protection. At a later date he unreservedly said the change would be to raise the duty on manufactured articles, which were then languishing for want of business. These utterances delighted his hearers, and every man having a dollar's worth of goods in the customs hastened to take it out, and so saved the extra duty which the hon. gentleman had assured them would be imposed. I don't say that the Finance Minister has taken him into his confidence, or that he informed the hon. gentleman as to intended changes; but he made those speeches, one result of which was to injure the country by keeping money out of the Treasury.

The hon. gentleman from Lincoln made an onslaught on the hon. member for Cumberland for having, as was said, denounced the imposition of the 2½ per cent. last year. Now, the hon. gentleman did object to the duty for incidental or direct protective purposes. The hon. gentleman's position was this: The Finance Minister, when he made the Budget Speech, declared that there was a large deficit in the revenue of the country, and that it was necessary to impose this additional tax in order to meet it. The hon. member for Cumberland contended that this was not correct, and the result of the year's operations showed there was no deficit.

The hon. member for North York found fault with the hon. member for Kingston, and declared him to be a Free-Trader because he opposed the Motion to appropriate $86,000 for manufacturers to exhibit their wares at the Philadelphia Centennial. The hon. gentleman's reason for opposing this was the same as that given by Mr. John Bright with reference to a similar proposition in the interests of British manufacturers—that it was useless appropriating money to show articles in a country which had such a high protective tariff as to preclude them from competition.

Mr. DYMOND—Mr. Bright did not make that statement in Parliament. He simply alluded to the carpet manufacture as an illustration of the disadvantages under which British manufacturers suffer. He did not discourage his countrymen from sending their goods if they chose, or Government aiding them if it chose.

Mr. BOWELL—If my hon. friend is satisfied with the explanation I am. If it applies to the carpet interest it applies to every other interest. It was the principle, without narrowing it down to any point, which Mr. Bright, as well as the hon. member for Kingston, opposed. But the whole intention of the hon. gentleman from North York appeared to be this:—There were two men in this country he desired to drive out of existence, and he thought the best possible way to do that was to bring the power of his giant intellect to bear upon them, and to relieve himself of a bottled-up speech. The cork flew out, as it generally does out of a soda water bottle, and the whole contents effervesced.

Mr. PATTERSON—It is not necessary to attempt to prove that there is a depression existing at the present time in this country. This is generally admitted and too painfully felt by many members of this House and by the people of this country to require any proof. It is natural, at a time like this, when such severe trials are being passed through, when so many find their fortunes are wrecked and the savings of hard labour for years and years swept away from them—that people cannot remain passive, but will endeavour to find some solution. The hon. member for Bothwell has moved for a Select Committee to enquire into the cause of this depression. There seems to be no feeling of hostility to granting the Committee on the part of any member of the House. It is true some of the opponents of the Government seem to think it is rather a serious question, and that the passage of the motion will be equivalent to a vote of want of confidence. The Ministry seem to take the matter unconcernedly, the whips are not seen about the House; no anxiety is manifested, and I suppose it is probable the Ministry will not resign if the motion is carried.

I must confess that I, for one, am slightly at a loss to understand the object of this Committee or the good which may be accomplished by it. No doubt the hon. member for Bothwell, with that intimate knowledge of political economy and all matters which come before this House that he possesses, has reasons good and valid, feels confident that the gentlemen associated with him will be able to discover the true cause of the depression, and will be able to suggest the proper remedy. But I have thought that the Finance Minister would be in possession of knowledge, on this subject fuller than can be acquired by any Committee—that, from the position he occupies and the care he takes in studying the interests of the country, he is already in possession of facts of great volume and weight. I assume that the greatest good to be accomplished by this Committee will be in affording an opportunity for the audible expression of individual views in reference to business matters. In this House you will find a diversity of opinion as to the cause of this depression, and some would attribute the trouble to one thing and some to another. It is sometimes stated that it is the duty of the Finance Minister only to secure revenue and see that it is properly expended, but I think that official would admit that he should do more. If the securing of revenue be his only aim and object, then, Sir, it would naturally follow that he should arrange a tariff to produce the greatest possible amount, no matter what effect it might have on any industry of the country. And taking this view I conceive that the term incidental protection is meaningless. If the Finance Minister found by reducing the present tariff he could secure more revenue, it would be his duty to make such reduction. I will ask this House if it is true that large quantities of American goods are being brought into the market, notwithstanding our 17½ per cent. duty? Should such be the fact, and that some of our manufactories have been closed in consequence, it follows that a very slight reduction of the tariff would produce such a state of things that our factories would close altogether, and that would mean more revenue to the country from the importation of all the goods consumed.

Mr. PATTERSON.

I hold that the position is impregnable that there is a duty other than the collection of revenue devolving on a Finance Minister. I take the ground that I am the only Free-Trader in this House, except the hon. member for Welland. A great many are Free-Traders in theory, but not practically. At the present time we have a protective tariff on some articles, and the question that should engage the attention of the Finance Minister is whether an additional duty, no matter how much it may be on certain articles, will promote the interests of the Dominion.

Let us look for a moment at the article of boots and shoes. Within my own recollection almost all those goods were imported from the United States, and I remember that when the tariff was raised to 10 per cent. a great stimulus was given to that great branch of our industry, which now finds employment for tens of thousands of persons. I venture the assertion that if the present 17½ per cent. were reduced to 10 per cent. we would derive more revenue from those articles than at the present time. That being the case, it is true that the tariff we have at present is in no measure protective, and both a revenue and a protective tariff at one time seems impossible. Is it in the interests of the country to have a tariff for revenue purposes alone, or will the country prosper better under free-trade than protection?

I am not a Protectionist. I am not one of those who believe in erecting a wall so high that you cannot trade with any other country, but I must admit I am in favour of a defensive policy. I cannot view with complacency what we see in this country. We live beside a country with a population ten times greater than ours, whose industries have been fostered by protection until they are enabled, even in some articles in which Britain excelled, to challenge supremacy with her. While that nation has erected against us and other countries a hostile tariff, we have our hands bound, and give them a free and unrestricted right to trade in our markets.

We must bear in mind in discussing this matter that the 17½ per cent. tariff that we speak of is not on a gold basis. It is well known that the difference between American money and ours, while it does not altogether pay the duty, very much reduces it. Then the statement is also made, and I have no reason to doubt its correctness since it fell from the hon. member for Montreal Centre, that the American manufacturers will sell to our people cheaper than to their own. I was told that a certain house in Brockville bought goods in New York for a firm in Ogdensburgh, because Canadians could get them cheaper. Considering this fact, and the difference in value of our money, there is no protection at all.

The hon. member for South Waterloo predicted the result of protection would be to stimulate our industries so much that more factories would arise than the country could sustain. That would bring down prices and ruin the manufacturers. If that be the case—and I believe the hon. gentleman is right—it would be the concern of those gentlemen who are asking for protection at the present time. Prices would be brought down, and consumers would get the benefit of cheaper goods than they now have. It would simply remove the competition from the American manufacturers to our own, the consumers receiving the benefit all the same, but the country being enriched by the industries. The Finance Minister should ascertain, if possible, what articles are being slaughtered in our markets, what industries are thus being crushed out in our midst, what enterprises could be successfully fostered in this country, and then frame a tariff that would be defensive in its nature. He, being the champion of our interests, should use, not offensively but defensively, the weapon that has been placed in his hands in order to prevent the life-blood of this country being drawn from it. I have confidence that he will arrive at a conclusion on this point. I know the difficulty he will have in satisfying all parties, but we should keep in mind the fact that we are one people, and when one of our industries prospers all must benefit, while if one languishes all must suffer more or less.

I would remind the hon. gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces that Ontario is not given up to manufacturing. That interest bears but a small proportion to others in this Province. It is the same in Quebec. That being the case, what is to prevent Halifax under a protective tariff from having its manufactories? What is to prevent the establishment of industries in St. John, Charlottetown, and the other towns of the Maritime Provinces? Protection does not mean Ontario's interests at the sacrifice of the interests of the Maritime Provinces. It is to stimulate the manufactures of this Dominion irrespective of Provinces; but if any part of Canada could more successfully compete in our markets I think it is Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, from the fact that they have coal and iron lying side by side. They would be able to manufacture cheaply and compete with Ontario.

It is well known that we pay a cash bonus to the inhabitants of other countries to come into Canada and settle in our midst. It is a fact that some of those who have been thus induced to emigrate to Canada have been compelled from want of employment to which they have been accustomed to go to the United States. I believe by a defensive tariff you would not have to pay to bring those men here. Adopt it and you will find the steam whistle of our factories will be the call for them to come.

The other year the Finance Minister in revising the tariff gave some encouragement to our industry which it never had before. The result was that a thousand men who were engaged in that industry in Germany were literally transported, by the change in the tariff, to Canada and set to work here. The cost of the article was not increased one iota, and Canada got all the benefit. The middlemen suffered a diminution of profits; but for them nobody seems to care much, the producer and consumer receiving all the sympathy. It is inevitable that a like result would flow to other manufactures under the same policy. If the Finance Minister finds such is the case, I trust that the wisdom which led him to yield that point will induce him to grant the same to other industries, and that no sectionalism will tie his hands. I hope that other hon. gentlemen will speak on this subject, and whether the Committee is appointed or not, the interchange of views will lead the Finance Minister to bring in a tariff which will redound to the prosperity of the whole Dominion.

Mr. CURRIER—The hon. member for Bothwell did me the honour to place my name on this Committee without consulting me, for which honour I am thankful to him. I rise now to ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw my name from the Committee. The reason is that I have a suspicion that the report which it will make to the House is a foregone conclusion. I have not the same excuse for declining to act that the hon. member for Montreal West has; I am not engaged in promulgating a tariff. I hope my hon. friend from Bothwell will consent to the withdrawal of my name from the Committee.

Mr. OLIVER—I think this Committee would do a vast amount of good in investigating the commercial depression which seems to exist in the Dominion at the present time. The report of the Committee of this House on the manufacturing interests of Canada furnished valuable information to the country. The Finance Minister, I have no doubt, has all the information connected with the depression of trade; and I have no doubt he has, in his wisdom, devised some remedy for it, but the report of this Committee will be fuller and give more information than his statement.

I am sorry my hon. friend from Ottawa has refused to act on this Committee, for he is the representative of an interest in this country which is of immense dimensions—I mean the lumber trade. I think some gentleman connected with that interest ought to be on this Committee. He need not be alarmed about the report they will bring down, for it will no doubt contain the evidence and statements on which it is based.

I was rather startled by the speech of the hon. member for Brant, who wishes to fill this country with factories. I would like that, too, if we had a market for the consumption of the manufactured articles. The representatives of the cities have either directly or indirectly advocated protection, but the hon. member for Brant wants a defensive policy, which in my opinion amounts to the same thing. Well, Sir, what does protection mean if it does not signify that a greater price is to be given by the consumer to the manufacturer for manufactured articles? The agricultural interest in this country has not the same opportunity to make their influence felt as the manufacturers and commercial men. They have no organization except a few Granges in the west of the Province, and they do not make their power felt by means of the press, and on the floor of this House. It is presumed, because they do not come in hundreds and wait in deputations daily upon the Finance Minister, they are willing to accept a protective duty, but this is not the case. The farmers are the most numerous class, and their interest is more important than any other; and because they do not act as I have mentioned, it is assumed that they are in favour of protection. It is amusing, therefore, to notice, that in the meetings of Boards of Trade and manufacturers, the first resolution generally expresses the opinion that the farming interest will be benefitted by such a policy.

Mr. PATTERSON.

An Hon. Member—So they will be.

Mr. OLIVER—Why do they not allow them to state their own opinions? Why should the manufacturer and the merchant assume this office for a community whose interests they do not understand? One statement has been made by my hon. friend from Hamilton, and, I think, by my hon. friend from West Montreal, and I believe, also by the last speaker, my hon. friend from Brant, that the Americans have made of Canada a slaughter market—a common expression at meetings of Boards of Trade and manufacturers. This is, however, denied by my hon. friend from Centre Toronto, who declares that English and not American manufactured goods are slaughtered on the market of Canada. I take it for granted, that with the extensive commercial experience of my hon. friend from Centre Toronto, and his intimate knowledge of both the marts of America and Great Britain—

Mr. MACDONALD—Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an explanation. I only referred to a certain class of goods. I did not undertake to speak of lines of which I know nothing.

Mr. OLIVER—Of course, I accept the correction.

American commercial men of high standing could never have one price for the foreign and another for the home market. He could not entertain such an impression; it was impossible. A statement has been made by my hon. friend from Brantford, to the effect that an Ogdensburg merchant obtained goods at a low rate by deputing a Canadian merchant to make the purchases in his own country. I am glad that the hon. member explained that this was not to his own personal knowledge; for it was so absurd that no one having the most limited knowledge of commercial transactions could credit such an assertion at all.

Reference was made to my hon. friend from Montreal West as being very much engaged in the revision of the tariff; but my hon. friend corrected himself, and said that he was occupied answering communications with regard to the tariff, and had not time to act on the Committee. A great many gentlemen, not only in, but out of the House, may have their opinions in this regard. Every manufacturer, doubtless, in the country is exercising his influence in this connection, and my hon. friend from Hamilton has some idea as to what ought to be brought down. Many members in the House have alleged that certain influences brought about this depression, and my hon. friend from South Waterloo declared that it was due to the great expansion which took place in the business of the country. I believe that is correct; this great expansion occurred during the last five or six years, and I have no hesitation in directly charging this state of things upon the wholesale merchants who have imported so heavily, being determined to make their fortunes rapidly. These importers, by means of travellers who visited every hamlet and village in the country, forced their goods upon rural merchants until they were hampered with stocks they could not dispose of. In consequence, the retailer was unable to meet his obligations, and these difficulties have impaired business, which was conducted on unsound commercial principles. Then these reckless wholesale importers came to the Finance Minister and asked him to step between them and ruin. I know a house in Toronto which does not use travellers and is properly managed; its cash receipts for last month were larger than for January, 1875. Hon. members have said the depression has extended to the agricultural interest, but I am prepared to declare, so far as my section is concerned, at all events, that the farmers were never in a better financial condition. The truth is, we now manufacture more than we are able to consume; and why should a protective policy be followed? Can we not produce as cheaply as the Americans with $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. duty and freight in our favor? Can any reason be offered to the contrary? I think not. I know manufacturers who are protected with a virtual 50 per cent. duty, but I have no doubt they are petitioning for an increase;—if they were given 100 per cent. they would not be satisfied. It has been said by my hon. friend from Hamilton, while advocating protection, that the manufactures of the United States are displacing those of Great Britain; but is this an argument for protection? It is not. If we pay the money to the Americans, what difference does it make to us? Of course it is desirable to send as much cash as possible to the mother country; but we all know as commercial men, and no one better than my hon. friend from Hamilton, that business would not be conducted upon sound principles unless the purchaser goes to the cheapest market. If such displacement is a fact, it is for the English manufacturer to look after his own interests. We do not hesitate to sell wheat, barley and wool to the Americans, so long as the gold is forthcoming, and why should we not purchase articles from them, too. An unfortunate Treaty was before this country last year, proposing to place a number of our manufactures upon the same footing with those of the States, and what was the result? Our manufacturers and an influential portion of the press cried out against it. What are you going to do for the farmer and the miner? My hon. friend from Cumberland says the Nova Scotian coal interest is languishing, and in a general system of protection it must be considered. What would be the result? The people of Ontario would have to pay duty for their imported coal. The farmer must also be protected, thus increasing the price of breadstuffs for the people in the eastern sections of the Dominion. The proposed duty upon American corn would be against the western farmer, who feeds it to his stock, taking it in exchange for his own products. It is urged that the tea importing interest has suffered through the abolition of the 10 per cent duty, but I hold that the great consuming public has been benefitted. I am a Free Trader to a certain extent.

Hon. Members—Hear! hear!

Mr. OLIVER—The present duties are sufficient to encourage our manufactures, but if necessities require further taxation, I will not say that I would not support any governmental policy brought down. I do not doubt the Finance Minister will be able to shew that it is in the interests of the people of this country, and as far as I am concerned, he must prove this before he gets my vote. It is wrong in principle to build up one class of the community at the expense of another. It should be remembered that the portion of the people asking for an increased tariff has but a small interest in this country. The true policy is to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Will my hon. friend answer a question? Am I right in my recollection that he accompanied me as one of a deputation to urge upon a former Finance Minister the imposition of protective duties upon a number of articles?

Mr. OLIVER—Yes; I went with the hon. member to ask for the levy of duties upon American produce coming into this country—flour and coal.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—And salt.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. OLIVER—And salt.

Hon. Members—Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER—The experience of one year was such, I am willing to confess—and I hope the hon. gentleman who has put the question will make a similar confession—that I was convinced the experiment was a failure. When I found I was mistaken it was my duty as an honourable man to retrace my steps. I did so, and that was the end of it so far as I was concerned.

My hon. friend, the Finance Minister, has been taunted to-night with changing his fiscal policy last year. He forgets, however, that a former Financial Minister also changed his fiscal policy—not in a week—but in half an hour. That change was brought about by the hon. member who put the question to me just now, and was in accordance with the influence he wields over men at all times when they come in contact with him. I hope the explanation is satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The recollection of the hon. gentleman is not accurate. He has not done justice to himself. He did not wait a year to ascertain what the result of his policy would be. After going with me as a deputation to the Finance Minister, when that hon. gentleman brought down his policy in accordance with his recommendations, the hon. gentleman voted against it.

Mr. OLIVER—That is a statement which is not correct, Mr. Speaker. When the Hon. Finance Minister came down with his first fiscal policy, wheat, flour and coal were mentioned as bearing a duty. When the change took place, wheat was left out. Why? Simply to benefit some prominent supporters of the Government at that time, who had a large milling interest in the country. The hon. member for Glengarry, who is now Lieut.-Governor of Ontario, introduced a motion to the effect that if wheat was allowed to come into the country free of duty, flour also should be undutiable. I voted for that motion, and that was the only vote I gave against the policy of Sir Francis Hincks at that time.

Mr. WORKMAN—The hon. gentleman from Oxford has given us a lecture upon the proper manner in which to conduct mercantile business. I have had a little experience, and I should like to answer an assertion which the hon. gentleman made. With reference to a statement of mine made yesterday, he said it was quite absurd for any one to say that Canada was made a slaughter market for the United States. In proof of my assertion I shall state one fact. About five months ago, my firm in Montreal received a communication from a manufacturing establishment in Pennsylvania asking us to become their agents, at any price, for the sale of an article in Canada. We were then acting as the agents of an English house for the same description of goods. I declined the offer, giving as the reason that we were already engaged by another firm. In reply they said:

"We are very anxious to get possession of the Canadian market. We will send you a quantity of our goods; we don't care what price you realize for them. If the English goods are selling for 15 cts, sell ours for 14 cts; if at 12 cts, sell ours for 11 cts. We are determined to get the Canadian market."

I then wrote the conditions under which we would accept a consignment. At the end of the month when the account was sent out to the agent in New York, I supposed that the result of this first instalment would satisfy him as to the undesirableness of the Canadian market. But he acknowledged the receipt, expressed his thanks for the business like manner in which the transaction had been conducted, and enquired if we would take another consignment. This consignment came, and the prices were so reduced that the English article was driven out of the market. After the third month's account had been rendered, they expressed themselves delighted with the Canadian market, and continued to send their goods to a large extent. That is the position assumed by Pennsylvanian manufacturers towards us. If my hon. friend would like to see the invoice, I shall be happy to furnish it to him.

Mr. GORDON—This subject, Mr. Speaker, has been discussed very largely from the importers and the manufacturers' point of view. The problem of the depression is easily solved in my mind. It is the same cause which operated in London in 1873, when the pressure of the banks was brought to bear on certain branches of trade, and financial difficulty was the result. The agricultural question has not been discussed much during this debate, and I may recall to the remembrance of the House that seventy-five per cent. of the whole population are engaged in that interest, whereas the mercantile and manufacturing interests represent only five per cent. I apprehend that any legislation that would tend to injure the agricultural interests would be detrimental to the general well-being of the whole Dominion. With permission, I shall lay before the House a few facts to prove that interest is not suffering at the present time.

The wealth of this country is represented by several leading articles—oats, barley, wheat, corn, peas and butter. The exports of the article of wheat last year amounted to 1,233,955 bushels more than the imports. This shows that the wheat interest requires no protection, because we produce more than we require for consumption. Barley, which is the next very important product, exceeded the imports last year by 5,419,000 bushels, and for the present year, up to 1st of January, the exports reached the enormous quantity of 8,530,000 bushels; and up to the 30th of June next I think it will foot up to 10,000,000 bushels. The imports of this article are nil. In the article of peas we exceeded the imports by 2,839,000 bushels, and with regard to butter, we export the immense quantity of 9,500,000 lbs. Our surplus oats amounted to nearly 3,000,000 bushels, and our imports are also nil. * The only article on which the balance seems to be against the farmer is that of Indian corn, the exports being 27,000 bushels, and the imports 4,000,000 bushels. After considering these facts, I think the House will agree with me that the farmer stands in need of protection.

Reference has been made to the article of cotton, the member for Toronto Centre stating that the Americans are obtaining entire control of the market. Now the reason for this is that the American article is infinitely superior to that supplied by British manufacturers. The grey cottons of the latter have become a perfect nuisance, and the consumer is now willing to pay 25 to 50 per cent. more for American goods.

The hon. member for Montreal West called attention yesterday to the immense advantages the United States had derived from protection during the last ten or fifteen years. The facts, however, do not bear out his statement. In 1860 the shipping trade of the United States, before the protective tariff, was 74 per cent. of the whole trade of the country. In 1873 it was reduced to 28 per cent. From the year 1860 to 1873, I find that the price of twelve leading commodities increased 92 per cent.; and during the same time the value of labour increased only 60 per cent., which gives a balance of 32 per cent. against the consumer. If protection had been the blessing described, a convention of farmers which was recently held in Illinois would not have passed unanimous resolutions in favour of free trade as the only sound policy. I think the majority of the agriculturists are convinced that protection would not benefit the great bulk of the population. I hope wise counsels will prevail in our dealings with this subject, and that the claims of a few gentlemen representing the manufacturing and mercantile interests will not be entertained to the detriment of the farming interest.

I have been identified with agricultural interests from my youth, and I now represent one of the most flourishing agricultural constituencies in Canada. I think it is due to the farmers to say that there is no foundation for the attempt that is made by some persons to represent them as an injured class. They grow more than the country is able to consume, and it will be hard to convince them that it is in their interest that a protective policy should be inaugurated,

Mr. MCGREGOR—I hope this motion will pass, and I will reserve what I have to say for the Committee. The principal produce of the country I represent is corn. If any interests in this country are to be protected, the farmers of the west should also receive the benefit of the policy.

Mr. ROCHESTER—I think the ventilation of this question in the House is of more value than the report of the Committee. The whole difficulty can be summed up in a very few words—over-importation and over-production. I am very glad to see there has been a decrease in the production of sawn lumber, the principal market for which is the United States. I am also pleased to know that there is a great reduction in importations, from which beneficial results must flow.

Mr. GORDON.

I cannot agree with the hon. member for Bothwell, with regard to what he says of the balance of trade. It looks to me improbable, while the balance is so largely against us, that we can be prosperous.

The hon. member for Oxford says protection means high prices. Perhaps to some little extent he is correct in that, but it is not so as a general rule. It has been stated to-night that the manufacturers of the United States find a market for their surplus productions. This is a simple business. If the manufacturers of Canada found themselves in the same position they would take the same course. None of them would cut down prices at home. They would prefer to send their surplus products to foreign markets, and sell them at a sacrifice abroad.

It has been said that we cannot compete with the manufacturers of the United States. We certainly cannot in every article, nor is this to be wondered at, our country being younger than theirs. Our neighbors not only compete with England in many articles, but even surpass them, especially in machinery. The reason is that in every town and hamlet in the country where there is a factory, there is a machinist who makes a speciality of some particular piece of machinery, and perfects it to the utmost of his skill.

While I am neither, strictly speaking, a Free Trader nor a Protectionist, I believe that we have a right to protect our manufacturers to a certain extent. If we do not, we must expect a continuance of our present condition.

Mr. McDOUGALL, (Elgin)—I think if there was no other ground for this motion, the debate which it has produced justifies its introduction. I do not understand it to affirm that either free-trade or protection is correct, but that a depression exists, the causes of which should, if possible, be discovered. I must say here that I do not believe, as some gentlemen represent, the country to be in such a deplorable condition. We are at peace with all the world, there is no war or desolation in the land, and the agricultural community is in a very prosperous condition. Providence has blessed us with a bountiful harvest, and if money is scarce we have the materials which bring money in abundance in the country. I think this House should have all the information that can be collected concerning a matter of such vital importance, and if a policy is to be adopted it will be for this House to consider what it shall be. We have now a policy which is part free-trade and part protective. What would be the effect of a protective policy? Its real object would be to prevent importation, and if so, what would be the effect to the revenue? I ask the Finance Minister, who has to provide for a deficit—if there be one—how is he to supply the revenue of the country if the sources of taxation are entirely removed? The manufacturers urge that they deserve encouragement and protection. I do not understand that there are any hon. gentlemen here who array themselves against the manufacturers, nor that the mover of this resolution had any unkind feeling or so expressed himself with reference to these industries. I think that all industries deserve encouragement, and I believe that the burden of taxation should be generally distributed so as to bear an equal proportion on all interests involved. I do not believe in one interest benefiting itself at the expense of others.

I infer from the statements of some hon. gentlemen during this debate that they believe it is within the power of the Government and this House to relieve the financial depression. I believe it has been brought about by causes over which this House has no control. We have had a time of exceeding prosperity, over-trading has been the result, and the true remedy is economy and industry on the part of the people of this country. This is not the only experience we have had of the same kind. I believe we have had it at other times to a greater extent, and it is the result of causes which I have indicated. I am willing to render the Government all the aid and support I possibly can if it is in their power to relieve that distress in any possible way. I will not adhere to any principle as a hard and fixed rule, if I see that by departing from it, and circumstances demanded that departure, I could agree to it. I believe the Government are desirous, as far as they can, to meet the wants of the country. I believe that the Finance Minister will do all he possibly can to this end, compatible with the general interests of all. I do not think it is possible for the Government to make people rich or relieve distress to as great an extent as some people think, as the hon. gentlemen on the Opposition side of the House say they are capable of doing and are liable for.

Mr. GILMOUR—I have waited patiently for some gentleman from the Lower Provinces to speak on this subject. The debate is nearly closed, and it appears to me that some of these representatives should have expressed an opinion. The debate anticipates the report of the Committee, and it is not the question before the House. The only good I imagine can result from the enquiry is to counteract the impression very industriously circulated in the Lower Provinces that the present Government is responsible for the depressed state of the country. Their predecessors were undoubtedly prosperous, and there has been a very great change. It has been very industriously circulated that the Government is responsible for it, and the masses, without very much reflection, think it must be so.

The cry for help seems to come from the manufacturers only, and they form but a small portion of the Dominion. I am surprised at it, because they are the most wealthy class of our population in proportion to their numbers. How do they expect to get it? The drift of the whole argument in favour of that relief is that the consumer must put his hand in his pocket and help them. The depressed state of trade is the result of over-production. Several hon. gentlemen have complained that the Americans come here and make a slaughter market of the Dominion. I am satisfied it is not a legitimate trade; but if they are compelled to come and give us their goods at less than what they cost, that will not impoverish but help us. If they gave us them for nothing, would it hurt us? Certainly not. Get them as cheap as you can. I grant it does not help the manufacturers, but they must look out for themselves. It is wrong to tax other interests to support them. One of the largest interests in the Dominion—the lumber trade—suffers more severely than any, and yet they do not ask for legislation to help them, although they have to pay duties on the articles entering into their industry, and depend entirely on the sale of their products to sustain their business. I am sure Ontario will not sustain a protective policy. I confess this policy looks like the entering wedge, and that the national policy is to be revived. It may suit certain parties, but it will not satisfy the Dominion; and I trust the Government will not adopt it. If these manufacturers are not able to sustain the business in which they are engaged, they must find something else to do, and invest in something that will pay them. One wants one duty—another, another duty; and one desires a duty on corn because it enters into the manufacture of whiskey. We import corn very largely into the Lower Provinces, where it is an article of food. We make no whiskey of it.

This defensive system just means protection. I have confidence that the Administration will do what is fair. I am satisfied they have a policy, and do not depend for one upon this Committee. I do not believe the resolution is a want of confidence motion, but if it is, I will vote against it. I have not yet lost confidence in the Government. I wish to tell the House and country, that the Maritime Provinces are not in favour of a protective tariff, but they are willing to contribute to the revenue, so far as the interests of the country require.

On motion of Hon. Mr. POPE, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at Eleven p.m.

MR. GILMOUR.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, Feb. 18, 1876.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Five minutes past Three p.m.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

Mr. YOUNG moved that the Public Accounts for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1875, be referred to the Select Standing Committee on public Accounts.—Carried.

SALARIES OF COUNTY COURT JUDGES.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE moved for a Committee of the Whole for Tuesday to consider certain resolutions respecting the salaries of the County Court Judges in the Province of Nova Scotia. Mr. Blake stated that the resolutions were the same as last year.—Carried.

ASSISTANT INSPECTORS OF PENITENTIARIES.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE moved that the House do, on Tuesday next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House to consider of the following resolution:

"That it is expedient to provide that the Assistant Inspectors of Penitentiaries, to be appointed under the Bill intituled "An Act to provide for the appointment of Assistant Inspectors of Penitentiaries in Manitoba and British Columbia," shall each receive a salary not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars per annum and travelling expenses, to be determined by the Governor in Council."

Carried.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE moved that the House do, on Tuesday next, resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House to consider of the following resolution:

"That it is expedient to provide that the Minister of Agriculture, or such other Minister as is mentioned in the Bill intituled "An Act to make provision for the Collection and Registration of the Criminal Statistics of Canada," shall cause to be paid out of any moneys which may be provided by Parliament for that purpose, to any Clerk, Officer or Sheriff filling up and transmitting the schedules required under the first section of the said Bill the sum of _____, and the further sum of _____ for each _____ comprised in such schedules; and to any officer transmitting the returns required under the second section thereof the sum of _____"

Carried.

THE ESTIMATES.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT presented a Message from his Excellency the Governor General, transmitting the estimates for the year ending June 30, 1877.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT moved that the Message, together with the Estimates accompanying it, be referred to the Committee of Supply.—Carried.

THE BUDGET.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked when the Finance Minister proposed to bring down his Budget?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I cannot give my hon friend that information now, but I will give it to him as early as possible.

SUPPLY.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Cartwright, the House went into Committee of Supply—Mr. Scatcherd in the Chair.

Item No. 2, Governor's Secretary's office, $8,150, was passed.

The Committee rose and reported the resolution.

THE FINANCIAL DEPRESSION.

Mr. JONES (Leeds), resumed the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Mills, for the appointment of a Select Committee to enquire into the causes of the present financial depression. He said—I think this motion is the most extraordinary one I have ever seen. I don't know what we have been brought here for if it is, to be allowed by the Government. I don't know what those hon. gentlemen have been doing for the last year, or what the Blue Books mean, if they require this information. As a manufacturer of twenty-five year's standing, I think I may be allowed to make a few remarks with regard to the policy which has been brought into this debate, not that I believe this to be the correct time to do so. This discussion should take place on the Budget, but since it has not, I may be allowed to say something on the subject. This country should have some fixed policy, instead of a tariff which changes from time to time. I do not understand what the rulers of this country have been about, not only for the last two years, but for the last twenty years, in not having fixed a tariff to promote our industries. Can you expect capitalists in a land like this, with a comparatively small population, scattered along the line of a country ten times as populous, to establish manufactures, when one year the tariff may be twenty, and the next fifteen per cent.? We have heard hon. gentlemen rise in this House and speak for half an hour, and when they sat down we could not tell whether they were Free-Traders or Protectionists. It is this incidental protection which has left this country in its present position. It has been said, why should the people of Canada put their hands into their pockets and pay the manufacturers a certain sum of money? I ask do these gentlemen think the manufacturers are beggars? Do they see us petitioning this House for relief? The request comes from the Dominion Board of Trade, not one third of which is composed of manufacturers. The others are wholesale merchants, farmers, etc. The truth is, our interests must all be blended in one. The hon. member for North York says "if a poll were taken to-morrow in Ontario and Quebec on this question, the verdict would be in favor of free trade." I believe the result would be very different, and that the gentlemen on the Treasury benches who are Free Traders would be ousted. I represent a farming constituency with 25,000 inhabitants, and though the Globe warns those who represent the farmers in this House against declaring themselves adverse to free trade, I say I am a Protectionist. I stand here to advocate a national policy, and a tariff which will not be changed from year to year, as may be thought necessary by those who favour incidental protection. The man who opposed me in my election, when he saw how the wind blew, trimmed his sails accordingly, and said he was a Protectionist; but notwithstanding this policy—of course I say nothing against him personally—I carried the election in a constituency, which the Globe, and other papers in sympathy with it, contended was, as containing a farming population, opposed to protection. We must all, however, be blended into one, and adopt a system which will make all prosperous. It has been said by the hon. member for Bothwell, that the protective principle in other countries is not beneficial, but I suppose that the hon. member wishes to back down on the word "principle." He is a little theoretical, and what we need is more practical and less of theoretical legislation. I would ask him to glance at the old world in a practical way; and he will find that England, under protection, grew to the power, station, and might she has attained; while on the Continent, France, under the same principle, has paid an extraordinary indemnity in connection with the Franco-German war. Again, come nearer home, and what do we see? The United States may not be flourishing at present, but she has passed through a terrific struggle, in which everything was exhausted; she is endeavouring to come back to a specie basis; and yet in the face of all her difficulties, with a high protective tariff in a great many staple articles, she is underselling the whole world beside. As has been so forcibly stated by the hon. members for Hamilton and Montreal West, she is doing so in cotton, hardware, woollens, and in the staples of iron and steel—I am obliged to use a great deal of steel, which for the past twenty-five years I have purchased in England, and still I am forced to go to the United States for a portion of the steel I require. It is an acknowledged fact, that great Sheffield manufacturers cannot supply steel and iron at the same price as Americans. One of the oldest of these houses on November 1st, 1875, writes me: "We see that American fork steel is now much reduced in price; in fact, lower than we can afford to sell it for, at present." This shows, Sir, that though they make a speciality of bar steel, and though the houses have been established for centuries, it is acknowledged that in connection with such a staple, even Sheffield itself, under the great Free Trade principles of Great Britain, the Americans are able to undersell in a British Colony; and not only is this case in this article, but in many others, such as iron, cotton, woollen goods, &c. Now, how do our neighbours manage their affairs? Do not they give every facility for the prosecution of enterprises in their country? With regard to their bonded system—

Mr. MILLS—I would like to know what that is.

Mr. JONES—Yes, possibly the hon. member for Bothwell would. I do not believe that he does know.

Under their bonded system, they import from Sweden and Norway large quantities of iron at a very heavy rate of duty; and then it is rolled into sheets, strips, and bars, or very roughly manufactured. They allow this to be done in bond, when the articles are exported to this or any other country, utilizing their labor for the benefit of their farmers and the population generally. So with the drawback system. Regarding every article manufactured in the United States, when sent here, the duties levied on the component parts are returned. I can make a dozen of shovels as cheaply as they can be turned out in any other country, and I ship them to British Columbia in the face of the San Francisco market; and a great American firm which makes the enormous quantity of four hundred dozen of shovels a day, when they ship them to the Dominion, are paid back the duties received on such exports, obtaining in fact $1 per dozen, actually a fair profit. What have we done during the last twenty years? We have quarrelled amongst ourselves when we should have looked at the great interests of the country. I do not care what party is in power; so long as they are faithful and true to our flag, and so long as they act justly and rightly on the floor of this House, they shall have my true and loyal support. Who pays the great proportion of our duties? You would imagine that the farmers did so, judging from the remarks made in this House; but I contend that this is not the fact—they are not the great consumers, but the great producers. If they buy luxuries, they must pay for them like other people. They produce home-made coats, such as I wear here to-day, and flax, woollens, hides, and everything they require; but they do not pay taxes in proportion to the other sections of the population—the labourers, the mechanics, the merchant princes, the millionaires, &c. If we only build up our manufacturing industries, and do not shut our eyes to the fact that we have forty millions of people on the other side of the line, with a barricade against us which will never be opened, we will adopt a proper policy. We have been looking for a change during the past ten or fifteen years. I remember in 1865, that I walked down from the back seats of the Parliament in Quebec to Sir John A. Macdonald—the Reciprocity Treaty had been abolished—and said, “Sir John, I think that this is a good time to prepare a tariff, which will build up our industries.” What did the hon. gentleman say? “Wait a little. Wait a year or two, we will get back reciprocity.” It has been waiting from that day to this; and you will be waiting many a long day before you get it from these high-minded merchants of the United States. They have kicked and cuffed and knocked us about in every way, from pillar to post, and have laughed at us in their sleeves; they think that we are fools. Talk of retaliation, and the consequent irritation some think it would produce amongst the Americans. Why, when we adopt a defensive policy, they will begin to think a little of us, and say we are business men, and not before. How have they treated us during the last ten or fifteen years? Have they done what is right, true, or honest? Have they carried out the Washington Treaty in regard to our canals? Do they not charge a duty in regard to fish oils, as well as in that paltry matter of lobster tins? We are similarly situated, as far as manufacturing powers are concerned, to the United States—indeed, I think we are better situated. In the Eastern States, in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Maine, they have good water power, but no coal or iron. Yet the East is the great manufacturing centre of the country. How are we situated? In the Lower Provinces, in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, we have, as at Boston, connection with the sea, and coal and iron lying side by side, and I believe with a proper system, with a true national policy persisted in for ten or fifteen years, instead of the dilly-dallying policy now pursued, we could manufacture as cheap and make the country as great as the United States. The high-mindedness of the people across the lines, which has been so often talked about, was exemplified yesterday by the hon. member for Montreal West. I can mention here an instance of their efforts to undersell us which came under my own observation. In a hardware shop in Detroit I saw an article selling at $9 gold, which they were delivering at Windsor to Canadian merchants at $7.20. When I travel, Sir, I blush for my country, which has had railroads for twenty-five years, and still imports rails, locomotives, axles, cranks and all the other things needed. In the Dominion now we have but one small locomotive company at Kingston, which is kept alive by a sop thrown to it now and then. If a sound policy had been pursued millions of dollars for wages in this industry would have been diffused throughout the country. But the effect of the policy adopted by the Government has been to cripple the railroad, manufacturing, mercantile, mechanical and farming interests, for I hold that they are all blended together, and that when one flourishes the other flourishes, and vice versa.

Mr. JONES,

The hon. member for Bothwell said he did not see why a duty should be placed on the agricultural products. I don't think there should be a duty on rye, oats, wheat and perhaps upon flour, because we raise good wheat and can manufacture flour to compete with other countries. But, in this connection, we must remember that the Grand Trunk and Great Western Railroads will deliver a cargo of flour from Michigan to Montreal or Halifax as cheap as they will to Toronto, Oshawa, or Whitby. This should be remedied by the legislation which was promised last year in the Railway Committee. The matter should be regulated by pro rata rates, there should be no difference.

On the article of corn I think there should be a duty. We grow a considerable quantity in the Western country, but not sufficient for the distilleries, in whose interest the duty of 10 cts a bushel was taken off. If we were to have a protective tariff we might have to pay a little more than we do now for some things, but I don't see why we should not have the same patriotism and desire for the advancement of our country as the United States have. See what love they have for their country. They bear the duty placed on those things; but what is the consequence? In many articles they are underselling us. And I ask the hon. gentleman if, seeing that the United States can undersell the world, whether it would be any disadvantage to the consumers here to have a high protective duty? I believe in a fixed policy which will build up our industries. We should encourage our trade with the West Indies, and have a line of steamers to effect an exchange of products. But what has been the policy with regard to the West Indies? Our sugar refining trade is closed by a duty of 25 per cent. on the raw material. I say if we would build up this country let us carry out our solemn contract in regard to the Pacific Railway. We have borrowed money on the faith of it from the British Government, to whom we are pledged for its construction. It may not be built in ten, fifteen or even twenty years, but let us do what we can. Our canals meet the requirements of our own trade for the present. Let us drop unnecessary works in which we are expending large sums. It may cause an outcry here and there, but the country will be the gainer. The people of British Columbia do not insist on the completion of the railroad in ten years so long as we can show an earnest desire to construct it as fast as possible. Let us build that road in advance of settlement as is done in the United States, and it will give employment to the men who are loitering about our streets and prosperity to every interest in the Dominion. I believe that is the true policy of this country, and I would not like to say what I believe will be the consequences to this country if it is not carried out.

Mr. DAVIES—In the Maritime Provinces we have to compete with the world. Some time ago we had protection when it was the policy of the Imperial Government. There was a protective duty on timber at one time, but since then we have had free-trade. Our products are now shut out of the United States, and if, in addition to that, we have to bolster up certain industries in Ontario, it would be hard for us to live. If protection were adopted as a national policy, I am not prepared to say that it would not be good for this country, since the United States has prospered under the system. We should, however, have the whole or none protected. It is not fair that one class should be protected at the expense of the others.

There is no doubt that small manufacturers, such as I suppose we have in this country, can compete very well with large ones. Large manufacturers can produce at very much cheaper rates. Possibly it may be a good policy to afford some additional protection to some of those industries. That would be a very good subject for a Committee to inquire into.

In our Province the Government have been very generous. They not only admit the Americans to our markets, but have given up part of our coasting trade to the United States flag. A line of steamers is allowed to coast to Halifax and various ports of the Gulf in violation of our navigation laws. I am quite aware this is an advantage to others who have no shipping, but it is very unfair to those who have. These steamers are injurious to the Dominion railroad through the Lower Provinces, and monopolize to a great extent the trade which should fall to our own vessels. I think, seeing the United States have refused to allow a boat of ours to carry a cargo on their coast, we have been over-generous in this respect. Although it is a small matter, it is a violation of principle. The hon. member for Leeds says we should show our patriotism by agreeing to submit to protection for the benefit of a certain class. Now, I cannot see why this should be done. In Prince Edward Island we are largely interested in agriculture. We send our products to the neighboring provinces and England. I think we may get a good deal of information from the labors of this Committee. If we see clearly it is necessary, in order to build up large manufactures here, that some small protection should be afforded, I would not like to say I would go against giving them something of the kind, but I should very much prefer, if we are to have protection, we should have a national policy. I am not prepared to say it would not be the best policy.

Mr. ORTON — It is not my intention to make many remarks on this subject. The statement has been made by some hon. member of this House, that the manufacturing and agricultural interests of our country are diametrically opposed to each other. Representing as I do a large agricultural constituency, it is my duty to make a few remarks in that connection. I am not one of those who have any idea whatever that what will benefit the manufacturers will injure the agriculturists of this country: but I believe that what will add to the prosperity of one will add to the prosperity of the other. I am of the opinion that what will advance the interests of one section of the Dominion will be beneficially felt by all. I think we should look back for the last ten years and consider our position. When we look at the agricultural or manufacturing interests we see that up to the last few years this country has had an unusual period of prosperity, and it would be well to seek the cause of that. I believe our farmers and manufactures are wealthier now than in the days when reciprocity existed with the United States. But there came a period when the United States was disturbed by war, when the commercial power of that country was crippled; and the consequences to us were the same as though protection existed in this country: it gave our manufacturers a chance of springing into existence. There never was so prosperous a time with our manufacturers; and that prosperity was further advanced by the great wars that afterwards occurred in Europe. What we have to consider is whether merchants and manufacturers have done their duty in trying to prevent the rebound which must be expected after a period of prosperity brought about by exceedingly exceptional circumstances? The present state of things the people of this country feel is to some extent chargeable upon the Government entrusted with our destinies, and with the advancement of our agricultural and manufacturing prosperity. Only last year our whole trade was disturbed by the financial policy which brought ruin to many; sugar refining and many other establishments have, in consequence, been closed, and this may be traced to the injurious measures taken by the Hon. the Finance Minister. It is not my intention now to treat this question extensively, as I hope to have another opportunity.

Hon. gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Mr. ORTON—But I do say that hon. gentlemen who hold that a system which would increase the prosperity of our manufacturers would injure the farmers, argue on a false basis. I believe that the farming population is thoroughly alive to the importance of any manufacturing interests. Looking abroad we see what has occurred in sections of other countries; and comparing the State of Massachusetts with Virginia, we find that the latter possesses a more prolific soil than perhaps any other part of this continent, still in the former where manufactories abound, its rocky soils are cultivated with more profit than the rich lands of the South. With the assistance of the manufacturers the produce is consumed and to the soil is returned its strength and its virtue. Also, compare even Ireland with England, and we find the property is of very much greater value in the latter than in the former, simply because it is a manufacturing country, while Ireland is not. It is true that England now pursues a policy of free-trade; and it is equally true that she once exported agricultural produce; also, that under a protective system her manufactures and commercial interests grew to vast importance, consequently the farming interest of the country was prosperous. In no country can grain be produced to the same amount per acre, or a larger amount be paid for what is produced than in England and Scotland, while in Ireland the land is not so valuable and the better class of it much scattered. I believe that in a great agricultural country like this the principal apology for protection is the providing of a market for those who have made the real wealth of the country. We shall have distress amongst the farmers if the system be not changed ; it is already beginning to show itself and the prices of coarser grains and products are less than they were two years ago. For instance, beef has fallen much lower in this relation. The drovers say that the people being out of employment cannot pay the same amount for meat as formerly. No small blame is in consequence attached to the policy of the present Government, and I thought to a certain extent with great justice. The manufacture of cheese was greatly encouraged by protection. I do not believe in such encouragement of manufactures, which cannot prosper here. If manufacturers are protected, so should the farmers be, who should have the first preference in our market. Indian corn should be taxed, and our whiskey made out of rye that we raise. The increase of our industries, even with judicious protection, would not decrease our revenue. I believe that the Pacific Railway should be built, for I have no faith whatever in the great bug-bear of a large national debt. It would give employment to idle men ; and during a time of depression railways should be constructed, as material can then be purchased cheaply.

Mr. DECOSMOS—I do not believe that the appointment of the Committee in question will be productive of much good.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Hear, hear.

Mr. DECOSMOS—I therefore propose to offer an amendment to the hon. gentleman's motion, with the object of obtaining the sense of the House as to whether it is in favour of protection, or a revision of the tariff, or of free-trade. In doing so, I take occasion to ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments in order to make some allusions to the state of matters in British Columbia, where, as far as I am aware, business has been in a very healthy condition during the past year. I am informed by merchants from all parts, that it was never more so ; also that the Dominion revenue in that point, never reached so high an amount—over $500,000 between the 1st of January and December 31st, 1875. Our prosperity in proportion to our population has been greater than in any other section of the Dominion, but I fear that the depression will reach us during the coming year unless the Government endeavours to carry out the promise made to British Columbia in regard to the construction of the Pacific Railway.

There is another point in this connection. Our Province is the only part of the Dominion which has the balance of trade in its favour. It imported during the year ending 30th of June to '75, $2,490,593 worth of merchandise, and exported to $2,824,812 worth of products, with foreign goods to the value of $50,000. The balance of trade is in its favour, without taking into consideration the large sum of money, possibly half a million, in the shape of gold carried away by parties leaving the Province. This leaves about $350,000 to the credit of our Province. When we take the Province of Prince Edward Island, with a population of 100,000 we find that the balance of trade is against it to the extent of $600,000. It is against Manitoba to the extent of $700,000, New Brunswick $3,000,000, and so on. I may, therefore, conclude this point by saying it affords me gratification to see that our much-abused Province has the balance of trade in its favour.

The Hon. Minister of Justice took occasion to remark during a recent election in Toronto, that British Columbia only contained about one-third the population of that electoral district, which on enquiry I found to be 20,000 and a fraction. This would allow the Province a population of about 7,000, and of the $500,000 paid into the Dominion it could give us something like $7 per capita, while only $3 per capita is paid in Ontario.

The subject of the Pacific Railway will come before this House in a short time, and I think it is right, in order to have a fair discussion, we should understand what is the population of British Columbia. The Customs Report of 1874 credits us with a different population than that estimated by the Minister of Justice. That report places it at 50,000, and gives the per capital at $8 and a fraction.

Mr. ORTON.

The Indian population is about 25,000, and with a consuming population of 25,000, the per capita tax would be $20, which is seven times that paid by the Province of Ontario, four times that of Quebec, six times that of Nova Scotia and four times that of New Brunswick. This will give the House a fair notion of our population and the tax we pay, and will show that a Province with so small a population, which imports $2,490,000 of merchandise in one year, and exports nearly $3,000,000, does not deserve the abuse it receives. Having made this statement, I will make a further one. I am in favour of a protective tariff, but I am not in favor of a prohibitory one. So far as my information goes, every nation that has risen to any manufacturing prominence has been at one stage under a protective tariff. The United States, Germany, Russia, and other countries have been in favour of protection until they could stand alone and compete with other nations of the world. Following their example, I think it will be sound policy to revise our tariff and discriminate in favour of home industries. In order to afford the House an opportunity to express its opinion on this question, I ask leave to offer the following amendment:—

Resolved, That the early revision of the tariff is very desirable, and that a revised tariff discriminating to a greater degree than the existing tariff in favour of home industries and manufactures, but not unduly stimulating one section of the country or one industry against other sections and industries, would be productive of great benefit to the whole Dominion.

Mr. SPEAKER—I think the hon. gentleman has not put the amendment in a shape to be submitted. As it stands it is certainly not germane and cannot form part of the same resolution, and it is not proposed as a substitute. Perhaps the House will allow the hon. gentleman to put it in such a shape as it can be submitted to the House.

Mr. MILLS—It seems to me there is another point besides the one the Hon. Speaker has made. Not only is the amendment not germane, but it proposes to commit this House to the principle of increased taxation.

Mr. SPEAKER—If the amendment is so worded as to be admissible, in the language of the authority it is such a resolution as is "barren in result." It is a mere abstract expression of the House, even supposing it to mean a revision of the tariff. I think the hon. member will find, if he consults the books, some extreme cases of that kind.

Mr. DE COSMOS amended his resolution and submitted it to the Speaker, who still thought it was not in the proper shape to be presented to the House.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—This amendment either involves some change in the taxation or it involves nothing. It either involves a re-distribution of something at present existing or nothing, and a re-distribution of existing duties imposes extra charges upon certain classes and lighter charges upon others. An expression of opinion in that direction is clearly imposing a burden on certain classes.

Mr. SPEAKER—The principle on which abstract resolutions is based is this: That the Government is not really bound by them, even if the whole House adopt them. Mr. Todd is very clear and strong on that point.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I think a resolution of this kind is strictly within the privileges of this House. It is not such a resolution as pledges the House in any way. It would be unfair to deprive this or any other Parliament of being a free Parliament, as would be done if we could not express our views generally on the system of taxation, the collection of the revenue or the re-adjustment of the tariff. I think the rule of exclusion of the power of Parliament does not go so far as that. But, however that may be, I am strongly impressed that this is not the proper time to offer such a resolution. It is not fair to bind the hands of Government before maturity. The Government are coming down. It is their duty to come down, and they have informed the House that they will come down at an early day; and they have the right to claim from both sides of the House that they shall have full opportunity to lay their views on the question of taxation—whether there shall be an increase or decrease, a re-distribution or re-adjustment of the tariff—before the House. No hon. member by any motion of this kind should attempt to force the Government into a false position by forcing them to resist the motion or to come down with their policy before they are ready to do so. The hon. gentleman ought not to press this motion, and if he does press it and you, Mr. Speaker, shall decide it in order, I certainly shall not vote for it.

Mr. MILLS—The only way such a motion can be in order is by making it express regret that the Government have not brought down a policy increasing the tariff.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—That is the same thing.

Mr. MILLS—No; the resolution makes this House declare positively that an increased tariff is desired, and it cannot do that according to the English precedents.

Mr. SPEAKER—May it not express regret that it has not been done and a desire that it should?

Mr. DECOSMOS—I believe that resolution is strictly in order. It is an abstract resolution, and does not in any way interfere with the exclusive rights of the Government to initiate money bills. It will simply give an opportunity to hon. gentlemen to express their views on this subject, and possibly attain the end sought by the hon. member for Bothwell.

Mr. DEVLIN—The constituency which I have the honour to represent has a large interest in the question of Protection, and if it was presented to the House fairly I should feel it my duty to offer a few remarks.

Mr. SPEAKER—If the hon. member has some observations to make he might be allowed to proceed while I am looking up the authorities with regard to the amendment.

Mr. Devlin, however, elected to defer his remarks.

Mr. SPEAKER—Speaking almost entirely from my general impressions of the subject, I think the amendment is in order. I find in May the following:—

“But the rules applicable to grants of money and motions for increasing the burthens upon the people, do not apply to resolutions expressive of any abstract opinion of the House upon such matters. Such resolutions have been allowed upon the principle that not being offered in a form in which a vote of the House for granting money or imposing a burthen can be regularly agreed to, they are barren of results, and are, therefore, to be regarded in the same light as any other abstract resolution. But for that very reason they are objectionable; and being also an evasion of wholesome rules they are discouraged as much as possible.”

I find in Todd a great many cases cited in which abstract resolutions of this kind were objected to as highly impolitic; but in no instance were they spoken of as out of order.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said if this amendment were passed it would commit the House to a re-distribution of existing taxation, any recommendation for which should come from the Crown. That was the objection which he had taken at first.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked how the House could in that case express its opinion on a question of this kind.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it could be done when the Government measure was brought down. It would be for the hon. gentlemen opposite to propose a motion expressing their regret that a certain course was not taken, and issue would at once be joined. If the amendment should be carried the consequence was well known.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said he believed the amendment was inexpedient, but still it was a matter of very great importance, because upon it depended very largely the freedom of Parliament. The House was not obliged to wait until the Government had taken a step before expressing an opinion. They might wish to express a regret that such a step was not taken. He was satisfied the amendment was in order and the question of its expediency should not be considered. If it were carried it would be an expression of the House. If the Government wished to yield to it they could bring down a measure based on it; if they did not they could say they did not think it expedient to advise Her Majesty to send a message in favour of a re-adjustment of taxation. In that case, then, would come the action of the House if it chose to insist upon its first-proposition, by expressing regret that the Government refused to carry out its views.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said it was no doubt difficult to draw the line in a question of this kind, whether a motion was in or out of order. No dependence could be placed upon the principle that because a resolution, if passed, would be barren of results, therefore, it would be in order. The hon. member for Victoria might move that it is expedient to increase the duty on certain articles by so much per cent. That would be barren of results, yet no such resolution would be in order. He did not think there would be found any case in which the House has been allowed by the Chair, except at the instance of the advisers of the Crown, to propound an opinion favourable to an increase of taxation. He would be sorry to say a word that would tend to deprive the House of any of its privileges, but the nearer they approached in the direction of permitting the House to take initiatory steps—even though they be abstract—towards imposing charges on the people, the more they reached the old system which was rejected in the Province from which he came after it had produced very bad results indeed. He hoped the House would not pronounce upon the motion, because the authorities agreed that while some of these resolutions might be in order, they were much to be deprecated. He thought it was the duty of the House to avoid inconvenient motions.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE wished to raise another point. A resolution of this kind could only be proposed in Committee of the Whole, and notice must be given by any hon. gentleman proposing an abstract resolution affecting trade and commerce and the taxation of the people in the most remote degree. Notice must be given of the intention to move the House into Committee of the Whole. He asked for the ruling of the Chair on this point if the other was not considered well sustained.

Mr. SPEAKER—With reference to the last point raised, it seems to me it is quite possible so to frame a resolution on such a subject, that an hon.

member may be able to take the sense of the House on the general question. Such a course, however, is irregular. It is possible but highly objectionable. I am not prepared to rule the amendment out of order, but if the hon. member desires to establish the practice of the House on this question I would like him to withdraw it for a day or two.

Mr. SCATCHERD cited Todd, Vol. 1, page 44, for a case in point. In 1830 Mr. Thompson moved the appointment of a Committee for a Committee for a revision of the general system of taxation. This was ruled out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER—That is the principle the Speaker laid down, but he goes on to show that it is not the practice with regard to abstract resolutions. I confess my own feeling is not in favour of limiting the powers of the House of Commons more than they are at present.

Mr. IRVING—However much I may agree with the remarks of the Minister of Justice and the right hon. member for Kingston, it appears to me if the amendment is withdrawn, the original motion should also be dropped. The hon. member for Bothwell has sown the wind and may have to reap the whirlwind. It was somewhat inconvenient that this matter should have been brought up, inasmuch as the true responsibility was upon the Government in a question of this kind; but the debate has proceeded to some considerable length, almost every one has taken part in it except the members of the Government. The hon. member for Bothwell has piped and a great number of us have danced. Perhaps other amendments will be moved which will narrow the question down still closer; but it does appear to me to be a pity that a resolution should go forth to the country made by the hon. member for Bothwell, and in principle not in accordance with his views.

Mr. DECOSMOS—I wish to know from Mr. Speaker whether the amendment to the motion is in order or not.

Mr. SPEAKER—I think that it is an amendment, as it has some relation to the motion.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—If this is the case, the rule amounts to nothing; because if an hon. member propose an amendment which is not germane to a motion, then you destroy the effect of the rule which obliges hon. members to give notice of any motion dealing with the question of trade.

An Hon. Member—What rule?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The rule requiring notice to be given of any intention to submit anything relating to a trade question to the House.

An Hon. Member—That only relates to a Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER—My present impression is, that the amendment is in order.

Mr. BUNSTER—Well, Mr. Speaker, I feel proud of your decision. It is in my opinion a step in the right direction. Two years ago I had the pleasure of bringing before this House a matter which was in the interests of the country, and I have had since, Sir, occasion to feel stronger than even at that time, that my judgment in this connection was well founded, from the way I have seen the Americans flooding our country with their produce to the ruin of our own interests. I state this, Sir, for the information of the Government, inasmuch as I know that they have very little knowledge of our district; none of its members having ever been there. It is well known that Canada is a slaughter market for Americans, and particularly with regard to their produce. The British Columbia farmers suffer very severely in this respect, the produce being brought from California and Oregon. The vessels take thither our lumber and coal and bring back grain, &c., which is sold at a nominal price, or even given away. Then our farmers are the victims of this system. Not only so, but this portion of the population labour without confidence, as they are well aware that their market will be so flooded. The merchants are also discouraged, and I presume that the same thing can be said with relation to Ontario. It has been agreed by some hon. gentlemen that the farmers do not require protection; but this is not the case, for whether a spade or shovel, as was well said by the hon. member for South Leeds, or a bushel of grain was in question, the same principle is at stake. Competition among manufacturers will regulate all difficulties that may be feared; and what our farmers want is not to be shut out from their own local markets, as was properly stated by the hon. member for Montreal West. If an article of English manufacture is sold for fourteen cents, the Americans offer it for thirteen cents; and if the farmer place it on the market at thirteen, the latter lower the price even to ten cents, their aim being, at all hazards, to run the English goods off the market. In the same way this argument applies to our own case. It has been shewn by the hon. member for Victoria that we import goods to considerable value; and I ask hon. gentlemen if it would not be more desirable to purchase goods of Canadian manufacture? I hope to see the day—particularly when the Pacific Railway is completed—when British Columbia will be supplied by her own and Canadian, instead of foreign manufacturers. The United States is the great example after which we should pattern. We are almost debarred from the San Francisco market, save as regards the article of coal, and we must find a mart elsewhere on the Pacific coast for our lumber, fish, and other articles which we export. The Americans are so keen, and the line is drawn so close, that they tax the very tins enclosing goods free of duty, and it will well become us to retaliate. I think that our country and our manufacturers would be more prosperous with a higher tariff, and agricultural produce should be included in the list. It has been mentioned that corn has been brought into Canada from the United States by distillers and others; and this is injurious to us, as it deteriorates the quality of the liquor we manufacture. It is well-known that it is not as good as the liquor with which we were supplied many years ago, owing to the use of Indian corn. There is too much oil in it. Now, it would be desirable to check the importation of corn for distilling; and I would recommend gentlemen in favour of prohibition to advocate a duty on this article of produce, in order to improve the quality of liquor manufactured in Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Then there is the question of reciprocity. We had it once and were dissatisfied. Will forty millions trade with four millions unless they have the best of the bargain? I for one think not. The Americans say—"Keep them in suspense; we will send in our goods and flood them out; we will drive them into annexation, and take down the "British Flag." But if we take advantage of our own resources, which are abundant—and we might if we had only the brains and ability—we need not for a moment depend upon the Americans. We have the British market as well as they. They have a high protective tariff, and still export goods worth millions to Europe, in vessels, varying in size from one to two thousand tons. If we protect our industries, we can also do this; and I claim that the agricultural interest is above all others. The farmers would rejoice to see the manufacturers prosperous, instead of having shops closed or running on half time; and even though the Government is not building the Pacific Railway, as it should—as it promised to do—it is to be hoped that it will take the case of our agriculturists into consideration, and more particularly, the vast domain now traversed by the buffalo and the Indian alone; enable five hundred thousand Canadians to return to their native land from which they were driven by want of employment; and make the country flourish. Then there will be no general cry of depression, and no such notice placed on the paper as is under consideration. Let the Government build the great Pacific line, which can be laid without exacting one dollar more than has already been promised in the way of taxation. Thirty millions of dollars and fifty millions of acres of land will do it. I heard an hon. gentleman say last Session that it would cost $30,000 or $40,000 per mile; but I was conversing with a railroad man while coming across the continent, and he told me that in his country they were building a road through a tract more difficult than our own, at the rate of $14,000 per mile. At this rate the work can be accomplished on the terms I have mentioned. We need not feel so nervous about a little extra taxation, owing to the increased amount this undertaking would eventually bring into the public Treasury, and the addition to our population it would cause. We should not forget our true interests. I do not think that it is creditable for a statesman to make such remarks as did the Hon. the Minister of Justice regarding our Province, British Columbia, which is as large as Ontario and Quebec together. It is, besides, no inhospitable country, as I can say from experience. A man can make his fortune in it more quickly than in Ontario or Quebec, if endowed with energy and perseverance; and the sooner it is developed by means of the iron horse the better. We want the railway, not in our own interest simply, but in that of Canada. If we were disloyal to our Flag, at a hint from us the Americans would build this railway and give us a large sum of money. But we do not see fit to turn traitor to the Flag under which we were born. What did the United States give for a country not worth one two-hundredth part as much as our Province—Alaska? Seven millions. I do not doubt that Canada would give seventeen or eighteen millions for British Columbia, and when the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald purchased our Province, with the promise of building the railroad, he got an extraordinary bargain. The United States would run ten lines across the continent to secure such a prize. Still I have read in the Canadian press that the scheme was wild and visionary; and hon. gentlemen in this House have affirmed that it could not be built. Why not? I know the reason—it is simply because the Government does not possess the ability. I make this statement fearlessly, and if they do not carry out the project, I will continue to say so. England has an abundance of sovereigns, and the Government has only to go there to obtain the bawbees. She, Sir, would take pride in assisting one of her colonies, and while we are dilly-dallying in this connection, Disraeli has bought a controlling interest in the Suez Canal so as to command the carrying trade for Britain. Would he not rather have invested this money in the Pacific Railway? I for one think he would. A good deal has been said on this subject, and I know that any mention of British Columbia affairs is disagreeable to certain hon. gentlemen in this House, whom I have heard abusing it, not only here, but outside these walls. I will merely ask them to be more liberal in their views, and to pay our Province a visit—they will be welcome.

The hour being Six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS,

The debate on the financial depression was resumed by

Mr. WOOD—He said:—I had no idea when this discussion commenced, it would take the wide range that it has done. I did not think that the question of protection, pure and simple, was to be discussed. The amendment of the hon. member for Victoria brings the issue squarely before the House this evening. The question is one of great importance to this country and deserves the most careful consideration of every hon. member present. In discussing it we must be careful to keep in mind that protection is not what Free-Traders would wish us believe, namely—purely in the interests of the manufacturer, and that he only is to be benefited by an increase of the tariff. If the advantages to be derived were simply to benefit one class of the community at the expense of all the rest—I for one would not be found in my present position. It is because I am convinced that protection to our infant industries is in the interest of all classes of the community, that I am and have been for many years, an humble but earnest advocate of its adoption.

The great problem of employment for the masses is one that has caused much anxiety to able and experienced statesmen in other lands; and I regret to say, that up to the present no real solution has been found, and as Canada grows older and increases in population she, too, will have to meet the difficulty, and prevent, if possible, such scenes as have been witnessed in Birmingham, Manchester and other large towns of England and on the Conti-ment where the working classes were clamouring for work or bread.

You are aware, Sir, that for many months all branches of trade have been suffering severely, the manufacturing interest particularly. Many of the factories have been running on short time, or closed up completely, thereby throwing out of employment thousands of industrious mechanics and artisans who, for want of work during the present winter, have been compelled to ask relief from charitable institutions in order to keep themselves and families from starvation. Such a state of things should not exist in a young and vigorous country like Canada, and I venture to say it would not exist to so great an extent if the Government would only courageously meet the difficulty and deal with it as it ought to do.

I am not one of those, Mr. Speaker, who like the right hon. member for Kingston charge the present Administration with being the cause of all the suffering and distress that is now felt throughout the country, nor am I prepared to say that any legislation that could take place would completely cure every case of wretchedness to be found in the land. But, Sir, if we point out in a clear and intelligent manner some of the causes of the present distress amongst the mechanics, artisans and labourers particularly, and then if the Government refuses to remove them, if in its power, I venture to predict that the country will hold them to a strict account. But I have faith that the gentlemen charged with the responsibility of conducting the affairs of this country are equal to the occasion, and that they will take hold and deal vigorously with it in such a way as to give satisfaction to the country at large.

It is a well-known fact that for two years past the Americans have been flooding this country with their surplus stocks, selling them at prices that make it impossible for our people to compete against and get cost for their goods. They sell irrespective of cost in order to raise money for some pressing necessity, and by so doing they are enabled to keep their factories in constant operation. They know quite well that in consequence of their high tariff our manufacturers cannot retaliate. Could we reach the American markets with the same facility that they reach ours, the present practice of underselling would not be resorted to. But as we are completely shut out of the States, the American manufacturers can keep their prices well up at home, sell to this country 15 to 25 per cent. less than they will do to their own people, and at the same time not reduce the price on their average productions more than $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 per cent., which is a small matter to them, when they can take away our gold in payment which should go into the pockets of our own people for goods made at home. They are at the same time destroying our manufacturing industries, and will be able at some future day to recoup themselves at our expense by charging us what they please when all competition has been crushed out.

Mr. BUNSTER.

The question now to be considered is how can legislation alter the present state of affairs? Will any action that the Government can take be such as would give employment to the thousands of industrious mechanics and labourers now suffering for want of work, and at the same time prevent our manufacturing industries from being completely ruined by the unequal competition that is forced on them by our foreign rivals? I think the answer to this question is one that could easily be given by every gentleman in this House who has given the present depressed state of the country any consideration whatever. It is the answer expected from the Government by the people of this country, and, if given, will put in motion numbers of factories that have stood idle for months, affording relief to thousands of artisans that have been suffering for weeks, and impart new life and energy to all classes of the community. The answer is: Simply increase the tariff $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on such articles as can be manufactured in this country to advantage, admitting at the same time all raw material that we do not possess ourselves, at the lowest possible rate of duty. Such a course will secure our home market for the productions of our own people both of the factory and of the farm. Where is the revenue to come from? There is a strong feeling amongst many of our people that we should assimilate our tariff to that of the United States, so far as that country is concerned, and to advance it very slightly to England and other countries. Personally I would willingly adopt this course, as it is from the Americans we receive the greatest injury. But I question the policy of such a course. The United States is the very best market for our barley, cattle, and lumber and other productions of the farm and forest, which might be completely shut out of that country if we undertook to legislate against them particularly; and while I contend that we have the right to do so, I am convinced that it would not be in our interest to take that course. They could trouble us in many ways that would work against our mercantile and railway interests, which are now to some extent depending on them. The bonding system that gives us access to the sea-board at all times might be done away with. Some of our largest railway corporations are depending on them for the through traffic that keeps them afloat; and any action on our part that would give them an excuse for stopping any of these privileges would be unwise. If we take their tariff as a basis for ours and treat all nations alike, then the Americans can have no cause of complaint. It is now a settled fact that we are not to have reciprocity with the States. Let us therefore adopt such a tariff as will make us independent of such a treaty—a tariff that will build up all over this country large manufacturing centres, with a population that will consume the produce of the farmer. We will not then have to beg for a reciprocity treaty which would enable us to supply New England with cheap bread, while she is manufacturing for us the very goods we ought to make for ourselves. "Import the labour and not the product of his labour," should be the motto of this country. To place the producer and consumer side by side should be the aim of every true Canadian. By doing so a vast amount of wealth as well as of unproductive labour, would be saved to the country.

As matters now stand, our manufacturers have no chance to compete with the Americans. Our hands are tied, while our American rivals are at perfect liberty to strike us when and where they please. The fences round our pastures are almost level with the ground, while theirs are built seven rails high, and the gates constantly locked and guarded. They have no difficulty in getting into our green fields, but we scarcely dare look over their fences. The American Custom officers throw every obstacle in the way of exporting goods into their country. The competition is unreasonable. They are possessed of large capital, the best of machinery, and long experience, and, to crown all, a prohibitory tariff; whilst we, as manufacturers, are but of yesterday, with little capital, less experience, and almost a free-trade tariff. But if we had our own markets, for a very few years, until our feet were firmly established, I am quite sure that with our industry, energy and economy, we would not be afraid to compete with them in any market.

The advocates of free-trade say that it is unfair to tax them for the benefit of a few manufacturers, some of whom have grown rich under the present tariff. They wish to buy their goods where they can get them the cheapest, and to sell in the dearest market. This is just what the advocates of protection claim that that system will do for the country. I deny that protection means an increase of price to the consumer, but the very opposite. Protection will secure competition amongst our own manufacturers, and this will secure fair and reasonable prices, which few object to pay. For instance, when the duty on boots and shoes was 25 per cent. we did not import a single pair. The country was well supplied. No one was ever heard to complain of high prices. Home competition secured this, and the duty might just as well have been 100 per cent. as 25 per cent. for prices would have been the same to consumers. I contend, therefore, if three-fourths of the goods that are now imported, that we could make for ourselves, were excluded from the country, the consumer would not pay a cent more for his requirements in ordinary times. Protection means much more than all this. It will secure the influx of a large amount of foreign capital for manufacturing purposes that would never reach us as long as our present free-trade tariff exists. Is this not a complete answer to those who say that an increase of duties means an increase of price to the consumer? The point I wish to make is, that while the farming community secures better prices in the home market where there is a large manufacturing population, they buy at prices equally as low, if not lower, than the same can be imported in consequence of internal competition.

Admit, for argument's sake, that we would have to pay more for what we have to purchase. If protection gives us constant employment and fair wages, we will be able to procure what we want even at the advanced price. While, as we now stand, with free-trade for all the world, we are not able to procure a day's work. Of what use are the very cheapest goods to us if we have not the means to purchase them? Would you not rather pay high prices, and be able to secure what you want, than have low prices without the means of so doing? If I, as a mechanic, am earning $2 per day under protection and have to pay 10 per cent. more for such goods as I require, am I not better off than if offered the same goods at 20½ per cent. less, but on account of free-trade, was unable to get work at any price, and I cannot earn even a dollar day to provide such things as I require for my family? I think that all will admit that high prices, good wages, and constant work are much preferable to low prices and no work.

Mr. Speaker, so long as we are subject to such ruinous competition, will we see want and distress amongst our own manufacturing population, as there is a determined effort on the part of our American neighbours to crush out all opposition, even at the sacrifice of their profits for a few years, in the hope of recouping themselves when all opposition has ceased to exist, which will soon be the case at our present rate of progress. They will then secure such prices as will repay them for any loss they now sustain. Our people are struggling manfully to maintain their existence. Many of the large mills are barely paying expenses in the hope that the Government will consider the position they are placed in and come to the rescue. Take a single instance, which is one out of many that could be named. The Dundas Cotton Mills, with a capital of $400,000, employ about 400 people, and pay out a large amount of wages monthly, most of which is spent in the town and neighbourhood in procuring supplies for the operatives and their families. This mill has not paid a cent of dividend to the stockholders for months, as they have made up their minds to fight the Americans as long as they have a dollar, in order to retain their customers. If they do not get relief very soon by an increase in the tariff, the mill must close. Then 400 people will be thrown out of employment, the large amount of wages paid monthly will cease to circulate, and the operatives and those dependent on them will have to seek for work in a country whose Government takes good care that the manufacturing industries of its people are not interfered with by the influx of the surplus stocks of outsiders.

There are four or five cotton mills in the Dominion, with a capital of $2,000,000, employing 1,600 hands, paying $300,000 per year, and the value of goods they produce amounting to $1,500,000 per annum. Not one of those mills is paying a cent to the stockholders, nor even putting into a sinking fund a single dollar for repairs. The consequence will be that unless a change takes place very soon, every wheel will be worn out in the next few years, and every spindle will cease to revolve, as no person will think of putting fresh capital in for the purpose of sinking it. The Americans will then have the trade to themselves, and our free-trade friends will find out to their cost how cheap they can purchase cotton in the future. The Americans are beating England in almost every market of the Old World, and even invading Manchester itself with the production of their looms; and if they can do this so successfully there, how can Canada, in her present condition, be expected to cope with them? Nothing but a considerable increase in the tariff, and that fixed for a number of years, can save the manufacturing industries of this country from being completely crushed out of existence.

The American tariff has secured to the American people their own market and freedom from outside competition, and their manufacturers are so firmly established that to-day they are driving free-trade England out of many of the markets where she at one time was the only source of supply. Take as a sample the iron market—pig-iron—a large portion of which is now imported from the States. All used to come from England three years ago. In bar-iron, more than one-half of the imports into Ontario are from the States. Three years ago there was scarcely a bar from that country; all came from England; and this is the country Free Traders declare is protected to death. So far as I can see, there is not any sign of death taking place at an early date.

Mr. GORDON—Will the hon. gentleman give his authority in regard to that matter?

Mr. WOOD—I refer the hon. gentleman to the trade and navigation returns. If the hon. gentleman knows where to turn, he will find the statement I vouch for its correctness. What use, I ask, is there in spending thousands of dollars every year to induce immigrants to come to this country unless some effort is made to give them employment? All that reach our shores are not suitable for farm labour. If we wish to build up a nation, we must have diversity of employment. No country can ever become rich, prosperous and populous simply as a nation of farmers and shop-keepers. How have the New England States with their rocks and mountains and unproductive soil become so rich and powerful? Not surely by confining themselves to farming operations. It is their manufacturing enterprise that has placed them in the position they are to-day. Let us look at the capital invested in Massachusetts since the year 1850 and see how it has increased in twenty years, with the amount of wages paid out, the value of the raw materials used, and the value of finished goods produced in the years 1850, 1860 and 1870.

	1850.		Increase		1860.		Increase		1870.
	$	cts.	percent.	$	cts.	percent.	$	cts.	$	cts.
Capital Invested.....	88,940	292	50	132,792	327	75	231,677	862	00	00
Wages Paid.....	41,954	736	36	56,960	913	107	118,051	886	00	00
Value of Raw Material.....	85,856	771	57	135,053	721	147	334,413	982	00	00
do Finished Goods.....	157,743	594	61	255,545	592	117	553,912	568	00	00
Average Wages per annum.....	236	00	11	262	00	422	00	00	00
Number of Hands Employed.....	177,461	217,421	61	279,380	00	00	00

This same State invested in Cottons, Woollens and Boots and Shoes alone in 1870 :-

	Cotton.	Woollens.	Boots and Shoes.
Capital Invested.....	$42,153,175	$20,622,440	$19,559,738
Wages Paid Out.....	12,914,023	7,296,752	27,265,283
Value of Raw Material.....	35,447,617	24,866,118	51,363,406
do Finished Goods.....	56,285,580	39,489,242	86,393,583
Hands Employed.....	41,455	20,551	54,831

	Capital Invested	Hands Employed	Wages Paid.	Raw Material.	Value of Products.
In Ontario.....	$ 37,874,010	87,281	$ 21,415,710	65,114,804	114,706,799
Quebec.....	28,071,868	66,714	12,389,673	44,555,025	77,205,182
New Brunswick.....	5,976,176	18,352	3,869,360	9,431,760	17,367,687
Nova Scotia.....	6,041,966	15,595	3,176,266	5,806,257	12,338,105
Making a total of...	77,964,020	187,942	40,851,009	124,907,846	221,617,773

The total value of property of all kinds, real and personal, in this State, in 1870, was $2,132,148,741.00. The population is 1,457,351. Compare this with the wealth of the same number in this country, where farming receives the principal attention, and you will find that the balance is in favour of the people who turn their attention to manufacturing enterprise.

Massachusetts has 114 per cent. less population than Ontario. She has 612 per cent. more capital invested in manufactures; pays out in wages 575 per cent. more than Ontario, paid for raw material, 514 per cent. more than Ontario; and the value of the finished productions is 483 per cent. more than Ontario. She employs 320 per cent. more hands in manufacturing, and pays 721 per cent. higher wages than Ontario. Massachusetts has $11\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. more capital invested in cotton alone than Ontario has in all kinds of manufactures, and the value of the finished cotton is equal to half the value of all our productions. Woollens is in the same position as cottons, but with this exception, that the value of woollens is only 30 per cent. less than all Ontario's production in that line.

In boots and shoes there is about half the capital invested that there is in all the manufactures in Ontario. The value of finished work is only 30 per cent. less than all the Ontario manufactures, and pays $27\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. more wages than is paid to all engaged in the manufacturrs in Ontario.

Pennsylvania has a population of about 1 per cent. larger than the Dominion. She has invested in manufactures over 525 per cent. more than Canada, pays out 310 per cent. more wages, and the value of finished production is 325 per cent. more than all Canada.

In iron alone there is just about as much capital invested as there is in all industries in the Dominion, paying only about 40 per cent. less wages than is paid in the Dominion for that purpose. The value of finished iron is only about 45 per cent less than all the production of our factories together.

The average earning of each operative engaged in manufacturing in Ontario in 1871, was \$245.00—just what was paid in 1850 in Massachusetts, 11 per cent. less than was paid in 1860, and about $72\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. less than was paid in 1870 when the United States Census was taken.

We are told that in protected countries like the States the profits to the manufacturers are enormous, and that they come directly out of the pockets of the consumer.

Let us compare the returns on investments in manufacturing in the New England States, where they have protection, with Canada, where free-trade practically exists, and we will find that protection actually reduces the cost to the consumer.

In Canada, up to the time when the Americans began the slaughtering business, after setting apart 6 per cent. for interest on plant, and interest on working capital, the manufacturer got a larger profit by $6\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. than the protected manufacturer in New England got. The result is that where protection exists home competition secures fair prices. But where free-trade is the order, as in this country, people will not invest their means in manufactures, and competition does not exist, and the consumer pays higher prices. This was the case up to 1872.

Here we see the source from whence the wealth of Massachusetts is derived, because of her large manufacturing population. Land that our Canadian farmers would think dear at any price, brings from forty to sixty dollars per acre, because every article that can be raised brings a large price in the market created by the manufacturing interests scattered so thickly over the State.

The capital invested in manufacturing in the State of New York in the years 1850, 1860, and 1870 was as follows:—

“1850—Capital invested, $99,904,405; wages paid, $49,131,000; value of raw material, $134,655,674; value of finished work, $237,597,249; hands employed, 199,349. In 1860—Capital invested, $172,875,652; wages paid, $65,446,759; value of raw material, $214,813,061; value of finished work, $378,870,339; hands employed, 230,112. In 1870—Capital invested, $366,994,320; wages paid, $142,465,758; value of raw material, $452,065,452; value of finished work, $785,194,651; hands employed, 357,803. The capital invested in manufactures in Pennsylvania for the same period, was:—In 1850—, Capital, $94,473,810; wages, $37,163,232; raw material, $87,205,377; finished work, $155,044,910; hands, 146,766. In 1860—Capital, $190,055,904; wages paid, $60,369,165; raw material, $150,477,698; finished work, $290,121,188; hands, 222,132. In 1870—Capital, $406,821,845; wages, $127,976,594; raw material, $421,197,673; finished work, $711,894,344; hands, 319,487. In 1870—Iron only—Capital; $78,668,802; wages, $24,680,024; raw material, $80,637,261; finished work, $122,605,296; hands, 47,134. In Ohio for the same period the statistics are:—1850:—Capital, $20,019,538; wages, $13,467,156; raw material, $34,678,019; finished work, $62,692,269; hands, 51,491. In 1860—Capital, $57,295,303; wages, $22,302,989; raw material, $69,800,270; finished work, $121,691,148; hands, 75,602. In 1870—Capital, $141,923,964; wages, $49,066,488; raw material, $157,131,697; finished work, $269,713,610; hands, 137,202. In 1870—Iron only—Capital, $22,856,774; wages, $7,905,101; raw material, $20,852,529; finished work, $35,625,157; hands, 14,943.”

We have here a large amount of the wealth of the States named, invested in manufacturing enterprise, which would not be the case if the country was not favoured with a protective system that prevents their country being made a slaughter market of by foreigners. What secured for England the position she now occupies in wealth and influence amongst the nations of the earth? Certainly not selling the produce of her cultivated farms, nor even the riches of her multitude of shop-keepers, but through the enterprise of her manufacturers who forced their productions into every market in the world, securing vast stores of wealth for themselves and respect for the nation which they represented, and at the same time giving such an impetus to commerce as makes England to-day the first Maritime Power in the world. Then again take Germany, France, Prussia, Belgium and other countries that might be mentioned, all thickly populated; are they supported by tilling the soil? Not by any means. In the countries mentioned every little hamlet, village, town and city is a busy hive of manufacturing industry, and to this fact alone they owe the position of influence and wealth that they now enjoy. All these countries early enjoyed a sound protective policy, and most of them continue it to this day. It is a fact that cannot be disputed that all countries that manufacture for themselves are, as a rule, rich and prosperous, while those countries that import to supply the home demand, are generally poor to what they would be if they manufactured and supplied their own wants. Canada, I regret to say, is in the position of being poor, because she imports much more than she manufactures and will continue to do so until such a change is made in the tariff as will give confidence to capitalists to invest their means in manufacturing industries that will supply a much larger portion of the home demand than is done at present. If the Government will make the present 17½ per cent. tariff 25 per cent., and carefully revise the free list as well as the other rates of duty now charged, and fix them permanently for a definite length of time, I venture to say that you will at once see such a change in the industrial affairs of this country as will astonish the most advanced Free-Trader. One thing more than another that prevents capital from being invested in manufactures in this country is the constant changes that are made in the tariff, and this fact enables those who are in some lines of business to take advantage and charge higher prices than they would if the tariff was settled for a length of time, which would induce others to go into the same lines of business, and thus create competition.

Mr. Wood.

Let us contemplate for a short time the position of some of those countries that have for various reasons adopted the system our opponents are so much in love with. I will ask the House to give me their attention while I read a few extracts from the pen of one of England's ablest writers on the question of protection, as to the effect of free-trade on the manufacturing interests of Ireland. The gentleman is Sergeant Byles, well known to the legal profession.

Another instance of the ruin that free-trade works you will find in Turkey. Her commercial system is a very liberal one, no part of the vast dominions of the Sultan exhibits the good effects of this tariff. Distress and misery meet you in the face at every turn. No manufactures exists there on account of the Sultan's enlightened free-trade views. Many of the Free-Traders of England who hold the bonds and securities of that unhappy country would be rejoiced, I think, if the Sultan would turn Protectionist.

Then we have Spain, Portugal and Mexico, all with a system of low tariff, but no manufactories. How do we find them progressing socially and financially? Will they compare in general intelligence and wealth with many other countries, with advantages far inferior to theirs in soil and climate, but who has the benefit of established manufactures conducted by intelligent energetic mechanics and business men?

One more sample of the baneful effects of free-trade, forced by England on a country that could not resist—the case of the Decca weavers of India—is almost too well known to need repetition. This industry that existed for generations, and prospered in that country, giving employment to thousands of its inhabitants, producing such articles as were required by the natives and for want of a reasonable amount of protection, England, with her large capital and improved machinery, brought utter ruin on all engaged in the muslin trade. Many of the weavers died of starvation, and their families were scattered all over the country. I will ask your attention to a few extracts from the pen of Horace Greeley on this point— He has given the question of free-trade and protection long and careful study.

We have seen what free-trade has done for Ireland, Turkey, Spain, Portugal, Mexico and India. I think the most ardent admirer of the system would not like to see our Dominion reduced to the level of any one of these countries. We will now reverse the picture, and take a view of the position occupied by those countries where a carefully arranged tariff protects their home industries from being crushed out by the influx of the surplus stocks of outsiders, who sell their goods at what they can catch, irrespective of cost of production; and as it is broadly stated by political economists, that protected manufactures are weak and sickly, I undertake to prove that it is only such that are strong and healthy; and that wherever a judicious system of protection exists the country is generally rich and prosperous; its inhabitants producing and exporting to those free-trade countries that do not manufacture for themselves. Do we need stronger arguments than these to convince us that if we are ever to take our place as a manufacturing country we must adopt a system of protection, that will prevent our manufactures from being swamped before they get well and firmly established.

In looking over the trade and navigation returns for 1874, I find that we imported $39,961,654 more than we exported. For 1873, the balance against us was about the same amount, and so on, back to 1868; so that the total imports over exports, in seven years after Confederation, amounted to the enormous sum of $154,866,212, and we are still continuing in the same course.

Need I ask what the result will be if we do not soon put on the breaks? The Commissioner of Customs, Mr. Johnson, takes the free-trade view of this state of things, and argues that the more we import the richer we are, and therefore the balance of trade is a myth. The logical conclusion of this argument, is that a man earning $2,000 per annum may spend $2,500 and still he is getting richer all the time. Will any person credit this conclusion? I admit that for certain improvements, such as railway building, canal enlargement and such like expenditure. We may occasionally run in debt to England for a considerable amount without injury to ourselves. But if we are to continue, year after year, importing what we could make for ourselves, and sending the gold, which is the life blood of the country, to pay for it, we will soon find to our cost that the balance of trade is a reality.

The question—where will the revenue come from if we put on a tariff that will enable our own people to compete with outsiders, under the present exceptional circumstances—is one that is often put by Free-Traders in order to confound the advocate of protection. My answer is, that for some time to come our own manufacturers would not be able to supply all that would be required; and, therefore, with the advanced rate of duty, the necessary amount of revenue would be raised, even if the imports should fall off materially; and when our own people were fully prepared to supply the home demand, the manufacturing population would have increased so much that their consumption of dutiable-paying goods, that could not be produced in this country, would be quite sufficient to supply any deficiency that might arise from the falling off of goods that we were making for ourselves. This is the case in other countries, and should be the same here.

Free-Traders point us to England, and say that she has advanced much more rapidly since she adopted free-trade than she did when she had a protective tariff; and that if we wish to prosper as she has done we must pursue the same course. I answer that the circumstances of the two countries are quite different. If Canada were in England's position she could do as England is now doing, and perhaps with profit. But when England was as Canada is, she did what the advocates of protection say that Canada ought to do now—that is, increase the tariff in the interest of home manufacturers. And when Canada has accumulated anything like the wealth and experience that England and the States have done by manufacturing in place of exporting her raw materials and importing them back manufactured and fit for use, having lost the labour and profits which should have been in the hands of our own people, then perhaps she may try for a time the experience of free-trade. I think after a discussion of the whole matter, the conclusion will be that the Government will bring down a tariff which will give encouragement to our manufacturers. I do not ask them to place a Chinese Wall around this country and keep everybody out of it. If our manufacturers had fair play, they could compete with any country in the world. It is impossible for them without a protective tariff to resist the great experience and enormous wealth of foreign competitors. Some gentlemen in this House cannot believe that the Americans sell their goods here at less than cost, but I know, because I have tested it. I know that in our own goods they are flooding the market with their surplus production. The constituency which I represent is largely interested in the question, and I would be recreant to the trust confided in me if I did not raise my voice in favour of those people who are doing everything they can to compete fairly with the manufacturers of other countries. They are entitled to such encouragement as the Government can give them. If we pursue a policy of free-trade which some hon. members advocate, our factories will be closed and our artizans driven to other countries to find employment. We have large resources, and if we had a protective tariff, capitalists would be encouraged to come in and develop them.

Mr. BERTRAM—I hoped that the motion of the hon. member for Bothwell would carry. It did not contain anything calculated to give rise to this discussion, but the amendment contains within itself matters which would call for a discussion of the great question of protection. It asks for a revision of the tariff, discriminating in favour of home productions. Now, my hon. friend from Hamilton has spoken at considerable length and with a great deal of force from his point of view, asking this House to assent to the proposition that we in Canada should have a protective tariff. Sir, I believe that those gentlemen who have argued this question in this House have somewhat misapprehended the real issue before the country. They say the issue is betwixt Free-Traders and Protectionists. Now, this I utterly deny. I do not think that there is any gentleman in this House, with the exception, perhaps, of one, who has avowed himself to be an absolute Free-Trader. We have a tariff for revenue purposes. I am a believer in a national policy for Canada; but I do not believe in all that is said by those gentlemen who advocate such a policy. I look at it in this way:—Our system differs from the systems of Great Britain and the United States. In England, a customs tariff includes goods such as tea and coffee, goods which do not come into competition with its manufactured articles, and therefore they may charge on them, even with their free-trade views, what duty they like. In the United States again, we have a tariff that is arranged for the absolute purpose of prohibiting the entrance of foreign goods on their market; while in Canada, we have, I think, the happy mean betwixt these two systems—a tariff which, while it encourages what are called our infant industries, brings revenue to the country. This must be sufficiently clear to every gentleman. If we take into consideration the position we hold, and assume for the purpose of argument, that 17½ per cent. represents the difference in the cost of manufactured goods in the United States or in Great Britain, and here in Canada, and if the tariff is raised, as my hon. friend from Hamilton proposes to increase it, to 25 per cent., it is their bounden duty to show that the amount of loss which we will sustain by the loss of 17½ per cent. on all manufactured goods, will be made up to the Dominion by some means which these gentlemen have failed to point out, as I understand it, in connection with the establishment of manufacturing industries. I confess that in approaching this subject I am entirely free from trade prejudices; and I may say further, that while we have protection speeches from hon. gentlemen who represent city constituencies and manufacturing districts, and probably free-trade speeches from gentlemen representing rural constituencies, I stand among the members who represent constituencies partly rural and partly manufacturing. In these constituencies are all the interests of the Dominion which we have to take into consideration in discussing this matter. I would ask if the tariff was raised to-morrow to 25 per cent. would it make the manufacturers of this Dominion continuously prosperous? Why, Sir, we have only to point to the United States and Great Britain in this relation. I saw lately in the newspapers, that in Glasgow, more mechanics were at present idle than ever had been so previously within the memory of the oldest inhabitant; and if we examine the condition of what is generally known as the Black Country, we will find an immense number of artisans out of employment. Why, it is one of those things concerning which any gentleman who understands anything at all about financial or trade questions, knows that these periods of inflation and depression come just as regularly and as surely as any natural phenomena; and it would be absurd to say that manufacturers in this country would be continuously prosperous if 25 per cent. duties were to-morrow imposed. I would ask the hon. gentlemen, who have a particular interest in the farming community—and I believe that there are many such here—if it would enhance the price of agricultural products in case such a tariff were put in force to-morrow? I think not. Viewing the question and from an unprejudiced stand-point, I am free to admit that certain articles of foreign produce would most certainly obtain a higher price if there were more manufactures in this country. I allude to the little etceteras, which farmers who live in the neighbourhood of cities would buy; but I utterly deny that the great products of this Dominion—wheat, barley, oats, butter, cheese, and everything else almost that we raise—would secure advanced prices to the extent of one single dollar. The prices of these articles depend upon those ruling in foreign markets.

Many manufactures in this country do not demand or require protection. I need not instance many of them; but I may cite the great industry of making manufacturers' implements. As to the question brought up by my hon. friend from Hamilton—the iron trade—I happen to know something about it; and I do not take his view as to the causes leading to the difference between the prices paid for articles imported from England and the United States. The period of collapse comes sooner in the latter than in the former, where bar-iron rose from somewhere about £7 17s 6d a ton in 1872, to £15 per ton; and she having the market of the world at her feet, did not so soon feel the pressure of hard times and over-production as our neighbours. We had, therefore, this spectacle—that while the price of bar-iron was kept up in England a very considerable time, it fell in the United States, inducing our own Western merchants to import it. This, I believe, Sir, is the reason why iron has been so imported. Now, I contend that our manufactures have prospered and thriven under the present tariff. I do not know of any class in Canada which, during past years, has done better; and if you examine the commercial newspapers, you will find that a much larger proportion of our merchants have failed in business than of manufacturers. I had the honour of meeting a few days ago, a deputation of the latter in a constituency near Ottawa, where they claimed an addition of amount of duty. I asked them what I consider a very pertinent question indeed—to show their balance sheets during the last year or two, and in what condition their business was; and I then said, what I have no doubt is the experience of many commercial men, that during this period the amount placed on the right side of the profit-and-loss account in their ledgers is very fair indeed.

Now, if these industries have generally thriven—and I can remember when, not many years ago, our manufacturers were very few in number—it seems to me that the Ministers have to-day a very serious matter to face in raising the tariff, arranged by the late and present Administration to obtain revenue merely; and it would seem to me that it would upset all our calculations if we entered on the new phase of preparing a tariff with the pure object of protection in view. I urge them to consider in what condition such a mad course would place Canada.

We hear a great deal about the slaughter process. I admit that it is indeed a great hardship for Canadian manufacturers if American goods can be sold here at less than cost; but with their high protective policy they are worse off than we are, who have no such tariff to shield our industries from the competition of the foreigner. Under such circumstances it would not become us to enter upon the very same course that led the American industries to such a condition. I am surprised that we have never heard during the long course of this debate, of the Canadian lumbermen, who are to-day forced to slaughter their goods on the American market; but do we grant them protection? Certainly from the point of view of my hon. friends from Hamilton and Wellington, we should do so; and I think that it would be very pertinent to ask for a Committee to enquire into the reason why the lumber trade is depressed, &c. My hon. friend from Hamilton made a very extraordinary statement. I think that it must have by error slipped into his speech. He alleged that manufacturers obtained larger profits in Canada than across the border by some 6½ per cent. I say then, so much the better for Canada, and also by all means let us remain in our present position under these circumstances, and not fly to evils we know not of. Every Canadian ought to take a deep interest in these questions. I know of none more important than the trade policy, and I only hope that every gentleman in this House—as I am sure they will do—will endeavor to understand them perfectly, treating them with the great consideration which they merit at the hands of every well-wisher of the Dominion. Our manufacturing industries have prospered during the last fifteen years, and it is a question whether protection should be increased to twenty or even twenty-five per cent. I am sure, at all events, that it will meet with that consideration from the Ministers of the Crown, and members of this House, which it deserves.

Mr. WALLACE—I have read that, in the multiplicity of counsel, there is wisdom; and if this be true, the Committee for which my hon. friend from Bothwell asks can have no difficulty in arriving at a correct opinion regarding the causes of the depression from which we are suffering. Notwithstanding the many theories volunteered, I am going to take the liberty of submitting to this House the view I hold concerning these causes. I am aware that this will not meet with the sympathies of the members of this House; nay, I am sure, that it will be ridiculed by the majority; yet it will not stagger my own faith in it unless I am shown that my reasons are incorrect. I believe that the depression is due to the system of credit, a necessity under our policy. It is false and vicious, impoverishing the many and enriching the few, destroying industry and degrading the people. Now, we are told that this country has been to a very great degree prosperous; and we have mentioned as evidence of this prosperity the trade returns, showing the volume of business transacted. We are told that the whole of our business has increased immensely in the past year, but I should like to ask if importations are necessarily an evidence of prosperity or of increasing wealth? I think that a careful analysis of the facts set forth in the trade returns will show that our imports are rather an evidence of indebtedness than of our wealth. The imports of the past year were $123,000,000, the exports $77,000,000; making a difference between the imports and exports of $45,000,000. I would like to ask how is this? How are we going to pay this $45,000,000? The English bankers, merchants or other persons must be carrying this indebtedness for us. I have yet to learn that the amount of a man's or a people's indebtedness can be considered as an evidence of wealth or prosperity. From 1868 to 1875 the volume of our exports has exceeded the imports by something over $200,000,000. Now, if we go on at this rate, what must the result be? What are we suffering from now? Nothing more than this: That the English creditors are calling upon Canadian debtors to pay their liabilities, and the payment of these liabilities is depressing the industries of the country.

Mr. BERTRAM.

I have said that credit is a miserable system. We have a monetary system that does not expand as the industry of the country expands. It is impossible make a limited and slightly increasing quantity measure a larger and much more quickly increasing quantity, and the tendency of that system is to destroy the industry of the country. What I think would be the remedy for the evils under which the country is suffering is not, as some gentlemen have been advocating, protection to industry. It appears to me to be the greatest absurdity imaginable to tax industry for its own protection. How can you benefit industry by taxing it? Taxes to my mind are a necessary evil—a consequence of Government. If we could carry on the Government of the country without taxation, we might dispense with Government; but I cannot understand the logic of taxing industry to protect it. I had always thought that taxation tended to the destruction of an industry. The article taxed is not increased in value to the consumer, neither does it benefit the producer; but I think it is possible to levy duties in a way that would be more conducive to prosperity than they are at present levied. As long as revenue is raised by taxation it should also be so raised as to stimulate and encourage industries that are natural to the country, without encouraging a hot-house growth of manufacturers. Would it be wise to tax tea, coffee, sugar and rice so as to protect their growth in this country? I think it would not be in the interests of the consumers of this country to have such a system as this would imply. I therefore hold that the true policy is so to levy taxes as to give an impetus to manufactures, the raw materials of which are our natural products.

I believe that credit is the cause of the periodical panics that we have; that they are as certain to follow as that the sun shall shine; that they are a necessity of the system. Our currency in its volume is not in a ratio corresponding with the industry of the country. Therefore credit has to come in and fill, as it were, the vacuum existing between them. And what is the consequence? The country which, under this system, is most quickly prosperous, the more quickly do reverses come. It is impossible that it can be otherwise, for the simple reason that the basis of the superstructure of our industry is false; and as we raise the superstructure, it widens and extends until it over-balances and down it comes to the base again. It is something like this that causes the trouble. Suspicion is breathed, confidence is destroyed; and the whole superstructure, which looks fair and reasonable, tumbles down like the card-house of a child; and where apparent prosperity was, there is nothing left but ruin and misery. That is, I believe, what we are suffering from at the present moment. Some gentlemen have said that it is inflation. Well, what is it that causes inflation? It is the same abominable system of credit. No man will give more for a thing than it is worth if he pays for it, but he who deals on credit, buys on speculation in the hope of an advance in value to make money. If we had a monetary system equal to the wants of the people this thing would be remedied.

Again, I am told that it is over-production from which we are suffering. This appears to me extraordinary. I have always been led to believe that production created happiness, and how can it be the cause of misery? I believe that over-production is of itself an impossibility—that the wants of men are as illimitable as human thought—and man is able to consume all that he can produce. They talk of over-production! Why look around the world and see the millions that have not enough to clothe them, not enough food to feed them, nor enough houses to shelter them. Is there over-production when many of the the citizens of Toronto, Hamilton, and Montreal are starving? Is it because of over-production that they are suffering? No; it is for the want of the means to get that which is necessary for their sustenance and comfort. Our credit system, I believe, will be the ruin of this country. We boast of the prosperity of Canada, but is a man prosperous who builds a house on credit? Our public works are carried on with borrowed money; our banks do business with borrowed money; our railroads are run with borrowed money, our municipal indebtedness we owe in England; and if the English creditor came and demanded payment of our liabilities, where would our prosperity be? Would we be able to liquidate our liabilities?

Some speak of a retaliatory tariff. I don't believe in anything of that kind. We ought to adopt a policy, not in opposition to other countries, but conducive to Canadian interest. It is not for the people of the United States or Great Britain that this House is called upon to legislate. It is for the Canadian people, and a policy which will benefit our industries is the only one which should have the sanction of this House—not a retaliatory policy, but one which will stimulate Canadian enterprises. I believe that the monetary system is the real cause, not only of the difficulties of this country, but creates the conflict between capital and labour all over the world. No question can come before the people of the civilized world to-day that is so important to humanity as this one of the relations between capital and labour. Between the two there is an apparent antagonism when there should really be none, and I believe the monetary system is responsible for the Trades' Unions in England and America, and the International in France.

There is no antagonism in reality, because capital is only labour realized, and what is injurious to one must be destructive to the other. The interests of the one are identical with those of the other, and this whole trouble, this financial crisis, under which Canada to-day is suffering, is not confinied to, this country. It cannot be for the reason that has been assigned—the want of protection to manufactures—because as the hon. member for Peterboro' has shown, the same evils exist in the countries where manufacturers enjoy great protection. It cannot be because we are a free-trade country; because the same troubles exist in England. Some better reason than either must be assigned for the financial depression that afflicts nearly every country in the world at the present time. I believe it is the faulty monetary system that is now paralyzing the world.

Mr. BLAIN moved in amendment to the amendment, that the word "financial" be struck out, and the words "manufacturing and commercial" be substituted in lieu thereof.

Mr. SPEAKER said this would alter the original motion.

Mr. DECOSMOS said he would relieve the hon. gentleman of his difficulty. It was the wish of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House not to press the amendment to a vote; and he was perfectly willing to meet their views, as he could not see how any good to the cause of protection could be got by voting on it. He moved for leave to withdraw the amendment.

The motion was carried.

Mr. BUNSTER—I believe I was the seconder of that amendment; I do not feel bound, nor can I see any good reason why it should be withdrawn.

Mr. SPEAKER—I have declared the amendment withdrawn.

Mr. BLAIN moved his amendment to the original motion, and said—It seems to me that the original resolution does not cover the ground that is desired. The House admits there is a serious financial depression. It will be found to exist among the manufacturers and mercantile men; the agricultural interest is very prosperous.

I have always favoured protection, and I do not hesitate to say I am a Protectionist. I know it requires some courage boldly to avow this. There are many in this country who acquired their ideas of trade and commerce under different circumstances from those in which our country is; and in the face of the many able men who have written on the subject it requires some courage to assert that Canada should adopt a protective policy.

I conceive protection arises out of nationality, as naturally as the stream flows from its source to the sea. If we desire to have a national or central power for the purpose of defence or attack, it becomes absolutely necessary that we should protect our people and look to the national welfare. I conceive we have looked to the welfare of the nation when we have guarded all its different interests. I do not think the gentlemen in this House have looked to the consequences of free-trade in England; where it has enriched some, it has impoverished many more. What is the result when you examine the question? Nearly every working-man has retrograded from the little property he owned, and is on the rent-list. Look at the legislation that has had to be enacted in the British House of Commons, in order to protect the people against this system of holding men's labour. The first legislation was to relieve the children, then the women, and then the men; and the moment the capitalist was limited in his dealing with the workingmen, when he was no longer able to compel them to work eighteen or nineteen hours instead of nine or ten, for a day's labour, then he could no longer monopolize the markets of the world. It rises naturally from the doctrine laid down. They will tell you that a capitalist ought to be allowed to make as large a return on his capital as he can. It will be found that the whole system of political economy in England rests upon three great pillars. Smith's Book, written a hundred years ago, is the first pillar of the system; then Menlins' system of population which was the second great discovery in this science; and Mr. Ardles' discovery of the system of rents is the third. Through the whole system of political economy these three principles run. Menlins lays it down that the population increases so fast that the production of the necessaries of life cannot keep pace with it. This does not apply here. We have abundance of land, and we want population to till it, so that it is a fallacy. There they have reduced free-trade to a science. I find it asserted in the London Times that those who do not believe in free trade are simpletons, and those who dare to dispute it are not entitled to be heard at all. A very great many people will dispute it, notwithstanding what the Times says. I believe that political economy is not a science. I deny to it the right to be ranked among the sciences. You will find no two of its exponents agree on its principles. I believe this system of protection affects the population of this country to a very great extent. No less than 500,000 native-born Canadians have gone to live in the United States, where they have greater opportunities to better their circumstances. I think we ought to endeavour to keep our own people in our own country, and induce others to come and settle amongst us by building up our manufacturing industries. I represent an agricultural constituency, and I deny that the farmers are going to be injured by protection. So long as we continue to export the surplus products of the country, instead of bringing the consumer and manufacturer here, we must of necessity suffer. Our farmers have only two or three different articles that they can export—wheat, peas and barley. They also send cheese; but it is a very late industry. We find that wheat alone is the grain we can send to the markets of the world, we can send barley only to the United States. The farmer has not a satisfactory market for his oats, peas, turnips and the thousand and one things that the farm can produce. If he had the consumer beside him he would have a profitable market for all he could raise. The consequence of this want of market in Ontario for years was that the farmers were obliged to crop their soil with wheat until they exhausted their farms; and thousands of square acres along the St. Lawrence have been absolutely impoverished simply because farmers have been compelled to raise wheat and barley year after year in order to pay off their lands. If we had manufacturing industries there would have been a home market for the farm produce, and these elements taken from the soil could have been returned to it to enrich it again, while the farmer would realize increased prices for everything he raised. I remember about thirty years ago when eggs were sold at $2\frac{1}{2}$ pence per dozen, because the farmers could not take them to market, and nearly every other product of the farm was the same; now we have a more dense population, and everything the farmer has to raise finds a ready market and high prices, so that he can carry on his agricultural operations on scientific principles and improve the soil. But if you go back to the newly settled parts of the country, where there are no markets, you will find that the very difficulties that existed in the older neighbourhoods thirty years ago prevail in that neighbourhood at the present time. I feel that I should like the Finance Minister to come down with a policy that would enable us to protect our home industries, that would enable us to bring the producer and consumer together.

Mr. MILLS—I make no particular objection to the amendment of the phraseology of my motion in the direction suggested by the hon. member for West York. I think that the motion will remain substantially the same. My motion is not open to the objection which the right hon. member for Kingston and the hon. member for Cumberland have raised.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—No objection.

Mr. MILLS—It certainly is an objection from our point of view. The right hon. gentleman says he has no objection to the motion, but he did say that the motion was in effect one of want of confidence in the Administration. I may tell these hon. gentlemen that they show a very great deal more courage on the Opposition benches than they displayed on this side of the House. If my motion is a motion of want of confidence, certainly there were a great many motions proposed by hon. gentlemen, when they were on this side of the House, entitled to this appellation. I remember when certain gentlemen had claims against the Government, instead of the Government assuming the responsibility of disposing of these claims, they permitted their friends on this side of the House to propose the appointment of Select Committees to enquire into their validity. Then I find that the right hon. gentleman had promised in the Speech from the Throne in 1869 an Insolvency Bill, but after the measure was introduced, he seemed to think that the Administration was not competent to decide what the character of that Bill should be; so he moved for a Select Committee, and the measure was placed in the hands of Mr. Abbott, at that time member for Argenteuil. Then I find on the 21st day of April of that year, Hon. Mr. Rose moved for the appointment of a Select Committee, consisting of Hon. Mr. Rose, Sir John A. Macdonald, Hon. J. S. Macdonald, Hon. Mr. Wood, Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Gibbs, Mr. Blake, Mr. Street, Sir George Cartier, Sir A. T. Galt, Messrs. Holton, Chauveau, Dunkin, Tilley, Smith, McLellan, Macdonald, (Lunenburg) and Hon. Mr. Campbell to take into consideration the subject of banking and currency of the Dominion. The Finance Minister of that day did not see proper to bring down to the House a measure on that subject without referring the whole question to a Select Committee. The hon. gentleman referred to Hume's motion. He said Hume in 1826 moved a resolution substantially the same as mine, to consider the state of the nation, as a Committee of the Whole House—not a Select Committee. But Hume did not move that the House go into committee of the whole; he moved that an Address be presented to the Crown (His Majesty), praying that he will be graciously pleased to take into consideration the present state of the nation, and cause an enquiry into the cause of the wide-spread distress. This was considered a direct attack on the financial policy of the Government.

Mr. BLAIN.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Hear, hear.

Mr. MILLS—These resolutions were forty-seven in number, attacking the whole financial policy of the Administration. It was impossible that the Government could consent to the motion without admitting their financial policy had been exceedingly mischievous to the country. Hume says:

“He had, however, for a considerable time taken a view of the country very different from that which seemed to guide their policy, and which induced them to continue imposing a rate of taxation much greater than our resources enabled us to bear. His desire now was to remove from their minds the erroneous impressions they had taken upon that subject and to show clearly to them and to the House that the course which they were pursuing would, if not checked, bring ruin and misery upon every class in the Kingdom."

That was the statement made by Hume. Further on he says :—

"For the first part—the currency—he could say boldly that Ministers had done very great mischief in their late measures with respect to the system of banking. They had in all their regulations confounded the principles of currency with the principles of banking, and been led by that mistake to do infinite mischief. In order to show the course which, in his opinion, ought to be adopted, he would begin by pointing out what was the cause of the evils; and they would then better understand the remedy. He should, at the same time, he hoped, remove the impression which prevailed upon the subject of the taxation under which they now suffered, and which was greater than had ever been borne by this or any other nation at any period of history."

Hume's resolutions were therefore a direct attack upon the whole fiscal policy of the Administration. It was impossible that they could vote according to his motion without voting a want of confidence in themselves. But when I look at the discussion which took place in England in 1847, immediately after the financial crisis that occurred in that year, I observe Parliament was called together at an earlier period than usual in consequence of this financial crisis, and we find Sir Chas. Wood, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, moving, observe, the following resolution :—

"That a select committee be appointed to inquire into the causes of the recent commercial distress, and how far it has been affected by the laws for regulating the issue of banknotes payable on demand."

Now, I ask the hon. gentleman if my motion is for a vote of want of confidence, coming from a supporter of the Administration agreeing in the policy of the Government. If Sir Chas. Wood's motion was not a motion of want of confidence neither is mine. It is perfectly clear with regard to any one of these matters whether it be relating to the commercial distress, the currency of the country, or the banking system, to it is competent for the House take such steps as are necessary to enquire into the causes of the financial depression. When the right hon. member for Kingston said he saw a vote of want of confidence in my motion, he saw what was not there, and what I am sure the majority of this House did not discover. When I introduced this resolution to the House I endeavoured to avoid discussing the question of free-trade and protection. I pointed out as perfectly as I could some considerations which I think would show all those gentlemen who profess protective views that what they predicted as absolutely certain as a consequence of the alteration in the tariff, did not flow from that source, and we were justified in asking for this enquiry. We have heard some extraordinary statements in this discussion; no two of those who advocated protection made the same allegations with regard to the cause of the depression; and I am sure that the majority of this House would consider, from the different opinions advanced, that I am justified in asking for a Committee for the purpose of collecting evidence to enable every man in this House to come to a conclusion for himself. Some gentlemen adopt a line of argument that would seem to indicate that a large debt was a great blessing; that if we were suffering from serious financial depression, that we should increase the burthen of the population at large. I have no doubt people understand how this conclusion was arrived at. As far as I am concerned I am justified in asking for a Committee to make further investigations and say from what particular point of view these gentlemen look at our financial position. I remember Sir Francis Hincks saying that he never heard a people so anxiously clamouring for increased taxation. That was exceedingly gratifying to the Finance Minister of that day, and I have no doubt if the Finance Minister of to day should deem it necessary to impose further burthens on the people, he would be greatly encouraged to do so by the gentlemen who have expressed themselves so strongly in favour of protection. I have heard all sorts of opinions put forward with regard to our condition; and one hon. gentleman from Hamilton informed the House this evening, that we are not in as favourable condition as Massachusetts—in fact he thought that a State 200 years older than we are should not be any more wealthy or prosperous than we are; that the wealth of Ontario, which is not three-quarters of a century old, ought to be as great in proportion as that of a country with two centuries of improvements.

Now, it is quite true the Americans have, since the civil war, increased taxation from an average of 15 per cent. to an average of something like 40 per cent. The effect on the New England States generally was to reduce the assessed value of land. In Massachusetts, where it averaged $100 per acre, the reduction was from that sum to $84.24 per acre. The assessed valuation of the State fell about $1,000,000, so that the fixed capital of the agriculturists was damaged to that extent by the duties imposed on imports coming into the United States. The whole real estate of New England was reduced 15 per cent., that of Pennsylvania 10 per cent. We find that the United States, after all, is essentially an agricultural country. Agriculture represents $3,500,000,000; cottons, $77,000,000; woollens, $69,000,000; iron, $119,000,000; shoe and leather interest, $222,000,000.

Mr. WOOD—Is that the whole of the United States, or Massachusetts only?

Mr. MILLS—The whole of the United States. These are facts which cannot be overlooked. In this investigation we are obliged to look at the effect upon the whole country, and every class, and not upon a particular class whose business may be for the moment suffering from depression. I have examined the trade returns of the United States since this discussion commenced, and I find in 1870 the imports were $452,875,665; in 1871, $578,759,518; in 1872, $573,912,888; in 1873, $684,633,736, of which $200,000,000 was nearly free. We find the importations of free goods gradually increasing, and the importation of those highly taxed to some extent diminishing. When we look at the exports for the last year, we notice that they were $644,000,000, or something over $40,000,000 less than the imports. That includes $44,472,000 in gold, and

Mr. MILLS.

$33,000,000 in silver, which some hon. gentlemen do not consider articles of ordinary exportation. Deduct these from the exports, and you find the exports reduced to $567,000,000 against imports $684,000,000.

Mr. WOOD—Does that include all the foreign bonds of the United States shipped to England?

Mr. MILLS—It does not. I shall not trouble the House further. I have briefly noticed the objections raised by some hon. gentlemen, but I express, myself, no decided opinion with regard to them. I think it is quite right and proper for this House to make an enquiry. I believe there is a general agreement among hon. members that it is not desirable to make frequent alterations in the tariff, and in order that ultimately it may be possible to place the tariff upon a rational and permanent basis, it is necessary that a full enquiry should be had into the causes of the financial and commercial depression.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—My hon. friend who has just sat down disputed the position I took the other night, that this amounted, at the time and under the circumstances when it was moved, to a motion of want of confidence in the Government. Of course I knew perfectly well my hon. friend was a devoted supporter of the Administration, and did not want to injure his friends, but I said his motion would go further than he desired. I think it is quite clear from the readiness with which my hon. friend accepted the amendment of the hon. gentleman from West York, he must have come to that conclusion himself. He must have seen that a motion to appoint a Committee to enquire into the financial condition of the country, the Government being specially charged with that duty, was a different thing from a motion to investigate the cause of the depression in the manufacturing and commercial interests. I am quite satisfied when my hon. friend from West York moved this amendment, he had some understanding with the Treasury Benches.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—He had no understanding with me whatever. Until he got up I was not aware that he was going to move an amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—It looks remarkably like it, because the resolution as moved by my hon. friend at first asks for due enquiry into the causes of the present financial depression, and it assumes that there is a financial depression; but the amendment, instead of asking for an investigation into it, seeks to enquire into the causes of the financial and commercial depression. Therefore, my hon. friend has really abandoned the whole of his motion in accepting the amendment, limiting the enquiry to be made; and I say that this is the greatest proof to my mind of the real secret feeling in my hon. friend's own breast—of course we cannot expect him to exhibit it openly here—that the objection I took is admitted and has been well grounded. So we are to have a very harmless enquiry as to the state of two branches, and not of the two most important branches of the industries of this country; and after discussing the matter for three days, we come to have a limited and partial Committee to make an investigation, not into the whole of our financial affairs, which, in my opinion, would have been the case if left to a Special Committee, or discussed in Committee of the Whole—substantially an enquiry into the condition of the nation. My hon. friend says that the late Administration allowed a number of Committees to act. Of course, if the Government of the day asked the assistance of the House, or of the Committee of the whole House, or of a Special Committee of the House, they had the right to do so. They could take the whole House into their confidence, and ought to do so in most cases when they ask the assistance of Special Committees.

My hon. friend did not, it is quite true, move the motion in a hostile feeling towards the Administration; and when I asked my question the other day, it was simply a matter for common sense. I think that it must have, so struck the common sense of this House, that when we have a Speech from the Throne, declaring the fact that there was stagnation in business and trade generally, from sympathy with the depression in the United States that economy was required, and that the estimates were going to be prepared in an economical spirit, owing to the loss of revenue caused by this stagnation; and when the Minister of Finance informed us that the Budget was to be brought down in a few days, and the estimates laid before us—they are before us now—previous to which time we would not be in a position to know what the policy of the Government was, my hon. friend came behind the reasons given in the Speech, and moved for a Committee to enquire into the causes of the financial depression, the Committee, of course, being empowered to report from time to time, and send for persons and papers, sitting—if the proceeding were to be of any value—for weeks, and until very late in the Session. When we were told that the Government was coming down at an early date with their financial policy, it was equivalent to saying we will take out of the hands of the Government that question. This was what I demanded the other day, and this was the necessary result of my hon. friend's motion if the Committee were granted. A Committee of this kind, however, is a perfectly harmless one; and its enquiries have been limited. I dare say that a desire to get rid of the inconvenience of having substantially a vote of want of confidence on the Journals, has induced my hon. friend to accept the motion in amendment. Why, were it otherwise, did the hon. members who agreed to sit on this Committee, feel that they must keep their minds open regarding the subject and causes of the financial depression? My hon. friend in his speech has just said, that he did not intend to express any opinion on these questions until the evidence was taken. Another hon. member, who is on the Committee, yesterday stated that he would not give an opinion, and he thought that he ought not to do so on account of his position. Well, what is the consequence? Although he would not express an opinion in this House as to the causes of the financial depression, he would be called upon to vote, whether he intimated his views or not, and express his opinions in the strongest manner possible by giving his vote concerning the best means of relieving the depression.

They will be obliged to vote; and therefore give their views with reference to the Government's policy touching this depression; the extent of it, the nature of it, the causes of it, and the means of remedying it, before the result can be known. And thus those gentlemen, who felt themselves prohibited from doing so, with respect to the financial depression and the means of remedying it, may be, and certainly will be called upon to vote both after the Budget is brought down and the financial policy of the Government is disclosed. These are the grounds, which I took the other night, and to which I still adhere.

The motion in amendment, which has been accepted by my hon. friend, makes it a very harmless enquiry, like the motions made during previous Sessions concerning the state of agriculture, and the state of manufactures. All these are very well in their way, as I said, when I took the position I first did; and I tell my hon. friend that he has altogether changed the position he took originally, when he accepted the amendment.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—My hon. friend remarks that an enquiry into the causes of depression in one branch of industry is very well, and so with regard to two branches, but as to three, four or five, it is a vote of want of confidence. My hon. friend from Bothwell pointed out that two very large branches of occupation—the commercial and manufacturing—are in a state of stagnation, and that this caused a financial depression. He moved an enquiry into the causes of that depression. My hon. friend from West York pointed out what these two subjects are, in terms embraced in the amendment, and the hon. member for Bothwell accepted that amendment. This is substantially what it was. He was right then and he is right now.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I suggest as an amendment that the word "ruining" be embraced in the motion.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The amendment to the motion is not yet carried. Perhaps the hon. member might ask the hon. member for West York to introduce that suggestion into his amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I would just say, that of all the industries in this country, there is none of greater importance than the mining interest; and I regret to state that of all our industries none is suffering in so remarkable a degree. I wish that it be added to the list.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I would suggest something of the same character with relation to other branches of trade.

Hon. Messrs. Mackenzie, Blake, and other Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, Hear.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I am glad to find that my suggestion meets with so much approval in the House. I allude to two other branches in which the prosperity of the country is very deeply involved,—I mean the great shipping and lumbering interests.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I would suggest that there should be also included the branch of manufacturing tariffs.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—My hon. friend the Finance Minister will excuse me. I find that for the purposes of taxation, the lumber and shipping interests are considered, irrespective of manufacturing interests, for the purposes of the Administration; and when it suits the purposes of the Administration to specially consider them, then I prefer to have it done in my own way.

Mr. GORDON—I just rise to correct my hon. friend for Hamilton, regarding one statement contained in the statistics he quoted. He stated that the bulk of the iron imported into Canada during the past year came from the United States and not from Britain. Referring to the trade returns, I find, Sir, that the amount of iron imported from these respective countries during the last year, was: Great Britain 53,422 tons; the United States 6,986 tons; or altogether about 80 per cent. from the United States as against Great Britain.

Mr. WOOD—The statement made by the hon. gentleman is not correct.

Mr. MILLS—Mr. Currier having refused to act on the Committee, I ask that Mr. McDougall of Renfrew be his substitute.

The amendment being carried,

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said—I move, seconded by Sir John A. Macdonald, that the original motion, as amended, be amended by adding the words “the mining,” after the word “manufacturing.”

This amendment was adopted, and

Hon. Mr. TUPPER expressed it as his opinion that the shipping and lumbering interests were included in the terms of the motion.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I have no doubt that my hon. friend is very sincere, but if he will tell me how ship-building, one of the great industries in our country, is a manufacturing industry, then I would be satisfied with the suggestion.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Then I suggest that my hon. friend for Cumberland do that at his leisure after we adjourn.

Mr. MASSON—Since such a scope is to be given to the enquiry, the agricultural interest might as well be added. I am told that at the present moment this interest is suffering in Quebec. Produce cannot be sold, and there are practical agriculturists in the House who could act on the Committee. I suggest that Mr. Benoit be put on the Committee.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT — A motion will be made for a Select Committee for that special purpose.

Mr. SPEAKER—The amendment suggested, is out of order.

The amendment of the Hon. Mr. Mitchell was seconded by Mr. Masson.

Mr. KILLAM—I do not think that there is any depression in the shipping and fishing interests.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—It ought to be enquired into. What is proposed to be added is unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—People who know more about it than the Minister of Justice think it necessary.

Mr. SPEAKER — It rests entirely with the House.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I was glad to hear from a gentleman so well acquainted with the shipping interest as the hon. member for Yarmouth, that the shipping interest is in an eminently prosperous condition. While paying great respect to his intimate acquaintance and knowledge of that interest, I must say that my information is of a totally different description. My information is that this most important interest in this Dominion has rarely been in a state of greater depression than to-day—that the owners of ships throughout the country are suffering somewhat, and instead of receiving money are very frequently called upon to pay money for the capital they have invested. While I should have listened with great pleasure to the statement, if correct, I listened with greater surprise than pleasure to the statement the hon. gentleman has made.

Mr. MITCHELL—I should like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman for Yarmouth to one fact. I have received a communication from New Orleans, a port which gives employment to a large portion of our own tonnage, to the effect that vessels there are not earning money, and are not therefore in a prosperous condition.

Mr. KILLAM—I must explain that these hon. gentlemen have somewhat misunderstood me. The fact is that the shipping of this country is employed in all parts of the world, and in some parts freights are low and unprofitable. But what I wished to convey was that as a general rule if the trade was not sufficiently prosperous, we need not enquire the cause in this House—that we should leave matters to take their course and the depression in time will disappear in itself.

The amendment proposed by Mr. Mitchell was then carried.

On motion of the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, the name of Mr. McDougall was substituted for that of Mr. Currier.

The House adjourned at Thirty-five minutes past Ten p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 21, 1876.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton)—To amend the Act to authorize the incorporation of Boards of Trade in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. CHARLTON—To amend the Act regarding the Transportation of Cattle.

REPORTS.

Hon. Mr. SMITH brought down the Supplementary Report of the Marine and Fisheries Department.

PRINTING RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether any steps had been taken to get the papers laid before the House relating to the Shipping interests printed for distribution among the members of this House?

Hon. Mr. SMITH said he had not taken any such steps, but he would be very glad to have them printed.

After a brief discussion—

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL moved that the papers be referred to the Printing Committee. Carried.

GUYON ISLAND LIGHT-HOUSE.

Mr. MACKAY (Cape Breton), asked whether the Government intend constructing the Guyon Island Light-house, for which an appropriation was made last year?

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Tenders were invited last summer, and a man by the name of Cameron sent in the lowest. The contract was awarded to him. He was notified accordingly, but he declined to enter into the contract. His tender was $2,130. The next lowest was $2,960, and the contract was awarded to that contractor, who has entered into it, and by the terms of the agreement the light-house will be finished by August next.

THE PATENT ACT.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked whether it is the intention of the Government, during the present Session, to introduce any amendments to the Patent Act so that the public may be better guarded against persons selling Patent rights?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—There is no present intention to amend the Patent Act. I took the opportunity of seeing my hon. friend with reference to the precise meaning of this question, and I will confer further with him on the subject, but as I at present understand it, I do not propose to make any amendment to the Act.

Mr. KILLAM.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY FENCE.

Mr. McINTYRE asked whether the Government has accepted of any of the tenders for the construction of the Prince Edward Island Railway Fence; if not, what action do they intend to take regarding it?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Government did not accept any tenders. They were all considered too high, and instructions have been given to the engineer in charge of the road to get out some of the materials in order to do the fencing by day labor.

CONNECTIONS WITH THE PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. MASSON asked whether it is the intention of the Government to adopt any means to assure the construction of a line of railway to connect Portage du Fort, proposed terminus of the projected Quebec Government Railway, with the subsidized portion of the Canada Central Railway?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The matter has not been brought under the consideration of the Government in any way further than this, that I requested a year ago the Chief Engineer of the Northern Colonization Road to join with the two other engineers, and ascertain whether a crossing could be had and connection made at that point. There has been no further communication, I think, between any of the Companies interested and the Government on the subject up to the present time. I may say I will be very glad to show my hon. friend the report of these engineers if he desires it.

INSPECTORS OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Mr. GORDON asked—1st. What amount of salary is intended to be paid to District Inspectors of Weights and Measures; 2nd. Amount of salary to be paid to Deputy Inspectors; 3rd. From what date will salaries of Inspectors and Deputy Inspectors be paid; 4th. Will return of expenses of Inspectors and Deputies be required to be certified to under oath; 5th. When will the Inspection Act come into operation?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The amount of salary is graduated by the population of the districts. Nearly all the salaries, however, are $500, except in some of the larger cities and districts where there is a much greater amount of work. The salaries will date from the time of the Inspectors sending in their bonds. The return of expenses will be made according to the Act. The Inspection Law will come into operation as soon as the Inland Revenue Department have all their arrangements completed, and I believe they are finished now. I may add the Inspectors are paid not exactly according to population, for in the large cities of Montreal, Quebec and Toronto the mercantile business controls the salary to a large extent, as ten times the business will be done in these particular cities that is done in rural districts of the same population.

HARBOUR OF REFUGE ON LAKE ONTARIO.

Mr. GORDON asked whether it is the intention of the Government to create a Harbour of Refuge on Lake Ontario between Toronto and Kingston with sufficient depth of water to accommodate vessels drawing fourteen feet of water?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the intention of the Government to propose anything of the kind this Session, either there or elsewhere.

PROPERTY AND CIVIL RIGHTS.

Mr. BLAIN enquired whether it is the intention of the Government in commencing the work of consolidating the Statute Law to take any steps to bring into uniformity all or any of the Laws relative to Property and Civil Rights in Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and of the procedure of all or any of the Courts of those three Provinces under Section 94 of the British North America Act?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Two matters are referred to in the question which may no doubt be connected with each other. It is not the intention of the Government to take any steps towards the latter.

LIGHTHOUSE ON BALD HEAD ISLAND.

Mr. BIGGAR enquired whether the Government intend constructing a Lighthouse on the Island of Bald Head, in Lake Ontario, in the Province of Ontario, for which an appropriation was made last year?

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I can inform my hon. friend that it is the intention of Government to construct a lighthouse there. The plans are now ready, and invitations for tenders will be issued during the week.

THE HARBOUR OF QUEBEC.

Mr. FRECHETTE asked whether it is the intention of the Government to have the South Shore represented among the five Commissioners to be appointed by the Executive for the Harbour of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The matter is under the consideration of the Government at present.

GRAVING DOCK FOR QUEBEC.

Mr. FRECHETTE enquired whether the Government have come to a decision with regard to the site of the proposed Graving Dock for the Harbour of Quebec; or whether it is the intention of the Government to send their Engineers to examine the different contemplated sites in the proper season to ascertain the action of the ice?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Government Engineers are at present examining the sites, and we can come to no determination until their report is received.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I thought the site was settled some time ago.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—My hon. friend is mistaken. There has been no intimation of the Government, I am sure, or of any member of the Government, that it was settled.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Or expecting it to be?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Or expecting.

RAILWAY RETURNS.

Mr. IRVING asked what Railway Companies have made Returns to the Honourable the Minister of Public Works in accordance with the second and third sections of the Act of last Session entitled "An Act to extend "and amend the Law requiring Railway Companies to furnish Returns of their Capital, Traffic and Working Expenditure;" and whether the Returns required by the fifth section of the said Act will be laid before Parliament within twenty-one days from the commencement of this Session in pursuance of the said Act?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I did not observe the first part of my hon. friend's question asking to give the names of the Companies; but I may say that the Returns have not been very well furnished. Comparatively few, I believe, have sent Returns, although I have issued circulars repeatedly on the subject. Those furnished, such as they are, will of course be presented to the House in conformity with the statute. I may perhaps take advantage of this opportunity, although scarcely within the scope of the question, to inform the House that the Government find a difficulty in obtaining accurate statistics under the law to which my hon. friend refers. We have taken steps to get complete and accurate statistics of all the railways, and those will be published in a volume showing the location of all roads built, in the course of construction, and the lines projected, so as to place complete information on this subject in the hands of the public.

BRANCH RAILWAY.

Mr. BLANCHET enquired whether it is the intention of the Government to build a branch railway from St. Charles, County of Bellechasse, to St. Joseph de Lévis, in order that the western terminus of the Intercolonial Railway should be fixed near the Harbour of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the intention of the Government to build this railway.

MAILS TO THE OCEAN STEAMERS.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER enquired whether the Government have entered into a contract with the Messrs. Cantin, of Montreal, for the construction of a steam tender to transport mails from Father Point to the Ocean steamers; and if so, whether tenders were publicly invited before such contract was entered into?

Mr. IRVING.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Government have entered into a contract with Messrs. Cantin, their offer being the lowest of the shipbuilding firms to whom circulars were sent inviting tenders for this service.

BOUNDARY LINE.

Mr. ROSCOE asked whether the Government have taken any steps to procure a settlement of the Boundary Line between Alaska and British Columbia, especially where said line crosses the Stikkeen River?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Government took steps by asking a vote for this purpose, but we have not found a willingness on the other side of the line to join in a commission at the present time to ascertain the boundary. We have, therefore, invited the United States Government to fix upon a boundary on the river. That Government have complained that some Canadian settlers have located upon the United States side of the line of that river. The Government will endeavour to obtain a settlement of that particular point, but we cannot proceed without the sanction of the United States authorities.

TRADE WITH THE WEST INDIES.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL enquired whether any and what steps have been taken by the Government to open up a trade with the British and Foreign West Indies and South America; whether any and what person has been appointed in connection with that service; also what instructions have been given by the Government to such person or Agent in connection with the same?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman is aware, I believe, that we invited tenders last year for a steam mail service—ostensibly for the mail service, but really with an endeavour to open up a trade between Canada and the West Indies. Those tenders were not so moderate as to justify us in accepting the lowest of them. Since that time we have been endeavouring to collect such information as would enable us to take some action with regard to the West Indian trade. The abnormal political state in some of the principal islands, however, is such that we cannot make much progress until existing differences are settled. No person has been formally appointed to go there on behalf of the Government, but we are at present engaged in prosecuting some enquiries which we hope will lead to some result. We have nothing to bring down to the House on the subject, but I will inform the hon. gentlemen privately at any time of all the facts in our possession.

FISHERY PRIVILEGES.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL moved for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for all Orders in Council, instructions to officers, reports from officers, with all correspondence to or from officials or private individuals or public bodies in connection with the arbitrary attempt of the Government to compel the occupants of Fisheries in the Maritime Provinces to an enforced attornment to the Government and an arbitrary deprivation of their rights which have for at least a quarter of a century been used and enjoyed by them. The hon. gentleman said:—"I may state for the information of the House, that the Fisheries in the Maritime Provinces, for the last three-quarters of a century, have been used and enjoyed by the people owning the lands in front of the rivers, bays and estuaries of those Provinces. It has been universally admitted and publicly recognized that such persons have the right to fish in front of their lands; and any change which disturbs the relations of not one, but the whole Provinces, must necessarily create a great deal of public excitement and interest. I was surprised in the month of May last to find that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries--and in dealing with this question I wish to refer to him with all courtesy and with that respect which I generally try to engraft on to any resolutions I make in regard to this Department--I was surprised that the hon. gentleman sprang upon the country Orders in Council which revolutionised and created more excitement in the county I represent than anything has done since Confederation. The hon. gentleman will understand that I don't desire to use any offensive terms, but to speak of facts as they strike my mind. My hon. friend knows that during the agitation of the Confederation question, in which he took a considerable part, some very strong arguments were used by the opponents of the movement. If I remember rightly, one of the principal points made by them was addressed to the fishermen and farmers in this manner. "If you go into Confederation, what do you think you will gain? What do they desire to unite with you for? First, to pay their debts. Well, how will they accomplish that? By taxing you in every way." The argument advanced by myself and others who advocated the other side was, that there was no such intention on the part of the Canadian gentlemen who represented at the Quebec Conference the public sentiment of the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario. We told the people that there was no desire to do anything which might wrong any class in the Maritime Provinces. There is not in this House a member, whether he represents Ontario, Manitoba, or the Pacific Province, who desires to impose upon the people of one Province a tax in violation of pledges given at the time of Confederation. It will be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen that during the first year it became the duty of the gentlemen at the head of the departments of Government at Ottawa to carefully revise the existing laws, and to consider how far they should apply to the different Provinces that came into the Union. Some of those laws were models to be followed and were well adapted for all the Provinces; and it became my duty to pass upon the laws connected with the Department over which I then presided. Sir, one of the measures it became necessary to consider at a very early stage in the legislation of the Dominion related to the fisheries; and I appeal to your honour to bear testimony to the correctness of the statement I now make, and to my hon. friend from Cumberland to endorse it.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Hear! hear!

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—That measure, now in the Statute Book, was submitted to the House by myself, not as anything new, framed for the purpose of being applied to every portion of the Dominion; and when this was done, no man could dare say that he could pretend to give to it the construction my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries does, in the report he has made to the Council, and by the Government in its adoption and the issue of the Order in Council I hold in my hand. It will be recollected by hon. gentlemen,—and I regret that my late leader is not in the House—I did not have the honor of then sitting in this Chamber—when the measure was under consideration the question was asked from this side of the House by my hon. friend from Cumberland, whether or not it would deprive the people of the Maritime Provinces of the rights and privileges they had enjoyed for years and years; and it will be remembered that my right hon. friend, the member for Kingston, in reply, stated that it would in no way alter the relation of these fishermen towards the Government and their property. These pledges coming from the Government, responsible for the legislation of the country, were accepted as satisfactory. I will not pretend to say that I took the responsibility, any more than any other non-professional member, of the legal construction of all measures I had any share in submitting. But Sir, when the leader of the late Government, the Minister of Justice, who was responsible for the advice he gave, distinctly declared what I have mentioned, in relation to these fishermen, concerning the use of the property they had held in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia for three-quarters of a century, and in some cases for a century, I was satisfied. What however do we find? My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in May, 1875, launched upon the country a series of Orders in Council affecting these privileges, and I notice that the original date was March of that year, but before issue March was struck out, and May substituted. I will have something to say at a later stage of this debate in this regard; but in the mean time I will state I think it was the duty of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, before he took action to have submitted to the

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL.

House resolutions of such importance and so seriously affecting so large a portion of the people of this country and further a breach of faith, in fact, with the Province from which I come. He should have given the representatives of the population interested an opportunity of addressing, and seeing whether this House would deliberately assent to such action. Since the first settlement, and I may say at the first settlement, of the country in that part—I speak more particularly of the locality I know best and the county to which I belong, through which the second river in the Province runs—families from father to son have held such privileges upon the fisheries; upon them they relied chiefly for subsistence, for it was not until long afterwards that the lumber interest became important and a great source of wealth, they occupied farms, and owned the fishing limits in front of them without restriction or taxation in any way whatever. When we were struggling to obtain the union of these Provinces, it became necessary to consider the effect which the Laws of Canada would have on the people of our own Province; and I communicated to these people my belief that no interference would be attempted with their rights; also that I would take an early opportunity of submitting their claims.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Did you put it in the Act?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I will tell my hon. friend I believed I did put it in the Act, and I challenge him to find authority in it for the construction he endeavours to put upon it. I will read the only authority which he pretends to possess for the legislation. I would not say legislation, but the arbitrary exercise of a very arbitrary power. Now, in all this volume, the only portion in this regard—if I am wrong my hon. friend will correct me—is the second clause:—"The Minister of Marine and Fisheries may, where the exclusive right of fishing does not already exist by law,"—

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Hear! hear!

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—"Issue, or authorized to be issued of fishery leases and licenses, for fisheries and fishing

"wheresoever situated or carried on, but leases or licenses for any term exceeding nine years shall be issued only under authority of an order of the Governor in Council." I shall explain the meaning of the clauses as I and hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House understood it. A system was in vogue in Canada for the purpose of leasing fishing privileges on rivers; and the object of the latter part touching extension to nine years, was introduced to give to gentlemen desirous of fly-fishing such right for that period of time. I will frankly admit that the system which prevailed in Quebec and also in Ontario, but less extensively, countenanced the granting of leases and licenses, because no exclusive rights had any existence, therefore it was stated in the Act, "where the exclusive right does not already exist by law," and I challenge my hon. friend to point to any other section giving him authority for what he has done. I feel that the House will not construe the clause in that way, sweeping away these privileges and springing a mine upon the people. The regulation was adopted before the House adjourned last year, and when my hon. friend brought down the Estimates, he should have taken the House into his confidence, as I hold he was bound to do according to Constitutional Law. Correspondence has passed between us on the subject, and we understand the matter very thoroughly. I know that he will tell the House that two or three decisions have been delivered in New Brunswick Courts, negating the idea that any exclusive privileges exist in law. He quoted in his letters three cases; but the first does not sustain the position he assumes. I frankly admit that the second, under the ruling of Mr. Justice Ritchie, now of the Supreme Court, does take strong ground, and states that no exclusive right exists; but I maintain that by the opinion of no single judge, however eminent, the rights of a Province can be swept away. No appeal was taken, and we have had no opportunity of learning whether his decision was correct or otherwise. The third is an entirely different case and does not affect the question under consideration. Now, Sir, my hon. friend will say that this is no new system; and in reply to me, he stated, that the system of taxation had already existed in our Province. This I most unhesitatingly deny; a number of magistrates in my county merely recommended that a registration fee of fifty cents should be imposed on the nets of the fishermen for the purpose of registration alone, and on this he bases his statement that his policy was sanctioned by the Province. I know something about the transaction, having been one of those magistrates, and I am aware that it was to create a registration fee, and pay an officer to keep an accurate record of the nets used, see that they were not beyond a certain length and of the right size, and in cases of dispute among the fishermen, or violations of the laws, be able to prove who was the transgressor; therefore it was not at all for the purposes of taxation.

The law on the subject in New Brunswick provides for Orders in Council regulating the fee. The only law they ever passed in this regard regulated the distances to be taken up on a river from the mouth to its source, the length of nets used and the mode of fishing. I hold, in consequence, that my hon. friend will be unable to sustain his position. Fifty cents were charged for fifty fathoms, and, if I remember aright, twenty-five cents for every other fifty fathoms, simply for registration purposes; and this was intended as a fund to pay the officer. I think that my hon. friend has taken a very extraordinary course. He replied in a letter that he could not make exceptional legislation in favour of New Brunswick; but what has he done? He has legislated against New Brunswick, and omitted Manitoba, British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, and Nova Scotia, and the only Province to which he has extended the portion of the law concerning taxation is New Brunswick. He has imposed $1 on every 200 lbs. of salmon, and 50 cents for every 200 lbs. of bass, and I consider that this can scarcely be justified. I will go further; not satisfied with this, he has in a most deliberate manner placed a tax upon the fishermen of certain portions of the Province, in a way which applied to them unjustly and unfairly, forming certain sections against other sections; salmon are only caught in the northern rivers to any great extent, save in St. Johns' Harbour, and bordering St. Johns' and King's counties, in the rivers of Northumberland, Restigouche, and Gloucester counties, and he has selected the two classes of fish taken in these rivers; the bass fishing is of vast importance, and I will quote from a paper evidence of the extent to which it is carried on just now:

"SR. JOHN, Feb. 3.—The transport of frozen and fresh fish from northern New Brunswick over the Intercolonial Railroad, is assuming large proportions. Last week 115,000 barrels were brought to St. Johns for shipment to the United States markets."

The fresh fish taken in winter in our Province are chiefly bass, and this fishery is very important, giving occupation to a large number of people. This order will, therefore, seriously affect the Province if it is carried out. My hon. friend proposes to impose a tax upon salmon and bass alone. He knows very well in the county from which he comes there is neither salmon nor bass, therefore, admitting it is a legal tax, it is unfair, because it presses upon the inhabitants of certain counties. My hon. friend may say "we have no bass or salmon fisheries, but we have shad fisheries which we tax." He puts one dollar per weir.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I think the correspondence will show there is no weir in my county at all.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Then it is all the worse. The tax will not apply at all to his county. The fact is, my hon. friend has practically exempted from the operation of these regulations the counties of Westmoreland, Albert, Kings', Queens', York, Carleton, Victoria and Charlotte, or nearly so, and I hold he has pursued a course that is not justifiable. But what is the reason they have not applied it to Nova Scotia and Prince Edward as well as to New Brunswick?

My hon. friend has chosen to take exception to the course I have pursued with regard to the people of my county. In his organs I have been assailed for exciting sedition among the people of Northumberland.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Hear! hear!

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—My hon. friend says "hear, hear," but if he reads history he may take a lesson from it. He will find that Orders in Council have not always been the most successful mode of imposing taxation. What right has my hon. friend to assume that he has the powers of Parliament? He may say he has the power by law to impose licenses, but that does not empower to him to levy a tax of so much per hundred pounds. I hold it was the duty of the hon. gentleman when he proposed to bring in an important change, affecting the most vital interests of any class of people and taking away rights and privileges which they had enjoyed for three-quarters of a century—it was his duty, having his policy matured in March, while Parliament was in Session, to come down to the people's representatives and ask them to give him authority to impose this tax, and to give us an opportunity of discussing the question.

My hon. friend says I initiated this policy, and that it was my intention to have adopted the very thing that I now find fault with. He says, by my own Orders in Council and my own reports, it is apparent I would have pursued the very same course. I tell him that I would not. He says I agreed to go for a system of uniformity. I did so, when the present Premier took exception to the existence of two systems—the licensing system in Ontario and Quebec, and the other in the Maritime Provinces. I told him then that I was prepared to go for uniformity as far as possible, but I was not prepared to take away rights and privileges from the people of my own Province by imposing a tax upon their own property that they had paid for and inherited.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Why didn't you do it?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Because the hon. gentleman and men like him turned us out. If I had remained in power I would have kept my promise as I always do.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—You said that the hon. member for Kingston, who was then Leader of the Government, made a promise at the time of the union that the rights of the fishermen of New Brunswick would not be interfered with; then why did you make a promise that you would have the system uniform?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Is my hon. friend so obtuse that he cannot see how uniformity could be attained without interfering with those rights? My intention was to adapt the free system to Ontario and Quebec.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—The hon. gentleman urged this promise of the hon. member for Kingston as a reason why he should not make it uniform.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I did nothing of the kind, I appeal to the Premier to say whether I did or not.

When he complained of the existence of the two systems, I said that the Lower Provinces came into the Union with the pledge that these rights would be respected, but that I was in favour of uniformity. I never said that I would not give the same privileges to the people of Ontario and Quebec that were enjoyed by the fishermen of New Brunswick, because the fishing interests of those Provinces were not of the same importance. I know cases in which people have paid one or two thousand dollars for a portion of beach on which you could not grow a blade of grass, for the right which is now taken away from them. Is it to be tolerated that by Order in Council these rights shall be swept away without compensation? If the hon. gentleman wishes to assimilate the systems, let him remove whatever tax the fishermen of Ontario and Quebec may consider burdensome, but do not attempt to get a revenue out of the earnings of the unfortunate fishermen, or take away from them the rights they have so long enjoyed. The hon. gentleman says he based his action on the reports which I made. That statement was uttered in May last, and as soon as I saw it I at once wrote to the Department asking for the two reports which were said to have been made by myself, and which were made the basis of this unjust proceeding. He was not satisfied in perpetrating a wrong on the Province to which he as well as myself belongs, but he has, to shield himself, placed the onus of that wrong on me.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I do not acknowledge it to be wrong.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—That is quite possible. He may know it to be wrong without acknowledging his fault. When I went to my county last summer the hon. gentleman's letter was flourished at me by my opponents and by their press. Now, I may explain when these reports were made by me they were made in consequence of an application coming from the Mr. Adam Ferguson, who owned fishing stands on the New Brunswick side of the Restigouche River, for a license such as was held by his friends on the opposite or Quebec side. He saw that by the possession of licenses they were protected in case of disputes, by the officers of La Canadienne which was sent there to look after the fisheries. In disputes among the fishermen one would occasionally encroach upon another's fishing grounds. Having a knowledge of the fishermen for some fifty years, I must say such disputes are of very rare occurrence, but when they did happen, the advantage of holding a license was clearly seen, and this led Mr. Ferguson to apply for one. This was the first case and it was such a novel application that I made this report to Council:—

[COPY.]

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES,
FISHERIES BRANCH,

OTTAWA, 22nd December, 1869.

The undersigned has the honour to submit for the consideration of Council, the annexed application of Adam Ferguson, Esq., of the County of Restigouche, in the Province of New Brunswick, for a license to fish on a station which he and his family have occupied for the last seventy years.

The system of granting leases and licenses for fishing stations has prevailed for many years in the Province of Quebec and Ontario, at rates varying in different parts of these Provinces from a nominal sum in some portions of the Province, to an actual cash value in other portions.

The Department, prior to its present organization, found it most difficult, and considered it unwise to adopt a uniform system which would materially unsettle existing arrangements.

At the time of the Union, systems of governing or regulating the fisheries of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia prevailed more or less perfect, and when the Fisheries Act of 1868 was passed, certain restrictions were introduced and limitations of the Law, as applied to these Provinces, and hitherto no change has been applied to them in the direction of leasing or licensing the commercial fisheries, it being hitherto considered unwise as a matter of policy to resort to that system.

By the annexed application it will be seen that Adam Ferguson, Esq., who is a descendant of one of the oldest settlers and fishermen on the Restigouche, and who with his ancestors have fished the station for the last 70 years, now voluntarily asks that the protection which the license system affords, and which he has seen the benefit of on the Canadian side of the Restigouche, be extended to him, the better to ensure him the quiet occupancy and the legal recognition in his station.

This being the first case of an application for license by the occupant of a station in New Brunswick, the undersigned has deemed it his duty to submit the same to Council, and begs to recommend that a license at a valuation by the Local Inspector be granted to Mr. Ferguson for the station asked for.

Respectfully submitted.

P. MITCHELL,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Now, Sir, there is a case. Mr. Ferguson voluntarily asks. My report stated when any party voluntarily asks those things Government were willing he should have them. But what did Government do? Did they adopt that policy? No; I was asked to reconsider the question and make another report, which I did. On the 27th January, 1870, I made this Report:—

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES,
FISHERIES BRANCH.

OTTAWA, 27th January, 1870.

The undersigned has the honor to bring under the notice of the Privy Council certain provisions of the Fisheries Act respecting the use of leases and licenses for fishing stations.

It has been the practice of the Government under the fishery laws in existence anterior to the Confederation of the provinces, to grant exclusive leases and licenses in Ontario and Quebec for the chief net fishing stations for white fish and salmon in the lakes and tidal water; also for angling stations in the salmon rivers emptying into the Gulf and River St. Lawrence,

In the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick no system of the kind was established under the Provincial Acts and regulations, although in the first named Province the Local Government was in the habit of renting to individuals exclusive privileges of fly fishing for salmon.

The Statute passed in the first Dominion Parliament was made applicable to the various provinces, but left in force certain of the fishery laws and regulations then existing in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL.

The Canadian Act does not forbid any kind of fishing without leases or licenses, but permits of their being granted by this Department when the right remains public, and provides a penalty against other persons fishing within limit so let for exclusive occupation. It has been found in most cases occurring in Ontario and Quebec by parties who desire to carry on their fishing operations without molestation, and who wish to secure themselves permanently in establishing the fisheries and trade arrangements connected therewith, the whole involving considerable capital; that the leasing system affords them greater security and enhances the value of their outlay as a matter of commercial business. They have therefore been wishing, (and in many cases been anxious) to obtain such titles and pay rents for them; with the exception of places for which there was much competition, the majority of stations are rented at nominal rates,—the Government considering the system as a means of protection and regulation, rather than a source of direct revenue.

There are doubtless in the Maritime districts numerous fishing stations where the parties have been in peaceable occupation for a long time, and being in instances riparian proprietors they think they have acquired a sort of possession by such prior occupancy. They may also desire to secure their holdings by lease or license.

The undersigned does not consider it desirable at present to recommend the application of the same system to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The condition of the fisheries in these Provinces, and the fact of the local Fishery Laws never having until lately been enforced in an effective manner, renders it probable that the people would be very impatient under the necessary restrictions.

The undersigned would however respectfully suggest, in all cases where it can be clearly shewn that parties are in the peaceable use of any salmon fishing stations in the Provinces, and apply for leases or licenses, that he be authorized to accede to their applications.

This partial introduction of a system which has proved beneficial to the fishing interests and improved the public supply in other portions of the Dominion, might lead to a gradual extension of the system at such times, and in such forms as shall render it generally acceptable.

The whole nevertheless respectfully submitted,

P. MITCHELL,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Now, Sir, I may say my hon. friend fails in the statement he makes in the letter of the 12th of July, when he quotes as the basis of his action these reports of mine, to place the onus of this unfortunate and repulsive legislation upon the precedent established by myself. He fails in that attempt and has done me great injustice in endeavouring to make me responsible, instead of boldly bearing it himself. When I heard of this action I addressed a letter, on the 5th May, 1875, which has gone the rounds of the public prints, to the Minister of Marine, in which I stated the objections to the policy which presented themselves to my mind, and stated that there was no sanction of law for adopting it, and that, moreover, it was in violation of a pledge given by the Minister of Justice from his place in Parliament when the law was passed. What was the course pursued by the officers of the Government? The people were told that if they would not accept leases their stands would be taken from them, and many of them in terror lest they should lose their stations, complied. But I am very glad to find the large majority of the people waited to see what their representative had to say before taking this step. I had not been in the county six hours before I was met by four delegations asking me to attend public meetings in order to find out the true state of the case. I did attend those meetings, which were numerous attended, and told them I would not take the responsibility of advising them, because it was a question whether the Act had been properly construed by the Minister of Marine or by myself. I recommended them to take the best legal advice, and ascertain exactly what their legal rights were and how far the Government, through the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, had attempted to invade them, at the same time telling that if it was found the Hon. Minister was right to attend at once, but if not to fight to the death. And here, I may tell my hon. friend, that he has excited a feeling in that section of the county which will not be very easily allayed. I have seen no reason to change my opinion as to the construction of the Act, but even if it can be construed as the hon. Minister endeavours to construe it, he fails to show that he bases his policy on anything that I have done. And even if the Act is as he construes it, a statement given by a Minister during his term ought not to be lightly violated. The hon. gentleman should come down to Parliament before taking this step, and if Parliament will adopt the policy and deprive a large number of persons of their rights, guaranteed by three-quarters of a century of occupancy, I will be very much surprised. I do not believe it will, and I appeal to the people of Canada in behalf of their countrymen of the Maritime Provinces, to carefully consider this matter. The gentlemen from Nova Scotia should interest themselves in this question. My hon. friend wants to get the entering wedge in. It is only $4 or $5 a year, we are told; but next year it will be $10 or $20, and by and by it will be hard to say what it will be. If the policy is sustained it must be extended to Nova Scotia, to British Columbia, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba. I do not wish to take up any more of the time of the House. This is a question of vital importance to the people of the section from which I come. If I have gone into the personal side of the matter it is because the press the hon. gentleman controls from one end of the Province to the other, have attacked and charged me with an attempt to arouse against the Government ill-feeling, which I now positively disclaim.

I gave them good, sound advice according to my light and best judgment, and I have tried to show here that the Government have no power in that Act to take away from the people the rights they enjoyed. I invite the attention of this Parliament to see that no injustice is done and that the pledges given by public men on so important a point should not be lightly set aside.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I think that my hon. friend has pursued a somewhat unusual course with respect to this motion. He should have waited until the papers were before the House before he delivered himself, when hon. members would be in a position to judge of the issue between us. My hon. friend has anticipated the papers, and it is necessary that I should also quote to some extent from the correspondence. I think I shall be able to show that my hon. friend in office was an entirely different man from what he is out of office—that every step he took when presiding over the Department of Marine and Fisheries pointed to the ultimate assimilation of the rights and relations with regard to this particular matter over the entire Dominion.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—That is not correct.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—If the hon. gentleman had waited for the introduction of the papers, every one, I think, would see that what I infer is correct, and that testimony produced before the Courts clearly prove it. The hon. gentleman says that this Government has been guilty of an act of arbitrary conduct in reference to the fishermen of New Brunswick. If I have been guilty of arbitrary conduct, I think I can convict my hon. friend on his own evidence of the highest acts of tyranny. The hon. gentleman states that an attempt has been made to take rights from the fishermen which they have enjoyed for three-quarters of a century. I deny it. He also takes the ground that the riparian proprietors in New Brunswick have the exclusive right to fish opposite their own lands. I will say to this House that there is no such Law. The question has been adjudicated upon by the Courts in New Brunswick, which were of the unanimous opinion that no such right existed. If I succeed in establishing this fact, my hon. friend will have to acknowledge that he is entirely wrong, and did me great injustice.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I know all you can prove.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—If my hon. friend knows it, very well; but it seems to me that he cannot take a judicial view of the question at all. It will be in the recollection of the House, that the late Chief Justice Ritchie gave it as his individual opinion, and there was no appeal from his decision.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I said appeal in the Superior Court.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—The case was tried in nisi prius. The Judge charged the jury in a particular way, and an appeal was taken to the Court in Banco, which was unanimously of opinion that the parties had no exclusive rights whatever.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Can my hon. friend not read the case?

Hon. Mr. SMITH.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Yes; it is the case of Rose vs. Belyea, first volume of Hannay's Law Reports, and it is as follows:—

"This was an action of trespass, tried before Ritchie, C.J., at the east Kingston Court. The damage complained of was the tearing of the plaintiff's net by defendant, while the defendant was fishing with it in the river St. John, within the ebb and flow of the tide, opposite to the land of the defendant, who claimed the exclusive right of fishing there. The learned judge directed the jury that there was no exclusive right of fishing in a navigable river; that the right of fishing in a navigable tidal river was in the public; and that the ownership of the land gave the defendant no right to interfere with a party fishing in the front of it. Verdict for the plaintiff, $40.

Barker now moved for a new trial on the grounds:—1, Misdirection; 2, that the damages were excessive, the actual damage done to the net being according to plaintiff's own evidence only $2, and he was not entitled to exemplary damages. Mayne on Damages, 351; Price vs. Severn (7 Brig. 316)

Per Curiam.—The soil of a public navigable river is in the Crown and the right of fishing belongs to the public. Since Magna Charta the Crown cannot grant the exclusive right of fishing in a public navigable river to a private individual. The claim set up by the defendant of the exclusive right to fish in front of his own land entirely failed. Malcolmson vs. O'Dea (9 Jur. N.S. 1,135.)"

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—That case was never appealed.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I suppose the hon. gentleman wants it to go to the Queen and Privy Council.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I do.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Then why didn't you get it there?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Because I had nothing to do with it. That case was remote from my county.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Yes; but the principle is the same. Well, my hon. friend cannot impose on the credulity of the House in that way. The principal is the same in Kings County as in the County of Northumberland; the rights of these people are identical, and therefore what is applicable to one county is equally applicable to the another. My hon. friend has chosen to set up his arbitrary opinion against the solemn and unanimous decision of a Court with the Chief Justice at its head. Why did they not appeal to the Privy Council? Because, I suppose, the lawyers said it would be absurd to do so. Now, surely, my hon. friend must submit to that law which is in force in New Brunswick as well as throughout the rest of the Dominion. He deliberately says—and I was rather startled, and I think that the House was startled, and that the country will be amazed to hear it—that it was his intended policy, if the Government had not been ousted, to abolish the system of license and leases, and assimilate the law to the practice which had prevailed in New Brunswick. I wonder who ever heard of it before? Certainly, I think, no employé in the Department, or any member of this House. This is rather remarkable, and does not seem to harmonize with the reasons with which he has justified the difference in the systems, and the assurance given by Sir John A. Macdonald across the floor of this House. I do not know what the right hon. gentleman said at the time; but this I can say, that the rights of the people of this country cannot rest upon a basis like that; but while this was under discussion, if such was the understanding, why did not my hon. friend insert it in the Act?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I never dreamt of such a construction being put upon it.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—What construction?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—The construction you put upon it.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I will show you this, that those proprietors had no rights such as those in question, secured them by law.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—You cannot do it.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I will prove beyond question that you yourself have so stated.

Now then, Sir, what I say to my hon. friend is—if it be the fact, and if it was understood in this Parliament, that the people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia should be exempted from the general law introduced by himself, why was it not put in the Act, when a few words would have accomplished the purpose? The second section states: "The Minister of Marine and Fisheries

"may, where the exclusive right of fishing does not already exist by law"—that is the exception, and wherever the privilege does so exist, the Minister has no power, but otherwise he has full power and control—"can issue, or authorize to be issued, fishery leases and licenses for fisheries and fishing wherever situated or carried on; but the leases or licenses for any term not exceeding nine years shall be issued only under authority of an order of the Governor in Council."

My hon. friend had great power; and it is extremely doubtful whether the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should have such power. I can quite understand that a Minister might use it generously, but I think it undesirable he should possess it. Before the change of Government my hon. friend granted a great many licenses in New Brunswick to sportsmen for nine years, at a small price for so valuable a privilege; and if we had them to sell over again we could obtain four or five times as much.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Will my hon. friend state the cases and I will soon endeavour to answer him.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I only allude to the general question.

My hon. friend says that the Government has acted in a most arbitrary manner. He cites the second clause, but does he not know that there is another clause which gives greater power to the Administration? His pretensions are extraordinary; and what has the Government done in this case? He admits we have certain powers but he maintains that the Government has arrogated to itself a power it did not possess, in order to coerce the people of Northumberland County into paying a tax, to the destruction of their rights. It seems to me manifest, that the people of New Brunswick should be subject to the same rules in this regard, as the inhabitants of Ontario and Quebec. I could not justify in my own conscience any other course. I have looked over the records of the Department, and I find that my hon. friend had evidently been under a similar conviction. I say, therefore, it seemed to me utterly unfair to act otherwise, and I was willing to undertake or share the responsibility of introducing there the system followed in Ontario and Quebec. I was quite aware that it would be unpopular; such action ever is, but my duty was plain. I would rather not have imposed a regulation obnoxious to my people; but I laid aside personal interests. I find, also, that my hon. friend, in order to make a little capital out of this, goes back on himself.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Do not impugn my motives.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—What did my hon. friend do in Quebec? Did he increase the taxation of the people, without announcing his policy to this House? I wonder that he does not recollect it. I can show what he did. He imposed from 50 cents. to $1 a barrel on salmon of his own mere arbitrary will, without reference to the Government or this House. Where is my despotism when compared to this?

I acted with the approval of the whole Government. I have the evidence in my own hand if he disputes it.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I do not dispute that; but I do not hold that two wrongs make a right.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I have just got my hon. friend where I wanted him.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—All right, hear I am, my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—My hon. friend acknowledges that he had done wrong in this case; and I wanted to convict him, and show that if I were guilty of tyranny and despotism, it was shared by my colleagues. He declares that the tax levied on the fishermen of Northumberland was intolerable; and that there was a registration regulation made by the municipal authorities of the county.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I say that it was recommended by the Municipal body of the county.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I do not know what was recommended, but I understood you to say, that it was for registration purposes.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Well, I did say so.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I will show that this, as other statements he has made, is inaccurate; and convict him of having made a false statement before the House.

Hon. Mr. SMITH. .

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Go on.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—In the New Brunswick Act 1863, I find Section 12, which runs as follows:—

“The Governor in Council may impose and levy an annual tax on every net used for the taking of salmon on the sea coast or in the bays and rivers in this Province not exceeding fifty cents for every net fifty fathoms in length, and one-half cent for every fathom above fifty fathoms; and may also enforce and levy such annual tax as may be deemed reasonable, on all and every engine, weir or trap used for taking fish in the rivers or on the sea coast or in the bays of this Province.”

This was the law in New Brunswick in 1863; and Section 13 runs as follows—

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—We have read all this.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—You have, but not the House; you said that there was no law.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I did not.

Hon. Gentlemen—Order! Order!

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—What I said was this:—that Justices of the Peace in the County of Northumberland recommended the Government to take such action, and the Government passed that law with reference to the issue of an Order in Council, the tax being paid into the Municipal Treasury.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I will show you now that you have only made the matter worse—that you have committed another inaccuracy. You say that it was a registration fee; I have shown that it was a tax. The 13th Section provides:—

“That the taxes imposed under the provisions of this Act, or the regulations to be made by authority thereof, shall be collected by the Wardens in the respective districts, and shall be paid by them into the Provincial Treasury in such manner as the Governor in Council may direct; and it shall be the duty of the Wardens to make full and correct returns of the amounts so collected and paid over by them respectively, annually, on the 31st day of October in each year, such returns to be forthwith transmitted to the Auditor General.”

What does the hon. gentleman say about that? He told us that it was a municipal tax, paid into the county funds; but here is a law declaring that it was a tax to be paid into the hands of the Receiver General or the Governor in Council who exercises the power to which I have referred, under this Act, made the following rule and regulation:—

“The owner or owners of nets used for the purpose of taking salmon, shall be liable to and pay the following annual tax, namely: For every net so used of fifty fathoms in length, fifty cents, and for every fathom over fifty, one-half cent; and the owner of every weir or trap used or set for the purpose of taking any fish, shall pay an annual tax of one dollar for every such weir, and of ten dollars for every such trap.”

My hon. friend, in the letter he has addressed to me, has charged me with partiality to my own community; he says that its residents were only taxed $1 per weir, and the fishermen in other sections $10. I showed, however, to my hon. friend in my reply that there was not a weir in my county, and therefore his accusation entirely falls to the ground. My hon. friend essayed to give the matter another turn, as to the issue between us.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I said I would show that my hon. friend had during his administration stated distinctly that these proprietors had no exclusive rights. I wrote:—

“Although the question as to whether riparian proprietors have the exclusive right of fishing opposite their land is a legal one, and is really not involved in the controversy between us, it is as well, perhaps, to discuss it briefly.

“You have unreservedly given it as your opinion that they have this right. On this point I distinctly take issue with you, and will call you as a witness against yourself to show that in 1870 your opinion was then in accordance with mine. In your report to Council (which was erroneously printed of Council) referred to in my former letter as dated 27th January, 1870, you use this language: ‘There are doubtless in the Maritime districts numerous fishery stations where the parties have been in peaceable occupation for a long time, and being in some instances riparian proprietors they think they have acquired a sort of preference by such prior occupancy. They may also desire to secure these holdings by leases or licenses.’”

Now, I would ask my hon. friend what he meant by this? He alleges that these people, having exercised the right for so many years, fancied that they could claim it by some priority of occupancy, but that they did not have the exclusive privilege they imagined they possessed. I think my hon.

friend is well aware of the fact, that I had no object in persecuting the people of my own Province. I thought that we were dealing with them in a most benignant way. I felt the responsibility of introducing the system which had prevailed in Ontario and Quebec, and I was prepared to assume it. In 1874, the system of licenses was adopted, when I was told that in Quebec payment had been made for some years at the rate of $1 per barrel for salmon taken, and I could only in all honesty introduce the policy into New Brunswick. In one year we issued licenses to the number of twenty-five on the Restigouche River, and it worked admirably. The people were well satisfied. The next year I thought it better to continue the system beyond the Restigouche, and the first duty imposed was $1 per barrel. I adopted the standard of my hon. predecessor. When this Order in Council was promulgated, delegations came and stated that the Fisheries were very much depressed. I replied at once if the representations were made to the head of the Department they would have been listened to willingly. The tax was reduced to 40 cents, not for New Brunswick alone, but also for Quebec. Well, we had petitions from the very fishermen of the county which my hon. friend represents. They stated distinctly they did not object to pay the tax, and that it was only fair they should contribute something to the maintenance of this branch of the public service. They knew that a fish-breeding establishment had been placed on the Miramichi, and they stated they were prepared to pay their share for its maintenance. I will quote their petition as it is summarized in my letter to the hon. member:—

“I have received petitions from the fishermen of Miramichi, couched in suitable and becoming language, and written in a spirit which does them great credit, and gives evidence of their intelligence and respectability. Differing from you, they recognize the justice of the charge, and express a willingness to contribute: to use their own language—‘Your petitioners are not opposed to contributing their fair proportion of the cost of maintaining the protective and propagating organisation and establishments of the Department,’ &c. This sentiment is commendable, and merits the approbation of every honest and right-minded man. The Government ask the fishermen to do no more; and if they can show that the tax is, under present circumstances, too high, I am quite prepared to recommend a reduction; and I may here say that I think they have made out a good case, and one that calls for a modification of the tax."

Now, this was the spirit of the fishermen when my hon. friend entered the county and stirred up sedition among them and preached rebellion.

I find in the records of my Department the following:—

"DEPARTMENT MARINE AND FISHERIES,

OTTAWA, 11th February, 1871.

SIR,—The Minister has had under his consideration your report dated 16th December, 1869, in connection with part of your annual report for last year, relative to the rating of license fees for salmon fishery stations.

A schedule of the licenses granted in the Division under your charge for the years 1864, '65, '66, '67 and '68, showing the average catch and average license fees per annum, was prepared here at the time for your guidance, and you were also requested to complete this statement for the following years in order to enable you to offer your suggestions thereon, and to place the Department in a position to determine upon a fair and reliable mode of rating these stations. I herewith inclose blank forms which you will please fill up accordingly with such details for the year 1869 and 1870 of salmon fishing in your Division. This information is wanted at once and you will please lose no time in supplying it.

Upon enquiry made by Dr. Fortin, he has been informed that the increase in the rate of licenses, has been only on the new ones issued for the past two years; that the several applications for such licenses were made with a full knowledge on the part of the applicants that if granted they would be subject to the rate he complains of, and that in no case has any person objected to the same, or withdrawn his request.

Dr. Fortin has, moreover, been informed that the Minister did not contemplate at present applying any new rates to the old stands, until such time as a uniform system can be established and made applicable to the different sections of the Dominion, which subject it is proposed to carefully revise in connection with arranging some such uniform system as is above referred to.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

W. F. WHITCHER.

For the Hon. Minister of Marine & Fisheries."

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Who is that signed by?

Hon. Mr. SMITH—By Mr. Whitcher.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—That is right.

Hon. Mr. SMITH.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Does my hon. friend repudiate that?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Your hon. friend will tell you what he does when he stands up to reply.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—My hon. friend says he is not responsible?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I say nothing of the kind. I am responsible, but I will explain the matter.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I will not detain the House longer; I have other records that I could cite to show the policy of my hon. friend. It is clear that it was to extend a uniform system throughout the whole Dominion. My hon. friend has said that I did not extend this to Nova Scotia. It is known that in New Brunswick we have a fish-breeding establishment on the Miramichi, placed there in his own county by my hon. friend. In Nova Scotia they had none, and I may add, the law of that Province, as it existed before Confederation, was in full operation up to last session. Wherefore the position of the two Provinces was not analogous.

The Inspector of Fisheries of New Brunswick, a protégé of my hon. friend, and an appointee of his own, recommended very strongly a tax of $2 per barrel, and he knew very well the condition of affairs.

From the information I had, there were no such fisheries in Nova Scotia as those of the Restigouche and the Miramichi. Therefore the circumstances were to a large extent different. I believe this tax is necessary, not so much for revenue purposes, as a basis for the administration of the Department. It is not the intention of the Government directly or indirectly to interfere with the occupancy which these people have for so many years enjoyed. In deference to this feeling, I did not exact all that I had the power to do under this 19th Section of the Fisheries Act of 1868.

"The Governor in Council may from time to time make, and from time to time vary, amend or alter, all and every such regulation or regulations as shall be found necessary or deemed expedient, for the better management and regulation of the sea-coast and inland fisheries, to prevent or remedy the obstruction and pollution of streams, to regulate and prevent fishing, to prohibit the destruction of fish, and to forbid fishing, except under authority of leases or licenses, every of which regulations shall have the same force and effect as if herein contained and enacted, notwithstanding that such regulations may extend, vary or alter any of the provisions of this Act respecting the places or modes of fishing, or the terms specified as prohibited or close seasons, and may fix such other modes, time or places as may be deemed by the Governor in Council to be adapted to different localities, or may be thought otherwise expedient."

Now, my hon. friend has overlooked that altogether. I did not pretend to exercise the power thus conferred. I felt it would be less obnoxious to the fishermen to pay a tax on the amount of fish caught than a fee which would be exacted from them whether successful or not. It is no attainment, as is shown by the Law of New Brunswick. They paid a tax on the land which they claimed as their own.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—They did not pay it.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—If the people of his own county were allowed to escape the payment of the tax, he is responsible, I believe some of them pay it while others did not.

I challenge the most complete investigation into this matter. I feel that I am not chargeable with acting in an arbitrary or tyrannical manner, but on the contrary I have treated the fishermen with the greatest consideration. I have convicted my hon. friend of many inaccuracies, and he should frankly admit that he was under a misapprehension when he told the fishermen of Northumberland that the Government were exercising arbitrary powers. All these papers will be submitted to the House, and I should very much like to have this matter thoroughly discussed.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—The motives attributed to me by the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries are unjust and incorrect, and I trust the attempt which he has made to raise false issues will not succeed. He has attempted, in the first place, to quote the decision of the Courts of Law to which I myself referred. The decision, as I have stated, was never appealed. I am not prepared to accept as conclusive the decision of a single Court on a single case in a matter of such importance as this.

I am not prepared to accept the decision in that case as final as to whether the people have riparian rights or not; my hon. friend did not pursue a fair course when he knew the position the people took on the question.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I did not know that.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—The hon. gentleman is very ignorant of public opinion in that part. I will ask my hon. friend whether Dr. Fortin did not urge and press the necessity of extending that tax, and it was then resisted by the people of the Maritime Provinces. The justification he makes is very weak, and he should be prepared to admit that two wrongs do not make a right. The illegality of increasing the tax in Quebec had never struck me during my administration of this office. Ministers rely to a great extent upon the subhead in their Department, and the gentleman who occupies that position in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Whiteher, is a man of great ability and thoroughly acquainted with the working of the system. The tax was made on the recommendation of the officers in charge of the District, backed up by Mr. Whiteher, and sanctioned by myself without giving as much consideration to the matter as I ought, as it was not one effecting a principle but merely increasing the rate. But I am convinced now that I was wrong, and I am not ashamed of admitting of it. The hon. gentleman has no ground to stand upon when he justifies his acts by a mistake of mine.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I think there has been too much said in this debate of the opinions and views of some principal officer in the Department. That officer has no responsibility; no officer in the Department has. It would be far better to avoid mentioning Departmental officers by name when referring to their opinions, as they have nothing to do with the House.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I thank the Hon. Premier for reading me a lecture, but it would have come with better taste if delivered half an hour ago when the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries began the reference to those officers.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I read from a paper.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Yes, and referred to the officers of the Department too. The hon. gentleman quoted the operation of the Act in New Brunswick, which states is to go into the revenue; but I am not prepared to say that, because that portion of the Act escaped my mind that I have made any material error in the statement of the case to this House. The hon. gentleman said I went into my county for the express purpose of creating ill-feeling and inciting rebellion. That statement is not correct. The people did not know from me that I was coming down. I go every year, and they expected me, and had written me to come; and I declare that I never induced a single person to get up in a meeting or influenced them in any way. I committed no act of rebellion, and excited no hostility to the powers that be. I instructed them to the best of my ability, and gave sound advice as to their remedies.

I don't think the hon. gentleman has satisfied this House that he acted fairly towards the Provinces. I don't think he has made any case, or touched the question which I first started. The hon. gentleman has referred to the dissatisfaction in the county. I recollect the time when we were trying to carry Confederation, when the hon. gentleman predicted that if we united with Canada, our fishery rights, among other things, would be taken away, and that the people would be ground down. My hon. friend finding that his prophetic vision—

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I said nothing of the kind during all my speeches.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I can show the hon. gentleman speeches in which they appear.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I challenge it.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Very well, I will endeavour to hunt them up. No more violent speeches were made than the hon. gentleman made, and to carry out the predictions and grind the people he has adopted this policy to verify his own prophecies. I don't propose to continue this discussion further, but hope I shall have another opportunity to refer to it during the Session when the papers are laid before the House.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL,

Hon. Mr. SMITH suggested that the hon. gentleman should strike out the word "arbitrary" in the address, and the papers would be forthcoming.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL struck out those words, and the motion was carried.

The House then took a recess.

AFTER RECESS

NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS.

Mr. YOUNG—I beg to move, that an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General praying that there be laid before Parliament a statement setting forth the total number of newspapers and other periodicals in each county and city of the Dominion which have paid postage on paper "sent from the office of publication," with the total revenue received therefrom during the three months ending the 31st December last.

Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON—I see no objection to furnish, as far as possible, what the hon. gentleman asks; with the understanding that no information is to be given regarding the number of newspapers mailed from each particular office throughout the country. This would be a kind of espionage, which I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to exercise.

Mr. YOUNG—My motion shows no intention of asking for the circulation of each newspaper in the country. I was requested to do so, but felt that this would be improper.

Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON—Undoubtedly; but I simply desire to preclude the possibility of a misunderstanding.

The motion was carried.

REPORTS OF CUSTOMS DUTIES—GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I beg leave to move: That the copies of correspondence relating to the refund of duties to the Great Western Railway Company laid on the table of this House on the 6th of April last be referred to the Printing Committee.

I may say, Sir, in making this motion, that I desire to occupy the attention of the House for a few moments with relation to the position in which the question stands at this moment. My notice having been drawn to an item in the Public Accounts, stating that $67,000 of customs duties had been refunded, I investigated the matter and found that it referred to a return of duties by the Government to the Great Western Railway; a small additional sum, some $2,000 or $3,000, was paid to another railway company—the Canada Southern. The Hon. Minister of Finance, when I ventured to challenge the propriety of this refund, stated to the House, that it was under an Order in Council passed by the late Administration. In order that I may not be accused of misquoting the hon. gentleman's words—he spoke very briefly—I will ask the indulgence of the House, and read from the Hansard. He said:—

“I will now refer to the Customs' refunds, amounting to $7,000, these refunds were charged on a plan laid down while he himself was Minister of Customs, and established by an Order in Council, so far from the present Government desiring to maintain that rule, the very first thing we did after getting into power was to put a stop to this in the tariff brought down last year; we did that because we thought these railway companies were receiving more than they should in the matter of exemptions, and no portion of those funds were given except on the Report of the Minister of Customs, and also of the Minister of Justice, that the Law required these refunds to be paid.”

Now, Sir, I may remind the House of the system under which these duties were paid Parliament for the purpose of promoting the manufacture of locomotives in this country, passed a law providing that certain portions of them, which could be easily made here, should be subject to a duty of 15 per cent.; the remaining portions, which Canadians could not readily manufacture, to be entered free; but the law required that every locomotive imported should pay 15 per cent. duty. Before proceeding to discuss the question itself, I desire to draw the attention of the House for a moment.—I regret very much that the First Minister is not in his place—to the character of the returns brought down. Immediately after my hon. friend the Minister of Finance had made the statement I have just read, I put a notice on the paper, and as soon as possible moved for the production of the papers and correspondence in this relation. They were brought down at a late period of the Session, and owing to some misunderstanding, it appears they were not printed. I have, however, had opportunity to peruse them; and I find that they disclose a very extraordinary and very improper method of procedure. I made a motion for specific papers, for all correspondence and all Orders in Council relating to the subject; and those who heard the First Minister in his place express his disapproval of having the opinion of subordinate officers of the Government brought into discussion on the floor of this House; and a few days ago hon. gentlemen who saw the First Minister, with his own hand, change a motion made by the hon. member for South Waterloo, striking out a reference to remarks desired from the Commissioner of Customs, and substituting the responsible officer, the Minister of Customs will see why I complain.

I took the first paper I found on the list, and what did I observe? That instead of the Government complying with the Order of the House, and bringing down the correspondence that existed, they commenced to manufacture correspondence. I do not think, Sir, that they could have given to the House a much stronger evidence of the weak and untenable position they occupied, than they did when they felt it was necessary to open this correspondence with a long communication from the Commissioner of Customs, dated the 5th of April, the day before it was brought down. Now Sir, I say that this gentleman was my officer yesterday; he is the officer of the present Minister of Customs to-day, and he may be my officer again to-morrow.

Hon. Gentlemen—No, no.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—It is extremely inconvenient, as hon. gentlemen will see, that when there is an issue between the Opposition of this House and the Government, subordinate officers, who are not responsible to the House directly, but to the Ministers, should be pushed into the gap. I do not intend, Sir, therefore, to take any notice whatever of the statement in this paper ; the officer concerned is a gentleman of high character and remarkable ability, in whose judgment I have very great confidence, but I will not notice his communication. I consider that it was not treating this House with proper respect to commence this return by manufacturing correspondence. We did not expect when the motion passed, to obtain the views of a subordinate officer, depending directly upon the Government for his position, promotion and income, having no value whatever in the House ; but no person will be surprised, after seeing the rest of the correspondence, that the Government should have found it necessary to adopt so extraordinary and so undefensible a course. Why, what authority has my hon. friend for the statement he made to this House ? I have just read that this was done under a precedent established by myself, and under an Order in Council passed by the late Administration. Sir John Rose called the attention of the Government of the day to the fact that the duty was being demanded, and charged by the Customs' officers on parts of the locomotives which should be admitted free. There was no power nor means by which any person could impose or collect such a duty except in gross violation of the law ; they could have filed a petition of right and recovered the money wrongfully received. " Mr. Rose—it is recorded—"brought the accompanying papers before Council "on Saturday last, and it was decided "that the parts of the locomotives declared free in the tariff should be entered free, the remainder to pay "15 per cent. Please instruct the "Collector accordingly. J. L. TILLEY."

This was merely a Departmental Order from the Minister of Customs, telling a subordinate officer to obey the law, and in order that there might be no misunderstanding, Mr. Bouchette addressed a letter from the Customs Department of date the 3d of June, 1868, to the Collector of Customs at Montreal as follows :

"DEAR SIR,—The correspondence between the Grand Trunk Railway and yourself relative to the importation of locomotive engines in parts, having been brought under the consideration of the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance. I am desired to instruct you to admit to a free entry those parts of the locomotives which are declared to be free by the tariff, it being considered that the parts in question do not lose their claim to exemption under the law by having been put together in Glasgow, with the other dutiable parts of the engine ; such engine being taken to pieces afterwards, and imported into Canada in parts as represented."

I want to know what other order could have been given while such a law was on the Statute Book, and that is all the authority the hon. gentleman had for the statement he made. I may state, however, Sir, that not only did the Government consider it necessary to manufacture correspondence in relation to this matter, but the correspondence brought down is garbled. A letter was addressed by the Manager of the Great Western Railway to myself on the 29th of September, 1873—that is given, and a letter written by the manager of this railway on the 16th of October, is also given, acknowledging a reply to that letter, but the letter so acknowledged is not forthcoming. Now, I want the Government to supply the missing link. I want not only this correspondence, but the whole of the documents, in order that we may know the authority for the course that has been pursued.

The application of the railway company was for a remission of duties on locomotives brought in by steam, and in running order. They were manufactured in the United States, run into Canada and paid, of course, the duty of 15 per cent., because the late Government had no power, nor did the company venture to ask, so far as I am aware, for the remission of duties they had thus to pay. They asked this remission from the hon. gentlemen opposite, and on the recommendation of the Hon. Minister of Finance, acting for the Minister of Customs, the Government passed an order in Council granting their request. Now, here is a case in which duties had been paid three years previously under a law that taxed the articles brought into the country. It is impossible to conceive any pretext upon which any Government could go back and make a calculation on the parts of the locomotives which, if they had been imported separately, would have been admitted free. It is impossible that a great company like this was ignorant of the tariff. If they had imported and entered the parts which are free of duty separately, no Government could have exacted the payment.

Another feature of the case is the first demand was $41,000, but when they found the Finance Minister was so generous they increased it and succeeded in squeezing $69,000 out of my hon. and good-natured friend. This was unconstitutional, and a violation of Parliamentary Law. What is Parliament for if not to be consulted previously to paying money out of the consolidated revenue fund. It establishes a precedent by which all the manufacturers of boots and shoes could demand a refund of duties on importations of such goods, because certain parts of them, if imported separately would be admitted free. It has been the policy of this country to encourage manufacturing by allowing raw materials to come in untaxed, but this establishes a precedent for remitting duties on manufactured goods.

This occurred just before the meeting of Parliament, and there was no reason why this sum of $69,000 should not have been placed in the estimates and legitimately decided upon. I say legitimately because it was a violation of the Statute Law which provides that no remission shall be made unless recommended by the Treasury Board, and this was never before the Board.

In discussing this question in another place with my hon. friend the First Minister he said: "What did the late Government do? Did they not remit a considerable sum of money to Gooderham & Worts for duties on whiskey consumed by fire?" The case stood on a different footing. The duty was levied in the distillery at the tail of the first still, and exacted from the proprietors before the manufacture had been completed. While the property was still in the hands of the officer of the Government the fire occurred, and made a case which presented a fair and legitimate case for compensation.

Mr. SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman made the motion last Session after the Committee had presented their final report.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I only mentioned it to know what steps should be taken.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—I did not know until this moment there was any garbled correspondence of the Commissioner of Customs. Any correspondence in the possession of the Department will be brought down. The remission to the Great Western was made on a principle that has been recognized since 1868. The Grand Trunk Company had received in exactly the same way on their locomotives \$80,000, the free parts being attached. The per-centage allowed for remission of duties to the Great Western Company was 33 $\frac{1}{3}$; to the Grand Trunk in 1868 it was 45 per cent. This matter was before the Treasury Board, and it was on their report the Finance Minister acted. The hon. gentleman refers to an Order in Council for \$43,000. The remission was made by two Orders in Council.

Mr. WORKMAN—Many enquiries have been made of me in Montreal on this question, and I am glad it has been brought up. I understood there was no remission of duties on engines coming into the country, and I stated so; I now find I am mistaken. It is not for me to say the Government has made a mistake, but I think they have been guilty of an error in making this large reduction of duty on articles subject to it by law. I don't think this House would approve of the action of the Government in handing $60,000 to one railroad company and $80,000 to another, while an honest merchant who imports his goods has to pay duty in full. If I applied to the Minister of Customs for rebate of duty, he would be pursuing a proper course to refuse it. It is a great injury to our own manufacturing industries. We have establishments in this country for manufacturing locomotive engines. They have a great deal to compete against, and where this unjust remission of duty—

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—My hon. friend is entirely mistaken. It is not unjust. This duty is remitted according to law.

Mr. WORKMAN—If I am wrong—

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—My hon. friend is entirely wrong. He is wrong in this respect. The hon. members opposite assume that because the Grand Trunk Company pretended—and it was a mere pretence—to loosen some bolts, take off some nuts and take the locomotive apart to some extent, therefore they should relieve from duty articles free by law, while the same articles imported by the Great Western Company should not go free because they were not taken apart. The hon. gentlemen opposite gave the Grand Trunk $77,146.45 in this way; we, under the operation of the same principle, gave the Great Western $70,942.61. The mere fact that the locomotives were not taken apart and put together again made no practical difference. It was precisely as if you had a duty upon wheels, but the duty would not be levied if you took the lynch-pin out. It was a mere farce and pretence to put the engines together in this country, when they were completed in another country.

Mr. WORKMAN—I think in any remission of this kind the Government ought to be very particular and see the law is carried out in its entirety.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—The Hon. Premier says that the action of the late Government was a farce, a mere pretence, and it made no practical difference whether a machine was brought in in pieces or in bulk. Whether it was a farce or not, the action of the late Government was legal; the action of the present Government was illegal. There was no option for the late Government, they could not refuse the application of the Grand Trunk Company when they had complied with the law; the present Government in granting the request of the Great Western Company broke the law.

The object of the tariff was obvious. It was to encourage manufactures in this country. We were anxious to encourage the construction of railroad locomotives in Canada. It was represented by the manufacturing interest that certain portions of them could not be made here, and that such portions should be admitted free of duty as partially raw materials. Therefore, if I recollect rightly, by the unanimous voice of Parliament, these articles were put into the free list in order that they might be imported free, and in order to enable manufacturers to construct the rest of the locomotives and put them up in this country. Well, the Grand Trunk, taking advantage of that law, it seems, got some locomotives built, some in Scotland and some in the United States, had them taken to pieces, and imported those new portions separately which were by law free. The consequence was that an Order in Council was passed that all the portions brought into this country were free.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Will my right hon. friend answer this question? If he acted under the law, where was the necessity for the Order in Council?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Because the question was raised by the Collector in Montreal whether he should charge or not, and Mr. Rose applied to the Government. My hon. friend has read the answer—before the Hon. Premier came in—which was this:—

“Mr. Rose brought the accompanying papers before the Council on Saturday last, and it was decided that the parts of the locomotives declared free in the tariff should be entered free, the remainder to pay 15 per cent.”

That was the Order in Council which the Minister of Customs, Mr. Tilley, communicated to the Collector at Montreal. That was all the Government did. I grant you that it was taking advantage of the law; but how often do you see people getting a remission in this way? But here was the statute which declared that certain portions could be brought in free, and those were the instructions of the Department, for of course no duty could be charged upon goods on which there was no tax. Therefore the Government could not help themselves, and acted within the law; but in the case of the Great Western the statute was violated. The boiler and machinery of the whole locomotive—screws, nuts, and everything of foreign manufacture were brought in, run upon our lines for one, two, or three years, and then the Government on the 13th of February, 1874, handed the whole duty back, amounting to $69,000 altogether, which was contrary to law, which was a breach of the law, which the Government had no right to do, and for which personally and pecuniarily they are responsible. It was a wilful breach, and the country loses $69,000.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—The right hon. gentleman's points, as I understood them, are two; first, that this Government, in making the refund, did something which was illegal, and second, that his Government did a similar act which was legal. The Grand Trunk tried to successfully avoid the law, and the Great Western was not so fortunate. The hon. gentleman is perfectly aware that the Government has power, where hardship or injustice has been suffered, to make remission, and the action of the Government would be perfectly justifiable when remission had been made. In the case of the Grand Trunk the Government were perfectly justified in acting under that discretionary power, but the other railroads should be put on a similar footing. But if the Commissioner of the Customs is received as a witness, and his testimony may be fairly received in this respect, it would appear to be the fact that the Grand Trunk and other companies had been in the habit—in regard to the importation of complete locomotives—of deducting from the duty paid on them a certain proportion equivalent to the amount of the article which might have been imported free of duty.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I rise to a question of order. I drew the attention of the House at the commencement to the fact that I would not refer to the Commissioner of Customs, for the very sufficient reason—the reason endorsed by the Hon. Prime Minister only to-day—that the opinions of subordinate officers should be left out of a debate. I have moved for all the Orders in Council and all correspondence in the archives of the Department, and the Hon. Minister of Customs had it in his power to bring, if he could, any authority from the late Government for this act. It is treating this House with disrespect to manufacture new correspondence and pretend that it is an authority.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—What is the question of order?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—It is this; that instead of confining himself to the correspondence moved for, he is bringing forward a letter manufactured to order the day before this correspondence was brought down.

Mr. SPEAKER—I believe the hon. gentleman is in order; he is merely replying to a statement.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I put it in as a simple statement of fact, with which it was right the House should be fully acquainted, and which it would have been disingenuous on my part to suppress. Under the Order of May 26, 1868, the Grand Trunk and other railways regularly entered their locomotives for duty at a rate representing the value of the finished machine, less the value of those portions in the free list, and entitled to free entry. That, on the authority of the Commissioner of Customs, was the fact, and such practice of the late Government. Now, Sir, the actual fact in the matter was this:—The Grand Trunk Railway received a remission of $75,000 out of $1,123,000 worth of locomotives imported, being at the rate of 45 per cent. of the value of those articles. The Great Western received only $47,246 out of a total value of $2,012,000, or at the rate of 25 per cent. I don't think it is necessary for us to say anything further on this subject.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—That statement of the Minister of Customs may or may not have been acted upon; but one thing is clear, there was no authority for it from the Government. The instructions were these:—

“The correspondence between the Grand Trunk Railway and yourself, relative to the importation of locomotive engines in part, having been brought under the consideration of the Minister of Finance, I am desired to instruct you to remit these parts of the locomotives declared to be free by the tariff.” &c.

My hon. friend represented in his speech that it was an ingenious means by which the Grand Trunk evaded the law; but they had the right to do so if the engines or parts thereof were brought in separately under the Act. These separated parts were free of duty; there was no law under which they could be charged. As regards the statute, I say it did not warrant a remission of this sum to the Great Western. The hon. gentleman says there was a breach of law. Supposing it were the fact that the late Government had committed a breach of law, is that any reason that the hon. gentleman should break a law—is it any justification or excuse? One importing party has no claim for hardship because another man by favoritism or corrupt practice has been allowed to bring in articles free. That is absurd on the face of it.

But there is a further consideration, and I call the attention of the House to the point. It is only in cases where injustice has been done—there must be both hardship and injustice—that duty can be remitted. It may be very hard to pay a duty where the Grand Trunk did not, but there is no injustice in making the Great Western pay a tax imposed by law. The Act goes still further, and says the remission shall not be made unless conducive to the public good. The preamble provides that when there is great public inconvenience and injustice, or any hardship, that hardship and injustice should be removed, because it is for the public good that Governments should not do injustice to anybody. But a mere case of hardship in favour of one individual and against another does not come within the terms of the Statute. And in the case of great hardship and injustice, there can be no relaxation until after the matter is fully considered by the Treasury Board, that Board being specially appointed to try those matters. It does not appear by the papers that this matter was ever submitted. Not one of the sections of the Act has been carried out. The whole thing was a breach of the law by the Government, I have no doubt with the best intentions. But notwithstanding it was a breach and an improper taking out of the public Treasury of the dollars which belonged to the public, and not to the Great Western.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—It is admitted that the Grand Trunk had been allowed to import the locomotives complete, entering them to the extent of that portion which was to pay a duty, and deducting the value of that which was free. That proposition appears upon the memorandum which the hon.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

member for Cumberland spurns, which he says is a manufactured memorandum, and represents opinions which ought not to be listened to, but which in point of fact is not a memorandum of opinions, but a memorandum stating facts with reference to the practice of the Department for years back. The memorandum of December 23, 1873, reads:—

“OTTAWA, Dec. 25th 1873

“Having been desired by the Hon. the Finance Minister to make a short explanatory report upon the subject of the application made by the Great Western Railway, the undersigned has the honour to state that at the outset when certain parts of locomotive engines were exempt from duty, as they are still found to be in the tariff, the impression was that the free parts of the engine should be imported unconnected with the dutiable parts—the consequence of which was that the exemption was in most cases a dead letter. It was therefore represented first by the Grand Trunk Railway Co., that where engines were imported in part or only partially put together, the machinery or parts of the engine which were free could not usefully be imported without being welded or inseparably attached to some of the dutiable parts of the engine before it left the manufactory in England or the United States, and it was accordingly proposed some two or three years ago, with the concurrence of the Minister of Customs, that upon the importation of locomotive engines from foreign countries, two specifications should be produced at the Custom House, one of dutiable parts of the engine, and another for the free, with the values. This was subsequently again modified by calling merely for a specification with values attached of the free parts of the engine, which deducted from the whole price paid for it would at once show on what amount the duty had to be paid. It now appears that since 1870 the Great Western Railway Co. have paid full duties on the numerous locomotive engines imported by them, without any deduction for the free parts.

It is for the refund of the duties paid by them on the free parts of those engines, that application is now made, and as the application is founded upon the law and is in accordance with the present and approved manner of carrying out the law so as to give practical effect to the exemption, it is submitted that the amount claimed by the Great Western Railway Co., $41,398.34 should be refunded to them.

“R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

“To the Hon. Minister of Customs,
“Ottawa.”

Now, Sir, it appears that the practice and interpretation of the Statute in question had been determined by the Government with the authority of the Minister of Customs. I presume that Minister was aware of the system upon which his Department was carried on. I presume he was aware of the modes, the modified plans of carrying out this law when adopted by them, although the hon. members for Kingston and Cumberland say there was a breach of the law; but if there was it was allowed and initiated by them. It was found upon the application of the Grand Trunk that the law was inoperative—that certain parts of locomotives should be admitted free. It appears the Government recognized that application of the Grand Trunk, and they were allowed to import their locomotives complete, to send in their invoices in double form, and afterwards in single form, but in each case duty was only paid on the parts on which duty was collectable if they had been imported in parts. That appears to have been the course which the Minister of the day pursued. And what my hon. friends are charged with doing is that when the Great Western found that the law was applied in one way to the Grand Trunk and was differently interpreted to them, and when they asked that it should be interpreted with an even hand and justice towards all classes of importers, my hon. friends are blamed for breaking the law, because they followed the example of the hon. gentlemen and measured out the same justice to that railway as they did to the other.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—There is no official correspondence in the Customs Department that is not ready to come before this House. I think it is very unfair for the hon. gentleman from Cumberland to have charged the Commissioner with having manufactured correspondence to misinterpret the action of the late Government. The right hon. gentleman from Kingston laid particular stress on his argument to try to convince this House that parts of the locomotives were apart from the locomotives themselves. The parts came in free, and the law that permitted them to come in free was construed by the Order in Council so to admit when unattached to the locomotive. When the Grand Trunk made application to have these parts admitted free they were not unattached, and it was the same law which in 1868 permitted them to come in free, that permitted the Great Western Railway to import them the same way. This Government saw the difficulty, and in 1874 met the case.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I have listened to the remarks of the Minister of Justice with considerable interest. I was anxious to see if the hon. gentleman would risk his reputation as a lawyer to defend the action of the Government by saying that the law had been complied with in this remission of duties, but I have listened in vain for any statement from him that the Government of the day have been borne out in their action by the statute. He knows as a lawyer that the transaction is a gross violation of the law. Last year when I brought this question before the House I was met with the statement that the Government did it under an Order in Council passed by their predecessors. I have moved for all the papers and correspondence connected with it, but what have I got? After searching the archives of the Customs in vain for authority for this transaction, they had to set a clerk in the Department to work to manufacture correspondence.

Hon. Gentlemen—Order! order!

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I have evidence in my hand that the correspondence of the 6th of April was written the day before it was brought down by the Commissioner of Customs. Did I move for the evidence of the Commissioner of Customs? I did not. I moved for all the correspondence that down to that hour existed in relation to that matter; and in all this the hon. gentlemen found themselves unable to vindicate their conduct without directing a subordinate officer to whitewash them by the letter which they have read. I said before I would not refer to it to-day, were it not a contempt of this House, when any hon. gentleman moves for papers in which the conduct of the Government is challenged, to manufacture correspondence outside of the papers called for. There is nothing in these two papers to vindicate them. I hold that the Order in Council of a year ago had no precedent. The following is the correspondence referred to, and does it give any pretext for such a transaction?

"CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,

"OTTAWA, June 3rd, 1868.

"Mr. Rose brought the accompanying papers before Council on Saturday last, and it was decided that the parts of the locomotives declared free in the tariff should be entered free, the remainder to pay 15 per cent. Please instruct the Collector accordingly.

"S. L. TILLEY.

"R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, Esq.,
May 26th, 1868.

Could Mr. Tilley say anything else? Could Mr. Tilley or anybody in Canada say that they should not enter free in the Custom House that which the Statute law of the Dominion declared should come into the country free. That was accompanied by the statement of the Commissioner of Customs, who says:—

"DEAR SIR,—The correspondence between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and yourself relative to the importation of locomotive engines in part, having been brought under the consideration of the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance, I am desired to instruct you to admit to a free entry those parts of the locomotives which are declared to be free under the tariff; it being considered that the parts in question did not lose their claims to exemption under the law by having been put together in Glasgow with the other dutiable parts of the engine, such engine being taken to pieces afterwards, and imported into Canada in parts as represented.

"I am, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

"Alex. M. Deslisle, Esq.,

"Collector of Customs, Montreal."

"Such engines being taken to pieces afterwards and imported into Canada in parts as represented."

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I want the hon. gentleman who say "hear, hear," from the Minister of Justice down, to tell me whether there is any law in Canada that would levy one farthing of duty on those parts of a locomotive rendered free under the tariff that are put together in Glasgow? No hon. gentleman would stultify himself in the presence of this House by pretending that because the locomotive had been fitted together the parts so fitted should not be admitted free when they were declared so under the tariff. I took these very papers to the late Minister of Customs and asked whether there was any other authority given by him for the free entry of parts of locomotives except the memorandum that is in my hand; he said there was not, and I say that while the course pursued by the late Government was strictly legal, this Government has taken out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada $67,000 without the shadow of law to sustain them. The Order in Council which I hold in my hand, dated 11th February, 1874, says:—

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

"On an application from the Great Western Railway Company representing that they have paid full duties on the various locomotive engines imported by them since 1870 without any deduction for such parts thereof as are exempted by law from duty, and praying that the amount so paid by them, and amounting to $41,398.34 be refunded.

"On the report of the Commissioner of Customs and the recommendation of the Hon. Mr. Cartwright acting in the absence of the Hon. the Minister of Customs, the Committee advise the amount claimed be refunded."

Here we find just upon the eve of the meeting of Parliament the Treasury of the country depleted to the extent of $70,000 without any consultation, without any authority of the House, and in direct violation of the law, on the authority of the Minister of Finance, without even the authority of a Treasury Minute to give it the semblance of propriety. I am not surprised that under the circumstances the Minister of Justice closes his speech without saying that there was a semblance of law to back the Ministry in the transaction.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I did not suppose the hon. gentleman, after whitewashing himself on a matter for which he and the right hon. member for Kingston were responsible, would retort that the course this Government adopted from their predecessors was a violation of the law. I thought it was enough to show the House it was in pursuance of their own actions that the present Government acted in this matter. I am speaking of the report of the hon. gentleman's permanent officer as to the interpretation of the law on which, for a long time, he had proceeded. The hon. gentleman says we are not to read the report of his permanent officer, but we are to trust to his memory.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I said nothing so absurd. I said when official documents were moved for it was too late to get correspondence manufactured, but I say every official document of an officer of a Department is properly brought before the House.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—On the 23rd of December, 1873, the Commissioner of Customs reports upon an application of the Great Western Railway Company to inform the mind of the Minister then responsible, as to what the course pursued and interpretation of the law had been. Mr. Bouchette in his report says:—

“At the outset, when certain parts of locomotive engines were exempted from duty, as they are still found to be in the tariff, the impression was that those free parts of the engine should be imported unconnected with the dutiable parts, the consequence of which was that the exemption was in most cases a dead letter. It was therefore represented first by the Grand Trunk Railway Company that where engines were imported in parts or only partially put together, the machinery or parts of the engine which were free could not usefully be imported without being welded or inseparably attached to some of the dutiable parts of the engine before it left the manufactory in England or the United States, and it was accordingly proposed some two or three years ago, with the concurrence of the Minister of Customs, that upon the importation of locomotive engines from foreign countries two specifications should be produced at the Custom House, one of the dutiable parts of the engine, and another of the free, with the values.”

This was subsequently modified by calling merely for a specification, with values attached, of the free parts of the engine, which, deducted from the whole price paid for it, would show on what amount the duty had to be paid. That was the course taken by the late Minister of Customs either with or without legal advice. The officer further says:—“That since 1870 the Great Western Railroad Company have paid full duties on the numerous locomotive engines imported by them without any deduction for the free parts, in ignorance of the dealings of the Government with another company who were allowed to enter portions of their engines free.” It was for refund of the duties paid by them on these free parts of their engines that the application of the Great Western Company was made. I did not think I would hear the hon. gentleman say again that that was against the law. I did not think I would hear his then colleague, responsible for his action, say that that was against the law. It appeared to me they would not have dared to stand up and tell us that they were guilty of a systematic violation of the law for three or four years.

But the hon. gentleman, notwithstanding the record of the transactions of his predecessor, blames the Minister of Customs for his action. He says in effect:—“I did it; but you should not learn from me; you ought to have known better; you ought to have mistrusted me; you ought to have known that what I have done is wrong.” And I admit there is a great deal of force in this line of argument, but we cannot apply it to everything. It must be conceded to the hon. gentleman that he has done some things right. This Government only desire to do even-handed justice to all importers of locomotives, and place a law on the Statute Books to prevent these free importations in the future. These parts are exempt, and the locomotive engine, if taxable at all, is only so as an article not otherwise enumerated. Now, the hon. gentleman takes the view—after consideration relative to the modified forms of carrying it out—that the locomotive engine was not taxable as a whole, but only those parts imported, which were not enumerated as separate; and I think that the view he took had a good deal of reason and a good deal of common sense in it. I do not therefore consider my hon. friends impeachable or peculiarly responsible for the money concerned.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I think that I may make a few remarks in reply to the Hon. Minister, and I must complain that this eminent legal luminary has left us without the benefit of his valuable opinion, whether this transaction had the authority of law. He is driven to the reductio ad absurdum of saying that under the law, in his judgment, because the Statute provided that certain parts were dutiable, and other parts free, he considers it was very doubtful whether a duty could have been levied on locomotives.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE.—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I certainly understood the hon. member to say, in his closing remarks, that there was a great deal in the argument.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—In favour of your view?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—He said there was very much in the argument, and it would be a very extraordinary question on which, I believe, a gentleman of the learned profession could not found a very strong case.

The hon. gentleman is obliged simply to fall back upon another memorandum, prepared by an officer of the Department after the late Government had gone out of office. Now, what have we got? I moved for all the correspondence, and I am told by the Minister of Finance that he has done this under the authority of an Order in Council of the late Government. I moved for all papers, &c.; and what do I get? I receive a memorandum drawn from recollection. I ask is that satisfactory to the House? We have an Order in Council produced declaring that only the parts so mentioned in the tariff can be admitted free, and the instructions of an officer of the Department to the Collector, stating that they must be imported in parts in order to have the advantage of that remission of duty; but there is no other authority for the Government, save the recollections of an old gentleman since superannuated. I have produced M. Bouchette's letter, written by direction of the Minister of Customs, distinctly prohibiting the admission to free entry of the parts of a locomotive, unless they came in separately, and, coming so, there was no law in Canada allowing them to be taxed. The hon. gentleman has produced a memorandum drawn up from recollection, without a shadow of documentary testimony in the Department to show it to be correct.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—They talk about our having refunded duties, but we refunded no duties; we exacted the duties the law imposed.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Which law prevented us from levying upon parts; and this is another instance of the evil consequent upon relying on the recollection of subordinate officers in the Department, and manufacturing correspondence.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—For that, it appears, was provided by direction, and to meet the views of the Minister of Finance and Customs.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Now, Sir, I will not occupy the attention of this House further with this matter; I am quite satisfied.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I trust that the Hon. Minister of Customs will supply the missing letter which was addressed by the Department to the Manager of the Great Western Railway in response to the letter written to myself; that is not here, and I hope that the Printing Committee will be instructed or requested not to publish as part of the correspondence the letter manufactured to order.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I say, Sir, manufactured to order.

I do not suppose that a member of this House—and I will say that without casting the slightest imputation on the gentleman—thinks that the Minister of Customs does not know his duty, when called upon by order of this House, to furnish correspondence for its information, and I maintain that it would have been a gross contempt concerning a superior officer for a subordinate to introduce a long letter among the correspondence without being ordered, and being directed by the Minister of the Department to prepare it for the purpose. As I said previously, the Prime Minister to-day, very properly, called in question the propriety of subordinate officers being brought under the discussion of the House, with reference to matters of this kind.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE— I will have to do it again.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I am assisting you. The First Minister certainly knows better what respect is due to this House, when papers are called for it by any hon. gentleman in it, than has been shown in this connection.

I have to say that the Hon. Minister of Justice has failed to deal with another point ; not, I imagine, because he has not sufficient astuteness to see a point when put ; but he neglected to deal with another matter of very great importance, with a law requiring an order of the Treasury Board before one dollar of duty can be returned. The hon. gentleman has not shewn that there was an order from the Treasury Board given in this instance ; and I have not only proved a violation of Parliamentary Law, but also a violation of the Statute Law ; and did not the Minister of Justice close his two impassioned appeals to the House on this subject, without venturing to question the soundness of my statement, which everybody that reads knows to be the fact, that this transaction was culpable and blameable from every point of view, including a violation of Statute Laws ?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The hon. gentleman may not have heard the Minister of Customs, behind me, telling him across the House that there was an order of the Treasury Board, and therefore I did not consider it necessary to mention it.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Then I say that it was a gross contempt of this House for the Hon. Minister of Customs, when the whole correspondence is moved for, to have brought down only a part of it. And, Sir, I go further. The Hon. Minister of Customs is speaking to the best of his recollection—I am speaking from the document. It appears that he was not here at all ; this statement represents that the Minister of Finance acted for the Minister of Customs, and in his absence made this recommendation. I hold, therefore, that if such an order existed, it was an act of gross contempt not to bring that paper down in response to the motion. The Order in Council shows, however, that the matter was never before the Treasury Board.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I think that the matter ought to be settled ; the Order in Council is either true or false. The Statute says that remission can only be made on the recommendation of the Treasury Board.

This Order of the Governor General in Council states that on the recommendation of the Hon. Mr. Cartwright, acting in the absence of the Hon. Minister of Customs, the report was made. It could not be done either on report of the Minister of Customs or the recommendation of the Hon. Mr. Cartwright ; it must be, and can only be, done by law on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, and therefore this Order in Council is not sufficient.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—I have not seen the papers since they were presented to the House. The papers with reference to this matter can easily be obtained. There is no disposition to hold back one single letter of any kind whatever.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—The hon. gentleman had better get the papers or supply the missing link.

The motion was carried.

QUEBEC MEDICAL OFFICERS' BOAT.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN moved that an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General for a statement shewing the monthly wages paid by the Government to each of the men composing the crew of the Medical Officers' boat at the Port of Quebec in 1874 and 1875 ; a statement shewing the total cost of the service of the said boat for each of the said years ; also all correspondence which may have passed between the Government and the said Medical Officer or Officers in relation to the said service during the said two years.

The motion was carried.

THE CHARLEVOIX ELECTION.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—I move that an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of the instructions issued to Mr. Talbot, one of the employés or Sub-Inspectors of the Post Office Department in relation to his visits to the Electoral District of Charlevoix during the Dominion Election in the month of January last. Mr. Speaker, it happens that this officer was sent specillay at that time, and as this seems very strange, it would be interesting for my constituency and myself to know what special instructions he received, and the reasons for his visit.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—It did do good.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—But not in the way you wanted.

The motion was carried.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—I move for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of the instructions given to Mr. Edmond Trudelle, one of the officers or employés of the Customs Department at Quebec, on the occasion of his visit to the Electoral District of Charlevoix during the Dominion Election held in January last.

This is a much more important matter than the last, and I must call the attention of the First Minister and of the Minister of Customs to this case particularly. Why was an officer of the Customs Department in Quebec allowed or ordered to leave his office and duties and go sixty or seventy miles away to the Electoral District of Charlevoix, where an election was taking place for the return of a member to the House of Commons? He did so, too, with the full knowledge of one of the Ministers of the Crown now sitting in this House—I mean the President of the Council—was sent there while that hon. gentleman was in Quebec, and after that hon. gentleman made an unsuccessful visit to my county. He also had a band of policemen hired and sent to Charlevoix, headed by one of the officers of the Government, this Edmond Trudelle. These men were composed of the river policemen, who in the summer are in the employ of the Administration. They were compelled to go there, else they would have been refused employment next summer; and they were illegally dressed in uniform.

I wish to obtain also the correspondence which took place between the Department of Marine and Fisheries and certain outside parties. It will be very interesting, showing that efforts were made to secure the uniforms and weapons of the police, which meant to make them appear to be a legal body, sent however to force the electors to vote for a man they did not want to return, with the connivance, and advice, and consent, and at the instigation of the President of the Council, who is sitting at the side of the First Minister. If any instructions, such as I believe, were given, I wish the House and country to know how a Minister of the

Hon. Mr. SMITH.

Crown has used his influence and his position; and the hon. gentleman would have succeeded in his designs had not a legal body, composed of Provincial policemen, kept these brigands in order. My friends were accordingly able to vote, and my opponents also exercised perfect liberty in this respect.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—I cannot give the hon. member the information he asks for. There were no instructions sent to the Custom House Officer at Quebec to visit Charlevoix.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—Now that the attention of the Hon. Minister of Customs has been called to that, perhaps, without putting another motion, he will enquire on whose authority the official left his office to go on that visit to my county.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—The hon. member is very touchy about this and other cases. He finds he has been elected, and of course he says my journey there was unsuccessful. I had not the advantage of having a brother in a high position in the Church, writing letters to persons in a diocese with which he was not connected. If I had such assistance, my candidate would have been more successful than he was.

There has no authority been given to the official. He may have been there or not, but at the same time, if he was there, did he do anything to interfere with the election? If he did not, I think he stands in a better position than three employés of the Quebec Government who took part in the triumph of the hon. gentleman's election. At any rate, I gave him no instructions.

Mr. MASSON—I think if the hon. member had contented himself with referring merely to the political part of the question, it would have been a great deal better; but this House must have been surprised to hear from the hon. gentlemen on the other side, who are accusing us of bringing certain names into discussions, to hear the hon. member for Charlevoix taunted with having employed ecclesiastical influence to aid his election. I ask now from whom do these references come—from us or the other side?

The opponent of the hon. member for Charlevoix abused influence of that kind; he made use of it falsely. He took means, by asking for a certain book from a library, to extract a friendly letter from an ecclesiastic of high position; and he afterwards read a part of that letter to the electors, the part being changed to suit the circumstances, to show them that he also had the sort of influence in his favor to which the President of the Council refers. This is the second time we have had the names of persons of high positions in the Church dragged into our discussions. It was done four times last Session. I hope this is the last time.

I agree with the hon. member for Charlevoix, that public employes should not be allowed to take part in elections. If it is persisted in it will introduce the American system. I noticed public employes in the Montreal Centre election taking an active part in the contest.

I would not have risen if it had not been for the manner in which certain names were dragged into the discussion that should not have been.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—The hon. member who seems to be the Lower Canada Leader of the Opposition has mistaken altogether what I said. I do not blame the high functionary for writing an election letter. I merely say it was unfortunate that the other side had not the same advantage. I do not blame anybody.

Mr. CARON—It seems to me that the Hon. President of the Council should have availed himself of this opportunity to explain his position. He is accused of having made use of his political influence to send down a force to the county of Charlevoix, who acted illegally and, according to what has been said, under his advice. It seems to me he should have explained how it was that these people were sent down, and how it was a Custom House Officer was also sent there. Instead of that, he says if he did do what is charged against him, the hon. member for Charlevoix had a person occupying a very high position who supported him. That is a very poor excuse for his conduct. He has several times referred to my hon. friends from Charlevoix and Terrebonne as being rivals for the leadership of the Quebec Conservatives. So far as the hon. President of the Council is concerned, I would like to know the members he leads, and whether when he was elected in Quebec Centre it was not told him by the papers that supported him that he was elected, not because he possessed any influence of his own, but because he represented public works which Quebec required, and among others, a graving dock.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—The Hon. President of the Council need not trouble himself any more about the leadership of the Quebec Conservatives. This is the second or third time that he seemed to be concerned about it. The hon. member for Terrebonne and I are in perfect accord; I support him and he supports me whenever necessary. We are also in perfect accord as to the position of the Hon. President of the Council in the Cabinet. Following his usual course, instead of answering the serious charges brought against him, he tries to carry the war into our camp, and into mine especially, because he says if a high dignitary of the Church, a relative of mine, had not supported me, perhaps the result would not have been the same. I would not have alluded to the subject if the hon. gentleman had not mentioned it himself; but I must explain why the "high dignitary," as he calls him, took the part he did. He interfered simply as any other citizen would have done.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—I did not say anything to the contrary.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—If he had the same rights as others, why did the hon. gentleman attack him?

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—I did not attack him at all.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—He is ashamed of having done so.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—I am not ashamed of what I said.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—The hon. gentleman should have known that Mr. Tremblay, my opponent, was reading at the church door in Charlevoix a letter which my brother, the Vicar General of Rimouski, had written him on the tenth of June, 1872, to show that he was against me and had no confidence in me, trying thus to destroy my influence with the electors of the county. It was to this effect—the first portion of it was a complaint of certain fishermen from the River Moisie, County Saguenay, which Mr. Tremblay at that time represented. They complained they could not fish in that river, as it was let to a party, and my brother asked him whether he could not do something in favour of these fishermen, the matter coming within the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament. The second part of the letter was about the survey of certain lands in the district, and we was going on to show that the explanations given by the Minister of Crown Lands were not satisfactory, and censured him for not acting in a more patriotic way. Mr. Tremblay read to the electors the portion referring to the fishing matters, omitted the middle part and added the censure, which was intended for a member of the Quebec Government, to the first part, to make it appear as if it referred to the Federal Government of which I was then a member. I had never seen the letter, and I wrote to my brother for explanation. He telegraphed back that the first part of it referred to the Federal Government, the second to the Local Government, and that the censure applied to the latter; and he added, for more surety he sent me a copy of the letter. I read that to the electors, with an accompanying one from my brother, who was naturally very severe on Mr. Tremblay for his conduct. My brother was defending himself, and I wonder that the hon. gentleman should attempt to condemn him for exercising a right which any man in this country would have acted upon. But the hon. gentleman says nothing about the charge that I brought against him—that he was a party to the organization of the men who were sent down to Charlevoix to coerce the electors.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—It is not so.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—He cannot deny it.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—I can.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—I have proof of it.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—Give your proof.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—I have it in writing. There is an order for carrying those men, and an account against them.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—It is not so.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—Let a Committee of this House be appointed and I will prove what I assert. Does the hon. gentleman say it is not true?

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—It is not true that I was at the head of a Committee to send vehicles for them.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—I never said that.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—What did you say?

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—I said that the hon. gentleman was instrumental in sending those men there; that he connived at it; that he acted for that purpose; that without him they would not have been sent; that the account is there against him if he has not already paid it; that there are writings by authority of which those men were sent to St. Joachim; that they were told in that document that they should have their lodging and board there, and that the same thing was also given to a hotel-keeper at Baie St. Paul. I had intended merely to mention the fact and say it was very wrong conduct for the Hon. President of the Council, but since he has denied it, I will give notice that I will move for the appointment of a Committee to investigate the matter.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—The hon. gentleman is not discussing the question before the House. Let us have one thing at a time.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN asked leave to withdraw his motion for the Address, since he had been assured the official received no instructions from the Department of Customs.

The motion was withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—Moved an Address for correspondence, &c., in relation to the despatching to the Electoral District of Charlevoix in the month of January last of some twenty of the men composing in summer the Quebec Water Police.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I can only say to my hon. friend that there is no correspondence or instructions of any kind with regard to this matter.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—Perhaps we may find something among the outside offices, and the hon. gentleman had better let the order go.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I will make enquiries into the matter.

The motion was carried.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—CLAIMS OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved an Address for correspondence between the Government and the Hon. Ambrose Shea, respecting a claim in connection with a supply of labour for the construction of the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—What is the object of this?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I intend to ask for a Committee, and I want the correspondence before giving any explanation.

The motion was carried.

AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

Mr. ORTON moved for a Select Committee on the Agricultural Interests of the Dominion. In doing so, he said:—Since the day I first moved a similar resolution to this, I have become doubly assured, and confirmed in the conviction I then held, that the objects sought by this Committee are seriously and earnestly desired. As an evidence of that, I may mention the resolutions passed at different agricultural societies throughout the country, and at various gatherings of millers from one end of Ontario to the other, asking for protection. With your permission I will read a resolution passed by the Agricultural Association of the County of Essex:—

"After the adoption of the Director's report, the President congratulated the Association on the very successful exhibition made last fall at Kingsville, but deplored that the farmers of this, the Garden County of the Dominion, did not take more interest in our agricultural societies. He then dwelt at some length on the injustice that is done the farmers in our present Customs arrangements with the United States, and called attention to the necessity of the farmers to bestir themselves, and see that as they composed four-fifths of the people of this great Province, their interests were not neglected by the men whom they sent to represent them. He then read the following resolution, passed by the Manufacturers' Association at Toronto last fall.

"Be it therefore Resolved, That in view of the fact that no duties are imposed on American products of the soil entering this country, while nearly all Canadian products are heavily taxed when sent to the markets of the United States, we do most emphatically protest against the interests of our farmers, millers and other producers being sacrificed in this way; and that, while desirous of seeing a fair reciprocity of trade in these articles between the two countries restored, Canada cannot suffer American products to enter her markets untaxed, as long as a heavy toll of custom duties is levied on all our products seeking a market in the United States."

"It was then moved and seconded, that the first resolution adopted at the Convention of Manufacturers held in Toronto in November last deserves the approbation of the members of this Society, and that any legislation that protects any other branch of industry, without considering the farming interest, is partial and unjust."

I may also mention that at various meetings of millers throughout the country the very same sentiments were reiterated. I may also draw the attention of the House to the opinion of a gentlemen of undoubted ability as well as of vast experience, Sir A. T. Galt, as expressed in a letter published by him September 6th, 1875, from which I make the following extract. He says:—

"But as regards the United States, I frankly declare that they ought to be dealt with in the same purely selfish spirit with which they treat us. For my part, I am heartily tired of efforts at conciliating the United States commercially—they meet with no response, and even existing treaties and laws are administered by them in a spirit of petty but vexatious exaction. I trust that henceforth the sole consideration will be how our trade legislation is to effect ourselves."

"Possibly this course may produce a wiser policy on their part more worthy of a great commercial nation."

In moving for this Committee, I am moving in the direction of the great public good. I shall endeavour, by the statistics which I find in the Blue Books, to show the injustice under which the farmers of our country are at present suffering. I find in 1874 Canada exported to the United States over $12,000,000 worth of agricultural produce, and that our farmers had to pay the Government of the United States, before they were admitted into their markets, over the sum of $2,000,000. Since the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty, the amount the farmers of Canada have paid into the United States Treasury is something like $25,000,000, a sum which would have built one-fifth of the Pacific Railway.

I find, on looking further, that the Americans may use all our markets, and send very largely all of their products into our country to compete with ours. I will endeavour to show what has been sent in by the Americans, and how far we have derived benefit from it. The imports of horses, cattle, sheep, swine, and other animals in 1872 amounted to $138,029; in 1873, to $259,549; in 1875, to $581,509, showing a rapid increase of the importations from the United States into Canada in the animals produced on the farm, and therefore competing with Canadian animals raised by our farmers. The imports of grain into Canada, after deducting what is exported not the produce of Canada for 1873 amounted to $8,473,699; in 1874, to $8,102,676, and in 1875, to $8,176,091, and this large amount of agricultural products competed in our markets with Canadian products. I will also point out another fact:—The total imports of flour from the United States for the year 1875 was $2,462,619. The exports of flour from Canada, including that not the produce of the Dominion, amounted to $1,583,242, leaving $879,377 as the amount of American flour which is actually consumed in Canada, and therefore competing with the flour produced by our own millers. There are many other facts which may be pointed out from the statistics, but statistics are a dry subject, and I shall not trouble the House with anything further on that point. I will ask the House to consider what the Americans have paid for access to our markets. The horses, swine, cattle and sheep which pay 10 per cent. when they come into Canada, articles which we send very largely to the United States, the Americans compel us to pay 20 per cent. on. I maintain that this is unjust towards the farmers of Canada.

In the United States there are wide tracts of rich agricultural soil, and with a climate that does not necessitate expensive buildings or large quantities of fodder, and cattle can be raised cheaper than in Canada, and they will be able to undersell Canadian cattle in our own markets, and our distilleries will be supplied, as they are now to some extent, with Yankee cattle. For the last two years there has been a great deal of agitation in favour of production for manufactures; to such an extent did this agitation go that even the present free-trade Government were compelled to increase the tariff of protection for manufactures from 15 to 17½ per cent; and if the prediction of the hon. member for Montreal West is correct—and the country must believe he had some grounds for it, as he was elected under the auspices of a free-trade Premier—the Government intend to further protect the manufacturers. I shall not endeavour to make it appear that protection to the manufacturers is injurious to the agricultural interest. I do not believe that the farmers of Canada can ever be led to suppose that such is the case; they are well aware that by the enterprise of manufacturers they derive vast benefits in the shape of better markets and higher prices for produce. It might be well to compare purely agricultural countries with manufacturing countries. Take Poland as an example:—In that country it is well known there are no manufactures, and I think that all will acknowledge that agriculture is but a sorry occupation in such a place. The average production of wheat there is only nine bushels to the acre, while in Great Britain the average yield per acre is thirty bushels, with a price per bushel double that of Poland. Is it a wonder then that the English farmer can afford to spend two or three times as much to improve his land as the Pole can? The abundance of capital which manufactures create in a country, as well as the increase of commerce and shipping, are advantages which we should not overlook in considering the agricultural interests; and I think we would do well to have the attention of the House directed to this matter. Land in England is worth twenty times what it is in Poland. The increase that has been going on in the agricultural wealth of the country is enormous. I find that the agricultural wealth of England is represented at $3,311,000,000, returning interest at the rate of 13 per cent., while the manufacturing wealth amounts to $219,000,000, while the products from the manufactories amount every year to something like $259,000,000. The product of the investment of the $3,311,000,000 of agricultural worth amounts annually to $559,000,000. When we find these great results arising from the encouragement of manufactures, and such increase in prices of agricultural produce, should we not try and emulate our Mother Country, and endeavour by some means to improve our own agricultural interests? I shall be told by the hon. member for South Waterloo that we would be introducing a dangerous protective policy. I say this policy exists in this country at present; but I maintain, whether the duties on manufactures are increased or not, the farmers should be protected and have the first choice in our own markets. In considering the question of protection, we are told that free-trade is the right policy; we are referred to Great Britain; but I would ask whether the agricultural wealth of Great Britain was brought about by a free trade or by a protective policy. The figures I have referred to in reference to the Agricultural wealth of Great Britain were collected previous to a free-trade policy being adopted, viz:—in year 1835, and after she had educated her immense population of mechanics until she could defy the world. The immense strength the manufacturers had then attained prevented any foreign competition, and therefore free-trade was the correct policy for the country at that time, as it encouraged foreigners to bring in raw material and take away the manufactured goods. John Stewart Mill states that in new countries and under certain circumstances protection to infant manufactures is both justifiable and proper, in order to enable them to compete with countries longer engaged in manufacturing, and who have had their people taught to become skilled mechanics and artisans.

I believe that the feeling of the people of this Dominion is in favour of a broad, comprehensive national policy and encouragement for manufactures, of articles the raw material for which exists in our own country. I believe that protection to them, and also to coarser kinds of cotton goods, would be beneficial to the agricultural interests. We cannot by any system of protection build up manufactures of the finer kinds of goods of which we do not produce the raw material, and we have not the accumulated machinery and skill that is in Great Britain. A protection to them would mean a burthen to the agricultural community. We should protect those industries which are natural to the country, develop our iron and coal, and encourage commerce between the Provinces. I believe Ontario should supply the people of the Lower Provinces with provisions, and that we should receive from them in return their coal and fish, also their manufactures. I believe that the Lower Provinces should be a manufacturing people, and they will become so under a proper fiscal system. I would like to see a policy that will keep the immigrants from Europe in this country and not send them disgusted to the United States. There will be a great deal for the Committee to do if they are appointed. It will be their duty to ascertain what the feelings of the farmers really are, and to hear from them in what shape—if there is to be an alteration in the tariff—the redistribution of duties shall take place in order to give the interests of agriculturists due consideration.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I must object, Sir, to the power the hon. gentleman asks for the Committee. Two Committees have been appointed in this relation during the last five years, and a report was presented last Session by a Committee the hon. gentleman obtained on a similar motion. This is printed in the Appendix to the Journals of last year, and it embodies information obtained by a previous Committee. Why he should endeavour to champion the interests of those who need no champion in this House I do not know. The farmers are thoroughly able to take care of themselves; they are the most prosperous class in the country, and the nostrums the hon. gentleman would prescribe for their protection I do not think they will have on any account. I have no objection, however, if hon. members desire to serve on the Committee, to give it power to send for papers; but I do not consider that there would be any justification for the expenditure of public money in sending for witnesses to testify what every person who has common sense already knows. If the hon. member agrees to strike out that part of that motion, then I have no objection.

Mr. ORTON—Sir, I certainly could not agree to this part being withdrawn. The Hon. Premier has granted a Committee relative to almost every interest in the country except the agricultural interest; and I am sure that the hon. gentleman will find, before this Session is over, large petitions sent by the farmers throughout Ontario to this House, praying that action be taken in their regard. They are discontented with the present state of affairs. The Hon. Premier seeks to condemn the position I have taken as unworthy, and represents me as administering nostrums to the farmers; but, Sir, I am sure that his insinuations are unworthy of his high position, when he tries to accuse me of acting dishonestly.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am surprised, Mr. Speaker. I never said that he was acting dishonestly, I never accused the hon. gentleman of being either dishonest or unworthy. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. ORTON—Certainly the term was not very complimentary. The Hon. Premier represented that I was administering nostrums to the farmers of this country, and that is the term applied to quacks. All I can say to the hon. gentleman is that I am no quack in this matter. I have the interest of the agricultural community at heart. I represent a large agricultural constituency, and I am endeavouring to advance its interests notwithstanding the difficulties the First Minister throws in my way. I know I shall receive the approbation of the great majority of the farmers, whose views, I believe, I state. If the hon. Premier is resolved that this motion shall not carry, he must accept the responsibility. The farmers will know why their interests cannot be considered as well as those of other classes of the community.

HON. MR. MACKENZIE.

Mr. MASSON—I think that the Hon. Minister of Public Works is not dealing with my hon. friend with quite his usual fairness. If I remember aright, the Committee struck the night before last was to enquire into the state of manufacturing and commercial interests; and the Hon. Premier then gave as his reason for not adding the agricultural interest the notice of motion made by my hon. friend in this regard. Had this been included, power would have been conferred to send for persons as well as papers, and therefore I think that this Committee should have the same authority. Past Committees have collected a good deal of evidence, but it is hardly applicable to present circumstances more than the testimony secured by the Committees which have sat with reference to the manufacturing interests.

Mr. ARCHIBALD—I should support with great pleasure the motion, if, in the first place, any reason existed for it, and if, in the second place, the remedy proposed would be effectual. I have been unable to ascertain that any complaints have been made by the farming community. I have not learned of any wide-spread discontent amongst them, but the contrary; therefore no necessity for this enquiry exists. The remedy he offered is protection. He speaks of certain agricultural products and cut meats; these are now protected by a duty of 10 per cent., and some even by a larger duty. The article of cut meats is protected by a specific duty of one cent a pound, which, as nearly as I can calculate, would amount to about 15 per cent. Regarding the articles admitted duty free, they are very few in number, and I will give figures to enable the House to judge how far any further protection would be of any aid to the farmer.

First comes an article, which, small as it is, is worth mentioning—eggs. We import to the value of $8,000, and we export to the value of $434,000; of flour, wheat and rye, we import to the value of $2,462,000, and export, as the hon. gentleman has stated, to the value of $1,583,000. It is worth while to take into consideration the fact that flour and wheat go together, and when I come to wheat, I find that we import to the value of $6,657,000, and export nearly $8,500,000 worth. So that in the article of breadstuffs, wheat and flour, our exports exceed the imports by a very considerable amount. Then comes grain other than wheat and corn, and in this connection, our imports amount to $191,000, and our exports $9,600,000. It is quite evident, therefore, that there is very little to be gained by imposing any duty in this relation, no matter how great. Of Indian corn we import to the value of $2,452,000 and export nearly $160,000 worth. It is important to mention, that while we export largely wheat and pease, these grains are much more valuable, and bring much larger prices than corn to the farmers, who buy the latter at a lower price for feeding purposes, giving them a clear profit. There is one other article I would instance:—We import nearly eight million pounds of wool, and we export 2,000,000 pounds. Apparently this is about as strong a case as can be made out by the hon. gentleman; but let us see how far any protection would be of use in this regard to the agriculturist. The wool we export is the long comb wool, which brings twice as high a price as the wool that is imported. As a matter of fact, the value of the nearly eight millions of pounds we have imported, is about $1,375,000, while we export to the value of $2,642,000 lbs., bringing us about $920,000. An exchange of this kind, it seems to me, is one of the very greatest importance and profit; and to impose a duty on the wool coming into the country would really be to fling money out of the farmers' pockets, increasing the cost of the cloth which is manufactured from it, and which the farmer himself would be obliged to pay when he purchased it from the manufacturer. Under these circumstances, I think that the remedy proposed is the very nostrum which it was characterized a short time since; also that levying any duty on agricultural products cannot result in the slightest benefit to the farmer, but the contrary. I can therefore see no reason why a Committee of this kind should be granted, more particularly as we have had several such Committees during previous Sessions.

Mr. McCALLUM—I am surprised that the Premier is disposed to refuse so reasonable a request as that asked for by the member for Centre Wellington to grant this Committee in order to find out how this great interest stands to-day? I am perfectly willing to leave the matter as it is, and let it go to the country that the First Minister has to-night refused to place the farmers on the same level with other classes. On the very tools with which they work they pay $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. duty; but their interests, which are as important as any other, are neglected. The time is not far distant, however, when the farmer will make his influence felt on the floor this House. Along the Welland Canal, near which I live, the very cattle and horses are fed on American products to the injury of our agriculturists.

If of Indian corn we have a short crop, we certainly need a market where we can buy, but we cannot take advantage of the American market in our case without paying from 20 to 25 per cent. duty. If there is a large crop in the United States they overflow this country with their products. The Committee can do no harm, and if it spends a few hundred dollars it will not be too much, the subject being worthy the consideration of the members of this House.

Mr. PATERSON—It is true that this Committee has been previously asked for by the hon. gentleman on one or two occasions; but I think that the results of their investigations have never been properly placed before the House. The first report, it is true, embodied information gathered by a previous Committee some years ago, but I would suggest, for the Premier's consideration, whether this would now apply under the changed circumstances. A few years ago, besides, the agitation which at present is general with reference to increased protection had no existence.

There is no doubt that throughout the length and breadth of the country at the present time this question agitates all classes of our community—how their interests may be bettered—and while I can quite understand the position of the hon. member for Stormont, he being ignorant of any desire on the part of the farmers for any improvement of their condition, I cannot take the same ground, because I am cognizant of the fact that the subject is stirring them to their very depths. At my last election, when my opponent told them that they need not expect any protection from the Reform Government, I had to assure them that whenever this subject came up in the House, I would raise my voice in their behalf. I think it is hardly possible that the duty on wheat will give increased prices, because we raise a surplus and export it. Nevertheless, it will be a protection to our millers; and if any can be given to our agriculturists by a revision of the tariff, they should get it. The party to which I belong, and which is led by the Premier, will make a mistake if they refuse to grant this Committee. We need not prejudge the report it will make. It may show that the ideas of the hon. member for Centre Wellington, if put in practice, would only redound to the injury of the farmers. If so, nobody would advocate that measure. I trust the good sense of the Committee will prevent them incurring much expense by sending for persons.

I do not know whether the petition was read which was presented here, asking the Government to put a duty on grain. I know there is a petition being signed by the Grangers, and the only reason why several of them have not been presented is that they intend to make their appeal with the signature of 100,000 farmers. It will be presented next year, and this House should be in possession of information that would enable them to deal with it in a reasonable and proper manner. Wise though we may be, it is possible there is an aspect of this question that has not been thoroughly understood or appreciated by some in this House, who endeavour to pooh-pooh the motion. It is true some hon. gentlemen here think the United States pursue a commercial policy that is utterly nonsensical in some respects; but until the duties on agricultural products are removed, it is prima facie evidence that the farmers believe protection to be in their own interests.

It is said by putting duties on grain

Mr. PATERSON.

we would simply give our American neighbours an idea we were pursuing a retaliatory policy, and that would prejudice future negotiations for a renewal of reciprocal trade relation. I am one of those who believe that to have the American market free to our products would benefit our farmers. We know an honest attempt was made to secure this, that it failed, and at the present time we have not got it. We do not know whether negotiations tending in that direction may soon be opened or not, at least members of this House are not in possession of that information. The question is whether in the event of future negotiations the imposition of a tax on grain would operate in our favour. Fancy a Commissioner, delegated by this Government and sanctioned by the British Government, sent to Washington to negotiate such a Treaty. The question might be asked what he desired. He replies: "I wish to have a free market in the United States for the products of our forests, fields and mines." Then the United States Commissioner might ask—"And what will you give us in return." Our representative replies "The free use of our markets for similar products of your country." The astute American would naturally say "We have that already; I do not see that you offer us anything." We must remember we should have something to offer when we attempt to open up anew the Reciprocity question. I need not remind this House that the great lever we had before in negotiating a Reciprocity Treaty is ours no longer.

I have no doubt a very hostile feeling would be evoked in the Maritime Provinces by imposing a duty on breadstuffs. As representing a community composed largely of Ontario farmers, I admit I am selfish enough to believe and wish it would benefit them, but let the people of the Lower Provinces remember that when the fisheries were given to the United States it was not for nothing. It secured for them reciprocity—the free introduction of their products, fish and fish oils, into the United States. They got the benefits, but the Ontario and Quebec farmers received none and lost the lever by which they could have secured a renewal of the old reciprocity trade relations.

It is desirable, I conceive, that where a motion is made looking toward gaining information on a subject concerning the well being of so large a portion of the population as the agriculturists, it should be allowed to pass with the expression of a hope that expense would be avoided as much as possible.

Mr. STIRTON—I think we should not oppose the hon. gentleman getting the Committee. Judging from past experience, it would be quite harmless. This is the third time he has brought the matter before the House. The first Session he had a seat here he got a Committee. He had ample time to present a full report; but my hon. friend had that peculiar turn of mind to look for what had been done before. He found an old report which he copied and handed in to Parliament. It was ruled out of order. Last Session we had an attempt, which proved abortive, to get another investigation I think, therefore, we should allow him to have his Committee.

I have something to say as a practical farmer in this matter. My hon. friend said this Committee was called for by a large section of this country. Now, when anything agitates the public mind, or is particularly wanted by any class of this community, we are generally approached by petition. We have the Provincial Agricultural Association, and County and Township Societies and clubs of farmers; yet at their meetings this question is never discussed. If I believed for one moment that protection would benefit the farmers of Ontario one cent, the hon. gentleman would find me zealous in supporting his motion; but I say, as a practical farmer, that instead of benefiting it would injure them.

The hon. member for Centre Wellington said something about having free-trade with the United States, but he never said anything about what we should do to bring it about. Will anything this Committee can do or agitate in this direction bring it about? Certainly not. He went on at great length to show the success of Great Britain, and made the extraordinary statement that it was obtained without free-trade. If he knew anything about farming there he would understand that agriculture has prospered since free-trade in corn. He also said the great secret of the success of the British manufacturer was because the raw material came in free of duty. What does he propose to do? Why, to tax raw material and make food dear.

My hon. friend from Lincoln the other night made an allusion to the fact that we imported 4,000,000 bushels of corn, and asked why should we import a bushel? Simply because we make money out of it. He also said, why not make whiskey out of coarse grains? We can buy corn for a cent a pound, and sell our barley for 1½ or 2 cents a pound, and there is more spirit in a pound of corn than a pound of barley. He proposes to put a duty on corn, and wants to make whiskey cost twice as much to the manufacturer as at present. Corn is the cheapest and most nutritious foods you can buy for the support of stock, and my hon. friend for the benefit of the farmer proposes to exclude it.

The great object is to get the farmers in line with some other interest, so as to bring such influence to bear on the Government as to drive them to the terms. I attributed a great deal of what we have heard here to selfishness. I feel as much concerned for the farming interest as any one, and if I thought this movement would benefit them to the extent of one cent in the bushel, I would support it, but I have come to the conclusion that there is nothing in it.

Mr. CASEY—Since another gentleman representing a constituency which is, in part, a farming constituency, has taken upon himself to state that the farmers are stirred up on this question, and has given mysterious hints about overwhelming petitions, I must enter a protest against the assertions of that hon. gentleman. There is no evidence, and never has been, before the House that there is any wide-spread feeling amongst farmers in favour of protection. The only attempts made in this House to establish that fact have been made by gentlemen either manufacturers themselves, or representing manufacturing, or in some way disconnected with the farming community.

My hon. friend from South Wellington has put the facts very clearly. He has shown you there is no agitation among the Agricultural Societies, and none among farmers to organize for protection. He also gave some strong arguments against protection as applied to the farming interests. I merely say this:—The fact we had to import agricultural produce shows that it is a saving to some one. If we put on such a duty as will shut it out, it must inconvenience some persons, or cause them to lose money. The hon. member for Centre Wellington has not shown that you put a corresponding amount of increased revenue into the farmers' pockets by an increased tariff. Farmers themselves know this very well. They feel that through all the changing circumstances of the country they have stood the storm as well as any other class, while merchants and manufacturers have gone down. They have not suffered under the assumed disadvantages of free-trade, but have always come out better than any body else. But I do not see why this attempt should be made to put patent nostrums into healthy constitutions.

Mr. PATERSON — Do you not think that this Committee might do good by recommending the abolition of the duties already existing? If free trade be better than protection, why have any duties at all?

Mr. CASEY—If the Committee is appointed, it would be as likely to do that as anything else. My chief point is that the farmers have not signified any dissatisfaction with the present state of things. Although the term quackery, employed in the early part of the debate on this subject, may be a little harsh, it is no matter for surprise that such a word was suggested by the course pursued by the hon. member who makes the motion.

On motion of Mr. MILLS, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at Thirty minutes past Eleven.

Mr. CASEY.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, Feb. 22, 1876.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION BILL.

Mr. BLAKE moved, that on Thursday next this House will resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House to consider of the following Resolution:

That it is expedient to provide that the provisions of the Canada Civil Service Act, 1863, and any Acts amending the same, and of the "Act for better ensuring the efficiency of the Civil Service of Canada, by providing for the superannuation of persons employed therein in certain cases," and any Acts amending the same, shall extend and apply to the Officers, Clerks and Servants of the Supreme Court of Canada, and of the Exchequer Court of Canada, at the seat of Government—Carried.

ASSISTANT INSPECTORS OF PENITENTIARIES.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE moved the second reading of the Bill to provide for the appointment of Assistant Inspectors of Penitentiaries in Manitoba and British Columbia. He said: It is not necessary to make further explanations than I have already furnished to the House. I may, however, refer to a suggestion made from one quarter of the House on the subject. This measure is not at all a consequence of the legislation to reduce the number of inspectors. The necessity arises from other considerations altogether, which would be applicable to the old Board, namely, the inspection of penitentiaries in provinces which are so remote that the travelling expenses alone would exceed the salaries which we propose to pay to the local inspectors. The further off those Provinces are, the more necessary it is to have somebody on the spot to make a closer and fuller inspection than if we had to send an officer there. The public charge is insignificant, and, as I said before, it does not amount to the travelling expenses.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—My hon. friend is quite right. It would be impossible for one inspector to go to Manitoba and British Columbia. It would take him so long that he could not attend to all his duties, while if a Board were appointed it would be broken by the absence of some of the inspectors. I think these inspectors should be of such standing as to give confidence to the House and to the country. It seems to me that this is a temporary measure more than anything else.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The intention is to find, if possible, a suitable person in each Province to whom this salary will be more a supplement than anything else. I do not anticipate any difficulty in finding proper men. The measure may in some sense be temporary, but I am afraid until we extinguish time and space it will be permanent.

Mr. BUNSTER—I think it would be impossible to find a gentleman fit for the position who would take it for the salary offered. Wages are higher in British Columbia than here, and certainly a gentleman capable of performing the duties would not accept a smaller salary than mechanics and laborers are paid.

The Bill was read the second time.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE moved the second reading of Bill to make provision for the collection and registration of Criminal Statistics. He said: I have but a few observations to make in reference to this measure in addition to what I said when introducing it. On that occasion I promised to explain to the House, as far as I could, what, in a general sense, were the possible number of records that might have to be made, and give such other information based upon the procedure in England, and heretofore in Canada, as might be at all useful. In reference to provincial statistics on this subject, the information which I have been able to gather is only to be found in the Province of Ontario. There is there a system which furnishes to a very large extent what is required on the subject, although, from the fact that it is designed more with reference to provincial objects—there being some provincial acts which are not criminal laws of Canada, and yet involve fine and imprisonment—we cannot obtain all the information which, according to the system which has grown up in England, may be required. The results are startling as to the growth of crime in the country. The commitments to jail in Ontario for the year ending Sept. 30th, 1872, were 6,958: for the year ending Sept. 30th, 1875, three years later, they were 10,073, making an increase of about three-sevenths of the whole amount in three years. We have partial statistics from Quebec. The commitments in 1872 were 4,241. If you assume the same percentage of increase in Quebec as we find in Ontario, it would give 6,650 commitments for 1875, or a total of between sixteen and seventeen thousand for the two Provinces, and about 20,000 in round numbers for the entire Dominion in 1875.

In Ontario a very large number of cases resulted in acquittal or discharge, the number being no less than 2,312, or about three-tenths of the whole number. This seems to me, speaking without reference to the statistics of other countries, to be a very large proportion of persons who have been subjected to the ordeal of commitment for crime and afterwards found not guilty.

Then, with reference to the minor class of crimes, part of which may be under provincial, and part under Dominion laws, and with respect to which I have no means of distinguishing one class from the other, there were no less than 3,663 commitments for the offence of being drunk and disorderly. Besides that, there are many for breach of by-laws and other crimes which might be designated as infractions of provincial by-laws punishable by committal.

This enormous increase in the number of persons charged with, and in the number convicted of crime, if you compare it with the increase of population, is remarkable, but it must not be supposed that it is attributable to any abnormal growth in 1875, for the increase of that year was less than that of 1874. I think these figures demonstrate the importance of our obtaining such statistics as may inform the minds of us who are responsible for those laws which prescribe what are crimes, the penalties for them, the criminal procedure, and the general effect of these laws upon the criminal class, as might enable us, perchance, with wisdom to amend them. As I have said, the practice in Ontario, under administrative regulations, has been such as to furnish a very large amount of information of which I have given the House only the general result without the details. Anterior to Confederation there was established in Lower Canada a system which afforded fuller details in reference to judicial statistics than in the other Provinces, but it supplied hardly anything, indeed, that is useful except the general results I have given the House as to the number of commitments made in the course of the year. As to the other Provinces, I have caused enquiry to be made so far as public sources of information and sessional papers, &c., gave the means of doing so, but it does not appear that there exists any useful provision at any rate for obtaining criminal statistics. As I have said the provision made in Lower Canada in this regard before Confederation was very considerable and very general, but since Confederation the Criminal Procedure Act has been extended to the whole of the Dominion. The portion having reference to convictions before Magistrates' Courts, imposed upon these Magistrates the duty of making a return to a local officer of their convictions and sentences, whether by fine or imprisonment, and also required that officer to advertise in a local paper the results in schedules, and transmit these results to the Minister of Finance. I presume, from the nature of the office held by the gentleman to whom the results were to be sent, that the object of this step was a pecuniary one, to see that what belonged to the Crown was properly remitted. I have endeavoured, as far as I could, in the present measure, to adopt existing plans sanctioned by the authority of the Parliament of Canada; and the Bill provides for the continuance of these returns, the only difference being that they should be forwarded to the Minister of Agriculture, who has charge of the Department of Statistics, instead of an officer to whom they are really of no consequence. The Minister of Agriculture can see just as well as the Minister of Finance that the fees are collected; and what is really important, can utilize them with a view to the compilation of statistics. That, however, was the only existing provision of the law which it seemed possible to embody absolutely in the Bill as capable of being made available under any circumstances. I felt at the time the measure was introduced, the importance of availing myself as far as possible of the systems at present followed in the other Provinces; and I did not like, with the information I then possessed, to propose a permissive clause; but since its introduction, I have, as I expected, received various communications on the subject, and of such a character as to induce me to inform the House of my intention to suggest a permissive clause, which enables us to utilize, where systems of statistics have been or may be established, the provincial method, so far as we can do it without injury to the harmony and completeness of our own system. It will be remarked that there are great advantages in the close supervision necessarily given by the inspector of local institutions and the returns made by virtue of his office relative to his inspection of the gaols, &c., once at any rate, and generally twice a year. He is able to ascertain how the reports are actually prepared, and check by actual inspection their accuracy with regard to the number of the persons confined in the gaol, &c. He is able to judge—and as I have been informed, his investigations frequently put him in a position to check errors—how far the officer is discharging his duty; therefore I feel it to be a very important part of the measure that we should avail ourselves of provincial machinery in this regard. The extra trouble given should be paid for, and a clause I shall suggest to be added, after the seventh section of the Bill, will be to this effect:

That in connection with the collection of criminal statistics, or the obtaining of any part of the information to be embraced in the schedules authorized under this Act, the Ministry may cause to be taken out of any moneys provided by Parliament in this regard, such sums as may be agreed on, not exceeding the amounts otherwise payable to the sheriffs and wardens for like services, under the 4th section of the Act.

I do not however propose to alter the cast of the Bill at all, but I wish to complete it, giving us full power to make collections by our own authority of all statistics. I mentioned at the time I introduced the measure that I thought it both politic and just that we should not impose this duty upon these officers without the payment of some small fee—just because it is an additional duty, and politic, because we cannot expect an additional duty properly performed unless this is done. I have felt a considerable degree of embarrassment as to the amount of remuneration to be given. It seemed tolerably clear to me that the general principle should be the payment of a small, fixed sum, in the first instance, for making the return. I also felt that there ought to be some little additional fee; but it was not so easy to decide whether it should be calculated according to the number of words employed, or the number of cases with reference to which information is given. On the whole, I concluded that the latter plan was most proper, for the number of cases with which the officer would have to deal would be a better measure of the trouble taken than the number of words used, obviating the employment of needless verbiage in the report. The rates I am about to propose are extremely moderate, and in this relation it is to be remembered that these officers are bound to make returns to the Local Governments, entering most of these things, if not all of them, as in Ontario. It is hardly conceivable, in any well-ordered Province, that the sheriff or gaolers should not be obliged to keep records of most of these matters, and the additional duty would be practically that of sending us the results of the entries. My intention with reference to the money resolution will be explained when we reach the notice in this connection on the paper. So much I have said with reference to the prisoners committed, either for trial or under conviction and what remains is with regard to the other and no less important branch of the matter—the returns of the business transacted in the courts themselves. It did not appear to me that we could hope to get satisfactory information by relying upon the reports of sheriffs or gaolers, obtained casually or otherwise. Besides, the acquittals would, in their returns, be entirely excluded from consideration. I have, therefore, added the suggestion that the clerk, or officer performing that duty, and when there is no clerk, the judge himself, shall make out the schedules, and fill up such as are sent to him with reference to the criminal business transacted in the Court.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE.

Now, Sir, passing to what is done in this relation in England, I may say that the system of judicial statistics there, which is much wider of course than our sphere concerning such statistics, embracing, as it does, the civil as well as criminal, was commenced very many years ago, and has been gradually improved. I think that about the year 1852 it was practically commenced by directions from the office of the Secretary for the Home Department, and as far as I can ascertain, it has gone on by degrees and by administrative arrangement only. There are some provisions in the old Statutes in connection with statistics, but they refer more to the means, first of all, of obtaining photographs of members of the criminal classes and the description of individual criminals, and secondly, to the provisions of the ticket-of-leave system, than to such matters as those which we are now called upon to consider. The more analogous legislation which I have been able to find, is that of Scotland in 32 and 33 Vic., Cap. 33, where provision was made legislatively for the collection of criminal statistics in Scotland; and in the second section of that Act, it is provided that the Clerks of the several Courts for the administration of Criminal Justice, the Keepers of Records, and other persons receiving remuneration for the performance of public duties, shall fill up, and transmit to the Department for the collection of criminal statistics, returns relative to the the business transacted in their offices during the preceding year. That Act also provides that each schedule sent should bear the signature of the Lord Advocate for Scotland, and a summary remedy for default, and for reports touching the state of crime, to be made by the Sheriffs. The House is aware that Sheriffs perform judicial functions there. These returns go to the Home Department with the view of contributing to the completeness of the system. I may say that I have taken advantage of the Scottish law; and I have also added provisions contained in Act of the Parliament of Canada concerning the imposition of penalties, included by the right hon. member for Kingston in the amended Act, itself drawn from Acts of that Parliament. I have had called to my attention the question whether the natural year should be adopted for the returns. This would involve of course considerable delay before the statistics can be expected to be prepared in the different offices. I think that this will require about two months, and that I propose to allow. Then there would be the further delay of compiling the results and tabulating them, and this would take I do not know how much longer, but a considerable time. It would not be possible, as is very obvious, if the natural year is adopted, to furnish to Parliament during the Session the usual satisfactory returns with regard to the preceding year; and there may be a question whether—although I confess that I have an impression in favor of the natural year—on the whole the efficiency of the returns would be impaired by taking some earlier period, as the 30th of September, securing the returns by the 1st of November, and during the Session these results might be laid before Parliament. We also have the incidental advantage, which is not unimportant, of having the assistance of the Provincial machinery and of Provincial officers to a very large extent. It is the year used in the Province of Ontario, though it is quite probable that if we adopted the other that Province might also be induced to change its year. If not, it is clear that additional labor would be imposed on the officers, having possibly to a certain extent an injurious effect on the service and our arrangements in connection with this system of statistics. I have no further suggestions. The House will perceive in the Scottish Act the forms for the schedules. The forms which are to be used shall be approved of by the Governor in Council, so that the whole Council shall be responsible for the adoption of any schedules which the officers in question under this Act will be obliged to fill up.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD asked

Hon. Mr. BLAKE.

if any provision was made respecting breaches of provincial laws?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The Bill provides for the collection of criminal statistics of Canada, and I do not propose to provide for that. With reference to the Province of Ontario, we can very easily collect the statistics, and perhaps as a mere matter of departmental administration the Minister charged with this duty in that or any other Province could make a supplementary report which can be communicated to the House. I did not think it expedient to mingle that subject with the statistics of crime of Canada.

Mr. BROUSE—I don't rise for the purpose of opposing anything in this Bill, but on the contrary to congratulate my hon. friend on bringing it forward. At the same time I regret that the Bill has not gone further. When my hon. friend on my left (Mr. Dymond) brought this question forward, it was stated that it was not within the province of the House to deal with it. I also brought forward another matter—that relating to sanitary science, and was informed that it could not be dealt with here. While expressing satisfaction with the present measure, I may repeat that a larger and more important question has been given the go by, and that no reference is made to health statistics, which would be of far greater importance than the mere collection of criminal statistics. The legislators of England have declared that it is the first duty of a statesman to legislate for the health of the people, and in other countries such legislation has had the effect of reducing the rate of mortality from 40 in 1,000 down to its present comparatively low figure. I think the hon. gentleman should give a reason to this House why this important subject should not be dealt with. I do not intend to go into the matter fully at present, but will avail myself of another opportunity to bring it before the House.

Mr. DYMOND—I think the history of this subject should encourage my hon. friend. Two years ago I made a motion to obtain statistics with regard to one particular class of crime, desiring to obtain not merely the convictions and sentences, but also the commitments where acquittals had taken place. I was then informed that it would be impossible for the Government to act in the matter. On a second occasion I ventured to add to my motion an address or recommendation, that attempts should be made through the local Governments to obtain the information which my hon. friend now proposes to get by this Bill. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on his having accomplished what was two years ago alleged to be an impossibility. I always knew my hon. friend would perform great things, and I hope that he or some other member of the Government will endeavour to carry out the suggestion of the hon. member for South Grenville. It is all very well for us to obtain information regarding the extent and nature of the moral disease which prevails in our midst, but it is equally important that we should understand what are the laws acting upon and regulating the health of the community—what are the climatic effects on longevity, and what parts of our country are more healthy than others, which can only be done through some such agency as that proposed in the Bill before us.

The subject of statistics has been brought before the House on other occasions. I remember that the hon. member for South Waterloo either made a speech or moved for a Committee last year, and the attention of the Senate was also called to the question. I venture to suggest that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice will be able shortly to give us the means of collecting statistics relating to sanitary matters.

It will be satisfactory, however, that this House will not be asked to pass criminal laws in the dark in future. Hitherto we have had no information before us, even as to the existence of certain classes of crime. We shall now be able to see what the effect of our legislation has been—whether justice has been administered satisfactorily under the laws that we enact, as well as to obtain some reliable information relative to the social condition of the people—a subject in which we are all deeply interested.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—In respect to the observations of my hon. friend from North York, I may say that he asked for certain returns, and was told, if I remember aright, it was not in the power of the Government to obtain them. We want to get power, and we are proposing this legislation in view of that clause of the British North America Act which gives us control of statistics. It was impossible to do it without a law, and in order to get over that difficulty the measure is proposed.

With regard to the remarks of the member for South Grenville, I admit that physical health is important, but it is not with that subject this Bill proposes to deal. By embracing that that subject, the system would be much more extensive, and would be coupling two subjects, alike only in the matter of statistics. Vital statistics should undoubtedly be dealt with, but I believe that those who carefully consider the great range of subjects over which a system embracing that subject would extend, and the enormous expense which would be incurred in carrying it out, would hesitate before presenting legislation to make use of the powers invested in us in that regard.

The Bill was read the second time.

THE CRIMINAL LAW.

Item 5—A Bill to amend the Criminal Law relating to violence, threats and molestations—was then called.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Let it pass.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD was understood to suggest that it might be as well to repeal and re-enact the old Act as to proceed with this measure.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—My right hon. friend has the honor and glory of being father of that legislation, and I don't desire to deprive him of any of his laurels.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I am very sorry that the hon. gentleman has not exercised the same magnanimity with reference to a very important act providing for the trial of controverted elections by judges.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I proposed that Act.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The hon. gentlemen may have proposed a Bill, but not that Act, which was passed by us.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I proposed one almost similar in 1872. The hon. gentleman wanted to run his election without it and voted it down.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The hon. gentleman says he proposed an Act precisely similar.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I did not say precisely.

Hon Mr. TUPPER—Well, the hon. gentleman used a term equivalent to it—“very similar.” Yet the Government, without giving any reason to this House, or to any person, as far as I am aware, repealed that Act and put another in its place. If the hon. gentleman had been animated by the same magnanimous feeling he has displayed now to my right hon. friend, he would have taken the opportunity of making the very slight modifications introduced in the Act to which he referred, and left it on the Statute Book as our Act.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—It is not fair to charge me with the sins committed by my colleagues before I joined them. I was not guilty of murdering his Election Act.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I certainly must excuse the hon. gentleman on that point.

The subject then dropped.

THE NEW NORTH-WEST TERRITORY.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the second reading of the “Bill respecting the North-West Territories, and to create a separate territory out of part thereof.” He said—I have very little to say in addition to the remarks I made in introducing the Bill. The intention is simply to appoint the Governor of Manitoba to govern the territory immediately east and north of the present Province—to detach, in other words, all that portion known as the North-West Territory east of Manitoba and Lake Winnipegosis, and to create a new territory, which shall in the meantime be governed by the Governor of Manitoba. It is uncertain when we may have the boundary on the west and east side of Ontario determined. The boundaries of the North-West Territories on the east are equally uncertain, and it is considered desirable in the interest of the good government of the country that we should have this arrangement made. As soon as the western boundary of Ontario is determined, and if the Province of Manitoba take no action for the enlargement of the boundaries of that Province, another arrangement may be made.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE.

The first section of the Bill is devoted entirely to a description of the boundary and the Territory. I cannot remember the name for it at the present, but it is an Indian name.

The second section repeals certain provisions which are not made applicable under this Act.

The third section provides that the Lieut.-Governor of Manitoba shall be ex officio Governor of this district.

We take power in the fourth section to constitute and appoint a Council if need be. We do not anticipate there will be any necessity for it, nor do we make provision for paying any members of the Council. It is merely to enable us, if necessary, to constitute persons to advise the Lieut.-Governor for the time being.

The other provisions of the Act are practically making applicable the provisions of the general Act of last Session and the schedules at the end of the Bill of the Acts that relate to the Government of the North-West Territories.

In the seventh section provision is made for the transmission by the Governor of that Province to the Governor in Council at Ottawa, within ten days from the passage of any law, a copy thereof: this is in accordance with existing provisions of the law.

Mr. MASSON—I would like to know why clause 11 in the North-West Territories Act is left out of this Bill; whether it has been found unnecessary or impracticable? A great many powers are taken from the Territorial Government, among them those which provide for taxation for local purposes. The Hon. Premier will, of course, give us his reasons for curtailing powers which, last session, he thought it necessary to confer to so large an extent. I would like to know what means the Local Government will have to provide for improvements and for the education of the people.

Will they be obliged to appeal to the Federal Government to provide for these things?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Bill is only temporary in its character. Section eleven refers only to the Act of last Session. The laws established by this Bill are those in force at the present moment in the North-West Territories—neither more nor less. The Act of last Session proposed the creation of a municipal system and conferred practically all the powers of self-government as a Province. It is only when such powers are exercised that the clause in question comes into operation.

Mr. MASSON—How will the people of that country be educated or provided with public improvements?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—They will have precisely the same power they have at present in the North-West Territories under the existing laws.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Does this Bill affect the powers conveyed by the North-West Territories Act, so far as its jurisdiction goes?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It detaches this section of country from the jurisdiction of the North-West Territories' Government.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Does this Bill provide for Municipal Government?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It provides for no municipal purposes of any kind.

Mr. MASSON—How does it provide for education?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—We make no provision for that in this local Act.

Mr. MASSON—I understand the Government last Session when they introduced their Bill thought it advisable to provide for education. They now give no power for municipal taxation or the education of the people. Is there any law in that Territory which gives to the people there those rights and privileges assured to them by the 11th clause of the Act of last Session?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The Act of last Session has not yet been put in force. At present all the Territories of the North-West are governed from Manitoba. The Act of last Session proposed, and I think rightly proposed a system which gave rudimentary representative institutions coincidentally with its going into effect. The Bill of this Session takes off a very small portion of the enormous territories of the North-West for the particular purpose which my hon. friend, the Premier, clearly explained. He pointed out in the present condition of that country, with its comparatively limited means of access, with its vast unsettled plains, and with a portion of the territory lying partly east of Manitoba, that it was advisable as a mere temporary measure to adopt this system of government in that country for a short time. He pointed out as soon as the boundary of Ontario and the North-West Territories was settled, the question would immediately arise whether a portion of the territory, for present purposes annexed to Manitoba, would belong to that Province. If not annexed to Manitoba it would be under the jurisdiction of the Government at Fort Pelly. If this territory is annexed to Manitoba the laws of that Province relating to schools will apply to it. If re-annexed to the North-West Territories, clause 11 of the Act of last Session will apply. But this cannot be done without at the same time conferring powers of taxation, and no such powers can be exercised without representative institutions.—We could not give to the few people there representative institutions, and therefore we continue for that part of the Territories the primitive system of government—the same system which the right hon. gentleman opposite thinks should continue for a long time to come. Now, that is not the view of the Government, as the Premier explained. He said the Act was passed last Session with the intention of bringing it into operation at the earliest practicable moment; but pending the settlement of the boundary question it is proposed to leave the few people who will be outside of this territory in the position that they now occupy.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—As I stated at the time the Bill was introduced last Session, I think that territory might well be governed from Manitoba without a separate Legislature, but I did not at all contemplate that country would remain for a long time without a government of its own. My contention was that the constitutional Governor of Manitoba had so little to do he could economically enough for a good many years govern the whole of the Territories under the provisions of the Bill of last Session.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I am very glad to hear that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—The hon. gentleman will find if he looks back that I approved of the Bill, and the only objection was that a separate Government was unnecessary. This Bill is a permanent one on the face of it, and I think a clause should be introduced to say that it is temporary. Under this Act there can be no taxation. Then any expense or cost in working the machinery of the Government of this country will, I take it, be chargeable on the Dominion Treasury.

My hon. friend will no doubt explain later in the Session why the Act of last year was not brought into force. If I recollect aright, when that Bill was introduced to this House, I ventured to state, with the sparse population of the West, outside the boundary of Manitoba, that the Lieut.-Governor of that Province would perform all the duties of government required for a time in the Territories, and there would be no necessity for establishing a separate Government until the country had been better settled. But it was stated by my hon. friend that it was highly expedient that there should be a Lieut.-Governor and a Government appointed for the Territories without any delay. Delay has taken place; and I venture to say that that portion of the country need not be brought under the operation of the law at present. The reason is still stronger now than it has been since last Session, as part of the territory is taken away under this Act, the part which has the most population. As I understand the boundaries, the bulk of the territory that will come under the provisions of this Act lie to the east of the western boundary of this Province, and to the east and north of the eastern boundary of Manitoba. The majority of the people who have gone into our Western country are settled in this district; at all events, a large percentage of them have settled about Lake Winnipegosis in the immediate vicinity of Manitoba, although not within the limits of its jurisdiction; therefore there is less reason for the establishment of the new Government under the Act of last Session. There can be no satisfactory legislation by a Government of this kind, even if the population were there, for you cannot have educational legislation or impose taxes. Even though they had Municipal Councils they have not the authority to confer on them powers which they do not possess themselves, to impose school taxes; therefore the ordinances passed by the Lieut.-Governor in Council would be of a very unsatisfactory and inadequate description. It would, no doubt, be satisfactory to the House to ascertain how long the hon. gentleman thinks that that country will be governed under this Act.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—There are several reasons why the Act of last Session was not put in force, some of which I can mention to the House. In the first place it was very desirable we should obtain the utmost possible information as to the probable distribution of population that would settle in the different districts of country. The Great Lone Land, as Mr. Butler terms it, was but imperfectly known, and it is only by recent explorations that many facts concerning it have come to our knowledge—facts that seem to be essential in considering the question of creating the seat of Government. We had determined on a vigorous course of action with regard to the expulsion of offenders by the North-West Mounted Police, and through their efforts we have been able to vindicate the majesty of the British law in these territories. By their means we have been enabled to acquire a great deal of information respecting the settlement and resources of certain parts of the country of which very little was previously known. We find that a large population is rapidly settling at the north bend of the Saskatchewan River, where there is a population already of between 500 and 1,000 souls. South of that, where the railway is to cross, the land at the south branch is being located, and one person has erected a saw and grist mill this year. Assuming the Jasper House and Lake Winnipeg are the central points, the place where we shall likely establish the seat of Government is 250 miles from Fort Pelly, and 550 miles distant from the town of Winnipeg. At one time we thought Fort Pelly was the best place for the establishment of the Government House, but other information leads us to the conclusion that it would be better to remove it further west. A vast territory can be developed, and is now partly developed, in the Peace River District. Fort Pelly appears to be too far east, and Government would be more difficult if located there than if it were established at the centre of the Territories. It is already difficult to reach remote settlements by any authority that we can put in motion, and we must have an authority that can easily extend to the different points. The place which we shall probably select as the seat of Government must be one favourable for the location of a considerable town; it ought also to be favourable as an agricultural district, with an abundance of fuel and timber, and easy access from the different posts established by the Government in the Territories. I have far less doubt now than ever of the wisdom of establishing this authority, and of the utter impossibility of the Governor of Manitoba governing that vast territory. The Indian question itself, is a very serious one. We have found it necessary to ask Lieut.-Governor Morris, who has devoted himself earnestly and with an assiduity beyond all praise to make himself useful in developing that territory, to travel 200 or 300 miles to meet the Indians in treaty, and it was impossible for him to make that journey in less than two or three weeks. We cannot expect him, when we are obliged to meet and treat with other Indian bands in the Far West, to leave his Government for eight weeks at a time on this business. We find it necessary therefore to have another officer of superior rank, equal to that of the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba, to meet those Indians, although Lieutenant Governor Morris has not his hands so full that he could not give his attention to more work in his immediate vicinity. It is a different thing when he is asked to travel 400 or 500 miles from his own Province, when matters pertaining to the Territories would demand his consideration. I have felt myself at liberty to consult with Lieutenant Governor Morris on all these matters. Although we were not politically allied, it does not prevent us from entering cordially into matters connected with these Territories, and it was entirely his opinion, as well as the opinion of this Administration, that until this boundary question between Ontario and the North-West Territories is settled, the portion east of Manitoba should be governed by the authority settled in that Province. We cannot apply the laws of Ontario to any part of that territory, although it may belong to this Province, until the boundary is decided on. Ontario claims the whole of it to Manitoba; while others assume that the boundary is as far east as Fort William, and that the terminus of the Pacific Railway there is really in the North-West Territories. If all the territory west of Fort William is given to Ontario, then the laws in relation to Ontario will come into immediate operation there; on the other hand if the North-West boundary is found to be at Fort William, then the laws applicable to the North-West Territories will be enforced there, and we can conceive of no difficulty that can arise that will prevent us from being able to determine these boundaries by legislation next Session of Parliament. The only settlement of any consequence east of Lakes Winnipegosis and Manitoba, is the settlement of Icelanders on the shores of Lake Winnipeg. There are very few settlers in that region, and though our friends claim that there is but little land in that direction that can be settled, recent explorations have led us to a different opinion. Settlement has gone south of Lake Manitoba, and north of Lake Winnipeg there is also a very considerable settlement. The prospect is that there will also be a very large population on the slope of the Rocky Mountains, where Colonel McLeod is stationed with the Mounted Police force, near Fort Benton.

Our officers there collected in something like six months $6,000 in duties on articles imported from the United States. The territory there is developing into a very rich country. It is a very fine grazing section, although from its greater elevation it is a little more subject to frosts than the other parts of the country of less elevation. There can be no doubt that the country from Lake St. Henry to the North Saskatchewan and a little beyond it is eminently favourable for settlement. There is a steady descent from the boundary northward. At the boundary the elevation of the prairie land is not far from 5,000 feet. At the Jasper House it is about 3,500 feet on the average. Progressing northward towards Smoky River, it is not more than 2,000 feet. Where the Peace River bends southward we find that the elevation of the prairie is not much more than 1,000 feet above the level of the sea, and with this declination north the climate grows milder, and the isothermal lines appear to follow the level of the country. This indicates two things:—That there is a rich country fit for settlement from the United States boundary all the way north to Lake Athabaska, and that as we go northward the land is better than in the south. There is no reason why a very large population should not pass into that vast country, stretching northward seven hundred miles, and enjoy a climate as favourable as in any part of Canada proper, except, perhaps, the south-west peninsula of Ontario. These considerations render it necessary, in our opinion, that this central authority should be established; that the people abroad who read our reports and seek for information about our country should understand that we have not merely an immense extent of fertile territory in the North-West, but that it is in a position that law and order can be enforced; that there is nothing to be feared from the wandering tribes of aborigines, and that everything has been done to prepare for the introduction and settlement of the large population that may naturally be expected to arrive from Europe. These measures have been adopted after due consideration, and the Bill is to provide for a difficulty of only temporary existence in consequence of the delay in ascertaining the western boundary of Ontario and the eastern boundary of the North-West Territories.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—My hon. friend will see that a permanent Act doing away with that clause might create misunderstanding, and probably dissatisfaction.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I shall consider whether it will be necessary to insert the words mentioned before the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—I think it very desirable that it should be a temporary Act, for in its wording I think that there are some very objectionable features. It assumes the delegation of our authority, not only to the Governor in Council, but further to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, and the Lieutenant-Governor is to have the authority and power of altering our laws; that is, he is to have greater power than we give to any Provincial Legislature, greater than we gave last year to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, in the North-West Territory, advised by an Elective Council. I do not think that is right, nor do I consider that it was intended such power should be granted to an irresponsible body, or the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. The hon. gentlemen present, who were in the House some years ago, will remember how sarcastically the present Chief Justice of Manitoba used to refer to this new institution of the Governor in Council; and this is now to be extended in a most remarkable manner. We are delegating these powers to the Lieutenant-Governor, with the power of altering, amending, and modifying any Acts, or Act, of the Parliament of Canada, or any parts thereof.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Would my hon. friend allow me to tell him that this is simply a consolidation of the laws under which that Territory is governed to-day?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—I think that my hon. friend is mistaken. I cannot find it in the North-West Territories Act.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I am not speaking of the North-West Territories Act of 1875, which is not in force, but of laws passed by my hon. friend's leader.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—If the right hon. gentleman passed an objectionable law, I do not think that we should re-enact it. It is no reason because he is an ass, that you should be a basilisk. This would be over-riding the legislation of the country, and I think that when my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, looks into it closely, he will see what I contend is really the case.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I may say in answer to my hon. friend that this Bill has been, I believe, prepared with great care. Instructions were given that this should be done in the consolidation of the existing laws under which the territory is governed. We repeal the three Acts which are at present in force there, and simply re-enact a measure giving precisely the same powers; we did not intend to alter, and I do not believe that we have altered, these powers in any particular.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I would like to ask the Head of the Government at what time he proposes to put the North-West Territories Act into operation?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I cannot answer that question at the present moment.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—With reference to this Bill I congratulate the Government on the conclusion at which they have arrived, after careful consideration, concerning the other measure.

Last year we had the North-West Territories Bill introduced and passed. Provision had formerly been made for the Government of that Province by the Governor of Manitoba, and a Council composed of a number of gentlemen of high standing and of great ability, who had given a great deal of time and attention to any legislation, or any measures found necessary in this connection. The Administration thought it wise to introduce a Bill last Session, for the government of these Territories, abolishing this unpaid Council, and providing for the appointment of an independent and separate Government and Council, with the various other machinery required. It was also at the time announced to the House that it was the intention to establish that Government at Fort Pelly. It appeared to me that it would be wise to pause before incurring this new expenditure. We had already all that was necessary for the government of Manitoba. This Session we are asked to create a new authority, and what was the reason given? That there was a number of inhabitants in the adjacent district, and that it was desirable that they should be brought under the influence of the Local Government, but only until the time when the boundaries were established between Ontario and the North-West Territory. I understood my hon. friend to say he hoped that matter would be adjusted when Parliament would meet at the next Session. If this be the case I cannot understand why we should go to this expense.

Hon. Messrs. MACKENZIE and BLAKE—There will be no expense.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The hon. gentlemen provides for the establishment of a Council.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—There will not be a dollar of expense.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Very well; I do not then understand why it is necessary to alter the North-West Territories Act in relation to this section, if it is intended to put the Act in force at all, especially when my hon. friend told the House that he intended to ask for different legislation at the next Session of Parliament touching this matter. This is a question to which I am sure the House will give its most careful consideration. I think that the facts quite justify a postponement as well as the wisdom of obtaining still further legislation with respect to this whole country before we materially change its form of Administration. It is besides inexpedient to adopt legislation for a single season. No doubt, it is very important that what is designed for new countries in this relation, shall be changed as seldom as possible, for people have become familiar with laws of a certain kind, and with a certain mode of Government, and it is not well that a year afterwards this legislation should be swept away to be replaced by another system. Experience shows the wisdom of a little delay in connection with such matters, and we should comply with the dictates of experience in the present instance, if we permit the measure to stand over for a time.

Mr. SMITH (Selkirk)—It must be evident to everyone, and more especially to those who are intimately acquainted with the subject, that a territory of such vast extent, cannot be properly and suitably governed from a point so distant as Winnipeg. At the same time I was very glad to hear the observations and explanations given by the Prime Minister—and that is, that the seat of Government of the proposed new Province is to be removed a considerable distance further west. In the North-West there are already very large settlements at different points near Bow River and the South Saskatchewan, and again beyond Edmonton, and at Fort Albert, &c.,—perhaps altogether comprising four or five thousand people; but there is also a district to the north of that again, equally well fitted for settlement with the region south of the Saskatchewan. A few days ago I received a letter from a gentleman in the Peace River District, who has travelled over the greater portion of the northern part of the territory, and he states his belief that for one acre of good land to the south of the Saskatchewan, there are five acres to the north. I am not quite so sanguine; but, at the same time, I know that there is a very large extent of country to the north which is as well suited for settlement as the portion to the south. Settlers will come both from the United States in the direction of Bow River, and also from British Columbia and the United States by way of Peace River, and it is absolutely necessary that there should be some legal Government to give attention to any difficulties which may arise.

It must be further recollected that in this portion of the Territory, the great body of the Indian population is found; these are very different to those in the south, and if there are any troubles to be experienced, danger is to be apprehended from the Indian tribes living on the upper portion of the Saskatchewan. I do not, myself, fear any such troubles, but many do, and I consider that it would be only prudent to take the necessary precautions. With regard to the section it is proposed to detach from the North-West Territory, I am of opinion that the provisions of the former Act would be found quite sufficient for the time being. That Act has been there administered during three or four years by a Council, which instead of having too much power, I consider had scarcely enough authority in several instances. Indeed, it was more an Advisory Council than anything else, and the Government has really been controlled from Ottawa; but nevertheless I must say that the Dominion Government has, on most occasions, given every consideration to the recommendations of this Council, and carried them out. I do think that for the moment the provisions of the old Act will be quite sufficient as regards the comparatively small portion settled, and of the district which it is to detach, nine-tenths or ninety-nine hundredths, or nine hundred and ninety-nine thousandths, will have no settlement for many, many years to come; and neither require legislation respecting taxation or schools, or almost any other purpose during that period. Settlement will be somewhat tardy between the Lakes Winnipegosis and Winnipeg, also a small portion near the mouth of the Winnipeg River, and possibly near Fort Francis or Rainy River. I trust that the Government will persevere with the measure, and carry out the promises of the Act of last Session as concerns the large section of the territory west and north of Lake Winnipegosis, which can be properly governed by any Council such as that which is proposed for the portion to be detached in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

The Bill was read the second time.

SALARIES OF COUNTY COURT JUDGES.

The House then went into Committee to consider certain resolutions respecting the salaries of County Court Judges of the Province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Scatcherd took the Chair.

The Committee rose and reported the resolution.

ASSISTANT INSPECTORS OF PENITENTIARIES.

The House went into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

"That it is expedient to provide that the Assistant Inspectors of Penitentiaries to be appointed under the Bill intituled 'An Act to provide for the appointment of Assistant Inspectors of Penitentiaries in Manitoba and British Columbia,' shall each receive a salary not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars per annum and travelling expenses to be determined by the Governor in Council."

Mr. Scatcherd took the chair.

The Committee rose and reported the resolution.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.

The House went into Committee again, Mr. Scatcherd in the chair, to consider the following resolution:—

"That it is expedient to provide that the Minister of Agriculture, or such other Minister as is mentioned in the Bill intituled 'An Act to make provision for the Collection and Registration of the Criminal Statistics of Canada,' shall cause to be paid out of any moneys which may be provided by Parliament for that purpose, to any Clerk, Officer or Sheriff filling up and transmitting the schedules required under the first section of the said Bill the sum of _____ and the further sum of _____ for each _____ comprised in such schedule; and to any officer transmitting the returns required under the second section thereof the sum of _____."

Mr. BLAKE said he proposed to fill up the first blank with "$," the second with "5cts." and the third with the word "case," and the last with $1. In conformity with the announcement made on his motion for the second reading of the Bill he proposed two additional sub-sections.

The amendment was adopted, and the Committee rose and reported.

THE AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

The debate on this question was resumed by

Mr. PLUMB, who said — I have been somewhat surprised at the disposition to oppose the passage of the resolution. It seems to me that the enquiry is one which very properly comes before the House. The fact that we have spent a great deal of time in discussing the propriety of making enquiry in another direction should be no reason why an interest so important as that which is involved in the resolution should not be treated with the same courtesy and the Committee granted as well as in the other case. Gentlemen who assume to take the farmers under their special protection, in the course of the debate last night said there had been no petitions presented to the House. The same thing, I think, may be said of the resolution proposed the other day—there were no petitions in favour of the action taken. It was brought before the House without any apparent outside desire that such an enquiry should be made. I cannot see why the same argument was not used against that Committee as was brought forward against the one proposed by the hon. member for Centre Wellington.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Will my hon. friend allow me a moment? I suggested to the hon. gentleman opposite that if we had a simple understanding, such as we had with the Chairman of the Committee on Manufactures last year, that although the power to send for persons may be left in that motion to provide for it if necessary, people should not be called in unless there was some necessity for it, there would be no objection to the motion. I objected to it last night because of the power it conferred to send for persons, as I found two Sessions ago that this power was exercised very much to the detriment of the public revenue. Thousands of dollars were spent during that Session in calling witnesses, many of whom seemed altogether unnecessary for the objects of the enquiry. If this suggestion is adopted, the Committee may be appointed at once.

Mr. PLUMB—I am not authorized to make any modification in the resolution. I do not see why it should not be treated in the same way as any other resolution before the House. If, as gentlemen claim, there is no depression in the agricultural interests, the enquiry will do no harm. I am not prepared to say that one interest in this country can suffer without others being injured. I know there has been a very large competition on the frontier, and there has been a constant increase in the importations from the United States. Last year we imported 5,105,258 bushels of wheat, and exported to the United States 410,000 bushels. We imported of Indian corn 3,696,746 bushels, and of other grain 180,000 bushels.

The gentleman who asks for this Committee represents an agricultural community, and was elected when he last appealed to his constituents by an increased majority. I consider that quite a practical endorsement of his course, and an expression in favour of protection. We are all, no doubt, in favour of an exchange of natural products if we can obtain it, but the advantages must not be all on one side. I hope this Committee will be struck in order that we may learn the cause of the decrease in our exports and the increase of our imports of farm produce to and from the United States.

Mr. SMITH (Peel)—I am sorry to learn that the Premier objects to granting this Committee.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I had no objection at all to granting the Committee from the first. My only objection was to bringing witnesses or creating large expenses. I am willing to grant the Committee on the same understanding as the Committee was granted last year to the manufacturers.

Mr. SMITH—I am quite sure the country will sustain the Premier in this. It has been pointed out that this is the third time that the hon. member for Centre Wellington has got this Committee and has done nothing. This is a serious matter. While some have pooh-poohed this motion—and I confess I was one of them at first—there can be no doubt that many of our farmers desire to have the question discussed and thoroughly investigated. I don't know that I can agree with the hon. member for South Wellington when he says if the farmers of the West required this Committee they would have discussed it at the meetings of the Agricultural Associations. It is well known that farmers do not study those things so much as they should, and that they are not prepared to take such action on them as commercial and manufacturing men would. I cannot agree with what the hon. member for South Brant said, that he had no doubt a petition will be presented next year signed by 100,000 farmers.

Mr. PLUMB.

I think that it would be well that the farmers should be placed on the same footing as other producers. I find that the great mass of the products brought into this country pay a duty of $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., while most agricultural products are admitted free. Horses, cattle, swine and sheep are charged 10 per cent.; and this duty should be at least raised to $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Then we have grain of all kind, flour and Indian corn coming into Canada absolutely free. Now, it is said to be absurd to ask an exporting country to be protective, but the United States, which exports largely, although raising farm produce and grain of all kind which they send over here, protect themselves against us; yet still they are prosperous, both with regard to producing powers and revenue. Certainly, we ought to occupy the same position. The farmers only ask to be placed on the same footing as other producers, and no more; and I have no doubt that the agitation which will be created amongst them in this relation will force this House to give attention to their interests.

Mr. McDUGALL (South Renfrew)—I am opposed to this Committee, though representing an agricultural community and being myself interested in that particular business. I think the arguments of those who are asking for this Committee are based on the expectation that the interests of the agriculturists will be benefitted only by the imposition of duties on those articles that are imported into this country and which they raise. I believe the question of protection to home industries agitates the public mind more than any other, and no people are more deeply interested in it than the farmers. They are the principal consumers and must pay for this protection. Surely they are interested in preventing that being done.

Now, I say by granting a Committee which is evidently intended for the purpose of putting a duty on articles produced by the farmers, they admit the case that is being attempted to be made out by the manufacturers. At this particular moment I think that every person who is anxious that injustice shall not be done to the farmers should do everything that lies in his power to prevent the manufacturers from having a protective duty imposed. Admitting it is quite possible for the manufacturers to be right and those opposed to them to be wrong, I believe a large proportion of the agricultural population think they are asking what they are not entitled to.

If they think that the manufacturers are asking what they are not entitled to, it is their duty certainly not to ask for what, if it were granted, would be as far wrong in their case as if asked by the manufacturers. I believe that no duty placed on articles raised by farmers can be of any service to them. They export those articles that are really the principle part of what they raise, and the prices of which are governed, not by the prices that prevail in the home markets, but by those which prevail in the markets to which they are exported.

There is not the slightest reason why the time and attention of the farmer should not be as profitably employed in raising articles for export as for home consumption or local markets. Great Britain will give us as much for our cattle as will make stock raising a profitable business in this country. That being the case, is there any reason why our farmers cannot use their coarse grain and roots in the raising of cattle for export? In doing so the farmer not only makes profit for himself, but it gives him the means of improving the value of his land, which is not only an immediate profit but a profit for all time to come. It is therefore evident that the duty asked for would be of no practical benefit to the farmers of Canada.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury) — Representing a constituency almost entirely agricultural in its interests, I wish to say a few words with respect to the motion before the House. It may be of very little advantage, the investigation of this subject by a Committee, and if I could see any to be derived from it, I would be the last person in the House to raise my voice against it. In fact I do not intend to do so now—but the gentlemen who are proposed on the Committee are not a fair representation of the Dominion. For instance, the mover has proposed thirteen names; ten of these are from Ontario, two from Quebec, one from the Maritime Provinces, and the remaining Provinces of the Dominion are not represented at all. The agriculturists of the Lower Provinces have different, and some of them conflicting interests from the farmers of Ontario, and to consider the interests of a portion of the agricultural community and ignore the interests of the other would, I think, be unfair. Another objection to the Committee is that a large majority of its members are not agriculturists. I think there are intelligent men in this House who could throw much light on the subject, who are not named. Gentlemen who are not practical agriculturists may be intelligent enough on other questions, but they cannot throw such light on a subject of this kind as parties who are directly interested in this pursuit. I think these are very grave objections to the constitution of the Committee. I believe, if we are to have a protective policy in favour of manufactures, that all the different industries of the country, agriculture included, should have an equal advantage, if there is any. The difficulty of protecting every branch of business and industry in this country must be apparent to every intelligent man. It would be a task I think no Government would undertake. For instance, in portions of the Lower Provinces the price of agricultural products depends very much upon the prosperity of the lumber trade. That branch of trade is at present in a very depressed condition, and in order to benefit the agricultural interests the lumber trade would have to be improved, and as it could not be done by protection there would be no other way except by a bounty, which is out of the question.

For these reasons, in my opinion, the difficulties likely to arise from this question are very many. I have been on Committees of this kind, and have always found that the agricultural interests were made a secondary consideration; that the millers' interests were generally first looked to, and the interests of farmers neglected. I fear that the present Committee, selected as they are, would do the same thing. I do not wish to continue the discussion, but when the hon. gentleman from Brant informs us that we are likely to be inundated with a flood of petitions from the Grangers of Ontario if the agricultural interests are not protected, I would tell him that we have agricultural associations in the Lower Provinces also. They are satisfied with the operation of the tariff, and if the Grangers of Ontario, whose interests are antagonistic to those of the Lower Provinces, urge the Government to put a duty on flour and meal, they will have petitions from the Grangers of New Brunswick against it. They are in favour of free-trade and against a protective tariff.

The debate was unfinished when the House adjourned at Six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 23, 1876.

The SPEAKER took the Chair! at Three o'clock.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Mr. HECTOR CAMERON (North Victoria) was introduced by Sir John Macdonald and Hon J. H. Cameron, and took his seat.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON introduced a Bill to amend the law relating to Criminal Procedure. He said: This is in part the same measure that I introduced last year, and its object is to provide for the examination of certain witnesses in criminal cases. I have also added two clauses that I consider it advisable to bring before the House, in consequence of matters that have occurred since the last session of Parliament. One is in reference to procedure where a witness was found guilty of a crime, convicted and sentenced. There is a doubt whether he can be examined as a witness. The law already provides that he can give evidence before conviction, but there is no provision for examining him after sentence. A doubt has been expressed by no less than three judges of the Superior Court of Upper Canada as to whether he can be examined or not, and I find that the American authorities hold that he can not. The other clause is one of a much more important character, and one which I have no doubt will require consideration, particularly at the hands of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and those who, like myself, are members of the legal profession. It is a curious anomaly of our criminal procedure that the law allows the punishment of a man convicted of crime by the evidence of an accomplice, while at the same time, the judge advises the jury that no conviction shall take place unless there is corroborative evidence. That anomaly should be ended. The law should not be one way while the direction of the court is another. If corroborative evidence is not required, then the party ought to be allowed to offer himself as a witness. My own opinion is, that the view of the judges both in this country and in England is the proper one. I propose to offer for the consideration of the House a clause which shall require that in such a case, in addition to the evidence of the accomplice, there shall be such corroborative evidence as the judge may think proper to submit to the jury.

Mr. BURPEE.

The Bill was read the first time.

THE INSPECTION LAW.

Mr. FORBES introduced a Bill to extend to the whole Dominion of Canada the inspection of certain articles of Canadian produce.

Hon. Mr. POPE—Explain!

Mr. FORBES—A Bill similar to this was carried through the House last Session and was thrown out by the Senate.

The Bill was read the first time.

ABORTION.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON introduced a Bill to amend the Criminal Law relating to the crime of Abortion. He said: In this Bill there are two clauses, one declaring the case in which it shall be murder, and the other in which it shall not be murder. I think it is quite evident from what has occurred during the last two or three years, and from the cases that have been before the courts, that there ought to be some alteration in the law. In all cases in which death ensues, the crime is murder. This arises from the old common law doctrine which declares that if in the perpetration of a felony, death is caused, the crime is murder. Of course one can easily understand how that would be the case under the old English law, which made every felony a capital crime. There was no felony that was not punishable with death, and the consequence was it mattered very little whether a man was convicted on one charge or the other.

The difference of intention was one of so extraordinary a character, that before the Committee appointed some years ago for the purpose of examining into the question of culpable homicide, when most of the judges were one after another examined, they all seemed—or the majority of them—to consider it strange that a principle which was taken from the original statement, should be the one upon which action should continue to be taken down to the present time. Now that the statement was this:—That if a man fired into a flock of fowls, with the intention of killing and stealing one of them, and he shot a person while doing so, such shooting would be murder; but if he fired at the same flock, not with the intention of stealing the particular fowl at which he fired, but merely wantonly, and shot somebody, it would not be murder. Well, of course, it is very difficult indeed to understand upon any other principle than the old one of which I have just spoken, how the fact of firing at a fowl, with the intention of stealing it afterwards, which was a felony, made the unintentional killing of a man murder on the part of the person who discharged the gun, while in the other case, when he shot in mere wantonness, such killing was not murder. That principle has prevailed in the English law to the present day, but it does not prevail in connection with other things of quite as much consequence. Take, for instance, the case of a man indicted for the crime of perjury. It may be established in the clearest possible way that the accused is, or is intended to be, guilty of wilful perjury in some particular point, but if touching some other point in the indictment he is not shown to be so guilty, he cannot be found guilty, because it so happens that the matter is not put forward concerning which he may be culpable and there are various other things of the same kind which really require consideration. While applying this to what is now before us in this country, and to what we have seen practised, particularly during the last three or four years, I think that principle will be found quite clearly opposed to the common sense and the common understanding of everybody; and we should endeavour to put an end to the crime which I have mentioned, not treating it in the way in which it has been treated heretofore, in accordance with the common law doctrine, but in an entirely different fashion, making it—wherever there was wilful intention to kill, or where it would be proven that death would result from the use of the means in question—murder; and where not wilfully done and where the intention was of a different character, changing the indictment from murder to manslaughter. In the United States it is called murder in the second degree by the laws of every State in the Union. They have what we have never had—degrees of the different descriptions of crime, and I think it not advisable, in connection with a matter of this importance, the effect of which is known to be so extended,—and the conviction of parties under it, is hardly likely in every instance to be carried out to its full extent—and where the death penalty under the law is not approved of by common sense,—to leave the law in such a state. This penalty should be really so prescribed that it should be properly exacted, and not as is actually the case, never hardly carried out because it is felt that it would scarcely be advisable. It is equally applicable to cases of accessory before and after the fact; and one cannot help seeing that where a person—who might be accessory before the fact relative to an act illegal in itself, but which he never contemplated in any particular whatever—caused the death of a party, that it is a most extraordinary circumstance that there should be that sort of murder without intention—the man being liable to be convicted, though, in point of fact, the idea of such a thing never entered his head. The effect of this system has been seen in various cases. The executive clemency is evoked and its exercise is necessary, for it is felt that the law ought not to be put in force. This should not be the case. In the same connection, there is another matter of great importance in the administration of the law. We are fortunately freer from the publication of advertisements and the circulation of pamphlets touching affairs of this kind than the country to the south of us; but at the same time we know perfectly well that there are always cases in Canada in which such circulation, and notices and advertisements in newspapers as to places where information, drugs, and advice, &c., can be obtained, are apparently made without any thought of difficulty whatever; and I propose by the third clause in this measure to make the publication of these things by pamphlet, or newspaper, or advertisement, or of any hint, order or address, by means of which persons may secure medicine or advice for such purpose, a misdemeanor punishable in the courts. I venture to say that these facts have come to the knowledge of many of us during the course of investigations which have taken place of late years, and I myself saw, only a short time ago, in one of our courts, a table covered with pamphlets, advertisements, and photographs of all these things, pointing directly, every one of them, to what I have said. This will be found to be a most salutary measure, involving every person guilty of such crimes in the punishment arising from the commission of a misdemeanor. I do not propose to make this so heavy as to be calculated to prevent its infliction, but to prescribe an imprisonment not exceeding one year with or without hard labor, in the discretion of the Court. I beg to move the first reading, seconded by Sir John A. Macdonald.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Mr. Speaker, of course the House will not expect me to offer any opinion regarding what my hon. friend has not stated—the details of the Bill, which he intends shall be presented for our consideration; but with reference to the general principle affecting at least a portion of this measure, I will say that for my part I have been unable to come to any other conclusion, for some time past, than that our law required a change. There are two propositions which seem to me to apply to this case, and to indicate that at an early day some reform should be made in the law. The first is, that punishment held inapplicable by reason of its extremity, in the popular sense, to any particular crime, is inexpedient, because it defeats the end in view, negating punishment to a certain extent; and the second, that any punishment which is excessive and inapplicable when convictions take place, defeats the great object of framing certain clauses in the law. Ground for invoking the executive clemency ought not to be given, because I think that it may be laid down as general principle, however difficult it may be found to apply it in all cases, that the punishment which the law prescribes to any particular crime should be that expected by the public to be the fate of a convicted criminal.

The observations of the hon. gentleman are applicable to a much wider range of consideration than those to which he has in fact applied them or to which the Bill has relation. The hon. gentleman has himself cited other instances to which they perhaps apply with even greater force than those to which he has given them application in connection with his proposed legislation—as for instance, being accessory after the fact. He has by no means exhausted the applications, and with regard to the class of crime, which unfortunately involves the taking of human life, it may be said that the law is not in accordance with practice, but as to whether it would be expedient on the whole to deal with this question by a comprehensive measure, which might put it on a better foundation, or to deal with it only in the particular relations to which my hon. friend has referred, I reserve my opinion. I have, however, come to the conclusion—and had time permitted, I would have been so prepared at this Session—to introduce at the next Session for the consideration of the House a much more comprehensive measure than that which my hon.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON.

friend has very properly submitted, as dealing with the pressing grievance to which he has made allusion. I do not think, Sir, that there will be any difficulty at all in acceding to the third clause, or, at any rate, to its principle; but with reference to the other clauses, I have given my unreserved opinion that these are not the only questions open for consideration.

The Bill was read the first time.

CORRUPT PRACTICES AT ELECTIONS.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I beg leave to introduce a Bill making more effectual provision for enquiry into corrupt practices in connection with Elections for the House of Commons.

There has been, Sir, for a long time upon the Statute Book of England, as a part of the legislation with reference to elections, a provision for enquiry into corrupt practices in cases in which Committees of the House—at that time the tribunals appointed for the purpose—reported that there was reason to believe such practices were general at the elections. The functions of these Committees have been extremely important and useful. When the legislation was introduced into this country by which enquiries into elections were transferred to the judges, so much of the English law as had regard to the judges reporting to the House of Commons that there was reason to believe corrupt practices were committed at elections was retained, and such reports are at present required: but there is no provision for any action being taken on them, and they are consequently nugatory. We have recorded on our journals numerous reports from several judges concerning cases in which there were corrupt practices. We have one case, I remember—and there may be more—in connection with which it was reported there was reason to believe that corrupt practices prevailed to an extensive degree, but with reference to none of these has anything been done. In addition to this legislation in England, subsequent measures were passed, providing for cases with regard to which there has been no enquiry into such practices upon a petition—permitting a petition being sent to the House by a certain number of electors within a certain time after the election, representing the existence of general corrupt practices, with a view to empowering Parliament to pass an Address to the Crown for an enquiry into the facts. These two provisions are still found not to meet the question completely; both in England and here, the difficulty has been found to exist to which my hon. friend the member for North Hastings referred on more than one occasion during the last Session, and also other members, and for which the remedy they proposed was felt by myself and others to be inapplicable. I think my hon. friend for Cardwell will be of the same opinion. The attempt made was mainly to cause the petitioners, against their will, to enter into a more prolonged investigation at their own cost; and I had no hesitation in saying to the hon. member for North Hastings—and my hon. friend coincided with me—that if this would not be practicable: first, because it is very difficult to make men do what they do not wish to do; and secondly, because a serious evil is threatened with regard to these petitions, owing to the large costs they involve. The addition of unnecessary or inequitable charges to those which are inevitable would render less efficacious our system for the trial of controverted elections; this would be another ground for apprehension to petitioners, and therefore I would be unable to accede, regarding these two main grounds to the view which, in such a way, would tend to prolong these investigations. But, Sir, as I have said, the difficulty of making investigations for the purpose of ascertaining whether general and extensive corrupt practices have prevailed has frequently prevented them in England as well as here. At the last Session a Select Committee was struck to enquire into the operation of the Act for the trial of controverted elections, which Committee made several recommendations. Amongst them was one, the substance of which I propose for the consideration of the House as an additional ground for authorizing an Address for the issue of a Commission; and that is, to add to the duties of the election judges the duty of reporting whether they are of opinion that the enquiry into a contested election has been rendered incomplete by the action of any parties to the petition of contestation, and whether further inquiry as to corrupt practices is desirable.

That additional report is to be made by the judge under the Controverted Elections Act. Then we will have the judge reporting, when corrupt practices extensively prevail, whether in his opinion the enquiry into that matter has been rendered incomplete by the action of any parties, and that further investigation is desirable. Upon any of these three grounds, or upon a petition of a certain number of electors, charging the existence of corrupt practices, being presented, trial may be had. Hitherto the ground was usually a petition for enquiry. Before proceeding to advert to the effects of that procedure, I may state that I propose to ask the House to provide that wherever a Judge has reported, as he is authorized to report by the existing and proposed law, that corrupt practices have, or that he has reason to believe they have, extensively prevailed, or that the enquiry was incomplete and further investigation is desirable, no new writ should issue except by order of the House, which has the matter in its own hands upon meeting. My hon. friend from Frontenac suggested something of that kind last Session, and I myself put a resolution on the paper that it was desirable. It is highly important that the process should extend to the constituency, which should understand that a temporary disfranchisement may follow—that it will certainly take place—in case it has disgraced itself by permitting extensive corruption to prevail at an election. There are obvious reasons why the provinces should have power to mitigate the effects of any trial. Our Federal constitution is one of those. Under that constitution a certain strength is given to our provinces, and it would be essential, although there is no reason to expect any considerable number of cases in which writs will be delayed, to provide that the provinces should be able to give additional representation to other constituencies, in order that the proper quota of representation may be preserved. This, although an unlikely contingency, deserves to be taken into consideration upon any occasion when the House is asked to issue a writ.

Having made these observations, Sir, I may say that the Bill in its details is founded upon the English Act. I hope, however, that in its language it may be found to be somewhat improved. I have endeavored, as in some other cases where Bills have been based on English legislation, to follow a more modern and sensible form of phraseology, and if possible to simplify the language. I have had to consider what the English Parliament had also to consider, what alterations were necessary as to Commissioners. I am proposing to the House to provide for a commission to issue to one or more of the Judges of the Supreme Court, or to one or more of the Judges of any Provincial Court competent to try election petitions, or to one or more persons appointed by the House itself, being advocates or barristers of not less than seven years standing in the Provinces. These provisions are elastic, and give the House power to deal according to circumstances with the class of persons to whom the commission is issued. I think it is obvious that, while it is desirable to avail ourselves of the services of the Judges of the Supreme Court for this purpose, their other judicial duties may be such as to render it impossible for them to be utilised. Similar observations apply with very great force as regards the judges of two of the larger Provinces. It is desirable in all cases to utilize a judge, but it is probable that it will often be found impracticable, without detracting from the efficient administration of justice, to call upon them to enter into what might be a protracted investigation. Therefore, provision has been made for the House to select advocates or barristers to conduct the enquiry when it is deemed necessary.

The Bill gives full powers for the calling of witnesses and for punishing those who do not attend, and contains also a very ample clause for indemnifying those witnesses who may have answered truly, in the opinion of the judges, all questions put to them on the subject of the election. I may say that the earlier Act of England contains a more limited clause, and it was found wise afterwards to extend it. The object one has in view in an enquiry of this description, where corrupt practices appear to have extensively prevailed, is to get at the proof, to search to the bottom, and ascertain how far corruption has prevailed in the constituency; and I think it is wise under the circumstances that a very liberal indemnity clause should be placed in the Bill.

A different view—it may be open to question and argument—but a different view may be taken in reference to the class of witnesses examined on cases of election petitions. The House will remember we have adopted a rule that the answers of a witness shall not be used in evidence against him; but he is still exposed to the apprehension of what the consequences may be of an acknowledgment of his guilt. We can see very clearly what the consequences of this may be. In the first place it adds strength and vigor to his testimony supposing he was guilty; in the second place it proves the fact, morally at any rate, that he is guilty, and is consequently some argument in favour of a more extensive indemnity clause. But, whatever the argument may be, it is absolutely essential for this part of the investigation that there should be a clause to indemnify witnesses who attend and give evidence, but not for witnesses who refuse to speak or who cannot claim a certificate of indemnity on other grounds.

The provisions of the Bill are such as to have an extensive enquiry first of all into the election complained of, and secondly into any elections prior until we come to some election at which we can find corrupt practices, but those provisions don't require further explanation at my hands.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON asked whether the clause relating to constituencies was taken from the English Bill?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—That was introduced into the English law several years ago. Curiously enough, in that law it is only on the petition of two electors that such enquiry was instituted. I felt some difficulty about that, and I have left a blank in this copy to be filled in if the House demands a petition of a larger number of electors.

The Bill was read the second time.

CORRUPT PRACTICES AT ELECTIONS.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I beg to move the first reading of a Bill to provide for the more effectual administration of the laws relating to corrupt practices at Elections. I have already observed that we have found upon the reports presented to us by the judges under this Act, numerous names of persons reported guilty of corruptions. In the English law a provision was made that under certain circumstances, and with reference to certain corrupt practices, it should be the duty of the Attorney-General to consider those cases, and, if the evidence is sufficient, to cause a prosecution to be instituted. Complaint has been made, and I think rightly, of the practical working of the present election law in this particular. Gentlemen who are candidates for election to the House of Commons, as a rule—invariably—scrupulously abstained from any act which might be construed into a corrupt practice, yet numerous other persons have been found guilty of such offences. Notwithstanding that legislation has imposed upon those acts the stigma of crime, and fixed a penalty for their commission, there has not been a single instance of—I won't say conviction—but any attempt to prosecute. Now, Sir, the observations which my hon. friend made in regard to the law on another subject apply in their spirit to this also. It is our duty, if we do consider those Acts to be crimes, and if we find our law remains a dead letter, to endeavour to take some steps to make it a living letter—to arrange it so that there may be an effective administration of that law which we maintain in our Statute Book. I think that the suggestions of the Select Committee to which I have referred as having sat last Session upon this subject are worthy of attention in this particular. One was that wherever the judge—I don't profess to quote literally, but to give merely the substance—upon the trial of an election petition, should find that a person was guilty, or that there was sufficient evidence to put him on trial, provision should be made for his being summarily tried at an early day for that practice. I believe members receive with great satisfaction generally any suggestions that may tend to the security of their seats, and it is my opinion that all our seats are imperilled to-day by the Acts of those who are wicked enough—to use the language of the law—and indiscreet enough—to use the softer language of those who desire to speak mildly—to violate the law. The agent, the impalpable agent, cannot be defined by law, for the moment that is done a means of evasion will be found and we will have licensed corruption. It is something which is beyond the pale of the law, and the agent works without the slightest apprehension of any penal consequences. We mitigated this to a certain extent last Session when we put in a provision that the agent might be made responsible for a portion, if not all, of the consequences of the petition. But that is very small satisfaction, nor does it meet the grave objection that we should retain upon our Statute Book laws which declare certain acts are crimes, and yet, although names of persons have been returned as committing them, no prosecution or conviction has taken place. Therefore, I hope that from the highest motive to which I have just referred, and to the other and not altogether unworthy motive, namely, that it will secure our own seats and strike terror to the hearts of those who are still disposed to violate the law, that the House will agree with me in making some provision for the short, sharp, summary trial of those persons against whom the evidence adduced upon the investigation of an election petition is sufficient to warrant prosecution.

My Bill provides that in case of the trial of a petition, any person is found guilty of corrupt practices within the meaning of the statute, or there is sufficient evidence in the mind of the judge to warrant his being put on trial, the judge shall summon him at any time or place to be named—the time within a certain number of days—and the place a convenient Court House or available room—to be tried. The judge can also bind by recognisance the persons present to appear to be tried or to give evidence as the case may be, and the Bill provides that the issue of the summonses shall be reported to the Secretary of the Province and to the Secretary of State—to the Secretary of the Province, because the administration of justice is in the hands of the Provincial authorities, and it is important these trials being of great public consequence, that he should have formal intimation of when the trial takes place; to the Secretary of State of Canada with a view to its being possible for the Attorney General to discharge the duty, which I suggest by a subsequent clause, which shall be imposed upon him, analagous to the duty imposed by the English act, to assist counsel in the prosecution. I propose it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to subpoena any witness who may be material. There is a provision also for the trial of the accused by the judge who sat on the petition; and if he is unable to attend then some other judge competent to try such cases within the Province will take hold of the matter; and I suggest that the trial should take place before the judge alone and without a jury, for the same reasons which have influenced, I dare say, the action of the prosecution in all such cases. I believe the trial of a question of corrupt practices by a jury would be attended with similar results as the trial of an election petition by a jury—a disagreement in almost every instance.

Then, there are some other provisions which are based largely upon those provisions incorporated some years ago in the Act of Parliament providing for the trial of prisoners at county courts by consent. There is also a provision for the punishment of witnesses who fail to attend, and a general provision as to penalties, which enacts that in cases of conviction the offender should be sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for a period not exceeding three months, with or without hard labor, and at a fine not exceeding $300 and to pay the costs taxed by the Court.

There is one crime, that of personation, which is punishable under the present law by imprisonment for six months. I thought it better, in dealing with the matter in this summary manner, to propose a uniform maximum term of three months, which would be quite adequate for the purpose. What we want is that justice should be speedy and certain, and not that the punishment should be unnecessarily severe. I think it is necessary there should be some term of imprisonment, because I hold it is of the highest importance that a moral stigma should be attached to this offence, and that a wealthy offender should know that he cannot escape by paying a fine of $200.

I also propose for the consideration of the House, a provision that no summons shall be issued or prosecuted under this Act, if it appears that a criminal prosecution for the same case has been tried; but that on the issue of any summons under this Act, the criminal proceedings shall be stayed. Otherwise proceedings which would be ineffectual might be commenced in the course of the trial of the election petition, expressly to withdraw from the operation of this Act the cases which it was apprehended might come under it. I think it better, therefore, to make such provisions as shall enable the judge and make it his duty to grapple with all cases that have not already been disposed of under the legislation which I now propose.

I thought it better to combine in one Act all the provisions for the punishment of corrupt practices which it appeared proper to ask the House to assent to.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON—Supposing the judge should decide a case in favour of the accused party, is he to be indemnified in the expenses?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—That is a subject worthy of consideration. It will be observed that the action is to be taken by the judge himself, and it is not on the motion of any private individual that such summons is to issue. It is only if, in the course of an election petition, it is made apparent to the mind of the judge himself that it is his duty to order a summons to issue.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON—I quite understand that. What I wish to point out is, that there should be some provision made to indemnify the accused if he should be acquitted. An additional point is with regard to the expenses of witnesses.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I have thought it expedient at once to grapple with that question. We are dealing with a very important matter, and I propose to introduce a clause to provide that the expenses be paid by the Parliament of Canada.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—This question is so far-reaching in its consequences that hon. gentlemen will be inclined to reserve their opinions until we have the Bill before us. I merely rise to ask my hon. friend whether he has at all considered the Act of last Session? There is one portion of it which I had great hesitation in letting pass without protest, and the more I think of it the more objectionable it appears to be—that is, that no trial of a contested election can proceed against a sitting member during a Session. It appears to me if the allegation is that the sitting member has no right to be here, the sooner it is decided the better. It is no advantage to a constituency that a person who does not really represent them should be here. It appears to me the principle is wrong that a person who has no right to sit here should, by special legislative action be allowed to hold a seat in this House for any length of time.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—That has nothing to do with this measure at all. Of course second thoughts are sometimes best, and the hon. gentleman during the recess may have found objections which did not occur to him while the measure was before the House last Session. My own opinion was expressed then, and my hon. friend from Cardwell and myself formed a coalition on that subject. It was considered fair and reasonable. The practical objection to the hon. gentleman's arguments was this—our Sessions are so short it is utterly impossible to expect if a trial is commenced during a Session (mark, it does not deal with a case commenced before the Session) that you can get a new member into the House before it rises. That is one of the reasons. I think it is quite probable both the Election Law and the Controverted Elections Act may require some revision before the next general election. I have myself a strong idea that some of the minor details of the law with reference to the ballot may require amendment. It would be inexpedient to legislate early on that subject. I think we should wait until we discover what further improvements can be made in it before the next general election.

The Bill was read the first time.

THE INSOLVENCY ACT.

Mr. DELORME asked whether it is the intention of the Government to amend the Insolvency Act?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The Government has under consideration suggestions made from several quarters, but no conclusion has been arrived at whether any legislation will be necessary or not.

THE CULBUTE CANAL.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings), in the absence of Mr. Wright (Pontiac), asked, whether it is the intention of the Government to take any steps for the improvement, during the coming season, of the navigation of that portion of the Ottawa River between the foot of the Culbute Canal and the head of the Calumet Rapids?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the intention of the Government to do anything in that quarter this season.

THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. Fiset asked whether it is the intention of the Government, in the interest of the Intercolonial Railway and for the promoting of its regular working, to make arrangements with the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the acquisition of the portion of their railway between Rivière du Loup and Point Lévis?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman is aware that it is absolutely necessary for the Government to reach Point Lévis upon a portion of the Grand Trunk Railway—that portion between Rivière du Loup and the terminus opposite the City of Quebec. The Government are in correspondence with the Grand Trunk Co. about an arrangement which we hope will be suitable to them and to us. I am not prepared to say at this moment what that arrangement will ultimately be, but it will be mentioned to the House when it is arrived at.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE.

POSTAL EXTENSION.

Mr. DESJARDINS asked whether in view of the increasing wants and requirements of the localities surrounding the City of Montreal, it is the intention of the Government to adopt any means which would give those localities greater postal facilities?

Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON—The Government have no present intention of dealing with the subject in the manner indicated in the hon. gentleman's question.

CUSTOM HOUSE AT LÉVIS.

Mr. FRÉCHETTE asked whether it is the intention of the Government to establish a Custom House, or at least a Bonded Warehouse, at South Quebec, Lévis?

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—There is no objection to granting a Bonded Warehouse at Lévis, provided it is under the rules and regulations of the Port of Quebec.

COMMERCIAL AGENCIES.

Mr. BERNIER asked whether the Government intends taking proceedings in order to protect the commercial class against the reports (too often false) of commercial agencies, which have often the effect of ruining the credit of persons perfectly solvent?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—The Government have no present intention to take any special action in this matter.

BEACON LIGHTS ON THE SAGUENAY.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE objected to the following question, which contained an improper charge against a Government officer, being allowed to stand:

“Mr. Cimon—Why the contract for building two beacon lights at the entrance of the river Saguenay was given to Ambroise Trudelle for $900.00 while tenders had been received for the work from

Louis Lavoie, Murray Bay, for.....	$490 00
Joseph Tremblay, Chicoutimi, for.....	500 00
Joseph Warren, Murray Bay, for.....	590 00
Joseph Warren, “ “ “ “	600 00

Mr. MASSON—It has been allowed to stand, and if it is not asked next time it comes up it could then be dropped.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I will take good care that no such question be allowed to stand again. If the hon. gentleman is present—

Mr. MASSON—He is not here.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Then I give notice this question must be put or dropped the next time it comes before the House.

Mr. MASSON—It will be put or dropped according to the rule of the House.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It disappears at once. I invoke the rule.

Mr. SPEAKER—The question has been allowed to stand.

PACIFIC RAILROAD SURVEY.

Mr. DEWDNEY asked when the Report of the Surveys of the British Columbia Section of the Canadian Pacific Railway made in 1874 and 1875 will be printed and distributed?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am very sorry I am not able to answer the question of the hon. member to-day. On account of the very serious domestic affliction in the family of the Chief Engineer, I have not been able to see him for two weeks. I hope the hon. gentleman will be satisfied with the answer. I will see him at the earliest possible moment.

PRESQU'ISLE HARBOR.

Mr. BIGGAR asked whether the Government intend placing a sum in the Estimates to complete the Harbor of Presqu'Isle on Lake Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am sorry to say we will not be able this year to place a sum in the estimates for this purpose. We do not think it is required so urgently as to demand a vote to be taken at the present time.

COMMISSION OF FINANCIAL AGENTS.

Mr. TUPPER asked what rate of commission was agreed to be paid to the Financial Agents for negotiating the recent loan, and the commission they are to receive for paying the coupons on the bonds; also, the names of the parties to whom the loan of 1874 was allotted, with the amount to each respectively? He added: I may be permitted to say I was anxious to have this information at the earliest moment possible, or I would have put a motion on the paper asking for a return. It would be extremely convenient if the hon. gentleman would, instead of answering the question verbally, lay the papers on the Table.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—With respect to the first part of the question, I may say the financial agents received no commission on that part of the loan negotiated under the Imperial guarantee, and a commission of one per cent on the remainder. The rate of commission on the bonds was one-half per cent on the guarantee, and the usual amount on the other. With respect to the remaining portion of this question, I take this opportunity of laying on the Table returns which give information so far as it can be furnished. With respect to the names of the parties to whom the loan of 1874 was allotted, I was advised it would be impossible to give them, inasmuch as the usual course is to keep them secret, and it would be a breach of confidence to mention them.

REFUNDING DUTIES.

Mr. STEPHENSON asked whether during the past two years duties levied on foreign manufactured Steam Fire Engines imported into Canada have been refunded; and if so, the amount of duties so refunded, and to whom?

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—There has been no refund of duties for Fire Engines imported into the country during the last two years.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH THE GULF.

Mr. Fiset asked whether it is the intention of the Government, in the interest of the navigation of the St. Lawrence, to subsidize any company willing to undertake it, or to construct themselves a telegraphic system, which would have the result of putting the Island of Anticosti and a great portion of the North Shore of the St. Lawrence in communication with the telegraphic lines of the South Coast, according to the suggestion made by the Hon. P. Fortin to the Quebec Board of Trade?

Hon. Mr. SMITH—The Government fully recognize the importance of this work, but they do not intend at the present Session to make any movement with regard to it.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. BLAIN.—Mr. Speaker,—It will be remembered that last Session there was some very considerable discussion regarding this matter, and then it was doubtful what was likely to be the policy of the Government—whether the Minister of Public Works would improve the navigation of the St. Lawrence so as to give twelve or fourteen feet of water. I was at the time, as I am still, interested in the question, and I am not sure whether the Minister of Public Works has altered his plans or not. I would like, therefore, Sir, to know whether it is the intention of the Government to adopt twelve or fourteen feet. A requisition was presented to the Administration, urging that surveys should be continued, and estimates furnished the House touching these improvements, covering the items, which I suppose are in all probability in the possession of the Government. I accordingly move, seconded by the member for East York, that a report concerning surveys of the St. Lawrence, and estimates for improvements giving fourteen feet of water, be laid before the House.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The policy, Sir, that the Government has adopted with relation to this subject, is this: On the works which necessitate excavation on the lower locks, guard locks and the like, provision is made for fourteen feet, but in all other places, where there has been a depth of twelve feet, the walls of the locks will be simply raised two feet, giving fourteen feet. It is desirable to obtain twelve feet as soon as possible, and the additional two feet can be secured at any time, while the canals are being used. With regard to the River St. Lawrence, as I pointed out last year, it will take a little over one and one-half millions of dollars to ensure twelve feet of navigable water at the points where shoals are to be found in the bed; and it will require a very much larger sum,—perhaps three times that amount—to obtain fourteen feet in the river proper. I have not deemed it necessary to employ any very large number of surveyors in order to have a report regarding the exact cost of this additional work, for this will be done by the regular staff of the Department. A portion has been finished during the past seven years, and the remainder will be accomplished as we find that we can spare men and money for the purpose. I can only say that everything is being done therefor with a view to ultimately securing fourteen feet of water as the standard depth, but we will have twelve feet available at a much earlier period by the course we have adopted than would be otherwise possible. The papers will be very incomplete, but such as they are they will be brought down.

Mr. FISER.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Might I ask the First Minister in the same connection, whether these means—which strike me, as well as a great many others, as defective—with relation to deepening of canals, apply to the vicinity of the St. Gabriel Locks, and whether it is proper to raise the walls to secure uniform depth in this, as it is proposed to do in other cases? I ask the question for the purpose of information.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Oh, yes; the same system will be followed on the Lachine as on the Welland Canal.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—As most of the vessels coming from the Lower Ports draw from sixteen to nineteen feet of water, it would be very desirable to have nineteen feet of water in the locks. I believe that this was the recommendation, but the contracts are only drawn for twelve feet. Unless we could get nineteen feet up to the point of discharge for coal, near the manufactories in the upper part of the town the deepening of the canals would be of no use to the Lower Provinces. If the difficulty cannot be overcome by raising the walls, it would be well to consider the question of deepening.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Well, that involves another point altogether, Sir. The depth at the St. Gabriel Locks will be fourteen, not nineteen feet; and although it would be very convenient for the people of Montreal to obtain nineteen feet, it is no part of our business to provide an additional harbor at Montreal—and this is a pure question of such accommodation—one mile and a half above the present position. The Dominion has guaranteed a considerable expenditure for the improvement of the St. Lawrence; and the Harbour Commissioners have had a very large amount placed at their disposal to increase the harbour accommodation in the River proper. This has been extended for over a mile of wharfage and by the excavation of basins in the canal below the St. Gabriel Locks; but the Government do not propose to extend it above these locks.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I would simply make one further remark for the information of the House. The First Minister seems to think that it is simply for the convenience of the city and port of Montreal to make such an improvement, but I would observe that it is more for the convenience of Nova Scotian coal owners and the very large number of persons owning vessels engaged in that trade, than for the manufacturers, because coal could be landed at a spot where they would obtain more for it.

The motion was carried.

FISH AND FISH OILS.

Mr. DECOSMOS—In rising to call for returns of the correspondence respecting the non-admission of fish and fish oils into the United States from the Province of British Columbia, I take occasion, Sir, to draw the attention of this House to certain facts. In the year 1871, British Columbia became a part of this Dominion. In the same year the Washington Treaty was negotiated. In the same year, 1872, legislation was passed, as was required, to apply the provisions of the Treaty to British Columbia and under the 21st Article of the Treaty, fish and fish oils were to be admitted into the United States duty free. During 1872 application was made by the owners and exporters of fish and fish oil for the entrance of fish and fish oil into the United States on the Pacific Coast, but such entry was refused. Many similar attempts have been made since, but without success. While the late Administration was in power I brought the matter several times to its notice, and I have since followed the same course. What steps the Government of the Dominion have taken in this relation I do not know, but we are aware of the action of the United States authorities, as well as their reasons, so far as communicated by the Custom's Officers. They maintain that British Columbia, not having been a part of the Dominion at the date of the negotiation of this Treaty, cannot be admitted to the enjoyment of its benefits. I believe that this position is unreasonable. We might as well take a similar course concerning Alaska with reference to treaties between Great Britain and the United States. Now, such non-admission operates unfavourably on our fishing industry, and though a young Province, if the records of 1875 be examined it will be seen that we exported during the year some $134,000 worth of fish and fish oils, nearly double the value of the exports of fish from Ontario; about one-third of the total exports of fish of New Brunswick, and one-fifth of those of Quebec. When in San Francisco recently, I was informed by the manager of a company of capitalists living in Massachusetts and Connecticut, that the latter proposed to erect an extensive establishment for the purpose of canning salmon and making fish oil, with the view of exporting them to other markets than those of the United States; also that if the 21st Article of the Washington Treaty were in operation, they would double or treble their capital, in order to can for the American as well as foreign marts. I therefore hope that the Government will consent to bringing down the papers required at an early day, and, further, that if possible, some explanations will be offered in this connection by one of the Ministers to the House.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Some correspondence has passed on this subject. I am afraid that the result will not be eminently satisfactory to my hon. friend, but such as it is, it will be brought down.

ISLE AUX COUDRES LIGHT-HOUSE.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—I move that an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, for a copy of the contract between the Government and Mr. Charles E. Forgues, of Malbaie, for the construction of a Light-house upon Isle aux Coudres; also copies of the correspondence which took place upon the subject and a statement shewing the amount claimed as compensation or damages by virtue of the said contract, and the amount paid to the said Charles E. Forgues, or to any other person in this matter.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I have no objection to bring down the papers, but certainly they are rather voluminous. It relates to a contract made by the late Government of which my hon. friend was at the time a member. It was not proceeded with, and compensation was given. I really do not know whether he objects to this as insufficient, or to the contract itself.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—Perhaps a portion of it will answer my purpose. My object is to know the reason why the work was not proceeded with, and what the amount of the indemnity was.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I think that my hon. friend knows the cause why the work was not continued; if not, I can tell him—the late Administration did not desire it.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—Let the papers be submitted.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—The contract involved an expenditure of five or six hundred dollars. The compensation I allowed was, I think, $181. However, I can bring down all the papers.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—I was told in the country, that the reason for arresting the contract was because the location was unsuitable.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—This was the case.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—That is strictly the fact; it was stopped after finding that the amount of money it was contemplated to expend exceeded the requirements, and a change of location was desirable.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE.

PACIFIC RAILWAY TELEGRAPH.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, for a statement of the tenders received for the construction of a line of telegraph in connection with the Pacific Railway, shewing the names of the parties tendering, the amount asked by each such party and the names of the sureties; also copies of the contract between the Government and F. Barnard, Esquire, in relation to the construction of the said line of telegraph; copies of all correspondence which may have been had with the Government on the occasion and since the passing of the said contract with a statement of all claims which may have been made in virtue of the said contract shewing the amount promised or paid in connection therewith, including all Orders in Council or Departmental Orders in relation to the cancelling or suspension of the said contract or to the indemnity to be paid in respect thereof.

The motion was carried.

THE OFFICE OF AGENT-GENERAL.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, for copies of the following papers:—

1. The Order in Council creating the office of Agent-General of Canada for England or the United Kingdom.
2. The Commission or Letter of Appointment of Mr. Jenkins to the office of Agent General.
3. The general instructions given to the Agent-General and all subsequent modifications thereof.
4. The Order in Council abolishing the office of Agent General.
5. The letters and correspondence relating to the termination of Mr. Jenkins' employment by resignation or otherwise.

The motion was carried.

PURCHASE OF LANDS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, for copies of all correspondence between the Canadian Government, or any member thereof, with the Hudson Bay Company relating to the acquisition or purchase by the Dominion from the Company, of their lands in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, or either of them, and of all Orders in Council, despatches and other papers respecting the same.

The motion was carried.

THE CULLERS' OFFICE.

Mr. McDOUGALL (South Renfrew), moved for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, praying for a Return:—1st, Of the names of persons who have ceased to belong to the Cullers' Office since 1st January, 1875, through death, superannuation or otherwise, distinguishing the cause and employment in each instance, with allowance in each case for superannuation. 2nd, Of the names of those who have been added to the staff in either a temporary or permanent capacity during the same time. The hon. gentleman said:—You will recollect, Mr. Speaker, that during last Session a Bill was passed giving authority to the Minister of Inland Revenue to superannuate certain cullers and other persons connected with the office, it being found there were many who were unable to do their duty, and others employed who were not really required for the business of the office. Since that time there have not been as many persons superannuated as was expected. No doubt that was greatly owing to the fact of the lamented illness of the gentleman at the head of the Department. At the same time, I think it is well that the attention of the Government should be drawn to the fact that the lumber trade require that the number of cullers should, as soon as practicable, without forgetting what we owe to those persons employed during years of activity, be reduced to the number required and capable to discharge the duties of the office. It will also be recollected, I think, that no persons were to be added to the staff in the meantime. The reason why all who could be dispensed with were not to be dismissed was that it was felt it would be a case of great hardship if men, who were unable to obtain employment outside and were capable of doing their work, were deprived of their situations, and it was understood they should be retained as long as they performed their duties properly. But in view of the understanding that no new men should be engaged, it is rather surprising that additions should actually have been made. It was the habit of former Governments, I know, to put a great many persons in the cullers' office, as it was a convenient position for persons who had made themselves useful at elections; but there is no reason why that practice should be continued under the present Government; therefore it was rather surprising that any addition should have been made to the staff. At the same time, I am glad that those additions did not go to any great extent; but I think it is the duty of every person in this House to call the attention of the Government to any neglect in this direction so that it shall not be repeated. I trust, Sir, that the Government will give their attention to this subject, which may not appear important to them, or at least to the country generally, but is of vast consequence to the lumber trade, particularly as it was understood that this office shall be self-sustaining.

While on this subject, I may express the hope that no persons still capable of doing duty, and who are required in the office, will be superannuated. But before anything is done in the way of providing employment for additional people, I trust that those not actually required and whose services can be dispensed without injustice, will be dismissed. If there is money over and above the expenditures of the office in the hands of the Government, I think—although that is left to the Administration—that the superannuation allowance be paid out of that fund, and no levy made on the lumber trade for it. But if there is no such surplus the trade should, of course, make provision for this allowance.

Mr. WHITE (North Renfrew)—This question was brought up in 1874, and a Committee appointed to investigate the working of the culler's office. Those of us engaged in the lumber business felt that a larger number of cullers were employed than was necessary for the requirements of the trade. The object of the Committee was to obtain information from parties connected with the trade as to whether that feeling was general. The evidence taken was conclusively in favour of a reduction, especially in the square timber department. The Supervisor of Cullers himself testified that 20 men were amply sufficient to perform the duties in the square timber department, and all the other evidence pointed in the same direction.

As has been observed by my hon. friend from South Renfrew, it was understood that the office should be self-sustaining, and not a charge upon the revenue, and I believe such is the fact.

In the several Acts relating to the Culler's Office at Quebec, power is given to raise or lower the tariff of fees so as to make the office self-sustaining, and I may say here that not only has the office been self-sustaining, but a considerable sum has been added to the revenue. Under these circumstances, the lumber trade naturally expected that the recommendation of the Committee would have received some attention at the hands of the Government.

We expected that the number of cullers would be reduced as speedily as possible, having a due regard to the rights and privileges of those who held positions in the office. I am sorry to say that the expectation has not been fulfilled. I think some gentlemen have been superannuated and removed from the office, and perhaps one or two have been added to the staff. Those who are connected with the lumber trade feel that an injustice has been done them by the additions that have been made to the office. I trust this motion will pass, so that we may be enabled to see how many cullers have been added since the 1st of January, 1875. I trust, also, that hereafter, notwithstanding the sins of the late Government, no cullers may be added so long as it is shown they are entirely unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. BLANCHET—There is a difference between the cullers of timber and the cullers of deal. Does the Address include all the cullers?

Mr. McDOUGALL—The point is this:—It was felt there were too many cullers in the office. It was also felt that there being no more in the deal department than were required, any vacancies there should be filled from the timber department, where there are too many. Therefore, there was no object in finding out whether the number had been reduced in either department.

Mr. CURRIER—From the speech of the hon. member for North Renfrew it would appear that additions have been made to the staff of cullers in the Quebec office. If so, the Government are greatly to blame. My hon. friends from North and South Renfrew will see now if they had followed the course which I contended for upon that Committee, they would not have got into that trouble, and there would not have been any expense to the trade. My suggestion was that payment should be made by fee, and that all properly qualified persons should be allowed to act as cullers. The best men would get most employment, and there would be no extra expense put on the lumber trade no matter how many cullers were appointed. I maintain still that is the only thing that can be done to reform the unjust practices of that office. I hope the Government will look into the matter and remedy the evils of which we complain. The Minister who has charge of that Department, I regret to say, is not in the House. He has been ill for a long time, and therefore I hope the members of the Government who have charge of that office will look into this and correct the evils that now exist.

Mr. COOK—This is a question of more importance than some hon. gentlemen suppose. The lumber trade of this country is second only to the agricultural interest, and should receive that consideration which is due it. I had the honour of being one of the members of the Select Committee appointed two years ago. At that time it was understood the number of cullers in the square timber department should be reduced. I am very sorry to see that instead of a reduction there has been an increase. At that time there were 40 cullers, and the interests of the trade demanded a decrease in the number. Although a hint has been thrown out that perhaps the increase may be due to the rewarding of political hacks, I do not believe that the Government of the day would put incompetent men into the office on that account. Still there are men employed who are not fit to perform the duty. It was supposed that some of them would be superannuated from the fund on hand, amounting to about $40,000, which was held not for purposes of revenue but for the benefit of the cutlers. I hope it will not be necessary to bring this matter up in the House again, but that the Government will improve this department as they have all others since they came into office.

Mr. WHITE.

Mr. ROCHESTER—Does this motion include all the cutlers ?

Mr. McDUGALL—Certainly, I include the whole department. I may say in reply to what has fallen from the hon. member for North Simcoe, that the expression “ political hacks ” was, perhaps too stiff. I did not intend to make any particular charge against the late Government so far as these appointments were concerned.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I understood him to make use of that expression with reference to the present Government.

Mr. McDUGALL—I am very glad to remove a misapprehension from the hon. gentleman’s mind. I did not make use of the words—I merely said that gentlemen who had been useful or assisted in elections had been appointed. Now, I think it would rather be a charge against the Government if they did not put into office men who had supported them if they were otherwise qualified.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I regret I did not notice the motion sooner, or I would have made particular enquiry into the facts. My recollection, however, is this :—The Minister of Inland Revenue was to proceed to Quebec early in the season in order to have this department reorganized. His long and severe illness prevented that consummation from being realized. My impression is, on making some enquiry for some other reason into the operations of this department, that two clerks were put there at some period last season to do some special work—copying specifications, or something of the kind—but I believe no additions were made to the permanent staff of the office. The return, of course, will be brought down as fast as it can be made out, and we will have the precise facts placed before us. It was the intention of the Government, and is now, to economize the labour of the department and reduce the number of officials. The hon. gentleman is quite right in stating there is a small surplus to the credit of the cutlers in the hands of the Government. It was the intention of the House, I believe, that the fees collected should be merely sufficient to cover the expenses of this department. I will attend to the remarks that have been made so far as they convey either information or suggestions.

Mr. ROCHESTER—The lumbermen were notified last summer that some change would be made in the tariff for cutting deals. I find by the returns that it remains unchanged.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—That return is only up to the 30th of June.

Mr. ROCHESTER—That makes the difference.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew)—The lumbermen have no objection to the appointment of a sufficient number of cutlers to do the work of the office. What we ask of the Government is this—until the number of cutlers in the square timber department is reduced to 20 (and that is a sufficient number to do the work of the office) that no additions be made to fill the place of those who retire either by superannuation or otherwise.

The motion was carried.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for all Orders and Minutes of Council, papers and correspondence with the Imperial Government relating to the introduction and passage through the Imperial Parliament of an Act chaptered 38 Vic., 38 and 39, intitled “ An Act to remove certain doubts with respect to the Parliament of Canada under Section 18 of the “ British North America Act, 1867.”

The motion was carried.

ST. PETER'S CANAL.

Mr. FLYNN moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, for a copy of the report and plan made by Mr. Perley in the summer of 1873, for the enlargement of St. Peter's Canal, with all subsequent reports, Orders in Council, advertisements, tenders and contracts appertaining to that work.

He said :—St. Peter's Canal is a work in which the people of Eastern Nova Scotia feel a deep interest. After many years of agitation, that work was commenced by the Government of Nova Scotia in 1864, the hon. member for Cumberland being then, I believe, Provincial Secretary. A year or two after Confederation it was completed to its present dimensions, but only a very short time elapsed before it was found to be unfit to accommodate the trade of that portion of the Dominion. A glance at the map will show that the canal connects Bras d'Or Lake with the ocean.

It is not necessary for me to say anything with regard to the resources of that important Island. Its vast mineral wealth is yet in the infancy of its development. Since 1859 or 1860 we have opened some 18 or 20 coal mines. Up to that period the General Mining Association had the exclusive right of opening and working our coal deposits, but by the settlement of that question by the Government of Nova Scotia which gave a great impetus to our mining industries, anybody discovering a coal area had the right to open and work it. The inadequacy of the canal for the trade was brought to the notice of the late Government by the members representing the Island in the winter Session of 1873. That Government sent Mr. Perley to inspect the canal and report upon it, and make the necessary plans and specifications. As regards that gentleman, I may say I think nobody could have been chosen who was more competent to discharge the duty that he was instructed to perform. In 1864, when the Government of Nova Scotia was working the canal, he was chosen engineer of the work. He made himself thoroughly acquainted with the question, and the plans and reports submitted by him in the autumn of 1873 were the results of his labours on that occasion.

Mr. KIRPATRICK.

When I came here in 1874, in the discharge of my duty as a representative from that Island, I found it necessary to ask for the report, plans and specifications, and they were laid on the table. I was not then satisfied with the depth of water, because I believed it would not be sufficient for the large vessels that would use that route; but I expressed no dissatisfaction, because I found the Government were then willing to proceed with the work on Mr. Perley's report, and had placed $75,000 in the estimates for that purpose. In that year no tenders were asked for, and no work was done. I felt a little annoyed, and had some communication with a member of the Government. In the Session of 1875 I found tenders had been invited, and the $75,000 was re-voted. I, of course, felt satisfied and said nothing about the delay, believing the work would go on that season. The tenders were to be in before the 10th of May; and after a considerable time had elapsed, seeing that the contract was not awarded, I telegraphed to a member of the Cabinet at Ottawa—the Minister of Militia and Defence. The answer I received was, that more information was required before the work could proceed. Nothing was done; and I heard nothing further of the matter until I saw in the newspapers invitations for tenders under amended plans and specifications. The contract was awarded to Mr. Tuck of St. John, who has been ready since October last and up to the close of the season to proceed with the work; still nothing has been done. Now, this is undoubtedly a serious cause of complaint; moreover the expenditure of the sum of money involved would have been of great assistance to many of the labouring men of that section. We, in common with every other portion of the Dominion, have felt the depression which has paralyzed our industries during the past year, and the expenditure of this money would have been a great benefit. In Nova Scotia, previous to Confederation, when any public work for which a large sum of money was required was advocated, it was not secured without much difficulty, but as soon as the assent of the Legislature was obtained, the required expenditure was at once made. Here, however, it appears to be the reverse; no trouble is experienced in getting appropriations, but the difficulty seems to be in getting the appropriations expended. No dissenting voice touching this project was raised either in the Session of 1874 or the Session of 1875; but nevertheless the appropriation has not been expended. My object in making this motion is twofold. In the first place, I wish to enquire of the Government why two years have been allowed to pass, without paying out any of this money which has been voted by Parliament, and in the second place, I desire to know why the plans and specifications submitted by Mr. Perley have been reduced from 50 feet to 36 feet? Then that gentleman reported in accordance with his instructions, he undoubtedly had not only the present but the future in view. He looked to the probable expansion of trade, as he saw that the Island was, perhaps, one of the richest portions of the Dominion in proportion to its size and population; the eastern section of it is one vast mineral bed; and aware of its resources, and knowing how its trade would increase, found it necessary in the interests of the Dominion, and of that portion in particular, to recommend the construction of a canal of suitable size. Our Nova Scotia railway system—whose progress was arrested at the period of Confederation—for we have not built a mile of local railway since—goes no further than Pictou. The Prince Edward Island steamer boats connect with this railway, carrying passengers and freight to the Strait of Canso; but owing to the insufficiency of this canal they have to be taken by land for a distance of fourteen miles to connect with the waters of Bras d'Or. If this canal was sufficiently enlarged this passage by land would be avoided. If Mr. Perley's recommendations were carried out, steamers could pass through to the Strait of Canso and the Lennox passage, using the canal to enter the Bras d'Or, and thence to Sydney. This should be done at all events in the interest of one of the great commercial centres of the Dominion—Montreal. Previous to Confederation the Gulf steamers were only few in number, but they have since that period been greatly increased—the number, I believe, is ten or eleven.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Eleven regular steamers, and half a dozen others.

Mr. FLYNN—The trade between Montreal and Pictou is also rapidly extending at the latter place, where they terminate their voyage, and we have no regular communication between Pictou and the eastern portion of the Province, at all events between it and Bras d'Or. This trade might besides be greatly increased if facilities were given to importers from Montreal and Quebec, by the enlargement of the canal. If this be not done, many of the advantages he expected to derive from the enlargement of the canal will be denied us. More than this the P. E. Island steamers, of which I have spoken, have been subsidised for eight or ten years to carry mails, and this is another argument in my opinion to convince the members of this House of the necessity of widening the canal to improve the means of communication with these commercial centres. The action of the Government in this matter, I must say, has greatly surprised me, as well as every other resident of the Island of Cape Breton. I could not believe that Mr. Perley had altered his plans as being too extravagant, nor can I think that the Minister of Public Works would do so without consulting some one. I feel it my duty, under the circumstances, as one of the representatives of the Island, to protest against that reduction, and in doing so I am sustained by the unanimous public sentiment of the Island on this question. I take still stronger ground, and hold that the Government should have made no material alteration without consulting Parliament. The facts are, that in 1874 I asked for the plans and specifications; they were laid on the Table of this House, and they shewed that the recommendation was for the widening of the canal to the extent of fifty feet. If the Government has the right to materially alter the dimensions of Public Works after Parliament has voted money, based on plans and specifications before the House, then much of the duty we perform here is perfectly useless. The sum of $75,000 was voted by Parliament, and the vote was repeated at the Session of 1875. The size of the canal was never in question, and I maintain that the plans should never have been changed, as has been the case. Had the matter been brought before the House I have no doubt, that the arguments that could have been urged by the members for Cape Breton and Nova Scotia, who are a unit in this relation against any alteration, would have been considered conclusive. The members from the other Provinces know full well the advantages of their canal in developing the resources of the Upper Provinces, and in 1874 and 1875 we voted nearly six millions for their improvement; and I have no doubt that animated by a fair and honourable spirit towards us, they would not have consented to the reduction made in the width of the only canal we have in the Maritime Provinces. As a representative, I feel I occupy a very peculiar position. In 1874 I saw no necessity for raising my voice, for the vote was in the estimates. At the Session of 1875 I occupied the same position, and I thought that there would be no difficulty whatever. I am aware that there is no department of the public service, the duties of which are more onerous and involve a greater amount of responsibility and labour than of the Department of Public Works; but while I am willing to make every allowance for the first year, 1874, I cannot assume the same attitude in regard to the neglect in not prosecuting the work in 1875. This delay and the reduction in the size of the canal have caused great dissatisfaction in that section of the country, and I do not hesitate to say that that dissatisfaction will be much increased if the amended plans are adhered to. Perhaps it may be shown that this alteration was made under a misconception of the requirements of the trade of that portion of the Dominion, and that a smaller canal was considered sufficient. I think I have shown that it will not be. I therefore ask, on behalf of the people of the Island of Cape Breton, that the canal be enlarged according to the report made by Mr. Perley. I don't ask this as a favour, but as a matter of right; I ask it on the broad ground of public necessity, and I trust the Government will give it due consideration. If they do, the result of that consideration, I hope, will be to adopt that report, and so satisfy the just demands of the people of that section.

Mr. FLYNN.

But, Sir, whatever may be the result of this motion—whether the Government adhere to the amended plans or adopt Mr. Perley's report—I have discharged the duty which devolved upon me as a public man, and the entire responsibility now is theirs.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE suggested that, as it was proposed to adjourn early, the debate should be adjourned. He would answer the hon. gentleman very fully at the next sitting.

On motion of Mr. Tremaine, the debate was accordingly adjourned.

The House adjourned at Fifty-five minutes past Five.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, Feb. 24th, 1876.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

TRANSLATING THE REPORTS.

Mr. MASSON drew the attention of the House to the fact that no issue of the Official Report had yet been translated into French, although the House had decided that this work should be done immediately. He thought it was the duty of the Committee to explain how it was that two weeks of the Session had passed without a number of the Report in the French language having been distributed.

Mr. BOWELL said the Chairman of the Committee, who was the President of the Council, was not present to submit the report which had been prepared. The Committee had thrown the responsibility of the translation of the debates into French upon the translators of the House. At a subsequent meeting, and after making an enquiry into the matter, it was deemed advisable to change the mode of translation and give it out by contract, provided a suitable person could be found to undertake the duty.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said this matter could, of course, be brought up as a matter of privilege, but it would be better to leave it a little later until the Chairman of the Committee was present.

Mr. MASSON explained that his reason for bringing it up was that the time for presenting reports had passed.

The matter was dropped.

BANKS AND BANKING.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON introduced a Bill to amend the law relating to Banks and Banking.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT asked for explanations as to the object of this Bill, and how far it affected the rights of private individuals or banks.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON was understood to say that as it is now, the banks frequently have great difficulty in reference to drafts and checks which are made payable to order on demand. He did not propose to extend the law as far as it had been extended in England, but to confine it simply to checks and drafts payable to order, and to provide that wherever a check or draft is made payable to order on a bank, that either the payee or the maker may cross the check or draft in the name of any other incorporated bank, and that then it shall only be payable to or through such bank. It also provided that the bank on which a check or draft made payable to order on demand was drawn, should not be obliged to show the genuineness of any endorsement.

Mr. SPEAKER—The strict rule, of course, would require that such a measure as this should originate by resolution in Committee.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the rule had not been enforced.

The Bill was read the first time.

EXAMINATION OF ENGINEERS.

Mr. COOK introduced a Bill to provide for the examination and licensing of persons employed as Engineers elsewhere than on Steamboats.

The Bill was read the first time.

PROTECTION OF LIFE.

Mr. COOK introduced a Bill to provide means of escape for persons falling into the water in the vicinity of Wharves and Docks.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. TUPFER—What is the object? Does the hon. member want to establish a swimming school?

Mr. COOK said a Bill similar to this had been introduced by him last Session and by consent was withdrawn, but he meant if he could to have it passed this time. The idea was to provide ladders on docks to enable persons falling off to hang on them until they could be rescued. At Collingwood, twelve lives had been lost, all of whom might have been saved if such means of escape had been provided. In Toronto and other places many persons had been drowned in the same way.

THE INSOLVENT ACT.

Mr. BECHARD asked whether it is the intention of the Government to amend the Insolvent Act in such a manner as to provide that the Official Assignees be no longer permitted to act outside their respective districts?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I stated in answer to a question the other day, that the Government have under consideration several suggestions with reference to the amendment of the Insolvent Act, but have not arrived at any conclusion on any of them. I do not know whether this suggestion will be acted on in the manner indicated or not.

FOG WHISTLE ON THE SAGUENAY.

Mr. CIMON asked whether it is the intention of the Government to have a Steam Fog Whistle placed on Lark Point (Isle aux Morts) at the mouth of the Saguenay, in connection with the Lighthouse there?

Hon. Mr. SMITH—It is not the intention of the Government to erect a fogwhistle there.

BEACON LIGHT ON THE SAGUENAY.

Mr. CIMON asked why the contract for building two Beacon Lights at the entrance of the River Saguenay was given to Ambroise Trudelle for $900, while tenders had been received for the work from Louis Lavoie, Murray Bay, for $490; Joseph Tremblay, Chicoutimi, for $500; Joseph Warren, Murray Bay, for $590; Joseph Warren, Murray Bay, for $600?

Hon. Mr. SMITH—The reason why Lavoie's tender was not accepted is, it was received too late. The tenders were opened on the 20th February. His tender was not received until the 23rd. Tremblay's was not received till the 24th. Warren had two tenders. We accepted the one for $590 and notified him accordingly, but he refused to take it. The next lowest was Trudelle's for $600, and he took the contract and has finished it.

RECIPROCAL USE OF CANALS.

Mr. CUTHBERT asked whether the Government are taking any, and if so, what steps towards removing the obstructions now placed in the way of Canadian Ships or Barges or Canadian Forwarding Companies' boats, passing from any port in Canada to New York and back via the Richelieu River, Lake Champlain, Champlain Canal and Hudson River, and placing them on the same footing as American barges navigating our rivers.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman has put his question in such a way that I would require to make a speech of considerable length in order to answer it. It is not convenient that questions should be asked, nor is it regular they should be put, in that manner. I can only answer him by saying that the Government have taken such steps as they conceived to be most judicious for this purpose, and all that is possible under the circumstances. If the hon. gentleman wishes to move for papers, that will be the proper way to ascertain what steps have been taken; but it is impossible for me to make mention of what the steps are.

PENSIONS TO VETERANS.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand), asked whether it is the intention of the Government to continue the pensions given to the veterans of 1812-14, and whether they propose to increase the amount awarded to each person, and to what amount?

Mr. CIMON.

Hon. Mr. VAIL—If the hon. member will examine the estimates he will see it is the intention of the Government to ask the House to vote the same sum as last year. Any further information that the hon. member requires will be furnished by the Government when they reach that vote in the estimates.

CERTIFICATES OF MASTERS AND MATES.

Mr. WOOD asked whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce a Bill to compel masters and mates of vessels navigating the Inland Waters of the Dominion to procure certificates of competency before taking command?

Hon. Mr. SMITH—It is not the intention of the Government to introduce a measure on the subject this session. Both last session and the session before a Bill was introduced on this subject. There was a good deal of opposition to it both from Ontario and Quebec, and we did not press it. If, however, it is the desire of hon. members from Ontario and Quebec it can be introduced again.

THE LAWS RESPECTING INDIANS.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM asked whether it is the intention of the Government to amend the Act passed in 1874, intitled "An Act to amend certain Laws respecting Indians, and the extension of the same to the Provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia," so as to confer on convicting Magistrates the power to give to all persons convicted under that Act hard labour as a part of their sentence?

Hon. Mr. LAIRD—The particular subject of the hon. member's question is under the consideration of the Government, and in a few days the Indian Bill will be brought down and their policy will be fully developed.

THE COAL MINING INTEREST.

Mr. McKAY (Cape Breton), moved, seconded by Mr. Carmichael, that an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General for a return of the number of tons of coal imported into Canada during the past year from the United States, and for the correspondence between the Canadian and the United States Government regarding the removal by the latter of the duty imposed on coal exported from Canada to the United States.

He said in connection with this motion, I beg leave to say a few words, in as much as I consider that it has reference to one of the most important industries we have in the Dominion of Canada. I have not yet heard on the floor of this House anything said with reference to the mining interest of the Province of Nova Scotia, and if anything respecting it has been uttered it has not been said in the forcible manner which its importance requires. When you take into consideration that there is as large a sum as twelve millions of dollars of capital invested in the Province of Nova Scotia coal trade, and that there are five hundred thousand tons of shipping annually engaged in the carrying of coal from the Province to other ports of Canada and to foreign countries; that there are as many as 23,000 hands employed in connection with this shipping; and taking into consideration that in 1873 there was as much as $123,000 expended monthly in the payment of different persons employed in and about the mines, this House will come to the conclusion that these interests deserve some attention at our hands. The extent of the coal fields of Nova Scotia is very great. By reference to works published on this matter, it will be seen that the largest available deposits of coal in Canada exist in Nova Scotia. It is true there are some deposits in the North West, but it is not known whether they are of the quality to make them serviceable or not. It is well known that there is coal in the Province of British Columbia, but it is so far west that it never can be of any possible value to the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, or the Maritime Provinces, and there is no possibility of a coal trade arising between that Province and the east. This being the case, I think this House should take into consideration the position of the Dominion with reference to an article of such importance. The great Province of Ontario is entirely dependent upon a foreign country for every ton of coal consumed in it.

All their manufactories driven by steam are entirely dependent upon the United States for their fuel, and any civil commotion that might take place in that Republic might have the effect of closing down these factories and raising the cost of coal in Ontario to famine prices. Therefore, there is only one place on which Quebec and Ontario can depend with any degree of certainty for their coal supply, and that is Nova Scotia. It seems to me in so far as our tariff is concerned, the position we stand in is a very humiliating one. Our neighbours seem to think they can take everything from us and give us nothing in return. They seem inclined to impose duties upon everything we send to them, and with reference to our country we adopt the very reverse. We cannot send a ton of coal to the United States without having to pay a heavy duty. Every ton of 2,000 pounds exported to that country has to pay, before it is taken from the vessel or placed on the wharf, a duty of 75c., while we admit the very same article free. The province of Ontario being almost entirely dependent upon the United States for coal, it will be said by these people it is not right to tax their fuel, but I wish them to understand as the tariff now is a number of the duties fall very heavily upon the Maritime Provinces and fall very lightly upon the Province of Ontario. I do not speak in this way for the purpose of creating sectional feeling; my intention is quite the reverse. My object is simply to induce this House to understand that unless we have certain trade interests protected; unless the East can trade with the West and exchange commodities, I do not think this confederation can hold together. It seems to me that the tenure of remaining in the position which we now hold is that each part of the Dominion must trade with the other; that each must take into consideration the interests of the other for the purpose of fostering trade between them. We in the meantime should be given to understand that the great Province of Ontario will show some consideration to the little Province of Nova Scotia. I do not think that the imposition of a duty on United States coals would fall so heavily on the people of Ontario as some persons consider it would. At the same time I think, in the interests of the Dominion, the duty should be imposed, as it would create a traffic between the Maritime Provinces and the west that does not now exist.

It may be news, Sir, to many hon. gentlemen in this House, that Nova Scotia, with some 400,000 people, imported from the United States $1,418,380 in value of breadstuffs during the past year. Now, why should not that trade, of pretty nearly $1,500,000, be transacted between this Province and Ontario, which could take our coal in return for the flour we need. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that Nova Scotia is almost a non-producing country, as far as grain and breadstuffs are concerned. Men engaged in fishing and mining, as a matter of course, are not agriculturists, and as there is an excess of grain and breadstuffs in Ontario, why should there not be an exchange? I may also draw the attention of the House to the fact that New Brunswick has imported during the past year flour and grain to the value of $682,142, and Prince Edward Island to the amount of $55,452, so that here is a market for Ontario which would make a return for any duty imposed on American coals, which have been imported during the past year to the value of $2,437,494. These, or at least a certain portion of them, could be supplied from Nova Scotia. It is true that we have no anthracite coal, but we have bituminous coal of the very best quality, which we send in large quantities into the Province of Quebec; and if a duty equal to that imposed by the United States on our own coal were imposed on the American product, we could provide for the wants of Ontario in that respect. Our trade in this relation has diminished during the year just passed to a very great extent. Our exports over the border, compared with those of the previous year, were reduced to the extent of about 50,000 tons. They have, on the whole, however, increased very largely—that is, when the year 1871 is taken into consideration. That year we sent out of the Province 280,908 tons, while the shipments in 1875 advanced to 706,795 tons. The policy which the United States has adopted towards this country is well illustrated, in my opinion, by the tax imposed on the tins—2½ cents each—containing the lobsters admitted by treaty free of duty—proving that we have nothing whatever to expect from the American Government. The next step they will take will probably be to levy a duty on our fish barrels, for although pickled fish are allowed entrance duty free, still by a parity of reasoning we may assume that this may be done. I might, say, Sir, that this question is of very great importance to the people of Nova Scotia, who are awaiting anxiously the action of this House. They wish to see something done for the protection of an enterprise in which they are extensively engaged, and I trust that their expectations will be realized. I hope that Parliament and the Government will take steps in this direction; either obtaining the removal of the duties imposed by the United States on our coals or levying an equal duty upon American coal. The influence, I believe, which has been brought to bear upon the authorities at Washington in the former relation, emanates from the Pennsylvania coal mine owners, who desire to exclude our product from the Eastern sea-board, and I consider if these proprietors understand that reciprocal imposts will be levied, they will exercise the same influence to secure the abolition of the duty of which we complain, because they export largely into Canada. The tariff was arranged in this direction, simply because they cannot on the Eastern seaboard compete with our mines, as our coal is sent by water whilst their's is sent by rail. I trust that any conclusion reached touching this matter, will be after serious consideration of the House; and I declare in all sincerity, that there is no question which is at present agitating to a greater extent than this the public mind in our Province. There is bound up in it, a vast amount of capital—not only Provincial but money which has come from abroad, to the total extent of twelve millions of dollars. I again beg leave to press this matter, not only on the attention of the Ministry, but also on the consideration of Parliament.

Mr. MacKay.

Mr JONES (Leeds)—I agree with a good deal that the hon. gentleman has said; but there are one or two points to which I would like to draw attention. I hope that the trade between the Lower and Western Provinces will be encouraged as much as possible; also that a duty will be placed on certain American coal coming into Canada, that is the coal we mine in Nova Scotia; but a duty should not be levied on coal which we do not possess. I do not think that the returns will separate the qualities used; but I am of opinion that seventy-five per cent of this article used in Ontario is Lehigh anthracite, and hard coal employed in blasting furnaces and factories, and this sort is not mined in Nova Scotia.

In asking for these returns, I think that the hon. gentleman should endeavor to have it shown what quantity of bituminous and anthracite coal is brought into Ontario from the United States. Our trade with the Eastern Provinces should be encouraged in every possible manner, and nothing can do this so much as the imposition of all the duties we can on American productions, and particularly on bituminous coal. An hon. gentleman behind me says—corn also; and I agree that this should be the case. If a duty were imposed, as I have indicated, it should be equal to the American impost, and might well even exceed it.

Mr. CARMICHAEL—I have the honor of seconding the motion made by the hon. member for Cape Breton, being impressed in the importance of the coal trade of this Dominion. At the same time, I am not all committed to the sentiments the mover has expressed. This industry, with others, is undoubtedly in a depressed condition; and if the Government can remove this unfortunate state of things, it would be of great moment, particularly to the Nova Scotian coal mine proprietors. I am not, however, of opinion that the course suggested would increase the production to the extent anticipated. My constituency is as much, or even more, interested in the coal industry than any other part of the Dominion, save the district represented by the hon. member who makes the motion. I am, besides, personally interested; but I am, nevertheless, an impartial judge in this connection. I second the motion in order to ascertain what steps, if any, the Administration have taken, or whether it is possible to adopt any measures to prevail upon the American Government to reduce their duty on coal. It is of very great importance that it should be lowered; but at the same time we are not entirely dependent on their action. Trade between the two countries would be greatly benefitted by such action; and it is to be regretted that the United States do not see as yet the propriety of this course. They are injuring us to a certain degree, but themselves more. The effect of placing a duty on American coal, as far as I can learn, would not exclude it at all from our market, unless it be levied, not on bituminous coal, but on anthracite.

Mr. JONES—No!

Mr. CARMICHAEL—We see the position in which strong Protectionists place themselves when it comes to the practical point of imposing duties. The only way of meeting the Americans at all, is to place a duty on anthracite, excluding coal we do not produce. The manufacturers of Ontario and Quebec demand protection; but when it comes to the question of putting an additional tax on them, for we all know to what an extent coal enters into manufacturing--

Mr. JONES—I would ask the hon. gentleman whether this bituminous coal is used for manufacturing purposes in this country at all?

Mr. CARMICHAEL—I am certain that it is used very largely. This coal is surely employed for producing steam more than anthracite—at any rate, I know it is used extensively.

The greatest market for Nova Scotian coal is Quebec; and it is burned on steam boats, &c. Let us look at the facts. The whole argument appears to be in favour of a retaliatory policy against the United States, and this I believe would be a piece of consummate folly, which would not affect our neighbours, but increase the taxation for Ontario. The hon. member for Cape Breton talked of our receiving our food from Ontario, but what does it imply ?

It implies this : If you give us a tax on coal, you must give the farmers of Ontario a tax on food, and what would the effect be on Nova Scotia ? It might benefit the coal interests, but would work to the general injury of the Province. The result also of the imposition of a duty would be a retaliation against Great Britain. It might shut out a few tons that come into Quebec and as far as Montreal, but no reasonable person can expect that we can successfully carry coals to Ontario. Such being the case, the result of the duty will be to tax the people who purchase the coal. It is impossible that it could affect the Americans to that extent as to induce them to lower their duty. We had far better show that we have a more correct idea of the true principles of trade, and follow the example of the mother country in such matters. The true method to promote the mining and other interests of Nova Scotia, is to refuse to inaugurate the protective policy we have heard so much about lately. Protection means taxation, and by adopting such a system, the cost of living will be increased ; consequently the cost of the production of coal will be augmented. Still, if the people are willing to be taxed to the amount proposed, I cannot object ; but what I have adduced is an argument against the system, and I hope the Ministry will consider it if they contemplate any change in the tariff. I trust they will not inaugurate a protective policy and put increased taxation on the coal-producers of Nova Scotia.

I know that to some extent the sentiments I have uttered may be used against me in my own county. The cry with a few there is "Protect our industries," and by those it will be said that a man from Pictou, representing coal interests, was opposed to protective duties. But, nevertheless, these are my sentiments, and I am disposed to utter only what are my honest convictions. I believe it is for the interest of Nova Scotia, as I have no doubt it is for the interest of the whole Dominion, to firmly resist anything like the beginning of a false protective policy.

Mr. CARMICHAEL.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I should like to remind my hon. friend for Leeds that the Customs returns don't discriminate between salt and coal.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I think it is very desirable that the Customs returns should discriminate between the two, and I am satisfied that it could easily be accomplished. All that is necessary is to have a simple word in the entries, and the Hon. Minister of Customs could call the attention of the officers to the matter. Where entries are made it would be easy to give a discriminating return.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE made a reply to this suggestion which was not heard at the reporters' table.

Mr. CURRIER—There is one thing my hon. friend from Pictou is mistaken about—the coal used for steam purposes. I know of no steamboats or stationary engines which use soft coal. At any rate anthracite is always used in this part of the country. For heating our houses and dwellings anthracite is altogether employed.

Mr. CARMICHAEL—The more reason why anthracite should be included.

Mr. MACKAY—I understood the hon. member for Pictou to state that he deems it almost impossible to organize a trade between Nova Scotia and Ontario which would be mutually beneficial. When a statement of that kind is made the House should be placed in possession of the authority on which it rests. I think the hon. gentleman is very much mistaken. On one or two occasions some three years ago, when coal was costing at the pit's mouth $3.50 per ton, and when freights to the United States were in some instances as high as $5, I think the experiment was tried of sending coal to Toronto, and it was discovered we could not compete with our neighbours across the lines. But the hon. gentleman has not mentioned that there is a great difference between the price now and then. That which then cost $3.75 a ton f.o.b. can now be purchased in Nova Scotia for $2 and less per ton, and I contend that if we can send a very large quantity to the Province of Quebec—if we can send as far west as the city of Montreal, and can compete with the United States there—if our tenders are received by the Grand Trunk Railway to the exclusion of those of the United States—I contend that we can send as far as Toronto, if not further, were some little inducement held out to us. It might be unwise to suggest that a duty could be placed on every ton of coal sent to Ontario, but if a trade was established between the Provinces, that tax could be returned. I am satisfied that the people of Nova Scotia would be perfectly willing to have a tax upon the flour which is now imported from the United States as a return. I represent a constituency that would certainly agree to such an arrangement, and I will say further that the constituency the hon. gentlemen represents feels precisely as I do on the subject. I doubt very much if the hon. gentleman would feel safe in expressing the sentiments in his country that he has uttered in this House.

Mr. CARMICHAEL—The hon. member for Cape Breton said I gave no grounds for stating that coal cannot be carried to Ontario. I thought the reason was obvious to every member. For instance, my hon. friend has stated that the price of coal has been very much reduced. That is very true. Coal sold in Pictou this season at $2.10 per ton. The common price, indeed, was $2.20. The very lowest freights this year, and every person is aware they were very much depressed, were $2. That makes $4.10 for the coal, without insurance or other charges, delivered in Montreal. Now I have been told that the Grand Trunk has made contracts for coal delivered in Detroit for $3.50. A gentleman acquainted with the subject informs me that freights this season have ranged from $1 to $2, but put on $1.75 for freight to any portion of Ontario on the Lakes, and that, with cartage, brings the coal up to above $6 per ton. If it be true, as stated—and a member of this House, who is a coal owner dealing now in the United States, is my authority—that coal is delivered at Detroit River at $3.50, how is it possible to convey coal from Nova Scotia to compete with it?

The hon. member has stated that I would hardly utter those sentiments in my own county. Even supposing my opinions are unknown there, which is unlikely, we have some intelligence, and look at the papers occasionally, and it is very possible that such sentiments as are calculated to do me injury would find a rapid circulation. But whatever my convictions are, I am accustomed to give them free utterance.

Mr. MCGREGOR—I heartily endorse the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Pictou. In Ontario we can buy soft coal at the mines for 90 cents. It costs $1.90 for railway freight, 20 cents for pockets to hold it in, 40 cents for shipping, 40 cents profit for the dealer, and other charges which bring it up to $3.50 per ton. Now I am satisfied that they cannot ship from Nova Scotia to Ontario and compete with that, and it is impossible to build up the trade suggested.

Mr. MACKAY—Is not the mine to which reference has been made in the extreme western portion of Ontario, and lying immediately contiguous to the United States?

Mr. MCGREGOR—Well, say 90 cts. for the coal at the mine; $1.90 from the mine to the port in Ohio, $1.19 thence to Toronto, 20 cts. for pockets, and 40 cts. profit—that makes $4.50. I am an old shipper and can assure the House that the hon. member for Cape Breton cannot possibly ship coal for that amount to Toronto. It is therefore impossible to put enough duty on to force us to deal with Nova Scotia. We should be very happy to deal with her, as I think it is out of our line to trade with our American friends; but if we can save $2 a ton it is our duty and interest to do it.

Mr. MACKAY—By permission of the House I should like to ask one question—(“order.”) I think the subject is of sufficient importance for hon. members to bear with me a little longer. Can any member from Toronto inform us as to the price of coal in that city in the months of December and January. I was there during those months and the coal to which reference has been made was $6.25 per ton instead of $3 and some odd cents.

Mr. MCGREGOR—The hon. gentleman is speaking of what it cost delivered in a man's yard. Of course, after it is landed at the wharf, there is hoisting, dockage, carriage to the man's place, and the profits of the third dealer, which bring up the price.

Mr. DYMOND—The hon. member wants to know what bituminous coal cost in Toronto in December last. I have had the same experience as others in that city, and the price of coal bought by the single ton and delivered in the yard was from $5.50 to $6. I desire to bear testimony to another matter on which I had an opportunity of making some observations, namely, the importation into Ontario of coal from the Maritime Provinces during the existence of the now celebrated national policy. I think if there are any gentlemen here who are desirous of imposing a tax on coal in return for other advantages, they might take a lesson from the experience obtained on that occasion. I believe just two small vessels freighted with coal did, by some means, reach Toronto. I hope my hon. friend will never send us any more coal of that kind if he expects us to burn it. It would be dear at any price or for any purpose. I visited the yard where it was stored, and heard the opinion expressed by the dealer. At that time we had to pay 50 cents per ton on coal burned in Ontario, and nobody in Ontario was any better for it. That was the practical experience we had on the occasion. What we felt to be, shall I say iniquitous, in that tax was, that it fell upon a small portion of the community only—namely: the population of our frontier towns. Of course, when we get further into the country where wood becomes cheaper, people can obtain fuel of another kind, but where our manufactories are, where our dense and poorer population is, there the weight of the coal tax fell. I remember the gentleman who then represented East Toronto, forgetting the vote he gave in the House, declared on the hustings that he would have been an unjust and dishonourable man if he had ever voted for that coal tax.

Mr. MACKAY.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I had not intended to speak on this question, but I feel called upon to make some remarks in reply to the allusion which has been made by the hon. member for North York to the national policy. He has emphatically condemned it not only on the present but on former occasions. After a very general expression of opinion on both sides of the House in favour of meeting the prohibitory tariff of the United States upon articles, the growth and produce of Canada, by a similar tariff, the Government of which I had not then the honour to be a member introduced their policy imposing a duty of 50 cents per ton on coal, and a duty upon salt, grain and several other articles. It is true that duty was subsequently abandoned. Although a number of hon. gentlemen, among them my hon. friend from North Oxford and Mr. McGill, who was then member for Hamilton, and who, I am happy to say, has no longer a seat in this House, were the loudest advocates in favour of adopting a policy of that kind, when they found the Government were disposed to meet their patriotic declarations in favour, not of a retaliatory policy in reference to the United States, but a reciprocity tariff, then they formed a combination to embarrass the Government and to prevent them from carrying out the very views they had themselves expressed. There was one honourable exception to this,—Mr. Cameron of South Huron. I will do him the credit to say he resisted all party seduction on that occasion, and refused to abandon or obstruct a Government that had consented to adopt the policy he urged upon them. The hon. member for South Oxford, after urging the Government to adopt that policy, and after they were committed to it, not only voted against it, but joined his party in endeavouring to obstruct us in every possible way. Under the circumstances, the Government were placed in a position of very great embarrassment. The majority by which they were enabled to carry this policy was a very small one, only seven or eight. After a year's experience, some of the gentlemen who had previously supported that policy objected to its continuance, and the Government were compelled to abandon it owing to the bad faith of the hon. gentlemen who had been loudest in urging it upon them. Although it was only a year on the Statute Book, it was long enough in existence to dissipate the objections that had been raised against it. When it was proposed to adopt a policy by which we should have, if not free trade, a reciprocity in tariffs—a policy that would have, more than anything else could strengthened the Free-Trade party in the United States—how were we met by the hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, now sitting on the Treasury Benches? They said we cannot afford to excite the hostility of the United States; it will be fraught with danger and disaster. That was one of the objections. Another was that it would have the effect of very largely raising the prices of some of these articles—coal, for instance—without giving any benefit whatever to the country which produced them. The experiment was tried for a single year, and as every person who has paid attention to the subject knows, there never was a time in Canada when coal was cheaper in Quebec and Montreal than during that period. What was the effect in the United States? Was there exasperation, excitement, or any attempt to injure us? No, the natural result followed. No sooner had we imposed a duty of 50 cents per ton on coal than the duty on the same article in the United States was reduced from $1.25 to 75c. per ton. There was also an immediate reduction of duty on potatoes and several kinds of lumber, and though the policy was in force but one year, Canada has reaped the benefit of it ever since. The result was to stimulate the coal trade in Nova Scotia, and the competition engendered by the investment of $12,000,000 in that interest had the effect of bringing down prices in this country. The arguments of the hon. member for Pictou are suicidal. I give him credit for earnestness, because he knows they must be distasteful to his constituents, but he forgets the results which will follow the adoption of such a policy as has been proposed. Two objects would be attained. The protection to flour from the great Province of Ontario would fully meet and counterbalance all they would lose by the duty on coal. You would have the revenue if you did not succeed in bringing Nova Scotia coal into Ontario. The consumers would pay, as others have contribute their share to the revenues. The trade which would follow the adoption of this policy, by sending cargoes of flour down and bringing coal back, would have the effect of reducing freight, while at the same time it would foster the industries of the country. That is not all. You would protect Ontario against the great danger of leaving her dependent upon monopolies in the United States which, after crushing out the coal industries of our own country, would demand their own prices. It was the case with our salt. When that article was discovered at Goderich the United States manufacturers flooded our markets with salt, and sold it at a lower price than it cost to produce it, for the purpose of killing that industry.

So it is with reference to all these articles. If you want to make this great Confederation of British North American Provinces a Union in fact as well as a Union on paper, it is the duty of the Government—whatever political party may occupy the Treasury Benches—to consider with the greatest care and attention every means by which inter-provincial trade may be fostered and promoted. Is there any great injustice in asking the people of Ontario to submit to a tax of 50 cents or 75 cents per ton on coal? You say it is sectional because Ontario alone has to bear the imposition of that tax; but that tax is a comparatively small amount. But what did the hon. Minister of Finance do the Session before last? He came down to this House and asked us to impose a duty of one dollar per ton on the construction of foreign shipping built in Canada. Who were going to pay that duty? Who was that tax going to fall upon, at a time when the shipping trade of the Dominion was in a depressed condition? Take the trade returns and you will find that Ontario with her 2,500,000 of population built only 7,000 tons of shipping that year, while Nova Scotia with a population of 380,000 built 84,000 tons. So my hon. friend asks that this small population should contribute to this country a tax on 84,000 tons while the people of Ontario should pay it on only 7,000 tons; and yet the hon. gentleman undertakes to tell us we should not deal in sectional taxation. I say there are other means of promoting trade between the Provinces. If the cost of transportation is too great, the interests of Ontario and Nova Scotia would be promoted if subsidies were given to lines of steamers for the purpose of transporting flour to the Maritime Provinces and bring back coal as return freight without increasing its cost to the people of Ontario, I am very sceptical as to the cost estimated by some of the hon. gentlemen of this House of delivering Nova Scotia coal in Ontario. If I mistake not, I heard one hon. minister state that after calling for tenders for the delivery of bituminous coal for the use of the Government in Ontario, they made their contract for Nova Scotia coal, for he said they could get it cheaper than from the United States. I believe it is the duty of the Minister of Finance to give his most careful consideration to this subject, and that it may result in means being devised that will build up inter-provincial trade and industries. I cannot congratulate the member for Cape Breton on the seconder of this resolution. I did not intend to say anything on this question, but for the remarks of the member for North York. I cannot permit him to say that the coal of Nova Scotia is not fit to burn.

Mr. DYMOND—I simply testified to that which I have seen and that alone. I saw these two little freights of coal, and in speaking—not with any professional knowledge of it—I gave the account of it that I received from the dealer.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I cannot permit the character of Nova Scotia coal to be aspersed in that way. I can point to the public records, and the highest authority we can have on this question—Sir William Logan—who has testified that we have the finest bituminous coal in Nova Scotia ever discovered on the Continent of America. I can also tell that hon. gentleman that the coal which has brought the highest price in this city of Ottawa he will find to be Nova Scotia coal. That from the mines of Sydney and Spring Hill are not excelled in any part of the United States for fuel purposes, and I regret that my hon. friend from North York should have been so unfortunate in his expressions as to throw out a statement calculated to prejudice the interests of Nova Scotia. There is no industry in the Dominion to-day suffering more from the general depression than the coal interest, and involving as it does a large amount of men, capital, and shipping, none requires more careful consideration on the part of the Government in order to adopt measures that will remove that depression and put the trade on a safe footing.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman says that he was an advocate of what he calls a national policy, although he has never yet developed his ideas of what a national policy is. But he was an advocate of this policy before he became a member of the late Administration, and he says that his opinions prevailed with the late Government to adopt it.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I never said anything of the kind. I said, on the contrary, it was the support volunteered by the gentlemen on the other side of the House that induce the Government to adopt the policy.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I shall volunteer the statement then that in their speeches the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House did not support the policy, and there is no doubt the hon. member for Cumberland was the active gentleman who procured the duty on flour entering into the Maritime Provinces, and the imposition of a tax on coal introduced into the Province of Ontario. He opposed all this while a Minister, and one of his first acts was to abolish that policy by his own motion.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The hon. gentleman says I abolished the policy; if the hon. gentleman turns to the Journals he will find this is what took place:—A motion was made to repeal a certain portion of the duties. The Government of which I was a member, and a number of their friends, voted to put all these together in the resolution so as to have the united strength of all interests in order to retain that policy on the Statute Book; and when the motion was thus amended the hon. gentlemen will find that I and the Administration of which I was a member supported it.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman will find that they accepted the motion of this House to abolish these duties. The Administration at that time commanded a large majority of this House; but the influence of my friend, the member from North Oxford, and the then member for Hamilton, caused him to abandon the policy, which my hon. friend then declared was purely patriotic and in the interests of the country. The hon. gentleman from Cumberland is not quite fair in his remarks toward the hon. member for North York. He knows very well that my hon. friend did not denounce the Nova Scotia coal as being very bad. Every coal mine, including those of Nova Scotia, has a bad article of coal as well as a good article, and all my hon. friend said was that a bad article from a Nova Scotia mine reached Toronto, although it may not have been the fault of the mine. Nevertheless, it is perfectly clear that it is utterly impossible to impose any duty less than two or three dollars per ton, which will force the coal of Nova Scotia to the Upper Provinces; and it is equally impossible to protect the farmers of Ontario by imposing a duty on foreign flour coming into the country; because what governs the flour market is not the price in Canada, but the price in the European markets; and what governs every kind of grain going to Europe is the European market. It is a mere matter of convenience to the manufacturers to have a duty imposed on grain imported into this country. The hon. gentleman knows that salt cannot be protected by a duty on salt when we have the richest salt wells in the world, and we are able to produce at one dollar or a dollar and a half per barrel a better article than they charge two dollars per barrel for in Michigan. It is so preposterous to say that the salt interest has been fostered by protection that I am amazed at the hon. gentleman at this period of our history making such a remark. We know very well that a great deal of the flour imported into Halifax, St. John and other ports of the Maritime Provinces is imported as return freights from the ports of Boston, New York and Portland, by vessels carrying other produce to these ports, and the imposition of a duty means simply to make these people pay more for their flour or give them less for their freights—he may take it in any way he pleases. It is not my intention to say anything on the general policy indicated by the hon. gentleman—occasionally on the one side, and occasionally on the other. I have heard the hon. gentleman as a fierce advocate of protection, but I defy any person who has listened to him to-day or at any other time to say he is an advocate for protection for anything except for a few articles on which he expects to make some political capital and create local excitement in some circles. The hon. gentleman did not propound a fixed policy on matters of trade; but whenever he is prepared to discuss matters of trade policy I shall be ready to meet him and take issue with him if I object to the course he pursues. I have sometimes been able to boast of the hon. gentleman as an ally in questions of trade policy, and I hope to utilize him yet in that character; but I do him the justice to say that there is not a gentleman in this House who is able to propound a trade policy of any kind who will not find the hon. member for Cumberland at some turn or other as an ally of his. With regard to the motion before the House, it will be interesting to show the various classes of coal and the amounts that come into the country, and it will be an interesting question to know how far any legislation we can adopt in this country is likely to affect the coal imports. No one can doubt the extreme importance of the the coal interest of Nova Scotia, and no one will be disposed to do anything that can be done, more than I am in order to place that trade, if this be possible through any act of ours, upon a better footing than it occupies at present.

Mr. OLIVER—I had no intention of speaking in this regard, and would not have spoken had not the hon. gentleman from Cumberland done me the honour of making reference to myself, with respect to a measure which was passed by this House some years ago and which, it is very true, I supported. I then advocated the levy of a duty upon all grains raised in Canada as well as upon coal and salt. I do not know whether it was the influence of the hon. member for Hamilton and of myself that induced the Government to impose such a tax, but this is what I am led to believe by the remarks of the hon. member for Cumberland. However, I no more assumed credit at that date than now in this relation, but the influence which was brought to bear, and which shaped that policy, was possessed by the hon. member for Cumberland, with whom I went, as he has stated, to wait upon the Finance Minister to urge him to place a duty on grains, salt and coal. When the policy was laid before the House this was done with reference to wheat, flour and the coarser grains raised in Canada, as well upon salt and coal, and I supported it; and this course I would have continued, had not a change taken place. It was altered at the instigation of the hon. member for Cumberland, wheat being left on the free list. Now, I consider that if we protect at all—

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I must interrupt my hon. friend, and ask on what authority he says that the hon. member for Cumberland used any influence to secure the omission of wheat from the list. I have no hesitation in saying that the statement is entirely unfounded.

Mr. OLIVER—I do not wish to convey the meaning, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Cumberland used his influence to have wheat left out.

Hon. Dr. TUPPER—Hear! hear!

Mr. OLIVER—But I mean to say that after the policy was changed the hon. member's influence was brought to bear upon the Government to secure its adoption. Wheat was omitted, and the only vote I cast against the policy of the Government at the time, was in this relation:—When Mr. Macdonald, who then represented Gleggarry, but is now Lieutenant Governor of

Mr. OLIVER.

Ontario, moved an amendment to this effect—that if wheat was to be kept on the free list, flour should bear it company. I supported it. I believed that if protection was good for the millers, it should be extended to the farmers; and after its amendment I supported the measure until it became law. The hon. member for Cumberland states that he is very much pleased on account of the defeat of the gentleman that at that day represented Hamilton; and I have no doubt that the defeat of many other gentlemen then members of the House, who pursued the same course on that occasion, would have created within him a lively sense of satisfaction.

We know what happened during the following year: the measure was displeasing to the entire country, and the result was that the Government, with the assistance of a very large number of the members of the Opposition, repealed the Act. We have scarcely heard a word of complaint since.

It appears to me that the proposition of the hon. mover of this resolution is to place a duty on coal and wheat, so as to secure inter-provincial trade—the policy also of the hon. member for Cumberland. It may answer the purposes of Nova-Scotia coal mine owners, but would it benefit the residents of the Western section of the country? I think not. I notice in the returns that we import yearly 660,000 tons of coal, and if 50 cents per ton additional duty were imposed, the people in the Western Provinces would pay annually $330,000 towards the protection of coal mine proprietors in Nova Scotia. I don't believe that it would tend to the latter's benefit; and what good would result? We talk of inter-provincial trade, and hear a great deal about opening up new markets for the products of the West. It is desirable to secure all the marts possible for this purpose; but we should not levy extra taxation to this end, when we well know that it will not increase the price of produce. We are aware that for all our wheat, flour and grains, there is already a ready market with prompt payments in gold. Then why should we adopt so foolish a course as that suggested? On a former occasion there was some reason in taxing produce imported; we were in full possession of our fisheries, and of the navigation of the St. Lawrence, and a great many western people thought that if such duties were levied on American products the United States might be induced to give us reciprocity. This reason no longer exists; we do not have the exclusive ownership of our fisheries, which are as much American property as our own for a number of years, while they have the joint enjoyment of the navigation of the St. Lawrence for all time to come, under the provisions of the Treaty of Washington. We export to a large extent—over and above the amount we import—of all kinds of grain—something like eleven millions of bushels—and would it add one cent to the price of wheat, or flour, or the coarser grains, if imposts were placed on American products? It would not.

I may state that notwithstanding the serious charges repeatedly brought against myself and others in this regard by the hon. member for Cumberland, he is the only one who seems not to see the course I pursued was correct. I did not wish the millers to benefit by duties when the farmers were left out in the cold, at the instigation of large numbers of millers in the House supporting the Government. They wished to keep their mills running during the scarce season of the year. I have therefore nothing to explain. Allow me to tell him that my county is purely agricultural; also that my constituents fully approved of my course, returning me by the majority of 1,211. I believe, further, that my present course is correct. We should, as far as is consistent with the welfare of the people and the development of the resources of the country, have free-trade in all things. What indeed will be the result if this agitation be continued? Everything must be protected—every single interest from the Atlantic sea-board to the Pacific Ocean; and I would like to know who is to pay for all this?—Why, Sir, the consuming public; there is no doubt of it, and this public is composed of the agriculturists throughout the length and breadth of the country in a greater proportion than any other class.

I was greatly amused with the utterances of my hon. friend from South Leeds, who was perfectly willing to protect soft coal, but hard coal he desired to have entered free.

Mr. JONES—We have no such coal in the Dominion.

Mr. OLIVER—Very true; but the coal interests cannot be protected as long as hard coal is admitted free of duty.

Mr. JONES—Why?

Mr. OLIVER—Why? Hard coal is universally used in our section, in the very back settlements of the country.

Mr. JONES—Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER—It will be impossible to protect soft coal without also protecting hard coal, because the latter will be used in its stead. If taxation is levied in this regard, every consumer in the West will pay it without reaping any corresponding benefit.

Mr. BOWELL—On two or three occasions since Parliament opened this subject regarding coal, salt, wheat and flour duties, has been under the consideration of the House; and I have not only been surprised, but amused at the dexterous manner in which my hon. friend from North Oxford has treated it in every instance, giving, as he has done, each time different explanations. A short time ago I heard the hon. member state that it took exactly twelve months to change his opinion, and that if the hon. member for Cumberland had changed his views, surely he, a more humble member, was also justified in doing so. Now, I find by looking at the records that it did not take twelve months for the member for Oxford to change his mind, but only about a month, as it was only between the 7th of March and the 27th of April of the same year, and only then when an opportunity was presented for defeating the Government, or placing it in a false position before the country, being at the same time desirous of destroying its influence. I do not think that the hon. member has forgotten the strong protectionist speech he made on the 7th of March, and his vote against his own proposition on the 27th of the following April.

Mr. OLIVER—No; I did not do so.

Mr. BOWELL—The hon. member shakes his head and says no; but if he will turn to the Journals and the Votes and Proceedings of the House, on the 7th of March, he will find the following resolution, moved by himself, using very strong language in favour of the principle of protection. It is recorded:—“That Mr. Oliver moved for an Address to His Excellency, praying for the imposition of an import duty on wheat, flower, Indian corn, hops, coarse and fine salt, and coal.” He said the Government had sent a deputation to the West Indies and South America with the view of opening up a trade with these countries; and then went on in his argument to say:—“For instance, immense quantities of flour were being imported into the Maritime Provinces, which, if a proper duty were imposed, would be supplied by the Upper Provinces.” He went further and stated:—“Whenever there was any excitement or uneasiness in any of our local markets—the very argument used so forcibly a few nights ago, by the member for Hamilton, which only a repetition of what my hon. friend from South Oxford said in 1870, for he declared:—“Whenever there was any excitement or uneasiness in any of the local markets the facilities offered to the United States were such as to enable them to step in and undersell Canadians. For instance, last year we imported into Canada 1,685,000 bushels of Indian corn, which comes into direct competition with our own coarser grains.” Then, a little further, he said: “The large distillers in the country are not content to buy Canadian grain, and had no interest in the local market, which in consequence suffered great loss.” “In coal”—the very question now under discussion—the hon. member said:—“In coal we import $951,000 worth, and import it in the face of a restrictive tariff.” There was no doubt, he said, that if a proper duty was placed on the article, inter-provincial traffic, which was predicted in the Confederation debates, would be brought about and be beneficial to the whole Dominion. He also said, in reference to salt:—“That the object of the American manufacturers was to “cripple our markets, and that they were succeeding.”

I don't know, Mr. Speaker, how any gentleman advocating the policy of the protection of national industries, and of the products of the soil and of the mine, could by any possibility have used stronger language than that used by the hon. member who has been defending himself to-day, and has argued during the present Session in favour of free-trade pure and simple. It is true the Premier came to his rescue and selected that very article of salt to which my hon. friend from North Oxford referred in 1870. The Premier asked how it was possible that we, who have the best salt mines on the continent, could be crushed out of existence by the importation of American salt. That argument was forcible and well answered by a gentleman who formerly occupied a seat in this House for South Huron, Mr. Cameron. And it was in this wise: He told this House—the debates are on record—that the salt producers of Syracuse sent their produce to the Western sections of Ontario, and sold it at a lower price than they did in the vicinity in which I live, which is nearly opposite to the place where it is produced, for no other reason than to crush the salt industry of this country out of existence.” So it is at the present day with almost every branch of industry; that is, the Syracuse salt was sent three or four hundred miles further and sold cheaper than in places of three miles from where it was manufactured. But to return to my hon. friend's position. After having made his very strong protection speech we find him forming one of a deputation of some 40 or 50 members of this House, who waited upon the then Finance Minister, Sir Francis Hincks, to urge the adoption of a protective policy. No man spoke more loudly, with more feeling—and in justice to my hon. friend, I say it—or more forcibly than did he in favour of such a course; and that deputation having been composed of men of all shades of political opinions, the Government came down with the desired policy. Then what do we find? On the 7th of April, a little more than a month after the

Mr. OLIVER.

Government had conceded the point asked in favour of protection, we find that Mr. Macdonald of Glengary, then a member of this House, moved to restore flour and meal, the very articles upon which the member for North Oxford asked to have a duty imposed, to the free list. On the very next day the name of the hon. member for North Oxford was recorded in favour of that motion, and in opposition to that which he had asked the Government to do. That is the only charge upon that point which has been preferred against the hon. gentleman by the hon. member for Cumberland.

—Mr. OLIVER—Allow me to make one remark. I have never denied the statement. I always stated that I voted for the amendment, and gave my reason on other occasions for doing so. That reason was that the Government, in place of leaving the tariff as it was first introduced, made a change and left wheat out.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Allow me to correct the statement just made by the hon. member for Hastings—that that was the only charge I made. I made a much wider charge than the one mentioned. It was that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) having induced the Government to adopt a policy which alienated a considerable section of their own supporters, turned round and on that very tariff joined in vote after vote and endeavoured to break down the Government.

Mr. BOWELL—That is precisely what I was coming to. So far as the vote I alluded to was concerned, that was the only charge against the hon. member for North Oxford, and it was dexterously parried by the introduction of the question of wheat. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that a duty should also have been imposed on wheat; but I find no record that the proposition first introduced by the Government of that day was subsequently changed. I do know, however, that the whole policy one year after was altered. But I cannot understand why a man who believes in the theory and propriety of the imposition of duties upon a number of articles, and discovers that he cannot get all he asks, must then turn round and vote against the whole. There seems to be a difficulty in carrying on a strictly party Government as it is in this House, for we find a man advocating the imposition of a particular duty on a particular article, and before the words cease to reverberate through the halls, especially if he sees an opportunity of defeating a Government against which he has arrayed himself, he does not hesitate to eat his own words and swallow any resolution which may have been proposed by himself. It would thus appear that a man's own consistency was of much less consequence than the turning out of a Government. No matter what policy my hon. friend may have advocated, or what resolutions he may have moved, if he voted against that policy and against a motion he himself made, it is quite evident that he was willing the farming interest, in fact every interest, should suffer so long as the Administration was defeated.

On the general question I am, to all intents and purposes, a Protectionist—you may term it old fogeyism if you please. My experience and study have convinced me of this fact, that in all new countries where industries are developing, the proper policy for a Ministry to adopt is one which will protect those industries until they are able to stand alone. In the past, both in England and in the United States, such a policy has been followed. Those countries have grown under it, and become wealthy, and their example warns us that free-trade is not adapted to Canada at present. I don't pretend to deny—it would be folly to do so—that as an abstract principle, free-trade may appear correct; but like many other theories which look well in argument, the moment you reduce it to practice we find it cannot be carried out. I hold that the true policy for Canada at this day, if we ever desire reciprocal trade with the United States, is to legislate exclusively for ourselves, without any respect whatever to our neighbours. The only way to do good is to place ourselves in a position that when they (the United States) shall desire free-trade with us we shall have something to give them in return. We should not, as in the past, surrender everything to them. We should not have given them free navigation and other rights as we did under the Washington Treaty, which every member will recollect I opposed and voted against in the last Parliament. We find the present Government, however, sending an ambassador down to Washington to give up the pecuniary benefits we expected to derive from the difference between the value of their fisheries and ours. And what is the consideration? To enable us to get into their markets to sell the products of the West and the coals of the East.

They treated us just as I anticipated they would, and as I believe they will on all future occasions when demands of a similar character are made; and for this reason—we have nothing to offer them in return for the reciprocal advantages we may seek. They contend that their fisheries are quite as valuable as our own, and that the benefits they extend to us under the Washington Treaty are sufficient compensation for any difference—if such exist—in the value of the fisheries of the Maritime Provinces; and, in this regard, they will no doubt secure the best of the bargain, as has been the case in connection with almost every treaty they have negotiated with Great Britain, whether a question of boundaries or trade were concerned. Our only proper course is to block them in every port of this country. I am prepared to carry out the policy enunciated a short time ago by a gentleman who occupies a high position in the Dominion, holding that we should have reciprocity, if not in free-trade, at least in the shape of a protective tariff. Until that day arrives we will never prosper.

Mr. MILLS—Would you put a tax on coal?

Mr. BOWELL—-I would.

Mr. KILLAM—How much?

Mr. BOWELL—I care not how much; but at all events enough to protect your coal interests in Nova Scotia. If we do not adopt this course with regard to all coal—although anthracite is largely used in the part of the country where I live—the Nova Scotian article will never be properly protected. While I ask for a full protection for the farmers' interests, I am quite ready to extend it to the fullest extent and secure a protective tariff in favour of every single article we produce in this country, more particularly if these products are kept out of the American market by duties.

Mr. BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I did not intend to speak on this question, and I would not do so, did I not wish to refer to some remarks which have been made by the Hon. Premier, with reference to the coal trade. When it is stated we can compete with the United States in this connection it must be remembered that there are points beyond which we cannot do so. Terminating at the mouth of the Lachine Canal, as far as Montreal is concerned, Nova Scotia can compete with American coal, and is year after year maintaining its own; but ere we can find a market in Ontario, we must have the St. Lawrence Canals deepened to eighteen or nineteen feet, in order to enable our vessels to pass up to the western ports on the Lakes. At Montreal it costs thirty cents per ton to discharge coal from one vessel into another, and if we were to supply Ottawa or any western city, we must transfer it to the canal boats, losing by delay, renewal of insurances, and other expenses in this relation.

While I am a Free-Trader, I hold if we cannot get reciprocity in trade, give them a touch of reciprocity in tariff. I would like to have the canal question considered in connection with this. If this Dominion is to be bound together by commerce as well as by political ties, there must be an exchange of products. The hon. member for North Oxford says the effect of the national policy which he was so anxious to have adopted, and for which he voted, was to put $330,000 taxes on Ontario, but he forgot to say that the smaller population of the Maritime Provinces took 700,000 barrels of Ontario flour, paying $380,000 taxes for the protection which that national policy gave their industries.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Both sides lost.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—The question of protection, I suppose, will be discussed when the Administration bring down their policy, and then I will be prepared to state what my opinion is on that subject.

Mr. YOUNG—I think the hon. members for Cumberland and North Hastings have very unfairly attacked the hon. member for North Oxford. However, his constituents will regard the assault of the Deputy Leader of the Opposition as a high recommendation. An attempt has been made to represent him as inconsistent. I cannot see the slightest inconsistency. He says he voted against the national policy after one year's experience had shown him that it was unsuitable to the country. He surely cannot be blamed for having voted according to his convictions. We have heard further that though he went on a deputation to urge the Government to put a duty upon certain articles, he voted against the same proposition a few days after. But the explanation is easily understood. He states distinctly that the reason he so voted was because wheat had been left out of the dutiable portion of the tariff with a view to conciliate certain other interests; and that he, as representing an agricultural community, felt in duty bound to refuse the other portions of the tariff unless wheat was included in the list. He voted against the Government on that occasion, and the reasons he gave for his conduct are perfectly satisfactory and consistent. But I do not think it lies in the mouth of the hon. member for Cumberland to speak of inconsistency with regard to this question of tariff. If my hon. friend from North Oxford changed his position in one year, I can show that the member for Cumberland changed his vote in a few minutes on that question. When the Government brought down their tariff in 1871, it was proposed that the policy known as the national policy should be changed, and the majority of the House so decided. There was a resolution moved shortly afterwards by the hon. member for Hastings to this effect, seconded by Mr. Brown:—

“That in view of the negotiations now pending at Washington between representatives on the part of the British Empire and the United States, touching questions which may lead to a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty, it is in the opinion of this House inexpedient to repeal the duties now imposed upon certain articles enumerated in section two of the Bill as amended. Be it therefore resolved that the Bill do not now pass, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of expunging all the words between the word ‘coke’ and the words ‘is hereby repealed’ in section two of said Bill.”

This, Sir, was in fact a proposition to retain the duties on wheat coal and coke. And I find among those who voted against it was Sir Francis Hincks, and further down on the list was the name of the hon. member for Cumberland. So that if my hon. friend from North Oxford changed his position in one year on that question, my hon. friend from Cumberland changed his in a few minutes. But look at the action of the Government. The first Session the duties on these articles were taken off; the very next year they were reimposed, and the following year were repealed. We all know when that took place on the floor of this House—when it was sought the third time to reimpose the duties—the Finance Minister came down and stated that such was his intention with regard to wheat and those other articles, but before he left he announced that the Government intended to change their opinion. And then between six and half-past six he came again to the House and informed them that the Government intended to impose these duties. So they changed their policy every year for the first four years they were in power, and twice in a single day.

At this point the SPEAKER called Mr. Young to order, as his remarks were not relevant to the question before the House.

The motion was carried.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I wish to lay on the Table the statement of revenue and expenditure of the Dominion up to the 10th of February.

WELLAND CANAL.

Mr. McCALLUM moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of all correspondence between the Department of Public Works and the Superintendent of the Welland Canal as to the damages to lands along the Grand River by raising the water in the upper level of the said canal; also copies of all instructions to valuers in valuing said damages; also of reports, if any, made by valuers to the Government in the years 1874-75; also, the amount of damages paid, or to be paid, to different parties, giving number of acres paid for or to be paid for.

He said:—My object in placing this motion in your hands, Mr. Speaker, is that the people I have the honour to represent in this House have a grievance against the Government. The Dominion Government some years ago, by instructions to their engineer, raised the banks of the upper level of the Welland Canal, thereby raising the water much higher for 15 miles than formerly. By that means they have flooded a considerable amount of land along the Grand River. The matter was brought before the notice of the Government last year, and surveyors were sent to value the land, but still the parties have not been paid for the land.

At Six o'clock the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 25th.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

After Routine,—

REPORTS AND BILLS.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD presented the Annual Report of the Minister of the Interior, also a Report on the Geology and Resources of the region in the vicinity of the Forty-Ninth Parallel from the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains, by George Mercer Dawson, Geologist and Botanist to the Boundary Commission.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand) introduced a Bill intituled "An Act to incorporate the Canada Fire and Marine Insurance Co."

Mr. JOHN MACDONALD (Toronto) introduced a Bill intituled "An Act to authorize the shareholders to the Union and Permanent Building Society to change the name of said Society."

Mr. IRVING introduced a Bill intituled "An Act to enable W. Smith Amies to obtain letters patent for a new and useful article of Artificial Manure."

Mr. McCALLUM,

Mr. JETTE introduced a Bill intituled "An Act to amend the Act respecting the Citizen Insurance Investment Company."

EXPENSES OF ELECTION TRIALS.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE moved that on Tuesday next the House will resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

"That it is expedient to provide that the travelling expenses of the Judge and all expenses incurred by the Sheriff or other officer in consequence of any sitting for trial, and for providing a Court room and any accessories under the Bill (No. 13) intituled: 'An Act to make more effectual provision for the administration of the Law relating to corrupt practices at Elections of Members of the House of Commons,' shall be defrayed out of any moneys which may be provided by Parliament for the purpose."

The motion was carried.

SALARIES OF COUNTY COURT JUDGES IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE moved the reception of the Report of the Committee of the Whole on the following resolution:—

"1. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the salaries of the County Court Judges of the Province of Nova Scotia shall be as follows:—

"Six County Court Judges, each.....	$2,000 per annum
The County Court Judges for the County of Halifax	2,400 per annum and that to each of the County Court Judges there may be paid for actual travelling expenses such sum not exceeding the rate of $200 per annum as may be allowed by the Governor in Council.

"2. Resolved, That the salary of any of the said County Court Judges receiving less than $2,400 per annum shall after a period of three years service as such County Court Judge be $2,400 per annum with travelling expenses as aforesaid.

"3. Resolved, That the said salaries and allowances may be paid out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

"4. Resolved, That the 8th section of the Act passed in the 37th year of Her Majesty's Reign, intituled 'An Act to amend the Act 36th Victoria, Chapter 31, for the re-adjustment of the salaries of Judges and other purposes' shall apply to the said County Court Judges in the Province of Nova Scotia, and that they shall be entitled to the same retiring allowance or annuity on the same condition and payable in the same manner as if they were expressly referred to and included in the said section."

The motion was carried.

A Bill founded on the resolution was introduced and read the first time.

ASSISTANT INSPECTORS OF PENITENTIARIES.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE moved the reception of the report of the Committee of the Whole on the following resolution :

"Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the Assistant Inspectors of Penitentiaries to be appointed under the Bill intituled 'An Act to provide for the appointment of Assistant Inspectors of Penitentiaries in Manitoba and British Columbia,' shall each receive a salary not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars per annum and travelling expenses, to be determined by the Governor in Council."

The motion was carried.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE moved that the resolution be referred to the same Committee as the Committee on Bill Number 2.

The motion was carried.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE moved the reception of the report of the Committee of the Whole on the following resolution :

"1. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the Minister of Agriculture, or such other Minister as is mentioned in the Bill intituled, 'An Act to make provision for the collection and registration of the Criminal Statistics of Canada,' shall cause to be paid out of any moneys which may be provided by Parliament for that purpose, to any Clerk, Officer or Sheriff filling up and transmitting the schedules required under the first section of the said Bill the sum of one dollar and the further sum of five cents for each case comprised in such schedule; and to any officer transmitting the returns required under the second section thereof the sum of one dollar."

The motion was carried.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE moved that the resolutions be referred to the same Committee as Bill Number 3.

The motion was carried.

THE BUDGET.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Mr. Speaker,—In rising to move the resolution which I am about to place in your hands, I may say at the outset that it would be both idle and dishonest on my part to attempt to conceal from the House, that the circumstances under which we meet are such as deserve our very gravest consideration. It is unfortunately too true that we are now passing and have been passing for a period of several months, through a commercial crisis great and almost unparalleled in severity; and, although I think that the statement made by

His Excellency in his opening Address to Parliament, that the distress in question was rather local and special than general, and that the great bulk of our people still continue to enjoy a condition of reasonable prosperity—although I think that that statement is true, and admits of reasonable demonstration, still I am not at all disposed to deny that there are cases of great hardship existing in this country. At the same time, Sir, I think I am justified in saying that, although the particular crisis and the particular form which it has assumed, were not, in the very nature of things, and could not be, calculated upon; still, as the House is aware I have always contended, from the fact that there is a very considerable diminution in our imports into this country, and of the revenue derived therefrom, that this might not unreasonably be expected. This, in effect, was foreseen, and to a considerable extent discounted beforehand. And I think I shall be able to show the House that there are certain important mitigating circumstances which may go far to relieve the apprehension which many persons have, not unnaturally expressed at the state of things which at present exists. Without at all desiring to underestimate the gravity of the commercial crisis to which I have referred, I believe, Sir, that this country has had other and much graver crises in its history than the one through which we are now passing, and that it has emerged from them comparatively without injury to its reproductive powers. It may appear paradoxical to say so, but in my judgment the position of this country is really far less dangerous to day than it was two or three years ago. And I make this assertion the more pointedly because I see that certain parties, both in this House and out of it, are in danger of falling into an error which I desire to correct so far as in me lies. A few years ago, as everybody in this House knows, many persons were betrayed into undue confidence from supposing that the remarkable expansion which had then taken place indicated an absolute substantial progress. Now, I never desired or intended to deny that there was underlying that expansion a really great and genuine growth of this country; but I took occasion more than once to declare that it was not wise to base our policy on the hypothesis of the balance of the expansion to which I have referred, at present. Sir, the cause is exactly opposite. In place of undue confidence we have undue alarm, and undue apprehension; and as might have been expected, we find that from bring over confident we are now in a state of what I may almost call cowardly alarm.

On that occasion I deprecated that over confidence—as I think the House will admit not without sufficient reason—and I deprecate now the undue apprehension which I perceive to exist, as I hope and believe on equally false grounds. I think this country, as I have stated before, will be able to weather without permanent injury the commercial squall—commercial tornado if you will—by which it is at present assailed, and although I do not intend to enlarge on this point at present, I think, before the debate closes I shall be able to show some reasonable ground for entertaining that opinion.

Now, Sir, my first duty on the present occasion is to review as briefly as I conveniently can the position of this country in the year which has just closed; and that is of the more importance, because the results of the year's operations require to be carefully considered in view of their bearing not only upon the present year, but also with reference to certain matters which occurred in the past. If the House will look at the Public Accounts which have been laid upon the table, they will perceive that the total ordinary revenue for the year which closed on the 30th of June, 1875, amounted from all sources to $24,648,715; and the ordinary expenditure during the same period to $23,713,071, leaving a balance of $935,644. They will also perceive from the trade and navigation returns that whereas the total importation in the year ending 30th June, 1874, amounted to $127,404,169, the total importation during the year which has just closed only amounted to $119,618,657, showing a decrease on the importations of the last year of $7,785,512. The exports during 1873-4 amounted to $89,351,928, while for the year which has just closed they amounted to $77,886,979, showing a decrease of $11,464,949.

It may be well to point out that of that decrease of nearly eleven and a half millions, about one million was due to a diminution in the amount of bullion exported, and about three and a half to a diminution in the exportation of goods not the produce of Canada. The total diminution of imports and exports amounted therefore to no less than $19,250,460, being a total decrease in the volume of the trade of that year of very nearly twenty million dollars as compared with 1873-4.

Now, Sir, it may be well perhaps to call the attention of the House to the fact that in the receipts and expenditures for the past year will be found a certain number of cross entries which swell the totals a little more than would be otherwise the case. This will be chiefly observed in the interest columns, and the cause of it was this: As hon. gentlemen know, we were compelled to pay off a very considerable portion of the public debt maturing in London on the 1st of July, 1875; and to do so we were obliged to keep a considerable amount of money lying there at interest. The receipts and disbursements on this account may therefore be considered as accidental, and practically balance each other. Moreover, in the process of paying off the Seigniorial Indemnity up to the 1st of January, 1875, a large additional charge was inflicted on the present year, as I find, for some reason or other, contrary to the usual practice, that the interest which matured on this fund up to the 1st of July, instead of being charged, as customary to the past year, has been habitually charged to the current year. I may

There is another item to which attention should be directed, the item of $121,700, put down as a charge for the survey made between ourselves and the United States. Now, I think that I mentioned in the Budget Speech of 1875, that this particular sum of money had been actually expended in 1873-4, but that owing to a delay in the transmission of the vouchers on the part of the Imperial authorities, we were not able to include it in the ordinary disbursements of that year. This item, although charged to 1874-5, really and properly belonged to 1873-4.

The last and most important item to which I desire to call the attention of the House is the item on account of the change of guage. With respect to this, I am perfectly well aware that in many cases whole cost has been charged to capital account, and I am also aware that a good deal is to be said for that practice, inasmuch as the change of guage is a permanent improvement which will never require to be repeated; and many railway companies, when it is necessary to make the change, do habitually charge it to capital account, taking, however, in that case, the precaution to charge a certain portion of that amount to the annual income for several years to come. There are obvious reasons why such a course is not expedient in our case, and, therefore, after conference with my hon. friend beside me, we decided that, although it was a permanent and useful improvement, adding largely to the efficiency of the road. Still, as it was the fact that a certain portion of the rolling stock was actually destroyed by the operation, our best course would be to charge two-thirds to the capital account, and one-third to the income, but not to make a further charge hereafter.

With respect to the operation going on of substituting steel for iron rails, that is, I think, an item properly chargeable to income, and is intended to be. I am somewhat particular in making this statement, because, as the House knows, we feel it incumbent upon us, as we are compelled to keep both a capital and ordinary account, that we should be very scrupulous as to what we allowed to go to that capital account.

Now, Sir, looking at general results, I think I am justified in saying that the total result for 1874-5 is on the whole eminently satisfactory notwithstanding the very extraordinary charge above referred to. In spite of the very heavy exceptional charges we are able to show a good balance, amounting to nearly $1,000,000, and that, too, in spite of the fact that a very considerable proportion of the revenue which properly belonged to that year was anticipated in the preceding year. This is of the more importance, Mr. Speaker, because there was a very perceptible diminution in the total volume of the imports and exports during that year. It may not be without interest to make a comparison between the total expenditure for 1873-4 and 1874-5. In 1873-4 we expended a sum of $23,316,000 in round numbers. Of that, Sir, payments for interest and subsidy, over which, as the House knows, we have no control, consumed no less than $10,255,746, leaving the expenditure in the year ending 30th of June, 1874, at $13,060,520. In the year 1874-5 our total expenditure amounted to $23,713,051; interest and subsidy, $11,124,634; while the controllable expenditure was $12,588,437, leaving a balance in favour of 1874-5 as contrasted with 1873-74, on items within which may fairly be called within the control of the Government of $472,083. And if we should reverse that entry of $121,700 paid on the account of the boundary survey, to which I alluded, and place it in the year when that expenditure occurred, we would have a total balance of not less than $715,000 of controllable expenditure in favour of 1874-5.

And now, Sir, I come to what is probably a more interesting portion of the present statement, viz.: to our position for the current year, 1875-6, the House will no doubt perceive, from the statement which I had the honour to lay upon the table yesterday, that there has been a very serious diminution in our total receipts for the first seven months of this year. I find that up to the 10th February, 1876, our total revenue, from all sources properly belonging to the consolidated fund, amounts to $12,870,785, as against similar receipts for the corresponding period last year of $14,856,121, being a difference, as nearly as possible, of $2,000,000 against this year and in favour of last. Now, it is quite true that a comparison of those seven months may possibly, to a certain extent, deceive the House, and for this reason: That the receipts during the first half of 1874-5 were unusually large, I believe larger than the Hon. Minister of Customs at all expected. However, this falling off, although very important, is not quite as significant as might at first sight appear. I intended to have laid upon the table of the House a comparative statement of the exports and imports for the last six months, which by permission I will do now, and send to the hon. member for Cumberland.

From this statement it would appear that whereas in the half year ended 31st December, 1874, we imported and entered for consumption $69,693,978 in the six months which closed on the 31st December last we only imported for consumption $51,923,236, showing a decrease in these six months of very nearly $18,000,000. On the other hand we exported during the corresponding period of 1874 the quantity of $53,740,729, and during the six months of 1875 we exported $50,624,845. Now, at present, I will only say this with respect to that statement, that although there has been a very great and formidable decrease in the imports and revenue derivable therefrom, the House will see with satisfaction that there has been a very small decrease in the total volume of the exports of this country, and that decrease has taken place in only the single article of sawn lumber, exported to the United States. Notwithstanding, Mr. Speaker, it is quite true, that the result of the statement I have laid on the table shows that the estimates which I made for the current year must necessarily be revised. I do not at all desire to convey to the House the idea that I foresaw any such commercial catastrophe as has overtaken the country. It is obvious if I had foreseen it I would never have presented the estimates which I then submitted. I was aware, of course, that every estimate made 18 months in advance is necessarily exposed to the chance of being worthless by some unexpected calamity such as has overtaken us. Nevertheless, I believe that the Estimates then submitted were justified, inasmuch as they were based partly on the experience of the two or three years preceding, and on our probable exportations on the imports in ordinary average years. As I remarked at the commencement of my speech—I have more than once pointed out the danger of a large diminution of the volume of trade and commerce of the Dominion, but nobody could expect me or anybody else to know what shape that reduction would assume; whether it would be acute or chronic in the shape it has taken, or whether it would occur in the shape of stagnation for a considerable period, extending over several years, until the natural growth of the country had brought us up to the consumption indicated by the returns for 1873, '74, '75. For this very remarkable diminution in the amount of our imports, there are two main causes. One cause is, the diminution of the volume and quantity of articles imported. That statement I have seen, on some occasions, contradicted, but the trade returns, which I hold in my hand, completely warrant that assumption. But there has been another and a somewhat singular cause at work, and that is not so much the diminution of the volume of these articles as the remarkable shrinkage of value that has prevailed during the last two years. I speak, of course, more particularly, of recent times. Now, Sir, my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, at my request, addressed some time ago a series of circulars to leading merchants in the principal ports, with a view to obtain from them an estimate of the extent of this shrinkage in the more important articles which we import, and from that—although I will not weary the House with the detailed statement—I find this shrinkage has been well nigh universal, spreading almost over every important article which we consume, and extending from 10, 15, 25 and in some cases to 30 or 35 per cent. of the previous value of the articles. It need hardly be said this was a very serious disturbing element in all calculations which either he or I were able to make of the probable imports and revenue to be derived therefrom. Now, in proof of the statement which I made that a very large proportion of the loss of revenue arises from this shrinkage of value, I may state on examining a comparative statement for the six months ending December 21st, 1874, and the six months ending with December, 1875, I find that it has taken place almost exclusively and entirely in one list. The total revenue received on articles bearing a specific duty was $1,307,000 for the six months of 1875, as against $1,426,000 in the preceding half year, showing a diminution of $119,000 on that list. On what is known as the specific and ad valorem articles, the revenue in the last six months of 1875 was $1,307,000, as against $1,272,000 in the preceding half-year, showing an increase in that department of $30,000. There was a very small decrease on the 25 per cent. list; but when we come to that large and important list known as the 17½ per cent. ad valorem, we find in the last half of 1874 we had a total importation of $28,771,000, whereas in the corresponding period of 1875 our total importation only amounted to $18,142,000, being a reduction on that one class of articles alone of $10,700,000, and that the revenue which we derived in 1874 from that source amounted to $5,034,000, as against $3,174,000 in 1875. In other words, almost the entire loss under customs revenue during the preceding six months has accrued on the 17½ per cent. list. Those figures are very remarkable. They indicate that there was a considerable and undue inflation; but it must be borne in mind, in this particular as in some others, that what is bad for the revenue is, on the whole, good for the country. The result of those figures which I have submitted appears to prove conclusively that, although the revenue of Canada has lost $1,000,000 or $2,000,000, the people of the Dominion have gained many millions. It proves that they have been able to buy a large quantity of these goods for a less price than they previously cost, and that the country is, in one sense, largely the gainer by this diminution of values.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

There is of course a drawback to this. It has undoubtedly contributed, in connection with other things, to add to the depression that has overtaken the manufacturing and commercial interests of the country. I am not disposed to underrate that effect but still I must call attention to the fact that as our imports have been appreciably diminished, and as it appears a very large proportion of this diminution does not arise from any decrease of the power of consumption of the people of Canada, but simply that they get better bargains for their money than before, it is on the whole an advantage and not an injury to the people.

Now, it is of course, rather difficult to estimate minutely what particular portion of the loss of revenue is due to shrinkage of value, and what portion to consumption. But I am inclined to think, if we could accurately discriminate between the two causes, we would find the larger part of the loss is due to shrinkage and not to diminution of consumption. This is a matter which it is impossible for me or for any other Finance Minister to guard against in advance.

It may be well before going further to offer a few observations on the causes of the prevailing depression which we all deplore. I do not think there will be found any great difference of opinion as to what the causes are, although I am inclined to believe there will be a wide divergence as to the extent to which they severally operate and the way they act and re-act upon each other. I think it must be abundantly plain to anybody who has watched the extraordinary expansion of our commerce and also of bank discounts that one considerable element of the present depression is due to the large over-importation that has taken place.

We find the imports entered for consumption increased, as follows:—$87,000,000 in 1871; $107,000,000 in 1872; $127,000,000 in 1873; then they remained stationary for a year, and last year they fell to $119,000,000. We find during the same period that the bank discounts rose from forty-nine or fifty millions of dollars in 1869, on the 1st of July, to $61,000,000 in the same period of 1870; $79,000,000 in 1871; $102,000,000 in 1872; $116,000,000 in 1873, and $130,000,000 in 1874, at which point they appear to have remained tolerably stationary. It is perfectly clear by those figures, that there was to say the least, a very considerable risk that many of our importers were holding vastly larger stocks than it was at all prudent for them to do, and that then and after this process had gone on for some years, they were suddenly confronted with the disturbance in values to which I have alluded. It is no wonder very serious distress was inflicted on some of those people. These causes operate in two ways. In the first place there was a very large depreciation in value caused from the fact of carrying over those stocks from year to year. In the second place, their value was still far the positive shrinkage above-mentioned. There can be no doubt a very large proportion of the distress in commercial quarters is attributable to this cause. The second cause which has operated very powerfully is the unfortunate depression that has prevailed for some years in that great branch of industry, the lumber trade. Everybody who has paid any attention to our ordinary business affairs, particularly in Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick, is aware, perhaps, this is the largest single industry in the country, except the agricultural. They are also aware that it gives support and employment to several hundreds of thousands of people, and furnishes one-third of our exports to foreign countries; and further that from the nature of the trade and the amount of money it puts in circulation, it is one of special importance to the commercial classes of the community. It is no secret that this industry has been depressed for a considerable period, and I believe, Sir, that it will be found that no inconsiderable part of that depression resulted from the very common cause—that a number of people, without sufficient capital and experience, choose to engage in the production of lumber in the face of a falling market, stimulated, no doubt, by the fact that many of my hon. friends engaged in this occupation were supposed to be accumulating very rapid fortunes. Then, Sir, when great fall of prices took place in the United States two or three years ago, thereby cheapening, of course, the cost of production in that country, it became very difficult for our lumbermen to compete on reasonable terms with the American lumbermen. And this, Sir, I deem to be another and very potent influence indeed in producing the present depression.

There was besides all this, that general extravagance and over speculation, which unfortunately always follow to be any period of inflation or even of great prosperity, continued for several years. Everyone knows our market is limited, everyone knows that there are few manufacturing industries which will allow more than a certain number of people to engage in them, and I think, Sir, most people who have watched the course of business in this country, will agree with me that during the last few years a very considerable number of persons had engaged in manufacturing enterprises for whom there was really no room, as was well said on a recent occasion, many of them possessed neither the brains nor the money to bring their enterprises to a successful issue.

And although I know our banks, as a rule, are well managed and conservative in their way of carrying on business, and although I don't at all mean to say they are one whit worse than their compeers in the United States or Great Britain either for that matter, still I say that various banking institutions of this country are not wholly faultless in this matter. Every-one who knows much about the mode of carrying on banking is aware that banks, when they have accumulated large sums of money, are very apt to discount largely to men of straw. Nothing they can do does such frequent injury to banks as encouraging adventurers of that class, who have entered into speculations; and I don't hesitate to say that no inconsiderable portion of the depression existing has arisen from that cause. I repeat that I do not mean to say that our banks are worse than those of other countries; I merely mean to say that it is one cause common to all banks, so far as I know, to grant discounts at such times to such persons on terms which no legitimate enterprise would warrant. These, Mr. Speaker, appear to be the chief internal causes, so far as I can at present ascertain, which have led to the existing depression.

But it must be remarked that our distress has been considerably aggravated by external causes, over which we had no sort of control. The House knows that the people of the United States have been labouring for two or three years under most unusual depression. The House knows also that it is quite impossible for a small community like ours, placed as it is in the immediate vicinity of a great nation of 44,000,000 people, bordering on us for two or three thousand miles—the House knows, I say, that it is quite impossible that any long-continued permanent depression can exist in the United States, without re-acting very powerfully upon us. We know, Sir, that when the prices of American staples are high, ours will be high also; when labour is dear in the United States, it will be dear in Canada—when cheap, it will tend powerfully to make it cheap in Canada also. And it is no source of wonder that when the cost of production becomes small in the United States it should re-act more or less unfavourably on those persons engaged in similar manufactures on this side.

I don't purpose at this present moment to enter fully into the discussion raised as to Canada being a sacrifice or slaughter market. But I must admit candidly and honestly, that I have no doubt that the distress of the manufacturers has been aggravated—though I will not say to what extent—by this cause. Then, unfortunately for us, the preceding year was one of general financial trouble throughout the world. I do not know a country in Europe that has not suffered during the year that has just closed. There can be no greater mistake than to suppose that the commercial depression is confined to New York or Montreal alone. Every one who knows anything of the state of commerce cannot but know that London, Berlin, Vienna, Moscow and St. Petersburg to boot, have suffered and are suffering from a very great and long-continued commercial distress and depression; and this, no doubt, did re-act considerably on the state of things here. It is hardly worth while to indulge in any lengthened proofs of facts which I suppose, all commercial gentlemen will admit. But, if any one desires proof, I will refer them to the language of Sir Stafford Northcote and Lord Derby, both of whom have warned the English people that they must not expect a repetition, indeed hardly a continuance of the remarkable expansion which had taken place in England as well as in this country during the year 1870 to 1873. And if we turn to the neighbouring Republic, we will find Governor Tilden, the chief magistrate of the great State of New York, in his message to the Legislature, speaking in equally strong terms of the condition of affairs in the great Empire State of the Union. Were I inclined to multiply other proofs, I might find them in the fact that many important staple articles of English export have diminished both in quantity and value, and we find gentlemen in the House of Congress rising and proposing resolutions with the view of obtaining more protection for the languishing industries of the United States.

I do not believe it is necessary for me to dwell upon this theme any longer. From all these facts this result, if no other, appears tolerably patent to my mind—if more men and more capital are engaged in any business than it legitimately requires, there is nothing more likely than that you will have distress among the producers; and it does not matter whether your market be 4,000,000 or 40,000,000 or 400,000,000, over-production will always produce distress. Nor does it very much matter for that particular purpose whether free-trade or protection is the policy.

There is another question on which I desire to say a word or two. It has been asked in this House and outside this House whether and to what extent this Government were responsible for the distress which we have witnessed. Now, if this question be asked of me, I should say that neither the present nor the preceding Government were directly responsible for that inflation or for the consequent distress. That inflation would have taken place whoever sat on these benches—in my opinion, at least. I do not believe in a free country it is in the power of a Government to restrain their people from embarking foolishly or recklessly in improvident speculations. All I think, any Government can do is to warn, to caution and carefully restrain its own operations within safe limits, and if it failed to do this, possibly a Government may be indirectly responsible for inflation. Wherever a Government is found treating a temporary inflation as indicating a stable, enduring prosperity, or entering into engagements which the country cannot possibly fulfil, unless that inflation becomes permanent, then in such a case I can agree that the Government should be held directly responsible. And I leave it with confidence to the people of this country, and to the members of this House, whether that is a fault which can be properly charged to the present Government.

Now, Sir, I propose to call the attention of the House to the estimates of the current year, recently laid on the table. But, before I proceed to details, it may be as well that I should say a few words on one important feature of the general policy of the Government. The House is aware that when we entered upon office we found a very large number of minor public works, of the class ordinarily charged to income, in course of construction or arranged for. I stated at the time that it would be impossible for us to make any reduction in that item of expense for several years. I stated also that I did not expect it would be permanent, and that a reduction in that respect was one of the resources upon which I relied in the event of any temporary diminution of imports, to make both ends adjust themselves.

I think, Sir, the House will see in looking at the estimates that we have succeeded in carrying out our policy with a very reasonable degree of accuracy. We did not deem it wise to suspend or interrupt any of those public works to which we found the Government committed, for two reasons. In the first place we found that, owing to the low price of labour and material, it was, on the whole, advisable to proceed with the completion of those undertakings as early as possible; and neither my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) nor myself thought it expedient in a time of great depression to delay the progress of any of them, or to restrict ourselves to those which were absolutely necessary. In the next place, we knew these works had to be completed, that they had to be paid for; and our policy was to avail ourselves of the cheapness of the times, and also to a certain extent to relieve the distress which we, as well as everyone else in this country, must desire to alleviate if we can.

Now, if the House will do me the favour to turn to the estimates, they will find that we propose in the present year to ask for certain additional sums. The first and most important of these is the amount of $513,000 additional interest on the public debt, rendered necessary by the loan which I contracted in London in the autumn of last year. The next item is a statutory one, rendered necessary by the creation of the Supreme Court. This sum embraces the salaries of the Judges and certain other incidental expenses. The third item is a very considerable augmentation of the expenditure for Mounted Police. While on that subject, I may say that it has been found that that force, although a very efficient and valuable one, is necessarily a very expensive one. It is very difficult to procure food and forage at the outposts at which it is placed, and therefore we have found it requisite to take an additional vote on this occasion in order to be able to supply them with the articles they need. I may further state that the Minister of Justice informs me that he hopes within a year or two to be able to reduce that outlay by establishing farms in the neighbourhood of the posts; and if the e should prove unsuccessful it is tolerably certain that from settlers who may be expected to go into that country in considerable numbers, and who by preference will locate in the neighbourhood of fortified points, we will be able to secure food and forage for the horses at much less cost than hitherto. There is also a very considerable item of increase in the shape of an amount of $63,271 for treaties with Indians. It is probably unnecessary to point out to the House that it is absolutely necessary we should conciliate these tribes and obtain a legal title to the land which they at present occupy. No doubt the sum total demanded for the Indian vote will appear considerable; but the House will find in the future that it is far less expensive to settle with those people in this way than to employ several hundred additional mounted troops to keep the peace in those territories.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

These, I think, Sir, comprehend the chief services on which we shall ask for additional votes, with the exception of some small increase in the vote for the printing in connection with the Legislature, and some addition for the Post Office Department, which my hon. friend (Mr. Huntington) will explain when the estimate is arrived at. Coming now to the other side of the account, the House will perceive that in Civil Government we have effected a decrease on the estimate for last year of $27,253; on that for Dominion Police of $10,000; on Penitentiaries $25,959; on Arts, Agriculture and Statistics, $156,680 (this, I think, being chiefly composed either of the Mennonite loan, or some charge in connection with the Philadelphia Centennial;) on Immigration and Quarantine $192,760, partly in consequence of not requiring any further loan for the Mennonites and partly in consequence of some other reduced expenditures which will be seen on referring to the details. In the important item of Militia, we have effected a reduction of $395,648, leaving $949,151 as against $1,345,000 for the preceding year. I am not about to enlarge upon that at this moment, as I am quite aware that I shall have plenty of other opportunities.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I am glad my hon. friend has adopted the suggestion I made last year.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I am glad to hear from the leader of the Left Centre. The suggestions of the Left Centre will always receive due consideration. Coming to Public Works and Buildings chargeable to income, the House will see the expenditure under that head has been reduced to the lowest amount consistent with a due regard to our engagements. On that vote we propose a total reduction of $1,701,200. On the item of Ocean and River Service, on which there were unusual charges last year, there is a decrease of $171,847; on light-houses and coast service, $146,750. The item of Boundary Surveys, $100,000, we have dropped, as we think we can manage without it on this occasion. On the item of Dominion Lands, which have been a source of very great expense for a considerable number of years, we have reduced our total expenditure by $170,000. Then there are some other items of reduction; but I will not detain the House by referring to them at present. The result of all this is, that although we have been obliged by unavoidable circumstances, and by the necessity of carrying on the great public works in which we are engaged, to make a total addition to our expenditure of $776,000, we have at the same time effected such reductions as amount in the whole to $3,247,000, being a net decrease in the estimates submitted last year of no less than two and a-half million dollars. If my hon. friends desire to know whether any further reductions are possible, I may say that I do not believe that it would be in the interest of the public service to make any further reductions at present. It may be possible, however, for my honorable friend beside me (Mr. Mackenzie) to make some further reductions in the expenditure on maintenance of the Inter-colonial Railway, some very important sections on which we have been engaged almost ever since we have been in the Government in putting into better order. That expenditure is rapidly coming to an end, and I hope that in a short time my hon. friend will be able to show a further reduction on that item of some $100,000 or $200,000 more, especially, as I before remarked, that iron is being replaced by steel, contributing materially to the economy and better working of the road. I might, also, under this head, remark that, although we cannot be congratulated on having heretofore derived large revenue from the public works of the country—and although I have frequently found it an obstacle to our financial negotiations that our public works up to the present time, have only contributed indirectly to our general prosperity—still I think that when the Welland Canal is completed we will be able to show for once an exception to that general rule. I would not dare at this moment to form any estimate of the revenue immediately to be derived from that source; but looking at the fact, that even in its present imperfect condition it yields a moderate revenue, I cannot be astray in supposing that the receipts which will be obtained from this source at any rate will give us some very considerable return for the large sum which it has cost us.

With regard to our other public works, I am sorry to say that my best hope is that the deficit on working expenses will be gradually reduced. As hon. gentlemen will see, we are obliged for their maintenance to make provision for a considerable outlay over and above the total receipts, but I may state that it appears at the present time to have reached a maximum, while there is reasonable ground for believing that the expenditure under this head will tend more nearly to equalize with the outlay in the future than in the past.

Now, Sir, if the House will refer to the Budget speech I addressed to this House in 1874, hon. members will see that I then took occasion to caution them that, even after the extraordinary charges to which I have alluded had been disposed of the total expenditures of the country, apart from interest, subsidy and the charges on maintenance of public works, could hardly be brought below the sum of seven millions; and I also told them that in the course of two or three years I would endeavour to do it; and hon. members looking over the various items in the estimate will see that I have redeemed my pledge, for the total vote asked for these purposes on the present occasion is well within that sum. I might also add that these estimates are in reality slightly less than they appear because there are certain expenditures which will probably be recouped by fees, although there will no doubt be a deficit on the general working—which were not taken into account in that statement to which I have referred.

Before I proceed further with my remarks, Sir, it may be as well to explain to the House the reasons which induced me to anticipate slightly the loan the House was aware would probably be made in the course of the current year. They are several in number. I intended, when I last addressed the House from this place not to appear in the London Market again until the Spring of 1876, and I believe I then so stated; but, after full consideration I thought it would be more in the public interest to effect this loan last autumn. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the time was eminently favourable. There was a large accumulation of money seeking investment in London, for which few eligible investments offered; and in the next place, I desired as much as possible to spare the resources of our people. We had exhausted all our means in London of necessity, because we were obliged to pay the sum of ten millions of our indebtedness, bearing a high rate of interest, and to expend seven or eight millions in public works, in connection with which also very large disbursements were being made during the current year; and in the peculiar condition of the country, it did not appear to me that it was desirable to deprive ourselves too completely of the reserve we held on this side of the Atlantic. Moreover, Sir, I considered that the House would be in a better position to discuss the proper policy to be adopted at this crisis, if it was known that we were in no immediate want of money, and I felt tolerably certain that I would be able to secure better terms last November, than in April of the present year.

Then, Sir, there was a very considerable advantage to which I will allude generally—we would be in a position to push on our works with all possible speed, by taking this course. Those who are intimately acquainted with the cost of carrying on public works, know that for a very long time past contractors had been unable to execute these so cheaply and expeditiously as at present, and that they are now pushing forward their various contracts to completion, with much greater rapidity than usual, and are making, moreover, more extensive demands on the public treasury than would occur during an ordinary year. I was also bound to take into consideration the possible risk of foreign complications, in connection with the English market. It is perfectly well known that the state of Europe at large has been considerably unsettled of late, and I received advices from London which led me to believe that I would incur an undue and a far greater degree of risk than would be justifiable for the sake of saving a trifling amount of interest, if I did not avail myself of the then favourable condition of the English money market; and accordingly after deep consideration and consultation with Sir John Rose, the financial agent of the Government, to whose zealous and hearty co-operation on this and previous occasions I am very much indebted, I decided to issue a loan somewhat in imitation of the loan effected by that gentleman in 1868-9, though on different proportions.

The latter consisted of one-quarter of Canadian five per cent. bonds, and three-quarters of four per cent. guaranteed stock, and my loan of two-fifths or nearly one-half of Canadian four per cent. bonds, and the remainder, to the amount of £1,500,000, was secured by Imperial guarantee. We obtained a total average of £99 1s. and 6d., as reported by our London agents; and the result, I think I am justified in saying to the House, has been exceedingly favourable and satisfactory. With respect to the disposition that is to be made of this money, I may briefly state that a certain considerable proportion will be employed to pay off debts and obligations of the country which bear a much higher rate of interest than that paid by us; another considerable portion will be invested in such works as the improvements which are being made on the St. Lawrence, and the payment of sums due to the Province of Prince Edward Island, and in connection with one or two matters of this kind, while the remainder will be applied either to public works in progress, or in taking up some other loans I expect shortly to mature.

I may add, Sir, that there is one important point to which I desire to call the attention of the House, and which affects, to a great extent, our present position. I think that comparatively few members are aware to what an enormous degree the minor obligations which this Government found itself compelled to discharge within the last two or three years extended. When we entered office we found a very heavy outlay going on, with reference to the Intercolonial Railroad proper and the Prince Edward Island Railway; also that large expenditures were requisite in order to put the Nova Scotia and New Brunswick lines in good running condition, and to push forward public works to which I have alluded. Extensive sums were due on account of the St. Lawrence River improvements, under statutory enactment; a large sum was due by treaty to Prince Edward Island for the redemption of its lands; and a very heavy outlay was being made on the canals, the Pacific Railway survey, and for similar purposes.

Now, Sir, the greater portion of these sums we have already paid, and the remaining obligations we had ample funds to meet in full. In order to give the House a better idea of the sum total, I have prepared a short analysis which I will read:—On account of the Prince Edward Island Railway we have spent since we came into office two millions of dollars; for redemption of lands we have to pay, or have paid, about $800,000 more; our minor works, as closely as I can estimate, have involved an outlay of about four millions of dollars; the St. Lawrence improvements, including the Quebec Graving Dock, probably some two millions.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Allow me to ask how much has been paid to Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—The total expenditure has been about two millions, in which, however, I include some two or three hundred thousand dollars he will find in the current estimates. I am speaking of the sum total in this respect that has been paid since this Government came into office.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—On capital account.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Yes. These minor public works are not, as the hon. gentleman knows, strictly a charge to capital, but I am now giving the amount of former obligations of all kinds over and above our ordinary expenditure, which we have had to discharge. To resume my statement on repairs, the change of gauge, the substitution of steel rails, and other matters in connection with the Nova Scotian and New Brunswick Railroads, we compute that we have spent or will spend the sum of three millions of dollars, the debts we have taken up amount to no less than ten millions of dollars, while our expenditure on the Pacific Railway, canals and the Intercolonial Railway, will reach very nearly eleven millions of dollars in round numbers; making the sum total, almost all of which we have discharged, no less than $32,800,000 since we took office, to which I will add about two millions falling due within the next six months. Now, the House will see that it is no light matter to provide the ways and means for the payment of about $35,000,000; and in addition we have a very respectable sum of cash in hand, mostly applicable to expenditure in progress on that important work, the Welland Canal. I have been more particular in drawing attention to this, because it is very desirable that hon. members should know how much has been done, as well as what still remains to be accomplished.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Will my hon. friend have the kindness to state the amount of available means on hand?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Well, I can hardly give it off-hand; but as I see the hon. gentleman has a motion on the paper in this connection, I will furnish the details in one or two days. We will have in hand in all likelihood about ten or eleven millions of dollars available, taking into account our reserves on both sides of the Atlantic. That is rather under than over the mark. Now, Sir, as I remarked before—and to this point I direct the special attention of the House—it has been a serious aggravation of the difficulties with which the Government have had to contend that we have been obliged to keep usually strong—and to make provision far in advance, chiefly for debts maturing. We could have managed our affairs much more easily and more profitably to this country if a little more foresight had been exercised before we engaged to construct enormous public works in all parts of the Dominion in the precise years in which a large portion of our debt matured. I may explain to the House—if it requires explanation—why it is I have been anxious to preserve large amounts in hand, and rather to anticipate than to delay the contraction of public loans. I will give a list of the various debts which mature in the next four or five years, during which time many of those public works will approach completion, so that the House may judge of the correctness of the statement I have made. I find in the current year that we have to provide for $1,879,000 of debts maturing; in 1877-8, we have to provide for $5,731,000; in 1878-9, for $7,624,000; in 1879-80, for $3,060,000; and for smaller sums in the years immediately succeeding. It is needless to state that that fact adds, and always adds, very considerably, to the embarrassment of my position; and I regret very much that those hon. gentlemen who had previously charge of the finances of the country did not chose to begin those public works either a little earlier or a little later. There is no doubt the circumstance that those works must be paid for at the very same moment that we have likewise to discharge a very heavy indebtedness places us under considerable disadvantage in the contraction of our loans.

It is probably desirable that I should now state to the House what amount of ordinary revenue we expect to receive during the ensuing year. I submit the estimates, after my experience of 1875, with very great caution. All I can say with respect to them is, that I think, as far as myself and my hon. friend the Minister of Customs can venture to form an idea in anticipation of the actual fact there is a reasonable probability of their being realized. I expect to receive from Customs during the ensuing year $13,500,000; from excise, $5,500,000; stamps, $250,000; post office, $1,100,000; public works, $1,700,000—that increase over last year being estimated in consequence of the additional receipts expected to be derived from Prince Edward Island and the Intercolonial Railways. From miscellaneous sources and interest we expect $1,200,000, which makes the total receipts $23,250,000, as against an estimated expenditure of somewhat less than that amount. These figures comprise the main facts to which I think it necessary to call the attention of the House. I think it will be quite obvious to the House and the country that the Government are reasonably justified as holding the present position to be one of a purely exceptional character. Anyone who considers the very remarkable expansion which took place in 1871-2-3-4, and continued very nearly to the close of 1875, can see that that expansion, or inflation if you will, was of a purely exceptional nature, and I believe the present depression will prove equally so. I think the country will recover ere long from that depression, although I admit it is only too likely that the recovery will be a gradual, and in many respects, a painful one.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

It becomes us to consider the various remedies proposed for this unfortunate state of affairs. In the first place, I desire to expend a few words on the general impression which prevails even in quarters where we would hardly expect to find it, that it is in the power of this Government, or any other Government, this Legislature or any other Legislature, to make a country prosperous by the mere stroke of a pen or the enactment of Acts of Parliament. I would like hon. gentlemen in this House and out of it who entertain that illusion—as I consider it—to think to what such a course would lead, and I ask them if they are prepared to pay the price. You cannot have at one and the same time a free Government and a protective Government. If the Finance Minister, whoever he may be, is able to be held responsible for the success of the commercial community, he must have power over that community. If he is to be responsible for the prosperity of our manufacturers, he must decide what persons shall carry on manufacturing, what manufactures they shall carry on, and how much they shall produce. Perhaps, under such circumstances and conditions, an intelligent despot might create prosperity. We find a fine illustration of this in the territory of Brigham Young; but can those hon. gentlemen point to any constituency in Canada, or to any gentlemen representing any constituency, who would adopt such principles as are successfully carried out in that country? I give the Territory of Utah as an illustration, because it is a remarkable proof of what a resolute, determined, intelligent man can do in the way of creating a very considerable amount of industrial prosperity under very disadvantageous conditions, and I also mentioned it for the benefit of those persons who think a Finance Minister can restore prosperity by the mere wave of his hand. There is no use in concealing that the Government have been importuned from many quarters to declare themselves in favour of a high tariff. Some of the gentlemen who have addressed us have done so as the advocates of protection, pure and simple; others, and I think I may say the abler reasoners have contended, and not without force, that circumstanced as we are, in connection with the people of the United States, it becomes the duty of the Administration to meet the peculiar policy of that people with a reciprocal policy in the same direction. I am adverse to indulging in purely abstract discussions on the questions of free-trade and protection; but as a matter of fact, it is necessary for me to review at some length the various arguments advanced on this subject. I don't entirely agree with those gentlemen who maintain that there is no ground for the champions of the Protectionist party. I have always myself been of opinion that in a new country like this there is considerable force in the argument that it is not well to allow ourselves to depend exclusively upon foreign manufactures, and if we do there is some chance that we may be supplied with the mere refuse of exportations. Probably in that way we derive some considerable indirect advantage from the establishment of manufactories amongst us. I am inclined to believe that under certain circumstances a revenue tariff may be advantageously imposed and may afford considerable benefit in overcoming certain temporary obstacles which are invariably in the way of infant manufactures, but I don't believe any tariff can overcome natural obstacles except at a very undue cost. As to the vexed question of the surplus population or labor which is employed by native manufactures, I can only say this: That I think there may be some foundation for it; but still I think the amount of the employment afforded is vastly less than has been alleged. I may also add that the result of the investigations I have made at this and various other occasions, have served to convince me that although it is possible to manufacture a very considerable proportion of articles now imported, yet the number of hands which would thereby derive employment is very much less than supposed.

As to the curious allegation made by the Protectionists that if our manufacturing friends are sufficiently protected it will not increase the cost to the consumer, as sufficient competition will arise to cut down prices so low that we will be just as well off as under the present tariff. I have simply this to say, that I think in time that result would be produced, but I also think it would take time, and during that period a few gentlemen would make large fortunes, while the rest of the community would have to pay an enormous price for that benefit. But I may add, Sir, if that is to be the result, if the desire of the Protectionists is by internal competition to cut down the standard of prices, I would strongly recommend the gentlemen to begin now, and by these means defy foreign competition.

An Hon. Member—There is not much protection in that.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—The Government would be exceedingly glad, and the Finance Minister would be glad to know that they could, with advantage to the whole community, lay on more taxation and obtain more revenue; but, Sir, none know better than some of these gentlemen opposite that the power of any Government to impose taxation is subject to stringent restrictions, and in no place more stringent than in Canada. We have to consider three important limitations—the financial, the political and the geographical circumstances of the Dominion. This Government must have revenue, because they are committed, through no fault of their own, to a very formidable obligations, and gentlemen can see if we put on a high tariff it reduces our revenue just in proportion as it affords protection. Moreover, it is part of the A, B, C of financial economy that high tariff diminishes consumption by raising the prices of goods, and that they also encourage smuggling, and demoralize the people who are subject thereto. They diminish imports by the artificial stimulus which they apply to home productions. In addition to this, there are political difficulties the Government have to consider. Canada, as now constituted, is composed of different provinces, having different and sometimes conflicting interests. That which may be desirable for one Province, may effect others injuriously and unfairly; and that the Government in bringing down a policy must not legislate for any one section, but for the general welfare of the whole Dominion.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

And lastly, we are bound to consider our geographical position, placed as we are alongside the people of the United States. We have had their experience as to the effect which a considerable difference—amounting, perhaps, to 20 or 25 per cent.—between the cost of production in Canada, after paying our rate of duty, and the cost of laying down goods in Canada, has had in fostering smuggling from Canada to the United States, and when the cost of production becomes so low that corresponding advantages would be obtained by smuggling goods from the United States into Canada, we would have precisely a repetition of what we had on our own frontier in by-gone years. The American authorities put it at an extremely high figure—higher than I myself think warranted—but in any case I have no doubt that a very considerable proportion of the imports into Canada from other countries paid our tariff and were finally smuggled into the American Republic and paid for by American gold.

The fact is, Sir, it was infinitely easier in the interests of the manufacturers to impose a higher tariff before this Government came into office, when the cost of production was higher in the United States, than it is to-day. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs informs me that, even as it is, he has great difficulty in protecting the revenue against the smuggling of certain articles on which our tariff is higher than the average rate.

Now, Sir, the example of the United States having been quoted very often as one we should imitate and follow with all possible speed, I may say that I too am disposed to quote the example of the United States; and I am disposed to quote it as the best possible warning to the people of Canada not to be led into the delusion of imposing a high tariff. Under the combined influences of their high protective tariff and their paper currency, I believe very grave and serious evils have resulted during the last ten years to the people of the United States. In the first place, it has led to an enormous waste of public resources. It is computed by American statisticians that for every dollar reverting to the American treasury by the operation of their high tariff the public loses three, or, in other words, the waste in the United States by their tariff has amounted nearly to $600,000,000 a year for the last ten years, or a loss of $600,000,000,000—nearly double the entire amount of the national debt of that country. I do not pledge myself to this statement, though it is made by men of considerable weight; but, I will crave permission to read to the House the observations of the Hon. David Wells, made on July 12th, 1875, on this subject. What he says is as follows:—

“For fifteen years now the experiment of Protection to Home Industry has been tried in the United States on the largest scale, and under the most favourable circumstances for success that the world has ever seen, and under its influence the domestic industry of the country, to use a slang expression, ‘has been getting no better very fast.’ Every prophecy so confidently made in the past as to the results of Protection in inducing natural prosperity has been falsified; and one has only to pick out the separate industries which have been especially protected to find out the ones which are more especially unprofitable and dependent. Thus in the manufacture of pig iron, excessive profits have given use to such excessive competition as to render the whole business ruinously unprofitable; a condition of affairs from which there can be no recovery, except through a continued suspension or curtailment of production, the utter abandonment of many furnaces and the utter loss of a vast amount of recklessly invested capital. In the manufacture of silk, the manufacturers although enjoying for many years the protection of a sixty per cent. duty on all manufactured imports, and a free admission of all raw material, are desirous of a still higher duty, and unanimously of the opinion that an abatement of the existing duties to even the slightest degree would be to them altogether ruinous. In the manufacture of wool—an industry in which the representatives of protection were allowed to dictate without interference the exact measure of protection which seemed then desirable, and caused the enactment of duties ranging from fifty to one hundred and fifty per cent—it is sufficient to say that the existing depression and stagnation is without parallel, eight of the principal mills of the country having been sold, on compulsion, within a comparatively recent period for much less than fifty per cent. of their cost of construction; the Glendham mills in particular—one of the largest and best equipped woollen establishments in the United States, advantageously located on the Hudson, about fifty miles above New York, and representing over one million of dollars paid in, having changed hands since the first of April last for a consideration of less than two hundred thousand dollars.”

Sir, these are pregnant remarks, and, without committing myself at all to the details which Wells has given—although he is a gentleman who would not put his name to a statement on these points which he did not know to be well ascertained—I repeat that these remarks are pregnant with warning to the people of this country and the members of this House. My next objection to the system of the United States is this: that, under the combined effect of a high tariff and inflated paper currency, they have imparted an exceedingly strong gambling element into all commercial transactions, to the great detriment of the large business class in that community, and further I say that any man who carefully examines the working of their system will find that their high tariff has tended most materially to enrich a very few and seriously impoverish the great masses of the people. I regard that consequence as of great importance. There is no problem harder to solve than how to distribute wealth in a highly civilized country like ours. You may trust the instinct of the people to acquire wealth, but the difficulty is to distribute it. My belief is that the introduction of a high protective tariff would tend to enrich a few, but it would diminish in the long run the wealth and comfort of the many. This is one among many reasons why I do not believe that we should be asked to imitate the United States in the imposition of a high tariff.

I believe the creation of colossal fortunes such as has taken place there, and perhaps in other countries, does threaten serious mischief. I have no objection to the accumulation of reasonable independences, nor do I indulge any hope of enacting sumptuary laws to limit the amount which any man should accumulate in a lifetime, but I do say that anything which over-rides the ordinary natural laws and operates in the direction of large accumulations in a few hands, is dangerous and ought to be discouraged. I doubt whether it is in the interest of any country that there should be a few colossal fortunes and the bulk of the people should be taxed to contribute to these fortunes, and I venture to say, if I may without infringing the rules of debate, that we have had a noble illustration in this country of how the possession of an unusually large fortune by one man may imperil the best interests of the community. Then, lastly, I have an objection which I think ought to weigh formidably with the Legislature. I believe a high tariff necessarily encourages the formation of rings, and those rings will involve bribery. Every protected interest will invariably form a ring. We have seen enough in past times of the mischief which can be done by large corporations, or rather by wealthy unscrupulous men. I don't want to see a permanent lobby formed for the purpose of watching the re-adjustment of the tariff. I think without its aid those who are charged with that duty are amply able to take care of themselves.

I know it is commonly asserted that the manufactures which would spring up under a light tariff would, at any rate, add considerably to the population of the country. Now, I have carefully considered this point, and my opinion, formed from studying the working of this in Canada and from such information as I have been able to collect from gentlemen who are familiar with the question in the United States, is that the effect of a high tariff is not to add to any extent to the population of the country, but to promote an artificial transference from the rural districts to the towns and cities at the expense of the agricultural interests. If you discriminate against the agricultural interests, if you enact that they shall receive less from the results of their labour than they would without your interference, then you undoubtedly promote an artificial transference from the country to the town. I have no objection whatever to see our towns and villages increase to any size that may be desired by a natural and healthy growth, but I do not approve of this artificial transference. I do not think we should stimulate a movement that already exists too largely. I have seen hundreds of men who would have made successful farmers, forsaking the rural districts to enter into commercial pursuits for which they were very indifferently suited. There is not the slightest doubt that this has been one—although I will not say a very great—cause of the commercial depression in this country. Many persons having quitted their associations in the country and become small shopkeepers and tradesmen of various kinds, and by their competition with each other have added to the depression which prevails. If hon. gentlemen will look at the last census returns for the several Provinces, and Ontario and Quebec especially, they will see that my apprehensions on that score are not altogether unfounded. Although it is quite true the population of Ontario increased considerably from 1861 to 1871, it is nevertheless the case that at least fifty out of our eighty-eight electoral districts, the rural constituencies hardly increased at all, and an analysis of the census will show a very large proportion of the increase, where it did take place, was not in the townships, but in the towns and villages. In Lower Canada, it is well known there was hardly any increase at all outside of the cities of Quebec and Montreal. If any hon. gentlemen are disposed to assert that the reason our people have forsaken our rural districts was because there was no more room for them there, because the fertile country was entirely occupied and well cultivated, I must respectfully dissent from that proposition. I say there is ample room in our rural districts, and it would be a most profitable diversion of our capital and labour, to send them to the country to cultivate it better than it is tilled at present, and I earnestly recommend that course not only to some of my hon. friends, but to the people they severally represent. I do not deny the policy of the United States may have fostered, and perhaps considerably fostered, certain special industries. I think this exceedingly likely.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

It would be a great wonder if, after the enormous tax they have inflicted on themselves, they had not done so, but I doubt very much whether those industries are worth what they cost to the people of the United States, and I doubt still more whether, if they had adopted a more rational policy and let their manufactures severely alone, they would not have been in quite as prosperous a condition as we now find them.

I believe the people of the United States have harmed themselves a great deal by the peculiar policy they have adopted. I do not at all mean to deny that they have, at the same time, harmed us considerably. I have pointed out several reasons which lead me to believe that if a great depression prevails in the United States because of over-protection there, it must react very disadvantageously on the people who are engaged in the same occupation here. I regret that this is so; I desire if I could to remedy it, but when we are asked to deal with a peculiar exigency affecting any industry or class in this country, we must consider what effect it would have upon the bulk of our population. Neither do I wish to lose sight of the fair play which is due to our manufacturers. It is undoubtedly a hardship they should be excluded from the markets of the United States, while our tariff enables American manufacturers to compete with them in ours, or, as it is called, slaughter their goods here. But I doubt if the fact that the Americans have done themselves and our people a great deal of harm, is sufficient ground for asking the Government of this country to inflict a lasting injury on the people.

Now, Sir, I am afraid I am tiring the patience of the House. (No, no; go on.) Although I don't make much use of scrap-books, I would claim indulgence while I read a few remarks from an eminent American paper. It is always well to see ourselves as others see us; and there are some things in the article I hold before me which I think we may without any harm consider a little. The article is headed "Protection in Canada," and is as follows:—

"A recent discussion in the Canadian Parliament shows that there is a very formidable movement in the Dominion to so revise their revenue tariff laws as to apply the theory of 'protection' to Canadian manufactures. Regarding this movement from a purely selfish American point of view, one is inclined to wish that the Protectionists of Canada will carry their scheme through. It will be largely in the interest of the United States Government to have such a system of high tariff duties adopted in Canada as will place the two countries on an equal footing in this respect. As it is now, Canada has the decided advantage. The Canadian products of the farm and forest have the same foreign market as the product of the United States. The Canadian farmers and producers get as good prices abroad as the farmers of New York, New England, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, and better prices than the farmers of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota, because the latter are further removed from the European markets, and have to sacrifice more in the way of transportation. At the same time, the Canadians are able to purchase all their manufactured goods at from 25 to 40 per cent. less than the people of the United States, owing to the absence of the protective element from their tariff. This circumstance has developed a gigantic system of smuggling all along the border from Maine to Oregon, which amounts, in the aggregate to perhaps not less than $25,000,000 annually. If the manufactured goods in Canada are placed on the same plane in the way of tax as the manufactured goods in the United States, this amount of money will be saved to American shopkeepers and manufacturers, and the vicious and demoralizing custom of smuggling will be checked to that extent. As long, therefore, as the United States are cursed with a species of robbery known as protection it is to our interest Canada shall be similarly cursed, in order that the Canadian farmers and people generally shall be compelled to compete on equal handicapped terms with their neighbours on this side of the line, and that the enormous smuggling business shall be stopped. Government loses several millions a year of revenue from the evasion of the Custom House duties, and our shopkeepers, and tailors, and manufacturers are deprived of many millions of dollars of demand for their goods. When the Canadian tariff is advanced to the beastly high level of our protective crushing machine, the natural advantages of the United States will enable our dealers and manufacturers not only to secure the trade they now lose, but to sell more goods in Canada than at present, as everything will become dear and high priced over there, except agricultural products, lumber and fish.

"At the same time while fighting to rid this country of the incubus of protection, it would be unfair not to expose the folly and stupidity which have prompted some of the Canadians to seek a repetition of our own disastrous experience. This new movement on their part is prompted by the recent financial depression in Canada, which has been falsely attributed to the difference in the tariff laws of the two countries. The fact that this is not true may be readily demonstrated by a comparison between the foreign trade of the two countries."

Here follows a resumé of the imports and exports of Canada and the United States, copied from the official returns of the respective countries:—

"The foregoing figures show that Canada, with only a million more people than the State of Illinois, and not so many as the State of New York, has a foreign business about one-fifth as large as all the United States, with eleven times as many people, and natural resources infinitely superior. The Dominion is almost destitute of those great and essential elements of strength and development, coal and iron; neither has she in quantities which pay for working such minerals as gold, silver, lead, copper, zinc, or mercury; her petroleum wells are little better than delusions."

I do not quite agree with this, I may remark.

"And she is wholly lacking in those rich, agricultural staples of cotton, corn, tobacco, sugar and rice. Yet the extent of her shipping and commerce, and the value of her surplus products, are truly remarkable for a country of so scanty population and restricted natural resources.

"The reason for this large commerce and the prosperity of her farmers, in spite of all the natural disadvantages, is simply because Canada has had a tariff averaging only about 12 per cent., while the United States has had a tariff averaging 48 per cent., or four times as much. The Canada tariff has been a tariff for revenue only; the United States tariff has been a tariff for protection—against consumers.

"It is absurd in the face of this shewing to claim that a protective tariff will be of any benefit to Canada, especially to her farmers, and lumbermen and fishermen. It is true that there has been a decline in the value of the commerce of the Dominion during the last year, but there was a marked increase every year up to 1874. The falling off of the last year has amounted to about 10 per cent., but it can all be accounted for by the decline in prices; there has been no decrease in the bulk of the trade. But this failure to maintain the ratio of increase in the past has been owing simply to the commercial depression that has prevailed throughout the entire world and with special hardship in the United States, Canada's nearest neighbor and chief customer. The general depression in this country was brought about directly by the two evils of over-protection and an inflated irredeemable currency. Canada has suffered infinitely less than the United States. As to any other difference in favour of the United States, it must be looked for in the enormous natural advantages possessed by this country. If Canada possessed the rich and vast deposits of coal and the great mountains of iron which the United States have, and if she were blessed with a climate that would grow corn, cotton, tobacco, sugar, rice, peaches, grapes, and oranges, the difference in her tariff laws would enable her to completely outrun the United States in commerce and manufactures; but these natural disadvantages cannot be offset but will only be increased, by the adoption of the protection fallacy. If, however, Canada desires an experience of her own in this respect, and is not satisfied with ours, let her try the experiment and see how it works."

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Who wrote it, and what paper is it?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—It is the Chicago Tribune, 21st Feb., 1876. Does my hon. friend mean to insinuate that I was a party to write that article? I have no such influence over that influential paper, the Chicago Tribune. We have had proof enough in the various debates of the great diversity of opinion which prevails with reference to this most important subject. It is natural enough that there should be diversity of opinion; and all I will say on that point is this: the Government have felt it their duty to give the most anxious attention to all manner of evidence, and to weigh every kind of information which has been laid before them. We do not desire to conceal that the responsibility that rests upon us is most grave. We don't desire to conceal that the result we have arrived at has been attained by an anxious protracted deliberation, as to whether we could at once relieve our manufacturers and yet do justice to the other portions of the people. But when we are asked, as now, for radical changes—changes which will affect our whole system and policy, financially, politically, socially and morally—I say we may well pause and hesitate before we reverse what has been after all the uniform policy of all Governments for twenty-five years. Whatever arguments may have been used, it still remains the fact that the Canadian tariff is substantially a revenue tariff; and if we are asked to create a high protective tariff, all I can say is that even if I have been mistaken, in any case the time chosen for these proposed changes is most inopportune. There have been, as we know, violent disturbances in trade and in values, rendering it almost impossible for any man, no matter how experienced or how skilful in commercial matters, to estimate with anything like accuracy the consequences that would flow from any radical changes in the tariff. We are not at all in a normal condition of affairs here. We have got enormous engagements that will tax our resources to enable us to fulfil them, and some of which it will be out of our power to fulfil in any shape; and if ever the onus was thrown on gentlemen asking for radical changes, of establishing a perfectly clear case in their own favor. I say the onus is now thrown upon those who advocate a high protective tariff. Let them consider for one moment what they ask this Government to do. They ask us to tax nineteen-twentieths of the population for the sake of one-twentieth. I am quite aware there is considerable misunderstanding and misapprehension on this point. I am quite aware that many gentlemen, looking simply at the ordinary statistics furnished by the census returns, believe the manufacturing interests represent three or four times as large a percentage as I have stated. But if these hon. gentlemen will take the trouble to examine these returns minutely, they will find that of the 200,000, or thereabouts, set down as engaged in industrial pursuits, probably 75 per cent. must be taken as not interested in protective movements, and precisely the number I have named are really to be considered as in any way interested in that direction. Of our industrial population, at least 40,000 are engaged in the lumber trade, and to those a high tariff would be no sort of an advantage, but rather a serious impediment, as necessarily to alarmingly increase the cost of lumber. The industrial population also comprises 10,000 or 12,000 blacksmiths,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

&c., engaged in serving the agricultural population; and a very large number of carpenters, and innumerable other trades of similar character. Far be it for me, however, to deny justice to a minority. But, on the other hand, there must be the most imperative necessity for sacrificing the prosperity of nineteen-twentieths of the population for such a small minority, and when these gentlemen allege that this is a slaughter market, and that American manufacturers make sacrifices here, I do not at all desire to deny that this aggravates the case of our manufacturers, but I may say that the evidence laid before us does not bear out the assertions that have been made, at any rate, to anything like the extent to which these assertions have been made. There is no doubt that immediately the cost of production in America became cheapened, there was an increase in the number of articles brought into this country, and that although advantageous to the bulk of our people, it did press with severity on a certain portion of our manufacturers. But there is also no doubt that a very considerable number of our manufacturers, embracing three or four of the most important trades, and employing a very large proportion of the number I have mentioned, do not dread American competition at all; but are afraid of British manufacturers. And this is a point which the House would do well to bear in mind—that a good deal of the American competition is not competition of American with Canadian industries, but American with British manufactures, the Canadian consumer being benefitted by the operation. Moreover, Sir, we must recollect that when, as has been the case recently, there has been a very large reduction in the demand for articles of foreign production, there will naturally be a large reduction in the demand for home manufactures also. When the state of things is such that we find that the importation of articles in the 17½ per cent. list, which contains the articles with which our home manufactures come into competition, reduced in six months to the amount shown by the trade and navigation returns, we must conclude that it is only natural and inevitable that there should be a considerable reduction in the total demand for the latter also. It must further be borne in mind that were we to impose a high tariff we would have to impose a high tariff all round; and that if we impose a high tariff all round, it will assuredly affect and affect largely the general cost of production of these manufactures which are thus protected. This effect has been produced time and again, and is actually the case at this moment in the United States, where many of the ablest manufacturers are convinced, from the extent to which the cost of production has increased from this cause, that they would be able to manufacture more cheaply and make more money if they had the tariff reduced to something like an equality with ours. There is no interest in this country which more deserves the favourable consideration of the Government than the lumber interest; and I have not yet received one demand for protection from the able and intelligent representatives of that industry in this House. Whether they are to come or not I do not know; but this much I may observe, that the imposition of a high tariff would affect them, and affect them very seriously, and that those who are engaged in that great industry have an interest in this matter quite apart from that of these persons who are now demanding an increase in the tariff. It may be well to remind some of my hon. friends that if we were to undertake a general and thorough revision of the tariff, we might find it necessary to do a little levelling down as well as a little levelling up. They must bear in mind that there are several very important articles on which the tariff is at present prohibitory; and I must caution them that it might be exceedingly difficult to get the Legislature to avoid the conclusion that there was no reason for an exceptional favour being shown to the producers of those articles in this country. Up to the present time our tariff has been exceptionally liberal; but it is noteworthy that as the country grows older the tariff even if unaltered tends to become more prohibitory, and the tariff which a few years ago might have admitted foreign articles freely may with the growth of the country become prohibitory in a short time. Then we have to consider a little the rate of the taxation which the people of this country at present labour under, as compared with that which prevails in other countries. The rate in Canada is low enough; but taken per se—considering the fact that a population of scarcely four millions are obliged to raise every year $23,000,000 or $24,000,000 to defray the expenses of the Dominion Government alone, irrespective of what they must contribute for municipal purposes—we must be very cautious how we increase the burden further. Every family in Canada has to pay from $25 to $30 towards meeting the expense incurred on their behalf by this Legislature. That represents something not very far from the value of a month's labour; and that, though it can be borne, is a serious drawback on the productive power of this country. I am cautious enough—Conservative enough, if my honorable friend likes—to regard every increase in taxation as a positive evil in itself. If we must impose additional taxation it must be for the benefit of the whole country, for the purpose of maintaining the public credit or carrying on the public works in which we are engaged. This is practically a question of cost and it is also to a certain extent a question of convenience. Theory apart, there are very few of us who would object to a moderately low rate of duty, or would care much to be found opposing a tariff, though in defiance of free-trade theories, which would bring a large addition to the population of the country at a very moderate cost to the remainder of the population.

On the other hand, there are very few I think so enthusiastic that they would be willing to submit to a high rate of duty if it were demonstrated to them that it would make but a small addition to the number of the people. What the country needs at present is more time. It is undoubtedly in a depressed condition, but a condition which I believe, unless some further disaster overtake us, will be only temporary. I have pointed out that there were numerous causes for that state of depression, and that they were causes over which the Government had no sort of control. I have pointed out that those causes have largely contributed to bring about the present distress, and I may add that had we been more cautious in the past, had we refrained from anticipating all our resources and throwing valuable reserves away, we might have been in a position to try more experiments in legislation than we can now. I say this is no time for experiments. This country requires all the revenue its people can contribute, and it would be a dangerous thing for us to enter upon a policy, the issue of which no man can at the present perceive. I will not detain the House long now. I think I can conclude my remarks by six o'clock, and I believe that will be most acceptable to my honorable friends. Reviewing, therefore, as briefly as I can, the general position of this country, I take it to be somewhat this: I do not believe (although the comparison has been often made) that we are at all in so disastrous a condition as that in which we were in the year 1858 and the years which immediately succeeded. In my opinion our position is very much less serious. The causes which have brought about the present state of things are clear and well defined; and they are far less likely to be permanent than the causes which led to the depression of 1858—a depression which is no doubt exercising a powerful influence on the minds of the people of this country at this moment. Let us consider what was the state of things at that period. We had in 1858 just concluded a period of heavy expenditure on railroads, chiefly supplies out of foreign capital which, compared with our present resources, would have amounted to two or three millions expended during the past four or five years. There had also been an increase in the price of staple articles of produce owing to the Crimean war, so great that in some cases for the amount received for two or three crops men were able to pay for their farms. This led to widespread inflation. We do not see these causes at work now. I think we will have, on the whole, but a temporary depression; and it is for that, and that only, that we will have to provide. Let us consider the favourable points. We have at present a condition of things in which we find our exports scarcely diminished, except in one article. We have a full Treasury; we are not obliged to be immediately to the English market; ample funds are provided for carrying on our public works and meeting the public debt as it matures. A large part of our expenses during the past two or three years, as I have pointed out, were of an exceptional character, not likely to occur again. I admit, and always have admitted, that there was a considerable inflation from 1871 to 1875; but it is very important that the House should bear in mind that along with and underlying that inflation there was a great and general advance throughout this country. There is no doubt that Canada has made very remarkable real progress during the last ten years. No man can look at our great cities, no man can acquaint himself with the condition of the agricultural population without seeing that what I am saying in that respect is literally true. I depend on the gain of six years of growth to bring us back to the position we occupied in 1871, which, I think, may be regarded as a fair normal year. I have deliberately rejected all abnormal and extraordinary growth, and depend on the natural growth which, even in the worst times and under the worst circumstances, we have found fail in Canada. In dealing with this matter the Government had have to consider very carefully, not what was to the interest of any one Province, in any one class, but what was to the interest of the whole Dominion.

In concluding, I may say, Sir, I am extremely sorry that I have been obliged to differ in opinion with some friends whom I value highly. I admit that there was considerable force in the arguments they employed. Undoubtedly a great deal of distress exists among certain classes and in certain parts of this country; and I regret exceedingly that the Government have not been able to see their way to relieve this distress, except at the risk of inflicting ultimately very great and permanent injury on the whole population of Canada. Although the hard times affect the poor people, they also are seriously detrimental to the Government, and every Administration, no matter what its opinions may be, must be most sincerely anxious—if it knows how—to remove such a state of things, and create general peace, plenty, and prosperity.

Sir, we have been called upon for a national policy. Our policy as a policy of justice to the whole Dominion, and of prudence and economy, until this present trial be passed; but I do not propose, for the adoption of the people of this country, a policy of which it can only be said that it is a servile plagiarism of the blunders which the United States have committed, blunders of which, I verily believe, the American people are now repenting, and from which I trust they are very steadily succeeding in extricating themselves. The policy which I have the honour, on behalf of the Administration, to propound for the acceptance of this House and this country, I desire to repeat, has not been arranged hastily or inconsiderately; and, if we are wrong in this matter, we have at least neglected no effort, we have spared no pains, and we have taken all possible trouble to convince ourselves that we were right in the course we have decided on.

Sir, I have the honour to move that you leave the Chair; and that the House do resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

The motion was seconded by the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER rose to reply, but the hour being Six, the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—In rising to offer comments upon the Address which has just been delivered by the Hon. Minister of Finance, I must first congratulate that hon. gentleman upon the very able manner in which he addressed the House. When the hon. gentleman rose to speak I confess that he had my sympathies. I felt, Sir, that a gentleman standing in the position of being compelled to admit that all his predictions in reference to the financial condition of the country had proved erroneous—that in fact he was mistaken with reference to revenue, with reference to expenditure, and with reference to the condition of the Dominion—that he had been unable in the slightest degree to forecast the condition of public affairs—demanded the sympathy of those who knew and felt that a suffering and intensely interested country were looking to the hon. gentleman for some means of relief. But, as he proceeded, my sympathy changed to admiration—admiration for the tact and ability with which the hon. gentlemen was enabled to encounter a position the most trying and difficult perhaps that ever any gentleman in this country, holding the high position he holds, had to encounter. Although I was unable to concur in many of the opinions the hon. gentleman advanced, no person could listen to the manner in which he endeavoured to extricate himself from his difficulties without feeling that he had brought a large amount of ability and a great deal of tact to his assistance.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

I must join issue, Sir, with the hon. gentleman in his premises, that it is not in the power of the Government of the country to promote its good or mitigate the evils likely from time to time to arise. The position that the Hon. Prime Minister has elsewhere adopted, the position that the Hon. Minister of Finance has taken to-night, that matters of trade and commerce are beyond the control of Government—that they must look on, as idle spectators, that the country may prosper or sink into decay, and the Government are helpless to promote the one or avert the other—is a principle to which I cannot give my concurrence. The honourable gentleman has admitted that under a system of despotism something might be achieved—that if the merchants and the manufacturers would give him despotic power over their fortunes and over the conduct of their business he might accomplish something for them. I don't think that the past history of the honourable gentleman, the experience the House and the country have had of him as a Minister of Finance, are likely to induce either the mercantile or manufacturing interests of this country to entrust him with those arbitrary powers which he says are necessary to accomplish anything for their good. I believe that the prosperity which Canada enjoyed uninterruptedly from the date of union—that marked, that striking and unexampled prosperity—down to the accession to power of the honourable gentlemen opposite, was largely due to the wise political measures of the great Liberal-Conservative party. Gentlemen who look, as my honorable friend from Toronto Centre does, with amazement and are almost startled at the wonderful advance of the trade of the country, and are unable to account for it, must not forget that that great political change which was then brought about gave an impetus to the trade and commerce of the country that has been attended with most beneficial results; and I believe the wise policy pursued by the late Administration in carrying on vigorously the public works stimulated that prosperity and continued it from hour to hour and day to day.

But the hon. gentleman must be congratulated on the fact that he shines in adversity. When he came into the heritage he now enjoys, the country was flourishing from end to end. We could look in no direction without meeting the gratified faces of men who felt their fortunes were being improved. But when the hon. gentleman stood in the position of Finance Minister, we were pained to listen to his dismal, doleful utterances as to the deplorable condition in which he found the country. I must congratulate him again that he has exhibited one of the greatest traits that man can exhibit in showing that it is not in prosperity, but in adversity that he shines to the greatest advantage. Now, when surrounded by what he is compelled to admit is a country suffering from the severe depression which we all deplore, when we find a revenue unequal to the expenditure of the country, when a deficit of over a million, within the last nine months, is shown in returns submitted yesterday, instead of giving us the same dismal, painful picture of the country, he meets it with a triumphant smile, and intimates that whatever is our condition, the Minister of Finance is supremely happy.

I must say, Sir, that I differ from the hon. gentleman on another point, that is the cause of the present condition of the country. There is no question that can be submitted to this House or engage the minds of an intelligent people more importance than the cause of the present depression. In order to discover what remedies are necessary to be used, we should satisfy ourselves as to the nature of the disease and what has produced it. And here again I must differ widely from the hon. gentleman as to his estimate of the cause of the present financial depression. I never said, and I do not say now, that this condition of a country in which trade rises to a certain height of prosperity, and then meets with a check and depression, has not affected this Dominion, but I say it is the business of the Government to meet such a condition of things and by wise and statesmanlike measures to mitigate it. But the Government has no such policy. I have said elsewhere and I repeat it here, that if all the talent of the Administration had been concentrated on the means of increasing the present commercial depression there is no single measure that they have left unattempted in order to bring about the condition of things that now exists. I hold that it is by the mal-administration of affairs, the bad policy, or the want of a policy of the Administration of the day to a large extent the commercial depression of the country has been intensified and the sufferings of the people increased.

In making a charge so grave against the Administration of the day I am bound to give some reasons for the conclusions at which I have arrived. One of the strongest reasons I conceive that can be adduced is the course the hon. gentlemen opposite pursued in order to destroy the measure propounded by the late Government for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Hon. Minister of Finance a year ago stated to the House that he relied largely for the revenue upon which he was calculating, upon the expenditure upon public works. The hon. gentleman pointed to the condition of Ontario, and attributed its prosperity to the enormous amount expended upon public works. I say it was consistent with that policy that measures should be devised by which foreign capital could be brought into the country for investment. Nothing was more calculated to carry on the country in a prosperous condition and inspire hope in the breasts of the people of the Dominion than the construction of the railway that would give us communication with the rich prairies of the Great West and the country on the Pacific slope. But the measures our opponents adopted, and the combinations they formed for the purpose of destroying that scheme, I look upon as one of the main causes which have resulted in the present depressed condition of affairs.

The first step that the Hon. Minister of Finance took after attaining office was to shake the confidence of the people of this country in the sound condition of the country by the proclamation to the world of a deficit that did not exist. I am glad to-night we have reached that stage when the question may be settled conclusively and forever set at rest. On the first occasion when the hon. gentleman made the announcement I proved from his own figures that no deficit could occur in connection with the current expenditure of the year. The hon. gentleman in the first instance placed in the Speech from the Throne the statement that a deficit had occurred in the current expenditure of the year that would require an application to Parliament to meet it. Another year rolled round and I was able to show the hon. gentleman by figures and data furnished by himself that instead of that year having closed with a deficit, it had closed with a considerable surplus. I showed that charging the year 1873-4 with all that the Government had received under the new tariff—charging the year with all the Government had collected under the increased taxation, that charging the year with the increased amount paid in from the Excise Department there was still a handsome surplus at the end of the year. But how was I met? I was met by the hon. gentleman with the statement that two millions of dollars had been discounted from the revenue of 1874-5 for the year 1873-4. I had credited him with all that was paid in from the Excise Department, but in addition to that the hon. gentleman claimed a million and a half as paid in by Customs. I met the hon. gentleman by saying that with a large decrease in the imports of 1874-5 it had shown during the first six months of that year a large increase beyond the portion to be derived from the increased taxes, and thus proved that the hon. gentleman's statement made a year ago—and which he ventured to reproduce to-night—was utterly unfounded.

Now, I will show him that unless he can put a million and a half dollars in two places at once, the year 1874 closed with a surplus instead of a deficit. I will show that the hon. gentleman claimed that although there would be a pause in the commerce of the country we had no reason to anticipate a retrogression. I will show that the hon. gentleman relied for his calculation upon the statement that the imports for 1873-4 would only give $22,000,000; he put on $3,000,000 additional taxation, that would give $25,000,000 for the year 1874-5. His estimate was $25,250,000. As this is a matter of some little importance, and the first serious blunder the Finance Minister made in the discharge of the duties of his office, I will draw the attention of the House to the hon. gentleman's own statements to show that there was a surplus instead of a deficit. We were told that the taxation was increased to meet the deficit of 1873-4; but in his speech a year ago the hon. gentleman said "the taxation was imposed, not so much to meet a deficit in the year then closed, as to meet future engagements." In January, 1874, the Hon. Minister of Justice, in his speech at Walkerton, confirmed the statement that, instead of that taxation being imposed (as the House was led to believe) to meet a deficit in the current expenditure, it was imposed for the purpose of constructing the Canada Pacific Railway. I will read the hon. gentleman's statement:—"In January, 1874 it had been found necessary to increase the tariff " to meet the obligations contracted in "the time of their predecessors, and enable us to place the credit of the country in such a position that the necessary funds should be provided for the construction of the Pacific railway."

Now, Sir, I might rest my case on the fact thus admitted, that the increase of taxation which they brought forward immediately on entering office, was not intended to meet any existing deficiency in the current revenue but for the purpose of providing for remote contingencies in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. If you look, Sir, in the Public Accounts of 1874, on page 12, you will find $1,705,256 entered by the hon. gentleman himself, as paid during the years 1873-4, out of the current revenue to the capital expenditure of this country; and if you glance at the Public Accounts for the present year you will observe three-quarters of a million more set down as having been paid during the past year to capital expenditure out of current revenues. I will now complete the argument to which I have drawn the attention of the House, to show that from the hon. gentleman's own calculations there was not only no discount from Customs in 1874-5, but that he has all the money under his tariff and estimates he could secure that year, without one dollar having been abstracted for 1873-4. In the Budget Speech of 1875, page 4, the hon. gentleman said, "One and one-half millions, if not more, were anticipated in consequence of the expectation that new duties would be imposed, and were in fact borrowed from the revenue of 1875." That is the statement I am now controverting. He also stated—on the same page—"Of that increase, no less than two millions is due to the present tariff;" and also—in the same speech—"On the whole, I do not think that we can receive a larger sum from the present source than twenty-two millions." This was on the imports of one hundred and twenty-seven millions for the year 1873-4; and in order to obtain the means of covering the expenditure of twenty-five millions, three millions of additional taxation must be imposed. He said, "As far as it is possible to form a calculation, I may say, in passing,

"that if a sufficient amount of taxation is now laid on to meet the present gross annual expenditure, that in view of the gradual growth of the country." The hon. gentleman did not then claim that there would be any retrogression in our imports, and he thought that the worst that could be anticipated was a pause—"that in view of the gradual growth of the country, although I do not believe it will be to the same extent as we have hitherto seen, we may be able not only to meet the requirements of the current year, with a small margin over, but to dispense with the necessity of additional taxation for a considerable period, if not altogether."

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Hear, Hear.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—So, Sir, the three millions of additional taxation the hon. gentleman imposed was to be sufficient to secure the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway without any application to this House for anything further, according to the hon. gentleman's own statement. He also said, as will be seen in the Budget Speech of 1875, on the 16th of last February:—"That, to the best of my judgment, the House must make up its mind to a temporary pause in the imports; but I have no doubt that if the House were willing to give the Government the supplies they demanded, these supplies would be ample to enable us to meet present expenditures and make provision for our future liabilities." I have called attention to the hon. gentleman's own words to prove that he expected no diminution in the imports; and that the three millions of additional taxation were necessary, if there was no check in the imports, to give him $25,250,000. Now, what did he get? The imports for 1873-4 amounted in value to $127,514,549; and for 1874-5, to only $119,618,657, showing a decrease of $7,895,892; and yet, Sir, the hon. gentleman who told the House one year ago that one million and one-half had been discounted from the Customs revenue for 1873-4, obtained with this reduction of nearly eight millions, $24,648,715. If with the new taxes he had secured the revenue he estimated, had the imports not increased, he would have received during the year 1874-5 no less than $26,225,990, so that unless the hon. gentleman can show the House that he can take out of the revenue of 1873-4, $1,500,000, and yet have that sum for the next year, I have established by his own figures, that he has obtained from the Customs the entire amount he estimated he would have; I will give the House another evidence in a manner I take to be entirely incontrovertible, of the fact that he occupies a false position.

The receipts in the revenue for 1875 were $8,443,532 for the first six months, and $6,605,125 for the last half year; if anything was discounted my hon. friend will admit that it must appear in the accounts for the first half of the year.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Oh, yes; and whether he does or not, I have proved that, unless the hon. gentleman can have one and one-half millions in two places at once, the ground I maintained a year ago—that he had mis-stated the financial condition of this country when he asserted that there was a deficit—is conclusively established. I say that this was the second cause of depression, and the hon. gentleman knows that there is no way of checking commercial prosperity and deepening financial depression more quickly or more thoroughly undermining the confidence of the great mass of the people in the soundness of the existing condition of public affairs, than by taking the course he has pursued.

Now I come to another point of very great importance—which I believe has produced a more disastrous effect throughout this country than even those to which I have already adverted—the attack made in London by Mr. Potter on Canadian enterprises. There is no country in the world whose present and future prosperity depends more thoroughly and completely than Canada upon the preservation of confidence abroad among capitalists with reference to her great industries and undertakings; and I feel that the Prime Minister only did his duty when in answer to the onslaught made upon our character and credit and every great work on which our progress and advancement depends—he obtained a complete and exhaustive reply. I do not hold the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House guiltless for these damaging and disastrous statements, for I believe that Mr. Potter, the President of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, would have never made them as he did if he had not been concerned with the hon. gentlemen opposite in the attempt to prevent the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and, going further, I will show that they stand before this House and country as endorsers of every false statement Mr. Potter has made in the London press in order to deprive Canada of her credit and position. The Prime Minister called upon Mr. Brydges to answer, and he only characterized Mr. Potter's statements accurately when he declared that they were "reckless and false averments." I will read the words of the gentleman: "They were charges which were absolutely false; the charges were wild and reckless statements, and violent attacks upon Canada," and were "unfair, unjust, and false statements, and sneers and insinuations against allies." This language was appropriately used, and what followed? Mr. Potter published a letter, which I hold in my hand, and which he has circulated throughout the length and breadth of England, and beyond its shores; and in it he shows that if these were "false, reckless, unfounded, and unjust statements," and "false averments," by means of which it was endeavoured to undermine the credit and character of Canada and prevent our people obtaining a single dollar of British capital to carry our enterprises forward, Mr. Brydges was the author of them all, and I say that while he remains an officer of this Government after the publication of this letter—Mr. Potter having quoted Mr. Brydges's own words, and given day and date for every one of these statements, while he holds the high and responsible and almost irresponsible position he does in this country—the Administration stand as endorsers of Mr. Potter's libel upon Canadian enterprises. Does the hon. gentleman suppose that it would not benefit the Dominion if the capital could have been secured for the construction of the Northern Colonization Railway from Montreal to this city? Is there a man in this country, who knows anything of this undertaking who doubts that it was a sound commercial enterprise? And yet for the allegations made by Mr. Potter producing such a state of paralysis in all our enterprises, Mr. Brydges is shown to be responsible, and consequently while the latter holds his present high office the Government is also responsible. I will not detain the House by reading his averments, though I could prove, step by step, that our public enterprises, both in Upper and Lower Canada, have been prostrated in the market of England by the false statements made by that gentleman, to Mr. Potter.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

Well, Sir, the next step taken by the the Hon. Minister of Finance to the great injury of Canada, was made in the Budget Speech he delivered in 1874, when he not only charged that a deficit existed, but he also portrayed our financial position in terms that could have no other effect than to cause dismay in the minds of all persons who placed the slightest reliance on his opinion. He told the House that if we proceeded with the construction of the Canada Pacific Railway, we would impose upon the Dominion a debt relatively larger than the debt of England or the United States; and having taken that ground the Administration committed themselves unreservedly to the policy of carrying on this railroad to completion as a Government work. Every person in or out of the Dominion, relying upon the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's statements, could only then come to the conclusion that our financial position was more deplorable than that of any other country, and expect at an early day that we would be ruined by a most oppressive taxation. The hon. gentleman not only provided for the construction of this railway as a Government undertaking, but he generously added the building of 360 miles of road outside of the Pacific Railway proper, involving seventeen or eighteen millions of dollars of additional expenditure. The hon. gentleman at the time undertook to give us a remedy, and that was the tariff upon which, by the way, the Hon. Minister of Justice passed a high encomium in his speech to the electors of Walkerton?

I believe he did me the great honour to quote me as an authority for having borne my humble tribute to the wonderful skill of the Minister of Finance in the construction of that tariff. He must imagine that the people at Walkerton whom he was addressing on that occasion had very little acquaintance with the press or public matters. Did he suppose there was any person there so ignorant as not to know that the tariff which he was eulogizing and to which I had the honor to pay an indirect tribute, was not the hon. gentlemen's tariff at all?

My hon. friend the Premier, at Saranac, on the eve of an important election in Montreal West, claimed credit for the Government having given 2½ per cent. additional protection. Had my hon. friend and the Minister of Justice forgotten that the tariff which was brought down to this House was laughed out of it? Had the hon. gentleman forgotten that the Finance Minister, after producing his tariff with a 16½ duty, came back, after his tariff had been ventilated in the House and outside of it, with some thirty changes to meet the views of the people and their representatives? I think under these circumstances it was scarcely competent for the Minister of Justice to pass a very brilliant eulogium on the wonderful genius of the Minister of Finance. Why, at this moment the tariff is complained of as possessing anomalies of a very serious kind. The hon. gentleman knows a very serious blunder was made in the imposition of the tariff on wines. He knows that the policy he propounded, instead of being calculated to give aid to the industries of this country which wanted protection, was diametrically opposed to them. The hon. gentleman knows this was the analysis given to the tariff as introduced by the Finance Minister—wines were to give \$200,000; brandies and spirits, \$200,000; silks, satins, velvets, jewellery, &c., \$400,000; unenumerated list, all that could promote protection, \$500,000; tea and coffee, \$400,000; metals, iron, &c., \$100,000; machinery, implements, ship materials, &c., \$350,000. I do not think there was much protection in taxing machinery that for the purpose of fostering our industries we had allowed to come into our country free. So, out of the whole \$3,000,000 it was proposed to raise \$500,000 out of the 16 $\frac{2}{3}$ duty and if that tariff was remodelled in all respects, it was done in deference to the gentlemen on this side of the House and public opinion outside of it. But it was sufficient to convulse and disturb the trade of the country. Everything up to that time had been going on in the most prosperous and satisfactory manner, and until the hon. gentleman, without the slightest excuse or necessity as far as the current expenditure of that year was involved, startled the whole country by the cry that for the purpose of meeting current expenditures he must have \$3,000,000 more revenue, and in addition to all that, the Pacific Railway was to be constructed as a Government work. I don't think that was calculated to promote the prosperity of the country, but to bring about just such a condition of affairs as we have to-day.

Another step of the Ministry was entering into an engagement to build the Pacific Railroad in fifteen years, without the qualification—if the resources of the country would permit that to be done without increasing taxation. There are fourteen years left for carrying out the contract binding us to construct that road without any regard to the resources of Canada, or how severe the taxation may be which it may involve. That was the next step—a step calculated to shake the confidence of the people of Canada as to the ability of those who occupied the Treasury Benches to manage the affairs of the Dominion. In his speech at Halifax the Hon. Premier stated the British Empire, with all its resources, could not construct the Canadian Pacific Railway in ten years, and yet, inspired by the same sort of Dutch courage which seems to animate the Finance Minister to-night, he was ready to pledge the faith of Canada to construct in fifteen years a work which the whole resources of the British Empire could not accomplish in ten. I am not surprised that a policy like that had the effect of shaking the confidence of commercial men in the ability of the Government, and producing alarm as to our future.

Then we had Mr. Brown's Reciprocity Treaty. Is there an intelligent man in this country who supposes you can send an ambassador to Washington and publish to the world his propositions—propositions that struck terror and dismay into the mind of every man engaged in manufacturing in this country—without inflicting the most disastrous consequences? Is there any one who supposes that the announcement of such radical changes could be made without producing an effect more injurious than anything else—that is, making every man who has a dollar to invest afraid to make any use of it for fear these startling changes would cause him to sustain loss instead of reaping benefit? It would be impossible to over-estimate the disastrous consequences of the policy propounded by Mr. Brown or the effect of that draft treaty, abortive as it was, in producing the commercial depression by the uncertainty it created as to what changes were to be made.

Then we have the loan of 1874. I say I believe the Finance Minister made a great mistake in the interest of Canada when he went to England in 1874 and mortgaged the revenues of our country imposing $20,000,000 additional debt upon us. I say he took a course most injurious to the interests of Canada because he did that which no Finance Minister is warranted in doing. There is nothing more unjustifiable than to negotiate such a loan without having a necessity for the money. Now, the hon. gentleman did not require it. When we were discussing the matter a year ago the hon. gentleman was asked, "Why did you want so much money?" He answered, "It is inadvisable to go to the money markets of the world too frequently, and in order to avoid that we put a larger loan on the market than we required." On the 15th of June last the hon. gentlemen had remaining unused $15,000,000 of the $17,500,000 realized from the $20,000,000 loan. It is known he loaned to the banks a very large amount of money, and when he was challenged with having suddenly called, by a circular issued from his department for the return of this money, a defence was entered into by the hon. gentleman's paper in Kingston, the British Whig.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I must decline the honour of having an organ of my own.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I say no man living could have written the article except the Finance Minister or somebody in his confidence, because it undertook to state every dollar at the disposal of the Government and where it was. It said: "it is true he is calling "in $5,500,000 or $6,000,000, but there "is still eight or nine millions left in the "hands of the banks." Therefore by the evidence of the Canada Gazette and the statement of the amount of money the hon. gentleman would have when this was called for, he had $15,000,000 of this loan in the banks of Canada and with their agents in England, on the 15th June last.

I believe the time has come when it is necessary to deal with this question. I believe the hon. gentleman is responsible to this House and to the people of Canada for borrowing money that he did not require, and has done much to cause this financial depression by the way in which he has used it. He was correct to-night when he said that one of the causes of the depression in trade was inflation. He was correct when he said that the banks were largely to blame for it, because they had put their money out, and at such times they would lend it to men of straw.

Now, Sir, I ask the hon. gentleman if there was not a condition of things that required contraction in the trade of this country, as undoubtedly there was, for there is no question that the inflated condition of commercial affairs had assumed a very decided aspect and was doing a very large amount of injury? But in that crisis of the country, when inflation was deplored, what did the hon. gentleman do? He borrowed fifteen millions on the credit of Canada and increased that inflation by loaning it to the banks. In the first place this was fraught with disaster. The financial depression increased and the hon. gentleman became alarmed, and he then having rushed into one difficulty in order to escape it, rushed into a worse one; and that was sending to the banks a vaguely worded circular that caused alarm, by suddenly calling upon them to repay the whole of it. The very first thing that looked like a financial crisis was when the hon. gentleman issued that circular. The banks instantly shut down on their customers; men who, in consequence of this fifteen million being placed in the hands of the Government had been obtaining money, suddenly had their discounts shut down upon, and the whole country was in a state of alarm of financial panic; and it was only after the press of the party to which I have the honour to belong, and notably the press of Ottawa—the Citizen—attacked the hon. gentleman and brought a pressure to bear upon him that he withdrew his circular, and thereby showed that he had made a mistake in issuing it, when he had other resources to fall back upon. I give that as one cause, and one of the principal causes for the commercial depression and financial crisis that has existed during the past season. But I have another objection, and a very grave one to this course. I say it is a corrupt policy. These gentlemen professed to be upholders of purity in public life, and that their great mission was the elevation of the standard of public morality. I want to know if this is not corrupt, and calculated to produce corruption? Why, Sir, what have we had? I will venture to draw the attention of the House to one or two facts in this connection, which I think will convince the House that no measure which the power of the Government can exercise is so fraught with corruption as their power to allow public money to be distributed amongst banks in the manner practiced by the present Government. It is unfair in the first instance, for one banker can get his capital without paying for it, because I must tell you that millions of this money has not only been scattered amongst the banks, but given here and there in half millions at a time, without any interest whatever. And so while the people of Canada are paying interest upon the debt created two years ago in England, the hon. gentleman has been giving half millions of it at a time for months and months, and I may say a year together, to those to whom he was disposed, without their paying one single dollar of interest. Is it corrupt or is it not corrupt to put any Government in the position or any Finance Minister in the position of placing $500,000 of the public money without any interest in the bank of a supporter? And when one of these bankers is a Senator and was a gentleman to whom the Government were looking for support, it assumes a character which makes it impossible to prevent the intelligent and independent men of this country from believing that their money has been sacrificed in the very worst way which it is possible to conceive. It will be in the recollection of the House that a very remarkable letter was written by one of the great purists of this country, a gentleman who has been loudest in all the country in demanding that we should have purity of elections. I will detain the House for a single moment as this is a matter which merits a good deal of attention. I refer to the Hon. George Brown, the editor of the Toronto Globe, the great organ of the party, and the great outside means of upholding the standard of public morality. The letter was as follows:—

TORONTO, 15th August, 1872.

"MY DEAR SIR:—The fight goes bravely on, but it is hard to work up against the enormous sums the Government candidates have in their hands. We have expended our strength in aiding the out-counties and helping our city candidates, but a big push has to be made on Saturday and Monday for the East and West Divisions if we are not to succumb to the cash of the Government. We could carry all three divisions easily but for the cash against us, and if we carry the first on Saturday, the other two will go with us in spite of all the cash they can muster. We therefore make our grand stand on Saturday. There are but half a dozen people that can come down handsomely, and we have done all that we possibly can do, and we have to ask a few outsiders to aid us. Will you be one? I have been urged to write and comply accordingly.

Things look well over the Province; with all their money, we shall beat them hollow in Ontario, and things look bright in Quebec.
Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

"Faithfully Yours,

GEO. BROWN,

"Hon. John Simpson,
&c., &c."

Well, Sir, I have the sequence of that letter, and that is the letter written by the Hon. John Simpson, to whom the letter I have just read was sent, and the President of the Bank of Ontario. The Hon. John Simpson says he never has expended any money corruptly. I am not going to challenge the accuracy of his statement, especially as he is not here to answer me. But as this letter is public property, he cannot prevent people where there is a very strong sequence from forming their own conclusions. And we find that this worthy President of the Bank of Ontario, thus invited to come down handsomely whatever he did in the way of money used his influence in the most potent manner by issuing a circular to the parties dealing with the bank of which he was President, calling upon them in virtue of the benefit it would be to the Bank of Ontario to sustain the present Government. He says, "If they are sustained, our bank and the other Ontario banks, and through them the country, will have the use of the Government surplus until required. May I ask you to give my old friend Mr. Cameron your candid hearty support."

I say that this was followed up by the fact that the Hon. the Minister of Finance did lend large sums to this Bank, for I have just taken up a couple of returns from the Canada Gazette, to show that whether or not this hon. Senator made a "big push," he was duly remembered by his friends upon the Treasury Benches. I find that on the 30th June last this worthy gentleman who is asked to "come down handsomely" has in his possession $669,194 of the public money of Canada without paying one dollar interest. Now, I ask if I am not right in drawing the attention of the House to this statement as a proof of mal-appropriation of public money, and, as calculated to create the impression that that money was issued for purposes of corruption. I have in my hand a return up to the 30th September, and I find that while he had been generous enough to the Government to return a small sum of it, still he has $598,084 of the public money without a particle of interest being paid. There is a large amount outside of that. I may be told that the other banks could have obtained it and on the same terms. I say that this is an entire fallacy. Mr. Simpson would not venture to accept the money unless he dare use it. He having "come down handsomely" and being a good friend of the Government could use the money, but another person not having the same claims and influence dare not use the money, because it would place him in the power of the Government to destroy him. I give that to the hon. gentleman as one of the modes in which he has used the money which he secured by a loan and obtained without necessity -- a use which was neither creditable to the Government, safe for the country nor calculated to promote confidence in the gentleman administering public affairs.

But, Sir, there is another objection. What do these gentlemen think of the independence of Parliament Act? Is it a farce? No members of this House are allowed to accept one dollar for their services, no matter how valuable to the Government, thus preventing the possibility of the Government by the use of public money influencing the action of any member of this House. But where is the force of this independence of Parliament Act, with Mr. Wilkes sitting alongside of me, he being the Vice-President of a bank that has Government money without paying interest, and with Mr. Simpson and Mr. McMaster, of the Senate, with nearly a million in their hands? Men in the position of Mr. Wilkes would be told: "If you are not careful of the line you adopt, we will take away our deposits." All he has to do is to utter one independent sentiment in this House and he will receive a polite note from the Minister of Finance to say: "We will require that money." And yet these gentlemen are going to uphold public morality and are sticklers for the independence of Parliament. Who does not remember that a gentleman of the highest character and standing, was hounded almost to death because, in respect of public services, he accepted a comparatively small stipend. I refer to Mr. Grey, a presiding Judge of British Columbia. And yet the gentlemen who protested so loudly about that can give half a million of the public money for a year without interest to one of their supporters. Yet these gentlemen want to know why all public confidence has been shaken in the administration of public affairs, and why there is a pause in the prosperity of the country. I tell them that measures like this are admirably calculated to do this. We now come down to the loan of 1875. I have shown that on the 20th day of June the hon. gentleman had fifteen million of money distributed among the banks, and before the close of the year the same gentleman who had told us that we had borrowed a good deal more money than we wanted—because it was very disastrous to enter the money market too often, at the time of a great commercial crisis, hied across the Atlantic for the purpose of negotiating another loan. People could not understand it when they looked at the Hansard and saw what he had said, to see him now, although with a surplus in his hands, wanting still more. The hon. member for Montreal West has kindly given us a solution of that. I will read it from the Herald, the organ in Montreal of the hon. gentleman opposite and the property of the hon. gentleman upon the Treasury Benches.

The hon. member for Montreal West, in fact shows us that the Finance Minister, instead of withdrawing the ample deposits held by the Government in Canadian banks, negotiated a fresh loan in England to enable Senator Simpson to obtain the use of one-half million of the people's money placed in his bank, the Finance Minister therefore went to London, not in his Ministerial capacity, but as the agent of the banks for whom he borrowed money. I have no doubt that my hon. friend from Montreal West is correct in what he has stated, and that what he gave to the people of Canada through the Montreal Herald, are the real and valid reasons why this new loan was made in accordance with principles contrary to those the hon. gentleman has always propounded.

Mr. WORKMAN—Will the hon. gentleman permit me to explain? I had no communication whatever with the Government. I occupied, unfortunately, the position of a Vice-President of a Bank, and the withdrawal of the deposits at a time when such stringency was prevailing, was producing a great deal of distress.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I am extremely gratified to hear this, for my hon. friend has furnished me with the best evidence of the entire soundness of my argument.

Mr. WORKMAN—And I think he was quite right in doing so.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—So they are really corroborated and sustained by the hon. gentleman, who is perhaps as well qualified to give us the facts of the case as any one in this House.

I now approach another subject that I believe has also a good deal to do with shaking the confidence of the people in the present Government. You cannot destroy the confidence of the public in the Administration of the day without producing commercial and financial mischief. Why, any person who listened to the eloquent, animated and impassioned appeal addressed to the House by the Finance Minister to-day would suppose they were placing the people of Canada under the deepest obligation for their economy when he was adding to the public debt of the Dominion. The statement was received with an enthusiastic cheer as if he was paying it out of his own pocket. Generous in the last degree, he borrowed money on the public debt, and I trust that he duly appreciated the enthusiasm with which the announcement was received. But the people of Canada had been led to suppose by the declarations of hon. gentlemen opposite when they were on this side of the House, that when they received control of public affairs a new régime would be inaugurated, that all would be economy such as never before had been practiced. There was no charge hurled against us with such persistency as that we were extravagant. Well, we were liberal with the public money but it was because we had to be liberal with it. Under the low tariff of 15 per cent. we were able to take off $2,000,000 per annum from the public taxes, making tea and coffee free, although we carried on the affairs of the country on that generous scale which we believe contributed to the best interests of the country and to its prosperity. Yet when these gentlemen came into office they proclaimed that there was a deficit. They saddled the country with three millions of additional taxation, and they imposed a duty on tea and coffee, which was by us admitted free, yet from the time they attained power their expenditures have been extravagant as compared with our own. Previous to proceeding with my remarks on this subject, I must complain of the manner in which the Finance Minister keeps the public accounts. A year ago the subject was very fully discussed in this House, the hon. gentleman having occasion to make an explanation in this regard; and I had hoped that it would be unnecessary to allude to it again. Although these hon. gentlemen have always declared that everything should be above-board, and that we should have the fullest information concerning all public business, the people have never been treated in such a way as by this Administration which is bound to publish the state of the revenue and expenditure monthly. Yet down to this hour such statements for the month of March have been suppressed, and despite the efforts of the press this information could not be obtained. I scan these matters with the closest attention, because every public man must on them form his opinions with reference to the financial position of the Dominion. The Opposition has the right to complain strongly in this connection, for such information was always furnished the hon. gentlemen opposite when they occupied seats on this side of the House. It is the same with the Railway Accounts. The Canada Gazette published monthly the returns of all Canadian railways, and this was done down to March. Everybody is aware that a great controversy had arisen between myself and hon. gentlemen in this House regarding the tariff introduced by Mr. Brydges on the Intercolonial Railway, and which we claimed was bad. It appears that loss was experienced in the receipts of this road confirming my view, but the returns were published until March, when a large decrease took place, and from that hour to this, we have been unable to secure precise information in this relation. But that is not my only charge against the hon gentleman in relation to the public accounts. The House knows the controversy I had with the hon. gentleman opposite because for the purpose of swelling the expenditure of 1873-4 in order to extricate himself from the false position which he was in by having proclaimed that there would be a deficit for that year; he took from the capital expenditure half a million and charged it to current expenditure; and what was his answer. I have it here in the Hansard.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

Well, Sir, we had to submit. The hon. gentleman took the half million voted by this House for capital expenditure, such as the construction of snow sheds half a mile in extent and similiar work on the Intercolonial Railway—money that ought to be legitimately charged to the Intercolonial Railway construction account, as much capital expenditure as it is possible to conceive anything to be, and it was charged against us in the accounts for 1873-4 because the hon. gentleman declared that the capital account of the Nova Scotia and New Brunswick Railway had remained open long enough. But he has done a great deal worse. He asked the House, consistent with the principle he had propounded here, to vote $800,000 for change of guage on the Nova Scotia and New Brunswick Railways, chargeable to current expenditure; and he has in the Public Accounts, for the purpose of extricating himself, gone back on himself and taken nearly half a million of money that, in the Statute Book, is appropriated for current revenue, and charged it to capital. When his necessities require it he charges as current revenue what belongs to capital, and when it suits him he takes half a million of current expenditure and charges it to the capital account. I think that is a course which will not receive the approval of any gentleman on either side of the House who have any regard for the way in which public accounts should be kept on any honest principle, by which one year can be contrasted with another. The difficulty was this: that with all their vaunted professions of economy we find their expenditure on those roads larger than ours. If you are allowed to keep accounts like that you may make a surplus or a deficit just where you like.

Having given that explanation with regard to the mode of keeping the accounts, I come to this retrenchment question. And what do we find? I will take the expenditure of last year. I find that in 1874-5 the expenditure over 1873-4 for civil government was $25,582. The gentlemen who denounced us, when they stood where we now stand, as having the public offices filled from garret to cellar with useless, unnecessary people for the purpose of providing salaries and places for our friends, have found places where they could crowd a few more; and instead of showing retrenchment to the extent of $50,000, on that service they spent $25,825 more than we did in our most extravagant year. That year, 1873-4, does not afford a fair contrast for ourselves, because those gentlemen came in and governed during the last half of that year, and were anxious to swell the expenditure and create a deficit. But as we were in office that year, I take it, although 1872-3 would be more favourable for my purpose.

An Hon. Gentleman—Why?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—For a great many reasons. Does the hon. member not know that in 1873-4 came the readjustment of the debt, the operation by which we had settled the difficulty between Ontario and Quebec, and had given a large sum of money to other Provinces to carry out their system of public works, and that there were expenditures largely increased over the previous year? If the hon. gentleman does not know that, he ought.

I come next to the Administration of Justice, and I find that in 1874-5 they have spent $38,386 more than we did. They may tell me that is statutory, but while the hon. gentlemen sit upon the Treasury Benches they are responsible for their increase of statutory expenditure as well as any other. We then come to superannuation; and I find notwithstanding the large amount expended by us, and we dealt with every necessary case, in their first year they exceeded us by $12,856 more than we ever expended. And I am not surprised at this. When they want a place for a supporter, when any hungry office-hunter desires employment, some officer is superannuated to make room for him. I met a gentleman yesterday as hale and hearty as ever he was in his life, and I asked him why he was not at his work. "Oh" he replied, "I am superannuated and am receiving $1,200 a year, while another man is filling my place at a larger salary." That man was being paid a large sum for doing nothing, who was as able to do the duty as at any other period of his life. This is only one instance, and there are many more of them. That, however, accounts for the increase of $12,856 on the public expenditure for superannuation.

On militia they have spent $35,567 more than our expenditure for 1873-4.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—More than the largest?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Yes; more than the expenditure of 1873-4.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—It was more than $800,000 within.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I say that your expenditure for 1874-5 is $35,567 more than our expenditure for 1873-4. I undertake to make that statement, and shall be obliged if the hon. gentleman can make any corrections. In Ocean and River service they spent $45,742 more than we did in the previous year. In Miscellaneous, which covers a great many things as all know who have been in the Government, and which prevents going into unpleasant details, their expenditure was $29,448 more than ours. With regard to Customs, I dare say the House remembers that I was charged with a large increase in that department. That increased expenditure, however, was because Parliament placed a sum of money at my disposal for the purpose of readjusting salaries. I thought we attended to that matter on a tolerably liberal scale; the present Administration, however, were of a different opinion and evidently considered we had not been extravagant enough, and they went over our expenditure by $24,374. In the Post Office Department their expenditure was $133,984 more than ours.

I was very much amused in reading the speech of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, at Walkerton, the other day. He said that not only the Postal Treaty was an admirable one, but that financially it was beneficial. But the hon. gentleman did not take the trouble to look at the Public Accounts, or even read the speech of the Minister of Finance, in which that gentleman told the House that, although the advantage of a person wishing to send a letter to the United States had been increased by the reduction of the postage, we must prepare for a considerable increase in the expenditure and decrease in the income. I don't think it is a financial success to make the expenditure $133,948 more than we ever paid.

For the collection of minor revenues, which is a matter which costs a comparatively small sum, there is an increase of $11,496. For the Mounted Police we have an increase of $133,984, and for the North-West organization $14,440.

Just in a few of these items, which I have run over to make a comparison as my eye rested upon them, the increase of this economical Government is $505,829 above the largest expenditure we ever made in that of 1873-74. I will now give a slight resume of the sort of retrenchment and economy they propose to inaugurate, and show how much money they ask the House to vote in this time of deep distress which demands the most rigid economy. I shall contrast their estimates for 1876-7 with our expenditure of 1873-4, in which our largest expenditure occurred. For Civil Government they only ask $10,718 more; for administration of justice $148,349. The latter we are told is statutory, but it is a statute placed on the book by themselves. They claim great credit on account of that measure. They say the late Government year after year brought in a bill for the establishment of the Supreme Court and were unsuccessful. But they do not consider that there was no great hurry for the consumation of that object. We had no Minister of Justice anxious to take his seat on the bench of that Court, and therefore no one had a personal interest in pushing the measure. We failed to establish this Supreme Tribunal, but it was our opinion that it would be time enough to pass a Bill of that character after a full and ample discussion when the members of this House should have come to some agreement as to what powers the Court should exercise. But the present Ministry put an Act on the Statute Book and organized the Court before some of the hon. gentlemen behind them were agreed as to its powers. I may say, however, that it is a tribunal which should be organized at some period, but there was no hurry and the country would not have suffered, in my judgment, if the additional $100,000 imposed on the country had been saved for some time longer.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The hon. gentleman is entirely over-stating the estimate of the Court.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I find that the administration of justice last year cost $38,000 more than the previous year. This year it is $148,344 more. If that addition is not in the Supreme Court, it is somewhere else.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I may take the opportunity here to refer to another matter which is somewhat connected with this subject. During a very interesting tour with the Prime Minister in North Renfrew this matter came under discussion, and I read with great pain and regret some remarks in the Times newspaper of this city charging me with having attacked the late Minister of Justice, now a Judge of that Court. I take this opportunity of saying that I made no attack upon that gentleman, and also that I believe no greater mistake could be made by any public man than to attack any one charged with the administration of justice without the very gravest reasons—reasons that would warrant him in asking this House to impeach the gentleman. That article was an entire misapprehension. My attack was upon the Prime Minister. I was referring to the speech he made at St. Andrew's Dinner, one which I read with pride and pleasure, when the Hon. First Minister stated the time had arrived when no man holding any position in the country was anxious to promote a severance of Canada from the 'rown. I reminded my hon. friend that the Hon. Postmaster General stood committed to those opinions, and I also said that a gentleman has been recently placed on the Bench of the Supreme Court who had been an advocate of the independence of Canada. I made no charge against the hon. gentleman. I should be sorry if I had done so; and having this opportunity I may state that while the late Minister of Justice sat in this House he enjoyed the respect of both sides and filled the high office he held with credit to himself and the country.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I believe my hon. friend has given a correct version of what he said at that meeting.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I am much obliged to my hon. friend for having corroborated my own recollection, because sometimes in the heat of political discussion one does not say exactly what he intends to say.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear—

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—But I can assure the House that is not the case on the present occasion. I have said exactly what I felt in regard to the Hon. late Minister of Justice. I come again to the question of superannuation, and find this retrenchment Government, those gentlemen who have declared that the remedy for the evils we are now suffering from was to pare down the expenditures of the country, only ask the modest sum of $30,557 more than we expended on that service. On the collection of Customs, although they expended last year $24,374 more than we did this year with all their retrenchment and economy they ask the House for $39,392 more than we expended. In the Inland Revenue service—I am not including weights and measures—a large additional charge that goes into action for the first time, and I would be sorry to object to the expenditure.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE — Whose Statute was it?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER — I am very proud to be able to claim the paternity of it—for the Inland Revenue service outside the weights and measures they ask for $24,982 an increase on last year and more than we ever expended on the same service. In the Post-Office Department I showed that last year they expended $133,984 more than we did. They propose this year to spend $345,230 more than our expenditure during 1873-4. On Indians they propose to spend $155,287 more than we did.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Is there anything wrong in that?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The late Government kept the Indians pacified with less. In these few items these gentlemen have increased the largest expenditure of the late "extravagant" Government by $769,918.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance a little while ago told us in making up his statement of the expenditures that we must take out certain items—the boundary survey for instance. I quite admit that in the explanation he gave he was justified in making that objection, but he will allow me perhaps, as he has taken the liberty of adjusting the figures, a little to say that he can hardly charge the $69,000 of Customs refunds to the expenditure of 1873-4. He must admit that wherever it goes it must come out of the account for 1873-4. I add that to his balance of $396,655, and then I come to the error in the railway accounts. My hon. friend must either take out of the expenditure of 1873-4 $545,605 of capital expenditure charged to the revenue of that year, or he must charge the expenditure of the last year with the amount that he has charged to capital expenditure which was voted for revenue. He cannot put both on one side, so I add the $69,000 of Customs refunds, which never ought to have been expended by anybody, and I add $545,605 taken out of capital expenditure and put to the charge of 1873-4, and it gives a total of $1,000,580 of money expended in 1874-5—more than the largest expenditure of the late

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

Government. Now, I come to a part of my remarks in which I have the pleasing duty of complimenting the hon. Minister of Finance; and you can scarcely imagine how agreeable it is to me, after the painful duty I have had of subjecting the actions of the hon. gentleman to fair and legitimate criticism. Mistaken as the hon. gentleman's policy has been, he has shown there is a redeeming feature in his political character. He has shown he is not unsusceptible to improvement; he has shown that instead of obstinately refusing to be taught he is willing to be instructed. It was my duty a year ago to criticise the loan negotiated by him. I am prepared here to sustain the criticism I then made as to the comparative value of the loan. I said the hon. gentleman had not done justice to the country in that negotiation. We contended, the late Government having obtained the boon of an Imperial guarantee, that when the hon. gentleman wanted money he was not doing justice to the people of Canada by keeping that guarantee in his pocket, and floating unguaranteed Canadian debentures on the London market. The hon. gentleman accepted that criticism, and when he went back to London to borrow money again he used the Imperial guarantee, the result being that, instead of Canadian debentures selling at a discount of 12 per cent. he has placed them on the market at a little below par. He was not above drawing a little wisdom from the gentlemen on this side of the House, and when he went to England last time he gave to the people of that country a fair and candid exhibit of the position of Canada. I shall point to that evidence from the hand of the Hon. Minister of Finance himself when I want to shew to the people of this Dominion that out of the mouths of these gentlemen, when they want to get money, they are obliged to confess that the administration of public affairs in Canada under their predecessors presented such a record as few countries in the world could exhibit. What was the result when he used the Imperial guarantee and did justice to his predecessors, showing how they had carried the financial position from point to point until they stood in the proudest position in which any country could stand? He could then put his loan on the markets of the world on terms favourable to our people. I challenged the policy of the hon. gentleman in making his loan in 1874, fixing the price, the rate of interest, the discount and the period at which they had to run, and then saying, "Who will take the bonds?" By this means he prevented capitalists from competing so that we could obtain the largest possible amount for the debentures. I say when the hon. gentleman fixed the rate of interest, fixed the discount and said to the capitalists, "How much will you take?" he made it impossible for Canada to obtain all that it could obtain if he had followed the precedent of former Finance Ministers. It formed a precedent under which any Finance Minister could place half a million of the peoples' money in his pocket without ever being detected. He said, "Those who do not hear from me will know that nothing has been allotted to them." It meant that the hon. gentleman could arrange with whom he pleased before hand as to who should have the loan. And there is a very remarkable circumstance in connection with this. When I said more money was tendered than was asked for, the hon. gentleman said he only got the loan by getting the financial agents to take a million pounds themselves.

The papers laid before the house two days ago proved that £5,148,000 sterling was offered for the four million loan. I said it was a suspicious circumstance that the financial agent should get a million of that loan.

In negotiating the last loan the hon. gentleman went to England and put the guarantee on the market, adopting to the letter the principles we propounded from this side of the House as the principles that should prevail in placing a loan. In his application for tenders he asked the capitalists to state in their offer how much they wanted, the price they would give, and he also took care to inform the English public that the financial agents would not take any of it. Because he felt that to give a million to the very people to whom he was bound to go and ask what terms he should put this loan on the market, was calculated to surround the whole transaction with suspicion.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I beg to state that the financial advisers were reluctant to take that million, and I had to use great pressure to induce them to take it.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—There was no necessity for them to take it as there was more than enough offered without, but as I said before, it is with pleasure I find that the hon. gentleman, bad as he is, is not unsusceptible of improvement, and the advice that has been offered from the Opposition side of the House has been received in that spirit of meekness that such advice should be received, and the country to-day stands in a better position, financially, than it would have done if that advice had not been accepted.

The hon. gentleman gave us some reasons why he wanted at this particular moment, contrary to everything he had stated in the House, to negotiate this loan. I hope there was not a motive kept back when he was making a full confession. I hope the impression that has gone abroad is not true, that the hon. gentleman knew that he could not get the Imperial Guarantee if the Order in Council in reference to British Columbia was in the Colonial Secretary's hands.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I beg to state that Lord Carnarvon was fully apprized of the policy and intentions of this Government by the Government before any prospectus appeared in the London papers at all; that Lord Carnarvon had the fullest information of our policy before the loan appeared on the London market.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I am gratified that I afforded the hon. gentleman the opportunity of making the statement. I am glad that the hon. gentlemen are in a position to state that they acted in good faith with the Imperial Government on that transaction, as we feel a paternal interest in that loan.

I do not intend to occupy the time of the House any further on the remarks that have fallen from the hon. gentleman, but before sitting down, as my hon. friend the Prime Minister yesterday stated his anxiety to discuss his policy on free-trade and protection and explain definitely and fully what is his policy, I cannot take my seat without making a remark as to the position that the hon. gentleman occupies in relation to his statement on that question.

We have gathered from the Hon. Minister of Finance what his policy is. A most disastrous condition of things has been brought about in the position of the people of this country by one of the most trying crises that has taken place perhaps for a great many years; and the hon. member for West Montreal—a high commercial authority in this House—declares that for forty years no depression, no financial stringency, and no commercial distress to compare with that which exists in Canada to-day has occurred.

I have explained to the House the reasons why I think it behoved the Hon. Minister of Finance to present some scheme to Parliament and the country by means of which the Government might aid in giving relief, and the hon. gentleman's attitude reminds me of a caricature made, I believe, on the Duke of Wellington at the time that he refused to pass the Corn Law Bill, he being represented as General Distress, giving the word "Starve"—so the hon. gentleman looks complacent from the Treasury Benches, and he also as General Distress gives to the expectant public of Canada the word "Starve!" He says it will be painful to emerge from the difficulties into which you are brought, but we intend to let you work through. If you look to the Government for any relief in your troubles you will look in vain; our's is a policy of laissez faire. We are going to enjoy the sweets of office, and govern the country from our own standpoint, regarding with complacency its unhappy condition without raising a finger, or making the slightest effort to ameliorate or alter it in any respect—this is the policy propounded, and whether it is satisfactory to this House or to the supporters of the Government in this country remains to be seen.

But, Sir, I now come to a question of great importance to this House and the Canadian people. I shall give the

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

Hon. the Prime Minister the opportunity of explaining some matters that certainly require explanation at his hands, with relation to what his views are concerning the trade policy which ought to be pursued in this country; and I will offer extracts from a very interesting volume containing speeches delivered by the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie. I find that the hon. gentleman, while in Dundee, in the course of a very able speech which he made on that occasion, propounded some very remarkable views in reference to the balance of trade. We have heard a number of gentlemen on both sides of this House exhibit great anxiety in this regard, they seem startled when they discover that our exports are not nearly equal to our imports, concluding that this is rather a serious matter, but they will be relieved and delighted to learn that instead of this being a misfortune, when the exports are insignificant compared with the imports, the larger the difference between exports and imports, the more the latter exceed the former, the richer and more prosperous the country. I wonder the hon. gentleman did not repeat these sentiments here when he found his own friends on his side of the House.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE I repeated them here in the first place.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—When his friends exhibited such alarming anxiety on account of the disparity between our imports and exports, he certainly ought to have given them the benefit of this most gratifying information.

He stated on that occasion—"A Parliamentary friend of mine was privately discussing this subject with me; He said, the country is going to ruin. the balance of trade is against us. Our exports last year were so many millions, and our imports so many millions more, and we are poorer by the difference between the imports and exports. I said we cannot be poorer, because the difference between the exports and imports represents the profits we have had, you send a cargo of 10,000 barrels of flour to Spain, which costs $50,000, and sell it for $90,000; with this $90,000 you buy other products and bring "them back to Canada, the balance of trade would be against you in this case to the extent of forty thousand dollars, which would also be the exact amount of profit on the transaction. In this way you account for the difference of import and export." All I should say after this is we should regret that the margin is not a great deal more than it is; if this be true, instead of being anxious when we find the exports of Canada falling so far behind the imports, our only anxiety ought to be to have them ten times as great in order that we might in consequence be ten times richer; but, Sir, I would like my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and the First Minister to get together and settle the question. This very night the the Hon. Minister of Finance was deploring the excess of the imports over the exports as a calamity.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—No, Sir.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—My hon. friend deplored it as a great calamity and expressed great regret in this relation; but my hon. friend the First Minister ought to have explained to the Hon. Minister of Finance his error; and informed him that instead of having cause for regret or anxiety, he should be proud to know that this was the state of things, because we were thereby much richer than we would otherwise have been.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I made no such statement.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—It is not pleasant, I know, for these hon. gentlemen to have their heads knocked together. Now, I will give the view the First Minister expressed on the question of free-trade; and what did he say?

"You were pleased to refer to my political opinions upon one subject, and while I quite concur with you, that in such a meeting it is, perhaps, not proper to speak of local politics; still I think in the higher branches of political life we may refer to political principles. I take the true meaning of the term 'free-trade' to be the complete removal of all restrictions upon trade so far as that can possibly be done. I believe myself that the principles of Richard Cobden and the principles of free-trade over the world are the real principles of civilisation---[applause.] That, I think, is the view generally taken by the people of Canada. We have amongst us, no doubt, as you have amongst you, people who have the idea that the free-trade principle is to build up a high stone and lime wall to prevent people coming in or going out, who say: 'Let us keep the trade to ourselves, and the money in our country.'"

Now, Sir, these are the views which my hon. friend expressed in Dundee, and I would not complain particularly of them if he did not propound any other views in other parts of the world. When asked in our various spheres and constituencies, the important question, "What are the principles of the Prime Minister of Canada on the question of Trade policy?" it is very important that we should be able to give a plain, straightforward and satisfactory answer; but I cannot answer such a question unless you give me the latitude and longitude of the hon. gentleman at the time he makes a speech. In the latitude and longitude of Dundee, the hon. gentleman is an out-and-out free-trader; but when he came back he learned that the seat for Montreal West was vacant, that it was important one of his supporters should be elected, and that to this end he must modify his views on free trade. Accordingly, in the latitude and longitude of Sarnia, he stated, not that the principles of universal free trade were held by the people of this country, but that to him the manufacturers owed $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. more protection and increase to this extent over the tariff of the late Government.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Read the speech.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Well, Sir, I must complain that this speech is not to be found in this volume; they have not given in it, I think, the Sarnia speech.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I think they have.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I beg my hon. friend's pardon; the Halifax and Prescott speeches have been left out instead, notwithstanding the great deal of trouble the collaborateur has taken.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman will find no difference of opinion in my speeches on that subject.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—He said this—"I stated in my speech of 1874 that when we found the revenue of the country would not be “met by the imposition of this duty,

 “it would become necessary to impose
 “more, and that it was impossible, if “my view of the public obligations had “to be met was correct, that the 15 “per cent. duty should continue to “suffice. The result of our exper“ience was that within a year
 “we found it necessary to increase the “duty on imports to 17 $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent.,
 “and that is the duty at present in “existence. We have, therefore,
 “given an incidental protection to the “extent of 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ more than had been im“posed by the previous Administra“tion. This might be a sufficient “answer to those who have been ac“cusing me of having in view to “inaugurate a free-trade policy.”

I want to know if this satisfies my hon. friend. And now I repeat I cannot tell what his views are on the trade policy unless I find out the latitude and longitude of the place where he speaks. I am not yet done with my hon. friend the Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am glad of it.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I must go a little further before I close respecting his views on free-trade and protection. I hold, in my hand, Sir, a letter written by Sir Alexander Galt on this question, and what does he say?

“Though a free-trader theoretically “myself, I have always recognized the “necessity and advantage of adapting
 “the application of principles, in them“selves sound, to the circumstances of “our country, the habits of our people,
 “the conditions of our climate, and our “political relations to Great Britain
 “and other countries. My views on “this subject have ripened, but have “been in no respect changed since, in “1859 I then arranged the tariff, and “subsequently modified it in 1866. The “policy adopted then, and which to a “large extent remains in force still,
 “was popularly known as incidental “protection. And Sir, further on:—
 “We cannot and ought not to ignore
 “the interest which our fellow subjects
 “elsewhere have in our revenue policy,
 “but as regards the United States I “frankly declare that they ought to be “dealt with in the same purely selfish “spirit with which they treat us,

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

“for my part, I am heartily tired of “efforts at conciliating the United “States commercially—they meet with “no response, and even existing treaties
 “and laws are administered by them in “a spirit of petty but vexatious exac“tion, I trust that henceforward the sole “consideration will be how our trade “legislation is to affect ourselves, “possibly this course may produce a “wiser policy on their part, more “worthy of a great commercial nation.
 * * * * *

“It is certainly the duty of the “Government to examine the allega“tions of the sufferers most carefully “with a view to their relief, if “practicable, and should such relief
 “take the form of differential duties “against the United States, I “unhesitatingly adopt the position,
 “that we have a distinct and inalien“able, right to impose such duties, if “we choose.”

I ask the Prime Minister if he endorses this letter, regarding which the Globe declares—“The practical result of Sir A. T. Galt’s meditations would be—first, the discontinuation of the work of building the Pacific Railway, and secondly, the re-adjustment of the tariff on the principle of avowed hostility to the United States.”

Now, Sir, having given you Sir A. T. Galt’s letter and the Globe’s commentary, I must say that this conclusion is the very one which every person will understand as perfectly correct. I will also give you a statement of the hon. Prime Minister, which he made in his speech recently delivered at Halifax and the absence of which I may add, from this volume, I deeply regret. He says:

“I have referred to Sir Alexander Galt’s utterances upon this subject because I believe that he represents, perhaps, a good many people upon that question, and I refer also to his utterances upon other subjects for a moment because I believe he is mistaken in reference to some of these matters. He says he would adopt such a policy with the United States as would be independent of any action of theirs in relation to the introduction of their goods into the Dominion, and that the tariff must be regulated to suit Canadian interests only. That has been my policy all my life, and I refused to go into a Government of which he was a prominent member—the Chancellor of the Exchequer—because I conceived that his policy of 1866 would lay us at the feet of the United States commercially.

I refused for that reason, so that I am glad to know that if we differed ten years ago, we are in entire harmony at the present moment as to the policy to be adopted by this country."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I say that now.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Here is Sir Alexander Galt declaring that the time has come when he is disposed to readjust the tariff in, as the Globe declares and as his language expressly says, a hostile manner to the United States. And the hon. gentleman who at Dundee was a Cobdenite and a Free-Trader, and an incidental Protectionist at Sarnia, down at Halifax goes the entire length of Sir Alexander Galt, and says the time has come when this country must have a defensive policy against the United States who have shut us out of their markets. Does the hon. gentleman adhere to that statement?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I never said that.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Sir Alexander Galt says:—"As regards the United States, I frankly declare that they ought to be dealt with in the same purely selfish spirit with which they treat us." And the Premier says:—"We are in entire harmony now."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I said nothing of the sort; I am amazed at the hon. gentleman making such a statement.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The hon. gentleman said "hear, hear," when I read this "I am glad to know that if we differed ten years ago, we are in entire harmony at the present moment as to the policy to be adopted by this country."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman had come over to my view.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Is that the view which I have just read, or is this his view? "It is certainly the duty of the Government to examine the allegations of the sufferers most carefully with a view to their relief if practicable. And should such relief take the form of differential duties against the United States, I unhesitatingly adopt the position that we have a distinct and inalienable right to impose such duties if we choose." But I have something a little stronger than that to give you. This hon. gentleman knows that when a Government supports a Candidate for Parliament, it is compelled to sustain the policy that he propounds to the electors. The hon. gentleman knows that when this vacancy occurred in Montreal West, he went down there himself and brought out the present member for the constituency by his personal influence after that gentleman had refused to become a candidate. What was the policy propounded by the hon. gentleman from Montreal West, which he came to this House to carry out? Here it is:—

"We must look to it that we protect our own interests, especially the manufacturing interest. That great nation (the United States) has gone on and prospered, but the tide of adversity has now overcome it, and their manufactures are flooded; their surplus stock is being brought into competition with our own manufactures. They bring their stock to our market, sell it for ready money, which goes into the pockets of their merchants whilst our own people are compelled to subsist on small salaries. If I am returned I shall advocate measures that will tend to prevent that system. I think it would only be an act of common justice to our country that we should impose the same amount of duty upon articles of their manufacture that they impose upon our manufactures of a similar class. I have said that I will advocate by every possible means a system of duty and tariff which will make all their articles of import and export equal; but I will go further and say, if Mr. Macdonald or anybody else will introduce such a measure, I will vote for it and support it to the utmost of my power."

The candidate put before the electors of Montreal West by the Government pledged himself, as a follower of the First Minister, to a protective policy. The hon. gentleman having given utterance to these sentiments, he stands in this position—either he had to change his principles or he presented the unworthy spectacle of a Prime Minister ready to support by every means in his power, in a great commercial constituency, a gentleman to whose opinions on a most vital question he was opposed. If the hon. gentleman wanted to give to the people of Canada the strongest evidence he possibly could that he distrusts his own sentiments and principles of free-trade, he could not have accomplished it better than he did on that occasion. The same thing occurred in reference to Centre Toronto. Everybody knows that the hon. gentleman who represents that constituency was most independent, able and outspoken in his denunciation of Mr. Brown's Reciprocity Treaty, and yet the Government sustained him as a candidate and claimed him as a supporter. The Government have shown the people of this country that they have no faith in their policy, or that for the sake of a temporary party triumph in a single constituency they are prepared to sustain candidates who are pledged to destroy it.

I have read with a great deal of interest the letter of Sir Alexander Galt, and the declaration of the Prime Minister that he endorsed those sentiments; and why? Because when six years ago I maintained, almost alone, the view that Sir Alex. Galt expresses in that letter, that it was the interest of Canada to protect herself against our neighbours across the line in relation to tariff regulations, I read with pride the declarations of Sir Alex. Galt and the Premier, who were my opponents then, that after six years they had become converts to my views which they before denounced. The attitude they then assumed was that Canada occupied the humiliating position that she dare not protect herself, that we were at the mercy of our neighbors across the borders. After six years of sober thought Sir Alex. Galt comes to the conclusion that what I proposed and what he opposed is the true commercial policy for Canada; and, better than that, the Premier goes to the great commercial city of Halifax and openly endorses his views.

The Finance Minister has closed his speech with the declaration there will be no change in the tariff. I take it no change can be made unless it is announced in bringing down the Budget. I take it there is no attempt to deceive the House. I cannot but feel that the Government have failed in what they owe to this country. I feel that since they have contributed so largely to the financial distress which exists in this country they are bound not to sit complacently and fiddle while Rome is burning, but to bring forward such measures as in their judgment would be calculated to restore prosperity again to the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER

Every one knows that after the House rose in 1874, although the Finance Minister propounded no change in the sugar duties, he used the doubtful power of making a change by Order in Council. He knows the sugar refining industry has not only been prostrated but annihilated in this country. How is it possible for us to create a West India trade? The magnificent mercantile fleet of this country carries away our fish and brings back to the shores of a foreign country the raw products that should give employment to our own people in home industries.

Canadian capital is at this moment sent down to New York to be used in building sugar refineries. I believe we could reduce the duty on the raw product in such a way as to enable Canada to have an important industry in refining that article, and at the same time build up a valuable West Indian trade, thus employing a considerable number of people and shipping. I am confident that this could be done and the revenue be increased at the same time. Every person who has looked into this matter knows that the reduction of ten pounds a ton on sugar by Sir Robert Peel in 1845, increased the consumption to a large degree and largely increased the revenue.

It is not, however, the duty of an Opposition to propound a policy for the Government. But we have a right to demand that when they admit the country is in deep distress they should not sit idle; but should address themselves to some means by which they could to some extent extend relief. I say, Sir, that the country will learn with deep disappointment and deep dissatisfaction the determination of the Government to leave matters to take their course and to put forth no helping hand, nor to make any effort in any direction by which the prosperity of Canada may be restored to the condition which it occupied when these gentlemen obtained their seats on the Treasury Benches. I do not intend to go into the question of free-trade or protection. The Hon. First Minister says I don't tell them whether I am a Protectionist or a Free-Trader, just for the best of all reasons—because I am neither a Free-Trader nor Protectionist. I say to discuss free-trade or protection as abstract principles in a country of four millions, lying alongside of forty millions of people, with a boundary line, as the Hon. Finance Minister has said, three thousand miles in length, is simply nonsense. I say what Canada wants is a national policy—a policy that shall be in the interest of Canada, apart from the principles of free-trade, apart from the principles of protection. The hon. gentleman in his eloquent advocacy of free-trade to-day, in his eloquent denunciation of anything like protection in this country, took it for granted that the whole farming population were bound up in this policy of free-trade. Look abroad on the face of Canada and you will find that there is no part of the community more alive to the necessity of due and proper protection for their own industries and interests than the farming population. There is no class of the people of Canada more anxious than the farming population that some measure shall be taken by which they will be protected from unfair and unjust competition with the people across the borders. There is no intelligent farmer in this country that does not know that instead of the protection of the manufacturing interests being hostile to his interests, it is eminently beneficial to them. Look at the newspapers. You will find farmers throughout Ontario, and all over the country giving bonuses—putting their hands into their own pockets and subsidizing manufacturers, and why? Because they know, common experience has taught them, that the most valuable market the farmer has is the market at his own door, the whole profit of his industry otherwise being swallowed up in getting it to a market. In conclusion I believe there will be a common sentiment felt throughout the domain of Canada—a feeling of disappointment at the enunciation on the part of the Government that they would make no effort to relieve the people of this country from the deplorable condition of commercial and financial depression into which it has been brought under their administration of public affairs.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE — Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to continue at any length the discussion upon which the hon. gentleman has entered since the dinner recess. But I desire for a moment to call the attention of the House to what I consider a very unfair quotation which the hon. gentleman has been pleased to make from my speeches. He knows—and I appeal to other gentlemen who are now here, who were there present, to corroborate my statement—he knows I am stating what is correct when I say that in my speech at Halifax I simply approved of what Sir Alexander Galt said in taking the ground that we should legislate in the interest of Canada alone in these matters.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I hope my hon. friend does not accuse me of misrepresenting him, because I may refer him to the reports of his speech by his friends in his Halifax organ.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I do accuse the hon. gentleman of misrepresenting me in not giving the whole statement but isolated sentences. The hon. gentleman knows that what I state is literally correct; I simply endorsed Sir A. T. Galt's action so far as it favoured legislation for the interest of Canada alone. And if I had it in my power to make the people of a foreign country contribute to our commercial success, I would be bound by every motive of patriotism to do so. I would do so by every motive that could guide a public man to do what was best for his country. The hon. gentleman made a quotation from the very middle of my speech at Sarnia, in October last. Let him read the concluding remarks (these the hon. gentleman has entirely omitted). I will now quote the whole of the passage relating to trade:—

“There are two principles of action in relation to trade which are to be considered and discussed. The one is absolute free-trade, the other absolute protection. You are aware from former political speeches that I have always assumed that in this country neither of these principles is possibly applicable to our circumstances, and as I stated in my speech in 1874, the question is practically removed from the sphere of political discussion, because no party that I am aware of, not even the most extreme Protectionist, has adopted the idea that we are to lose all revenue for the purpose of preventing any one coming in here to sell his wares, as that would result in a system of direct taxation. Every man, woman and child of you pay from four to five dollars a year by indirect taxation. If that system is abolished, you must pay that sum into the Treasury to ensure the existence of a revenue for the public service. I have assumed, as a matter of public policy—and not one public man in Parliament has attacked that policy—what Sir Francis Hincks characterized as ‘incidental protection’—a stupid phrase at best—meaning a revenue raised from the imposition of duties on articles imported into the country, but also manufactured in the country. We found that we derived a revenue sufficient for the purposes of the country for some years from an import duty on certain goods of fifteen per cent. Every dollar’s worth of those goods coming into the country paid fifteen cents to the Government as revenue; so every manufacturer who made the goods in the country had the advantage of fifteen per cent. in his favour. I stated in my speech in 1874 that when we found the revenue of the country would not be met by the imposition of this duty, it would become necessary to impose more, and that it was impossible, if my view of the public obligations which had to be met was correct, that the 15 per cent. duty should continue to suffice. The result of our experience was that within a year we found it necessary to increase the duty on imports to 18½ per cent. and that is the duty at present in existence. We have therefore given an incidental protection to the extent of 2½ per cent. more than that imposed by the previous Administration. This might be a sufficient answer to those who have been accusing me of having it in view to inaugurate a free-trade policy.”

I now call the attention of the House particularly to the omission by the hon. gentleman of the concluding words of the passage:—

“A policy which I say frankly I would inaugurate at once if the circumstances of the country would admit, and if the position of our manufacturers would admit of it, because I believe that a free interchange of thought, information and commodities is the true means of enriching a country or making a people great, while the system of protection as it exists in the United States is altogether evil.”

I made a speech also at Hamilton in 1874 on this subject and I appeal to my hon. friends from that city who were present, whether I did not state precisely the same principles as my political creed. I made another speech at Montreal, and I appeal to my hon. friends from Chateauguay and Montreal if I did not there announce exactly the same principles. I defy the hon. gentleman to make a fair quotation from any one of these speeches to bear out his accusation; and I appeal to the House if I have not shown that he has made a most unfair quotation. I have never sought to conceal my views. I have stated that as we have a boundary co-terminous with the United States for thousands of miles, it is utterly impossible to adopt a fiscal policy for this country without reference to what is passing in that country. All that we have to do as Canadian statesmen is simply to endeavour to legislate in the interest of the the majority of our own people, as I stated at Halifax, irrespective of any foreign views or influences. I don’t propose to refer to much that the hon. gentleman has said. There is no necessity to do so. I have heard most of the speech many times myself, and I am sure you have all heard it before also, it has been answered about as often as it has been delivered. There is not much new in it; and what is new in it is not very correct. My hon. friend has again referred—I don’t recollect the words—to some supposed conspiracy between the Grand Trunk Directors, the Grand Trunk Company and myself in opposition to the hon. gentlemen and the Canada Pacific Railway. I can only say that ever since I have been in public life the Grand Trunk Railway Company has been one of the bitterest opponents of the political party with which I am allied. I did suppose that for some years that Company had withdrawn from political life and political strife. I hoped it was so; and I had given them no cause to do otherwise. Since we have acceded to power I have had no kind of communication, nor has any of my friends, good, bad or indifferent, with either Mr. Potter or any one of his associates concerning the Pacific Railway or any other public or private work whatever. Now, I invite the hon. gentleman to produce his proof, and not to repeat what can only be considered a gross slander upon myself personally and upon the political party which I have the honour of leading.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to produce it now?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I will do it. I hold in my hand a letter written by Mr. Potter to the Hon. the Prime Minister himself. In that letter, which is published in the Railway Times, November 27th, 1875, Mr. Potter gives this quotation:—

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.

" Mr. Brydges, in one of his official communications to me, had given the following description of the district through which the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway passed :—

" The country through which the line will run from Montreal to Ottawa after the first twenty-five miles will be almost a complete wilderness, and with a character of soil which can never make it a fit country for settlement. For the first twenty-five miles the population is purely French, and cannot produce as good a traffic as that which we have upon the Rivière du Loup line. As a railway between Montreal and Ottawa it will be impossible to maintain it from the working of the line as it is built, and as it is running almost due north it will be getting into a worse climate every mile and render it more difficult to work in winter."

" In another official communication Mr. Brydges has addressed me as follows :—

" The contract for the construction of the Northern Colonization Railway has been let and signed by Sir Hugh Allan to Duncan Macdonald and Mr. Henry Abbott, brother of the lawyer. It is a bogus contract, but the amount covers something like $400,000, which, by a private understanding, is to be disbursed by the contractors amongst certain parties directors of the company. The whole thing will be unquestionably smashed by the publications which will be made, even were it not a game of bluff to let the contract under present circumstances. It is important with reference to crushing this Northern Colonization that you do what I now ask with reference to the full publication in England of the disclosures about the Pacific."

Now, Sir, there is a letter written by Mr. Brydges while an officer of the late Government, while he was actively engaged in endeavouring to break down that Government and to bring the present Government into power. While he was in that position—

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Does my hon. friend want to make a speech ?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.—I was only explaining. My hon. friend has challenged me to produce any connection between himself and his party and Mr. Potter previous to the latter gentleman's attacks upon Canadian character and credit, and previous to his endeavours to prevent Sir Hugh Allan from getting money for the Canada Pacific Railway.

Now, Sir, Mr. Potter had been furnished with a letter enclosing the correspondence which defeated the Canadian Pacific Railway scheme by Mr. Brydges at the time he was in close alliance with the hon. gentleman opposite, and taking himself active and energetic means to break down the late Government and to bring the present Government into power. I give that as evidence of the connection. Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but there is the fact that their agent was an active and energetic party throughout in endeavouring to break down the Government here, and was engaged in sending Mr. Potter letters, and furnishing him with all those means of defeating the Canadian Pacific Railway scheme.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.—The hon. gentleman is always easily satisfied with proof; but if anyone ever heard a more childish exposition of the reasons which a public man has to offer for arriving at such grave conclusions and making such grave charges as the hon. member has made to night, I would be satisfied to hear him state it. Why, the hon. gentleman said a little while ago that because Mr. Brydges was in the employment of the present Government, therefore, the present Government were responsible for anything he might hold as an opinion. Here is a transaction which occurred when he was the servant of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and if I adopt the hon. gentleman's own doctrine they were responsible for the intrigue which was carried on then. But the hon. gentleman says this occurred at a time when he (Mr. Brydges) was in active communication with me. I tell the hon. gentleman, the House and the country that I never had a syllable of communication with Mr. Brydges about the Pacific Railway Scandal; and the first communication I had with him was when he sent me the resignation of his office of Railway Commissioner. But I requested him to remain in the public service, because I believed him the only efficient man the late Government then had managing that railway, and not because I had any political connection with him. Indeed, I had none. That, I presume, disposes of this particular slander—until it is repeated, of course. But if the hon. member should see fit to repeat it, he will find that it will take something more than such absurd, ridiculous fabrications as this to convince the public of the accuracy of his statements.

But the hon. gentleman spent a little while—and I refer to that only for a moment—pointing out what an extravagant thing this Government did when they made a compromise, through the intervention of Lord Carnarvon, to obtain for the building of the Pacific Railway west of Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean an extension of time of nine years. He was a member of the Administration that bound this country hand and foot to finish it in 1881. Yet he attacks us because we made an arrangement to build a part of it—subject, of course, to the conditions mentioned in the Orders in Council—nine years after the time to which the hon. gentleman had committed the country to finish the road from end to end.

I call the attention of members from British Columbia to these extraordinary circumstances. We always supposed that the hon. gentlemen opposite thought themselves bound by their compact to finish the Pacific Railway in ten years. Therefore, when I heard the hon. member for Cumberland in one of his speeches at Renfrew—and the speech to-night would be a very good stump speech if it was delivered there—state that he never intended to build it in ten years; when I heard him declare that they never meant to do it, and had no conception that they would be ever expected or asked to do it, I started in amazement. That was the first time I ever heard a man say that what he put deliberately on the Statute Book by his own act was a sham. "A sham," the hon. gentleman interrupted, "I did not say it was a sham." I replied, "No doubt; but it is a sham; the child is yours, I merely christened it." The engagement we entered into was one which we believed possible, by using the utmost diligence in our power, to accomplish. They enticed the people of British Columbia into the Union by saying that they were prepared to do what they could not and never meant to do. Very many things were said by the hon. gentleman to-night to which I shall call attention at a future time, with perhaps more propriety than now. He attempted to discuss the speech of my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, and occupied considerable time in doing so, by taking up almost every available topic that came under consideration at and since the general election. Some of the things were most extraordinary—especially some things he alluded to in the latter part of his speech respecting the sugar duties. He stated the policy of the Government was such that the produce of the West Indies could not be brought to our own ports, and had to be taken to the ports of the United States. He believed, I suppose, he was making the impression that we had so arranged the duties as to put an embargo on trade between Halifax, Montreal, Quebec and the West Indies; while all the time he knows that the sugar duties as they now exist, except in so far as the Order in Council of last year altered them by reducing the duty on raw material, are the sugar duties as arranged by the hon. gentleman and his own colleagues. The duty is now, therefore, more favourable for the trade than it was as he left it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Will the hon. gentleman say whether the duties in the United States are the same now as they were then? A change is required to meet the alteration of the American policy.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell us that this policy would be to meet the change of policy in the United States? The hon. gentleman is speaking of a matter which he has never studied, because he is incapable of dealing with it, I mean, of course, in a political sense. He very well knows that the system which is at present in operation in the United States was in existence when he went out of office. If he is not acquainted with it he should not discuss the subject.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The bounty was increased.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The bounty was decreased. The hon. gentleman knows that the bounty is less now than it was then, comparatively speaking, but he does not confine himself to the principles on which taxation should be levied, which was the subject.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Does my hon. friend mean to say that the bounty given by the United States was as large when we went out of power, when we had the means of dealing with the question, as it is at present.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am not able to speak with absolute accuracy, of course.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—But I am.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Yet my impression is as I have stated.

Mr. JONES (Halifax)—I can say that the bounty was as large at that time as now, taking into consideration the fact that the duties have been increased in the United States twenty-five per cent., while the bounties have not been advanced in the same proportion.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I know that I am very nearly accurate in my recollection of the matter. The hon. gentleman, when a member of the Administration, never took a step in order to right the wrong which he pretends we allow to be continued improperly. The hon. gentleman also in connection with some other matters misrepresented very seriously the position of the Government. He endeavoured to show, or rather to state—for he does not show anything, it is a mere statement—the hon. gentlemen endeavoured to show that there has never been such a serious depression in this country as at present. Let me read a portion of a speech of the right hon. gentleman who sits beside him (Sir John A. Macdonald). He said, speaking of the commercial depression in 1857:—

“In 1857 came a great commercial and financial crisis, which ruined so many of our best men, depreciated property all over the country and destroyed the public revenue. The Province has survived all this, and never, I am happy to say, has the revenue been more flourishing, the country more prosperous, or the public credit higher.”

I wonder who ruled the country then? And as the hon. gentleman blames the rulers for commercial distress, he must be impartial in distributing blame.

Well, Sir, I do not think matters have come to that pass at the present time. The hon. gentleman knows very well that it is impossible in any community to avoid commercial crises occurring at comparatively short-intervals; and these intervals are more or less frequent in proportion to the magnitude of the trade done. It is utterly impossible to do as the hon. gentleman proposes (if he proposes anything), that is, to have a system of reciprocal retaliation—I think that was the phrase he used. I don't believe in a policy that would only hurt ourselves and shew a foolish petulance abroad. I believe in maintaining our independence, political, commercial and legislative, in maintaining the interests of our whole people and not of any class. Every species of class legislation is unjust in itself, and must necessarily produce much distress amongst the people, as the promotion of the interests of any one class must be at the expense of the general public. I know that the system some few people propose is one of absolute protection, or what would lead to that end. I have stated my views on that subject, and I have only further to say that I believe a system of absolute protection in this country would end in making the rich richer and the poor poorer.

The remarks of the hon. gentleman with reference to the Intercolonial Railway I shall answer when we come to discuss the item in the estimates. I will only state now that what he said about a certain sum which was chargeable to income, and afterwards charged to capital, is incorrect.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—My hon. friend will find in the Appropriation Act, which is the law, an amount of $800,000 chargeable to revenue.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The sum of $800,000 voted for change of gauge was kept in a suspense account until the Government could decide what amount was fairly chargeable to income, in consequence of too much new stock being obtained to replace the old.

The hon. gentleman says that snow sheds were charged to income when they ought to have been charged to capital. They were charged to capital. The hon. gentleman must remember that there were certain roads finished, and what is spent in maintenance of any works completed must necessarily be charged to revenue. This is the principle on which the Government has acted, and I contend that it is the sound principle. I would like to satisfy my hon. friend, if he can be satisfied. The only part of his speech to-night that was at all pertinent to the remarks of my hon. friend in introducing his Budget, referred to the deficit, which he said formerly did not exist. He denies, I suppose, that there is a deficit now, or that there is any necessity for coming to the conclusion that there is any need to meet it by economy. I can quite understand, however, the confusion and irregularity of my hon. friend's speech. No doubt he prepared an address to deliver on the other side, and all his materials were lost. I have no doubt he had made a careful selection of pamphlets and speeches to prove that it was not wise for this Government to again increase taxation. But the Ministry did not propose any additional burdens, and it is clear that this was a surprise to the hon. gentleman. He then took the position that we had considered the necessity of doing something or other. But he did not say what ought to be done. He remarked that it was not his duty to initiate a policy. That is quite true, and at the same time most fortunate for the country. I hope the country will not be troubled for many long years with any policy of his initiation, because it is much safer for him to be where he can fairly criticise than where he could display his legislative capacity. His present position suits him better, and it suits us infinitely well to have the hon. gentleman where he is.

But there is one thing I wish to say before sitting down. We have endeavored honestly and faithfully to carry out the views we have always enunciated with regard to economy, and when the revenue of the country fails to supply the amount of money that might be advantageously spent for public works and promoting the development of the country, we have simply to avoid the expenditures that can most wisely be avoided in order that, like prudent men, we can keep our expenditure on a par with our income. And I am quite sure, notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's opinion, the people will approve of the decision of the Government to reduce the expenditure by $2,500,000, while we have to extend the postal system, and to open up the vast territory we have and people it. There is an expenditure which will necessarily go on and increase, for the purpose is to settle the country and follow up the settlement with greater facilities. Still, it is always in the power of the Government, if honestly disposed, to make a certain reduction when the state of the public revenue demands it. The true cause of Canada's prosperity for many years arose from the fact that it was a cheaper country to live in than any other on the Continent. Our prosperity lies chiefly in the hands of the great farming population, and when we make it a dear country to live in, when we follow any commercial or financial policy which will leave us in the position of having a deficit, of making Canada a place that no immigrants will care to come to, that would be standing still or retrograding; but so long as the Government act upon the economical principles which my hon. friend (Mr. Cartwright) has developed in his speech to-day, so long will we maintain supremacy as a favourable country for the immigrant, and so long will my hon. friend and those associated with him possess the confidence of the people over whom we rule.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.

Mr. IRVING—I move the adjournment of the debate, as there are several members who desire to address the House, and it is rather late to continue it this evening.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I shall make no opposition to the motion. It is quite right that my hon. friend and other members should have a full opportunity to express their views. I shall also avail myself of the opportunity to refer to the obscurity in which the hon. member for Cumberland has left some of the questions he has adverted to.

The motion was carried.

The House adjourned at Fifty-Five minutes past Ten.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, Feb. 28th, 1876.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

TRANSLATION OF DEBATES.

Mr. MASSON called attention to the fact that no copy of Hansard in the French language had yet been distributed, although the President of the Council had, on Thursday last, brought in a report recommending that the work of translation be done by contract. That was the unanimous decision of the Committee, yet no steps had been taken to ratify it. The House would agree with him that the French members had given the Government, who were the guardians of the privileges of the House, all the time that was necessary to give their concurrence in or disapproval of that report. A very important speech had been made by the President of the Council, in the French language, which the Quebec members could not have to send to their constituents. It was time that the House should be asked to consider the report of the Committee, and he would therefore, acting on the advice given by the Premier when it was submitted, move that it be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it would be noticed the second report of the Committee proposed to set aside their first report, which recommended that the reports be translated by the officers of the House. He had concurred in that first report personally, as being the best course that could be pursued, and the House had adopted it unanimously. The second report recommended that the work should be done in another way, and they were asked without notice to set aside the decision at which they had arrived on the previous occasion. He could not consent that it should be treated in this way. Members who were now absent and who might be desirous of sustaining their first decision were entitled to notice before any action was taken.

Mr. SPEAKER—My impression while the hon. member was speaking was, that this cannot strictly be regarded as a motion of privilege. There are many cases in May, and some of the decisions conflict, but the principle upon which they are based is where it is possible to give notice of a motion, and where no injury can result from the delay consequent upon giving notice. It cannot be considered as a question of privilege without, of course, the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. MASSON said if his motion took the House by surprise he would be the first to withdraw it, but when the Hon. President of the Committee had stated that he would bring the matter up in due time, and had not done so; and when it was considered that it was a question in connection with which the French members of the House were suffering an injustice, he did not consider that notice of motion was necessary.

Mr. SPEAKER said in order to entitle it to be treated as a question of privilege and precedence, it must be a matter in which somebody or some member suffers from the non-interference of this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said the report of the Committee in the first instance recommended a mode of translation of the Reports; the House approved of that mode, and it rested with Mr. Speaker and the Clerk of the House to carry out that order. He presumed that the order was naturally carried out, and if it was not it was their duty to see it executed. If the House decided on a different mode of translation it would be quite right for them to do so. It was somebody's neglect that the requirements of the French-speaking members of the House were not complied with. They had not the information that the rest of the members had to send to their constituents; at all events his hon. friend was quite right in bringing it up as a question of privilege. He contended that according to the practice of this House notice had been given by the submission of the Report of the Chairman of the Committee and its lying two days on the Table. They had all a cause of complaint, and it was that hon. gentleman who occupied the position of Chairman of the Committee, if he did not approve of the report, had a right to say so, and then some other member of the Committee could move it. It looked like as if there was an attempt on the part of the President of the Committee to throw this report over for some object of his own; that he had some other reason, and that he was not honest or straightforward to this House in not giving the two days' notice.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON thought the hon. gentlemen was getting excited without a cause. He (Mr. Cauchon) obeyed the order of the Committee by bringing the matter before the House. It was in the hands of the House, and he did not know that it required a notice.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN was surprised at the President of the Council, who was one of the oldest members of the House, not knowing that it was his duty to give notice and move to have the Report adopted; it was the more his duty when he knew that the report was to give to his compatriots the advantage of the report of the debates of House in their own language; but he need not be surprised as it was in accordance with other acts of that hon. gentleman during this present Session. Nearly three weeks had elapsed and not a single line of the French copy of the debates had yet been in possession of the members, and it was owing to the President of the Committee not having done his duty.

Mr. SPEAKER said he was bound by the strict ruling of Parliament to require notice of motion to be laid on the Table for two days.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said it had been the constant practice of this House to allow the laying of the report on the Table for two days to constitute sufficient notice.

Mr. MILLS said the House had already acted upon another report, and he did not see how the Committee could make another report in regard to a subject which the House had already decided on. He thought before that motion could be put it would be necessary that a motion should be made to waive the action of the House on the previous report.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE quite agreed with the right hon. gentleman opposite, in what he stated had been their general practice; but on the other hand the practice had been invariably subject to the application of the rules. It had been followed for the convenience of the House; but when it was an inconvenience for any member, the rule was enforced. He had stated the other day, when this matter was brought up by the hon. member for Terrebonne, that nothing was going wrong in the meantime, for the work was proceeding. He took it for granted that it was, and Mr. Patrick informed him that the work would proceed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. MASSON—But it has not proceeded.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Mr. Patrick informs me that it will be proceeded with immediately.

Mr. BOWELL—Do I understand that you have ruled it not to be a question of privilege, and that the motion is out of order?

Mr. SPEAKER—It is not a question of privilege which requires to be disposed of in this manner; two days' notice should be given.

Mr. BOWELL—I have no desire to take objection even to your ruling, although the hon. member for Terrebonne acted upon the suggestion made by the Premier three days ago, last Friday, when the question was before the House. If I am not permitted to discuss the question, I will at least take the opportunity of saying, that the President of the Council, the Chairman of the Committee, did not act in accordance with its instructions. I make that declaration because I desire that this explanation should not go to the public without a flat contradiction. If I am allowed to tell wherein the hon. gentleman did not act in accordance with the instructions of the Committee I will do so at once.

He had that report in his pocket for two days here.

I did not wish the hon. gentleman's interpretation to go to the public unchallenged.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I think that the hon. gentleman had better make his remarks out of doors.

Mr. BOWELL—No! I make them here where those of the President of the Council were made.

Hon. Gentlemen—Order! Order!

Mr. BOWELL—I shall not permit the hon. gentleman to misrepresent the Committee.

The matter dropped.

“MAIL” PRINTING AND PUBLISHING COMPANY.

Mr. BOWELL—In the absence of Mr. Kirkpatrick, moved, seconded by Mr. Stephenson, for leave to introduce a Bill to amend Act Vic. 36, cap. 3, entitled “Act to incorporate the Mail Printing and Publishing Company.”

The Bill was read a first time.

SUPREME COURT AND COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I move for leave to introduce a Bill to make further provision with regard to the Supreme and Exchequer Court; to provide for the taking of testimony either by commission, or by order, or by examination or otherwise, in various parts, either in or out of Canada. The original Bill did not contain details on the subject, and almost all of these clauses are directed towards a simplification of the machinery in this relation. I have made provision—and this is not the only novelty in that particular—for empowering the Court in its discretion to obtain the testimony of persons although they are resident within its jurisdiction, when owing to very great distance and the expense of travelling, it may be expedient to secure evidence elsewhere than in Court, as must at present be done under such circumstances. As the jurisdiction of this Court reaches from shore to shore of the two oceans, the absence of such a clause might amount in certain cases, to a positive denial of justice. The first fifteen clauses have all reference to this matter, and with a single exception are based upon existing penal legislation. The 16th clause provides for cases of controverted election appeals. It was deemed doubtful whether—although the Court is given the express power of ordering the payments of costs in appeal—in case the judgment of the Court below was reversed, this privilege existed; and this clause is introduced merely to remove that doubt and give the Court the authority intended in the first instance.

The 17th clause contains a slight amendment with regard to the Exchequer Court. It was found that its jurisdiction has been rather ill-defined and that some powers supposed to have been conferred were not granted, and didn't exist in connection with this tribunal on the revenue side in England. The amendment touches the striking out of the words “revenue side,” and leaves its jurisdiction as it was intended to have been designated. I consider the 18th clause important; it makes provision for submitting matters coming before the Exchequer Court to referees, a principle which I think is most useful. I know how tender the Province of Quebec is with relation to suggestions concerning procedure, and I do hope that many of our Provinces—I will not say all—will adopt this system. The next three clauses provide for jurors in Exchequer cases. The first states the qualification, and provides that the mode of summoning jurors shall be according to the laws regarding the Superior Courts in the several Provinces; the next makes somewhat more elastic the present provision, which regulates the numbers—not less than thirty-four, nor more than thirty-six. In some provinces a very small number is required—seven in New Brunswick, if I remember aright; and in this case it is not necessary to summon so many as when twelve is the rule. I propose, therefore, to adopt the principle of the old clause, requiring that the number to be called shall never be less than double nor more than treble that requisite in connection with civil cases in the Province that may be in question.

The three and four following clauses have respect to writs of execution, some doubt having been expressed as to whether the general clause relating to procedure, which was framed by the House last Session, was satisfactory. I think that power was given to the Court. In England the Exchequer Court is empowered to obtain in similar cases such writs against the body in connection with debts to the Crown. I consider that we should go as far as any Province has gone, or may go, with regard to imprisonment for debt, and I shall propose for the consideration of the House that no person shall be effected by an execution for debt out of the Exchequer Court, except in cases in which, under the law of the Province in question, he may be liable to be taken in a similar case, and that such a person shall be entitled to his discharge, in accordance with the practice observed in his Province in such relation.

The other sections provide that writs of execution shall be governed by the laws obtaining in each Province.

In answer to Sir John A. Macdonald, Hon. Mr. Blake continued:—There is no express provision to empower the Court to appoint officers; but I expect that this will be done under the present Act. I have been desirous of interfering as little as possible with the Court, with reference to procedure and general orders, but I felt bound to pay considerable attention to representations made to me by judges concerning points in doubt. The orders alone might suffice for this, and with that view I propose to the House to give express power, with respect to writs of execution affecting woods and lands, to the officers to deal with these matters under the general orders.

Then, as I have said, no attachment will issue for payment of money; I think the modern spirit is entirely opposed to imprisonment for debt, and I want to go as far in that direction as the House will allow. There is another clause which provides that the power of the judges shall be the same as at present proposed. The clause places the officers of the court on the same footing.

The Bill was read the first time.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHORT-HAND WRITER.

Mr. MILLS moved that leave of the House be granted to the Select Committee appointed to enquire into the causes of the commercial depression to engage a short-hand writer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I would call the attention of my hon. friend the First Minister that he objected to the appointment of the Agricultural Committee the other day on account of expense. Is it necessary, in this instance, to go to the expense of a short-hand reporter?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—All I can say about that is, that I think the hon. gentleman who moved for the shorthand reporter should have the sense of the House upon the subject. I am very anxious to keep down the expenses of these Committees. Perhaps the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) can tell us what the expense will be?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. DEVLIN—I do not see the necessity for employing a short-hand writer or even continuing the Committee. There is no occasion to inquire into the commercial depression after the speech of the Finance Minister on Friday night. In the city of Montreal we know all about it.

Mr. MASSON—The Hon. Minister of Justice gratuitously took upon himself the duty of reporting the evidence of a Committee last year.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—That is perfectly true. I took upon myself to discharge a portion of the duty, because we thought too much was being charged for the service. The subject, however, was before the House last Session and a maximum charge was adopted. I presume the House thinks that rate should be charged in cases where the House deems it necessary to authorize the employment of a short-hand-writer.

The motion was carried.

HARBOUR OF CASCUMPIQUE.

Mr. PERRY asked whether it is the intention of the Government to take any steps for the improvement, during the coming season, of the navigation of the Harbour of Cascumpique in Prince Edward Island, in accordance with the report of Henry F. Perley, Esq., in 1874?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am sorry to say that we cannot venture to ask an appropriation for that Harbour this year. If my hon. friend has read Mr. Perley's report he will remember that anything that can be done there will require a large outlay both to block up one entrance and open out another, and we are necessitated by what presses upon every work of the kind this year not to ask an expenditure of money for the purpose. Of course we will keep it in view for the future.

QUEBEC RAILWAYS.

Mr. CIMON enquired whether, inasmuch as the Government last year remitted to the Northern Railway Company of Canada a sum of more than two million dollars owing by that Company to the Government of Canada, and also granted a considerable subsidy to the Canada Central Railway in view of its extension from Douglas to the Eastern terminus of the Canada Pacific Railway, it is their intention to ask this House to consent to a grant in aid of the railways of the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I must object to the form in which the question is put, which is entirely contrary to the rules. I cannot answer an argument in replying to a question. If a question simply is put on the paper, I have no objection to answering; but as it now stands I must decline.

DUTIES OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. McISAAC asked whether in changing way-offices in Nova Scotia into post-offices unnecessary duties have been imposed on postmasters; if so, have steps been taken to relieve them or increase their salaries in proportion to the additional labour?

Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON—I may say that there has been no intention of imposing improper or unnecessary duties upon postmasters in changing way-offices into post-offices. On the contrary, inspectors have been instructed to very carefully guard against such changes being brought about more rapidly than proper. With reference to the way postmasters in the Lower Provinces who are willing to effect the change, the Department will be willing to see it done.

THE OFFICIAL GAZETTE.

Mr. FRÉCHETTE enquired whether it is the intention of the Government to furnish a copy of the Official Gazette to the different municipalities of the country?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the intention of the Government to furnish the Gazette to Municipal Councils.

PAYMENT OF PENSIONS.

Mr. ROULEAU asked whether it is the intention of the Government to continue the payment of the pension to the families of Veterans of 1812 who have died since a grant was voted for that purpose?

Hon. Mr. VAIL—It is not the intention of the Government to continue this grant.

PALMER'S POINT.

Mr. DOMVILLE enquired whether it is the intention of the Government to erect a light-house at Palmer's Point, on the St. John River, in the vicinity of the wharf?

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I may say to my hon. friend that it is not the intention of the Government to do so. Our attention has not been called to the necessity for a light at that point.

MILITIA-MEN OF 1812.

Mr. FRÉCHETTE asked whether there still remain any militia-men of 1812 who have not received their share of the $50,000 voted last year; and if so, whether it is the intention of the Government to ask for a supplementary vote in their behalf?

Hon. Mr. VAIL—There are quite a number—perhaps thirty or forty—who have perfected their claims since the vote of last year was exhausted. These claims will be considered and probably paid after the 1st of July next.

COMPENSATION TO ST. JOHN.

Mr. PALMER enquired whether the Government have decided to abandon the branch of the Intercolonial Railway around Courtney Bay to the Ballast Wharf at St. John, New Brunswick; and if so, whether they intend to make any compensation to the said city for the injury to its property by building of the said road over the city property?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Government have the matter under consideration as to the place where the road will terminate. They are not aware of any injury to any party that requires compensation at their hands.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH THE WEST INDIES.

Mr. YOUNG moved that an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that there may be laid before the House of Commons a statement shewing what steps have been taken by the Government touching the opening up of regular steam communication between Canada and the British, Spanish and French West Indies, with a copy of the tariff of any of these Islands which may be in possession of the Government, with such other information, if any there be, calculated to increase the interest in, and promote our valuable commerce with these prosperous Islands. He said: I may state briefly that my object in moving this resolution is not simply to get any papers there may be on the subject, but to keep before Parliament the importance of our trade with the West Indies, Spanish, French and British, as well as the desirability of encouraging and by every possible means extending that trade. Last Session I asked a question as to whether any efforts had been made to establish steam communication between Canada and these Islands, and was informed by the Postmaster General, who is now Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, that the subject was under the consideration of Government. If there be any papers—and I suppose there are—I trust they will be submitted to Parliament, that they will show the Government are alive to the importance of this trade, and that they have taken all the steps in their power to carry out the views of the House of Commons, and of commercial men generally, on the subject.

Shortly before Confederation we had a grand Commission appointed, of whom the Hon. William Macdougall was one, associated with other gentlemen—some from the Maritime Provinces—who went to tropical countries to see what could be done to encourage this portion of our commerce. At that time visions of a large trade with the West Indies and South America were called up before the minds of the people of Canada; but nothing has resulted up to now from that Commission, and I am sorry to say, from the consideration I have given to our statistics of trade, I find there has been very little, if any, improvement in our commerce with those tropical countries, although our trade in other directions has expanded with very great rapidity. The largest volume of trade in any one year was in 1872, when the imports and exports to the Spanish, French and British West Indies reached $6,773,967. The following year (1873) the trade declined to $5,963,475; 1874, showed a very slight improvement, $6,057,129; in 1875 it was $6,139,910, making altogether in the four years total transactions to the extent of $24,934,431. I am sorry to say these figures indicate that this portion of our trade has remained almost stationary, and I think the fact is very deeply to be regretted indeed. The causes are not difficult to discover. One, possibly, is that we are not able to bring cargoes in our vessels from the West Indies. In other words, they take more largely of our articles than we take of theirs in return. It is possible that some legislation might take place that would have the effect of increasing this valuable trade. Another cause, no doubt, is want of information with regard to the duties on articles we export there. I know I had occasion last year to send to one department to ascertain if I could get the tariffs of those Islands, and found there was information regarding that of but one single Island in the possession of our Government. I think steps might be taken, at least, to have the tariffs of all those Islands ascertained.

The great drawback is want of steam communication between the two countries. I have only to say, as a representative of an Ontario constituency, we desire to see such communication opened up with these Islands, assured that while it will benefit more directly the Maritime Provinces, indirectly it will prove beneficial to every part of the Dominion.

The trade with the West Indies is the most profitable we have. Of the whole trade of the four years, amounting to $25,000,000 in round numbers, $16,000,000 were exports and $9,000,000 imports, showing a balance of trade in our favour of over $7,000,000. It must be recollected in addition to this that we had the carrying trade for our ships—a very important consideration indeed. There is no interest in this country that deserves more to be promoted than the commerce of our merchant marine. I believe it to be one of the most valuable industries we have, and there is nothing reflects more credit on Canada to-day than the fact we have the third or fourth largest merchant marine in the whole world.

I may add a very few words with regard to the position of the various Provinces in this matter. No doubt the Maritime Provinces, who have such a splendid position on the seaboard for carrying on a trade of this kind, are more directly interested than other parts of the Dominion. I saw a statement some time ago in a newspaper of the Lower Provinces that there was a feeling there that the people of the West were not so much interested in this trade as the people of the East. I desire for one, and I think I can say I speak the sentiments of the commercial men of Ontario generally on that question, from what I have seen of their views expressed in the press and otherwise, that they take a great interest in this trade, and their hope is that before long the ships of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia will be more frequently seen, not only in the ports of the West Indies, but in the waters of Mexico, of Brazil and of South American ports generally. I do not intend to speak at any length on this matter, and I therefore place this resolution in your hands without further comment.

Mr. FORBES—This is a subject that has engaged the attention of the House on several occasions. I have endeavoured to bring it under their notice myself. I most heartily thank the hon. member for South Waterloo for the manner in which he brought this matter up. There is undoubtedly a feeling in the Maritime Provinces that people of Ontario care very little for the interests of the people by the sea, but the motion of the hon. member must convince them that they are mistaken.

There is but one steamer to perform the service between Canada the West Indies, and it is very inefficiently done. I would beg leave to read from the report of the Commissioners from British North America appointed to enquire into the trade of the West Indies and Brazil, the reasons that were urged for a subsidy being given. They say: "The communication between British North America and the West Indies was now very unsatisfactory, the only regular service being performed by a steamer leaving Halifax once a month, the day of her sailing depending on the arrival of the European steamer there, and that of her arrival at St. Thomas being consequently uncertain and not so timed as to meet with regularity Intercolonial steamers which distribute the mails among the Islands. In consequence of this letters from North America frequently lie for several days in the post office at St. Thomas, and the time occupied before replies could be received was such as to deter merchants in the British Provinces from sending orders to Demerara or the Windward Islands." That was ten years ago, and it is no better now—no wonder the trade has not increased. At Confederation we looked forward to the fostering hand of the Dominion to furnish us better communication. The Government of the West India Islands offered to supplement any subsidy that might be given by the Provinces. It was estimated that $100,000 would furnish two or three large steamers for the service. If this offer had been accepted there is no doubt the business would have grown to a very large extent; but I believe the subsidy is no longer within our reach, the United States Government having secured it.

It cannot be expected that our trade with the West Indies will improve while we send them large cargoes and can get none in return, the vessels carrying the return freights to United States' ports. I believe the duties could be so arranged as to give us that trade. Five years ago a memorial was sent to the Government signed by a number of representatives, but it resulted in a little talk. Four years ago more petitions were sent; three years ago a memorial was sent signed by 85 members of this Legislature, and we expected that would have some effect, but nothing has been done and matters still remain as they were.

Last year something was done in the matter. We all supposed it was a final conclusion, and upon reference to the Parliamentary Companion for 1875 I find the statement that among the administrative reforms established by Hon. Mr. Macdonald, late Postmaster General, after his accession to office, was the establishment of direct postal communication with the West Indies. I supposed when I read that notice that it was a positive fact, but it seems to me that it is only a delusion and a snare, as nothing of the kind had been done. There is no difficulty in arranging such communication; all it wants is an adjustment of the sugar duties and a very small subsidy to place a line on a good footing. We now do a good business between the town which I represent and the West Indies. It is a market for nearly all our fish and lumber, and if something were done to increase and foster trade between the Dominion and the West Indies it would benefit the finances of the country and aid the Dominion in carrying out its obligations. I trust this matter will receive the consideration it deserves at the hands of the Government.

Mr. DOMVILLE—Much as I admire the action of the member for Waterloo and the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, I fear that nothing will successfully establish a line of trade between the Dominion and the West Indies unless we have a better basis for sugar duties. We all know that sugar can be taken from the West Indies to Glasgow, where it undergoes the process of refining, and is brought from there to Canada at such prices that our refiners cannot compete with it. The duty now on sugar is between 50 and 60 per cent., and the trade with the West Indies in this article is consequently crushed out. The course of trade is to ship fish, lumber and various other products from the Maritime Provinces to the West Indies, but when the vessels go down there they are unable to bring back anything; if they load with sugar the market is against them, and if they load with molasses there is no refinery to take it, so they have to return to the ports of the United States and load with flour. This is the natural course of trade at present, and it is impossible to build up any direct return trade with the West Indies unless the duties on sugars are reduced one-half; that would at once stimulate the trade with those Islands and increase the consumption of sugar in the Dominion. We know that in 1866 Commissioners were sent to the West Indies to report as to the means of increasing the trade with that country; their report is at present in the Library, and the state of matters it represents could not be greatly altered now except in the manner I suggest. As far as rapid communication is concerned we have the cable now, which does away with a good deal of the urgency for postal facilities by steam; still the Lower Provinces will not object to anything that will build up trade. As for Ontario backing us up in bringing trade from the West Indies, it is like a fly used by a friend of mine in salmon fishing, which he said was "a very good kind of fly, but it was too thin and wouldn't wash." So it is with the Province of Ontario and the West India trade—"They won't wash." How are we going to send up produce from the West Indies and bring down flour from Ontario without the Baie Verte Canal? It is a well-known fact that it costs as much to ship freight from St. John to Charlottetown as it does to ship from St. John to England and from England back, for want of this canal—about $6 per ton for a distance of 150 miles. And how are we to do a trade between Ontario and the West Indies? It puts me very much in mind of the old saying, "Fools look to the end of the world for profit," to speak of the West Indies for trade while we are not able to ship goods from St. John to our outlying ports in New Brunswick with profits for want of the Baie Verte Canal.

Mr. FORBES.

Mr. PALMER—I must express my satisfaction at the motion of my hon. friend from South Waterloo. I regard it as a motion of very considerable importance. My hon. friend from South Waterloo is led into an error in supposing that the Government and the country have lost sight of this question, but if he looks into the report on the Baie Verte Canal he will find that instead of the Commissioners addressing themselves to ascertain the importance of that canal to the trade with the Upper Provinces they looked entirely to its bearing on the West India trade. They presumed that the Baie Verte Canal had to be killed, and the first question asked in connection with its construction was what would be its influence on the West India Trade, as if the work were of no consequence unless it would benefit that trade. I think as the report has completely settled the question of the West India trade, as far as the Baie Verte Canal is concerned, there can be nothing now in the way of the Government putting the action that this motion indicates into effect, and communication will be opened up that will cultivate the trade between the two countries.

Mr. JONES (Halifax)—I am very glad that the resolution of my hon. friend from South Waterloo has elicited such favourable opinions from the hon. members of this House. It is a question in which the people of the Maritime Provinces are not alone interested, but the people of the whole Dominion. I am satisfied, myself, that at the present moment there is no question which so much interests the manufacturers of the Dominion as the establishment of a large and continuous trade with the West Indies—British and foreign. I am persuaded that we have many articles in Canada for which the people of the West Indies would be good customers; such as beef, pork, flour, lumber and other such produce. If we desire to build up trade between the two countries, it must be by the exchange of such produce with such West Indian products as can be utilized here either for manufacture or direct consumption. There is nothing at the present time which so much tends to hinder a satisfactory or successful line of commerce between the tropics and the Dominion, as the unsatisfactory position of the sugar duties. Until they are adjusted or placed on a basis that will more fairly represent the value of the raw material, as compared with that of the refined article, it is out of the question that any line of trade can be successfully undertaken. The House must understand that it is only for a very short time that returns can be obtained from the West Indies, and it is therefore of the greatest possible importance that during these six or seven months we should have such a demand in our own markets for the raw material from the West Indies as would furnish traffic between the two countries. We have plenty of produce to supply them and build up a satisfactory trade with them, if the sugar duties were adjusted on a proper basis so that we could bring back that article as return cargo.

With regard to our communication with the Islands at present, my hon. friend fell into a mistake when he said it was not well conducted. It is done by the Cunard Line, and everybody knows the Cunard Line is satisfactorily managed. Of course there are other channels of communication with the West Indies—besides cable communication—but I do not look upon this question so much from a mail point of view as from a trade standpoint. I believe at the present moment, when the manufacturers of the Dominion are looking for customers for the articles which they produce, nothing would so much tend to relieve them as foreign trade, and if we can successfully establish such a trade with a country like the West Indies, and bring back a return trade, it is our best policy.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I am very glad my friend from South Waterloo has brought this question before the House. I moved for correspondence and papers on the subject some days ago, but the Hon. Premier said it was not in a position to be brought down. I feel that any discussion of this kind must lead to good results. The trade existing between the Dominion and those Islands has not been very successful, and the reasons have been referred to by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, and my hon. friend from Kings, both of whom have had a great deal of experience in that trade. I believe we never can have successful traffic with any of the Islands to which we send our goods unless there is a reciprocity of commerce. At present the great volume of the West India trade is done with England, and all we can do could not materially divert it from that country. But as regards the exports from the West Indies which are consumed in the United States, much could be done to divert them to the Dominion, instead of New York and Baltimore, if proper steps were taken with that object. I shall watch with much interest the action of the Government in this matter. I am satisfied that the circumstances related by the hon. gentlemen who have spoken are such as will show that Canada, with a reasonable amount of sacrifice, can secure a portion of this trade by a proper adjustment of the sugar duties. The sweets of the tropics are the principal articles of export from there to Canada, and without encouraging their import into this country we cannot expect to obtain the West India trade to any extent. I can only say as far as my aid will go on this side of the House, occupying as I do an independent position, I shall guarantee the influence of the Left Centre towards any reasonable measure for fostering this direct trade with the West Indies.

Mr. DAVIES—I cannot agree with the hon. member from Halifax that the mail service performed by the Cunard Line between Canada and the West Indies is satisfactory. It is only a monthly service, and as it is not always regular, there is no opportunity for merchants to receive replies promptly. We have to rely more on sailing vessels than we do on the steamer. The only objection to establishing a line of steamers between Montreal and St. Thomas is that the navigation of the St. Lawrence is open but six months in the year. No doubt a very large trade could be done in this time if there were a proper adjustment of the sugar duties, so that it could profitably keep our refiners in operation. I think it is very desirable we should have regular postal communication also, and in the winter time, when the Intercolonial Railway is open all the way to Halifax, the trade could be continued over that route.

Mr. WORKMAN—I am very glad this subject has been brought up to-day, as it will enable me to submit to the House the opinions of some of the leading merchants of Montreal on this important subject.

The communication to which I would direct attention is on this very question of trade with the West Indies and the sugar duties therewith connected, and is dated the 24th of February. It is signed by Gillespie & Moffatt, Tiffin Brothers, W. R. Ross, P. & J. Ross, and several other large importing houses in sugars. They say—"We desire to bring under your notice, and through you under that of the Minister of Finance, the difficulty—we might say the impossibility—which we experience in carrying on direct trade between Canada and the West Indies. The difficulty to which we refer is the want of modification here for Muscovado sugar, which constitutes the main export of the West India Islands. This article, which must be regarded either as raw material for manufacture or as a necessary of life, is now subject to a combined specific and ad valorem duty equivalent to about 50 per cent. on its first cost, and we venture to say that no other article of the same character is subject to so heavy a tax. This tells against the consumption of raw sugar by bringing up its cost close to that of refined sugar; and, on the other hand, it can no longer be used here as raw material. The bonus of fully one-half cent a pound now paid by the United States on the export of refined sugar has virtually rendered refining an impossibility in Canada."

This, Mr. Speaker, is the opinion of men who are not refiners but who are engaged in this large and important trade. They go on further to state—"The total consumption of sugar of all kinds in the Dominion, we believe, is rarely in excess of one hundred millions of pounds, equivalent to one hundred cargoes of five hundred hogsheads each, and making reasonable allowance for the refined sugar which would still continue to be imported, and the further consumption of the Lower Provinces, Manitoba and British Columbia, it may fairly be estimated that were the tariff modified, as we suggest, not less than 75 additional vessels would annually arrive at Montreal and Quebec, and this would have a material influence in cheapening downward freight, a point of vital importance to our grain trade, and more over affording facilities for the export of manufactured articles of Canadian produce, and manufactures which

“would find a ready market in the West India Islands.”

That is an expression of opinion from gentlemen who are well qualified to give it, Sir.—It suggests certain changes in the present duty on sugar, on which it is unnecessary for me at present to dwell, because the policy announced here on Friday last renders it inadvisable. It will be useless to try, and stimulate trade with the West Indies until the present rate of duty on sugar is altered; if changed as suggested in this letter it can, no doubt, be stimulated to a very large extent, benefitting the whole Dominion and also importers.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE — Permit me before the motion is carried to say a word or two. I previously stated, in answer to my hon. friend from Northumberland, that the Government had had this matter under consideration for a long time. Many difficulties present themselves which we do not at present feel ourselves in a position to surmount. The trade of the principal West India Islands—Danish, French, and British, British Guiana, the Dutch Islands, Jamaica, Cuba and Porto Rico—with the United States last year amounted in value to $35,562,966, nearly one-half being transacted with Cuba; another large proportion (nearly ten millions) consisted chiefly of flour and meals of various kinds. Now, those who have dealt in this particular class of products and know the capacity of Canada as a wheat and corn-growing country, are aware that we act in this relation as brokers; and whether we could compete, in this regard, with Virginia and Southern millers, is a question, I think, which admits of very serious dispute. The importations into these countries from the United States last year of flour alone, were worth about seven millions of dollars; and of the two classes of Indian corn, about one and one-half millions. One of these articles we could not supply at all, and the other we could only furnish, as I have said, in the capacity of brokers. I believe that the wheat grown in the Northern States and Canada, in the Lake Region, would either require a peculiar process of manufacture, and be kiln-dried or treated in some such manner to make it acceptable, or we could only sell it in small quantities that might be rapidly used. The sugar difficulty is one we feel—as every hon. gentleman has stated—to be very serious, on account of revenue requirements, while the normal state of some of the West India Islands, they being almost always in rebellion against the political powers that have authority, nominal, at least, makes it a matter of extreme difficulty to come to any reciprocal arrangement with them. I can only express my own very ardent desire to do everything the Government can in order to promote trade in the various articles which will enable us to compete with the United States, without holding out any delusive hopes of being able to do so in regard to such articles concerning which this is manifestly impossible, owing to the part of the country we occupy and other difficulties that stand in our way. The means the Government have taken to obtain very exact information as to the views and feelings of those with whom it is necessary to deal, and the exact condition of every branch of trade, will in a short time place us in the best possible position to take action. At the same time one serious obstacle stands in the way which we have to confront and meet in some way. We must promote the trade of the country without seriously injuring the revenue. It is of the last importance to us to do everything possible in order to encourage the shipping interests; this is a fact I at once recognize, and this it would be impossible for any one to deny who knows how much the political power and prestige of a country depends upon its foreign trade and maritime interest. I can only assure the hon. gentleman who makes this motion and those who have spoken on the subject, that every consideration will be given that is consistent at all with the state of the Dominion and existing interests, to the matter they have to-day brought before us.

The motion was carried.

WINTER COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. PERRY—I move that an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General praying that there may be laid before this House a statement shewing what steps have been taken by the Government touching the opening up of regular steam communication in the winter season between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, in accordance with terms of Union between the Province of Prince Edward Island and the Dominion of Canada; also for all correspondence and copies of contracts proposed with various parties in this relation.

At the time of the entry of the Island into Confederation, the Dominion Government became bound to provide steam communication in winter as well as in summer for the conveyance of mails and passengers between it and the mainland, and it is well known that up to the present time this stipulation has not been honoured. I am very anxious, accordingly, to learn what correspondence has passed between the Government and various persons in this connection.

In the fall of 1873 Mr. King entered into such a contract, but on examination his boat was found to be unsuitable; only one trip was made late in the fall, or the commencement of winter. In the Spring of 1875 the Government entered into an agreement with Mr. Sewell, of Quebec; I saw him here at the time, and he had a model of a boat which, I believe, from my knowledge of the crossings to be made, would have answered the purpose very well. It appears that this contract fell through, and some time afterwards tenders were offered by two steamboat companies of the Island, one for $15,000 and the other for $20,000, I think. The Government accepted the latter, I understand, and the parties were bound to have a boat in readiness by the fall of 1876. It seems that it cannot be completed for winter service in 1877, throwing such communication back to the winter of 1878; consequently the Island will have been for almost five years in the Confederation without seeing the fulfilment of the stipulation mentioned. I consider that under the circumstances the Government should take the matter up and make the experiment. They should employ an engineer, who could prepare the plan and models.

Mr. PERRY.

I have no doubt that the service can be secured. This was one of the inducements held out to the Island to enter Confederation, and for many years this want has been deeply felt. One of the Island companies offered to do the work for $20,000, and I believe that for this amount a boat would be provided next fall; the other could have a steamer ready by 1878. I trust that the Province, although the smallest in the Dominion, will not be overlooked so far as the observance of terms is concerned, so many parties having already failed, and the time passing when the people of Prince Edward Island should derive the benefit to which they are entitled. I contend, and I think the majority of this House hold a similar view, that the Government should undertake the work themselves. If there is a loss to be sustained the Government are better able to sustain it than private parties; and if there is money to be made the Government are just as much entitled and as competent to make it as private individuals. It is essential also to find out whether the persons getting the boat built are proceeding under a model plan and proper specifications. If the boat should be built for any other purpose than winter crossing, it will be a mistake, and the Government will be no nearer carrying out this part of the terms of Confederation than now.

Mr. YEO—I quite agree with the last speaker as to the pressing necessity for having this communication opened up. In 1873 there was an attempt to effect this, which, however, proved a failure. A contract was also entered into last year with no better result, and this winter some other party took the matter in hand and also abandoned it. At the time of Confederation this steam communication was held out as one of the greatest inducements to our Province, and it is not right that it should now be neglected. By not putting a boat on the Government have already saved from $45,000 to $60,000, which would cover all the expense of constructing a boat specially for the purpose. Should a private company take hold of the matter no advantage will accrue to the Province, but the Government's prosecution of this necessary work will operate successfully for all parties. If in connection with this the Administration would open a branch road from Aulac to Cape Tormentine and from Cape Traverse to connect with the Grand Trunk, a great trade would be opened up. As a supporter of this Government, I trust this work will not be delayed much longer, but that they will endeavour speedily to carry it through. The Department of Marine and Fisheries are conversant with the question in its details, and we would gain by having it transferred to them instead of leaving it as at present. The people of the Province are desirous of having the matter settled, and the Government will do well in furthering this project.

Mr. DAVIES—A great deal of dissatisfaction exists in the Province owing to the non-fulfilment of the pledge given before Confederation with reference to this work. The representatives of the Government have been severely censured, but I think the First Minister will give me credit for being very importunate on this point.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—You all have.

Mr. DAVIES—Circumstances have arisen, I know, to prevent the project being carried on. Two difficulties present themselves: first, whether to construct the steamer or to give a private company the contract. The second plan is most generally adopted. The Government do not like to undertake works of this character. I do not think they can prosecute them efficiently, for the reason that private companies have a closer control over their employes and expect to make money, while Government employes do not expect to make the service remunerative, and therefore do not work with the same energy. I did not expect the boat to be completely under the direction of the Post Office Department. It is not expected that the Postmaster General knows much about shipping, and his Department is not the proper one to have this matter in charge. As I before remarked, the Government are desirous of completing this work, but difficulties have cropped up which no doubt will be satisfactorily explained.

A great time should be given to build and equip a steamer of the class required. I happen to be a member of a company which tendered for the work, but we found that the boat could not be completed within the specified time. A vessel of this kind will ordinarily have to be built at Glasgow or Peterhead, but if sufficient time was granted we could build as good a boat in Prince Edward Island for this service as can be procured in the world. This winter a gentleman in the Island accepted the contract, but on sending his engineer to Scotland he found it impossible to get what was required in time, and was under the necessity of declining to perform the work.

Mr. SINCLAIR—I am very glad this question has been brought forward. My opinions with reference thereto have not changed since the first. As all acquainted with the Straits of Northumberland know, there will be six weeks during which it will be difficult for the steamer to cross. Boats will then have to be used, and it will be better to have the service all the winter round. As has been observed by the member for Kings' County, companies carry on such undertakings better than Governments; but this work is of a peculiar nature, and as a private enterprise would probably not be efficiently managed. A company would stay in harbour during bad weather, and would be more careful about their boat than the Government. Besides, the public have not the same control over them as over the Government, and would not consequently be so well served.

If the Ministry want to do justice to the Province they will undertake the work themselves. As far as the cost is concerned it would not be much, and any Government who think themselves competent to carry through the Pacific Railway need not shrink from crossing the Straits of Northumberland. The interest of this Province is evidently neglected because it is small as compared with the other Provinces. Many complaints have been uttered, and it is time an adequate attempt was made to carry through this work in a proper manner. The Government should take into consideration that Prince Edward Island looks for it to be completely carried out next winter, and I trust they will make preparations accordingly. This is a question of great importance to Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and it is to be hoped that we shall not have to repeat this complaint.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD--Being a representative from Charlottetown, the leading city of the Province, I must have a peculiar interest in seeing this winter navigation successful, and I shall use my best efforts to make it so. I can, however, perceive very great difficulties in the way. Winter navigation across the Straits is yet an experiment, just as the navigation of the St. Lawrence is. But we see that question agitated every Session and the matter is in a very unsatisfactory state. The navigation of the Straits of Northumberland is, however, much more likely to be successfully accomplished than the St. Lawrence scheme. The distance is much shorter and the object to be attained is of much more importance, at least to the people on the Island. The whole Province is cut off from the mainland in winter. Small ice boats with runners are taken over the ice as far as it extends and then rowed until the next piece of ice is reached. This is a precarious method of communication, and although we get our mails in that way, still the accommodation is poor and inconvenient. As far as trade is concerned it is absolutely nil; we have no means of procuring any article that we require for use during winter.

Nothing but mere luggage of passengers and small parcels could be taken across. So much with respect to the carriage of mails.

At the time of the Union, when the terms of Confederation were negotiated, it was stipulated that this winter navigation should, if possible, be maintained by the Dominion. This was readily acceded to and confirmed by Parliament without a dissenting voice. The first winter it was impossible to do anything. No tenders were asked for until the present Government came into power. Sometime in December tenders were invited and the lowest, sent in by Mr. King of Halifax, was accepted. He was asked to send in specifications of his boat, which had been built at St. John for the service. She seemed to be utterly unfit for the ten years' contract, but as the Government were desirous that the attempt should be made the next winter, an inspection was made by the engineers, who reported that the vessel was seaworthy and strong and the engine sufficiently powerful. On the understanding that this boat should be taken for one winter only, and that the contractor was to build a new boat adapted for the service in every way for the remaining nine years of the contract, he commenced to run his vessel; but last winter was very severe and she was found unfit for the work; she had not sufficient power and was not of the right build. Where the difficulty was, he failed to enter upon the construction of the new steamer, though called upon repeatedly by the Post Office Department to do so, and send in his specifications. In the month of April, when he had failed to comply with his agreement, we cancelled his contract; it was so late then that it was almost impossible to have a boat ready for the following winter. At this time Mr. Sewell, who is well known to be enthusiastic in the matter of winter navigation, was in Ottawa. He had a winter boat in course of construction, and offered to have it ready for this winter provided we would give him the contract to run between Cape Traverse and Cape Doremantine, but he afterwards stipulated that we were to put up break-waters at both points to protect his boat. We refused to sign his contract, having no report as to the cost of such break-waters. On examination it was found they would cost $50,000 and it was doubtful whether they would stand the ice then; consequently the project had to be abandoned late in the season.

The plan of giving the contract to the lowest tender having proved a failure, some three or four persons were asked to make an offer. Steamboat owners in Prince Edward Island were asked to tender, and Mr. Sewell was also invited to make another offer to run between Georgetown and Pictou. Three offers came in and one was accepted; but it appears, their agent having gone to Scotland, he found he could not get the boat built in time for the first winter. I understand they are in correspondence for a boat that will be ready in time.

Mr. SINCLAIR.

I can only say the Government have taken considerable pains to have this service performed, but the great difficulty seems to be that it is a new work, and no responsible man appears willing to undertake it unless he is pretty well remunerated. There is the same difficulty in getting a boat for the purpose, because it would have to be very strongly built, and would be of little use for any other service. Still I am of opinion that this work can be done much more efficiently by a company than by the Government. We all know how difficult it is to manage anything of the kind so far removed from the seat of Government. All the crew would have to be put in by Government patronage, from the captain down. It would be difficult, under such circumstances, to get the best men and to run the vessel economically. If you deal with one responsible party, who will no doubt be a ship-owner perfectly well acquainted with steamboats, sea captains, and men fit to form his crew, he will do the work well. There is another advantage in having a local company. It would be in a great measure amenable to public opinion in the Provinces interested and somewhat afraid of criticism from the people of the place. These circumstances combine to make a private party better suited to manage this service than the Government. Still, if we cannot get a company for the purpose, the Government, by the terms of Union, is bound to undertake the work.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I have listened with a good deal of attention to the explanations made by the Minister of the Interior, and I cannot but come to the conclusion that the people of Prince Edward Island have been very badly treated. The hon. gentleman says it was part of the terms of Union with the people of the Island that if it was possible to perform this service it should be done. The hon. gentleman says Prince Edward Island came into the Dominion on the 1st of July, and yet says we should have carried out the terms.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD—Why did you not ask for tenders?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I had no authority, and the Government of which I was a member, had none to do so. The hon. gentleman knows that he himself took an active part in preventing the Government who had arranged the terms of Union with the Island, from obtaining a vote from Parliament to carry it into effect. He tells us that he, a representative of the Island holding a seat in the Cabinet, allowed a year to pass the estimates to be voted, and Parliament to close without having raised a finger or taken the slightest step to carry out the terms. I listened very carefully to the gentleman's statements and I find that no effort was made during the first winter. During that Session the hon. gentleman representing the Island in this House stood still, without making an effort to have the terms of Union adhered to. I have no sympathy with the hon. gentleman himself, or the others who have been so loud in their complaints to-day, because they have had meted out to them the same sort of good faith they meted out to others; but I have sympathy with the people of Prince Edward Island, who I consider have been badly treated, for they have good ground for complaint because the Government has not kept its compact with them. This Administration has not accomplished anything in that direction nor made an effort to do what the Dominion Government and Parliament pledged themselves to do for the Island. After a whole Session had passed, a contract was entered into with a gentleman from Nova Scotia, who undertook to perform the service required. Yet so incompetent were they to deal with even a matter of this kind that they made a contract with Mr. King and accepted a miserable boat entirely unfit to perform the service, which is regarded as one attended with the greatest difficulty by one of the members for the Island who knows something of shipping. I ask that hon. gentleman if the people of Prince Edward Island do not deserve more at the hands of the Government than they have received? It appears that the specifications of the boat were to be sent, and the Government instructed their officers to inspect it. Having done so they accepted it. They made a contract, but until we get the papers it will, perhaps, be hardly worth while to go into the question. I am, however, instructed by the contractor that having made a bargain with him, and being satisfied of the fitness of his boat, he performed the work; but having encountered a winter of extreme and unparalleled severity, his contract was violated in the most extraordinary and unwarrantable manner, and he was not permitted to carry it out, as he was prepared to do, by building a boat which, in the judgment of the Government, would suit the service. I am not much surprised at the conclusion which the Hon. Minister of the Interior has arrived at, a conclusion which the hon. member for Bothwell has also reached, that the Government are inadequate to deal with questions of the simplest kind; and the sooner a company can be got to do the work the better will it be for Prince Edward Island and the Dominion. It is quite obvious, from the statement of the hon. gentleman himself, that if the people of Prince Edward Island never get that service performed until such measures as the Hon. Minister of the Interior is required to undertake are carried out, they will go without it for a long time. I do not say the service ever will or can be done by anybody, but I say that the Government of Canada are pledged to the people of Prince Edward Island to use all the means in their power to establish this service, and until every means is exhausted, whether it succeeds or not, the Government will not have fulfilled that pledge. The hon. gentleman has good reason to distrust himself. He says a company can perform the service better than the Government can; that a company can build a boat and run it. He leads the House to understand that if the Government had a boat perfectly competent for the service, the difficulty would be to man it—they could not trust the Government to man it, as the appointments would be made by patronage, so that they would have to take incompetent men. I am not in the least surprised that the hon. gentleman mistrusts himself. It is perfectly obvious that if we were to trust the Government in the selection of men for this service, the interests of the people of Prince Edward Island would be neglected. A year ago, when the question in relation to the working of the Prince Edward Railway by Government came up, a gentleman of the highest standing came forward and offered a handsome sum of money to be allowed to run the railway. Was his offer accepted? Nothing of the kind. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well the Government could not afford to give up the patronage which the control of the road gave them, to a private individual at a profit to the country, when they had such a number of friends to provide offices for.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I have no objection in the world to the hon. gentleman going into an argument or political attack, but I think he should choose his time; and if he means to discuss the Prince Edward Island Railway management he should give due notice. I perfectly understand that the hon. gentleman cannot speak on any subject without making a political attack, but he should confine himself to the question at issue.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I confine myself to a review of the statement made by the Hon. Minister of the Interior, and I put it to the House if I have gone outside of that. Are hon. gentlemen going to invoke you, Mr. Speaker, to protect them against any censure of their policies—I hold it to be my duty to the people and to the country to censure them. Hon. gentlemen exhibit an amount of temerity and irritability that is not, in my judgment, becoming to the Treasury Benches.

Mr. SPEAKER ruled that the hon. member for Cumberland should confine himself to the motion.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The Hon. Minister of the Interior has propounded a policy to the House of depriving the Government of the patronage connected with this steam communication with Prince Edward Island, and surely I may show the soundness of that policy as illustrated by the maladministration of the Government in the management of works with which patronage is connected.

However, I do not wish to go beyond the strict line of the discussion that the remarks of the hon. gentleman called up, but it is a matter of very great importance. Here is a Province for six months in the year cut off from all communication with the mainland, except by the uncertain means of a little ice-boat. I do not say it is possible for the Government by any policy they can adopt, or by any efforts they can make, to bridge the Straits of Northumberland in the winter season, but I do say in the terms of Union, the Government and Parliament of Canada have bound themselves solemnly to accomplish that object.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—There is no condition.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Then the hon. gentleman will see it is still more necessary to prove it is impossible to do it before we can be relieved in the slightest degree of the obligation we have undertaken, and show that we have not been guilty of bad faith.

Mr. MILLS—What would then be said of those who made the compact?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—They were not accustomed to keep faith.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—If it is impracticable, then it will be open for my hon. friend from Bothwell to say: "You have entered into an engagement that shows your anxiety to undertake an important work that it is impossible to do," and my hon. friend from Bothwell will see that the result will be to show the extreme anxiety of the late Government to do all in their power to bring the inhabitants of Prince Edward Island into as close communication with the mainland as it is possible to do. I believe that the Government had the support of my hon. friend touching that question, notwithstanding his habit of picking flaws in anything that they generally brought forward, as he considered that it was a policy which ought not to be adopted. My hon. friend does not mean to say that we hold the position of independent public men in this country and must leave it to the Administration to ascertain the manner in which things can be done. I am quite sure that he would not be willing to accept such a position for a single moment; and as one of our public men who has always given the most careful consideration to all matters coming before Parliament, he will not be able to escape a certain amount of censure if he has not done all in his power to accomplish this work.

But, Sir, to return to the argument. I want to know from the Minister of the Interior whether, down to this hour, the Government of Canada have obtained the best talent that Canada affords to secure specifications for a boat, and the information necessary in order to proceed intelligently with such a work; or does my hon. friend say that this is to be left to a private company? Why, such a company has no business to warrant it taking up such a question; and I declare that if at this day this Government have not done so, they are not in a position to justify themselves, in my judgment, against the legitimate complaints the people of Prince Edward Island make, which complaints have become so strong as to force the hon. gentleman sitting behind the Minister of the Interior, to attack the Government as he has to-day done. The hon. gentleman remarks that it is near six o'clock, and although I have by no means exhausted the subject, which is very important, I will give the First Minister opportunity for announcing public business.

Hon. Mr. BLANCHET—Perhaps the Hon. Minister of the Interior would be kind enough to inform me whether Mr. Sewell, who desired to secure the contract in question, gave security in the way of providing boats for the purpose?

Hon. Mr. LAIRD—The papers will show when they come down.

Hon. Mr. BLANCHET—Is the hon. gentleman aware of this fact or not?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I do not think that it is quite possible to answer this question.

Hon. Mr. BLANCHET—It is quite possible.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is unreasonable. An accurate survey of the place and estimates must be prepared before a decision could be reached. We could not accept the terms required, Mr. Sewell wished the piers to be built.

Hon. Mr. BLANCHET---The Hon. Premier may not understand me. I ask whether Mr. Sewell, who engaged to furnish boats fit for the service, gave security?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE---I do not think that there is anything of the kind. There was no contract, and therefore no security given.

Hon. Mr. BLANCHET---Yes; but the Hon. the Minister of the Interior just now told us that Mr. Sewell would be ready to sign a contract if the Government would furnish piers.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE---We could not grant the terms demanded. I will have the pleasure of saying a few words in reply to my hon. friend from Cumberland when this matter comes up again. I am certain that he would be anything but pleased if I passed over his remarks without notice, and I shall endeavour to gratify him as far as possible. Of course we are very much afraid of him, but still we can manage to get along, I dare say. I move, seconded by Sir John A. Macdonald, the adjournment of the debate.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD---Before the House adjourns I would ask my hon. friend what will occupy the attention of the Government to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE---I think that we will proceed with the adjourned debate on the motion to go into Committee of Supply; then we will continue with such business as may be on the Government paper. We hope in a few days to have every measure which the Government intend to submit before the House in order that business may be pushed forward with rapidity.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD---After Ash Wednesday I suppose that there will not be so many interruptions as at present after six o'clock.

At Six o'clock the House adjourned.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, Feb. 29th, 1876.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three p.m.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BROUSE---To amend the St. Lawrence and Ottawa R. R. Act.

Mr. IRVING---To enable the Welland Vale Manufacturing Co. to obtain an extension of patent for an improved ferule and socket.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he would not object to the introduction of the Bill, but he would call attention to the necessity of adhering to the Patent Law. It would be quite impossible to allow the passage of such Bills as this, when so liberal a Patent Law had been made and extended by recent legislation. He would warn the hon. member that this Bill was not likely to obtain the sanction of the House.

Mr. IRVING said he would not ask for the second reading until the Premier's views were communicated to the promoters of the measure.

The bill was read the first time.

The Budget.

Mr. IRVING resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Hon. Mr. Cartwright, on the motion that the House go into Committee of Supply. He said:—I need hardly remind you that the motion, and the debate springing out of it on Friday night, are of peculiar interest to a large section of the community, and more especially to those constituencies represented by my hon. colleague and myself, the gentlemen from Montreal and Toronto, and from other cities and towns where manufacturing establishments give employment to large numbers of persons. I would wish, firstly, to say that the position taken by the hon. member for Cumberland and his supporters gave rise to very great expectations on the part of such representatives as myself, and I grieve to say after hearing the hon. gentleman's speech, that he sat down leaving us greatly disappointed. He could hardly, after his remarks, have taken his seat without formulating his views in reference to the attitude of the Government. If even one of his charges against them were true, they have no right to hold the seats they now occupy, but should give way for that hon. gentleman and those of his partisans that there was so much difficulty in getting rid of in 1873. He, the hon. member for Cumberland, charged the Government with having created the difficulties under which we labour to-day; with having abandoned the Pacific Railway policy; with having declared there was a deficit two years ago in the revenue, when subsequent events proved there was none, and with having unnecessarily increased taxation to meet it. He attributed to them the really serious attack made in England upon our railway securities; he charged them with general extravagance, with suppressing proper information from the public and with making improper advances to the banks. If any one of these matters were true, it was his bounden duty to have attacked the Government, not by words only, but to place before us some resolution on which he could have taken the opinion of the House. More particularly should he have done so when he has been holding out to the country hopes that to him and his right hon. colleague the manufacturing interests must look for help, and not to the hon. gentleman opposite.

I think that the hon. member for Cumberland very happily referred to many of the utterances of the First Minister with reference to the longitude in which he stood in the tone and expression given to them, but the hon. gentleman might have taken to heart some of that lesson to himself for words recently spoken in Peel and Renfrew, which places are sufficiently near not to be unknown to members of this House; but he avoided that point and attacked all that was defensible, and all that which was satisfactory. He did indeed speak in some general terms of a "national policy," but I have yet to learn what is really meant by such an indefinite term. After all the mortification and disappointment I experienced on Friday evening, there was indeed one gleam of satisfaction, and that was that I should never be able to look to my hon. friend from Cumberland, or his right hon. colleague, for that necessary relief to the manufacturing classes of this country which is necessary. But, Sir, turning from these hon. gentlemen to the gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, I regret to say I do not see much improvement. I must say I have reason for disappointment, not only from one side of the House but also from the other. There was indeed a certain smoothness of diction in the style of the address of the Hon. the Finance Minister which met the approval and admiration of the hon. member for Cumberland. But compliments to a Minister under such circumstances should not be confined merely to matters of style but to matters of principle, and therefore I have no words of admiration to bestow. It does appear to me that the Finance Minister has grievously disappointed the country generally and the manufacturers especially. I cannot help remarking that the country had been led to expect something very different at the hands of the Government. It had gone forth from party organs of the Government—they say, indeed, they have no organs, but they will not deny that which the Globe led us to believe,—that the rate on some manufactures might be slightly advanced; and I am sorry that the Finance Minister did not adopt that policy. In several of the deductions and statements of fact of the Hon. Finance Minister, there are matters upon which I differ from him, and which I shall take the opportunity more especially to elucidate and explain. The Finance Minister after dealing with matters which are solely administrative in his office, accounted to us satisfactorily for the way he had administered these affairs in reference to the instructions given to him by Parliament, which he did fairly; but when he branched into matters of policy I think he lamentably failed. He fought against an imaginary evil, as though there was a party in this House forcing upon him a high protective tariff. I have not heard of any party forcing upon him a high tariff, nor have I heard anything said that would justify any difficulty of that kind. The Hon. Finance Minister put one in mind of Falstaff and his men in buckram, or more properly speaking, Don Quixotte tilting against the windmills. But, Sir, with reference to his policy of doing nothing, or as one of the newspapers summing up the matter very pithily puts it, "the Finance Minister wants calmly the advent of better times." If this is statesmanship, then the Finance Minister rises to the sublime; but with the Finance Minister on the one hand, and the hon. member for Cumberland on the other hand with his Fabian policy, between these two hon. gentlemen many interests in the country will languish if not die. Indeed these two gentlemen put me in mind of the last chapter in Rasselas, where everything is considered and nothing is concluded. "Imlac and the Astronomer were contented to be driven along the stream of life without directing their course to any particular port." That appears to be the statesmanship that now surrounds the governing and ungoverning powers. Those matters which have especially disappointed me in the views of the Finance Minister were those bearing upon the industrial difficulty or difficulties of the country. I cannot say that the Finance Minister did not exhibit that he had spent a great deal of research and industry on this subject. I cannot say he had not looked round the world to find a policy. He spoke of having considered that which prevailed at Moscow and Vienna, and then he bounded from Europe to the country of Brigham Young; but if the hon. gentleman had been only content with examining into the condition and the circumstances of the industries of Montreal, Toronto and Hamilton, he would have been able to come down with a policy much more suitable to the country and acceptable to the people. I could have shown him that the industries of the country were suffering by reason, among others, of the competition of the cheap prison labour of the United States, and I think a country like this should hardly have its labourers forced to stand idle, in order to have forced upon them the products of the convict labour of the neighbouring country. I think our manufacturers have hardly been fairly dealt with in this House, nor indeed always by their own friends. I object to the idea that whenever a subject of this kind is to come before the House for discussion we are to be met by extreme arguments with reference to a Chinese Wall of Protection. There is no agitation in this country for a high tariff. The agitation is that the system of tariff as it at present exists should be adapted to the wants of the country, so as to protect those industries which are now suffering by reason of its misapplication. That is the point and the principle I invoke here, and, I think, the Finance Minister begged the question and surrounded it with a number of difficulties—true, perhaps, in themselves, but wholly inapplicable to the narrow issue we want discussed on the floor of this House. Then the First Minister took up the question of free-trade, and I have now to deal with him; dealing with those gentlemen in the order of their criminality. The First Minister the other night referred to Cobden and his principles as the great Free-Trader. The great Free-Trader of modern times may be measured by his negotiation of the French Treaty of 1846.

I wonder—for the First Minister is almost invariably so accurate in everything he states—whether the hon. gentleman ever took the trouble to read that treaty. Does he know that the very first clause of the Cobden Treaty is to this effect: "That the Emperor of the French would bind himself not to impose upon British manufactures going into France more than 30 per cent. ad valorem." Is there any free-trade in that? On the other hand, the next clause binds England for a certain number of years not to put an export duty on coal. Is there any free-trade in that, which was a chief ingredient in the negotiation? Talking of coal, I am reminded that Mr. McCulloch, an accepted authority upon commerce and a leading authority on free-trade, says that "England should never have consented to give up her right to impose export duties on coal, because being better situated in that part of Europe to supply other countries she could monopolize the market."

I refer to these instances to let my hon. friends know that free-trade is a noun of no quantity, and is merely an expression or cant term for making the best bargains. But, placed as we are, we have no voice in making a good bargain. We have to accept free-trade on one hand, and a commercial policy of extreme protection on the other. In the same way let me tell those hon. gentlemen, if they have never heard of it, that the whole system of England as adapted to free-trade at the present time is free-trade in the sense that it suits them specially. When free-trade principles were formulated in that country fifty years ago, it was never intended by Mr. Huskisson that they should be extended to countries with hostile tariffs; and in the discussion in the House of Commons in 1846 it was admitted that that was the true principle in reference to the question. The point by which free-trade was carried was that the Manchester people coupled it with a cry for cheap food. The opportunity of striking at the large landed interests and the Manchester men with their large capital in manufactures succeeded in forcing a system upon the country which, however satisfactory it may have turned out, would not have been carried had it stood alone, apart from the cry of cheap bread.

I will state the position in which I understand the manufacturers are placed, and in which I think they are entitled to the consideration of the House. I begin by laying down the premises that there is no man in this House but is willing to sustain the manufacturers by all that is reasonable and fair to ensure their success. We are all friends here to the country and to the manufacturing interest especially if, as we have been told over and over again, manufacturers are a source of benefit and wealth, and we are all necessarily in favour of their establishment and success. I also take the argument of my hon friends opposite—that England being a free-trade country, must necessarily procure goods cheaper than any other country, and consequently, I say that the prices with which she is satisfied should be regarded as the normal prices. I will also go further and say, taking the argument of the Free-Traders, that America being strictly a protective country, by parity of reason it is impossible that she can produce goods which can be sold as cheap as the products of a free-trade country. If, therefore, the result be, from causes which are abnormal, that American goods come here and injure Canadian manufactures, it must be by reason of there being something vicious in the system which permits sales below those prices which must be the proper prices. By taking free-trade prices as the measure of prices for our manufactures, the Government, therefore, if they are sensible of these facts, if they can be made sensible that American goods are sold below their real value, then to that extent should they shield our manufacturers. This intrusion of American goods is a disturbance of regular prices, and that is a matter which true statesmanship should rise up to the level of being able to protect us against. That is the protection we want, and not any absurd nonsense connected with high protective tariffs or Chinese Walls.

Having gone so far as to point out a number of what I call the deficiencies of the hon. gentlemen opposite, in whose hands the destiny of the country now is, I shall venture to explain what I believe is the manufacturers' position, and their views of what is fair on this question, and what they will be satisfied with. They have not asked for any extravagant rate. In November they passed a general resolution in Toronto to the effect that they would be satisfied with an advance to 20 per cent., and protection against the sacrifice of American goods, and by the newspapers I see that a few days ago, at some convention, an effort to commit them in favour of 25 per cent. was negatived by a large vote. In their distress and difficulties they do not ask any high amount, but come to the Government and say, "Give us some moderate aid and we will be satisfied." Those gentlemen on the Ministerial benches, however, turn obdurately away, and give no hope whatever.

What are the remedies that have been proposed? There has been a great flourish of trumpets throughout the country with reference to reciprocal legislation. I understand that to mean something in the nature of fixing our duties in the same way that the Americans fix theirs in Congress. That matter has been discussed generally, and the country has very properly and loyally protested in ever being included in what would practically amount to an American Zollverein. Therefore, I see no remedy in that direction; nor do I see any relief in what is brought forward under the head of national policy, unless those who advocate it will give to us the details of the tariff they mean to advocate. That may be such a tariff as we may like to accept, but so long as great men use large words with respect to a national policy, and give no precise definition of their meaning, we must refrain from placing in their hands the reins of administration until they take a more distinct course.

Well, Sir, I will now proceed to propose a remedy, which I will define:— I would discriminate against foreign manufactures which come into competition with the productions of Canada and the United Kingdom. When I have sat down some hon. gentlemen may reply—"We cannot adopt retaliatory duties." I have not used these words, and I do not propose to do so. The Americans have imposed a high tariff; and if there is an adjective proper to describe the policy we should pursue I would say that it is imitative. I would take a small leaf out of the American book, and if it be true that imitation is the sincerest flattery, why we can so flatter in this relation the American eagle as to turn it into a very peacock. It is said that there is very great difficulty in the way owing to treaties that exist, and some eminent statesmen like Lord Burleigh walk across the stage and shake their heads; but I hope that the result of this discussion will be to show what our right position is, for no such difficulty has any existence; and if the Administration will not meet the demands of the country, we must have a Ministry occupying the front seats on the right of the Speaker which will do so. I have taken it upon myself to assert that in no treaty does any provision exist preventing any legislation such as we require by the Canadian Parliament. Instructions are merely given by the Crown directing His Excellency the Governor General to withhold his assent from any Bill imposing differential duties; and the despatches and correspondence which have passed in this regard—though so long ago as to be scarcely applicable to the present day—warn the Colonial Legislature against legislation in this connection, not owing to want of power or to treaty requirements, but simply because, it being a difficult question, the Crown desires that no legislation may in any way interfere with the prevailing Imperial policy, with which the Colonial Parliament is assumed can hardly be so well informed as to be able to deal with at all times with propriety. Therefore the course is perfectly clear for the Government at any time to enter into communication with the Imperial Cabinet in order to discuss a policy that may relieve this country from the difficulties with which it is at present surrounded. I am not content touching a matter of this importance to allow the House to remain under this impression solely because I have so stated. I will accordingly turn to one or two public documents which deal with this question very distinctly. After the war of 1812, at the Treaty of Ghent, Great Britain and the United States signed a convention of commerce in 1815, in which appear these few words, to which I beg to draw attention:—

Mr. IRVING.

 "No higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the territories of His Britannic Majesty in Europe of any articles, the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, and no higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the United States of any articles, the growth, produce, or manufacture of His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe, than are or shall be payable on like articles being the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country."

This provision, in distinct terms, limits this convention to trade relations between the United States and Great Britain in respect to all European productions; and in order to prevent any mistake this additional clause was added:—"The intercourse between the United States and His Britannic Ma-

“jesty’s possessions in the West Indies and on the continent of North America shall not be affected by any of the provisions of this Article, but each party shall remain in the complete possession of its rights.”

This Treaty is as plain as words can make it. Such a difficulty as has been represented does not exist, and I assure hon. gentleman that no treaty has been made on the subject since. I have already explained that the Imperial authorities should be consulted in such regard by the Ministry. I hope that the day is not far distant when we may have a statesman on these Benches—I am not prepared to affirm that he is not there now—who, with a clear head and a bold pen, will send such a despatch across the Atlantic.

In these ideas there is no novelty; such was the policy up to 1847, when discriminatory duties prevailed throughout this country in favor of Great Britain as against all the world.

In 1852, at Quebec, Mr. Hincks made a similar proposition in language which is singularly applicable to the present state of things—“Our policy towards the United States,” he stated, “has been one of concession. England had given to the people of that country most extraordinary advantages, and yet they refuse to us the paltry concession sought for. We abolished our differential duties and obtained nothing in return. We have given them the free use of our canals when they refuse to allow a Canadian vessel to pass through theirs; and now they want to obtain our fisheries and the navigation of the St. Lawrence. Let us suppose that the differential duties which existed in 1846 were now in force, and he would ask whether any individual could be found who would now advocate their repeal unconditionally.”

More follows to the same effect; but enough has been read to show hon. gentlemen that the policy in question has been on several occasions before the country, and I think the time has come when we should deal with it again.

Mr. Merritt in 1858, concerning this matter, reported to the House of Assembly:—“In 1847 in deference to opinions expressed in despatches of 1843, our duties on American manufactures were reduced from 12½ to 7½ per cent. and increased on British manufactures from 5 to 7½ per cent., the effect of this Act being to remove all discriminatory duties against the United States. Your Committee therefore earnestly recommend that that despatch of 1843 be withdrawn, leaving the legislature to regulate the duties on imports as heretofore under the Act of 1846 without restriction.” Further, Sir, I am highly gratified to observe that so late as 1870, as the hon. member for Cumberland informed us the other night, he advocated this same policy. Now this question must be faced; it is not a question of parish politics, but one upon which the country desires information, and regarding which, whenever questions relating to our trade and manufactures are discussed, it is suggested that discriminatory duties would meet the difficulty. I therefore hope that the Ministry will turn their attention to this question, and deal with it in such a way that a thrill of satisfaction will pass from one end of the country to the other, giving us another reason for being proud of the name of Canadian.

I propose moving a resolution embodying the views I have stated, and having read it I will beg to draw the attention of the First Minister to one or two additional remarks. I move, seconded by my hon. colleague from Hamilton,—That it be exposed our manufacturing interests to unfair competition, and this House, while now ready to record its approval of the general policy of the present Administration, is nevertheless of opinion, that the said manufacturing interests deserve the continued fostering care of Parliament, and that the time has arrived when the Government of the Dominion should inform the Imperial Government that the Parliament of Canada deems it necessary to revive some of the features of a former policy by imposing differential duties; and to indicate, further, that in order to meet the difficulties against which Canadian manufactures are struggling, and in the general interests of the Canadian public, and to bring the British and foreign manufacturer on nearer terms of equality in the Canadian market, this House would be prepared to approve of any measure to be submitted to them by the Administration whereby a rate of not less than ten per cent. should be added to the existing importation tariff against such articles of foreign manufacture, of which the same classes are manufactured in the Dominion by way of difference to that extent in favour of like classes of productions of the Mother Country."

“Resolved, That this House in maintaining the policy adopted by the present and past Governments in limiting the rate of duties upon the importation of these classes of articles which are produced in the country, to the extent required to meet the wants of the revenue, fully appreciates the national benefits arising from the degree of protection to the existing manufacturing industries of the Dominion afforded under that system, but observes with regret that the fluctuations in price, resulting from the uncertain condition of foreign markets, affecting the Canadian markets, and incapable of being foreseen by the Canadian manufacturers,

I think this resolution if adopted would meet the difficulty. It would encourage the manufacturing interest to expect some meed of protection and defence from the present Government. I hope that the Government will not set the cities at defiance. Already in the cities there is more active political thought upon this subject than in the country constituencies generally. The views I have been attempting to enunciate have never, to my knowledge, been opposed by the farming community, to whose good sense I look for protection in favour of their relatives who live in the neighbourhood of cities. I entirely deny the propriety of raising a distinction between the rural and urban populations of this country. In my mind they are the same kindred.

In conclusion, I wholly dissent from the ideas of the Finance Minister that the result of manufacturing in the cities is to take away the population from the country and carry such population to the cities. It is a well known fact that the manufacturing establishments of Connecticut and Massachusetts are more than half manned by Canadians, and Chicago is swarming with our countrymen who cannot find employment at home. If our population has not increased in some of our rural constituencies it is for want of congenial labour in the country, many have been obliged to go to a foreign land to get employment.

Mr. CHARLTON—Like many hon. members in this House, I had believed that protection to a certain extent and within certain limits would benefit the country. We have been told that a protective policy is one which could only be adopted by patriarchal Government—a Government which could not only protect industries but also limit production. I hold that a protective policy, on the contrary, runs through the whole legislative system of any country. To afford protection of life and property is the duty of Government, and armies are raised and navies built to protect the nation. Prisons are erected for the protection of the public, and free grants given for the purpose of increasing the public wealth and adding to the population.

It may be safely assumed that no nation has attained to greatness in commerce or manufactures without having in the course of its history imposed exactions and restrictions. This has been notably the case with Great Britain herself; and I think the assertion that the development of various industries is necessary to the cultivation of the self-defensive power of a nation is incontrovertible. We have had an illustration of it in the neighbouring nation. The Southern States were without manufacturing industries while the Northern States were filled with them, and the advantage this gave them resulted in the suppression of the rebellion.

No person will assert it is proper to protect industries that are not naturally adapted to the country, but when they are suited to the land it is the duty of the Government to foster them. Arts and manufactures do not spring up readily on a virgin soil. In the first place trade has a tendency to remain in beaten tracks. Then the advantage is on the side of a nation in which manufactures are established, because money is always more easily obtained there than in a new country.

Mr. IRVING.

Then, again, the possession of organized and skilled labour is an advantage that the manufacturers in a country where manufactures are established for a long time possess over a new country. But, although it may be conceded that protection is to the advantage of manufacturers, unless it can be shown that it is also an advantage to the other classes of the community and the nation at large, all arguments in favour of protection fall to the ground. It must be shown that the agriculturists are to be benefited by protection before it is incumbent upon the Government to adopt a protective policy. I believe that the interests of the nation at large would be promoted by judicious protection; I believe that the agricultural interests of the Dominion would be promoted by protection, and that the manufacturer, being brought to the door of the farmer, would afford a market for a great many articles of produce that would not be saleable if the market were three thousand miles away. With a home market of this kind established by protection to manufacturers, the agriculturist can benefit his soil by producing a rotation of crops. The purchasing power of money is not a correct measure of the purchasing power of labour. A farmer raises a bushel of corn which he sells for fifty cents in a foreign market, and with the proceeds he can buy three yards of cotton; but supposing the manufactures are brought to his door, and the better market which it creates increases the price to 60 cents or 70 cents per bushel, and although impost duties are levied on cottons from Manchester so as to add largely to its price, still he may be enabled to buy four yards of cotton with his bushel of corn instead of the three yards it was able to purchase before, as the purchasing power of his labour is increased.

We have at our own doors all the illustrations and experience of protection and its benefits required for our government and guidance. The United States have adopted a protective policy under which their manufactures have been fostered and promoted until in 1870 their products reached the sum of $4,253,000,000, giving employment to 2,000,000 operatives and disbursing over $775,500,000 in wages.

It has been charged that protection has prevented the extension of foreign commerce in that country. That may be true; but it is estimated that the domestic commerce of the United States last year reached the enormous proportions of 200,000,000 tons, valued at $10,000,000,000. What is the foreign commerce of that country compared with the vast domestic trade that goes on increasing without the fluctuations or risks of foreign trade. Look at the progress of the cotton trade in that country. Previous to the import duties on foreign cottons in 1824, British manufactures crushed out all efforts to establish factories in the Republic; but the imposition of 25 per cent. duty on foreign cottons had the effect in a few years, not only of building up manufactures, but led to the production of an article better in quality and lower in price than the Americans received from British manufactures before their own industries were established. In 1860 the United States were exporters of cottons, exporting nearly 10 per cent. of the whole amount manufactured. The same way with the iron trade. All attempts to establish iron industries were crushed out by foreign competition, and high prices were maintained at intervals—higher, on the average, than the per centage necessary to produce them in the United States at a profit. But when a protective duty was imposed iron manufactures were established, and in a short time the price of iron was brought down several dollars per ton, and it is now sold cheaper than the British iron ever was offered for on that market. The shipping interest of the United States was one of the most signal illustrations of the benefit of a protection policy that could be produced. Under a protective tariff the ship building of the United States had grown, till in 1860 it was nearly as great as that of England, and there came two causes to ruin it. First, the war, which placed the United States shipping at a disadvantage with all other common carriers, and the second cause was the revulsion in the ship building trade caused by the substitution of iron for wooden vessels. Under these combined influences the shipping trade fell into the depressed condition in which it now remains. Why is it that we are so desirous of selling to the United States articles of food? It is simply because they have by protection built up manufacturing cities with a numerous population that consumes not only the vast products of their own country, but also afford a better market for our products than we in the Dominion possess. The issue in Canada to-day is not an issue between free-trade and protection; the issue is, is the protection now afforded adequate for the promotion of our industries? Although protection has conferred great benefits upon the United States, I think it can be clearly shown that the amount of protection in that country has been altogether greater than necessary for the purpose of promoting its interests, and in consequence of that over-protection monopolies and rings were created and a gambling element was introduced into all business transactions. Part of this is due to that element brought into the problem, the influence of which is so difficult to measure or define, the element of an irredeemable vicious paper currency. In consequence of that it was necessary to introduce a higher tariff than would have been necessary under a sound monetary system. I am satisfied that the manufacturers of the United States, through lobbying, obtained vastly more protection than they were entitled to or the country should have granted. I had supposed that the duty of 17½ per cent. levied upon that list was a duty insufficient for protection, and the impression I had formed upon that point I must confess was very seriously shaken by the statement made by the Finance Minister in his Budget Speech. On examination into the subject I find that the imports under the 17½ per cent. list for the last six months of the year 1874 were $28,271,000, and for the corresponding period of 1875 they were $18,142,000, a falling off of $10,129,000, or about 36 per cent. It must be borne in mind that although there was a heavy falling off in that list there was a diminution in the total volume of trade, and it is necessary to consider the falling off in the general imports. I find that the total imports for the last half of the year 1874 amounted to $69,193,000, less goods on the 17½ list $28,271,000, leaving the imports exclusive of the 17½ list at $41,422,000 for that period. The total imports for the last half of 1875 were $51,223,000, from which deduct the imports on the 17½ list and it leaves $18,142,000. Thus we have the amount of imports, exclusive of the 17½ list, of $33,781,000, a falling off of imports exclusive of the 17½ per cent. list of $7,141,000 or 18 per cent., a nett reduction of 18 per cent. of imports for the advantage our manufacturers in twelve months of protection. I doubt whether it would be policy to advance that rate 2½ per cent. It is evident that it has acted efficiently as a protective duty, but whether efficiently enough remains to be seen. At any rate the 17½ per cent. had better be continued for the present.

There is another feature to be borne in mind. The present duty caused a heavy falling off in receipts and a deficit in the revenue. Were there 2½ per cent. increase in the tariff, industries would, perhaps, be unduly stimulated, there would be a still larger deficit, and Government would be further embarrassed. With regard to the resolution, I confess I would like to see a retaliatory policy adopted which would bring the United States to terms, and would at least protect us against slaughter invoices. I doubt, however, whether that is an evil which requires the interposition of Government. I think it is much magnified, and is entirely owing to a state of affairs across the lines which cannot be considered permanent and which will disappear with the return of good times to that country. Greatly as our manufacturers have been injured, I think their complaints will not last long; and I doubt whether it is good policy, in view of the fact that this is a temporary evil for the Administration, to pursue a course which would lead to retaliation. I am reminded of the anecdote of the Englishman who allowed his wife to beat him. When asked why he endured the treatment, he replied, "Oh, it pleases she, and don't hurt I." That is exactly our position in this respect. A retaliatory policy may please us but will not hurt them. I hold that what Canada desires is reciprocity with the United States—a short cut to the markets which Protectionists propose to secure for us. It is a matter of very great importance that we should obtain access to those markets. A retaliatory policy might have a bad effect in preventing this. In the United States just now the Democratic party have a majority in the House of Representatives, and they are favourable to granting us more liberal trade relations than we have hitherto enjoyed. It is not impossible that that party may carry the elections this year, and thus exert a greater influence upon the policy of the country; and it would be folly on our part to do anything to prejudice our case in the meantime.

To attribute the existing stagnation to inadequate protection is a fallacy. England, with her free-trade, is to-day depressed; and in that highly protected country the United States there is a great stagnation. This great wave of depression has swept over the commercial world, and our interests being blended with those of the United States, it is not surprising that distress has visited us. No Government could do anything to mitigate or avert the trouble under which Canada is suffering. The Government has no more to do with it than with the tides of the ocean or the changes of the moon. The crisis came in obedience to a natural law, and in obedience to a natural law it will pass away.

In conclusion, I may state that I am desirous of doing everything calculated to promote the manufacturing interests of this country. But looking from my stand-point I believe that the present tariff is adequate; that at all events to demonstrate its inadequacy will require more time. I heartily endorse the policy of the Finance Minister in declining to advance the rate beyond $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Mr. WORKMAN—In arising to address a few remarks to the House I have to crave its indulgence fearing I may to some extent trench upon personal grounds. I will not detain the House long if I can avoid it. Before entering upon a discussion of the question now before us I cannot but express my deep regret and mortification at the policy initiated in this House by the Finance Minister on Friday last. Since my arrival in Ottawa a great many deputations from my constituents in Montreal have visited this city, and I have had the pleasure, as it was my duty, to accompany those deputations to the different heads of the Departments and to put them in communication with the Ministers of Finance, Customs and others, in order that they might explain to the leaders of the Government their views in reference to this question of the tariff. I think I am correct in stating that the gentlemen composing these deputations formed a conviction from their intercourse with these heads of Departments that on the whole there would be some slight change in the tariff.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that I or any other member of the Government made that statement to him or any other person?

Mr. WORKMAN—I say that those gentlemen from their conversation with you and others came to that conclusion. The hon. gentleman never directly stated so, but there is such a thing as an inferential conclusion. If the hon. gentleman stated directly and distinctly to those deputations, as he did on Friday last—and here I wish to remark that he treated us courteously and not discourteously as the newspapers had it, that the policy of the Government was fixed and there was no use in their coming here, we would have understood our position and saved trouble and expense to these gentlemen and a good deal of inconvenience to myself. I mention this in order that I may be distinctly understood on that point.

When I had the honour of coming forward as a candidate for Montreal West I saw that the temper of the people and the tone of the public opinion ran strongly in favour of protection. I had always been to a moderate extent a Protectionist myself. but I confess that the prevailing sentiment was beyond the ideas I had previously formed on that question. I stated then, and I repeat it here, that if I had the honour to represent Montreal West on the floor of this House, I should advise and impress upon the Government by every means in my power to adopt a system of duties that would place us in a position to enable the struggling industries of this country to compete on fair grounds with those of the United States. Nay, Sir, I went even further, and I stated that my convictions of what would be proper were, what I should term, a reciprocity of duty. By that I meant the imposition of duties on all goods coming into Canada from the United States equal to the same rate of duties that that country charged upon similar goods coming from Canada. That was what I stated, and I say now that I am prepared to advocate that doctrine. For the last ten or fifteen years I think we have been what I might term cringing to the United States. It is time that we should try to adopt a policy of our own and free ourselves from that thralldom. Therefore, I think one of the most important steps in that direction would be the one I indicated at Montreal, and which I repeat here to-day. I remember well what Canada was 45 years ago, when I was a lad and went first to business. It was then pre-eminently a free-trade country, and I would like to tell some of the hon. gentlemen who favour that policy now, what Canada was at that time. There was a duty of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on goods coming from Great Britain, and specific and ad valorem duties on goods from foreign countries, but nearly all our imports were direct from the Mother Country. At that time trade was very small indeed, and our shipping was still smaller.

Our duties were so light that we were frequently flooded with the overstocks of Manchester, Leeds and Glasgow. Although the number of merchants was very limited very few of them were able to survive this competition from England. Goods being admitted at $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and that duty being only indifferently levied they were sold for what they would bring. The consequence was large and numerous bankruptcies. I remember well the condition of affairs from 1827 to 1837 under a free-trade policy, and in order that my free-trade friends around me may know a little about the condition of things then, I will quote a few prices of leading staples of the farming community of that day, and now. I refer principally to articles that the farmer produces and which are consumed in and around his own residence and in the towns near where he lives. From 1828 to 1830, the price of beef at Montreal was $2\frac{1}{2}$ to $3\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound. I bought very good beef myself for three half pence a pound. To-day the same article sells at 12 to 18 cents, so that the farmer gets under a $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. tariff nearly five times as much as he got then. Mutton was 20 to 25 cents a quarter. Two years ago it sold in Montreal at 75 cents. Butter was 8 to 10 cents a pound; it now sells at 22 to 30 cents. Eggs were then 6 to 7 cents a dozen; they now bring 15 to 20 cents. Oats sold at 16 to 18 cents a bushel. One of my first speculations was a large purchase at 10 pence per bushel, on which I lost money. To-day oats sell at 40 to 50 cents. Firewood was then \$1.75 per cord, to-day it is \$7 to \$8. The price for sawing wood was 9 pence to 10 pence currency, that is 16 cents; to-day it is 50 cents. The wages of a very good servant girl was \$1.50 per month; now good servants command readily \$7 to \$10. White pine, 80 feet average, sold at 5 cents; to-day it brings up to 25 cents. Rock elm brought 9 cents; to-day it brings 30 to 35 cents. What is it that has produced this great change in these staple articles, the produce of the farm and forest? I do not mean to say it is entirely to be attributed to our manufacturing establishments, but I say they have largely contributed to it. We have established a home market, and the farmer can find at his own door ready sale for his articles, at highly remunerative prices. At that time an axe cost the lumberman \$2.50 and he got a very inferior article. There was only one small axe manufactory in the country at that time; to-day the same article can be bought for 75 to 80 cents. The lumberman is now getting his axes for one-third the price he then paid, and receives four times as much for the products he sells. The same will apply to nearly all the articles farmers and lumbermen use to-day. All the agricultural implements, spades, augers, scythes, &c., were made in England and brought to Canada. They were of the worst possible quality and entirely unsuited to our wants, since then, during the last 25 years, small factories have been established and our industries have grown largely. They are now producing these same articles of a very superior quality—quite equal to those manufactured in the United States—and selling them to the farmers at the same price, and in many instances at less than they paid for the inferior productions of Great Britain. That state of things has been brought about by incidental protection, but to-day our manufacturers are not prospering for reasons I have already stated in this House. Until two years ago they were prosperous, but since then we have had to meet competition from the neighbouring States, which has proved disastrous to a great number of them. If that competition were conducted on fair terms we would not object to it. If we in Canada were allowed the same access to their markets that they have to ours we would not complain. When our markets are full to repletion, when our factories are working at three-quarter time and are just in a position to make two ends meet, if \$10,000 worth of goods from the United States were thrown on our markets, even that small quantity would produce disastrous results, and to my own positive experience it has done so.

Mr. WORKMAN.

Lower Canada is pre-eminently fitted for a manufacturing as well as an agricultural country. We have a very thrifty and economical population, but the policy of this country hitherto has had a tendency to drive them out of the country. They have gone to the neighbouring Republic, so that to-day, if I have been correctly informed, there are 500,000 French-Canadians in the factories of New England alone. Why is it that these people leave us? There must be "something rotten in the State of Denmark."

I hope the Government will take this matter into consideration. I did hope they would have done so at this Session of Parliament, and that they would have submitted to us a tariff that would at in some degree have met the well-understood wishes of the large manufacturing centres. I am almost afraid to express the amount of indignation and regret that pervades Montreal under the excitement caused by the Finance Minister's statement. My letters and telegrams are of the most stinging nature. Occupying the place I do here it is only right to the House that my constituents should understand the position I took on this question last Friday. I confess my deep mortification at the result of all the deputations that came here at my desire and on my prognostications. Feeling that I was bound to sustain here the doctrine I advocated at Montreal, when the hon. member for Cumberland was about to reply to the Minister of Finance, I walked across the floor of this House and asked him a question, telling him what my answer would be on the matter. That question was, whether he was prepared with a resolution to offer the House in opposition to the policy laid down by the Finance Minister.

The hon. gentlemen told me---I am not sure whether he said I was, or we were not prepared with a resolution at present; and that if he decided to submit such a resolution he would let me know. He has not done so. Therefore, I conclude that he is not so prepared. I drew that conclusion because I had no communication from the hon. gentleman in this relation. On the contrary, instead of acting in such a manner as to have pleased me, grappling with the question in a straightforward and manly way, he entertained this House for a considerable time in quoting from my speeches in Montreal. I really was delighted to find that any of my utterances had attracted the attention of such a distinguished gentleman, who had actually gone to the trouble to keep in a scrap-book with these extracts from my stump-orations, delivered at unguarded moments very often, and send them to the country as sentiments worthy of repetition. If the hon. gentleman publishes a second edition of that work I beg him to send me a copy, and if he would be kind enough to enclose a few locks of his hair I would be delighted.

I would have been gratified to a greater degree if the hon. gentleman had stated clearly and distinctly his views on protection, because that is the most pertinent question before us, to my mind. I listened with a great deal of attention, but, I confess, to deep disappointment, when I heard the hon. gentleman say that he was neither a Free-Trader nor a Protectionist; and that he was in favour of the grand system known as the National Policy, one of its items being, I believe, the imposition of a tax of fifty cents per ton on coal.

I did expect that my hon. friend from Hamilton would have drawn up a resolution of a sufficiently simple and striking nature to have secured a clear expression from this House on this question of protection; and in order that no misunderstanding may exist, and that I may place myself right with my constituents and this country, I propose to move an amendment to the amendment. I desire to know whether the majority opposes a protective policy or not, and if so, we will then be prepared to educate public opinion to such a point as to secure the return at the next election of a majority sustaining our views.

An Hon. Gentleman—Never!

Mr. WORKMAN—If we cannot do so then it will be useless further to discuss the question.

I move in amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Montreal Centre, that all the words after that be struck out, and that it be Resolved, That this House deeply regrets to learn from the speech of the Hon. Minister of Finance on Friday last, that the Government has not proposed to this House a policy of protection to our various and important manufacturing industries; and that the large amount of capital now invested in these industries, and their present depressed condition, render such a policy necessary to restore them to a condition of prosperity.

I submit this amendment with a great deal of deference. Before I sit down I would like to allude to another matter which perhaps has been one of the causes that has produced the existing distress, in the mercantile community at least—the amount of money deposited in different banks throughout the Dominion—banks which were not at the time fitted to become custodians of public money, or restore it when so called upon. Receiving large sums in deposit it was necessary for them to find customers for it; and to my certain knowledge, in two instances—banks were so anxious to distribute this Government money—it was loaned to firms which soon became bankrupt. In one case $179,000 were loaned to one establishment; it should never have received more than $30,000 or $40,000. In the other instance, a still weaker house, composed of very active and enterprising young men, whose cash capital did not exceed $10,000, obtained $212,000 under discount; and I believe that at the date of their suspension the sum under discount amounted to $197,000. The character of that paper being largely accommodation and partly forged was the most discouraging feature of the affair.

If to these banks had not been confided such large sums they would have been more careful as to its distribution and would have paid more attention in the selection of their customers; fewer men would have engaged in business and there would have been less competition; firms doing business in a legitimate way would not have been obliged to submit to undue—nay, to ruinous competition; for if the houses to which I have referred had obtained the sum to which they were alone entitled—ten thousand dollars—they would not have been able to sacrifice goods in Western Canada, as they did to the great detriment of houses transacting their business in a proper manner. I mention this in order that the Government whenever it has a surplus may take better care of it, discontinuing the policy followed in this regard during the last eighteen months.

The Finance Minister will be greatly deceived in his calculations concerning the receipts of Customs duties during the next six months. I consider that they will be less by 25 or 30 per cent., because I well know what a degree of depression exists throughout every branch of trade. Had the hon. gentleman asked for the imposition of an additional 2½ per cent. on the tariff, it would have given a wonderful stimulus to the commerce of the country; and in lieu of being a burden, as has been pretended disastrous to the lumbermen and farmers, I am prepared to prove that this would have been a decided advantage to the trade of the Dominion; and that the lumberman, the farmer and the mechanic would have in consequence occupied a wonderfully improved position. The present prostration will continue for some time longer. I know that our country is full of vitality and energy, and that it will recover its prosperity; but if the Government are not prepared to extend a helping hand to our industries, then I am prepared to support any resolution coming from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House which will place this question fairly and squarely before the House.

Mr. WORKMAN.

Mr. SPEAKER—An amendment to the amendment to a motion for the House to go into Committee of Supply is not in order.

Mr. WORKMAN—Then I shall take the first possible opportunity of submitting such a motion to obtain a square vote on the question at issue.

Mr. DEVLIN—A few minutes ago I was requested to second the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Montreal West, and observing that it called in question the financial policy of the Government, I stated at once my willingness to second any resolution which would give expression to our disapprobation of that policy. I now find it ruled out of order; but nevertheless, representing as I do the leading manufacturing constituency of the Dominion, and being in full accord with the opinion entertained by my constituents as to the necessity of adopting a truly national policy, I feel it to be my duty to say, that I am in complete harmony with the gentlemen who have recommended a policy of protection for our manufacturing industries.

I have been a member of what is known as the Reform party for over twenty years, and I think I have always been amongst the number who have striven to give effect to its principles. I looked upon its accession to office with pride and pleasure, and I expected that when the opportunity offered its leaders would govern this country with wisdom, impartiality and justice. I placed faith in them; and at this hour it is with deep regret that I feel myself compelled to declare that I utterly dissent from the policy propounded by the Finance Minister for himself and his colleagues, and in accordance with the sentiments of my constituents and my own convictions I am now perfectly willing to assist in the passage of any resolution—honestly put before the House—which will reverse that policy.

I occupy an embarrassing position from another cause; desirous of procuring protection for our industries, and discovering that the Government does not contemplate granting any further protection than has been extended since their accession to office, I naturally look to the Opposition believing that they will gladly avail themselves of so favourable an occasion for striking a direct blow at their opponents, an opportunity for which they have anxiously waited for a long period. I regret however to be obliged to state after the speech of my hon. friend for Cumberland who, when he spoke, I supposed would have in his manly, eloquent style, advocated protection as we understand it.

I had expected such a result from his speech, but when the hon. gentleman closed by stating that he was neither a Free-Trader nor a Protectionist, I felt that our protection friends look in vain to the members of the Opposition for the assistance they require. I therefore find that we who support the manufacturing interests of this Dominion cannot look for assistance from the Opposition, nor can we look for it from the Mintsterial benches; therefore we occupy a most unfortunate position in the House at the present moment. But the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has not spoken yet, and I wait with some degree of anxiety for that hon. gentleman's speech upon this important question. It has been stated that the hon. gentleman informed a deputation that his platform was a Protection platform; if that be true I await with anxiety his endorsement in this House of that statement; and I say now if he is prepared to put himself forward as the advocate of the manufacturing interests of this Dominion, he will find the members for Montreal prepared to follow his lead in that particular matter. The question under the consideration of this House is one of vast importance to the country, but I regret to say the opinions of an overwhelming majority of this House is against those who advocate the imposition of higher duties than those which we have at present. I can understand the embarrassing position in which the Government find themselves in this matter. The hon. gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces, it has been said, have called upon the Finance Minister and the Leader of the Government and intimated to them that if any change was made in the tariff they might rely upon opposition from these Provinces. I hope this is not true, for if it were it would prove that Confederation could not after all produce the happy results we were lead to anticipate would flow from it. It would be a most painful position for Ontario, Quebec, and the Western Provinces to be placed in by any attempt of this kind, to force legislation on the Government of the country by the threat "if you don't give us all we want, we are prepared, regardless of all consequences, to record our votes against you, and drive you from the Treasury Benches." In Montreal and other manufacturing centres the strongest possible hopes were entertained that the tariff would be increased. I believe the hon. member for Montreal West is to-day responsible, and is held responsible to some extent in Montreal for the loss which the merchants of that city have sustained by reason of the course pursued by the Government at the present moment. The hon. gentleman has on the occasion of public meetings in Montreal held out certain inducements to the persons who were then assembled, which led them to believe that some change in the tariff would be made; that change has not been made, and the hon. gentleman no doubt finds himself in a very embarrassing position. If he had it in his power no doubt he would make such a change as would satisfy his friends in Montreal West. Protection has not been afforded to the manufacturers of the Dominion, and all they can do is to record their protest against the policy of the Government. If the population of this country is to be increased the manufacturers must be afforded greater protection. No more powerful argument in favor of such a policy can be adduced than the fact that while we in the Dominion who are paying out large sums of money annually to encourage immigration to our shores, our own people, skilled in the language and industries of the country and accustomed to its climate, are leaving for the United States where they can find employment, while the ships are bringing hundreds upon hundreds of strangers into the Dominion at the same time. There must be something radically wrong, and there is something radically wrong in the Government of the country when such a state of affairs can exist. Look at our position to-day; look into the great metropolitan city of the Dominion and see the condition of her artisans, labourers and others who have now many of them to depend upon the soup kitchens and the charity of the citizens of Montreal to save them from starvation. Similar distress exists in other cities of the Dominion and what is the cause? Surely there must be something wrong in the Government when, with all our national advantages and the wonderful products of our soil, thousands of workingmen are in a state of destitution. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to entertain free-trade opinions and give expression to them in this House, but they will have very little weight with men who have wives and children who are starving, and are told to wait and suffer a little more until the policy of the Finance Minister had been more fully developed. Free-Traders say protection is all very well for Montreal, Toronto and Hamilton; it may be very convenient for those who live in the cities in Canada; protection may be an argument for them, we sympathise with them; but if we become Protectionists what becomes of the agricultural classes. Everyone knows that it is to protection England owes her commercial prosperity and present commercial greatness. Hon. gentlemen have said the protection argument may meet very well the views of Montreal, but rub out Montreal from the maps, follow it up by extinguishing Toronto and the other cities and then what becomes of the great Dominion? I take it for granted there is not a man residing in Canada and not an hon. gentleman in this House who is not proud of Montreal. I take it there is not a man in Montreal who is not proud of Toronto, and of every other city in the Dominion, and I say if you abolish the industries that give vitality to these cities you strike a blow at the life of the Dominion itself. My hon. friend, the member for Norfolk, made a very able speech; but when he rose to address the House I had something of the same feeling as when the hon. member from Cumberland rose. I thought the hon. member for Norfolk was a strong Protectionist. After he had logically shown that protection was needed in this country, and that the manufacturing interests were not sufficiently encouraged, suddenly a change came over him and he reversed the picture. In doing so he reminded me of that eminent Scotch advocate, who being engaged to prosecute in a certain trial, in a fit of absent-mindedness, delivered an eloquent speech for his opponents side. When, however, his client intimated that he was speaking on the wrong side, he turned the tables by saying, "That is exactly what my opponents will say;" and then demolished the argument he had previously made. The speech of the hon. member reminds me of that circumstance. After addressing the House in favour of protection, he concluded by proclaiming himself a Free-Trader. But what is the most remarkable is, that three days ago the hon. gentleman declared that an increase of 2½ per cent. was necessary. To-day he expresses himself perfectly satisfied with the soundness of the Finance Minister's policy. In the course of his speech the hon. gentleman said if we adopted a retaliatory policy against the United States we would offend that nation; that their industries are depressed, but that the days of prosperity are not far distant; and that they will recuperate in a very short time. That may be all true, but do we live in fear of the United States in this country? Has our legislation to be shaped in accordance with the will of its people? I apprehend not. There is not a man in this country who would consent to occupy a position of that kind. Considerations of that kind should not for one moment enter into our adoption of a policy. If our policy is just and can be recommended we ought to legislate accordingly, irrespective of what other countries may think or do.

Mr. DEVLIN.

The manufactures of this Dominion, I contend, are entitled to greater protection than is accorded them now. They asked to be placed on an equal footing with the United States, which was a fair request. That country numbers forty-four millions; we are but four millions, and if we are to compete with them, there is no reason why it should be under other than equal conditions. When they close their markets against us we should retaliate by closing our markets against them.

My hon. colleague from West Montreal has given his experience of free-trade forty-five years ago; unfortunately my memory does not extend so far back, and I am unable to follow him on that point. Before I close I deem it my duty to avail myself of this opportunity to say that I am in a position to state that so far as the City of Montreal may be worthy of the consideration of this House, her citizens are very deeply grieved at the policy of the Government. That city showed great confidence in the present Administration by returning three supporters, and I think that a city of its magnitude and population was entitled to a larger share of consideration than the Government have afforded it. I hope that the hon. member for Kingston will take this opportunity to catch the members for Montreal East, West and Centre. If he does not the hon. gentleman will throw his net out for a long time before he will secure so good a haul. On the other hand, if the right hon. gentleman believes in the wisdom of the policy announced, if he believes that no other course could be adopted under the circumstances; if he believes that greater protection is impossible under existing conditions, it is his duty to rise now, and give the country the benefit of his views thereon.

It being Six o'clock the House took RECESS.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. DEVLIN resumed his speech. He said—When the hour for recess arrived I was endeavouring to persuade the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition to favour us with his opinions upon the important question now under consideration, and I am not disposed to leave that branch of the subject without putting it still more forcibly if I can. I believe the country expects to hear his views on this matter. I have in my possession a communication from gentlemen exercising a very large influence in Montreal and outside of it, who seemingly look to the Opposition for protection, and I would be wanting in my duty if I did not call upon the right hon. member for Kingston to speak out plainly on this subject. The hon. member for Cumberland has spoken at length and with great eloquence; and certainly he assailed the Government very strongly on this particular question, but he concluded his speech by saying he was neither one thing nor the other. Therefore, so far as he is concerned I can extract no comfort from his remarks for my constituents, and I turn to the right hon. member for Kingston.

There is another gentleman, whose name is a household word throughout the Dominion, who applies himself to legislation in a way that shows he takes a deep interest in every matter that concerns the country's welfare—I refer to the gentleman who is recognized as the leader, the worthy Leader of the Left Centre.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—What have you got to say about him?

Mr. DEVLIN—I say that if he desires to occupy that position in the Councils of the country to which his eminent talents entitle him, now is the time (if the right hon. member for Kingston refuses to speak on this subject, or to avail himself of the strength with which he can surround himself,) for him to enunciate his opinions on the policy of the Government. If all the gentlemen of the Opposition keep silent the country will come to the conclusion that they are better off after all with a Government that increased the tariff from 15 to 17½ per cent.

Mr. DEVLIN.

I believe the right hon. member for Kingston when called upon by a deputation from Montreal received them very kindly (as he always does those who call upon him) and expressed his sympathy with them. If I am rightly informed he intimated his readiness to render them all the assistance in his power. I wish to know to what extent he is willing to go in aiding the manufacturing industries of the Dominion at the present time. I declare most seriously if the Opposition will throw themselves into the cause, if they will raise the banner of protection and allow us to enroll ourselves under their standard, if there is no humbug in it; although I have been with the Reform party all my lifetime I will give them all the assistance and support in my power.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—How long?

Mr. DEVLIN—As long as they continue to protect the interests of the people of this Dominion. As long as the public believe it is for the good of the country to have such a policy, so long will I give my warm and cordial support to the Administration that pursues it; because I contend in a question of this kind we must throw aside party lines. When we know that starvation is staring thousands of our people in the face, and that the destitution is attributed to a certain cause, the men who are willing to provide a remedy for the evil should receive the support of every lover of his country. If the Opposition are not prepared to submit a policy, in the name of common justice let them not add fuel to the flame and increase the excitement that already exists, by pretending they would do so if they held the reins of power. I want the leaders of the Opposition to speak out. I feel that I ought not to close without referring to the efforts made by the hon. member for Bothwell to discover the cause of the depression. Every hon. member knows that the hon. gentleman has always taken a deep interest in the legislation of the country. But I must be permitted to say that it looks to me like an attempt to enquire into a matter to learn that which is manifest to the meanest intellect in the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Hear! hear!

Mr. DEVLIN—I am bound to say that if the appointment of this Committee, or its object was simply to divert attention from the real cause of distress, it should fail; and if it be to divert attention from the Government's financial policy, it must fail.

I listened to the speech of the Finance Minister with admiration; it was most able and eloquent, but I am convinced that his arguments utterly failed to satisfy the interests I represent. I believe that it is still within the power of the Government to give relief to our manufacturing industries, and I most sincerely hope that the Finance Minister will even yet see his way to granting the legitimate protection to which they are entitled, also that the Hon. Leader of the Government will change their financial policy in this relation. I have heard it said, that the Finance Minister informed a deputation that no change would be made; but I trust that the contrary will be done. I derived deep gratification from the speech of the hon. member for Hamilton and the other hon. gentleman who supported his views. I am obliged to tell the Government that if they persist in the policy enunciated by the Finance Minister they can no longer rely—as I am at present advised—upon the support of the members for Montreal. I cannot support any party, or any Government that refuses, as I understand it, to deal justly with the interests I have the honour to represent. I simply ask the Administration to remember that we have to compete with forty-four millions, and that all we demand is to be put in a condition to compete with them fairly. If you want free-trade, give us absolute free-trade; give no advantage to the United States; do not enable them to close their doors against us and leave our doors wide open to them to do with our country as they please. I will not abuse the patience of the House by discussing the "slaughter" market-question. This is stated outside. It has been discussed at great length, and if our manufacturing industries are left to perish for want of legislative protection, all I will further say is, the Opposition will take all the advantage of it, and the Government will have all the disadvantage accruing from such a course.

Mr. JONES (Halifax)—I wish to say a few words in reply to the hon. gentlemen from Hamilton and Montreal West. The former, while introducing his resolution, with all the ingenuity of a practiced debater, and all the skill of a special pleader, made certain statements which, from his point of view, bear upon the subject; but before resuming his seat, to my mind the hon. gentleman destroyed the entire force of his argument when he admitted that in England, at present, under a free-trade system, goods were manufactured more cheaply than in the United States, with protection. I take this to indicate that although discussing the question from one point of view, the hon. gentleman is in reality at one with us on the main question.

Mr. IRVING—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I simply cited it as part of the argument advanced against me.

Mr. JONES—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I think he put it the other way.

The hon. member for Montreal West argued from a different standpoint; and he was good enough to give statistics of forty-five years ago to prove under what circumstances the country was placed at the time. The hon. gentleman is, however, the best illustration of the advantages of free-trade during the last forty years, for I am told, and I am glad to know it, that he has amassed a colossal fortune, as well as other merchants who buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market. The hon. gentleman wants to go back on this record and introduce an injurious system. He quoted the prices of certain articles; but I do not think that he expects the House to receive this as evidence of the advantages of protection, for such prices are regulated by supply and demand; and no one is better aware than himself that to reverse the policy under which this country has so happily advanced during the last forty-five years, would be suicidal in the extreme.

I listened with the deepest pleasure to the speech delivered by the Hon.

Minister of Finance; and I am sure that every person who had the interests of the Dominion at heart, throwing aside sectional considerations, must have rejoiced, as I am confident the country will rejoice, on account of the able, patriotic and statesman-like policy enunciated by the Government on this occasion. The hon. member for Montreal Centre talks about threats having been used by the representatives of the Maritime Provinces, but surely if they felt that an increase of duties would be prejudicial to their interests, they had a right to exercise any influence they possessed with the Administration. The hon. gentleman himself has, moreover, threatened the Government, and I think the remarks he has made under the circumstances scarcely came from him with good grace.

I believe that the country is satisfied, and that deep disappointment would have been felt had the tariff been raised. I hold that to do otherwise would be a violation of good faith. What was the understanding when the Pacific Railway policy was announced by the late Government, and when subsequently introduced to this House by the present Government? It was based upon the assumption that the taxation and burthens of the people were not to be increased in any respect for the construction of this work. If the Government have not the money to carry on other public works, let them take it off the Pacific Railway until time and the resources of the country would allow them to proceed with it. The Government have very wisely curtailed the estimates for the current year, without unduly reducing the expenditure on public works, by about two and a half millions of dollars. I believe the country will approve of that reduction; I believe the country would rather all these works should be carried on on a smaller scale until the revenue came up to its former standard. Reference has been made during this discussion to the United States, England and other countries, and to the progress that they have made under different systems. Nobody will deny that the prosperity of the United States previous to the war was brought about entirely under a mere revenue tariff. They were peculiarly situated at that time, and they gradually developed a protective policy. Everybody knows that there never has been such a blow at the prosperity of the country as that protective policy. The destitution of Montreal is referred to; but look at New-York, Boston and other great cities of the Republic, where thousands of workingmen are clamouring for employment; mechanics that used to have $4 a day are now glad to get laborers' work at a dollar a day. That is under a protective policy. I hold in my hand an article from the columns of the New York World, showing what protection has done for the ship-building in the United States. It says:—"Forty-four years ago our tonnage was seven times that of foreign nations; now of all the ships entering our ports we have a tonnage of less than 4,000,000, foreign countries having more than 6,000,000. Low tariffs and great commerce, high tariffs and little commerce go hand in hand." * * * * Of the commerce of Christendom we had 13 per cent. in 1860, before protection, and only 9½ per cent. in 1870, after nine years of the blessings of that "system." In this period the world's commerce nearly doubled, and under the general augmentation, Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria and other great powers kept about equal pace, while the United States comparatively lagged far behind. Had that country done as well as England or France, their commerce in 1870 would have aggregated some fifteen hundred millions of money instead of less than nine hundred millions; and this was the price of their protection. Who do the Protectionists of Canada wish to protect themselves against? It is a fair argument held by these gentlemen that they desire to be protected against the United States. I don't dispute that; but who else do they want to protect themselves against, but against Great Britain, of which we form a part? Some of these gentlemen talk much of their loyalty to the British Empire; but they come to this House and ask us to put on a protective tariff against the very country that bears the expense of protecting us with her army and navy at home and abroad. The hon. member for Montreal Centre seems to think that Montreal is the whole Dominion. It is a beautiful city and a great commercial centre, but I say with all due respect it is not the whole Dominion. If Montreal, Toronto, St. John, and Halifax with them, were all blotted off the map of the country, the Dominion would not be ruined. They produce nothing themselves; they only distribute the natural products of the country, and the country could do a great deal better without the cities than the cities could do without the country. Then the hon. member introduced an argument I was very sorry to hear used on the floor of this House. He pointed to the position of the poor working men who would not wait until the Government came to their assistance. It is an argument I hope never to hear used in this House again; for the moment a Government are asked to take charge of and feed the poor, you strike a blow at their self-respect and independence that is fatal to our existence as a people. There is no doubt that a great many of the industries of the country are in a depressed state at present, but it is very easy to know the cause. We know that during the existence of the Reciprocity Treaty the Provinces that now compose the Dominion exported largely to the United States at high prices. After the Union of the Provinces a great deal of money was expended on large public works, which gave an unnatural impetus to trade for a time; then came a period of depression that everyone knows visits every country with the regularity of the rise and fall of the tide every ten or fifteen years. If it were not so, if there was no such risk, every one would rush into business and get rich like my hon. friend from Montreal under the free-trade system. Trade is depressed, but the evil will cure itself in time, and I have such faith in the recuperative powers of the country that I have no doubt in another year the Finance Minister will have ample means to carry on the public works to the advantage of the country without increased taxation. The coal trade and lumber interest of Nova Scotia are in a depressed condition; but what is the cause? Three years ago, when Canada was represented at Washington by the right hon. member for Kingston, we had an offer from the Americans to admit our coal and lumber into their market free, and the right hon. gentleman refused it at that time. There never was such a blow struck at the interests of this country as when the right hon. gentleman bartered away the only thing which the Americans wanted—our fisheries, the only thing we had to give them as a quid pro quo for what we wanted—their market—and thus sacrificed the lumber and coal interests. The American markets are the only markets we have for our coal. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to talk of Ontario, but we are geographically debarred from taking advantage of the markets of that Province, and the right hon. member for Kingston and the hon. member for Cumberland are more responsible today for the depression of the coal trade than any other cause.

Mr. JONES.

We have heard a great deal about slaughtering goods in this market. I hardly know what the term means, but I infer that its meaning is that the Americans have been sending goods into Canada and selling them below their value. It is unnecessary to go into statistics on this point. Figures have been produced and answered by the Hon. Finance Minister himself, and his reply has not been controverted. The ad valorem duties, which would form the entire bulk of the goods to which reference has been made, have been shown by the hon. gentleman to have decreased $18,000,000 in amount during last year, and that should convince the House that the whole outcry against increased imports was a mere fallacy, got up in the interests of the manufacturers, to bring pressure upon Parliament. In a discussion on this subject in the Chamber of Commerce of Halifax, the other day, a different view was taken. I do not mean to say that it is my view, but I give it in the same relation as the hon. member for Montreal West treated the question. It was held at that meeting that the only protection Halifax wanted was against Canada—that traders dealing in Montreal were subject to the same tricks as manufacturers across the lines are said to practice.

I doubt very much whether manufacturers are in the sad condition depicted by the hon. member for Montreal Centre. That hon. gentleman stated they had been compelled to reduce their staff to one-third, and could only pay working expenses. It is no great indication of hard times when they can pay working expenses while running with one-third their usual staff. If they now make expenses, what money they must have accumulated when running full time! There have been fewer failures of manufacturers in Montreal and elsewhere than of any other branch of trade. During the last three or four years men engaged in the commerce of the country have scarce been able to make both ends meet.

We have been told that protection must be upheld and that good times will result. If there is any soundness at all in this argument, if it is to be of any value to the manufacturers, it must have one result, that is to shut out the ad valorem goods from other countries, and to that extent it will decrease the revenue. What will we then do for revenue? We will be compelled to place a duty on other articles which are heavily enough taxed at the present time. Suppose shipping to be one of those articles. Last year in this House, when certain expenditures were going on for lighthouses, &c., the policy was pursued that the interest receiving the benefit should to a moderate extent contribute to the revenue. I advocated that plan at the time and do so now, as I think it perfectly fair. But what view did the hon. member for Cumberland take? He made a great outcry against it, and he now comes here and has not the manliness to state whether he is a Free-Trader or Protectionist. To use a common expression, he is trying to "hedge." When the time comes, he will be able to say: "I did not announce myself as a Protectionist; you cannot say that. I neither said I was a Protectionist nor a Free Trader; you can take which you like." What would his policy lead us to? Assuming that he is a Protectionist, I have shown that the revenue will be decreased to the amount of ad valorem goods that are going to be excluded, and then he will have to increase the duty on shipping, which procedure he denounced so earnestly two or three years ago. I hold that a man who builds a ship worth $50,000 is as much a manufacturer as the man who makes boots and shoes, furniture, &c. I may be wrong, and I am open to correction.

Mr. JONES.

As is well known, we have at the present time a heavy duty on petroleum, amounting almost to prohibition. I am told that as soon as that duty was passed, a ring was formed out West so that no petroleum could be bought except through a certain agency or town. And that is the protective system which the hon. gentleman, with singular inconsistency, asks us to build up now. About a year ago, the Government brought down a fair proposition to reconstruct the sugar duties. In the Maritime Provinces we are largely interested in the West India trade, and I endeavoured to show last night that every man engaged in commerce has an equal interest in these matters; but when that proposition was made, deputations of Protectionists, headed by my hon. friend the representative for Hamilton, came down and brought such pressure upon the Government that, although raw sugar paid 50 per cent. and fine 40 per cent., it backed down. That was an instance in which the duty was a manifest injustice to a great interest, but still these gentleman refused to allow a proposition to equalize the raw material with refined.

I saw it reported that on a recent occasion the hon. and distinguished member for Cumberland visited Halifax and attended a meeting where he made a speech, and took good care no one should be present to answer his arguments. He took the opportunity to say that the sugar question was one on which I had never dared to open my mouth in the House.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Allow me to correct my hon. friend. I said he had not dared to open his mouth on the question in favor of protecting the sugar refineries, because he had previously denounced the tariff from an entirely different stand point.

Mr. JONES—I am sorry I have not the hon. member's speech with me, but I think he will not deny it when I bring it before the House on another occasion. I am prepared to discuss that matter with the hon. gentleman, now, or at any other time. What I said when the question was before the House at the time referred to, was, that the policy which the Government pursued was going to drive out the consumption of the better qualities. I have been a true prophet; that policy has driven that class of sugar entirely out of consumption, and we import nothing but raw material at the present time. But it has done worse than that. It has made Boston and New York the capitals of all West India trade; it has driven from this country a large trade which we formerly enjoyed, and which involved some three or four millions dollars a year.

I only refer to that because the hon. gentlemen, when he comes down to Halifax, indulges in some of those playful observations which he used when taken to account for removing the railway works from Halifax. He said it was done before he entered the Government; but on reference to the facts it was found they were removed ten years after he became a Minister. I allude to that to show he is not always accurate in his recollections in that respect any more than in others.

It is very desirable that this question should be looked at in all its aspects. I am willing to view it not from a Nova Scotia, but from a Dominion stand point. The manufacturers are as a rule in the large cities, and being where public opinion through the press is largely influenced, and being also usually active men, they have made the very most out of their position. I believe in Montreal, Toronto and Hamilton they have worked up a pressure of public opinion until they have really at last persuaded themselves into the belief that the country is with them. They never made a greater mistake. They have been most active in the debates in this House, and I have listened to them feeling, as the hon. member for Montreal Centre said, that "it pleases them and doesn't hurt I." That is the way the question has been allowed to drift until now, and it is only because I am reluctant to let it be supposed that the Lower Provinces share their opinions that I take part in this debate. I believe the country has received the policy of the Finance Minister with intense satisfaction. I believe it would have created a great deal of unnecessary uneasiness if the Government had increased the tariff; and that more or less uneasiness had already in reality arisen from the fact that it was supposed, by those who looked superficially at the question, because we had a slight deficiency there must necessarily be a large increase in the tariff. Many merchants imported largely, paid duties in advance, and now find that they were mistaken. I would much sooner they should be disappointed than the interests of the country should be disturbed. It is essential that the Government of the day should be in a position, whenever it is necessary to go to England, to show we have merely a revenue tariff. I had in my hands the other day a resolution passed two years ago by the Chamber of Commerce of Manchester, protesting against what they called, at that time, the protective policy of Canada against their manufactures. It was natural enough. These people are called upon to contribute to the maintenance of an army and navy for our defence, to bear burdens on our behalf, and to lend us money when we require it. To let it go to the world that the views expressed by the advocates of protection are those of our people would be a fatal mistake.

The hon. member for Montreal Centre seemed to think an undue pressure had been brought to bear upon the Government, by the representatives of the Maritime Provinces, to induce them to reach the conclusions at which they had arrived. I have too high an opinion of the Government to think they require any such instructions. I believe them to be Free-Traders naturally. They have always avowed it manfully. They advanced the tariff $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and reduced the duty on raw sugar; to that extent they may be regarded as more favourable to protection than these who preceded them; but it was for revenue purposes. Free trade has always been the deliberate policy of the party to which we are allied, and I believe it is so still. If the Government had been able to show me that it was necessary in the interests of the public credit and the public service that a small increase of taxation should be made for revenue purposes and not for protection, I say for myself, and I believe I can speak for the representatives of the Maritime Provinces generally, we would be willing to vote what was required. But that is a very different thing from what has been pressed upon the Government by deputations from Montreal, Toronto and Hamilton. We of the Lower Provinces are not so near the seat of Government, and that fact throws a great responsibility upon us to speak plainly whenever the question comes up in Parliament. If we could not carry our views, we would not, like the hon. member for Montreal Centre, cross the floor of the House and make an unholy alliance with the hon. members for Cumberland and Kingston. I believe it is better to endure the ills you have than fly to others you know not of. The Government have conducted the affairs of the country on economical principles, and the principles they advocated when in Opposition. When the hon. member for Cumberland delivered his speech it was evident he had prepared it to denounce the Government for unnecessarily increasing taxation. The hon. gentleman has one speech yet undelivered. He had better keep it till next year, and then if the tariff goes up he can use it.

Now that this question is before the House, I hope we will have a decided expression of opinion. In my own Province the dissatisfaction would have been intense if the Government had adopted a different policy from that which they have announced. Although Montreal, Toronto and Hamilton do not like it, still there are more constituencies in this Dominion which have larger interests involved than theirs, great as they are, and they will sustain the policy of the Government.

Mr. THOMPSON (Welland)—I do not rise to speak with regard to free trade or protection. I only desire to lay before the House some thoughts and some knowledge which I hope will have some effect in educating the minds of members of this House on the subject. Authorities who existed two hundred years ago have been quoted by some hon. gentlemen, but at that time there was no such thing in existence as a steam engine. Since the construction of railways and telegraphs, the power of the human mind has been greatly developed, and hon. gentlemen should follow the steam engine. We find that machinery can be made just as cheap in one part of the world as another, and worked as cheaply when intelligence is put beside it. The question arises, why cannot we manufacture as well and as cheaply in this country as in others? It must depend upon the intelligence and enterprise of the manufacturers. I want to know if the hon gentlemen here are going to support ignorance?

If our manufacturers were equally educated and intelligent with those of Great Britain and the United States, they would need no protection. To say the contrary is simply absurd, for we can buy as cheaply as they, employment is as cheap, our population could do as much work, and, therefore, the want is intellectuality. I have heard of a Canadian gentleman who made $100,000 in manufactures, and who placed on his sign "Domestic Industry and Fair Trade"—some boys changed it to "Free Traid," and he remarked it was not free-trade, it was fair trade—fa-r-e fair—and these are the people who want protection. Such a system is false, it makes money dear. My right hon. friend from Kingston remembers as well as I, Canada twenty, thirty, and forty years ago. I never saw a happier people than the Canadians were at that time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Let us go back.

Mr. THOMPSON—Canada in the aggregate is to-day richer, but not as to individuals. Why cannot agriculturists be as intellectual and as happy, and make as much money as other classes of the population? and everything that tends to shut cheap articles out is not only contrary to philosophy but it also makes the people poor. With free-trade, articles being cheaper, families can save perhaps $100 a year, and supposing there are 500,000 families, this would make in a year $50,000,000, while with this miserable revenue of $18,000,000, the country loses the difference, besides the reproductive advantage of this capital; therefore, every single dollar placed on imports cause a loss of three dollars.

Mr. JONES.

This system is entirely a matter of expediency; little by little the theory is adopted, and men's minds are filled with the stereotyped notions of England a hundred years ago, and the country crawls back like a lobster. Some hon. gentlemen say—Look at the United States and its growth as proof of the value of protection; but I affirm that protection has never made the United States prosperous, but on the contrary, impoverished them. In New England, in the manufacturing towns, as Worcester, &c., the houses have an excellent appearance, but the families are living in tens of thousands in respectable poverty, on incomes of $600, $800 or $1,000. New England is not rich, but poor; and extensive duties impoverish the manufacturer as well as the people because they make capital dear, and limit the power of consumption, producing an unnatural state of things. The United States would have been to-day twice as prosperous had it not been for this system of protection.

I have visited all the manufactories of Great Britain; and if I was talking in Yorkshire or Lancashire, the mechanics could understand me perfectly, but here an educated Canadian gentleman cannot understand me. In taking twenty millions by an artificial process out of the pockets of the people, so much working capital is displaced; and if this be extracted during the months of January, February, and March, in a year one hundred millions of capital would be annihilated, and this would probably produce, under other circumstances, three hundred millions; remove twenty millions, and only $240,000,000 would be produced, sixty millions being lost by the displacement of twenty millions.

The member for South Norfolk speaks of the money of the United States being a vicious currency because it is irredeemable; but if the Government of the United States were not as ignorant on this subject as this House is, the money of the United States would have remained at par from the day it was issued until this moment. Greenbacks are redeemable upon their farms, and in every house in the Republic, and the only reason it is deficient in value in the eyes of the people of the world, is because the Legislature insists on calculating the duties on a gold basis. If this House adopts a protective policy they will give the greatest blow to the country it ever received. I do not care whether the manufacturers or the merchants or anybody else succeeds, I do not want any man to protect me; I want every man to stand on his own bottom. You give the manufacturer twenty-five per cent. on his manufactures, and the farmer twenty per cent. on his corn, and what difference does it make; it puts up the price of food and the labourer puts up the price of wages, and it balances. These tariffs are merely the result of the profound ignorance of the people. I do not speak in support of this Government, or of this party, or any other party—I am speaking in favour of a philosophic principle, without which this nation is never going to amount to anything. We have to rise in harmony with the laws of nature and of trade to arrive at anything.

Mr. MacDONNELL (Inverness)—It has been said that members from the Maritime Provinces have brought pressure to bear on the Government to dictate to them what shall be their financial policy. As far as I am concerned—and I was happy to hear the hon. member for Halifax say the same—I had no influence over the Government on the subject. Nothing was asked of me about it, nor did I trouble myself to communicate my ideas on the subject to the Government. I am sorry this charge has been made. I think we ought all to avoid everything like undue pressure from any section of this Dominion. I think the harmony and prosperity of the future of Canada greatly depend upon every member of this House considering himself a member for the whole Dominion and not for any one part of it. But supposing we did wait upon the Government, in the face of what is attempted to be done in this House, a delegation representing certain interests in this Dominion having in the lobbies and Committee rooms of Parliament asked for sectional or class legislation would it not be the duty of other hon. members of this House to take steps in order to defeat any step of that kind. It is true the members from the Maritime Provinces as a whole are Free-Traders, believing it to be the principle that does justice to the various interests of the Dominion. It has been said by Perry, the political economist of the United States, that no Legislature upon principle can be Protectionist unless at the solicitations of certain individual interests. This theory of protection has long ago been exploded. It is not true that the prosperity of England is due to protection. In 1826 England began to manufacture silk. It then reduced the tariff from ten shillings to five shillings per pound on foreign silks, and the tariff on raw material much more. The consequence was, England became a silk producing country. In 1860 she repealed the last vestige of the tariff on silk, and its manufacture had then grown to the extent of ten millions of dollars of an export trade. It is said protection has built up the United States, but I say it has been ruin to the United States. What was the period of the greatest prosperity of that country? It was when the tariff was lowest, in 1790, when the average duty was only $11\frac{1}{4}$ per cent.

At no other period of its history was the United States so prosperous as then. What does protection mean? In order to be available it must be discriminative. If you protect all the industries of a country, you have no protection at all. This is the principle which is laid down by writers on political economy, and which will be understood by every person who gives it a moment's consideration. Whatever is discriminative is partial, whatever is partial is unjust; and therefore protection is unjust. I contend that protection means to enrich the rich and impoverish the poor. Whatever restricts trade, whatever forms an obstacle to trade, adds cost to production—cost and scarcity. And scarcity means what? The poor man wants and is incapable to buy; the rich man can buy what he desires. Abundance is for the benefit of the poor, and abundance is produced by free trade.

We are told that the Americans make a slaughter market of the Dominion. If goods are sold here at half price, is it not a benefit to the country? Would it be an injury to the people if ship and car loads of goods came into the country gratis? Would it not produce an abundance? If such is the case, and I hope no hon. gentleman will have the hardihood to deny it, then goods received at half price must be better than goods received at high prices.

Let us take the article of iron. I presume the iron manufacturer is one of those who wish to be protected. Well, iron is an article that enters into the composition of every industry. You may protect the iron manufacture, but such a course will injure every other interest in the country. A few years ago a gentleman by the name of Bessemer invented a method of producing steel. He did not attempt to produce a better article, but simply to cheapen the mode of production. No sooner was this heard of in the United States than the doors of Congress, like the doors of this honourable House at present, were besieged by iron producers. A law was obtained enhancing the duties upon iron, and what was the consequence? In the year 1872, when the Michigan Central Railroad was being built, the Company had to pay $79 for steel rails, while across the Detroit River, a few miles distant, the Canada Southern was being built with steel rails at $50 per ton. This was protection to the manufacturers of iron; but what benefit was it to the company? Was it not an injury, and being an injury to the Company was it not also an injury to the whole United States? It is said that protection will give ultimate cheapness—that if the manufacturers of the Dominion are protected to-day, at some early time in the future they will become so developed and progress to such an extent that manufactures will be cheap. This is not the fact. They may progress for a certain time, but after a while, as experience shows, the price of labour will be enhanced, and they will soon be applying for another increase in the tariff. Such has been the experience of the United States. The tariff passed in 1790 gave protection, and in 1808 the same clamorous appeal was made to Congress and the duty was again raised. But the matter did not rest there; from time to time it was enhanced until at last they had the tariff of abominations. Who was the advocate of the tariff in 1790? It was Mr. Colquhoun, a man whose name is bright in American history, and is known to every gentleman in this House.

Mr. MACDONNELL.

Mr. PLUMB suggested that the hon. gentleman was incorrect in his dates.

Mr. MacDONNELL—I beg pardon; I find on examination that the second tariff passed in 1816 was designated Colquhoun's tariff. The tariff passed in 1790 was called the Hamilton tariff. That, however, is only a matter of date, but I am very glad to find my hon. friend so exact. There was no stronger advocate of protection than Mr. Colquhoun; but he afterwards saw his error and became the champion of free trade, and died as such. If, instead of coming to this House for protection, the gentleman representing the manufacturing interests had come here for a cash subsidy, I should feel much more disposed to support them. But protection means nothing but a cash subsidy. It is paying them out of the interests of the nation. It is putting a tax upon the other people of Canada in order to put money into the pockets of the manufacturers; but I would prefer voting for a direct subsidy at once for the amount claimed for those gentlemen, than to introduce and engraft upon the constitution a protective policy, of which we may never rid ourselves hereafter. Admitting that the present tariff is a just one, upon which the revenue is collected, each man would pay his fair proportion to that subsidy; but by protection you may do injury to certain sections of the Dominion. The hon. gentleman who last addressed the House asked why it was the manufacturers were praying for protection. In my opinion, in doing so, they admit somewhat of an inferiority on the part of the people and resources of the country. It is said that manufactures are in their infancy. I don't think this is the real cause. What constitutes their infantile condition? Is it their want of raw material, favourable conditions, or experience?

I cannot understand why the manufacturers of this country cannot compete successfully with those of other countries when they have a tariff of 17½ per cent. and the cost of transportation in their favour. I do not believe in the Government taking in hand the protection of the industries of the country. They should be left to private enterprise. It is not the function of a Government to direct what industries shall be developed. No part of this country has suffered more from the protective policy of the United States than Nova Scotia. That country a few years ago raised and shipped three times the quantity of coal it does today. The coal mines are closed and yet, I am proud to say, there is not a single representative of Nova Scotia asking for aid. I say these men who ask for protection to private enterprises come here as paupers. They embarked their capital in those enterprises without consulting the Government; they were guided by their own judgment, and they have no right to come here for aid. A farmer who by some misfortune would lose his crops and be obliged to mortgage his farm, would not pursue such a course.

Mr. DEVLIN said the manufacturers did not ask for aid. He had simply remarked that Free-Traders who would go to Montreal would meet with a very poor reception from those who were suffering from the factories being closed up.

Mr. MacDONNELL—The rose by any other name would smell as sweet. The man who asks assistance in his private affairs wants charity. This matter of protection is the old cry of monopoly. In England they have had a surfeit of it, and other countries have been emancipated from such a policy. Is this Parliament prepared to go back to a retrogressive system? Let us have free trade, which alone will do justice to all men, and is best calculated to develop the various interests of this country.

Mr. GORDON—I find a very laborious effort is being made by a certain class to persuade the farmers of this country they are suffering under a grievance which a protective policy would remove. The profession comes from the millers who, at a meeting held in Toronto recently, passed a resolution declaring that the admission of American produce and flour into Canada free of duty is a gross injustice to the agricultural and milling interests of this country. I have one thing to object to in this resolution—and that is, the millers having grievances of their own, seek to show that they are shared by the farmers. Under the national policy the duty on wheat was 4 cents per bushel, and the profit to the miller on every barrel of flour was eight cents. This may appear trifling, but an illustration of its importance may be found in the fact that my hon. friend from Lincoln, who produces 700 barrels of flour a day in his mills, made $56, or $336 a week by it. No wonder the millers are complaining that they need such protection, but they should not seek to make a stalkinghorse of the farmers to carry their grievances to a successful issue.

I find the following figures in a valuable work entitled "Does Protection Protect?":—"In 1820, the total exports of wheat from the United States, was $38,000,000. Between 1820 and 1830 was a period of high protection. In 1830 the value of wheat exported was $53,000,000, an increase of 36 per cent in the decade."

Between 1830 and 1840 was a period of free trade. I find the value of exports in 1840 had increased to $93,000,000, an increase of 76 per cent. From 1840 to 1847 was a period of protection, and the last three years of the decade a period of free trade. During the ten years ending 1850 the increase was only 35 per cent. From 1850 to 1860 "free trade policy prevailed, and the increase was 107 per cent. From 1860 to 1869 a period of the closest protection, the increase was only 2½ per cent."

For the four years between 1839 and 1842, a period of free trade, the average price of flour was $5.45 per barrel; from 1843 to 1846, a period of protection, it was $4.40; from 1854 to 1861, a period of free trade, the price was $6.47; from 1862 to 1867, a period of protection, the price was $4.94. The average price during a period of 17 years of free trade was $6.13; during a period of ten years of protection, $4.75. The average price per barrel during twenty years of free trade was $4.95; during twenty-five years of free trade, $6.04. Now, I think these figures must show to any candid mind that although the millers and others may profit by a protective tariff on flour, the loss to the farmer is $1.36 per barrel as the result of the system.

I think, that if these facts are duly impressed upon the minds of the agriculturists, it will show that this agitation on the part of the millers arises from very selfish motives, regarding a matter in which they are directly concerned; therefore, I hope that under these circumstances the farmers will perceive, as was remarked the other night by the hon. member for South Norfolk, that they will have to bear a grievous burden. The hon. gentleman, the member for Norfolk, made an allusion to the prices of land on the banks of the Hudson and in the Province of Ontario, stating that on the Hudson some $250 an acre were paid, whilst in this Province the average was only $50 per acre. I take issue with the honorable gentleman on that point, for I believe it can be clearly shewn that in no part of the United States—taking the last five years as the average—has the price of land risen in the same ratio as in Ontario. I remember, when five years since, it was considered a high rate to obtain $50 an acre for the best farms in the best localities, and I now find in my own and surrounding neighbourhoods, entirely removed from any manufacturing establishments, that prices range from $110 to $120 per acre. So I think that this will prove that the advance in values does not arise from the proximity of lands to such industries, but to their intrinsic worth and the character of their products. This, in my opinion, will always be the gauge, in Ontario at all events.

Complaint is made that our industries are suffering grievously; but I am not aware that any hon. gentleman condescended to mention the closing of any such establishments in Canada. The Finance Minister referred to instances, particularly in the iron trade, where firms were obliged to shut down in the United States, in consequence of over-production; but I can mention a native industry which was compelled to close its doors, for a time at all events, — the starch manufactory at Edwardsburg. The cause, very candidly assigned, is that very large factories at Oswego manufacture this article to the value of $500,000 annually. A home market is found for $400,000 worth at an average profit of from 25 to 30 per cent., and the remainder is sent to Canada to be sold at a reduction of five cents per pound, in order to close the Canadian establishments.

Mr. MacDONNELL.

Now, I ask if this is the case, how could a protective tariff prevent such a competition? If the American manufacturers choose to make a sacrifice, how can we prevent it? I think that the cause for existing evils is to be found in the depression which prevails in the United States, and this will be remedied in the course of time. Our friends who advocate a protective policy, point across the border as to a kind of paradise, where all Protectionists are flourishing; and I will just read two short paragraphs from a very important periodical published in the interests of the American shoemaking and leather interests at the present date, and they are to the following effect:

"Manufacturers complain that a large amount of bankrupt stocks in boots and shoes on the market, has been operating unfavourably to prices."

Again I find in another place:

"We are glad to note an increased interest in the matters of foreign trade among manufacturers of women's goods. If this branch of trade is suffering from over-production it only needs a little self-sacrifice in the way of labor on the part of a few capable men to clear the obstacles from the road."

The same cause—over-production—operates there as well as here, and although they have an average protective duty of 48 per cent., they still labour under these disabilities. I cannot see how raising the tariff to 20 per cent. would have the effect of shutting out the evils of which complaint is made, when there is an additional tariff over the border of 28 per cent.

Mr. BLAIN—I am unable to support the amendment, which, if I understand it properly, declares that we should establish a discriminatory tariff in favor of Great Britain as against the United States. I cannot conceive that this would be in the interests of the country, though I am willing to do all in my power to obtain what I think is necessary protection for our manufactures. A great deal of discussion has taken place beyond the proper limits of the debate. In the first place, many hon. gentlemen talked about protection and free trade. There is no such thing as free trade in any country of which I have knowledge on the face of the earth. There is not a single nation which is not governed by a protective policy, with the single exception of Great Britain. When the subject was reviewed, it was found that in this country out of 1,500 articles on the list she only derived sufficient revenue to pay collection for some seventeen; and that out of a portion of these seventeen she now obtains her revenue. In other words, she is almost as much a protective country as when she adopted the policy she at present terms free trade. When we come to this side of the ocean we find the people of the United States have a protective policy; and we therefore find that free trade is nowhere the rule, while protection is universal. Every nation, we are well aware, regulates her own affairs, and may foster or injure our own industries. No one here desires to shut out trade and commerce by a very high protective tariff; we wish to have a tariff for revenue purposes, so arranged as to protect our manufactures. We have three classes,—the manufacturing, the commercial, and the agricultural; two are productive, and the third wholly distributive; and if depression affects either the agricultural or manufacturing, the third must necessarily suffer. It is admitted that the farmers are prosperous, but the manufacturers labour under very great disadvantages; and it follows, as a matter of course, to my mind, that the mercantile industry must also suffer; and when American capitalists attempt to crush out our native producers, whose means are less, I say that it is our duty to deal with the question legislatively. It is conceded that it is the duty of Great Britain to interfere in case a foreign country should give a large bonus on the export of sugar, and the same principle applies, whether a nation or manufacturers, are willing to make this sacrifice; in this event, the whole principle of protection is granted, and consequently we should place on the Statute Book, a law in this regard. That Great Britain has been injured by her free trade policy is patent to every visitor of that country. Fifty years ago probably every other man in Great Britain owned some property; but what is the case to-day, nearly every man is forced to depend upon wages as the means of support for himself and his family. The speech of the Finance Minister was admirable. He stated that protection in the United States had enriched the few and impoverished the many, but what is the state of things in Great Britain?—At the present moment nearly all the land is in the hands of about 50,000 persons, and nearly all the capital in the possession of about ten times that number. In no country on the face of the earth is there so little in the possession of the great mass of the people as in Free Trade England. When other nations are able to compete with her, she must return to a protective policy. Apropos of Bessemer steel, it was imported into the United States at the rate of $160 a ton; at present, with a protective tariff, it is manufactured in the United States of as good quality in every respect for $60 per ton. It has been supplied for something like 80,000 miles of railway. The amendment reflects upon the financial policy of the Government, and as it is a motion of want of confidence I cannot vote for it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Centre Toronto)—A few remarks may be expected from me on this subject. Three days of the time of this House have been spent in the discussion of matters relating to the financial depression of the country. A Committee was asked to investigate it, though to my mind, and in the opinion of a great many others, the causes were perfectly plain; and, I think that when this Committee has collected all possible information, it will have a very unappreciable effect.

Mr. BLAIN.

The country has simply been passing through a crisis, which will again be followed by others, for every country has crises as regular as the seasons, though at greater distances. No country has ever risen to greatness without passing, not only through its crisis, but its crises, and the neighbouring country to which reference has been made, and which has reached to such a point of manufacturing perfection, has passed through a variety of crises.

The eminent manufacturers of that country who have rolled up colossal fortunes, have built them on the wrecks of those who have preceded them. The resolution which was moved for the appointment of the Committee took another turn, and the amendment was moved that there should be a Committee to consider the depressed manufacturing interests. That Committee is sitting now, and that Committee has come to this House and asked for a shorthand writer, and I have no doubt they intend to do a large amount of business. And yet we have the strange anomaly of a Committee sitting to consider the depressed condition of the manufacturing interests of the Dominion, and the Government adopting a policy which affords no help to the manufacturing interests. I promised upon another occasion, when I last addressed the House, that I would refer to some of the causes which have brought this crisis about. I stated that among these was the cheap credit of England, but I have perhaps failed to impress on some of the members of this House the extent to which this evil exists. Starting from the threshold, we have the young men of the country coming to the cities, as the last census exhibits, despising the labor of the field and seeking in the larger cities mercantile callings; and so long as that disgust—shall I call it—of labor and tilling the soil exists, we shall have the same results. Here, then, is the source of the evil. They come to the city, and they easily obtain goods, the parties from whom they obtain credit having themselves easily obtained it. Notably, the export trade of Great Britain to this continent has been gradually leaving her, and her merchants have been taking with her customers in this country greater risks than they otherwise would have done. The goods from Great Britain are sent out to this country not only to the man who buys them, but they are consigned to other parties and thrown on the market irrespective of value, and I appeal to this House if this country has a consuming power for fifty millions of dollars worth of goods, and a hundred millions are thrown on it, is it not apparent that every industry must be depressed?

Let me give one illustration. In the city of Montreal a very short time ago one concern, I was told, failed for a million and a quarter of dollars. That concern, I understand, had very little difficulty in arranging with their creditors in Great Britain at ten cents on the dollar. It is not a difficult thing to understand that a million and a quarter of dollars worth of goods thrown on a small market under such dishonest circumstances affects it considerably. Credit is so cheap in England that the same firm while settling for ten cents on the dollar was making arrangements for renewing their stock again to demoralize the market as they had done before. Speaking of the ease with which goods are obtained, so anxious are British merchants to throw them on the market that stocks bought in December are dated in the month of March. You have thus three clear months, and beginning with that they then obtain a credit of six months, which makes it nine months; then they have very little difficulty in obtaining a renewal for one-half, which makes a credit of nearly twelve months; The slaughter does not come from the United States. I was quite clear on that matter when in this House I made the statement the other day, but since then I wrote to two firms in the United States the following questions:

Question.—Are goods sold to Canada by United States manufacturers or commission men, lower than to the people of the United States?

Answer.—No; our prices and terms are the same to all buyers, whether from Canada, United States, or elsewhere.

Question.—Can you give any reliable information as to the probable increase which has taken place in the sale of dry goods by the United States to Canada during the past year?

Answer.—We cannot. In our opinion the quantity is very materially increased over previous years, but to what extent we cannot say with any accuracy. Your Custom Houses' statistics would show this.

Question.—It is claimed that goods are sold regardless of price, and at indefinite time, by the United States merchants to Canadians, &c.?

Answer.—This is not true as applied to manufacturers or selling agents, but, undoubtedly, to a certain extent, jobbers who have "runners" throughout Canada and the United States, do much to demoralize prices and terms, as you fully understand, but this applies the same to the United States as to Canada.

I will point to the fact that in the large cities of Montreal, Toronto and Hamilton, the agents of English houses have their offices, for which they do not pay more than £35 or £40 a year. They contribute nothing to the municipal expenses of the cities in which they are placed, while they sell as many goods as any wholesale merchants in any of these large cities, who have either to build their warehouses or rent them, employ clerks, and maintain expensive establishments. This is a very great grievance, but I do not speak of it in this House to bring any measures to correct it, as it will correct itself. It is one of the many plans by which English houses seek to disseminate their wares through the country.

Then another feature that has brought not only this but previous crises about, has been the establishment of mercantile agencies in Canada. This may appear a very strange statement indeed, but the day was when a man who went to travel with goods required to be an intelligent man; the day was when a man who went to introduce his goods into the country required not only vim, but culture and intelligence. Now a little memorandum book is put into the hands of agents, and A B and C are said to be the men who are to be called on. It would not matter so much if but a few were instructed to call upon these men, but all of the 1,500 travellers in Canada receive the same instructions, and the result is that if the man is not bad they make him bad in a very short time by crowding on him more goods than he can use. I have in my hand a letter from a house which sells in the course of the year as many goods as the Dominion of Canada imports from Great Britain altogether, and it will be satisfactory that this firm endorses the statement I have ventured to make in this House.

They say:—

“We have been aware that the subject to which you refer would be brought before your body for consideration at your present meeting, and we are very glad to receive your communication, in order that, so far as we are able, we may correct any misapprehensions which exist regarding the trade between the United States and the Provinces.

“Answering your questions in the order in which they are propounded, we beg to say that we presume we are sending more American goods into the Provinces than any other house connected with the trade, and we can most emphatically state that at no time and under no circumstances have our goods been sold to your merchants at lower prices than those which we received from merchants doing business in our own States; on the contrary, all buyers of merchandise of us, whether from the Canadas or from the most remote sections of our own country, are in every respect treated alike as regards the sale to them of our goods.

“In this connection we would suggest that our terms are confined strictly to our customers' credit of sixty days on what are called domestic goods, viz., sheetings, shirtings and prints, while the foreign goods that we sell throughout the Provinces or throughout the States are based on a credit of four months.

“As an instance of how closely we hold to these terms, a proposition was made us within the past few days by a house doing business in Canada, of known standing and respectability, to purchase a considerable amount of our domestic goods, provided we would sell them on a credit of four months, adding interest for the extra sixty days of time, which we promptly declined, simply because it was a longer credit than we are willing to grant on such goods. This instance, we think, is a fair illustration of the manner and time at which American goods are being sold to provincial merchants. We wish we could advise you clearly and definitely regarding the increase of the trade in dry goods between the United States and the Canadas, but this is a question rather to be determined by your Custom House records than by any estimates which can be formed here. Our own trade with the Provinces during 1875 was increased moderately over that of 1874, but it has not grown to be an element in our sales of sufficient importance to be especially noted.”

I shall not detain the House by reading the balance of the letter, but it is a very suggestive proof to my mind of the statement I have made.

Mr MACDONALD.

I have received since then further confirmation of the statement—the settlement of the affairs of a wholesale house that has just gone into insolvency. Its liabilities, direct and indirect, are a quarter of a million. I know that it did a large American trade, but the amount of American liabilities represented in that quarter of a million is only two thousand dollars. The Americans have discounted in their sales all possible loss; they have brought everything as nearly as possible to a cash basis. They sell goods at very short time, and if payment is not made they cut off the customer—this is an instance. I venture to make this statement, that that thing will go on, and that while the imports from Great Britain will steadily decrease, those from the United States will as steadily increase, unless you build up barriers against them, and such barriers as I cannot defend. Unless you build up such barriers before another eight years elapse you will find that the trade with the United States, amounting to $50,000,000 to-day, will reach a volume of not less than $100,000,000. The reasons are so numerous that a little reflection will show how apparent this is. The United States are 3,000 miles nearer us than Great Britain. Canadian merchants can telegraph to New York to-day, and in three days receive their parcels. In a few days more they are sold out, and have duplicated and triplicated their transaction before they could get returns from England. It is useless to shut our eyes to the change that is going on between this country and the United States.

Coming down to the Budget Speech of the hon. gentleman, I desire to state that there are several things in it which it would be folly for this House to do other than approve. And there are some things to which I shall take objection. For instance, I cannot shut my eyes to the fact—I am speaking from memory—that some $4,000,000 has been spent upon what are called “minor works,” that $2,000,000 has been paid on account of Prince Edward Island; and if I remember right, and the hon. gentleman will correct me if I am wrong—in reference to the St. Lawrence there were $2,000,000 more; and that since the hon. gentlemen assumed the position they now hold they have paid the sum of $32,800,000. It would be idle for me or any member of the House to state that this is not a matter for congratulation. But I was disappointed, and there will be others who are disappointed that the manufacturing interest did not receive the consideration to which it was entitled in the Budget Speech. The hon. gentleman said he could not legislate for one-twentieth to the exclusion of nineteen-twentieths. I hold that to be a fallacy, because I claim that the one-twentieth have just as much right to be legislated for as the nineteen-twentieths. We have heard a great deal about a high protective policy; but I don't know where the agitation came from; I certainly have not heard it. I came down to this House unpledged to vote for protection or anything else. My constituents have confidence in my judgment; at any rate they sent me here to do and say what I like, and I shall say just what I please and when I please. I came down here with the desire that every industry that was languishing, and that it could be demonstrated that it was so languishing, was entitled to an amount of protection that would help it without injury to the consumer; and I was prepared to prove that the native competition would have kept down the price to the consumer, and that it would not have excluded American products, because I hold that the moment you exclude the manufacturer from suitable rivalry you destroy his energies.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear! hear!

Mr. MACDONALD—Gentlemen say "hear, hear" - but the moment you expose him to terrible odds you crush him out. I say I do not desire to see American goods excluded from this market. I want the consumer to have the fullest possible benefit, and I want the manufacturers to have "foemen worthy of their steel." But I have been endeavouring to look at the temper of the House. I find here the representatives of seven provinces, whose interests are dissimilar. I find the great agricultural and manufacturing province of the West; at the same time I find one whose interests lie immediately in shipping, and one of my hon. friends comes from a long distance, where that long, untrodden path is between, and the "sea of mountains intercept us; and so on with the other provinces. I find what is desired by one is opposed by another; I claim that the views I held on this matter are exceedingly reasonable, and ought to commend themselves to the good sense and good judgment of every member of this House.

My hon. friend who preceded me spoke rather warmly, and the remark was made that the representatives of the Maritime Provinces waited upon the Minister of Finance and pressed their views. I don't say whether they did so or not. But I say if they did, I don't think it was wisdom. The day will come when they will want their own interests looked after, and I should be very sorry were the members representing Ontario to go to the Finance Minister, or any other member of the Ministry, and oppose anything that gentlemen from British Columbia, the Maritime Provinces or Manitoba, could demonstrate was not only for their good, but for the benefit of the whole Dominion.

I want to notice what I thought was fallacy in the Budget Speech. The Finance Minister spoke of the very great shrinkage in value as having been a source of wealth by enabling people to buy a larger amount of goods for a lower price. The hon. gentleman should remember that a shrinkage in value also represents a shrinkage in the pocket of the operative, and it would be far better for him to get a higher price for his labour and pay a little more for his dwelling-house and for his goods.

There is a point, however, that I have not heard introduced by any preceding speaker, and it is one for which I wish to give the Government the credit they deserve, inasmuch as it is to my mind a gleam of hope for the future. I mean this: That while there has been a large falling off in imports, and while that decrease has necessarily diminished their revenue, that in that very falling off I see the first gleam of light. It is an evidence that men are gathering wisdom, and that they have commenced the policy of retrenchment and that may be regarded as a bright gleam of hope for the future. I am quite willing also to give them credit for the fact that while their increased expenditure is $176,000, they have effected reductions amounting to $3,250,000, being a decrease of nearly $2,500,000.

There are many other matters of which I had intended to speak, but I am afraid that I may have wearied the House. There is one point, however, which I wish to note before I sit down. The Hon. Finance Minister says in his speech, "that in a new country like this there is force in protecting our manufactures." I accept that as an evidence that he admits the force of their claims. I will just say that frequent alterations in the tariff are dangerous—that crude and undigested alterations are dangerous—that I fear that if this House were asked at this moment to change the tariff, as I should have liked to see the hon. gentleman propose to change it, it would involve a certain amount of danger. I hope during the recess the Finance Minister will take into consideration the interest of every manufacturer. I shall be disposed to sustain such a policy, remembering that the elements which make a tariff valuable are equity, the freedom from anomalies, and above all the certainty that when framed upon just and equitable principles there is some guarantee for its continuance.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—At this late hour I don't wish to occupy the attention of the House very long. I wish, however, to reply to the invitation of my hon. friend from Montreal Centre, who has called me by name in a most pressing way to enter into a discussion of the general question which has occupied this House not only since the Budget Speech, but during the whole of the Session.

Now, I do not propose to add my quota, at all events just now, to the discussion on the merits of protection and free trade. The hon. member for Centre Montreal called upon me to state my opinions on this subject, and taunted me for silence. Several speakers also taunted my hon. friend from Cumberland with having made a speech in one direction without having declared his principles. Now I do not know whether my hon. friend who sits near me (Dr. Tupper) was disappointed at the result of the speech from the Hon. Finance Minister. I certainly was. I came, I confess it, to hear his speech, impressed with the idea he was going to bring down an alteration of the tariff. We had a right to suppose he was, and the country had a right to suppose so. The hon. member for Montreal West had declared to his constituents that there was to be a change; we were led to believe he was in the confidence of the Government; we knew that he was supported by all their power, and that he came forward as the candidate and advocate par excellence of a protective policy. There were other indications—the speeches of the hon. gentleman himself on several occasions, the rumours in the country, the statements in the Ministerial press—which led the manufacturers and merchants of the country to believe that there was to be an alteration in the tariff, and one which would operate incidentally, at all events, in protection of our home industries. Therefore, I must say I was taken quite by surprise by the announcement of the Finance Minister, that the Government policy was to make no alteration in the tariff during the present Session at least.

Mr. MACDONALD.

The hon. member for Halifax said my hon. friend from Cumberland came prepared to attack the Government for extravagance if they increased the duties. I do not know if that was the motive which influenced that hon. gentleman when he was in opposition to us. That certainly would not have been the principle which would have actuated us in view of the grave circumstances surrounding us, of the stagnation which is admitted by the Government and by the speech placed in the mouth of Her Majesty's representative to exist. In this great crisis we were prepared to give the fairest, calmest and most favorable consideration to any proposition made by the hon. gentlemen opposite, with an anxious desire to set aside any party triumph in the interests of the country. When, therefore, the hon. gentleman took his seat at the end of his singularly able but at the same time singularly unsatisfactory speech, I desired, taken by surprise as I was, time to consider what course we should take under the circumstances. However, my hon. friend from Hamilton got the floor and promised us a motion, and we got it. I shall only address myself to the words of it to-night. Of course the hon. gentleman prepared it from the most patriotic motives, from an anxious desire to secure to his constituents the advantages of protection, and as an earnest protest against the policy of the Government. It was intended as an indignant protest against the Ministry for being so utterly regardless of the interests of the manufacturers of Hamilton, notwithstanding the admission in the Speech from the Throne that there was a deficiency in the revenue and distress all through Canada. The hon. gentleman, I have no doubt, was actuated by a sincere desire to place himself right with his constituents and the country in laying before the House the resolution in your hands, and which we have got to dispose of before we can proceed any further. I suppose the hon. gentleman understands his constituents best. He has felt their pulse, and in laying this motion before the House he has satisfied their wants. He will have an ovation when he returns to Hamilton from every artisan and mechanic for the bold, manly, clear and decided manner in which he protects them against the hostile and unfriendly course of this Government. But while I have no doubt his constituents will crown him with laurels, those who have not been educated up to that point—the manufacturers of Montreal and other cities—will feel disappointed at the resolution. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman acted on his own advice or on the suggestion of others, who aided him in drawing up the resolution. It may be a mistake, but I say every person who will read it, every one who understands the effect of a resolution will say if a friend of the Government had been employed for the purpose of making protection ridiculous and getting the smallest vote possible, he could not have framed it better. In the first place it will be voted against by every Free-Trader in the House. In the second place it will be voted against by the Administration, whose policy it attacks, and by those of their followers who have such unlimited confidence in them that they will come under the category the hon. Premier reckoned my supporters to be in when he spoke from this side of the House. He used to say they were the servile followers of a corrupt and incapable Administration. I have no doubt my hon. friend has found the advantages, though he is neither incapable nor corrupt, of having not a servile, but a confiding majority. The hon. member for Hamilton, I repeat, so framed his resolution as to succeed in getting every Free-Trader, the whole Administration, and every one of their confiding followers to vote against his resolution—and he must expect every member of this House who has not the good fortune to confide in my hon. friend, and who are placed in a position of political opposition to him, to oppose it also. He has ingeniously contrived that every member of this House, no matter whether he is a Protectionist, an incidental Protectionist, or a Free-Trader, must vote against it. He must get against the resolution every person who is in favor of a policy of retaliation against the United States, and every man who thinks we should pursue a policy of conciliation as advocated by the honorable member for North Norfolk, who made such an able speech. The honorable gentleman has so ingeniously contrived his motion that, excepting himself and the seconder, I do not know where he is going to get support. A good many years ago there was a great friend of mine in Parliament who was a very active-minded man, and applied himself very attentively to the legislation of the country. The beginning of every Session he introduced a great number of Bills, and he fought for them bravely. He discussed them eloquently and powerfully, fighting the battle against all odds, but the moment he found anybody to join with him he dropped his Bills.

My hon. friend in his resolution has taken very much the same course. He asks us seriously to vote for this motion, and, Sir, the time of this House has been interrupted and taken up by a resolution carefully and ingeniously framed for the purpose of getting the smallest amount of support possible to be given to it. And this, Sir, is done in the interests of his constituents—in the interests of the manufacturers—in the interests of the home industries of this country, and to put down the slaughter market, and keep out the foreigner, and prevent the injurious competition of foreign countries. This, Sir, is done for the sake of relieving the depression in this country, and to restore full time where there is now but three-quarter time, or one-half time, or no time; this is the amendment he proposes as the advocate and supporter of a protective policy.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this motion will be put out of the way and disposed of in the manner in which it deserves; and it is a waste of time in my opinion to discuss under these circumstances the practical question of the necessity of increased taxation, and the best mode of meeting the deficiency which has been declared by the Hon. Minister of Finance to exist; the best means of relieving the prevalent depression—of restoring confidence to the manufacturers, and of developing the industries of the country. I say, it would be a waste of time to discuss these questions in this relation: but we are promised by the hon. member for Montreal West that this matter will again be brought up, and I have no doubt that this will be done during this Session on many occasions. From the east and the west of Canada there will be petition after petition, and remonstrance after remonstrance, laid upon this table from the suffering manufacturers of the Dominion. I am confident that this question will be discussed—, and it must be discussed—as it ought to be, fully and practically; but before we can do so to any advantage, Mr. Speaker, we must first get rid of the motion of my hon. friend from Hamilton.

My hon. friend from Centre Montreal—I do not see him in his place.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. DEVLIN—-I am here, Sir.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I hear his dulcet tones.

My hon. friend from Montreal Centre was kind enough to address me in a very complimentary manner, and in a very insinuating way; but he also showed, that he could speak in quite a different tone.

I heard the threat—the dire threat—that the members from Montreal would go into Opposition; and yet I did not see a change in my hon. friend the Premier's countenance. He did not seem to be very much frightened, notwithstanding the menace that the confidence of the hon. gentleman and the other two members from Montreal would be withdrawn from the Government, and that they would go into Opposition. I thought that I could see a smile—a gentle placid smile pass at the time over the countenance of my hon. friend, who knows his power. My hon. friend from Montreal Centre is like ancient Pistol—he can speak brave words, but like the same ancient Pistol, he can eat the leek. My hon. friend the Premier was quite satisfied, that although the member for Montreal Centre was very brave just now, and although—

“He casts off his friend as A huntsman his pack,
As he knows with a word
He can whistle them back.”

And that though these brave gentlemen were going to snuff out my hon. friend the Premier, they would give him their confidence, as they had hitherto done. If the Government are never displaced until through the arm or accident of my hon. friend from Montreal, they will remain in office much longer than either the wishes of the Opposition, or the good of the country require.

My hon. friend from Centre Montreal gave me a warning, that unless I accept this offer at once there would be no use in my throwing my net for him. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have caught some queer fish in my time, but I am afraid that my hon. friend—as during the previous Session, when he sat over in that corner—is too loose a fish for me ever to catch.

However, Sir, this subject must come up again, and I hope, when it is brought forward in a practical form, to be able to present my own views in my own humble way to this House; and although, as was often asserted by my hon. friend the Premier, and my hon. friend the member for Chateauguay, when they sat on this side of the House, it is not part of an Opposition duty to form a policy unless they choose, it is the part of the Opposition to criticise the party in power, show that it is wrong, if they can, and attack and assail it by argument. I yet hope that before this interesting subject is withdrawn from the contemplation of this House on behalf of the Opposition, to enter into it at some detail. In the meanwhile, we will have the vote on my hon. friend's amendment, and I trust to-night; and when this is taken, I suppose that other hon. gentlemen will have the opportunity of proposing other resolutions on this subject.

The members were then called in, and the House divided, with the following result:—

YEAS:

Messieurs

Wood.—3.

Devlin, Irving,

NAYS:

Messieurs

Applby, Aylmer,
Baby,
Bain,
Bannatyne,
Barthe,
Béchar, d,
Benoit,
Bernier,
Bertram,
Biggar,
Blackburn,
Blain,
Blake,
Blanchet,
Borden,
Borron,
Bourassa, Bowell,
Bowman,
Boyer,
Brown,
Buell,
Bunster,
Burk,
Burpee (St. John),
Burpee (Sunbury),
Cameron (Victoria),
Carmichael,
Caron,
Cartwright,
Casey,
Casgrain,
Cauchon,
Laird,
Lajoie,
Landerkin,
Langevin,
Langlois,
Lanthier,
Little,
Macdonald (Cornwall),
Macdonald (Kingston),
Macdonald (Toronto),
McDonald (Cape-Bret.),
MacDonnell (Invern.),
Macdougall (Elgin),
McDougall (Renfrew),
MacKay (Cape-Breton),
McKay (Colchester),
Mackenzie,
Macmillan,
McCallum,
McGreevy,
McGregor,
McIntyre,
McIsaac,
McLeod,
McNab,
McQuade,
Masson,
Metcalfe,
Mills,
Mitchell,
Moffat,
Monteith,
Montplaisir, Mousseau,

Charlton,
Cheval,
Christie,
Church,
Cimon,
Cockburn,
Coffin,
Colby,
Cook,
Coupal,
Cunningham,
Currier,
Cuthbert,
Davies,
Dawson,
DeCosmos,
Delorme,
Desjardins,
De St. Georges,
DeVeber, Domville, Dymond,
Farrow, Ferguson,
Ferris,
Fiset,
Fleming,
Flesher,
Flynn,
Forbes,
Fraser,
Fréchette,
Galbraith,
Gaudet,
Gibson,
Gill,
Gillies,
Gilmor,
Gordon,
Goudge,
Greenway,
Hagar,
Haggart,
Harwood,
Higinbotham,
Holton,
Horton,
Huntington,
Jones (Halifax),
Jones (Leeds),
Kerr,
Killam,
Kirk,
Norris,
Oliver,
Quimet,
Palmer,
Paterson,
Pelletier,
Perry,
Petter,
Pickard,
Pinsonneault,
Platt,
Plumb,
Pope,
Pouliot,
Pozer,
Ray,
Richard,
Robillard,
Robitaille,
Rochester,
Roscoe,
Ross (Prince-Edward),
Rouleau,
Ryan,
Rymal,
Scatcherd,
Schultz,
Scriver,
Shibley,
Shinclair,
Skinner,
Smith (Peel),
Smith (Selkirk),
Smith (Westmoreland),
Snider,
Stephenson,
Stirton,
St. Jean,
Thibaudeau,
Thompson (Cariboo),
Thompson (Haldim'nd),
Thomson (Welland),
Trow,
Tupper,
Vail,
Wallace (Albert),
Wallace (Norfolk),
White (Hasting),
White (Renfrew),
Workman,
Wright (Ottawa),
Yeo,
Young.—174.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—A motion expressing confidence in the Administration has been moved, and only three members have voted for it, and the Government have then voted want of confidence in themselves, but my hon. friend's course was constitutional of course.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT rose to reply. He said he had not the slightest desire if any other members wished to speak on this question to press it to a vote.

On motion of Mr. Macmillan, the Debate was adjourned, and the House rose at Ten minutes to Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, March 2, 1876.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

After routine,

NEW BILLS.

Mr. BLAIN introduced a Bill entitled an Act to incorporate the Scottish Canadian Loan Company.

Mr. WORKMAN introduced a Bill entitled an Act respecting the Mechanics Bank of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Would my hon. friend state what is the object of the Bill?

Mr. WORKMAN—The object is principally for a reduction of the stock in consequence of the loss sustained by the bank.

INSOLVENT BANKS.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT introduced a Bill entitled an Act to make provision for the winding up of Insolvent Banks. He said: I propose to make insolvent banks subject to the 142nd section of the Insolvent Act of 1875, which provides for the winding up of insolvent incorporations, subject to certain modifications. This will not interfere with their resuming payment within a certain number of days. As the law at present exists, creditors have very great difficulty in getting practical control of the assets of the bank, which, in point of fact, remains with the shareholders. This Bill will give creditors power to apply to the judge to appoint a receiver or assignee who may deal with the matter. There are certain other provisions of a more technical character.

Mr. JONES (Halifax)—I would like to ask whether it applies to banks in trouble already, or banks that may be in trouble in the future?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I may say that we rather think the provisions of this Act will apply to all banks in insolvency now or going into insolvency after the Act becomes law.

THE INDIANS.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD introduced a Bill entitled "An Act respecting the

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

Indians of Canada." He said: The principal object of this Bill is to consolidate the several laws relating to Indians now on the statute books of the Dominion and the old Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. We find that there are three different statutes on the Dominion law books, as well as portions of several Acts that were in operation under the laws of Old Canada, and which are still in operation. It is advisable to have these consolidated in the interests of the Indian population throughout the Dominion, and have it applied to all the Provinces. Several amendments of various kinds are introduced. The principal amendment relates to the enfranchisement of Indians. Under the present law an Indian who becomes enfranchised only obtains a life interest in the land set apart for him, and his children have no control over it after his death. The present Act proposes that his children can control the land after his death by will from him. The operation of this it is considered will be an inducement for the Indians to ask for enfranchisement. Hitherto the inducement has been so small that very few of the Indians have asked for the privilege. This Bill proposes to go further; any Indian who is sober and industrious can go to one of the agents appointed for the purpose, to see whether he is qualified for the franchise or not; if qualified he receives a ticket for land, and after three years he is entitled to receive a patent for it which will give him absolute control of the portion allotted to him for his own use during his lifetime, and after that it will be controlled by whoever it is willed to. It is thought that this will encourage them to improve their land, and have a tendency to train them for a more civilized life. It is also intended that after they have obtained the patent for their land, if they wish to go on further and get possession of their share of the invested funds of the land, they can make application accordingly, and after three years further they will be entitled to a distribution of the funds; thus after six years of good behaviour they will receive their land and their share of the moneys in the hands of the Government, and will cease in every respect to be Indians according to the acceptance of the laws of Canada relating to Indians. We will then have nothing more to do with their affairs, except as ordinary subjects of Her Majesty.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—The Bill is a very important one. It affects the interests of the Indians who are especially under the guardianship of the Crown and of Parliament. From the statement of the hon. gentleman, I have a great deal of doubt whether it would be well to give every Indian, when he becomes 21 years of age, the right of absolute disposal of his lands. I am afraid it would introduce into this country a system by which land-sharks could get hold of their estates. However, we will have a better opportunity of discussing the question on the second reading.

I may take this occasion to say, I think it is hardly fair for the Government to take up other days besides their own to introduce their Bills. I did not object to it before, but as the paper is now so full of measures in the hands of private members, it is only fair that we should have a little time.

THE TRANSLATION OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. MASSON—It will be observed, by referring to the Orders of the Day, that I have followed the course which appears most satisfactory to the Premier, and in accordance with your views, with regard to the question of privilege relating to the translation of the Debates into French. Up to this moment we have not seen the first number in French. I have followed your ruling and given notice; I now move that the second report of the Committee on the printing and reporting of the Debates of Parliament be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The hon. gentleman's motion is on the order paper.

Mr. MASSON said he had acted on the suggestion of the Premier in the first place, but Mr. Speaker had ruled that two days notice must be given before the question could be brought up. Now the Hon. Minister of Justice remarked it must be taken up in its course. He (Mr. Masson) contended that it should be moved at once, because if taken up in its order it would not be reached before the end of the Session, and the Debates would not be translated. If the hon. gentleman was right, notice should have been given in the same way when the first report was dealt with. May furnished instances in which quasi questions of privilege had been given priority.

On Feb. 16th, 1836, the consideration of a petition relating to a corrupt agreement in the Carlow election stood 9th on the orders of the day, but was taken up before all the notices of motion. On June 5th, 1837, a similar precedence was given in the matter of a petition relating to the printers of the House. On April 26th, 1844, a question of breach of privilege stood the 11th order of the day, and was taken first. He contended, therefore, from the facts and precedents that his motion had priority.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said these very precedents showed that the motion could not be referred to until the orders of the day were reached. He (Mr. Blake) would then be prepared to reply to the hon. gentleman's arguments.

Mr. MASSON contended it was a question of privilege, and claimed that he had a right to move it at once.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had been quoted as saying the motion could be made a matter of privilege. What he did say was, that it might, perhaps, be mentioned as a matter of privilege, but not that it could be introduced as a motion. The only ground on which it could be brought up as a question of privilege would be urgency. Now, he understood the first sheets of the translation would be placed in the hands of members to-morrow.

Mr. BOWELL—I cannot understand how it is possible that the translation of the speeches can be delivered to members of this House to-morrow, unless some person or persons, the Government or the Chairman of the Committee, or some one else, have assumed a power to which they have no right under the circumstances. The report adopted by this House places the translation in the hands of the Committee, and states further, that if any assistance be required to enable the officers of the House to do the work in question, this is to be given under the supervision and the instructions of the Committees. So that no persons have power from this House—unless it has been assumed by the Government or the Chairman of the Committee without authority—to translate these debates.

In answer to the Hon. Mr. Blake Mr. BOWELL said the officers of the House has not given the requisite authority.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—So the hon. gentleman stated this morning.

Mr. BOWELL—I beg your pardon.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The hon. gentleman said that if any additional assistance was needed, the Committee was to take action.

Mr. BOWELL—I did say so; but if any additional translators have been employed, an authority has been assumed for which no right was given.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am not aware that any additional employes have been engaged.

Mr. BOWELL—I have reason to believe that they number three or four, and the best reason is, one came and, with reference to a speech I made, questioned me regarding the mode of rendering certain of my expressions. I will read the report of the Committee to be found on page 48 of the Votes and Proceedings:—

“That, for the French edition, the said speeches be immediately translated into French on the same principle as the Votes and Proceedings of the House. For which purpose it is recommended that the official translators of the House be utilized, and when necessary such extra assistance as may be required will be granted under the supervision of the Committee.”

And the Committee has never met to consider this question.

Mr. SPEAKER remarked that there was no precedent for the system followed in this relation, as the English House of Commons did not employ official reporters. His own impression was, that the House having ordered an Official Report, and appointed a Committee to superintend it, any member having reason to complain in this regard might fairly say he did so on the ground of privilege, to some extent. His opinion was that this was a matter of such importance and urgency, and partook so much, at all events, of the nature of privilege, that precedence should be given to it when the notice of motion where it stood was reached.

Mr. BOWELL.

CROSSING OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I beg leave introduce a Bill making better provision for crossing navigable waters by railway and other road companies incorporated under Provincial Acts.

Considerable inconvenience has been caused by the lack of such legislation as is proposed, as special Acts from the Parliament of Canada have had to be procured for this purpose; and it appears to the Government that such procedure is hardly requisite, and that under proper restrictions, as contained in this Bill, an easier mode of facilitating the operations of Provincial companies may be carried into effect. The Bill proposes, when a railway or other road company is lawfully incorporated by a Provincial Act, and it is necessary that such line should be taken across or along navigable water, sections 54, 55, 56, and 58 of the Railway Act shall apply. A clause is added requiring any company desirous of constructing any work under this Act, to give notice for six weeks in a local newspaper; the plan must be submitted to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and it must be authorized by the Governor-in-Council.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—Does the Bill apply to existing companies?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—It will extend to all Companies at present formed, or to be incorporated. It imposes no restriction on any companies whatever, but it gives permission to those incorporated under Provincial Acts to cross navigable waters under certain conditions.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Bill will remove an existing anomaly, placing it in the power of companies to cross navigable streams under arrangements provided by law.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac)—Would this apply to the Northern Colonization Railway at present?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—If this railway is empowered to construct its line, this Act will not interfere with it in the slightest degree; if not, then the company will be able to obtain such power under its provisions.

Mr. DOMVILLE—In the event of corporations, such as cities, not wishing to have railways crossing navigable streams, would this Act enable the companies to carry their roads across without the consent of such cities and corporations? A year ago a Bill was introduced to permit a road to be carried across the St. John's River at a navigable point, interfering with the rights of owners of wharves in the vicinity; it was thrown out, but it gave me a great deal of trouble.

Mr. WORKMAN—I would also ask if it would cover an application to be made in this House for the construction of the Royal Albert Bridge at Montreal? I have already received a great number of letters in opposition to the scheme; but of course as the Bill is not yet submitted I have not said anything.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I do not know whether the Royal Albert Bridge is to be built as part of a local railway; if not, the Bill has nothing to do with it. The provisions, I hope, are sufficiently guarded to prevent any such injustice as that to which the hon. member for King's County, (N.B.), refers, as notice must be given in a local newspaper of any such intention. I do not think that there is any likelihood of any injustice being committed.

MONEY IN THE HANDS OF FINANCIAL AGENTS.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked whether the Government will lay on the Table of the House a statement of the amounts of money belonging to Canada in the hands of the financial agents, or the banks in Canada or their agencies in England, on the 15th day of June last, and at the present time respectively; specifying the amounts that were bearing no interest and the rate of interest on all the other amounts respectively?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I don't want to take objection at this moment to the mode in which the question is put; but I may observe that it seems to be at the risk of some inconvenience if questions of this kind are put for purposes which had better be reached by a motion in the ordinary sense. I shall, however, have no objection to bringing down this information, and will add to it other facts pertinent to the subject which are not called for here.

SALE OF PUBLIC PROPERTY.

Mr. FRECHETTE enquired whether it is the intention of the Government to sell any portion of the public property set apart for military purposes in the the County of Lévis?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—We have no immediate intention of selling any portion of the lands in question. I don't know what has induced my hon. friend to ask the question. If we find it in the public interest to sell any portion we shall do so in the usual way.

TERMINUS OF QUEBEC RAILWAY.

Mr. MASSON enquired whether it is the intention of the Government to adopt any means to assure the construction of a line of Railway to connect Portage du Fort, the proposed terminus of the projected Quebec Government Railway, with the subsidized portion of the Canada Central Railway?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Government had a memorial transmitted to them from the authorities at Quebec on this subject, but we have not had it formally before us. I can only say to my hon. friend that the Government of course are disposed to regard favourably anything in that direction.

BEACH LOTS ON THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked whether the Government is aware of the fact that the Government of the Province of Quebec is issuing letters patent granting to private individuals rights of property in beach lots on the St. Lawrence between the lines of high and low water, and even beyond the line of low water in the navigable waters of the St. Lawrence and the sea-ports thereof; and if so, whether the the Government acknowledges the right of the Government of Quebec so to act?

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I may say that the Government have some information and correspondence on the subject, but I am not in a position to state what they may do in respect thereto. I will suggest to my hon. friend that he had better move for correspondence and papers, which I shall have no objection to bringing down to the House when Government may be prepared to state what they are prepared to do.

EXTRADITION OF CRIMINALS.

Mr. DYMOND enquired whether any, and if any, what steps have been taken by the Government towards enlarging the scope of the existing provisions for the extradition of criminals as between Canada and the United States?

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Steps have been taken by the Government towards that end. I suppose they are in the nature of correspondence, which, if asked for, there will be no objection to submitting.

GRANT TO RAILWAYS OF QUEBEC.

Mr. CIMON asked whether it is the intention of the Government to ask this House to agree to a grant to aid the Railways of the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the intention of the Government to ask for an appropriation to aid railroads in any of the Provinces.

THE BOATS BETWEEN QUEBEC AND LEVIS.

Mr. ROULEAU asked whether it is the intention of the Government to pass such a law as will prevent the boats, which cross during the winter between Quebec and Levis, from breaking the ice bridge which forms there every year?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the intention of the Government to propose any such law.

THE IRON STATION AT HALIFAX.

Mr. DOMVILLE enquired—Was the iron station now at Halifax awaiting erection purchased privately or by public tender, and from whom?

Mr. CASGRAIN.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I did not observe the question until this moment. The contract was by tender, but I don't recollect the names of the tenderers or contractor.

Mr. DOMVILLE—Then I will let the question remain on the paper.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Very well.

SNOW SHEDS ON THE INTERCOLONIAL.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked whether the Government have authorized the General Superintendent of Government Railways to place iron snow sheds on the Intercolonial Railway in the place of the wooden ones now existing; if so, has the contract been awarded, and to whom; also was it by private bargain or public tender?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—There are no iron sheds in existence that I am aware of.

Mr. DOMVILLE—That is not the question. I asked whether the Government have authorized their substitution for wooden ones?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The thing has never been discussed at all.

THE TRANSLATION OF DEBATES.

Mr. MASSON moved that the report of the Select Committee on reporting the debates of the House, be now concurred in. The hon. gentleman said: I wish to say to my hon. friend, the Premier, that I would be very sorry he should remain under the impression that I had wilfully misrepresented anything he said. In the Hansard I find the hon. gentleman said: "The hon. Mr. Mackenzie said this matter was brought up as a matter of privilege, but it would be better to wait until the chairman of the Committee came." I think if it is possible to bring it up as a question of privilege, it is equally correct to bring it up as proposed.

Mr. DELORME—I beg to move as an amendment—"That the House add here to the mode of translation proposed by the first report of the Committee, and that the Committee be instructed to secure such assistance as may be necessary to ensure the prompt execution of the work."

Mr. MASSON questioned whether the amendment was in order.

Mr. BOWELL—Is it not simply a negative to the proposition made by the member for Terrebonne ?

Mr. SPEAKER—If it goes beyond the original report, of course it is out of order.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It does go beyond that.

Mr. BOWELL—In what way ?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It gives instructions to the Committee.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—May I ask if there are any instructions to the Committee by the House ? The House concurred in a former report of the Committee suggesting the mode in which the work should be done. To secure the requisite assistance is the same thing; they are both mere negatives.

Mr. BOWELL—Full power is given by this House to the Committee to employ extra translators if desired, according to the instructions.

Mr. SPEAKER—Will the hon. gentleman read the last line ?

Mr. BOWELL—"For which purpose it is recommended the official translator of the House be utilized, and when necessary"—that is, if necessary in the opinion of the Committee—"such extra assistance as may be required will be granted under the supervision of the Committee."

Mr. SPEAKER—By whom ?

Mr. BOWELL—By the Committee.

Mr. SPEAKER—To whom is it granted by this House ?

Mr. BOWELL—The power is granted by this House to the Committee. This house has adopted the report, and had the Committee not decided to change the mode of having the translation made, they would have proceeded at once under the power given here to give to the translator of the House such assistance as may be required.

Mr. SPEAKER—Would they be authorized by concurrence in this report to employ additional translators without the passage of some such resolution as has been submitted.

Mr. BOWELL—Yes; and had the Committee given instructions to the Clerk to secure such assistants, he would have paid them. He has refused to do that in the past, because they were not employed by the Committee.

Mr. SPEAKER—It is open to the construction that the additional assistance will be granted by this House. It is very strange if on a report of this kind the Committee should be empowered to employ additional translation.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is plain that the words "For which purpose it is recommended that the official translators of the House be utilized, and that such extra assistance as may be required will be granted," mean that it is to be granted by the House under the supervision of the Committee.

Mr. BOWELL—Oh no !

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The passage will bear no other reading.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The House may have the power to employ assistance; the House now orders the Committee to do it.

Mr. BOWELL—The course which has been pursued in this matter is one which, I think, is a direct reflection upon the action of the Committee, and it is taking out of their hands that which was conferred by the resolution which appointed them. The original motion was made for the appointment of this Committee on the 14th of February. The next day, so urgent was it that the French members should have the reports of their speeches in French, the Committee met and appointed the President of the Council as Chairman. It was decided to utilize the translators of the House, with some additional assistance, to secure more accurate translation of the debates than we had of those of last Session. On the same day, upon which that report was adopted the President of the Council, as chairman of that Committee, presented it to the House on the 17th without giving any notice of his intention to do so, and the House adopted the report without discussion. Immediately after it was adopted the difficulty presented itself to the minds of the Committee and to the Chairman that it would interfere with the regular work of translating the proceedings of the House if this additional labour were imposed on the translators. They, however, agreed to try to enter into arrangements with the translators to perform this labour as extra work, by allowing them so many additional hands, and by detaching one of the gentlemen, in whom they had confidence, from the staff of the House. The President of the Council took exception to this mode on the ground that if the translators were to work during the night and on Sundays to keep pace with the printing of the debates, it was not only wrong in principle, but it was one to which he had a decided objection. He said it looked like a job, and he was not prepared to lend himself to it. If they could perform this work without any interference with their regular labours, he would be quite willing to allow them to do it, but that granting extra pay for extra work to those who had plenty to do for the House already, was wrong, and he opposed it. At the next Committee meeting, on the 22nd, we thought the best mode was to give the work out by tender to some responsible person who had thorough knowledge of French and English, and practical experience in translating. Having come to this conclusion, some names were suggested, among others that of a gentleman who afterwards agreed to take the work—Mr. Descelles. No one on the Committee spoke in higher terms of the honesty, integrity and ability of Mr. Descelles than the President of the Council.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE called the attention of Mr. Speaker to the fact that the hon. member for Hastings was out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER ruled that the hon. gentleman could not refer to proceedings that had taken place in Committee.

Mr. BOWELL—Perhaps I may tell the reasons why the Committee changed their opinion and made a second report. It is quite evident that the members of the Government—particularly those who have taken the matter out of the hands of the Committee—are desirous that the facts shall not be known either to the House or the country. That report was adopted, but instead of its being presented to the House on the day of its adoption by the Committee, it was carried in the pocket of the Chairman for two days, and it was not presented to the House. But the President of the Council again called the Committee together to endeavour to persuade them but they decided not to change their report. The reason that was given for the course they pursued by those who had this matter in charge, was outside pressure that was brought upon certain members. No sooner was it ascertained that this resolution was placed in the hands of Mr. Descelles than he was besieged by applications for positions on the staff, and by members who wished to provide places for friends; but when he ascertained that they had no experience in the translation of the English language into French, he could not consent to do it. He was still pressed, however, and then objection was taken to the mode of translation.

The facts reduce themselves simply to this, that the Government supporters became annoyed at losing a certain amount of patronage by this work being given out to a translator that they said was in opposition to them in politics, and connected with a newspaper which they asserted was continually abusing them and their party; therefore, he had no right to the contract. That may be the principle on which the Government act in giving out contracts, but I question whether it is a right course to pursue in the administration of the affairs of the country.

The President of the Council brought in the report and allowed it to remain on the Table until it was taken up by the hon. member for Terrebonne, who has been frustrated in every attempt he has made to bring it before the House. If the amendment before us should be adopted it will add materially to the expense of the translation, and what I fear more than anything else, the expense will be so great it will have the effect of destroying the official reports altogether. One translator, whose salary is $1,600, will have to be detached from the staff, and he expects extra pay for the labor he has to perform. He tells me he will require from three to four extra translators to whom he will have to pay at least $5 per day. Basing the computation on the time taken for translating the Confederation debates and last year's Hansard, this would give $1,400, to which must be added half a year's salary of the translator. This would give $2,500, and a proof reader and reviser would bring the cost up to between three and four thousand dollars. The translation of the Confederation debates at $1.30 per page, which is five cents more than Mr. Decelles' offer, cost $1,050.50; the translation of last year's Handsard cost $1,501.25. The House can easily see why the Committee changed their report. I have good reason to believe certain members besieged the Government, and I know they besieged the Chairman of the Committee, to endeavour if possible to set this report aside, on the principle that they had no confidence in a translator who was connected with a newspaper in opposition to the Government and to them. If this be a good reason for setting aside a report which was unanimously agreed to by the Committee, surely the same argument might and should apply to Mr. Burgess, the editor of the Reports.

Mr. BOWELL.

Everyone knows that he owns and edits a journal in this city, and when an opportunity presents itself he does not hesitate to express his opinion of the course pursued by members in this House. I hold that is right and proper, and something with which we as members of Parliament have nothing to do. He has as good a right to criticise and condemn members of the Opposition, so long as he keeps within the law, as any other newspaper man in this country. On the other hand, if it is right and proper that he should be the reporter of the debates in this House, and also editor of a Ministerial journal, surely it is just as logical to declare that Mr. Decelles, being an employé of the Minerve, has as good a right to take a contract from Parliament for the performance of a similar work. But it is contended that it is not so because exception has been taken to Mr. Decelles, while none has been taken to Mr. Burgess. That is a fallacy which is neither honest nor right. It is a reflection on the honesty of the reporters which is not deserved. I speak from my experience, having been on the Committee ever since this House decided to have official reports, when I say that Mr. Burgess has, to the best of his ability and upon every occasion, done all that he could to give an honest and faithful official report of the doings of this House. While I admit that, I believe Mr. Decelles, though he may be connected with the Minerve, would act as honestly in the discharge of his duties as Mr. Burgess. If I had any reason to doubt that, my doubts were set aside by the high encomiums paid to Mr. Decelles by the President of the Council himself. These are the reasons why I oppose the motion which has been placed in your hands. I believe it would add at least 50 per cent. to the expense of this translation, which then would not be done any better than it would be if the contract were carried out. We know from the recommendations we have received that Mr. Decelles is not only competent to do the work, but possesses also an honesty of purpose and pride in his profession which will induce him to do it faithfully and correctly. There can be only two reasons why he is refused this contract; either the Ministerial supporters want the patronage for friends, some of whom are totally incapable of doing the work, or they are determined that no one whose political views are opposed to theirs shall receive a contract. I believe both of these reasons have actuated many hon. members. We find some of them have gone to the contractor under the impression that the additional assistance is to be paid for out of the funds of the country, and insisted on placing inexperienced young men on his staff at a certain amount per day. It is time, therefore, to sustain the action of the Committee when they are endeavouring to carry out the instructions given them by the House.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman draws a parallel between the contractor for the reporting and this person whom the Committee propose to employ as a contractor now. There is no parallel.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Why?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—In the first place, public tenders were issued asking for proposals for reporting the debates. The lowest tender was accepted, which was that of Mr. Burgess, long before he owned the paper with which he is connected. The Committee, according to the hon. gentleman opposite, has made a private arrangement with Mr. Decelles.

Mr. BOWELL—The Clerk of the Printing Committee was instructed to receive proposals from as many translators as he could.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The arrangement is private so far as the House is concerned. The offers have not been reported to the House. From the very first I have taken the ground that the translators of the House should do this work, and the printers of the House should do the printing, so as to have it under the control of the Committee as far as possible. I do not see why the work of translating should not be done as cheaply one way as the other, and I am confident it can. I am informed that an offer to do the work for 90 cents per page was refused by the Committee.

Mr. BOWELL—It is true, and the President of the Council will explain why.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman asserts that it is the principle of this Government to give contracts to political favourites. I defy him or any member of this House to show that favouritism has been extended to political friends, and I challenge him to make good his assertion.

The Committee decided upon a mode of effecting this translation, and we approved of it. I have not the slightest doubt of their good faith, but they must understand when they submit a report diametrically opposed to their first one, it will be criticized. I do not see that the hon. member for Hastings should revile the House for the course they take. Surely they have a right to an opinion on the matter as well as the hon. gentleman. I think the proposition of the amendment is quite reasonable.

Mr. BOWELL—Has the hon. gentleman made enquiries as to the cost?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I know a little about printing and reporting, and I have no doubt the translating can be done as cheaply by one system as the other.

Mr. MASSON—If I am well informed the reason why the offer of 90 cents was refused was because the President of the Council would not give the work to an Irishman.

When questions of interior economy are under consideration the political creed of a gentleman should not be considered, and this course was followed when my right hon. friend the member for Kingston was at the head of the Government. At that time an editor of a paper called L'Ordre, which was very bitter against the Administration, was appointed a supernumerary translator; and not only so, but a few weeks afterwards a permanent officer of the House, establishing the principle which I have mentioned. The gentleman in question negotiated with the President of the Council himself; and, if I am well informed, he acted most fairly. He understood, as well as the President of the Council, that politics should not be introduced into questions of interior management. He said boldly, fairly and honestly: "I have the contract; you have given it; and I have a right to choose such men as I like for my employés." He might have chosen men of his own political faith, as was within his right, but he would not do it; while he would not submit to dictation as to the men he intended to engage, from persons outside of this House. He said: "I will do better than that; the press is well represented in the gallery, and I will choose men among the editors and correspondents of the different newspapers who are capable of assisting me in making an excellent translation." He accordingly selected among the Liberals the editor of L'Evenement, Quebec, and the correspondents of the National and Bien Public, Montreal, and two Conservative journalists.

An Hon. Member—That is a coalition

Mr. MASSON—No; that is fair play. Such was the arrangement effected with the President of the Council, with the knowledge of all the members of the Committee, and the motion for the employment of Mr. Decelles was moved by Mr. Bechar. But hon. members have found that their political friends would have all the patronage; and in this regard I must really compliment my hon. friends on the Ministerial Benches from the Province of Quebec. They have given way repeatedly when important matters have been brought before the House, nevertheless, I observe that they at last perceive they must show their independence. They do not desire to submit, regarding the question of patronage, to the President of the Council, and they have made it a sine qua non that this report should not be approved. They knew that they could not induce this House to cancel a contract honestly and fairly made at the request of the Committee, and they declared that they would change the whole system of patronage in this relation. I would be astonished if the unworthy attempt made were sanctioned by this House, for I hope we will rise above the level of party spirit. I notice that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier smiles at this, but I know that he is incapable of doing such a thing. I appeal—not to the hon. gentlemen who are endeavoring to force the President of the Council to change his decision, but to the other hon. members; and I ask them whether it would be proper to take the step which is urged, simply because some hon. gentlemen cannot secure the patronage to which they lay pretensions.

Mr. YOUNG—I extremely regret that any difficulties should have arisen in the Committee, because it is quite evident that if politics are to be introduced into such matters, this report can only exist for a very short time. Indeed, as far as I can ascertain, the trouble is not due to the causes represented by hon. gentlemen opposite; and I do think that they should not have taken their present course in this regard. The real cause is well known.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—What is it?

Mr. YOUNG—I will tell the hon. gentleman. It is this: The gentleman in question is an active writer, employed on the staff of a leading French paper, while the feeling existing between political parties in the Province of Quebec is very bitter, and certain members felt that it would not be fair that the translation of the debates of this House should be entrusted to a gentleman who is in such bitter opposition to them. This is the only reason. I think that the objection taken is very sound. In the case of Mr. Burgess, I do not think that the circumstances are parallel, for—as I have already told the member for North Hastings—Mr. Burgess scarcely reports himself, while little of the report passes through his hands. I have no doubt that the reporters endeavour to do strict justice in all cases, and I have no reason to believe that Mr. Decelles is other than a very honourable man; but still the difficulty I have mentioned exists. If our friends on the other side of the House objected to Mr. Burgess on account of his connection with a newspaper, and doubted his intention to do them justice and treat them fairly—as I told the hon. member for Hastings—I would feel that this would form a proper ground for objection. The only way will be to leave the matter in the hands of the translators of the House as was first agreed. I have no doubt that they will act impartially. Certain members of the Committee forced their opinion upon it against the wishes of the minority.

Mr. BOWELL—The report was adopted unanimously, and upon the recommendation of the Hon. President of the Council.

Mr. YOUNG—I dare not mention what took place at the second meeting of the Committee, and the hon. gentleman knows that the position taken was different at this meeting. I trust that nothing will be done to interfere with the publication of the Reports, which, I am sure, hon. members fully appreciate. I regret very much that the plan proposed to the House, in the first place by myself, the hon. member for Cumberland, and other hon. members, was not strictly followed.

Mr. DESJARDINS—The only objection my hon. friend from Waterloo seems to have to the action of the Committee is that he does not consider Messrs. Decelles and Burgess as occu pying similar positions; but the circumstances, to my mind, are exactly the same, as the translations were to be submitted to members. Moreover, Mr. Decelles was to have merely the supervision of the work, the majority of his assistants being chosen, as the hon. member for Terrebonne has mentioned, from among the political friends of the Government. At the beginning of the Session the President of the Council appeared to be the leader of his party in the Province of Quebec; but I think that to-day we have, more than ever before, reason to enquire who is the real leader of the Ministerial party in Lower Canada. The step that was taken by the President of the Council was viewed with disfavor by his political friends; they denounced the effort he made to act impartially. He took the initiative in this matter, and assured himself of the services of a gentleman who could faithfully and satisfactorily translate the debates, and previous to submitting the question to the Committee, the hon. gentleman saw Mr. Decelles and ascertained that his services could be secured. I also believe that he intimated to this gentleman the price he should obtain under the contract.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—No! no!

Mr. DESJARDINS—The reason why the Committee unanimously adopted the report submitted to the House, was therein indicated:—The inconvenience which would result, if the work was entrusted to gentlemen already over-burdened, and the necessity existing for seeing that no ordinary duties were neglected in its performance or the translations inconveniently deferred.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I rise to a point of order. My hon. friend from Hochelaga is not making much progress, and I am afraid that a great deal of time will be lost while he is giving a history of the transactions of the Committee.

Mr. DESJARDINS—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I understand that he is recapitulating arrangements made by the Committee.

Mr. DESJARDINS—Decidedly.

Mr. DESJARDINS.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—What the Hon. President of the Council and the Committee have done.

Mr. SPEAKER—This would be clearly out of order.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—The matter before the House relates to the report of the Committee and does not concern the regularity, or irregularity, the formality, or informality of its transactions.

Mr. DESJARDINS—This is a question which I consider merits the attention of the House. The Committee was appointed, I suppose, because the House had confidence in the impartiality of its members, and when its second report was adopted it did not at once fall under the flood of indignation which appears a few hours afterwards by accident to have poured from hon. gentleman opposite. On the contrary, the Committee's action was approved, even by Ministerialists. When we saw one after another coming and proposing to the contractor, or hon. members who were supposed to have some influence with him, a crowd of applicants anxious to offer their services to their country for a consideration, of course matters at once changed. A certain portion of the hon. gentlemen became indignant, because the contractor did not wholly follow their suggestions, and they waxed warm, owing to the fact that the President of the Council had dared to recommend a gentleman who had the misfortune to be employed on the staff of a journal like the Minerve. It is to be regretted that this feeling was not previously shown and immediately after the selection, in order to conceal their motives, which were clearly explained by the hon. member for Terrebonne. They believed that they were being robbed of a certain sum of money which legitimately belonged to the Ministerial Party. They have not enjoyed Ministerial favours a long time, and they are not at all certain that they will long have such opportunity. At present, three hundred pages of the English Hansard have been published and distributed among members; and had this difficulty not arisen, and had action been immediately taken in the way the President of the Council desired, without delay, one hundred and twenty pages would have been translated, printed and circulated. The difficulty raised does no credit to the Ministerial majority. In any case, whatever may be the decision of the House, it will tend to throw discredit upon the Committee—I can give other interpretation to any action that may be taken.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I have seen party pressure applied many times in this House, but I never before saw it applied for the purpose of defeating the unanimous report of a Committee composed of members of both sides of the House. Mr. Decelles' capability cannot be disputed by any person in this House. It cannot be disputed, because the Hon. President of the Council has represented him as eminently qualified to perform his duties, and there is no hon. gentleman in this House more capable of giving an opinion of Mr. Decelles' qualifications for the work. His capability has been admitted as beyond question; the only ground alleged against him is that he is connected with a French newspaper politically opposed to the Government of the day. When the House remembers that the whole of this work of reporting our debates has been entrusted by gentlemen on both sides of the House to one of the strongest political partizans to be found in this country, to the hands of the gentleman who edits the Government organ in this city, and who deals in the severest terms with the actions and expressions of gentlemen who oppose the Government; when it is considered that no members of the House ever objected to have the whole reporting of the debates committed to such a gentleman, I say it is amazing that any member can be found who would venture to ask this House to vote down the report of the Committee on the ground that a gentleman who is to serve under that reporter is connected with a French newspaper opposed to the Government. I cannot believe it possible that independent gentlemen on either side of the House can fail to feel that nothing is more unreasonable than to ask them to vote against this report, when it has been shown that the offer which it recommends will save a large amount of money, and the work could not be done on more favourable terms. I referred to Mr. Burgess as a political partizan, but I am bound to say that his character as a reporter, in discharge of the duty with which he is entrusted, makes him superior to taking any advantage of the position which he occupies, or to doing anything but give, with most perfect fairness, the reports of the speeches of the hon. gentlemen of this House. Surely the Government do not say they want the reporting to be in the hands of a political partizan, and they will not employ any person under him who is not a political partizan of the Government.

Mr. PALMER—The principal thing that governs me in this matter is the question of expense. I would like to hear the views of the President of the Council as to what induced him to enter into that contract.

Mr. MACDONALD (Toronto)—I am free to confess I find some difficulty in this case. I want some light, and other members want some light on this matter. When the hon. member from Terrebonne brought it before the House it presented itself to me in this way: The hon. gentleman found fault that the Reports had not been delivered to the French speaking members in the French language, and that appeared to me so exceedingly reasonable that I would vote that they should have them in French. On the other hand, I find an amendment moved from the Government side of the House by gentlemen speaking the same language and resisting this. The difficulty with me is to find a reason for voting against this report, as I understand Mr. Decelles was unanimously appointed by the Committee.

Mr. MASSON—The contract was awarded to Mr. Decelles, and instructions were given to the Clerk of the House to sign the contract with him.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Committee simply recommended that the tender be accepted; they had no right to award it at all until the House approved of it, and now the amendment embodies the view that the House should have charge of this and not the contractor.

Mr. BOWELL—Before the objections were taken, with the consent of the President of the Council, the Clerk of the House was authorized to enter into a contract with Mr. Decelles.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I greatly commiserate the Premier in the position in which he is placed. He is exactly in the position that I have been placed in some time ago by the peculiar action of the member for Quebec. I cannot at all venture to add to the argument of my friend from Cumberland, in his answer to the speech of the hon. member for South Waterloo. I cannot perceive the difference between Mr. Burgess and Mr. Decelles. They are both good reporters, and both have strong political proclivities. Mr. Burgess is connected with one of the newspapers which support the Government; in fact the confidential press of the Government, and yet it never occurred to the members on this side of the House to enter into such ignoble warfare against Mr. Burgess, because he was opposed, strongly opposed to us in politics, and sometimes expressed his views in criticizing our actions in language which, if used on the floor of this House, would be considered exceedingly unparliamentary. Yet, when he got the contract we never thought of attacking him.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—He was not connected with the paper at that time.

Mr. BOWELL—He occupied the same position on the Times at that time as Mr. Decelles now occupies on the Minerve. He was editor of the paper of which he is now proprietor.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—It has never occurred to us to grumble or complain about Mr. Burgess, or to talk of cancelling his contract because he was editor of the Times; and I am exceedingly sorry that that course has been pursued with reference to Mr. Decelles. As far as he is concerned, however, I think he is well out of it. It is quite certain that he would be worried all the time, that he would not get fair play; and that the contract would be a ruinous one to him. But what surprised me was the conduct of the President of the Council. I do not deal with the Committee at all, but only with the hon. gentleman as a member, by what is said in the House. It is stated here that he was in charge of a report which was unanimously adopted, and it was his duty to lay it before the House; but he kept it in his pocket two days contrary to his duty as Chairman of the Committee.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—That is not the fact.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Well, how long did the hon. gentleman keep it?

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—Go on; don't be in a hurry.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Perhaps it was forty-seven hours and three-quarters. That was not respectful to the Committee, and by so acting the hon. gentleman forgot his duty to the Committee and this House. What is the reason? There is something behind this. My hon. friend is always energetic in performing his duties; I have known him a long time, and no one understands his duties better than he. If he sinned in this instance it was not from ignorance, because he knew it was his duty to lay that report before the first meeting of this House. But the hon. gentleman kept the report in his pocket two days after the House met. If he had moved it in its place the House would have adopted it unanimously. But in the meantime it was not denied that Mr. Decelles had got the contract, or had been promised it so far as the Committee could promise. It is alleged that certain members of this House went to Mr. Decelles and said—my hon. friend stated it on his own responsibility—"You must employ so-and-so, and give them so much, $4 a day." Mr. Decelles, however, said "I won't do it; I am responsible for this work, and I will engage my own people;" and because he could not be induced to purchase the support of those hon. gentlemen, pressure was brought to bear upon the Hon. President of the Council which, no doubt, he greatly regrets. It puts this House in rather an inglorious position, and is doing a great injustice to Mr. Decelles, who is in effect punished for his politics, and punished because he happens to be a Conservative.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.

Mr. DEVLIN—I am surprised at the effort made on the part of the Opposition to impugn the motives of the members on this side of the House. During the whole time they were in office those who were opposed to them had no chance of receiving any employment. If you look at the various Government offices in existence at Ottawa to-day, you will not find one that is not filled with partisans of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and I believe I am correct in stating that not one has ever been removed. Although the hon. gentleman tells this House that the person in whose behalf he has spoken was punished for partizanship, I think he is mistaken. The record of the Government in this respect is above suspicion. The Ministry have on more than one occasion incurred the censure of their friends for neglecting the interest of those who have supported them in times past; and looking at the thing fairly and squarely they should prefer their friends to those who stand opposed to them. That is my doctrine. Whenever I am called upon to give a vote I shall always record it in favour of my friends in preference to my opponents. I shall, therefore, support the position taken by the House on this question.

Mr. BLAIN—The position taken by both sides of this House is not a proper one. I tried to point out that no man should be put in a position where there is the possibility of a conflict between his feelings and duties; and I have no hesitation in saying, now, that he who reports the debates of the House ought not to be employed; and that this man, who controls a Conservative paper, ought not to have this contract. If we desire to keep those people as they ought to be kept—men of independence, men who will follow any walk of duty that may be before them—we ought not to put them in a double position of that kind. Both sides of the House are now attempting to shield partizans at the expense of the Government. I think, Sir, that both these gentlemen ought to be dismissed.

Mr. DELORME—I think a wrong idea has been formed on this question. Motives have been imputed upon the other side that are not borne out by the circumstances. Where is the responsibility? The contract for translating last session was not well filled indeed, so indifferently that members determined there should be a change this year. A number of us decided to place the work in the hands of the French translators who are responsible to this House. This was the real reason which induced the change.

Hon. Mr. BLANCHET—I hope the President of the Council will not resist the appeal made to him. I receive nearly every day letters from my constituents and friends asking me to send them copies of the Report. I could only reply, "I have no French copies." The President of the Council is responsible for this delay. There is something suspicious about this thing. One day Mr. Decelles is the best man the Committee could choose. Even a good Irishman is put aside when he offers to do it for ninety cents, on the principle, I suppose, that "No Irish need apply." I would like to know why Mr. Decelles has so changed from pure gold to lead. I have every confidence in the reporter of the House, who is the editor and owner of a Ministerial newspaper, and it is admitted that Mr. Decelles has the intelligence, education, honesty and industry required for the translation of the debates. Perhaps the hon. member for L'Islet can tell us why the French population of Quebec are deprived so long of reports of our debates in their own language. I appeal strongly to the President of the Council to give us some explanations.

The members were then called in, and the amendment was carried on the following division:—

YEAS:

Messieurs.

Archibald,	Higinbotham,
Aylmer,	Holton,
Bain,	Herton,
Barthe,	Huntington,
Bernier,	Jetté,
Bertram,	Jones (Halifax),
Bigger,	Killam,
Blackburn,	Kirk,
Blair,	Lafamme,
Blake,	Laird,
Borden,	Lajoie,
Borron,	Underkin,
Bourassa,	Langlois,
Bowman,	Macdougall (Elgin),
Boyer,	McDougall (Renfrew),

Brouse,	MacKay (Cape-Breton)
Burk,	Mackenzie,
Burpee (St John),	McCraney,
Carmichael,	McGregor,
Cartwright,	McLeod,
Casey,	McNab,
Casgrain,	Metcalfe,
Cauchon,	Mills,
Charlton,	Norris,
Cheval,	Oliver,
Christie,	Paterson,
Church,	Pelletier,
Cockburn,	Perry,
Cook,	Pettes,
Davies,	Pickard,
Dawson,	Poser,
Delorme,	Richard,
De St. Georges,	Robillard,
Devlin,	Ross (Prince-Edward),
Dymond,	Scatcherd,
Ferris,	Scriven,
Fiset,	Skinner,
Fleming,	Smith (Peel),
Flynn,	Smith (Selkirk),
Forbes,	Smith (Westmoreland),
Fréchette,	Snider
Galbraith,	Stirton,
Gibson,	Thibaudau,
Gillmor,	Trow,
Gordon,	Vail,
Goudge,	Workman,
Hagar,	Yeo,
Hall,	Young—95

NAYS :

Messieurs.

Baby,	McDougall (Three Riv.),
Bannatyne,	McKay (Colchester),
Blanchet,	Macmillan,
Bowell,	McCallum,
Cameron (Cardwell),	McQuade,
Cameron (Victoria),	Masson,
Caron,	Mitchell,
Cimon,	Moffat,
Colby,	Monteith,
Coupal,	Montplaisir,
Currier,	Mousseau,
Uthbert,	Ouimet,
Desjardins,	Palmer,
Dewdney,	Pinsonneault,
Domville,	Platt,
Farrow,	Plumb,
Ferguson,	Pope,
Flesher,	Robinson,
Fraser,	Robitaille,
Gaudet,	Rochester,
Gill,	Roscoe,
Haggart,	Rouleau,
Harwood,	Short,
Hurteau,	Stephenson,
Jones (Leeds),	Thompson (Cariboo),
Kirkpatrick,	Tupper,
Langevin,	Wallace (Norfolk),
Lanthier,	White (Hastings),
Little,	White (Renfrew),
Macdonald (Kingston),	Wood,
Macdonald (Toronto),	Wright (Ottawa),
Macdonald (Cape-Bret.)	Wright (Pontiac).—64.

It being Six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

DAMAGE TO LAND BY THE GRAND RIVER.

Mr. McCALLUM resumed the adjourned debate on his proposed motion for an Order of the House for correspondence on the subject of damages caused to lands along the Grand River by raising the water in the upper level of the Welland Canal. He said: The motion placed in your hands is in reference to a grievance of the people I have the honour to represent in this House. They have suffered largely by the negligence of the Government in this matter, particularly those farmers and property-holders in the townships of Moulton, Dun and Canborough, in Monk, as well as those living in the townships of South and North Cayuga, in Haldimand. They suffer by having a large portion of their farms covered with water during the summer months, and by having their roads injured, their bridges washed away, and being put to a great deal of inconvenience in other ways. The Corporation of the village of Dunville has also suffered in this respect, having been put to the expense of building an embankment along the Grand River for a long distance, to keep the water out of the town. In 1870 or 1871 the Government, through neglect in not having sufficient waste wires to carry off the water, caused a great deal of damage in the town by the rapid rise of the water. The loss was heavy, and the people applied to the Government from time to time for compensation, but got none. Last year the Government sent surveyors and valuers to value and report upon the extent of the loss, and I do not see any good reason, nor have I heard any expressed, why these people should not have received their money long ago. Some people say that the settlement of this matter was kept back for political purposes, but I do not charge the Government with doing it with that object, although it has done duty at the election in favour of the Government candidate. It has been argued by supporters of the hon. gentleman opposite, that if the people wanted to get justice in the matter of land damages, they must support the Government candidate. I know it had an influence on the election favourable to the Ministerial candidate, but not sufficient to send him to this House. But I do charge the Government with negligence and indifference in this matter; and I am surprised that I do not see a sum placed in the estimates for the payment of these damages. I do not charge them with doing wrong in raising the water in the Grand River, or in this reservoir, as it was necessary for the purpose of supplying the Welland Canal with water for manufacturing as well as navigation. But while I approve of what they did in that regard, I cannot admit that they were justified in doing an injustice to a few individuals for the benefit of the public without offering some compensation. I trust they will grant an arbitration in this matter, in order to remove the just grievances of the people.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Government would take the necessary steps to ascertain the amount of damage, if any, and the matter would be dealt with at the proper time and in the proper manner.

Mr. McCALLUM said the sooner this grievance was removed the better. The people were as law-abiding as any in the country, but he would not be responsible for the result if this injustice were continued. There was also a grievance against the late Government. In 1870 or 1871 a large amount of damage was caused in Dunnville by an overflow of the river. He wanted the Government to grant an arbitration to those people to see what damage they had sustained.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman had no business to constitute himself champion of these people at all. He accused the Government of injustice, though he knew the late Ministry, whom he supported so zealously, had declined to pay these people damages. The dam was never raised by this Government and they should not have been accused of injustice. He (Mr. Mackenzie) had taken particular steps to have a survey made to establish water levels and then sent valuers to determine the losses of property holders. Maps were prepared and a sum would be appropriated as soon as possible for paying the damages.

Mr. McCALLUM said in the spring of 1874 this Government had raised the water in the Grand River from 15 inches to two feet higher than before because the supply in the Welland Canal was insufficient, and yet the Premier asserted that nothing of the kind had been done under his administration.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he did not rise to take part in this debate, but to enquire what the Premier meant by saying the hon. member for Monk had no right to constitute himself the champion of these people. It was the duty of any hon. gentleman in this House to champion the humblest individual in the Dominion, from one end to the other, whenever an injustice in his judgment was done him. The hon. gentleman's statement was rather too broad.

After some further discussion the motion was carried.

WATER NAVIGATION.

Mr. PERRY renewed his motion that an Address be presented to His Excellency, for a statement showing what steps have been taken by the Government touching the opening up of steam communication, in the winter season, between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, in accordance with the terms of Union between Prince Edward Island, and the Dominion of Canada; also all correspondence and copies of contracts with different parties, with the view of effecting the same.

The motion was carried.

PUBLIC BILLS.

The following Bills were read the second time and referred to appropriate standing Committees:—

Mr. WOOD—To amend the Act 37 Vict., chap. 51, intitled "An Act to authorize the incorporation of Boards of Trade in the Dominion."

Mr. CHARLTON—To amend the Act 38 Vict., chap. 42, respecting the transportation of cattle by railway or other mode of conveyance within the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. FORBES—To amend the Act to make better provision, extending to the whole Dominion of Canada, respecting the inspection of certain staple articles of Canadian Produce.

LICENSING OF ENGINEERS.

Mr. COOK moved the second reading of the Bill to provide for the examination and licensing of persons employed as Engineers elsewhere than on steamboats.

Mr. SPEAKER—The Bill affects trade and commerce, and my impression is it should be introduced by resolution in Committee of the Whole. Last Session a Bill on the same subject, introduced by the hon. member, was ruled out for that reason.

Mr. COOK—You refer to another Bill. The object of this measure is to get a competent class of men. I do not see why it is not in order. It would have the effect of improving this class of engineers.

It will also have the effect of creating a revenue; I find from the returns, that such has been derived yearly from steamboat inspection. In 1870, $5,122.11; 1871, $2,048.96; 1872, $3,210.43; 1874, $5,311.61; and 1875, $2,800.12. We do not hear of accidents on steamboats, but a paper is scarcely taken up that does not contain information that a boiler has exploded in some factory or mill, large numbers of people being killed. Two years ago an explosion occurred in a factory at Pieton, and it was proved conclusively to have been due to the incapacity of the engineer. Mr. Platt, at the time wrote congratulating me on the introduction of a similar Bill, and hoped that it would not be withdrawn, as it was a necessary measure. Not only lives are endangered, but a great amount of property is destroyed; the lives of the people so exposed should be protected, and I trust that the Government will not be hostile to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—If the views of my hon. friend could be carried out, the effect, I do not doubt, would be beneficial in many instances; but there is a broad distinction to be drawn between the class of engineers charged with the care of steamboats, containing perhaps one thousand passengers, and those who are simply proprietors of a shingle machine worked by themselves in some remote part of the country. It is equally certain that we could not reach all the persons mentioned in our legislation; it would impose a very heavy duty on Government officials, a larger staff would be required, and a tax would become necessary. I may at once inform my hon. friend that the Government are not prepared to adopt his views, because they believe that they could not possibly carry them out, and because it would not be well or wise to do so if they could, to the extent the hon. gentleman proposes. He cannot, moreover, as a private member, introduce a Bill which would levy a tax on any portion of Her Majesty's subjects, or dispose of public moneys so obtained; and I think, that having explained his views, he should be satisfied and withdraw the measure.

Mr. ROCHESTER—I am sorry to hear the hon. Premier make this statement, for I think that it is necessary to have skilled engineers in mills and factories as on steamboats. In many mills from one to three hundred people are employed, and legislation in the direction proposed is very advisable.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I took the ground that this was a matter regarding which we cannot competently legislate, but one which I think belongs to the Provincial Legislatures.

Mr. ROCHESTER—I am not prepared to say that it is not constitutional; but if we cannot take such action the Local Governments should adopt some measure in this connection.

Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman will notice in the second section of the British North American Act that such legislation appertains to the Provincial Parliaments.

Mr. COOK—Do steamboat inspectors come under the control of the Local Legislatures?

Mr. MILLS—No; for that is a matter connected with navigation, but the engineer of a saw-mill has nothing to do with commerce.

Hon. Mr. BLANCHET—I regret the position taken by the Premier. A few years ago an accident happened in Quebec, owing to the explosion of a donkey engine, and last summer a man was killed there, I believe, in consequence of a similar mishap. The hon.

Mr. FORBES.

member for Bothwell will, perhaps, be able to say whether donkey engines are controlled by the Dominion or Local Legislature. Probably by the former, because they are employed on vessels and docks. Legislation preventing accidents would protect the public, and hence would be very desirable.

Mr. COOK—I must say I was very much surprised on hearing the remarks that have fallen from the Premier.

Mr. SPEAKER—Does the hon. member allow the matter to stand and be taken under consideration.

Mr. COOK—I wish to give vent to a few remarks regarding the discussion that has already taken place.

I am very much surprised at the attitude of the Premier. If he is not aware that there are larger establishments than shingle mills in this country, where steam engines are used, requiring the services of competent engineers, I will inform him on the subject. Mills exist where from 150 to 200 men are engaged, and a very large number are employed in other factories. I imagine the Premier will recollect that last year he had the boilers in this building inspected by the Chairman of the Board of Inspectors. It was then discovered that they were very rusty, and if they had been subjected to a heavy pressure the consequences might have been disastrous, while the House was in Session. These facts are incontrovertible, and under these circumstances, and when the Government finds it necessary to employ in asylums and other public buildings engineers furnished with certificates, I do not see why this should not be generally required. I hope that the technical objection taken will be dropped, and that the measure will be allowed to become law. The tax would be light and a revenue would be created.

Mr. COCKBURN—The law proposed would be a hardship upon many small establishments. I have been requested by parties throughout the country to state that they are not prepared for such a regulation, which should be deferred until the public is educated up to the proper point. If the Bill is not withdrawn I must vote against it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I think the hon. gentleman from North Simcoe did not understand the latter portion of my remarks. I doubted whether this House was competent to deal with this subject. I do not at present think that we can do so. I moreover questioned the policy of going so far as the hon. gentleman proposes, even if it were within our power.

Mr. COOK—Under the circumstances I will leave the matter over for further consideration and may bring it up again.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD—I think my hon. friend who introduced this Bill must see that there is no use in keeping it on the paper. The Hon. First Minister says he opposes it in the first place on the ground that this House has no jurisdiction, and in the second place, that if the House had jurisdiction it ought not to pass the Bill. Under such circumstances it seems hopeless to keep it on the paper. I am inclined to concur with the view taken by the hon. member for Bothwell, that this is a matter for local legislation.

Mr. ROCHESTER—If the Premier has decided correctly, that this House has no jurisdiction, I should say nothing more about it. There is, however, a great deal to be said in favour of the measure, and I think it will be well to let it remain on the paper.

Mr. McDOUGALL (Renfrew) moved the adjournment of the debate. The motion was carried.

THE NATIONAL EXCHANGE CO.

On motion of Mr. Scatcherd, the Bill to incorporate the National Exchange Co., was read the second time, and referred to the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

ASSISTANT INSPECTORS OF PENITENTIARIES.

The House then went into Committee on Bill No. 2—An Act to provide for the appointment of Assistant Inspectors of Penitentiaries in Manitoba and British Columbia. (Resolution reported from Committee of the Whole on Friday, 25th February, referred).

Mr. Scatcherd took the Chair.

The Committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.

The House went into Committee on Bill No. 3—An Act to make provision for Collection and Registration of the Criminal Statistics of Canada. (Resolutions reported from Committee of Whole on Friday, 25th February, referred).

Mr. Scatcherd took the Chair.

DUTY ON TEA.

The Committee rose and reported.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL moved an Address to his Excellency the Governor General for copies of all correspondence or communications since the 1st day of January, 1874, between the Government of Canada or any of the Departments or officers thereof and Merchants and other parties, if any there be, relating to the changes in the duties on tea, and asking for or relating to compensation resulting from such changes, together with a statement in detail of all duties refunded on teas, with the names of the parties to whom the refund was made.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—There is no objection to the first part of the resolution, but there is no correspondence.

The motion was carried.

PIER AT BAIE ST. PAUL.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that his Excellency will cause to be laid before this Honourable House:

1st. Copy of the contract between the Government and Mr. Adolphe Gagnon, for the construction of a pier or piers at Baie St. Paul;

2nd. Copies of the correspondence between the Government and the said Adolphe Gagnon and others in connection with such contract.

3rd. Copies of all claims or accounts presented by the said Adolphe Gagnon, or by any other person in his name, for indemnity in this case;

4th. Copies of all Orders in Council or Departmental Orders referring this claim or this account to the Official Arbitrators;

5th. Copies of the award of the said

Mr. ROCHESTER.

Arbitrators and the papers accompanying it, and of all Orders in Council or Departmental orders giving effect to each award.

The motion was carried.

QUEBEC CITADEL.

Mr. CARON moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for: 1st. Copies of all contracts between the Government and any person or company for the execution of work at the Citadel of Quebec in 1874 and 1875; 2nd. Copies of all arrangements, made with a contractor or contractors, or with a superintendent or overseer, or superintendents or overseers, for the execution of any portion of the said works; 3rd. Copies of the pay lists, showing the sum paid to each overseer, superintendent, workman, &c., for the execution of such work, the number of workmen, overseers, and superintendents, employed each week, and the total cost of such work during the year ending the 31st December, 1874, and the total cost for the following year.

The motion was carried.

DISALLOWANCE OF PROVINCIAL STATUTES.

Mr. MILLS moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, for all correspondence with the Colonial Secretary on the subject of the exercise of the power of disallowance of the Provincial Statutes. In doing so he said:—

I need say but very little in reference to this motion. It will be remembered we had this subject up last Session for discussion. The late Colonial Secretary, Lord Kimberly, on one occasion directed the Governor General to exercise the power of disallowance regardless of the advice of his Ministers. I think that the general opinion expressed in the House last Session was that the advice was bad advice and unconstitutional. I think an hon. gentleman who moved a resolution respecting it last year withdrew it because it was then under consideration between the Government and the Colonial Office. I now move for the correspondence.

The motion was carried.

INSPECTOR OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES FOR CHARLEVOIX.

Hon. Mr. LANGÉVIN moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of the commission appointing Mr. Henry Simard. Inspector of Weights and Measures for the Electoral District of Charlevoix — and of the oath taken by him as such Inspector, and of the date of such oath.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—There has been no commission, and there was no oath as far as we know.

Hon. Mr. LANGÉVIN—It appeared in the Official Gazette, but I will withdraw my motion.

MONTREAL CUSTOM HOUSE SUPERANNUATIONS.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, for a Return of the names and ages of all employes of the Montreal Custom House who have been superannuated within the last two years, with causes of such superannuation; names of all persons who have been taken into the Public Service during the same period in connection with the Montreal Custom House, whether as permanent employes or as supernumeraries, and the salary paid to each, and for what period, and showing whether they are still employed.

The motion was carried.

SIX NATION INDIANS.

Mr. PATERSON moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for all correspondence which has taken place between the Council of the Six Nation Indians and the Indian Department, with reference to the payment of accrued interest moneys which belong to them and which have been added to their general fund; and also for a statement showing the amount of said interest moneys.

He said: I may remark that the Hon. Minister of the Interior is not in his place, but some of his colleagues may give the information. The motion refers to a matter with which I am somewhat conversant. I may mention that the correspondence is of this nature: The Six Nation Indians have $300,000 invested by the Government. During the past thirty years there have been large sums of money, by way of accrued interest, which have been paid to the Government, and which, instead of having been paid to the Indians as they are entitled to, have been merged in their general fund. They have contracted debts with merchants, and they now desire to pay these debts. They have memorialized the Government asking that the amount of accrued interest be paid them in order to do so. I have taken this opportunity of pressing the matter upon the notice of the Government, in order that they shall concede what is just and right, bearing in mind the fact that the Indians are asking for their own money, not the public money. They do not ask that the general fund should be trenched upon in the least, but they ask for the accrued interest, to enable them to pay their debts as honest men. The amount they require is about $75,000; they feel persuaded that there is that amount of money due them, but it is not known exactly. I have asked for a statement of this accrued interest, but it will necessitate a great deal of trouble to the Department. I will say on behalf of the Indians that they will be perfectly satisfied if their request for $75,000 is granted. I would ask that the Minister of the Interior should have the statement furnished as soon as possible, so that I may be in a position to convey back some answer to them on my return from the House.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—My hon. friend, the Minister of the Interior, has no objection to the adoption of the motion with this alteration: "together with an approximate statement," instead of "statement." The hon. gentleman will observe that there is great difficulty in making out the accrued account, and for the present an approximate statement will answer.

The motion was carried.

DREDGING THE MIRAMICHI RIVER.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, for copies of instructions given to the officer in charge of the steam dredge employed clearing the bar at the entrance of the Miramichi River, with all reports from the officer in charge or parties under him, as to the amount of work done in that locality; stating the number of bars removed, and the character of the material; the depth to which the channel has been deepened, and the width thereof; the length of the cutting or dredging yet to be done; also stating the contemplated depth and width to which the Government propose to improve said channel; the number of days during which such vessel has been actually at work; also copies of the report or reports of the engineers or other officers, on which such improvements are based, and the depth of water which it is proposed to obtain; also the amount already expended on such work, with an estimate of the amount required to complete it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I have no objection to the information as far as we can furnish it.

The motion was carried.

EMPLOYÉS OF MONTREAL CUSTOM HOUSE.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved an address to His Excellency the Governor General for a Return of the names and ages of all employés of the Montreal Custom House who have been superannuated within the last two years, with causes of such superannuation; names of all persons who have been taken into the Public Service during the same period in connection with the Montreal Custom House, whether as permanent employés or as supernumeraries, the salary paid to each, and for what period, and showing whether they are still employed.

The motion was carried.

THE STEEL RAILS PURCHASE.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for a return of copies of all correspondence relating to the contracts entered into by the Government of Canada, or any Department thereof, for the purchase of Steel Rails in the year 1874, including correspondence, if any, with parties before the advertisement for tenders; copies of all the advertisements and names of newspapers in which they were published, with date of first insertion in each of them; all correspondence on the subject of further delay in the time of receiving tenders; copies of all advertisements postponing the time for receiving tenders, with the name of newspapers in which such notice was published; copies of all tenders received for the supply of steel rails with all correspondence in relation to them and names of persons by whom or through whom such tenders were submitted or made; all correspondence with any of the parties tendering, as to the quantity of rails to be supplied by them; copies of all contracts entered into and of all correspondence relating to them; copies of contracts for the transport of steel rails from Montreal to the different parts of the Dominion, with any changes made in such contracts and correspondence relating to such changes at the time the contracts were entered into, with a statement of the dates of payment of all moneys on such contracts, the present location of the rails and all charges for transport or storage of the same.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL.

The motion was carried.

PACIFIC RAILWAY AND TELEGRAPH.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for a statement showing the amount which the Government of Canada have agreed to pay or have already paid under each contract passed between the Government and any individual or company for the execution of any portion of the work on the Pacific Railway or the line of telegraph, or of any other work in relation to the said railway; also the total amount of such different sums.

The motion was carried.

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for a statement showing the amount which the Government of Canada have agreed to pay or have already paid under each contract passed between the Government and any individual or company for the execution of any portion of the works required for the enlargement of the St. Lawrence Canals, including the Welland and Lachine Canals, since the report of the last Commission appointed to examine the question, also the total amount of such different sums.

The motion was carried.

MAILS AT FATHER POINT.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, for a return of copies of the circulars sent to ship-building firms for the construction of a steam tender to transport mails from Father Point to the ocean steamers; all correspondence with any parties in relation to the same, and a statement of the names of all parties or firms to whom such circulars were sent with the tenders received; the date of the acceptance of Messrs. Cantins' tender, and a copy of the contract entered into with them.

The motion was carried.

MR. SHEA'S CLAIM.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved that the return of correspondence between the Government and the Hon. Ambrose Shea, laid on the table of this House, be referred to a Select Committee, consisting of Messrs. Caron, Workman, Blain, Brouse and the mover. The hon. gentleman said: I do not intend to detain the House further than to say that the object of this Committee is to examine into and report to the House, the claim which Hon. Mr. Shea prefers against the Government for moneys expended by him in procuring and forwarding labour to this Dominion at the time when the construction of the Intercolonial Railway was first undertaken. He claims that from an understanding with the Commissioners he was induced to spend a very considerable sum of money for the purpose of so cheapening the labour as to enable the contracts to be performed for anything like the sum for which they were originally undertaken. The object of the Committee is to hear what evidence can be produced in this relation, and to make a report to the House of the testimony to be given, with such suggestions as the Committee may have in their power to offer. The Hon. First Minister, I believe, has no objection to the Committee.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE--As the hon. gentleman has correctly stated, I have agreed to the appointment of this Committee. I did so with a great deal of reluctance, as it is one of those very dangerous Committees, which are entrusted to a certain extent with looking into personal grievances which involve the payment of money by the country. Occasions, however, arise now and then--there have been several since I entered Parliament--which seem to justify at least some investigation. In agreeing to this Committee I have not committed myself to any promise to abide by the report they may make, but from the evidence which the hon. gentleman has laid before me of what took place between members of the late Government and officials connected with the Intercolonial Railway, I think it is but justice to him to allow the enquiry to take place, the Government reserving the right to do with this matter as the public interests demand. I deem this explanation due to the House, because it is one of those extraordinary occasions on which Government may feel it requisite to depart from the exact routine observable in the disposition of public moneys.

The motion was carried.

DISMISSAL OF MR. COLLET.

Mr. FRECHETTE moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for all correspondence and documents relating to the dismissal of Mr. Collet as Postmaster of St. Henry, in the County of Lévis.

The motion was carried.

FISHING LICENSES IN ONTARIO.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK moved for an Order of the House for a return of all licenses to fish with hoop and trap nets issued during 1875 for the Province of Ontario; all petitions and communications to and with the Minister or the Department of Marine and Fisheries in favour of or opposing the use of such nets; and reports, &c., showing the effect of the system of fishing with hoop and trap nets on the quantity of fish in the waters where such nets are used.

The motion was carried.

IMPORTS OF GYPSUM.

Mr. GOUDGE--I beg to move that an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General for a return of all gypsum or plaster of paris imported from the United States into Canada, giving the ports or places whence imported, as also the ports in Canada where entered; the quantity entered in crude state; that entered as ground for purposes of manure; that entered as ground for purposes of manufacture; that entered as calcined plaster; also at what prices entered; the rate of duty upon each class, and the amount of duty collected from the same.

The motion was carried.

MILITIAMEN OF 1812.

Mr. ROULEAU—I beg to move that an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General for a statement showing the names, occupations and places of residence of the persons who made application as militiamen of 1812 for the pension granted to such militiamen, and who have not obtained such pension, with the reasons for the refusal thereof.

The motion was carried.

TORONTO HARBOUR.

Mr. MACDONALD (Toronto)—I beg to move that an Order of the House do issue for copies of instructions issued by the Public Works Department to any engineer regarding the survey of Toronto Harbour; also copies of all reports made to the Government, showing the present state of the Harbour or suggesting additional works to preserve it from destruction.

The motion was carried.

REMISSION OF DUTIES UPON TEA.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I beg to move for an Order of the House for a return of all remissions or refunds of duties on tea at the ports of Montreal and Halifax during the past year: specifying the duties of such remission or refunds; the parties to whom made; with all correspondence, minutes of Treasury Board, and Orders in Council thereon; also the names of parties from whom bonds were taken for the duties on such tea, in cases where the same were finally remitted.

The motion was carried.

Mr. GOUDGE

FISHERY LICENSES.

Mr. BABY—I move that an order of the House do issue for all papers and correspondence between the Department of Marine and Fisheries and L. J. Loranger, Esq., Fishery Overseer, or any other person, in relation to licenses granted or refused to parties wishing to fish in the lakes comprised within the limits of the Counties of Terrebonne, Montcalm, Joliette and Berthier; and of all instructions given to the said L. J. Loranger; and also for a statement showing the names of all persons to whom such licenses have been granted, and on what conditions they were so granted.

The motion was carried.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. SCHULTZ—I move that an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, for a statement showing imports during the fiscal year 1874-75 into the North-West Territories through ports on the Hudson and James Bay together with exports from the same; names of, and remuneration paid to persons employed by the Government at the said ports, together with instructions furnished them by the Government and reports made by them to the Custom's Department.

My object is to elicit information on a point of great interest to the Province of Manitoba—an indirect interest, perhaps, at present, since the boundary is being established between the North-West Territories and Ontario. The Provincial Legislature have shown their disposition to request, and the Dominion Government an inclination to grant the extension of the eastern boundary to the Province of Ontario; therefore all information which can be given without prejudice to the arbitration in progress I very much desire to obtain.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It will not be convenient to bring down some recent correspondence with the arbitrators appointed by the two Governments; and there is nothing else, I think, of any particular interest to the hon. gentleman or the district he particularly represents, in this connection, making it desirable to bring down incomplete correspondence. Former papers which were published, and the report of the Commissioners of the two Governments, are already before the public, and I think it would be better if the hon. gentleman should withdraw his motion for the present.

Mr. SCHULTZ—If the legal points in question are in print I would like to obtain a copy; though this matter is not included in the motion, I would like to have all the information possible.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—I understand that a very interesting report has been made by an eminent gentleman who has investigated the subject; it is in print.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—That report will be distributed.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—That is what I suggest—that it should be distributed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It will be. The motion was withdrawn.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY WORKS AT RIMOUSKI.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN—I move for an Order of the House to issue for copies of all correspondence which may have been had between private individuals or corporations and the Government of Canada in relation to the offices, workshops and works of the Intercolonial Railway at Rimouski.

The motion was carried.

The House adjourned at thirty-five minutes past Nine p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 3rd.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. RYMAL moved that the time for receiving petitions for Private Bills be extended ten days.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE thought it would be well there should be a thorough understanding in the House that while they consented to this motion there should be no further extension. If the new rules should be finally adopted by the House, they would make it impossible to have even this extension for the future.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD quite agreed with this view. At the same time the hands of Parliament could not be tied by a rule. He thought, however, the understanding after this extension should be that an exceptionally strong case must be made out before an appeal could be made to the House for the introduction of a Private Bill after the proper time had expired.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were introduced and read the first time:—

Mr. WOOD—To extend the time for the commencement and completion of the Great Western and Lake Ontario Shore Railway, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria)—To incorporate the Mutual Insurance Company of Canada.

Mr. WOOD—To extend the time for the commencement and completion of the Canada and Detroit River Bridge, and for other purposes.

Mr. MACDONALD (Toronto)—To authorize the shareholders of the Permanent Building and Savings Society to change the name of said Society.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON (on behalf of Mr. Workman)—To amend the Act incorporating the Credit Foncier du Bas Canada.

Also,—To amend the Act incorporating the Canada Shipping Co.

Also,—To incorporate the Trust Company of Canada.

Mr. SCATCHERD (on behalf of Mr. Thomson of Welland)—To amend the Act incorporating the Clifton Suspension Bridge Company.

Mr. YOUNG—To make certain amendments to the Charter of the Canada Landed Credit Company.

Mr. IRVING—Act respecting the capital of the Great Western Railway Company, and for the capitalization of certain charges and liabilities.

Mr. JETTE—To incorporate the Royal Albert Bridge Company.

Also,—To amend the Act incorporating the Canada Gas Lighting Company.

CASK MARKS.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD—I move that on Tuesday next the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to extend the Acts 36 Victoria Chapter 47, respecting Weights and Measures, and the Act 38 Victoria Chapter 36, respecting the marking of casks containing merchantable liquids with their respective capacity, and the Act 36 Victoria Chapter 48, to provide for the inspection of Gas and Gas Meters, to the Province of Prince Edward Island, including in such extension the powers given to the Governor in Council to make tariffs of fees for services performed in carrying the said Acts into effect; and to repeal such Acts of the Legislature of the said Province as may be inconsistent with the said Acts; Such extension to take place from and after a time to be named in the Bill to be introduced for the purposes aforesaid.

The motion was carried.

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD—I move that on Tuesday next the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions providing for the amendment of the Dominion Lands Act, with the object of transferring highways in the Province vested in the Dominion Administration, to the Local Government.

The motion was carried.

MANITOBA SUBSIDY.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I move the House will on Tuesday next resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following Resolution:

That under the circumstances appearing in the Minute of Council of 26th October, 1875, upon the Finances of Manitoba, laid before the House, it is expedient that Canada should pay as a temporary annual grant to that Province the sum of $26,746.96 yearly by semi-annual instalments, being the amount necessary in order to raise its revenue derivable from Canada to $90,000. Such grant to commence from the 1st day of July, 1875, and to continue until the close of the year 1881.

The motion was carried.

PRECEDENCE OF GOVERNMENT MEASURES.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that during the remainder of the Session Government measures shall have precedence on Thursdays.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I hope that my hon. friend will not press this motion at a period so early in the Session, as it would have the effect of depriving in a measure independent members, who take an interest in the general administration of affairs, from contributing their fair quota. If I remember aright, my hon. friend moved an adjournment at six o'clock last Monday, and I do not doubt that he had important matters to which he was compelled to give attention elsewhere; and on two other occasions during the Session, hon. members generally had pressing engagements, while the House did not sit on Wednesday. I think that the hon. gentleman will allow us another week or ten days at all events. Our Sessions are all short now-a-days, and the circumstances are not the same as before Confederation, when they continued for three months and sometimes three and one-quarter or four.

Mr. JETTE.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I will do this; I will not ask for the first Thursday after six o'clock. I am desirous of having some of our measures sent to the other branch of the Legislature as soon as possible; and this might have been accomplished last night, had not the hon. gentleman rather objected to proceeding with certain Bills. Our only desire is to facilitate the progress of business, and to endeavour to afford every possible accommodation to independent members having measures before the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—It so happens that this arrangement will not suit independent members, for I understand that after six o'clock notices of motion cannot be proceeded with while public Bills and orders are few in number, and there are a great many notices of motion.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I will then take the evening, and give up the afternoon.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—This reminds me of the story of the huntsman and the Indian; the former said—"I take the deer and you take the turkey; or I take the turkey and you take the deer." There is too much of the turkey about this proposition. If the whole of next Thursday were given us it would be better.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Then I will not press for the first Thursday but take the second.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—We have all but one object—to despatch business as quickly as possible. I regret that the Government did not introduce three or four Bills in the Upper House, as the latter might have thus been kept out of mischief, for it is said that Satan finds mischief for idle hands to do.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I shall change the motion to read Thursday after next.

The motion, as altered, was carried.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—With regard to the period of the year for making returns, in connection with the Bill making provision for the collection and registration of criminal statistics in Canada, I feel that the time I suggested on the occasion of its introduction would be the most convenient on the whole. The year proposed is the natural year, and two months from the end of this period, the returns would be brought in, necessitating the postponement of their presentation to the House until the Session in the following year. Apart from this circumstance, the year adopted in this relation in the largest Province of the Dominion terminates on the 30th of September, and I have concluded to propose to the House the alteration of the Bill to this effect. With that view, I move that it be not now read the third time, but that the House go into Committee to make the necessary change.

The motion being carried, the House went into Committee of the Whole on the Bill, Mr. Scatcherd in the Chair.

The Committee rose and reported, and the Bill as amended was read the third time and passed.

Debate on the Budget.

The adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Cartwright, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply," was then resumed.

Mr. YOUNG—The discussion, Mr. Speaker, of the question of the Budget and the financial position of the country—

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I rise to a point of order. The motion of the Hon.

Finance Minister was met by an amendment that you do not now leave the Chair. That amendment, after a full discussion, has been negatived, and I hold that under the rules of the House the motion must now be put—that no further debate can take place on the original motion.

Mr. SPEAKER—The House has not resolved that I do now leave the Chair. That question is still before the House, and hon. gentlemen who have not yet spoken on this question are in order.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Let me suggest the point, Mr. Speaker. The motion that you do not now leave the Chair has been negatived. But this question is a peculiar one. In any other case a motion being made, and an amendment moved and negatived, it is competent to make any other motion; but it is not competent now to make any other motion. The question has been decided by the House in the negative. It is not competent for any other motion to be made, and consequently the effect of that motion is that you do now leave the Chair. I do not want, however, to demur to the decision.

Mr. SPEAKER—I am satisfied that the House did not pass a certain amendment, but it has not yet resolved that I leave the Chair. In the English practice, questions are put in a very different way indeed, and in a very much more convenient form than here. After it has been resolved that these words stand part of the question, no further debate or action of the House can be permitted, except by a direct vote on the question. Nevertheless, hon. members are permitted to speak on almost every relevant subject. I think the question that I now leave the Chair is open to debate, and hon. members who have not already spoken on that question have the right to speak.

Mr. YOUNG—The discussion upon the Budget and the financial position of the country generally has wandered away from that topic to the question of Free Trade and Protection as our fiscal policy. Having paid some little attention to that question, and feeling that it is assuming a position of great importance throughout Canada and has a direct leaning on its future prosperity, I desire to give expression to certain conclusions that I have arrived at with regard to it.

The difficulty of discussing the question in this House is that we have no positive definition of what gentlemen mean by free trade and protection. We have certain gentlemen rising, like my hon. friend for North Norfolk, in his clever speech the other day, and arguing in favour of protection, yet closing with expressing their belief that 17½ per cent. duty was sufficient protection under the present circumstances of the country. Again, we have other gentlemen who call themselves Free Traders who reached the conclusion that they would not object to having even 20 per cent. put on certain classes of articles. Therefore one difficulty in discussing this subject on the floor of Parliament is that gentlemen do not start from the same point—that we have not the definition of what is really meant by those two principles.

The writings of such men as Smith, Ricardo, and Mills—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD--Smith never saw a steam engine.

Mr. YOUNG—That may be true. I say that the writings of those gentlemen have been generally accepted throughout the world—that, provided all countries would adopt freedom of trade, the system is best adapted to promote the wealth of a country. For my part I hold that, however true those principles may be in themselves, you cannot apply them to all countries without taking into consideration the geographical, political and other circumstances of the particular country to which they are about to be applied. On this question, as I trust on most other questions, I am no theorist. I prefer to look at it from a practical point of view; and regarding the position of Canada, situated as we are, alongside the United States, and geographically and politically, to a certain extent, connected with that country, I think that the best fiscal policy for the Dominion is neither absolute free trade nor absolute protection. So far as free-trade, pure and simple, is concerned, the engagements of the country, the demands of the public credit render such a policy as that impossible; and

Mr. YOUNG.

I am prepared to say, for one, after such consideration as I have been able to give this matter, that I do not believe free-trade, pure and simple, would be desirable. On the other hand, I take the ground, and hold it most strongly, that a policy of absolute protection—of high protective duties—would inflict the most fatal blow on our interests that could be inflicted.

An Hon. Member—No one asks for that.

Mr. YOUNG—Wait until I come to that point—I will refer to it. The Hon. Minister of Finance, in the exceedingly able speech he made in introducing the Budget, exhibited to us the exact financial position of the country at the present moment. He told us that next year he could not calculate on a revenue of more than about $23,000,000; whereas last year our expenditure was close upon $24,000,000. It therefore became necessary that some action should be taken by the Government to equalize the revenue and expenditure, for anybody can see that a deficit under present circumstances would be a most unfortunate thing.

After full consideration of this question, the Government arrived at the conclusion that the true course for them to take in the interests of the whole country was to retrench the public expenditure and reduce the amount that would have to be raised. They might have increased taxation, but they decided that the true solution of the matter was to enter on a system of economy. The leader of the Opposition said he was surprised, and though the hon. member for Cumberland did not say so, it was apparent he felt surprised at the policy of the Government, and had come to the House prepared to censure them for again increasing taxation and inserting the thin end of the protection wedge. When I arrived here my impression was that an increase of taxation would be necessary, and I was prepared to say, looking at the importance of our manufacturing interests and the depression which undoubtedly exists among them, to approve of the principle on which our Governments have acted for the past twenty years being carried out, and that, in adjusting the tariff, incidental protection should be given to our manufactures. I was prepared even to go a little farther. I would not have objected to a proposition to make a small increase, say two and a half per cent. on those classes of exchangeable manufactures which pass between Canada and the United States, although I admit there were great difficulties in the way of carrying out such a policy. But when it is now openly avowed that we should depart from the principle of incidental protection, and we are asked to tax the whole community for the benefit of a few, the question assumes a different shape, and one dangerous to the best interests of the country.

Mr. WOOD—Nobody asks that in the House.

Mr. YOUNG—I will give my hon. friend a little light on that point just now. We had a short time ago a meeting of manufacturers in Toronto. I believe my hon. friends from Hamilton were present, and we know a large portion of that meeting advocated the adoption of a retaliatory policy against the United States. It might be injurious to say all that might be urged on that point, and therefore I shall not do so. But if a retaliatory policy were taken up in the same spirit in the United States, a most disastrous blow might be inflicted upon our agricultural interests.

I hold here a speech delivered by Mr. Adam Brown, of Hamilton, a gentleman for whom I have personally very great respect. He has taken a very prominent part in this agitation, and may be said to be the mouthpiece of the Protectionists. He said at the meeting of the Dominion Board of Trade:—"Let us seek to carry out a national policy here, which will make our country a secure place for capitalists; not a policy to be tinkered with every day. I abominate the word 'incidental.' It may be protection of a sort—on to-day and off to-morrow." It is very clear, from the fact that this question is assuming a new phase, that many are now prepared to go beyond the reasonable encouragement of a revenue tariff, and are bent on forcing on the country the suicidal protective policy of the United States—are prepared, in fact, to go the whole hog, bristles and all. Mr. Brown objected very strongly two years before to any change being made in the sugar duties, so it may be said he wishes us to swallow the policy of the United States, unsweetened even by a little home-made sugar. Before I leave the point with regard to economy, allow me to say I am not surprised that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition expressed astonishment at the action of the Government. I was surprised myself. I have watched political affairs in this country closely since 1854, when the right hon. gentleman went into power, and this is the first time I have known a single Administration honestly endeavour to carry out a policy of retrenchment in every branch of the public service. I ask any hon. gentlemen to point to a single instance in which it was before attempted to be done. It is impossible to do it. From Confederation till these gentlemen went out of power, their course was a continual round of extravagance. They began with an expenditure, for the ordinary administration of affairs, of $13,000,000, and ended during their last year with an outlay of nearly $24,000,000, having that year increased it over $4,000,000. No wonder that they were surprised to find the Government honestly endeavouring to economize the expenses of the country.

Up to revenue requirements, I for one have no objection to incidental encouragement to our manufactures, but when we are asked to enter upon protection for protection's sake, when we are asked to set aside the policy under which Canada has achieved the proud position in which she stands to-day, and to follow the course which had reduced the United States to a state of chronic commercial crisis, we are asked to do that which would put us not only in antagonism to the commercial policy of the Empire, but result in most serious consequences. If we adopt the high protective system of that country—and that is where we would undoubtedly be landed if we adopted the principle—we will take a course which, in my humble opinion, will be injurious to every great interest in this country. We have in Canada six great interests—the lumbering, importing, shipping, farming, manufacturing and trading, in which I include all traders. The lumber, importing and trading interests could not possibly be benefited by a protective policy, and when through its operation our shipbuilders were compelled to pay more for the iron, steel, copper and cordage which go into their vessels, instead of being the third or fourth maritime power in the world, we would fall to the ninth or tenth. Look at the effect it would have on the agricultural interest of this country. Say what we may, there can be no doubt that interest is the real foundation of Canada's prosperity. The effect of a policy like this would be that the farmer would have to pay more for every implement he uses, more for all the clothing he and his family require, and more in the shape of taxation. It would reduce the value of every bushel of grain, every animal, every pound of butter and cheese and every dozen of eggs the farmer raised. (Hear, hear.) Hon. gentlemen may say "hear, hear," but I refer them to the history and experience of the United States to prove the position I take in this matter. In many parts of that country, to-day, farmers are unable to make any profit out of their land, because under a system of legalized robbery their money has been legislated into the pockets of other classes of the community. An illustration of this is furnished by Hon. David Wells, of the United States, a gentleman who is one of the highest authorities in the world on this question. I believe I am correct in stating he went into the Treasury Department of the United States a Protectionist, and from the facts he learned there came to the conclusion that as a commercial policy protection was ruinous. In consequence of the large amount of duty on salt in the United States, imposed for the benefit of the Onondaga Company in New York State, Mr. Wells shows that the western farmer has to give two bushels of spring wheat to buy one barrel of salt; whereas, if there had been no duty, or only a moderate one, he could have bought that barrel of salt for one bushel of wheat. The farmer was therefore forced to give one bushel of wheat as a present to the salt maker. So it is with nearly every article the farmer consumes, and I am prepared to show if we in this country adopt that principle we cannot help going further, and you will find that many of the farmers of Canada will be scarcely able to make more than a bare subsistence. If they are rendered less prosperous, if their purchasing power be decreased, the markets for our manufactures will be largely destroyed—it will be found we have destroyed the goose that lays the golden eggs.

Mr. Young.

Now, Sir, I approach the point in my argument where I propose to consider the effect of a high protective policy, such as exists in the United States, upon the manufacturing interests of this country; and it is my opinion, and has been for many years, founded upon my observation and experience, that no policy could be devised which would be in the end more fatal to these interests generally than that I have mentioned.

My hon. friend from Hamilton alluded the other day to the fact, that an important manufacturing interest existed in my own town and neighbourhood, and I am proud to say that Galt has more manufactures for its size than probably any other town in the Dominion; and further, that my Riding, as is shown by the statistics contained in the late census, turned out more manufactures than any other Riding in the Dominion with the exception of those embracing large cities. I shall not retort with respect to certain remarks made by the senior member for Hamilton in the course of his speech, but I wish to say to the hon. gentleman I am never afraid, here or elsewhere, to state my views on this or any other question; and if the time should ever come when I am unable on the floor of this House to advocate what my judgment and conscience assure me is right and for the good of Canada, I shall cease to have any desire to remain in public life.

I would refer for a moment to the benefits conferred by manufactures on a country. Some hon. gentlemen believe that manufactures of any class, and whether profitable in themselves or not, must be a benefit to the community. I dissent from that opinion. I consider that they are an advantage—as is the case with any other interest—only when they can be carried on with profit, and show a surplus between revenue and expenditure. I go further, and assert that if any branch of industry cannot be conducted in Canada with the incidental protection of a revenue tariff, one of two things is perfectly clear; either we do not possess the natural facilities necessary to its success, or the individuals engaged in that department of trade have not the requisite capital and skill. If the former be true, no one will gain by the existence of such an industry; and if the latter is correct—and we know that this is the case in many instances to-day—it is too much to tax the whole community in order that incompetent persons may be kept in an unprofitable calling. I regret, as much as any one, that our manufactures should be in such a depressed condition as they are at present, but other interests occupy a similar position—such as the mercantile and lumbering interests, &c. I maintain, however, that taking the last ten or twelve years into consideration, our manufactures have developed as rapidly and as largely, and have been as successful as any other great interest in this country. All manufacturers do not, by any means, hold that a high protective tariff would be beneficial to their interests; a large proportion have never demanded more than reasonable encouragement, and I must say that I have been extremely surprised to find that many of the men who have come to this House to insist the most vehemently upon the adoption of the American system, have been citizens of Montreal who have, during the last ten or fifteen years, made large fortunes. What would be the effect if the advice of these gentlemen were followed? In a very few years we would have colossal establishments built up in Montreal and neighbourhood, which would crush out by their immense competition the smaller manufactures in Ontario and other sections of the country. This has been largely the result in the United States, and it would be the same here.

If we are to adopt a high protective system, we cannot confine it to particular industries: we must extend it to all; and in that case everybody would be exactly in the position they previously occupied.

It is quite clear, for instance, that the iron industry must come under this head, and I hold that the arguments in favour of such a course are stronger with regard to this interest than with reference to many others. The coal interest must also be protected under such circumstances; in a very short time our taxes would be increased, working men could no longer live on their present wages; and in a very few years our manufacturers would find that there would be such an increase in the cost of production that they would be far less capable of competing with the manufacturers of Great Britain and the United States than they are at the present time under a revenue tariff. If the principle be once adopted—that the Government must be responsible for the success of certain industries—then, I contend, as soon as they again become unprosperous, further taxation would have to be imposed.

The hon. members for Hamilton have said that nobody demands extreme protection, and have admitted that such a policy has been elsewhere most disastrous; but I maintain that when we depart from a revenue tariff and adopt protection as the principle of our fiscal legislation, we will have started upon an inclined plane, and cannot logically arrest our course short of absolute prohibition. In a short time, when further depression occurred, more protection would be demanded, and the principle being admitted, the demand could not be resisted. I accordingly believe that such a policy in the end would be disastrous to our manufacturers themselves. If prohibitory duties were adopted, would they restore prosperity to many of our manufactures now depressed? I answer No! for the very simple reason that their want of prosperity is to-day due to over-production within our own country. I take as an instance the boot and shoe trade. I know that the annual production in this article, in Montreal alone, is estimated at over ten millions of dollars; and in the census of 1871, the production of the whole Dominion was estimated to exceed in value sixteen millions; while the boots and shoes imported last year into every Province were only worth $241,000. Under these circumstances, does any one believe that a new protective duty would render this industry prosperous? Not at all; because not foreign competition, but over-production, is the cause of the existing depression. The same statement holds good with regard to the coarse woollens we produce. I admit that if we adopted a policy generally of the kind mentioned, industries, in connection with which we do not supply our own market, might be stimulated for a time; but in the course of four or five years undue profits would attract so much capital and labour into these branches of trade, that over-production would ensue, our limited market would be speedily glutted, and we would have ten-fold more depression than exists at the present time. This is the case at present with reference to the lumbering interest. For a number of years the persons engaged in this business realized extraordinary profits, inducing many others who were ignorant of its workings to enter into it, and the market became completely overstocked. So it would be with other industries in the course of a few years if a high protective policy were adopted. Instead of American and British manufacturers occasionally making of Canada a slaughter market, we would then have wholesale slaughtering in our own country and at our own doors. In the case of the United States, the action of such a policy requires a longer period to produce such results. Their own market including more than forty millions of people. But in Canada, having only four millions of population, the results would appear more speedily; and my firm conviction is that such a system would in the end inflict a serious blow upon the interests of our manufacturers themselves. If a general system of protection ever could have produced good results, it would have done so in the United States; but I hold that never since that country has existed has its manufacturing industries been reduced to a lower position than is the case to-day. In this relation I would read a brief extract from a speech made by Mr. Wells at the Cobden Club Dinner in England, two years ago. He said: "Thus the total value of the exports of the United States increased in the twelve years, from 1860 to 1872 inclusive, $176,000,000, or from $373,000,000 to $549,000,000; but of this increase, all but about $6,000,000 is referable to the following six items: — Bread-stuffs, coin and bullion, provisions, leaf tobacco, petroleum and lumber products, three-fourths of the value of which represent the gifts of God, and the other one-fourth, labour of the most unskilled and poorest-paid description. And of the other six millions increase of exports, which might be supposed to represent the products of high wages and skilled industry, it is only sufficient to say that fully one-fourth stands to the credit of the single article of sewing machines. During this period of protective paper-money influence, moreover, the flag of the American commercial marine has been almost swept from the ocean, as is shown by the fact that while in 1860 seventy-one per cent. of the total foreign trade of the United States was carried in American bottoms, in 1868 the proportion had fallen to forty-four per cent. and for 1873 will not be in excess of twenty-eight per cent."

Mr. Young.

So, Sir, we have a statement which no one can deny, that this policy has largely destroyed the foreign trade of the United States, and has protected their splendid mercantile marine almost entirely off the face of the ocean.

But we need not confine ourselves to Mr. Wells, and I hope the house will pardon me for reading another short extract which bears directly upon this point—that is, the effect of such a system upon manufacturers themselves. If it could be shown that by such a system as has been spoken of we could largely increase the prosperity of our manufacturers and of the people of Canada generally, everybody would agree to it at once; but the fact is that the ultimate result would be injurious to all classes. What I propose reading is an extract from that very able paper referred to by the Hon. Minister of Finance in his Budget Speech. In another article recently published, the Chicago Tribune, one of the most respectable and clever papers to be found on this continent, the writer traces the results of this protective system upon manufacturers in the following language:—

"The Canadians have had an opportunity to observe the workings of protection in this country, and, despite the melancholy and pitiable story, some of them have now got hold of the delusion and are pressing its adoption. Just as the American manufacturers, as a class, are about demanding relief from the weight of protection, the Canadians are demanding that the load be placed on them. Had it been given, there would, of course, have been a profit on the goods on hand to the extent of the increase of tax, less the decline in consumption. In the meantime, there would have been a general advance along the whole line of items entering into the list of production equal to the increased tariff. Labor, the cost of machinery, raw material, rents, commissions, and the innumerable list of expenses which go to make up the cost of production, would be increased, so that the goods produced after the tariff would leave the producer no more margin of profit under the protection than he had before the protection was voted him, and he would find that consumption had declined proportionately with the increase of prices. What then? Why, there must be a further increase of the tariff, more protection, in order to enable the producers to sell their second crop. The same condition of things would prevail after the second advance in the price of goods; all Canada would be on a strike for increase of wages, and the cost of everything would go up until the second vote of protection would utterly fail to cover the cost of production, and even Yankee goods would be selling cheaper in Canada than they would be produced for in any part of the Dominion. A further increase of protection would become a necessity, and in time a fourth, fifth, sixth and even a seventh increase would be required to prevent Canadian manufactures from stopping. By this time the prices of everything in Canada would become appalling; on many things the tax would of necessity range from 90 to 120 per cent, on others 70 to 90, and thus down to 40 per cent. Consumption would fall off from one-fourth to one-half, and in some lines of goods production would cease. The capacity to produce would exceed the demand, and, in order to equalize production and consumption, the mills, furnaces, shops and mines would have to close for two days in a week; then one week in four; then one month in three; then two and three months at a time; and then only be worked spasmodically. Then the protected "labour" of Canada, instead of continuous employment, would have but one day's work of four, and be months at a time without a dollar of wages; the savings in the banks would be consumed by the unemployed; idleness, with its attendant consequences, would take the place of industry and thrift; poverty, and want, and destitution would recruit the alms houses, the hospitals, and the brothels; and the more adventurous and daring would perambulate the country enforcing support as tramps. We have in no way drawn upon the imagination. We have given but a faint sketch of the actual facts as they have existed and now exist in this country."

These are the words of one of the ablest and most respectable papers in the United States; and I ask you if the picture the writer draws of the manufacturing interests of the United States under protection is not one to make our manufacturers recoil from absolute protection, and be content with such protection as they receive under a revenue tariff?

The member for North Norfolk admitted that protection has destroyed the foreign trade and ocean shipping of the United States, but he requested us to look at their domestic trade. Well, that trade is large, but I maintain that it would have been much larger if the Americans had a larger foreign and shipping trade. And if any more powerful argument is wanted to show the injurious effects of protection on the Americans, it is to be found in the fact that that great country, with its great national resources and abundance of raw material, is unable in most branches of manufacture to export to other countries. Before I conclude my desultory remarks, I desire to refer to one other point—that is the effect of a high protective tariff upon the mechanics and workingmen. I advert to this more particularly because my hon. friend from Montreal Centre has drawn a sad picture of the the number of men out of employment in that city. In the United States to-day, taking the relative amount of population into consideration, you will find far more distress and more men out of employment than in this country; and I am prepared to show conclusively to this House, from statistics that cannot be gainsaid, that our mechanics and workingmen will get a better result from their labour under the system of incidental protection we have, than their fellows do across the lines under the American system. I hold in my hand evidence to support that view—a statement which was made by Mr. Moore, a gentleman connected with the American Government, at the request of the Hon. Mr. Wells, showing the result of the labour of a certain number of mechanics in the United States, in 1873, compared with what the labour of those men would purchase under the moderate system in vogue in 1860.

The first table shows the annual consumption of 12 commodities by a family consisting of two adults and two children, and the cost of the same in 1860 and 1873, respectively, in the city of New York. The commodities taken to make the comparison are fresh beef, mutton, corned beef, butter, rice, milk, coffee, tea, sugar, molasses, coal and rent. What is the result? In 1860 this family could have lived in New York city and bought a certain number of these articles for $181, but in 1873 to purchase the very same articles would cost $347; there had been an increase in the price of not less than 92 per cent. during the space of thirteen years.

The second table shows the relative wages of eight leading industries in 1860 and 1873. He has taken for the purpose the cabinet-maker, cooper, carpenter, painter, shoemaker, tailor, tanner and tinsmith. In 1860 the labour of these eight men for one day, amounted to $13.58; in 1873 to $21.75—an increase of only 60 per cent.

The third table shows the number of days these men would have to work to purchase the commodities referred to in 1860 as compared with 1873. The cabinet maker in 1860 would have to labour 103 days 9¼ hours; in 1873, under the higher wages, 126 days 2 hours; the cooper in 1860, 110 days 2 hours, in 1873, 126 days 2 hours. I shall not quote the whole, but give the general result, which is that to purchase the aggregate amount of these necessaries of life this family would consume in 1860 under a moderate tariff these eight men would have to work 859 days 5 hours, but in 1873 with higher wages, under their high protective tariff, they would have to work 1,027 days 3½ hours. While the cost of the 12 articles had increased to 92 per cent. in 1873, the increase in the result of labour was only 60 per cent.

Mr. YOUNG.

I desire to urge these facts upon the mechanics and labouring men of this country. We have springing up in our large cities and towns a most intelligent class of operatives, and I commend these statistics to their consideration. They prove that while under a protective tariff they might receive higher wages, the result of their labour would be less than under the present system. My opinion is, and has been for a long time, that the true policy for us is the one our Government has been pursuing for at least 25 years—that is, a revenue tariff so framed as incidentally to encourage manufactures; and it is my firm opinion, after a full consideration of this matter, and looking at it I trust as a true friend of the manufacturers, that in five years after the adoption of a high protective tariff every great industry in Canada would be injuriously affected.

Our lumbermen would find their profits decreased by the increased cost of production. Our importers would be injured because our foreign trade would not increase if it did not absolutely decline. So far as our traders in the town and villages are concerned, they would find their expenses so increased that they would be unable to make as good profits as they do at the present time. It would strike a fatal blow at our agricultural interests. Our ship-owners would find the cost of the materials entering into their vessels increased, and Canada would fall, as I have already said, from the third or fourth to the ninth or tenth maritime power. Even the manufacturers, if we adopt the high protective system of the United States, would find that while we might build up a few colossal establishments, the greater number of them would, in consequence of over-production in a limited market, find themselves in a worse condition than under present circumstances. I do not believe we can become a great manufacturing people, or Canada ever attain a strong and powerful position, if we undertake to build a high tariff wall around the country and practically declare non-intercourse with the world. What our manufacturers want is a larger market, and the only way to secure that is by keeping for Canada the proud distinction of being one of the cheapest countries in the civilized world to live in. We want to attract population to fill up our waste lands, to settle our magnificent North-West Territories with millions of industrious and prosperous people. I have no objection to every legitimate encouragement being given to the manufacturers. The true way to protect them is to give them the raw materials at the lowest possible cost. I desire that they should have low taxes and cheap living—that they should be able to produce their manufactures cheaply. If we pursue this policy, by the end of the present century I hope we will be manufacturing not only for nine or ten millions of Canadians, but even sending some of our goods to the West Indies, South America and many other countries.

I will only add, in conclusion, that what I have endeavoured to point out, however feebly, is, in my opinion, the only true national policy for Canada, the only one which is fair and just to all classes—the one which will most rapidly increase the national wealth—and the only one which will make us a great manufacturing as we are already a great agricultural and maritime people.

Mr. BUNSTER—The hon. Leader of the Government said he expected to hear from British Columbia on this occasion. Well, she does not give a silent vote on important questions. In my opinion, for years back Canada has not been legislating in her own interest, but rather in the interest of the neighboring Republic. We have not taken into consideration the advantages that the United States have gained under a high protective tariff.

Will any hon. gentleman tell me they have not thriven under that tariff? We find the goods which they have been exporting and are now sending to other countries are still protected. We find them competing with British manufacturers in the markets of the world, and even in England herself. Then it is high time that we should protect our own industries and keep our people at home.

The manufacturers say the agriculturists do not want protection. I deny that. It is as much needed for one class as the other, and they should join hands to obtain it. I do not believe in class legislation. The neighbouring Republic has a population of 40,000,000, while we have only some 4,000,000.

There has been too much politics, too much party strife in the Dominion for the good of the nation; our great and magnificent interests have been totally neglected, including the grand project of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Had that enterprise been followed up in a proper national spirit, instead of allowing politics to interfere with it, if the Government of the day had taken hold of it in the interests of the Dominion, we would not now see the depression that prevails throughout Canada. On the Pacific coast we have not felt this depression yet, but we certainly have felt keen disappointment at the delay in building the Railway and at the manner in which the Government have run down the project and deteriorated their own credit in the London market, which is banker for the world. Had the Pacific Railway been pushed forward as it should have been, instead of finding the people discontented and applying to the Mayor of Montreal for work or bread, there would have been plenty of work for all who were willing to be employed. When the Hon. Finance Minister in his speech tells us that he has a surplus of eleven millions of dollars on hand, and not a blow struck on the Pacific Railway, it is neither creditable to himself nor to the country when it is known that he borrowed the money on the strength of building the railway across the continent. British Columbia is accused of being unreasonable, but I defy the hon. members of this House to prove that she is unreasonable. She has never yet asked for better terms as other Provinces have done; all she asks is for the terms she was guaranteed when she entered the Union. But the Government are not satisfied with breaking these terms, they must run down the credit and resources of the country, which only requires to be developed to prove that it is as fine a Province as Ontario or Quebec. It is no inducement for immigrants to come in and settle with us, to run down our Province. If the Government do not intend to carry out their promise, we in British Columbia can afford to bide our time. Four or five years have passed since Confederation, and little or nothing has yet been done, except surveys, and the sending out of a few rails, which are now lying rusty and unemployed. The money borrowed by the Hon. Finance Minister, although obtained to build the Pacific Railway, is being employed in improving the Ontario Canals. It was not for that British Columbia came into the Confederation. I say any Government who leave politics out of the question can see in $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land resources enough to build the Pacific Railway without increasing the taxation of the people one dollar. If the railway were built, in place of having a population of four millions, as we now have, in four years we would have six millions, and in ten years we will have a population of twenty millions. Then the manufacturers will not have to come to this House crying for protection, as they will have market enough for what they will have to sell. We have an example of railway enterprise in the United States, when two young men obtained stock enough to build the Union Pacific after the old heads on Wall street had scouted the idea as a wild enterprise. Canadians, too, will have to rely on the young heads to build our Pacific Railway, as the old ones do not appear to have sufficient faith in the future of the country.

Mr. MACDOUGALL (Elgin)—The question, as I understand it from my limited experience in Parliament, is one that resolves itself into whether there shall be a change in the fiscal policy of the Government or not; and I think the House will pardon me as a young member for undertaking to occupy a portion of their time in expressing an opinion on it. The subject of the fiscal policy is one in which every member of this House has an interest. From the year 1866 to 1874 there was a fiscal policy adopted under which the country prospered in a great degree. The general ad valorem duty was 15 per cent., and during that time gentlemen on the Opposition benches will agree with me that the country was abundantly prosperous; that we were not only able to meet our engagements, but to enter into new ones; and that the policy was one of a most successful character. In 1874 there was a slight change, not a change in the basis of the policy which had governed the country, but an increase in the import duties for the purpose of meeting public engagements. Those who were charged with the administration of the affairs of the country previous to that time had undertaken large public works; they had undertaken engagements which they considered the country had ability to meet. But it was found, when the gentlemen who now occupy the Treasury Benches assumed power, that it was necessary to increase the duties in order to meet these engagements. In the increase of these duties protection was afforded to a certain extent to the manufactures of the country. Hard times, which periodically visit all nations, and which cannot be averted by any legislation, came to Canada, and the Government should not be held responsible for it. The hard times came upon us, and I suppose it is considered proper for any party that may be in opposition to make as much as possible of them to bring disrepute upon the Government of the day and make them unpopular. But let us consider the causes that have brought about this depression. We are closely connected with the trade of the United States, in consequence of being such near neighbours, and we are to a certain extent affected by the condition of their trade. We sell and buy there, and the depressed condition of their trade, in my judgment, is one of the causes that now affects us. In 1873 the United States experienced for the first time a considerable degree of financial depression. Hard times broke on them. They were purchasing lumber in Western Ontario, but they were obliged to retreat and cut down their purchases. The consequence was that the market, as far as lumber was concerned, was reduced. Then there was another reason. In Ontario, particularly, for a number of years there was a considerable amount of public works carried on, which caused the expenditure of a large amount of money. Enterprises of all kinds were stimulated, and men who were engaged in business, feeling the effect of the good times, became more reckless in their financial engagements, so that when this depression occurred on the other side of the water times became more stringent here, general depression and tightness ensued, and capitalists buttoned their purses and refused to invest their money, fearing they might lose it.

Mr. BUNSTER

I believe that there is an immense amount of money in this country at present locked up in the banks or the purses of individuals, who would invest it, if they thought they could do so with safety, and would be certain of return. A great degree of substantial wealth exists amongst us, and the condition of affairs cannot be compared with the state of things in 1857-S. Then this wealth had no existence, at least comparatively speaking. Inflation had prevailed to a great degree; when the collapse came the country was unsound, and the usual result followed. This is not the case to-day; and I can speak with considerable confidence in this regard. At this particular juncture, however, it is asked that the fiscal policy—under which we have greatly prospered, undertaking important public works, and making extensive engagements, which I am happy to say have been met promptly and punctually—should be entirely changed, and another adopted in its stead. This reminds me of a remark made by the late President of the United States: "It is unwise for a man while crossing a river to swap horses." It is conceded on both sides of the House that these hard times will be of short duration, and I think that under these circumstances it would be unwise to change our fiscal policy merely to meet a temporary emergency. If increased duties were adopted on many articles, would a larger demand be created? This is not pretended, and it is known that only a certain number of customers for these articles exists in this country, and that only a certain quantity can be manufactured with profit.

I am prepared to say that I entirely agree with my hon. friend from South Waterloo—who uttered a truly patriotic sentiment, which I believe both sides of the House will endorse—when he said that if our public engagements required increased taxation, the people of this country would be ready to meet it; but I understand from the tenor of the Speech from the Throne, and the able speech of the Finance Minister, that this is not necessary. I will boldly make this statement, based not upon my own knowledge, but upon the speeches of hon. members in this relation—no two of the hon. gentlemen who advocated increased protection can agree in detail upon a re-adjustment of the tariff, such as would be acceptable to the entire body of Protectionists. They tell us that our manufacturing industries are languishing, that our factories are being closed; that this is due to the fact that the duties are not advanced, and that they only require 2, 2½ or 3 per cent. of increase; but I put it to you, Sir, and to this House, if an advance to this extent were only made, would it be sufficient to make manufacturing lucrative and profitable?

An Hon. Member—Yes!

Mr. MACDOUGALL --- I do not think so. The statement is either incorrect, or if not, the conclusion drawn must naturally be as I have indicated. Besides, if the tariff be arranged as these Protectionists desire, the revenue will be necessarily reduced; and as we learn from the Finance Minister that a certain sum must be raised to meet financial exigencies, either increased duties must be levied on articles imported into this country, or direct taxation must follow. I do not believe that the latter system would be acceptable to the people of this country. The hon. member for Montreal Centre the other night made an eloquent and pathetic appeal to this House, picturing the distress which exists in Montreal, but I ask whether our fiscal policy is to be changed on account of local causes? If this precedent were adopted, changes would be yearly required; and if our feelings were to carry us away in this relation, this would be the case after such an appeal as has been addressed to this House; but where would such a system of legislation stop? It would indeed be singularly and notably dangerous to the general welfare of the community at large.

Some of the hon. gentlemen have said we should treat a matter of that kind by special legislation. I am not prepared to say how far that principle should be carried, but I think if I had to choose between the two I should rather give special assistance than change the fiscal policy of the country for a purely local difficulty. We know it as a fact, and I challenge contradiction, that the hard times experienced in 1875 were during the months of June and July; and we are told that the manufactories in Montreal have only recently closed. It is a singular coincidence that some of them closed just at the time of the opening of this Parliament, when we were beginning to tide over the trouble; and that we hear of those great difficulties just before the Finance Minister comes down to this House with his policy. Able men than myself at drawing conclusions will address the House this evening, and I will leave it to them to explain the riddle why those manufacturing establishments closed just before the assembling of Parliament.

With regard to the subject of protection, I shall undertake to say a few words. It has been discussed here already and will, doubtless, be discussed again. It has occupied the best minds of England, France, the United States, and also of this country. I am not going to lecture the House upon a subject they understand better than I do, but I shall take the liberty to say that this protection theory is the natural outcome of the balance of trade theory, which, as hon. members know, was thoroughly exploded some years ago. What is protection? It is really the creation of monopolies. And what is this House asked to do? The hon. member for Montreal Centre appealed to the Leader of the Opposition to declare whether he would change the course pursued in Canada for many years. The policy of the right hon. member for Kingston was a revenue policy. Whatever he may have said at his dinners we will excuse. When the member for Montreal Centre made that appeal, I began to think it was scarcely possible under the circumstances the member for Kingston could depart from the course pursued and, so to speak, "write down" what he had done in times past. The member for Montreal Centre asked us to adopt a policy which would have the effect of building up a monopoly to benefit certain manufacturing establishments of Montreal, that the country should be taxed in order that certain persons in that city should be able to carry on their business in a profitable way, and as a consideration for being taxed the people should have the satisfaction of knowing that such a policy had made certain persons in Montreal wealthy.

Mr. MACDOUGALL.

It being Six o'clock, the House took recess, Mr. Macdougall having the floor.

AFTER RECESS.

The following Bills were read the second time:—

To incorporate the Canada Fire and Marine Insurance Co.

To authorize the shareholders of the Union Permanent Building and Savings' Society, to change the name of said Society.

To further amend the St. Lawrence & Ottawa Railway Act.

The Budget.

Mr. MACDOUGALL resumed his speech. He said:—When I was closing my remarks at six o'clock, I was referring to protection and the effect it was likely to produce. I do not propose to discuss that branch of the subject further. During this debate I have heard several hon. members refer to the prosperity of France as an illustration of the advantages of protection. I do not claim to be well acquainted with the commercial history of that nation, but I know there was a time when its policy was strictly protective, and during the existence of that system the machinery and implements used in the country were exceedingly rude. While protection continued that condition of affairs was unchanged, because there was no competition. There was no necessity to manufacture as cheaply as possible, and no inducement for improvement. The results of adopting free-trade are shown in the vast improvement of the country and in its wonderful recuperative powers after the recent struggle with Germany.

Some hon. gentlemen contend that we must have protection. Now, what does that policy mean? It means the exclusion of trade with foreign countries. Its object is that people shall trade among themselves and have no communication with other nations. That is the principle which those gentlemen would force on this House, and for which they ask the Government to change the whole fiscal policy that has proved to be so successful in this country.

Mr. WOOD—Has any gentleman on this side of the House wished the Government to change their whole fiscal policy?

Mr. MACDOUGALL—I say the hon. gentleman has himself asked for the adoption of an entirely different policy from that enunciated by the Government. The Finance Minister says it is not necessary that we should increase taxation. He says by the policy of retrenchment he proposes to pursue he does not need to add another dollar to the revenue by raising the tariff. Now, I ask if the change which the hon. member for Hamilton wants would not involve the adoption of a different fiscal policy. The Protectionists say we have hard times and they make the most of that cry. I do not believe the people are so badly off as they are represented. The agriculturists are not. Representing a farming community I say they are in a position to help themselves. Hon. gentlemen say they do not want a prohibitory tariff, but there is a temporary distress which they want to relieve by increased taxation for the purpose of enabling the manufacturers to make more money. I ask them to candidly tell me if we should increase the tariff two, three or four per cent., when they will be ready to reduce that tax? Would they specify to me the date when they will be prepared to ask this House for a reduction of the amount they say is necessary to be put on during this time of depression? There is no such intention. If we increased the tariff they would never be ready to reduce it to its present rate. The condition of the United States has been taken as a proof of the desirability of adopting a protective policy. Quite a change has come over many of our people. I remember a time, when any reference was made either to the Constitution or to the financial condition of the United States, the man who had the boldness to do so was taboored as being disloyal to the Empire.

But, Sir, it suits the purposes of certain members of this House to point to the United States as an instance of the success and prosperity that have attended the adoption of this protective system. That system came into force in the United States in 1866; but I join issue with those hon. gentlemen who state that protection has been the cause of the prosperity of that country. From that time these hon. gentlemen know that that country was agitated by a dreadful revolution, and it was necessary for the purpose of carrying on the affairs of the Republic to issue an irredeemable currency, by means of which every enterprise and business was stimulated to a great degree. During the war there was terrible destruction of life, wealth and property, and the whole condition of the country was disturbed and everything was stimulated into an unhealthy activity. But the condition of the trade of the United States under those circumstances and what it would be in Canada under protection would form be no parallel. Allow me to quote the words of a distinguished statesman of that country—and I am free to confess as a loyal Canadian—they have produced great men in the United States—men who have done a great deal to promote civilization, to instruct the country in the proper principles of legislation and lift up humanity and make it better than it was before. Among these men none stands higher than Daniel Webster. In discussing this very question of the tariff and the very principles enunciated in this debate, at a time when the condition of the United States was very like what that of Canada is at present, with an inconvertible currency, head dressed himself to the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB—I want to ask if there was an inconvertible currency in the United States in 1874?

Mr. MACDOUGALL—I will now quote from the speech of that distinguished statesman, and if there are any errors in the report, I hope my hon. friend from Niagara will correct me. He says: "Now, Sir, what is the remedy for existing evils? What is the course of policy suited to our actual condition? Certainly it is not our wisdom to adopt any system that may be offered to us without examination, and in the blind hope that whatever changes our condition may improve it. It is better that we should bear the ills we have than fly to those we know not of?" "We are bound to see that there is a fitness and an aptitude in whatever measures may be recommended to relieve the evils that afflict us, and before we adopt a system that professes to make great alterations, it is our duty to look carefully to each leading interest of the community, and see how it may probably be affected by our proposed legislation." These are the words of the distinguished statesman belonging to the party that, from that time down to the present, in the United States have always been favourable to the principle of protection. These are the statements he makes, and I think they are as applicable to the present time as they were applicable to the affairs of the United States at that time. He continues in another part of his speech: "On the general question, Sir, if the doctrine of protection as a general doctrine be not preposterous. Suppose all nations to act upon it, they would be preposterous, then, according to the argument precisely in the proportion in which they abolished intercourse with one another; the less of mutual commerce the better upon this hypothesis."

That is precisely what is asked for in this principle. I know it will be stated that I am putting this argument to the very furthest extreme, but we are not discussing the question of details at this moment. The hon. gentlemen who favour protection are content for a moment to ask the attention of this House to a question of detail. They challenge the House, and those who hold the views I entertain upon the principle of protection. Upon this I join issue, and the ultimate conclusion I arrive at is that the principle of protection is one of entire prohibition or of non-intercourse with other nations. This a question of great importance; it is a question of such magnitude as has not come before this House since I had the honour of having a seat in it. It is not a question of the present, but of the future; it is one I believe should enable us to rise above party feeling and party proclivities. It is one we should discuss upon its merits and upon its merits only. It is a question of adopting a principle that will be either for the weal or the woe of this country.

Mr. DYMOND—I am quite aware that any one rising to address the House at the period of the debate at which we have arrived taxes very heavily its indulgence, and I am not sure that I would not have postponed the remarks which I intend to make if it had not been for the speech with which the discussion this afternoon was opened. However, I see my hon. friend from South Waterloo is not in his place, and I will take the liberty of postponing for the moment my reference to his remarks. This is a subject which we have to approach from two points of view; we have to approach it not simply as an economical question, in which sense it has mainly been discussed to-day, but also as a great political question, and that, too, not simply as members of this House but as members of a great political party, a party which, I believe, is about to be called upon to adopt and define a line of conduct and policy with regard to it. It cannot be denied that the Government now in power entered upon office under circumstances of great difficulty, and we congratulate ourselves that they have been so far successful in overcoming the difficulties that have confronted them, arising out of the obligations left them by their predecessors. The large revenue and heavy loans they have had to raise have been obtained with little difficulty. But, Sir, we find ourselves at the present moment also confronted with a deficit, and that deficit has to be met in a way which we as members of the Liberal party ought certainly to rejoice over. The old watchwords of that party were "peace, retrenchment and reform." Happily in this country we have nothing to disturb our peace, and we have accomplished so many reforms that there is now little for us to do in that direction. And now, Sir, we find ourselves consummating the glorious record, by adopting the glorious policy of retrenchment. I am not now going to charge the members of the late Government with being responsible for that enormous increase to which my hon. friend from Waterloo adverted. I believe that in these matters as a rule Governments are more sinned against than sinning, and it may be well that we who sit on these back benches should experience the absolute necessity of the policy of retrenchment, because it will teach us, at all events, that we have to sustain the Government in carrying out this policy, and in discouraging those who would endeavour to induce them to violate it. The late Government too often yielded to the importunities of friends and supporters, but they have at all events the excuse to urge that, in their day the inflation of the revenue came in as a justification of their liberality. We now find from the responsible Minister of the Crown that he needs no further taxes, and that charged, as he is, above all things with taking care of our credit, he is able at present to announce that we can carry on the affairs of the country for the next twelve months without asking for any increase of taxation. This state of things fully justifies my hon. friend, who has just sat down, in making the remark that those who are coming forward to demand an increase at the present time are doing so exclusively in the interest of protection, and I do not honour the man who comes forward with such a demand, while concealing at the same time the motives by which he is actuated. Reference has been made to my hon. friends from Hamilton time and again; but at least we must admit that they have been honest in their demands. They have openly avowed on the floor of this House, before the Budget was introduced, in the Committee Room and in their speeches on the hustings, that they are Protectionists, and that they ask that we shall inflict taxes on the people of this country, in order that manufacturing—and I suppose other industries—may be fostered and encouraged. There is a well defined issue between us; they are Liberals or Reformers, and though they are with us on nine points out of ten we must join issue with them squarely on the tenth. I am quite sure my hon. friends at heart do not indulge in the delusion, that nobody wants more than $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The record is against them; $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. increase of duties would be a sop to Cerberus, but Cerberus would not be satisfied. Two years ago a body of manufacturers met in the City of Toronto, and I have before me the resolution they passed. It records the various businesses in which they were engaged. I observe that these include every branch of home manufactures from woollen goods down to coffins and clothes wringers; and they demand specifically that on all these articles there should be levied a duty of 25 instead of 15 per cent. with one exception, and this is with regard to paper to be used in the printing of newspapers. I suppose that this exception was also a sop thrown to Cerberus, but Cerberus did not take it.

Mr. MACDUGALL.

We have another body acting under a greater sense of responsibility than these little caucases of manufacturers—the Board of Trade. In 1873, being confronted with a resolution in favour of free-trade, the Board passed an amendment declaring in favour of the policy which has been adopted in this country up to the present moment—a revenue tariff giving incidental protection. In 1874 this same Board went a step further, and demanded that the element of protection should be incorporated in the policy of the country. They were not then satisfied that we should proceed on a revenue basis, and they asked for protection, although in a somewhat modified form; but since that time they have advanced, and they now call for a reciprocal policy—a euphonious substitute for a retaliatory policy. They mean that wherever the duties of the United States on our goods amount to a certain sum we should impose the same duties on our side. Another meeting of manufacturers was held very recently in the City of Toronto; and they again asked for a retaliatory policy. I believe that my hon. friends from Hamilton are perfectly honest in the course they have adopted, but I think that they are no more masters of the situation in the country than they were masters of the situation in this House the other night. They might as well come out at once as wait to be forced against their wills, and ask for 10 or 15 per cent. increase of duties; and I must say that they insult common sense in the face of the facts I have stated in limiting their demand to 2½ per cent. This being the case, and the country being asked to commit itself to a protective policy, the next question is—for what reason is this demand made? In the first place we are told that we must have a national policy. This phrase has been burlesqued, and therefore I am afraid that it will not be received with very great favour in most quarters. What does it mean, if it signifies anything?—A policy formed in the interest not of one part or of another section, but of the whole Dominion to be instrumental in welding us together as one nation, breaking down and not establishing sectional differences and barriers. But what is one of the first things which we are asked to do? To impose that most odious of all imposts—a bread tax on the people of the Maritime Provinces. If there were one thing in this world that would tend to exasperate any free people, it would surely be to tax the bread which they eat; and this is the first request made by these champions of a national policy. It is not only that the bread of the Maritime Provinces is to be taxed. We are all aware that many of their people came very reluctantly into Confederation, and it is possible that even yet there may be in some quarters elements of discontent. We have gained very largely by the accession of these Provinces, for the manufacturers of Toronto, Hamilton and other places find in them some of their best customers. My hon. friend from Hamilton, when he obtained a Committee on this subject two years ago, extracted a great deal of valuable information. Here is the testimony of one witness, Mr. Muir, a gentleman from Montreal, and I am sure that my hon. friend will bear me out when I say that he was one of the most intelligent and frank-spoken men we had before us on that occasion.

Mr. DYMOND.

He does a large business in the clothing trade:—

Q.—Your business has largely increased since that time—(this was since a very few years previously)? A—Yes.

Q.—What are the causes? A—The causes are various; our business increases with the trade of the Dominion, and this has increased largely; but one of the principal elements of the increase has been our getting the Maritime Provinces as a market. Not less than one-third of my own trade is with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Q.—What amount do you transmit to the Maritime Provinces—that is, what amount of business do you do with them annually? A.—I should say not less from $120,000 to $150,000.

Now, when we are asked to levy from 5 to 10 per cent. increased duties, we are asked to tax the people of the Maritime Provinces for the benefit of other sections of the country, and this is the national policy which is to weld us together into one great nation, and break down the distinctions between Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Ontario or Quebec.

There is another reason alleged in favour of the adoption of a protectionist policy. It is said that the Americans invade us with their goods. I hesitate very much before criticising, even in the slightest degree, the speech which has been so justly complimented on all sides of the hon. member for North Norfolk. I do not think that he is very far out of the right way, but he stated, I think, that protection to home manufactures was very desirable as a check upon the prices of the foreign importers. I will just reverse that proposition, and say that I think the foreign importers are a very salutary check upon the home manufacturers; and after all what is the amount of injury that the latter receive? I have selected from returns lately brought down a few of our leading articles of manufacture. The first is agricultural implements—the smaller articles, I presume, such as spades, shovels and the implements generally used in farm work, and I find that we manufactured in 1871 $2,685,393 worth, or at the rate of 77 cents per head of our population, and in the year 1875, a period of inflation, when this country was being made, according to all accounts, a slaughter market by the Americans, the importations of these implements amounted exactly to four cents per head. Of boots and shoes we manufactured in 1871 to the value of $16,133,638, or at the rate of $4.63 per head, and our imports in that year, when we were suffering from the causes to which such frequent reference has been made, amounted to seven cents per head; of cabinet furniture, in 1871, we manufactured $3,500,000 worth, or at the rate of $1.03 per head, and our imports just averaged nine cents per head; of machinery of all kinds, paying duty, we manufactured $7,325,531 worth, or at the rate of $2.10 per head, and our imports of machinery not paying duty, in 1875 amounted to only twenty-five cents per head; of carriages of all sorts we manufactured in 1871 to the value of $4,849,239, or at the rate of $1.40 per head, and our imports in 1875 of that important article of manufacture amounted to just three cents per head; of saddlery and harness we manufactured about $2,500,000 worth, or at the rate of 70 cents per head, and our imports averaged the enormous sum of two cents per head; of clothing, in 1871 we manufactured $9,300,000 worth, or at the rate of $2.64 per head, and in 1875 we imported at the rate of 24 cents per head; our tanners manufactured something over $9,000,000 worth of material in 1871, or at the rate of $2.64 per head, and we imported at the rate of 24 cents per head in 1875; of woollen goods, including blankets, flannels and tweeds, we manufactured in 1871 $5,000,000 worth, or at the rate of $1.58 per head, and we imported in 1875, when it is said our markets were flooded with foreign goods, at the rate of 36 cents per head.

This is the upshot of all this outcry, and I think that we cannot help seeing the weakness of our opponents' position when they claim that we should impose a protective policy in this country in the face of such figures as those to which I have just referred.

Another reason is given for the imposition of a protective tariff. It is represented that the Americans refuse to admit our manufactures at the same rates as those that we levy upon theirs. This opens up the whole question of free-trade. Allusion has been made to the case of France in 1860. I can well remember what an outcry there was in Great Britain in consequence of the concessions—as they were called—which were made to the Emperor of the French, for while the latter was only willing to stipulate for the reduction of the tariff to such a point that it would be no longer prohibitory to our goods, we, in a great number of cases, admitted these goods free, and we were told that we were consequently making a sacrifice. The answer of the Government and the people of England was that whenever we could admit goods free our people were the gainers by the transaction, no matter from whence they came, as this must cheapen the necessaries of life and thereby give the people a large amount of money to spend, not only for foreign productions but for home-manufactures.

To the proposition to adopt a retaliatory policy very grave objections exist. It would be not only dangerous but very undignified. It is extremely absurd of anybody to boast or threaten unless he can fulfil his threat or his boast, and it is idle for us, on the floor of this House, to say that we can adopt a policy altogether independent of the United States. It is useless to be mealy-mouthed about this matter, or to assert that we can compel the United States to adopt our views when they have forty millions of people and we have but four. I believe, too, that it is not generally considered good policy to quarrel with one of your best customers; and the United States last year imported from Canada something like $23,000,000 or $24,000,000 worth of goods, of which $8,000,000 were agricultural produce, and this out of $77,000,000 of our total exports at a period of very considerable depression. Another objection may be fairly raised—especially by those who, like myself, represent agricultural constituencies—and that is, whether the large body of consumers be taxed in the interest of one class? I am aware that I must not refer to what has passed in debate in this House during the present Session, but I have heard somewhere the doctrine laid down that the farmers were not consumers, but simply producers; and I once saw an hon. gentleman, who by the way is not a farmer, call attention to his own home-spun habiliments in order to show the primitive manner in which people live in the district from whence he comes. There may possibly be in some parts of the country—somewhere, perhaps, on the banks of the St. Lawrence—a primitive race—a race who clothe themselves as our first parents did after their ejection from Eden—a people who use flint-headed agricultural implements, who don't raise anything but a few scanty ears of maize, and live by the proceeds of the chase. There may be some such people, say, about Gananoque, but they are not to be found in any other part of the country. At any rate, go into the old Home district with which I am best acquainted, and you will find the farmers there have attained a higher degree of civilization; that they are men of education and of taste; that they generally live in handsome brick houses, constructed with all the fittings a high state of civilization requires. They use cooking stoves, which are an article of manufacture. They use furniture, which is also, I believe, an article of manufacture. They are in the habit sometimes of dressing in broadcloth. Indeed, we shall not have to go far from where I speak to find an Ontario farmer who is seen in broadcloth on many occasions, and not a little of it either.

Hon. Gentlemen—Name, name.

Mr. DYMOND—Not to know him would be to argue one's self unknown. I will go further. You will hardly go into a farm house in the county a part of which I represent—and I know my hon. friends from Ontario? Peel and elsewhere, will bear me out—without finding some costly musical instrument, a handsome organ or a piano costing several hundred dollars. These two are products of home or foreign manufacture. It cannot be shown by any argument that any form of protection would be of the slightest advantage to these men. Yet you want to tax every article of furniture in their houses, every piece of clothing they wear; in fact, everything except the food they raise upon their own farms. In the name of these men, Sir, and in the name of the agricultural constituencies in whose behalf so many of us on this side have the right to speak, as well as in the name of our friends from the Maritime Provinces, I protest against the proposition to do anything which, for purely protective purposes, will place fresh burdens upon their shoulders. When did they come whining like paupers to your gate? When did they come to this House to ask for anything to strengthen their strong right arms in achieving the fruits of honest industry? You can hardly go among them and listen to the stories many of them can tell of their hard wrestlings and their once rugged lot without emotion—without hearing a tale of struggles and suffering that has about it all the elements of romance. It was not by asking the aid of legislation that they exalted from the earth her tribute and from the wilderness a home, and literally made the desert to blossom as the rose; it was not by appealing to legislation that they made Canada as great as she is to-day, that they have made our people so strong that they can meet one of the severest crises in our history, if not without anxiety at least without alarm.

We are told, too, we must have protection here because of its great success in the United States. I am not going to follow the example of some of my hon. friends by reading long passages from the speeches and opinions of eminent statesmen. When my hon. friend from Waterloo referred to Mr. Wells I heard something like a jeering laugh on the other side of the House. His opinions may be taken for what they are worth. Any hon. gentleman in this House is just as entitled to hold and express his own opinions as Mr. Wells; but if we want facts and the statements of a highly conscientious man—a man who, beyond most other public men, is accustomed to the compilation of figures and facts—we may go with all confidence to Mr. David Wells, and there are few men living at the present time who have so large a fund of information upon those subjects with which he is acquainted, or on whom you can rely with more confidence than upon than gentleman.

Mr. DYMOND.

Now, with regard to the American mercantile marine, my hon. friend from North Norfolk remarked that the destruction of the American shipping was a consequence of the war. The war did rather less damage to the navy than the hon. gentleman, perhaps, believes. More than ten years have elapsed since that war terminated; eleven years will have passed by in a few weeks since Richmond fell, soon after which peace was restored to the Union. What is protection asked for if not to foster what are called infant industries, or to aid the recuperative power that is found in the resources of a country? What is the condition of the American mercantile marine to-day? It is in a state of depression; so weak that I believe not a single letter is carried across the ocean in an American ship. There is a country with the finest resources for shipbuilding in the whole world, with ample supplies of timber and of iron, and with a sea coast lined with admirable facilities for shipping, and yet, such have been the blighting effects of protection as recorded by Mr. Wells and other American writers, that their mercantile navy is practically destroyed, and American commerce is virtually swept from the seas.

Another great industry, the manufacture of woollens, may also be instanced. During the war, when cotton was very dear and so scarce that it was almost impossible to obtain it, wool, of course, came into the market. There was an enormous demand for wool, manufactories sprang up and an exceedingly profitable business was done. But the moment the war was over the trade in woollen goods to a certain extent collapsed. There had been over-production; there was a cessation of demand from the army, and the Government threw a quantity of the surplus stock into the market. The result of this was a great outcry. Farmers went to Washington to obtain relief. A convention was held, and it was proposed to levy, and Congress did levy a protective duty of something like 120 to 150 per cent.; and yet such is the state of the woollen trade at this moment that not only has the magnificent breed of sheep dwindled away, but the mills are being literally sold at sacrifice prices, at less than twenty-five per cent. of their cost, because the trade has been crushed out of existence by protection.

I come next to silks. In the United States there is a duty of 60 per cent. on silk manufactured goods, the raw material being admitted free. But, notwithstanding this, the manufacturers are clamouring for an increase of duty in order to protect their trade from destruction.

Well, if we may look to America to see what has been the effect upon its commerce of a protective policy—and I am not one of those who are ashamed to look to her for an example, for if there is one country in the world besides Great Britain that may be worthily imitated, it is the United States in a great many passages of their history—we may surely turn to England to learn what have been the effects of free trade. We are certainly just as much entitled to take a lesson from Free-Trade England as from Protectionist America. If ever there was a class of men in this world who might fairly cry out against free trade—if ever there was a class to whom free trade threatened destruction, it was the farmers of England at the time the corn laws were repealed. The case of our Canadian farmers affords no parallel to theirs. They knew nothing of land which they could call their own or of the light taxation we enjoy here. A large proportion of them were tenants-at-will, liable to be thrown out of their farms by their landlords at short notice. A large number of them were in debt, and a spirit of despondency brooded over the whole land. I will read a short passage from the work of a very able writer to show the state of Great Britain in 1841, previous to the time Sir Robert Peel commenced his fiscal reforms:—"The period of Sir R. Peel's accession to office was one of greater depression than our industrial interests had ever before experienced. The State seemed precipitately falling to decay;

“it was as though the very spirit of death paralyzed all the movements of capital; we stood like some ancestral oak, arrested in the mid-career of spring-tide vegetation by some fatal shock, and from whose branches the vital sap is suddenly withdrawn. Never again may such a dismal time darken the path of Old England! The distress which was then endured by the nation sounds more like the wild creation of a tragic fancy than a recital of sober facts.”

But what was the result, even to the farmers, of the corn laws being repealed? From 1831 to 1840, under protective laws, the average consumption of foreign wheat in Great Britain was 900,000 quarters, of the value of £2,520,000 sterling. From 1841 to 1850, partial free-trade having been in operation up to 1849, the average consumption had increased to 2,600,000 quarters, of the value of £6,890,000. From 1851 to 1860 the average consumption had increased to 5,000,000 quarters, of the value £13,500,000. In the eight years, from 1854 to 1861, there was consumed in Great Britain £122,000,000 worth of foreign wheat, equal to $75,000,000 worth in our money, on an annual average. Yet, notwithstanding this, from 1843 to 1860, the assessment on agricultural lands had increased from £42,127,419 in the former to £42,994,947 in the latter year. The valuations of farmers' profits also increased enormously, and such was the effect of this—the raw material of industry, the first necessary of life, being cheapened to the great body of the people—that notwithstanding these great importations of breadstuffs, the price of wheat actually increased. From 1841 to 1850 the price of wheat was £2 13s. 3½d. per quarter, from 1851 to 1860 it was £2 14s. 7½d. per quarter. In Great Britain the estimated area of cultivated land in 1827 was 34,014,000 acres. In 1868 it had increased to 45,832,000. In 1874 it had increased to 47,143,000 acres. The number of horses, cattle and sheep had increased in similiar proportion. There was just this result perceivable. Instead of almost exclusively growing wheat there was more pasture farming.

Mr. DYMOND.

The intelligence of the farmer has called into activity. You will find by looking at the statistics a much larger number of shepherds employed by farmers in 1871 than in 1861. The increase from 1851 to 1871 was from 12,500 to 22,323; and the number of persons engaged in tending agricultural machinery—another very important indication of the progress of the farming community—had also doubled in the same period. Then, again, when we turn from the experience of the agriculturists to the records of the great volume of trade, in order to ascertain what the effect of free-trade has been upon the commercial community, we find a very similar result. The British exports of 1822 were £36,968,964; in 1842, under twenty years of protection, they had only increased about £11,000,000; but in 1853, during a period of partial free-trade, they had more than doubled. They had grown to £93,357,306; and in 1873 they had reached the enormous volume of £300,000,000, of which £250,000,000 were the produce of Great Britain herself, £50,000,000 being the produce of other countries to which she acted as factor. We have thus, on the one hand, the distressed and, in many cases, ruined industries of the United States as the consequence of protection, and we have on the other hand the magnificent exhibit of Free-Trade England, to which I have just taken the liberty of calling attention.

Now, I said if my hon. friend from South Waterloo came in I would venture to make one or two remarks on the speech he delivered this evening, and which was, to a large extent, an echo of other speeches he has made on the same subject. I can venture to take liberties with my hon. friend; we can afford to differ a little on this side. We are numerous enough to do so safely, and our very name of Reformers shows we are progressive, and must therefore at times differ. But my hon. friend has progressed backwards. The hon. member from East Elgin has not the reputation of being a joker, or the House would have discovered the fine irony underlying the reference he made to the member for South Waterloo this afternoon. Looking at the position in which we are placed at this moment, when we are bracing ourselves for a struggle with protection, I venture to say the speech of my hon. friend was about as objectionable as any that could have fallen from his lips. When he conceded one point he conceded all, and once on that inclined plane to which somebody alluded, when he begins to slip there is no knowing where he will go to. I don't believe my hon. friend is going to pursue that course. He has been carried away by the outcry around him, and has been led into the belief that under certain circumstances he should do that which Mr. Wells, whom he quotes, says is to the last degree pernicious. We are bracing ourselves for a struggle in which, as a party, we have to choose sides. I am not sorry that the time has come when we are to have a square issue on this question. I care not what Government may be inconvenienced, or what Ministry may rise or fall, so long as the truth remains—that on this side of the House we are the party of free-trade in the sense in which free-trade is understood in this country. We have on the present occasion adopted that principle as our policy. Our opponents, so far as they have expressed themselves, have taken sides against us. We have not heard the important speech which is to be delivered some day by the right hon. member for Kingston. I shall listen, as we all do, to his utterances with the most profound attention and respect. But we have his opinions as expressed elsewhere, and in spite of the good character the hon. member for East Elgin gives him, I believe he is at heart a Protectionist. I believe he once said that my hon. friend the Premier's courage, like Bob Acres', would ooze out of his finger ends. But who is the Bob Acres here to-day? Who has shown on this question a want of courage? The right hon. gentleman has shrunk from taking a decided stand on this question. It is he who is playing the part of Bob Acres, if he will excuse me for saying so. At Kingston on the 10th of January, 1874, the hon. gentleman wanted votes, as he has often done, and he made a speech in which he alluded to things in general, and this question of free-trade and protection in particular. He said—alluding to the late Government: "We should have been forced to re-adjust the tariff to assist the industries of Canada, so as to enable them to compete with the home market; and the farmers must be protected also so that they would not have to depend on the fact of a good crop or a bad crop." The right hon. gentleman was not only going to protect the manufacturers, he was also going to do what no one had ever attempted before since the world began—ensure the farmers riches whether they had good crops or bad crops. The right hon. gentleman also made a speech at Cooksville last January. We are sometimes told that on such occasions he is not in sober earnest; but we were not there to know whether on that occasion he was joking or not, and we must therefore hold him to his words as they were spoken. He said:—"The next principle is that in the arrangement of our tariff; we will consult the interests of Canada altogether. We will endeavour, without unduly burdening the agricultural portion of our population, so to adjust the tariff as to encourage our manufacturers, and to protect them from the enormous capital that is collected in England and the United States." So at intervals of two years the right hon. gentleman declared himself to be prepared, as he had done in 1872, when he was scurrying around the country rallying his followers, to be an advocate of protection. In fact, he declared himself to be that which the Government have at this moment pronounced themselves not to be—prepared to lay on taxes, not for purposes of revenue, but to benefit a certain class or certain classes of the community. He was doing that which my hon. friends from Hamilton have asked us to do, and what my hon. friend from Waterloo in an incautious moment professed he was almost ready to do—that is, to be willing to adjust the tariff in the interests of the manufacturers. When I heard my hon. friend from Cumberland the other night say he was neither a Free-Trader nor a Protectionist, and then heard the course taken by the hon. member from South Waterloo, I thought it looked very like a coalition. Although the hon. member for Waterloo feels the most intense repugnance for every other principle advocated by the hon. member for Cumberland, on this one they seem to be agreed. I hope my hon. friend will receive the warning thus honestly given him, that he is in bad company and runs the risk of forfeiting that brilliant reputation he has won and in the ranks of the Reform party up to the present time. But, Sir, I believe that by this question being presented as a clear political and party issue, we shall, when the hour comes, all fall into line. I believe that Montreal at no distant day will cast off her mourning apparel. We shall find Hamilton, sitting clothed and in her right mind. I have great hopes for North Norfolk; there will be a strengthening of the knees in South Waterloo, and even Lincoln may see light. That being the case, I for one most fearlessly await that struggle. I am told that we should be banished from public life if we talk of free-trade; but I think the people of this country are a great deal wiser than we give them credit for being. All the wisdom of the Dominion is not on the floor of this Parliament. If the Government had given way to the extent of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., as they were asked to do, they would simply have weakened the position they now hold and have done no good, even from a protectionist point of view, to any man, woman or child in the community. If I had thought we could have done anything that would have relieved the distress in the country, no one would have yielded more readily, but I defy any one to show the good that would have resulted from a $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. increase. If we are to have protection let us have it fairly and squarely; prove to us on the floor of Parliament that the country would be better with a protective tariff and we would have to bow to your arguments, but till we have stronger proof than the mere peddling appeals made to us on this question have supplied, we will have to take our stand as we have taken it to day. We have fought great battles in the past; we have been the party of free institutions; we have been the party of a free press, we have been the party of free education. A gallant wing of our party is even at this moment struggling for the principle of free thought and free speech in one of the Provinces of this Dominion, and the time is coming when we must inscribe "Free-Trade" on our banner—that is free-trade in the sense of laying on the shoulders of the people no other burthens than the exigencies of the public service may require.

Mr. DYMOND.

Mr. APPLEBY—Perhaps there is no political question which has received more prominence lately than protection and since Parliament have assembled here the advocates of that system have taken advantage of every opportunity that has presented itself to propound their peculiar views and flood the House with the arguments at their disposal. Anyone who has watched the progress of affairs in this country for some time past must have seen that protection and free-trade must enter strongly into the politics of the Dominion, and there will be a definite line drawn between political parties on this question. If there were any doubt as to what the opinions of the Government are on protection that doubt has been settled by the Budget Speech of the Government. Being a Free-Trader myself, I have to offer my congratulations on the policy that they have declared and I think it will be received with approbation from all parts of the Dominion. Political parties have been required from time to time to lay down a platform, the Reform party has laid theirs down as economy and free-trade, and I think the country will respond to that sentiment. A number of persons seem to have a great idea of the power of Parliament to legislate prosperity for a country, and I think if we keep on in this strain we will almost believe it ourselves. A great many in advocating the doctrine of protection seem to think that Parliament can legislate prosperity; but the wealth of a country is hewn out by the honest industry of the people. Every man in a free country is actuated and impelled by his natural instinct to work out and acquire prosperity, and the credit of that is our national wealth. I am myself a Free-Trader of the most radical type, and I hold it the duty of Free-Traders to avow their principles, and not be content with the present condition of things.

That we intend to take no steps backward, but will use every effort to gradually reach that period when tariffs and custom houses shall be unknown.

Although [free trade, pure and simple, and its incident, direct taxation for revenue purposes are not practicable at the present day, and may not be for some years to come, still, I repeat that we should seek to render them practicable, hoping finally to see no restrictions upon commerce, and our revenues collected in a manly straightforward manner—in the words of an English writer—"When our revenues are henceforth to be drawn "not from oppressive imposts on industry, wrapped in puerile concealments, but from assessments openly and honestly levied, and voluntarily acquiesced in as the price which a free man pays for benefits conferred."

We have been told by the advocates of protection that the want of a high protective tariff has produced the commercial depression under which this country is at present suffering, and we are at the same time pointed to the United States as an instance of national prosperity under protection.

These gentlemen should remember that this country flourished wonderfully under a 15 per cent. tariff, and it must be apparent that the present distress arises from other causes, as the distress is world wide, and prevails to a much greater extent in the United States than in this country.

Although the people of that country are at present suffering great commercial distress, they have in the past prospered wonderfully, but not by reason of high protection, but in spite of it.

They had the wars of the revolution and 1812, the Mexican war, and the late civil war, and they have prospered in spite of these burdens just as they have prospered in spite of a high protective tariff. If our manufacturers represented the great bulk of the people of the Dominion, if all our hopes of prosperity depended upon their success, we might be inclined to listen to their views, but they represent a very small portion of the country. The great industries of the Dominion are the farming, lumbering, shipping, fishing and mining, interests none of which is it practicable to protect by legislation.

We are asked, Sir, to create monopolies to lay the great consuming class under contribution to enrich the manufacturing few.

Protection inflicts a double wrong upon consumers; first, they are compelled to pay higher for their manufactured goods than they would under foreign competition; and if foreign manufacturers are excluded from the country, the revenue from that source falls off, and must be made up by an additional tax on those necessaries which are not, and cannot be produced in the country, and which are in common use by all classes, the poor as well as the rich. My opinion is that we have too much legislation, that the people should be let alone; that the first and almost only duty of Government is to see that life, liberty and property are secure, and that the people should be allowed to buy and sell when and where they may without hindrance.

I hope to see the time when Parliament will take their unlawful hands from trade and commerce, that they may be allowed to flow in natural and unrestricted channels.

As an instance of the hindrance to trade, I would mention our Stamp Duty, which I hope the Government will soon see their way clear to repeal.

While I congratulate the Government on their policy, I hope that they will still further pursue a policy of Free Trade, and instead of an increase, that there will be a decrease in the present tariff. I desire to call attention to the article of Kerosene Oil, which can be bought in the United States for 12 cents per gallon, upon which we pay a duty of 15 cents per gallon.

I hope at no distant day that this obnoxious tax may be removed, and a more reasonable tariff imposed instead.

The hon. member for Montreal Centre intimated that the Government were not carrying out their own principles, but were compelled to abandon them by pressure from Maritime members, which pressure he denounced in unsparing terms. At the same time he threatened the Government with his opposition unless his views were met; what was wrong in others was just the proper thing for the member for Montreal.

It is well known that the Prime Minister is a Free Trader, we have abundant evidence of this from his public speeches. We also know that very great pressure has recently been brought to bear upon him by members of Parliament and influential delegations from Montreal and other manufacturing cities, to induce him to abandon his principles and inaugurate a protection policy. It, therefore, would not be surprising if gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces should wait upon the Government and intimate that they might place the utmost reliance upon their support and assistance in carrying out their principles.

If an absolute free trade policy should be adopted, the fleets of all nations would seek our shores, laden with the commodities of the world; these fleets would not return in ballast, but would carry away every article of our surplus products, affording a steady and convenient market. In concluding my remarks, I may indulge in the hope that the time may come in Canada when such a state of affairs may be brought about when we shall have such a condition of national prosperity as Political Economists have never yet dreamed of.

Mr. ROCHESTER—The hon. member who has just taken his seat represents the County of Carleton, New Brunswick. I have the honour to represent the County of Carleton, Ontario, and I hope the reporters will not make a mistake and attribute the hon. gentleman's sentiments to me, as he claims to be a Free-Trader.

I will allude to a remark that fell from the Finance Minister during his Budget Speech, on the subject of the depression. He said that this was the case in manufacturing and commercial circles; and also, that among all the complaints, he had heard none from the lumber trade. I take it for granted that this statement is true; but I will say that this was not because there was no reason for it, and not because abuses were not connected with this interest which ought to be remedied.

Mr. APPLEBY.

In the first place, as to these abuses, we find that the Michigan lumbermen can take out their timber, bring it through into Canada, use our lakes, rivers and canals, and enjoy all the privileges and rights of Canadian subjects without paying one cent therefor. This, I contend, is an abuse; and not only is this the fact, but the Americans have the benefit of our market. They convey their timber to Quebec, and possess all the advantages to which Canadian lumbermen are entitled, on precisely the same footing as the latter. Then there is the forwarding interest, which is very important, as for a number of years a large quantity of lumber has been sent into the United States, which has been an extensive and excellent market for Canada. I believe that I am correct in saying that in the Treaty of Washington in 1872, it was supposed that equal rights and privileges would be granted to Canadian forwarders in the United States; and I will read a short extract from correspondence, in order to show how the provision in this relation has been carried out. In reply to a letter from one of the forwarders to the Collector of Customs at Plattsburgh, this was written:—
 “I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st inst., wherein you ask for the following information, viz.:—Whether Canadian barges will be allowed to pass en route from Rouse's Point to New York with foreign merchandise in bond? In reply I beg to inform you that the United States laws, as construed (I think misconstrued would have been a better word) by the Treasury Department, prohibit the trade in question, so far as British vessels are concerned. See 2,771, Revised Statutes of the United States, which read as follows: ‘Vessels which are not vessels of the United States shall not be admitted to unload at ports of entry established by by-law, and no such vessel shall be admitted to make entry in any other district than in that one in which she shall be admitted to unload.’”

This is from the Collector of Customs at Plattsburgh. Now, the forwarders went a little further, and one wrote to Washington; he says:—“Not being satisfied with the reply, knowing as " I did that in 1866 some 70,000,000 feet of Canadian lumber upon British barges was transported from this district to the district of Vermont in bond, because it suited the Government of the United States that year to have it so, I sent to get a copy of the instructions from Washington on the subject, and the official answer I received was as follows:—

" TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

" WASHINGTON, D.C., June 18, 1875.

" I have received your letter of the 4th instant, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Ottawa and Rideau Forwarding Company, stating that he had forwarded a number of his British barges from Ottawa to New York, via Lake Champlain, Champlain Canal and the Hudson River, and that he intended continuing that trade, if it be not illegal.

" I will thank you to inform the gentleman that the laws, as construed by this department, prohibit the trade in question, so far as British vessels are concerned. The fact that the vessels mentioned as having gone to New York were British, was over-looked at that port, and they were treated as American. Section 5,771 of the Revised Statutes requires that the vessels in question shall unload at your ports.

" (Signed,) Very respectfully,

" B. H. BRISTOW,

" Secretary.

" To Jacob Parmister,
" Collector, Plattsburgh."

It appears that the general impression has been for years, since the negotiation of that Treaty, at all events, that the difficulty was with the State Governments, that they would not allow our barges to pass through their canals, or grant to Canadians the rights and privileges Americans enjoy in the Dominion, but from this answer it seems that on the contrary, the States have expressed their willingness to allow Canadian barges to pass through all their canals, and that the difficulty lies with the Federal Government. When our boats cross the line they must stop at the first port of entry, enter their cargo, and pay their duty—$2 in gold per thousand board measure. I suppose that the hon. member for North York will call this reciprocity; and so will I, on one side. The barges enter at the first port of entry, and pass into the interior for perhaps twenty or thirty miles, but not beyond forty miles, because this is not permitted; and this is prevented, not by the State Governments, but by the Federal Administration. I will just read the 27th article of the Treaty of Washington:—"The Government of Her Britannic Majesty engages to urge upon the Government of the Dominion of Canada to secure to the citizens of the United States the use of the Welland, St. Lawrence and other canals in the Dominion on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the Dominion, and the Government of the United States engages that the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty shall enjoy the use of the St. Clair Flats Canal on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the United States; and further engages to urge upon the State Governments to secure to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty the use of the several State canals connected with the navigation of the lakes or rivers, traversed by or contiguous to the boundary line between the possessions of the High Contracting Parties, on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the United States."

I think it is clear that the difficulty lies with the Federal Government. This is an abuse which I consider ought to be remedied; and I imagine it would be if proper representations were made by our Government to the American authorities. It is a great disadvantage to the Canadian lumber trade, as to send lumber to New York in American barges costs from $6 to $7, and sometimes $7.50 per thousand, while our Canadian forwarders would be willing to take it through at $5 per thousand. We are obliged to pay $1 in gold in duty, and from $1.50 to $2 extra on freight. American bargemen generally own their own barges; they load with coal, and wait for the first opportunity when they can obtain a tow towards Canada; and so they go on, until they reach Montreal or Ottawa. Having discharged their coal, they load with lumber and return. When this treaty was made Canadian forwarding companies purchased plant to compete for the carrying trade, and to-day from 25 to 30 steamers, and from 200 to 300 barges built at the time, are lying at various wharves, rotting. The trade is labouring under a great hardship, and I hope that the Government will take this matter in hand. And I cannot see that they will have any great difficulty in effecting a satisfactory arrangement. If the Federal Government of the United States has made this Treaty, and will not carry it out, I think that the country ought to know it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I think that the country does know it pretty well.

Mr. ROCHESTER—I am very glad to hear it, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that the Government will endeavour to obtain redress. If the obstacles cannot be removed, then $2 per thousand feet should be levied on the oak and pine which our American cousins send into the Dominion; and this would be what I would call reciprocity.

I am not prepared with statistics, but I can tell the Hon. Premier that a large quantity of American oak and white pine is sent to the Quebec market; and I am credibly informed that, whereas the only profitable trade that will be transacted during the present year, as far as I can see, will be in deals, Americans are preparing to send a large quantity of them to the Quebec market. If this be the case I think there is the stronger reason why $2 per thousand should be levied on their lumber coming into Canada, while such a sum is collected on Canadian timber shipped to the United States. I am one of those who are in favour of free-trade, but I cannot endorse the sentiments of my hon friend from North York in this regard, for I hold that a system of free-trade on the one side, and protection on the other, is one that does not suit the interests of this or any other country. The lumber interest is perhaps second to none other in the Dominion, and under these circumstances I think I am perfectly justified in saying that it ought to have the fostering care of the Government and be protected as much as possible.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—If my hon friend would look at page 368 of the Trade Returns, he would find that the entire sawn lumber entered from the United States, was only worth $141,000, and that on it were paid $20,000 in duties.

Mr. ROCHESTER.

Mr. ROCHESTER—Have you the figures for square timber?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The square timber entered was valued at $256,000.

Mr. ROCHESTER—What was paid on it?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The mere cost of transit.

Mr. ROCHESTER—Was duty paid on it?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It was shipped through; and the more of it that comes the better.

Mr. ROCHESTER—I see that lumber and timber of all kinds, round, hewn and not otherwise manufactured, are entered free. I cannot see how the timber mentioned paid duty.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Squared timber is free.

Mr. ROCHESTER—I think the First Minister will agree with me, that this affects our market to a great extent.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Not in the least.

Mr. ROCHESTER—Our trade is very largely in squared timber in this part of the country; and the Americans take it to the Quebec market for sale. Their pine is good timber, and I know that last year quite a large quantity of it was sent from Michigan to Quebec.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—So much the better.

Mr. ROCHESTER—I must confess that I must be dull of understanding if this is the case. If the Premier shows that he is right I will admit that I am wrong; but if he or any other hon. gentleman on the floor of this House will prove that it is proper that we should pay duty on timber sent into the United States, while American timber is admitted into Canada free to compete with us in our own market, I would like to hear it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Does not the hon. gentleman see that it supplies a vast amount of trade to our shipping? It is that which induces the Americans to bring the grain from Chicago through our canals, and so increases the shipping trade at Quebec, and acts advantageously to the country.

Mr. ROCHESTER—Does not our lumber going to the United States benefit their carrying trade? It is the same thing.

An Hon. Member—They don't see it.

Mr. ROCHESTER—They don't want to see it. The hon. member for North York stood up as the advocate of the agriculturists in this House, and I think the farmers ought to be obliged for the compliments he paid them. But I cannot see how he can go back to his constituents, and in view of the duty they have to pay to get over the stone wall, tell them it is to their interest to maintain the present system. I think they should have protection, and that it would be the most reasonable thing imaginable for them to have it, especially if the United States will not deal fairly and honestly with us in this matter of reciprocity. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman that the imposition of the same duties as they impose upon our goods is retaliation, and there is no doubt that the United States is experiencing depression as well as Canada. England has suffered in the same way, together with other nations in Europe. But so long as the Americans can put a duty on goods sent in by their neighbours, and escape a like impost when they export to other countries, there is no danger of their becoming bankrupt.

With regard to the lumber interest, which is second in importance, I think it ought to be protected as well as the agricultural industry. The agriculturists raise their corn, wheat, oats and flour, and the lumbermen are the consumers. The one cannot get along without the other. The lumber trade brings in a vast amount of gold into this country, and therefore deserves and ought to have the fostering care of the Government; and I hope that the Ministry will endeavour to find out where the trouble lies with regard to this forwarding business.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The trouble lies very near the hon. gentleman.

Mr. ROCHESTER—My hon. friend must excuse me; I am bad at guessing. With regard to the difference of freight, it would only pay the duty the Americans receive from us. On the other hand, speaking of the coal trade, the same barges that come here loaded with coal could return with our lumber, and our barges taking lumber to the United States could bring back coal, which by such an arrangement could be landed on our wharves at $1 per ton less than at present. I don't know how this would suit some of my Lower Province friends, but such would be the result.

I will not detain the house further than to say that I hope this discussion will lead to some benefit to the trade, and that the gentlemen who have enunciated free-trade principles will so change their minds as to grant what is right to all parties. We want nothing more than we ought to have, and which I think it is our duty to demand. If this matter were left to the Local Governments I think there might be trouble in obviating the difficulty, but while it is in the hands of the Federal Government there ought to be no misunderstanding, and our forwarders should be put on the same footing as those of the United States.

Mr. DAVIES—When speaking to the resolution of the hon. member for Bothwell asking for an enquiry into the causes of the commercial depression, I said that although the Province I come from was nearly altogether Free-trade, and that I myself was a Free-trader, yet I recognized the necessity in some instances of fostering manufactures, and that if it could be shown we could fairly give infant manufactures a small degree of protection, I would not oppose it. I listened attentively to the speeches made on both sides, and have come to the conclusion that instead of requiring protection they are already too much protected. The hon. gentlemen from Ontario must not think that protection would be a benefit to them alone, and that there are no people in the Maritime Provinces to whom it would be a boon. In the Province I come from we rely mainly upon agriculture. We also build ships and have our fisheries, but owing to sparse population they are not prosecuted to a large extent. In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the bulk of the ships are built for export; we build them and send them to England with a cargo and sell them. There is actually a tax on that industry, which was imposed some two years ago. I objected to it at the time, but the hon. member for Yarmouth and other hon. gentlemen took the ground that, as lighthouses and harbours of refuge were constructed for the benefit of owners, that interest should make some return. Our ships, as I have stated, are not built for trading, and it therefore seems to me that no tax should be imposed on our raw materials. The proper way to sustain the lighthouses would be a slight harbour duty.

The hon. member for Hamilton referred to continental Europe and the United States as instances of the beneficial results of protection, but no statistics were given to show that those nations are as prosperous as Free-Trade England, which has prospered to an enormous extent since she inaugurated her present fiscal policy. Wages have advanced 100 per cent. and all classes appear in a good condition. The hon. gentleman also says that no man could be found in the country who would be unwilling to sustain the manufacturers to a certain degree. I think they are already sustained up to that degree. The raw material comes in free, and they have a protective tariff of 17½ per cent.; and if they cannot manufacture with that protection they had better take to farming.

There are also other interests to which protection would be a great boon. The hon. member for Pictou, on the motion for a protective duty on coals made by the hon. member for Cape Breton, pointed out that the tax would come out of the consumers of Ontario, and would be unfair to them. He further showed that the geographical distance is such that it is not our natural market for coal, that the consumers would naturally look to the United States, and that a duty of $3 a ton would not divert the trade to Ontario.

The hon. member for North York spoke very contemptuously about our coal. We have two kinds of coal—bituminous and steam—the one produced at Sydney being the best. The other kind is not good for house purposes, and I suppose it was that kind the hon. member saw at Toronto. The distance is so great we could not compete with United States coal in the Ontario markets, and a tax on this article would only be a burden on the consumer without benefiting the Lower Province coal interest. If we attempt to tax coal the people of Ontario have a right to expect a tax on our fisheries, and we would have to give them up to the Americans.

I listened with great interest to the speech of the hon. member for Montreal Centre. He said there had been a combination of Maritime members who forced the Government to abandon a policy of moderate protection. The hon. member for Halifax, as one of the leading supporters of the Government, seemed to know nothing about it. The fact is a few Maritime members—ten of them—met in the lobby. We heard deputations were coming from the manufacturers of Ontario and Quebec, and using pressure on the Government. We thought it was quite right we should go down and wait on the Premier. He kindly received us, and we had a talk with him. As for pressure, we did not dare to use it. We merely said the tariff having been increased, and the depression being temporary we thought at present an increase of duties was not required and would not be acceptable to our constituents. One or two members who are not in the habit of speaking in this House, but have great influence with the party, said they would not support the Ministry on that point. I would not have spoken of this matter if capital had not been of it in the press of Ontario and Quebec. There was no pressure brought to bear on the Government to compel them to abandon an increase of duties.

The hon. member for North Norfolk in a review of the question came to the conclusion that the protection the manufacturers enjoy at present is ample. I think that was a wise conclusion. He also spoke of the way the North conquered the South, and attributed it to the fact that the North had the manufactures, but it must be remembered that the South was crushed by the money it had contributed to the North under the protective system. I think it is unfair a few eastern manufacturers should be bolstered up at the expense of the farmers of the West and South. The hon. member for Toronto Centre took the ground that this slaughtering, as he termed it, came from England and not from the United States, and he wishes to put on a discriminatory duty against Great Britain. I, for one, would never agree to it. We owe too much to her to discriminate against her in that way. He also said the ease with which young men got credit in England induced a great many to go into business who should have remained out of it. My experience is they are not so ready to give credit in Great Britain, and that it is quite as easy to get it in the United States. I think, with the hon. member, it is a pity, where we have so much fine land under forest, that men should be attracted to the cities instead of induced to cultivate the soil.

Mr. DAVIES.

A good deal of the present inflation has been caused by too much banking. I know it is so in my own Province. Men of business find they can make more by investing in bank stock than in business. Banks make 20 per cent., which is more than any legitimate business can earn. From this cause there is too much money invested in banking, and it is given out freely to very many young men who would be much better occupied in other occupations. They get respectable young men to furnish good security, and then advance the money with which they start in business.

Mr. PLUMB—I listened to the able speech of the Finance Minister with deep interest, and I thought I could read between lines an idea which had been changed at the last moment—a disposition to concede to the manufacturers that which they had been loudly asking for; but I have no doubt the exigencies of party at the last moment induced him to change a policy which I think would have been hailed by the country with great satisfaction. I am very gratified, however, to find the tone of the Finance Minister so changed from that of his former Budget Speeches. He gives us now a more hopeful view of the situation.

Causes outside of us have brought the present depressed condition of business upon us, but we are obliged to deal with it quite as closely and with quite as much attention as if we had brought it upon ourselves. In all the arguments that have been addressed to the House upon free-trade, there have constant assertions that there has been an attempt upon the part of those who maintain opposite views to the Government, to obtain a high protective tariff—a Chinese Wall of protection. I have never heard of any such claim; I have never heard that it was desired to imitate the country on the other side of the border; I am not aware of any such proposition being made. I have heard of nothing more than a small increase in the present tariff asked for, which would not throw any additional burthen on the people. But scarcely a gentleman who has spoken on the other side of the question, has failed to make use of the strongest free-trade arguments, quoting from Mr. Wells and the Chicago Tribune. The latter was first quoted by the Finance Minister, and no doubt the circulation of the paper would be largely increased by the importance that has been attached to its articles by the hon. gentleman. It is certain, as far as I know anything of the condition of the country, and the situation in Ontario, that something was expected from the Government—some declaration of policy recognizing an existing trouble, something like holding out the hand of sympathy to the suffering and struggling manufacturers. I know that there has been the greatest possible disappointment felt, and it will make itself manifest to this House from every quarter of that Province. The question of free-trade has been discussed at such length that I hardly think it is necessary to go into it further. The question of protection has also been ably presented. There are strong arguments to be used on each side, but it is difficult to find where absolute free-trade exists. I fail to see that any such policy is adopted by any country, and when it is I have no doubt it will be brought forward as an example to this country by ardent free-trade advocates. I confess myself in favour of a moderate protective policy, which will give us a home demand for our agricultural productions—not based on the fluctuations of foreign markets. I have no hesitation in saying that such a policy as that will make us measurably independent of other countries, and we will hear very little of "slaughter markets." But, on the contrary, we will soon be at the mercy of foreign manufacturers if the policy of free-trade to be adopted. I was glad to hear the speech of the hon. member for North Norfolk. I fancy a better argument on our side of the question could not be addressed to the House, but I am very sure that the argument did not at all justify the conclusion. The hon. member said he believed that protection to a certain extent, and within certain limits, would be useful. He also said the iron trade of the United States owed its existence to protection, that the success of the manufacturers benefited the agricultural interest by creating a market for a variety of farm products, which, perhaps, might not be in demand under any other state of things, and that he was in favour of an increase in the 17½ per cent. tariff, until at the last moment he was converted by the arguments of the Finance Minister. The hon. member for Halifax thought we owed too great a duty to England to increase our tariff, and he also spoke of the Chinese Wall which was to be erected—which appears to be a favourite figure of speech with the hon. gentlemen who advocate free-trade. He said cities were merely places of exchange, while the hon. member for South Waterloo asserted that cities were great manufacturing places, and if cities were protected they would destroy the manufactures in small communities. Who will decide when two such great "medicine men" disagree? The hon. member for North Ontario brought forward volumes of statistics relative to the manufactures, finances and population of the United States, but what use are those statistics unless you have all the other conditions of the problem to show whether there is a tide of immigration flowing into the country; whether there is an inflated currency or other circumstances without which you can make these statistics support any position. You can prove anything by a Blue Book. The hon. member for South Waterloo said he did not start from the same stand-point as the hon. member for North Norfolk, but he also admitted that free-trade, pure and simple, was impossible; he was prepared to add 2½ per cent. to the tariff on articles manufactured in Canada which suffered most severely in competition with similar manufactures of the United States. He said the lumber trade had been killed by protection. I did not understand before that there was any protection upon the lumber trade; I understood there was an export duty on it. If I am wrong the hon. gentleman will correct me. He quoted from the Chicago Tribune to show that protection had crippled, and in fact destroyed the manufactures of the United States, and asserted that they could not export anything. In reply to that I have to say that a single manufactory in the United States is now exporting from 10,000 to 15,000 pieces of cotton per week to England, and selling them in a free-trade country. I think that disposes of the argument that the manufactures of a country that has a protective tariff cannot compete with a country where free-trade exists. Nobody here desires to defend the high protective tariff of the United States. The origin of that tariff was the commencement of the war in 1861. The people of New England and Pennsylvania had been struggling for protection, but they had always been kept in check by the free-trade interests of the South. When the Southern members of both Houses seceded from Congress they left a very large majority of the remaining members representing protective interests, and what was known as the Morrill tariff was adopted exclusively in the interests of manufacturers and prohibitory in many particulars. There was one item, for instance, imposing a duty of over 100 per cent. in the screw manufacture by which a few individuals made immense fortunes. That system of high tariffs to a very great degree became the rule of legislation in the United States, and was perpetuated in consequence of the irredeemable currency and the necessity of raising large taxes. It is perfectly true, as asserted, that the collection of that revenue did cost a great deal more than the actual net revenue itself, and gave rise to a great many fraudulent combinations. No one on this side of the House ever dreamed of advocating any such policy in this country.

Mr. PLUMB.

The whole country on our border is in a state of the greatest prostration, and there are causes which affect this prostration that are not due to the manufacturers or to any single branch of industry. There have been vast expansion, inflation and extravagance, everywhere; immense importations and heavy expenditures on unproductive railways; at this moment more than one-half of the latter in that country are non-productive; and these are the causes rather than any matters connected with the manufacturing industries. The iron interest has been entirely paralyzed, not only in the United States but also in England, and steel rails have fallen since a certain purchase of which we have heard so much, from 20 to 30 and even 40 per cent., and they can now be bought for about £8 per ton. My hon. friend from Waterloo was followed in the debate by the member for East Elgin, in what I may very properly term a strictly partizan speech, and I was surprised to hear his insinuation that a great many manufactories were closed about the time Parliament assembled, and shortly after the meeting of the Board of Trade, as if there had been some preconcerted action in order to coerce this House into the adoption of some measure of relief. I fancy that if the hon. member would examine the balance sheets of those manufactories he would discover a much better reason for the stoppage of their works than the one he has suggested. The hon. member made the astounding and contradictory statement that the policy of my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition was more inclined to free-trade than that of the present Government, because the tariff has been advanced 2½ per cent. since they have taken office. He also made an extraordinary assertion that a tariff for France in the last century was made by Mr. Jefferson, afterwards President of the United States. I am not aware that the latter was ever in France on a mission having relation to the policy of its Government, and it is needless to say that he did not frame its laws.

France, I might further remark, owes the existence of its manufactures largely to its system of protection; has been enabled to meet the enormous financial burden imposed by the Franco-German war through this policy, coupled with the rigid economy of its people. He quoted Mr. Webster, of the United States, as an exponent of a free-trade policy in 1824; but I am not aware that the latter was ever a Free-Trader. He represented New England and a manufacturing interest for many years, and was opposed in Congress by a great advocate of free-trade, (Mr. Calhoun), and by the Free-Trade party.

My hon. friend from North York made a fervid oration, cracking his whip over the heads of hon. members on the other side of the House, some of whom he seemed to consider a little recalcitrant, and telling them that they must wheel into line because the question lay between free-trade and protection, the gauntlet having been thrown down, and I was not surprised to hear him make that declaration, although, notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's free-trade principles, he is an earnest and zealous supporter of a Government which has increased the tariff, since it came into power; this is a little contradictory, but we are told to expect contradictions on that side of the House. It is none of our funeral, as the phrase goes, and should give us no unhappiness.

I do not doubt at all, and never did question, that with our resources and latent wealth, we will survive this crisis; but I think that the suffering, which has befallen the country might have been greatly alleviated if a different policy had been pursued by the Government.

I have in my hand a paper which has relation to the argument that an increased duty on certain manufactures, would reduce the revenue and add to the burdens of taxation, I consider it a cogent answer to these representations.

"1st. How will an increase of the present duties effect the revenue as regards the special class of cotton goods, manufactured by ourselves, in stopping the importations of similar goods from the United States and England?

"The answer is that more than 70 per cent. of the goods at present made in our cotton mills are unbleached cottons; the importation of a similar class of goods from England has entirely ceased. The competition — a ruinous one to the Canadian manufacturers, as will be shown further on—is now with the United States solely.

“The Canadian manufacturers, to keep possession of their own market, have reduced their prices to such low rates that the importations by wholesale houses from the United States has almost entirely ceased also. What importation there is at present is mostly by retailers, who buy from the American jobber in New York, Boston, Buffalo and Detroit. The amount of such importations must be very moderate, and their total exclusion cannot therefore affect the revenue to any appreciable extent, and would be much more than compensated for by the increase of the duties upon the goods which we do not ourselves manufacture, the importations of which will not be interfered with by an increase of the duties. This will also apply to the general importations of the country which are governed entirely by the condition of the trade of the country, and not by the rate of duty which may be imposed.

“2nd. How much increase of the present duties the condition of this manufacturing industry requires to ensure its continuance and preserve the capital invested in it, and how it would affect the consumer.

“As already stated the competition is with the United States solely. Cotton manufacturing in that country possesses all the advantages of an old and thoroughly well-established industry, with abundance of trained labor, and having the exclusive possession of their own market, it is now great and prosperous.

“Some of their mills are the largest in the world, running constantly on one class of goods, the cost of production is reduced to a minimum, so much so that very considerable exports of their goods are now being continuously made to England, India and China. American houses such as Messrs. A. T. Steward & Co., and Clafin, who have warehouses in Manchester, keep a stock of those goods on hand for sale. There bonâ fide purchases are being continuously made by English merchants. This is not an abnormal condition of American cotton manufacturing; on the contrary, it is their normal condition, to which they are now returning, after having been in an abnormal condition during a long period of the most extraordinary inflation in the history of any nation.

“The premium on gold at present nearly equals our duties and then our market is virtually free to them, while we are shut out from them by duties which are an effectual prohibition.

“The competition, which the Canadian manufacturer has thus to contend with, is a most unequal one.

“The present price at which what are called American Standard unbleached cottons can be imported, is 27 cents per lb. of cloth. The Canadian manufacturer must accept the same, or less sometimes, while the present cost of production to him is more; an increase of the duties of $7\frac{1}{2}$, making the duty 25 per cent. will not do much worse than save him from loss, or at least with the utmost economy in working, enable him to pay a very moderate dividend.

“The increased price, which the consumer would have to pay in consequence of such increase, could only be trifling; it is well known that such goods are generally sold by both the wholesale and retail merchants with little or no profit; and the benefit conferred by a growing manufacturing industry on the country can hardly be over-rated.”

Now a good deal has been said about the slaughter market, and the small quantity of American importations connected with it; it has also been argued that such a quantity could not affect our prices and our manufactures, but I say, that it makes no difference how small the quantity is, while the price is a most material consideration when these goods are offered for sale at a low figure. The Canadian manufacture is bound to meet that price, however small the amount offered for sale may be; and here lies the difficulty, the American imports having, moreover, the advantage of being free from duty, owing to the difference in value between their currency and the gold standard.

The condition of things which existed in the United States for sometime has changed; the price of living is reduced and we have no longer the advantages in our trade with them that we once enjoyed, the statement holds good particularly with regard to agricultural products, which they can now sell to us. We cannot compete with them.

Mr. PLUMB.

I do not think that any arguments in favour of protection, will change the policy adopted by the majority of the hon. members of this House; but I feel that it is my duty to place my views on record respecting this great question which has agitated the entire country. Almost every discussion that has taken place in this House during the present Session, has drifted into this subject in some shape or other, and all this proves the overwhelming interest taken in the issues which are at stake.

These issues are forcing themselves by their pressing importance upon the consideration of the public throughout the country and upon the earnest consideration of every member of this House. They cannot be put aside; but it is not for gentlemen who occupy the Opposition Benches to deal affirmatively with them now.

The responsibility devolves elsewhere, and not upon us. It rests with those who wield the "great majority of this House, and I must say for one that I hardly supposed that any influence could be brought to bear at the eleventh hour to cause a reversal of the policy—if it did cause such a reversal. I am surprised that with the large majority behind them, the Ministry, after having decided upon a policy, should have withdrawn it to the great disappointment of the country and to the great injury of some of the large industries, which I think it the duty of every Government, so far as it can consistently be done, to foster and promote.

Hon. Mr. POPE—Several gentlemen who have spoken on this question have stated that a large portion of their constituents are farmers. I too, Sir, represent an agricultural constituency, and am a farmer myself, and I think I know something about the feelings of the farmers in that section of the country. They have desired reciprocity between Canada and the United States, and have felt that it would serve their interests better than anything else. But they have abandoned that as impracticable under existing circumstances. They also entertain the sentiments held by the cities of Montreal and Hamilton in relation to the fiscal policy of the country, because they believe that the establishment of manufactures, with such a tariff as is necessary to protect them, would be to the general interest. It has been satisfactory during the debate to observe the endorsement expressed by the whole Opposition of the policy that has been steadily pursued since 1858. In that year a system of incidental protection, of fostering the industries of the country for revenue purposes was inaugurated. There have been changes in the tariff since then; articles have been removed from the free list; but we continued, and after the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty we progressed finely. Our progress, we have been told, during the last ten or fifteen years was greater than any time previous, and that was with the same protection we now have. That is perfectly true. From 1858 dates almost the very commencement of our manufactures. What did the Hon. Sir A. T. Galt tell the House at that time? He said the country was in a most dangerous condition—that we relied upon the agricultural community, but that if we would foster our manufacturers, in case of a bad harvest we would have something else to fall back upon. But I want to refer again to those 10 or 12 years, for I take a great deal of pride in the policy pursued, which we had to fight for and maintain in the face of great opposition. The policy inaugurated in 1858 we continued to 1861, and afterwards we got on very well, these gentlemen say. But why? We have not exactly the same tariff to-day. The war was raging on the other side of the line, and that war served as protection to our manufacturers. While that conflict lasted they did not complain nor ask for anything more; but when the war ceased and they were working back into a normal condition, when labour began to grow cheap and the United States built this Chinese Wall between us, our manufacturers began to cry aloud. And I will tell the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury Benches that they are very much to blame for the cry heard to-day. They led the manufacturers to believe that some change in the tariff was contemplated. My hon. friend from Norfolk declared that he had come prepared to vote for a higher tariff—that although on the 23rd he felt we ought to have more protection he changed his views on hearing the speech of the Hon. Minister of Finance. That speech must have been a very powerful one, for its result was to satisfy everyone in favour of protection on the other side that they were mistaken. But these gentlemen will find they have not satisfied the country—that the people cannot turn round in these days as they have done. They will soon experience the result of deceiving the country by promising—I have heard it said such a promise was made—greater protection to our manufactures. In view of that hope held out by the hon. gentlemen opposite our manufacturers have held on, kept their factories running, and have gone to the very end of their tether. If they had been told in the first place that no change was contemplated, much of the disappointment and trouble would have been avoided.

If any one in this House made a protection speech, perhaps without fully realizing it, it was the Hon. Finance Minister. Part of that speech had no doubt been prepared for a different object than that for which it was delivered. That part sounded very well. He told us that all his lifetime he had felt that some protection ought to be afforded.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. POPE—I think you said that; but I will quote from the speech:

“I do not entirely agree with those gentlemen who maintain that there is no ground for the champions of the protective tariff. I have always myself been of opinion that, in a new country like this, there is considerable force in the argument that it is not well to allow ourselves to depend exclusively upon foreign manufactures, and if we do there is some chance that we may be supplied with the mere refuse of exportations. * * * I am inclined to believe that, under certain

Hon. Mr. POPE.

“circumstances, a revenue tariff may be advantageously imposed, and may afford considerable benefit in overcoming certain temporary obstacles which are invariably in the way of infant manufacturers.”

Well, Sir, I don't know that I have made out my case, but I cannot but believe that when the hon. gentleman spoke thus he felt in his own mind that he had a doubt whether some protection of manufactures was not necessary.

I was going on to say that while the war in the United States was in progress, the high price of labour and cost of production in that country were all we required to protect our industries. But when that war was over we found the Americans sending their goods to our market in spite of ourselves.

Now, I do not complain, and I do not ask for anything more than to be placed on equal terms with them. They are determined to keep us out of their markets; is it fair play that we should allow them such unrestricted access to ours while this state of things continues? I presume our factories may run, but the manufacturing community are greatly disappointed. Notwithstanding the speech of the First Minister in Dundee, the speeches he has made in this country and the intimations given by the Finance Minister have led the manufacturers to believe there would be a certain increase in the tariff, and believing this the announcement in the Budget Speech will be ten times worse on them than if no encouragement had been given.

I would not have risen to speak if I had not wanted to show that the manufacturers under this policy are actually receiving less protection than they did before, because we were placed in a different position. In order to place us in exactly the same position, the tariff must be raised.

I am not prepared to say that to some extent the farmers might not also be protected. For instance, suppose you put a small duty on Indian Corn, you would stimulate the production of coarse grains in this country, and consequently to that extent it would be advantageous to the agriculturist. If the Government had come down with their first resolution they would have been more likely to retain the confidence of the country than they will by this policy.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the debate had now lasted three days, and if all the hon. gentlemen who desired to speak on the subject had expressed their views, he would take this opportunity to address the House.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER quite agreed with the hon. gentleman, but could not agree to his making a second speech, when he could have done so on the amendment. He would be happy to listen to the hon. gentleman when, under the rule of the House, his speech would be in order.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am more surprised than ever I was in my life to find the hon. gentleman afraid to hear the Finance Minister reply to his speech, and taking advantage of what he conceives to be the rule of the House to prevent him from speaking. In all our practice, during twenty years' experience, I have never known a Finance Minister to be prevented from making a reply to the attacks of the Opposition upon his Budget Speech. I call the attention of the House to the fact that the hon. gentleman is afraid to hear the Finance Minister.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I am not afraid to meet any hon. gentleman opposite either in this House or outside of it. I think I have not given any hon. gentleman ground to impute cowardice to me in meeting them whenever or wherever they pleased to discuss public questions. What I do say is this—as the hon. gentleman refused to take the opportunity which, under the rules of the House, he had to meet any statements on this side, while we had a chance to reply to his remarks, I hope he will not press the delivery of his speech at a time when he knows he cannot be answered, but will avail himself of the opportunity that will occur on Tuesday next to make any remarks he pleases.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said the hon. member for Cumberland was, no doubt, right; but he had never known the rule to be enforced. To give the Finance Minister a chance to speak he would move that the debate be adjourned.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I am very sorry indeed that the Hon.

Leader of the Opposition did not allow me the customary and invariable right to reply to their criticisms, and that I have been indebted to the courtesy of the hon. member for Chateaugay for affording me this opportunity to speak. I shall avail myself of it, as it is not my intention to allow the charges of the hon. gentleman to remain unanswered for two or three days longer which was their object.

With respect to the general question of protection or free-trade, no doubt, that will be brought up, and in such a fashion that those hon. gentlemen shall not be able to shirk the issue. They shall have a decided vote one way or the other, that they may depend on, and the hon. member for Cumberland will find neither he nor his right hon. colleague has gained anything by refusing to meet the fair and square issue which the Government has laid before the House and country. The first charge is that the Government were chiefly responsible for the depression which prevails in the country. It is a very easy and a very common trick for demagogues of high and low degree to charge the Government with being responsible for hard times, but fortunately for us and unfortunately for the pair of demagogues opposite—

Several Members—Order! Order!

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—What I have to say is this, if the hon. member for Cumberland had possessed any prudence or delicacy, or any sort of regard for the feelings of the hon. gentleman beside him, that is the very last charge he would have made against the present Government. If the present crisis is fairly due to us; if this or any other Government is responsible for such disasters, what is to be said of the terrible crises which prevailed in Canada from 1855 to 1866, during the time the hon. member for Kingston was responsible for the management of the affairs of this country. I leave the hon. member for Cumberland to settle that with his friend and leader at his leisure. I do not pretend to say the right hon. gentleman was responsible for it. I do not think he was responsible for the inflation resulting from the large expenditures on railways any more than I admit we are responsible for the disasters which have arisen from causes over which we have no control. The charges of the hon. member for Cumberland are not new to me. For a year past he has been formulating them on the stump and at election meetings in Ontario. I did not deem it worth while to reply to them until we could meet face to face in this House. The hon. gentleman has been good enough to give us a list of the various causes to which the present distress is due. Some of them are of a very remarkable character. The first is the success of the present Government in destroying the measure for constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway. In the first place we can show that most preposterous measure never had any life. It was an addled egg from the commencement. It was impossible for us to do it any injury for it fell still-born. Then the hon. gentleman said the declaration in the Speech from the Throne in 1874 that there would be a deficit in the revenue, powerfully contributed to the present distress, and also injured our credit as was well shown, I suppose, by the success of the Canadian loan floated in the June immediately succeeding. I have had the opinion of English capitalists as to the measures which I brought down on that occasion, and the policy to which this Government had recourse, and that opinion was one of hearty approval of our conduct. The third cause which he was good enough to allege was the letter of Mr. Potter with respect to Canadian securities. I do not believe we were affected by that letter, but it may well have been that the credit of Canada was more or less injured by the unfortunate fact which alone gave force to that communication—that the two great railroads, in which so much English capital was locked up at that time had paid no dividends.

And that fact no doubt had an injurious effect on Canadian securities, though I need hardly say this Government was in no way responsible for it. Another reason advanced was that we had entered into a contract to build the Canadian Pacific Railroad in so many years. How an engagement entered into by us to build two-thirds of that road in fifteen years from date, could have injuriously affected the credit of the country when we have inherited from our predecessors the legal obligation to build it in ten, part of which time had elapsed, is a matter I leave to that hon. gentleman to explain at his leisure. He was good enough to attack me with respect to a change of policy in 1874, I say there was no change of policy on that occasion. Our policy was to raise an additional \$3,000,000 of revenue and we laid down certain broad lines on which we were to obtain it. We agreed to make the duty $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. instead of $16\frac{2}{3}$, making an alteration to about five-sixths of one per cent., which as it brought more revenue necessarily involved the abandonment of some minor duties. The hon. gentleman from Cumberland has called attention to the fact that I had imposed a tax on shipping materials at a rate of one dollar per ton, which he alleges injuriously affected this industry. During the year 1875 these duties brought us in the sum of \$29,500 the total shipping built in that year, amounting to 150,000 tons so that duty was not equal to one dollar, but to 20 cents. per ton. The hon. gentleman only exaggerated five fold. I am perfectly willing to admit that that is no great exaggeration for him to indulge in; I am glad even to find that foundation of fact for his financial statements. It is a very uncommon thing to find so large a percentage of fact in his statements as twenty cents on the dollar.

The hon. gentleman advanced three charges which might be described as serious, if they were true. First, he stated it was not necessary to impose any more taxes in 1874; Second, that our management of the bank deposits had increased inflation and increased depression; Third, it was not necessary to make either the loan of 1874 or the loan of 1875. If I have misstated the position of the hon. gentleman in these three points, I am open to correction; if not I shall proceed to comment on them. As to the first, I doubt whether, with the exception of the hon. gentleman himself, there is another man in the House who would state that it was not necessary in 1874 to impose further taxation. What were the arguments advanced by the hon. gentleman? He argued that the imports of 1874 were so large that it was clear we would have obtained, without additional increases in taxation, sufficient to meet all our engagements. What was the fact? The imports of 1873 were actually $200,000 more than the imports of 1874. What was the actual revenue for 1873? Mr. Tilly's own estimate for 1873 which was, I believe, substantially correct, was $21,740,000, to which might be added about $260,000 for Prince Edward Island, making a total revenue of about twenty-two millions and, as was abundantly shown at the time, the revenue which was received up to the first of April left no doubt that there was not the slightest ground for anticipating more revenue than $22,000,000 on the 30th of June, 1874, without recourse to additional taxation. The hon. gentleman was good enough to say that the fact that the revenue received under the new tariff for the first half of 1874-75 was clear and sufficient proof of his position. For the special information of the hon. gentleman, I may state that although it is true that the imports for the first half of the financial year, 1874, amounted to $69,585,000; the imports for the same period, 1873, during which there was no increased tariff, amounted to $71,068,000, being $1,482,000 excess on 1874. How, therefore, the fact of the large revenue obtained under the increase of the tariff on a diminished import could prove the assertion that we would obtain sufficient revenue without increase in the tariff, I must leave to my hon. friend to explain to the House. But the hon. gentleman was extremely emphatic as to the iniquity of the Government in the management of bank deposits, not only here but in other places. And the hon. gentleman stated that by our mischievous management of deposits, we had increased inflation and increased the depression. I will read to the House the statement of the total amount of our deposits credited to the banks in Canada during the year 1874-5:—

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

July	$9,659,045.
August	7,930,194
September	8,844,841
October	9,983,107
November	9,698,074
December	11,475,608
January	11,595,728

February	9,300,856
March	9,066,184
April	9,784,223
May	9,955,057
June	9,700,903

Now, I will only call the attention of the House to one fact in connection with that matter, that the largest discrepancy remarked there is a sum of, as nearly as possible, $3,500,000. When we came into office we found that there was a total deposit of $8,000,000 to the credit of the Government, of which $4,396,820.08 bore no interest. We found also, on looking back over the preceding year that the deposits in the hands of the late Government had ranged as follows in the year 1872-3:—

October	$4,660,057 16
November	4,064,257 96
December	4,537,560 54

1873 :—

January	5,710,522 86
February	7,102,753 81
March	7,709,701 33
April	8,145,188 33
May	9,487,575 27
June	9,405,580 97
July	7,760,748 89
August	7,420,192 96
September	6,500,695 79
October	7,685,625 66

Increasing slowly towards the end of the month. I desire to call the attention of the House to these figures. The allegation was this: that we, by our policy in dealing with the banks, increased inflation had increased depression. The fact of the matter is, that there was no inflation whatever after this Government entered office. Before we entered office the tide began to ebb, having in fact attained its maximum height in the year which ended 30th June, 1873. After that time the imports began to decrease, although the accession of Prince Edward Island would seem for a time to conceal it. The anticipation of the tariff of 1874 concealed it still more, but the highest point was reached in the year ending on the 30th of June, 1873. Both relatively and absolutely the fluctuation which took place in deposits was greater the last year, during which these hon. gentlemen were in power, than at any time since we came into office. The highest fluctuation was three and a half millions with us; their highest was nearly five millions and a half per annum. Although I do not say that the addition or withdrawal of two or three millions of dollars to the deposits seriously affects trade, I consider it was a dangerous thing to add five millions and a half to the deposits of the country during a period of inflation. It is utterly impossible that we could have contributed to that inflation from the simple fact that it had reached its highest point several months before we took office at all. Our deposits were increased, moreover, from two causes which in no way contributed, as far as we were concerned, to any inflation whatever. There was a large expansion of circulation and we were obliged to keep a larger sum at ordinary cash than in other years. In the next place I had agreed to pay off the Seigniorial Indemnity Fund, and I had to bring over an amount of money for that, but so far from contributing to the inflation, it was a direct benefit to the whole community. I borrowed the money at four and a half per cent., and released money on which we were paying six per cent., and added three millions to the permanent capital of the country. So far from these deposits fluctuating arbitrarily, they were unusually steady as compared with the range of deposits under the regime of the hon. gentlemen opposite. This is not the time to enter into a prolonged discussion on the bank policy of the hon. gentleman; but under existing circumstances it will be necessary for this or any other Government to keep very considerable amounts of money on deposit. Public works of great magnitude are being carried on throughout the Dominion, and it is necessary, therefore, to reserve considerable sums at different points. In the next place, as long as we possess a legal tender note system it will be absolutely necessary to have command of considerable funds, in addition to the gold reserve, to meet fluctuations to which we are liable. In the third place, we have a huge expenditure compared with the ordinary expenditure in the redemption of debt and ordinary outlay.

During the year 1874-5 no less than $42,000,000 in hard cash were required for the objects I alluded to, and payments ranged from three to five and eight, and in one case to fully twelve million of dollars within the space of a single month. Under these circumstances the Government must reserve three or four millions at least at call, in order to meet these obligations without disturbing more than it is desirable to disturb their deposits with the bankers and without injury to trade. I come now to the allegation that the loans which I effected in 1874 and 1875 were quite unnecessary. I request special attention to this statement and hat it involves. The hon. gentleman from Cumberland—

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I might save the hon. gentleman a great deal of trouble by telling him that no such statement was ever made. I said that according to the hon. gentleman's own statement, he obtained in his loan of 1874 a very much larger amount of money than he required, and he gave to the House as a reason for it, that it was unwise to go frequently to the money markets of the world. That was the statement I made, Sir, and I quoted the statement of the hon. member for Montreal West to show that when on the second occasion he put a new loan on the market it was for the purpose of avoiding calling upon the banks for the money he had loaned them.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—The allegation is then, first, that I did not require to borrow so large an amount in 1874; and second, that I borrowed money in 1875 too soon.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—That is the statement.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I will deal with both those statements. With respect to the loan of 1874, which loan, as the House knows, realized seventeen millions and a half dollars, I have to say with that loan I paid off ten millions of dollars indebtedness, and that I also defrayed charges on public works amounting to seven millions or thereabouts. These two things swallowed up the whole proceeds of the loan, and the payments were made within the year 1874-75. I think the hon. gentleman must have paid very little attention to the public accounts if he maintains that the loan borrowed in 1874-5 was too large and more than the interests of the country required. As to the loan of 1875, it is quite true that I antedated that by a few months for reasons I will not now repeat in extenso; but to say that that loan was not necessary under the existing circumstances is to show great blindness to the peculiar position in which the country was placed in June and July of last year. The hon. gentleman called the attention of the House to the fact that we had on deposit in Canadian banks and at the London agencies in June, 1875, fifteen millions of dollars—the sum was a little over fourteen millions—but the hon. gentleman, although he ought to have known it; although the fact had been stated again and again, chose to suppress the all-important circumstances that in July, 1875, I was pledged to pay twelve millions of dollars. And when he gave the House to understand that I provided this money in advance of what the country would require, keeping out of sight the payments in July, 1875, the hon. gentleman did his best to convey to the country a false impression of the purpose for which that accumulation was made or intended. He has accused me before, and has repeated the charge that I dealt very harshly and unfairly with the Canadian banks by the circular which I issued in June, 1875. What were the facts? Not only in my Budget Speech of that year had I explained that the whole of the sum borrowed in 1874 would be consumed, and I would be left with nothing beyond our original deposits, but all through March, April and May I had by letter and by personal communication sent warning to the banks that money must be provided after the first of July. To say I was not bound to give these gentlemen notice, or say that I did anything wrong in giving them notice, is to advance a very strange doctrine. I am not bound to provide money for the banks, but I am bound to give them reasonable notice, and that I did. It was absolutely necessary I should know early in June to what extent they could respond to the demand I was about to make, and if they thought the call was likely to prove embarrassing to the trade of the country, and that it would be difficult to supply all the money I required, it would have been far too late to make any provision to prevent inconvenience if I had not taken this precaution. The actual fact was this:—The moment the banks stated to us that under the circumstances it was likely to incommode them, I made provision to leave them undisturbed, and that contributed greatly towards relieving the distress which prevailed in commercial circles, not from our circular, but from the great wave of commercial distress that passed over England at the same time. On the whole, our banks passed through the ordeal very well; only one or two very badly managed concerns failed. Generally they would have been ready to pay us, but if we had removed these deposits we would have seriously curtailed their power of affording accommodation at that critical period. We therefore did not disturb the banks; the only bank we drew upon to any considerable extent was the Bank of Montreal, which had taken such precautions and made such arrangements that they could supply our wants without curtailing their accommodation to Canadian customers. I believe I am justified in stating that this bank not only supplied us with all we required for our purposes, but brought large sums into Canada from outlying reserves, with which it materially assisted other banks and the Canadian public at large; but, Sir, with regard to the loan itself, it must be remembered that it became apparent in July and August that we were going to lose a very considerable amount of revenue which we had expected to receive; also that the various public works would consume a larger amount of money than might have been anticipated under ordinary circumstances, owing to the reason, which is perfectly well known to all persons acquainted with these matters, that in cheap or hard times, contractors are apt to push forward works much faster than during ordinary seasons, making consequently greater demands than usual on the Treasury.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

On the 10th of February of the present year we had in England the sum of about $13,500,000—$10,000,000 or $11,000,000 in cash at interest, and $2,500,000 ordinary cash; and as I only borrowed $12,500,000 in London I ask you to reflect in what position we would have been to discuss the subject placed before us if I had not made the loan I did in November last. We would have had to meet the enormous engagements to which I have alluded, and also many contingencies. We would have had in hand eight or nine hundred thousand dollars against which there were claims, which would have twice swallowed it up if the parties to whom we are indebted chose to present them. I think that single statement will suffice to show the House that I exercised a wise judgment in making that loan in order to fill our Treasury; and that when considered calmly and leisurely it will be found to have been the best policy it was possible for us to pursue.

Now, the House is acquainted with our present position; and I ask hon. members to reflect on what would have been the result had we followed the advice tendered by the hon. gentleman, who would have had no loan made, and no taxes imposed. Had we done so, Sir, for the years 1873-4, we would have had a deficit of not less than $1,300,000; for the year 1875 a deficit of $1,700,000, or perhaps more, for by no possibility could the tariff as it then stood have produced more than twenty-two millions; and as to the current year I leave it to the hon. gentleman's own imagination to decide what the deficit under these circumstances, would have been. Briefly our position would have been this:—We would have had three successive deficits and if we had borrowed any money at all, we would have been compelled to exhaust every penny of our English guarantee; our credit would have been practically broken, and we would have had a repetition of the disgraceful condition, in which the country found itself during the year 1866, when Canadian five per cent's were quoted on the London market at 75 and 76 cents on the dollar, and the Canadian Minister of Finance standing in this place, was obliged to rise and tell the House that he was unable to borrow money in London on the credit of Canada at eight per cent. I advise the House to look on this picture, and then on that, to see in what position we would have been placed by the hon. gentleman's policy, and the position in which we stand owing to the policy we have pursued.

Now, I hardly wish to detain the House at this moment by dealing with a sub-charge made by the hon. gentleman, respecting the Ontario Bank; but, at the sametime, I am afraid that I must trouble the House with the actual facts of the case. I took down the hon. gentleman's figures, and he can correct me if I am wrong; he said that in June the sum of $660,000 was on deposit, without interest, in that Bank.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I read from the Gazette.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—The hon. gentleman will excuse me for saying that he did not understand the Gazette; if the hon. gentleman had taken the trouble to look at the head of the Gazette's columns, he would have seen that certain sums are deposited at call; but it is not necessarily implied that these amounts do not bear interest.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—It does.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—It does not.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Then the hon. gentleman has made a new arrangement with the banks.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—If the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to look at the heading, he will see the words are "not with interest," or "without interest," but "at call," or "not at call."

Now, on the 30th of June, according to the return from the Department, the Ontario Bank had $376,000, not $660,000 at ordinary cash and $340,000 bearing interest. The hon. gentleman has been deceived owing to the simple fact, that he chose to consider that the Gazette stated not what it really announced, but what he for political purposes, wished to interpret it as announcing. As for the allegation, that this Institution made $50,000 profit during that year out of the funds thus placed at its disposal, all I can say is, that if the hon. gentleman can teach any bank how to realize such a sum out of these funds, he is certainly hiding his light under a bushel in maintaining his present position. Any bank would gladly, under such circumstances, utilize his services, and give him one-half of the profits if he could inform it how its deposits could be turned to so valuable a purpose.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

During the whole of that year, the average amount this bank held nominally in cash, without interest, was about $360,000; and I beg to state in this respect, on the hon. gentleman's own showing, that money is of no use to a bank unless it knows that it can employ it undisturbed; and accordingly the greater part of that deposit was useless to the Ontario Bank. The reason why it was permitted to have this large balance was simply this: to provide funds for very large expenditures in Manitoba, and at Prince Arthur's Landing, at which point, it is our agent. I presume that every hon. gentleman in this House knows that in these outlying regions, we must provide large funds in excess of the ordinary requirements; and that such deposits can afford very little profits indeed to a bank; but suppose that the hon. gentleman was right, and that the $360,000, which is the average held during that year, were really available to the Ontario Bank, I would like to know very much in what possible way he would propose to make, with this sum, $50,000 profit a year; I am quite sure that the respected senator, who presides over this institution, would be still more glad to learn in what manner this could be done, and extremely willing if it could be shown, to make use of the financial abilities of my hon. friend, and obtain his services.

Now, Sir, if the House will examine the figures I gave, showing the total amounts held in the banks by these hon. gentlemen when in office, and the amounts held by us, hon. members will find that whereas the total difference between our highest and lowest deposit was but a little over three millions, the greatest difference between theirs was five and one-half millions, on a much smaller sum originally, or in other words, our total fluctuation did not exceed 35 per cent., while theirs was considerably in excess of 130 per cent, this being the proportion between four millions of original deposits, and nine and one-half millions, in the course of five or six months.

The hon. gentleman was good enough to compare me to Lord Wellington, when he appeared in the guise of General Distress giving the order—starve!—as being a very fair illustration of our policy; but I will help the hon. gentleman to another illustration. Had I adopted the policy he has implied, although he has not dared to say what his policy is on the question of free trade and protection, — I would have much rather resembled the famous highwayman, “who robbed the rich “and did bestow the money on those “who were poor and low,” with this trifling difference, that I would have robbed the poor and bestowed the money on the rich.

Well, I decline robbing the rich agriculturists and in particular I decline to do it on behalf of the poor and needy manufacturers, who occupy those squalid hovels which adorn the suburbs of Montreal, Hamilton, and every city of the Dominion. I feel as sincere pity and sympathy for the suffering employes, as the hon. gentleman can do; and I say, that if there was any just way of relieving these people, I would not shirk the responsibility of coming down to this House, and proposing such a measure. I do not, however, see that such relief can be extended without inflicting permanent injury on other classes throughout this country. The fact of the matter is this: we cannot help suffering more or less, from the mad financial revel—I can call it by no other name—which prevailed in Canada from 1870 to 1873. From the time of the admission of British Columbia into the confederation until the time of granting “better terms,” there seems to have been no thought in the minds of hon. gentleman opposite as to the manner in which they could best expend the public money, but they rather appeared to have been intent on getting the smallest returns for the largest possible expenditure, and although I would hardly like to impute even to them the design of deliberately laying traps and entanglements for their successors in office, still, I will say, that had they devoted their entire energies during the year previous to their retirement, to providing such entanglements for the Ministry that followed them they could not have succeeded better than they have done.

These hon. gentlemen inquire how we propose to meet the present crisis. I will tell them; it is not in a spirit of idle bravado, but that while recognizing its full weight and severity, we are prepared to measure the danger, and to take such steps as we believe best calculated in time, with patience and economy, to restore Canada to a state of prosperity. We have clearly shown the House our policy; I have pointed out what we did,—more particularly with reference to matters of administration and bank balances, to prevent mischief without stimulating an inflation, which I repeat, began before we first sat on those benches. To the best of our power we have maintained things on a level and we have given the banks and merchants of the country the opportunity—of which they may or not have availed themselves—of setting their houses in order. For the space of eighteen months, bank balances were left undisturbed, and although we informed them in advance of the necessity of reducing these balances at a certain fixed date, we even then took good care so to regulate the matter, that no banking institution in this country has any honest right to complain of the action of the Government in connection with the withdrawal of the deposits during the months succeeding July 1875.

I do not pretend to say that we can avert misfortunes which proceed from causes over which we have no control; nor that we can produce good results from the folly into which others may rush, but all things taken into consideration, I think that the House will find that we have done all in our power to aid the country without inflicting still more serious burdens than already exist upon the nation; to our policy in this respect we challenge the sharpest criticism of hon. gentlemen opposite, and we await with confidence the verdict of the country.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Mr. Speaker, I do not think that any higher compliment could have been paid to the remarks I ventured to offer to the House, on the financial statements contained in the Budget speech of the Hon. Finance Minister, than the temper in which these remarks were received by the Hon. First Minister of the Crown, on the occasion when they were delivered, and by the Hon. Minister of Finance to-night. The Hon. First Minister, in replying to the speech, in the course of which certainly I indulged in no unparliamentary expression, for I had in no respect exceeded the due courtesy of debate, ventured to use terms that were assuredly, if parliamentary, anything but polite. The hon. gentleman undertook to tell me that I did not understand the subject with which I had dealt the specific question of the sugar duties, to which I will again refer before I take my seat, and the Hon. Minister of Finance felt it necessary in that exhibition of passion, to which hon. gentlemen who are strong in the positions they take never have recourse, and never are driven—characterized my right hon. friend and myself as demagogues. I will not retort in kind, Sir, because I am aware, from a great deal of experience in public life, and of observation in and out of this Chamber, that intelligent men, whether in Parliament or outside of it, must come to the conclusion that when an hon. gentleman, engaged in the discussion of public questions, loses his temper, he gives the best evidence to the world that he has a losing cause. I shall not, therefore, imitate the hon. gentleman in that respect, but invite, as briefly as I can, the attention of the House to the feeble attempt the hon. gentleman has made to cover his retreat from the discussion in which we have been concerned. He has undertaken to question in the first place the accuracy of my statement in reference to the injury inflicted upon Canada by the destruction of the scheme for the construction of the Canada Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman cannot brand that project as preposterous unless he is also prepared to brand the ablest men in his own party in the same manner. The hon. gentleman, who sits through the power this Government has exercised, as Speaker of the Senate, is one of the gentlemen charged with having been engaged in a preposterous scheme; and the hon. gentleman knows that when the statement was before the country as to the amount of money and public land for which the Government were prepared to ask Parliament, the great body of the leading capitalists in Ontario and Quebec, embracing the ablest financial men in his own party, made a desperate struggle to secure an Act of Parliament by which they could obtain the construction of this work on the terms proposed. I say therefore, that it is not sufficient for hon. gentlemen to say that we were engaged in a preposterous scheme, which had no merits; these were sufficient, however, to require the combined energies of the enemies of the Government in and out of Canada in order to insure its destruction in the money market of the world. They accomplished their object, and when they did so by combined effort, they rode into power over the ruins of their country; and they gave to the people of Canada the best evidence, that there is no measure, however fraught with advantage to this country, which they were not prepared to trample under their feet, provided they could obtain power and office.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman says, that I charged them with being responsible for the hard times; and he alluded to the condition of Canada during the period of a former Administration, to prove that they have nothing to do with them, but I did not state then—nor do I state now—that they were entirely responsible. What I charged these hon. gentlemen with, and in connection with which I gave the House evidence that led me to come to the conclusion which I mentioned, was this:—that instead of having discharged the duties devolving upon them as statesman, with regard to a condition of the country, requiring wise and judicious statesmanship in order to alleviate the existing state of things, they had left no measure untried that was calculated to increase and deepen the distress which existed; this was the charge which I made. I do not say that there are not cycles of prosperity, followed by a severe condition of depression. I gave to the House succinctly the grounds which I believed had intensified this condition, and among them was the destruction of the scheme for the construction of the Pacific Railway, by which this great highway across the continent would be secured, and a $100,000,000 of foreign capital brought into this country, to cement and knit the Provinces together, a result which would have involved only an expenditure of $1,500,000 per annum. The hon. gentleman says, I am guilty of an absurdity in stating that they who have reduced the liability of Canada in the construction of this work to the extent of two-thirds of the former liability had imperilled our credit by the course they have taken. Does the hon. gentleman wish to ignore the difference between the scheme of the late Government and that of the present. The former scheme committed the Government to a distinct liability—a liability of $30,000,000, involving a taxation of $1,500,000 for interest; while the scheme of the hon. gentleman opposite commits us to an unreserved engagement for the construction of that line of railway in 15 years. The Finance Minister, who is driven to the position of asking intelligent men to contrast these two schemes, forgets there are men of intelligence in this House and out of it, or he would never have ventured such a statement. While in the one case every Canadian felt that the interest of the country was secured; in the other they feel that our good faith is pledged and revenue is mortgaged for an untold and indefinite sum of money to engage in the construction of a work for which the Government has not shown itself better qualified than a private company. Any intelligent man who looks at the engagements made, will see that the one scheme was fraught with advantage to the whole Dominion, while the other is fraught with a danger to our financial position, which must strike terror into the country.

The hon. gentleman says I charged him with having injured the credit of the country by his Budget speech, and by the speech from the throne. I charged him with having shaken the confidence of the people in the sound administration of public affairs, and with having taken a step eminently calculated to bring about precisely the same condition of affairs as exist to-day. He claimed to have negotiated a loan in England on favorable terms. But that was no answer when we remember that when those statements were falling from his lips, hon. gentlemen on this side repudiated them, and that one of the great organs of England denounced his statement with regard to the deficit as a pretended deficit. The hon. gentleman's statements were not believed, and no more credit was placed in them in England than is placed in them by the hon. members of this House, who know to-night that he stands convicted, out of his own mouth and by his own testimony, of having to-tally miscalculated the position of the country in reference to that matter. Does the hon. gentleman dare to discuss the question as to whether the deficit existed on the 1st July, 1874, in face of figures he himself brought down. I have shown, by every fact from the time the statement was made, it was impossible for the deficit to exist. But what did the House think when the hon. gentleman stated that all that Mr. Tilley could have obtained from his $127,000,000 imports, was $22,000,000, and that in order to make ends meet he had to put on $3,000,000 taxation. I can prove beyond refutation, from the hon. gentleman's figures, that not a dollar was discounted from customs, notwithstanding his statement. He has told us that $127,000,000 under the old tariff only gave $22,000,000, and that the 3,000,000 additional taxation was levied for the purpose of raising $25,000,000, which was the expenditure required. Now, what did he get from his new taxation in 1874-5?—$24,648,715. The report of the Minister of Inland Revenue showed that the receipts for the first six months were $645,000 less than the year before, and I dis-counted that on the year of excise for 1874-5. Now, put the amount dis-counted, the amount the Government declared—that their own officer declared—was dis-counted from excise to the amount the hon. gentleman said he got, and we have $25,393,715, or more than he stated the $127,000,000 would give; so that with a falling off of the imports amounting to $7,895,000, with a falling off below that which the hon. Finance Minister estimated, we would have got $25,393,715 in 1874-5. Then in the face of the figures which he laid on the Table himself, dare he venture to say to any intelligent man that a deficit could have existed on the 1st July, 1874? That matter is settled beyond the possibility of controversy.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

The hon. member for North York and other members have declared that we have made an issue at last between protection and free-trade—an issue between those who wish increased taxation and those who desire to economise. Does not the house know that these gentlemen who sit there as ardent supporters of the Finance Minister, who now figure in the rôle of Economists, cheered when the hon. gentleman demanded three millions of additional taxation. The gentlemen stand in this position—and all the eloquent speeches they may deliver will never shake public sentiment in relation to it—they stand in the position of backing up the Finance Minister in claiming additional taxation when he did not want a dollar, because it was asked on the ground of a deficiency that year. They stand in the position of sustaining the Government in wringing $3,000,000 out of the country, and of maintaining them in voting through the House the most extravagant expenditure we have ever known.

Mr. DYMOND—Did the hon. gentleman object to any item?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I did. I stated that the Hon. Finance Minister, for the purpose of creating a deficit, and of obtaining taxation which was not required, had swollen the estimates enormously.

Mr. DYMOND—Did you vote against any appropriation?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The hon. gentleman, I perceive, feels very uneasy, but he will be more uneasy yet when the statements he submitted to the House are subjected to a little further criticism and examination. I don't wonder at his uneasiness when we contrast his position to night with the position he occupied at the time referred to. The hon. gentleman knows that he and the hon. members behind him supported his Government in voting the extravagant estimates of 1874-5. The largest expenditure ever made by the late Government, swollen as it was for several months by the hon. gentlemen opposite, was $23,316,316.75. Now, what did the hon. member for North York vote for this Government to spend—what money did he put at their service to spend the following year? Why, Sir, if he will look at the estimates brought down by the Finance Minister, and the first and second supplementary estimates submitted to the House, he and the other hon. members opposite, whose principles are so elastic they can accommodate themselves to the unnecessary demands of the Government, will find they voted for 1874-5 a total amount of $26,800,000. Does any person require to be told, then, that the $3,000,000 additional taxation was not to meet a deficit for 1873-4? The Hon. Finance Minister would require to be sent to a hospital for the insane if he thought so. The Hon. Minister of Justice told the people of Walkerton it was required for the Canadian Pacific Railway, yet without a foot of that road being constructed, the $3,000,000 have disappeared, and $2,000,000 more at the back of it. The fact is, having demanded $26,800,000 for the first year's expenditure, they just put on the $3,000,000 additional taxes in order to furnish them the money. We told them they could not spend it, and the hon. gentlemen stand convicted of demanding $3,087,929 more than they could expend. Does the Hon. Finance Minister expect men possessing the least intelligence to place any confidence in the estimates he makes or submits to Parliament, or that anybody outside of it will consider them worthy of perusal? I will not follow the unparliamentary language that you permitted the hon. gentleman to use when he said there was only twenty per cent. of accuracy in my statements, but I will tell the hon. gentleman this—he will be regarded by the country as utterly dishonest or utterly incapable in the statements he makes. I leave him to choose which horn of the dilemma he pleases. The hon. member for North York talks about sustaining a retrenchment Government, other gentlemen have ventured in the innocence of their souls to talk in the same way. I have proved to the House, and furnished figures to show that in the very items most under control of the Government the hon. gentlemen opposite have lavishly expended of the money voted by their followers, half a million more this year than any Government that preceded them. The first year they got their hands in the treasury of the country they spent over a million more than any Government that preceded them, and yet the hon. gentleman thinks mouthing words about economy and retrenchment will be accepted by the country in the face of these facts and figures. The hon. gentleman may say that refers to past years, but we are to have retrenchment now. I say the estimates on the Table demand $700,000 more for the half-dozen services I have called attention to than we ever expended on any previous occasion.

The hon. gentleman says the credit of the country was proved by the loan he negotiated. Does he not know that before he could float a bond in London, Sir John Rose, the financial agent of the country, a gentleman whom he eulorized in the highest terms, had to go into the public prints and give a flat refutation to the impression created by that Budget speech of the hon. gentlemen the previous Session.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Does the hon. gentleman say Sir John Rose contradicted my statement?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I do.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Then I have only to say he is stating what is utterly incorrect.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Then I ask the hon. gentleman how Sir John Rose, as financial agent of this country, dared to rush into the London prints with a review of the Budget speech of the hon. gentleman, and with the object, as he stated, of explaining away the erroneous impressions that the Budget had created in the public mind? The hon. gentleman expected to be employed to negotiate a loan again, and he knew how impossible that would be unless he could disabuse the minds of the people of England by explaining away the effects of the Budget speech. No person could read his statement in this House that the Canadian Pacific Railway was an insane undertaking on the part of the late Government, and would leave Canada with a greater debt proportionately than England or the United States—no person could read that and look at the fact that the Government had undertaken to build that road from end to end in fifteen years, without feeling that the character of the country was imperilled and our financial position was utterly unsound.

The hon. gentleman charges me with having misrepresented his tariff, and he ventures here, with the facts only a year old, and hon. members who were present at the time sitting on both sides of this House, to say there was only one change in his tariff. Everyone knows that when it was brought down it met with an examination in this House, and outside of it, with a howl of discontent, with scorn and with contempt by the intelligent people of this country who understand the subject better than the hon. gentleman himself—everyone knows he disappeared and after two or three days returned with a tariff as unlike the first one as day is unlike night. Everyone knows when the hon. gentleman brought down his tariff he spread his wings and was going to leave Mr. Tilley, Sir Francis Hincks, and every Finance Minister who had preceded him, in the shade. He was going to convince the country that they had a heaven-born financier at last, who was going to meet all the exigencies of the times, and boasted of the new principles that would be embodied in this tariff. It was to be a poor man's tariff. It was to levy a tax on luxuries. Everyone knows the hon. gentleman came back in the most humble and contrite spirit, and asked the House to give force by law to his amended tariff, on the ground that it was as near like those of Sir Francis Hincks and Mr. Tilley as he could make it. He says there was only one change in that tariff—from 16 $\frac{2}{3}$ to 17 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Why, he reduced the tax on shipping materials from one dollar to twenty cents, but it was because he was compelled to do so; and he put a score of things connected with the building of ships back on the free list. One gentleman saved \$80 on a lot of champagne under his first tariff, and he found himself the laughing stock of the country. Even the Montreal Herald, an organ of the Ministry, came out and denounced in unmeasured terms the tariff as utterly ridiculous and false in principle. The hon. gentleman knows he proposed to increase the tax on sugar, and I have a statement under my hand showing he made 30 changes instead of one. Articles he asked to tax he rendered free again. I ask the hon. hon. members for Hamilton if they did not in their last election claim the support of Protectionists, on the ground that they owed the increase of 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent to this Government, and I ask the Finance Minister if that increase was not due to the hostility his tariff met with when it was introduced in this House? I ask whether the alterations he made in the tariff, levying a tax on raw materials entering into our manufactures did not largely neutralize the effect of the increase of two and a half per cent? So, while there was no principle in this tariff, while the hon. gentleman was floating about, dictated to by Tom, Dick and Harry, as to what the tax should be, he was compelled to claim support for it on the ground he had brought it back as nearly as possible to those of his predecessors. I give his vacillation as one of the causes which shook the confidence of commercial men and everybody else in the ability of the Government to manage public affairs, and contributed in no small degree to the distress which prevails. That distress has been intensified by the hon. gentleman's conduct in relation to this expected tariff. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been borrowed by suffering merchants, at ten per cent. interest, for the purpose of obtaining stocks and taking goods out of bond. They were deluded by the First Minister who, at Halifax, intimated there would be a change in the tariff. They were deluded by the statements of the hon. member for Montreal West, and by the intercourse they had with ministers themselves. The hon. member for Montreal West told the Finance Minister in the House that the conversations he had with gentlemen interested in the tariff had sent them away with the impression there was to be an alteration. I say in a time of deep distress, when, as the hon. gentleman says, a commercial tornado was sweeping over the country, they have increased the difficulty by the manner in which they dealt with the question of a tariff a second time, and the position in which they leave it now. A more fatal policy could not be imagined. When no increase was necessary they vote \$3,000,000 for the purpose of building the Pacific Railway. They come now with that money all gone, and a deficit of \$2,000,000 in the revenue, and still they have scarcely begun to build the railway.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

If the hon. gentleman is not a master of finance, if he is utterly deficient in what is necessary to form an estimate of the expenditure required for a single year, I compliment him on his success in boxing figures. Instead of giving in the public accounts and the statements laid before the House, a fair and candid exhibit by which a man can, without costing him an hour's labor, compare past expenses with present outlays, he manipulates almost every figure on which he puts his hand. I charged him the other day with having suppressed from the Canada Gazette, the information the people are entitled to have—the revenue and the expenditure. The statement for the month of March has not been given yet. That charge, if true (and I ask him to deny it if he can) ought to withdraw from him the confidence of every man who has any independence in his nature, while it remains unanswered. Yet the hon. gentleman who gives to the public information of so entirely deceptive and delusive a character as that, expects this House and country to place reliance in his statements. But we expected to have a statement of revenue and expenditure down to the latest moment possible, to enable the House to contrast it with what has gone before. That is not furnished.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE--Make it.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I am not in the habit of making such statements. If the hon. gentleman wants them made he has his hon. friend alongside him who is quite equal to the work. The statement submitted contains the expenditure on certain items down to the 10th of February. When I look over that statement, I find $333,000 where I knew there should be over a $1,000,000.

But, Sir, I look at the foot of the page, and I find there a suspense account of over a million of dollars, and what for? Was there any suspense account a year ago? Nothing of the kind, but it is a means by which the Government can conceal from their supporters in this House the deplorable condition to which the country has been brought in this short period by their administration of affairs. I will undertake to say that if he will balance the suspense account, he can do it in an hour—he will add a million to his $1,148,000 to the deficit which existed on the 10th of February, 1876. The hon. gentleman said a deficit would ruin us; the moment it went abroad that we could not meet the ordinary expenditure of the country, Canada would be in a ruinous position; and he asked us to put three millions additional taxation in his hands, and he would carry us on until we completed the Pacific Railway; but here we are at the end of nine months with a deficit of two millions. I do not expect to make any impression on my hon. friend from North York by my remarks; I expect to find him just as ready to back up the Finance Minister in keeping the revenue as it is, and leave a deficit of two millions or four millions at the end of the year to take care of itself, and the credit of Canada to take care of itself. It is a fatal blow to strike at the credit of Canada, and that after the magnificent record that has been rolled up by the late Administration, who accumulated a surplus of fourteen millions while reducing the taxation of the people and carrying on extensive public improvements. But the hon. gentleman proposes to meet the deficit by curtailing public expenditure; what kind of public expenditure? There are two kinds: one is the expenditure by the Government on themselves and on those who assist them in carrying on the affairs of the country, but instead of curtailing these expenditures they have added $500,000 to them, and he intends to curtail by cutting down the expenditures on public works. If ever there was a time when public works should be proceeded with it is now at a period when there is a deep depression in the country, and labor can be obtained for 30 or 40 per cent. less than any other time. A wise and prudent Finance Minister would provide for the carrying on of these works at such a time, and thereby increase the revenue and relieve the suffering masses who require assistance. Now I come to the subject of bank obligations. I do not intend to go into the story of the fluctuations in the bank deposits; the hon. gentleman may read a page of figures which no one in this House can understand without an opportunity of examining them, and I have seen too much of the hon. gentleman's figures to accept them without an opportunity of examining them. I asked for a statement which I knew the hon. gentleman could bring down at an hour's notice. I asked for a statement showing the amount of money deposited by the Government in the Canadian banks and their London agencies on the 15th day of June last, and the amount in the banks now. I wanted it in order to prove by his own figures, and not by mine, that he had borrowed money when he did not want it in 1874, of which he had in his hands fifteen millions of the public money on the 15th of June. I pressed the hon. gentleman across the floor of this House to-night for a statement showing the amount of public money in the banks, the banks who hold it, and the interest that was paid, and the amount that was not paying interest, and the statement is not yet forthcoming, for the best of reasons—that it will sustain and support, when it does come, every allegation I have made on this most improper transaction of the Government with the banks of this country. But the hon. gentleman admits that on the 15th of June, 1874, he had $14,411,850 in his hands; my statement was he asked for more money than he wanted, and obtained less for our debentures than he would have obtained for a smaller lot. The Hon. Minister of Justice, in his speech at Walkerton, said the loan was a magnificent loan, as the Finance Minister got as much for his loan as our five per cents. would bring in small parcels.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I did make the statement that it was impossible to float a loan of twenty millions at the price that we could float smaller lots.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The Globe reported the hon. gentleman as saying the very reverse. If the Hon. Minister of Finance had gone on the markets of the world and only asked for what money he wanted, he would have got all that he required on better terms; but he asked for more than he wanted, paid a larger price for it, and brought it back here and had nearly fifteen millions floating round among the banks, a large portion of it without interest. The hon. gentleman says I have misstated the amount without interest, but if there is any misstatement it is due to his unhappy talent for boxing figures. Any person who reads the Canada Gazette knows that the money on call is money without interest. The Hon. Finance Minister admits that his friend, the Hon. Mr. Simpson, had an average for the whole year of $360,000 of the public money in the Ontario Bank without interest, and we are told he dare not use it, as it was on call. I say the banks will not take money on call and pay interest for it. Why does the hon. gentleman show two columns in the bank's statement in the Gazette, if it is not to show the money on call is without interest, and that on notice draws interest? The hon. gentleman knows that last Session an hon. Senator in the other end of the building moved for a return showing the amount of money on interest, and all not on interest, and that it corresponded with the view I have taken; but the Government concealed and held back all the millions that were in the hands of the London agents of the banks. Even then it was impossible, although the return demanded it, to find out what interest was being paid, so that if any gentleman in this House was mistaken as to the mode the Government were dealing with this money of the people of Canada, it was because they denied to Parliament the information that every

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

Government is bound to give to the people's representatives. If Senator Simpson had this $500,000 on call, as I showed he had, and I shall want further evidence of the statement of the hon. gentlemen before I accept his explanations, but assuming it is only $365,325, he says I had better retire from my present position, if I can make out of $500,000, $50,000 a year. I say the Ontario bank has been making large interest out of this money to the extent of $50,000 a year, and it is generally believed that the institution was favoured in consequence of aid given during the elections.

The hon. gentleman charges me with having wrongly assailed him in this matter in connection with the banks, but I did not do the subject justice the other night. In my anxiety to spare the hon. members of this House the pain of hearing me speak at such great length, when physically I was incapable of doing justice to the hon. gentleman, I passed over one of the most important subjects in connection with this matter. I showed that it was a corrupt transaction—that it was fatal to the independence of Parliament—but I did not show the most important objection to it of all; and I am indebted to the hon. member for Montreal West for supplementing my statement. That hon. gentleman referred to it as most dangerous to the commerce of the country.

He said that the Government scattered the public money among the banks in a manner that had inflicted great injury to the country, and that their policy was fraught with danger to the community, and as the hon. gentleman dealt with this subject in a very able and conclusive way, I will read a short portion of his speech; he said, speaking of these banks: "Before I sit down, I would like to allude to another matter, which, perhaps, has been one of the causes producing the existing distress in the mercantile community at least."

¶ If the Hon. Minister of Finance will not take my word, and my expression of opinion, will he accept the views of a leading merchant in one of the great commercial centres of this country, to the effect that their policy of scattering about public money, shoving $15,000,000 into the hands of the banks of this country, at a time when contraction and not inflation was demanded, was ruinous? He goes on to say, that the forcing of this money upon the banks, by the Government, led to their placing it in most improper hands, and enormous sums were in consequence lost, and he told the hon. gentleman, that had he persevered with his circular he could not have obtained the money, and would have produced a financial crisis, causing our people to sustain enormous losses. He continued, "If these sums had not been confided to these banks—if they had not confided such large sums to them, they would have been more careful as to its distribution, and would have paid more attention to the selection of their customers. I mention this, in order that the Government, whenever there is a surplus, may take better care of it, and discontinue the policy followed in this regard during the last eighteen months. I invite the hon. gentleman's attention to these remarks, and I say, that if he dared not correct the Vice President of a bank when he made these statements in the House, he should not correct me for reading them to hon. members.

Now, I believe, that I have noticed every attempt of the hon. gentleman to refute a single word that I used in my comments upon his speech, and I leave to the House to judge as to how far that hon. gentleman has given a defence which will be acceptable to any person save the hon. member for North York. I anticipate that what is black one day will be white the next with that hon. gentleman, who will be keenly alive to any assertion, however fallacious, that falls from the mouths of Ministers, and prepared to endorse any position they may take, deaf to the strongest utterances and most conclusive evidence that can be furnished him concerning the fact that these hon. gentlemen are pursuing a policy, the very reverse of wise and judicious, and fraught with the gravest possible disasters to the country.

Before I sit down I want to notice for a moment a few remarks you, Sir, permitted the hon. member for Halifax to make in this House. I understood, Mr. Speaker, that you were prepared to confine gentlemen very closely to the subject; and I must say that I listened to the speech of my hon. friend from Halifax, and the allusions to myself, with a good deal of surprise, but I was afraid that if I ventured to call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman had violated your rules, my hon. friend the First Minister would come to the conclusion that I was frightened. But suppose that this was the case, my hon. friend from Halifax is a strong man—a very strong man. I dare say you have heard of the story of the gentleman who was going to have a dinner party, and who previously said to one of his friends “when there is a little lull in the conversation, do you speak out from your end of the table and say, “Samson was a strong man.” “Why do you wish me to say that, the friend enquired. “Never mind,” was the answer; “I have got a splendid thing to say;” and so the very obliging friend in the midst of the dinner, taking advantage of a slight lull in the conversation, said—“Samson was a strong man.” Well, people looked around a little; but the host took no notice whatever of the remark. Again the persevering friend observed—“Samson was a strong man,” but still attracted no notice; and he repeated—“Samson was a very strong man.” “Well,” replied the host, “Samson, I dare say, was a strong man; and you are a deuced sight stronger lugging him in here by the head and shoulders in spite of himself.” And so when I found my hon. friend lugging in the Monkton station into the debate on the tariff, I came to the conclusion that my hon. friend was a pretty strong man. Since he was permitted on such an occasion to lug in Monkton station and challenge the accuracy of statements which I made in a speech at Halifax, where my hon. friend intimated to the House I was afraid to meet him. No hon. member will be in the least surprised after listening to the powerful orations of my hon. friend, if I exhibited a little craven fear, and dreaded to meet him on a platform in Halifax. I can only say that the hon. gentleman undertook to state that I had misstated a fact with reference to the Monkton Station.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

He alleged that I declared at Halifax that the question of removing the station of the Intercolonial Railway, the Central Station from Halifax, was settled definitely before I became a member of the Government, that there was a gentleman on the Board who had greater experience in the working of railways; that I supposed that the principal commissioners had deferred to his judgment; and that the matter was at all events arranged before I had the honour of a seat in the Cabinet. He undertook to declare that this took place in 1872, and that I entered the Government in 1870; but I will refer to the Hon. Minister of Public Works, and to the President of the Privy Council, and ask these gentlemen to bring down and lay on the table of this House the report of the Intercolonial Railway Commissioners recommending Monkton to be selected, as well as the purchase and valuation of the land, and of the adoption of this report by the Council, it will then be found that these two events occurred anterior to my becoming a member of the Government. So much for the personal explanation which I would not have been obliged to make, had you, Sir, not permitted the hon. member for Halifax to display his Samsonian strength by bringing in Monkton Station by the head and shoulders into this discussion.

The First Minister undertook to tell me that I did not know what I was talking about when treating of the question of sugar duties; but when I ventured to put a modest question across the House, and asked the hon. gentleman if he could state whether the duties had been altered favorably to the refiners in the United States since the late Government went out of office, the hon. gentleman was unable to tell anything about it, and confessed it frankly to the House, admitting that previous to such a discussion he had actually not taken the trouble to inform himself of the very first principles in this relation; and more than that, he had not even read the elaborate report of the Minister of Customs brought down and laid on the table of the House. The hon. gentleman showed an entire want of acquaintance with the subject, and in his despair turned round to his prompter, the hon. member for Halifax, who stated to the House that the First Minister was quite correct that no alteration had been made since the late Government went out of power; that the increase in the drawback was balanced by a corresponding increase in the duty, and that accordingly the matter was left as it was. Now I need do no more than remind the House that while the late Administration held office, unequal and unfair as was the sugar tariff to the Canadian refiners, sugar was refined here; but since that time a change has taken place in the United States, which gives to their refiners the entire control of the Canadian market, closing up the sugar refinery of Canada. The hon. member for Halifax accused me of a misstatement, in saying that he had never dared to open his mouth on that question, because when Sir John Rose, as Finance Minister, brought down his tariff, he attacked the Government as being too favorable to the sugar refiners. He undertook to controvert that assertion, and I will give him the statement he then made. Although in 1874, when a change in the sugar tariff was proposed, the hon. member for Halifax was lobbying the House to secure support for the Government—as I said in Halifax, and as I repeated here—the hon. gentleman dare not stand up in this House with the recollection of the views he held on this subject and advocate it, he never opened his mouth on the subject, and if he dared to do so to-night it is because he is as bold as well as a strong man.

When Sir John Rose brought down the sugar tariff, what did the hon. gentleman say? The following quotation is taken from the Globe of May 1st, 1868:—

"The remaining terms were agreed to, down to the duties on sugar and molasses as follows:—Sugar equal to or above No. 9 Dutch Standard, also sugar candy and confectionary, 25 per cent. and 1 cent per lb. Below No. 9, Dutch Standard 25 per cent.; $\frac{3}{4}$ c. per pound.

"Mr. Jones (Halifax) disputed the correctness of the data from which the Minister of Customs and also the Minister of Excise had deducted the figures representing the duties payable by the various grades under the new scale.

"He did hold, however, that the opinion of the whole mercantile community from east to west, and which had been disregarded by the Government, ought to have received proper consideration.

"Mark the controversy between my hon. friend and myself. He held that the Government had proposed a tariff too favourable for the sugar refiners; this is the whole controversy:

"'The reduction of the specific rate,' Mr. Jones continued, 'of 1 cent to $\frac{3}{4}$ of a cent on the lower grades, and of $\frac{3}{4}$ on melado, was a heavy concession to the refiners.'

"Then who, he would ask, was to determine at every port, whether a particular lot of sugars was not equal to No. 9 Dutch Standard."

"He would go back to his argument, that it was not for the interests of the Dominion to perpetuate any monopoly which made the people pay high prices. He moved in amendment that the proposed duty on grades of sugar at and above No. 9 Dutch Standard be reduced to 75 cents per 100 lbs., and 25 per cent. ad valorem, being the same as for grades below that standard."

I have proved that the hon. gentleman attacked the Government for having proposed a tariff too favorable to sugar refiners; this is the position I have taken, and this, Sir, is the statement which I made in Halifax, that, when he did so, he was endeavoring to destroy not only the Government of which Sir John Rose was Finance Minister, but also to incense and exasperate the people of Nova Scotia against the Administration, taking the ground that it was striking at the interests of the masses of the people in the interests of the sugar refiners, and although the hon. gentleman changed his views, and lobbied this House in 1874 to induce members to sustain the Minister of Finance in increasing a duty already 50 per cent. on sugar, which I opposed in the true interests of the country, he did not then venture to state it in the House, and would have ventured to do so now if he were not, I say, a bold as well as a strong man. Although the hon. gentleman declared here that we would never have a West India trade unless the duties on sugar were so changed as to enable it to be refined in this country he contradicted the statement I made to the effect, that the alteration which recently took place in the American policy—since the late Administration retired from office—had acted in the interests of the sugar refiners in New York, Boston, and elsewhere in the United States. These are the facts. In 1872 the duty remained at $2.25, and the drawback was increased to $2.70, the advance thus becoming once more twenty per cent.

In March, 1875, the duties were increased twenty-five per cent, making the nett duty (on above quality) \$2.81 $\frac{1}{4}$; the drawbacks were also increased nominally by the same percentage, but at the same time a reclamation of ten per cent. was reduced to one per cent., consequently the drawback really was advanced thirty seven and a-half per cent., becoming \$3.71 nett, and the advance now becoming equal to thirty-two per cent. over raw duty. Finally, in December last, the drawback on hard sugar was reduced to \$3.56 nett, but at the same time, the drawback on soft white sugar was increased from \$2.47 to \$2.97 nett, so that the refiners were really much better off than before, as the reduction of fifteen cents on one quality was accompanied by an increase of fifty cents on another.

To conclude the analysis, it may be said that the drawback on hards was advanced thirty-three per cent., while raws had advanced only twenty-five; and to compare the position at this moment with what existed when we were in office, it may be said that the present drawback is an advance of twenty-seven per cent. on the raw duty, while then it never exceeded twenty. So I think I have established the point which was controverted by the First Minister, and in which he was sustained by the hon. member for Halifax. I now return to the report brought down by the Hon. Minister of Customs, and I ask them if, after reading that, they can venture to contradict the statement I made. On the 24th page I find the following:—

“ On the 3rd March, 1875, an Act of Congress increased the import duties on raw sugars, and by an Order of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, a more than corresponding increase was made to the drawback, the following being the rates then established:—

On ref'd crystalline sugar	per lb.	3 $\frac{1}{2}$ c.
“ B and C lower grade	“	2 $\frac{1}{2}$ c.
Syrup of sugar	per gal.	6 $\frac{1}{2}$ c.
“ from molasses	“	5 c.
Sugar	per lb.	1 $\frac{1}{2}$ c.

These rates being subject to a reduction of one per cent. only, instead of 10 per cent. as before.

“ Whatever may have been the fact in reference to the operation of the former drawback, there can be no doubt that the latter favored the refiners to a very considerable degree, giving them a bonus upon their exports and a corresponding advantage, not only over the refiners of Great Britain and Canada, but also over importers of the higher classes of West India sugars.”

I will now leave this question. When hon. gentlemen undertake to challenge a statement of facts I make, I consider myself justified in asking the attention of the House to the evidence. I have shown that the statement I made was sound and accurate, and that the statements of the First Minister and the hon. member for Halifax were entirely inaccurate.

I now come to a few remarks which the hon. member for Halifax made, and which, coming from my own Province, I feel he would have a right to consider himself slighted if I passed them over without reference. In the first place, the hon. gentlemen ventured to lecture this side of the House on loyalty. I should like to know what excited his apprehension. Did he find any intention of disloyalty here; did he find any hon. gentleman proposing to haul down the flag of Her Majesty in this country? Regarding the hon. gentleman as a strong man, as a bold man, as a man of great powers of eloquence and logic, I felt no little gratification in knowing that he is loyal, that he is no longer antagonistic to the flag which waves over us, and that we can rely upon his going with us shoulder to shoulder on this question of preserving the connection between Canada and the Crown.

The hon. gentleman attacked me for having opposed the tax on shipping. He asked: “ Why should not shipping be taxed as well as anything else?” Because the policy of Canada before Union with the Maritime Provinces, a policy which was proclaimed to the world, and upon the strength of which we entered into Confederation, was that the shipbuilding interests should be free from the imposition of any tax with reference to construction. When it was attempted to alter that policy, and my hon. friend asked to place a tax of $84,000 upon 380,000 people, I said it was unjust for him to bring forward that imposition to strike down an industry of vital importance to the character and credit of the Dominion contrary to the terms entered into at Confederation and the guarantee on the statute book. But, I am glad to say, that instead of that tax of $1 per ton on our ships there is only 20 cents to-day—a triumph of which I am proud, and of which every member of the Opposition ought to feel proud. If the hon member for Halifax is a giant he ought to use his strength in support of the interests of the Province rather than in Opposition and antagonism thereto.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

The hon. gentleman also spoke in reference to the duty on coal, objecting that there should be any impost, and claiming that the people of Nova Scotia owe a deep debt of gratitude to the present Government for refusing to grant protection in this and other particulars. Where does he get his reasons for supposing that the Province is opposed to the duty on flour, and coal and other natural products? As I said before, and repeat now, if Canada is to be a great country she must have a policy of her own. We must not say that this tax will fall upon this section and that on another; we must, if necessary, suffer in one direction, provided that the policy brought forward is calculated to be of benefit to the whole Dominion, and build up inter-provincial trade between the different provinces. Where does the hon. gentleman get the impression that Nova Scotia is opposed to the national policy that I formerly urged, and that I to-day urge upon this House—that we should levy such imposts as will give the Government a revenue to protect them from such a startling deficit as the present, and at the same time afford such fostering protection to infant industries as will enable them to grow and expand into a position which will render it unnecessary for that protection to be continued. Is not protection commenced at the very cradle? Does not the parent protect his infant, and why? Because he knows if the child is protected it will grow up to manhood, and the man's strength will be used in support of the parents who shielded it in infancy. This holds good with a country. If our industries were fostered by the Government instead of building up the trade and commerce of a great neighboring rival, they will grow up until instead of being a burden on the people they will add vastly to the general good. Who could listen to the able and logical speech of the hon. gentleman for North Norfolk without feeling that he had made a case he could not answer. It reminded me of a story I heard about a clergyman giving a dialogue between a Christian and an infidel. He put the case so strongly that he was unable to extricate himself and the infidel got the best of the argument. It is just the same with the hon. gentleman. He puts the case so forcibly that he cannot answer it. Although he employed all the argument his keen intellect could suggest, he left the House in want of any reason why he should.

It is, however, unnecessary at this moment to discuss this question at length. I feel that it is a fatal policy to leave this country to face a deficit of revenue—to leave our manufacturing interests to languish, and the people, after those interests are destroyed, at the mercy of those who having destroyed them can impose such a tax as they please. But where did the member for Halifax get his opinions as to the people of Nova Scotia? This is not a new question, Sir. Six years ago I sat over there and urged upon Parliament the adoption of a policy imposing a tax upon flour, grain, coal, salt—upon those natural products that are coming from the United States free and are met there with a protective tariff. I did not stop then, and I do not now, to enquire whether it was a policy that would lead to power. I held the opinion honestly and as an honest man gave to the House in an earnest manner the sentiments I held. My hon. friend for Pictou and his colleague, who have spoken on this subject of coal, spoke against the policy, and what happened?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—You voted against it.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—That is not true. I brand that statement as inaccurate. I voted and struggled for that policy to the last hour, and I only surrendered it in the face of overwhelming opposition that compelled us to change and abandon it. I maintain now that it was a sound policy to follow; the people of Nova Scotia recorded their views on the subject. My hon. friend for Pictou and his colleague for Halifax, who voted against it, went back to their constituents, but with what result? Why, that these hon. gentlemen, who have professed that they alone are able to speak for the people of Nova Scotia and the Maritime Provinces, were left at home. They left these gentlemen with a square issue between them and myself. The men who voted against the policy were defeated by the people of the Province, while I was sustained and returned here, sustained by the entire Nova Scotia vote, with the exception of the hon. member for Lunenburg, who obtained his seat on that occasion through declaring himself an independent member.

And so, Sir, I give that to the hon. gentleman as evidence that when this question was fully and fairly tried out before the people of Nova Scotia, what the result was so far as the sentiments of that Province are concerned, I say Nova Scotia has a deeper interest in fostering home industries than any other Province in the Dominion. Ontario, with greater wealth and experience and a higher tariff, built up her manufactures and is ahead of us. While we had a tariff that gave us no protection Old Canada had one which fostered her home manufactures. In Nova Scotia we have the coal and iron in close proximity—the materials essential to building up great industries—as they are not to be found in any other part of the Dominion. I believe Nova Scotia would be prepared to endorse in 1876 as she did in 1872 the views I advanced.

The hon. member for Halifax denounced the Washington Treaty. He is a most ungrateful as well as a bold and strong man. That Treaty has put thousands of dollars in the hon. gentleman's pockets.

Mr. JONES—Never a cent.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The only two interests that were beyond the power of being injured by this Government are the only two that are at this day in a prosperous condition. One is the agricultural, the other is the fishing interest. Under the Washington Treaty the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces can go into the great market of export on free and equal terms with the United States fishermen. As a fish merchant, the hon. gentleman has been enabled to amass a handsome fortune, and I say he is an ungrateful man that he does not recognize the benefit that has been conferred upon him.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.

I have been accused of having a sort of political revolver. He says I had half a dozen speeches ready because it was quite impossible to know what I had to meet. That is quite true. You would require a revolver to know where to find the Hon. Minister of Finance. A seven-barrel revolver would not meet the tariff of 1874—you would need thirty. I confess no man who heard him deplore a deficit that required to be met in advance to preserve the credit of the country in 1874 could have believed he would have dared to show his face to this Parliament with $2,000,000 of a deficit staring him in the face, and the credit of the country imperiled, and say we propose to fold our arms and make no effort to relieve the prevailing distress. But there is no difficulty in meeting the Hon. Minister of Finance. The statements he makes to the House are so full of fallacies that all you have to do is to take down half a dozen notes while he speaks to refute them and show how little confidence can be placed in his utterances. Everyone knew the Government was bending all its energies for months to the construction of a tariff, and if outside report is to be relied upon, they had succeeded in satisfying themselves as to what was due to the interests of the people of Canada, but they so far forgot their positions as statesmen as to prove recreant to the interests of the people at the bidding of this strong, bold and powerful man from Nova Scotia. That hon. gentleman, though not a Warwick (because he did not make a king), has made a Minister. He has induced the Government to pass over 18 able and intelligent members in this House and to go outside of it to bring in a minister to replace Mr. Ross. I won't say whether his power was used in the interests of Canada. It was a deep insult to my colleagues from Nova Scotia, which I leave them to resent. It is now heralded through the press that this bold and strong man has again dictated to the Ministry and induced them to tear up the tariff they had taken months to prepare.

We have been told that the Government are in favour of incidental protection, but the hon. member for North York says "We are the Free Trade Party. We go for free-trade and death to the manufactures of Canada." The policy of the Government is not in the interests of the country and will be regarded by the people as utterly fatal to many of our most important industries and destruction of the credit and financial position of the country.

Mr. JONES (Halifax)—The hon. member for Cumberland is very far out of the way in speaking of the influence he assumes I possess. No one knows better than he that the influence which he supposed I had exercised with reference to Government measures, was entirely incorrect. That gentleman is always forcible when he addresses the House, but he is not always accurate. He possesses an advantage over others, because he always manufactures his own facts. He won for himself a position in Nova Scotia before he came here, when he defended himself on a public occasion with all the evasions he has shown to-night.

Mr. SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is not in order.

Mr. JONES—Well, I need not go to Nova Scotia. The course pursued by the hon. gentleman, when he endeavoured to misrepresent myself as well as others, proves what I assert. The other night, when the Premier exposed his unfair quotation of a speech, I felt a kind of sympathy for the man who could be placed in such a humiliating position before the country.

Now, Sir, what position has he taken here to-night? It is of no consequence what argument is addressed to him; it is of no consequence if the Finance Minister proved his assertions from the Bible itself, the hon. member for Cumberland would reiterate his charges with all the apparent earnestness with which he reiterates them to-night. The hon. gentleman says there was no necessity for increasing the tariff last year, yet he stated here to-night that there is a deficiency of two millions, and he tells us that when the Finance Minister depicted a deficit two years ago, that there would be a deficiency in the revenue; he was striking a blow at the credit of Canada. Is not the hon. gentleman to-night, according to his own argument, striking a blow at the credit of Canada in his anxiety to make a point against the Government? The hon. gentleman charges the Finance Minister with keeping back part of the Bank statement, but he forgets that he kept back the announcement that the Intercolonial Railway works had been by Order in Council removed from Halifax to Moncton until after the election in Halifax was over. With reference to the sugar question up to the time of the tariff introduced by Sir John Rose, very little refined sugars were consumed in the Dominion. At that time we had a large importation from the West Indies of the brighter colored coarse sugars, and it was because the tariff was shutting out these sugars and destroying the West India trade that I opposed it. And as a proof that I was right, when we imported one hundred hogsheads of sugar then we only import about five now. I stated the other night that the alteration in the sugar duties by the present Government left them about the same. At that time the drawback on sugars was $3, and the duty paid was $2.25, leaving a difference of 75 cents. At the present moment the duty is $3.60 instead of $3.75, while the duty on raw has been increased 25 per cent. The hon. gentleman is not aware of the three or four alterations that have been made in the duty on sugars since I opposed Sir John Rose's tariff, so that the duty now is within a cent or two of what it was at that time, or if he is aware of it he takes good care not to take the House into his confidence. The hon. gentleman has asked on what authority I undertake to speak for the people of Nova Scotia. If there is one man in this Parliament who is unauthorized to speak for the people of Nova Scotia it is the hon. member from Cumberland. It is well known that after the last election with all the power and influence of the late Government to back him he went down to Nova Scotia and came back alone. I ask him how he dare stand up here and presume to represent the people of Nova Scotia on any question. He knows that his views of a national policy have been repudiated by the people of Nova Scotia over and over again.

He says at one moment that taxes on shipping are not right, being sectional, and bearing heavily on one part of the Dominion, and in the next breath he states that he is prepared to put a duty on flour coming into Nova Scotia; condemning on the one hand what he advocates on the other hand. In this relation I must regret being obliged to make personal references, because I wish to discuss these matters from a higher stand-point. I think that the hon. member might have omitted certain allusions, although I suppose he was glad to seize at anything in order to make a long speech. He was once a prominent member of the Government of Nova Scotia, but he went back on his pledges, and instead of retrenching expenditure as soon as he obtained power, he increased the disbursements, and the hon. member so disappointed public expectation that when the first constitutional opportunity presented itself, in 1867, he was the only member on his side of the House returned to this Parliament. Perhaps his experience has been unfortunate in this regard, and concerning other matters the hon. member is in no position to lecture me on my views, which I am perfectly willing to submit to my own constituents and my own people. I have advocated them with perfect freedom, and I think, with tolerable consistency here and elsewhere, and if he had afforded me the opportunity of discussing with him at Halifax these issues instead of retailing stale jokes about steel rails and the Pacific Railway, our own people would have been better satisfied.

With reference to the general policy of the Government, I have heard since it was announced the most ample assurances from my own Province that they are highly satisfied with it, and I am sure that the hon. member, if he repeated the views he has expressed to-night in Nova Scotia, would find that they would be condemned by the people, who very much prefer retrenchment to an increase of burdens. The Finance Minister can very well afford to pass by the statements of the hon. gentleman with regard to the matters at issue. On a similar occasion, when he denounced a prominent man, the late Mr. Howe applied to him a description, which he perhaps has not forgotten. I recollect well Mr. Howe's retort, which was—that a serpent might crawl over a statue of Apollo, but the beautiful proportions of the marble would remain beneath the slime. He should not have ventured to provoke such criticism again. The hon. member is able and eloquent, and he might go on hour after hour denouncing his opponents, undisturbed in his apparent happiness in doing so, if his affirmations did not go to the country representing men as inconsistent and regardless of their past views; if this were not the case, I could sit by the hour listening to him in admiration of his pluck and command of language. I do not find fault with his remarks this evening; he certainly gave me more credit than I am entitled to, with reference to the policy of the Government. I have only feebly endeavored to do my duty, in the interests of my constituents and Province, and this I am always prepared to perform without regard to the opinions of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. JONES.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—At this late hour, I will only make a few remarks in reply to certain statements of the hon. member for Cumberland. My hon. friend complains that I used very impolite language, because I said that he was speaking of a matter of which he knew nothing. Well, Sir, I do not think that this was very harsh; and at all events, if it did not seem polite, I am very sorry that I am not able even yet to withdraw it. My statement was mild, I think, compared with assertions made by the hon. gentleman to-night, for he characterized my hon. friend as utterly deficient in the qualities which a Finance Minister should possess when submitting matters to the House, and he says that we cannot expect this House—

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I did not call him a demagogue.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The term, demagogue would be milder than the language he has employed concerning my hon. friend. The hon. member for Cumberland asserted that we could not expect the members of this House to place the slightest reliance on the figures and statements of the Finance Minister; that he had too much experience respecting the hon. gentleman's figures to accept any of them without personal examination; that he stands convicted of gross misrepresentation; that he was utterly dishonest, and that he hoped by mouthing words—

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—No! no!

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I took down the hon. gentleman's words.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—That was only one horn of the dilemma; there was another horn; I said—he was either dishonest or incompetent.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—If these are specimens of the hon. gentleman's horns, he had better not put them out so far.

However, I consider that if there is any hon. gentleman in this House who should never complain of any other hon. member using strong language, that member is my hon. friend from Cumberland. I do not know any one who can go to the very verge of being offensive, without being unparliamentary, so frequently and eloquently as the hon. member—who hopes, by employing very strong, not to say offensive, terms—and I fear they are very often offensive—and violent adjectives, with a rolling voice, and in an earnest and vigorous manner, to impress upon the House opinions which he can hardly be credited with entertaining. The hon. gentleman made two or three allegations to-night to which I desire to call the attention of the House for a few moments. One might have expected that if the hon. gentleman and his colleagues would shun the discussion of any subject that subject would be the Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman pointed out, a short time ago at a public meeting, that although the late Administration entered into a solemn engagement by treaty, to build the Pacific Railway during ten years, they never intended to perform their promise. Let me read the words by which the late Government was so bound:—"The Government of the Dominion undertakes to secure the commencement, simultaneously with'n two years from the date of Union, of the construction of a railway from the Pacific towards the Rocky Mountains, and from such point as may be selected east of the Rocky Mountains, towards the Pacific, to connect the seaboard of British Columbia with the railway system of Canada, and further, to secure the completion of such railway within ten years from the date of Union."

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Will my hon. friend kindly read the qualification which was so important that it was put in the Act?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—No hon. gentleman will find any qualification in this treaty; the hon. gentleman knows that it is not there, Sir.

The hon. gentleman says that he and his colleagues would have brought one hundred millions of foreign money into the country—a vast amount of capital and a vast amount of energy; that they would have constructed this road, and that they would have settled this extensive territory. Why, Sir, these hon. gentlemen were in power for two entire years after this solemn treaty was made, having a large majority in this House at their backs, and yet the only money they ever brought into the country was received from Sir Hugh Allan to carry on the elections.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—We did not give up refunds to the amount of $69,000 previous to the elections, as was done with Hon. Mr. McMaster.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Well, Sir, if that is all the hon. gentleman has to say in reply, it is of slight import.

This is the only money of which I have any knowledge that they brought into the country. They had a large majority for two and a half years after the conclusion of the treaty, and what progress did they make? Did they not confessedly admit that the scheme was a failure? Did they not give up the contract into which they entered? And does not the hon. gentleman now, in almost every speech he delivers, pretend that there was some terrible combination between hon. gentlemen on this side and Mr. Potter, of the Grand Trunk Company? but, sir, I have challenged him, and I challenge him again to-night if it be of any use—to show a scintilla of evidence to justify the extraordinary allegations he has more than once made, and it has been of no avail. Why, Sir, it is well known that Mr. Potter and the Grand Trunk have always been my political enemies, and the enemies of the hon. gentlemen who sit on this side of the House. It is notorious that this Company has been a political engine operating against the Liberal party, and to this hour I know of no change.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The engine is reversed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman says that it was a terrible thing for this Government to undertake to build a road from Lake Superior westward to the Pacific by 1890; but the hon. gentleman himself undertook solemnly, as I have pointed out, to build it from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific by the year 1881—within ten years—while we only pledged ourselves to complete two-thirds of the work in nineteen years. These hon. gentlemen endeavoured to leave this terrible incubus upon the country—a piece of folly which should have driven everyone of the perpetrators out of public life; and yet the hon. gentleman who is in part responsible for all this, charges us with dereliction of duty and extravagance, because we sought to keep faith with the Province which the hon. gentleman and his friends brought in the Union by false pretexts. If this bargain and solemn treaty through the hon. gentleman and his colleagues had not been entered into, do you imagine, Sir, for a moment, that he would have made the efforts we have made to provide for the expense of surveys? But all this has been undertaken in connection with so enormous an enterprise, for the single purpose of maintaining the national faith, as far as this was possible with our resources. But the hon. gentleman has not fairly represented what we did do. What we undertook to do in connection with Lord Carnarvon's recommendations was subject to the Act already placed on the Statute Book.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—No! no!

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman may say no.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Show it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I can show it any time.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—No!

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman will say “no” and “yes” to anything. What we have undertaken to do, even the modified part, is subject to the resolution under which it is provided that we shall not increase the taxation of the country. The hon. gentleman will find whether this is so or not; he will find that we will carry out our purpose to the very letter, and that purpose is intimated plainly in the Order in Council of last year. So much for the legislation regarding the Pacific Railway. I don't think it is necessary to say one word more on that subject.

The hon. gentleman also said that Sir John Rose wrote a letter criticising unfavourably the speech of my hon. friend. Sir John never wrote such a letter. He sent a communication to correct the malicious representations of the Standard newspaper; and every one knows that that paper is not the organ of the Conservative party. It is a Conservative freebooter, nor is it owned or recognized by the Conservative party in England, and of this I can furnish proof. Sir John simply did his duty, as a Canadian, in correcting the misrepresentations of that paper, but he did not correct the speech of my hon. friend.

The hon. gentleman says that the tariff of 1874 was ruinous to the country, and in the same sentence he declared that the Hon. Finance Minister deserved no credit for it, because it was a servile copy of the tariff of the hon. gentleman opposite. If that was so it would have a strong chance of being subjected to the opposite charge. He has not ventured to enlarge upon the deep distress in the country. There is a class

---it is a comparatively small one and has my deepest sympathy---which is in difficulties. The country as a whole, however, is not suffering distress, but is tolerably prosperous---immensely more prosperous than during the crisis of 1857. Yet we did not hear that the Government of that day were to blame for the condition in which the country then was. But the hon. gentleman proposed a remedy for the depression for the first time. When he made his speech a few evenings ago, it was quite evident he was on the wrong track. He had prepared a speech he could not deliver, which explains his peculiar manner of jumping from one subject to another. The hon. gentleman thought additional taxation was to be proposed, and he was prepared to expatiate upon the wickedness of imposing additional taxation. Now he asserts that the remedy for the great distress is to impose additional taxation. It is a curious remedy, if it is a remedy. It is the duty of Government when distress exists amongst any large class of the population to relieve it if it can be done consistently with the general interests of the country; it is the duty of the Government when revenue fails to practice the most rigid economy; but it is not the duty of the Government always when distress prevails to propose additional taxation as the only possible remedy.

With regard to the one question on which the hon. gentleman has pronounced himself strongly to-night---that of a protective policy---I think while it would benefit a certain class, the benefit would be reaped at the expense of another. We have all accepted a revenue tariff as the policy of the country for the time being. That this revenue tariff has been so high is chiefly owing to the extravagance into which the country was plunged by hon. gentlemen opposite. But the hon. gentleman said that the Government led the country to believe there was to be a change of policy. Nay, Sir, he went further; he stated that he had a policy carefully prepared. I tell him he is mistaken. There was no such policy prepared, and no such announcement was made to the public either directly or indirectly. The Government never led a single individual in this House to believe they would propose additional taxation. The Government, as they were bound to do, maintained a most rigid silence towards their intimate friends as to the policy they would bring down. But the hon. gentleman and his organs proclaimed for weeks and months that there was an enormous deficit, pointed out the absolute necessity for an increased taxation, and so tried to influence the Government. But when they found this failed their rage knew no bounds, and hence the fierce denunciations of hon. gentlemen opposite as to our policy.

Mr. BOWELL---Did not the Globe make precisely the same announcement?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE---I don't know what it did. The Globe is not my paper, and I am not responsible in any way for its statement. The hon. gentleman has my leave to enquire if he likes whether the Globe had any authority to make such a statement.

Mr. BOWELL---I made no such charge; but the hon. gentleman charged that the Opposition press misled the people.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE---It did, months before.

Mr. BOWELL---Well, the Globe did the same thing.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE---The statement was made in that paper on Friday morning, the day the Budget came down. We don't make confidantes of any newspaper. It has been said that we made a direct intimation of our policy. The hon. member for Cumberland pretends we had a policy prepared. I know that many things which have taken place in Council during the last two years have become known, but it is impossible that this could have become known.

Mr. MASSON---The hon. member for Chateaugay, in the City of Montreal, stated that a revision of the tariff was contemplated.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE---The Hon. gentleman was entitled to his opinion.

Mr. MASSON---Then the hon. gentleman could not lay the charge at our door, that the Opposition press circulated these rumours some months ago.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I must lay it to their charge. I heard my hon. friend from Cumberland announce this among many other curious things in the course of his speech at the last public meeting we attended together. He declared, that in 1875, not a single dollar was applied to the reduction of the debt.

Hon. Mr. TUPEER—No! no! I beg to say that the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. We had two reporters with us; the hon. gentleman had one and I another, and I defy him to prove that any such statement was made by me.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I contradicted him by taking the public accounts and reading from them to the meeting, showing the amount of debentures which, having matured, were redeemed.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Such a statement was not made by me.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Well, the hon. gentleman seems to have a very elastic memory. There is one thing more the hon. gentleman said, that he introduced and supported throughout a policy of imposing duties on coal and other articles. I will read an extract from the Votes and Proceedings on this point: "The Hon. Mr. Holton moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. Mills, that all the words after 'be' to the end of the question be left out, and the words 'now re-committed to a Committee of the Whole House, for the purpose of so amending the same as to repeal the duties on coal, coke, wheat and flour,' inserted instead thereof." And this was all voted upon, and the hon. gentleman voted for both motions and the amendment. Then, Sir, it was moved that the amendment on the original question be put, and the hon. gentleman voted against it. Even we find that the hon. gentleman for North Hastings, on the 4th of April moved an amendment.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—At what stage?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Never mind at what stage; it was during the Session.

Mr. MASSON.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—This was with reference to the Customs' Bill.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Yes. He moved an amendment, in view of negotiations then pending at Washington, that it was expedient to repeal the duties on certain articles enumerated in section 2, flour, coal, &c. Then Mr. Lawson moved an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for North Hastings, that the word "salt," whenever it occurred, should be left out. They endeavoured to save salt, but the hon. member for Cumberland would not allow it. He did not leave a single one of his children living that he did not slaughter.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Can you kill the dead? The hon. member knows very well that the House killed it and not me. It was useless to attempt to resuscitate it in the face of a hostile majority, and I did that which the hon. gentleman would have done himself under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am sorry the hon. gentleman has given this explanation, for he admits he did very little to preserve its life. He now admits that he thrashed it after it was dead. I could understand how the hon. gentleman might in a moment of passion commit murder, but I cannot understand why he should mutilate the dead. The hon. gentleman will hardly find a case in which I have voted in the early stages of a Bill for the principle of it, and afterwards against it. The hon. gentleman was bound to carry out that principle to the end, but he now shows how much and how little confidence can be placed in his political honesty.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I will give an instance in which my hon. friend the First Minister voted against a principle which he had voted to establish. My hon. friend stood here where I am now, and voted to make it impossible for any Government to construct the Pacific Railway in any other way than by a company, and afterwards stood where he now is and voted to build that road by the Government.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman is merely making an assertion, and we know the value of his assertions. I will not reply to the taunt of the hon. gentleman about hauling down the flag at Halifax, although the right hon. member for Kingston knows I can tell good stories about flags. I do not think it is well to revive disagreeable reminiscences, not even to wound a political opponent.

There is just one remark of the hon. gentleman to which I will refer. He said the Budget Speech of the Finance Minister in 1874 produced a disastrous effect on the London money market, and yet we find that the best loan ever negotiated for Canada was floated immediately afterwards. My hon. friends tried to get a loan for the Pacific Railway, and yet they did not get a single dollar, although they had a wonderful Premier, a wonderful Minister of Customs, a wonderfully prosperous country and no gloomy Finance Minister to sing jeremiads over the condition of the country. Such are the curious inconsistencies in which the hon. gentleman indulged to-night.

Hon. Mr. VAIL—As the hon. member for Cumberland has thought proper to enlighten the House as to how I obtained a seat in the Cabinet, I must, even at this late hour, ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments in order that I may point out a few of the difficulties which my hon. friend from Cumberland had to overcome before he secured a seat for himself here as a Cabinet Minister, and also explain my own position.

I have learned to-night for the first time that I owed my seat here to the hon. member for Halifax. I was under the impression that I was indebted to my hon. friend the Premier for that honour, and I am satisfied that he has been too long in politics to have come to the conclusion to offer me the place without being assured that my appointment would be satisfactory to at least a majority of the supporters of the Government from Nova Scotia.

The hon. member for Cumberland was first appointed Provincial Secretary for Nova Scotia in 1857, and the first election afterwards took place in 1859, when the Government was defeated. He again succeeded to power in 1863 on the retrenchment cry which the hon. member for Halifax has referred to, and before 1867 his Government had become so unpopular that in order to escape another defeat he forced the Confederation Act through the House, well knowing if he submitted the question to the people at the polls it would be disastrous to him and his party. For the next four years, or thereabouts, the hon. member occupied the position of 14th member of the Cabinet, flitting to and fro between the Capital and Nova Scotia hoping to reconcile the people of that Province to the new state of things, when General Doyle, who was then Governor of Nova Scotia, applied for leave of absence, which opened up the way for a seat in the Cabinet by appointing Hon. Mr. Kenny, who was then a member of Government, Administrator; but as the hon. gentleman's majority was a very narrow one in 1867, he did not feel safe to accept office and go to the county till he could rely on the support of his former colleague, Mr. McFarlane, who had been a long time in politics and would be satisfied with nothing short of a Senatorship. This could only be given him by appointing the Hon. Jonathan McCully to a judgeship, which was done, and McFarlane put in his place, continuing two Senators in the county of Cumberland, out of twelve in Nova Scotia, while the western part of the Province had no representative in that body. The House will thus see that in order to make room for the hon. member for Cumberland in the Cabinet, General Doyle was given leave of absence; Judge McCully was made a judge, and Mr. McFarlane appointed to the Senate.

For my own part I went into the Government in Nova Scotia in 1867, where I occupied an important position, second, if not first in responsibility, till last year, when I resigned and accepted the position offered me by the Premier here. Now, I think after this explanation the House will agree with me that the hon. member for Cumberland is the last man who should taunt me with being made Minister of Militia by the hon. member for Halifax who, so far as I know, has no more influence with the Premier than any other member from the Province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. DOMVILLE—I want to know if the Hon. Premier meant that the gentlemen connected with the Pacific Railway Company ought to have been driven from public life? If so, in the absence of an answer, I would refer him to the Statutes for 1871, where he will find among the parties praying to be incorporated to build the railroad, one who is now a Cabinet Minister. I think it well to mention this, because the Premier should either withdraw the statement or make it good.

Mr. BOWELL—I will call the attention of the House to one statement made by the Premier with reference to the charge preferred by several of his followers, and by the Ministerial press, to the effect that the Opposition press is responsible for having misled the mercantile community into the withdrawal of their goods from bond under the supposition that an increase of duties was to take place. I know that this is their favourite topic on every occasion since the Hon. Minister of Finance delivered his Budget Speech, although the Globe announced to the people of this country that the duties were to be raised. I shall refer in this regard to the action of a Ministerial candidate, and those who supported him so long ago as January last, to show that the Ministerialists are themselves responsible for misleading the country in this particular. It is well known that there was a deficit. I will just read a portion of a speech made by the hon. member for Montreal West, to establish that it was the intention of the Government to increase the tariff. We have already been told by the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House that the hon. member for Chateaugay made a similar statement.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—I do not remember it.

Mr. BOWELL—I do not say this on my own responsibility; but it is what I have heard. I have such a high opinion of the hon. member for Montreal West that I do not believe that he would state anything which he knew to be incorrect. The hon. member's speech will be found reported in the Montreal Herald of January 27th, 1876. He said: "Gentlemen, it is perhaps fortunate to some extent that the present revenue of the Dominion

Mr. DOMVILLE.

"has fallen off, because it will impose upon the Government of the Dominion the duty of making certain changes in the tariff. (Hear, hear.) I know that these changes are occupying the attention of the members of the Government. They have been quietly consulting and obtaining information through the different branches of manufacture, in order to form correct views with reference to any changes which they may make. Of course I am not at liberty to state—in fact, I do not know—what the proposed change will be, but I might say, that there will be an increase in the tariff and that the increase will tend to the protection of the manufacturing industries. (Applause.) What it will be I am unable to say; it will be a large increase, however, in the rate of many articles imported into this country from the United States."

Now there is a declaration made a short time ago by a gentleman who had been brought into the field much against his will, through pressure brought to bear on him by the Premier himself; and after an interview with the First Minister, the hon. gentleman appears before the people of Montreal, the commercial metropolis of this Dominion, and deliberately tells them, that although he was not aware to what extent the tariff was to be increased, he knew that it was to be raised sufficiently to protect the industries of this country; and yet in the face of all this—repeated over and over again, not only in Montreal but elsewhere, by almost every man in the confidence of the Government—we find the Premier and his followers, not only in this House, but also in the country and in the press, attempting to fasten the responsibility of the belief which had taken possession of the minds of the people in this connection upon the Opposition press. But if any persons are responsible for the injury that has been done to our mercantile community, they are the supporters of the Administration who gave forth such an impression. Whether directly obtained from the Government or by inferences, certainly neither the Finance Minister nor any of his colleagues have risen to deny the correctness of the statement of the hon. member for Montreal West—and which he repeated frequently—that he was so led to believe by the Government.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I rose and said that the hon. gentleman had no authority for making such a statement.

Mr. BOWELL—The Hon. Minister of Finance denied pointedly that he had told deputations that an increase would take place, and the hon. member for Montreal West reiterated immediately afterwards that the interview in question was of such a character that he was satisfied a change was to be effected.

I have seen it stated in a newspaper, which claimed to be prepared to prove it, that the Ministry had informed deputations, which waited on them a few days previous to the delivery of the Budget Speech, that such was their intention.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—There never was any such resolution arrived at.

Mr. BOWELL—I did not say resolution, but intention.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I say, that there was no such intention.

Mr. BOWELL—I accept the statement of the hon. gentleman, because I have no means of denying it. However, there can be no doubt that an effort has been made to fasten the responsibility of producing such an impression upon the Opposition press, while it is equally certain that this should be borne by the Ministers and their supporters.

Mr. MASSON—I said just now that the hon. member for Chateauguay lead the people of Montreal to believe there would be an increase. Speaking of the anomalies in the tariff the hon. gentleman said, and it is reported by the Herald:—"These anomalies had to be redressed and the tariff thoroughly revised. The positions of Mr. White and Mr. Workman are identical as far as protection is concerned, except that Mr. Workman, as a supporter of the Government, would be more likely to influence them to adopt his way of thinking." At the moment the Premier had come to Montreal to support Mr. Workman, the hon. member for Chateauguay told the citizens of Montreal: "If you elect Mr. Workman, you will have a better chance of obtaining protection than if you elect Mr. White." The hon. member for Montreal West, not only months ago, but three or four days before the meeting of Parliament, said the people of Montreal could trust the Government that they would give a certain amount of protection—not so great as they expected, but they might be sure of obtaining reciprocal duties with the Americans. I think it comes badly from hon. gentlemen opposite to reproach the Conservative press with having induced the merchants to take their goods out of bond.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—I did not doubt at all my hon. friend had some quotations from some speech of mine that would seem to bear out his statement, but, of course, I had no intimation from the Government that they intended to change the tariff. The inference was general throughout the country that the tariff would be revised, but certainly I never received any information from the Government leading me to suppose such was their intention, and I venture to think that my relations personally and politically with the Administration were so intimate, if they had communicated with any of their supporters on a matter of that kind they would very possibly have mentioned it to me. It was entirely a matter of inference, from facts that were patent to everybody, that the revenue had fallen off, and that the tariff would be opened. I am gratified to find that my hon. friends were enabled to make both ends meet without the necessity of imposing additional taxes. I thought, and I feared, before I came up here, we should find it necessary to impose additional taxation, and if the tariff question had been opened I should certainly have done my best to redress some of the anomalies to which I refer. But as this whole subject is to be up on Tuesday, I think we had better drop it for the present, and I ask leave to withdraw my motion to adjourn the debate.

The motion was withdrawn, and the House went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Scatcherd in the Chair.

On the item "Privy Council $14,540," under the heading of Civil Government,

Mr. KIRKPATRICK complained of the increase of $160 over last year, and $2,000 over the vote for 1874. The House had been led to suppose that the Government were about to adopt a policy of retrenchment. He objected to the passage of this item without discussion after Three o'clock in the morning.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT explained that the increase last year had met with the sanction of the House without a word of disapproval, and the increase this year was but trifling, and was necessitated by the employment of an additional messenger.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD suggested that the Committee rise and report progress.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said no progress had been made; at least one item should be passed before the Committee should rise.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER objected to disposing of the item in this summary manner. The House and the country had been led to believe that a policy of retrenchment was to be inaugurated, yet here among the smaller items there was a decided increase for which no satisfactory explanation had been given, while the item for immigration purposes was largely decreased. He considered that it was of the utmost importance that the appropriation for immigration purposes should not be reduced. It was essential that we should adopt every means available to settle our North-West Territories.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE raised a point of order; the system had always been to allow no discussion in Committee of Supply except on the item under consideration.

The Chairman ruled the member for Cumberland was out of order.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD protested against this ruling; it was interfering with the liberty of Parliament.

After some discussion the item was passed, and the Committee rose and reported progress.

The House adjourned at Thirty-five minutes past Three, a.m.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 6, 1876.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were introduced and read the first time:—

Mr. OLIVER—To amend the Weights and Measures Act of 1873.

Mr. DOMVILLE—To incorporate the Charter Bank of London and North America.

SECOND READINGS.

The following Bills were read the second time:—

To amend the Acts respecting the Citizens' Insurance and Investment Company.

To amend the Act 35th Vic., Cap. 111, intitled "An Act to incorporate the Mail Printing and Publishing Company (Limited.)"

Respecting the Mechanics' Bank.

An Act respecting the capital of the Great Western Railway Company, and for the capitalization of certain charges and liabilities.

HALIFAX STATION HOUSE.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked was the iron station now at Halifax awaiting erection purchased privately or by public tender, and from whom?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The iron roof was purchased from a firm in Philadelphia, not by public tender.

Mr. DOMVILLE—What is the name of the firm?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I made a memorandum of it, but have mislaid it.

Mr. DOMVILLE—Suppose we let the question stand over.

INSTRUCTIONS TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

Mr. MILLS asked whether any correspondence has taken place between the Government and the Secretary of State for the Colonies, in reference to the instructions given to the Governor General with a view to make the instructions consistent with the undoubted authority of the Parliament of Canada?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—There was no correspondence that I can bring down for my hon. friend on that subject.

THE GEORGIAN BAY BRANCH RAILROAD.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew) asked whether the contract made between Hon. A. B. Foster and the Government, dated 27th February, 1875, for the construction and working of the Georgian Bay branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been cancelled or modified; and if the said contract has been cancelled, whether it is the intention of the Government to take such steps as will secure the early construction of the said branch line of railway?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The contract with Mr. Foster has been cancelled. The Government will submit at a future stage of the business of the House what steps are proposed in the matter.

SUPERVISION OF BANKS.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce during the present Session any measure for the purpose of securing a more effectual supervision of banks, with a view to protecting the interests of depositors, shareholders and the public.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—It is not the present intention of the Government to take any further steps in that direction.

THE PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. THOMPSON (Cariboo) asked whether such progress has been made in the surveys of the proposed Canadian Pacific Railway in the Province of British Columbia as to enable the Government to decide upon a route between the Pacific Ocean and the Rocky Mountains, or to enter into contract for the construction of the whole or any portion of the same?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Such progress has been made as enables the Government approximately to decide upon the location, but the surveys are not completed yet, and we are not able precisely to decide upon the line through British Columbia. Until that is done the Government will not be in a position to let out any tender on that section, and besides that, any tender that is let must be approved by the House.

BAIE VERTE CANAL.

Mr. MACMILLAN asked by whose authority the Report of the Commission on the Baie Verte Canal was published; at what printing establishment it was printed; whether the printing was done by tender or not; how many copies were printed and what was the total cost thereof; whether the account for the publishing thereof has been paid, and if so by whose authority?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I think that is properly a motion that should be put on the paper for returns. It is quite impossible for me to answer the series of questions contained in one mass. I may say generally that the evidence was printed in order to enable the Commissioners to read it more clearly. I am not able to answer the other parts of the question.

GRAVING DOCK AT QUEBEC.

Mr. BLANCHET moved for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of all reports by Engineers, reports from the Quebec Harbour Commission, documents, correspondence and Orders in Council relating to the selection of the site for the construction of a graving dock at the Port of Quebec. The hon. gentleman said this question was a very important one, and he wanted all information relating thereto brought down. It was the subject of legislation two years ago, and last year when the commission was appointed it caused a passage at arms between the Hon. Premier and the hon. member for Cumberland. The trade and shipping are taxed for the construction of the work, and the interests of trade and navigation depended a great deal upon the selection of the site. The engineers chosen by the late commissioners, Messrs. Kinipple and Morris, of Greenock, were eminent men with a reputation on both sides of the Atlantic, and they reported in favour of the south side of the river, which they said presented most advantages both for cheapness in construction and natural facilities. A great deal of capital had been made out of this question of the site. The Hon. President of the Council told the citizens, at the local elections last summer, that the election of Mr. Shehyn would contribute to the prosperity of the city in this respect. The election also of the member for Quebec Centre was brought about by promises that this work, as well as the fortifications and other improvements, should be undertaken and carried out. But there were many strange things in the world of politics. On this question the hon. member for Charlevoix and the President of the Council agreed together, and the member for Lévis and himself were also in unity thereon. The engineers referred to reported that the graving dock would cost £20,000 sterling less to construct at Indian Cove than at Diamond Harbour, and he hoped this House and the Government would be convinced that the south side was preferable for the undertaking. Besides, at that point an Allan Line steamer had been detained two weeks in April, and a great deal of expense had been incurred in repairing the Napoleon III., which was damaged badly by the ice. The surveys of the mouth of the St. Charles River were not satisfactory. He hoped the Government would take the necessary steps for the appointment of the new Commissioners as soon as possible. The last Harbour Trust expired on the first of January, and the people of Quebec were anxiously awaiting their appointment. There might, however, be difficulties in the way of the Government in this particular. Some persons might be anxious to see certain gentlemen appointed, but the Government ought to settle the matter as early as possible. The Government had stated that no new surveys were to be made, but it was desirable that the information moved for should be furnished, so that members might know what progress had been made towards getting the graving dock. He trusted the Government would consult with the President of the Council on this matter, one on which that gentleman was well informed and held sound views. He also hoped his hon.

Mr. BLANCHET.

friend from Lévis would give him a helping hand in inducing the Government to listen to these reasonable demands.

Mr. ROULEAU thought that the question should be treated without any display of favouritism to contending interests. The reports of the examining engineers had all been in favour of Point Lévis, where the dock could be built at the least cost by a considerable amount. He trusted that the Government would show their liberality in this respect by ceding the land required gratuitously; and he observed that the Point Lévis site had the additional advantage of being accessible later in the autumn and earlier in the spring than the other location. The Board of Trade had declared that this site was the best; and now that the North Shore Railway was to be built, and several other improvements to be made, particularly in favour of Quebec, he deemed it but just that Point Lévis should have some consideration and justice despite the powerful influence exercised by Quebec. He hoped that certain papers were in error in announcing that the dock would be located at Quebec; and also, like the hon. member for Bellechasse, he trusted that these announcements had only been published with the view of carrying elections.

Mr. FRECHETTE stated that when this delicate matter came before the House for the first time, he had thought proper to abstain from taking any part in the discussion, though the constituency he had the honour to represent was deeply interested in its fair settlement. In the general interests of the country and navigation, he had thought it bad policy to endeavour to embarrass the Government in this relation. He had full confidence in the Ministry, and he was certain that they would be inspired by a spirit of justice when they came to give their decision, so important to the country in general and to his district in particular. He did not believe that they would be more successful in their object if they abused the Ministers; conflicting interests were at stake, and if a decision had not yet been given, this was due to a certain extent to the action of those who never failed to bring down every important question to the level of partizanship in order to make political capital out of it. For two years it had been so utilized by the Conservative press of Quebec; and if any credit could be given for unscrupulous and untiring appeals intended to arouse the prejudices of the masses, this honour should accorded to the Conservatives in this question, which served as a double weapon:— In Quebec they said, "Electors, your interests are being sacrificed; the Government have chosen the site for the graving dock at Point Lévis; what an abominable Administration this is." At Point Lévis they exclaimed, "Electors, what an abominable Government you have! The site of the dock has been selected at Quebec. Vote against the Ministers who have so shamefully sacrificed your interests." At Lévis Mr. Fréchette had been bribed by Mr. Cauchon, at Quebec Mr. Cauchon had been seduced by Messrs. Gilmour, Patton and others, and so on; and what was the result? The strongest and most extraordinary local feeling had been created, and instead of this important question being regarded from a national standpoint, it had become only an apple of discord and bone of contention between two different and neighbouring localities, the one having the advantage in point of number, and the other in point of position; and either will raise a clamour whatever be the course adopted by the Government. He regretted that it had been employed to serve political purposes, but did not doubt the sincerity in this relation of the hon. member for Bellechasse. Of what had they to complain so far? When the report was presented in favour of Lévis, the Government could do nothing less than suspend judgment, and send their own engineers to make a personal examination, of which the result was not yet known. Where, then, had negligence been exhibited; and where was the denial of justice? Of course the question was embarrassing to this, as it would be to any other Administration; but he, for his part, did not believe that any change of Government would advance the interests of Point Lévis one iota; and well-known scandals which concerned the late Administration were of such a nature as to make it unlikely that anyone should desire such a change. The points of issue were scientific, and should be left to the engineers who, he was glad to say, favoured Lévis and to the Harbour Commissioners. The facts of the case which were of public notoriety, had been submitted to the Ministers. The Prime Minister, about two years ago, in the course of an eloquent speech delivered at Quebec, had stated that the Government was strong enough to do justice to everybody, and he was confident that this was still the case. He paid no attention to the threats of those who must bear the greatest part of the responsibility for producing the present imbroglio, and he sincerely thanked the hon. member for Bellechasse for the interest he took in his late constituency, which alone of the Electoral Districts of the Dominion might be said to be represented, not only as to its majority, but also as to its minority.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN considered that his hon. friend from Bellechasse had rather pre-judged matters in promising that he and the Hon. President of the Council would agree with him regarding this question. He was bound to say that the conduct of the hon. member for Bellechasse in calling to his aid his late adversary excited the suspicion that his case was not very strong, although the latter had not proved a very powerful ally. The latter averred that the Ministry had been attacked unnecessarily touching this question, also that it had been a God send for the Conservative party; the hon. member should however have borne in mind the fact that it had been used on certain occasions at Lévis and in Quebec Centre, not by the Conservatives, but by the Liberals. When Mr. Shehyn was a candidate the President of the Council himself had held the construction of this dock out as an inducement in his friend's favour, and L'Evènement would surely not be repudiated by his hon. friend from Point Lévis or any hon. member on that side of the House.

Mr. FRECHETTE—Why don't you quote the articles of the Canadien.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN — I am sure it will afford great pleasure to my hon. friend to read those articles himself.

Mr. Shehyn, the local Liberal candidate, was reported as saying: "You will obtain in a few months the graving dock, that enterprise which will not only help the progress, but be the life of St. Rochs and St. Sauveur. That graving dock is the beginning of important and gigantic works which will be built on the St. Charles. I think I can rely on being a member of the Commission," &c. He had the promise, no doubt, of an appointment, and he believed he could exercise a great deal of influence in the location of the graving dock. The report proceeded to say:—"Mr. Cauchon was called, and spoke with great success of the candidature of Mr. Shehyn, of his magnificent position in business and connection with the North Shore Railway, which was to be constructed by the local Government. He also referred to the graving dock, the construction of which would throw $1,200,000 in St. Rochs and St. Sauveur, to say nothing of the large amounts which would be expended in Quebec for harbour improvements. Do you understand the effect of this? It is life and immense property for the city." He (Mr. Langevin) could also quote from the Journal de Quebec extracts to the same effect. The papers that were favourable to the Hon. President of the Council spoke of the great advantage it would be to have him elected. Mayor Murphy published a letter in which he said, after an interview with the Premier about this graving dock, that he was in a position to say what would be done for the city. Thus it would be seen that the graving dock was kept before the electors of Quebec to secure their support for the President of the Council. The Morning Chronicle, which was a special organ of the hon. gentleman and took a deep interest in his return, had a long article on the 21st of December appealing to the electors to support him on account of the great works he could get for Quebec. It contended this was not a question of persons or politics; the citizens of Quebec might not like the hon. gentleman, might be displeased with his conduct, might not have confidence in him, but all that should be set aside, and he should be elected because of the patronage he could get for the city. It said:—"Let us take for instance the proposed graving dock, on the construction of which on this side of the river we all place so much stress. Is it at all likely we shall improve our chances of obtaining this great work by showing ingratitude to a man like Mr. Mackenzie, who has so frequently expressed his willingness to act for the benefit of Quebec? Is it not more human to expect that in such an event his decision would be favourable to the side which returns a professed and enthusiastic supporter. We believe so at least. Then, again, we have Lord Dufferin's proposed embellishments of the city, and new Castle of St. Louis on the Citadel which, if carried out, will not only lastingly improve Quebec beyond her hitherto wildest aspirations, but entail the expenditure of a large amount of money to the advantage of our population. Is it possible to conclude that the rejection of Mr. Cauchon and the election of Mr. Tarte would be calculated to propitiate the Federal Government and advance our interests in these particulars? For it must be remembered that more than three-quarters of the large sums necessary to carry out His Excellency's proposition must come from the Ottawa Treasury. We must not be understood to say that the realization of all these undertakings depend wholly on Mr. Cauchon; but we believe it will be generally admitted that it is much better to have a powerful friend at Court than none at all; while, on the other hand, Mr. Cauchon's defeat—which, however, we do not admit to be possible—could only indefinitely retard works pre-eminently needed at this moment by Quebec and its people." He (Mr. Langevin) could go on reading that article, but it would introduce side issues which he thought would be undesirable under the circumstances. The hon. member for Lévis had forgotten that instead of this being a God-send to the Conservatives it had really been used as an engine by the Liberals to carry their elections. It would be surprising if the electors of Centre and

Mr. FRECHETTE.

East Quebec, who are principally labouring men, should be found to go against the advice of their newspapers.

There was a good deal to be said in favour of the south shore. Representing a constituency situated at a considerable distance from Quebec, he was in a better position to judge impartially of the merits of the two places than if he represented Dorchester. After the admirable manner in which the members for Lévis and Bellechasse had put their case, something should be said about the north shore claims. The people of Quebec were quite taken by surprise when they heard there was any of the graving dock being constructed on the South Shore. The impression had always prevailed in Quebec that it would be on the north shore, where there were two sites. Each of these two sites had its advocates, but it was generally conceded that the mouth of St. Charles River was preferable to Wolf's Cove. One of the Engineers who submitted plans to the Commissioner, gave five or six reasons why St. Charles River should be selected. The hon. member for Bellechasse had claimed as one of the advantages of the south shore site, that it was Government property. That same advantage applied to the St. Charles River, where it would be under the control of the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec. It is in the centre of the business part of Quebec, where it is convenient to the masses of the workmen. The graving dock would also be in immediate communication with the proposed terminus of the North Shore Railway, and the water is deep enough for the largest ships. He gave these reasons, not as his own, but as those of several engineers. There was another site at Champlain Ward of which he had less knowledge. There was a shoal there which could be utilized in the construction of the dock. He had been informed that the boring which was being done at the mouth of St. Charles River was progressing very slowly. He supposed the season had a good deal to do with that. If, however, it required a week to bore sixty feet, the summer would pass before it could be finished. He mentioned this to show the Premier how anxious, not only the people of Quebec, but the surrounding country were to have this work commenced.

The dock could be built at a very much lower rate at this time than any other, on account of the cheapness of labour and material. He understood the new Commission was to be appointed, and they might call for tenders and have the work proceeded with during the summer. He urged the Government to increase the force engaged in testing this matter of the site.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON said he was not present when the hon. member for Bellechasse alluded to his position in regard to this question. It was stated that he had been elected by a promise that the graving dock should be constructed. The hon. gentleman had said a great deal about him, but everybody engaged in politics must know that he had been in the House 32 years, and had gone through 14 elections without defeat, and there was not always a graving dock before the public. In 1872 he ran against the strongest man that could be found to oppose him, and he was also elected for Quebec, unanimously, in 1874, when the hon. member had to run away from that city. He had always been in favour of the graving dock, but he made no promise during the last election. Gentlemen opposed to him had tried to fix him on this question, and they endeavoured to induce him to sign a document written, he supposed, by the hon. member for Charlevoix, with that object.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN--Was it in my writing?

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON--It looked like his doing.

Hon. Mr. LANGEVIN--I did not write it.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON--The man who presented it must have consulted the hon. gentleman about it. He (Mr. Cauchon) refused to sign the document, and declined also to commit himself at any of some twenty meetings which had been held during the contest. He knew his position, and had no authority to make a promise about the work. He believed the River St. Charles was the proper place for the graving dock. Three parties were interested in the work—the Government, which was bound by its position and law to see that things are well done; the Harbour Commission, and the Corporation of Quebec. Preliminary borings were going on, and every effort was being made to have the survey as complete as possible. That was the true position of affairs, and nobody could complain of being ill-treated. With regard to the attempts made to turn the electors against him, he would say that here and out of the Government he would do nothing which could be construed as an injustice towards any constituency. The statement that this question had to do with his election was incorrect. He had always occupied the same position with regard to it. He was returned unanimously at the last election, and he could promise them that he would be unanimously returned at any future election. A man who had been in Parliament thirty-two years, who had been opposed by the strongest men who could be brought out against him, who had been betrayed by his own friends, and still was successful, could accomplish a great deal.

Mr. CARON said although he did not agree with all that had fallen from the hon. member of Bellechasse and others, he fully concurred with them in the opinion that this question ought to be settled. In 1873 power was given to the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec to borrow money for the purpose of creating a fund which, with the money to be voted by the Parliament of Canada and the Imperial Government, would be used to defray the cost of this graving dock. In 1875 the legislation was altered so that the power to borrow money was transferred from the Commissioners to the Governor in Council and the money was not to be paid into the hands of the Commissioners until the plans had been approved by the Governor in Council, and the site had been selected. Ever since the question had been before the public it had been largely discussed; expensive explorations had been conducted by the most eminent engineers of England, and local gentleman had also been employed to decide this question of the site.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON.

Public opinion was divided as to where the dock should be placed. One party was in favour of Lévis, and there was a great deal to be said favourable to the site recommended by Messrs. Kinnipple & Morris. But from the nature of improvements going on and contemplated at River St. Charles, he thought that perhaps there was no room for the graving dock. Moreover, difficulties from an engineering standpoint were in the way of this site; it was stated it would cost more to construct the dock there than at other localities mentioned. After carefully reading the reports which had been made, he had come to the conclusion that Wolf's Cove was a most desirable location.

In the course of this debate, his hon. friend the member for Lévis seemed to discuss matters foreign to the question. That gentleman spoke of attacks on the Government and the benefits which the Conservative party had derived from this graving dock agitation. When his hon. friends were busy at the local elections, he had also to take his share of this, and he remembered that one political party made use of this question, which should be considered from a purely national standpoint, to serve their own purposes.

He remembered distinctly that the President of the Council took a very active part in connection with the election of Mr. Shehyn; and at one of the meetings it was stated in the presence of the President of the Council to the electors of St. Rochs, that if they would return Mr. Shehyn, a good Liberal who would be true to their interests, they might rest perfectly certain that the graving dock would be located in the River St. Charles. On the same day, and perhaps at the very same time his hon. friend from Lévis, while supporting the candidature of his friend in the county for the Local House, Mr. Paquette, told the electors that if they desired to have the dock on their side of the river they must elect this gentleman. He was rather surprised to hear the President of the Council speak of his great successes in his political contests during the past twenty-five years. The hon. gentleman might surely have avoided mention of his last two elections, for in 1872 he came out as a Conservative; and his hon. friend might also remember — though, of course, he would be very sorry to make him personally responsible for it—that during this contest, never were such violence and corruption witnessed as were used on the hon. gentleman's behalf; and yet his hon. friend was proud of this among his other successes.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—That was in the Conservative interest.

Mr. CARON—It was altogether in the Conservative interest, on the part of a gentleman who had left the ranks of the Conservative party, and who was to-day President of the Council in a Liberal Government.

The hon. gentleman should also have remembered his last election as a Minister of the Crown. That he would accept such a position had been rumoured for some time. Many were incredulous on this point; others, who were not altogether the hon. gentleman's friends, hoped that it would be the fact, confident that he would do more harm to his new than to his old political allies. At this time, the construction of the graving dock was a matter of considerable importance, and the Quebec Chronicle explained how it came to pass that it supported the President of the Council, in the following language:—

“As we take it, the question which presents itself for Quebec in this election is not one of party by any means, although stump orators and partizan writers may seek to place it on that narrow ground. The question is, which of the two candidates is likely to exercise the greatest influence just now for the advantage of Quebec? There can possibly be no hesitation in pointing to Mr. Cauchon as the one who, by his present high position and connections, is best fitted in every way to do so. This language may seem strange on our part, but where the real interests of the city are concerned we have never yet hesitated to sink our personal prejudices and dislikes in order to advocate the cause best calculated to promote the welfare and prosperity of the people. We have never had an overweening affection for the new President of the Council; we have fought him bitterly more than once, always speaking our mind of him and his conduct very plainly indeed, but this has never prevented us from recognizing the marked ability and great energy of the man, nor does it now bind us to the fact that much of the future destiny of Quebec depends upon the present endorsement by the electors of the Centre Division of his acceptance of office in the Mackenzie Administration. The moment is a critical one for the ancient capital, and the people in the Centre possess interests identical with those of the remainder of the city. We must all hang or fall together, and it can only be by accepting Mr. Cauchon, with all his faults, and returning a friend and supporter of the Government, and not a foe, that Quebec may expect the Administrative favours it so much needs, and realize the long-cherished hope it entertains. It is only reasonable, if we wish the Government to help us, that we should at least meet them half way, for it must not be put out of sight that great public works and improvements are contemplated in this city and neighbourhood, in regard to which the Government has much to say. Let us take, for instance, the proposed graving dock, on the construction of which, on this side of the river, we all place so much stress.”

Probably his hon. friend from Lévis had this article in his mind when he stated that this question had served as a political engine. He, for his part, considered this matter as one of vital importance not only to Quebec—and he could not look upon it from a strictly Provincial point of view—but to the whole Dominion, in connection with its commercial interests. He, moreover, considered that the dock should be built by the Canadian and Imperial Governments. We enjoyed commercial advantages of which we should be proud, being the fourth or fifth naval power in the world, as far as our merchant navy was concerned, and, in every other country, these docks were considered indispensable with respect to the commercial prosperity of the nation. Across the line they numbered seven. There was one each in the Brooklyn, Boston, Norfolk, Pensacola, and San Francisco Navy Yards; eighteen at Liverpool, six at Birkenhead, one at Sebastopol; one at Bermuda, one in Australia and one in Vancouver. It might be recollected that three or four years ago (13th of June, 1872), a large steamer, the France, chartered by the Allan Line, while leaving harbour, ran ashore; and it was necessary to raise and temporarily repair her in order that she might be sent to England. These repairs cost an enormous sum—nearly $40,000. She sailed for Quebec on the 5th of the following September, and the repairs made on the other side of the water also necessitated heavy expenditure, without taking into consideration the cargo destroyed. It accordingly seemed to him that the time had come when a site for a graving dock should be selected, and for them to know whether it was the intention to build such a dock at all, and if so, the place where, and time when. The interests of the country required that immediate steps in this connection should be taken by the Government, and he hoped that the question would not be left undecided until the occasion of the next elections. The choice of the site should be submitted to the Engineers. He did not possess scientific knowledge, but he was under the impression that if the River St. Charles did not furnish a suitable location, such could be found at Wolfe's Cove, where the dock could be built with little, if any, more expense than at Point Lévis.

From an engineering point of view it was fully equal to the site at Point Lévis, and far superior from a commercial point of view. He hoped it would not be held over until next general election, so as to be again used as a political engine. He knew that if the President of the Council lost this useful help he would find, when required, some other means of helping his friends. It reminded him of a page of our political history. It was when the seat of Government had not yet become permanent. The Government went, at that period, from Quebec to Montreal, and from Kingston to Toronto. When an important vote presented itself the gentlemen in power threatened their supporters, representing these different districts, that unless they voted as required they would lose the permanent seat of Government. Thus this question of the graving dock was utilized, as he stated above. When an election occurred in Lévis, electors were told: "Vote for the Government candidate, and he will secure the graving dock for Lévis." If the battle raged in Quebec, the independent electors were told: "Elect the friend of the Government and the dock will certainly be secured for Quebec." We hoped this would cease, and the graving dock question settled once and for all.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE remarked that he had listened with a good deal of interest to the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, and of his hon. friend from Lévis; and in the first place, he could not help observing how impossible it seemed for the former to speak, even of a business matter, without introducing political considerations; but they had been unable to show that the Government had used political influence in connection with this or any other work. Still the hon. member for Bellechasse had not hesitated to say that this was the motive which the Administration had in view. He did not desire to convince the hon. member of the contrary, for he knew that this could not be done; the hon. gentleman had been a very distinguished member of the opposite party, and he dared say, felt bound—

Mr. CARON.

Hon. Mr. BLANCHET—Pardon me I did not say that the Government had used the Quebec graving dock question as a political engine; but that the President of the Council had raised expectations in the minds of the electors in this connection.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE accepted the hon. gentleman's correction; the hon. member from Bellechasse, he dared say, had felt bound to show his new-found friends the extent of his enthusiasm in their behalf. His hon. friend was mistaken when he said that the President of the Council had exercised any influence whatever in this relation; he failed to establish in any manner that the question was used with reference to late elections, while he must have known that the entire expenditure on the fortifications had been very trifling.

Hon. Mr. BLANCHET—Excuse me again. I do not like to be misrepresented or misunderstood. I did not speak of money laid out on the fortifications which was voted either at the last or the preceding Parliament; I referred to improvements proposed by the President of the Council, mentioned in some newspapers, and expected to be made by the people of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—With this matter the Government has had nothing as yet to do; and whatever might be done, would of course be ordered with the knowledge and consent of the House. He would merely say that the works on the fortification had been undertaken purely in the public interest, irrespective of any election cries whatever. He was glad to observe that the hon. member for Quebec County had proclaimed himself so entirely free from improper influences in connection with elections, for undoubtedly the contests in Quebec County in 1872 and 1874 had been extremely pure; and consequently the fact that his hon. friend so readily suspected other people of improper motives was no matter for surprise. His hon. friend from Charlevoix had also had his little fling in the political direction; and he was afraid that there were grounds for the belief that it would gratify his hon. friend very much if the site was chosen at any other place than Quebec.

The Government from the very first, however, had taken the greatest possible pains to obtain accurate information concerning the various sites proposed; he had not been satisfied with this, and he had given his personal attention to the matter. He had weighed the representations of the Engineers, Harbour Commissioners and other gentlemen interested, altogether apart from local motives. The engineers had recommended Point Lévis as more suitable, in many respects, than the River St. Charles; and they had also pointed out that the commercial advantages were undoubtedly in favour of the latter location, although physical difficulties were in the way. They had to consider the amount of ice which would be encountered, and many things besides the question of mere cheapness of construction. The hon. member for Quebec County was quite right in his statement that the whole country was interested in this matter, and the Harbour Commissioners were very properly to be consulted in this regard. The Government would, in any event, not be influenced by political considerations; having the general interest of the country solely in view, they could not, of course, please both sides, but as soon as possible they would obtain all the information which the Chief Engineer of the Public Works Department could supply, and this would be done before they could think of committing themselves to a formal opinion touching this important matter.

By these considerations the Government must be guided, and he could only assure the House no time would be lost. They hoped the examination would be completed in time to take advantage of the earlier part of this season in commencing a work of so much importance to the interests of the whole country. In connection with such matters it seemed very undesirable to be bringing up mere political speeches, which were well enough, perhaps, delivered at an election, but totally unsuited to business matters in the House.

Mr. MASSON agreed with the Hon. Premier in his remarks relative to the location of the graving dock, but he was unwise in taunting the Opposition with discussing this question from a political point of view. That had been done on this occasion by the hon. member for Lévis who had, in the most unjustifiable manner, dragged old feuds and scandals to light as if there were no scandals at the present day. The hon. member was indiscreet in his zeal. He said the Government were greatly embarrassed, not so much by the reports of the engineers, as from the fact that they had rights and advantages on the side of Lévis, but numbers on the side of Quebec.

Mr. FRECHETTE—I did not say so.

Mr. MASSON—Perhaps the hon. member did not mean to say so.

Mr. FRECHETTE—The hon. gentleman never heard me say so.

Mr. MASSON said he had noted the words, but must have done so incorrectly. The hon. member had said it was a God-send to the Conservatives, but proof had been furnished to show that it had been used by the Liberals. He (Mr. Masson) advised the hon. gentleman to use his influence with the Government to have this settled immediately, and he might be assured the Conservatives would be very glad to have this question removed from the arena of political discussion.

Since the opening of Parliament, proof had been furnished of a fact that was well known to the country—that the great party of purity had at last consented to adopt such means to carry elections as they had always been disposed to believe only poor Conservatives who were mortals and not angels, resorted to. Another feather had fallen from the cap of the Liberal party.

They were more familiar with political corruption than the Conservatives. They did not go the elector and offer him a pecuniary advantage for his vote, but to a whole constituency and say, "If you elect so and so, you shall have a graving dock."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Who said that?

Mr. MASSON—My hon. friend from Charlevoix has read the utterances of the Ministerial press to that effect.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—He read from the Morning Chronicle, which was never known to support the Liberal party.

Mr. MASSON said L'Evenement had also been quoted, and the Premier would hardly repudiate it. The President of the Council had professed to be favourable to giving a graving dock to Quebec, and when asked to sign a statement to that effect, refused to do so on the ground it would compromise his election. When the hon. gentleman, while a member of the Dominion Government, was in the lobbies of the Local Legislature trying to influence members against the Local Government—

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—That is mere rumour manufactured by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MASSON asked if it was not true that the hon. gentleman had gone into the lobbies of the Local Legislature for the purpose of using this graving dock question to weaken the Local Government.

Mr. SPEAKER called the hon. gentleman to order.

Mr. FRECHETTE—I ask the hon. member for Terrebonne if the graving dock should be at Lévis or Quebec.

Mr. MASSON—I am in favor of having the graving dock wherever the Minister of Public Works will place it after he receives the best information he can obtain on the subject.

Mr. FRECHETTE—We are all of the same opinion.

Mr. MASSON said there was this difference, the Conservatives had not made political capital out of it. Conclusive proof had been furnished that this question had been used by the Ministerial party to aid them in their elections.

Mr. MASSON.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he presumed the object of this motion was to bring up this discussion rather than to get the papers, some of which could not be furnished. He would bring all he could, however.

Hon. Mr. BLANCHET said it was evident from the remarks of the Premier that the opinion of the Government and of every man of business in this country, would be in favour of the south shore. He had heard nothing in this debate to convince him to the contrary. He was sorry the Premier had accused him of making political capital of this question. The member for Lévis was the first to refer to the political aspect of the matter. When legislation first took place with regard to this graving dock, two Sessions ago, the present Government was in power, so that it was incorrect to say that it had been a god-send to the Conservatives. He (Mr. Blanchet) had brought this matter before the House as a question of public importance from a business point of view; and he was very glad the Premier had determined to decide upon the site irrespective of party or locality, basing his decision on the engineer's report to be submitted to him after thorough and proper surveys.

The motion was carried.

TRURO AND PICTOU RAILROAD.

Mr. MACKAY (Cape Breton) moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for correspondence with the Local Government of Nova Scotia respecting the contemplated transfer of the Branth Line of Railway between Truro and Pictou to aid in the extension of the Railway system east from the latter terminus.

He was about to address the House when six o'clock was called.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. MACKAY said that the subject of his motion was of such importance to the constituency he represented that he felt it incumbent on him to make some remarks in connection therewith. It would not be amiss for him to state that he represented the most eastern constituency in Canada, and if there was any dependance to be placed upon the present state of affairs in Cape Breton, and upon the statements of scientific men in regard to the great mineral wealth of that island, there must be a great future before it. They were a long distance from the capital, and had no railway communication with the rest of the Dominion and their wants and interests had been greatly neglected. When it was taken into consideration that the railways in Nova Scotia were built almost entirely out of its public funds, and that the people of Cape Breton contributed very largely towards their construction, and that during the agitation for these lines they were given to understand that the railway system would be increased as the country developed and be extended to that Island; he contended they had certain rights and equities to which this Government, to a certain extent, had fallen heir. If Nova Scotia had not gone into Confederation the railroads would have been extended further east and gone through Cape Breton, and influence would have been brought to bear to carry out the understanding which existed when the construction of the lines was first commenced in the Province. This matter had been brought before Parliament on one or two occasions, and had been considered of such importance that two Committees had been appointed indirectly in connection with it for the purpose of considering the advisability of constructing a line of railway east from New Glasgow to Louisbourg. This question presented itself before the House and country in two lights—it might be regarded as a matter of local importance, and also as a matter of national importance in as much as they claimed to have within their borders the shortest route to Asia and Europe. He would not then address himself to the former, but to what he deemed the national aspect of the question. By looking at the map it would be seen that the eastern portion of the Dominion goes several hundred miles further into the ocean than the United States. He would refer to two or three sections of the report, presented

May 22, 1874. In that document the Committee, of which he was a member, state:

"1st. That there are but three harbors possessing the qualities necessary to commend them to the attention of your Honorable House, viz., Halifax, Louisburg and Paspébiac.

"2nd. That, from the evidence given before your Committee, it has been shown that Louisburg is a first-class harbor, having the geographical advantage of being the nearest available harbor of this Dominion to Europe.

"It is 230 miles nearer to Europe than Paspébiac, and 196 miles nearer to Europe than Halifax, by the direct route.

"It should also be observed that the approaches to Louisburg are very easy, and that the anchorage is good on the north-east portion of the harbor, which is entirely sheltered from winds, and that the harbor is capable of floating vessels of any size.

"Your Committee believe that the ultimate selection between Louisburg on the one hand and some port on the line of the Intercolonial Railroad, in the vicinity of Shippegan or Paspébiac on the other; but from the evidence given before your Committee, they cannot report favorably upon the harbor of Shippegan.

* * * * *

"On the other hand, Louisburg has the advantage of having a shoal or rock of small extent, it is true, inside the harbour, called the Egg Rock, which may be removed by excavation at very little cost, and which, in its present state, may be avoided by following the directions issued by the Admiralty.

"Therefore, as between Louisburg and Shippegan, your Committee have no hesitation in strongly recommending the former, for the reasons above stated, and which are fully borne out by the evidence given your Committee.

* * * * *

"Your Committee recommend that a survey be made between Louisburg and some point on the Intercolonial Railway to ascertain the practicability of building a railway between the most suitable point of said railroad and the harbour of Louisburg; at the same time that a proper survey be made, and report be given upon the best mode to be adopted for crossing the Gut of Canso."

The Committee also reported favourably upon having the terminus at New Glasgow extended to Louisburg, the former being a port closed during three or four months during the winter season. He would also draw the attention of the House to the report of the Committee, of which the hon. Minister of Finance was chairman. In the third section of that report, it is stated:—

"That by selecting some suitable point within the territory of the Dominion, and using vessels specially constructed for the purpose, it would be quite practicable to gain from two to three days each way in the passage from London to New York, and even more in the journey to other points in the interior of Canada and the United States.

"As respects the last point of departure within the Dominion the Committee are not yet in a position to report authoritatively. They may state, however, that setting aside, for the time being, the route across Newfoundland itself, they entertain little doubt that the selection will ultimately lie between Louisburg on the one hand and some port on the line of the Intercolonial Railroad, in the vicinity of Shippegan or Chatham on the other.

"The Committee, without desiring, as yet, to express any positive opinion on either of these routes, would briefly observe with respect to them, that while both possess the advantage of being several hundred miles nearer to Europe than any other point available, Shippegan can only be made use of for a period of six or seven months in the year, and Louisburg will require the construction of 150 to 160 miles of additional railroad to bring it into connection with the existing railway system, and would even then be several hundred miles farther off than Shippegan from the chief Canadian and western cities, even after allowing for the fact that Louisburg is from 60 to 100 miles nearer to Europe by sea."

He thought these extracts would show the House that the terminus of their railroad system was not at its proper place, and that it was necessary to extend it to the most eastern portion of Nova Scotia. By rail we could travel without difficulty at 30 miles an hour, while 12 or 14 miles was the greatest speed by sea; consequently, there would be a considerable gain in communication between Canada and the Mother Country by running the line as far east as possible. The time now consumed between New York and London was, on an average, 10 days and 20 hours. The distance between New York and Louisburg is 1,111 miles, at the rate of 30 miles an hour would make 37 hours; and the distance between Louisburg and Liverpool is 2,255, which at 14 miles an hour would make 161 hours. The additional time between Liverpool and London is five hours, which in all would make 203 hours from Louisburg, giving a saving of time over New York route of 2 days 9 hours, or a passage of 8 days and 11 hours. The distance from Montreal to Louisburg is 950 miles; from Louisburg to Liverpool, 2,255; making an aggregate of 3,205. At 30 miles an hour 950 would be traversed in 31 hours, which added to the time between Louisburg and Liverpool by boat, would make the journey to London only 8 days; whereas by the existing route it now takes ten days and a half to perform.

Mr. MACKAY.

The matter was to be looked at from another point of view. There was no doubt whatever that the mails of the United States would be sent by this route, which would largely help maintain the line. It is also considered that Newfoundland will enter Confederation before long. When that took place one of the stipulations would be for an extension of the railway as far as Louisburg.

The people of Cape Breton did not in any way object to paying their proportion of the taxes, or to the expenditure of large sums in the construction of canals in other portions of the country, but they thought that they were entitled to some consideration, and that whilst some five millions were being expended on canals in Ontario, something should be done to give them railway connection with the rest of the Dominion. It had been shown conclusively, that as a matter of national policy, our railway system should be extended eastward, as well as westward. He took it that they would not knock vainly at the doors of this House, and that their interests would be given due consideration. The proper terminus for the railway was near the harbour of Louisburg, certainly one of the finest in the world, where coals could be procured cheaper than in any other port of the Dominion, an important advantage. Most persons undoubtedly preferred land travel, and this route would ensure the shortest ocean voyage to Europe. No matter had agitated to a greater degree the public mind in Cape Breton than this; they claimed railway privileges and considered that they should be taken under favourable consideration by the Government, fully assured that the work would not only be of great advantage to the Island but to the Dominion, Louisburg being certainly the terminus provided by nature for the trans-continental system of railways.

Mr. FLYNN (Richmond, N.S.) stated that the work in question was of very great importance to the people of Nova Scotia, and particularly to the constituency his hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. MacKay) represented, and next in, if not of equal importance to the district he had the honor of representing. He had thought that the line of argument of his hon. friend, who made the motion, would have been different and to his mind more pertinent. A good deal of discussion relative to railway extension east of New Glasgow had taken place both in this Parliament and in Nova Scotia during the last three or four years. In 1872 the Local Government of Nova Scotia, at the solicitation of their friends, had made an effort to secure railway extension from New Glasgow to Louisburg, offering to ascertain chartered company, or to any other company that choose to accept, 150,000 acres of crown land, and a subsidy equal to one-half the royalty on coal for forty years; this royalty is ten cents per ton. This was at the time considered a large subsidy, as our coal exports must increase very much before many years elapse; nevertheless, no company had been found willing to undertake the work. In 1874 the Nova Scotia Government made another effort, determined to secure the building of a road, if not to Louisburg, as far as the Strait of Canso, about one-half of the distance. It was considered, that if control could be obtained of the portion of the Intercolonial road from Truro to Pictou, with a subsidy from the Local Government in addition, the enterprise could be made successful as far as the Strait of Canso, as no company could be found willing to undertake to carry it to Louisburg for the amount offered. When they came to the House in 1874, they found the Government willing to give the Pictou and Truro branch to a company who would extend the road to the Strait of Canso, but objection was taken on the part of some members from Cape Breton; and an agent or attorney of the New Glasgow Company having waited upon the Administration, and stated, that if a delay of a few months was given they would be able to construct a railway from New Glasgow to Louisburg. The request was naturally granted, six months passed—no company was organized for the purpose, and nothing was done. During the last Session of the Nova Scotian Legislature, an offer was made to it to the effect that if the grant of Crown Lands previously proffered were doubled, with $5,000 a mile additional, a company would undertake to extend the road from New Glasgow to Louisburg. This was ceded; but the result was as on former occasions. All that his hon. friend had said in reference to the magnificent harbour of Louisburg he fully endorsed, and as it was the nearest point to Europe he believed it was destined, ere many years were passed, to be the Eastern terminus of our inter-oceanic railway. No one could be more anxious to see this extension made to Louisburg than himself, as the line would run through his county from end to end; but he had come to the conclusion that at present it was not practicable. Blame had been attached to the Local Government, but the fault was not theirs. He believed that the members from Nova Scotia were unanimous in the opinion, that the portion of the road mentioned should be given to some company unconditionally, in order to secure the construction of a railway from New Glasgow to the Strait of Canso.

Mr. McDONALD (Cape Breton) entirely approved of what had been said by his hon. friend as to the importance of making the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway at Louisburg. Public opinion was very strong in the Island of Cape Breton on the question of railway extension to Louisburg, and particularly in the county he had the honor to represent. It had been there understood that it was the intention of the Dominion Government to subsidize the continuation of the Intercolonial Railway to that place, by means of the branch from Truro to Pictou; and he might say, that the Premier had never taken so popular a position as this in connection with that section of the country in Cape Breton. They had also been informed that very strong pressure had been brought to bear on the Administration to induce them to give the branch in question merely for such extension as far as the Strait of Canso; but this, he considered, would be an act of injustice to Cape Breton generally, and to his county particularly, because it would be of very little advantage to the people in that quarter. The travelling public on the Island might thereby gain something, but this would be all. He did not think that any undertaking would be of more importance to the whole Dominion than running of a railway to Louisburg; and he believed that the entire country had taken this position. The leading public men as well as the press had taken this view. Such was the ground assumed by the St. Johns (N. B.) Telegraph, and he thought also by the Toronto Mail and Globe, as well as by the press of British Columbia. Last year also, during a discussion relating to the Pacific Railway, the hon. member for Cumberland stated that he hoped, at no distant day, to see a road built from the Pacific to Louisburg. Under these circumstances the undertaking should be considered as a Dominion work; and that he thought a cash subsidy from the Dominion in addition to the allotment of the Truro and Pictou branch, would secure the extension of the line for the entire distance. He remembered that when the item of the Baie Verte Canal was under consideration last year, the Minister of Justice told the House, that inasmuch as this met with strong opposition, he would have no objection if there was any other work of equal national importance in the Maritime Provinces to expend the amount in question on it; and this project he, for his part, considered of greater national importance. He hoped the Hon. Minister of Justice would now use his great influence to carry out what he then suggested.

Mr. McISAAC, as the representative of one of the counties interested, said he fully endorsed the remarks made by the hon. member for Cape Breton, who had just spoken, and his hon. friend from Richmond, regarding the importance of the work. During the first year of the Union the railway was extended to New Glasgow, but since that time nothing had been done. Then they had control in Nova Scotia of their tariff, which was law; they were not troubled by Protectionists or anything of that kind, and could do as they liked in this connection. As soon as Confederation had been accomplished, their tariff was increased, and not one mile of railway had been since built eastward.

Mr. McDONALD.

In the present financial position of Nova Scotia, it was impossible for the Province to build the road. Two years ago this House came to their assistance and passed a resolution authorizing the transfer of the Truro branch to a company on certain conditions. On the strength of that resolution the Local Legislature granted subsidies. The people of Eastern Nova Scotia were desirous of having the road extended to Louisburg; but failing to get that, they would be satisfied with the 80 miles to the Straits of Canso. To the great surprise of the Local Government, the people of Nova Scotia and the company which was prepared to undertake this work, when they asked for the transfer of the road, they were told it would not be granted unless the extension was pushed on to Louisburg. The result was that the project was abandoned for the time. He did not mean to say this Government had acted in that way from any desire to delay or defeat the work. They had no doubt been led to suppose, by a few gentlemen in this House from Eastern Nova Scotia, that a company could be found which would extend the railway to Louisburg, and the extension to that point would fully compensate for the time lost. The company on which this Government relied had been tried and the result was failure. Important as this work of extension to the Atlantic was, unless this Government would undertake it, it could not be accomplished by the Local Government. They could build it to the Strait of Canso, I believe with the aid of Truro branch, but no further. Even the extension that far would be of extreme value to eastern Nova Scotia, making the Strait no more than a temporary terminus. Efforts would be made in time, and no doubt with success, to extend it to Louisburg, or some point on the Atlantic. If this Government were not disposed to undertake the whole work, they should give the branch unconditionally, otherwise the work would be delayed and defeated as it had been in the past.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Inverness) was very happy that this question had come up for the consideration of the House. He could not but admire the manner in which the hon. members for Cape Breton had advocated the extension to Louisburg on the ground of its being a national work. If it was, he hoped they would not be left alone in advocating it, but there was not now the slightest prospect of getting the line extended so far. Whatever chance there was, some years ago it had evaporated. The question was now whether they would have a road to the Straits of Canso, half the distance, or none at all. If the extension to Louisburg was all that was claimed for it, the building of half the line would be a great step towards its completion. There was no other part of Canada, except British Columbia, which was so in need of railroad communication as Nova Scotia. Cape Breton with a population of over 80,000 had not a mile of railroad, while Prince Edward Island, rich in agriculture, but in nothing else, had its railroad, though not so large as Cape Breton and not much larger than the county he represented. He hoped something practical would be done this Session, and that the Government would without delay ask this House to transfer the branch to any company that would extend the road to the Straits of Canso. This was all that could be expected in the meantime, but it was perfectly practicable. The road was 64 miles in length, and he presumed did not more than pay working expenses. If transferred as required, it would assist in developing Eastern Nova Scotia, and would benefit the country to a much greater extent than it did at present.

Mr. MACKAY (Cape Breton) did not approve of granting this transfer unconditionally. He thought it would be very unwise if the Government should come to the conclusion that the road could not be built to Louisburg. He should, in case of transferring the road, attach certain conditions giving running powers to other companies which might be decided upon, in case of disagreement, by arbitration.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said there was no objection to the motion, although there was very little correspondence on the subject. The House would recollect the Government obtained authority to alienate that portion of the Government railway between Truro and Pictou for the purpose of promoting the extension toward the Strait of Canso, or as far eastward as possible. At that time some English capitalists interested in Cape Breton mines and projected railways were sanguine that the aid they might obtain in this way would enable them to reach Louisburg, and of course the Government were bound to give every reasonable facility to accomplish this purpose. The Order in Council was drawn up with a view to meeting the probability thus held out. It was subsequently ascertained they were unable to accomplish anything in that direction. At the present moment there was no company that he was aware of likely to undertake the construction of this railroad. It rested with the Government and the people of Nova Scotia to a great extent to say what course should be adopted. His opinion was that it would be better to reach the Straits of Canso as soon as possible, because if that was once reached means would be found from local resources, and aid by persons interested in mining and other projects for the development of the country, to extend it further east. There was no doubt if a good line to that part of the country was established, a steamship line would sooner or later be organized, crossing the narrowest part of the Atlantic, and carrying mails and passengers of light weight—steamers of comparatively light draft, which could make much more rapid progress than was at present attained. It was evident to any one who studied the map that this must ultimately be the short route to Europe, and would be used, perhaps, within a very few years. But he could not hold out any promise that the Dominion Government would undertake the construction of any other railway than those now in hand. The correspondence when brought down would show that the Government had done all in their power with reference to the matter.

Mr. PALMER said if the road was extended to Louisburg, it would be of great benefit to the shipping interests of the Maritime Provinces, and particularly of St. John. Since the introduction of the telegraph, ships coming from Europe have invariably called at the Island of Cape Breton. He was sorry to find that with a subsidy to the extent of the value of the Branch Line, which cost the Local Government some $3,000,000, and with the assistance Nova Scotia could give, a company would not be able to build this road. He was still of opinion that the reason for this was that Canadian railway stocks were at no value in the English and European markets. In the course of a few years this would probably be rectified, but in the meantime he had a great objection to putting a link of the road into possession of a corporation that would not run it to Louisburg. There was great difficulty and extra cost in transporting over lines run by different companies, and he trusted that fact would be borne in mind in connection with his proposed work. If at a time like this no company could be induced to go into the speculation, he thought something would be gained by waiting a year, and Government should maintain the position of retaining the property until the whole line was provided for. It would be found, he thought, after getting the line to Louisburg, that the Baie Verte Canal was an absolute necessity, and that the road would be of little use without it. Getting the line to Canso Straits would be of little or no use, unless it were to give the people strong cause to press its further extension to Louisburg. In view of this fact, it would be cheaper to construct the line to Louisburg at once.

The motion was carried.

OBSTRUCTION IN THE NIAGARA RIVER.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of any correspondence which may have taken place between the Government of Canada through the British Minister at Washington and the United States Government, relating to the obstruction of the navigation of Niagara River by the erection of an Inlet Pier in mid channel of said River for the Buffalo City Water Works, thereby causing a dangerous obstruction to the passage of vessels and rafts of timber.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.

The hon. gentleman said where Niagara issued from Lake Erie the current was a very rapid one, varying from seven to twelve miles an hour according to the direction of the wind. The International Bridge has been thrown across the river at a distance of about two miles from the lake, and this was found to be a very serious obstruction to navigation upon the stream. After the completion of that bridge the corporation of the city of Buffalo undertook to tunnel under the Niagara and build a crib on the mid current of the stream as an inter-bar for their tunnel, to supply their water-works. This crib was removed upon representations made, he presumed, by this Government in 1873; but in the removal of the crib a portion of the stone work was left in the bottom of the channel, and it now forms a dangerous reef. After the removal of the first crib the corporation commenced the building of another, which was carried away by the current. They then placed a third crib in the stream about a hundred feet nearer to the Canadian shore, and in a direct line with the draw of the International Bridge. This creates a difficulty for vessels passing down the river to the right side of it. It is almost impossible for rafts to do it; in one instance a raft of three million feet of timber in attempting to weather this bar had a large portion carried directly over it and wrecked. The International Bridge was choked with lumber for several hours, and the damages to the owner of the raft were several thousand dollars. This is only one instance, but there were several others of the kind, and it was a matter of considerable importance to Canadian lumbermen. The port of Tonawanda, ten miles below Buffalo, was the great entrepot of the lumber trade. Last year the commerce of that port amounted to $3,500,000, confined chiefly to timber and lumber, 200 millions feet being transhipped through. It was a matter of great importance that the navigation of the river should not be impeded by obstructions of this kind, and he called the attention of the Government to the subject, and the important interests it involved.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—My impression is, there was no reason for any correspondence about this matter. We were not aware of the difficulty until this motion was placed on the notice paper, but the Government will of course direct enquiries to be made, and take such action as the circumstances of the case may require.

The motion was carried.

RELIEF OF MANITOBA SETTLERS.

Mr. POPE moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of all Orders in Council, letters and telegrams between the Dominion Government and the Government of Manitoba, or any officer or other person, respecting the relief to be given to settlers and others in Manitoba, shewing the amount appropriated, the parties to whom it is to be given, and the conditions upon which it is given.

He said he held the Government strictly responsible for any money that might be appropriated without the consent of this House. This grant might have been very necessary, and might possibly be all right, but the House should know the conditions upon which it was appropriated, whether it was a loan or whether it was given to these people. If it was a loan, what security Government have for it, and the reasons which induced them to make the appropriation. It was rumored that $60,000 was appropriated without any vote or consent of the House, and the House should be informed as to the conditions and parties for whom it was appropriated.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE observed, that he had no objection to the motion; nor did he see any reason why he should not at once state that the circumstances in which this remote Province was placed were entirely different from those of any other portion of the Dominion. The population, which was comparatively small, had been visited by a plague of locusts, and many, who had promising crops early in the season, found themselves entirely deprived of them; in consequence, the Government were obliged to take such steps as seemed absolutely necessary, in order to prevent a still greater calamity—loss of life—and enable the sufferers to have at least seed for the coming season. They, therefore, felt themselves justified in taking $60,000 of the public money, afterwards accounting to Parliament for it, and asking for an indemnity. They had requested the Lieutenant Governor to act for them with regard to the organization of a committee, composed of representatives of the various classes interested to arrange the disposition of the seed grain and flour sent; and they had reason to believe that this duty, which was not yet completed, had so far been thoroughly done. It was quite impossible to give the returns asked for up to the present time; but they would supply all possible information, all the correspondence, and any other explanations that might be deemed necessary, when the papers came down. The hon. member would admit, he was quite sure, that they must deal exceptionally with such a population, to which access was difficult in winter. Had they failed to act as they had done, he felt that they would not have done their duty; and he did not doubt that the House would justify them. The committee were instructed to take ample security from settlers relieved, and while this in some instances might not be of the best character, they had reason to expect that the great portion at least of the money spent would be returned. They would soon probably learn that they had saved these people from a very great calamity, and had taken steps which would ensure the continued settlement of the country. So far as they had been able to ascertain from naturalists acquainted with the habits of the locust, it would in all probability not revisit that country for some years.

Mr. SCHULTZ said he was glad to be able to agree with the Premier in the action which the Government had taken. He felt that they deserved credit for the promptness with which that action was taken. As he understood it, the approximation was made in accordance with the recommendation of the Hon. Minister of Agriculture after the visit of that gentleman to the Province. He felt quite sure that the Minister during his visit could have heard no advice from anyone in Manitoba, except that the grant was necessary. He (Mr. Schultz) regretted that the relief afforded had not been afforded to the extent which the Government intended, and he begged to read from a late editorial in the Manitoba Free Press in regard to this matter :

"Had the $60,000 asked of, and we believe appropriated by, the Dominion Government to relieve the Province in the disaster which had overtaken it, been judiciously expended and handled, all would have been well, as that amount would have been purchased, and delivered, an ample supply of seed to insure the sowing of all the land ready for crop, and provisions to carry the destitute through the winter. But it was not well managed, consequently we have but a half—perhaps even less—of both seed and provisions, than under other conditions we might have had with the same expenditure. This circumstance increases the ultimate cost of the supplies to the settlers by a hundred per cent; and, worse than that, if an additional loan be not made by the Dominion Government, a large area of land ready for crop is bound to go unown this year for the want of seed; and we are not sure but that actual suffering may be endured by our settlers for the want of food before winter is over."

From this it will be seen that only half the relief intended was likely to be afforded, and he (Mr. Schultz) earnestly hoped that the Government would see fit to increase the amount. Meantime, he was glad to hear from the Premier that the Government had arranged for the gratuitous distribution of the relief, because it was currently reported in the Province that a certain gentleman, through some local influence, had been pitchforked into the Secretaryship of the Relief Committee, and was receiving six dollars a day for his services. If this was the case, and if the amount came out of the appropriation, he felt that the Government should at once put a stop to it, as they had a number of Dominion officials in the Province who were not at all hard pressed with work this winter, and who might save this amount to the poor, for every day of this gentleman's services meant so much less flour for the starving poor.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—What I said was, that the Committee would do the work gratuitously. No doubt the secretary would be paid.

Mr. SCHULTZ.

Mr. SCHULTZ—I have only to state in answer that $6 a day implies the loss of two bags of flour daily for the suffering poor.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I know nothing of that.

Mr. SCHULTZ—In view of the fact that there is an abundance of Dominion officials doing comparatively nothing in that quarter, it was the plain duty of the Government to send up instructions to have this work done by one of them, instead of paying some $6 per day to some other person, during the whole of the rest of the winter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD thought that, as there was a large number of Dominion officials employed in that part of the country, this duty might have been performed without extra remuneration, or, at all events, for a very small additional amount, by one of them. This was not, however, the point he wished to raise. The Hon. Premier, in his explanation, had certainly, he was of opinion, made out a satisfactory case for the prompt expenditures in question. A calamity of that kind coming suddenly on the people, especially a young and struggling people just emerging into organized life as it were, far away from the usual appliances and means of relief, justified the action of the Government, which was such as the House and country would sanction; but it nevertheless occurred to him that this was an expenditure for which there was no previous vote of Parliament, and accordingly it was the bounden duty of the Premier, at the earliest possible moment, to have laid before this House the necessary explanations, and not wait until his hon. friend—

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—At a very early period in the Session, I laid on the Table a warrant from the Governor General, in the usual form.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD still thought that the Premier, from his place in Parliament, should have previously stated the facts. In England, though perhaps not for so small an amount, under like circumstances, Parliament would not be satisfied with a confirmation of the vote in the estimates of the year; but a special act of indemnity must be passed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE replied that he was quite ready to have informed the House immediately of the matter; and his impression was that this had been done.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT distinctly recollected ordering the matter to be prepared; and he was almost certain that it had sometime previously been brought down.

Sir. JOHN A. MACDONALD—In the way of a message?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—In the usual form. The warrant was laid on the Table.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE added that an express statutory provision existed for such emergencies; the warrant of all such returns was to be laid on the Table, and this was the constitutional mode of acquainting the House with the matter.

Hon. Mr. POPE presumed that this was according to constitutional usage; but he wished to call the attention of the House to the following circumstance. There seemed to be a change of opinion on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, for he remembered that not many years ago, when an appropriation for a similar purpose in connection with Nova Scotia was in question, these hon. gentlemen claimed that we had no right to expend Dominion money for Provincial purposes; but now they maintained opposite pretensions. He desired to bring into relief this inconsistency on their part. This was entirely a Provincial matter, and the object was praiseworthy no doubt—he had nothing whatever to say against it; but the same difficulty, if they were consistent, still existed. It was the duty of the Government of Manitoba to have met this emergency; and the loan they made should have been entrusted to the Provincial Administration, and not with the people directly.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT read from the "Hansard," that a special warrant from His Excellency the Governor General, touching the $60,000 expended on behalf of these settlers, had been laid on the Table at an early period in the Session.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE begged to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the circumstances in this relation were completely exceptional; the people whom they had relieved having been settlers on Dominion Lands, whom they had brought into that Province for the purpose of settling it. Their efforts in this regard would prove, however, completely abortive if something such as was done had not been attempted. This was a consideration apart from the charitable motives. Had it gone forth to Europe that these people were suffering and starving it would have done the country incalculable injury; and in consequence the course they had adopted was taken.

Hon. Mr. POPE contended when these settlers were once in possession of their lands, this Government had no more to do with them than with the people of other Provinces. He did not blame hon. gentlemen opposite for what they had done; but he contended if granting better terms to Nova Scotia was unconstitutional, so was this.

Mr. MILLS said this was an extraordinary position to take. In the one case a payment was made to Nova Scotia; in the other, a simple loan had been extended to Manitoba.

Mr. SMITH (Selkirk) said he had heard but one idea of the propriety of the Dominion Government taking this matter into their own hands. It would be readily seen in a small community like that, party feeling runs high, and the aim and object of the Lieutenant-Governor, acting under instructions of the Dominion Government, was that the distribution should be made apart from local politics. If the supplies had been distributed by the Local Government, no matter how fairly it might be done, it would have been impossible to prevent people from suspecting them of partiality and he thought it fortunate for the Provincial Government that it was not left in their hands. The members of the Committee were taken from all classes of the community, and it was admitted that the distribution was most satisfactory. While further relief was desired, there was but one opinion as to the manner in which the aid already given had been supplied. In the Scotch parish all the people declined to participate in the relief. Some of them were not wealthy, but they were determined to fight it through, and give the aid to those who were more in need of it than themselves. He hoped the Government could furnish more relief, and he thought it should be through the Committee as at present. The hon. member from Lisgar referred to a gentleman having through some great influence been pitchforked into the office of Secretary to the Committee. The Secretary is a gentleman respected by the community in general, and would no doubt perform the duties most satisfactorily, and it was considered better to have one entirely outside of the Government service for this purpose.

Mr. SCHULTZ—I brought no charge as to character. The question is whether it is right that $6 per day should be taken out of the relief fund furnished by the people of Canada. As to the respectability of the Secretary of the Committee, there are few besides the hon. member for Selkirk who respect him.

AGRICULTURE AND EMIGRATION REPORT.

Mr. MASSON asked when the report of the Agriculture and Emigration Department would be laid before the House. He did not reproach the Government for not having submitted it sooner. As a general rule they had brought down their reports very early, but hon. gentlemen would understand how advantageous it would be to have these reports early in the Session. He would like to know whether the Government could not so arrange affairs that these documents could be sent to members some fifteen days in advance of the meeting of Parliament. It was absolutely impossible to look over the whole of the blue books during the Session. He did not make these suggestions to find fault.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the report of the Department of Agriculture was usually brought up to the 1st of January, in order to comprise the whole of that season's operations rather than the financial year. This made it next to impossible to get it out as readily as the others. However, it is all in the printer's hands, and in a few days would be presented to the House. With reference to the other question, the hon. gentleman was aware all the reports were ready at the meeting of the House, but it was a matter they had sometimes discussed before whether they could not advantageously be distributed a little before the meeting of Parliament, which was early in February. There had been a great deal of difficulty this year to get so many volumes printed in time. The Government would consider the suggestion of the hon member for Terrebonne.

Mr. SMITH.

After some further discussion the motion was carried.

THE DAWSON ROUTE.

Mr. MASSON moved an Address to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of all reports and communications between the Government or any of its officers or other persons since June, 1875, relating to the state and condition of the Dawson route from Thunder Bay to Fort Garry, together with a statement of the number of passengers and quantity of freight transported on said route during the season of 1875. He said it was not his intention so much to obtain this information (because it was already before the public) as to bring the matter before the House. It was well known the whole arrangement of the Government relating to the Dawson route had been a complete failure, and that fiasco was due to mismanagement of the contract and the culpable neglect of the Government, who had systematically refused to listen to the disinterested advice that had been given to them by parties inside and outside of this House. Last Session he had called attention to the facts he had learned during the season of 1874, while at Manitoba, from parties who had travelled and suffered on the Dawson route. On his return, having met the Premier, he thought it his duty (because he considered in the position the hon. gentleman occupied he could not know everything that was going on) to inform him in a friendly way of the condition of that route, and to mention that parties who had travelled it, and who were great admirers of the hon. gentleman, suffered most seriously between Thunder Bay and Fort Garry. It appeared that information was not believed, because when the House met last year it was rumoured that the contract was to be renewed. He (Mr. Masson) drew attention once more to the miserable condition of the whole route, and warned the Government against the bad system of granting to the contractors a sum too small for the transporting of emigrants, and too large for the enterprise. The consequence of such a system was, the contractor considered it more to his advantage to pocket the bonus and send the emigrants by another route, so as not to have the expense of transporting them. It was well understood that the proper plan was to give a greater sum to the contractor, thereby leaving him no inducement to send them by the United States. However, the hon. Premier said there was no just cause of complaint, that whatever was told him was greatly exaggerated, and he added that during the first three weeks of the season of 1874 there had been such a pressure of business that it might account for the insufficiency of accommodation for a few days or weeks. In the report of the Emigration Department, he found the agent at Winnipeg, Mr. Hespeler, corroborated almost everything that had been said about the mismanagement of the route. The report stated:—"From the first of July up to the close of navigation, (1874) the emigrant sheds were overflowed, which was principally owing to the inferior management of the Dawson route contractor, causing at the time very great loss to the new settlers, who were in many cases obliged to wait three to five weeks for their baggage, after enduring a most trying voyage which lasted twenty-two days."

It was well known that Government had the right to cancel this contract by paying a certain indemnity. The accusations about the mismanagement of the road were entirely correct, and the Hon. Premier would remember that on a previous occasion he was told that everything was in bad order. One consequence of the mismanagement was that immigrants instead of travelling by our road were driven to use the American line. The hon. gentleman was told that the system of bonuses was wrong, and had the effect of inducing the contractor to get rid of passengers and send them by the Red River Navigation Company. The Government had taken upon their shoulders a great responsibility, and he would be surprised if the country would approve their action.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—What action?

Hon. Mr. MASSON—Of renewing that contract.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman is speaking without information. The contract was cancelled many weeks ago.

Mr. MASSON said the Hon. Premier had misunderstood him; he was speaking of what occurred during the season of 1874. The hon. gentleman had often spoken of the great necessity of sending our immigrants through Canada into our North-West Territories, and it was certainly impolitic to allow them to pass through a country whose interests were entirely at variance with ours, and would probably attract many of them. It was not right, after spending such enormous sums of money, to bring emigrants from the old countries, and subject them to such influences. He did not think that the present amphibious, or water-stretch policy, would be conducive of better results than the late scheme; it would be open to the same mismanagement which characterised the Dawson route. It was the duty of the Government to take immediate steps towards building a through line from Lake Superior to Fort Garry. Immigrants would not stand the numerous transshipments of the present scheme, and it was absolutely necessary to provide an easier method of reaching the North-West Territories without having to call the Americans to our aid. There was no patriotism in these things, and an emigrant could not be expected to subject himself to the very great inconvenience of the water-stretch plan. He thought the Government would soon recognise their great mistake in not adopting Nipigon as the terminus.

of that branch of the railway, in order to keep the whole transportation of immigrants by the north of Lake Superior.

The Hon. First Minister had so far acknowledged the correctness of the Opposition views on this question as to cancel the contract with Mr. Carpenter, and by adopting their suggestions about the Georgian Bay contract.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD enquired if the Hon. Premier would bring down any papers connected with the cancelling of the contract, or any scheme for the continuation of the service in any way?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE replied in the affirmative. He wished to say a few words in reply to the hon. member for Terrebonne. He was not quite aware what the hon. gentleman would like to be at.

When the Government assumed charge of this Dawson route, in the first place, they found that it cost for the previous year very nearly $300,000. During the six years it was in operation it cost over $220,000 per annum, and they found the number of passengers and the quantity of freight carried over it infinitesimally small. They determined to economise, if possible, by asking for tenders for the performance of the service. They accepted the lowest tender of $76,000. No doubt there was truth in what the hon. gentleman stated about complaints having been made; complaints were made all the time, from the first to last, whether the road was under the immediate supervision of the Government without the intervention of a contractor, or by a contractor with the intervention of the Government supervisor. Last year Mr. Dawson resigned his position, and Mr. Grant, of this city, was appointed superintendent. A great deal of his time was consumed in examining into and paying old accounts. They found $150,000 of overdue accounts without any proper vouchers for them. A very large proportion of these it was utterly impossible to get at, except some statement from Mr. Dawson that such an amount was due. The inextricable confusion to which the affairs of the road were reduced could thus be imagined.

Mr. MASSON.

The contract had been continued almost through necessity during the year, with new superintendence, and with such measures taken as would ensure all possible attention being given to the work. It was decided, after obtaining the reports of the Superintendent as to the working of the road, and the difficulty they found to exist in getting passengers to send over it, that it was perfectly useless to attempt to keep it open in its present state, as a means of transporting passengers and freight. In consequence, the Government had cancelled the contract, but they would nevertheless take such steps as would enable them to continue the ordinary mail service to the various points on it, and accommodate their engineers and others, maintaining a small establishment on the route in connection with the Pacific Railway survey, under the immediate control of these officers.

The greater portion of the immigrants who had gone to Manitoba were Icelanders, and Mennonites, who went chiefly with their own money, choosing their own route. The Government extended to them the usual aid, and it was quite evident that all the passengers who could travel by rail to Red River, taking the boat down it, would prefer that to the other way. While he wished as soon as possible to have a road open for immigrants to travel over our own lands in this quarter, it was clear that they could not force people to pass over a long and disagreeable line, making, as the hon. gentleman had found it, a somewhat disagreeable journey, when the same point could otherwise be reached in one-half or one-third the time, and as cheaply. The hon. gentleman had, however, spoken inadvisedly, and had selected an inconvenient time, in his opinion, for discussing the Pacific Railroad question. He had entirely misunderstood—he would not say misrepresented, for he did not think that the hon. gentleman would do so—the plan of the Government. In this relation they simply proposed, while the road was being constructed to utilize a large portion of the water communication available for the passage of boats; as, for instance, when the road touched, as it would, according to the survey now nearly completed, the north-east angle of the Lac de Mille Lacs, they would have continued navigation, with some portages doubtless, to the north-west end of the Lake of the Woods; and until the line was finished between the Lac de Mille Lacs and the west side of Winnipeg River, they could use this navigation as long as it was required. If they found it impossible from the circumstances of the country to continue the building of the road between these two points for some years to come, they would have some 64 miles of railway from Lake Superior to the north-east corner of the Lac de Mille Lacs, similar communication being opened between Red River and Rat Portage from the western extremity, so that they would be enabled to bring the two ends of the Province within comparatively short distances of each other. He did not expect that it would be possible for the Government—even though Parliament could furnish the money required—to construct the intermediate portion within less than four or five years; and it was very important indeed that they should avail themselves of almost continued water navigation between two and three hundred miles during that period. The railroad in the meantime would be built on the line proper westward to Fort Garry; and he might tell his hon. friend—who spoke unadvisedly, because he was not informed on the subject, and he could not indeed be otherwise—that the route since found by the engineers far west and south of the Nepigon route, was infinitely its superior, both as to grade, and as to ease of construction, while it passed through a better country for settlement.

An Hon. Member—How about distance?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The distance was still shorter, because the line would be much shorter. Ascending the small river, of which he had forgotten the name, that ran near the end of Lake Nepigon, the route was extremely tortuous and crooked, without having anything like so favourable a grade. It could be made but would involve very heavy work, while the present line was not only shorter but it passed through a section containing a great deal more of valuable timber, &c. The only rough portion consisted of about 37 miles west of Rat Portage, and at about an equal distance on the east side of it. The Government's intention was simply to use this water communication; and they could reach the end of Lac Mille de Lacs by railway by the end of next summer very easily. They could, moreover, within two months from date, run engines over about 25 miles of it. The line ran through a country over which such a road could be easily built up to that point, from which they would be very foolish indeed if they did not use the water navigation at their disposal until the intervening link could be constructed. This he also advocated; and if they found that their financial necessities compelled them to suspend from doing the rest of it—if they failed to obtain a favourable offer from a company under the provisions of the Act of 1874, they would then do the best they could with the means at their command—the water communications which the country possessed. The whole matter had received the most careful consideration of the Government, and he had no doubt that it would ultimately turn out to have been the very best possible thing that could have been prepared under the circumstances.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD desired only to make a few remarks with regard to the course taken by the late Government with respect to the Dawson route. When the North-West Territory became a portion of the Dominion, and it fell upon the Government to see to the settlement of the country, they found that there was no communication with it through Canada at all—the first immigrants passing thitherward, went through the United States; and representations were soon made to the Government that every possible obstruction was being thrown in their way. In the first place, they came from Europe, they had not finally made up their minds in what part of the West to make their homes, and accordingly they were seduced by the runners and officers of the rival land companies of the Western States from their first intention to go to Manitoba or other portions of the British North-West. Those who took furniture or goods with them to be forwarded in bond, met with every possible obstruction; they were also overcharged, and the customs officers put them to every trouble. Complaints, in consequence, were ceaseless, and the Government discovered that if they were ever to secure immigrants for the British North West, it must be by a route of their own, so they at once commenced the construction of the Dawson Road, holding it in their own hands because it was a new venture. There was no inducement which they could well afford to give to prevail upon practical men to undertake so unknown, so uncertain, and so hazardous an enterprise. The Administration was aware, of course—it was so stated to Parliament, which approved of the expenditure—that this would involve very considerable outlay, and they considered that the money was well spent. The moment the road was opened, immigrants at once took advantage of it, and they had the choice of two roads. They went by this way, he would confess, in very small numbers at first, but these were increasing every season—indeed, almost every month. The utility of the line so established throughout Canadian territory, from the end of Lake Superior, was at once obvious, from the fact that immediately the American officers changed their course, the railways diminished their fares, and our immigrants could travel over their routes with their furniture and appliances, stock and cattle, &c., without interruption. The customs officers became much more civil, and obstacles were withdrawn, because they feared the loss of trade and traffic. It continued, he admitted as his hon. friend the Premier has stated, to be a considerable expense, but this it was well worth, for we had a road over which immigrants might pass without being exposed to oppression and insult and very frequently overcharge and obstruction; and he thought it would be well, on the whole, if the present Government had continued this system. The fact of giving a bonus, and a handsome bonus, to the contractor, which he could put in his pocket, was a disadvantage; the inducement was to drive emigrants to take another line, and in this Mr. Carpenter was completely successful. The number of immigrants who previously passed through our own country had steadily increased, but from this time the number steadily diminished. Of course common sense would tell us that this would be the case. The contractor, Mr. Carpenter, had placed the $75,000 bonus in his pocket, and as his hon. friend had ascertained from him, he had actually induced immigrants not to go by this line. The gentleman would not be bothered with them; he wished to secure the $75,000 merely, and then drive the immigrants through the United States; this was the system of his hon. friend.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. BOWELL—And he boasted of it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I never heard of that before.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—Some gentleman coming down on the steamer Lake Superior this summer met the contractor, and he made that statement.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I can simply say I heard that from some one who had heard it from some one else who had heard it from some one else. I asked Mr. Carpenter if he had ever said such a thing, and he denied it point blank.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—If he did say so he was a great fool for his pains. He should have held his tongue and put the $75,000 in his pocket. He had every inducement to send emigrants by way of Duluth. The system was sufficient to induce him to do so. I am very glad to hear my hon. friend say he found it was proper to take this contract out of the hands of the contractor, because it was decidedly a waste of so much money. My hon. friend found that out. He was kind enough to say he would bring down to the House the proposition of the Government, and the way it intended to keep that road open for the next season, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I said we will keep it open, but we simply propose to keep it open for the mails and for the purpose of sending conveyances over it two or three times a week in connection with the Pacific Survey.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD then asked if the road was to be abandoned altogether and the emigrants would be obliged to go by the United States? They had no longer a road through Canada, and a repetition of what had occurred before the Dawson road was established would take place—a repetition of the continued attempts to seduce emigrants, going to Manitoba to settle, to go instead to the far West, while the agents, runners and officers of the great western Land Companies held out the most problematical, and, God knew, most magnificent promises to the emigrants. He was very sorry that his hon. friend was debarred by the fear of expenditure from still keeping efficiently open this line in our own country for intending emigrants.

He thought it would be well worth the money, and much more than that had been spent on it during the last year or two. He hoped his hon. friend would reconsider his resolution, and not allow it to go abroad that until the railway is finished Canadian immigrants to the North-West must go through a foreign country.

