Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I will allow questions at the end of my speech, which is drawing to a close.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member made statements—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue has the floor and he has just said that he would answer questions after he has completed his observations.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member said he was quoting the words of the Minister of Justice, but I should like him to quote from the text.

Mr. Martineau: I am very pleased to answer the point of order raised by my hon. opposite. It is unfortunate that he was not in the house at the beginning of the sitting for he would know that I did quote the Minister of Justice from the text. If he wants further information in this regard, he could read carefully what the minister said in this connection.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to go into details. Up to now I have only tried to underline the complete inconsistency of the attitude of the federal government in regard to the transfer of the Eskimos.

Personally, I think I have made my position clear when I participated in a debate on the same question on March 26 last. Here was the stand I took then: the transfer of the "jurisdiction" of the Eskimos' administrative affairs was recommended by a joint committee on Indian affairs in 1961. The matters which were proposed to be transferred came under the exclusive jurisdiction of the province. The committee recommended certain conditions under which the transfer was to be made, for instance, that the transfer be agreed upon by the Indians themselves and then ratified by the federal and provincial legislatures.

I want to say that, as far as self-determination is concerned, the Eskimos have surely some rights and that we, of the province of Quebec, would be the last ones to deny them those rights.

Mr. Chairman, I shall conclude my remarks by saying that I am convinced that should this transfer be made according to the rules I have mentioned, and in accordance with the recommendations of the joint committee of the parliament of Canada, the government of the province of Quebec, which would then exercise its authority in a field which properly belongs to it, would jealously maintain and completely safeguard the fundamental rights, the culture and the language of the Eskimos.

Mr. Chairman, that is the stand I took in the past and which I still take. That is the issue. The minister of northern affairs said yesterday that the ultimate objective of the federal government was to promote the full and complete emancipation of the Eskimos. I am all for it, if such is the real objective of the government. But then, let the government treat the Eskimos with the respect they are entitled to as intelligent human beings and not try to outsmart them. It should not be wily with them, for they are Canadian citizens.

Mr. Chairman, the government ought not to try and confuse an issue which should be absolutely clearcut. On the one hand, we have the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources telling us that the federal government is at odds with Quebec on the matter and, on the other, the Minister of Justice saying that the provincial government accepts the federal government's conditions and that they have consulted each other. He should rather tell us what is the attitude of the federal government in that respect. There cannot be as many attitudes as there are ministers. If they are unable to settle this matter, they should not endeavour to do it because, instead of finding a solution, they would be getting away from it.

Mr. Chairman, before the end of this de- government, in dealing with this matter, must respect the Canadian constitution and the sovereignty of parliament, and above all the rights and interests of the Eskimos. Until now, they have given no evidence that they would settle the matter on the basis of standards dear to them. Well, Mr. Chairman, since Eskimos are human beings endowed with keen intelligence, as everyone knows, I feel it is shameful and entirely unthinkable to approach such a vital question that way.

Mr. Chairman, before the end of this debate, I would like the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to answer questions directed to him yesterday by members on this side of the house. We would like him to outline the policy the government intend to follow in that respect.

[Text]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I will not be very long, and I make no apology for commenting on this item. I think we have before us two of the most important principles with which this parliament has yet had to deal in my memory. There are two things involved. I suggest the first is a denial of natural justice to the Eskimo people. I am not going to deal with that point very much because it has been dealt with adequately by my leader, by the hon. member for Yukon and other hon. members on this side.

It was all very well for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to say last night that no formal agreement has been entered into yet, but having examined Hansard, having had an opportunity to read the questions and answers with respect to this problem, having seen the statements made and having read the press reports, I suggest that no other reasonable interpretation can be placed on the situation but that the government has committed itself to enter into an agreement by which there will be placed in the hands of the government of Quebec certain responsibilities with regard to the Eskimo people. True enough, as the minister said, the fine print has not yet been completed, and I think it is to the credit of the minister that he has seen fit to hold out until he thinks there are adequate safeguards in the agreement which is to be made. However, that the government is committed is, I think, perfectly obvious.

I think we have now gone so far on this question, Mr. Chairman, that natural justice will be denied unless the Eskimo people have the opportunity to express their views by means of a referendum. I leave this aspect by quoting again a statement Sir Wilfrid Laurier made many years ago, which I quoted on March 20 in the budget debate. I think what he said with respect to the people of Quebec applies just as much now as it did then.

> Yes, we are too much the sons of France, of that generous nation which has so often shed her blood for the defence of the weak, of the oppressed, not to be ever ready to defend the rights of our fellow countrymen of different nationalities to the same extent as our own.

It is my submission, and I fully believe, that the people of the province of Quebec would not wish any such transfer of responsibility to be consummated without the Eskimo people having the opportunity to express their views by a referendum.

I leave that point and will now deal very briefly with the legal aspect. I say that there has been a denial of natural justice. I add to that by saying that what is proposed to be done is that such transfers as take place will be consummated without due process of law. I posed the question on April 6, when I spoke briefly on the estimates of the Department of Justice. I spoke on purpose at that time, to give the Minister of Justice an opportunity to examine my arguments, which I feel I put before the committee dispassionately and with due regard to the facts and the law of the situation. At the conclusion of my remarks I said this:

> Until parliament has given the government the right to give to a provincial government any of its responsibilities in respect of these Indians—
> —that should have been Eskimos—
> —then the action which the government proposes to take is completely unconstitutional and not within the purview of the government as opposed to parliament.

How did the Minister of Justice answer this question? Yesterday, as recorded at page 1966 of Hansard, he made these remarks:

> Mr. Chairman, I was saying that the agreements which were and continue to be made in regard to Indian affairs are made in the framework of the exercise, by the federal government, of its administrative jurisdiction in the field of Indian affairs.

So the minister is saying at this point that we can do this so far as the Eskimos are concerned because in the past we have done it in respect to the Indians. Further down the page he is recorded as saying:

> And in the same way that no one can question our right to deal with Eskimo affairs through agents, representatives, intermediaries... I do not see why, so long as the decision quoted by the Leader of the Opposition is not against that and that there is no transfer of jurisdiction, we could not use, in the same way, a provincial government to manage Eskimo affairs—

I see, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Transport is in the house. At one time he was minister of citizenship and immigration and, as such, had jurisdiction over Indian affairs. I am sure he will bear me out that with respect to Indians, as interpreted and defined in the Indian Act, the act constitutes a complete code, and in that act there are a number of sections by which parliament, having first had an opportunity to debate this issue, having first had an opportunity to express its view, having first in committee of the whole examined clause by clause the provisions of the Indian Act saw fit—and I think properly—to entrust to the government the right by order in council to regulate, to make agreements, and to give in particular to the provincial governments and to local school boards certain agreements with respect to education and other matters.

It is only because parliament, being supreme to do so, delegated its authority to the government that the government has the right, and has exercised that right on a number of occasions, to enter into agreements with the provincial governments.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman, having brought me into this, would answer this question. The hon. gentleman is quite right that under the Indian Act the government was entrusted with the power, the faculty, of making these agreements. In fact I made many of them. I made an over-all agreement with the Northwest Territories council no different in many respects from what is proposed in this case.

But I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if it is not true either that Eskimos are Indians, and therefore they are covered by the provisions of that act or, if they are not Indians, they are just ordinary Canadian citizens and therefore should be treated as ordinary Canadian citizens? It seems to me they must be one or the other. They are not some third thing. They are either Indians, and therefore covered by the Indian Act, and the minister in charge of Indian affairs has the right to make an agreement as he did with other Indians; or they are not Indians and, if they are not Indians, then they are just ordinary Canadian citizens.

Mr. Baldwin: With respect, I brought this point up last night but I do not think the minister was here.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I was not.

Mr. Baldwin: They are a third body. Under section 4 of the Indian Act, Eskimos are specifically excluded from the operation of that act. Consequently they are not covered by the provisions of that act, and there cannot be valid agreements made by the government in the same way as agreements can be made by the government with respect to Indians. But equally they are not ordinary citizens in the same sense, because by the supreme court case the parliament of Canada has been invested with exclusive jurisdiction and responsibility.

For that reason, because of this anomaly which may not have occurred to people before but which definitely exists, the Eskimos in northern Quebec covered by the supreme court case are the exclusive responsibility of the federal government, and they cannot be included within the four corners of the Indian Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask another question, purely for information? Does he feel that the decision in 1939, with respect to the Eskimos in Quebec, applies to Eskimos living in all the provinces of Canada, or only to those in Quebec?

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Baldwin: The 1939 decision applies only to the Eskimos living in northern Quebec because the terms of reference to the supreme court were definitely restricted to those. As the minister understands, there was a conflict over who would have to face the responsibility of feeding, providing for and maintaining these particular people, and it was limited to these particular people. The reasons for the decision were directed to these people exclusively, and the decision applies only to them.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is evading and not answering my question. My question is, surely the supreme court did not say only this group of Eskimos in Quebec are Indians? Surely the supreme court meant that all Eskimos were Indians? Now, I am asking the hon. gentleman if he does not think this applies equally to any Eskimos living in any other provinces, or does he think it does not?

Mr. Baldwin: No, the supreme court decision cannot apply to any other than those people to whom the supreme court directed its attention. It had no right, under the terms of reference, to look to the Eskimos in any other part of Canada.

Mr. Turner: Surely the hon. gentleman, having read the case, would agree that the terms of that decision are wide enough to include the word "Eskimo" as a generic term, as applying right across the northland? More particularly, in view of the evidence produced before the supreme court relating to Hudson Bay documents, Northwest Company documents affecting Eskimos in all parts of the north, how does he find authority in that judgment limiting the definition of Eskimos merely to Ungava?

Mr. Baldwin: Because in examining this question the court directed its attention to ancient documents, to evidence contained in treaties which dealt with Eskimos in this territorial area alone. It might be wise to suggest to the government that it see to it additional references are made to the supreme court with respect to other Eskimos.

Mr. Pickersgill: As the hon. gentleman has the supreme court decision under his hand, if he would read the decision it would be helpful. I have always felt it is much easier to debate things if we have facts to debate rather than opinions, and the supreme court used certain words about the Eskimos. I do not carry them in my head and I doubt if the hon. gentleman does. If he read the decision it would be helpful.

Mr. Baldwin: The decision was here yesterday but it is not here now. Perhaps while I am speaking the minister might be able to obtain the decision. But I would say to the minister that what the terms—

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not the terms of reference I want. It is the decision of the court.

Mr. Baldwin: But the court is limited to the terms of reference.

Mr. Martineau: If the hon. member would permit this interjection, at page 421 of the decision Sir Lyman Duff, who was the chief justice and rendered the decision on behalf of the court, stated as follows:

Resolved that upon the transference of the territories in question to the Canadian government it will be the duty of the government to make adequate provision for the protection of the Indian tribes, whose interest and well-being are involved in the transfer.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not what I want. I want the sentence that refers to Eskimos. It is that I am interested in.

Mr. Baldwin: I will see the minister's curiosity is satisfied, either now or later. I shall produce the decision and cite from it the particular paragraph which makes it clear beyond any doubt that in coming to their decision the learned judges of the supreme court had directed their attention to the Eskimos within a certain defined territorial limit. The affirmative answer which they gave to the question "Are these Eskimos Indians within the meaning of the act?", and the answer being yes—

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. member going to be so sophistical as to argue that these particular Eskimos are Indians and that the rest are not?

Mr. Baldwin: By no means; but they are Indians because the supreme court has declared them to be so, having examined the evidence with respect to these particular people and defined them for the purpose of deciding whose responsibility they are to be. Apparently this question has never arisen with regard to the Eskimo people in the Northwest Territories, but it did arise with respect to these Eskimos in the northern part of what is now called new Quebec. The estimates make this plain. If one examines the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration—I am dealing with the estimates for the year ending March 31, 1965—

Mr. Turner: Before the hon. member goes into that, may I ask him whether he is introducing the estimates as a legal authority?

Mr. Baldwin: If the parliamentary secretary can contain his impatience he will see where my remarks are leading. He may not be satisfied by my argument now, but I will have a few additional authorities to give him.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely we are not debating the estimates of 1965 yet, though it may appear to the public that we are doing so.

Mr. Baldwin: I am simply using the estimates so that the few doubters who remain on the other side of the chamber will be satisfied. The estimates of 1965 for the Department of Citizenship and Immigration in connection with Indian affairs provide for the payment of a substantial sum of money and recoverable expenditures under agreements entered into with the approval of the governor in council with the governments of the provinces and territories and with local school boards in respect of social assistance to persons residing on Indian reserves, the education of Indian children and so on. In other words, there is a definite reference to agreements made between the government and provincial governments approved by order in council, agreements which can be made only because the Indian Act authorizes them to be made.

However, when we turn to northern affairs we will see votes providing for moneys to be paid in respect of Indian commercial activities, the instruction and supervision of Eskimos, the furnishing of materials, finished goods and so on, and welfare services for Eskimos. There is no reference whatsoever to agreements being concluded with provincial governments. I say to the government that if they persist in their determination and enter into an agreement with the province of Quebec and pay out moneys for that purpose, the Auditor General when examining such payments is bound to certify that they are illegal payments made without the authority of parliament.

Someone said to me, how is it that in the past, there being no legislation, the government has been able to deal with Eskimo affairs and provide for their education, their welfare and their medical services? The answer is simple; there has been authority from parliament. Each year there are items included in the estimates. Each vote is a motion of this house, and the aggregate of the votes is included in an appropriation act authorizing the payment of those respective sums. Parliament has then authorized the government for the period of the fiscal year in question by implication and directly to pay on these various services the money so allocated. This is the limit of the government's authority. No other authority has been given by parliament to the government. Any attempt by the government to act without receiving such authority is illegal and invalid, and I am satisfied it would be promptly questioned by the Auditor General.

Mr. Turner: I wonder whether in the event that there were an agreement concluded—I notice that the hon. member has now desisted from his earlier argument that there already is one—but if there were an agreement, would not that agreement be sufficient legal justification for payment?

Mr. Baldwin: Depending on the terms I would think it might be, if parliament approved it.

Mr. Turner: If parliament approved the arrangement.

Mr. Baldwin: As I understand the mood of this parliament there will not be approval, or certainly there should not be approval, of an estimate by which the government is authorized directly or indirectly to enter into an agreement of this kind unless there are certain safeguards established, and I propose to deal with what I think these safeguards should be.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the hon. member goes on to deal with the question of safeguards, may I ask him this. Has he not completely answered his own question? In other words, if the government made an agreement with the province of Quebec it could not implement its plans and spend any money without a vote from parliament. So, as the hon. gentleman has so successfully demonstrated, parliament will have the final say on this matter whether the government likes it or not.

Mr. Baldwin: If the hon. gentleman or the minister of northern affairs will rise at this time and say that no such agreement will be consummated or applied until it has been brought before parliament, I will resume my seat this moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was said yesterday.

Mr. Baldwin: No, it was not. It was said the agreement would be brought before parliament. I am saying it should be approved by parliament and examined by parliament. This is our right. We have been given the responsibility for these Eskimo people and it is our right to examine the terms of any such agreement and, if we dislike it, to say so.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit me, before he continues, to ask him another question? The government of Canada is spending money on the Eskimos of Manitoba. Would the hon. gentleman argue that the federal government has no right to make an agreement with the government of Manitoba to carry on some of these functions without the prior approval of parliament?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, I would so argue.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very interested in that answer. Does the hon. gentleman found that answer on the privy council judgment or on the supreme court judgment of 1939? Or on what does he found it?

Mr. Baldwin: On the principle that these Eskimos are under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the ground that they are Indians?

Mr. Baldwin: On the ground that they are Eskimos who are accepted as a responsibility of the federal government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, but I am asking the hon. member this question. He says that in the case of Quebec an agreement cannot validly by made without prior parliamentary approval; he says this is because the supreme court decided that the Eskimos in Quebec were Indians. He also said that the supreme court did not make any such decision with regard to the rest of the Eskimos. Therefore the rest of the Eskimos are not under the jurisdiction of parliament to any greater extent than are any other citizens.

Mr. Baldwin: That is not so.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish the hon. gentleman would clear up this point.

Mr. Baldwin: Certainly; because if a reference is to be made and can be made, the same principles and the same law which was argued in the 1939 case would be applicable. In particular there is a reference in that case to the royal proclamation of 1763, under the terms of which certain ancient and immemorial rights of the aboriginal people of Canada, which includes Eskimos and Indians, were retained in their hands, including the use and occupancy of the land. In confirmation of that, the government of this country from time to time thought it necessary to negotiate treaties with various Indian tribes. Under the terms of those treaties the Indians gave up or ceded to the government of Canada the respective lands covered by the treaties.

That royal proclamation would be applicable, in my opinion, to the aboriginal people, including the Eskimos of northern Manitoba, to the same extent and in the same way as it was utilized by the Supreme Court of Canada in coming to a decision in the 1939 case.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. gentleman would not mind answering another question, for information. Does the hon. gentleman think it is equally applicable to the Eskimos of Newfoundland? Newfoundland is a part of Canada. Does the hon. gentleman think it is equally applicable to them?

Mr. Baldwin: No, Mr. Chairman, because the royal proclamation excepted certain areas, including the provinces which were created following the treaty of Paris in 1763, and the crown colonies.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is surely aware of the fact that the boundaries were changed on more than one occasion after that. He is not going to say, is he, that we brought any Newfoundlanders into this country as second class citizens of Canada? Surely he is not arguing that the Eskimos in Newfoundland are not entitled to the same protection from this agreement as any other Eskimos; or is he?

Mr. Baldwin: I am simply referring to the Eskimos of northern Quebec. The minister asked me a question with regard to the Eskimos of northern Manitoba, and I gave him my views in this regard and quoted what I thought was ample authority for this argument. I do not know what the boundaries were of the province of Newfoundland. The eminent minister is a historian and is probably aware of this. He and I might get together and work this out. But without prior knowledge of the facts on which a decision should be based, I prefer to limit myself to the facts of which I have knowledge, which is something I recommend to the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure there is one fact of which the hon. gentleman has knowledge, because he was parliamentary secretary to the former prime minister. He must know, therefore, that in practically every year the former prime minister was in office the government of Newfoundland made formal application for assistance for the Eskimos of Newfoundland, and in every case their request was ignored by the previous government. That is why I asked the hon. gentleman the question, did he and his party regard the Eskimos in one province as second class citizens and those in another province as first class citizens, which seems to be the conclusion of his argument?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have no knowledge of that fact arising out of my position as parliamentary secretary to the former prime minister. My duties include my presence in the house having to do with the obstructive tactics of the then opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not saying, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. gentleman was not an apt pupil.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: I only have five minutes, Mr. Chairman, and I should like to conclude my argument. I shall be glad to answer any questions of the parliamentary secretary either during the lunch hour or this afternoon. I have dealt with the question of the estimates, and I should like to conclude by stating what I think are the four safeguards that should be provided before any agreement is entered into. Let me say that I sat on the Indian affairs joint committee, and it is my considered opinion that in the final analysis and in due course it is desirable that distinctions between citizens in Canada should be eliminated; but let me also say that because of the manner in which this particular issue has been handled it is my view that the government has set back the process of adjustment by at least a generation.

I make these suggestions; first, that any agreement which is to be made must be submitted to parliament and must have parliamentary approval. Second, there should be adequate safeguards in this agreement; third, a safeguard of arbitration by means of reference to possibly a supreme court judge or the Supreme Court of Canada should the Eskimo people feel that the provisions for protecting them are being violated; fourth, there can only be settlement now after a referendum.

I understand the problem which faces the government with regard to this business of a referendum, having in mind that some time in the next few years similar arrangements should be entered into with respect to the quarter of a million Indians now under the Indian Act. But having in mind what has happened—and sitting on the Indian affairs committee as I did, it was by no means unanimous amongst the Indian people that there should be this integration; many of them took exception to it, and I am sure their leaders will be watching with care and scrutinizing with anxiety the actions of the government in this case—I think the only way you can satisfy the Eskimos of northern Quebec and the Indian people, who must be considered so far as the future is concerned, is by means of a referendum.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, may I have leave at this time to satisfy the curiosity of the Minister of Transport with regard to the specifics of the supreme court decision? Here are the terms of reference:

Does the term "Indians", as used in head 24 of section 91 of the British North America Act, 1867, include Eskimo inhabitants of the province of Quebec?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, Mr. Chairman; but I would like the answer. That is what I asked for.

Mr. Baldwin: The answer was "Yes". Perhaps I should read the headnote. This is one of those fortunate references where, unlike the case with questions asked in parliament, there is a yes or no answer.

Mr. Churchill: Not a Pickersgillian answer.

Mr. Baldwin: The headnote provides the answer:

Eskimo inhabitants of the province of Quebec are "Indians" within the contemplation of head No. 24 ("Indians and lands reserved for Indians") of section 91 of the British North America Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, may I now repeat my question to the hon. gentleman. Does he really seriously contend that that answer does not mean that all Eskimos in Canada are Indians, wherever they reside?

Mr. Baldwin: This was not decided. I have no doubt that under the terms of a proper reference, if it was thought necessary, the same answer would probably be given. But we are bound—at least, I hope this government is bound—by decisions of the supreme court, and I hope the government does not decide to go outside these lawful decisions for its own purposes. We are bound by this act and must stay within the four corners of the decision.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may ask one question on the same subject. The hon. member has given his legal opinion on this judgment and related statutes. Would he seriously contend that the purview and effect of the decision by the Supreme Court of Canada in this case in 1939 would not be that Eskimos as a generic term, as an indigenous race in Canada, were not similarly defined under head 24 of section 91 of the British North America Act?

Mr. Baldwin: I understand that the parliamentary secretary practises law, as I do. I am sure he has had the same experience I have had in trying to persuade a court that a decision that has been made extends beyond the boundaries of that particular case, and not being very successful in his argument.

Mr. Turner: Which side of the case do you prefer?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get involved in the discussion which has taken place, but it seems to me that the remarks which have been made are a pretty good indication that there is some agreement as to what are the legal requirements. While I cannot see why Eskimos and Indians are put in the same category, there is probably a legal reason for so doing. However, why is the province of Quebec so interested in reaching an agreement that the federal government should give up its control over the Eskimo population in this particular area?

One question which is asked, and I think it is a good question, is, is this because of the squatters' rights that the Eskimos obviously have in regard to the natural resources in what is called New Quebec? Has this also something to do with the boundary between Labrador and Quebec in relation to the local inhabitants of the area? Is that why the people of Quebec are so interested in them, and particularly the government of Quebec, because there is certainly a distinction between the two which we should draw. For example, Mr. Levesque is interested in obtaining this concession from the federal government, even though it has been said that he still wants some of the administration costs to be paid by this government

The rest of us in Canada have two responsibilities in this regard. One of them is to see that the people who are our native population, whether they be called Indians or Eskimos, have their rights protected. If we are willing to send our troops into other nations across the world to protect their right to self-determination, then at least we should be able to apply this principle in our relationships between the federal government and the provincial governments of Canada. This is very fundamental, and any member of parliament who comes here unprepared to meet this commitment on behalf of the native population of this country is doing a great disservice to the people of Canada and to the idea of a united Canadian nation.

It is my opinion that many of these people have reached the stage where they can achieve self-determination. From talking to people who have visited the Eskimos in some communities I believe that the Eskimos have already made this decision, and the only thing preventing the implementation is that they want to retain their preferred position under the control of the federal government, and have an outspoken objection to being transferred to the control of the province in which they may reside. They believe they have certain advantages in remaining under the control and responsibility of the federal government.

I do not think we as Canadians are the least bit interested in whether a province wishes to obtain clear title to a particular area in this regard. This should not concern us at all. What should concern us is the welfare of these people. It seems to me very surprising that this government should insist upon us making this decision without taking into consideration the wishes of the people in those areas.

I can only conclude, Mr. Chairman, as many others have concluded, that when all the smoke dies down and the legal precedents have been cited, we will find this whole matter hinges upon the commitment the Liberal government in Ottawa made to the Liberal government in Quebec. I feel it is as simple as that. This problem did not come to the fore until there had been a meeting of the resource minister of Quebec with the minister of northern affairs for Canada.

I had an opportunity some time ago, along with other members of parliament, of seeing a film outlining some of these problems. This film was paid for by certain interests in the province of Quebec and illustrated the conditions under which the Eskimos existed in the Arctic region. The particular gentleman who took the film went up to the Arctic and set up a trading company in that area. This film showed great abuses by employees of northern affairs who worked in that area, particularly where there was a relationship between the Hudson's Bay Company and the department of northern affairs. One example concerned oil declared surplus by the Department of National Defence which was turned over to the Hudson's Bay Company. This oil was not suitable for outboard motors. However, the Hudson's Bay factors would not stock any outboard motor oil on their shelves until this surplus oil had been used up.

This incident was brought to the attention of the department of northern affairs, but nothing was done about it. There were other illustrations. The post office was run by the Hudson's Bay Company, and people in the area could not obtain cash unless this was done through the auspices of the Hudson's Bay Company. This was done on a very discriminatory basis. The gentleman who came back had in his suit coat a number of packages containing bills of large denominations which he had been using while in the Arctic because he was not permitted to have cheques cashed in that area.

As I have said, Mr. Chairman, all these incidents came to the attention of the department of northern affairs. Representatives of that department viewed this film and made very disparaging remarks while the film was being shown. They showed great ignorance in doing so. In view of the fact that this film was being shown to us by the film board in their quarters, these people could have shown courtesy to the other guests who wanted to listen. I am sure these matters must have been discussed within the department. I was interested in ascertaining why certain individuals in Quebec would pay to support such an expedition to obtain this type of film. Since discussing the matter with a number of other people, I am satisfied the reason it was done was that the province of Quebec had already decided they wanted to get control of the Indian population in that area. It was simply a case of squatters rights in connection with the resources that existed in this area.

If this is true, and I believe it to be true, then I believe these Eskimos should be given the same protection that is afforded by the Indian Act. We are all well aware of the fact that if this area were declared to be a reservation for Indian bands, then the resources of the area could be developed for the benefit of the people of the area. I am quite sure, Mr. Chairman, that one major mining company in northern Quebec would more than support in perpetuity the 2,300 Eskimos in that area. In all fairness, if the minister really wishes to protect these people he is going to have to give a much clearer indication of this desire than he has in the past. He will have to allow the Eskimos to determine their own future.

There are other problems which I believe will arise before the committee can give approval to the recommendations outlined in the memorandum the minister presented to parliament. There are matters such as religion, education, language and so on, that will be of concern to the Eskimo people in the future. We must insist that the minister not proceed further with these negotiations with Quebec, Manitoba or the other provinces until the very fundamental problem of the responsibility for these people be established throughout the whole area.

Mr. Herridge: I have a few words to bring to the attention of the committee. I have been detained in the external affairs committee during the greater part of the discussion of these estimates. I have been asked by friends of mine, and close friends of the minister's, to raise this question. The close friends of the minister reside in the city of Revelstoke. The question relates to Revelstoke park and what people claim is the continued waste of public money in that park. The minister knows that the superintendent's house cost nearly $50,000. It is a most lavish place. There are repairs being made to buildings only recently constructed.

I just ask the minister this question. Will he agree to call the superintendent of the Revelstoke national park and the engineer in charge of the park before the committee on mines, forests and waters, and will he be willing at the same time to hear witnesses who have anything to contribute to a complete understanding of this question?

Mr. Laing: I think I should make some answer to the hon. member for Kootenay West. I understand he has been making these charges for two or three years now.

Mr. Herridge: I am not making any charges; I am repeating what people have told me.

Mr. Laing: The expenditures in the park to which he refers were made some three years ago. I have seen some of the results of those expenditures. While he and others may contend that the buildings that were erected were luxurious, I think the fact that we are going to create the most notable mountain park on this continent calls for buildings commensurate with the beauty and service the park gives. If the hon. member has any specific charge to make that waste was deliberate in those days, and he has never made such a charge, I would certainly take measures to investigate those charges.

Mr. Herridge: I have just one question. The minister knows some of the facts, and does he consider it right and proper that the people of Canada should be called upon to pay close to $50,000 to build a house for the superintendent of a national park?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, the house is built and I am not going to tear it down.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pigeon: Filibuster.

Mr. Francis: —the item before us is vote 1e of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, an additional appropriation of $53,000. I have listened to the debate with a great deal of interest. I have also taken note of the comments in other sources of communication and public information indicating that this situation is one of very great seriousness, as I personally believe it is. This is the 15th day on which the house has been debating these final supplementary estimates for the fiscal year which ended March 31, 1964.

As I understand the position of the official opposition, they want assurances from the government with regard to certain safeguards before passing the item under discussion. The problem which I as a member sitting on this side of the house have to face is in interpreting what the official opposition actually claim should be the safeguards, and trying to reconcile statements in Hansard so that I may better understand why this debate is being prolonged.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River concerning the interpretation of the 1939 decision, and I must confess that he put forward a case that carried a great deal of weight with me personally, although I am not trained in the law, in terms of the scope of the decision and its influence. However, I should like to quote from Hansard for December 16, 1963, page 5975, when the main estimates of this department were before the house. I quote the words of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm:

> Mr. Chairman, when Newfoundland joined confederation the administration of Eskimo and Indian affairs was put in the hands of the government of that province. Now, I wonder why the same procedure could not be followed with the government of the province of Quebec?

That is a verbatim quotation from Hansard, Mr. Chairman, and I am wondering whether the hon. member for Peace River has had any opportunity to put forward the same kind of convincing and enlightened argument to his colleague the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, the type of argument which he placed before the house so effectively earlier today.

In a cursory reading of Hansard I have located 12 occasions when the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has interjected in the debate or has posed oral questions, but I cannot claim that the instances I have found by any means exhaust the quotations I might find. On July 26, 1963, as found on page 2669 of Hansard, this question was posed by the hon. member:

> Since the officials have completed their reports in connection with the possible transfer of Eskimo affairs to the government of the province of Quebec, when will there be a meeting of representatives of the federal and provincial governments to effect the transfer?

On July 29, 1963, page 2732 of Hansard, the hon. member put this question to the minister:

> Does he intend to meet the Quebec authorities as early as possible in order to transfer to them questions relating to the New Quebec Eskimos, in view of Mr. Levesque's contention that the federal government is putting off on purpose a new meeting between the federal and the provincial authorities?

Again on August 1, 1963, at page 2885 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration a question? Has the minister read the statement by Mr. Eric Gourdeau of the Quebec government, who charged the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources with insincerity and accused them of having delayed the meeting between the two parties in regard to the transfer of Eskimo affairs to the Quebec administration?

On October 1, 1963 the question became a little more ingenious. It is found on page 3074 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Will the government finally transfer to the government of the province of Quebec jurisdiction over Eskimo affairs in New Quebec in accordance with the legitimate wishes of the province and those of his good friend, Mr. Rene Levesque?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Repeat it.

Mr. Francis: I repeat:

Will the government finally transfer to the government of the province of Quebec jurisdiction over Eskimo affairs in New Quebec in accordance with the legitimate wishes of the province and those of his good friend, Mr. Rene Levesque?

On October 18, 1963 at page 3737 of Hansard, the same hon. member posed this question:

Could the minister tell the house whether he intends to get at the truth of certain press reports to the effect that some officials of his department are putting pressure on Eskimos of northern Quebec or are blackmailing them so that they will refuse and protest against the wish of the province of Quebec to take over the management of their affairs?

Again on November 13, 1963, at page 4693 of Hansard:

Has the Quebec government requested another meeting with the minister to consider the possibility of transferring the jurisdiction over the Eskimos of New Quebec to the government of the province of Quebec?

On December 16 and again on February 19 the hon. member again raised this matter in the same vein. In the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne the hon. member was very clear on this point. He said, as found on page 103 of Hansard for February 21 last:

The government should also, Mr. Speaker, entrust the province of Quebec with the education of the Eskimos in new Quebec.

On February 19, 1964 he put this question as found on page 12 of Hansard:

Since federal officials, as confirmed by Mr. Rene Levesque, have the Eskimos of Fort Chimo sign a petition objecting to the transfer of jurisdiction, can the minister state whether the administration of Eskimo affairs will remain under federal jursdiction?

There are many quotations, Mr. Chairman, and I have not by any means exhausted them, but one of those I personally found rather difficult to reconcile is to be found on page 1407 of Hansard for March 24, 1964, where the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm put this question to the minister:

Could he tell the house whether, according to a statement made by Father Steinmann, an Ungava missionary, and a report published in this morning's issue of Le Devoir, Ottawa is trying to impose on the Eskimos in new Quebec a quick assimilation which, in the opinion of Father Steinmann, would be a true genocide?

We have had a very thorough debate on this item, Mr. Chairman, and some statements have been made by hon. members on the other side which have been well argued, but I find it completely impossible to reconcile those statements with the statements made by the leading spokesman of the official opposition in this house. The question I would put to the hon. member is this. Is he in favour of the transfer or is he not?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes or no.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, I have read into Hansard some of the statements made by the hon. member. In particular he has on many occasions read extracts from the press. I am thinking, for example, of February 21, 1964 during the course of the throne speech debate, when he quoted from La Presse in some detail. I should like to refer to today's La Presse, an article by Marcel Gingras entitled:

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon was not there—

Having adopted the views of Mr. Rene Levesque, Mr. Pigeon, since the very beginning of the dispute, has constantly been urging the Pearson administration to comply with Quebec's wishes.

[Text]

I ask hon. members of the house to judge. Is this a consistent policy which is being put before us by the opposition? I raise the matter of the record which is there for all who want to read. I have submitted a series of quotations that are beyond question with regard to the subject of education and the subject of the transfer of administration, matters which have been raised in this debate; and these quotations cannot be reconciled by any stretching of my understanding with a good deal of what has been said.

I submit that the holding up of these estimates on this 15th day of debate is a true filibuster if we ever saw one, and the purpose of this filibuster will no doubt become apparent as we proceed. But for $279 million we are now in the 15th day, and on an item for $53,000 we are now in the second day of debate.

There is no question but that we are now faced with an organized filibuster, and in these circumstances I leave it to hon. members to judge what we are being asked to agree to, what are the conditions being placed upon us by the statements made by the official opposition and by the inconsistencies in those statements.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) forgot to remind the house that last year the members of his party dealt with the estimates for a period of 26½ days, while we have only been discussing them for a few hours, since there have been days when we merely spent an hour or two on them.

Therefore, I would not be surprised if the hon. member for Carleton was trying to mislead the house, as he did yesterday when he suggested that I had slipped away from the House of Commons because I did not share my leader's views on the Eskimo question.

An hon. Member: It is true.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Carleton made a false and dishonest statement which is not in keeping with the courtesy which should prevail in this house.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Carleton mentioned that I, as well as my fellow members, had asked many questions with regard to Eskimo affairs in new Quebec. I think opposition members have the responsibility to question and press the government on this important matter, because we want fair treatment for the Eskimos, who are Canadian citizens.

Mr. Chairman, questions have been put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau), and their answers were contradictory. It is impossible to know what the government proposes to do.

We want to protect the rights of the Eskimo people as we are entitled to do; we do not want those rights to be ignored.

Mr. Levesque would like to see Eskimo affairs under the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec. Last year he stated that by April 1, 1964, Eskimo affairs would be a provincial responsibility.

I fail to understand the position of the Minister of Justice, and I accuse him of being a centralizer. He wants Quebec to remain under the control of Ottawa as all he concedes to the province is the administration of Eskimo affairs. In other words, he wants the provincial government of Quebec to look only after the administration of Eskimo affairs, which means that the federal government would control the provincial government's activities in this respect. I think that this is an infringement on provincial autonomy, and we do not want the government of the province of Quebec to be under the control of the federal government.

I find it very difficult to justify Mr. Rene Levesque's position, who poses as a defender of provincial autonomy. I would rather say that he is insulting provincial autonomy. Who could imagine that such an arrangement between the federal government and the government of the province of Quebec could be accepted? The federal government does not want to grant the rights nor the constitutional powers which are essential to the full development of the province. Just half a jurisdiction is to be given to the province of Quebec with regard to Eskimo affairs. In other words, the idea is to put the government of the province of Quebec under the control of the federal government.

In other words, Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Choquette: Who wrote your speech?

Mr. Pigeon: Oh, I hear the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette). We know his loyalty to his party, to Her Majesty the Queen of Canada. We have known it for quite some time, Mr. Chairman.

If the hon. member for Lotbiniere has any courage, let him rise after me, and tell us what is his attitude towards Eskimo affairs. Let him tell us whether the Minister of Justice and the federal government are right at present in wanting to put the province of Quebec under the control of the federal government, as far as Eskimo affairs are concerned, by surrendering only half the jurisdiction.

As my leader stated, we do not want the Eskimos to be bartered like mere chattels. We ask that the transfer be made democratically and that the Eskimos, who are most concerned, be first consulted.

But if there must be a transfer, it should be made through the usual channels. Legislation should be brought forward following consultations between the governments involved. That matter should not be sneaked through without being discussed by parliament. Parliament has a right to be consulted on that matter. In other words, we want the transfer to be conditional and we do not want it to be another intrusion by the federal government in the provincial field.

Mr. Chairman, there are several—

Mr. Lessard (St. Henry): Did you ask Mr. Barrette?

Mr. Pigeon: I hear the hon. member for St. Henry (Mr. Lessard) who often has the floor in this house. Did you know, Mr. Chairman, that he spoke twice since he has been in the house? I wonder why his electors keep returning him.

Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for St. Henry wishes to speak, all he has to do is to rise, and I shall give him the floor so he can have, at last, one opportunity of saying a word.

Mr. Lessard (St. Henry): When I speak, I do not talk nonsense like you.

Mr. Pigeon: As far as that matter now before us is concerned, I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question.

[Text]

Why are some of the textbooks and instruction books used in government schools in northern Canada prepared and printed in the United States when equally as good Canadian school books are available?

[Translation]

I should like to get an answer to that question from the minister. I should also like to ask the minister whether it is the intention of the government to revise the status of the Hudson's Bay Company. That company has contributed to the development of the northern sections of Canada and has been doing an excellent job for many years.

I wonder if it would not be possible to revise the status of this company in order to reconsider its powers and pass new legislation or new regulations in its respect.

Those are the few comments I had to make. But before concluding, I should like to put a question to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner). He made a rather serious statement at a symposium under the auspices of the Arctic Institute of North America, at McGill University; as a matter of fact, he is alleged to have made misleading and irresponsible statements, according to Professor Jacques Rousseau, who denied emphatically the allegation of the parliamentary secretary. We want to hear him on this subject and we want to have his views.

In brief, Mr. Chairman, it is the responsibility of the opposition to scrutinize this matter carefully. We are surprised to see what I would call an undemocratic attitude on the part of the government.

We on this side of the house are blamed for asking questions, but there is no unanimity in the government on this matter of the transfer of Eskimo affairs from the federal government to the Quebec government. The cabinet now stands divided on this matter. If the minister could speak, he might say that I am right. I repeat, the cabinet now stands divided. There is a desire to transfer Eskimo affairs to Quebec in order to please Mr. Levesque, but without the Eskimos and the government being consulted, which in my opinion would be an undemocratic procedure.

We wish to obtain a specific answer from the minister and the parliamentary secretary. What will be the policy of the federal government concerning the status of Eskimos in New Quebec in the province of Quebec?

We want to know where we stand. I think that we are entitled to such information. If the minister is ready to make a specific and concise statement on this matter, he can be assured that we will fully co-operate in this field.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, may I put a question to the hon. member? Perhaps he could take time in order to reconcile his point of view with those of the hon. members for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) in order to attain on their side a consistent position and policy.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I am asking the parliamentary secretary to supply evidence to show that we disagree on this matter. In making his allegations, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) relied on questions I had asked in the house. Members have the right and the privilege to ask questions in the house.

Before concluding my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I wish to add this. If at any time the management and administration of Eskimo affairs is turned over to the province in a democratic and constitutional way, while respecting the rights of the Eskimos, I can assure the house that the Quebec government will respect those rights as it has always respected the rights of minorities, both English and others, in the field of education.

[Text]

Mr. Winch: To the best of my knowledge there is not an Eskimo or an Indian resident in my constituency of Vancouver East. However, we have now had several hours of discussion on a certain phase, and as a member of this committee I should like to have a little more clarification of this question. That is why, without taking very much time, I should like to direct a series of questions to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and ask him if he will have the courage and the decency to give direct answers.

First, on what basis is it that after approximately 90 years during which the Eskimos have come under federal jurisdiction, consideration is being given to bringing, I understand, around 2,700 of them under provincial jurisdiction? Second, if this is under consideration, is this an admission that 90 years of administration under the federal government by both Liberals and Conservatives has failed, both administratively and constitutionally, and that the task must now be taken over by the provincial government? Third, what is the actual basis now, in these last few years, three or four years before the centennial, for this discussion, turmoil and fight over whether Eskimos in the Quebec area should come under the control of that province?

What is behind all this? There must be something, and it cannot be only 2,700 Eskimos. If it were 2,700 Eskimos, surely to heaven the federal government could do more for them than a provincial jurisdiction. Will the minister honour this committee by giving it something in the way of truth? Will be also tell this committee, in view of what is taking place, whether, if it is correct that 2,700 Eskimos are to come under provincial jurisdiction in Quebec, he applies that principle to all Eskimos across the northern region of Canada; and if so, will he recommend that there be this extension?

Now let us get down to even a bit more. I count this as a most weird situation which has not been explained in this committee, and I am certain it has not been explained with truth by the government of Quebec or by the government of Canada. Why is the minister now taking the stand he is taking on this issue? Is it because he can now give us some really factual points or is he, with all respect, becoming a bootlicker and an apple polisher for something that Quebec wants?

I put it just that way. You know, Mr. Chairman, there has been an extraordinary situation in this House of Commons in this past year, things that have amazed members here and have amazed the people of Canada. I believe we would do a much better job in this House of Commons if we were given a lot more truth and facts on the presentation of propositions, proposals and policies. I believe that if this were done by the government and accepted by all of us on this side of the chamber we would be a lot further along with the business of the people than we are at the present time.

As I said, there are no Eskimos in my riding, and no Indians, but I have listened to this discussion for hours, and I still do not know what is the government's position as to why they are discussing this matter after 90 years of federal responsibility. The minister comes from a riding very close to me. Will he stand up in his place right now and tell the committee what has been the failure of 90 years of federal responsibility for the Eskimos in northern Quebec and the reason the province of Quebec should take them over? Why would the Eskimos be better off under Quebec than under the federal government? What is the basis in principle and in fact for this measure now before us? Will the minister get up and give us straight answers to these questions?

An hon. Member: He is not going to answer.

Mr. Winch: The minister will not get up and make a statement?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Mandziuk: I am glad the minister refrained from answering the hon. member for Vancouver East because I have a few questions to pose to him, too, and he can answer all the questions together. I too come from a constituency which has no Eskimo population, and I have been listening to this interesting debate.

I have followed the career of Mr. Levesque who has tried to assimilate everything in Quebec, and I should like the minister to tell us what reason Quebec could have for demanding that the administration of Eskimos be turned over to that province. Is it to better their living conditions? Is it to preserve their culture and language? Or is it to assimilate them and make them nonentities or nothing in that province?

That is important. We are concerned. I do not think the other provinces which have Eskimo populations have made any such requests. In 1939, as we know from history, the province of Quebec was very anxious that the federal government should take charge of the Eskimo population, provide for them and educate them. Can the province of Quebec make any improvements? I think the minister should tell this house whether the province of Quebec has promised that. If the province of Quebec just wants them so as to assimilate them, why do they not lay their cards on the table and tell us the truth? I think the hon. member who preceded me asked some very pertinent questions, and the minister in all reasonableness should answer those questions. We do not want to be accused of filibustering. We want to know the facts. We want to know the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Mandziuk: If the members on the front benches on the other side of the house did not try to evade the issue and skirt around the questions we have asked, if they would frankly and openly answer these questions, we would save a lot of time.

An hon. Member: Oh, how sincere.

Mr. Mandziuk: You get up and make your own speech.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Peters: I do not think it should carry, Mr. Chairman. I think the things that have been said should be either refuted or answered; otherwise everyone will know that the Liberals in Quebec and the Liberals in Ottawa reached an arrangement for support in the last election, as has been charged. I am not willing to support the use of the Eskimos of this nation as pawns in some political arrangement.

We have listened to the hon. member for Carleton and the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm put forth two particular ideas. I think they put the extremes on both sides of the case. I believe the case that Quebec is putting to Ottawa and the negotiations that are taking place represent exactly the position the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has put forward. I am quite sure this is the position of the Liberal government of Quebec.

I know that the minister who is responsible for these things is enough of a realist and a federalist to wish to maintain the responsibilities of the federal government in regard to this jurisdiction. But I am sure there is one cabinet minister sitting here this afternoon who was in on the discussions before there were ever negotiations; I am sure he was in on the original arrangements. I am sure that most of the ministers representing the province of Quebec are aware exactly what those arrangements were.

I am not like some of the others; I believe the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources is being fairly honest with us when he tells us that he is putting up the objection, and that the memorandum which he has approved is not being agreed to because he has not made any further concessions. My point is that I think he is going to have to make further concessions.

Mr. Mandziuk: Why?

Mr. Peters: I think the pressure from his own party is going to insist on it. I am sure the Secretary of State will have something to say in this regard.

Mr. Mandziuk: So that is the reason.

Mr. Peters: I am sure they are going to put the pressure on him. That is why I think this matter should be left open and no decision arrived at today. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I would ask that this item stand and that we go on with the other estimates; because I am in an impasse as far as this matter is concerned in that I disagree very much with the position Quebec is taking and I am not sure that the position the minister has outlined is one he will be able to follow through. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, I would ask that this item stand.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I would like to support the proposal that this item stand until we can get a really forthright answer from the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources as to exactly what is behind this matter. We have not had the situation clarified in any way whatsoever. I too am convinced that there is some kind of a saw-off between the federal Liberals and the provincial Liberals of Quebec. I am convinced that this is a disservice to the Eskimos and a disgrace to the federal government; and if we ever allow this to happen it will be a disgrace to any of us who so do. Therefore I sincerely hope that until we can get the real answer in this House of Commons, this item does not pass.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, there is no reason why the minister should not answer the questions that have been asked of him today and yesterday. I do not think there is any real need for the item to stand. The minister, as his colleagues have so often said, has all the answers, and surely he can give the members of this committee answers to the questions put to him during this debate. We have been subjected to the usual evasions, the usual silences and the usual distortions—I suggest, sir, deliberately—to throw a smokescreen around a very embarrassing issue as far as this government is concerned. There is obviously some reason why the government is sitting silent on the matter.

Mr. Winch: You're darned right there is.

Mr. Nielsen: There are obvious divisions between the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who wants to fulfil his responsibilities with respect to his department, and ministers like the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and the Secretary of State. These divisions are very apparent, and no matter how many infantile and stupid interjections the Minister of Transport makes with relation to the constitutional questions involved here, one fact remains; that is that the federal government is by our constitution responsible for the well-being of the Eskimo people of Canada's north.

Mr. Pickersgill: Including the province of Newfoundland, I ask the hon. gentleman?

Mr. Nielsen: I am glad the hon. minister has asked that question, because again this is typical of the smokescreen that he is trying to throw up around this whole issue. With regard to the Eskimo people of Newfoundland, the terms of confederation and the agreement by which they were brought in bear no relation to this question whatsoever. In the first place, as I am sure the minister knows, the government of Canada was responsible for the Eskimo people long before Newfoundland ever came into confederation. Second, the proclamation of 1763 did not apply in any way, shape or form to the Eskimo people of Newfoundland. Third, as the minister well knows, the Eskimo people were specifically exempted from the terms of confederation between Canada and Newfoundland.

Mr. Pickersgill: That statement is not correct.

Mr. Nielsen: Then perhaps the minister will participate in this debate and inform us just how that statement is incorrect, because he was around in the year in which confederation took place between Newfoundland and Canada.

I wish to refer to one or two other matters which have been raised in this house, Mr. Chairman, and I am sorry the Minister of Justice is not here to listen; because I want to show just what type of deviousness has been exercised by the ministers on the treasury benches when dealing with this question.

For some 20 or 25 minutes yesterday the Minister of Justice skirted all around the points raised and did not answer directly one single proposition put to him by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and other members on this side who dealt with the constitutional issues. I said to the minister, when I was speaking, that he had mentioned a draft agreement. He said he had mentioned no such draft agreement in his remarks, and I said that Hansard would show that he did just that. I said to the minister that no amount of wriggling could get away from those words in Hansard. I want to read them now that Hansard for yesterday has been printed. His words will be found on page 1965, in the left hand column. The minister said this:

> But what happens in the same case? It has been decided that nothing prevents the federal government, in the exercise of its own jurisdiction, from selecting a body of the provincial government as its representative, its agent to exercise, in accordance with conditions laid down by the federal government, a federal jurisdiction; and the fact that this agent acts on behalf of the federal government is not unlawful, but on the contrary it is completely in accordance with the constitution—
> What, then, is the matter involved here? It is merely for the moment a draft agreement under which the Quebec government would agree to look after the administration of Eskimo affairs in the far north, on behalf of the federal government.

They were the minister's words, and within half an hour he denied ever having uttered them.

Again on the same page, six or eight lines from the bottom of the left hand column, he referred to a draft agreement. When I put this question directly to the Minister of Justice and challenged him to deny the existence of a draft agreement, the minister of northern affairs intervened, and as reported at page 1969 he made this observation:

> Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister of Justice has no reason to have any such knowledge of the matter at all;

What is more ridiculous than for the minister of northern affairs to say that the Minister of Justice, who has been in on consultations with the Quebec government officials, has no reason to have any knowledge of the matter at all?

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the government is hiding something. I believe we are entitled to an explanation as to the underlying reasons for this continued evasiveness. The minister has been sitting in his seat throughout this debate and has said nothing substantial whatever in reply to the questions which have been put to him. He has been asked questions by the hon. member for Vancouver East, the hon. member for Skeena, the hon. member for Timiskaming, as well as several hon. members from this party. Not one of those questions has he answered. He did answer one of mine, and I will accept his word for it, although he cannot blame me for being suspicious at his assertion that there is no agreement in existence. But I am suggesting to him that he has to go further than that. I am suggesting to him that he has to tell us how far these negotiations, so-called, have gone with the Quebec government officials. He must also tell us what is the underlying reason for his colleagues and the government transferring jurisdiction.

The Minister of Justice makes a great show of saying that all the government is doing is transferring the administrative control to the provincial authorities. Surely when administrative control is transferred one cannot get out from under the fact that with that transfer of administrative control must of necessity go a transfer of the power to make policy decisions. Let us assume for a moment that administrative control does pass. Surely with that administrative control is going to go the power to make decisions as to the curricula to be taught in schools; as to the standard of health to be maintained; as to whether welfare programs will be applicable. All these are matters of policy, and you cannot say under the blanket of a smokescreen that we are retaining on behalf of the federal government this responsibility and merely transferring the paper work to the province of Quebec. That matter has to be clarified before the hon. members of this house should be asked to accept any such transfer.

The Minister of Transport in his intervention when the hon. member for Peace River was speaking, which intervention I suggest served more to confuse than to add anything, asked a question concerning the Eskimo people of Manitoba. This too has no relation to the problem at all because there were no Eskimos in Manitoba, as the minister well knows. The federal government transported them from the Northwest Territories into the province. If he is using that as the basis of his argument he might as well say that the federal government could transfer all the Eskimo people from their homes in the north to Prince Edward Island and transfer jurisdiction over them to that province. So that the minister's argument on that point is specious indeed.

Another very important question which the minister must answer before this item passes relates to the dismissal of Mr. McTaggart. The minister rose in the house when asked a question on the matter the other day and stated that Mr. McTaggart did not resign, but Mr. McTaggart himself seems to have another view. In an article appearing in the Winnipeg Free Press Mr. McTaggart is quoted as having said that the Quebec authorities—> —have been carrying on a "smear campaign" aimed at "getting rid of anybody who has any influence on the Quebec Eskimos".

The article continues:

> He said that Mr. Laing, on his visit to Fort Chimo, was told by Eskimo leaders that they did not want their affairs to be taken over by the provincial government.

Mr. McTaggart went on to say, after having explained how he published certain of his views in the Northern Star, which is a mimeographed newspaper which he started three years ago in order to knit the Eskimo community of Fort Chimo together, that:

> Within a day, word of the article had reached Ottawa and a rocket was heading back to Mr. McTaggart telling him to keep quiet.
> It came in the form of a letter from the director of the northern administration branch of the department of northern affairs to the department's acting administrator in Fort Chimo.
> The letter pointed out that department regulations prohibit federal employees from writing for publications on department matters without prior clearance from their superiors.
> It closed with these words:—

This is the letter from the department as reported in the Winnipeg Free Press:

> "In no way whatsoever am I anxious to take any action which could be construed as curtailing the freedom of the press, but at the moment it is almost imprudent for any departmental employee to publish unauthorized articles on the subject of Eskimo affairs in northern Quebec".

If it was not the intention to limit the expression of free speech, why did the directive not include a specification that there be no opinions published at all without clearing them through the department? Why restrict it to this one problem? Why was he told to be silent only with regard to the Eskimos of northern Quebec? I think there is some explanation required there. The letter continues:

> "Mr. McTaggart is, therefore, asked to govern himself accordingly and to publish nothing on this subject or any other matter of departmental business without first obtaining approval from the district administrator".
> At the moment, Mr. McTaggart said, that appeared to be the end of it and he prepared to comply with the directive.
> A few days later, he received another letter telling him that, since he had broken the directive, he was being transferred immediately out of Fort Chimo. He was told to be out by March 6.

This man was the principal of a school who had occupied that office for three and a half years and was prepared to comply with the directive issued by the minister's department. A few days after receiving this letter—unless there was some intervening conduct of which the members of this committee have not been told—having done nothing further to raise the ire of the departmental officials, he is told to be out by March 6. Why? Was he a disturbing influence on the relations which the government wanted to maintain with the government of which Mr. Levesque is a member? I think some explanation should be forthcoming there.

Mr. McTaggart spent a week in Ottawa and was offered another school in the Northwest Territories. Instead, he turned in his resignation. What other course was there for this gentleman to follow? The department practically said "Get out of the school at Fort Chimo where you have been principal for three and a half years, in the middle of the term, and here is another school." This was in the middle of the winter, and he was tossed out on his ear by the department. The other teachers followed by requesting transfers out of Quebec.

Now, I think we are entitled to explanations today. There seems to be a certain amount of loyalty expressed by the teachers at Fort Chimo school for the actions of Mr. McTaggart, even though they did not appear to be consistent with what the government wanted. When he was asked by the interviewer, probably the gentleman who wrote the article, why he was transferred when the matter had apparently been settled by a warning, Mr. McTaggart said "I'm told it was pressure from Rene Levesque's department." This was Mr. McTaggart's answer.

Now, these questions have to be answered. The minister cannot discharge his responsibility to this committee by remaining silent any longer. Someone has to answer for the government. Surely it is this minister who is responsible for that. He knows, as well as I do, that by section 5 of the act which sets up his department he is given specific responsibility for the administration and welfare of the Eskimo people in Canada. Without altering the constitution of this country, without an amendment to the British North America Act, and without an amendment to that specific act, he cannot duck that responsibility. He cannot slough it off as the government apparently wants to do. I am not suggesting the minister wants to do it, but he is confronted with pressures inside of his own cabinet that he apparently cannot resist. We on this side of the house are prepared to support him to the hilt in the discharge of his responsibility. I know he, in all conscience, wants to do that.

Mr. Winch: I feel very certain the minister is going to get up and answer some of the questions that have been asked. I feel very certain of that, sir, because if he did not he would be a bit of a disgrace to his city and province. I should like to make certain he will answer one question if he does not answer any others. Will the minister tell this committee just what it is under his jurisdiction, as the great white father of the Eskimo people, he has not done, is not doing or is not prepared to do for the Eskimos that he thinks the government of Quebec could do if jurisdiction were transferred? I have put this question bluntly.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, when I first visited an Eskimo group in the Northwest Territories I told them, through an interpreter, that at the end of my visit I would be far less concerned about my thoughts of them than their thoughts of me. I am beginning to wonder today, when news of what has gone on in this house in the last couple of days gets back to the Eskimos, what they will think about us. I am going to say unhesitatingly that the administration of the Eskimos in the territories in which they reside is excellent indeed. It has not been excellent merely since April 22 last; it was excellent before that.

I only wish some of the members who are sitting here and talking so much about Eskimos had an opportunity of visiting in those areas that are extremely primitive. We are doing a very good job in ministering to, if not administering, the Eskimos, and that goes for health matters and everything else. A great number of questions have been asked. Some of them I do not believe are worthy of a great deal of time in answering. My old friend at the far end of the house from Vancouver, who seems to believe that the importance of the things he talks about must be related to the decibels of sound he emits, asked me a question. He used rather rough language, but I am going to assure him at once that I am not going to return his rough language in kind.

Mr. Winch: Will you answer the question?

Mr. Laing: We are dealing with people for whom I think most Canadians would admit we have not done a very good job in the last hundred years. I am speaking about Indians and Eskimos. However, I believe at the present time we are doing our best to do a job. So far as financial requirements are concerned, there has not been any limitation imposed by this government on those things that are necessary for these people; nor by the previous government, either.

Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition referred to them as those poor, untutored fellow Canadians. I want to assure him they are not as untutored as he might think.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is what I hope the government finds out.

Mr. Laing: I think he should be told, if he does not know, that a great many of these people are very clever indeed. They have a natural cleverness, let me assure him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A natural cleverness.

Mr. Laing: This is shown in connection with their operation of machinery. We find in the schools that these youngsters are making just as much progress as white children.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They are wondering who is throwing the monkey wrench into the works.

Mr. Laing: I think I can interpret the feelings of the Eskimo people a little bit better than the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Nielsen: He has been in the north more often than you.

Mr. Laing: The whole difficulty with this part of the country is that it is very large. I am asked, why would Quebec want to take it over?

Mr. Mandziuk: Yes, why?

Mr. Winch: Why do you want to let it go?

Mr. Laing: I have not said I want to let it go.

Mr. Mandziuk: You have not said you do not want to let it go?

Mr. Laing: Should I say either?

Mr. Mandziuk: I think you should.

Mr. Laing: On which side of the fence is the hon. member for Marquette, or is it a picket fence?

An hon. Member: Are you with Pigeon or Diefenbaker?

Mr. Nielsen: Will the minister permit me to ask a question?

Mr. Laing: No. In this area of fantastic size we have a number of locations and communities. Let me read some of them.

Mr. Churchill: Why don't you just answer the questions? The descriptive material you are giving us is very good, but answer the questions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Why don't you allow the minister to speak, as we have allowed you to speak?

Mr. Churchill: I have not spoken on this yet, but I will in view of your interjection.

Mr. Diefenbaker: "We have allowed you"; is that the position of the government? Thank you for the permission.

Mr. Laing: Let me remind hon. members that at Fort George we have 1,000 Eskimo people and 33 white people. At Paint Hills there are 418 Eskimo people and no white people. At Great Whale River there are 418 Eskimo people, 225 Indian people and 37 white people. At Port Harrison there are 339 Eskimos and 34 white people. At Povungnituk there are 460 Eskimos and 16 white people. At Sugluk there are 250 Eskimos and seven white people. At Wakeham Bay there are 122 Eskimos and three white people. At Payne Bay there are 160 Eskimos and four white people. At Fort Chimo there are 400 Eskimos and 75 white people.

Here we have a situation where, as a result of the boundaries decision of 1912, all this enormous area was added to the province of Quebec in very recent years. I am surmising now for the benefit of the hon. member for Marquette what is the wish of the government of Quebec.

Mr. Mandziuk: May I make a correction? I asked why Quebec is so anxious to get hold of these Eskimos and the administration of their affairs. I think the minister knows if he cares to tell us.

Mr. Laing: The hon. member asked why. He asked one way and then he asked another way. He is running both ways, of course.

An hon. Member: So are you.

Mr. Laing: If he will be a little more patient I think I can probably give him my idea why the Quebec government wishes to expand its administration into the area. In recent years there has been some indication that the area has considerable resources in minerals.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Laing: I say there has been some indication; yet hon. members opposite say "oh" as if it was a terrible thing that they should find minerals there. This area is a part of the province of Quebec, and the government of that province are anxious to extend development of their province northward. We know that, among other things, a very important deposit of asbestos has been found at Sugluk, which is on the northwest corner of the extended great peninsula. There have also been other indications. A number of iron deposits have been found and there are other minerals there. The province is looking forward, of course, to the development of the northern part of its territory.

This situation has existed throughout the term of the present government and also the previous government so far as the citizens there are concerned. After all, people are the first asset of the region, and unless you can use the people who are there you are not going to develop the resources that lie there. The citizens are Eskimos whose numbers are added to by a small number of white persons who, almost without exception, have been employees of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I have given figures such as 250 Eskimos and seven white people. The seven white people are employees of ours. I believe these are the reasons the government of Quebec is interested.

With regard to the innuendo that has been thrown at me and the manufactured questions and half-manufactured answers of the hon. member for Vancouver East and the hon. member for Yukon, I can only say that I stated the actual facts yesterday and if hon. members will read what I said then, they will see what the situation is. There is very little I can add.

The government of Quebec asked us to discuss the matter with them and we said we would. We have met ministers of the government of Quebec on two occasions. Since then the matter has been left to our officials to discuss with officials of the province of Quebec to see whether, on the basis of the memorandum that I put before the house, a draft agreement could be arrived at for submission to the two governments. I said yesterday that we had made almost no progress at all in coming to any draft agreement.

The matter of finances and how they will be handled has to be discussed at the ministerial level by the two governments, and we have not met at all up to this point. So when the hon. member for Yukon says he is suspicious I hope that in this respect at least, if not in others, the hon. member will overcome his suspicions. I was very frank with the house yesterday, and I have been as frank as I can be today. The situation today is no different from what it was yesterday. We have made practically no progress at all in the negotiations. As I said frankly to the house yesterday, the matter hinges on the basis of what is involved in consultation with the Eskimos. I defined what that should be in our view, and we will continue to insist upon the consultation that we propose to have with the Eskimos before any agreement is signed.

The hon. member also dealt with the school teacher. He got up and said the school teacher had been dismissed. The hon. member knows he was not dismissed.

Mr. Nielsen: Forced to resign.

Mr. Laing: He was offered another position within our department at Ottawa, not in any school. He came down here and indicated to us, as a matter of fact, that he would accept. He came to Ottawa and then left afterward. If statements picked up thereafter by newspapermen, and probably qualified in some cases by newspapermen, are going to be read into the records of the house as facts and held against us, then we can get nowhere at all, of course. I have attempted to say that this man was a valued employee of the department and I hope he works for the department again. I do not want to say anything about him, and I do not think the hon. member does, which would affect his future. He is still a young man with a very bright future.

Mr. Nielsen: Why did you force him to resign?

Mr. Laing: He was not forced to resign, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. Nielsen: Why did you yank him out? Why was he brought out of Fort Chimo?

Mr. Laing: I think the hon. member would not be prepared to argue with me when I say that we cannot have our employees making comments upon policies of this administration or of the department. I think the hon. member has some understanding of business. How would he like to run his business that way, with his employees commenting publicly about the way the boss was running the business?

Mr. Nielsen: That is why he was taken out.

Mr. Laing: The hon. member can make any comment he likes. I pay less and less attention to the comments he makes.

[Mr. Laing.]

Mr. Peters: Could I ask a question?

Mr. Laing: Just a moment.

Mr. Peters: What will be the basis of consultation?

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Laing: The matter of the constitutional responsibility of the various provinces with respect to these people has been dealt with by the Minister of Justice and other members of the house, and I am not going to deal with it. I think it has been agreed in all corners of the house that in the years that lie ahead of us the best results with respect to these indigenous peoples will be achieved by bringing them into general comity with the other people resident in the areas where they live. If members on the other side are going to say this is not the year to do it in Quebec, that is another matter, but generally speaking I think there is universal agreement that this is the best thing for all concerned.

Instances can be given of agreements made when the right hon. gentleman was in power with respect to education in a number of places in Canada, and I can assure him that the results have been excellent indeed. We have 2,300 Indian children in our high schools in the province of British Columbia today, and I want to say that they are as good students as any others. I think that policy would meet with the approval of members on both sides of the house. But if it is going to be contended in respect of the Eskimos of northern Quebec that this is not the time, that is another matter; and that argument can be made, of course, in respect of any area or group of people in Canada from time to time.

Mr. Winch: Is the minister prepared to give an answer to the final question I asked? Can the minister give any indication to members of the house as to what greater care or protection the province of Quebec could give these Eskimos than his department is giving or is prepared to give?

Mr. Laing: The province of Quebec as it expands northward, and in fact the other provinces that are moving north, take their provincial services such as police, welfare, administration of lands and so on with them. I would think any province that is of good heart at all could extend those services to the native people with better results than might be possible through the intervention of a national government.

This is my own opinion, and I was very frank yesterday in dealing with the situation in respect to the Indian reserve in my own riding, where the native children are now going to a white school. This is not of great moment at present, because we have insisted in the memorandum we set out that the standards of service to these people—where a province is going to take over their administration—be not less than the standards which we have been operating and which we would expect to operate in the years ahead.

Mr. Winch: You have set out a memorandum. Are you therefore approaching the government of Quebec on this, and could we have a copy of that memorandum?

Mr. Laing: The memorandum I referred to was that presented to the house on March 4, setting forth the guide lines for the minimum requirements we would insist upon in any dealings with the province in respect of these people.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, unlike the minister, I listen to what he says very carefully indeed. He did say in answer to my hon. friend from Marquette, "I have not said I am prepared to let it go," that is, the administration of the Eskimos in New Quebec. That is what he said just a moment ago, as Hansard will show. Yet on March 4, as recorded at page 506 of Hansard for that date, the minister said, in words with which I am sure he is extremely familiar:

> —Canada is prepared to have Quebec administer Eskimo affairs as part of Quebec's general administrative responsibilities in the province—

Now he has said that hon. members on this side are taking both sides of the question; but if he has not done that just this moment then I do not know what he has done. On the one hand he has said that he has not said he is prepared to let the matter go to the Quebec authorities, but on March 4, in very clear words, he said he is.

Again, to point out the deviousness of these ministers, the Minister of Justice said, as reported at page 1964 of yesterday's Hansard:

> What is not true is, first of all, that the present government tried or is trying to make a transfer of jurisdiction. Neither is it true that we are trying to lay down conditions for the administration of Eskimo affairs—

Yet the minister of northern affairs put on record in his conçensus on March 4, the guide lines, as he called them, that will guide any conferences between the two governments in an effort to reach an agreement to transfer jurisdiction over the Eskimo people.

What one minister is saying is quite different from what the other is saying, and what the other minister is saying is quite different today from what he said on March 4.

We are still not getting the answers we sought. For the benefit of members of the committee the minister should stand on his feet and say nobody is trying to impute any veracity to the questions that are being asked of the minister, merely by asking them, and nobody is trying to give a statement, made in the house, the validity of truth simply because the minister is silent. All we want are some answers to questions, and we want direct answers.

I think the minister has already said it, but in view of what he said to the hon. member for Marquette I think we have to have some reassurance on this point, that what he said on March 4 was the intention of the government to reach an agreement with the provincial authorities for the transfer of jurisdiction over the Eskimos?

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister did not mention jurisdiction in that statement.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, the Minister of Justice certainly mentioned jurisdiction yesterday.

Mr. Pickersgill: And he said it was not going to be transferred.

Mr. Nielsen: Quite so, but the minister of northern affairs said on March 4 that the government is prepared to have Quebec administer Eskimo affairs.

Mr. Turner: Is there not a difference between administration and jurisdiction?

Mr. Nielsen: Oh, is this the hair they are splitting? It is a hair so fine you can hardly see it.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question. The harbours board is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport, but the Minister of Transport does not administer the harbours board. The harbours board was an agency created for the purpose of administering the harbours. The Minister of Justice, the minister of northern affairs and every other member of the government who have spoken, have made it perfectly clear that, even if we wanted to, we could not transfer the jurisdiction because it is vested in this parliament. So there is no difference on the part of any of us on the question of jurisdiction. The only question is whether or not some of these things under the jurisdiction of parliament can be administered by another agency, as has been the case with Indians, and as my colleague the minister of northern affairs has pointed out.

My colleague has also pointed out that the government is not prepared to entrust any administration to the province unless the fundamental conditions that were in that memorandum of March 4 are met.

Mr. Nielsen: I am very happy to hear the Minister of Transport use the words he did, namely that this matter is the responsibility of parliament and that no jurisdiction can be transferred without the approval of parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it could, even with the approval of parliament. I think it would require an amendment to the constitution.

Mr. Nielsen: I was going on to make that very point because that is what the Leader of the Opposition has said, and that is what the hon. member for Peace River has said all along.

Mr. Pickersgill: And what everybody on this side said all along.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not correct. The Minister of Justice made a great case for saying that the government could, by way of agency, transfer part of the jurisdiction that the federal government has over Eskimos.

Mr. Pickersgill: And the hon. gentleman talks about splitting hairs. I have not read all that the Minister of Justice said, but what he said to me and to my colleagues about this matter was that the government has the authority to make an agreement for the carrying out of certain functions. I am only too happy, as I am leading the house at the moment, to say, as the Minister of Justice said yesterday, that if and when any such agreement is made it will be brought into the house and laid on the table. The life of the government will be staked on it, and no action will be taken until parliament has had an opportunity to challenge it and throw us out if they do not like it. What is more, we cannot spend any money without its being voted by this parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what is happening now.

Mr. Pickersgill: The right hon. gentleman says that is what is happening. The right hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that the only money being spent is being spent by my colleague, the minister of northern affairs, and the only money that can be spent, until parliament decides otherwise, is in the way that parliament prescribes that it shall be spent.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister talks about splitting hairs. The real trouble is that here we have an expert on parliamentary procedure who does not really understand the distinction of what comes under parliament and what comes under the authority of the government, because he just said a moment ago that it is parliament has the responsibility of jurisdiction over the Eskimo people, and in the next breath he said that the government can, by executive action, transfer part of that jurisdiction.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will not have words put in my mouth. I said the government could make an agreement to have certain functions performed, and indeed the government performs practically none of the administrative functions. They are performed by civil servants. They are performed by crown corporations. In many cases, ever since confederation the functions with respect to fisheries, I believe, have in certain provinces been performed by provincial governments under arrangements which were made. It is true to say, as I venture into this constitutional field—and I can see the Leader of the Opposition all but springing up—it is true the courts have decided that a legislature cannot delegate its jurisdiction to parliament and that parliament cannot delegate its jurisdiction; so all it could possibly do would be to make some adminstrative agreement under the authority of parliament and under the authority of the minister.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. gentleman stop right there. He has said the government has the authority, in the same sense as it has with crown corporations and the other examples he has given, to have certain administrative controls—

Mr. Pickersgill: "Functions" not "controls". Use the words I used.

Mr. Nielsen: Let us use the word "functions" then. But in all the cases he has mentioned, including as he well knows, the case of the Indians under section 113, there exists parliamentary authority to do that very thing. But can he say where authority exists for the transfer of any function of the federal government with respect to Eskimo affairs? He cannot do so because no such authority exists.

Mr. Pickersgill: If that is the problem, I think it can be cleared up at once. Everybody in this committee knows, I am sure, that no government, however powerful it may be, can do anything that it is not empowered to do by the constitution, by the law and by parliament. Ministers have no power of their own; they have only such powers as as the law gives them. That is why they are called ministers. They are responsible for everything they do, to parliament in this situation, and I know I would not argue, nor would anyone on this side of the house, that any minister could make a valid agreement unless there was legal authority in existence for his making such an agreement. We are not arguing that for one moment. Equally, parliament cannot make any agreement with anyone. Parliament is a sovereign body and it cannot make agreements. Any agreements which are made under the law have to be made by someone entrusted by parliament with doing so or, in a few rare cases which survive, under the prerogative.

But clearly, under our constitution, unless the minister has the power under the law he cannot do anything and there will be no attempt in connection with this matter or any other to try to make any agreement or do anything else which we are not empowered by the law to do.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The general principles enunciated by the minister a moment ago are certainly in accordance with the facts and the law.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the right hon. gentleman for saying that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thought it was a fair summary of the situation and nobody is in disagreement with that general enunciation. However, where we do disagree is that there is no power in parliament to authorize the minister to make such an agreement with regard to Eskimos. There is in respect of Indians provision under the Indian Act specifically excepting Eskimos therefrom, and the fight we are putting on is to get the government to carry out the principles which the minister has enunciated as being proper and appropriate. We do not want to carry on a fight indefinitely. We have responsibility for these people. The government for the time being has a responsibility which we say they are flagrantly and unconstitutionally endeavouring to dispose of outside the law. There is, apparently, a difference of opinion. In 1939 there was a submission to the Supreme Court of Canada.

I make a suggestion, now, in the hope that it will meet the approval of those who have participated in this discussion from this side of the house. There is no rush about this. The Eskimos have got along very well. According to the minister they have received unusual consideration. I gather from his words that every opportunity has been given to them in recent years. The hon. gentleman dealt with the past and said we had not always been considerate of the Indians and the Eskimos. He very fairly stated that, and it is true. But today, in every part of our country and, indeed, all over the world, a psychology is building up that there must be no second class citizens—that everyone must have equal opportunity. He said, as well—and again, I underline the words he uttered at that meeting to which I made reference yesterday—"We want government of laws, not men". But what is being done here, if our view is correct, is the establishment of a government of men, not laws. In other words, we say, and the authorities bear us out if our interpretation is correct, that this government has no power to do that which it is endeavouring to do in these negotiations. If the 1951 case, or the reference to the supreme court in Nova Scotia v. the attorney general of Canada means anything, it means that this cannot be done under the law. And I now make this suggestion in order that we may move ahead. Let us move ahead. I repeat what I said a moment ago: There is no rush about this; we do not have to accelerate the speed which has been apparent from the government side in this connection.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would allow me to say, speaking of acceleration—

Mr. Diefenbaker: In a moment. I am speaking now about the acceleration, the unusual energy with which the government has entered into these discussions. What is the rush? What is the reason for it? The hon. member for Vancouver East asked: What is the reason for this? What are the advantages for the Eskimo? Why the haste? Why these continued discussions which are going on in order to bring about agreement? If there is no real need for haste, and I am sure there is not—the development of those commercial resources of which the minister spoke would not be delayed in any way by following this suggestion I am about to make—why not do this? Why does the government of Canada not submit to the supreme court a reference as to whether or not parliament, or the government purporting to act under the powers that parliament grants, has the authority to do this? We say it has not. We say it is illegal and unconstitutional.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the right hon. gentleman permit a question for the sake of clarification?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let the hon. gentleman wait just a moment until I have finished. I know the haste with which the minister always moves, as he once moved in the Fort Garry hotel in Winnipeg—but I do not want to go back to that; I saw reference to it in the press only today. I say this to the Minister of Transport, who is senior in so many ways, with the great authority he has had in administration, having been a kibitzer in council for so long—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the right hon. gentleman tell me what that word means?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will tell you. Just take a look at yourself in the mirror occasionally. In view of the declaration of these principles, I ask the minister—he knows the principles; he has enunciated parliamentary law and tradition correctly—to now place this matter before the Supreme Court of Canada and ask the supreme court whether this power exists; and if it does, then the government will be in a position to act. We believe that it does not.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a reply to the right hon. gentleman, but I would first like to know what I am replying to. On several occasions he used pronouns that had no antecedents, and I always like to know what I am talking about, if I can. He kept saying "this". What did he mean by "this"? Did he mean jurisdiction, or did he mean the discharge of certain functions that would remain under the jurisdiction of parliament? I could not give any answer until I know which of these two things he means.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I appreciate the difficulty under which the hon. gentleman operates, and I am not here to try and cast any aspersions on his lack of understanding. What I was endeavouring to place before the committee was this; that the government should submit a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada on the question as to whether the government, carrying out the powers that parliament gives it, can enter into an agreement whereby it will transfer, sublet or in any way assign the control of the administration of Eskimos, as would be the case in the agreement the general principles of which the minister has placed before the committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think I can answer that question very easily. The government has not the slightest intention, as I understand our intentions—and I think I understand them quite correctly—of transferring any jurisdiction at all to anyone; therefore it would be redundant to ask the supreme court whether we could do it or not. We feel that the legislative jurisdiction exists in this parliament, as decided in 1939. We feel that the Nova Scotia case, to which the right hon. gentleman referred, applies to it and that it would not be possible without an amendment to the constitution; and it seems to me it would be rather needless to make this reference, if we are talking about jurisdiction. If, however, we are talking about the kind of agreement that I made with the Sarnia school board for the education of the Indians in the schools of Sarnia, that is a matter, as the hon. member for Yukon has said, with regard to which there might be some question—whether the government could make such an agreement without being specifically empowered by parliament to do so. I am not a lawyer and I would not like to express an opinion on that point; but I would think that if it was within the power of parliament under the Indian Act to give me as superintendent general, and to give Mrs. Fairclough as superintendent general, and to give—who succeeded Mrs. Fairclough?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, you have had so many changes over there.

Mr. Pickersgill: You had so many changes over there. I was referring to one of yours. Perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre could tell us who succeeded Mrs. Fairclough when she was promoted to the post office.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Bell.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Bell, oh yes. The bell tolled for him too. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt this serious argument with facetiousness of that sort, but if the right hon. gentleman is asking us to ask the supreme court whether the government would have the power, as the law stands now, to make this agreement, I do not think we should ask the supreme court a question of that sort—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope the right hon. gentleman will listen, because the hon. member for Yukon has pointed out that under the Indian Act the power to entrust certain functions was given to the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: For Indians, not for Eskimos.

Mr. Pickersgill: If there is any serious doubt that the power exists, it is within the competence of parliament to remove that doubt. Therefore it would seem to me redundant to ask the supreme court that question too. But I will say this. The right hon. gentleman knows I am not the head of the government; he knows we cannot decide questions like that here in the house. But I will undertake, without any hesitation, to bring this matter anew to the attention of my colleagues and if there is any serious doubt whatsoever that the government has this power, and if we feel that, not having it, we want to have it, we will not attempt to exercise it without having that doubt removed by parliament, if parliament wants to remove it.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, may I ask one question of the minister? With whom does that doubt exist? The way the minister expressed it, I think he implied that if the government had any doubt, they would not do it. Could he not put it this way? Will he not inform his colleagues that doubt with regard to the power of the government exists in the minds of a great many people.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has been expressed in this house by some very eminent lawyers, and some lawyers who are not yet quite so eminent, and I will convey that doubt to my colleagues. There were doubts expressed, as the right hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre will recall, about a power the previous government took upon itself to act by order in council. We made a very serious endeavour to get parliament to pronounce upon that question, and the hon. gentleman used every kind of device to prevent parliament pronouncing upon that question in that last parliament, which did not last very long.

This government certainly has no intention of attempting to do something that we believe we do not have the legal power to do. Since these views have been expressed, I undertake to bring them to the attention of my colleagues. What is more, I reiterate the undertaking given yesterday, that if the law officers reassure the government on this point; if—and these are very big "ifs", as the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has already pointed out—after that, any agreement can be arrived at and any agreement is arrived at, it will not be implemented before it is laid on the table of this house and before there is ample opportunity for the fate of the government to be determined with respect to it.

Moreover, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has also indicated that these functions for which we have the responsibility and for which we will continue to have the final, ultimate responsibility under our constitution, cannot be exercised unless someone pays for them; and we cannot pay anything for them unless this parliament votes the money. So there will be at least two, and I suspect there would be a great many more than two, opportunities if ever an agreement is made in this matter—and there is no assurance of that at all—for this parliament to pronounce upon any such agreement.

Mr. Churchill: Why don't you chuck the whole thing?

Mr. Nielsen: Why don't you abandon the idea?

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I have not spoken in these debates at all with regard to the supplementary estimates, in the foolish hope that if I did not speak we might speed things up a little. There were a number of departments in which I was interested. We have heard a great deal about this particular matter and members of the official opposition have put forward their different views and complaints with regard to the government's handling of this problem of the Quebec Eskimos. It seems to me that the point has been made over and over and over again, and surely the government must understand it by this time. We have not an agreement before us. If an agreement comes before us, these points can all be raised again at that time. I suggest we will not make much more progress. The point has been exhaustively made. Speaking as an ordinary member I know the views of other ordinary members of other parties, and they are fed up at the length of time that these supplementary estimates are taking. The only purpose to be served by continuing with them is to bring parliament even further into disrepute and to grind it to a halt.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Parliament is never brought into disrepute when a great principle is being fought on behalf of the people, and I emphasize that fact.

Mr. Howard: Only when unprincipled people are dealing with it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That comes with the authority of the hon. member for Skeena. I am not referring to the hon. member who has just made a statement when I say this, but there is a remarkable degree of alliance between the Liberal party and the hon. gentlemen to my immediate left in the New Democratic party, who invariably come to the rescue of the government whenever they are in difficulty. I would say this to the minister: Why not submit the agreement containing the generally projected terms which have tentatively been discussed by the government of Canada and the government of the province of Quebec to the supreme court? The hon. gentleman said that if the government comes to the conclusion that it has any doubts on the question, then it will take certain action. Do you think any government, having determined on the course already determined upon, would have any doubt? It must have had no doubt when it decided on the course it has proceeded on so far. We are perfectly willing to do everything we can to assist in placing this matter in a position which is fair and just and maintains the law and the constitution.

The hon. gentleman says that we will have an opportunity after the agreement is signed to debate the matter. It will be brought before parliament and the government will regard a vote in that connection as a vote of non-confidence. In reality that is what he said, and it is meaningless. What possible defence will that be if the principles of justice under the law and constitution of the country have to depend on a vote in this house on a motion of confidence in the government? We have had that experience over and over again and on a matter such as this. It is no reflection on hon. members when I say that the outcome would not be in any doubt.

This is a matter which touches on the freedom of the individual and the constitution of the country. Mention was made of the right of administration as a result of the agreements, entered into with respect to Sarnia. Those agreements have been entered into, it is true, under law passed by parliament. But there is no statutory authority for what the government purports to do in this connection. It is because there is no statutory authority and because constitutionally we believe this cannot be done without amendment to the constitution that we have asked that the government place before the Supreme Court of Canada a reference in this connection. I think that is a reasonable suggestion. There will not be any delay. There is no rush to secure the implementation of any agreement which may be entered into. And above all, such a course would ensure that constitutionally we will not be playing fast and loose with a matter which today exercises the minds of the people of Canada, namely the preservation and maintenance of constitutional rights and authority. That is the reason for these suggestions.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, there are two things the Leader of the Opposition said which I should like to support. First of all, I support his suggestion that this matter might be referred by the government to the supreme court. Surely—

Mr. Pickersgill: Would not the hon. gentleman, who is usually pretty clear headed about things, tell us what he means by "this matter"? I said that we were not interested in divesting ourselves of the jurisdiction, so the question of jurisdiction is not en jeu at all. Will the hon. member say precisely what he thinks should be referred to the supreme court?

Mr. Knowles: I shall be glad to do that, but I thought we had completely and unanimously agreed that there is no question of jurisdiction involved. Therefore, it is not even necessary that we talk about it; the jurisdiction is settled by the constitution and the interpretation of it. I am referring to the authority to make the kind of agreement the terms of which have been indicated to us. It is the authority of parliament, or of the government which has been given the authority by parliament, to make such an agreement on which I think it would be useful to have the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada. I am sure that both the Leader of the Opposition and the Minister of Transport will give me credit for consistency in that a year or so ago, when there was doubt in this house about an order in council that the previous government had enacted I asked the government to refer the matter to the Supreme Court of Canada. I think this would be a good thing to do in this instance.

The other point the Leader of the Opposition made which I should like to support very strongly is that it is not quite good enough to lay on the table of parliament an agreement of the kind in question, and then merely to submit the life of the government to the House of Commons in a vote of non-confidence. If I may go back to what happened in the last parliament, I would remind the Minister of Transport that is precisely what the previous government did in respect of the surcharge order in council, and the Minister of Transport did not like it one little bit. During the life of that parliament many of us called on the then government to do something about that surcharge order in council, but we were told several times by the then government that there were votes of confidence in this house on the issue, that the government of the day had been sustained, and therefore that settled the issue.

The hon. gentleman knows that when we have votes of confidence, whether on the address, on the budget, or on a supply motion, they get pretty confused. We are told that anything which the government may be planning—family allowance payments, if you please—is at stake, so that you do not get a clearcut decision on the matter itself.

I think it would be fair to have this matter of statutory authority for the kind of agreement which is envisaged brought before parliament as a piece of legislation. This other device I realize is legal and is used at times, but I do not think it is good enough in a situation of this kind. The Minister of Transport may tell me that that is what happens with a declaration of war; that a declaration of war does not have to be approved by parliament as such, that all that is required is that the government summon parliament, if it is not sitting, within 10 days and submits itself to parliament. But this is not a declaration of war which requires to be dealt with in those terms. This is something about which there have now been raised some pretty serious questions, and I think they should be dealt with definitively.

It seems to me that there are two ways to do this. Either you get an opinion from the Supreme Court of Canada or you bring the matter before parliament in terms of specific legislation. Perhaps I should say that both these things need to be done instead of "either/or". We should get the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada, and if the opinion is that the agreement is one which can be made I suggest it be brought before parliament as a specific piece of legislation, rather than to use this device of saying that we can move an amendment to a supply motion. This is what the Minister of Transport is saying—"We will lay the matter on the table, and then on the next supply motion you can move a motion of non-confidence in the government on this issue". Then of course, when the debate takes place, all the other issues that are before parliament can be brought forward.

We want to get a vote on that issue itself. It seems to me that these two suggestions the Leader of the Opposition has made to the Minister of Transport have validity, and I hope they will be given serious consideration by the government.

Mr. Pickersgill: They certainly will be given serious consideration. I should like to say that I do not have any such low opinion of my fellow members of parliament as seems to be entertained by the right hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The government did not envisage having a matter of this importance mixed up with anything else. When the Minister of Justice said yesterday we would lay this thing on the table and give ample opportunity for a want of confidence vote, we meant a want of confidence vote related specifically to any such agreement.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Does he undertake, in that situation, that there would not be anyone from the government side who would stand up and say: Now if you vote against us on this you are defeating the government and you are going to have an election before there is a Canada pension plan, before there are increases in family allowances, or any of the other goodies the government has in store. Does the minister undertake we would not be faced with that kind of argument?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, if you defeat the government, you defeat the government. Both the right hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre seem to believe we are so secure on an issue of this kind that there would not be a majority of the house to defeat the government. I wish I had the same confidence that they express.

I do admit that there are some—

Mr. Nielsen: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I would rather reply to one question before another is asked. What was the word the Leader of the Opposition used and which could be applied to the hon. gentleman?—that he is a great kibitzer. If he will just wait with his kibitzing until I have answered the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, then I will receive his question.

With regard to the supreme court reference suggested by the right hon. gentleman, I have to repeat that I do not believe anyone has questioned the constitutional power of parliament to do this thing. It has been done with the Indians and, in so far as the Eskimos are concerned, all we would need to do is have an Eskimo act like the Indian Act, and it could be done as well in the one case as the other. I cannot imagine any good lawyer making any other argument. It seems to me, therefore, that if there is any doubt about this power, I think, instead of referring the question to the supreme court the government should introduce legislation into parliament. I must confess I always listen with great respect to the hon. member for Peace River. However, it does not seem to me this is the kind of question for the supreme court, unless we have some doubt about the constitutional right of parliament to do this thing.

Mr. Nasserden: Parliament is not doing it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nobody is doing it; nothing is being done. We have been debating for days something that is really hypothetical, as the minister of northern affairs has pointed out a dozen times. It is on an if-and-when basis. I do not believe there is the slightest likelihood of the matter being advanced very far before we reach the main estimates. As Your Honour has pointed out once or twice, when Your Honour has been permitted to draw our attention to the rules, this item has nothing whatever to do with the supplementary estimates.

I cannot make any more commitment than has been made at the present time. If it would facilitate dealing with the other estimates, we could suspend consideration of this item so I can consult the Prime Minister. If there was unanimous consent of the committee to that effect, it could be clearly understood that this would be the only point with which we would deal when the item is called again. If that was the understanding, I would be willing to consider, if the minister of northern affairs would also be willing to consider, in the interests of getting other supplementary estimates through, consulting with the Prime Minister and coming back to this item at seven o'clock, no matter what point we have reached in our discussions. If the hour from five to six was used to discuss estimates, I might be able to come back earlier.

I cannot do this myself. If there could be a unanimous understanding, I would put the points that have been raised to the Prime Minister, and then either he or the minister of northern affairs would be able to say what the government felt it was able to do. If that would facilitate completing the work of the committee, then I would consider doing it, if my colleague would consider it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will refer to this suggestion in a moment. Before I do, I want to refer to the point made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He mentioned that during the period we were in office we passed an order in council with reference to surcharges which he and other members of the house considered was beyond our authority. I point out in that connection that we secured the opinion of the law officers of the crown and the law officers said we had that authority.

I want to ask the Minister of Transport or the minister of northern affairs if the law officers of the crown have given an opinion on the agreement covering the administration of Eskimos, and the legality within the constitution of entering into such an agreement? I ask that question before I refer directly to the suggestion made by the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not believe it would be possible for me to give a precise answer to that question. I doubt if it would be possible for any of my colleagues who are here at the moment. It may be that the minister of northern affairs could answer the question. Frankly, I cannot say for sure, and that is why I repeated the word of the right hon. gentleman about doubt. I will let the minister of northern affairs say whether he has any knowledge of this.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder if I may permit—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let the minister answer.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I think the fact we have had some two full days debate on this item is compensated for by the fact that the calibre of the debate has been high. I think it has been one of the better debates in which parliament has engaged during this session. However, we have come to the point now where we are discussing whether or not the legal officers of the government have passed upon the authority of the government to do a certain thing with another government. We keep coming back, especially the Leader of the Opposition, to this agreement which is about to be signed, and so on.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am quoting the minister from Quebec who made the statement.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Laing: I want to assure the right hon. gentleman and the committee that there is no agreement about to be signed. I have said that twice and I say it again. We laid down a list of principles which we would insist upon in any negotiations with the province of Quebec, and they must live up to those standards. They involve protection of the Eskimo and his right to live in the so-called Eskimo community of the north, protection of his language and of his schools which, of course, as every member of the house knows, involves religion, and protection of his right to be treated equally as well in regard to all these things as we have treated him. This is all we have done thus far.

I cannot report that a single bit of progress has been made since I put a statement on the pages of Hansard on March 4. That is the situation. We have had a number of meetings between our officers and officers of the province of Quebec, some of them even in the last two or three days, and like one of those steam engines that got stuck on dead centre I want to tell the right hon. gentleman we are on dead centre now in respect of what consultation with the Eskimos means.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is meant by a dead centre in consultation?

Mr. Laing: The right hon. gentleman knows as much about those western steam engines as I do.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Are both sides steamed up? Are the dominion and the province of Quebec steamed up? Is that the reason?

Mr. Laing: Somebody has to take them off centre by hand. The situation is that apparently we cannot come to any understanding in respect of a definition of consultation. I stated yesterday our insistence on what consultation was going to involve. So we are dealing theoretically with something which the Leader of the Opposition thinks exists, which the hon. member for Yukon has persistently said does exist, and which various other members have said they have heard is in the making and have accused the government of keeping something from them. I want to assure the committee that nothing of this nature exists. I am going to wind up by making a very strong plea, as strong as I can make it. I think it will be the best thing for the department and for the progress of the house if we pass these estimates now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, we still have not got an answer to the simple question I asked. Have the law officers of the crown been asked for their opinion whether an agreement in the general terms suggested by the minister would be within the power and authority of the government of Canada to enter into? He made a very general statement and with much of what he said I was in agreement. He speaks with clearness and lucidity always, but the question I asked had no reference to the kind of speech he made in reply. I simply ask: Has such a legal opinion been sought? That is all. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, in so far as I am concerned I am quite certain the right hon. gentleman will agree that this is a question which normally he would address to the Minister of Justice, if he were in the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister in charge of the department would naturally have an opinion, would he not, before he would go ahead?

Mr. Laing: I would think that the opinion given by the Minister of Justice yesterday would have been supported by his officers, but I would not want to say this in the house without knowing it to be a fact, and I do not know it to be a fact.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I could perhaps say one thing that might help a little in this matter. On behalf of the government I am quite willing to undertake that we will get a legal opinion from the law officers of the crown, if one has not been got, and if there is any doubt about the power of the government I will certainly undertake that we will not, with any doubt on the part of the law officers existing, attempt to make any agreement until whatever needs to be done has been done to make sure that the government has such power.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, the question I wish to ask the Minister of Transport concerns what is a reiteration of the offer of the Minister of Justice to lay the agreement on the table when it is executed and test the confidence of the house and the government by that means. As one kibitzer to another, I wonder whether he could explain how he feels that sort of action would legalize any such agreement, provided an agreement is signed, if in fact entering into such an agreement was unlawful in the first place?

Mr. Pickersgill: I never thought it would. It does seem to me they are two entirely separate questions. There is one question involving whether the government would have the legal power to make such an agreement, and there is the second question whether the House of Commons thinks the government should make such an agreement. The government is responsible to the House of Commons and even if we have undoubted power to make an agreement I still think that parliament has the right to kick us out if members think we should not make it. That is what I understand by responsible government. The idea was not that it would give any additional legality to the agreement to do this, but that it would assert the primacy of the house over the government.

I must confess that until I listened to the debate today and particularly to the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River it had not occurred to me that there was any doubt about the power of the government to make the kind of agreement we are envisaging, which transfers no jurisdiction but merely entrusts functions. Because of my experience as superintendent general and having made so many of these agreements it did not seem to me that there was any doubt, but I confess that the argument raised by the hon. member for Peace River that the Indian Act has a specific provision in it exempting Eskimos is a point. I do not say that that concludes the matter but it is a point that had not occurred to me before. That is why I felt I would be quite justified, knowing my colleagues as I do, in saying that if after the law officers have looked at this matter thoroughly they entertain the slightest doubt about the power of the government we would not attempt to make any agreement without being clothed with the power to make it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the differences between us are rapidly being diminished. I have just one veto and it is this. When the opinion of the law officers is secured I would ask that before an agreement is signed the matter be brought to the attention of the house by notifying the house that the law officers are of the opinion that it is legal, if that should be their opinion, at which time an opportunity would naturally be provided for consideration by the house. If that meets with the views of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and brings us together in agreement, I think this debate has been well worth while.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have no hesitation whatever in saying that such an assurance would be given in an unqualified way by the government. We do not want to make an agreement with anybody that we have not got the power to make. We want to remove any possible doubt on this matter and I give the assurance that the house, if and before any agreement is signed, will be advised, and if it is not in session we will take the necessary steps to make the point public, that the law officers of the crown feel the government has the necessary authority.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: Order. In order to permit the house to proceed to the consideration of private members' business according to section 3—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder could Your Honour not see the clock and dispense with the formalities?

The Chairman: I suggest it should be done in the formal way and an arrangement made with the Speaker in the chair. According to section 3 of standing order 15 it is my duty to leave the chair.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder would Your Honour see me before proceeding to private members' business, and see whether it might be the sense of the house on this particular occasion that we would forgo the private members' hour and go back into committee of supply. It is conceivable that in doing that we would be preventing having to sit this evening, or too much of this evening.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we are in agreement with that, but with regard to the latter part of what the hon. gentleman said, may I say that he expressed a rather optimistic hope that we will not have to meet again this evening.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was brought up in the west, and so by nature am optimistic.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then is it agreed that we suspend the private members' hour.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

55e. Water resources branch—administration, operation and maintenance, $25,000.

Mr. Simpson: Yesterday in the house I asked the minister whether it was the intention of the department to conduct a vocational training school, or a school of any nature, for Eskimo children at Fort Churchill, and when these facilities might be made available to the Eskimo children. Can the minister enlighten us on that?

Mr. Laing: It is the plan of the department to occupy some of the buildings that were occupied by the army at Fort Churchill, as a residential school principally for Eskimo children, but probably for some Indian pupils as well. Negotiations are now being undertaken with the government of the province of Manitoba in respect to its jurisdiction over education. A very careful survey is being made of the buildings to ensure protection from any danger of fire, because of the fact that it would be a residential school.

The Chairman: It is not clear to the Chair how this subject relates to vote 55e, water resources branch. It may, and perhaps the hon. member can help clarify this point.

Mr. Simpson: I understood we were still on the first item.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, that was passed.

Mr. Simpson: Well, since my question was answered, is it the hope of the government to have this school in operation this coming session or next fall?

Mr. Laing: If the committee will permit me to go outside the scope of this item, I may say I think it would be 1965.

Mr. McBain: Several of the hon. members who represent ridings along the great lakes area are greatly disturbed over the continuing lowering of the lake levels, and yesterday the minister promised a detailed report to the hon. member for Grey North. Can he indicate when that report will be ready and when it might be tabled?

Mr. Laing: I am sorry I did not have the opportunity of placing it before the house today, because it is now ready. I shall do so on Monday. It is a very extensive report and I shall be asking leave to have it printed in Hansard instead of reading it.

Mr. Aiken: Is the report merely an explanation of the problem or will it indicate remedies and give hope that the lake levels will be rectified?

Mr. Laing: It will be principally an explanation of the phenomenon. The lake levels, of course, are determined largely by precipitation and, as my hon. friend knows, precipitation has been low in recent years.

Mr. Aiken: We would be very thankful for a full statement because this is a very serious problem, particularly at Georgian bay, where the water is out to the low point. I am sure the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Public Works must also be concerned about it. One has to walk to a lot of these small docks at present. Perhaps this would be a good time to carry out repairs on them, because they are up out of the water.

It was stated last year that this was a cycle that would come to an end last fall, but unfortunately that did not happen. The majority of the people who are writing to me, who are forming groups to discuss and consider this matter, are looking for action and will not be satisfied with a statement. I have tried to give them all the information I could gather from the water resources people and the Department of Public Works, but I am sure it is not as complete a statement as the minister will provide.

However, a statement of the problem is not much consolation to them and I hope the minister's will contain something more than an explanation.

Mr. Rock: Will this report include the water levels of lake St. Louis and the harbour of Montreal? Further, does it propose any solutions for the future?

Mr. Laing: I expect it will deal with the water levels in the entire system, including the St. Lawrence.

Mr. Thomas: Does the department intend to keep in mind the matter of water pollution in the great lakes?

Mr. Laing: I think I reported the other day I had written the resource ministers of the ten provinces suggesting that this be one of the matters given first consideration at the resource ministers conference in Prince Edward Island next June.

Mr. Nielsen: Is the minister or the government in communication with the government of the United States with respect to its proposal to construct the Rampart dam project on the lower reaches of the Yukon river?

Mr. Laing: We are aware of the work of their engineers and the extent to which the proposal has gone.

Item agreed to.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

5e. Operations, $79,800.

Mr. Nielsen: The Postmaster General not being here, is the parliamentary secretary here?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that, as was the custom when the hon. gentleman sat on this side of the house, the president of the council will have the answers to most of these questions. The Postmaster General was here most of the day but he has had to leave for an engagement.

Mr. Nielsen: Since the president of the council would have the answers to these questions I wonder if he will inform me what decision the department intends to take with regard to the removal of the post office from the village of Carmacks to a point further along the highway.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not want it to appear that I am not fully appreciative of the problem, but I am afraid any answers I have are related to the supplementary estimates which are before us. There is no such detail here.

Mr. Nielsen: I will save the question for the Postmaster General.

Mr. McBain: I wonder if the minister is able to give us any additional information regarding the unprecedented robberies from mail vans in the Montreal and Three Rivers areas. Can he assure the committee that mail clerks are now being given adequate protection, and are armoured express trucks now being used to carry large sums of money? If that is the case, is this being done only in Quebec or is the practice being followed in other parts of Canada as well?

Mr. McIlraith: I am afraid I shall have to take that question as notice.

Item agreed to.

PRIVY COUNCIL

39e. Expenses of commission under part I of the Inquiries Act to inquire and report upon certain prairie farm assistance administrative matters, $12,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the present condition of this commission on prairie farm assistance?

Mr. McIlraith: I understand that the commission is still being carried on. Its work is at an active stage at the moment.

Item agreed to.

41e. Expenses of the preparatory committee on collective bargaining in the public service, $42,400.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if the minister could give us an account of the progress which has been made in providing bargaining rights for civil servants?

Mr. McIlraith: The department is working quite actively at the moment on this subject. The hon. member will have noticed that the civil service associations on their side have taken certain steps within their own responsibility to modify their organization so as to be in a position, when the legislation is approved, to carry out their part of the bargaining procedures. I realize I am doing a certain amount of forecasting, and perhaps this is a dangerous thing to do, but I would anticipate that the legislation would be ready for parliament to deal with this fall. The question is receiving very active treatment. Perhaps I should not bring this up, but may I say it would have had more active treatment in the last week or so if I had not been required to sit here for longer hours than I had anticipated doing.

Mr. Howard: Would the minister care to forecast just when the summer recess will start and how long it will last, inasmuch as he has got us back here in the fall?

Mr. McIlraith: I can assure the hon. member that I have ideas on that subject and I suspect that they will be rather agreeable to a lot of hon. members on both sides. But I am afraid that is not a subject for me to deal with here at this moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It would be very helpful to have the benefit of the views of the hon. gentleman in this connection and in my opinion the house will look forward with anticipation to hearing those views which are going to bring happiness and joy to our hearts.

Mr. McIlraith: I think the hon. member for Ottawa West is too cautious to satisfy that curiosity before a collective decision has been made by his colleagues and himself.

Item agreed to.

43e. Expenses of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, $275,850.

Mr. Howard: Before we proceed to pass this vote, inasmuch as it involves the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism I should like to make a few brief comments about that commission and about its origins, and perhaps express some regrets as to the course followed so far in this particular field.

I think all of us as we look back will recall that this royal commission had its founding days when the present Prime Minister sat on this side of the house as leader of the opposition and when he was, I would say, desperately groping for some appealing things to say, rather than looking in depth at the question of the culture and linguistic structure of Canada. I think what happened really was that he stumbled on to the thought of a royal commission on bilingualism without any great thought about it, found it was appealing and so was sort of stuck with it.

In the initial instance, I think without his thinking too clearly about it the present Prime Minister when he was over here as leader of the opposition looked on this as being something which would be appealing to one particular province of Canada rather than as something which might be of benefit and help to all of Canada, and the impression which was received by many people in Canada was that it was a commission slanted in one direction, orientated to one theme or designed to appeal to one group of people in Canada.

It is unfortunate that this happened. I think that if the Prime Minister and his government had done some public relations work and prepared the people in the western part of Canada, as I know them, and in the east, and in the east in the maritimes, as it has been related to me—if they had prepared people in those areas for the acceptance of the idea of such a commission, it would have been more readily accepted and appreciated as something which might be beneficial to the whole recognition of the culture of Canada.

I might recall the immediate reaction of the premier of Alberta to this royal commission, a reaction which gives some indication of the attitude the people in the west had about it. In one sense, and I do not want to say this by way of derogation, the very terms of that royal commission are an insult to one group of people in Canada—the one we have been discussing for some days now. I refer particularly to the original inhabitants of this nation, those whom we now classify as Indian and Eskimo people. If we are going to have a commission to inquire into the cultural aspects of the people of Canada, surely our Indian people should have been placed in the forefront of any consideration, rather than being relegated, as they are in the commission's terms of reference, to one of the other ethnic groups.

The terms of reference have been referred to many times and they are pretty well confined within the first paragraph of the order in council setting up the commission, which gives them the authority "to inquire into and report"—I am reading now from the terms of reference—"upon the existing state of bilingualism and biculturalism in Canada and to recommend what steps should be taken to develop the Canadian confederation on the basis of an equal partnership between the two founding races, taking into account the contribution made by the other ethnic groups to the cultural enrichment of Canada and the measures that should be taken to safeguard that contribution." It is the reference to "other ethnic groups", among them being the original inhabitants of Canada that I say is a somewhat insulting approach.

In addition to that, the commission is charged with the responsibility of recommending what steps should be taken to develop the Canadian confederation on the basis of an equal partnership between the two founding races. Again, this is completely disregarding the fact that our native Indian and Eskimo population, as we call them now, were the very peoples who founded or participated in the founding of Canada. There must be prime concern given to the culture and history of these people if we are to have any real understanding of what comprises Canada. It is true, I think, that we can inquire into the state of bilingualism, as the commission is charged to do, but I doubt very much whether we can inquire into the state of biculturalism, because such a thing does not exist and, I submit, cannot exist. We cannot have a "bi" or "tri" or "quadri" or any other kind of multiple culture. You have a culture, and it is not divisible. That is what people participate in. For the sake of argument, I can never become a part of the culture of the people of French parentage who were born and raised in the province of Quebec. I cannot do that because I was not born in that environment and of that parentage. Conversely, neither can anyone else have the culture, in the full sense of the word, of any other citizen or any other person unless he was born into that environment and followed a particular national lineage in his inheritance. To my mind it is rather an anomaly to ask a group of people to inquire into the state of biculturalism.

Marcel Chaput's book entitled "Why I am a separatist" makes reference to this perhaps, in a way, when he refers to bilingualism, although in reading the preliminary part of it he is in fact using the language as a part of culture. He says this:

> There isn't a single bilingual people in the world, not even the Belgians or the Swiss. Bilingualism is a meaningless word, a sin against nature. At most, there are nations made up of several unilingual groups joined under a common government, such as Belgium and Switzerland.
> The reason is simple—a man can only have one pattern of thought.

Here he refers to the question of a culture:

> He is like a tree whose branches all spring from the one trunk. His knowledge of a second language must take the form of an offshoot from his native language. But in our case, bilingualism is nothing more than a pernicious union of two branches, with no trunk at all, which can only result in a stunted and deformed knowledge of our native language.

He is referring particularly there, of course, to the French language; but I submit that in a sense taking those words in the broad sense and referring them to culture in the true sense of the word, it is ridiculous to appoint a royal commission to inquire into the state of biculturalism when no such state or condition can possibly exist. There is only a culture, as I said earlier, and one cannot have the culture of another; he can only come to the point of respecting and admiring the culture of another and hoping that mutual respect and admiration is generated thereby. Perhaps in the light especially of the recently concluded—or perhaps it was adjourned—federal-provincial conference in Quebec we should go a bit further afield and wonder just what is to be the relationship in this country between those who acclaim one inheritance and those who acclaim another. I think it becomes obvious more and more as each day goes by, more and more as each federal-provincial conference is held, more and more as each question arises over which there might be dual jurisdiction, that the demands—not the demands of Quebec, but the position of Quebec—of Premier Lesage are for some peculiar political reason almost insatiable. The Canadian government will find itself giving in, time and time and time again to these incessant demands of the premier of that province and of others in his cabinet. Some of us have studied or have read about the effect that narcotic drugs have upon an individual. Progressively, if he cannot get enough his demand increases. He starts off with a little bit and continually day after day, demands more and more and more and greater dosages of the narcotic drug in order to maintain a particular state. This is the condition that exists in the government of Quebec; it is something similar to that of a drug addict.

Normally and in the initial instance there were many people who came from the extremes of east and west Canada who, not having grown up in the environment of and with the history or the knowledge in any intimate way of the history of Quebec and what took place there, had an attitude of great sympathy toward people in Quebec who claimed they had been wronged. There was a desire to understand and work with those who claimed that wrongs had been committed against them, and to right and correct those wrongs. I know this was the situation at home amongst people whom I know, people who were born and raised on the west coast who really did not have any great involvement with people living in central Canada 3,000 miles away, except by way of reading in the newspapers, watching the television newscasts or listening to radio broadcasts, or something like that, and who initially were desirous of wanting to find a solution to what was claimed to be a wrongdoing in the first instance.

Unfortunately this feeling is developing into a resentment; it is developing into a resentment because, as I said, the demands are becoming more and more insatiable all the time.

I think it is time to think not in terms of retaliating, which is what some people are talking about, but to think in terms of accepting the fact that we might as well proceed on the assumption that we are going to have a Canada consisting of nine provinces, and that Quebec will be a separate entity within the geographic area and will fit into the picture in as loose a way as Quebec wants. This is something which the government has not accepted. It is something which the Prime Minister, master diplomat that he is, cannot accept, probably because of his background activity in the field of diplomacy and external affairs, which consists of attempting to listen to different sides of the question and to smooth things over as much as possible. But this is not possible with the province of Quebec, and the sooner we accept that fact and that we can develop and work together to build a Canadian confederation as I have just indicated, the better off we will be, and the better off they will be in Quebec.

If we do not follow that course the government of Canada, no matter who happens to form it, will find itself saying to Quebec: "Yes, we will give you 35 per cent of the tax revenue". The next day it will say: "Yes, we will give you everything by way of succession duty taxes". Then the next day it will say: "Yes, you can opt out of the hospital insurance program and we will pay you more". As a result we will find out that what will happen will be that Canada will give and give and give until there is nothing left to give. The result will be that the Canadian nation will collapse and no sort of reasonably amicable relationship will exist in the country. But I submit that if we take the other course of accepting the fact that Quebec's demands are insatiable and cannot be met from the pockets of the rest of the people of Canada, the sooner we will be able to go on and build something worth while.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, just one or two remarks on this item. First of all, we have spent $275,850 on the royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism, and I presume this amount has been spent on the commission up to the end of March of 1964. I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council whether that is the case, and I should like some detail as to what the money has been spent on.

My second point is this. During the course of questions on the orders of the day and in various other debates the Prime Minister and other front benchers on the government side have repeatedly admonished some members of the opposition to speak of those things which unite Canada rather than those which divide Canada. I agree that this is where the emphasis should be. I do not have before me actual quotations from the Prime Minister, but I am sure all hon. members recall occasions when he has suggested to members of the opposition that some of the statements they have made did not do anything to unite Canada, and that they would have been better left unsaid. If this amount of $275,850 is to permit the chairman and co-chairman of this commission to go about the country saying some of the things they have been saying, then I think this item should be reduced to $1.

[Mr. Howard.]

I say that, Mr. Chairman, because in today's Globe and Mail and on the front page of today's Montreal Gazette we find expressions by the chairman and co-chairman of the commission to the effect that a parochial or provincial view is going to divide Canada and perhaps lead to her collapse. The headline to the fourth section of the Toronto Globe and Mail is this:

> Provincialism could bring Canada's collapse with no one feeling at fault: Laurendeau.

Then in a report of their meeting in Toronto yesterday it is said:

> Both reported that the functions of their commission had been widely misunderstood.

If that is true, I think these gentlemen should spend some time getting the people of Canada in all parts of the country to understand what is their function and what are their ultimate objectives, and how they intend to reach their aim.

I should like to make one other reference to this article, a statement attributed to Mr. Laurendeau. He is reported as saying:

> French speaking citizens feared the commission would foist English upon them; English speaking Canadians, Mr. Laurendeau said, took the stand that "if those damn French would speak English like everybody else, the problem would be solved".

I suggest that it is precisely this sort of misinterpretation of the attitude of people in many parts of the country which is widening the division between the cultural groups of the nation. If this parliament is allowing public funds to be used so that these gentlemen can go about the country making this sort of statement, it is time the government took another look at the personalities of the chairman and co-chairman of this bilingualism and biculturalism commission and informed them that it is not their purpose to make this kind of statement, or alternatively to replace these gentlemen. I agree with the Prime Minister and with many other moderate and reasonable members of the house that we could far better spend our time emphasizing the matters which unite all of us, of whatever language or cultural group, and I suggest that perhaps we should start by saying to the people who have been appointed by this government to improve relationships that they are under the same obligation to seek those things which unite us, rather than to make ridiculous and inflammatory statements such as I have referred to in this article.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I have very little to say on this matter, except that we should have rather full detail from the President of the Privy Council on this very large item of $275,000 which represents, as the hon. member for Skeena said, the expenditure up to the end of the last fiscal year. This is a large amount in respect to which we are entitled to reasonable detail. I am one of those who took the stand that a royal commission on this subject would not be beneficial to national unity. I took that stand officially in February 1963. My feeling was that it was not a royal commission which was necessary, and instead I endeavoured to bring about the convening of a national meeting of federal and provincial representatives, a meeting not of two or three days duration but a period of weeks and months, and behind closed doors. At such a meeting, men and women could discuss frankly and freely what they believe could be done by the federal and provincial governments, and we would arrive at a general agreement as to what might be done in order to assure unity within our country.

On that occasion I mentioned the question of national symbols. I mentioned the repatriation of our constitution, something we endeavoured throughout the years to achieve while I was prime minister, but without success. We are the only country within the commonwealth of nations which cannot amend its own constitution. It is ridiculous that we should be placed in a subservient position and that every time we want to amend our constitution we must go to Westminster. Certainly the British parliament does not want this vestige of the past retained. We have not attained that maturity of mind that would permit even the return to our own country of the right to amend our constitution in the parliament of Canada.

We tried for months. We met together. We found that there were objections by certain provinces and the result is that, while a royal commission studies this subject we, as a nation, still have not the right to amend our own constitution because of our failure to agree on a matter as simple as that. My view was that a royal commission could achieve nothing but the opportunity for those who are irrational and intolerant, who have a regard for this nation that is not generally held, to place their views before this commission. There are those who have some regard for the constitution of our country. Today we have a hodgepodge developing by reason of this commission being set up which is bringing about in our country a feeling that the hopes of the fathers of confederation cannot be achieved.

We need a little more faith. We need people to speak for Canada, to speak for this nation, rather than to speak for their own purposes. I am one of those who believe we can achieve unity. I think that message must be given to the Canadian people. I find in every part of Canada today a fear about the future of the country and its destiny. This fear has been engendered as a result of statements that are made that ought not to be made by those who have regard for the tremendous heritage that is ours, and the great destiny that will be ours if we but realize that there are two sides to every question, but that in a community of counsel we will bring about unity within the nation.

I do not want to be critical but I do agree with the hon. member for Medicine Hat. I cannot understand the concept of a royal commission which, while it takes evidence and hears representations, has periodic interpretations made by the chairmen of that commission. I do not understand this. They are supposed to be listening to the views of Canadians. They go across the country. They make speeches everywhere and they interpret their powers and their authority. I think that in doing that they are doing the greatest disservice to Canada and to the cause of unity and, above all, to the achievement of that relationship within our nation without which we cannot attain the greatness which our resources make possible. I think that a word might be spoken to these men.

This has become a commission of peripatetic after-dinner speakers who, wherever they go, interpret what they have heard in the intervening days since the last speech or the last press conference. This is not the purpose for which the commission was set up. This is not the purpose for which the Canadian people have already paid $275,000. This is not a circus parade where, in order to gratify whatever the purpose may be, the performers make speeches wherever they go. Their purpose is to endeavour, out of a diversity of viewpoint, to achieve a common degree of acceptance of principles which will enable the governments to act. After all, when the commission is through, then the work begins.

It is said the commission will continue until 1968, I believe. If we have to endure all the speeches in the next few years that we have in the last few weeks, then indeed that commission is for an unusual purpose and the commissioners are discharging their responsibilities in an unusual manner. The commission was established to try to get a consensus of viewpoint. It was not set up to interpret to the Canadian people, weekly, bi-weekly or monthly, the views of the commission. The commission started off by these commissioners announcing their views before the commission actually sat. It is not their views for which we are asking. They seem to think they speak as a body, ex cathedra to the Canadian people.

If I understand what the government had in mind when setting up the commission, the commission was supposed to listen to representations and finally recommend, not to make interim and interlocutory statements whenever the spirit moves them. I am not saying my idea was right, and it represented not a consensus, but my idea. It was that we would bring the provinces and federal representatives together in a national meeting. After all, the responsibility will finally rest on these two levels of government. The Prime Minister thought otherwise. The Liberal party went through the campaign undertaking to set up this commission. I want this commission, now that it is set up, to do an effective and efficient job for Canada. I do not believe it can if it continues to have chairmen as loquacious as they have been in recent days and in recent weeks.

I read the joint speeches that were made at the Empire club in the city of Toronto. I am not going to discuss the details of them, but under the circumstances I found those speeches quite beyond understanding. I say no more at this time but I do hope that the chairmen, Mr. Dunton and Mr. Laurendeau, will come to a realization that Canadians are not interested in their periodic declarations and views but rather are interested in having this commission work effectively. I did not think it would work and I said so. It was not a popular view when I took that stand. Now that the commission has been set up I want it to succeed, but I doubt that it can unless the members of the commission begin to realize that they are not and were not appointed to be the teachers of Canadians in these difficult and trying times.

[Translation]

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Chairman, I regret not to have had a week at my disposal to prepare a reply to the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), but I could not anticipate that a member of this house who, I presume, enjoys a certain degree of education, I am not saying instruction, would make remarks such as those we heard a few moments ago. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that in replying to the hon. member for Skeena, I will not preach in the wilderness—at least, there is sand in the desert—but I will talk to the wind.

The hon. member for Skeena tried to prove to the house that the objective of the commission on bilingualism and biculturalism to impose a double culture to every Canadian is unattainable.

I should like to say first of all that the interpretation given by the hon. member for Skeena is all wrong. The purpose of the commission is not to force two cultures upon every Canadian but to encourage the development of two cultures in our country. Moreover, I should like to point out to the hon. member that if it is impossible for every Canadian to have two cultures, it is still possible for each and every citizen to participate in a culture of his own, a fact that the hon. member has failed to show.

Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Skeena does not know what culture is, I should now like to tell him that it is the product of a common education, of a common belief and of a common tradition. In other words, culture is a product, and the hon. member has just shown that he has no culture at all.

According to him, bilingualism goes against nature. Can you imagine that. Does that mean that a person who speaks two languages is not normal? You might just as well say that anything which is not a basic necessity goes against nature. I am still wondering whether there is any point in replying to arguments of that sort.

Of course, the hon. member could not help refer to the federal-provincial conference. He states without guile that Quebec keeps on asking for more. He wonders what could satisfy the province's appetite. I should like to tell him that Quebec has never asked anything but what is rightfully its own. I want to say to the hon. member for Skeena that when Quebec is claiming 25 per cent of taxes it is because it has contributed 100 per cent. In that case, it does not claim 25 per cent from other provinces. I would also point out to him that when Quebec is claiming 75 per cent, it is not claiming 75 per cent from succession duties from the province of Ontario or from British Columbia, it is claiming 75 per cent of what it has actually paid.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not endeavour to prove it to him, because it is not worthwhile. The hon. member for Skeena said, mind you, that this inquiry on biculturalism was frustrating the Eskimos because, he added, they had been forgotten.

Here is my answer to the member for Skeena. Were they forgotten in 1534, in 1660, in 1760, at the time of the conquest, in 1840 and in 1867, at the time of confederation? And he now tells us that they were forgotten when the royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism was set up.

With such remarks coming from the hon. member for Skeena—and to those remarks he adds words from Dr. Chaput—I am not surprised that people are asking where is confederation going.

I would ask the hon. member for Skeena if he came to Canada in one of the large groups of immigrants, apart from the English group? I would remind him that if there is talk of biculturalism today in Canada, it is because the French and the English nations have built something in Canada. Immigrants coming to Canada today do not bring Canada anything; they come to get what Canada can give them. And I will prove this to you by saying that I am proud of speaking English and French. If I decided today to emigrate to Germany I would not clamour for French—

The Chairman: I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member, but it seems to me that he is straying a little from the item under consideration. I would ask him to confine his remarks to that item, which is the expenses of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism.

Mr. Plourde: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. A few moments ago, the hon. member for Skeena was speaking in general terms, and all the hon. member for Labelle wants to do now is to comment on what the member for Skeena said.

The Chairman: There is no question of privilege in the point raised by the hon. member for Quebec West.

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Chairman, I always treat instructions from the Chair with the utmost respect and I shall do so again today. However, you will admit that, since the hon. member for Skeena has been allowed to deal with such a general matter, it is quite in order for another member to rise and reply to him.

By his statements, the hon. member for Skeena greatly helped the cause of separatism. I am not a separatist, and neither are most members of this house. On the contrary, they want to assure the success of confederation. On the other hand, if one day there were in this house only members of the ilk of the hon. member for Skeena, separatism would become an accomplished fact and there would not be any biculturalism. Indeed, if there were only members of the calibre of the hon. member for Skeena, we would not have any culture at all.

An hon. Member: May I call it six o'clock Mr. Chairman?

[Text]

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Olson: Before the item carries I should like the President of the Privy Council to give us the details with regard to how the $275,000 was spent.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps he could do that starting at seven o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the hon. gentleman not do it now?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Six o'clock.

The Chairman: Before the committee rises I should remind hon. members that we will meet again at seven o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

The Chairman: At six o'clock the committee was discussing item 43e, Privy Council.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, at six o'clock I had been requested to give the detail of this vote. I have it here in precise form, and if the committee is agreeable I would like to have it printed in Hansard.

The Chairman: Is the committee agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I understand the minister has offered to give us details on item 43e and it is precisely what interests me, because I consider that $275,850 is quite a fabulous amount for an investigation which is just getting under way. I wonder what the total expenditures will be once it is completed.

I think that the chief investigators are over paid. Those people already draw a salary, sometimes two and even three. They are paid $100 a day and, after all, it is only a nationalistic movement. It seems to me it would have been wiser to think it over at the start, and I am asking the minister to check the expenditures because I think there is not enough control over them. It may be that another commission will have to be set up to investigate the expenditures of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism because at this rate, the investigation will turn out to be a gold mine for some people who were appointed—I am not saying for political reasons because I have confidence in their skill—by the party in office to hold that investigation.

Now, it remains to be seen whether that investigation will give positive or negative results. Only the future will tell. I think the commissioners should have carried out an investigation instead of daily airing their own views on the report they should present to parliament. On this point, I think that I agree with the views stated by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) to the effect that if the commissioners were concerned only with their work, without making comments every day in newspapers or on the air, if they knuckled down to work without assessing their own accomplishments, I think that there would be less misunderstanding. By following such a course, the commissioners would reach the goal set for them by this government and I cannot conceive that one of the joint chairmen should pass judgment at any given moment in this way, more particularly as we know his socialistic ideas.

I think that this is a most dangerous attitude and I ask the minister to put a stop to this and ask that gentleman to do his job without foretelling the business of parliament, because, when the results are known of the inquiry we shall discuss them, and it will be up to parliament to reach a decision.

I realize that frictions which arise are always due to entirely needless balderdash on the part of one of the joint chairmen of the inquiry commission on biculturalism. The aims of that investigation are laudable in themselves, as everybody will admit. It is an ideal opportunity of getting some understanding and benefit from confederation by finding out where we stand after 97 years. At the same time, the inquiry enables us to know which province has most, or least, observed the spirit of confederation.

The objectives of the inquiry are praiseworthy if they are meant to help improving confederation. Today, there is some talk of destroying it and building up another. Let us first begin by considering the possibilities of improving what is already built up. I think that this is the aim of the legislators who initiated the inquiry.

Now, what did the inquiry produce to date? It did enable us to find out the good and the bad sides of the matter. We had a sample of it this afternoon when listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

It enabled a few to make their views known. At the same time it also enabled the Canadian people and the house to realize that Quebec is not the only province where there are separatists; they are much more numerous in western Canada.

Even though it would have but one result, that of eliciting statements from people who generally act without speaking, I think that it would be something worth while and that the inquiry into bilingualism and biculturalism would be fruitful. In fact, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing worse than a fellow who never says a word and who always works in the dark.

The statements that were made this afternoon prompted members from certain parties to come out of their cage and I ask those members to come and repeat in the province of Quebec the speeches they delivered in this house this afternoon. They will then be able to observe the reaction of the people from Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be prejudiced. I am not one of those who claims that there are no French Canadians outside Quebec. Indeed not. French Canadians can be found throughout Canada. We should not forget when speaking about French Canadians, that we are referring to the entire country. As stated by the hon. member for Skeena this afternoon, people in the west say: "But we did not know the province of Quebec before." If they do not venture outside their own bailiwick and are like rats in a cage, we are not to blame. The citizens of Quebec are better informed about the various races that make up Canada.

The statements made this afternoon will result in a tightening of the bonds between serious-minded members who still wish to save confederation; they have awakened and realized that some provinces are still more dangerous than Quebec within confederation. This is not due to ill will but it is due to the fact that these Canadian citizens do not know Canada well enough.

Those who came to Canada since confederation, as well as those who are still coming, will make a point of knowing Canada. Indeed, if the royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism has been instituted, it is because Canada did exist before those people came to live here.

It must be well understood, Mr. Chairman, that the two great races who founded Canada, got along very well in 1867. They contributed to the expansion of the country. But since 1867, another group of people entered the country. Immigration was promoted. The other group settled in Canada and it is always the third party which brings trouble into the family because he does not know really the facts of the matter.

That third group must be educated at all costs—and I am serious when I say that—namely the new Canadians who probably never understood the true meaning of confederation. In fact, I noticed this afternoon that several showed a complete lack of knowledge about confederation because they were not born, in short have not lived, within confederation.

That is why we say today that it is essential to amend confederation, not to destroy it, with regard to that group which came here not to take over confederation but to become part of it.

Immigrants who come to Canada undertake to respect one group or the other, to share its way of living.

And when I hear the New Democratic party members talk about multiculturalism, I say to myself right away that they have never understood the true meaning of confederation, never knew why they were coming to Canada.

I feel that we must look at the inquiry into biculturalism in that light, always to bring up to date, amend and improve confederation, so that every one may use a little of his talent, knowledge and intelligence to understand family life, because I am of the opinion that family life among Canadians is like that of a big city.

A city, where every family has independence and self-determination, when it feels itself in security, because it does not feel its independence threatened by the city council, is a city that will live in peace. Such is the situation of Canada's ten families: if each one is assured of its own security, of its autonomy, of its independence, Canada will live in peace.

I repeat it is in that sense that we must consider the future of confederation, so that neither one of the two groups feels wronged in its rights and feels secure in Canada.

I assure you that if we succeed in convincing everybody of that, by intelligent reasoning instead of by stupid arguments, insults or physical coercion, Canada will be the more powerful and productive.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I rise to speak on this item with some reservation and some hesitation, due to the very touchy part that biculturalism plays in the economic well-being of Canada today.

Certainly, we are all concerned about it. Where is it going? What is Canada going to look like by 1967, 1977, and so on, or by 1987, and one could go on and on. Where is it leading us to? What sound purpose is this inquiry going to bring about? I see here in the estimates that it is already costing something like $300,000. The inquiry we are told is going to continue until 1966, and most likely 1967, when we are going to celebrate our centenary. Is it going to be a happy centenary, or a sad one? Is the inquiry, I wonder, going to promote or bring about a happy centenary? When you see the two chairmen travelling throughout the country listening to interested people presenting their own isolated ideas on biculturalism, I doubt it. In other words, is the inquiry seeking out the thoughts and thinking of the average man on this question, or are they going across the country telling the people their views as to what they think a person should be thinking on this question? We read the opinions of the two chairmen in the various papers, one of them in today's Globe and Mail, where they made a co-operative speech, and they have already summarized their findings, to some extent, in this co-operative speech as far as I can gather. I think the inquiry is costing too much and is doing very little, other than trying to bring a tremendous storm in which Canada can mull about until 1967, and then perhaps thresh out after the whole question dies down and the inquiry has brought down its findings.

It is rather odd that I, the member for Acadia, which has a rather traditional name and is often taken for some part of Canada other than Alberta, should speak on this question. These are my views on this subject and I am certain the vast majority of western Canadians feel as I do. We do not want Canada thrown into a vast turmoil on this touchy subject. We do not want to see Canada split asunder. We firmly believe that our forefathers—and I do not speak entirely of western Canada now—came to this country to establish a new country and start a new culture, not to maintain the two or three cultures which existed in the old country or in the fatherland as the case was. Our forefathers came to this country to escape feudalism as it existed in Ireland, England, France and Europe generally. They came to this country with the hope of improving their lot and the lot of their families to follow them. They certainly were not interested particularly in the maintenance of any culture they may have left.

I think back to my own constituency. Half of it is called the Palliser triangle. Palliser studied that country to see whether it was fit for civilization—to see whether the land was fit for cultivation. Who settled the country in the ensuing years? Alberta did not become a province until 1905. Who settled that country in the 50 years from the time when Palliser said it was fit for cultivation, or the vast majority of it? Incidentally, he said the part in which I am now living was not fit for cultivation. But in any case it took, not necessarily the two cultures which are today proclaiming that they were the two founding nations to establish Canada; it did not take those two cultures to settle that part of Canada. This part of the country was settled by many different cultures who do not make any boast about trying to maintain their beliefs, their ideals or their language. In many parts of western Canada there are different languages spoken. These people came to Canada to better themselves and to better the following generations. They came to establish a new world and to establish it to the best of their ability, not to quibble about the maintenance of old cultures.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that too much of the time of this house is spent in dealing with this touchy subject. We have before us an item of $300,000 which has been spent on this inquiry into biculturalism before the findings of the commission have been made available to us. The cost of this inquiry is likely to run into a million dollars. This commission is not really ascertaining the opinions of Canadians: The members of the commission are giving Canadians their opinion as to what Canada should be like in 1967 and 1968. Certainly we are not going to obtain the co-operation of all the people of Canada by this method.

The hon. member from the eastern part of Canada who preceded me in this debate talked about the inquiry as being nothing less than a gold mine for some people. I do not know who he thought was going to obtain the gold, but it certainly will not be the Canadian people. It may be a political party, it may be the chairmen or it may be somebody else altogether, but it will not be the Canadian people. This commission is doing nothing but harm to the people of Canada. We have heard a lot of talk about the British North America Act of 1867. Certainly this act is a long document containing many words. I have read it all, and I see very little reason to change it in any way. This is just my opinion, of course. It deals with the subject of biculturalism, it deals with the French language, French laws and the jurisdiction of provinces and the federal government.

I hear too much talk in Canada about biculturalism, too much talk about two states or two nations. I was talking to a constituent of mine not long ago, and he told me about Switzerland. I believe this is an interesting story and has a bearing upon the problem with which we are confronted tonight. He told me that there are three main languages in Switzerland.

Mr. Pickersgill: Four.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): My hon. friend says that there are four. Of course, a half of one per cent of the population speaks the original language, which goes back to the days of the Romans. I am sorry that I omitted it. In any event, I said, if you have three official languages and government documents are published in three languages, why is it you do not have the problem that is confronting Canada today? He said, "I will tell you why; we are all Swiss first and the language is secondary." I learned something from that conversation, and I think we all have something to learn from it. Let us all be Canadians first. We can be proud of the different part of Canada from which we come, and nobody in this house is more proud of the part from which I come. I let everybody within the sound of my voice know that I come from western Canada. However, I am proud that I am a Canadian first, and I think everyone in Canada should adopt that attitude. We should be Canadians first, and then we can be proud of the part of Canada from which we come. In this way we will maintain one country after 1967 and even after the year 2000. Let us bear that in mind; there should be one nation and one country and we should all be proud to maintain that country.

[Translation]

Mr. Caron: I am a bit surprised every time I hear a westerner speak about the different languages that are being used in Canada.

Everybody admits it—

[Text]

Mr. Aiken: Wait a minute; there is no translation.

Mr. Caron: No translation? I am surprised to hear these people coming from western Canada speak about the many languages we have in this country. I am surprised, because when they talk this way they display a lack of knowledge of the history of Canada. In 1867 there was a contract entered into between two nations, the French Canadians and the English Canadians. It is this contract we want to keep in Canada. It is this contract we want to see kept all over Canada, not only in the province of Quebec. The more we think in this direction, the less we will think in the other direction, and the more progress this country will make.

[Translation]

Because only two languages are really recognized in Canada by our constitution. In 1867, the fathers of confederation did not mention the languages of those who would come and settle in Canada. We are happy to have among us the Ukrainians, the Italians and all the other people who wish to come to Canada. I hope that these people will keep on speaking, studying and learning their languages, that they will continue to give us the advantage of their culture which they brought from the European countries or elsewhere. But I believe that we should not forget that there are only two official languages in this country: French and English. It is useless to talk otherwise. It is only that way that we will be able to solve the problem of the Canadian confederation.

That is what I had to say and I hope that it will be understood and that we are going to pass the estimates.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Public buildings, construction and services—
35e.* Ontario (other than Ottawa), $1.

Mr. Aiken: I should like to speak on this item concerning public buildings in Ontario. A couple of days ago I rose on a question of privilege in connection with an answer I received from the government concerning the acquisition of a building site in the village of Britt, Ontario. At that time I stated that the answer I had received was wrong, and I am quite satisfied that it was. I do not know if this was just an oversight. I know that the consultant to whom I referred is, in fact, a consultant of the government in relation to post offices and public works. I asked if the minister would make inquiries and correct his answer, if it was wrong.

According to the answer which I received, this particular consultant had acquired a site for a public building at Britt and had resold it to the government. I had particular knowledge of this matter because while the Conservative government was in power this particular site was negotiated for by the government, and I must say I was fully aware of this negotiation. There was some difficulty in connection with a road allowance, which took some time to adjust, and at the time the government changed hands no completed arrangement had been made. Therefore it was with a good deal of surprise that I found the government's consultant had in some fashion acquired the particular sites from two private individuals and had resold them to the government.

I have not made, and I am not making tonight, any allegation that there was an unjust profit made; the details of this behind-the-doors transaction are not known to me and I suppose never will be known. But all in all I feel it is not a proper exercise of jurisdiction on the part of a person to whom the government apparently looks for advice and assistance in political matters, when he is himself dabbling in government sites. It is nothing more than that; it is a case of impropriety, and I am sure if any member of the house did this he would be severely taken to task.

If the government is going to continue this system of having their defeated candidates made consultants, to whom they can write for advice on postal and public works matters, and if the government are going to accept that advice and act upon it, then these consultants must have just as high a standard, and should be required by the government to maintain just as high a standard, as an elected member.

I do not approve of this system. It is extremely irritating to me, and it is irritating to other hon. members to have so many things going on behind their backs. I believe the degree to which this is done is recognized. In some cases there appears to be some political advantage to the government party, and they prefer to deal with regard to political matters with these consultants. However, I give notice now that I am going to keep raising this point until I get an answer. I want to know whether this person is a government consultant on public works and post office matters, and whether the government is satisfied to have this type of thing go on. I think it is wrong and it should be rectified. I have nothing personal against this particular individual, but if he is going to be used as a consultant, then he has to have a much higher standard than has hitherto been displayed.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member raised this matter in the house the other day—I think it was as a question of privilege, was it not?

Mr. Aiken: Yes.

Mr. McIlraith: While the matter itself is not directly involved under this vote, I recognize the importance which the hon. member properly attaches to it. I do happen to know that the Minister of Public Works is trying to get all the information on it assembled, with a view to making a statement in the house as soon as he has the necessary information to do so. I know that from my personal knowledge of the matter. Perhaps in light of that there is little point in my trying to say much about it now, because I simply do not have sufficient information on it to do so properly.

Mr. Aiken: Personally, Mr. Chairman, I do not feel I was out of order—

Mr. McIlraith: No, I am not raising any point on that.

Mr. Aiken: —in raising this matter under this item, because certain jobs are listed here, and then there is an amount to cover anticipated lapses, which might include an item covered by the original estimate. However, I accept the statement of the minister that an investigation is being made, and that is all I ask.

Harbours and rivers engineering services—
115e. Ontario, $1.

Mr. Aiken: Here again, Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few comments, and I am glad to see the Minister of Transport here. This afternoon a question was raised under the water resources vote concerning water levels, and the minister of northern affairs assured us that he would make a statement in this connection. There is a problem here. The minister explained to us that his statement would merely be directed toward why the water level was low, but I am sure that this in itself will not be satisfactory. There are many harbours, particularly in the Georgian bay area and on of the shores of lake Huron, which will have navigation problems this spring and early summer. I know my hon. friend from Simcoe North is particularly concerned about Collingwood, and I am concerned about Parry Sound. Both are major harbours which may have navigation problems for lake boats. I should like to have the Minister of Transport give us an assurance that where exceptional measures are necessary this year, in the case of dredging and dock extension, if this is felt to be the last year of low water, these measures will be taken.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. member knows that any dredging which will be required will be done by the Department of Public Works. However, I am Minister of Transport, and although I cannot make the rain come—doubtless some of us wish we could at times—nevertheless I am concerned with this problem. I will draw the hon. gentleman's observations and those I have received from other hon. gentlemen, such as the hon. member for Grey North, the hon. member for Simcoe North and other hon. members to the attention of the minister. I might add that some defeated candidates have spoken to me about this matter—I suppose it is all right for them to talk about it —and we are anxious to do everything we possibly can to meet what is a real problem. I asked the Minister of Public Works to have a survey made of all these harbours as soon as he possibly can, and to do anything practicable to meet the problem.

Development engineering services—
169e. Payments in respect of winter maintenance of the Haines cut-off road, northwest highway system, $120,000.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I have one or two brief questions to put to the minister on this item. Under the contract which exists between the federal government and the government of the state of Alaska, this amount of $120,000 is to be paid by the Canadian government to the government of the state of Alaska for the purpose of maintaining the Haines cut-off road. Under the contract the government of the state of Alaska is required to submit monthly accounts to the Canadian government. The contract commenced operation last November. I should now like the minister to inform the committee of the total amount of bills received from the government of the state of Alaska by the government of Canada.

Would the minister also advise the house whether the government of the state of Alaska has advised this government of the actual cost, quite apart from the bills which have been rendered, of the maintenance of the road to date? Finally, is the minister now in a position to assure the committee that the road will be kept open next winter on the same basis?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, the reason for this payment to the United States authorities is that at the time the matter was raised it was so late in the season that the assembling and transportation by Canadians of the kind of machinery required to do the job was not possible, if the job was to be done this winter. The United States authorities had the equipment in position, or relatively close to it. That was the underlying reason for it. I made inquiry two days ago to see if I could get a report on the results because I think, as the hon. member well knows, this was an experimental venture to see how feasible it was to keep that road open in the winter, because of many local weather factors with which he is perhaps more familiar than I am but which I have had occasion to study in other capacities over the last number of years. These are very severe factors. In any event, I was advised that the reports that would give a reasonable indication as to the success or lack of success of the venture were not available. That was earlier this week, in anticipation of this item coming up for discussion.

As to the detailed bills for each month, I do not have them here. The last question the hon. member asked was whether I would give the assurance that we would continue this venture next year. I am quite unable to give that assurance, for the reason that before a decision can be taken to continue the venture next year, we will want to look at the success or failure of the venture this year, analyse how successful it was, what the likely costs will be over the future years in relation to the benefit provided by the road —that is to say, the added facilities that the road has provided—and how many days, notwithstanding the work being done and the machinery available, the road was closed in any event, and what traffic was going through on the road on the days that it was open.

The whole matter will have to be analysed before the government will make a firm commitment for next year. That was another, added reason why I was seeking to find out how much information we had for this year as to the results, because a thorough analysis will have to be made of this project to see whether it is economically wise to spend this amount of money, or whatever amount will be required in future years to do this job.

Therefore as to the last question, I regret that my answer to the hon. member will have to be a categorical no, in the form in which he put his question.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to remind the minister, if that reminder was necessary, that one of the promises that was made to the people of the Yukon during the last election campaign by those who supported his party was that the Haines cut-off would be maintained during the winter season. What I rather suspect is that this device of keeping the road open this winter on an experimental basis is another exercise in political appeasement simply to establish that the cost of keeping it open is going to be prohibitive and thereby giving the government its out in telling the people of the Yukon next year, "Well, we tried it one year and the cost simply prohibits its being maintained in any subsequent years". Perhaps while the minister is answering that non-provocative question he might also explain to the committee how it is that a contract which was executed prior to April 1, the date upon which the Department of Public Works took over jurisdiction of the northwest highway system, involving the expenditure of $120,000, now finds its way into the public works estimates. Should not this sum be under the authorization of the Department of National Defence, which had responsibility for the maintenance of the highway at the time the financial commitment by contract was made between the government of Canada and the state of Alaska?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, as to the inference in the early part of the hon. member's remarks, I can only tell him that I had a great deal to do with this particular matter and am rather familiar with the reasons why the contract was entered into, and all about it. This is the first time I ever heard of any political promise having been made on this subject, or indeed of its having been discussed. I can assure him that if there was any such promise made or anything said on the subject, I certainly did not know about it and it was not known about when this decision was taken; so it has nothing to do with the subject matter.

The question as to whether or not this road should be kept open, is an important one. It is a matter, when we are dealing with these public expenditures, of trying to act responsibly and in a way that will assure that the interests of the taxpayers are protected and their money is used reasonably for the benefit of any section or particular parts of the country. As the hon. member knows, there are very special and difficult problems of transport in the Yukon, and this is a manifestation of one of them.

All I can say to the hon. member is that I assure him this was done to get some experience in this whole field as to whether or not it was feasible to keep this road open in winter. I think it was a very wise and correct decision. It is intended to examine the whole subject before we make a further commitment for another year. All the elements that enter into such considerations will have to be examined before that decision is taken.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, the minister has, of course, not answered the last question that I put to him, and I will repeat it in just a moment. Perhaps while we are on the relevant item I might mention very briefly a matter which has been brought to the attention of the government by other members of this house, notably the hon. member for Skeena, with respect to the establishment of some sort of arrangement with the United States which would get around the impediment of the Alaskan Panhandle, because as the minister knows by reason of his other experiences apart from his governmental obligations and responsibility, there is a problem in reaching tidewater from the Yukon territory. The only route we have now is by the White Pass and Yukon Railway. Many of us in the Yukon believe that we need a road route through to tidewater. This is the only road route available to us at the moment, and of course its all-weather maintenance is of paramount importance to the economic development of that part of the country. I suggested several years ago that perhaps we might get around it by negotiating with the government of the United States with respect to the establishment of free ports. Perhaps one such location which would be ideal would be Skagway, and another would be Haines Junction. The suggestion has also been made that perhaps we should have corridors not only from the Yukon to tidewater but as well through those portions of the Panhandle which border on the province of British Columbia. Perhaps it is time that negotiation between the two governments in an exploratory way was commenced in order to establish whether or not these suggestions are feasible.

The question I did put to the minister, and which he did not answer, was: How is it that this $120,000 finds its way under the heading of public works when the financial commitment by contract was made when the Department of National Defence was responsible for the maintenance of this particular road?

Mr. McIlraith: I will look into that point, Mr. Chairman, but I should think it is quite clear that keeping it open in the winter was not viewed as part of the defence of the country at all.

It is viewed rather as a maintenance operation for the service of the civilian population in their ordinary activities, and it has no military connotation. I do not know what particular difference it makes which department it is under, but for the life of me I do not see at the moment why it should be under the national defence estimates. I will look into the point and see if there is anything in it, but nothing I have seen so far has indicated to me that it should be under national defence estimates rather than public works estimates.

Mr. Nielsen: I want to make it quite clear that I am wholly in favour of the vote passing and of keeping the road open because it is vital to the economy of the territory that it be maintained on an all-weather basis. It simply surprised me to see the estimate under the Department of Public Works since the financial commitment was made while the Department of National Defence was still responsible for the maintenance of the road in question. Therefore it seemed to me that some explanation should be forthcoming with regard to why the item is under this department, particularly since these estimates were published prior to April 1 when the Department of Public Works assumed responsibility.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps I could answer that point a little more fully right now.

Mr. Nielsen: I will sit down in a moment. I certainly do not wish to create any suggestion whatsoever that I have any objection to the funds being spent. On the contrary, I think they are well spent and in my view the government should continue to maintain the Haines cut-off road on an all-weather basis, even if it means maintaining it by payments to the American government, by wholly American labour at a time of great unemployment in our own country and by the use of American equipment alone.

I think other means could perhaps have been found. We could have employed Canadian workmen on the road. We could have rented Canadian equipment from Canadian contractors in order to maintain the Canadian section of the road for which this money is intended. I know there were particular difficulties that confronted the government at the time and I know that most likely they tried to reconcile matters so they might be able to hire Canadian workmen and equipment for the maintenance of this Canadian road. Nevertheless I am sure that in keeping with the promise they made to the people of the Yukon the government will want to see that the road is maintained next year, and having regard to their desire to reduce unemployment in the country I am equally sure they will want to see it maintained with Canadian workmen next year rather than with American workmen, so that this Canadian money would be going into the economy of that particular part of Canada rather than Canadian funds being paid to a state or federal government of the United States.

Mr. McIlraith: Of course the simple answer to that part of the question is, as the hon. member knows, that the government which he supported did not keep this highway open and if he held these views he could have had the matter considered and the appropriate action taken that he speaks about. In any event, he has referred to the Liberal government in a critical way for doing this, but I would remind him that what has been done was done by a Liberal government and correctly done, as I think members generally will agree.

The hon. member speaks about this item not being under the defence department estimates. I would remind him that the responsibility for looking after the highway had been in the Department of National Defence because of the construction of the northwest highway system. This highway was added after the other system was completed, but the military had the kind of establishment there that was capable of doing this kind of work. It would seem reasonable that it was not desirable to put in a duplicate maintenance establishment, so under the former government the military continued to do this work, and correctly so. I think it was the correct decision that they should do so.

As the hon. member knows, the administrative responsiblity for maintenance has been transferred starting with the current fiscal year from the Department of National Defence to the Department of Public Works. For the life of me I cannot see what was wrong in having the estimate for and approval of the winter work shown under the Department of Public Works, in anticipation of the transfer and having in mind that the removal of snow this winter would take in part of the last fiscal year and part of the present fiscal year. I just do not see anything wrong with that. I think it was a proper and reasonable thing to do.

Mr. Nielsen: I was not being critical of it. In my inexperience, contrasted with the great experience of the minister who is giving the explanations, I simply thought he would enlighten the house as to the reasons for having this sum carried under a department which had no fiscal responsibility at the time the agreement was made. The minister has also rather put words into my mouth, something with which I am frequently charged by members on the treasury benches, when he said that I was critical of the Liberal government for keeping the road open. That is not the case at all. I have said not only once but twice that I think the maintenance of this read on an all-weather basis is vital to the economy of the Yukon and I applaud the government for keeping it open. I think they should keep it open in future winters, as they promised the people of the Yukon they would do in the last election campaign.

I was very close to the former minister of northern affairs in the previous government and I can tell the minister why it was not decided to keep the Haines road open during the five years that the Progressive Conservatives were in office. That government was so busy building development roads and roads to resources across the country that they had to deal with these matters in order of priority. I can tell the minister also that in the Yukon in those five years, in contrast with previous years when almost nothing was done with regard to the development of Canada's northland, some $25 million was pumped into the construction of development roads in that part of the country, and as a result—

Mr. Moreau: Will the hon. member permit a question? In view of this tremendous development program in the Yukon can he tell us how many mines were found during that period?

Mr. Nielsen: I think the last three words I uttered were "as a result". I was just about to enlighten the hon. member whose interest in geology and mining matters is very acute, I know, and I am sure he will be very interested in learning.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether, without being offensive, I could raise a point of order?

Mr. Monteith: He asked a question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely I also have some right to speak in the house as well as other hon. members. I am raising a point of order and I think that is competent even to a member on the treasury benches. Although hon. gentlemen seem to object very strenuously when we speak and even more strenuously when we do not, I still persist, sir, in raising my point of order. There was a lot of talk the other night about general debates on the first item, but there was certainly no talk about general debates on the last item. I wonder whether the two hon. members who are so interested in mines in the Yukon could have a private talk and let the rest of the house go on with the estimates according to the rules?

Mr. Nielsen: I think I might perhaps comply with the request of the Minister of Transport, but it was the minister sitting immediately to his left who raised this matter in the first instance and apparently another of his colleagues is also quite interested. I am sure other members of the committee are likewise interested, with the sole exception perhaps of the Minister of Transport, although it seems to me a unique situation for him to be holding that portfolio and to express disinterest in the subject of additional communication in the country.

However, as a result of those roads oil was discovered for the first time in the Yukon, tungsten was discovered for the first time in the Yukon, a silver mine was opened in the Mayo area and an asbestos mine in the Dawson area. All of these discoveries were brought about by the increased interest of private investment in a country which hitherto had been neglected so far as the construction of roads was concerned. It was the previous government which created the atmosphere for development.

Mr. Pickersgill: Don't forget Arizona Charlie.

Mr. Nielsen: I will come back to Arizona Charlie in a moment or two.

The Chairman: Order, please. It seems to me we were doing rather well a few minutes ago, and I wonder if I could have the co-operation of all hon. members to get back to the resolution, and to limit their remarks to vote 169e.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, if it had not been for the intervention of the Minister of Transport and the hon. member whose riding for the moment escapes me—as I am sure it will him in the next election—I would have been through; but I just want to point out that it was because of the impetus given by the previous government, and its expenditures on roads in the Yukon, that these investments were made by private industry. That is in direct answer to the question which the minister posed, as to why the former administration did not maintain the Haines road.

While the former administration was in office it was so busy giving priority to developing the country to attract investment, which resulted in these mineral discoveries, that this matter, as well as many others, such as paving the Alaska highway, were placed somewhere in the middle of the list of priorities. I notice now that the order of priorities has been reversed, and that the development of roads has almost disappeared. Only one contract was let this year for road development in the Yukon.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

17e. Canadian government participation in the universal and international exhibition, Montreal, 1967—to amend vote 786 of the Appropriation Act No. 4, 1951 by deleting the words "to be called the Associate Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce" and substituting the words "Commissioner General for the Canadian Government Participation, 1967 Exhibition", and to amend vote 692 of the Appropriation Act No. 5, 1958 by deleting the expression "$16,500" and substituting the expression "$23,000" therefor and to provide a further amount of $50,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, this is a particularly interesting item and one which has to do with the Canadian government participation in the exhibition in Montreal. This is a matter upon which the committee and the government should have some information.

We have been endeavouring to obtain, without success, or at least the information has not been brought down, the salaries of the various officials such as the commissioner general and the associate commissioner general. I am sure the minister will be able to furnish the fullest information in this connection.

Speaking as one who did everything he could to bring about a national exposition for confederation, and whose government devoted itself to securing the consent of nations and the support of nations on behalf of this very laudable objective, I would now like to know the degree to which the exposition is proceeding, the appropriations being made, and I also point out the fact that, considering the tremendous contribution being made by the people of Canada, information must be forthcoming.

When we entered into this plan it was made clear to us that Canada's contribution was to be $20 million, the contribution of the province of Quebec, as I recall it, $15 million, and that of the city of Montreal $5 million. No other city in Canada made any application to secure this exposition because various representatives said that the amount in question would not meet the needs of an exposition such as was contemplated and such as would be in keeping with Canada's position as a nation.

This project represents one of the largest ever undertaken in this nation. What the total expenditures are to date no one knows, although it has been estimated that the total expenses are—

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if the Leader of the Opposition would permit me to draw something to his attention before he extends his remarks too far. It is the government's participation as an exhibitor that is involved in this item. This is not the item that has to do with the organization of the world fair, and I want to point out that distinction to him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I very much appreciate any suggestion on the part of the hon. gentleman, but I am pointing out the fact that we have not secured any information in connection with the vast expenditures that the people of Canada are being called upon to make in this connection. We have a right to information, and we have not been able to get it.

Complaint is made sometimes, and has been made in the last couple of days by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport, that we have been obstructing the business of the house. I make it very clear we have been doing nothing of the kind. We have been trying to get information.

As a matter of fact the Prime Minister, according to a report in tonight's press, has left the suggestion or possibly leaked the suggestion, that our conduct is going to bring about an election. We are not at all frightened of that possibility. He is the only one who has any fear in that connection. Indeed, I am informed that—

Mr. Pearson: The last one put you over there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was waiting for the opportunity to hear what the right hon. gentleman had to say, because within the last 24 hours I understand that members of the cabinet have been giving consideration to this matter of holding an election. There has been every suggestion of it. In fact the Minister of Transport made a pilgrimage to Quebec and there made certain suggestions; the threat being that because we dare to ask for information which is denied us, a smokescreen is being raised—

Mr. Brewin: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; is this discussion of an election related to the item before the committee?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, this is another example of the fine co-operation between the N.D.P. and the Liberal party. The only place they are separated is in the province of Saskatchewan.

The Chairman: Order. I am sure the right hon. gentleman will agree with me that the point of order raised by the hon. member for Greenwood is well taken, and I am sure he will want to limit his remarks to the item before the committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I say with the greatest of deference you have always a manner of requesting order that secures the immediate attention and co-operation of all, but these were just passing observations I have been provoked into making. I return once more to the item to which Your Honour has directed my attention. I want to leave this with the minister and the government—that we want full information regarding expenditures being made of the moneys of Canada on this project. There is every indication that for some reason those associated with this project are engaged in making expenditures almost at a gallop. We want to have the fullest information regarding this particular item as indicative—and no doubt it will be indicative—of what appears to be, and to have been in recent months, the seriously wasteful course being followed by those responsible for ensuring the success of this exposition.

We want to make this exposition a success, but we want at the same time to have reasonable opportunities to look into the expenditures so that Canada's moneys will not be wasted. I ask the minister to make a full statement in connection with this item.

Mr. McIlraith: The item which forms the subject matter of the greater part of the right hon. gentleman's remarks does not appear in the supplementary estimates which are before the committee. The item is not before the committee at all and, for that reason. I am not able to give the full information which is sought, even if it were appropriate to do so.

As the right hon. gentleman knows, provision for this exhibition was set out in the agreement prepared by his own government, and the scheme for control over the expenditure was in that agreement. It is still contained in that governing document. I do not understand the suggestion that the right hon. gentleman has not been able to get information on this subject. I do not understand, because I do not see any questions on the order paper seeking information on this matter. If there are, I will certainly draw them to the attention of the minister having to do with this department on his return to the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just by way of interest, here is one, number 599, and it has been on the order paper since March 31:

1. Have cars been rented for the world's fair executive?

2. Was the rental contract let by public tender and, if so (a) what are the names and addresses of the firms which submitted tenders (b) what was the amount of each tender?

3. What is the name and price quotation of the successful bidder?

That is the first one I turn to.

Mr. McIlraith: There has been a question on the order paper for ten days. I will try to make sure that an answer is obtained as quickly as possible and give it to the right hon. gentleman. When the estimate relating to this subject is before the committee, at the time the main estimates are under consideration, the information can be provided in a full and detailed way. I do not think there is much more I can usefully add at the moment.

Item agreed to.

28e. Canadian government travel bureau, $90,000.

Mr. Aiken: I wonder if the minister could tell us whether the advertising set out in this item in connection with the Canadian travel bureau is in a new area of endeavour or whether it is merely an additional expense in an existing area.

Mr. McIlraith: It is an additional expense in an existing area and it is for advertising campaigns in the United States, Britain and Europe to promote travel to Canada.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

1e. Departmental administration, $70,000.

Mr. Nielsen: I endeavoured to obtain some answers from the Minister of Transport to questions which were, at the moment I asked them, of such a technical nature that he informed me he could not reply. But I am sure he has now had an opportunity to look into the matter which I raised, and perhaps now he will be able to reply in a more satisfactory fashion.

The minister will recall that I raised the matter of the construction of 500-foot towers south of Calgary international airport on the approachways to runways at that airport, and I termed them at that time a hazard to air navigation. We had an exchange which left me in some doubt—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could remind the hon. gentleman that the hon. member for Vancouver South put a question on the order paper which, of course, under the rules was the proper way to deal with this matter, and that this question was replied to long ago. The information is on record in Hansard.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, the minister informed me that if I did not put the question on the order paper he would have his hon. friend from Vancouver South direct it to him in the house. I have read the answer and I listened to the minister as he gave it, but it still falls far short of satisfying my concern for the safety of general aviation in the vicinity of Calgary airport.

The Department of Transport, through the press and by personal telegrams, has reiterated that these towers would not constitute in any way a danger to aviation using the international airport at Calgary. This is not true. The observations of the department as to the absence of danger apply only to traffic originating under instrument flight rules, traffic which comprises only one quarter of 1 per cent of the traffic using Calgary airport. The submission I make now concerns the attitude of the department in totally ignoring the danger which these towers will present to V.F.R. traffic which comprises 99¾ per cent of the total traffic going in and out of the airport. It is this traffic to which the towers will constitute a danger.

Any traffic which originates in the Lethbridge or Cowley areas can legally fly toward Calgary with a ceiling of 500 feet and a visibility of one mile. It is patently impossible to see an object such as a radio tower, and take the appropriate action, in the space of one mile if visibility is impaired, say, by showers or falling snow. I do not know whether the minister realizes this or not. He may or may not have flying experience under visual flight rules, but his deputy minister should have this knowledge. The situation becomes all the more dangerous in the Calgary airport where the department's minima for V.F.R. flights are conditions of 500 feet and three miles. The minister should bear in mind that these towers are to be 500 feet above surface level.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

One of the procedures used in coming into Calgary, a procedure which most of the pilots flying single V.F.R. flights use, is going to be explained to the minister, now, in the hope that he will make submissions to his officials and, through them, to the C.B.C., that they should cease their determination to go ahead with the construction of these towers. If he is in the northern quadrant, a pilot reports to the Calgary tower at a place near Third Lake and then he comes in on the outer marker, if he is going to use runway 34, and takes a direct course from Third Lake to the outer marker. This course passes within 2,000 feet of the proposed towers and for the Department of Transport to claim that this situation poses no danger at all to V.F.R. aircraft is patently absurd. It is so dangerous for the Department of Transport to hold these views that I think it is almost impossible to arrive intelligently at the conclusion that the towers would create no danger to general aviation in the vicinity.

Calgary international airport has become an attractive airport of entry, if we may call it that, for visual flight rules traffic proceeding northwest to the Yukon, Alaska, and so on. A good deal of that traffic is increasing each year. Adding 500-foot towers on a recognized V.F.R. flyway into Calgary does in no way at all increase the attractiveness of the Calgary international airport for such traffic. It would in fact mean that in marginal weather pilots who were flying on V.F.R. routes would clear Lethbridge or go on to Edmonton, staying well east of Calgary.

We heard the former minister of transport speak about the operations at Penhold and the safety factors there, and we have heard the Minister of National Defence speak on this subject as well. Surely if they claim that general aviation safety is one of their prime concerns, the Minister of Transport should also take these factors into consideration. The minister, while he was holding the portfolio certainly, if not while he was not holding the portfolio, was made aware of a meeting which was held with his officials in Ottawa in November of 1963. This is commonly referred to as the "Hazards in air space meeting". Perhaps it was the minister in charge of the privy council, but I cannot recall. At that meeting it was understood and agreed by all groups representing general aviation that the grouping of radio and T.V. towers near any large city into one quadrant or area was a desirable philosophy.

This proposed C.B.C. tower in the vicinity of Calgary international airport violates the principle adopted at that meeting. The contention of the C.B.C. that the Shepard location is the only possible location for their transmission towers is absolute balderdash.

If the state of art of radio wave propagation in Canada is at such a level that the C.B.C. engineers are unable to design a transmitting system in that huge area lying south and west of runway 34 of the Calgary airport, which now contains only five towers, we are indeed suffering a drought of engineering talent, and I do not believe this is actually the case. I think the C.B.C. can find an alternate location which will not present a hazard to general aviation in the vicinity of Calgary international airport, and I think the minister should insist that the C.B.C. engineers look for an alternate location.

It might be argued that V.F.R. pilots will have to change their approaches to Calgary because of these towers. My contention is that this violates the principle that the overall system of controls of airways, regulations and the like, exists for the pilot, not that the pilot exists only for the system. Air line pilots have been reported as saying that these towers will present no hazard to aviation in the area; but I point out to the minister that these air line pilots constitute only a quarter of 1 per cent of the traffic that uses the airport. These V.F.R. pilots put forward a plea, which appears to be falling on deaf ears since not only in this regard is general aviation in the country being neglected but in many other areas as well.

I ask the minister, before this item passes, to give me his assurance that he will accede to the pleas of the several aviation organizations which I know have been in communication with him asking that these towers be relocated in the many, many acres of land available in the vicinity of Calgary international airport. The Alberta aviation council has made representations to the minister, as has the Canadian business aircraft association, the western division of the Canadian owners and pilots association, the international flying farmers, the royal Canadian flying clubs association, and others. Surely these associations that are well versed in aviation matters should be listened to and their recommendations should be considered by the minister in the most favourable light.

Rather than going ahead and insisting on the construction of these towers I think perhaps the minister would be well advised to sit down again with the engineers, or have his officials sit down with the engineers of the C.B.C. to see whether an alternate location cannot be found.

Mr. Chairman, I have just one more point to make to the minister before concluding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: I am glad to hear that some hon. members on the other side of the chamber are also interested in the safety of general aviation in the country. The other point I have to make concerns the slow dismantling which seems to be occurring with regard to radio aids to navigation in this country. I will pinpoint a few of them for the minister and I hope he will take into consideration the serious problem that it represents to the small aircraft operator in Canada—not the huge air lines flying D.C.8's and aircraft with all sorts of radar equipment—

An hon. Member: And the D.C.9.

Mr. Nielsen: —including the D.C.9's, but rather the small, charter operator who cannot afford expensive radar and radio equipment. The department is slowly dismantling the directional radio facilities in this country. I mentioned Kenora, Pagwa and Armstrong, which has not yet been dismantled but which is going to be changed. All these are now directional units which assist an aircraft operator in finding his way across the air highways of this country. They are being converted into non-directional units. For the small aircraft owner and operator to have the minimum radio aid equipment in his aircraft he has to lay out between $900 and $1,500, which gives him what we call A.D.F. and a radio compass. These radio aids to navigation are completely safe if they are directional, because if the radio compass in the aircraft fails, the pilot of an aircraft can determine his location and navigate on radio signals alone. But if the directional facility is not there and the radio compass fails, he is lost; he has had it. So that the value of these directional facilities to the pilot is very great indeed and I think the minister should stop now and reassess—

An hon. Member: Mind you don't get lost.

Mr. Nielsen: I know that a good many members on the opposite side would like to see me lose my radio compass, but I am afraid I check it before I crack off on every journey I make. I am extremely disappointed each time I fly across this country to find that another directional facility has been abandoned. I think it is a very sad state of affairs, because general aviation in the country is being made less safe. One of the hon. members opposite might one day find himself in an aircraft that has been chartered by himself or by another group, and he is going to be very sorry that these directional facilities were abandoned by the department. I think the government, and the minister particularly, should sit down and reassess this whole policy which seems to be implemented now. These directional facilities should not be abandoned; they are one of the few remaining aids to air navigation.

I did not quite hear what the intellectual member for Consolidated Mining and Smelting had to say. I wonder if he would stand up and say it. I would make this personal plea to the minister, as one who is very familiar with flying small aircraft in the country, and ask him to assure me that he will cause his officials—or perhaps he himself will take a personal interest in this matter—to see that these aids to navigation are retained. I realize that the big air lines do not need them any longer because of the improvements in radar and other aids to navigation, but the operators of small aircraft, whether they be private owners or small, charter operators, are still in great need of these facilities and the cost of their maintenance is well met if they save but one life in aircraft that are flying the air highways of this country.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I could reply immediately and very briefly to the hon. member, because I want to correct a mistake I made. I inadvertently referred to my hon. friend from Vancouver Quadra as the hon. member for Vancouver South. Of course the minister for northern affairs is the hon. member for Vancouver South, but long ago these two constituencies were one riding, and even though they are now two constituencies their representatives were always on this side of the house.

I should also thank the hon. member for Yukon on behalf of the hon. member for Calgary North and the hon. member for Bow River for making speeches in connection with the airports in their constituencies; I am sure they will be grateful to him. I may say that the wealth of knowledge of the hon. gentleman is quite overwhelming to me, although I do not know about his directional guides. I would be quite incompetent to reply to him now, but I have taken careful note of both points which he made, and out of my great regard for the hon. gentleman's knowledge I assure him that I will see that the points he has made are very fully considered.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, this is the first item on this department and I should like to raise a question of great concern to me and to the city of Medicine Hat. I have on occasion during the past few weeks attempted to ask questions on orders of the day about this matter. Perhaps that was not the proper place, but I am happy to see both the present Minister of Transport and his immediate predecessor in the house tonight. The matter I wish to discuss concerns the southern prairie air run.

I have to go into a little history about this air run which is presently completely without service. As long ago as November 1962 Trans-Canada Air Lines made application to the air transport board to suspend their air service or to be relieved from the obligation to provide a service on the southern prairie air run. The chambers of commerce and city councils of Regina, Swift Current, Medicine Hat and most of the other places concerned raised very serious objections to this at the time. As a result of the air transport board hearings—their findings and recommendations—in February 1963 Trans-Canada Air Lines was granted permission to withdraw from this service because it required the use of two piston engine aircraft, and they claimed they had now converted completely to turbines. Furthermore, TransAir was granted the right to provide this service, particularly from Regina to Swift Current to Medicine Hat to Calgary.

To make a long story short, when TransAir took over this run they were given something like $500,000 worth of equipment by T.C.A. Now, less than a year later, they have suspended the entire service from Regina to Calgary and I understand have reduced the service from Brandon, Dauphin and Yorkton to one flight a week. This is on a Thursday and it used to be a daily run.

Under the agreement between Trans-Canada Air Lines and TransAir there was a transfer of two DC-3 aircraft plus one Viscount aircraft, plus a large amout of other equipment, all for the sum of $1, provided TransAir operated this service for three years. This service has not been provided.

I should like to ask the government what they are doing about getting back this $500,000 worth of equipment, or about demanding payment by TransAir for not fulfilling the terms of the agreement. All of these places I have mentioned are now without air line service of any kind. It happens that in the city of Medicine Hat the federal government is spending $600,000 to renovate one of the runways at the airport, and as I say there is no air line service being operated at the present time. Despite all the representations which have been made to Trans-Canada Air Lines and the air transport board, as well as to the Minister of Transport, no assurance has been given that even after this expenditure has been completed and the renovations concluded air line service will be resumed.

There is something very intriguing about this whole deal, because I know of no indication by Trans-Canada Air Lines that when TransAir applied for the run they would be given any equipment or any subsidy. It is grossly unfair to all of the other air carriers who applied with TransAir for this run in November 1962. Many of the carriers had laid out some sort of schedule which they were prepared to follow provided the federal government gave them some kind of subsidy. But no subsidy was forthcoming and TransAir offered, according to the decision of the air transport board, the most acceptable kind of service. As I say, when they were granted this franchise, or whatever it should be called, to provide this service T.C.A. transferred to them these three aircraft plus other equipment worth $500,000. If there was some kind of agreement between TransAir and Trans-Canada Air Lines before that date—and I happen to be one who is very suspicious that this was the case—then the submissions made at the air transport board hearings in Regina are shown to be nothing more or less than farcical. Here is $500,000 given to TransAir, and none of the other companies which bid for this run were even aware of it.

Since TransAir has now abandoned this service we have asked Trans-Canada Air Lines if they are prepared to resume it, particularly into the city of Medicine Hat. I have before me a letter addressed to the mayor of the city of Medicine Hat from the president of Trans-Canada Air Lines, and it says this:

> Thank you for your letter of February 18 in which you ask that serious consideration be given by T.C.A. to re-establishing its service to Medicine Hat as and when the airport is made suitable for Viscount operations.
> To come to what I feel sure is the unwelcome truth at the outset, I can hold out no hope whatever that T.C.A. could resume service to Medicine Hat even if the related airport was made suitable for Viscount operation.

I do not want to read the whole letter, but further on Mr. McGregor says this:

> I will not pretend to you that the service represented to T.C.A. anything but a net loss, due to paucity of traffic, but we would have been prepared to continue with cross-subsidization as we do in several other cases, if we had been put in a position where we could use Viscount aircraft.

This is exactly what is taking place in so far as the $600,000 expenditure to extend the runway is concerned. Then, he goes on:

> However, now that our ground organization has been disbanded, and in every sense of the word our bridges burned, we could not give serious economic consideration to resuming service to one or more of the original "prairie run" stations.

I want to know if there was some kind of deal between Trans-Canada Air Lines and TransAir, some kind of intrigue, before TransAir was given the right to operate this run so that Trans-Canada Air Lines could get out from under it. It is obvious from the answers we have been getting lately that this was a convenient way for Trans-Canada Air Lines to turn over this operation to TransAir and give them $500,000 worth of equipment so that Trans-Canada Air Lines could get out from under, knowing full well that TransAir was going to let go a little later.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the application of TransAir for this run and the kind of service that they intend to give was completely ridiculous, unless something had been promised to them in addition to what was made known at the hearing. We know that there was $500,000 worth of aircraft and equipment transferred. I want to know from the minister what the government intends to do about getting this equipment back from TransAir or making TransAir pay for it. Clause 13 of the agreement between Trans-Canada Air Lines and TransAir reads as follows:

> If TransAir fails to commence the said operations pursuant to clause 12 hereof, TransAir undertakes to pay as liquidated damages to T.C.A. the sum of $500,000 or at the option of TransAir shall return to T.C.A. all the equipment already delivered to TransAir by T.C.A.—

Then, paragraph (b) of that clause reads as follows:

> If TransAir commences operation of the aforesaid services pursuant to clause 12 hereof and thereafter discontinues such operation within three years of the said commencement of operations, TransAir undertakes to pay to T.C.A. that proportion of $500,000 which the period from the date of such discontinuance to the date three years after the commencement of operations bears to three years, or at the option of TransAir shall return to T.C.A. such equipment delivered to TransAir by T.C.A. hereunder—

As I said, Mr. Chairman, this area now has no air service. TransAir has a half million dollars worth of government property. This company operated the service for less than one year, and the agreement says they shall return the equipment or pay for it unless they operate the service for three years. I should like the Minister of Transport to tell me now what he is going to do about it. I do not want to be given the same excuse he gave earlier today to the hon. member for Mackenzie, namely that this is a deal between T.C.A. and TransAir and that he should not interfere.

I know that the present Minister of Transport did not enter into the deal or endorse the deal between TransAir and T.C.A., and neither did the government because it was entered into on February 16, 1963 before the government took office. I am not blaming him for entering into the deal. In fact, I am not even too critical of the previous government for entering into this deal because this represents subsidization of one kind or another. However, I am critical of the fact this company has disbanded the service, has violated the terms of the contract, and I think there is a definite obligation on the part of the government to see that TransAir either pays for the equipment or returns it.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, I believe it is the responsiblity of the present government to see that some kind of air service is re-established for these cities. I have written a rather extensive memorandum to the Minister of Transport outlining how a reasonably satisfactory air service could be re-established for the city of Medicine Hat with very little, if any, cost to Trans-Canada Air Lines. The city of Medicine Hat has forwarded to the Minister of Transport a brief outlining how this important service could be provided. The method would be to require T.C.A. to extend the run they now make daily from Calgary to Lethbridge to include Medicine Hat in the circuit. This would not require any more air crew or any more aircraft. It would require about 45 minutes additional flying time, plus one landing and one take-off. It happens that this flight takes off from Calgary and goes to Lethbridge, and could be extended to include Medicine Hat and then go back to Calgary in time to meet the transcontinental runs in both directions. This would provide desirable service for both freight and passengers. There are a lot of cut flowers and other greenhouse products that could be hauled from Medicine Hat if connections were made with the transcontinental runs.

TransAir, in my opinion, deliberately established schedules which nobody would use. During the first part of their operation they had something like three or four passengers per flight on an aircraft that would hold 26. I am not saying this would be profitable business. They changed their flight plan after they had been in operation for three months, specifically on July 14, 1963, and after that the passenger load was reduced to less than one passenger per flight. The reason is very simple. Their flight arrived in Calgary in the morning at 9.50 a.m. and the flight going to Toronto was at 4.45 in the afternoon. The flight going to Vancouver is a little earlier in the day. You even had to wait in Calgary for some time to get a flight to Edmonton. As I have said, this appears to be a deliberate attempt to discourage traffic so the company would be justified in abandoning the run. I suggest it is time we made them pay up or give back the equipment.

I do not want to take a lot more time in the committee, but this is a serious matter for the whole southern prairie, which is without any kind of satisfactory air line service. The hon. member for Mackenzie and the hon. member for Dauphin have told me recently that the service on their lines has been reduced to one flight per week. This is not a kind of service we expected to get when the franchise was transferred to TransAir. In closing, Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the Minister of Transport to use his influence to insist that T.C.A. re-establish some service into Medicine Hat on the basis of extending the Calgary-Lethbridge circuit. I think this would provide a satisfactory service and I believe it would generate business both in freight and in passengers. This service might even be profitable, rather than costing Trans-Canada Air Lines any money. I am not going to pursue the matter any further tonight, but I am going to insist, because of these suspicious circumstances, that TransAir be required to live up to the agreement. Since they have now abandoned the line, they have either to pay for the equipment or return it.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Macquarrie: I am prompted to say a few words, and they will be very few because I happen to be a man of brevity. I am prompted because I am in receipt, as I am sure the Minister of Transport is, of a resolution passed unanimously by the legislative assembly of Prince Edward Island. I am directing my remarks to what might be called the general item. The resolution of the legislature of my province calls upon the government of Canada to take immediate action to fulfil its commitments, its promises, to provide, with a top rate priority, a car ferry as promised 13 months ago in many arenas of discussion, and to move forward too on the causeway.

It is not for me on these items to make comparisons between the present government and the former government, nor to recall that on the question of the causeway no less a person than the prime minister of the day committed the government and the country unequivocally to giving us that which we had long desired, a continuous communication link with the mainland. Nor shall I point out that since the present government has taken office we have been left in silence, so far as these important commitments are concerned, except for the occasional press release from the Solicitor General, who does not have administrative responsibility either for the causeway or the ferry.

In my desire to expedite these items and reserving my right to speak at length and with feeling when the main estimates come before us, I will say only that I hope the Minister of Transport, who in his halcyon days as a member of the opposition when there were no Liberals from Prince Edward Island was regarded as somewhat of a spokesman for our province, and expressed great interest in the causeway and the ferry, will bear in mind the resolution of the Prince Edward Island legislature which was endorsed as strongly by his political associates as by the members supporting the government of the great premier of that province, Hon. Walter Shaw.

I want to be brief but I hope to be allowed to make a few comments in a general way. I will almost promise not to say anything further on the items before us because like a good Presbyterian I go to bed early too, particularly on a Friday night. I was gratified when one of the minister's predecessors corrected an error which we in the Atlantic region had felt keenly for a long time. It involved the matter of the Trans-Canada Air Lines terminal. For years visitors from Europe and the United Kingdom have landed in Canada at Montreal, toured the great west and Ontario and Quebec but never found the time to come to the maritimes. Under one of the minister's predecessors, a member of the government which I had the honour to support for six years, it was arranged that there should be a terminal at Halifax and flights were arranged to arrive at Halifax. Although I am not given to extended silence, I was shocked beyond speech when I discovered that various departments of the present government, in their advertising in the United Kingdom describing the beauties and glories of our wonderful country, have ignored the Atlantic provinces completely.

It is not for me on a specific item such as this to compare the treatment which the Atlantic provinces receive from the present government with that received from the government which I had the honour to support, but I would ask the minister to note that T.C.A. does land in Halifax and that people from other parts of the world will find much beauty and charm and much worthwhile activity in visiting all four of our provinces by the sea. I think the minister is sort of an adopted member for one of them.

I should like to say too that in recent months the great railway hub of the Atlantic provinces, Moncton, has had a new terminal spring up, and I wish that the minister would ask Canadian National Railways to look into the matter of this terminal. Someone in the other place has called it a monstrosity. It may be a monstrosity but it is also one of the smallest I have ever seen. It is an insult to the people of the Atlantic provinces who, willy-nilly, must regard the city of Moncton as one of the great transportation depots in our area. There are more people coming through on one given train than the new station can accommodate, as far as seating capacity is concerned. I will not go into how far they must go to find a place to sit down. However, with the minister's erstwhile interest in our province and the maritimes generally I would ask him to look into the facilities we have in the C.N.R. depot to service that great area, "The Bend", as it was once called.

I pass quickly to the subject which has concerned Prince Edward Island parliamentarians of both parties. I may say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that we have been very mature in Prince Edward Island. We have only had two parties.

Mr. Knowles: Your day is coming.

Mr. Macquarrie: But all through the years we have been tremendously concerned about that vital link between ourselves and the mainland. I am still young enough to remember vividly the promises a year ago of immediate action on a car ferry linking us with the mainland, but now I find as a result of questions by my colleague, the other member for Queens, and myself, that the icebreaker is in a sort of deep freeze as far as plans are concerned for providing us with this vital link. I would ask the genial and occasionally hotheaded minister to do what he can to thaw out that deep freeze.

There are many other things I could say about the question of transportation to our province. I could say how fed up we in Prince Edward Island are with having the C.N.R. deficit on the car ferry operation charged against Prince Edward Island, whereas we all know that years ago it was transferred to an item in the consolidated revenue fund. I could tell the minister how concerned we were about the rumours, not so insubstantial, about an increase in rates on both of our ferries and the attitude of the present government and the reaction thereto. I am not given to partisanship but I must say that the government has engaged in another revision at which it is such an expert.

I would ask for the consideration of the minister as a man who used to be interested. As a matter of fact, I will not say he is not interested. I am not so partisan as to say that the hon. member, formerly from Ontario, for a long time from Manitoba and now from Newfoundland, is not interested in our problems but I would say to him that when he deals with the problems of Prince Edward Island and comes to the question of transportation he is dealing with something much more than a political matter. He is dealing with something that is vital to us and of a constitutional priority at least as great as any of those matters which his Prime Minister has mentioned in his various discussions about priorities in the constitutional scheme of things.

It was the great problem when we reluctantly entered confederation. We applauded the efforts of his predecessors in providing us with some of the most up to date and speedy ferries we have ever had. We applauded the action of the leader of the government I supported in stating in the house unequivocally that we would get a permanent link. Our people are disturbed, upset, querulous and wondering about the lack of a concise statement on this matter. I have invited the minister, I have invited the Minister of Public Works, I have invited the Prime Minister, but we have not yet received a statement. I hope that we shall.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in reference to port facilities on Hudson bay at Fort Churchill. Over the years the western farmers have been asking for larger port facilities and bigger terminals in order to ship their grain through Fort Churchill. Last year, more than ever before, the Hudson bay route association, farm organizations and other people sought strenuously for consideration to be given to this very serious problem.

Just recently the Hudson bay association passed a resolution requesting that these port facilities be enlarged, as all the prospects indicate another big year for the export shipment of grain from the three prairie provinces.

The excuse has always been used that the port facilities there are not large enough to handle more than 20 million bushels of grain a year, and if that be the case I want the minister to give serious consideration to building other terminals, these so-called inland terminals. Not so long ago I had a chat with one of the grain commissioners, and he informed me that if grain could go out to these port facilities clean, like for instance in Vancouver, shipments through this port could be increased by 100 per cent. If that is the case in Vancouver, then certainly inland terminals could serve the same purpose in this case, and grain shipments from Hudson bay could be increased many times.

I bring this to the minister's attention because I understand the national harbours board comes under his jurisdiction. In that connection I ask the minister, does the harbours board have to have authority from him, or the department, to have the port facilities, elevators or terminal facilities built, or must the minister seek the money for such projects in the estimates of his own department? I am very much interested in this question because I was given to understand, the first time I had a question on the order paper about it, that the harbours board did have authority to build these things without their having to be approved by the department. That is all I have to say, and I do not intend to hold up the discussion any longer.

Mr. Clancy: I was very interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Medicine Hat, as I too am interested in the prairie milk run. Since Medicine Hat seems so ungrateful about it, I ask the minister to transfer that $600,000 to Yorkton and, if he does, I will meet him at the front steps every morning and escort him into the house.

At Yorkton our service is down to one plane a week because our airport is substandard. It will not take a Viscount except on an emergency landing, but we would like to see the prairie milk run kept in operation, and to do that we need facilities.

There is another question I wish to ask the minister. Why are the fees for hangar and the the apron rental per foot the same for commercial companies or commercial flying clubs in Regina as they are in Yorkton? Regina has a first class airport while Yorkton has not, but the department charges the same rental per foot for the Yorkton Flying Enterprises as it charges for similar companies in Regina.

Mr. Korchinski: I also would like to say a few words on this question of the TransAir-T.C.A. agreement which was signed recently, and which was intended to provide service for three years. I am happy the hon. member for Medicine Hat has taken the time to explain the details of the agreement, and I may say I am somewhat familiar with that run because this is the nearest airport to my riding. I have used it on numerous occasions travelling to and from Ottawa.

When TransAir first took it over they had a run which was operated previously by T.C.A. and that provided plane service every day. However, shortly after that TransAir decided that for three days a week the planes would go in one direction and on another three days they go in the return direction. That immediately resulted in a loss of traffic.

This morning, as I pointed out to the Minister of Transport, I expected he would look into this quite serious problem. I told him I expected a report from him. I hope he will provide us with it because now TransAir has decided not to go into the city of Regina. I dare say one of the reasons is loss of passenger traffic, but how can passenger traffic be maintained if no one knows the schedules? TransAir does not even bother to print schedules. They run off mimeographed copies because the schedules change almost every other week. That is the reason passengers are not using the service and I understand that very shortly TransAir will provide service on only one day a week.

I do not know how long this is intended to go on, but I think this is just one of TransAir's ways of getting out of their agreement, and they hope no one will look into the problem. I think the agreement was signed in all sincerity, but if there was something underhanded about it, or it was made for some other purpose, then the minister should investigate it.

Recently the minister went to Saskatchewan and in the city of Saskatoon indicated that the rail line abandonment problem is well in hand. I know legislation will be brought down dealing with this matter, but I notice that after July 1 the railways will be allowed once more to make application for an increase in rates. I do not know the magic surrounding that date, but it may have something to do with a by-election. It seems to me that here is a magic date which will serve to pacify the people, to throw farmers off their guard, into believing service will be provided and that there will be no loss of railways lines.

Those who have been interested because their lines have been designated for abandonment have set up committees and have been working. Now, because of the minister's statement, they will perhaps sit back, feeling secure. If the hon. gentleman is making these statements because of what is happening in Saskachewan, or will happen on April 22; if he is making those statements because of a by-election which will be held there, I say he is doing a disservice to those people. If a line is to be abandoned it is his responsibility to deal frankly with those people who will be affected. I am sure they will be willing to co-operate wherever this seems the proper course to take. But to expect them to throw down their guard is to do them a disservice if lines are to be abandoned.

Mr. Nasserden: I have very few words to say tonight. First, I should like to remind the Minister of Transport of the matter I brought up on a previous occasion. This has to do with whether or not the government is developing a policy with regard to increased assistance to promote local civic air strips across the country.

The other matter which has engaged my attention arises out of the development which has been taking place on the railroads whereby trains today are much longer than they used to be in days gone by. In many cases, crossings close to towns, villages and cities are closed due to the length of freight trains today. Sometimes they have upwards of 200 cars, and this causes a bottleneck in local transportation on streets and highways. I wonder if the minister and the government are giving any attention to an accelerated program to provide for overpasses and underpasses in this regard.

I was glad to see the hon. gentleman appointed to his present portfolio because I believe he has that sense of history which was mentioned by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) in regard to the constitutional aspect in this country. I refer, of course, to the guarantees which were given to western Canada in the Crowsnest pass rates years ago, an integral part of the charter to that part of the country from the parliament of Canada. I was pleased to hear the assurance the minister has given to people in western Canada that there will not be the measure of abandonment of rail lines which the applications presently before the board of transport commissioners would indicate. I am one of those who believe that if you take a look at the history of both the historic parties in this parliament there is room for a policy which will alleviate the situation which appears on the surface, when you take a look at the applications which are before the transport commissioners today.

Like the hon. member for Mackenzie, I hope and I believe that the minister is sincere in the representations he has made—that he is sincere in those things he has said in western Canada regarding rail line abandonment. Without saying anything further I should like to hope that the government will give consideration to introducing the other policies I have mentioned here tonight, because I believe they are very urgently needed at this particular time.

Mr. Pugh: A few short words. Over the last six or seven years the Kelowna airport has grown. The government has been most helpful but there is one small point of urgency at the present time. That is the completion of the installation of the lighting to the north and south end of the field. The reason for urgency is that Canadian Pacific Airlines which flies into that airport is now using Convairs. They are changing over to DC-6s, and the changeover is to be made next fall at a season when darkness comes earlier in the evening. The schedule may have to be curtailed unless the installation of these lights has been completed by then. I would ask the minister to look into this, as I know he will, and expedite the matter.

Mr. More: I only want to say a word. Last year I saised the question of the milk run with the former minister. If I remember correctly—he is here and can correct me—he said at that time that in regard to the milk run it was being examined and they hoped there could be a realignment of service which could give good service and the service could be continued.

Subsequently, of course, we all know what happened. The minister was good enough to provide me with the order in council and the agreement which was reached. I think it was reached in good faith. I do not accept the insinuations of the hon. member for Medicine Hat. I talked to T.C.A. and the other party involved. T.C.A. had a problem with regard to servicing and they said it was a good deal for them, and therefore perhaps for the government of Canada. I think it was accepted on that basis. I do not place a value on the equipment which was turned over—$500,000 or $600,000. It was never offered to anybody else, and it is an arbitrary figure. It could be a million dollars for that matter.

Mr. Olson: That is the exact amount stipulated in the contract.

Mr. More: I say it is an arbitrary figure and no one can give me a basis for arriving at it. The equipment was never offered to anybody else. I do not have any axe to grind and I do not represent any former carrier, but I do say that the result of what has happened seems to me to be that TransAir has come out of this, abandoning a service which it was under an obligation to provide altogether for three years, realigning the schedule if that could be done. They are going to end up with the profitable part of the run—Regina, Saskatoon, Prince Albert. They have abandoned the service to Medicine Hat and I am concerned that they should have ended up in a position where they have reaped a profit during the length of time they operated the run, to the detriment of the other air service which was interested in having it.

I think this is wrong and I believe the government should see to it that T.C.A., the government party to the agreement, one might say, should perform or pay. I believe this is only right. I have heard of the company's big losses but only last week I saw a statement in the press that TransAir had increased its profit on its total operation this year. It was not very large, but the amount of which I am speaking was part of it.

Traffic from the Yorkton area is naturally orientated toward Regina, but the TransAir service has orientated it to Winnipeg, now, and I do not think that should be so. I do not think it right that a Saskatchewan community, naturally orientated to the capital city of that province, should, by reason of the air service provided, be encouraged to orientate toward Winnipeg. I object to this and I am concerned about it as are the chamber of commerce and the people of Regina.

I ask the minister to see to it that TransAir should perform or pay, and that the arrangement is fair to everybody. I hope the examination which the minister said was taking place, and the ideas he had about continuing the air service to the prairies, can be worked out and that we shall have some kind of air service. I think it is too bad. I understand that the present service of TransAir, which they said was reorientated, was to connect with the jet service from Winnipeg, eastward. You took it and got in an hour after the service had left. This is something that came with the railways trying to get out of the passenger service for a time. Thank God the C.N.R. seems to be staying in and trying to provide better service and schedules now. I appreciate there being an agreement. I think it discloses everything and I do not have any suspicions in that regard. But I do say that because of what has happened since, it is up to the government to see that the terms of that agreement are carried out by the parties to it.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it would be right to have the item carried without my saying a word about some of the points that have been raised. Since this is the last item on which there could possibly be a general debate, perhaps it is safe for me to do this. Most of the points that have been raised on this particular item are appropriate for the supplementary estimates and not for the main estimates; therefore I shall try to deal very briefly with them.

The hon. member for Mackenzie asked me today about the contract between Trans-Canada Air Lines and TransAir, and in his supplementary question he did remind me that the contract had to be confirmed by order in council. For that reason I would assume that the government would have some responsibility in the matter. Whatever responsibility the government has, I can assure hon. members it will be discharged; and, as I said earlier today, I will ask T.C.A. to give me a report at once on this matter and anything and everything I can properly disclose to the house will be disclosed. I am very much concerned about this matter, as I think everyone is who has lived in a part of the country that has enjoyed air service and then finds it curtailed. There is a very great deal of concern about the curtailment of service on the prairies and I hope that some solution can be found to provide a decent service to these communities. The matter is one, of course, that the government directly cannot settle. Parliament has put this matter in the hands of the air transport board and it would be quite impossible for the government or myself to attempt to do it directly. But I think hon. members do know that whatever time I can possibly find from urgent, day to day duties, I am devoting to a consideration of over-all air policy. One of the biggest elements in that policy is to provide a proper system whereby regional carriers can serve those communities which bigger and more expensive aircraft cannot reach. There is a need for feeder service in these areas and to provide local services. I am very anxious that we strike a proper balance between regional services, main line services and international services. I do not think we have it at present, and assuming we do it right, the sooner it can be done, the better. I am trying to do this just as diligently as I can.

I noted what the hon. member for Yorkton said about the character of the airport there and about the rents. I will make some inquiries about those matters and let him know about them. I have had information brought to my attention already, and I am glad the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary repeated it, about the airport at Kelowna. Even this week I happened to see someone from Kelowna who spoke to me about it. I am having that matter looked into. I noticed what the hon. member for Regina City and other hon. members said with regard to the subject about which I have already spoken. With regard to the subject raised by the hon. member for Rosthern, namely the civic airstrip policy, I will attempt to do something about that when my main estimates are before the house on another occasion.

A number of hon. members have raised the railway question and I should like to say three things in this connection. First of all, so far as the Crowsnest rates are concerned, they are not going to be touched, period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: So far as rail line abandonment is concerned, it was the previous government, as I have said four or five times already in the house, that asked both railways to indicate to the board of transport commissioners every line they had any thought of abandoning. The C.N.R. has done that; I do not believe the C.P.R. has. It may be to the detriment of the C.N.R. that they did it, because it has created a great deal of quite unnecessary apprehension. It is perfectly obvious that many of these lines, and perhaps most of them, and may be for quite a long time all of them, are not going to be abandoned. In any event, the notice of the legislation that was given by my hon. friend the President of the Privy Council last December indicated that we were going to set up a railway rationalization authority to consider this matter and that a fund was going to be set up. It would not be right for me to go into the details now, but the fund is for a purpose, and the purpose is to see that lines are not abandoned that are needed for economic and social grounds merely because those particular lines cannot necessarily pay. That is the position. That does not say there will not be some rail line abandonment, and I do not believe there is any member from the prairies who would say that every mile of railway that is now there should be there forever. But as I have indicated four or five times before, the position of this government is that the needs of the people should be served and, above all, the needs of the farmers and of the wheat growers shall be put in first place and the question of balance sheets of the railways in second place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: That will be just as true in the second part of 1964 as in the first half; it will be just as true in 1965 as in 1964; and it will be just as true in 1966 and 1967 also. With regard to railway rates, hon. members will recall that I also said something about this earlier today in answering a question, and I was rather surprised that it was raised in the way it was by the hon. member for Mackenzie, who is generally very fair about these things. I expressed satisfaction that the railway association—that is, the two railways —had voluntarily agreed to extend for another three months the suspension of the increase in rates which was granted to them by the board of transport commissioners. This additional three months will give us that much more time to deal with this problem. I hope that in these next three months—and, of course, in regard to one of them ten days have already been expended—this House of Commons will see fit to deal with that legislation and to deal with it conclusively.

I finally come to this matter. Well not finally but penultimately I come to my hon. friend from Tisdale. I take the third part of his constituency because it is the part I like best, the reason being that the name came from Norfolk county. The hon. member for Tisdale will be interested to know that last Saturday I was in Churchill and I was enjoying myself much more than I have been today. The weather was fine; there was a south wind blowing; it was about 40 degrees. I examined the terminal facilities; I looked at the airport, and I also went to see the Eskimos, who incidentally are going to the provincial schools there. I believe that with good organization even more grain can be shipped out of Churchill in the coming season than was shipped out in the last season, which was the best season that Churchill ever had.

The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale, and I am sure everybody else on the prairies, can be reassured when I confess that I was one of the original supporters of the "On-to-the-bay association", at a time when most hon. members on the other side of the house were not yet born.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is my interest in travel around Hudson bay; at least it is historical.

I now come to my honourable, genial and constitutional friend from Prince Edward Island, the junior member for Queens, who looks younger than ever. I may say I am surprised that the junior and alert member for Queens missed the speech I made in North Sydney the other day when I said the causeway would be built, period. And it will. The ferry will also be built. In fact, it would have been built a lot faster if the senior member for Queens had been able to prod his colleagues a little more successfully than he was able to when they were on this side of the house. The trouble was that there were no Liberal voices in those days from Prince Edward Island to prod the government and we had to wait for a change of government to get this thing started. But it is going to go, and it is going to go pretty fast.

I think that deals with all those points which have been raised, except those matters of broad policy that I will be glad to make a long and tiresome speech about on the main estimates, if we ever reach them.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to be more than two minutes. I want to say to the minister that his promise to raise with T.C.A. the matter of the contract made with TransAir and which was not fulfilled by TransAir, and the failure to take the ordinary precautions which any good business management would have taken to see that the other party to a contract fulfils the contract, has left most of us with a good deal of concern. It is not my intention to keep the committee tonight. I want the minister to be on notice, however, that we think this is a very strange piece of business which T.C.A., the very efficient management of which we have heard so much about, permitted to be transacted. After all T.C.A. made an agreement with TransAir by which in effect T.C.A. subsidized a private company by giving them equipment worth $500,000. A condition of that agreement was that TransAir would carry on the "milk run" through western Canada for three years. TransAir fulfilled their part of the contract for less than one year. T.C.A. may not have been very worried about that contract; after all, they got out of what they thought was a pretty poor deal, and that is all they were worried about. But the people who worked on this aircraft in Winnipeg are very concerned. The people who are not getting any air service are very concerned. Those of us who think that $500,000 is a pretty large sum of money and that TransAir should pay the money back or return the equipment are also very concerned.

All I wish to do tonight is to put the minister on notice that when his estimates come up in the regular way—and I am sure they will—he is in for a good long, hard discussion. The minister might pass on to the president of T.C.A. the promise of members on this side of the house that the first time he gets before the proper parliamentary committee he will have to explain in considerable detail what happened to this $500,000 before he gets back to his fancy office in Montreal to run his regular business.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, it will take me not two minutes to say to the minister that I am glad he has now accepted some responsibility for seeing to it that an investigation is made into the T.C.A.-TransAir agreement. If he will also assume some responsibility to require Trans-Canada Air Lines—or Air Canada as it is now called—to carry out its obligations to provide air services in Canada, a responsibility which was given to that company by their charter and the initiating legislation, and so on, a comprehensive air service including regional and feeder lines as well as the main transcontinental runs, then I will be satisfied.

Item agreed to.

Railway and steamship services—

65e. Construction or acquisition of auto-ferry vessels and equipment—to extend the purposes of vote 65 of the main estimates for 1963-64 to include the vessels detailed in these estimates, $1.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to hold up the committee but I should like to ask the minister a question regarding the extra amount for the Wood Islands and Caribou services. I presume this is for the new ferry which will come into service.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the president of the council has the information.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): While the Minister of Transport's colleague is looking up this information, may I say that I realize the Minister of Transport is new in his portfolio and therefore I do not want to go into the matter in detail. However, when he becomes a little more familiar with the history of his department I think he will find that over the years both parties when in power have had a fairly good and consistent record as far as the transportation facilities to Prince Edward Island are concerned. If he will look at the situation completely fairly, perhaps by chance or by the circumstances prevailing at the time I think Conservative governments have contributed more by way of vessels. However, I am not going to go into that point at this time.

During the term of office of the last government the minister will find that there were two new ferries built on Prince Edward Island, one for each service. Also initial steps were taken in the construction of a third, the one we are looking forward to coming into service as soon as possible. I know this will be a large vessel, the design of which will take a considerable time, but I should like to make one suggestion. I understand that modern dayliners cannot be carried on the present ferries; I believe trials were held in this regard. I should like to see a new ferry built which will accommodate modern dayliners, because this would provide a fast passenger service to Prince Edward Island which, if it would not pay for it, would at least reduce the deficit.

Item agreed to.

St. Lawrence seaway authority—

230e. Operating deficit and capital requirements of canals and works entrusted to the St. Lawrence seaway authority, $540,000.

Mr. Bell: I want to ask a question of the minister. I am not sure I will get the information but at least the question will serve to prove that I have been patiently sitting here for the last 16 days. The minister knows I have been asking questions about this matter before. Without any preamble, I should like to ask if he has any more information about when a decision will be made as to a possible increase in tolls on the seaway. The minister knows what effect this will have on the maritimes and other areas. We hear reports every day from the United States to the effect that the senate is against tolls. I think it is important that some indication be given from time to time of our thoughts on this subject. When will the matter be brought forward? When will a decision be made, and what are we thinking about this important matter?

Mr. Pickersgill: Under the statutes, of course, there has to be a review before July 1 of this year. Discussions are going on at the present moment between the St. Lawrence corporation of the United States and the seaway authority on this matter. I hope to be able to report quite soon on the subject, but I cannot at the moment.

Mr. Bell: Supposing an organization wished to present a brief outlining their views on the effects of an increase in tolls, will they be able to do this, or will the minister make an interim report before the details are announced?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think any interested party could make representations at any time to the seaway authority. I believe however it is contemplated that, in certain circumstances, there would be public hearings.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. McIlraith moved:

Resolved, that toward making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, the sum of $143,702,715, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. McIlraith thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-89, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending March 31, 1964.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time, now?

An hon. Member: By leave.

Mr. McIlraith moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Before this bill is read the second time, there is just a brief word I should like to say. I say it with the best of good will and I say it expressing the concern of all members in the House of Commons. I merely want to express the hope that we do not soon again get into the kind of situation that we have had recently. It is not my purpose to assess blame, other than to say I think there is blame all around, and that includes all of us.

An hon. Member: Let us get on with the business.

Mr. Knowles: This kind of situation can be avoided if this type of legislation is not delayed until the last minute but is introduced in sufficient time for the house to be able to deal with it. None of us knows when the next supplementary estimates will be laid before the house. However, all of us know that at the end of next month the government will require interim supply. I plead with the government now that it not leave the next interim supply bill to the end of May, but that they introduce it not later than May 15 so that we can give proper attention to these matters without feeling that a gun is being put to our heads.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I simply cannot allow the hon. gentleman's remarks to pass. The legislation we are now considering was brought before this house on March 13 which, according to the best information I am able to get, is the earliest date before the end of the fiscal year this has happened in the last ten years. Interim supply was also announced for consideration on that same day and was brought forward at the earliest possible moment thereafter.

Whatever disposition the house may have made of it, the record should not be distorted to suggest that the initiation of this matter was not early enough. I am not going to prolong the debate, but I have some really remarkable quotations from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre concerning the length of time we ought to take in dealing with supplementary estimates.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): My name has been brought into the discussion, and I was not going to say a word except to express my disappointment that the subject has been raised at all at this stage. We were getting on rather famously and co-operating as we used to do. I am pleased to see the Minister of Transport has recovered some of the good humour which he used to display when he was house leader. However, this is not a subject under discussion at this time and I suggest we get on with the business.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I wonder if any member of the government might be able to indicate to us when the other chamber will be able to deal with this measure which we have dealt with so expeditiously and in such a statesmanlike manner?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I could do that when we get into committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Pickersgill: Although perhaps it is not strictly in order, I ought to try to satisfy the curiosity of the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie). I was informed by the government leader in the other place that they had adjourned subject to recall on 24 hours' notice. I do not imagine, however, they will be sitting either tomorrow or Sunday. However, it would appear they are prepared to deal with this matter.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Macquarrie: Since hope springs eternal, I have always a built-in solicitude for the other place.

Mr. Knowles: I suppose it is the same old story, but the Minister of Transport having said he could not allow the remarks I made to pass, I must return the compliment.

Mr. Monteith: It always happens.

An hon. Member: Some compliment.

Mr. Knowles: The Minister of Transport drew the attention of the house to the fact that debate on these supplementary estimates began on the 13th of March. That is correct. The inference was that this left plenty of time for them. May I remind him that between that date and the time when the house was expected to recess for Easter there remained only nine sitting days including the Thursday before Good Friday, but the government chose to have the house devote four of those days to discussion of the budget. I suggest it is this kind of thing that put us into the box we got into, and I think a little better planning another time would be a good idea.

Mr. Pickersgill: You can have the last word.

Preamble agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? By unanimous consent, now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. McIlraith moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, it is not the intention of the government in the time remaining to proceed with the other item of business that was suggested for this evening, but since the house has been in such a good and co-operative mood I wonder whether with unanimous consent the house would like to pass the motion to set up the special committee on defence so that it could get to work at once.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the former house leader has reverted to his old and bad practices. I wonder whether he would announce to us the business for next week.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can announce, of course, what the government would like to do and I only hope that we will have the kind of co-operation we have had in the last hour in getting it done. I think it would not only impress ourselves but it might even impress the country. I suggest that on Monday and Tuesday we complete the budget debate, and I think the regular house leader will indicate on Monday evening what the further business will be.

Mr. Knowles: In view of previous announcements made by the regular house leader, can we not take it for granted that the next item will be the Canada pension plan?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would imagine that would be so, and I would hope that on Wednesday there will be more time for government business than there has been on some Wednesdays so far this session.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Shall I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SPEAKER—STATEMENT ON QUESTION BY MEMBER FOR JOLIETTE-L'ASSOMPTION-MONTCALM

Mr. Speaker: On Friday morning the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) rose on a question of privilege respecting certain statements made by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) the previous day. His declaration was to the effect that the hon. member had said about him things that were untrue or false. The words used in French were "des choses fausses". After quite a debate had taken place I said that I would examine the matter over the week end and give a decision on Monday; that is today.

There are evidently two questions which arise. The first and most important one is the question of privilege, and the second one is whether an expression used by the hon. member was unparliamentary. I will deal first with the latter, as it will soon be disposed of. The hon. member, speaking in French, stated:

[Translation]

The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) said some false things about me. He took advantage of my absence to do so.

[Text]

It was then I stated that the use of the term "false" is not parliamentary. I had not realized at that moment that the word "false" was applied to things said and not to the hon. member for Carleton. If one hon. member should say of another hon. member that he was a liar, or that he had affirmed something knowing that such a thing was untrue, this of course would be unparliamentary. However, this is not the same as saying that what a member says of another member is not true.

Having disposed of one part of the incident, I should perhaps take advantage of this occasion to deal with the question of privilege per se and I will try to do it in very general terms, in terms that will render my remarks applicable to this and to all other questions of privilege raised in this house.

There are still areas of the work of the Commons which are causing some difficulties in reference to procedure. This may be the understatement of the year. One of these areas relates to questions of privilege. More and more often members are rising to invoke so-called questions of privilege which could more properly be classified as mere interruptions, ordinary points of order, untimely grievances, disguised charges, contempts, or even simple disagreements with what is being said from the floor of the house.

Hon. members rose on questions of privilege over a hundred times during the previous session of parliament. As there were 117 sitting days from May 16 when the house met to December 21 when the house prorogued, this means that invoking privilege practically became, and has continued to be, a daily occurrence. I dare say that not 10 per cent, nay 5 per cent, were proper questions of privilege. Moreover, only three or four of these were followed by a motion which would have been the proper procedure to adopt in the circumstances.

As a sample of what I have stated, early Friday morning the hon. member rose twice on a question of privilege, the first time to the effect that it was his "duty to direct questions to the Prime Minister and to any member of the cabinet"; and he added "If I am out of order, Mr. Speaker, it is your responsibility to deal with the matter and I shall abide by your ruling, provided it is fair and reasonable". This last comment was perhaps unnecessary, and it was not a question of privilege in any event.

As may be seen if one takes the trouble to read citations 108 to 112 of Beauchesne's parliamentary rules, privilege is a very serious matter and therefore should not be abused. I might perhaps terminate the present statement by directing the attention of the house to one particular quotation from Beauchesne which is to be found at page 102, a quotation which should be read carefully by all members as it summarizes the situation clearly and without equivocation. This is the quotation:

113. Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the house. A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament. It should be dealt with by a motion giving the house power to impose a reparation or apply a remedy. There are privileges of the house as well as of members individually. Wilful disobedience to orders and rules of parliament in the exercise of its constitutional functions; insults and obstructions during debate are breaches of the privileges of the house. Libels upon members and aspersions upon them in relation to parliament and interference of any kind with their official duties, are breaches of the privileges of the members. But a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege. An attack in a newspaper article is not a breach of privilege, unless it comes within the definition of privileges above given, and then a member is bound to lay on the table the newspaper in which the article complained of appears—

MR. NIELSEN—REMARKS IN DEBATE BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. I feel I must do so because I did give the house notice last Friday that I intended to raise this question.

The question is one which involves two separate factors, one concerning the translation from English to French, and second the translation from French to English as relayed by the translators in the translation booths. Most of the time these translators do an excellent service to the house, but in this particular debate last Thursday they did break down for a moment. I have not, of course, access to the blues in the Hansard office, but on page 1964 of Hansard for Thursday last, about half way down the right hand column, the Minister of Justice is reported as using these words:

I say that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who is perhaps the one who most bitterly criticized the attitude of the government in the house, has always intimated something which is false both in fact and in law.

Then a little further on in the same column he said:

I say that such statements are a hateful betrayal of the truth, of the facts and of the law.

I have checked with several of my colleagues on this side of the house, Mr. Speaker, and all confirm me in my recollection that the translation which came over the earphones in English was as follows:

I say that an hon. member of this house who has most bitterly attacked the government——and then followed the remainder of the text. So the English translation did not specifically name me at the time. Had that occurred, Mr. Speaker, I would have risen, probably at the stage where the minister used the words:

I say that such statements are a hateful betrayal of the truth—

—and so on. So the first point involved in this question of privilege is one of an English translation coming over the system possibly quite different from the words the minister actually used, or any other hon. member actually used. The other factor involved in the privilege is the words used themselves. Without having had the opportunity to study in detail the statement Your Honour made today, I have not come to a conclusion as to whether or not these words, in the context of your ruling, are parliamentary.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): On a point of order, so long as the hon. member was referring to the fact that the translation of my words may not have been accurate, I was not personally concerned and I allowed the hon. member for Yukon to deal with his question of privilege. But I contend now that so long as he intends to raise a question of privilege, in my respect, of course that is ruled out by Your Honour's previous ruling. But even if it were not, so long as the hon. member purports to raise a question of privilege based on the utterances of any hon. member of the house, and in the present instance utterances by me, I say that Your Honour may not entertain any discussion except on the basis of the original text for which I must take responsibility, that is the text in which I made my remarks, the French text.

This is the only text that can be opposed to me. If the hon. member is ready to discuss the question on the basis of the French text itself and to say I may have used words which are not parliamentary, then I might be in a better position to answer him, but I say that on the basis of the translation he cannot confront me with the words in the translation.

Mr. Nielsen: I can clear up that question at the outset, on the point of order raised by the Minister of Justice. I have examined both texts and have consulted with some of my French speaking colleagues, and both texts in Hansard show that the minister did use words identifying me in his remarks. I do not question at all that any alterations have been made in Hansard. That was my original suspicion, but since both texts coincide I simply have to conclude that the mistake itself was made in the translation from the French to the English.

Now, to proceed with this second factor in the point of privilege I raised, as my authority for perhaps questioning the words used by the Minister of Justice I merely cite the Minister of Transport who, as recorded at page 1197 of Friday's Hansard, said:

—that when one hon. member undertakes to suggest that another hon. member has said something that is false, it is up to him to prove it was a false statement by real evidence, and not simply to use an unparliamentary word as a form of innuendo.

And I believe Your Honour, as recorded at the same page of Hansard, said that the term "false" was not parliamentary. This may have been changed in view of Your Honour's ruling today, but without having studied it carefully I would not be in a position to venture an opinion. I merely draw to Your Honour's attention these words which the minister used as recorded at page 1964 of Hansard for Thursday last, April 9:

I say that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen)... has always intimated something which is false both in fact and in law—

I say that such statements are a hateful betrayal of the truth—

Mr. Favreau: On a point of order, I ask for a ruling on this point because surely no hon. member may be accused on the basis of a statement which he did not make. The only statement I made was a statement in French, and it is recorded at page 2065 of the French version of Hansard for April 9, 1964. I cannot be responsible for a translation which may or may not accurately reflect my thoughts.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I would like to suggest to the hon. member that this presentation of his point of privilege is becoming almost an argument. I suggest to him that he state his point of privilege and then I will have a chance to examine the actual words, outside the house, and perhaps present a ruling tomorrow, thus saving the time of the house.

Mr. Nielsen: I thought I had already stated my question of privilege, namely the question I drew to Your Honour's attention concerning the translation itself and, second, the words used by the minister as they appear in the English translation of Hansard which I have read into the record. If, as the minister seems to be intimating, those words are not a correct translation or do not coincide with the French issue of Hansard—I think they do; I think they are the same in the French and English editions—then I think I am entitled to have the English edition changed so as to comply accurately with the French version if the minister did not use the words that appear in the English translation.

Mr. Speaker: I will take the matter into consideration.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—TABLING OF DOCUMENT RESPECTING FUNCTIONS OF U.N. TROOPS

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a document dealing with certain functions of the troops serving under the United Nations command in Cyprus.

Introduction of Bills

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING REPLACEMENT OF CHIEFS OF STAFF COMMITTEE

Hon. Lucien Cardin (for the Minister of National Defence) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-90, to amend the National Defence Act.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the National Defence Act in order to be able to implement the provisions in the white paper that have to do with the integration of the forces. The amendment provides for the replacement of the chairman of the chiefs of staff committee, the chief of the naval staff, the chief of the air staff and the chief of general staff, with an authority that would be charged with the functions, the duties and the powers of the people who are being replaced. This new authority would be the chief of the defence staff who would head a body to be known as the defence staff.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AERONAUTICS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CHARGES FOR USE OF FACILITIES AND SERVICES, ETC.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Aeronautics Act to authorize the governor in council to make regulations prescribing charges for the use of any facility or service provided by or on behalf of the Minister of Transport for or in respect of aircraft or at an airport and to make such regulations as he deems necessary to impose upon the owners or operators wherever resident, of any aircraft, charges for the availability during any flights of such aircraft within or outside Canada of any facility or service provided by or on behalf of the minister; to provide also for the payment of certain expenses of witnesses attending before boards of inquiry established by the minister to investigate aircraft accidents; and to make certain other amendments for the better administration of the act.

Motion agreed to.

BANK ACT—QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

EXTENSION FOR ONE YEAR OF AUTHORITY TO CARRY ON BUSINESS

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act to extend by one year the authority to carry on business for the banks to which these acts apply.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, we are not really adopting these motions, are we? Are they not automatically transferred to the order paper?

Mr. Pickersgill: They have to be adopted.

Mr. Speaker: I would refer the hon. member to standing order 21, subsection 1.

QUESTIONS

WASYLENCHUK CASE PROCEDURE

Question No. 34—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Did F.B.I. officers act as police officers in Canada in the Wasylenchuk case?
2. Did prison officials turn Wasylenchuk over to the F.B.I officers?
3. Was Wasylenchuk transferred from the prison to the U.S.A. by Canadian officers or by the F.B.I.?
4. Did prison officials refuse Wasylenchuk permission to call his lawyers after he was incarcerated and, if so, how long did this refusal continue, and how long was it before Wasylenchuk was permitted to contact his lawyers?

Mr. Favreau: 1. The extradition warrant, which was in the form prescribed by the Extradition Act, directed the keeper of Oakalla prison farm to deliver John Wasylenchuk into the custody of Dean G. Rolston and Alfred G. Gunn and commanded the said Dean G. Rolston and Alfred G. Gunn to convey John Wasylenchuk to the United States. In accordance with the practice Dean G. Rolston and Alfred G. Gunn were designated for this purpose by the United States authorities. They are agents of the federal bureau of investigation.

2. Yes.

3. Wasylenchuk was transferred from the prison to the United States by the F.B.I. agents abovementioned who were accompanied by members of the R.C.M. Police.

4. Prison officials at Oakalla prison farm, which is a provincial institution, have informed the R.C.M. Police that John Wasylenchuk was held at the Oakalla prison farm from October 18 to December 18, 1963, awaiting his extradition, upon which latter date he was delivered to the F.B.I. agents, as above described, and that during this time he received approximately 20 visits from relatives, friends, parole officers, members of the John Howard society and a priest.

[Mr. Gordon.]

CONSTRUCTION OF PENAL INSTITUTION, SPRINGHILL, N.S.

Question No. 53—Mr. Coates:

1. When will construction commence on the young offenders, medium security penal institution to be located at Springhill, Nova Scotia?
2. What is the estimated date for completion of this project?
3. Who was the successful tenderer for high temperature water generators and auxiliary equipment associated with this project, what was the amount of the contract, who were the unsuccessful bidders and what prices did they submit?
4. What is the estimated number of man-hours involved in the construction of the institution?
5. What is the estimated number of employees who will staff the institution on its completion and what is the estimated annual payroll?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. It is expected that tenders can be called and a contract award will be made to allow construction to start in the summer of 1964.

2. The contemplated date for completion is the fall of 1965.

3. The successful tenderer for the high temperature water generators and auxiliary equipment was Dominion Bridge of Montreal at $221,930. Other bidders were Canadian Vickers Limited, Montreal, Quebec, $228,310; Foster Wheeler Ltd., St. Catharines, Ontario, $229,519.

4. It is estimated that 500,000 man hours will be expended in construction of the institution.

5. One hundred and seventy employees. Annual payroll of $800,000.

Questions

*QUEBEC PROJECTS TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT

Question No. 510—Mr. Ricard:

What new projects does the government intend to carry out in order to eliminate unemployment in the province of Quebec particularly?

Mr. Byrne: The government has developed and introduced a number of programs designed to strengthen the economy generally and to bring about an adequate growth in employment. The effectiveness of these programs can be seen from the fact that employment in the past five months has averaged some 270,000 higher than in the corresponding period of the year before and is over 90,000 higher in Quebec. Unemployment has averaged about 60,000 lower for Canada and about 20,000 lower in Quebec. The government has strengthened employment in the winter months which has resulted in seasonal unemployment being significantly lower this winter than in previous winters through the winter house building program and an expanded municipal winter works incentive program. New programs, as they are developed for dealing with unemployment, will be announced to parliament in the usual way.

*INCOME TAX EXEMPTION FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS

Question No. 522—Mr. Slogan:

1. Are professional or technical graduates who attend refresher or postgraduate courses now entitled to income tax deductions for their tuition fees?

2. Is this exemption restricted to tuition fees or are all costs, such as the cost of books, instruments, travelling and living expenses included?

Mr. Benson: 1. Tuition fees paid for refresher or postgraduate courses are not deductible under existing law unless they qualify under section 11(1) (qb) of the Income Tax Act which requires that the student be a full-time student and that the fees be paid in respect of a course of at least 13 consecutive weeks duration.

Paragraph 1 of the income tax resolution tabled following the budget speech proposes that the right to deduct tuition fees be extended to include fees paid by part-time students to educational institutions described in the resolution.

2. The deduction now granted by section 11(1) (qb) of the Income Tax Act applies only to tuition fees. The proposal to extend this deduction also applies only to tuition fees.

DISPOSITION OF RADAR STATION EQUIPMENT, ST. SYLVESTRE, QUE.

Question No. 527—Mr. Caouette:

As a result of the decision to close the radar station at St. Sylvestre in Lotbiniere county, what does the government intend to do with the buildings, equipment, and other material on the site?

[Translation]

Answer: As far as the Department of National Defence is concerned, most of the R.C.A.F. station at St. Sylvestre will be declared surplus at the end of 1964 or the beginning of 1965 and only the part directly affected by maintenance of the telecommunication system will be kept.

WINTER WORKS PROGRAM, BRUCE COUNTY, ONT.

Question No. 532—Mr. Loney:

1. How many applications were received under the municipal winter works incentive program 1963-64 from the county of Bruce?

2. How many of the applications were approved?

3. What are the names of the municipalities where applications were approved?

4. In each case, what was the winter works program undertaken?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. Ten applications were received under the municipal winter works incentive program 1963-64 from municipalities in the county of Bruce.

2. The ten applications received were approved.

3 and 4.

Municipality	Project No.	Description of Work
Chippawa	Ont. 798	Installation of storm drainage system
Kincardine	Ont. 277	Installation of sanitary sewers
Port Elgin	Ont. 1264	Installation of water mains
Port Elgin	Ont. 1265	Installation of water mains
Ripley	Ont. 901	Improvements to community arena
Teeswater	Ont. 954	Construction of senior citizens unit
Teeswater	Ont. 955	Construction of arena floor
Whitchurch	Ont. 1037	Installation of water supply system
Wiarton	Ont. 928	Installation of sanitary sewers
Wiarton	Ont. 1134	Construction of fire hall

*SOCIAL INSURANCE APPLICATION CARDS

Question No. 534—Mr. Hales:

1. How many application cards for social insurance numbers were ordered and what was the total cost?

2. Were tenders called for these and, if so, (a) how many tenders were received (b) was the lowest tender accepted?

3. Does the company which received the order have an agreement with its employees through a recognized Canadian union?

4. What is the approximate cost of distribution to working Canadians including express, postage, envelopes, etc.?

Mr. Stewart: 1. Ten million application cards were ordered at a cost of $7,437 for printing and $37,266.77 for paper.

2. For printing: Yes (a) 11 (b) yes.

For paper: Tenders were not called. The specifications for the paper required could be met by only one mill. The first of many requisites was the necessity for rag content and the company awarded the contract was the only manufacturer of rag bristol. Experiments by this mill have also produced a chemical additive which provides the extended life expectancy required for the stock.

The cost of the paper compares favourably with existing prices for other similar goods.

3. Yes.

4. The cost of the distribution of the application cards is not known at this time since the distribution has not yet been completed. For budget purposes an allowance of $200,000 was made for the total distribution costs to the unemployment insurance commission for all supplies associated with the registration, exclusive of costs for staff time. This included not only the cost of distribution of application cards, but also letters to employers, social insurance number cards and unemployment insurance books. It is not possible to estimate at this time the part of the total distribution cost that application card distribution represents.

*SALARY PAID MINISTER OF FORESTRY

Question No. 536—Mr. Pigeon:

What amount has the present Minister of Forestry received in salary from public funds since he was sworn in as a member of the cabinet?

Mr. Benson: The Minister of Forestry has received the statutory salary of a minister of the crown since February 3, 1964.

INCOME TAX EXEMPTIONS FOR VOLUNTEER FIREMEN

Question No. 540—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Is consideration being given to allowing all volunteer firemen to claim an exemption of $300 for income tax purposes in place of the present exemption based only on the actual cash received by way of honorarium by such volunteer firemen?

Mr. Benson: No.

INDUSTRIES ESTABLISHED IN DESIGNATED AREAS, N.S.

Question No. 542—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Up to the present date, how many industries have been established as a result of the incentives provided by the government, in the designated areas of the province of Nova Scotia, and what are the names of the companies concerned, type of industry, and where have they been established?

Mr. Drury: To date three new businesses are in the process of being established in Nova Scotia with the declared intention of benefiting from the designated area tax incentives program. Any announcement of a firm's intentions regarding location, type of business and planned employment is made by the firm itself. Premature disclosure by the government could affect adversely the establishment of a new business.

MUNICIPAL LOAN FUND APPLICATIONS, MARITIME PROVINCES

Question No. 546—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

How many applications have been received and approved under the municipal loan fund up to the present time in the provinces of (a) New Brunswick (b) Prince Edward Island, and (c) Newfoundland?

Mr. Benson: The number of applications received and approved to March 24 from these provinces is as follows:

Province	Number of Applications Received	Number of Loans Approved
(a) New Brunswick	13	11
(b) Prince Edward Island	2	2
(c) Newfoundland	13	3

C.N.R. AUTOMOBILE LOADING COMPOUND, SYDNEY, N.S.

Question No. 551—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Has a decision been reached by the Canadian National Railways in the matter of setting up a compound in the Sydney-North Sydney area for the handling of automobiles arriving on railway tri-level equipment for Cape Breton and Newfoundland and, if so, what is the nature of this decision?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Canadian National Railways advises that it is not the intention to establish a compound at this time.

POST OFFICE, REDNERSVILLE, ONT.

Question No. 557—Mr. Alkenbrack:

Did the Postmaster General, during November last, agree to open a post office in the village of Rednersville, Ontario, and, if so, when will such a post office be opened?

Mr. Nicholson: Yes. It was decided at that time that a post office closed in 1961 should be reopened at Rednersville, Ontario, in accordance with what the Postmaster General understood to be the wishes of the great majority of patrons residing within a half a mile radius of the proposed site. At that time the Postmaster General had been given to understand that the patrons concerned generally were agreeable to giving up service through rural mail boxes and receiving their mail through the proposed post office.

However, a conflicting petition was received on the 31st day of January 1964, and it was deemed advisable to resurvey the area. A further canvass has now been completed and as a result 33 of the patrons have expressed a preference for service through the proposed office, and 32 are against such a move.

This canvass revealed that generally those persons residing within a quarter of a mile of the proposed site for the post office are in favour and those who reside further than a quarter of a mile are against the establishment of such a post office, if such action involves termination of the rural mail delivery service now being provided.

When a situation such as this occurs, it is the normal policy of the Post Office Department not to make any change in the existing arrangements because of the resulting adverse effect on the community as a whole. In the circumstances, and since the patrons of the area are being adequately provided with rural mail delivery service, it has been decided not to proceed with the establishment of an office at Rednersville.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK LOANS, BEAUCE COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 559—Mr. Perron:

1. How many loans were made by the industrial development bank in the county of Beauce during 1961, 1962 and 1963?
2. What was the amount of each of these loans?
3. To whom were these loans made?
4. Were any requests for loans refused and, if so, to whom were the refusals made, and what amounts were involved?

[Translation]

Answer: 1, 2, 3 and 4. The information requested is not available. Loan approvals are classified by provinces on pages 14 and 15 of the last annual report of the industrial development bank and by types of businesses on pages 16 and 17 of that report.

ADVERTISING REVENUE, STATION CJBC, TORONTO

Question No. 563—Mr. Cowan:

What was the division of the advertising revenue of radio station CJBC, Toronto, in the month of February, 1964, between advertising in the French language and advertising in the English language?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am advised by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that all advertising revenue of station CJBC for the month of February, 1964 was from advertising in the English language.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS, BEAUCE COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 566—Mr. Perron:

1. How many loans were made by the small businesses loan fund in the county of Beauce during 1961, 1962 and 1963?
2. What was the amount of each of these loans?
3. To whom were these loans made?
4. Were any requests for loans refused and, if so, to whom were the refusals made, and what amounts were involved?

[Translation]

Mr. Benson: 1 and 2. Statistics on regional distribution of loans made by the chartered banks under the Small Businesses Loans Act are available by provinces but not by counties.

3. The identity of individuals to whom loans are made by the chartered banks is confidential.

4. The banks do not provide information concerning loan applications which have been refused.

HONOURS TO COMMANDER OF R.C.M.P. VESSEL "ST. ROCH"

Question No. 568—Mr. Basford:

1. What honours, medals, or titles have been conferred by the government of Canada on Captain Henry Larsen, who commanded the R.C.M. Police vessel, St. Roch on its historic voyages of circumnavigation of the North American continent in both directions?
2. In the arrangements now being completed by the city of Vancouver and the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources for the proper housing and restoration of the R.C.M. Police vessel St. Roch, are any funds made available so that Captain Henry Larsen can be invited to and honoured at the opening ceremonies of the restored St. Roch?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. Polar medal, 1943; bar to Polar medal, 1946.

2. No, since under the contemplated arrangement any such ceremony would presumably be organized by the civic authorities who would undoubtedly recognize Captain Henry Larsen's famous association with this vessel.

M.M.R.A. VEHICLES, CUMBERLAND, N.S.—TENDER FOR SALES AND SERVICE

Question No. 571—Mr. Coates:

1. What firms in Cumberland are invited to tender for the sale of motor vehicles to the M.M.R.A. and what dealerships do they represent?
2. What firms in Cumberland are invited to tender on the overhaul and repair of motor vehicles owned by the M.M.R.A.?
3. From what firms in Cumberland does the M.M.R.A. purchase oil and gasoline?
4. Are any firms in Cumberland excluded from the opportunity to tender on the replacement of motor vehicles, repair and overhaul of motor vehicles, and on the sales of oil and gasoline for the M.M.R.A. and, if so, what firms?

Answer: 1. Those firms which sell motor vehicles having the specifications required. The last tender call for vehicles was in November 1963 and the following firms were invited to tender:

Cameron and Wilson, Amherst, N.S., Chrysler products. Cumberland Equipment Ltd. Amherst, N.S., Pontiac and G.M.C. trucks. Tantramar Motors Ltd. Amherst N.S., Chevrolet and G.M.C. trucks. Rivers and Dickinson Ltd., Amherst, N.S., International. D. A. Casey Ltd., Amherst, N.S., Ford and Ford trucks. Claude W. Carter, Springhill, N.S., Mercury, Meteor and Mercury trucks.

2. For overhaul and costly repairs, the firm which supplied the vehicle, and other garages including the above, known to be competent.

3. Bulk gasoline purchases made principally from the Irving Oil Company Ltd. Bulk oil purchases from British American, Imperial and Texaco Oil Companies. All drivers are provided with credit cards honoured by dealers for all major oil companies, and they use their discretion in making purchases. A conscious effort is made to divide the business.

4. No.

INDUSTRIES ESTABLISHED IN DESIGNATED AREAS

Question No. 584—Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron):

1. How many new industries, by provinces, and areas have been established in Canada under the designated area program since this legislation was enacted?

2. How many new jobs have been created by these new industries?

3. What is the estimated cost to the treasury through loss in revenue by special concessions given to these new industries?

Mr. Drury: 1. Thirty four new businesses are being established in Canada with the declared intention of benefiting from the designated area tax incentives program since the enactment of the legislation on December 5, 1963. A provincial breakdown is as follows: Alberta, B.C., 1; New Brunswick, 2; Nova Scotia, 3; Ontario, 17; Quebec, 11; total, 34.

No further breakdown by designated area is shown at this date because of the need to prevent premature disclosure of company plans which could adversely affect the establishment of a new business.

2. A total of 4,251 new jobs is reported by the companies. This figure does not include indirect increases in employment by suppliers, service and construction industries.

3. No estimate of the value of tax exemptions is available.

MOTOR VEHICLE PURCHASES, AGRICULTURE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 591—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

From May 1, 1963 to March 1, 1964 how many motor vehicles have been purchased by the Department of Agriculture (a) manufactured or assembled in Nova Scotia (b) manufactured or assembled in Ontario (c) imported from the United States (d) imported from other countries?

Mr. Hays: (a) Nil; (b) 185; (c) nil; (d) 1; total, 186.

ANNUAL PRECIPITATION, GREAT LAKES DRAINAGE AREA

Question No. 595—Mr. Smith:

What was the annual precipitation (snow and rain) in the area draining into lake Superior, lake Michigan and lake Huron for each of the years 1953 to 1963 inclusive?

Mr. Pickersgill: The average annual precipitation (snow and rain) given in inches of liquid, in the areas draining into lake Superior, lake Michigan and lake Huron during the years 1953 to 1963 inclusive is as follows:

	Lake Superior drainge basin	Lake Michigan lake Huron drainage basin
1953	33.76	30.20
1954	31.07	36.25
1955	34.19	28.36
1956	27.01	29.80
1957	28.97	34.00
1958	29.67	26.01
1959	32.66	37.47
1960	31.26	33.73
1962	27.19	27.80
1963	25.30	26.12

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—EXTENSION TO TEACHERS

Question No. 597—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

Is it the intention of the government to place the school teachers in Canada under the Unemployment Insurance Act as recommended by the Gill committee?

Mr. MacEachen: The Gill committee report is under review. The government's intention on the recommendations contained in this report will be announced in due course.

P.E.I. CAR FERRY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 612—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

With reference to vote 65 of the Department of Transport estimates passed by parliament for the fiscal year 1963-64, of the $100,000 voted for auto-ferry vessel for the Prince Edward Island car ferry service (a) how much was spent on this project (b) how much, if any, of this amount lapsed (c) how much, if any, of this amount was used for other projects in this vote?

Mr. Pickersgill: (a) Expenditure to March 31 1964, was $109,169.85; (b) and (c) not applicable.

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN DEVELOPMENT CONTRACT

Question No. 618—Mr. Pascoe:

1. Was a contract awarded recently in connection with the South Saskatchewan river development project to McNamara Construction Limited in Edmonton and, if so (a) what was the amount thereof (b) when were tenders first called (c) when were they opened (d) on what date was the contract awarded?

Questions

2. What are the names and addresses of the contractors and/or companies who tendered on this contract and what was the amount of each tender?

Mr. Hays: 1. Yes. (a) $15,598,860; (b) February 5 and 6, 1964; (c) March 4, 1964 (d) March 19, 1964.

2. McNamara Construction Western Limited, Edmonton, Alta., $15,598,860.

Western Contracting Corporation (Sask.) Limited, Regina, and W. D. Wells Construction Company Ltd., Saskatoon, Sask., $18,898,695.

Paul Hardeman Constructors Limited, Vancouver, B.C., $19,947,800.

Mannix Company Limited and Standard-General Construction (International) Ltd., and Tallman Construction Co., Ltd., Calgary, Alta. $21,428,962.

Piggott Construction Limited, Saskatoon, Sask., $21,472,242.80.

*SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN DEVELOPMENT PROGRESS AND COST

Question No. 622—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Is the rate of progress in the construction of the South Saskatchewan river development project on schedule as forecast in the engineering plans made in 1959? If not, in what phases or aspects is the project?

2. What is the total expenditure for said project made to date by the federal government?

3. To whom and in what amounts have contracts in connection with said project been let since the first day of January, 1964?

Mr. Beer: 1. The rate of progress in the construction of the South Saskatchewan river development project has been such that the work is approximately six months behind the schedule forecast in 1959. Construction of the river diversion tunnels was completed behind this schedule and delayed the diversion of the river from August 1963 to February 1964. Progress on most other components of the project was contingent on the diversion of the river and has been delayed a corresponding period of time.

2. The total expenditure for said project made to February 25, 1964 by the federal government is $72,852,241.47. Of this amount $11,673,663.90 has been recovered from the provincial government.

3. Construction contracts awarded since January 1, 1964 have been with: Falcon Engineering Co. Ltd., Calgary, Alberta, $65,906.18; McNamara Construction Western Ltd., Edmonton, Alberta, $15,598,860.

INDUSTRIES IN DESIGNATED AREAS

Question No. 624—Mr. Stenson:

1. How many industries have settled in the designated areas since these areas were set up?

2. What are the names of these industries?

3. How many people will each industry employ in the next three years?

4. What will their advantage be economically and financially?

5. Is the Department of Industry changing the rules of selecting the designated areas?

[Mr. Pascoe.]

Mr. Drury: 1. Thirty four new businesses are being established in Canada with the declared intention of benefiting from the designated area tax incentive program since this legislation was enacted on December 5, 1963.

2. Any announcement of a firm's intentions regarding location, type of business, and planned employment is made by the firm itself. Premature disclosure by the government could affect adversely the establishment of a new business.

3. A total of 4,251 new jobs are reported by the companies. This does not include indirect increases in employment by suppliers, service and construction industries. No breakdown of the figure by business is given because this is a subject for disclosure by individual firms.

4. Eligible business receive a three year exemption from federal income tax and special capital cost allowances on machinery, equipment and buildings. No forecast of the value of advantages to the new businesses is available.

5. The area development agency of the Department of Industry has under active consideration the method of selecting designated areas.

VISUAL REQUIREMENTS, CIVIL PILOT'S LICENCE

Question No. 625—Mr. Loney:

With regard to the medical requirements for a civil pilot licence are there any pilots licensed by the civil aviation branch who have not met the visual requirements of the regulations?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. Pilots licensed by the civil aviation branch must qualify in accordance with the physical standards prescribed. The inclusion of an internationally recognized flexibility clause, however, permits some allowance with respect to detailed requirements in the case of an experience pilot. Where visual acuity is concerned, allowance is confined to the uncorrected acuity, full correction must be achieved by wearing glasses.

INQUIRY INTO AIR LINE SAFETY MEASURES

Question No. 627—Mr. Langlois:

Is any examination being made of the possibilities of establishing a commission to enquire into safety measures applied by various commercial air lines operating in Canada and, if so, (a) will such commission be authorized to enquire into the safety measures applied to private planes operating from commercial airports (b) how soon would it be possible to establish such a commission?

[Translation]

Answer: The establishment of a special commission for the purposes stated is not under consideration. The matter of aviation safety standards is under constant and continuing review at all times by both government and industry.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICE, TIMMINS, ONT.

Question No. 628—Mr. Martin (Timmins):

1. Are any plans contemplated to split the employment office in Timmins, Ontario into one office to handle employment and the other to handle unemployment insurance claims?
2. Are any plans contemplated to move the employment claims office out of the area and, if so, how is this reconciled with the Department of Labour's action in classifying Timmins as a depressed area in need of special consideration?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. Consequent to the decision to transfer the national employment service to the Department of Labour some consideration is being given to local office organization but no decision has yet been reached.

2. No.

BRUCELLOSIS TESTS, CHAPLEAU COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 635—Mr. Laprise:

1. How many tests for brucellosis were made on herds in Chapleau county in 1963?
2. How many herds were affected by the disease?
3. How many animals were killed in each herd?
4. Who were the owners of the various herds, and how much did the government pay in compensation to each owner?

Mr. Hays: 1. Brucellosis testing in Chapleau county was conducted under the areas formerly designated at Abitibi East and Abitibi West.

Thirty four thousand, four hundred and eighty one tests for brucellosis were made on herds in Chapleau county in 1963.

2. Animals in 52 herds were affected by the disease.

3 and 4. It has been the practice that amounts paid to owners in the form of compensation for animals slaughtered under the provisions of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act are not disclosed publicly. It is considered undesirable to divulge the names of the people who have been ordered to have animals slaughtered under various disease programs since it could be considered by some as a reflection on the health status of their herds because of circumstances over which they have no control. The following does provide the information in the question without revealing the names of those people involved:

FRENCH SPEAKING RESIDENTS, CJBC BROADCAST AREA

Question No. 638—Mr. Loney:

1. What is the approximate number of French speaking Canadians residing in the broadcast area of CJBC?
2. What is the percentage of French speaking Canadians in comparison to English speaking Canadians in this area?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. On the basis of d.b.s. official languages tabulations, there are approximately 163,000 French speaking Canadians within the total coverage area of CJBC. Of this total, 67,000 list their mother tongue as French.

2. The total approximate population of the CJBC coverage area is 4,175,000. Thus, French speaking Canadians are approximately 0.40 per cent by official language, and 0.16 per cent by mother tongue.

MOTOR VEHICLE PURCHASES, NAPPAN EXPERIMENTAL FARM, N.S.

Question No. 648—Mr. Coates:

How many motor vehicles were purchased by Nappan experimental farm in Cumberland from April 1, 1963, to March 31, 1964 and (a) from what firm, or firms, were these vehicles purchased (b) what was the amount of the lowest bid (c) was it submitted by the successful tenderer and (d) what other firms were invited to tender in each instance?

Mr. Hays: One ½-ton pick-up truck was purchased by Nappan experimental farm in Cumberland from April 1, 1963, to March 31, 1964. (a) Cumberland Equipment Limited, Amherst, Nova Scotia; (b) $1,975 (including trade-in); (c) yes; (d) Tantramar Motors Limited, Amherst, Nova Scotia; D. A. Casey Limited, Amherst, Nova Scotia; Rivers and Dickinson Limited, Amherst, Nova Scotia; George M. Harrison, Amherst, Nova Scotia; MacCann Garage, MacCann, Nova Scotia.

NATIONALIZATION OF CANADIAN BANKS IN CUBA

Question No. 651—Mr. Cote (Chicoutimi):

1. After the Canadian banks or branches of Canadian banks were nationalized in Cuba, did the Cuban government compensate Canadian owners or shareholders?
2. What was the currency given in compensation and in what amount?
3. Did the Bank of Canada intervene in this matter, and in what way was it able to protect Canadian interests?
4. Has the Bank of Canada accepted Cuban currency on behalf of Canadian interests?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. After the branches of the two Canadian banks operating in Cuba were nationalized, the Banco Nacionale de Cuba paid to each of the banks an amount equivalent to its total invested capital and unremitted profits on the books of its branches in Cuba.

2. The compensation was paid in United States dollars. The total amount so paid is not a matter of public record.

3. All transactions involved were arranged entirely between Banco Nacionale de Cuba and the two Canadian banks.

4. Answered by 3.

CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING TARIFFS

Question No. 677—Mr. Stenson:

1. Has the attention of the Minister of Industry been drawn to the Canadian General Electric's announcement last Thursday that tariff philosophies are not conducive to making needed investments in export facilities in Canada, and that they are setting up plants in Europe and Latin America rather than investing in export plants in this country?
2. If so, what steps have been or will be taken in this regard by the government?

Mr. Drury: 1. Yes, I have seen the comments made by the president of Canadian General Electric Company Limited respecting the forthcoming round of tariff negotiations.

2. The government has announced the basic principles which will be followed in the negotiations. These are set out on pages 972 and 973 of Hansard.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

CENTENNIAL PROJECT GRANTS

Question No. 454—Mr. Latulippe:

1. How many grants of all kinds has the government given to or provided for provincial or municipal governments, organizations, groups or individuals in connection with centennial projects?
2. To whom were these grants given, what were the amounts involved and what was the project planned?
3. What are the names of the organizations which to date have informed the government of their intent to undertake a special project for the centenary?

4. Who, on behalf of the responsible federal minister, is in charge of the administration and co-ordination of all centenary projects?

5. Are there any statistical data on the amounts that have been invested to date in various projects and, if so, what are they, by project?

Return tabled.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

WINDSOR—U.S. CONTROL OVER TELEVISED HOCKEY BROADCASTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): I have a question for the Secretary of State. In his absence I could perhaps direct it to the acting minister or to the Prime Minister. The question arises out of the disappointment and dissatisfaction felt by viewers of sports broadcasts put out by the C.B.C. last week in southwestern Ontario, especially in the Windsor area. Is it a fact that our C.B.C. is under United States control to the degree that the manager of the Olympia arena in Detroit directs which broadcasts of hockey games may be televised in the area even to the extent, as alleged, that all televised games from Toronto come into Windsor only by courtesy of United States permission?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Perhaps I can deal with this matter which is of such great importance to so many people and tell the hon. member that his anxiety about this inadequacy is shared by many, including my hon. friend from Essex East and others from that part of the world who have already brought this to my attention in very strong terms.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REPORTED STATEMENT BY COMMANDER OF CANADIAN REGIMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement recently made by the commander of the Royal 22nd regiment that the honeymoon was now over for Canadians in Cyprus and that a blood bath was imminent on the island, can the minister give the house an up to date report on this operation with a particular assurance that all measures have been taken to avoid possible loss of life?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have not seen the statement to which the hon. member directs my attention. I may say, however, that the most recent communication from Canada's high commissioner in Cyprus suggests that the United Nations peace keeping body in which Canada is participating is proving a very useful factor in the stabilization of that troubled island.

Mr. Martineau: In view of the minister's answer perhaps I had better send him over today's newspaper.

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR BRIGADE HEADQUARTERS STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has a final decision now been made by the government to send a brigade headquarters staff to Cyprus and, if so, how many Canadian personnel are involved?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question on Friday I said we were considering a request from the United Nations secretary general to provide a brigade headquarters staff for the United Nations peace keeping force, and a few staff officers for General Gyani's headquarters. The government has now decided to meet these requests and my colleague, the Associate Minister of National Defence, has the details.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question I can say that the Department of National Defence has received two formal requests from United Nations headquarters, through the Department of External Affairs. The first is for the provision of five Canadian staff officers for General Gyani's United Nations force headquarters. The second had to do with the provision of a brigade headquarters, a signal squadron and a headquarters company, the latter for local domestic support of the brigade headquarters and the United Nations headquarters.

It is clear that some of the appointments in the brigade headquarters will be filled by personnel from the other participating nations. The role of the brigade headquarters will be to take over command of the Nicosia zone which is at present commanded by the British 16th parabrigade group headquarters. The headquarters will be responsible for the domestic support of the United Nations force headquarters and may be responsible for the administration of part of the Swedish contingent in the northwest portion of Cyprus. It will have under command the Canadian contingent, two British units of battalion size and the Finnish contingent, as well as a number of logistic units.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I am sure hon. members can appreciate how difficult it is to establish exactly how many personnel are required, and in order to be able to determine this Brigadier Tedlie will depart from Trenton on Thursday, April 16, with an advance party of approximately 20 people. The Thursday flight is the normal weekly maintenance flight to Cyprus. On arrival Brigadier Tedlie will confirm the establishment required and call forward the balance of his headquarters, the signal unit and the headquarters company of domestic and administrative personnel.

Although it has been difficult to come to an exact figure as to the number of additional personnel required, it is estimated that the additional number of personnel to be sent to Cyprus, including the five officers in General Gyani's headquarters and the brigade headquarters, will total approximately 156. This would make the total number of Canadian forces in Cyprus 1,088. Hon. members will notice that this is well under the ceiling established in the order in council, which provided for 1,200 Canadian personnel in Cyprus.

CYPRUS—REPORTED REQUEST FOR R.C.M.P. CONTINGENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

It is based on the C.B.C. news bulletin at one o'clock. May I ask the minister if it is true that the United Nations asked Canada to send 40 R.C.M.P. officers to Cyprus?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, discussions have been held between the secretary general and representatives of various countries, and Canada is of the opinion that the proposal should be considered by all nations, especially since Canada and other countries are now participating in the United Nations force.

Mr. Pigeon: As far as the R.C.M.P. is concerned—

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to get more accurate information from the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the question I asked him a while ago. Could he tell the house whether it is true that the United Nations has officially asked Canada to consider the possibility of sending an R.C.M.P. contingent to Cyprus?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Cardin.]

VIET NAM—REPORTED U.S. PRESSURE TO ATTACK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct an important question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the pressures being brought to bear on the United States government by certain elements within the United States to settle the unfortunate Viet Nam situation by an attack on North Viet Nam, has the Canadian government indicated its fears as to what this might mean with respect to world peace if such action is taken?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There have been very full discussions between Mr. Rusk and myself and between other representatives of the two governments with respect to this matter.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—REQUEST FOR REVISED ACTUARIAL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the desirability of having at hand all possible information before we reach the debate on the second reading of the Canada pension plan, can the Prime Minister find out whether there is an updated actuarial report on the plan similar to the one we had last year and, if so, can such an updated report be made available to members of the house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will look into that question at once as a matter of urgency.

SOCIAL INSURANCE

NOVA SCOTIA—TELEGRAM FROM TEACHERS UNION RESPECTING REGISTRATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him if he has received a telegram from the secretary of the Nova Scotia teachers union complaining of the fact that boards of education in the province have been advised that all employees must register for a special insurance number and that if they do not they are subject to prosecution for failing to do so.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I have not received a telegram to that effect but I think a similar telegram was sent to my hon. friend from Halifax, who drew it to my attention just as I came into this house.

The fact is, of course, as I tried to indicate on Friday, that the printing used in one section of the sheet of instructions is set out in such a way that it might be interpreted to include the whole set of instructions, when in fact it applies only to the insurance book renewal, namely, to those persons in the insured population who have an obligation to register.

I will be glad to get in touch with Mr. Parker and explain the circumstances to him.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary question. Under the law as it exists at the moment, registration is voluntary for certain teachers, at any rate; yet they have received notice from the unemployment insurance commission that they are now subject to prosecution if they do not comply. Is this an extension of an act of parliament of which the House of Commons has not been advised, or is it an intrusion on the part of the federal government into the field of education which comes strictly under the control of the provincial governments?

Mr. MacEachen: It is neither. The teachers are free to register if they wish. It is my hope they will register. This is really a misunderstanding based on the size of the print at the bottom of the sheet of instructions.

Mr. Nowlan: My final supplementary question on this matter. I take it from the minister's answer that it is up to the teachers whether they register or not?

Mr. MacEachen: Absolutely.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker. I apologize again for returning to registration for unemployment insurance, but I am wondering why it is departments of the government are still sending out notices that in no way bear a relationship to what the minister has said is the rule. I have before me a circular letter to all employees having to do with the department of printing and stationery. I quote the pertinent part:

The new system includes issuance of a social insurance number to all employed persons whether covered by unemployment insurance or not.

This notice is dated April 7. It goes on:

The unemployment insurance commission therefore has undertaken the registration of all employees whether insured or not under the Unemployment Insurance Act for the purpose of allocating a new number. Before a new social insurance number can be allocated all employees residing in the Ottawa-Hull area must complete an application for a social insurance number.

Is it not possible that this series of disorderly announcements which bear no relationhip to what the minister has said could be obviated by one general order, instead of some people being placed in the position where they are threatened unless they register while others are free not to register?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I tried to follow the reading of the statement by my right hon. friend as I listened to him. I did not get the impression that the statement indicated that all employees were obliged to register. It is our desire—

Mr. Diefenbaker: So that the minister has the words I will read them again:

Before a new social insurance number can be allocated all employees residing in the Ottawa-Hull area must complete an application—

Then over the page it says:

A final return date has been established for April 13, 1964.

Mr. MacEachen: Well, of course, Mr. Speaker, before a number can be issued the form must be filled out. That is how I interpret the statement, but I want to make it clear again, as I have done for several weeks now in the house, that the mandatory aspect is with respect to the insured population, which aspect derives from the authority of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Notwithstanding the apprehension which may have been expressed by particular groups of the population, I think it is still a good idea for all Canadians to come forward and register voluntarily.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is not a question whether it is a good idea or not; these people are being led to believe that the government has a power it has not got. I want to ask the minister whether he will also give consideration to this. As suggested by the Saskatchewan teachers federation, some teachers have been threatened that they will be prosecuted unless they comply with this registration, as a result of which threat they did comply. They now ask that their registrations be returned, they have been made under a misapprehension and through a misdirection.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly be very surprised if any teacher has been threatened. Certainly it is not the desire of the commission or the government to have any person threatened when there is no legal obligation upon him to come forward. I have attempted to make the situation clear from the very first time the matter has been raised in the house, and I have explained it again today.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour which is based on his statement of a moment ago that applying for a social insurance number is voluntary for non-insured persons but a good idea. Since that is the case, and since the minister himself is presently in non-insured employment, has he voluntarily come forward and applied for one of these social insurance numbers?

Mr. Pearson: You will soon be unemployed yourself.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have not come forward, but I will be delighted to do so today.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question. When the minister has found out how he can apply for a social insurance number, will he let the rest of us know too in case we should like to apply?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour relative to the completion of the unemployment insurance cards. A moment ago the minister stated that the teachers were not compelled to complete these cards and that there was no compulsion involved. I have a copy of the telegram which was forwarded to him by Mr. Tom Parker, the executive secretary of the Nova Scotia teachers union, which states in part:

> Strongly protest recent letter to school boards from national employment office U.I.C. requiring boards ensure that all employees register for a special insurance number and declaring it an offence not to comply.

Will the minister make it very clear that it is not an offence for the teachers not to complete these cards?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have made it clear, and I shall be glad to make it clear again. I think one ought to understand the background with respect to the apprehension of the teaching profession with respect to this card. The Gill committee, in its examination of the Unemployment Insurance Act, has recommended that additional groups including teachers be brought within the coverage of that act. Teachers' groups are opposed to this, and I believe they feel that if they fill out this form they give some indirect support to that recommendation of the Gill committee, which of course is quite incorrect.

Whatever coverage is undertaken for additional classes of people will be up to the parliament of Canada, and is an entirely separate decision. The filling out of these social insurance forms would not, in my judgment, affect the decision in any way.

Mr. Martineau: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I interject to say that we seem to have had an extended discussion on this quite important matter and questions have come from all across Canada, all directed to this one subject. I think the minister has stated his position reasonably clearly, and I think hon. members have made their points very clear. May I suggest that we get on to something else.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. It is related to the previous question and I think it is of very great importance. During the reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre the Prime Minister made an interjection and said, "You had better because you may soon be unemployed". I want to ask the Prime Minister, is he contemplating calling an early election?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my hon. friend for giving me an opportunity to deal with this important, unrelated question; because I know there has been much talk lately of a quick election, and I would like to say on this subject the government has no intention, nor has it had any intention, of assisting and co-operating in any way with those who want to force on the Canadian people a third election in two years. We propose to carry on with our parliamentary program and get the items of that program planned for this session before parliament, and we propose to do that as quickly as we can.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I note there is general agreement with that, and suggest to the Prime Minister it would have been well had he told his colleagues this and they would not have had the meeting they had the other night.

Mr. Pearson: Although, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman has made a suggestion and not asked a question, and therefore is out of order, I would like to set his mind at rest. There was no such meeting the other night.

[Later:]

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to address one more question to the Minister of Labour because my telegram from Saskatchewan states categorically that some teachers have been threatened with prosecution unless they register.

I should like to ask him to inquire into the source of these threats and see that they are withdrawn, and that no more are made by any agency under his jurisdiction.

Mr. MacEachen: I will be very surprised if any threats have been made. Possibly this interpretation has been regarded as a threat, but we will take steps to make sure no teacher feels there is a threat involved.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Labour. In order to overcome this great confusion which exists across the country in connection with this matter, will the minister consider using some of the $200,000 that has been set aside for advertising this program to notify people that only those who come under unemployment insurance must fill out these cards?

REGISTRATION OF EMPLOYEES OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister. I may say I have received from the teachers federation of the province of Saskatchewan a complaint similar to the one which my hon. friend has just brought up, to the effect that teachers have been threatened with prosecution if they did not register.

However, it is not of that I wish to speak. My question has to do with the employees of crown corporations and, in particular, of the Canadian National Railways. Have the crown corporations been advised that their employees do not need to register unless it is in connection with unemployment insurance? I am informed that Canadian National Railways and other crown corporations are proceeding as if registration were compulsory. Will the minister make this situation clear, since apparently there is a duality of interpretation still taking place? This should be cleared up at once.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The situation, Mr. Speaker, is that only employees within the insured population are obliged to register under the authority of the act. I shall be glad to investigate this particular matter and clear it up.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the hon. gentleman tell us whether the officers of his department are now working on a plan to prolong the winter works program in the designated areas after April 30 of this year?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I have assured the hon. gentleman that this suggestion will be considered. However, that consideration has not yet been completed.

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister received telegrams from the municipalities of such designated areas to the effect that the winter works program for this year should be prolonged?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to check into that particular aspect of the matter and identify the telegrams, as to whether they have come from designated areas.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. Would he consider this not only for the designated areas but for all areas of Canada?

Mr. MacEachen: I have already stated that it is not the intention of the government to apply an extension generally to the municipal winter works program. That decision has already been made. What is still under consideration is the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Can the minister tell the house whether the Quebec government has made representations to his department, in order that the works period be extended to May?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, subject to checking; and if I prove to be wrong I will advise my hon. friend.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Has the Minister of Labour received any representations from the association of Canadian mayors and municipalitiies for a further extension?

Mr. MacEachen: I will also check into that, Mr. Speaker. I do not recall having received any representations recently.

SHIPPING

EFFECT OF LOW WATER LEVELS IN GREAT LAKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is the minister ready to make the statement on the water levels of the great lakes and Georgian bay which he promised last week?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, this report was prepared; I read it, but I was not too happy with it. There are further discussions—

Mr. Nowlan: You were not too happy with what, the water levels or the report?

Mr. Laing: I thought there was not enough water in it. I expect to make the report tomorrow.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I assume that the minister is asking for an objective report on whether some action can be taken to remedy the situation?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, it would still appear that the best thing we could do is pray for rain.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF KITIMAT RIVER—OPERATION OF MILLER BAY HOSPITAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I should like to direct a question to the hon. member for Hamilton East in his capacity as parliamentary secretary. My question is based upon a letter of which I gave him a copy just a few moments ago. I should like to pose the question. Is the department aware that recently two members of the Kitimat Indian band suffered acute gastroenteritis and the diagnosis of the doctor was that the cause of this ailment was the eating of contaminated fish from the Kitimat river occasioned by the pollution of that river by raw sewage? I ask the parliamentary secretary whether this matter will be looked into, to ensure the protection of the native people there.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask the parliamentary secretary if he would care to reply to a question I posed the other day regarding the hospital at Miller bay.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the first matter, on behalf of the minister I thank the hon. member and I will bring the letter to her attention. The minister will no doubt reply to it in the house.

As far as the second matter, concerning the Miller bay Indian hospital, is concerned, I would reply as follows. The Miller bay Indian hospital is not and never was intended to be an acute general hospital. It has been operated for the past 18 years as a 147 bed hospital for tuberculous Indians. Acute general care for British Columbia Indians has been provided in community general hospitals, through British Columbia hospital insurance services, on the same terms and conditions a their non-Indian neighbours.

Because of the progressive reduction in the Indian tuberculosis case load, the department hopes to be able to phase out the hospital's tuberculosis function over the next two or three years. Planning has been complicated by an acute bed shortage in Prince Rupert general hospital. Because general care beds are not always available for them in Prince Rupert, Miller bay has, for the past several years, been admitting local Indians urgently requiring general hospital care. When and if extra beds are available in Prince Rupert, these emergency beds in Miller bay will no longer be required and the department can proceed with the planned phase out of the tuberculosis institution.

Miller bay Indian hospital has played an important role in the department's anti-tuberculosis program for British Columbia Indians. It is, however, a former R.C.A.F. hospital of temporary wartime construction, and the buildings are rapidly nearing the end of their useful life. Inasmuch as the remaining Indian hospitals at Nanaimo and Sardis can now carry the full Indian tuberculosis case load, there will be no justification for the continuance of this substandard treatment facility.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether I could ask that the department approach the province of British Columbia to offer some financial assistance to the Prince Rupert general hospital, inasmuch as with the closing of the Miller bay hospital it is the only hospital in that area which will be able to accommodate native Indian people. Is the department prepared to assist financially in the additions to that hospital, in order to ensure that there will be adequate treatment facilities there?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to bring the hon. member's submission to the attention of the minister.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—INQUIRIES RESPECTING "DO NOT SHIP" LIST

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a couple of questions to the Minister of Labour.

One arises out of the question that I asked earlier as to whether the "do not ship" list is still in effect on the great lakes. Is it a fact that some 4,000 Canadian seamen are still on that list? In addition, does the S.I.U. continue to charge an initiation fee of $240 for every person who wants a job on a Canadian ship? Is that system going to be continued in effect?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the board of trustees advised me last week that when they took over there was no "do not ship" list in existence, and that they had placed a person in each of the hiring halls to see that this practice is not revived. In connection with the second part of the question, may I just say that I will check into the matter of initiation fees. However, I would remind the hon. gentleman that if the constitution of the S.I.U. provided for a special initiation fee the trustees, under the legislation, are not permitted to alter the constitution except with the consent of the membership. I do not know whether initiation fees are part of the S.I.U. constitution, and I will check that matter.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister says the trustees have advised him that there is no "do not ship" list, I wonder whether the minister could inquire from the trustees how the thousands of men who were put on the "do not ship" list can get back to work. They do not have the membership card which permits them to go into the hiring hall, so in fact they cannot go back to work and are, in effect, barred from working.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the trustees have assured me that they are ready to right any injustice that has affected any S.I.U. member. They have suggested, and I have suggested in the house, that any particular member of the S.I.U. having a grievance in this connection ought to get in touch with the board of trustees about the matter. That is the procedure that ought to be followed.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister inquire from the trustees, if this is true, why people who came to the trustees are being referred to Commander Robertson for adjudication of their grievances?

Mr. MacEachen: The first step, in so far as the trustees are concerned, is to have the matter drawn to their attention. What procedures they follow after that is a matter for them, but I will be glad to inquire and report to my hon. friend.

[Later:]

Mr. MacEachen: May I refer to a statement I made earlier with respect to the S.I.U. constitution. As I recollect the provisions of the trusteeship act, the trustees can recommend changes to the constitution to the membership, and that rule generally prevails except in certain instances where extraconstitutional powers are granted to the trustees. I did not want to mislead the Leader of the Opposition in any way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, I was misled and I am surprised at the answer. I would now come back and ask the minister whether he was not misled when he said that the "do not ship" list is no longer in effect. I am informed that various seamen have been denied employment because they are on that list.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat that I have raised this question several times with Mr. Justice Dryer and as recently as Saturday, he being in Ottawa. He told me that the list was not in existence, and that if there is any way in which persons can inform them that this discriminatory practice is still being engaged in, the trustees would be glad to take whatever action they can.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday and Friday last the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre made inquiries concerning the number of orders for returns still outstanding from the first session of the present parliament. I now want to report that 10 orders for returns are still outstanding out of the 229 which were passed during that first session. On February 18, 1964, at the beginning of the present session, there were 49 returns outstanding and since that date 39 have been deposited, leaving a balance of 10. The departments concerned have been notified, and just as soon as the information is received from those departments it will be deposited in the house.

INCOME TAX

CLARIFICATION OF FINAL DATE FOR FILING RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In the last two or three weeks the finance department or the income tax department have been putting on a drive to get people to file their returns by April 15, and a lot of people have the idea that that is the date by which they should be filed. Would the Minister of Finance clear that matter up for the public, please?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the returns are due on April 30. I am sure if there is any further information on this particular point which my hon. friend would like to have, the Acting Minister of National Revenue will be glad to supply it.

Mr. Cardiff: I think a mistake has been made as far as the public are concerned. These statements which have been made on the radio and television seem to indicate that the 15th is the deadline instead of the 30th.

POWER

PEACE RIVER—APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works and arises out of the answer he gave to a question of mine on Friday last, when he informed me that the government was now looking into the question of an application from the government of British Columbia for a licence under the Navigable Waters Protection Act with regard to the Peace river——because at this time we have not received any application from the province.

In view of the fact that six months ago the former minister of justice, Hon. Lionel Chevrier, informed the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that it has been determined that the Peace river, at the point at which this construction work is going on, does come under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, I would like to ask the minister how much longer the government is going to look into this; and is there any connection whatever between the extraordinary delay in dealing with a flagrant and obvious defiance of the law on the part of the government of British Columbia and the improvident arrangements that the government has made in the past with British Columbia for the development of the Columbia river?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the last time this matter was brought up I told the hon. member that we were looking into it.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Six months ago.

Mr. Deschatelets: Not for six months. I told the hon. member the other day that the first problem was to determine whether at the dam site the Peace river was navigable.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That was done six months ago.

Mr. Deschatelets: I told the hon. member that an opinion was secured from the Department of Justice, which was in the affirmative. I repeat to the hon. member that we are looking into this matter. Communications were had with the government of British Columbia, and as soon as this matter reaches a conclusion I will be very glad indeed, as usual, to report to the house.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As a supplementary question, can the minister tell us of any other solution than calling on the premier of British Columbia to abide by the law? Further, why has the government waited six months after it had that determination as to the applicability of the act?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I am not ready today to give the house the decision which will be taken, but I still insist on saying that in the very near future a decision will be adopted and the house will be told accordingly.

AGRICULTURE

RECOMMENDATIONS OF QUEBEC CONCENTRATED MILK MANUFACTURERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Recently the Quebec concentrated milk manufacturers' association, of which Mr. Georges-Henri Vermette, prefet de Lotbiniere, is president, made recommendations to the agricultural stabilization board. I would like to ask the minister whether it is the intention of his department to implement those recommendations.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is surely a question for the order paper.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on March 20 the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, in reply to questions by myself and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, that he would consider taking part in the budget debate to make a definitive statement on the Canadian stand at the United Nations conference on trade and development and the relationship of that conference to the forthcoming GATT conference. I am wondering whether the minister is still prepared to do that.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if there is an opportunity I certainly intend to take part in the debate, and I shall try to cover these among other points.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON TRIP OF WHEAT BOARD CHAIRMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce under whose jurisdiction the Canadian wheat board comes. Since the chairman of the Canadian wheat board, Mr. McNamara, has returned from a two month trade mission in Russia and eastern Europe, can the minister report to the house, if he has received a report from Mr. McNamara, whether the mission was successful and will be beneficial to our country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think this has been a most successful trip by Mr. McNamara to the Soviet union and other countries, not because he was engaged in trade negotiations but because after the strenuous efforts he has made on behalf of Canadian farmers I think he deserved a holiday. He had an excellent holiday. I saw him in Winnipeg on Friday and he is in very good health. He did have some useful conversations with Soviet representatives and with other governments. Some of these were very successful indeed notwithstanding the fact that that was not the primary purpose of his trip. Therefore I think I can say to my hon. friend that from the point of view of Canadian farmers the trip was a great success.

AIR TRANSPORT

USE OF CRASH POSITION INDICATORS ON CHARTERED AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Transport if he can yet answer the question I asked him on April 7, of which he took notice at that time. It relates to the over-all government policy concerning the use of crash position indicators in chartered aircraft.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the matter is under consideration, but it is not customary to answer questions about policy in response to urgent questions on orders of the day. When a decision is made an announcement will be made at an appropriate time according to the rules.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the minister that this is an urgent matter, since hundreds of charter companies are desirous of ascertaining the policy of the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

LABRADOR

INQUIRY AS TO BOUNDARY BETWEEN QUEBEC AND NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the house if the whole of Labrador now comes under the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec, as indicated by the advertisement for Quebec savings bonds which appeared in the April 13 issue of the Financial Times of Canada?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the part of the hon. member's question that I could hear did not appear to me to be concerned with my functions as Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this question be put on the order paper.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

HULL, QUE.—VACANT POSITION OF DIRECTOR

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Public Works?

Could the minister point out to the authorities of the national capital commission that the office of commissioner for the Hull area has been vacant since February 6?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having raised the question, but I must advise him that we were aware of the fact and that an appointment to fill that office will be made in the near future.

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRICE FLUCTUATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Having in mind reported new fluctuations in the price of sugar, I wonder whether the minister would be good enough to ask the department to look into the matter and report to the house on the situation.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will recall that at their peak prices of sugar on the London market were about £105 per ton. When I spoke in the house in February and gave a report on the negotiations the price had declined to £80 per ton. At that time I felt confident in saying that the price would go down still further and that it would be undesirable to have any definitive negotiations then. Prices have since declined to a low of about £62 a ton, and during the last few weeks they have fluctuated between that figure and £68 per ton. They are now at £66½ per long ton. Indications in the futures market are that prices will go down still further, and under those circumstances I believe I was justified and continue to be justified in awaiting further developments.

HOUSING

REPORTED HALTING OF LOANS BY APPROVED LENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of information I am receiving that there is a complete drying up of N.H.A. loans from approved lenders, can the minister advise the house whether any steps have been taken to rectify the situation?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The matter is under immediate and urgent consideration at the present time, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DISCUSSION OF ORGANIZED CRIME WITH U.S. ATTORNEY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Justice a question. Can the minister tell us whether in his meeting tomorrow with U.S. attorney general Robert Kennedy they will be discussing the infiltration of organized crime into Canada and any plan that the government may have in mind to deal with American syndicates alleged to be beginning to move into Canada?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I suggest this is not a proper question for this time of the day, but I will take note of it as an indication from the hon. member of what he thinks is a proper suggestion for discussion.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 24, consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance), that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, the magnetic attraction of extreme positions has been well illustrated by the debate on the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance on March 16, and now before us again today. Some speakers who have taken part in the debate have denounced the Minister of Finance, who reduced the forecast deficit by one third from that of the last two years, for not having done more to achieve a balanced budget. Others who have spoken regard the minister as strangely unenlightened because he has refused to budget for a massive deficit which could be achieved by greater expenditures or by a cut in taxes.

Now, what both groups are ignoring is that neither a balanced budget nor a massive deficit is desirable as an end of economic policy, per se. Deficit spending or tax cutting are useful ways of stimulating a stagnating economy, but they are useful only up to a certain point. Beyond that point they only inflate the supply of money or credit in circulation. Balancing the budget has a deflationary effect in an expanding economy, for it means that the quantity of money or credit in circulation is being held constant while the economy as a whole expands.

A balanced budget brought about by the simple expedient of slashing expenditures will have a depressing effect on an economy. This does not mean, of course, that balanced budgets are to be anxiously avoided. A balanced budget is desirable if it should come about as the result of an economy so prosperous that with the rates of neither altered, government revenues overtake government expenditures.

The demand for a balanced budget and the demand for a massive deficit, both of which we have heard in this debate, are red herrings. They tend to obscure the important consideration in the formation of national economic policy, namely the possibilities given to our people to earn a living. The general availability of jobs in a productive economy is what is supremely important. Balanced budgets or massive deficits are important chiefly as they influence this fundamental consideration.

The scarcity of jobs, that is unemployment, is now a regional problem, concentrated mainly in eastern Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, as the Minister of Finance told us on both March 16 and March 24. The deluge of unemployment has receded so that most of the nation is now free, but unemployment persists, albeit at reduced levels, in certain areas, and most especially in Atlantic Canada. Consequently the approach of the government to the problem of unemployment must now be regional, and not general as a few months ago.

Those of us who come from Atlantic Canada are anxious to have our lower economic status corrected in so far as that lower economic status is the result not of nature but of laws and policies. It must be understood that we are not asking that natural resources be created by statute of this parliament, but we are asking that we be helped to overcome the special difficulties that our participation in Canada entails. These difficulties, which are basically three in number, spring from the fact that we are at the remote end of a narrow transcontinental economy rather than at the centre of a north Atlantic economic community. We are confined by tariff walls that do not help us much directly. In an age of improving transportation we are becoming relatively more and more isolated. Because of the centralized nature of Canada's savings and investment institutions, our savings have been drained away to produce prosperity elsewhere.

We would like to see freer international trade. We hope that the Kennedy round of negotiations under GATT will be highly successful. We want to see more and more economic and political co-operation among the nations of the world, and we should like to see the nations around the north Atlantic showing the way to co-operation.

But frankly, sir, we do not expect such moves to be so rapid as to free us soon from the disadvantages that pertain to our position at the extremity of Canada's national economic system. Consequently we were happy to see parliament recognize Canada's interest in the prosperity of the provinces by setting up the Atlantic development board and later by assigning funds to that board for its purposes. We are now elated that the board has set to work and is co-operating with the provinces in an exemplary way. It is co-operating with the municipalities, with the provinces and the federal government, and already it is producing results.

Mr. Coates: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Stewart: Yes.

Mr. Coates: Does the hon. member not have some concern about the state of the fund the Atlantic development board has available to it at the moment, and the fact that large sums are being paid out of what appears to be a small amount of money when you consider the over-all impact this board is supposed to have on the economy? And does he not think we should have increased the size of the fund to indicate to the people of the area that they have no need to worry about future development?

Mr. Stewart: In my view there is no question whatever but that the board should spend the money it was given, and spend it as rapidly and as efficiently as it can. I am quite sure that if the board comes back to this government and to this parliament, after having continued the record it so far has established, it will have no difficulty in acquiring more money to spend for useful purposes.

What I want to do now is simply to illustrate for the benefit of some of those members who do not come from the Atlantic area, the way in which the board has so far been useful. In December, 1962, speaking in this house, I mentioned a small town in my constituency, the town of Canso. This is a fine place, sir, with fine people. It is splendidly situated at the apex of a peninsula at the eastern end of the mainland of Nova Scotia. This peninsula protrudes out into the north Atlantic fishing grounds. When last I mentioned this town of Canso, the people were deeply discouraged. A great deal of money had been made there over the years in the fishery, but that money had been moved away to produce development elsewhere, and there had been little recapitalization locally. In fact the population had dropped by almost two thirds in the last 50 years.

However, during the last 16 months the picture has changed in Canso. An energetic company of competent fish processors has moved in; the provincial government of Nova Scotia has shown its willingness to co-operate; and the town of Canso has been willing to co-operate with the federal government. Consequently there is now planned there, the construction of what will be the most modern fish processing plant on the north American continent. In the meantime, the old plant is providing employment for the skilled workers of the community. Frankly, it is difficult to see how this would have been possible without the work of this board established by parliament, and without funds provided to that board by parliament. The future of this community has been assured. This shows what a board such as this, willing to co-operate with municipal, provincial and federal agencies, can accomplish when its members are determined to produce results. Now that a beginning has been made in Nova Scotia I confess we are anxious to see what will be done elsewhere.

In addition to the improvements in the fisheries which the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) is now planning in co-operation with the provincial fishery authorities, our region needs the modernization of its agriculture and of its forestry. We also need the introduction of more secondary industries. In many parts of eastern Canada, forestry and agriculture go together; they are connected as the foundation of the local economy, and the appointment of a minister whose duties embrace both these fields was, I think, a progressive move, especially when that minister is also charged with responsibility for carrying out the ARDA program. Our own attitude toward the ARDA program is one of cautious hope. Our caution springs from fear that the program will be approached with a reluctance borne of indolence and timidity. Our hope rises from an idea of what could be accomplished by way of the rehabilitation and development of large areas of our countryside if plans were formed imaginatively and carried out with zeal and energy. We wish that this parliament would hasten to confirm the minister in his new duties, for strong leadership in this field is needed immediately. We also need his leadership in the establishment of an eastern feed grain board or agency.

Last year the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), recognizing the need for secondary industries in provinces such as Nova Scotia, announced that tax incentives would be provided for new industry locating in designated areas. On March 16, 1964, he announced that the date by which an industry had to be in production in order to qualify for the incentives was to be changed from December 5, 1965, to April 1, 1967. That is a good step, but tax incentives only help to create a temporarily attractive economic climate; they are seldom enough to overcome the various inertial forces, some economic and some non-economic, which are drawing secondary industries toward the central part of Canada. British and European experience, as I mentioned in this house on December 10, 1962, has shown that specific assistance in various forms—the preparation of sites and facilities, capital grants to assist construction, and financial assistance during the settling-in period, can be most effective. I realize that many of these devices are not available to a federal minister of finance. Such measures can be initiated and are most likely to succeed in co-operation with provincial governments after a thorough but not too prolonged study of the resources available to maintain development. I should like to see the Atlantic development board encouraging secondary industry in Nova Scotia in these direct ways, in the closest co-operation with the provincial government of that province.

I suppose there will be squabbles occasionally about to whom the political credit for these activities should be given. However, I do not think the possibility of such squabbles, repulsive though they are, should deter us from taking this step if on other grounds it is desirable. We simply cannot afford to allow political pettiness to frustrate a program which is vital to the people of our region and, indirectly, to the entire nation to which the Atlantic area presents a special problem, as a result of its lack of economic development. I should hope that if this were acceptable to the province of Nova Scotia the board would seek authorization from this government to establish procedures allowing for direct co-operation with agencies of the province of Nova Scotia.

But even if our primary industries were flourishing and even if a score of new secondary industries were added, neither the prosperity nor the employment to which we aspire would result. A high division of labour in the provision of services as well as of goods is needed in Nova Scotia. Major population centres are needed, for it is only in such centres that a high proliferation of the service industries is possible. This means that new industrial developments should be planned and encouraged, not sporadically, but around natural or established centres, such as Halifax-Dartmouth, Mulgrave-Port Hawkesbury, and New Glasgow. Consequently, it would seem desirable to have Halifax-Dartmouth included just as soon as possible among the areas eligible for the various development incentives introduced by this government.

The necessary agencies for co-operation between the board and the various departments of the federal government are in existence. What is needed now is a vigorous and imaginative pooling of ideas and efforts between the Atlantic development board, the provincial government of Nova Scotia, the various municipalities and the various departments of this government.

So far, I have been inviting your attention, Mr. Speaker, to certain internal aspects of regional development in Atlantic Canada. I now wish to turn to the question of transportation, chiefly transportation between Atlantic Canada and the rest of the continent. It would be the height of folly to spend scores of millions of dollars encouraging secondary industry; it would be the height of folly to allow special tax incentives to new industries in this area, if those industries are to be choked off by transportation practices based on false notions masquerading as sound policy. We may assume that in the absence of some compelling reason, such as the location of natural resources, business in Canada will be drawn by savings in transportation and communication costs to the area roughly between Montreal and Windsor. This does not mean we should forget our efforts to build up and maintain a transcontinental Canada any more than the difficulties imposed by the law of gravity mean we should not build and maintain houses. We must face this question of transportation and communication costs. If we are prepared to insist upon the result we must be prepared to pay the price. If we propose, as I assume we all do, to maintain a prosperous ocean-to-ocean economy, it is necessary for us to have something which we have not had recently or, perhaps, ever, namely a new and clearly enunciated transportation policy.

The "value of service" system of fixing freight rates, under which the value of the commodity to be carried is highly influential in determining the amount to be charged by the transportation company, permitted interregional subsidization in favour of the maritimes; but at the same time it encouraged maritime industry to concentrate on the supplying of raw materials rather than on the supplying of manufactured or processed goods. For this reason, among others, our small manufacturing industries, unable to compete on the larger Canadian market by reason of higher transportation costs, closed down; and here we are, three or four generations later, striving to repair that damage.

Moreover, between 1947 and the present we have ignored the unpleasant fact that we must pay the transportation costs of national existence. We have allowed the laws of transportation economics to hold greater and greater sway. As trucking competition grew in the central region of the country the railways were obliged to hold down freight rate increases there and to seek compensating revenues at the extremities of the country. Each permission to increase rates had a compounding effect at the extremities—what I like to call the "saucer" effect. The present situation is aptly described in the report of the MacPherson royal commission on transportation. At page 27 of the first volume the commissioners state:

> These inequities—

They are referring to the inequities in the railway freight structure:

> —are principally a result of the fact that the railways' competitive position relative to other carriers has declined and, as a consequence, they have been forced to obtain a greater relative share of the revenues they require from the traffic which is least affected by competition. And, since the position of the railways vis-à-vis their competitors seems to continue to decline with each passing year, the degree of inequity experienced by the traffic still tied to the rails continues to grow with each general increase in freight rates which the railways are permitted to apply. If such a process is allowed to continue the end results are dismal to contemplate; either railway rates will become so high that "captive" traffic cannot move at all or else competitors will inevitably arrive on the scene to relieve the "captives" from their bondage—in either case, a source of revenue upon which the railways are increasingly dependant will have disappeared and the railway financial position will have become completely untenable.

In this situation you will understand readily why moves to keep the St. Lawrence river open longer and longer each year, and thus to bypass the Atlantic ports, seem calculated to heap insult upon injury.

Hon. members must realize that transportation policies are as vitally important to the future of the Atlantic provinces now as they have ever been in the years of our confederation. In 1867 the prospect of plunging Nova Scotia into the bedevilled cauldron of Upper and Lower Canadian politics was far from enticing. We were able to accept the invitation because it was clearly understood that national policy, especially national policy on transportation, would make confederation economically viable for us. We have no desire to become an 18th century-style mercantile colony, a colony preserved as a market for Ontario and Quebec while at the same time developments in transportation promote, first, the shipment out of the province of raw materials rather than finished goods and, second, the bypassing of our ports.

We still have no desire to become an 18th century-style mercantile colony.

We applaud the decision of this government to look into the ways in which the ports of Saint John and Halifax can be modernized. We regard that as a good harbinger of the future.

We know that efforts are being made to bring tourists into the Atlantic provinces by developing attractions there, such as the great fortress at Louisburg and the establishment of a new national park in the western part of Nova Scotia. Efforts are being made in various ways to encourage manufacturing there. Obviously additional provision is now needed for rapid and ample transportation facilities for both tourists and trucks between western Nova Scotia and new England. This is one specific thing that should be done immediately. But, sir, we are hoping for more from this government.

Since 1927 the government of Canada has been paying the railways millions of dollars each year in an effort to discharge the obligations to the maritime provinces recognized by the Duncan royal commission and by the preamble to the Maritime Freight Rates Act. Surely, now that the railways have lost the monopolistic position they formerly enjoyed in many parts of the country, things are ripe for us to ascertain if these annual payments to the railways offer the way most beneficial to the maritime provinces for the discharge of these obligations. These payments have been established in a statutory way and their validity is beyond doubt. What is not certain is that these payments should be paid directly to the railways, thus running the risk that they become a subsidy to the railways, rather than assistance to the shippers in the Atlantic provinces.

The present government already has begun to pay 90 per cent of the cost of completing the trans-Canada highway. I urge the government to remember its commitment, and here I quote directly from the pamphlet entitled, "A better break for the Atlantic provinces", to make available "financial assistance for building trunk highways in all four provinces to promote the tourist industry and provide better access to resources and markets". I think this is a commitment the discharge of which this government should undertake very soon; in fact, a beginning should be made this year. It would perhaps be a small beginning, but at least it would be a beginning.

In addition, I should like to see the government examine most seriously the possibility of obtaining permission from the appropriate United States authorities for the construction of an all-weather highway across the state of Maine to connect the Atlantic provinces with the eastern townships of Quebec, Montreal, and Ontario. The distance from Montreal to Moncton is, after all, only 400 miles; and the benefits from such a highway would be obvious. But there is a benefit which is not immediately obvious, and it is that it would introduce into the transportation situation in the Atlantic provinces a degree of competition such as is highly recommended by the MacPherson royal commission on transportation. I am not saying that this is something which inevitably should be done; I am saying that in this situation, where we need to review our transportation policy, it is something which should be considered and examined rapidly and thoroughly.

If unemployment is the major economic problem of the country, and if this has become a regional problem, then sir, the matters I have been putting before the house are of great concern. In 1867 Canada was joined by Nova Scotia very reluctantly, but we have overcome our reluctance and are now determined to do all we can to make Canada succeed economically, culturally and politically for the people of all its provinces. Our own economy is developing quite well. We are anxious to have it develop even better so that as the years go on we can make a greater and greater contribution to what we hope over the years will be a more and more perfect union.

[Mr. Stewart.]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) and followed some of his remarks very carefully. In particular he referred to criticisms which had been made of the Liberal program, I imagine referring to members of the opposition, and described them as a red herring. Let me say at once that there were none who paraded before the country in the last campaign more consistently than the Liberal party, criticizing the previous government's financial administration. At this stage of the game, viewed in retrospect, and in view of what has transpired, this is regrettable, because now we find greater areas of spending. Although the deficit appears to have reduced, we find in actual fact it would not have been, if the payment of corporation tax had not been moved forward. But for that I venture to say the deficit would have been equally as great in the coming year as it ever was in the past, perhaps even greater.

However, the point I wish to make initially is not that, but rather to indicate the confusion which exists as a result of government policy since the Liberal party took office a year ago this month. I think the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) put his finger on the point this afternoon when, in answer to a question regarding the filing of applications for social security, he said there had been some confusion. He may not have actually used that word; he may have said "misunderstanding"; but this confusion has spread into three or four fields, such as into the teaching profession, into crown corporations, and so on. The present government are currently known more for this than or anything else. Let me say that the program of confusion which has existed since the government took office in April of last year is one which needs a little further investigation at this time, and I am glad to have this opportunity to bring these matters to the attention of the government, and particularly to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon).

I should like to begin by giving the house a list of those areas in which I believe the government has mismanaged the affairs of the country, where they have caused confusion. In actual fact, in an age when we should be considering where the country as a whole is going it seems to me the government is unable to lift us, to give us leadership, or to give us direction in any of these fields.

First of all may I point to the present commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. With that I would couple the attitude currently taken by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Next is the situation which is being created in this country by this government owing to their proposed Canada pension plan. The third area, Mr. Speaker, concerns the redistribution of electoral boundaries. Another is government policy regarding veterans hospitals. Another is the situation regarding the flag we presently have for Canada. A further one concerns agricultural policy and the problems which exist within the country. Then there is the situation in the Department of Labour itself, which the government has brought about through its handling of the current dispute with the S.I.U. Another one concerns defence policy. For a government which has acted in the way it has and has spoken in the past in the way it has, the present policy of the government, although it may be desirable from the public's point of view, in restropect is a peculiar attitude for the government to take. Another area concerns unemployment insurance, and what has happened in this house during the past two weeks, to which I will be making further reference. Then recently there was the federal-provincial conference, and I draw attention to the relations which have existed since that time.

No doubt many hon. members in the house, even on the government side, could give me a longer list than the one I have just spelled out, Mr. Speaker, but I think that is enough for one contributor to this debate. To begin with—and again I refer to the transportation policies which were discussed by the previous speaker—I should like to make reference to something which was not in my mind previous to hearing the hon. member. I refer to the discussions which have taken place between the government and the industry which is most common in my constituency, the furniture industry. For the benefit of the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Moreau) we would probably be referred to as a rural constituency by most hon. members in this house. However, in the constituency of Grey-Bruce we have the largest centre for the manufacture of hard furniture in the Dominion of Canada. I know the government is thinking in terms of a reduction in tariffs in this field. This is an industry which is indigenous to the area in which it is currently located, and it would mean an end to that industry in Canada if this reduction took place. As a result of the situation which existed prior to the present government taking over the treasury benches, the people employed in that industry know only too well where their prosperity came from.

Before I proceed may I make a brief reference to some of the words used by the Minister of Finance at the time of the introduction of his budget. He said, as reported at page 969 of Hansard:

> All hon. members can take satisfaction from the improvement that has been occurring in economic conditions in Canada and from the optimism with which we can view the immediate future.

Those words would be true, Mr. Speaker, had he told us from whence and from what policies this outlook had emanated. It certainly did not result from anything which he presented to this house.

When I look back, Mr. Speaker, at his first budget and compare it with the one he has just brought down, it would seem that in 1963 he was trying to play the bad boy in the ball park and was saying: "If you won't let me bat I won't play". Then after he saw what could be done by his playmates in the field he threw his bat away and went home anyway. He has thrown out every policy he intended to bring into the house, except for one or two, such as the imposition of sales tax on building materials; and it would have been a lot better for him had he thrown that one out as well. Then this year, 1964, the Minister of Finance came in looking as though he had the world in his hands and made a very lengthy budget speech with what seemed a full bag that evening; but when the evening was over there was nothing there. It was full of hot air, and I think the country received it in exactly the same fashion. We are now in the second year of Liberal administration and all we find is the addition of confusion, to which I made initial reference in opening my remarks.

I also think of the introduction of his budget this year, which leads me to believe from my knowledge of the circumstances that this is the complete and total cause for the situation which has existed in this house over the last two weeks. As I said before, I shall be making further reference to this matter in due course.

If I may quote again from the remarks of the Minister of Finance in introducing his budget this year, he continued with these words:

> The deficit in our current account balance of payments with other countries is still too large but it is smaller than it has been since 1954. The prospects for the current year are good;

Then later he said this:

> Employment, production and incomes should all be substantially higher than last year for the country as a whole.

Then further:

> It was necessary to move quickly on a number of fronts, and understandably some of the proposals that were put forward were questioned at the time.

I would say that almost every proposal that was put forward was questioned at that time. Then he went on:

> It is now clear, however, that the main policy changes proposed last spring and summer have paid off well and will continue to pay off in the months and years ahead.

I do not know that the Minister of Finance at any time ever gave credit to the previous administration. He may have, but certainly in the tenor of his address to the house that evening he indicated to the country that any progress made was due to the policies which he and his government brought forward. Nothing could be further from the truth.

All that the Liberal representatives, who were sent to my constituency prior to the last election campaign, complained about was the financial problems we had in the country. In contrast, I wonder what the Minister of Finance and his colleagues would say this year. We have been assured that there is not going to be an election this year, and that is news after the interesting things which have transpired during the last few days. In fact I noticed a very large number of prominent persons of the Liberal party in town today, and they did not know themselves why they were here. That in itself may not mean anything, but it indicates what was suggested as having transpired last week may have been true.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, representatives of the minister's party came into my constituency during the 1963 campaign, and prior to it, criticizing me and the administration I represented for its financial and agricultural policies. I doubt if they would go back to my constituency today and say the same things because the results of their policies are too well known.

Some hon. members opposite speak of "this government" and "that government". I still say this is our government, and nothing has been done by our government in 1964 for the agricultural industry in central Canada. Nothing has been done for the province of Ontario.

What happened to commodity prices after the 1963 April election? Ask the farmers. They know what transpired. With regard to deficit financing, it is well known that the previous administration would not have had budget deficit in some periods had it not given increased grants to the provinces. But that is not the way the Liberals painted the picture for the people. Their deportment was one of conceit, which is a regrettable thing when they propose a program to the people of Canada.

An hon. Member: Political fraud.

[Mr. Winkler.]

Mr. Winkler: Yes, political fraud. Dealing with what transpired in the house during the last two weeks it is certainly peculiar that the government, and in certain instances much of the press, were very critical of the way we acted. I have here two motions which I might quote, but for the sake of brevity I will not. They deal with the same question of unemployment insurance and show that the former administration acted reasonably in looking after the situation. Nothing like what happened last week would or did occur at the time the Conservative party, under its present leader, formed the government.

The people are well aware of this. They are well aware where the blame lies for what happened in the last few weeks, and there is one very interesting observation that I would like to quote:

> I suppose this is neither the time nor the place to discuss the reasons for what I might call the mess in which the whole of parliament is at the present time. Whether it is due to the intellectual or political amateurism of one, or the stupid obstinacy of the other, or the blatant opportunism of any other party.

Maybe the rules of debate do not permit us to read speeches made in the other place, but that statement was made in the other place by a supporter of the party that forms the government. What happened in the last two weeks was a shame, and a mark on the parliament of Canada. It showed the inability of the present government to manage its own affairs.

One can quote all sorts of editorials to support the view that I am taking, but in fact I place the blame on the Minister of Finance. I believe he wanted his budget hurriedly dealt with, before he went to the conference in Quebec city, so that there he could say there was nothing more to be discussed in that regard. All that remained then would have been the Canada pension plan. He could have told the provinces the federal government could not make a greater contribution to their needs, and that would have been the end of that.

But realizing at the end of the fourth day of the budget debate that there was no time to finish it and get the other business through before Easter, the Minister of Finance acceded to the wishes of others in his party and we went on to deal with interim supply and the supplementary estimates. At this stage I do not think it is necessary for me to quote the Prime Minister, but we took him at his word when he outlined the business that had to be done before the Easter recess.

On April 1 I put a question to the Minister of Labour, which he finally answered, saying that he was aware of the crisis in the unemployment insurance fund prior to the Easter week end. I am not making any of these comments just to say I wanted to have Easter week off, because I was one of those who were here during the course of that week. On April 3 I asked the Minister of Finance if he was aware of the crisis in the fund, and after some lecturing he said he was also.

Since that time the Minister of Labour has seen fit to lecture us on what should and should not be our duties. He took a very arrogant Liberal party view of our duties and said it was our duty to look for this information, suggesting we were delinquent in our homework by not getting the information which we sought from him. The attitude of the Minister of Finance was exactly the same. Obviously, therefore, the whole crisis that existed was due to the introduction of the budget and the failure of the government to realize the seriousness of the situation. The government could have borrowed the money for the fund up until midnight of the Tuesday of the following week, but it did not see fit to do so after it felt it had the opposition in a position of prejudice and that it could arrogantly force its views on them.

We would have failed in our basic duty to the people of Canada if we had acquiesced in the desire of the treasury benches at that time. We did not then, and we never will, particularly if they try to crowd us into accepting these things. How else could we have found out the seriousness of the situation with regard to the unemployment insurance fund? Any blame for that situation must be placed on the shoulders of those occupying the treasury benches.

I have one editorial here from the Winnipeg Free Press, a newspaper that is not always, if ever, too friendly to the party on this side of the house, and the editorial is in support of the statement made by the hon. gentleman in the other place. Whether it was right or wrong let us not try to pull any nonsense in this house by saying it was the responsibility of the opposition. It is a very sorry thing when supporters of the Liberal party go around, trying to create the impression among the people of Canada that we have spent a long time on the supplementary estimates when they, while in opposition, spent a total of 26½ days on supplementary estimates, eight of them devoted to the Department of Labour.

With regard to the budget, the point that is most often brought to my attention when I visit my constituency is the adamant view of the Minister of Finance in continuing and increasing the sales tax on building materials. Because of this tax the farmer is caught in a squeeze from which he cannot escape. Even in the case of minor repairs he has to pay this tax, and this despite the fact that his monetary return from the commodities he produces is so low.

Again I return to one of the points I mentioned, namely defence policy. I cannot deny that there is a measure of agreement throughout the country in regard to some of the ideas being proposed. We must not always look back, Mr. Speaker; there is no question but that we have to look forward. However, in retrospect I find it a most peculiar thing that the Liberal party should use the tactics it did with the armed services during the last election campaign and then turn around and introduce the policy it has now introduced.

The Prime Minister has said that the Liberals are not interested in going to the country. He knows full well that the reason lies in the results of the policies they have introduced. As I go down the list of items it is a list of total confusion and badly prepared legislation so far as Canada is concerned.

I should like to deal with a point with regard to which I believe the government can take immediate action, to repair some of the damage that has been done. I refer to their so-called efforts in the field of biculturalism, and I make these remarks without any reference whatsoever to our friends and fellow citizens in the province of Quebec. I have in my hand an article from the Winnipeg Tribune of Saturday, April 4, 1964, dealing with a speech made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) to his constituents, I imagine. He had this to say in western Canada:

> If Quebec leaves confederation western Canada will be forced to its knees, begging for help and aid from Washington.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what degree of unity is there in words like those uttered by a minister of the government on the treasury benches? What can they expect? They say to us that we have to make greater efforts. Who is causing the dissension? Who is causing the situation that exists? It is my humble opinion that if the commission at present touring the country had never been formed the confusion that exists today would not have occurred.

I believe too that when the government thinks over things that have happened in the past they must have some soul searching moments when they wonder what on earth they have created in this parliament. I am referring now, Mr. Speaker, to the present situation in regard to the Canada pension plan and what has transpired. I believe that the pressure that has been exerted by the government on the province of Ontario is most unfair. It seems to me that the premier of Ontario has now made a study of the entire situation. He has voiced his opinions on several occasions and he now seems to favour the plan that has been outlined in the province of Quebec, an outline that I have here. But first, Mr. Speaker, let me refer to some words taken from the report of the 1950 joint committee on old age security. I find the following on page 107 of that report:

The committee further believes that such a program—

A social security program.

—can be financed and administered satisfactorily only by the federal government. Only the federal authority can establish a sufficiently broad base of contributions to make such a program possible, and only the federal authorities can ensure that an individual will receive the benefit to which he has contributed, regardless of whether he moves from one province to another.

It is a peculiar situation, Mr. Speaker, when we examine what has taken place up to the present time. I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the Montreal Gazette which quotes the premier of the province of Quebec as saying that there is "no possibility" of Quebec entering the national plan. The articles goes on to say that Mr. Lesage was adamant in his position with regard to the federal project.

If that is the case today, what has caused the change of heart? The reason must be nothing more than sheer politics. The government likes to accuse us of introducing politics into the house from time to time, but you can see that they are at it almost all the time. Even back as far as 1950 they started to play politics with this matter and if I had been able to do more research and examine the records further I am sure I would have found other instances.

That being the case, I find the situation most peculiar when I look back to 1957 when the change of government took place, and when I refer to the attacks that were made on the leadership of the party that formed the government then. It is a peculiar thing how all this has taken place. There were names then that were important in this particular field such as Laporte, Levesque and Laurendeau. Those names were known then, as well as the attitudes they adopted and the positions they took. But now that they are in hallowed places we must not say anything. We cannot say anything about this matter. But I say to hon. members that if the Quebec Liberals want to adopt a certain attitude in the province of Quebec and to segregate themselves from the Liberal party nationally I do not blame them. It is a strange thing that the Prime Minister cannot maintain any degree of cohesion or unity within his own party at the federal level; and if he cannot do that, how does he think he can maintain cohesion and unity throughout the nation? I do not know how it can be done. It is a very peculiar situation.

This is not the only incident. From 1957 on there were all sorts of other incidents in which the party across the floor was most efficient in attacking people's characters.

Mr. Moreau: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Winkler: Certainly.

Mr. Moreau: Would the hon. member not agree that, no matter what happens, so far as the pension plan is concerned it was this government's initiative that forced Premier Robarts into a public plan?

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, this is the sort of statement we can expect from one who cannot cash a government cheque in his own constituency. That is all I have to say. As a matter of fact, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) is spending money as though it was going out of style I would be ashamed to stand up in the House of Commons and say I cannot cash a cheque in my own constituency. Certainly the Minister of Finance has got more than he needs and I believe he might have ripped up the cheque and given the hon. member the money anyway. However, that is behind us.

The suggestion I wish to make at this point is simply this. I do not believe for one minute what was said by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Moreau), because in the discussion on redistribution I think he showed he did not have a clear understanding of what the situation is in Canada. He talked about rural tyranny. Let me tell you this, Mr. Speaker. If the government places the tolerance figure at less than 33⅓ per cent it will add to the confusion with regard to the things I have mentioned this afternoon and cause more confusion in the country and, no matter when the Prime Minister calls the election, they will not be in office after it is over. Of that I am very sure.

Because the hon. member has referred to the premier of Ontario I am going to say this in concluding my remarks. It seems to me that a more thorough study has been made in other quarters than has been made by the federal government with regard to pensions for Canadians. What about the farmers? The farmers are concerned; they are turning against the government because not only do they not understand the situation but they are coming to believe it is going to cost them more for less. There are so many people who will not be covered by the federal plan that many people who have plans of their own in industrial plants want no part of the federal plan. This is the truth, Mr. Speaker. I am not deceiving anyone.

Our position is clear. The former minister of national health and welfare has made it clear. We want a plan and are going to support a plan but we do not think this plan is good enough. Mr. Lesage has brought forth a plan that is clear. I have it right here. There are survivor benefits, disability benefits and many other benefits plus a higher cash return, although the premium may be a little larger.

It has been proven actuarially that the premium will be higher also for the federal plan. I believe that if the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the government want to do one thing, and do it immediately and quickly, to cause some degree of unity in Canada, they should consider reconvening the provincial premiers conference, study Mr. Lesage's plan and adopt it. Then they could invite these provinces to join us in a plan that will be at least national in scope.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I should like to take advantage of the latitude afforded in this debate to raise briefly two subjects which are not directly related to the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). My first observation, Mr. Speaker, is that I dissent vigorously from the remarks made in this chamber last Friday by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I am sorry he is not here. I have told him that I propose to discuss his remarks, but apparently he cannot be here at the moment. He said, during the debate on Friday, that the remainder of Canada should give up trying to meet what he described as the insatiable demands of Quebec and should proceed on the assumption that Canada will consist of nine provinces. The hon. member in these remarks spoke for himself. I have no doubt he will find some people who will agree with him but I, for one, wish to repudiate such a defeatist view.

I believe, and I think there are many others who are not French Canadians who will continue to believe that we should give serious and sympathetic consideration to the genuine grievances of French Canada within confederation. I believe also, and I think there are many French Canadians who will agree with me on this, that concessions to provincial demands, from whatever source they come, should not go so far as to destroy the power of the federal government to give effective leadership in matters affecting Canada as a whole. I cite for example such things as full employment, opportunity for economic growth across Canada, and so on. We know that reconciliation of these two conflicting aims may not be easy, but it must be achieved.

I do not believe that with the present difficulties of confederation, observations such as those made by the hon. member for Skeena are helpful, however sincere they may be, or however much they may reflect some existing attitudes throughout Canada. In my view the members of all parties, from wherever they come in Canada, have a duty to interpret to the people of our country the spirit of compromise and conciliation upon which Canada was built. This spirit is still necessary today if Canada is going forward as a genuine partnership between the two founding nations. I believe we have a duty of interpretation to those Canadians who are neither French speaking nor English speaking, and who sometimes find it difficult to understand the historic realities upon which Canada was built.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I thought I would underscore these few words by repeating them in French. But my knowledge of French is limited. I know that my French colleagues understand me very well when I speak English, so I will refrain. However, I would like to reassure them, and those whom they represent of the sincerity and the good faith, of the majority of the Canadian people, and of their determination to do everything in their power to understand and satisfy their grievances.

[Text]

My colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), asks what contribution my French is to the unity of Canada. All I can say is, at least it is an effort.

I should like now to say something about this parliament. I believe there is a general impression that parliament is floundering, and such an impression does harm to every party represented here and to parliamentary democracy itself. I believe the situation is urgent. Some of the difficulties are those of procedure and I hope that the special committee, under your chairmanship, sir, will be able soon to recommend some radical and effective changes. In the meantime I suggest that the Prime Minister and leaders of the other parties should get together and evolve a plan for the early and effective dispatch of the business of this house before the summer recess.

This suggestion is by no means original. I noticed it, for example, in the columns of my hon. friend, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). If some temporary alteration of the rules is necessary, and could be made, as I believe it could, without interfering with the basic rights of members, then I think the house would be willing to give favourable consideration to it.

It looks to me, Mr. Speaker, as though it is getting close to five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to a consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED BROADCASTING OF PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved:

That a special committee of the house be appointed to consider and make recommendations on a system of televising and radio broadcasting of the proceedings or part of the proceedings of this house.

He said: It was by chance, Mr. Speaker, and not by design that I find myself addressing the house, as it were, in sections or in instalments and on different subjects. The motion before the house, which I am bringing forward, provides for the appointment of a special committee to make recommendations on a system for televising and radio broadcasting of the proceedings or part of the proceedings of this house. The purpose of this suggestion is to improve the procedure of the house and also to use the best means of bringing to the public the proceedings in the house.

Parliament has been described as the paramount forum of the nation. I suggest that all interested citizens should have an opportunity to see and to hear what is done in their name by their representatives. I further suggest that television and radio are the best means of carrying out this objective. This house is not a private club or debating society. This is the forum in which the great issues affecting the country are discussed, or at least should be discussed by the men and women elected to do so. The original meaning of the word "forum" was "marketplace". Who would suggest that a marketplace should not be as open to the public as possible?

There has been a tendency, Mr. Speaker, in recent days to deride parliament. Just about a year ago Mr. Charles Pannell, member for Leeds West in the British House of Commons, pointed out: "It is not a new fashion to deride parliament. It has all been done before, and done better". During one of his speeches, Mr. Pannell gave some illustrations of his point. On August 4, 1661, Mr. Pepys, in his diary, recorded how an acquaintance said to him:

How basely things have been carried on in parliament by the young men that did labour to oppose all things that were moved by serious men —that they are the most profane, swearing fellows that ever he heard in his life, which makes him think they will spoil all and bring things into a war again if they can.

Charles Dickens, the well known writer and observer in the press gallery—I probably do not need to explain who he is—decried parliament in these words:

The great dust heap of Westminster...laughing, coughing, oh-ing, groaning, a conglomeration of noise and confusion to be met with in no other place in existence, not excepting Smithfield on a market day or a cockpit in all its glory.

In 1830, the essayist Hazlitt wrote this:

Talk of mobs. See how few who have distinguished themselves in the House of Commons have ever done anything else.

Robert Louis Stevenson said: "We all know what parliament is and we are ashamed of it." And Carlyle asked:

How is it possible to believe, much less to think, that in the Commons is rooted the strength of England, and not its weakness?

At the present time in Britain a group of Conservatives are circulating a paper under the ominous title, "Change or Decay". As Mr. Pannell said, it is a sort of legend that parliament has been a noble institution which has fallen into decay. Nevertheless, in his view, parliament today is more sober than ever it was. Generally, he says, we are not lesser men than our grandfathers were.

I do not know whether these encouraging words, which are applied to the United Kingdom House of Commons, the mother of parliaments, are equally applicable to the Canadian parliament, but I do suggest that much of the deploring being done about the Canadian parliament today is vastly exaggerated. However, this is not a ground for complacency and whatever can be done to improve parliament and bring it closer to the people, should be done. I expressed earlier, in another context, the hope that the special committee will report at an early date, and that its report will be vigorous and radical with regard to what needs to be done to improve parliament.

The suggestion I make in this resolution is one of a number of reforms which could be achieved. I do not suggest for a moment that it is the most urgent, but I think it should be considered by the special committee. I suggest that the televising and radio broadcasting of the sessions of this house would have beneficial effects both on the conduct of debate and, if I may use an over-worked expression, upon the image of parliament. Nor should hon. members be frightened by the novelty of my suggestion. There are always "stick-in-the-muds" who object to anything new, and quite a few of them seem to find their way into various parliaments. Proposals similar to mine are being discussed at the present time in the British House of Commons. I should like to refer to the views on this matter of three of its members, one from each of the three historic parties in Britain. First, I should like to quote Mr. Iain Macleod, speaking in a debate on parliamentary reform on March 15, 1963. Mr. Macleod was at that time leader of the house, although I think he has since fallen into some disgrace with the Conservative party after having objected to the mysterious processes by which the present prime minister was chosen. Mr. Macleod, speaking of the proposal to televise sessions of the house, said:

> I do not think we should be too afraid of this. I remember very well two instances, one of enormous importance and one of much less importance, where I believe that before the event people were afraid of the impact of television. The one of the greatest importance of all was the coronation of Her Majesty the Queen. Many people were deeply worried and desperately anxious about it and thought that it was wrong that television cameras should go into Westminster abbey. In fact it was one of the finest programs that has ever been put on and one of the greatest services that could possibly have been given to the royal family. The other incident I have in mind was a question about which very many people were worried—the televising of party conferences. Many people thought that we should all end up speaking exclusively to the television cameras. As we know, this does not happen.

When a Mr. Curran intervened to suggest there would be certain mechanical difficulties, Mr. Macleod replied:

> I am certain that these arguments are formidable, but they are also not insuperable.

The next objection, raised by a Mrs. Judith Hart, was that the selectivity which would result from an edited version of proceedings in the house would do damage to the quality of speeches. Mr. Macleod replied:

> It is possible, but one has exactly this difficulty with the sort of programs that exist already and which inevitably compress the events, as in the newspapers and on sound radio.

Perhaps I may turn now to the observations of Mr. Grimmond, the leader of the Liberal party in Great Britain—I hope that by referring to him I will secure some support from hon. members opposite. In the same debate, he said this:

> The press, the B.B.C. and television keep democracy ticking over and once the press ceases to report the House of Commons, democracy will suffer. Every day the main headlines in the press are about things raised in the House of Commons and, much as we complain about the press, and I do, do not let us delude ourselves, the press is a vital part of democracy and this is one reason why I have changed my views on television. I used to be against the idea of televising the House of Commons, but it is an essential function of the house to raise issues and get them across to the public.

That is the real point of what I am saying. But perhaps the most vigorous exponent of television in the British House of Commons is Mr. Anthony Wedgwood Benn of the Labour party. Mr. Benn, as most of the members of this house know, was a distinguished commoner who inherited a title and was subsequently the subject matter, one might say, of legislation which enabled him to step down from the House of Peers and revert to the rank of commoner. In this he blazed a path for the present Prime Minister, Sir Alec Home—is it pronounced "Hume"? I am not sure.

As reported in the Manchester Guardian of March 21, 1963, Mr. Benn has this to say:

> The time has now come to launch a campaign to televise the House of Commons. For how much longer are we going to have to put up with getting our parliamentary reporting by courtesy of the popular press and the self appointed television commentators? Why can't the cameras come to Westminster and show us as we are?
> The House of Commons is the grand forum of the nation or nothing at all. Here, government policies must be deployed and criticised; here, the opposition must reveal and defend its alternative in broad outline; here, those who exercise power must be held accountable for the use they make of it to backbenchers of all parties; here the quality of men and women is continuously assessed by colleagues who know them intimately and who see how they react to stress and defeat as well as how they take their moments of glory.
> The M.P.s who carry weight and are respected for their knowledge and integrity are not by any means always the same ones as those who shine in the contrived four-minute knockabout beloved by the television producers.
> If the House of Commons let in the cameras, people would see us, warts and all. They might not like us all the time, but parliamentary debate is a substitute for civil war and they would more likely share our moments of passion than mock us for showing them. At any rate, they would be judging us by what we are and not what others, for their own purposes want to make us out to be.
> Why, then, is the Commons not televised? Because many members—and this is more a matter of age than political affiliation—fear some loss of dignity and intimacy, and visualize nightmarish arc lights and even make-up and the heady atmosphere of party conferences. In truth the cameras would soon be forgotten once they were installed. Few younger M.P.s on all sides are impressed by these objections and for them the television lens holds out no more horror—or promise—than the sight of a journalist, pencil in hand, at a political meeting.
> Televising parliament will, of course, come in time. The question really is, why not now, when it could do some real good? If there is to be a break-through it has got to be made an issue and not discussed interminably.

I heartily endorse the words of Mr. Benn and commend them to the members of this house. Of course there are objections. Some of them have already been mentioned and disposed of in the quotation from what Mr.

Suggested House Proceedings Broadcast

Iain Macleod said. I had occasion to discuss this matter of television with the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who raised, amongst other objections, the fact that members would, as he put it, "posture" when they were on television in the house. I cannot see the force of this objection. Is it not the essence of being part of a public forum that we are required to posture to some extent? Surely we cannot expect in this public forum to have the pleasantness of privacy as in a club, where we can snooze comfortably or chat intimately with our friends. It may be objected that some of our member are more photogenic than others. This is, of course, inevitable, but I cannot think that most of the members of this house need have any misgivings on this score. Each of us no doubt has his own individual type of charm which at least some of our friends and constituents will appreciate if they see us on television. I do not forget, and I remind the house, that the downfall of Senator Joe McCarthy was credited to television, as was the election of the late President Kennedy. I hope I will not be thought to be interfering in any way with or making improper remarks about the politics of another country, but I think those events can be credited to television, and I think they were all to the good.

All in all, it is my guess that if we were televised we would tend to behave a little better, rather than a little worse, if we knew that we might find ourselves revealed, warts and all, to the candid camera, reproducing our contributions to parliament in the private homes of people across Canada.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the televising of parliament would be a contribution to Canadian unity. Instead of centring their attention upon local heroes, the people of Canada would have the opportunity to get to know the great men of other provinces and regions; we would perhaps be able to develop a sense that parliament spoke for all the people of Canada, instead of being merely the exponent of local and regional problems. I admit that there are technical problems and that the experiment would certainly not be successful if undue selectivity meant that a special show was put on by a few chosen individuals at the time selected for television. But surely, if the opportunity is provided, these objections can be dealt with. Nothing would ever be done and no change ever made if we were to concentrate our minds on the objections alone. Mr. Speaker, I conclude by asking the house to take this motion seriously. I think by adopting it—it cannot come about right away—it would contribute to that much needed development, the interest of the people of Canada in parliament, and the renewal of the basic function of parliament as the grand forum of the nation.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Berger (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, to follow up the explanations the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has just given about his motion and to which I listened very attentively not to say religiously, I must tell you very sincerely that, since I read that motion, I have been both amused and interested by that suggestion, and you can no doubt guess why.

I had already noticed—with all the sense of humour I can muster and the few notions I have in this field—that, curiously enough, whereas I personally put an end to almost 16 years of work in radio, television and journalism to devote myself actively to politics, a few hon. members in this house, on the contrary, took advantage of their entrance into active politics to become on a regular basis, journalists, radio commentators and television moderators.

I have no wish to discuss here their personal merit, their success or lack of success, far from it, because I know from experience that they have assumed a very hard job, a very heavy task, considering all the work required of a responsible member of this house who must above all have that important qualification of attendance with regard to the sittings of the house, and the committees, not to mention his own personal work, in order to give his constituents a good and fair representation.

Now the hon. member for Greenwood—no doubt, in order to facilitate and reconcile those twofold responsibilities—seems to suggest an agreeable and practical way of discharging those responsibilities, by enabling hon. members to do all that without leaving the house. It is a gallant gesture with regard to all of us, I admit, but I seriously wonder whether introducing such a system of radio or T.V. broadcasting of part of our proceedings would really help "equally" all hon. members and bring about anything really desirable for the Canadian people.

When I refer to some of our sittings, you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that the true and earnest spirit of hard work which should prevail in our proceedings would be seriously questioned, and rightly so, by the listeners or viewers. Of course, this might be a good thing, if we were sure it would bring a marked improvement in our proceedings and the quality of our discussions, but it must be admitted that it would take a bold man to say so.

Several factors play a part in radio programs, and still more in television programs. For instance, the tone of voice, the delivery of the speech, the quality and correctness of the language, the right clothes, the posture or the poise of the participant, his better profile and also, Mr. Speaker, and not the the least, the "gesture" which is most important on television.

You may be sure, Mr. Speaker, that we would certainly get our money's worth just watching the gestures which the hon. members of this house would be making on television. There we would have bellicose gestures which might serve the cause of separatism, or gestures worthy of the top-ranking heroes in westerns, when they start pitching lead all over the place, or the eloquent, grandiose gestures of the great Shakespearian or Racinian actors of yore, not to mention in some cases the frantic arm-waving, Allegro con vivace, remindful of that grand maestro, Leopold Stokowski, leading his musicians in Richard Wagner's Die Walkure.

See where that might lead us. Considering those remarks, Mr. Speaker, you can anticipate all the sittings and rehearsals we would be compelled to make in order to give Canadian views a dignified and commendable show.

Then there would be all the people looking after management, lighting, props, make-up, and all those technicians in charge of sound or picture, to name but a few. However, there is in all that a practical aspect which I ought to mention: it would be a great step forward in fighting unemployment, by doubling the staff of the companies which would be in charge of these gigantic productions. Unfortunately our Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) who is not here, but who has so much to do, would certainly not be pleased with this new financial charge added to his budget already so heavily burdened.

In my opinion, however, there are more serious reasons not to pass such a measure, at least for the time being.

Many people, including myself, are of the opinion that our Canadian television is sick at the present time. The diagnoses of experts in this field are coming to us from all over Canada, so much so that several fact-finding committees are now being set up.

There are newspaper reports to that effect, as shown by these excerpts from Le Droit of Ottawa, for April 7:

A special committee on broadcasting is to be set up soon in Ottawa.

Indeed the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) stated:

—that the federal government proposes to appoint a special committee on broadcasting in order to put an end to uncertainties in this field in Canada.

Suggested House Proceedings Broadcast

At the meeting of the Canadian association of broadcasters, the minister indicated that federal authorities will soon reveal some details with regard to the future committee.

As the minister responsible to parliament for broadcasting, Mr. Lamontagne remarked that the major problem for broadcasters probably was the lack of clearness and the weak points of the Broadcasting Act which was enacted in 1958.

There is some confusion with regard to the objectives of private and public radio broadcasting in Canada, with regard to relations between the C.B.C., and private stations, with regard to the powers of the C.B.C. and the B.B.G. and also with regard to television.

And he added:

It is necessary to find some solution to those problems, and it obviously depends on the kind of broadcasting desired in Canada.

And the article in Le Droit further says in respect of the statements of the Secretary of State:

He indicated, moreover, that according to the federal government the financial administration of the C.B.C. should be carefully examined. It would also be useful to scrutinize the conclusions of an internal committee of the C.B.C., which, at this time, is studying the recommendations of the Glassco commission with regard to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Before broadcasting the proceedings of the house, we should deal with the deficiencies of our television and radio broadcasting system. Besides, it is not only a Canadian problem, because in the same newspaper, I saw on the same problem, another article entitled:

"Pontifical commission on modern communication media."

In that article, we read this:

The Pope announced today the setting up of a pontifical commission which will have the responsibility of developing a code of relations between the Catholic church and modern communication media: press, radio, television, movies.

The commission, staffed by experts on communication media, will draft "pastoral instructions"—

Of course, because this concerns the Pope.

—which will have to be submitted to the Pope's approval. Those instructions are designed to embody the recommendations adopted last year on that matter by the Ecumenical Council.

And now, the interesting point:

In announcing the setting up of that commission, the Holy Father pointed out that communication media "bring forth, at this time, problems so important that they affect not only culture, civilization and public morals, but also religion.

That is why I feel that we must watch very carefully what we are able to offer our audience.

Consequently, for the abovementioned reasons, especially to be short but also for other reasons which I do not have time to state now, I sincerely think that this notice of motion is premature. This is why I believe that we should defer such a study to a later date or if it is preferred, until such a committee is set up. We have, I believe, more work than we can cope with at the present time, and at the snail's pace we are proceeding, which is the usual speed of our debates, not to say that it is characteristic, I unfortunately feel that the motion of the hon. member for Greenwood, no matter how commendable and well-meaning it may be in several aspects, unfortunately runs the risk of being indefinitely put off, and I am sorry about it.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, just a few words to congratulate the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) for having introduced this motion.

I believe it would be worthwhile to form a committee of the house to see if it would be possible to try an experiment, first with radio, and then, later on, with television.

I believe there is no point in concealing things; we are elected by the people and we should not be ashamed to broadcast the proceedings of the house on radio or television.

I think it would be in the public interest, Mr. Speaker, since the public could see the behaviour of the members in the house and hear the answers given by the government when members of the opposition, or even government members, ask questions, and it could also find out about the attendance of the members, especially when a vote is taken.

It seems to me it would be important that the Canadian people learn, through radio and television, which members are present in the house or absent from it, which are those who take part in the debates and those who do not.

In my opinion, it would be in the public interest that all this be made known.

I appreciated the statements from the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Berger). By the way, I may say his constituents would have liked to see him on television, had this sitting been televised, because he had the proper gesture, the proper voice, everything. Finally, it could be seen he has great experience in that field, since he worked for a long time on radio or television.

If only for the sole purpose of compelling members of the House of Commons who are paid $18,000 per year to attend the sittings of the house, I believe that the motion of the hon. member would be most useful not only to the Canadian people but also to the members themselves. Thanks to these media of direct communication, radio and television, the people would then be in a position to decide at election time, whether or not the absentee member should be returned to the house. Or this would prompt members to resign automatically and to abstain from running for office in the next election, to be replaced by some active member who would always be present in the House of Commons to look after the interest of the Canadian people.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, the proposal put forward today by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) is an interesting one in many respects. I should like to congratulate him for raising nearly every one of the objections which I had to televising part of the proceedings of this house and for giving his opinion as to how to deal with these objections.

I agree that there is a great need for a better appreciation of the activities of parliament by the general public of Canada. I say that because we have seen consistently reports in the press, which have to do their job in the best way they see fit, dealing for example, with want of confidence motions, in which reports certain members are accused of voting against the terms of the motion, whether it concerns sales tax, family allowances, medicare, or what-have-you, when the members concerned and even the mover of the want of confidence motion know very well that the only result which would eventuate from support of the motion would be to dissolve parliament.

That is just one example, but there are other matters which go on on parliament hill involving the activities of members of which the general public understand very little. For example, a lot has been said about attendance of members in this house. I think it is incorrect to presume that the members who spend the greatest number of hours sitting in their seats in this house are in fact doing the best jobs for their constituencies and for Canada.

I say that because, for example, all hon. members of the house specialize in one field or another. They may specialize in more than one department, but they certainly do not try to become experts in the whole spectrum of federal government administration. If my speciality happened to be agriculture, fisheries or forestry, and if I spent my whole time sitting in the house and did not prepare myself for the debates on these subjects, I could not really make a very valuable contribution to them.

As I said, there is a great need for the people to be better informed. But I am not sure whether this can be done by televising some of the proceedings of the house—although I have no objection to the setting up of a committee to look into the matter, and to see if it would be possible to do it on a trial basis. However, we will immediately run into the problem of how much of the proceedings should be televised. In this connection, if it reaches that stage, I suggest the question period so that there would be a larger number of performers at any given time.

Mr. Woolliams: Do you think it is a good idea to have performers?

Mr. Olson: That is exactly what it is going to turn out to be. People will give a great deal of consideration to the deportment they will project when the television cameras are running. Perhaps that may be overcome in time, but I believe it will deteriorate into performances.

Then there is the other side of the coin. Our government and our parliament are something like our stomachs. Between elections they probably function best when you are least aware of their being there. Certainly between elections you do have to make some decisions that may not be popular. This applies to functions of government, of business, and even in one's own private affairs. One has to conduct himself in a way that it is not a continual case of doing everything he likes to do or everything that is popular.

Furthermore, I do not believe parliament functions best when there is a series of spectacular performances. Even this year there was a great deal of criticism of the budget simply because there was nothing spectacular in it. That in itself is not sufficient reason to criticize it.

If the government takes the position—and I do not say I do—that during the fiscal year 1963 the proposals it brought in did in fact set Canada on a new course, and that course was producing results, then there would be no need to have any spectacular changes.

I am waiting for the day when the impact of television performances begins to wane because I do not believe there is much relationship between your television image and your actual administrative ability. The one is not related to the other, although this matter of how you appear on television, and the number of times you appear on it, has a great deal to do with whether you get elected or not.

That is all I have to say so far as we are concerned. We are willing to support the setting up of a committee to give the matter some consideration, and perhaps even to go as far as having it on a trial basis, but I personally am also of the opinion that parliament is a little over-publicized even now.

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to commend the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) for introducing what I consider to be a very interesting proposal. As a matter of fact, this is one of those forward looking proposals we could expect from a member for one of the Toronto and district ridings.

In principle I am sure most members of the house would agree we should and must avail ourselves of every means to inform the electorate about our national government. I say, in a non-partisan sense, that parliament and politics suffer a great deal from the lack of understanding and want of information which exists in a usually apathetic electorate. For this reason I would like to support the motion before the house, realizing at the same time there are a great number of problems inherent in it. However, I think it would be the job of the committee to look into them, and we could expect recommendations from the committee as to how and in what way we could achieve our aim.

Some hon. members have indicated that we could be faced with a deteriorating situation so far as the conduct of the business of the nation is concerned, and I am sure hon. members would agree a good number of speeches made in the house are made either for political purposes or for distribution in the ridings of hon. members.

Mr. Woolliams: Would you say that is why you are making your speech now?

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Speaker, I am very delighted to see the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) back with us because he has been absent for some time. We know that reporting in the press gallery sometimes does not reflect too accurately what we consider is important in parliament. We also know some of the press gallery reporting coverage appears to encourage the antics of some members; but to be quite fair we can also agree that reporting by members of the press is effective in cutting down members who somewhat abuse their privileges in the house.

I do not know whether we could devise an equitable way in which the proceedings of the house could be televised. Many problems immediately arise, such as the time to be apportioned between the government and the various opposition groups; but in general I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Greenwood deserves to be entertained seriously.

We have also to remember that we are dealing with a controlled media where, at best, we have probably only two competing stations in any particular area. The danger of increasing the role of such a controlled media is somewhat frightening, taking into account the influences of advertisers and, if we are to believe the suggestions of some hon. members, the influence of politics and perhaps of future governments.

Suggested House Proceedings Broadcast

In raising this point I want to make it clear there is no other news media that is so closely regulated and controlled by so few. In my opinion the advantage which newspapers and periodicals hold over television lies in their ability to cover the news and the political scene in a way television never can, and we have to appreciate the fact that continually several points of view are being projected by these other media. This unique role that the periodicals and newspapers maintain, and which they have as an advantage over television and radio, has enabled them to maintain their competitive position in covering the news. I just wonder what extending television coverage into the House of Commons would do with respect to their position, although I realize they cover the news in a somewhat different way.

Having raised this point, I should like to say that I strongly support the legislation now on the order paper to regulate advertising in foreign magazines. At the same time I wish to express my equally strong disappointment at the provision excluding Time and Reader's Digest. I urge the government to reconsider its decision and I hope it will delete the clause excluding these two publications before the legislation is proceeded with. I do not think any member of the house could seriously quarrel with the fact that these publications are engaged in a dumping procedure as far as Canada is concerned, and I do not think anyone would seriously suggest that they reflect a truly Canadian viewpoint. Finally, may I say that in my opinion this motion has a great deal of merit and should be referred to the appropriate committee for study. I should like again to commend the hon. member for introducing it.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this resolution may I say I am very much against it on two counts. First of all, I think that people generally have some misapprehension today as to the functions of parliament. I think it would be well to examine the British system because under that system there are no desks in the chamber. There are places to which you go but no desks are assigned, and they have made their House of Commons a chamber of debate.

There is a feeling across the country, which I think might grow if our proceedings were televised, that unless members are warming the green leather seats in the House of Commons they are not performing their functions as members of parliament. I do not agree that this is the sole function of a member. Basically the function of parliament is to be a chamber for debating our principles, our policies and also legislation.

[Mr. Moreau.]

The functions of a member of parliament are many in number. One of his functions is to be present during debates when he finds it necessary, I suppose. We are all guilty of some parochialism in regard to the areas from which we come. Those from the prairies may not be too interested in some of the industries of other parts of the country, so they may be discharging other duties. They may be attending committees or in their offices. In fact, we may even be outside of Ottawa altogether. It seems to me that our function is not to present our personal opinions here and I do not know how we can express the opinions of our constituents, whether we represent 260,000 or 60,000, unless we keep in contact with them.

I believe that at one time the province of Saskatchewan broadcast the proceedings of its legislature over the radio, but I do not think it is done today. I understand it was not very satisfactory and if our proceedings were televised I do not believe it would be very satisfactory. I ask this question: What network would want to carry the proceedings of the House of Commons day after day and, if it did so, would it be very profitable to it? How many viewers would there be? There are many times when we are in committee of the whole or engaged in other debates when the people of Canada, I believe, would not want to view the proceedings.

Then there is the human nature aspect. There is talk about delays in parliament. I have only been here since 1958 but whether the Liberals, the New Democratic party or the Social Credit party are the main opposition, I do not think there is going to be much change in the proceedings of the House of Commons from year to year unless we get down to amending the rules that govern debate in parliament.

I think we are all guilty of one thing. When the Liberals sat over here and we were over there, the situation was reversed. I am certain that the splinter parties are no more holy or moral politically, and if one of them happened to form the government the situation would be no different. I am sure that many members agree we have to get down to amending the rules of the House of Commons. If the rules were amended there might then be something to view, but there is no question that at the present time there are serious procedural delays. Sometimes these delays are misunderstood. I think it would be a sad and sorry day for democracy if the people of Canada, unless they had had the opportunity to become familiar with the situation through election to parliament, could walk into a room and view a debate on television, and be expected from viewing it to understand what parliament is about.

I repeat that parliament is a place where we debate principles and policies. If we had a camera here today it would not matter which side of the house was shown, although one corner may be a little better populated this afternoon than the others. However, I do not think that group can make any particular claim, because as far as absenteeism is concerned for the purpose of being in one's office or performing other duties I think the record of one party is just about the same as that of any other party.

Mr. Knowles: You make up for all your absent colleagues.

Mr. Woolliams: My friend has said that I was absent from the House of Commons. I did not intend to say this but somebody else has also referred to it.

Mr. Knowles: I said that you and your appearance make up for all your absent colleagues. You are here; we are glad to see you.

Mr. Woolliams: That is fine. I am not going to go into any details except to say that I had a reason for being absent in the last few weeks, and I think it is known in the city of Calgary. I do not believe one should go into anything personal in a debate and I am not going to do so. Seriously, as far as I am concerned I cannot believe that the people of Canada want to view exactly what is on that side of the house at the present time, empty seats, and what is on this side, also some empty seats. They probably would not appreciate that, after all, we are merely debating a private member's notice of motion. For example, when I was absent from the House of Commons—

Mr. Brewin: May I ask the hon. member a question? Does he not realize that if we had television of these proceedings the spotlight would be on him at this moment and not upon the empty seats around him?

Mr. Woolliams: That might be the greatest mistake television ever made, Mr. Speaker. This is what I am afraid of. These prima donnas to my left would always be talking because they would want to have their "physogs" before the camera to show what hardworking members of parliament they are and what great reformers they have been since the time of confederation.

I just want to complete one point before the question is put. The proceedings of the house have to be thoroughly understood and I think they can only be understood if one spends some time in the House of Commons or in the press gallery or in the public galleries. Things are misunderstood. For example, a week ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) brought in a private bill which got headlines across the country. Many people I talked to really believed there was a bill before the House of Commons to abolish the Senate, which might be passed. Very few people appreciated that there is only one hour each day for private bills. They thought it was government bill or a bill that would really be debated for weeks with the result that the Senate would either be abolished or not abolished.

I think there would be greater misunderstanding if people just viewed certain proceedings of the House of Commons because they would get the wrong idea. That is my feeling about the matter and it is supported by the experience in Saskatchewan where the C.C.F. government of that day instituted broadcasting of the proceedings of the legislature by radio. They gave it up because they found it was not very satisfactory. After the novelty wore off people were not too interested. I suppose that televising the proceedings might possibly clear up some misunderstandings. However, last week the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) made a speech in Lethbridge. He said there had been some delay in the proceedings of the house, with the result that the government had not been able to proceed with its farm legislation, which was on the order paper, and get it passed. I have looked at the order paper and I cannot find any farm legislation. I suppose what he was doing was more or less bluffing about the proceedings on the basis of the debate on the supplementary estimates. I do not believe the putting of the proceedings of this House of Commons on television is going to clear up that misunderstanding. In fact, I would say it would only add to the confusion.

Mr. Moreau: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Woolliams: No, I should like to finish what I have to say. You have had time to make your speech, so I would like to complete my remarks. If the house would like to adopt this motion, I should like to see it given an opportunity to go on record in that regard.

Basically, I believe the adoption of this scheme would only add to the confusion. Surely, there is enough confusion now. This is illustrated by the things we read in newspapers about what really goes on in parliament. There is no doubt about it, so far as a member of the house is concerned and the members of the various political parties, the political image is still important. As hon. members know, there was a book written about one prime minister, and I would invite hon. members to read about the myth built up about the late President Kennedy. It is rather interesting to read the history of that situation. I suppose the book was withheld from publication because of the tragedy that took place last year. There is no doubt about it, a myth was built up. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that television would help in creating a false image of parliament in the minds of the Canadian people. So far as I am concerned, I oppose this motion on that basis and I oppose any legislation arising out of it.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, April 13, 1964

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wishart Spence, a Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, April 13, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,

Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bill:

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance), that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, as I survey the house this evening I think it would be appropriate to call a snap vote.

An hon. Member: On what?

Mr. Brewin: On almost anything. It may be a bit of a shock to the members of the house to hear that at this stage of my speech I propose to discuss the budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Brewin: This is a subject which, after a few weeks of supplementary estimates, seems to be lost in some sort of a haze and be somewhat remote at this time. I recall that when the debate proceeded before, certain adjectives were used about the budget. I think it was described as a "stand pat" budget, a "do nothing" budget, and I propose to add a few phrases of description of my own. The budget seems to me to be a budget of creeping complacency; it is conservative to the core. I use that word not in the political sense but in the proper meaning of the word conservative. I see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) blanch as I use these words.

An hon. Member: "Squirm".

Mr. Brewin: "Squirm" is the word that my colleague suggests. At any rate, it is appropriate to the occasion. This budget is a declaration of neutrality in the war against poverty. It accepts the sterile orthodoxies of the 1930's. It fails altogether to employ the fiscal remedies available to deal with the present day problems—problems of growth and of unemployment. At a time when we urgently need federal leadership we get this uninspiring, negative and deadening budget. At a time when we need to move firmly forward, we are invited to stand still. Those are a few of the adjectives that I think can properly be added to describe this budget.

One could almost hear the sigh of relief with which the government accepted as an excuse for inaction the stimulus to the economy of the purely fortuitous sales of wheat to countries behind the iron curtain. It is our belief that the budget could be, and should be, an important instrument to be used aggressively to promote expansion, to cure unemployment and to remove unnecessary poverty. It is our conviction that it will be found impossible to change over the Canadian economy to rapid and steady growth and full employment without taking vigorous measures to induce greater equality of opportunity and standards of living for Canadians. To put it in other words, if we moved vigorously to meet the most urgent unfilled needs of fellow Canadians, we would at the same time be giving an impetus to our whole economy. The pursuit of social justice will lead to economic progress. There may be some who question whether or not we have in Canada serious destitution, poverty or deprivation. In our affluent North American society much poverty is hidden. There can, however, be no doubt that it is real.

A well known Swedish economist, Mr. Gunnar Myrdal, in his recent book "Challenge to Affluence" has outlined the situation in the United States. He documented the continuing pockets of poverty in that most prosperous and affluent society. He points out that the bureau of census, several of the departments in Washington and of the state administrations, university institutions and other research outfits have in recent years done a commendable job of laying bare the facts of American poverty and of the causal relations behind this poverty. I commend to hon. members opposite the most fascinating statistical review I have ever read—perhaps the only fascinating statistical review I have ever read—called "Rich Man, Poor Man" by Herman P. Miller, special assistant to the United States bureau of statistics. I would suggest to some aspiring Canadian statistician that he should write such a book and do the same thing for Canada as Mr. Miller did for the United States. We do not appear to have up to date information available in Canada, although some significant facts can be obtained from income tax statistics. Some of these were presented to the house in this debate by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow); others, to which I will refer later, are to be found in a report of the research projects section of the dominion bureau of statistics for the year 1957.

It is highly probable that the conclusions arrived at by Professor Myrdal and Mr. Miller about the United States are roughly comparable to the conditions which exist in Canada. Professor Myrdal based his conclusions on a condensation of various studies derived from "Poverty and deprivation in the United States", published by the conference on economic progress. He defined "poverty" for multiple-persons families as having to live on a family income of under $4,000 a year; and for unattached individuals, under $2,000 a year. On this definition 38 million Americans—or more than one fifth of the nation—were poor in 1960. Similar figures in Canada would mean that between three million and four million Canadians fall below the poverty line. In the United States another 39 million were below what Professor Myrdal calls the "deprivation line", that is to say had incomes, for families, between $4,000 and $6,000, and for individuals between $2,000 and $3,000. He uses another term, "destitution"; that is to say, the situation of people with less than half of the income representing the poverty line. This destitution was the destiny of more than 12½ million Americans, or nearly 7 per cent of the population of the United States.

A similar figure for Canada would be over 1¼ million. The groups which in the United States of America are afflicted by poverty are the minorities, such as the non-whites, small farmers and farm workers, the people from 65 years of age upward, the less well educated and the unemployed, and 40 per cent of the families whose heads were unemployed were living in poverty. Poverty hits the family whose head is a female, the family which has lost a husband and father, or never had one. Long term unemployment is creating a class of unemployables. Even the figures of unemployment do not present a full picture, as many are under-employed, that is employed part-time, and many who could, in a full employment economy, be employed do not enter the labour market.

I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that Canadian poverty can be found in similar groups. I am particularly concerned about destitution among older people. The survey conducted by the research projects section of the dominion bureau of statistics which I have already referred to indicates that approximately one quarter of the heads of families and unattached individuals over 65 throughout Canada, other than farmers, had cash incomes of less than $1,000 a year in 1957 and that this figure reached in the prairie provinces nearly one half of the families and individuals.

I do not have available the figures to fit into Professor Myrdal's analysis of destitution, but it is clear that destitution is the common fate of most Canadians over 65. Indeed, the average income of families—this is of whole families—with heads aged 65 or over was $2,535 for Canada, and as low as $1,830 for the prairie provinces.

It may be asked: What can the budget do about this? The first thing to be recognized is that redistributional reform is necessary from the point of view of social justice. Redistributional reform involves a reduction in the tax burden on persons in the lower income brackets, as well as the imposition of the capital gains tax as suggested by my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron).

I know, Mr. Speaker, that there is a royal commission on taxation which has not yet reported, but I venture to say that no royal commission on taxation is needed to demonstrate the injustice of maintaining income tax on persons with an income which is in fact so low as to put them below a reasonable definition of poverty. In 1961, the last year for which figures are available to me, there were 2,495,168 taxpayers with incomes of less than $4,000, who paid a total tax of $387.4 million. To remove the tax burden from the backs of those already suffering from poverty in an affluent society would be an act of social justice which it would be well within the capacity of the government to undertake immediately. But the argument for such a reduction in taxation at the lower levels is not merely to benefit the poor. This tax reduction would be equally as important as a basis for the achievement of expansion of the economy. It would be of general economic interest and not only benefit the poor themselves. Unemployment and the lower productivity of the lower income brackets is one of our major unutilized and under-utilized resources.

Is it not possible, Mr. Speaker, for us to have the good sense to see that a real effort to relieve those in need is, according to the best economic advice we can get, also part of economic wisdom? In the United States of America the government has accepted the notion of an unremitting war on poverty. Our government should at least be as equally committed to such a war. It could perhaps take a look at the American example of tax cutting. A substantial tax cut suggested by the President of the United States was accepted by congress as a necessary means of stimulating a relatively stagnant economy. A proportionate tax cut in Canada would amount to roughly $500 million. Our economy has at least been equally as stagnant as the United States economy. Why has the government rejected a similar stimulus to the Canadian economy? The tax cut approved by congress in the United States was, in accordance with the American pattern, not applied at the lower levels only. It is my contention that if a tax cut of half a billion dollars were applied by the Canadian government and applied at the lower levels of income, the increased demand would give a tremendous and urgently needed stimulus to the Canadian economy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are two other matters I would like to mention. I was very greatly disappointed at the announcement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on Friday that the federal government was not going to increase its contribution to hospital construction. I found one of the reasons he gave particularly disturbing. He said that one or more provinces had objected. If, Mr. Speaker, there is a grave crisis affecting the lives and health of a very large section of Canada—there is no doubt that there is and I could spend much time documenting the case—is the veto of some province or provinces to prevent federal action? The Prime Minister, in my judgment, has shown weakness in sheltering behind the objection of one or two provinces.

The statement that hospitals are a provincial responsibility is indeed true; but the existence of the present federal hospital grants is a recognition that a federal contribution is in order. If it is to be made at all, why should it not be increased to keep up with increasing costs and to aid in relieving a very real and grave crisis? Because the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) and myself have been consistently pressing for federal relief in this field, an impression has developed that this is a local Toronto matter. It is nothing of the sort. It is a matter seriously affecting every urban and metropolitan centre.

We are glad to hear in this house about the special needs of other areas—Quebec, the maritimes, the prairies, the Yukon, and so on. I hope the government does not think that it should ignore the needs and requests of major metropolitan areas, which in numbers alone exceed most of the provinces. It will be making a great mistake if it does.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one more subject I should like to mention if I have time. I should like to say a few words about another notable document which was brought before the house since the budget was introduced, and I refer to the white paper on defence. It is very obviously related to the budget as it contemplates continuing defence expenditures of more than $1.5 billion a year. Obviously I have not time to discuss the white paper in detail. It has received a very good press, and the impression has been created, not I must say from any careful reading of the white paper itself, that the machinery of integration which it proposes and which has been highlighted represents a substantial saving, and that the proposals of the white paper taken together would, if carried into effect, bring about a substantial lightening of the burden of defence expenditure. Nothing could be further from the truth. Indeed, the gains on the swings are more than made up on the roundabouts. At page 24 of the white paper—I will not have time to read it—are serious proposals for additional major expenditures.

The fact is that the white paper is a very serious disappointment. It puts some new and welcome emphasis on Canada's peace keeping role and the mobile forces required to fulfil it. It talks of the obsolescence of strategic concepts and then provides for Canada to continue its part in the obsolete and indeed dangerous concept of tactical nuclear weapons to be used in response to any aggression in Europe. The search for the new and more realistic and effective role that the Prime Minister in his famous Scarborough speech of January 1963, saw as the result of promise of re-examination, turns out to be a mirage. The truth is that the white paper tries to do the impossible. It clings to the old love and seeks to embrace the new at the same time. It cannot do both. It cannot sustain an effective mobile intervention role in NATO and for the United Nations, and at the same time maintain our share of the forward forces by supplying a brigade group and air force squadrons for the front line in Europe.

The white paper falls between two stools. The bold, new look that was promised has been compromised by the conservatism which has prevented a break with the past. The real dilemma has not been solved. We are going to proceed with the continuing futility of doing a little of everything that is involved. The white paper poses the question of whether our role should be a nuclear or a non-nuclear one, and then evades it.

The white paper talks of flexibility. I hope this means that the minister and his advisers will move forward from the very small advance they have made, as represented in the white paper. I can assure the Minister of Finance, if he needs assurance, that until they do, until they move forward from trying to do a little bit of everything, as the white paper suggests, his problems of rising defence expenditures will grow, and not diminish, as the years go by.

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words in this debate and perhaps, like the hon. member who preceded me, I too may stray a little from the subject of the budget.

At the outset may I say I was pleased with the reference made by the Minister of Finance to the extension of family allowances to the 16 and 17 year old students still in school. I was also encouraged by his reference to a student loan plan because this represents a great improvement. I do not think I would go far as to say it is an unprecedented step, but certainly it shows a welcome attention being paid by the federal government to the problems of the youth of the country.

Certainly in the whole field of social security this government is to be congratulated for at least showing its willingness to bring in some new legislation. Indeed, the Canada pension plan represents the first new, major piece of social security legislation in all too long a period. Because of this I am hopeful that the present administration will come to grips with all, or most, of the present inequities that exist at the present time within the framework of our social security laws.

Our social security laws were bred in the desperate thirties. Since then we have increased them and one might even say, begrudgingly at times extended them. Unfortunately, however, there has evolved a non-planned, often unrelated patchwork system. The time has come for all of us, at this level of government and at other levels of government, to ascertain just what we are doing in this field because, as was pointed out in the debate earlier this afternoon, for all of our brave talk and for all of our eloquent speeches there is still a great deal to be accomplished. Relatively, I say relatively, Mr. Speaker, do we know how much better off are those in the lower income group today than they were 30 years ago.

I am alarmed, Mr. Speaker, because there are many Canadians who, consciously or subconsciously, feel that we have done enough in this field of social security. They feel this, I am convinced, without ever having studied the inequities that exist within the framework of our present approach.

An hon. Member: The Conservatives did.

Mr. Cashin: No party is without blame in this field—none of us.

We have just increased the old age pension and I submit that the figure of $75 per month is at best only supplementary to the income of our retired citizens, and because of that we are attempting to introduce the Canada pension plan. However, the pension is a considerable amount compared to the miserly allowances paid to the widows in our country. I suggest that we examine what the ten provinces of Canada are paying to widows. They are and form a whole class of people who have to apply for this allowance, but there is not one province that proportionately comes close in equalling the allowance to widows to that given to old age pensioners.

I would suggest that at the forthcoming conference of welfare ministers, in the spirit of co-operative federalism, all levels of government try to determine what we can accomplish as a nation, not just as ten provinces, to remove the awful inequities that exist in our haphazard approach to social security.

One great obstacle to a fundamental understanding of social security must be removed. Social security is not taking from the rich and giving to the poor; it is not a form of charity. It is, more often than not, a transfer of income from individual to individual within the same group. For example, the worker with no children helps to pay for the worker in the same group who has eight or nine children, and the worker who is healthy helps to pay for the benefits that the sick receive.

We must recognize that in our advanced technological society there are many things which we consume collectively, and which we can only consume if we consume them collectively. It is folly to suggest that we live in an era of private consumption and private earning, or that we should return to such an age. To do this, or to say this, is to ignore the scientific revolution that has come about in the last several decades. It is amazing that with each suggestion of a further improvement in our social security laws the same old arguments are raised against them. There is probably not one reasonable person in Canada who would suggest that we remove the social security legislation now on the statute books, but when additional legislation is advocated, and quite often the additional legislation represents only a compromise, the laissez-faire arguments that were applicable to the 19th century situation are applied to the 20th century situation. This shows a desire on the part of some to protect a narrow, vested interested. It also shows a failure to recognize the great changes wrought in the last several decades.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Canada pension plan was opposed last year. I have very good reason to question not only the motives but many of the arguments advanced against it. But if we think the opposition to the Canada pension plan is anything, what is going to happen when the government eventually gets around to giving us that much needed piece of legislation, a comprehensive medical program? The government will then find itself in a tough position, with one group saying it does not go far enough, and another group not knowing what to say but nevertheless criticizing us, while at the same time we have 19 million Canadians not greatly interested in those viewpoints because all they want is to see such a plan in operation. Yet we, who sometimes seem to think the whole world is watching us from the gallery, interested in every word we say, will probably delay the implementation of such a program for several years.

I have referred to the 19th century attitude that resurrects itself whenever we talk about social security. I expect it is a distorted notion of freedom. We in the 1960's can be truly more free than man ever dreamed of 100, or even 30 years ago. Because of our scientific advancements and our great breakthroughs in medicine, we now have in the sum total of human knowledge the ways and means to live better, to live longer, and to live in better health. But to apply 19th century thinking to this type of society means that all free men will not be free to enjoy the benefits of mankind's achievements. Many of these achievements, Mr. Speaker, can only be available to you and to me if they are available to all men.

Let us understand the meaning of social security and the function of social security in the 1960's. It is not to be confused with creeping socialism, and we must not allow ourselves to be retarded in our progress because of a misunderstanding of what social security laws are all about. It is not to be confused with the government's control of the economy through control of the means of production, though it does represent certain government intervention in the economy, but since the days of Keynes this has become fashionable, if not always understood. It follows that the state is merely an instrument or agency through which these things can be accomplished. Theoretically, at least, the state is not the only available agency, but practically I suggest it is.

I have already made reference to the inequities in our present social security system, and have given as a specific example the widows' allowances. There are a great many others. If we are to talk about social security we must talk in terms of defining our philosophy of social security, and if we look at it in the light of the functions of society I think we will remove the argument that this is a continuing handout program. This concept of a handout program has arisen because successive governments have not had the courage to understand it themselves, and in that sense the politicians of the past 30 years are somewhat to blame.

With regard to social security I am interested, of course, in seeing that we have national standards, and this presumes a strong central government. I believe we can only have equalization of opportunity for all Canadians if in fact we have a strong federal system. While I am on the subject I may say I realize that in the province of Quebec our brother Canadians of the French tongue are concerned at the present moment about equalization of opportunity. It seems to me that all Canadians are in sympathy with their aspirations and are sincerely interested. But, Mr. Speaker, some views—I hope they represent nothing like a majority—held by responsible men in the province of Quebec would suggest that we have a dilemma to be resolved because these people feel that the only way the province of Quebec can fulfil its aspirations is through a weakening of the fiscal authority of the federal government. On the other side of the coin there are areas, not as well to do at all as the province of Quebec, that are quite convinced that the only way we can achieve equalization of opportunity is through a strong federal system.

For a moment I should like to present a hypothetical situation of a Canada exactly the same as it is today except in one respect, that one respect being that all of the 10 provinces have the same mother tongue. What would the differences be between that Canada and the real Canada? The Atlantic provinces situated as they are on the extremity of Canada would be in the same economic position as they are today. That being the case, the federal government and the well to do areas of Canada would have the challenge to help create an atmosphere in which the Atlantic provinces could develop. The same quid pro quo would exist between the extremities and the centre of this country as now exists. In the centre the great industries, being protected, would find outlets for their industries in the extremities.

We might ask ourselves what the position of the province of Quebec would be in this hypothetical Canada where we were all of one language. Would the education system be the same? If not, what effect would that have? In this example, of course the means of production, industry and commerce in that hypothetical Quebec would be owned by people of the same mother tongue and the same culture as the working people. We might ask ourselves whether in that imaginary Canada I have conceived Quebec would still be second only to the Atlantic provinces in unemployment.

I have used this example, perhaps a very crude one, to come to the point about which I am wondering. Who are the people who can say best at this time what is the answer to the dilemma I posed a few minutes ago with regard to those who see the federal system a little differently than I do? I might suggest with a great deal of support, I am sure, that perhaps if the federal government had even stronger powers than those that some would now take away, what is now happening in the province of Quebec would have happened 40 years ago or perhaps would not have happened at all, because of the existence of a truly strong federal government.

I have been talking about the federal government theme, and I do so because if we are to have national standards and a sound approach to social security I believe we must have a strong federal government. But I am concerned that when we talk about national unity and the powers of the federal government we may find ourselves in 15 or 20 years, having spent a great deal of time talking about these matters, actually confronted more forcibly than we are now with what may be the real underlying problem, the United States of America, and whether or not we will remain economically and politically independent of that country to the south. If the Atlantic provinces or any one of the areas on the extremities need a strong central government to help to bring about equalization of opportunities, I suggest the argument is just as strong that so do the 10 provinces of Canada under that government unless, of course, we are to accept what some suggest is the real question, that economically and politically we might be better off if we did not exist in this form at all.

So far as higher standards of social security are concerned I have noted, as some other hon. members may also have noted, a book by Michael Harrington, "The Other America" in which he suggests that in the United States of America there are 40 million to 50 million Americans living at a bare subsistence level. If we compare Canada with the United States we find that our standard of living is 25 per cent to 30 per cent behind that country. If in the United States they have 40 million to 50 million Americans living at a subsistence level, I think it would be reasonable to assume that the comparable figure is higher in Canada although, as the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) pointed out in his remarks, the proper kind of study of this problem that we would like to have has not been made in our country.

In the United States recently there has been much discussion about the war on poverty. Senator Fulbright, who is one of the more enlightened of contemporary American political figures, said recently in a speech at the University of North Carolina that the war on poverty is only beginning. In fact he criticized his countrymen in a sense for their preoccupation with the cold war, induced by an hysteria that has lingered as a hangover from the McCarthy era. He suggested that more attention needs to be paid to the problems of social security.

Perhaps the analogy has some value in regard to what I was talking about a moment ago. While we may be pursuing a very vital and necessary course in indulging in introspection about our national identity and culture, it may be that this is being done at the expense of our resources and creativeness just as in the United States the cold war, as Senator Fulbright has suggested, has affected that country.

In talking about equalization of opportunity, and social security would be a part of that grandiose phrase, the traditional outlook has been, of course, that, rural areas are continually attempting to bring themselves up to urban standards. But I am quite convinced, as I feel most of us are, that perhaps some of the greatest human misery that exists in this country exists within the very heartland of our cities. The problems of urban growth and urban renewal are just as important because poverty is just as harsh and in some cases perhaps harsher in our cities than in rural areas.

The problem of urban renewal is one that again necessitates, I suggest, national policies and national standards. Many hon. members on both sides of the house have enumerated programs which would have national implications to raise our economic standards, and standards of living. As has been mentioned earlier in the debate, the government has made a start on some of these things. It has made a start unprecedented for Canada in bringing forth legislation relative to planning, and the creation of the Department of Industry is something that represents a significant step forward. I hope that an enlightened federal approach to the problem of urban renewal will be another that will be forthcoming.

This afternoon we listened to a speech by the distinguished member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart). It is obvious that the way the name of that constituency is bandied about by some of the less informed members of the house, they do not know how to pronounce it correctly as we do. We know that this afternoon this very distinguished member enumerated some of the programs and policies which this government has started, and some of the things which they have not yet started but which we hope they will start. These programs will affect the equalization of opportunities for those of us from the Atlantic provinces.

Now, I have talked about social security and about a strong federal government with national standing. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that having been here for some time, perhaps not as long as most hon. members in this house, I have come to the conclusion that the greatest challenge that faces Canada today is not biculturalism. The greatest challenge that faces us is the eradication of poverty and the equalization of opportunity for all Canadians in all provinces. We should make sure that Canada and Canadians keep abreast of changing conditions in our increasingly scientific and technological world. We will find then that biculturalism and bilingualism will become only part of this greater problem.

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): In participating in this budget debate, I wish to say at the outset that it is my intention to confine my remarks to matters of immediate concern within the riding of Bruce. In dealing with these matters, I shall address my remarks to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets). While my remarks, in essence, might appear to the minister to be criticism, I would remind him that as the elected representative of the riding of Bruce I speak for and on behalf of the constituents of that riding and the matters of concern that affect the people of the riding, and the welfare of the people.

One matter of immediate concern which I would present to the minister for reconsideration is the dredging of the harbour at Kincardine. I refer now to a letter written to the minister on October 16, 1963, in which I ask, with reference to a dredging program, "when will a dredging program be undertaken to improve the harbour facilities at Kincardine." I quote from the minister's reply of October 23, 1963:

> It is considered that existing depths in the harbour are adequate for the normal traffic. Therefore, it is not planned to undertake any dredging program at this place.

I draw attention, Mr. Speaker, to the words "are adequate for the normal traffic". I have here a letter from fishermen operating out of the harbour at Kincardine, dated March 3, 1964. I quote:

> We the undersigned fishermen, holding valid commercial fishing licences out of the harbour situated at Kincardine, Ontario and district, respectfully petition to have the harbour at Kincardine dredged.
> We believe that it should be deepened to a depth navigable by fishing craft, and also yachts and smaller craft which are very numerous during the summer season. At the present time the harbour is not navigable by any craft with a draft greater than four feet. We respectfully submit that it should be deepened to a depth not less than nine or ten feet.
> The present condition of this harbour, prevents it being used by any craft caught on the lake by a storm, the majority of fishing craft in this area have a draft of seven feet.

This letter is signed by D. A. MacLeod; Charles L. Pilon; Roy F. Jackson; William R. Jackson and F. B. Rayner. These men are all licensed commercial fishermen operating out of the harbour at Kincardine.

The immediate need for dredging is caused by the current low water level of the great lakes. The drop is now close to three feet. In addition, there is the natural silting from the Penetangore river which flows into the harbour basin. The town of Kincardine is very much aware of the resultant silting action and has endeavoured to convince the Department of Public Works of the benefits of a control dam. These efforts were unsuccessful, and I should like to quote from a reply the town received from the Department of Public Works. It is addressed to Mr. C. Roy Whiting, chairman, town planning board, corporation of the town of Kincardine. I quote from the text:

> Of the three purposes or benefits mentioned in your letter that would result from the construction of the dam, only the prevention of the harbour silting up would be of interest to this department. In this regard, our annual cost to maintain the harbour for its present use amounts to less than $3,000. Furthermore, the percentage of this average cost, due to settlement of river materials as distinct from materials entering from the lake, are not known. Also the ability of the proposed dam to retain the river silt would depend largely on the design and can only be determined by a detailed study to establish the amount of silt being carried down and the amount that would still pass through the dam during periods of heavy flow.

Although the capital cost of the dam, including expropriation, etc., and its operating costs, have not been calculated, it would appear that any savings, if any, in our maintenance dredging as a result of the dam would be extremely small and, therefore, any participation in this project by this department could not be justified.

Mr. Speaker, this reply sets out in detail the small annual cost of the maintenance of the harbour which is essential to the fishing craft, a shelter during storms, a tourist attraction, and the mainstay in the economy of a resort town. I have here a resolution passed by the Kincardine town council, indicating they are aware of the existing situation. This resolution is dated March 10, 1964, and reads as follows:

That the council request the clerk to write a letter to the Department of Public Works requesting that the Kincardine harbour be dredged and some form of renovating program be carried out in 1964.

This resolution is signed by R. Lautenslager, clerk-treasurer. The Kincardine harbour is a natural stopover for yachtsmen, since it is approximately halfway between Sarnia and Tobermory. The business community has worked hard for many years to attract this trade and it is of the utmost importance that harbour facilities be available. I should like to put on the record two letters from businessmen who service pleasure craft with fuel and supplies. This letter is dated March 10 and is addressed to the Minister of Public Works. I quote:

May we take the liberty to petition you and your department to give serious consideration of dredging the harbour at Kincardine this spring?

I have gasoline pumps at the government dock and last year we had between 450 and 500 yachts; most of these yachts were from the U.S.A. and they leave large sums of American currency each year in Canada. Mr. Cottrill, who is my competitor, also had a number of yachts at his marina.

As you likely know, we are situated just about half-way between Sarnia and Tobermory. This makes a nice run from Sarnia to Kincardine in a day and then from Kincardine to Tobermory the next day. For the last number of years the boating has been on the increase and it will continue to do so, however, we must help the cause along by giving the boating people good harbours. I understand that the states are fixing their harbours so as to keep the boaters on the American side of the great lakes.

Goderich has a good harbour, but it is a commercial port and some of the boaters do not like the noise, etc.

From a safety point of view there is a stretch of about 60 to 70 miles between Goderich and Port Elgin where, if a sudden storm came up, there would be no haven for a boat to seek shelter except Kincardine, and with the shallow water at Kincardine it would be difficult for a fair sized boat to get into our harbour. Some of the fishermen tell me that they will have trouble getting their fishing tugs into Kincardine this year.

Therefore, sir, we here in Kincardine would appreciate very much if you would consider our request and have the harbour dredged to a depth of about 10 to 12 feet and have the pilings around the harbour checked.

Yours sincerely,
Clarence H. Walpole.

I wish, now, to quote a second letter which is also addressed to the Minister of Public Works. This letter is dated March 14, 1964. It says:

We are writing in support of a plea that some dredging be done at our harbour in Kincardine, Ontario.

We realize that our harbour is used for small pleasure craft and that we have upwards of 600 yachts each summer. These yachts are over 90 per cent from the American side and constitute a large part of our tourist trade. The tourist trade has always been one of our main industries and we are naturally interested in seeing that we have proper facilities to look after it. Unless we have 10 to 12 feet of water in our harbour there are many yachts and fishing tugs which will have difficulty. Many yachts are sailing craft and these, by their type of construction, draw considerable water, even small ones. We should also like to point out that as a harbour for storm shelter we do not have enough water to admit fair sized craft.

We do hope you will give consideration to dredging at this time.

Sincerely yours,
James C. D. Cottrill.

The low water level is of serious consequence to the lakeshore tourist areas of western Ontario. Recently, the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) and the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Noble) brought this to the attention of the house. I have here a picture published in the Wiarton Echo on March 26 showing a dock at Wiarton which is completely above the waterline. There is a late model car parked on the dry ground beside the dock. As further evidence of the seriousness of the low water situation I have the April 8 issue of the Port Elgin Times. On the front page is a picture of the dock at Port Elgin. Underneath, it says:

The receding waters of the great lakes and especially the Georgian bay and lake Huron area are causing considerable concern among the lakeshore communities. The lowest ever, might mean fewer yachts stay-over in Port Elgin this year. This photo, taken from the lakeshore road area towards the small craft catwalk and the Bluewater tearoom, shows how far down the water has gone this past year.

From the same issue of the Port Elgin Times I should like to quote the caption beneath another photograph of government property at Port Elgin. The picture shows a breakwall which is high and dry above the waterline. There is no water in sight at all. The caption reads:

The south breakwall is presently high and dry at the local beach as the water level dropped another two feet this year.

This is further evidence of the seriousness of the situation. Also from Port Elgin comes a picture beneath which appears the following caption:

Here are three craft attempting to turn around to come back into the local harbor. The boats were out some distance past the breakwalls, but low water levels allowed spectators to walk out right up to the stuck craft most of them making their way along the stoney bar shown above.

This is further indication of the gravity of the situation in the lakeshore area. I have another picture showing the Southampton harbour with an article stating the intention of the local residents. This is from the Southampton Beacon.

The Georgian Bay development association has begun a serious survey of the water levels of the Georgian bay and lake Huron.

Because of the serious effects of the present record low levels of these waters, commercial trade is suffering in several ports and hundreds of cottagers as well as commercial enterprises are finding their docks even higher out of water.

Numerous examples of this devastating effect can be noted at establishments along the shore lines and to stay in business this year thousands of dollars will have to be spent by the owners.

Neville Keefe, general manager of the association, told this paper that the association's first move would be general discussion with government officials and other agencies as to the causes of the recession of the waters, and a survey of the effects of this on the economy of the areas affected.

The low water level presented problems last year as well. I refer now to the launching ramp at the government dock at Dyer's Bay. Last year the local residents found it necessary to extend at their own expense—I repeat: at their own expense—the small craft landing ramp leading to the receding waterline. I was informed by the secretary of the Dyer's Bay resort association that the extension they built last year is now six feet from the waterline. I intend to speak on this matter on another occasion. The problems resulting from the current low water level are evident at all government docks on the shoreline of Bruce. Immediate attention should be given to the harbour facilities at Port Elgin and Southampton.

It was with dismay that we learned in Bruce of the decision of the present administration to cancel the proposed dredging project at the Sauble river. This program involved some $60,000 and was absolutely necessary to the maintenance of the tourist industry in this resort area.

To return to the situation at Kincardine harbour, I would ask the minister to give serious consideration to the numerous requests for a dredging program. In addition, the department should investigate the damage being done to pleasure craft by the pilings which are now above the waterline. We would also ask the minister to consider the petitions of the community for the construction of a small craft launching ramp. The minister stated in his reply of November 19, 1963 that he would have engineers examine a site if there were reasons to warrant an expenditure, and I now present for his consideration petitions of the chamber of commerce of Kincardine. These petitions are addressed to myself, and the first is dated March 28, 1964.

The Kincardine and district chamber of commerce urgently request that you plead with your government on our behalf, for the erection of a boat ramp in the vicinity of the harbour.

Your government wishes us to improve our tourist facilities in order to encourage more tourist dollars spent in Canada. We feel sure they will want to do their part to carry out this important program.

As lake Huron is the only geographical asset we have, it behooves us to make the most of it.

If we are assured work will be started on the ramp in the immediate future, we can advertise it to our prospective summer visitors.

May we have a definite answer immediately,

Very truly yours,
Mrs. J. Henderson
Secretary-treasurer.

The second petition is dated April 2, 1964 and reads as follows:

I'm writing on behalf of the chamber of commerce with regard to the Department of Public Works building a boat launching ramp in Kincardine.

Situated as we are on lake Huron it is unthinkable that we should go through another summer without proper launching facilities. We have done a road check and we find that every fifth car has a boat and trailer. This check was done for us by our chief of police last July. Those who operate tourist accommodation tell me that there are many requests for a boat launching ramp. We in Kincardine are going all-out this summer to promote our tourist industry. This is more important to the life of our town because of the loss of two important industries. There are also many more boats in Kincardine and surrounding area than there has ever been.

To date we have been able to get a suitable site on the north side of the north pier, directly in front of the house occupied by Gordon Lafrance. There is much more ground work to be done in this regard. However, for now I think those of us from the chamber and the town council who have viewed the site agree that this is the most logical place. Also we have enlisted the help necessary to get the roadway built. This will be done by the town council. The chamber, although lacking in funds will do everything possible with regard to smooth operation of the ramp and with the normal upkeep of the site once it has been built.

Mr. Scroggie, the district engineer, from London had his Mr. George Metrink call on us and we have obtained some valuable information from him. They have been most co-operative and we appreciate the efforts they have made thus far.

That is signed "Jim Cottrill" on behalf of the tourist committee. Mr. Speaker, in concluding my remarks I ask the minister to reconsider his reply of October 23, 1963 with regard to a dredging program at the Kincardine harbour. I reiterate that reply:

It is considered that existing depths in the harbour are adequate for the normal traffic. Therefore it is not planned to undertake a dredging program at this place.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of those concerned, I ask that we be given the opportunity to substantiate our requests.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Ouellet (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my remarks, allow me to congratulate the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) on his recent appointment as Minister of Citizenship and Immigration for Canada. I will not wait any longer to wish him a fruitful career within the federal cabinet and in the administration of his department in particular.

The beautiful riding of Matapedia-Matane runs along the eastern side of the riding of Rimouski which I have the honour and the privilege to represent in the House of Commons of Canada.

If Rimouski is represented in the house by a member of the opposition, it has the enviable privilege of seeing two of its distinguished sons in the federal cabinet.

That is why, at this time, I must offer my thanks to the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) for the great honour done to so many families connected with the hon. members for Outremont-St. Jean (Mr. Lamontagne) and for Matapedia-Matane.

In fact, the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean comes from Mont Joli, Rimouski county, and he too was appointed recently Secretary of State for Canada. As far as the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is concerned, he comes from Luceville, near the town of Rimouski.

The two cabinet ministers, who come from the Rimouski county, maintain probably a particular affection for the region of their respective origin. To every valiant heart, the nativeland is always dear, is it not?

With regard to the riding of Rimouski, it would be most ungrateful on my part to rise here and charge the federal government with discriminating against Rimouski voters and its representative. Facts are facts, and a careful study of the measures passed by Ottawa in favour of the riding of Rimouski bear witness to the solicitude of the federal government in providing Rimouski with its full share of subsidies, grants, etc. Public works, harbour installations, subsidies to the ferry Père Nouvel in service between Rimouski and the north shore, are amongst the main contributions of the federal government to my riding. Such a kind of co-operation is to the credit of the government. Speaking of co-operation, I would like to thank the hon. member for Saguenay (Mr. Blouin) for helping as concerns the proposals made with a view to solving the problem of the ferry between Rimouski and Baie Comeau.

I believe repairs and wharf installations at Pointe au Pere and Trois Pistoles will again be subsidized this year by the federal government. When the facilities become available the ferry Le Razade, which operates between Trois Pistoles and Les Escoumins, will give the required service which is necessary for the development of our region. Incidentally, when will a deep water wharf be built in Trois Pistoles? The existing wharf is situated on a ridge and requires the dredging operations which are bothersome for all parties concerned. It is said that a deep water wharf could be built at little expense about two miles east of the existing structure.

Trois Pistoles is a growing maritime centre and consideration should be given to the establishment of a shipyard in that community. That is the unavoidable conclusion to which we have come after a thorough examination of the problem.

The constituency I represent in this dignified chamber is, as everybody knows, one of those regions affected by economic stagnation. I will admit that commendable efforts have been made in the past, particularly during the last season, by means of large winter works grants.

Thus, the city of Trois Pistoles ranked first in Quebec for its winter works program, thanks to indispensable co-operation by its civic representatives. As a matter of fact, all the mayors of the municipalities in the county I represent surely deserve to be commended for their initiative at the opportune time.

Hon. members of the house, first let us all admit that we meet here with the responsibility of giving the Canadian people the best possible government, that is the part we have to play, and also our responsibility. Indeed, did we not promise it to our voters, to all those men and women in our respective ridings, even before undertaking this task with a solemn oath to Her Majesty, our gracious and glorious Queen, Elizabeth II.

I am very far from agreeing with those who want another election to settle our political problems in Canada. The attitude of those who try to abuse the masses by their sustained effort to rouse one family against the other in a fight based on linguistic, racial and religious prejudices and even go as far as to hold the public or political authority entirely—not to say solely—responsible for troubles which are inherent to our earthly life, such attitude cannot be accepted.

As I said a moment ago, such attitude tortures people and distorts active democratic principles because another federal election, in Quebec at this time, would I am sorry to say, just delight all those who could not care less about the present needs and responsibilities.

We have a tremendous task to carry out here for four years, or longer if needed. At the end of that period, this parliament will have, I hope, the satisfaction of handing over to those who will form the twenty seventh parliament better conditions than the ones it inherited.

Furthermore, from the Macdonald-Cartier administration in 1867 down to the present time, Canada has profited by its politicians' solicitude. In every period, our Canadian people have freely recorded their epic events as well as their tragedies.

As I am now more fully aware of your kindness, hon. gentlemen, here is another remark which I would like to submit to your serious consideration.

The constituency which I represent is bounded on the north by the St. Lawrence and on the south by New Brunswick. This constituency is part of the senatorial division called Gulf, which is represented since July 1955 by a Canadian of Irish extraction. This hon. senator was a member of this house for 30 years and he is a valuable man in his political party because he is quite devoted to each and everyone. We must say that about him.

I shall therefore raise the following matter, which is of great concern to me, and I should like if possible to call the attention of government members, of Liberal members, to it, because it is serious and urgent.

Since the beginning of this century, the party in office at present has ruled over, or rather has controlled the appointments to the Senate for 43 out of the last 64 years.

As far as Acadians are concerned, I wonder why the Liberals have not treated fairly those fine Canadians who, moreover, support the Liberal party both at the federal and at the provincial levels? Shall we have to wait for another administration in Canada to get an answer, a solution? No, it would be really sad, even tragic. I do believe that we deserve another Sir Charles Tupper in Canada.

[Mr. Ouellet.]

Mr. Speaker, if I talk like that, it is to claim fair representation for the Acadians in the Senate and also to solemnly state that I am not a separatist; I do not want to forsake, spurn or reject my compatriots in the other provinces of Canada. I feel that the confederation sanctioned by the Macdonald-Cartier ministry has until now justified the hopes of men who know the value of peace, peace within ourselves and with others.

Some might consider this statement rather daring, but it is a matter of deep faith and hope. Yes, we have our political independence in Canada. What we must still get is our economic independence, because we are under the domination of foreign, especially American, capital.

As I say, if there is a minority that we of Quebec must hold dear—in fact, our past attitude is not too glorious in that respect—it is certainly the Acadians. Have the most ardent nationalists of our province held a dialogue with French Canadians outside Quebec? Do they realize now that those who hurt them the most are the selfish Canadians who commit the sin known to anyone who has read Genesis, that of Cain, the hateful man who refused to show brotherly love to Abel.

In New Brunswick, where 40 per cent of the people are of Acadian origin, the premier who is an an Acadian himself has a hard time giving his people satisfactory economic conditions. We Quebeckers must throw in our lot with these admirable fellow citizens.

I am most pleased to tell you that I have had many opportunities to meet the people of northern New Brunswick where I have many relatives and friends. As I came to know them and their area, I rapidly formed a lasting friendship with those noble people, the most loyal subjects of Canada. These people constitute, in my opinion, one of the greatest treasures of our national inheritance.

I believe that everyone here no matter what part of this vast country he comes from, can acknowledge that I speak the truth. They settled here over 360 years ago and their unrivalled history is that of a people which would not disappear. Acadians, my cousins, my brothers, the Canadian confederation must be for you the subject of your most noble hopes.

Incidentally, I long for the day when we have a road, a highway connecting my county, from the St. Lawrence river to Moncton, the metropolis of the Acadians; a road which would go, for instance, from Bic, the centre of farm unionism, mutualism, cooperatism, in the lower St. Lawrence region, the Switzerland of lower Quebec, adorned by the Ile-au-Massacre, a memento of our civilization, would be an ideal starting point towards the land of Evangeline. Such a motor trip would be for me, I dare say, a heavenly ride.

Mr. Speaker, may I exhort, even beg the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), the Solicitor General (Mr. MacNaught); the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud), the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauve) to get together in order to promote the official recognition of the French language in New Brunswick before July 1, 1967.

In fact, recently we learned that the hon. member for Iles de la Madeleine, stronghold of the Acadians, was appointed minister in the federal cabinet to administer the Department of Forestry. So it is in order to congratulate the holder of this office, without forgetting to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). No doubt, it was a nice surprise for the population of that constituency established in 1947.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a final appeal in favour of the rights of democracy in Canada.

Canadian democracy should not be used exclusively for political purposes where strength, trickery and profit too supersede the love of peace, justice and liberty. Let us face it, the power of Canada resides primarily in the soundness of its domestic markets. What are we doing for the economic and financial independence of the Canadian family? Have we, here in Canada, a policy concerning the Canadian family? We are unfortunately going ahead very tremulously in that regard.

In 1950, the federal government was more than making ends meet; it showed a surplus, with less than $2½ billion for the year. This year it is asking for more than $7 billion. Therefore, the budget has nearly tripled in 15 years.

I am a member from Quebec province. What is happening there? Well, if we go back a few years, we find that at that time, the provincial government could get along on less than $500 million a year—more than that, it succeeded in reducing its public debt; today the provincial government expenditures reach a billion and a half.

The government's share has tripled, that is, it has tripled in Ottawa, and tripled in Quebec; the municipalities and the school boards, in the last 15 years, have had a similar experience. However, the income of the Quebec family, the rural family specially, has not tripled, no, never. Yet, we, the federal members, have seen our salary tripled, while that of the Quebec members has quadrupled since the war.

I realize that these facts are not very interesting. Nevertheless, I think that we must straighten out things if we are to discharge our duty honourably here.

It seems to me, for instance, that any family concern, whatever it may be, should be protected and should also get some assistance. The family is the main cell or the basic cell of society.

Do not our family allowances, as they are nowadays in 1964, condemn our political system? We claim that we are always supporting the values of Christian civilization. Does not capitalism, through its abuses, expose us at present to the disorders and ruin which are brought about by bolshevism?

Let us be practical. A new alignment is required at this time because we are choking in a materialistic atmosphere. Canada with its human resources of all races, with the superabundance of its natural resources, our national natural resources, has been endowed by Providence for our welfare, that is the welfare of all Canadians over and above everything. Yes, Canada must provide for each family everything that a national birthright can guarantee. Therefore, let us fully dedicate ourselves right now to the imperatives of our time.

The one you have just heard is trying to speak on behalf of the man in the fields. I do not wish to hold any party or any member in check by the stand I am taking here.

I do not claim to be here for ever either; besides there is nothing permanent in this world. I come from the hinterland to make a heartfelt appeal to this dignified and majestic chamber and in so doing, I think I am the faithful voice, at least I earnestly hope so, of dozens of generations which have lived peacefully on the banks of the majestic St. Lawrence river.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, having listened in relative quietness for the last two weeks to the debate on the supplementary estimates I welcome this opportunity to take a more vocal part in the deliberations of the house. Indeed, remembering the rather strange atmosphere that prevailed in the house during the last few weeks, I hope there is nothing in my speech that may do anything to reintroduce that type of ill will which we can do very well without in the house.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, when I voice the opinion that possibly the economy of Canada is on the march once again, I am sure I have the full support of all hon. members of the house. The fact is that unemployment is practically non-existent in some parts of the country, and in others it is at its lowest point in many, many years.

Almost daily, presidents of our large corporations are tabling their financial reports showing record profits, and our experts are predicting not only a greater share of the export market but that the present boom might very well continue into 1965.

I have not been long in the house, but long enough to witness the presentation of two budgets, and I may say that possibly this latter budget is but a continuation or an appendix of the first one presented by the Minister of Finance. I remember taking part in the budget debate last year when I predicted that some of the less noticeable parts in the budget would help the Canadian economy long after some of its more controversial aspects passed into oblivion. I can give one prime example of such a hidden factor in the minister's first budget. I refer, for instance, to the obvious and perhaps unexpected success of our auto parts industry as a result, not only of the first budget, but of enlightened legislation introduced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to support that budget.

The Financial Post of April 4 had an article headed "Car parts spreading prosperity all over". The article lists possibly a dozen or more small, independent, Canadian auto parts manufacturing firms which will have to expand because they are in the happy predicament of having more orders than they can fill with their present facilities.

Appearing elsewhere in the same issue of that newspaper is a table showing that last year we exported almost four times as many auto parts as in any year previously. Another article in that newspaper, in the same issue, written by Knowlton Nash in Washington, has a headline which reads, "U.S. twitches over our auto exports . . . Ottawa plan seems to be working". This article outlines some of the things that are well known to most of us, for instance, that General Motors will be spending $120 million to build auto and truck assembly plants, and parts plants in Canada, and that Chrysler Corporation predicts that within 20 years their facilities and factories all over the world would be getting most of their more important parts from Canada.

American Motors Corporation is increasing its purchases of auto parts from Canada, especially bumpers, headlights, transmission parts and wheel covers, and the article further points out that the McCord Corporation of Detroit has placed orders for 100,000 radiators in Canada for the U.S. market in 1965.

There are many other examples in this article, which I do not intend to read into the record at this time, but one thing which did catch my fancy was the tribute paid to this legislation, to this boom in the auto parts industry, by a representative of the Ford Motor Company, who voiced cautiously his approval of the plan and who indicated that the Ford Motor Company would soon be part and parcel of it. I think that tickled my fancy, and what I am sure will appeal to all non-partisan members of the house, is the fact he referred to the plan as the Drury plan. This puts a stamp of approval on it by the automobile parts manufacturers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would be false to myself and the party I represent if I were to say or to intimate that all was well with the Canadian economy. As a matter of fact, many pockets of chronic unemployment that exist across the country are a source of concern to all of us, and perhaps even more so to me because I come from la belle province du Quebec. I feel very strongly about this problem because I think it is one of the contributing factors to the strength of the separatist movement in Quebec.

As a resident for 42 years of that province, as one who has had the privilege of breaking bread with French Canadians, as one who respects their traditions, language and culture, I feel strongly that the separatist movement could not stand alone on its emotional appeal to the French Canadians. Coupled with the tendency towards separatism was the despair and resentment that is a by-product, and a bad by-product, of chronic unemployment. Picture, if you will, Mr. Speaker, the undue publicity this movement gets outside the province of Quebec. I usually go home at the week end. Later I pick up the papers in the parliamentary reading room on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays, and on reading them I do not recognize the province of Quebec where I have just spent two days. But I do feel that many irresponsible leaders in French Canada, leaders in politics, leaders in the newspaper world, leaders in our different organizations, are harnessing and using this movement for their own selfish short term gains. So, like everybody else in this chamber, I would welcome the disappearance of chronic unemployment in Canada.

I was not in the house earlier today when the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) spoke very eloquently, I understand, but I appreciate the sentiments he expressed toward the province of Quebec and as to the necessity for tolerance and understanding in this country. In my view, Mr. Speaker, we were all elected to this house because we were supposed to be 265 people with intelligence, tolerance and the ability to see the other man's point of view.

There is one last article in the Financial Post to which I should like to refer, and it touches on a different subject. It is written by a lawyer, John McDonald, Q.C., a very prominent person in the economic field. I am interested in the article not because I want to refer to its contents, although I think some of the economists in this house and would-be economists would do well to look at it. I am interested basically in the headline which is in these words: "How to Buy Back Canada". It is particularly significant to me because I think it represents to us a fact about which many deep thinking Canadians are perturbed and worried. I refer to the fact that daily more of our heritage and our children's birthright disappears into the hands of friendly but foreign interests.

I pay tribute to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) this evening for having at least paid some attention to this problem. Whether or not we agree with the method he employed is another matter. Certainly economists, like lawyers, are a breed that tend to disagree. But the important thing is that the Minister of Finance is aware of the problem and is searching desperately for some solution, in the same way that many other Canadians are, as Mr. McDonald indicated. Before I go on record in the mind of any member of the house as being against foreign capital, may I say I think it is our duty to encourage foreign capital to come into Canada, but I think that the type of foreign capital we need is that which comes into our country in the form of loans or debentures, the type of capital which comes into this country under a contract specifically stating when we can pay the money back and at what interest. This country can ill afford any further domination of its economic future.

If, as some cynics seem to feel, the time is perhaps even too late to win back any part of our economic control, there is one field where I believe we can do something. I refer to the gradual domination of our field of communications by outside interests. I feel very strongly on this point because in my view communications and culture are synonomous in the world of today, and what would Canada be without its Canadian indentity and Canadian culture? I think history will at some time in the future pay tribute to the part that French Canada has played in retaining the French culture and therefore a Canadian culture.

The fields of communication which I believe should be kept purely and simply all-Canadian are radio, television, our daily newspapers and our periodicals. Living as we do next door to a nation which for the most part shares our language, our common heritage and our democratic principles we are faced with the danger of losing control of our culture and communications in the same way we have lost control over so many of our industries. That is why I am a strong advocate of the C.B.C. While I do not believe that the C.B.C. is above criticism, that it does not need reform periodically or a new financial administration, I shudder when I see well meaning members stand up in the house and, by their questions, their suggestions and their pleas try to reduce the C.B.C. to a pale carbon copy of our private radio and television interests. In my view the C.B.C. was one of the greatest single forces and factors in the emergence of Canada as a nation, and when and if the C.B.C. is watered down to that carbon copy to which I have referred I believe we will have witnessed—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It should be worth watching then.

Mr. Mackasey: Our expert in lariats is back again. Happy birthday.

I feel that when that day comes we will have begun the acceleration of the end of Canada as a country. I feel just as strongly about our daily newspapers. It is an open secret that at the present moment strong forces are uniting in the United Kingdom to enter the Canadian market by buying some of our daily newspapers. I wonder what would happen if the molding of our editorial comment, the shaping of public opinion, were to pass out of Canadian control into foreign domination. Who would be left to help us fight against the constant encroachment into Canadian industry?

An hon. Member: The Conservative party.

Mr. Mackasey: We are not the only country which has had this problem. France recognized it in 1944. Many members of the house know that France lost a very important segment of its daily newspapers before the last war. In 1944 France introduced legislation and I should like to read into the record one clause:

> All owners, partners, shareholders, silent partners, financial backers or other persons financially interested in a publication must be of French nationality.

This is the type of positive clearcut action that we need to protect our communications in Canada.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Give us your opinion of Time and Reader's Digest while you are at it.

Mr. Mackasey: Our great friend is back again. One rather looks for hon. members on that side to have enough courtesy to keep quiet while a member is speaking. I may get to Time and Reader's Digest.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You were reading your speech so well that I thought you needed a few interruptions.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the government has indicated its intention to introduce legislation at this session of parliament to help Canadian periodicals. It is designed to make advertising in Canadian periodicals more attractive than advertising in American periodicals. It is a well known fact that most of our periodicals are doomed to extinction unless some financial assistance comes their way. That is why I believe that Reader's Digest and Time must not be exempt from the proposed legislation. I feel very strongly that Reader's Digest and Time magazine are American publications, have always been American publications and fully intend to remain American publications. It is my strong view that so far as the editorial content of a magazine is concerned the nationality of the people who write the editorials should be the criterion, whether or not a magazine is Canadian or American. The fact that it is printed in Canada, Mr. Speaker, is incidental, and it is the source from which the dictation of its editorial policy comes that is a deciding factor. I cannot, for the life of me, see how two United States magazines, owned by United States capital, can consider themselves to be Canadian publications merely because they contain four pages of Canadian material.

I often wonder what the policy of these particular magazines would be, if they were forced at some date in the future when our two countries may not see eye to eye on a common problem, to take a stand. Would they take a stand for the Canadian point of view or the United States point of view? May I just allay the fears of the many readers of Time and Reader's Digest in this country? I fully believe that if the legislation is extended to include Reader's Digest and Time, these two excellent magazines will continue on the newstands because they are basically excellent magazines. We have other excellent magazines that are out and out United States publications and make no pretence about being Canadian. I could cite as examples, Saturday Evening Post, Fortune and many other magazines. I feel that I must, here and now, reserve my right to speak again when this legislation is brought before the house.

I feel, in view of the situation in relation to the province of Quebec, the time has come when our newspapers, periodicals and opinion formers, our professors, teachers, indeed all Canadians must take a good look at the problem of being Canadian today. We must now put political expediency aside; we must put regionalism aside, indeed even politics aside, if this country is to meet the challenge that lies before it. It is time for the members of this house to show some of the qualities which it was presumed they possessed when they came into this house. It is time that English speaking members showed some responsibility outside the house when they are discussing Quebec, and it is also time some of our French Canadian members used a little discretion, a little more restraint when speaking inside the house.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that it was suggested to me a few hours ago that, when I suggested the possible inclusion of Time and Reader's Digest in this proposed legislation, I did so because I represented hidden interests. I can assure you, sir, and the house that nothing is further from the truth. Like so many other members here I came to this house with no special talents; I represent no wealth, no pressure groups, but I do represent 90,000 Canadians and I have the courage of my convictions and a willingness to express them in this house. I am one Canadian who is prepared to stand up and be counted when Canada is at stake.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): We have heard, Mr. Speaker, during the resumption of this budget debate a complete review of all sorts of adjectives applied to this budget. In fact, I sympathized with the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) when he was attempting to find some new ones. I must say that I thought his efforts sounded a little laboured.

In so far as this budget is concerned, I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) must feel fairly secure, at least secure in the knowledge he is not going to win any Oscar. After all, we understand that there is a performance in some other place tonight in which Oscars are being awarded. I do not believe last year's performance or this year's will give the minister any nomination for that award. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the minister last year reminded me a little of the hot-shot rookie coming up to the national hockey league. He goes out for the first game and, with a great burst of speed cuts around the goal but, somehow or other, he steps on a piece of tape and you know where he lands. This year, he has come out a second time, but much more cautiously, and may suffer from that a bit.

In any event, let us look at this budget. Without anticipating the debate that may follow on some of the resolutions, there is one item I should like to bring to the attention of the house. I refer to paragraph 7 of the income tax resolution under which a taxpayer, in computing his income, may have amounts expended by him in relation to the objection to his assessment, or an appeal from an assessment, and shall include in computing income any costs recovered in respect thereof. I hope the minister has some detailed explanation of the limitations that will be imposed on this provision. I hope my fellow lawyers are not going to take me to task, or even the accountants, but if severe limitations are not imposed on this provision I can foresee one big field day.

Who is going to say what are the costs of filing an objection to an assessment, or of prosecuting an appeal? I must say, therefore, we will undoubtedly get a clarification of this point. When we merely say that the taxpayers are going to be allowed the amount expended by them in this fashion, I think we are glossing it over. I feel we are going to get a lot of restrictions indicated by the minister when we come to a discussion of this resolution. Let us not look at this as a whole bag of goodies, because they just are not going to be there.

I should like to refer now to the other matter I had in mind. If we look at the estimates we know that the Minister of Finance indicated that in 1964-65 he expected a budgetary deficit of $402 million. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) has indicated quite clearly, as have a number of other hon. members, that in order to get down to this figure of $402 million the minister is going to have a windfall this year of some $170 million as a result of an acceleration in the payment of corporate income tax. This, of course, is something that has to be examined in proper perspective, and the indications are that, if it were not for this sum the deficit would be back to $585 million. I am not suggesting that we should be shouting for higher and higher deficits. As a matter of fact, when I listened to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) I thought that apparently that wing of the party says: We could not care less about the size of the deficit; spend and spend.

On the other hand, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) expressed his regret this evening that the minister had not imposed a tax cut. I do not know how these hon. members intend to get the best of both worlds.

An hon. Member: That would be a good way to get a deficit, though.

Mr. Lambert: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) was not talking about tax cuts. His idea was just that we should spend the money. The hon. member for Greenwood did not have much to say about spending programs. He wanted the minister to cut taxes.

In any event, there is an item of $14,250,000 which I think the minister has tucked away neatly. I do not think this item appears where it should appear and where it will, ultimately appear. I refer to loans. He has made a loan to the C.B.C. of $14,250,000 for capital projects. But how does he anticipate that this will be repaid? This corporation, unlike Atomic Energy of Canada, for example, is not a profit-making crown corporation. The C.B.C. takes anywhere from $75 million to $95 million from the treasury each year to meet the obligations imposed on it by the Broadcasting Act. Yet the minister lends the corporation more than $14 million. We would certainly like to know how the corporation intends to repay it. I am sure it is not the president of the corporation, or the vice president, or any of the board of directors who are going to repay the loan. Somewhere along the line, two or three years hence, the minister will have to write off this loan and the amount will then have to go on the expenditure side. I think, therefore, we should raise the amount of estimated expenditure by this $14,250,000.

There is not much time left before ten o'clock and I had intended to speak about two points relating to sales tax. However, I think I will leave them until we are discussing the resolutions on excise tax.

Mr. Gordon: You will have a hard time doing that. There are none.

Mr. Lambert: Well, the application of sales tax to production machinery came into effect last year. I hope, Mr. Speaker, you will grant me a little indulgence; I do not intend to discourse on matters which have been covered before. I think the minister is aware of this problem. It was raised last year and I indicated it would arise, particularly in respect of goods acquired prior to June 13 but delivered subsequently. We face a real problem in the city of Edmonton. As a result of a tender, the city entered into an agreement for the purchase of a steam turbine generator at a cost of some $2,200,000. The minister indicates, in the correspondence which I have read, that unfortunately the city will have to pay the sales tax because they did not buy this machinery for re-sale to someone else—in other words, they were not committed to pass it on to someone else at a firm price. But this turbine will not be delivered and installed before 1965. Because the city bought it for its own use for the production of electricity within the community, it now has to pay the sales tax. Strangely enough, if the city had bought this turbine through an intermediary who was importing it into the country from Britain, there would have been no sales tax.

I confess I find some difficulty in understanding the logic of the position. If this turbine had been bought by an intermediary for the city of Edmonton for delivery there would have been no liability for sales tax. Yet because the city buys it, and because part of it is made in Canada, sales tax is to be charged. I submit that the explanations given by the minister last year, the nature of the hon. gentleman's speech, indicated that this steam turbine would not be subject to sales tax. Nevertheless, in the cold light of administration, we now find that the tax has been imposed.

With respect to loans to university students, I would draw the minister's attention to the proposal put to him and to members of this house by the Canadian union of students who prefer some sort of scholarship bursary grant based on scholastic attainment and on need. As to this whole matter of interest free loans, it will be most instructive to see how the banks will, in fact, administer them.

I was gratified to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) with regard to Time and Reader's Digest. Reader's Digest is, I think, harmless with respect to the pressure it could bring to bear, but I can assure the hon. member that if there ever was a difference of opinion on policy between Canada and the United States all he needs to read is the editorializing which is done in the other publication and he will see just where the pressure is applied. I believe the proposal which the government is now making is just one which will lead to the rich getting richer and the poor getting poorer. What is being done is to enshrine in legislation the precise anomalies which existed previously, shutting out competition from Time and Reader's Digest and building a beautiful protective fence around them so that the other publications are in a worse position. The advantage about which we have complained is now to be protected by legislation. For this reason I think the government should take another look at this proposal. I do not approve this principle of exempting particular publications. It is like picking out one taxpayer and saying to him: We intend to let you get by; you do not need to pay this particular type of income tax. Or: We intend to give you a particular exemption, or an accelerated rate of depreciation. To my mind this is a bad tax principle and the sooner the government can get rid of it the better off we shall be.

May I call it ten o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the leader of the house what business we shall have before us on Wednesday and the rest of the week, if he is able to tell us.

Mr. Favreau: We shall, of course, be completing the budget debate tomorrow. As to Wednesday and the rest of the week, and maybe the beginning of next week, I hope to be in a position to make a full announcement some time tomorrow afternoon.

It being two minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 14, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORT OF SEVENTH MEETING OF CANADA-U.S. INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

Mr. Speaker: By leave of the house, and perhaps by way of a happy coincidence with the subsequent visit, I hope, of a distinguished guest, may I lay on the table in English and in French the report of the seventh meeting of the Canada-United States interparliamentary group. A report in identical terms is being tabled in the other place by its Speaker, who had the honour of sharing with me the chair at these meetings. The meeting was conducted in two committees, one which considered economic matters and the other defence and foreign policy. The appendices to this report include reports of the discussion in each of these committees, which have been agreed upon with our United States colleagues, and they are being reported to the two houses of congress.

Is it the wish of the house, in keeping with past practice, that this report and its appendices be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed that this report and its appendices be printed as an appendix to Hansard.

[Editor's note: For report referred to above see Appendix "A".]

PRIVILEGE

MR. SPEAKER—STATEMENT ON QUESTION BY MEMBER FOR YUKON

Mr. Speaker: While I am on my feet I may deal with the so-called question of privilege which was raised yesterday by the hon. member for Yukon.

Yesterday the hon. member for Yukon rose on a question of privilege respecting certain statements made by the Minister of Justice on Thursday, April 9. The question, he said, "is one which involves two separate factors, one concerning the translation from English to French, and second the translation from French to English as relayed by the translators in the translation booths". Following in the footsteps of the hon. member I will deal with this question first of all.

It is certainly inaccurate to use the words "translation" and "translators" in the present case. What we have in the house is rather "simultaneous interpretation" by "interpreters". The hon. member for Yukon adds that in this particular debate the translators did break down for a moment. One who understands the difficulties and niceties of both the English and French languages would surely realize that it is impossible to make a satisfactory simultaneous translation. The interpretation comes first; the translation follows, and is something else. Therefore only the text itself or the translation which appears the next day can be used exceptionally as a basis for a question of privilege, if such a question of privilege is at all admissible.

The hon. member, who is a student of parliamentary procedure, when he rose to speak yesterday had just heard a statement from the Chair to the effect that members should not raise so-called questions of privilege on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the house, and that questions of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament. When the hon. member objected to the use of the words "something that is false both in fact and in law" he must have known that the opinion I had just given was just as applicable to the use of those words by the Minister of Justice as it had been to the use of the same words by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. What I said then, which I can only repeat now, is that if the word "false" was applied to things said and not to an hon. member, the term ceases to be unparliamentary. Surely the hon. member does not expect me to revise my decision at this time.

I can only conclude that the allegations of the hon. member, in the circumstances in which they were made, that is after I had just ruled on the matter, do not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege but constitute an abuse of the rules of the house.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I wonder if I might ask whether Your Honour would deal with the other two points I raised yesterday in making my question of privilege, namely the further use of words by the minister—

Question of Privilege

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe I have covered the subject sufficiently, and this is not the time for debate.

Mr. Nielsen: Then I must rise again on a further question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: The question of privilege I raised yesterday dealt, in addition, with the words used by the minister which are to be found on page 1964 of the official records of the debates of this house—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a new question of privilege? If he is discussing the opinion I have given he is very much out of order.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not for a moment intend to question the decision which Your Honour has already given. I simply say that as part of the question of privilege I raised I referred to the words used by the minister—"such statements are a hateful betrayal of the truth, of the facts and of the law"—and suggested they should be dealt with by Your Honour and that you might decide whether the use of such words by the minister was parliamentary.

The other point I raised was this. The minister intimated that the translation into the English text of Hansard of the French words he used did not give the same meaning. I suggested yesterday that I should be entitled to have the English text altered so that it might agree with the French text. I feel these points should be dealt with. Perhaps Your Honour might take them under consideration and let me know tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: In the circumstances I do not think it is necessary to give further time and attention to the subject.

SHIPPING

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON GREAT LAKES WATER LEVELS

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I should like to lay on the table a report dealing with the matter raised by a number of members in the house namely the water level of the great lakes. Since the statement I have prepared is of considerable length, and since I believe it would be valueless unless read, I ask permission to have it printed in Hansard. I should like at the same time to table two copies of the 1961 report of the international joint commission entitled "Water Levels of Lake Ontario" which deals with the water levels of the great lakes system.

A number of hon. members have asked what plans are being made for the relief of this problem. I must tell them we are aware of the plan in respect to the so-called Grand canal in connection with which it is proposed to generate power from three rivers in northern Quebec and to use as a storage basin Abitibi lake, thence to have the water flow south to the great lakes system. It is the opinion of the appropriate branch of my department that any cost efficiency study of this plan should be preceded by a conference between the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, who are the owners of the resources.

May I have permission to table these documents?

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give permission?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As to the request that this statement be included in Hansard without being read, I should like to suggest it be included as an appendix. It seems to me that putting into the pages of Hansard statements which are not read is a questionable practice.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house consent to this statement being printed as an appendix to today's Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For text of document above referred to, see Appendix "B".]

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heber E. Smith (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, flowing from the statement of the minister of northern affairs—or perhaps, more accurately, not flowing from his statement—I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the exceedingly low water levels in the great lakes, are any plans being made for emergency dredging in those harbours where shipping is being seriously affected?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. D. R. Mitchell (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is the minister aware that private sources are prepared to make a survey of the Grand canal project and, if so, is his department ready to give all necessary assistance to this survey?

Mr. Speaker: This is also a question for the order paper.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—PROPOSED POSTPONEMENT OF CONSIDERATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): We have been led to believe in the house that the Canada pension bill would come up for consideration at the conclusion of the debate on the budget. Now I understand there is to be a postponement in that connection. Does this postponement mean that the present pension bill is to be altered or changed in any way? Will there be a revision of the revision in order to meet the position of one or other of the provinces?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at the recent conference in Quebec the government of Quebec made available the main details of the pension plan which it was proposing to introduce as a provincial plan, and many of the provincial governments indicated at that time their interest in it. We in the government have been examining this plan, which is the only other pension plan that has been proposed by any Canadian government. If by making alterations to the federal plan, without changing the principles on which it must be based, we can ensure that a plan, when adopted, will be uniform across Canada with the same terms applicable to all the people of Canada, we feel that we would consider making these necessary changes, though not departing from the principles of our bill. That, I think, would be an important step toward national unity, and we are examining the other plan in that context.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Another withdrawal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does this somersault mean that negotiations are going on between the government of Canada and the government of Quebec whereby Quebec will agree to enter this plan provided its scheme is accepted by this parliament? With regard to the amount, is it intended to raise the amount from $75 to $125 in order to bring the two systems into agreement? Is it intended to provide survivor benefits, and is there to be an endeavour to include those other classes—

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Again to the rescue.

Mr. Bell: Bail them out.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps I can put my point of order in the form of a question. May I too participate in this debate on the Canada pension plan?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I answer the point of order. It seems to be the invariable custom of the hon. gentleman that whenever a matter arises that does not please him particularly and the government needs co-operation, he steps into the breach.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I press my point of order, and I do so because of the concern that five or six of us are feeling as a result of the fact that as members of a special committee we are grappling with the rules of the house. One of the rules with which we are grappling is that regarding questions. We understand that in questions on orders of the day it is appropriate to ask for information. It is not appropriate to give information or to enter into a debate. It is the belief of some of us that this rule applies to all members of the house, including the Leader of the Opposition, but day after day we have to listen to speeches by the Leader of the Opposition in this house at question time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: You are making a speech.

Mr. Knowles: It is a point of order. If the rules of the house are going to be observed and if we are going to be asked to improve the rules of the house, I submit that obedience to them is obligatory on all of us, including the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The wonderful reception that the hon. gentleman's remarks have received from the other side indicates that they appreciate his intervention. I was asking whether or not certain terms would be included. If that was not a question I do not know what it was. I asked whether certain terms would be included in the arrangements being made. We are naturally anxious to know why the government that has pressed, and properly so, a pension bill, adjourns it for some purpose or other every time it comes up. I ask that question, and I should like an answer to it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I would like to point out that we, in this corner of the house, would also like to see the rules respected by all. Moreover, we point out that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) takes the liberty of making speeches during the question period whereas we, in this corner of the house, do not even have the right to do so.

Under the circumstances, I submit that the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is well taken and that, consequently, the Leader of the Opposition should, in his turn, be called to order so that he will put his questions the way we are supposed to.

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I do not know whether you wish to make a ruling at this time, Mr. Speaker, upon the violations of procedure indulged in by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. If you do, I will be glad to answer his question after you have dealt with the matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I object to that word "violations". I keep within the rules—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —at all times that it is within my power.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that soothing words should be applied at this moment. I should like to make the position of the Chair clear. There are officials in the house. It is understood that all members have the same rank and the same privileges. On the other hand, there is an officer called the Prime Minister of Canada, and there is another officer of the house called the Leader of the Opposition. When the Leader of the Opposition is a former prime minister of this country it seems to me that with that experience and the responsibility he has shouldered in the past, the Chair is entitled to rely on his judgment to a certain degree.

Furthermore, it seems to me that in the presentation of this question, which is an important one, the right hon. gentleman may have taken a bit too long in outlining the question, but his remarks were germane to the question which was put. He was not, therefore, interrupted by the Chair. I have to rely on the experience and good will of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition to obey the rules, the same as everyone else, and I feel quite sure he will.

Mr. Pearson: I wish that when I was occupying the position of leader of the opposition the same charitable interpretation had been granted to me.

Mr. Monteith: Don't be a child.

Mr. Pearson: However, I shall deal with the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition. He referred to procedures in the house last evening by the chief whip of the party as a somersault. This is a description of a procedure about which the right hon. gentleman does not know anything.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman wishes to describe as a somersault a desire on the part of the government to examine the Quebec provincial pension plan, not with a view to the adoption of that plan, but to ascertain whether through an examination of it and a further examination by the provincial government of Quebec of the national pension plan we could bring about a situation where the same pension provisions will cover all the people of Canada, then that is not the term we use in describing an attempt to bring about national unity in this important field.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would ask the Prime Minister why he did not think of consultations in this regard before he brought in the original plan.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, for the right hon. gentleman's information there has been more consultation over the months in regard to this matter than occurred previously in regard to pension plans, but the particular detailed plan of the province of Quebec was made known to the Quebec conference only a few days ago.

Mr. Starr: Now that the pension plan has been settled, I should like to address a question—

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the hon. member for Ontario if he is raising a supplementary question?

Mr. Starr: No, I am raising an entirely new question.

Mr. Speaker: Then we will hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Is it still the government's intention to proceed in this session with a bill to establish a Canada pension plan?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is; and it is our hope that that bill will include provisions which will be applicable to all the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether there have been any consultations with the provincial government of Quebec since the federal-provincial conference, in view of bringing about a participation from that province to the national pension plan?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, what I said was that consultations have taken place with a view to bringing about, if it can be brought about, a situation where the same pension provisions will cover all the people of Canada, and that will require consultation not only with the government of Quebec but further consultation with the other provincial governments as well.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of the answer given by the Prime Minister, who categorized the plan as an all-Canada pension plan. Does he consider it would be an all-Canada pension plan if one or more than one province does not join the plan in question?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I shall try to make clear to my hon. friend what I have just said. I said that we hope there will be similar pension provisions covering all the people of Canada so there will be no discrepancy between a plan in one province and a plan in another province, and no discrepancy between a provincial plan and a federal one.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Would the Prime Minister care to comment on whether he would be prepared to submit the present bill, No. C-75, to a committee so there would not be any further delay, and so the house could accept recommendations made by the committee? This would give an opportunity to hon. members in all parties to study all these rather new developments.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I hope there will not be any great delay in referring a bill to the house, getting second reading of that bill and having it go to a committee. However, I feel certain all hon. members would be glad to accept a few days' delay if by that delay we can bring about a pensions system better in its coverage of all Canadians than we might have if we had a federal scheme which differed greatly in many respects from a provincial pension scheme.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question relating directly to the answer the Prime Minister has just given. In reference to the parliamentary committee to be established to consider this bill, has the Prime Minister given assurance, by letter or otherwise, that the committee will be able to recommend fundamental revisions of the plan, if required?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the committee will have all the powers of a parliamentary committee, and will be able to make any recommendations to parliament, within its terms of reference, that it desires to make.

Mr. Aiken: My question is whether, after second reading and the bill having been adopted in principle, the committee will then have power to deal with any revisions, except minor ones.

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is more skilled in the rules than I am and he will know, of course, that the rules governing the actions of a committee of the house will give the committee power to make recommendations back to both houses.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and may I ask the Prime Minister whether he would give me a yes or no answer. Was he in fact guided by the views that I placed before the government in regard to the pension plan?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, as I am being asked to give a yes or no answer I wish my hon. friend would repeat the question, because I did not quite get it.

Mr. Winkler: I regret that, Mr. Speaker. I am merely asking the Prime Minister whether he was in fact guided by the advice that I presented to the government in regard to the pension plan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to deal with that question, although it cannot be answered yes or no because the consultations in question began before my hon. friend's very interesting speech last night, from which I was delighted to ascertain that he was entirely in favour of this procedure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

SHIPPING

AMENDMENTS TO ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY ACT AND CANADA SHIPPING ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport and ask when he expects to bring before this house amendments to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act and the Canada Shipping Act, in accordance with the recommendations of Mr. Justice Norris.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at the rate of progress this house has been making so far in this session—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —that question would appear to me to be largely hypothetical.

Mr. Starr: I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When will the minister place these amendments on the order paper?

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course, Mr. Speaker, there are amendments to the Canada Shipping Act before the other place, which is making a lot more progress in legislation than we are.

Inquiries of the Ministry

VETERANS AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR LEGAL COUNSEL TO ASSIST LAND OWNERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs which is, as usual, strictly according to the rules. This question is related to the principles of the bill of rights. My question is based on the great concern of veterans resident along the Arrow lakes and the Columbia river as far north as Revelstoke with respect to the possibility of their being submerged in the early future, and the request of the veterans organizations that the Department of Veterans Affairs appoint legal counsel to assist them.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Herridge: My question is, in view of the fact that the minister of lands and forests of British Columbia has agreed to this suggestion, would the Minister of Veterans Affairs give consideration to appointing legal counsel from his department, to make certain these veterans rights are protected, these men who fought for the very land they live on?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would be very grateful to my hon. friend if he would direct that suggestion to me in writing so I could give it an adequate reply. I do not think I can answer it now.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is made urgent due to the resolution introduced by the Minister of Finance yesterday. When can we expect the report to be brought down from the royal commission on banking and finance?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I hope before the end of this month, Mr. Speaker.

LABRADOR

INQUIRY AS TO BOUNDARY BETWEEN QUEBEC AND NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the government been contacted by either the government of Quebec or the government of Newfoundland with regard to the suggested bartering of land in Labrador between those two governments?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the question deals with boundary matters concerning Newfoundland and Quebec. If I am right in that, the answer is no.

LABOUR RELATIONS

B.C. FISHERMEN'S STRIKE—REPORT OF ARBITRATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister received any report from the arbitrator who was named to negotiate a settlement of the dispute between the fishermens union on the west coast and the fisheries association on the price of salmon this year?

Mr. Monteith: Order paper.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have received the report in question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless the minister is prepared to answer immediately, that surely is a question that would be better placed on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. I understand that the Department of Fisheries has received the eagerly awaited report on the fishing dispute in British Columbia. My question is, if so, would the minister be agreeable to tabling that report?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I received yesterday the decision of Mr. Justice Nemetz in the arbitration between the united fishermen and allied workers union and the fisheries association of British Columbia. With the unanimous consent of the house I am prepared to table this report.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the tabling of this report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GREAT LAKES—OPERATION OF S.I.U. HIRING HALLS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Minister of Labour. It arises out of the information I sought last week about the method employed in the hiring halls operated by the S.I.U., and I ask whether an employee must be hired by an employer when that employee is referred from the hiring hall.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I had the answer to my hon. friend's question on several occasions and did not have a chance to give it to him. I will give it to him tomorrow.

CANADIAN FLAG

REPORTED SELECTION OF FLAG AND ANTHEM BY LIBERAL CAUCUS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Is it true, as stated on the front page of today's La Presse, that the Liberal caucus has unanimously selected the Canadian flag and the national anthem and that this report results from an indiscretion committed in Montreal by the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger)?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rosthern—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. The Prime Minister was all set to rise and answer my question.

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was ready to answer that question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Whether or not the hon. member is in order, he is entitled to be heard.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I ask you to rule whether it is in order to ask a question asking for comment on a press report of something that is supposed to have gone on in a caucus. I would like to have your ruling on whether a question of that kind is in order.

Mr. Speaker: The ruling is very simple and, I hope, direct. The question is out of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Later:]

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Prime Minister. Was the Minister without Portfolio announcing government policy in a recent speech, when he is reported to have stated that legislation to provide for a distinctive national flag and national anthem would be brought before parliament within two months?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has asked me a question based on a report of a speech which I have not seen. I will inquire of the minister whether or not the report is accurate.

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): A supplementary question. Is the Prime Minister aware of recent press reports concerning Premier Stanfield's support for a distinctive national flag in Montreal recently?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I saw the report of that very interesting and, I thought, forward-looking speech.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister not agree that the Canadian red ensign is a distinctive national flag?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The form of the question is wrong.

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION UNDER STABILIZATION ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister aware that the price for eggs in Saskatchewan dropped to an unprecedented low last week?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Nasserden: My question is, will the minister consider amendments to the Agricultural Stabilization Act to protect producers against losses under the present regulations?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, eggs are supported under the stabilization board in Saskatchewan, and this suggestion is news to me. Generally speaking the prices of agricultural products are up from a year ago.

Mr. Woolliams: What about the price of cattle?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dorchester.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the pension bill is not going to come before parliament immediately, I wonder whether the Minister of Agriculture could inform the house and the country whether he is now prepared to bring in the legislation that will revolutionize farming generally in Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Speaker, I think I heard you recognize the hon. member for Dorchester.

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is a misunderstanding at the far end of the chamber. The hon. member was rising on a supplementary question. It will then be the hon. member for Dorchester. The hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture is this. Now that the pension legislation is not going to come before parliament, can we expect to see soon on the order paper the three legislative measures the minister spoke of in western Canada, so that the house and the country will be informed of his ideas of how he is going to revolutionize agriculture in Canada?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, from the bottom of my heart I hope we can bring forward this legislation as soon as possible, because the farmers want it.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS TO WORKERS IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Can he tell the house whether during the last months there has been some decided progress in the negotiations between the Canadian government and the state of Maine to arrive at an agreement concerning the unemployment insurance benefits of Canadian lumbermen working in that state?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS RESPECTING FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Does the minister intend to bring in legislation that would adopt proper and adequate insurance principles in relation to the unemployment insurance fund, and also measures to eliminate exploitation of its benefits?

[Mr. Beaule.]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have dealt with this question several times, as did the Prime Minister in his speech to the House of Commons on this subject.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Can he tell the house what was the nature of the discussions he had with the Quebec premier during his trip to Quebec last week?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker; as Minister of Transport I discussed several important questions of transport with the premier.

POWER

PEACE RIVER—APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice, but in his absence I will address it to his parliamentary secretary. It arises out of two answers which were given to questions in this house and an answer which was given this morning in the external affairs committee. The two answers given in this house were those given by Hon. Lionel Chevrier on October 14 last, in which he stated that it had been determined by the Department of Justice that the Peace river is a navigable stream under the terms of the Navigable Waters Protection Act at the point at which British Columbia is now constructing works.

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Just be patient. On Friday last I received a similar answer from the Minister of Public Works. This morning I received an answer from Hon. Ray Williston, minister of lands and forests in British Columbia, who told me that the federal government has not yet informed the government of British Columbia of this decision of the Department of Justice.

My question is this. How much longer is the government going to delay giving this information to the affected province?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will bring this speech to the minister's attention when he returns to the house.

SOCIAL INSURANCE

INQUIRIES RESPECTING OBLIGATION TO MAKE APPLICATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour concerning registration for social security purposes.

Could he tell the house whether he will issue new directives to U.I.C. officials to point out that registration is compulsory only for those who hold jobs covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that this question was thoroughly discussed and aired yesterday.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Could he tell the house whether he has received a telegram from the Quebec Catholic teachers corporation strongly protesting against compulsory registration for social security purposes? If so, could he inform us of the steps he intends to take in that connection?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I should like to point out to the hon. member that the same series and types of questions were asked extensively yesterday, and if we were to take notice of every telegram that every hon. member receives in this House we would never finish our business.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is true that the same questions were put yesterday, but the Minister of Labour said then that he would look into the matter and inquire whether such a request had been received. Since he has not yet provided an answer and was supposed to do so today, that is why this question is being asked again.

In addition, I wish to point out that those telegrams have been sent by the provincial corporation of Catholic teachers of Quebec, most members of which are concerned over such registration for social security purposes. That is why we should like to obtain today the answer the minister was unable to give us yesterday because the required information was not available to him then.

Moreover, this matter is most urgent, since school boards are asking—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This ground was thoroughly covered yesterday.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour with regard to the new plan which is being adopted for the setting up of a social insurance numbering system. In view of the fact that it has been stated that this numbering system will also apply to a Canada pension plan, can the minister say whether it is the intention of the government to request any province which may be setting up its own pension plan to use this same social insurance numbering system?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister yet applied, and been able to obtain, his own social insurance number? If so, can he tell the rest of us how we can apply for ours if we wish to do so on a voluntary basis?

Mr. Nesbitt: Order. If there was ever a question which was out of order, surely that one is.

Mr. Speaker: I was about to suggest to the hon. gentleman that this is a question for the order paper.

GRAIN

OATS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF FINAL PAYMENT FOR 1962-63 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and ask him if, during his recent conversations with the Canadian wheat board, he was able to ascertain that an announcement is now ready respecting the prices to be paid on the recently closed oats pool.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian wheat board announced in Winnipeg today the final payment on oats delivered to the board during the 1962-63 crop year. The total amount of the final payment is $10,671,000. The rates of final payment are as follows: No. 2 Canada western, 11.724 cents per bushel; No. 3 Canada western, 11.60 cents per bushel; extra No. 1 feed, 11.6 cents per bushel; No. 1 feed, 12.838 cents per bushel; and No. 2 feed, 14.818 cents per bushel.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REPORTED REQUEST FOR R.C.M.P. CONTINGENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the government is giving consideration to the sending of a contingent of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to Cyprus, what unique or special duties would be contemplated for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and in what way would these duties differ from the duties being presently carried out by the United Nations peace keeping force?

Mr. Speaker: This is surely a question for the order paper.

INQUIRY AS TO OPENING OF QUEBEC TELEVISION STATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Could he tell the house whether the C.B.C. television station in Quebec will be put in operation this year?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

QUEBEC—REVIEW OF PROGRAMS BY CENSORSHIP BOARD

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State, the responsible minister for the C.B.C., and I hope to get a direct answer.

In view of the many complaints directed to the C.B.C. by parents and educators in regard to certain films shown over the network, does the government propose to assign such a task to existing provincial censorship boards?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question. Could the minister tell the house what he thinks of the C.B.C. when it does not want to take any action to correct—

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: —that situation?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a question; this is an argument.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I do not know how the hon. member proposes to raise a point of order when his original question is out of order. I fail to see how a point of order could arise.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: If you wish, Mr. Speaker, I will state my point of order and I will gladly abide by your ruling.

We, on this side of the house, are directing many questions to the Secretary of State who is always replying evasively. I think it our duty to insist on definite answers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Orders of the day.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REDNERSVILLE, ONT.—REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES OF PROSPECTIVE POSTMISTRESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): My question is directed to the Postmaster General, and it arises from the answer to question No. 557 placed on the order paper by me on March 24 regarding the opening of a post office at Rednersville. The first decision, Mr. Speaker, was to open the post office. According to the answer I received it has been decided not to proceed—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member have an urgent question he wishes to ask? If so, would he ask it?

Mr. Alkenbrack: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My question, arising out of two conflicting decisions made by the Post Office Department, is as follows. Will the Post Office Department, in all honesty and fairness—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Alkenbrack:—to the prospective postmistress, Mrs. Donald Dillon of Rednersville, reimburse her for all expenses authorized by the inspectors, amounting to about $600 for renovations to the premises.

Mr. Speaker: Order. No doubt the question is important, but I suggest that the hon. member put it on the order paper.

BRITT, ONT.—PURCHASE OF SITE FOR BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I should like to answer the question put to me a few days ago by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. In February, 1962 the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka suggested that the Department of Public Works look at four properties, including two owned by Mr. Roy and Mr. Follick, at Britt, Ontario, as a possible site for a new post office.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Deschatelets: I am answering a question asked by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

The asking price for the Roy and Follick properties was reported at $5,000. In addition there were costs of $3,000 to make this site suitable. In view of the high total cost of the site in relation to the value of the building, the project was delayed.

In August, 1963 the department was advised by Mr. G. M. Taylor that he had acquired options on these two properties and would be willing to sell them to the department at $3,200. Mr. Taylor then acquired the two properties at $3,200 and sold them to the department at that price without any profit whatever to himself. A road allowance was also bought from the province of Ontario at $50.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any real urgency about this question? It seems to me we have spent a great deal of time over something which should have been on the order paper.

Mr. Aiken: The facts submitted by the minister are not complete, and I wanted to ask a further question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not the time for argument. Would the hon. member put his question on the order paper?

Mr. Aiken: I should like to ask the minister, as a supplementary question, if it is not a fact that the offering prices of those two properties were reduced to an amount equal to or smaller than that for which they have now been procured, before the government changed? I know this to be a fact.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is out of order because of the way in which it is framed.

TRADE

INCREASE IN FLOUR CONTENT OF FUTURE WHEAT SALES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of his statement yesterday and on other occasions reflecting optimism about future wheat sales to Russia and other eastern European countries. I should like to ask him whether there is any extension or expansion of the flour content envisaged in these future orders.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am not certain that I understood the purport of the question. I have never made optimistic or pessimistic statements about the situation. I have made factual statements. As far as I know there are no changes contemplated in any of the contracts entered into. If there are new contracts, the terms of those contracts will prevail.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question. Would the minister care to comment on the recent change in United States policy with respect to the subsidy on the export of flour, and how this will affect our dealings in the near future?

Mr. Sharp: I think it would take me half an hour to comment adequately; and some other occasion, when there could be more extended comment, would appear to be more suitable.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Monday, April 13, consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance), that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to rise and bring my modest contribution to this debate in order to show that our country—and I sincerely believe this—is heading toward anarchy, because the present government, just like the previous one, does not seem to know where it is going exactly in matters of finance and economy.

Once again this year we have heard the Conservatives take the government severely to task for its deficits, and rightly so because, when they were sitting on this side, the Liberals did the same and what is more, during the last election campaign, they promised to balance the budget. They certainly pulled in a lot of votes that way, since many people believe we should live according to our means.

During the election campaign the Liberals also made much of the fact that they could solve that economic problem because they had within their ranks some very capable economists who would be able to find within the present financial system the necessary money to increase expenditures, to abolish the annual deficit, to pay the debt, all that without increasing taxes.

And the Conservatives, just like the Liberals when they were in the opposition, now blame the government for not increasing its expenditures for social welfare, for example, or for other purposes. In short, as the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) so rightly said not long ago in a candid statement on T.V.: "There is no difference between Conservatives and Liberals."

Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to find out the reason why people whom I believe to be intelligent, who certainly must have something remarkable, as they have been chosen by their fellow citizens to represent them in the national parliament, should act in the inconsistent way I mentioned a while ago, and change their minds, simply because they change sides in the house.

Why should those same people feel so capable of settling every problem when they are sitting in the opposition, but suddenly become paralysed when they come into power, and do exactly the opposite of what they promised the people during election time? To illustrate my point, I shall mention the budgetary deficit, the 11 per cent tax on building materials, the 1 per cent income tax increase, and the so-called disappearance of unemployment which became stagnant unemployment; we were promised a minister of agriculture for the east; but this too vanished from the program. We were also promised an increase of family allowances for every child, but this has been changed to school allowances for children between 16 and 18 years only; and I could mention many other promises.

The worst in this matter is that those mighty brains with such poor achievements, deride and brand as inefficient anybody who suggests new and bold solutions, without ever stopping to listen, consider and discuss their suggestions, or summing up the courage to refute them logically.

I have now come to the point where I believe that because they are led by their pride and arrogance, they become deaf and blind.

[Mr. Belanger.]

Mr. Speaker, it is precisely because I am conscious of the fact that it is illogical, under our present monetary system, to advocate an increase of expenditures without at the same time boosting taxes or adding to the national debt that before the government considers making heavier expenditures, I suggest once more that it carry out a monetary reform along the lines that we Social Crediters have been suggesting for several years.

To enable hon. members to better understand what I mean, I feel it is necessary to explain somewhat the present monetary system, not the one we advocate but the one Canada adheres to right now. Consequently, allow me to quote from a brochure which was published under the direction of the Conseil Économique Inc., whose president is none other than Mr. Eugene Therrien, Q.C., barrister, and of which Hon. Senator Vaillancourt is a director. Those two gentlemen can hardly be called Social Crediters.

The persons I have just mentioned allowed the publication of this pamphlet to induce French Canadians to favour the only two French Canadian banks in the country with their deposits and savings.

To obtain such results, they had to show what benefits they could offer in return, and you will be able to see for yourselves, in the light of some quotations from this booklet, that these persons confirm exactly what the Social Crediters have been saying for a long time, that is banks control money and credit in the country by the privilege they have to create credit and to destroy it.

Here is this small pamphlet entitled "Chartered banks and us". The pamphlet proceeds by questions and answers. The first question is as follows:

What is money?

If the Minister without Portfolio were here, I would ask him to give special attention to this question, because I remember that, during the last election on television, thousand dollar bills rained on his head so as to frighten people by the threat of inflation. The minister certainly did not understand the definition of the word money.

Here is the definition given in this pamphlet:

The public often imagines that money is essentially a bank-bill, but according to present habits of Canadians, the majority of monetary operations are done through cheques, or internal accounting operations in the banks (transfers from one client's account to another client's account). Currency, as a means of payment or exchange, may assume various forms: metal currency, paper currency, cheques etc....as on the other hand, it is called upon to play widely different roles in our national economy.

Further on, we find question number 4:

What is the banking system?

In paragraph 2, we read this:

But the Bank of Canada alone does not make up the banking system. Its role is only justified to the extent that the banks properly act as intermediaries between the Bank of Canada and the general public—

And here we find the names of the Banque Canadienne Nationale and the Banque Provinciale du Canada as illustrations.

The Canadian banking system, more particularly, provides for so-called "chartered" banks which we shall especially examine. Indeed, those banks play the most significant part in the monetary field, considering the place given in Canada to "scrip" money, that is money created by the chartered banks in their books.

Those banks, Mr. Speaker, are not afraid to frighten us by saying that chartered banks create money.

Under question 5:

Can it be said, then, that banks create money?

—we find the following answer:

Yes, indeed, the chartered banks do create money, but only so far as they have liquid assets available at the start.

And we are given a more concrete explanation by means of a diagram composed of five small squares connected to each other by arrows, with the explanation that $1,000 of savings in a chartered bank become $11,500, which means that they are multiplied by 11½, the amount then being made available to trade and industry.

That pamphlet was published to stimulate saving deposits by French Canadians in French Canadian banks to enable the latter also to multiply them by 11½ in order to help our French Canadian business and industries.

Question no. 10 is as follows:

In what way does the bank give assistance?

Here is the answer:

The banker makes an "advance" (he opens a credit) to his customer. The operation, as far as bookkeeping is concerned, is very simple. Let us assume that bank's assets increase, for instance, by $10,000 and, the bank's liabilities, by $10,000. On the assets' side, next to this "extra amount", of $10,000 the following reference now appears: "advance made to Mr. X". On the liabilities' side, an account of $10,000 is open to Mr. X; from now on, he will be able to draw cheques to pay his suppliers, to settle his accounts with his workers, etc. His bank account has "been provided with funds".

Mr. X has no money, but he has a bank account.

Did the bank create money in that way?

Of course, this is a manner of speech. By opening a credit, the banker made $10,000 of new money available to his customer (in the books: bank money).

That is exactly what the banks are doing when they create money.

But if the bank may thus create money, why should it be interested in receiving our savings?

The answer is this:

Banks need only have a certain quantity of notes, only a certain amount of liquidity. Therefore, they may use the rest, if they observe the "legal reserves"— —which is a compulsory 8 per cent reserve for chartered banks. The banks also decided themselves to provide another 7 per cent reserve, which means that on every deposit, the banks must set aside 15 per cent.

Now, if I apply the system explained in this pamphlet to an amount of $1,000 here is what will happen. If I deposit $1,000, 15 per cent of that amount, that is $150, will be set aside as a reserve. If you deduct that amount from the $1,000 the balance is $850, which, multiplied by 11½, as the banks are entitled to do, adds up to $9,775.

Now, that amount of $9,775 lent at 6 per cent yields $586.50. An average interest of 3 per cent is paid on savings, which represents $30. That leaves $536.50 and I shall be generous in taking off another 10 per cent for administration expenses, although that 10 per cent is usually charged to the borrower; however, 10 per cent of $9,775 gives $97.75. Therefore, for the $1,000 deposit, the banker will get $459 per year in interest.

It is precisely that privilege that Social Crediters would like to put an end, and they would like the government to take it over and keep it for the benefit of the Canadian nation.

It is because of that privilege that chartered banks control credit, and indirectly the governments and the economic life of all Canadian citizens. That is why we are asking the government to recover that power. Without such a reform, without taking back from the banks a privilege as dangerous and vexatious for the people as that one, the same unemployment crisis which is threatening the United States will also be at our door and it will be impossible for the government to guard against it.

That crisis I made reference to was the subject of an article published in Le Droit on March 24, 1964. Let me quote:

A report on the dangers of automation (Reuter agency, Washington).

A group of American professors, trade unionists and economists submitted to President Johnson a report where they point out the dangers of automation.

There is a danger that automation might give rise to "unprecendented economic and social disorders" in the United States, according to the 32 signatories of the report, among whom one notes Gunnar Yrdal, the economist of Swedish origin, and Nobel prize-winner Dr. Linus Pauling.

The report states that the United States—and, some day, the rest of the world—will soon be at grips with a "revolution" which will see "an unlimited production by machinery with no need for the co-operation of human beings."

"Steps must therefore be taken to provide and income for everyone", added the authors of the report.

Mr. Speaker, one does not have to be an economist or even hold a university degree to understand that the monetary system of a country is the very basis of its economic and social life and that it is most difficult, if not impossible, to build something sound, good and lasting upon a faulty basis. We cannot, for instance, build a house on wobbly foundations. Well, that is exactly what we are trying to do, and we know the results, which can be summarized as follows: huge debts, a federal government in debt, shying away from provincial governments which also are in debt and which try to get the most out of the federal government, thus giving rise to frictions that are getting increasingly serious between the federal and provincial governments.

On the other hand, municipal governments also are in debt, the same as school boards, wherever they exist, and they in turn are looking more and more to the provincial governments for the financial assistance they need for their normal development, which again results in rather serious frictions. Then we come to the smallest but most important cell of society, the family. There again, we see that debts are causing rather serious frictions which sometimes result in broken homes.

And yet this country offers us the horrifying spectacle of stores and warehouses overflowing with goods of all kinds, while a whole army of unemployed are waiting in poverty for the opportunity to increase production even more. I think that situation, in our country, is very aptly described by this increasingly popular expression: the people of Canada are living in poverty in a land of plenty.

And at the rate things are going, in view of the observations I made a while ago in regard to automation, this is but a beginning.

I could go on for some time in the same vein describing the present economic position in this country as well as in many other countries where the same monetary system is in use.

The solution to the present problems—I will not venture to say the perfect solution as such a thing does not exist—rests in a monetary reform which would hand over to the government money and credit control.

I think it was a great prime minister of Great Britain, Disraeli, who once said:

Give me control over money and credit in any country and I do not care a rap about those who will be making legislation there.

[Mr. Belanger.]

Hon. Mackenzie King said, in one of his books:

It is useless for a government to speak of sovereignty if it has no control over its own money and credit.

Mr. Speaker, this proves, indeed, the importance of control over money and credit.

May I also quote some extracts of the encyclical Quadragesimo Anno. Under the subtitle: "Domination has followed from free competition", we read:

In the first place, then, it is patent that in our days not alone is wealth accumulated, but immense power and despotic economic domination is concentrated in the hands of a few, and that those few are frequently not the owners, but only the trustees and directors of invested funds, who administer them at their good pleasure.

This power becomes particularly irresistible when exercised by those who, because they hold and control money, are able also to govern credit and determine its allotment, for that reason supplying, so to speak, the life blood of the entire economic body, and grasping, as it were, in their hands the very soul of production, so that no one dare breathe against their will.

And as for the consequences of such a system, this is what our Holy Father the Pope has to say:

Disastrous consequences—The whole economic life has become hard, cruel and relentless in a ghastly measure. Furthermore, the intermingling and scandalous confusion of the duties and offices of civil authority and of economics has produced crying evils and have gone so far as to degrade the majesty of the state. The state which should be the supreme arbiter, ruling in kingly fashion far above all party contention, intent only upon justice and the common good, has become instead a slave, bound over to the service of human passion and greed.

All this shows that we Social Crediters are not the only ones to deplore this serious deficiency in our country due to lack of control by the government over the most essential factor in our economy.

I think I have said enough to prove that the government, as well as the Canadian people, are the slaves of this system. Far from controlling it, they are controlled by it instead. That is why individuals, intelligent though they may be, are compelled to act in such a stupid way.

If the government would solve the financial problem along the lines I have just suggested, it could raise family allowances according to the present cost of living, improve the Old Age Assistance Act, the Old Age Security Act, as well as the Disabled Persons Act and the Blind Persons Act, so that when the husband falls under one or the other of those classifications and becomes eligible, to the assistance provided, the wife should also become eligible automatically. In addition, these pensions should be paid at 65, because I fail to see the purpose of keeping at work people over 60, 65 and 70 years of age while young people of 20, 30 or even 40 cannot find work and might even go hungry. I am in favour of keeping at home the older people, but let us pay them a pension which will enable them to live decently, according to the standard of living which is possible in this country.

By agreeing to that monetary reform, the government would not have to constantly violate the constitution, to sacrifice the welfare of the people to the golden calf on the altar of finance, in short, to sacrifice confederation itself. In fact, we must not forget that this has been said and even proved following the last federal-provincial conference, for it is indeed financial matters which divide the provinces, Quebec especially, and the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that the problem of bilingualism, biculturalism, nationalism and racism is very important, but it behooves us also to settle financial problems which create so many difficulties.

I may seem to pay too much attention to social measures, but when you represent as I do a constituency where in wintertime, I would say at least half the families depend on social assistance, unemployment assistance or unemployment insurance benefits, you cannot help but find those social measures very important.

Along the same lines, I would ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) to try and improve the Unemployment Insurance Act. It is very hard to understand and many zealous employees try by all possible means, by using the provisions of the act which they actually know much better than the recipients, to find a loop-hole that will prevent the unemployed from receiving his or her allowances. In brief, an act, or rather acts, were passed to help the unemployed and the underprivileged but, on the other hand, everything is done to prevent them from getting such help.

I would also like to remind the Minister of Labour that his intention, which he has just revealed, to place all school teachers in this country under the Unemployment Insurance Act is an unwholesome plan which will be met with much resistance. As far as I am concerned, I think it is an indirect, hypocritical and iniquitous way to tax people for something they will never take advantage of, for everyone knows that in the teaching profession, there is no unemployment and it will be a long time before there is.

I should also like to mention to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) that in my riding and in the neighbouring one there is a serious obstacle to trade and industrial development. It is the Saguenay river, which makes it necessary for all through traffic to use a ferry on which rates are very high, almost prohibitive. In view of the alarming economic situation in that area, would it not be possible for the government to take the situation in hand and pay all ferry costs, which would be profitable for users and the whole population?

I will deal once more with highway No. 15, between Quebec city and Seven Islands, and suggest again that this government should come to an understanding with the provincial government, in order to make it a northern section of the trans-Canada highway. That would be one of the most urgent and most essential improvements if that region of Charlevoix and Saguenay is to develop at least as much as the other regions of Canada.

I also ask the government, as an emergency measure to fight acute unemployment in my riding, to build post offices which are so obviously needed, and to continue its policy of restoring and repairing the great number of wharves which need looking after.

I would like again this year to ask the government to make the necessary studies to find out definitely if the construction of a deep water wharf at Baie St. Paul is needed for and essential to the industrial and economic development of that region.

We are told that trade and industry in that region are not important enough to warrant the expense of building such a wharf. I feel that if the government were to make such an expenditure, its decision would be justified by the industrial and commercial development that would follow.

With the hon. member for St. John's West, I say that the primary objective of the government should be to fight poverty, want and hunger especially in Canada but also throughout the world. That would be possible through a monetary reform since all the means are at our disposal: the required production facilities, an abundance of products which more than satisfies Canada's needs and the necessary natural resources. That would be a much more efficient way of waging a cold war against communism than the sending of troops to the four corners of the globe.

I could not conclude without saying once more that it is imperative for the government to regain control of the money supply and credit and to take that privilege away from the banks.

It is to keep this privilege in favour of a small group of men that we are directed to have some works performed during the winter when it would be more appropriate and less costly to have them done in summer. It is on account of this privilege that the high cost of living is maintained, by forcing the public into paying twice or many times over for any single thing.

As an example, let us take the last world war, when the people provided the work, the materials and the soldiers; when it was all over, we owed $15 billion to those who had only written down the necessary figures to represent these expenditures. To keep this privilege, nobody even thought of stopping the war for lack of money, but today, families by the thousands are left in utter poverty because money is lacking. All this and many other things are stupid and would be ridiculous were they not criminal.

As long as the first and the most important concern of a nation consists in finding money, it will remain a slave, a materialist, and its morals will sink lower and lower.

Those are some of the reasons why I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and the government to implement as soon as possible the financial reforms which we have recommended. Unless he finds a better solution, a sad future lies ahead for his party and particularly for the Canadian people, and he will bear forever that heavy responsibility. You cannot keep the majority of the Canadian people in poverty for long without provoking violence when a high standard of living is physically possible.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a good deal of pleasure to take part in the budget debate. It is a generally accepted rule that when a member takes part in this debate he should deal with matters pertaining to the budget, but I do not think it is an actual infringement of the rules if a member deals with other matters relating to the general business of the house, which it is my intention to do today.

The matters I would like to bring to the attention of the house include, among others, the proceedings of the house, in particular those connected with private members' bills and motions. I am not revealing any secret when I say I am not too pleased with some of the rules and regulations we have in the house governing private members' motions, bills, and requests for the production of papers. The house is not allowed to debate these matters on second reading because they are quite often ruled out of order. I think it is unfair that hon. members should be deprived of the opportunity to present their case or their grievance to the house before second reading is given. This is something that should be changed in our rules and procedures.

I should like to comment on some of my motions and bills which were introduced in the house, particularly the bill which had to do with the building of a terminal in the town of Tisdale in the province of Saskatchewan. The intention behind the legislation that I proposed was to bring to the attention of the harbours board the need for such a terminal. I understand that the harbours board is authorized to spend this money without approval being given first by the house; they have this right by statute. What I had in mind in introducing this bill was to bring to their attention the necessity for building such a terminal. The port of Churchill on Hudson bay has a terminal with a capacity of 5 million bushels. The shipping season is very short there, only two months a year, August and September, and during the shipping season approximately 23 million bushels are exported through the port of Churchill. It has been the contention of the farmers in the west that much more grain could be shipped through this port. Some are of the opinion that as much as 40 million bushels could be shipped if we had overseas customers for such a large amount. The Hudson bay route association, and other organizations in the west, have continually asked the government to increase the terminal facilities from 5 million to 10 million bushels, but the argument against building another terminal in Churchill is that the capital expenditure of another $10 million is not justifiable or desirable because this terminal elevator would be used for only two months in the year and the present capacity of 5 million bushels is sufficient.

My argument for building another terminal in Tisdale is this. It is only about 600 miles away from Churchill, but it would be located in the centre of a farming area with an excellent wheat growing capacity and during the navigation season, namely August and September, clean grain could be shipped to Churchill, thus eliminating the loading and unloading in Churchill. In this way time would be saved. I have talked to one of the grain commissioners and he informed me that one reason not enough grain was shipped from Vancouver last year was that the grain from the prairies reached Vancouver in an unclean condition, and it takes a terrific amount of time to have this grain loaded and unloaded and cleaned. If this is the case in Vancouver, I am sure this argument could be applied in favour of the new terminal which I think should be built in Tisdale. Last year when we had this particular trouble in Vancouver, this issue was very much debated and discussed on the prairies.

As I said before, a terminal in Tisdale could provide storage facilities for 5 million bushels and it could be used 12 months in the year, instead of having another terminal at Churchill used for only two months of the year. The argument in favour of building such a terminal is very strong. It is that if the government has to spend money on building a terminal, it might as well spend it on one that could be used 12 months in the year. The argument against building a terminal in Tisdale is that we have on the prairies three government terminals and these have never been used to full capacity. There are two terminals in Saskatchewan and one in Edmonton. The argument is that the receipt for the Saskatoon terminal for the past ten years was only an average of 2,700,000 bushels, while the capacity of the elevator is 5,500,000 bushels. The same can be said for the Edmonton elevator, as it also has only been used to half its capacity.

One reason for these elevators being used to only half their capacity over a period of ten years is that the private grain companies during the surplus years were very anxious to have their storing facilities filled to capacity, so they could collect storage charges from the government. I know from personal experience that in the northerly areas of Saskatchewan during the surplus years we were on a two bushel quota for many months —as a matter of fact, sometimes up to May— before quotas were opened, while at the same time these government terminals were standing half empty. It was a hardship to the farmers because in other areas of Saskatchewan covered by main line railway facilities they had seven and eight bushel quotas, while the people in the north were on a two bushel quota. This was of course a hardship, before we were able to bring in the consequential legislation which alleviated this situation to a certain extent, namely the interest free cash advance on farm stored grain.

My bill to build a terminal at Tisdale was ruled out of order. I wanted, first of all, to have the grain terminal built for this reason. Over the years my bill had read this way:

> An act to provide for the restitution and distribution of the proceeds of grade excess and overage unlawfully confiscated and converted in 1955 and continuously thereafter under an act intituled an act to amend the Canada Grain Act to the use and purposes of the governor in council.

This meant that over the years our grain companies had always had overages which amounted to quite a large figure. I have before me statements which I should like to read into the record. In the years 1955 to 1962 overages amounted to approximately 9,975,381 bushels. Under this act these overages were supposed to belong to the governor in council. The interesting thing about the ruling which was based on the memorandum submitted by the parliamentary counsel to Mr. Speaker was that the explanatory notes were too long and that Bill No. C-245 passed on March 11, 1955 was a proper bill and that the overages shall be the property of Her Majesty. I should like to direct the attention of the house to the fact that in 1955 a similar bill was introduced and ruled out of order because the resolution preceding it had dealt with more matters than one. May I read into the record this particular quotation. Mr. Donald Fleming rose on a point of order concerning a bill No. 161 on March 5, 1957. As reported at page 1893 of Hansard the hon. member said:

> Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This bill, No. 161, is introduced following a resolution which was passed on February 22 and because the bill goes farther than the resolution I am taking exception to it on this point of order.

Then further on Mr. Lesage, as reported at page 1903, said that this bill was a mistake and would be withdrawn.

This, Mr. Speaker, is exactly my contention about the other bill, Bill No. 245, which was preceded by a resolution and covered more than one item, as a result of which the bill was ruled out of order. Parliamentary counsel had recommended that this bill be ruled out of order, and of course I accept the ruling. With regard to this bill introduced by Mr. Lesage which was ruled out of order, Dr. Maurice Ollivier and Mr. Batt, the assistant law clerk, gave their opinion in this way:

> In our opinion, a money bill not supported by a proper resolution could be questioned in the Senate, adjudicated upon by a court of competent jurisdiction, and have moneys withheld by the proper officers under the Financial Administration Act.

The puzzling thing to me is that at the time that Dr. Ollivier ruled on this bill and Mr. Batt ruled on my bill, their opinions differed, while on a previous occasion their opinions were the same.

I am not going to argue this matter because it is now so much water under the bridge, but it is my contention that hon. members should have an opportunity to be heard when bringing these resolutions before the house so that the house knows what they are about, instead of hon. members introducing them and getting first reading, and then having them ruled out of order. I think we members of parliament are thereby deprived of an opportunity to present our case, and I urge that when the committee on procedure is convened this matter be taken up and given serious consideration. My bills were ruled out of order and they dealt with matters of great importance. At the present time western Canada is faced with a problem of great magnitude because railroads are going to be abandoned, some towns will almost disappear, and grain elevators will be taken away. The government should act before the farmers concerned are placed in an impossible position. It should build terminals now. We will certainly require them as our exports are increasing. These terminals should be built at once, but terminals on the west coast or at the lakehead will not serve the purpose. Inland terminals built on the prairies, however, will serve a double purpose. First of all they will give the people on the prairies an opportunity to store their grain. Second, they will give the farmers an opportunity to have their grain cleaned and shipped out and thus expedite shipment through the seaports. Although my bills have been ruled out of order I am encouraged to bring in new legislation, and I hope the government will have enough interest to pay more attention to the problems of the three western provinces.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity of participating in this budget debate as it draws to a close. I make no apology for not dealing on this occasion with the financial and economic aspects of the budget; there will be ample opportunity to do that when we discuss the budget resolutions. Perhaps I might say that I feel the budget is appropriate for the economic circumstances in which we find ourselves in Canada today—circumstances which may give us some real ground for encouragement, but which nevertheless warrant caution as we approach the future. It does not seem to me, Mr. Speaker, to be a time to bring in far reaching economic and financial changes in these circumstances, especially as we are about to receive a report from some of the most important royal commissions, in their terms of reference, which have been set up by any Canadian government for many years.

What I wish to discuss with you for a moment is a subject which has already been discussed, and rightly so, in this debate and on other occasions during this session of parliament. I refer to a problem which is very much in our minds and indeed in our hearts: the problem of Canadian unity; the problem of unity in a federation; the problem of federalism, which is basic to our growth, basic to our strength, basic to our very survival.

Politically that problem, as in every federal state, is the necessity for having a central government strong enough in jurisdiction, in resources and in resolve to discharge its responsibilities to all the people, but a central government which will not encroach on the jurisdiction of the provinces or which acts so as to prejudice their ability to do their job within their jurisdiction. The reconciliation of these two things is not easy. It never has been, in this country or in any confederation—and I suspect it is as difficult now in Canada as it has ever been in our history.

To do its duty a central government must be strong enough to carry out the tasks imposed on it by the constitution, to provide the services for which it is responsible, especially social services, and to ensure a fair and equitable measure of comparability in respect to those services throughout the country. This country cannot survive, let alone grow, if it becomes a country of developed and underdeveloped areas—Cadillac regions and cart regions. If we allow this to happen—and I believe we will not allow it to happen—the strain on national unity, which is now great and which we all recognize, would indeed become intolerable. The federal government must also have the fiscal and financial power necessary to influence and direct national economic activities through national policies operating throughout the country in the interests of all the people. No province, no group of provinces, can do this. The federal government must be able to take new social and economic initiatives within its jurisdiction when these are necessary for the health, stability and progress of the nation as a whole. And it must be able to approach the provinces with a view to sharing with them the responsibility and the resources necessary for joint schemes of that kind.

This latter requirement brings up the whole question of shared programs about which there has been a great deal of talk, though perhaps not as much thought.

Joint federal-provincial programs, of which there are now more than 60, have been in existence in this country for many years and have proven to be a most important and useful method of bringing about balanced economic and social programs. Of course conditions are changing, not only in Canada but throughout the world and especially, perhaps, in federal states. In our own country, provinces, or some of them, are more concerned now than they used to be with the consequences of what might seem to them to be too much federal control over these programs when, as they do, they deal with matters within provincial jurisdiction. Provinces can even take this position while recognizing the value to their people of these programs. The federal government need not, of course, renew a shared program when an existing agreement comes to an end. Indeed, it can abandon, by agreement with the provinces, a shared program before an agreement is due to end under the existing arrangements.

The right of the provinces to do this, in a matter within provincial jurisdiction, we refer to as "contracting out". This is a phrase which, I confess, worries me somewhat because it gives the impression of not only contracting out of a program, but of contracting out of something which a province does not wish to see going on as an activity across Canada. Perhaps we should talk less about contracting out and more about the right of a province to take on its own responsibilities, in co-operation, if you like, with other provinces, in respect of matters which are within provincial jurisdiction. But a provincial government does have the right to opt out of programs of this kind. I believe it is proper that it should have this right, and it can do so, in our view, under certain conditions, with compensation, and convert its part of a shared program into a provincial part. For the federal government to oppose the right of a province to exercise its option of withdrawal from any joint program which covers matters under provincial jurisdiction either shared or exclusively, would not strengthen confederation; it could destroy confederation.

This does not mean, as it has been interpreted in some quarters to mean, that the federal government will encourage this course of option. But it should, I think, admit the right. Furthermore, when a province exercises its right to carry on its share of the program as a provincial program, to refuse that province financial compensation is to insist that in that province the provincial taxpayer should pay not only the full cost of the provincial program but also share the cost in the other provinces as well. Surely, no one thinks the application of this principle would strengthen confederation. When provinces, and above all the province of Quebec, question the desirability of continuing in certain joint programs they are influenced by considerations both of constitutional anxiety and by more practical matters. It is true—and so that this may be a completely non-partisan observation, let me say that the truth goes back many years—that some programs had been decided on by the federal government without adequate consultation with provincial governments. And, later, when a program begins to bear on a provincial treasury, or when provinces feel they would prefer to spend the money in question on something else, they begin to take the view—and there is ample evidence to support this—that the shared program was imposed on them rather than agreed with them. Indeed, they may also feel that the joint program has prejudiced the position of the province in question and led to the centralization of policy making and policy decisions in Ottawa, even in fields which are a direct responsibility of the province.

It is felt by certain provinces, and it has been felt over the years, that joint programs often do not take sufficiently into account provincial priorities. We heard a good deal about this at the most recent federal-provincial conference—that they did not take sufficiently into account provincial needs and characteristics; that there are often too many rigid federal conditions and at times irksome federal procedures.

It is certainly true, Mr. Speaker, that some joint programs have imposed increasing strains on provincial budgets and on federal budgets, but these strains have been felt most by the poorer provinces, the ones less able to bear their share of the cost. In these programs the proportion of the cost borne by a province is the same in the case of every province, unless there is a special arrangement to the contrary, and I do not know of any such arrangement.

On the other hand, it is equally true that shared cost programs, as I have already said, constitute a recognized and valuable method for making a federal system work. They have made an important contribution to the economic and social progress of our country. They have fostered national uniform standards for many important social services. For these reasons many provinces desire and advocate their continuance even though often with some changes.

Many of the disadvantages I have mentioned could be removed or reduced by the federal government working more closely with the provinces in the initiation and administration of programs. Perhaps the federal share of the cost could vary according to the fiscal capacity of the provinces participating. When a province opts out, and this is generally understood now, the conditions should not only be agreed to with that province but should not prejudice in any way the position of the provinces that remain in. With changes of this kind and the careful observance of the principles of consultation there is no reason, as I see it, why shared programs should not continue to play a useful part in our federal national development.

But I think I am safe in saying that recent experience—by "recent" I mean experience over the last year—will undoubtedly result in the federal government hesitating to embark on new shared programs without the assurance of the full and unqualified support of all the provinces. The right to opt out must be admitted, but it is much better to have a plan from which no one wants to opt out. Having said that, I do not believe that exercising the right of option need be disastrous or a threat to national unity. I think that is exaggerating the importance of opting out. I do admit, however, that certain disadvantages follow. When opting out takes place there always is a kind of patchwork result in the country as a whole in respect of the application of a program. This need not be disastrous but it is disadvantageous at times, and opting out does emphasize the sense of separation in our country in dealing with certain matters, especially when jurisdiction in those matters is shared. Opting out means very often that there is increased scope for federal-provincial difference over the relative advantages of staying in or opting out.

Shared programs then are one illustration, and one very much in our minds these days, of the difficulties as well as the opportunities of co-operation in the relations between the central and provincial governments in our country. These relations are in their turn a major, although not the only problem of our confederation. That problem expresses itself in political, fiscal, economic and resource development fields. It has been with us, and we should not forget this, since confederation first came into being nearly 100 years ago. Certainly in the federal government we have never in the history of our country been far away from provincial problems. These problems will remain with us as long as we are a federation, and we cannot exist as a Canadian nation except as a federation.

But while the basic problem of federalism in our country is old it has taken on new, complex and difficult forms as government at all levels has taken on more and more duties and responsibilities, especially in the field of social services. This problem has also become a part of, and indeed it is often confused with, the relations between the two foundling elements of our nation, the English speaking majority and the French speaking minority. The two problems tend to overlap and are interrelated.

The French speaking minority, as we know of course, has certain rights and privileges which are guaranteed in our constitution. It is a minority by no means confined to the province of Quebec, but that province is in a very real sense the guardian of its cultural and religious and linguistic rights. Therefore, while federal-provincial relations are an equal concern to all the provinces, and they must all be treated alike within the constitution, Quebec in a very real sense is not a province like the others. Therefore its position is bound to introduce special features into federal-provincial relationships.

[Mr. Pearson.]

For the central government to recognize the special problems arising out of the relationship with Quebec and to seek and find, whenever possible, solutions for them, without prejudicing the position of other provinces, is not capitulation or betrayal. Those who carelessly call it such are themselves, I suggest, betraying the spirit of confederation and weakening the only foundation on which confederation can stand firm and endure. A prejudiced and obstinate refusal to recognize that there are special complexities in relations with Quebec, or a failure to appreciate the special sensitiveness of that province as the guardian of the rights of a minority would soon and finally destroy confederation and make impossible the growth, in strength and unity, of a Canadian nation.

If, however, to refuse, to recognize the special position of Quebec in this way is to weaken and destroy confederation, and it could have that results, then for a province to exploit this position at the expense of Canada as a whole could have the same tragic result.

We can have no real future as a Canadian nation if we so act in our relationships provincially and federally that the result is the loosest possible kind of federation, with power and control in the hands of the provinces who would develop in their own way as best they could. I can see no salvation, I can see no survival along that course.

Of course, as we know, there are tendencies in that direction. They could destroy Canada by leading to separatism. I do not believe that these forces will prevail. We must make sure in this parliament that they do not, and in that connection the government of the day, whatever government it may be, has a very special responsibility. To this end, Mr. Speaker, this government intends to avoid either of the extreme courses I have mentioned. We propose to recognize the increasing importance of the responsibilities of the provinces in our federation, as indeed the previous government did in its financial contributions to provincial assistance.

We propose to recognize the increasing importance and responsabilities of the provinces in our federation and to help make it possible for those provinces to meet their needs by a reallocation of financial resources and a revision of our tax structure for this purpose, even if this would require a change in certain sections of our constitution, which was passed nearly 100 years ago when conditions were very different from what they are now. This is the purpose of the proposal to set up this basic tax structure committee on which I hope every province and the federal government will be represented.

In taking that attitude, surely the federal government's policy is the very oposite of centralism. We are sure, and I am sure all members of the house will share our confidence in this regard, that the provinces will use the increased authority and increased resources which they need, not to destroy but to buttress confederation. We fully appreciate, as all members of the house do, the position of the provinces. While fully appreciating that I, for one and I am sure others also, refuse to admit that the recognition of provincial rights and new provincial responsibilities requires in any way the weakening of the federal government to do its job.

This is the ultimate reconciliation we have to make in our federal system and it is one of the most difficult reconciliations that has ever been faced by any government or parliament in this country. The federal government, in these days of new responsibilities and new requirements, must also be strong in the resources it needs to deal with these increasing responsibilities, which are responsibilities of all the people of the Canadian nation from coast to coast. These facts are evident, and they must be accepted. Every province has its rights, its rights that do not change and its responsibilities that do. Every province must be in a position to exercise its rights and discharge its responsibilities, and Quebec in these matters has a special position. But equally it must be accepted and established that Canada is above all the provinces, embracing all the provinces, respecting provincial division and provincial responsibility, but that Canada, as a nation, is greater than its parts or the sum of its parts. French speaking Canada must play a proud and equal part in that nation, must feel that it belongs to Canada and that Canada from sea to sea belongs to it.

Canada is a very proud name in the world today and has been over the years. Our country need not and must not become balkanized or even, if you will pardon the expression, Austro-Hungarianized. This will require understanding and, when necessary, great concessions and compromises on the part of provincial governments as well as the government in Ottawa. In other words, there must be co-operation for progress in order to avoid a conflict that would destroy us. Recent conferences with the provinces have pointed up the urgent need for such co-operation and understanding. They have also shown that without this co-operation and understanding, in the face of new pressures, tensions and problems arising out of growth and change and the quiet revolutions, the nation that our forefathers founded and built, might disintegrate and disappear. We must do nothing, either by provocation or by weakness or by stubborn unawareness of the basic nature of our federalism or by words or actions based on prejudice or fear, to bring about that weakening or disappearance.

We must reject the defeatism and despair which cries out that if Quebec or any other province works out an equitable arrangement by which it can take over its own share of shared programs, this means we are heading straight for separatism. This gloomy exaggeration of our difficulties may bring about the very result that those who exaggerate profess to fear. However, there can be extreme talk and extreme proposals on the other side which it would be folly and dangerous to ignore, that we can go on fragmenting ourselves, with each province ignoring the position of the other and the federal government, and the federal government ignoring the position of the provinces, and with the provinces making claims and carrying suspicions to the extreme so that they weaken the voice of Canada itself and destroy all feeling of national unity. This too, Mr. Speaker, can bring about a break-up that is not intended by those who follow such a course, except by an avowed but very small separatist minority.

Surely, it is obvious that the remedy is to avoid the paths of extremism wherever they may come from and wherever they may lead to. Mr. Mackenzie King, if I may be pardoned for quoting him, once wrote these words in a letter to a friend:

> The extreme man is always more or less dangerous but nowhere more so than in politics. In a country like ours it is particularly true that the art of government is largely one of seeking to reconcile rather than to exaggerate differences.

It is the task of parliament, without regard to party; it is the challenge of statesmanship rising above faction, to find the solutions to our problems which are now more serious and more difficult than any we have faced in peacetime since 1867. We must find these solutions by agreement, not force them by compulsion. We cannot hope to find such agreement in our country if we cannot find a basis for it in our parliament.

Oh, I know, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps no one knows it much better than I, that this parliament of minorities is not an easy one for any of us, wherever we may sit. How could it be? It is idle to wrangle over blame or responsibility if parliament has, in fact, declined in repute over the last ten years and particularly, if you like, over the last two.

I am quite willing to accept, for my party and for myself, our share of any blame and responsibility; to acknowledge both political the parliamentary sins of commission and omission, in opposition and in government. Every party, every leader and every parliament in our history has had much to its or his credit, and things also to its or his discredit. But it is well to keep a sense of perspective when we try to analyse our own faults and achievements. It is well also, for those of us who analyse them, to keep a sense of perspective, and a knowledge of history, which I should not talk about, helps to maintain a sense of perspective.

For one thing, we should realize that circumstances and conditions governing the functioning of parliament today, especially in the realm of communication, have changed radically in the last 30, 40 and 50 years. The media of communication and commentary can now bring our weaknesses and misdeeds, and occasionally even our achievements, into every home, immediately and with a dramatic effect not possible many years ago.

But while perspective can give us some comfort because it helps us to emphasize and maintain a sense of proportion, perspective can be damaging and, indeed, can be dangerous if it is allowed to obscure the fact that, while we may not be any worse, or even as bad as our forefathers in politics and in parliament, today we must be better because the problems we now face are far greater in degree and in complexity than theirs, and the penalty for failure to deal with them is correspondingly greater.

That is why we are all anxious, in all parties in the house, to take steps—and I hope we can agree on them—whereby parliament can operate more effectively in the interests, not of parliamentarians but of the people of the country, and that is why all of us attach very great importance to the committee on procedure which we have set up, and which I venture to hope will be submitting to us, before many days, an interim report which, if it can be agreed upon by all of us—and I hope it can—would do something to improve our procedure and make it more effective, pending the final report of that committee.

We must then, Mr. Speaker, do everything we can by our conduct in parliament to justify parliament as an institution and to bring it into better repute than it seems to have attained recently.

Our major problem today, and these are my closing words, Mr. Speaker, is not one of nation building. Although we still have that, and although Canadians have achieved great success in the field of nation building ever since 1867 right down to 1964, our problem today is not one of nation building; it is a problem of nation saving. It is not less than that—saving this nation from forces that weaken and could ultimately destroy it, forces all the more dangerous because they are used often by those who do not desire that result.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this parliament can strengthen Canada and, by strengthening it, we can certainly save it. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this is above all partisan, selfish, regional and provincial considerations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Canada is a good country, and we can make it a great country if we rise above the squabbles of its lesser citizens who would reduce it to a collection of competing regions and provinces. Parliament in this regard must give the lead and show the way. I hope we will measure up to the responsibility before us.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, could I call it five o'clock? There is only a minute to go.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house wish that I call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills and public bills.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROVISION TO ENABLE CIVIL SERVANTS TO ENGAGE IN POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-10, to enable civil servants to engage in political activity.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my purpose in introducing this bill this afternoon is that by so doing I hope we can initiate a discussion in the house about a very grave and serious problem. By that, I am referring to the political and civic rights of the civil servants of Canada.

There are approximately 200,000 people in this category, and at the present time they are in a state of virtual suspended animation with regard to political activity. This situation arises as a result of the Civil Service Act which was passed in 1960-61, and more particularly as a result of section 61 of the act, which provides as follows:

(1) No deputy head or employee shall
(a) engage in partisan work in connection with any election for the election of a member of the House of Commons, a member of the legislature of a province or a member of the council of the Yukon Territory or the Northwest Territories; or
(b) contribute, receive or in any way deal with any money for the funds of any political party.

Subsection 2 of this section provides that anyone who violates this is liable to be dismissed, and the act properly goes on to provide that persons so charged cannot be dismissed unless they have an opportunity to be heard, themselves, and through representatives.

The net effect of this provision is to deprive our civil servants in toto of the right to engage in any form of political activity. The section of course is somewhat vague. It would appear that a civil servant could engage in political activity so long as it was not at election time, and provided he did not contribute any money to a political party. It would also appear that a civil servant could engage in partisan work for any sort of party he wished, no matter how extreme its views, provided it did not run candidates. However, as I have said, the net effect is to place a blanket denial on the rights of our civil servants to engage in political activity. The section does not define "partisan work" very clearly, but I feel from reviewing the events that over the years a very narrow definition has grown up as to what constitutes partisan work. Many civil servants are very doubtful if they even have the right to be seen at a political meeting. Readings of Hansard indicate that even a civil servant having his picture taken might constitute grounds for dismissal. It is interesting to note that as late as 1957 civil servants could be dismissed on the charge by a member of parliament that they had engaged in partisan activity, and indeed this could be done without any investigation at all.

I am merely saying that by our legislative act we have to all intents and purposes isolated the civil servant from political activity. This is to me a very serious limitation that we have placed upon their rights as citizens in a democracy, and it can only be justified if some more overriding reasons can be advanced. I would like to see us discuss whether these overriding reasons still exist, because certainly this is not the kind of restriction which any of us would tolerate were it imposed by private industry, trade unions or farm organizations which employ people. It is my contention that the time has come for the relaxation of this very rigid rule even though there are still some areas where it may have to be applied. Thus clause 2 of the bill provides:

> Notwithstanding anything contained in any other act of parliament, every employee of Her Majesty in right of Canada, shall have the right to engage in any form of political activity—

Then I have set out some of the categories:

> (a) the right freely to associate with others in political parties and organizations;
> (b) the right to speak, to write, and to publish on behalf of candidates for public office;
> (c) the right to be a candidate for public office; and
> (d) the right to make contributions to and expenditures on behalf of political parties and candidates for public office—

It is also provided in the bill that of course no such employee shall use his hours of employment or any of the tools of his office for these purposes, and clause 4 provides:

> The provisions of this act shall not apply to:
> (a) a deputy head as defined in paragraph (h) of subsection 1 of section 2 of the Civil Service Act, or an employee of equivalent rank; or

It seems to me this is the only limitation which we can now justify with respect to political activity by civil servants. The policy of political neutrality has had a long tradition not only in our parliament here in Canada but of course in the United Kingdom as well. But in the United Kingdom they have questioned the advisability of perpetuating the blanket nature of the prohibition. The matter was discussed in a very interesting book by the late Harold J. Laski called "Reflections on the constitution". In that book Mr. Laski re-examines the political and civil rights of civil servants and makes some conclusions. He says:

> I think it is absurd to insist that, once a civil servant, not in the industrial grades, becomes a candidate for parliament he shall resign his post. I think it is even more absurd to lay it down that civil servants shall not play a part, in their leisure time, in the political organization in which they believe.

He deals with the French system where a great many civil servants have played an important part in the politics of their nation. He mentions in particular Mr. Leon Blum. These civil servants have played their part in the politics of their nation and it has not interfered with their impartiality nor with their ability to discharge their role as civil servants. He felt that below the capacities that I have mentioned it is enough if an official of the particular class gives an undertaking, whether he becomes a parliamentary candidate or takes an active interest in his party, not to discuss in public the affairs of the department to which he belongs, nor to reveal information which he obtains by virtue of his position in the service. He felt it would be sufficient to give this undertaking, and any violation of it might constitute grounds for dismissal.

Indeed, the British have progressed ever further in this field. The Whitley council examined this whole problem of the political rights of civil servants and they advised a horizontal division where some are completely free to engage in political activity, some are more restricted and some are barred. They ended up with a division that 62 per cent of the civil servants are completely free to participate in politics, to campaign and serve in public office; 22 per cent employed in capacities of a more confidential nature are free, subject to the use of very serious discretion; and 16 per cent, because of the confidential nature of their office, are completely barred. But even this group are completely free to engage in municipal elections and municipal activity. In Great Britain, should the group who can participate decide to run for public office, they must resign before nomination day. If defeated, they are reinstated within a week of the official returns being made. If elected, they can serve and receive leave of absence as long as they are not away more than five years and have had ten years seniority. They are reinstated upon their subsequent defeat as long as they apply within three months of such defeat. It seems to me this is a far more enlightened view of the rights of civil servants than we have taken here in Canada. It seems to me also that within some reasonable limits, which could be drawn up, the public would not lose confidence in the detachment and loyalty of civil servants if they were permitted to exercise the normal rights of citizens. They should have leave with pay to participate, and if elected continually, of course—as I have indicated—they might have to reassess their position. Otherwise our legislators, and indeed the House of Commons itself, are not only depriving these people of the rights that everyone else has but are also depriving themselves of the ability, wisdom, knowledge and training these people have accumulated over the years.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to speak at length because I am anxious to hear the views of other hon. members on this important subject. As I have indicated, I think that parliament, by depriving these people of their right to engage in political activity has very seriously interfered with their rights as citizens. I feel that conditions have changed over the years and that it is time to reassess the blanket denial of these rights, which denial has been effected by our legislative acts here in Ottawa. I would hope that after the discussion today—and of course this cannot be resolved in the matter of one hour—this bill might be referred to the appropriate committee so that this serious matter could receive further consideration. In such a committee we could study what has been done in other jurisdictions, we could receive the benefit of the views of the civil servants themselves, and perhaps at the end we could recommend to the house a revision of this section which would be more in line with modern times, which would give the greatest possible freedom of political activity to our civil servants that is commensurate with the nature of their duties.

However, there is no indication that this will be done. I feel that this bill, like so many others, will merely die at the end of the hour. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, before sitting down I might be permitted to renew a plea which many hon. members in all parties have made with regard to the private members hour. We heard much talk at the beginning of this session that things were going to be different and that private members' business was going to receive a greater degree of consideration, a better method of treatment; but as the days have gone by it is becoming increasingly clear that we are again slipping back into the farcical situation that pervaded private members' hour, certainly in the two parliaments in which I have served. If one examines the order paper he will find it full of important controversial matters which have been introduced by private members. If one examines it closely he will find that, with one exception, most of them have merely been adjourned at the end of the hour. One bill did pass and it was almost an historic occasion in the chamber when a private member's bill actually received third reading. So it looks, Mr. Speaker, as though private members' hour is getting back into the same old rut, and in many ways this is a tragedy.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) spoke in his address of the difficulties of operating in a minority house, and all of us are aware of this. But a minority house, it seems to me, also presents a unique opportunity for us. As I have indicated, there are a host of controversial social measures which ought to receive treatment in Canada. I think of such things as divorce, birth control, lotteries, a national anthem, habeas corpus, civil rights and the matter of the death penalty. It seems to me that these are all issues which it may be difficult for any party to take a stand on as a party, and I can understand why in many cases. But it also seems to me that private members' hour is a period in which many of these matters could be resolved one way or the other. They might be passed, they might not be passed. But surely we should be thinking in terms of permitting this hour to deal with such measures, to bring them to a vote and to make an adjudication upon their merits.

I think that if we were prepared to do this, then instead of private members' hour being conducted in a virtually empty chamber it would receive the attention of almost the entire house. Members could come in, and in the freedom of the absence of party control speak their minds on some of these controversial measures and express their opinions in a recorded vote. If we were prepared to do this I think we would go a step in the direction of elevating this parliament in the public's esteem. It is ridiculous for us to have divorce laws which go back 100 years. Everyone knows this and admits it, and everyone wants the laws changed. But no one is prepared to make this change, and for political reasons. In a matter such as divorce it is hard, of course, to get a party stand because it deals with religious, moral and personal views. But I want to re-emphasize the plea that I have been making that private members' hour in a house of minorities presents an outstanding opportunity for us to deal with some of the social changes that we cannot deal with when we must stick to the party line. With that, Mr. Speaker, I will sit down and hear what other members have to say on this other important proposal, but I could not resist the opportunity to make the plea I have made.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the mover of this bill, in particular his reference to the function of private members' hour and what its potentiality could be in this house. Many of us will agree with what he has said. The only observation I should like to make is that I think my record of attendance in this house certainly compares with that of other hon. members, and I believe a fair number of these bills have this time been referred to a committee. Certainly more than one has; I know at least three have, and although I do not know what the actual score is, I am sure this fact should be put on record.

The hon. member who introduced this bill agreed that he was introducing something very different in principle and approach from other bills, where the background preparation of public opinion must be gone into thoroughly and consistently before this house could take action. One of the things I expected to hear something about from the hon. member was citations from staff associations, organized groups of civil servants and other people in the community who feel that the measure which the hon. member is promoting is one which they themselves would desire and which they feel is in their own best interests.

Mr. Scott: Would the hon. member permit a question on that point?

Mr. Francis: Certainly.

Mr. Scott: Would he not agree that such activity would be classified as partisan activity?

Mr. Francis: I disagree thoroughly with that contention. The wording of section 61, as the hon. member pointed out, is specifically related to elections, and the general question of the rights of civil servants is perfectly within the scope of activity of the sort which would be invited. I am certainly sure that no hon. member would discourage an association from trying to express its opinion on the principle whether or not the legislation as presently constituted is adequate to protect the rights of civil servants.

This question may be looked at from several different points of view. The hon. member who has spoken referred to the point of view of an individual civil servant and a citizen in the community. That is of course a valid point of view, but we must also look at the point of view and rights of a government. We must look too at the point of view of political parties and at the needs and rights of political parties. And not the least, I think we must look at the public interest which dictated this particular section in the first instance.

If the hon. member was calling attention to a matter which had not been reviewed by this house during a period of time within the living memory of members of this house and had been long standing on the statute books, I think there would be even more justification for raising the subject. But as recently as 1960, when a comprehensive review of the Civil Service Act was enacted by this house, the clause to which the hon. member referred was reviewed and modified, as he acknowledged, to give a much greater degree of democratic control. For example, a man or woman may not be dismissed except after formal inquiry. No longer do the rather discriminatory provisions concerning complaints by members of parliament apply. If he had cited any injustices under the application of the rule I would have been more moved by his arguments.

As the situation stands today there is no question that the government faces something of a dilemma. Political activity in our society relies on the spontaneous and voluntary action of citizens who put themselves in the position of assuming a greater degree of responsibility for the kind of government and society in which they live. That is basic to any democratic society. We must have a maximum voluntary involvement of citizens in those activities. We want to encourage the government. At the same time the government as an employer must set the example of a good employer. As the hon. member pointed out, we want employers to encourage their employees to take part in politics. Politics in a democratic society would be meaningless without this participation.

That is one side of the question. The other side concerns the history of activity which brought such a regulation on to the books in the first instance. The Canadian civil service has since 1920 built a reputation which is second to that of no other country in the world in terms of competence, respect for the merit principle, in terms of the encouragement of men and women of profound ability to seek a career in the public service of Canada and to develop a career in a way which makes us as Canadians proud of their talents. If this rule had had the effect of substantially discouraging numbers of men and women of prominence from seeking a public career because they would feel they were in a sense second class citizens and would forfeit their full rights, then I think the hon. member would have made something of a case. But the opposite is the fact. The profound respect for the merit principle and the degree to which it was applied and respected, in Canada even more so than in many contemporary democracies in the western world, has had the effect of encouraging large numbers of competent people to seek a career in the public service.

There are, of course, evils when political activity takes place within the public service. History prior to 1920 discloses examples. Evils manifest themselves as abuses of individuals by unscrupulous members of political parties, and there are persons who participate in public life who are not of the sort of standing which we should like to see. There is the opportunity for a more or less compulsory political contribution; there is the opportunity of calling for a return for services rendered. This is the situation when men and women, who show up at election time and make their careers in the public service, then go to their members of parliament and say: I worked for you; now you work for me. If anyone wants to read the reports which formed part of the background of the first civil service act in 1920 and the disrepute into which it brought the civil service as it existed prior to that date, he will find ample confirmation of these points.

The other side of the coin is the abuse of civil servants in circumstances in which financial contributions could or might be invited. I note that the hon. member has not spoken of the role of the civil servants staff associations, where they are free to take an active part on behalf of, or against, any particular political party. It seems to me this whole field would bear careful examination.

We must bear in mind the tradition of neutrality which exists in the civil service—the tradition of loyalty to the government of the day whatever its political complexion; the tradition of the protection of the rights of individual civil servants against unscrupulous holders of public office. These are the reasons for the rule. These are the reasons why parliament in the sixties did review sections of the act and introduced some changes, though not the changes suggested by the hon. member.

A great deal more could be said about political activity which is not of a political partisan nature. I refer to political activity among civil servants, especially at municipal level. I think the tradition of non-participation in the Canadian civil service is so strong that it leads to inhibition in areas where there is no need for it. This is not a matter of law. I think it is a matter of the development of practice and, in particular, of administrative practice. In a city such as the national capital, where a municipal form of government is maintained, this practice has had the effect of discouraging men and women, among them some of the most vigorous and most able people in Canada, from offering themselves for office. It is not the law that is responsible for this. It is a tradition which has grown up within a general interpretation of the law. During the 1962 federal election, in the course of the campaign, a member of the civil service commission made a public statement to the effect that wives of civil servants should have nothing to do with politics. And the inference was left that close relatives of civil servants should also think twice about doing so. There is nothing in the law or in the regulations that says this. But this type of administrative interpretation by a responsible head of the public service, in this case a member of the civil service commission, is to be roundly condemned as leading to a situation which is creating an evil. The law which is presently on the books has not, in my experience, been the object of a great deal of criticism. I am not aware that any gross inequities have arisen. There is an excessive timidity about offering oneself as a candidate, for example, for the office of alderman on a local council, or for office as reeve or urban councillor in smaller municipalities.

Here the important question is a question of possible conflict of duties and, in addition, the level of responsibility that is assumed. It is reasonable to expect that when a man or woman is hired by the public service for full time work his employer has a right to full time service. Frequently, service on a council creates obligations in terms of conflicts of time, or even conflicts of energy. This imposes a problem, and administrative discretion has to be exercised. It is perfectly lawful and, I believe, it is to be encouraged that civil servants who do not experience a conflict with their jobs should offer themselves for municipal office on a non-partisan basis. If they like that kind of life they can quit their jobs and take up politics as a full time occupation. Later, if they find they do not like it as well as they had imagined they would, they can go back, qualify themselves by passing open competitions and re-enter the public service, if that is what they wish to do. There is nothing wrong in that, nor should it be discouraged.

As a matter of administrative practice, treasury board has set a limit of earnings above which it has not been the practice to grant leave of absence so that a man or woman might offer himself as a candidate. That level is revised from time to time. It currently reflects the average earnings of an alderman in one of the larger cities of Ontario or Quebec. The level is drawn so as to discourage those who might wish to serve on the board of control in, for example, Toronto, Ottawa, Sudbury or Hamilton, because the board of control, as the cabinet of the city, is very much a full-time responsibility though its members are seldom paid on a full-time basis. It is therefore necessary for men and women wishing to carry out duties at this level to avail themselves of leave of absence. I think it should be the policy of the government to grant such leave of absence in the overwhelming majority of the cases in which application is made.

What is wrong with these rules? I know that the government, as an employer, in terms of being a custodian of the civil rights of its employees, seeks to give the maximum encouragement to those wishing to take part in political activities. But the public has a right, too. The public has a right to expect that its employees will show equal loyalty to whatever government is in power. The Civil Service Act permits civil servants to contest elected offices at the municipal level. Indeed, it encourages them to do so. This type of activity provides a way by which participants can be initiated, if they seek this kind of life. As for the stage at which a man or woman takes on a political label and offers himself or herself as a candidate for a particular political party, I think that is the stage at which our legislation draws the line. I do not see anything terribly wrong with this. It is perfectly all right for a man who wants to run in the name of a party to quit his job—after all, he is a free agent—and then, if he decides he does not like political life, he can enter another competition held on the merit principle, and rest assured that he will not be the object of discrimination because of the fact that he participated in political activity.

Mr. Lamb: Did I understand the hon. member to say that a civil servant should be able to obtain leave of absence, run for parliament and then, if defeated, get his job back as a civil servant?

Mr. Francis: That is not what I said.

Mr. Lamb: I just wanted to clear that up because I do not think that would be altogether right. I understood that was what the hon. member said.

Mr. Francis: I thank the hon. member for raising the point. That was certainly not my intention. I was saying that in municipal office it is possible to take leave of absence without pay, but when you carry a political label I think you should resign. After you have resigned and have spent some years out of the service there is no stigma if you want to change your occupation again. You are perfectly free to enter a competition and win or lose on your merits as a man or woman, with no stigma as a result of what you have done at some previous time. But when you enter the public service these are the rules. As long as you are a civil servant they are the rules, and if you do not like them it is your privilege to resign from the service. In a democratic society I think this is not an unhealthy tradition.

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I did not know earlier that this bill would be coming up today because I should have liked to examine more closely the problems it would create. However, from what he has said, it would seem that the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) wishes to give greater importance to members of parliament than to civil servants.

Now, it is well known that at the federal level, civil servants play an exceedingly important role as compared with members of parliament. In fact, they have a role to play and they can remove themselves from the influence not of politics, I would say, but of parliament itself. Thus, very often when we ask for the reasons behind a certain decision, we are told that the letter was based on confidential documents containing information which cannot be revealed to private members of parliament. However, civil servants for their part may not only have information but may also create situations about which we should require explanations.

As far as the civil service is concerned, I believe its powers are exceedingly important and something might indeed be done about it. I make this statement, knowing quite well it is not very wise, politically speaking, but I wonder whether an inquiry into the administration of the civil service would not be justified to find out whether there are not some nooks and corners where some dust may have collected and where a little dusting would be useful.

The civil service is protected by the civil service commission, on which no political pressure is being exerted. This, I admit. However, the complaints received from civil servants holding subordinate positions are so frequent—I would even say they are almost incessant—that, in my opinion, it would be wise to study the suggestion I made a moment ago, that is to conduct an inquiry into the administration of the civil service.

The hon. member stated a few moments ago that if civil servants were not allowed to enter politics, they would be deprived of their rights. I do not know any civil servant who was ever compelled to enter the civil service. When entering the civil service, he knew what to expect. He knew he was to work for his country or his province, as the case may be. He knew also that his position involved some duties which were constantly to be respected and that some rights which he considered legitimate were to be denied him, in many circumstances, and this, for reasons of security or confidentiality. This means the applicant for a civil service job knew what to expect.

On the other hand, if he wanted to engage in political activities, if he wished to express his views to the people as a whole, all he had to do was to go into politics and run as a member of such and such a party. If he had no desire to belong to any party, he could have run as an independent.

I do not feel those are sufficient reasons to require that an act of parliament allow public servants to engage in political activity. But, as the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) said a while ago, I think there is a distinction to be made between municipal politics, school politics and even, in some respects, provincial politics, because the ties between federal and provincial parties are so close that I would be afraid to allow a public servant to engage in political activity in one of those two fields.

As far as municipal and school board politics are concerned, I do not feel we can prevent a civil servant who undoubtedly has the necessary qualifications from taking an active part in such activities. In fact, if a civil servant wishes to hold public office, I do not see why we should refuse him permission to do so.

However, when it is said that civil servants are deprived of any chance to be helpful to the government and parliament, I feel, as I said a moment ago, that that is granting little importance to members of parliament, considering especially the fact that those people can be of use to the government.

In fact, if a committee of the house needs information, it is easy to call in competent officials and ask them to explain matters for the benefit of the members of the committee who will later on make recommendations to parliament and to the government.

The government and parliament can make full use of those people if they have qualifications. I fail to see why they would be better qualified simply because they would work actively for a political party. For a long time, when law clerks or certain judges were to be appointed, for instance, they were required to belong to a political party and, very often, it was the only qualification required. This gave rise to more and more complaints. Yet, some people would like to require from civil servants, on top of necessary qualifications, membership in a political party.

Mr. Speaker, I think that such an argument is illogical and it should at least be criticized before it is accepted.

It must also be recognized that in spite of the sacrosanct independence of the civil service commission, as I was saying, there is surely some way for politics to intervene, because too many civil servants come to see their members to ask them to bring some pressure to bear so that they may be appointed to such and such a position. That means that to get into the civil service, political influence is often used, but once the candidate gets in, if he wants to remain there, he must get completely out of politics.

If he wants to go into active politics, the only way would be to quit the civil service and take a chance, as everybody else does, by running at a general election.

As far as I am concerned, I could not serve two masters.

When I chose to devote myself to politics, I forced myself to give up the practice of medicine, not because I was no longer capable of practising, but because I felt my first duty was to my country and my constituents. That means that the right I actually have to practise medicine is restricted and also minimized by my new duties as a member of this house.

I feel that should apply also to a civil servant who would be allowed to engage in political activity.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to labour the point, for I know other members would like to speak on this matter and, especially, that the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) would like to obtain the consent of the house to refer his bill to a special committee.

Still, I should like to say that if, under a socialist or ultra-socialist regime, it is quite normal for civil servants to engage in politics since the latter then become a direct function of the government, the intrusion of politics in the public service is absolutely unthinkable in a democracy like ours where the individual still has, in his riding or at the polling booth the apparent right to choose the men who will form the government.

Obviously, a civil servant's political affiliations may play against him if he has been or still is engaged in politics. If there is a change of government, he will be the first to suffer.

This new measure might keep the government and the whole parliament from using the services of a very qualified man.

Mr. Speaker, I do not say that I am totally opposed to the fact that civil servants might engage in political activities—as I said earlier, at some levels, it is quite possible—but I object to the general principle and I should like very much to have the opportunity of discussing the matter in committee, if ever this bill should go before one.

[Text]

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out as definitely as I can that we, sitting on this side of the house, take the introduction of this bill by a member of the New Democratic party as a compliment to our cabinet and to the Liberal government which the country is enjoying today. It would appear that with a Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) who came directly from the civil service into the arena of federal politics, and a Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) who came directly into politics from the civil service, the mover of the bill appreciates the abilities and qualities of such leadership and is endeavouring to increase the number of civil servants who might engage in federal politics for the good of the country.

This principle has been demonstrated by the activities of such former civil servants as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp), who is measuring up to the peerless stature of the late C. D. Howe. We have, as Minister of Industry and Defence Production (Mr. Drury), a former civil servant, who is establishing new records in that division. We have a Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) straight out of the civil service, and I understand he has had 14 years of continuous service in either provincial or federal civil service positions. He is a man of experience and ability. It is a very nice tribute to our cabinet and to the Liberal government of the day to have the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) introduce a bill which he hopes will enlarge the number of civil servants coming into the area of federal politics.

An hon. Member: But not from the Liberal party.

Mr. Cowan: However, I cannot say that all ventures of this nature have been for the good of the country. There are occasions on record—I do not wish to be too specific—where civil servants, as a result of the nature of their occupation as relief administrators or as inspectors for this and that, travelling around at government expense and making contact with thousands of voters, have established in that manner a popularity which has enabled them to run for office. This has been done by passing out government money in one way or another. One might almost say the government has subsidized their campaign throughout the years they were engaged as civil servants.

I do not believe that federal civil servants should be eligible to participate in federal politics. I do believe that a dominion government employee should take part in provincial politics and municipal politics. I do believe that a provincial civil servant should take part in municipal politics and federal politics. I do not believe a civil servant should engage in politics at the level at which the parliament or legislature of which he would be a member would be his employer. The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) has pointed out that he believes there are many people who are afraid to engage in political action because they know they are forbidden to take part in some fields of endeavour, and therefore they refuse to take part in the much wider field.

It strikes me that there must be a tremendous number of people in this country who are quite willing to become civil servants. As the last speaker pointed out, despite the restrictions on political activities, people are willing to become civil servants. It is interesting to bear in mind at this time the remarks made by the Minister of Industry only last week when he pointed out that there were 6,500 applications received by the civil service commission for the 87 positions advertised in the Department of Industry. If 6,500 Canadian people are willing to apply for 87 positions that are open, despite the restrictions that now exist on political activities, this would indicate to me, if not to other members of the house, that these people are willing to accept these restrictions which have been imposed for some years. The onus cannot be very serious or we would not have had that number of applications for these few positions.

Indeed, many men and women have not been deprived of taking part in election campaigns because they were civil servants. The late Mr. Raymond, who was Liberal member for the city of Brantford for many years, was the former postmaster of the city of Brantford. Some of you may recall this gentleman as the blind member of parliament who, for a number of years, would stand in this house and correct any misquotation by calling the speaker's attention to the fact that the next paragraph read as follows. His memory was phenomenal and his literary knowledge was vast. He was a former civil servant who made his mark in the federal field. It is true he gave up his position to run, but this did not restrict him in running for parliament.

We have in this house many former government employees. I do not like to limit the words "civil servant" to the federal civil servants. We have provincial civil servants; we have municipal civil servants; we have federal civil servants. Now that we have the United Nations, we will be getting international civil servants. Men and women can take part in various levels of political activity. In my own riding of York-Humber I have about one eighth of the area of the township of Etobicoke, which has a population of 173,000 souls. I am sure it will interest members of parliament to know that one local—I will not say problem, I will say question—concerns the fact that the board of education in that township is pretty well dominated by teachers. These teachers are not in the employ of the board of education of Etobicoke. They are men and women, university professors, who are employees of other boards of education or universities elsewhere in metropolitan Toronto. However, since they live in Etobicoke, they are qualified to run for office there.

We have this little question as to whether or not teachers should be allowed to run for boards of education in municipalities where they are not teaching, which pinpoints the problem that is brought to the fore by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) in introducing this bill. The reeve of Scarborough, in metropolitan Toronto, is one of the ablest reeves Scarborough has ever seen or will see, and he is a former high school teacher, Mr. Albert Campbell. He is a credit to the community and is building up Scarborough's reputation as reeve.

The Prime Minister of this country and myself were boys together in the city of Peterborough, and when we were children one of the finest mayors there, and prior to that an alderman, was Mayor Buller, who was collector of customs in Peterborough customs house for many, many years. He was a civil servant but he contributed much to the growth of Peterborough and the country by engaging in political activity.

When I was a child, visiting my grandparents here in Ottawa, I heard great praise heaped on a school teacher in Kent school, who for years was a very useful member of the city council of Ottawa and, if I am not mistaken, rose to be controller. He was an employee of the public school board who was taking a very active part in municipal politics on the council level.

In our Liberal party on this side of the house I am pleased that we have such members as the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. McNulty), the hon. member for Humber-St. George's (Mr. Batten) and the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter), all former school teachers, or school principals, or school inspectors. They have not been held back in the field of federal politics because they were former school teachers.

The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) also was a former school teacher. I call him a former civil servant. Many people state that an employee of a board of education is not a civil servant, but I point out that he is in receipt of tax moneys. At one time the former hon. member for the city of Peterborough, Mr. Pitman, was a high school teacher and is a high school teacher again. These men had much to contribute to the communities in which they were teaching and they took part in federal politics with credit to themselves.

The former prime minister of this country appointed a C.N.R. employee to the Senate. That is a crown corporation and you can call him a civil servant; but he made his mark. He contributed much to the province of Ontario, to the Dominion of Canada, and now has a seat in the other place. I would remind you of the present minister of education in the province of Ontario, a former crown attorney in the county of Peel. He gave up his position as crown attorney and sought elective public office in the provincial field. He became a member of the legislature and a member of the cabinet, and today is a good servant of the public in the form of minister of education, despite the fact that some years ago he was a civil servant as crown attorney for Peel.

I cannot see that the civil service employees of this country, whether on the municipal, provincial or federal level, are suffering under the laws that now exist. The town of Weston is one of the five communities making up the riding of York-Humber. An alderman there for some time and a reeve for many years was a pilot on T.C.A. It is a crown corporation, but no one held it against that gentleman that he was an employee of a crown corporation. He was elected to public office year after year in Weston, and served with great distinction to the town of Weston and to metropolitan Toronto, of which Weston is a part.

The hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Cantelon) is a former school teacher who is a credit to Kindersley and is of value to this house. The hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Weichel) is a former federal civil servant. He has been elected more than once from his riding, which shows the regard in which he is held. It is not any terrible onus that is placed on these civil servants that there are some restrictions on their political activities in the laws of the land. They can engage in political activities with credit to themselves, and if they wish to run for public office I do believe they are willing to offer themselves and suffer the consequences if they are defeated.

It is difficult at this time to recall the names of many defeated candidates for public office, but we know the civil servants who have been elected to this house, because there are only 265 to consider when discussing a bill of this nature. I am certain, however, that there were many former civil servants who offered their services and, because they were not successful at the polls, were able to return to their former positions or to some other positions they had secured.

With regard to civil servants, I have been thinking of what the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) drew to our attention, that people supported him and, after his election, came around and pointed out they worked for him and wanted his help to get them a position in the civil service.

Talking about restrictions on government jobs, how would we like to have men coming off the bench of the Supreme Court of Canada, or the Ontario supreme court bench, and offering themselves for public office? We hold all members of the bench up to praise and we point out how fair they are and how impartial they are in all their actions and decisions. I do not think for one moment it would be proper for us to give the right to men to come off the bench and run for public office, men whose reputation the country as a whole builds up since we must hold our judges and justices in the highest respect. It would not be right for such judges and justices whose reputations have been built up for them by the taxpayers, who in their exalted positions have travelled around as trial judges, and in doing so have met thousands of people, to engage in federal or provincial politics, after spending those years of activity on the bench.

I cannot see any reason for making any alterations at this time in the laws as they now exist. With 6,500 applications for 87 positions, and every one of the 6,500 knowing these restrictions exist at the present time, we have our answer definitely there.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business is expired. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance), that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I noted the other day where a British historian had written that British general elections were locks on the canal of British progress. I was going to start tonight by suggesting that our elections were locks, period, and by scorching the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and to a lesser extent the Leader of the Opposition on the basis that while the one dallied and the other raised Cain, and both gave us fine words, on our major problem, which is national survival, the situation seemed to be worsening. But the Prime Minister's speech this afternoon, which was quite candid, certainly constructive and somewhat conciliatory to some of us who were critical of him in this field, has made me certain that he does know the dangers and does feel they are matters which time and negotiation will solve, and that he and all of us have a concept of Canadianism which enables us to join with him in fighting for it.

I was moved to consider being sharp not least by an article sent to me from Paris—I got it today—which appeared in Le Monde last Sunday, April 12, headed "Les relations entre Quebec et Ottawa ont atteint un inquietant degre de tension" and written by the Le Monde correspondent in Quebec, Jean Tainturier. It is a very long article analysing what he calls the disquieting degree of tension between Quebec and Ottawa, and it seemed to me that the last paragraph was the kind of call to arms to which I think the Prime Minister will listen. I hope my fellow members will forgive my pronunciation:

[Translation]

The unrest concerning the constitution which has developed during the last few years has thereby reached a dangerous phase from which the breaking up process of the Canadian confederation could spring unless bold measures are quickly taken by Ottawa.

[Text]

In other words, this gentleman recommends an audacious or bold and rapid seizing of initiative by Ottawa, and I am in hopes that the Prime Minister's remarks this afternoon are an indicator of this. I also endorse the remarks made by my hon. friend for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron), who made the point as one of the generation which bled so much in the first war that he and his colleagues of that generation had a bill to present to this country in terms of asking us, those of us who came afterwards, not to deal with this matter in terms of insult.

I was somewhat shocked to discover a few weeks ago when I read an article about myself in a magazine by the name of "Actualite", written by Jean Marc Poliquin, that he used the adjective "brutal" a number of times to describe my attitude in so far as French Canada is concerned. I have always tried in this particular matter, as an individual and a party spokesman, to be frank. I certainly hope that tonight and at any other time in the future I will take heed of the words of my hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and will not do anything to exacerbate the difficulties or trade in insults.

The Prime Minister's speech today gave us a bit of a framework and an undertaking, but I think he would be the first to concede that he did not do much more than that. He left us with some questions which will puzzle us until he and his colleagues give us more reasons. He gave us a good outline of the difficulties of joint programming. He suggested that "opting out" was a better phrase than "contracting out" of joint programs between the federal government and the government of a province. Then toward the end of his speech he mentioned that what the two governments consider to be the French and English factor in Canada in language terms really was something different that could not be matched up with the joint programs or anything like this. He indicated, just as we believe and it is in our program, that there should be a special status for Quebec because of its language and culture responsibility. But some of the questions that are left unanswered, for example, are: Where does the federal member from Quebec stand? As far as that is concerned, where does the federal member from Ontario stand on something like the pension plan when, without anything we can do or say about it, the initiative in this specific case has been seized by a provincial premier?

I am not going to raise the question; I just want to circle around the fact of where do we vote if we are going to be representing people who in effect have a premier who leads them in other matters and says that the federal government shall not enter, or may not enter here and become involved in this particular problem. It seems to me that a member from Ontario faces something that is quite difficult with regard to the pension plan. For the French Canadian member from Quebec who represents his people here and who sees the provincial premier claiming that the primary, or the basic, or the fundamental responsibility for speaking for French Canada does not enter into this chamber at Ottawa but rests with the legislative assembly at Quebec, I know there are a great many problems and difficulties.

It seems to me that in working out this special status for Quebec the Prime Minister has to determine who has the delegation of authority both from us and from the other provincial governments to deal with Quebec. If Quebec is given a special status, what devolves upon us—that is, upon the federal parliament and authority—regarding two matters; for example, the minorities in Quebec and the minorities of French Canadians in the rest of the country? I want, and my party wants, to respect the rights of the French under the constitution in the rest of the country, but if they are to receive more privileges than they have now—that is, the French outside of Quebec—for example in the fields of language rights, education or provincial politics, it becomes again a matter for the provinces rather than the federal government. After all, the Prime Minister is not in a position to undertake what may be given in Ontario with regard to educational or language rights for French Canadians. If Quebec's special status is recognized, what do we do to keep Quebec representation in this house with some kind of prestige and authority? Members may not believe it, but I actually feel, not anything so high handed or high headed as pity or something like that, but I do feel grieved and sorry for my colleagues from Quebec when I realize that they are under pressure and, in a way, under attack and I would suggest that they are less representative of their people than are other representatives gathered in this place.

The Prime Minister's approach as he outlined it today was a pragmatic and empirical one with the idea that we negotiate around a table and bargain step by step; that we have to go slowly and there needs to be a great many compromises. This is all very well, and it is certainly in the Canadian tradition. But emotionally it seems to me that our Quebec friends may be too impatient for this. English speaking Canada at the present time, as I tend to feel it, is also working up something that is emotional and imaginative with regard to this whole matter. One wonders what happens if things do boil more toward fever heat. What more immediate steps can be taken than those the Prime Minister outlined, which really depend upon a long, slow series of negotiations and deals and compromises. It seems to me that we need to be prepared for this. I sometimes get the feeling—I do not know whether other people in the house join me in this—that the politicians in the province of Quebec may be riding a juggernaut for which they had not any reins. I do not say this in order to irritate, but I just raise this as a question that may put more urgency into this whole matter than the approach that was given today by the Prime Minister.

There is one other point that needs to be made in regard to this question. I wish my hon. friend from Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) were here because it is the one thing that is always more before him than anything else. The Liberal party has always claimed some kind of prior magic or mesmerism in regard to handling the French Canadian representation. I think there are claims being made at the present time, and if some of us laugh it is rather hollow laughter in view of the fact that the Liberal party is having the same difficulties that other parties are having.

I suggest that at this time when emotions and feelings of nationalism are not confined to Quebec it would be well for the Liberal party, as the federal Liberal administration, no matter what happens in its detachment from the Quebec Liberal party, to take the attitude that it did not have all the answers unto itself in this matter. Otherwise it seems to me that it is fruitless for the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to come to the house and appeal for our help and support, if at the same time his hustings speakers are going round and saying things such as that said by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) a few weeks ago, that the Liberal party is the only hope to save confederation. I make this point in some earnestness, Mr. Speaker, because one of the most difficult problems ahead with regard to solving the confederation difficulty is this whole question of partisan claims.

One of the last points I wish to make in relation to this matter has come to me in my reading from a book called "Beyond the ruling class" by Suzanne Keller, and it seems to me that this is one point which we should bring to the minds of the provincialists and the premiers of the provinces at this time. This writer makes the point of the experience of Greece in the fifth century B.C. and that of Rome in the fifth century A.D. She says:

> In each case the failure to control and curb the desires for local autonomy accelerated the decline of these civilizations. The inability to transcend sectional interests has plagued primitive societies as well, many of whom must manage to solve these problems without benefit of inclusive political organization. Various alternative measures—strict village exogamy, or membership in age-sets that override local village loyalties on specific occasions, or membership in far-flung trading associations—might be considered functional equivalents of political organizations such as the state.
> Advanced industrial societies, it appears, are currently on the way toward ever larger, functional divisions. This trend was anticipated by Saint-Simon, among others, who envisaged an international order based not on national but occupational co-ordination. Durkheim continued this line of thought. He favoured the displacement of segmental, territorial solidarity by a comprehensive, functional solidarity based on occupational interdependence, residence becoming less and occupation more important. "A day will come," he prophesied, "when our social and political organization will have a base exclusively, or almost exclusively, occupational". Increasingly it does appear as if local trading, academic, artistic, financial, and fashion centres are yielding ground, and territorial solidarities are making way for other kinds.

This is so obvious in North America that it hardly needs telling, and yet at this time we are making what in essence are demands across the board because of our fragmented political society. We are giving rise to a parochial autonomy.

I now want to refer briefly to Ontario's attitude toward the pension plan. I read recently an article by Bruce MacDonald in the Globe and Mail entitled "Robart's pension reversal", and it made me feel that I was completely wrong about Premier Robarts. I had a suspicion that he was interested in taking a stand which would be in line with the private insurance companies of Canada. He was against larger contributions. I thought he wanted smaller benefits. Now it seems he wants larger contributions and greater benefits and more investment moneys. This is an indication that Premier Robarts may be almost a blooming socialist. It almost indicates that he has been under the influence of the Swedes. Because if you stop and figure the line that Mr. Robarts is now taking—and Mr. MacDonald has outlined it very well—almost everything which Mr. Robarts now seems to be saying, although it does not square very well with what he said before, is an indicator that he is taking the long term attitude of the social democrats in Europe whereby investment from pension funds is one of the great big things you go for.

The other surprising thing to me, and very pleasing of course, is that he seems to want greater benefits, earlier benefits, more survivors' benefits, and of course this fits in with larger contributions. This remarkable about-face by Premier Robarts is something that we need to know a great deal more about. But at the present time, from looking at what he seems to be intending, we almost have an indicator that all the long propaganda efforts of Donald MacDonald and his fellows in the provincial legislature are bearing fruit and that we now have a conservative who is recognizing the merits of social democratic pension attitudes.

One further point in connection with the pension plan is the attitude of the teachers federation. I think this is a glorious demonstration of inconsistency. In effect I have been a member of the teachers federation. They are a closed shop. You have to belong to them and pay a fee, and they have had a nice arrangement with the provincial government that whenever the school trustees in Ontario wanted provincial-wide bargaining in terms of salaries the great cry has gone up by the school teachers: "Oh no, we must keep it within the municipal boundaries. This is the authority by which education has been set in this province, and therefore we should and must keep it that way".

This is very good, Mr. Speaker, from what you might call the trade union point of view. You keep the bargaining unit small. You have a closed shop and you have the benefit of the whole federation across the provinces behind you. You separate the boards one by one and gradually work up over the years to a better salary standard. The Ontario teachers federation has done a magnificent job in this regard, and as one of the former members I was complementary to them when I belonged and I am complementary to them now.

Now they come out against the Canada pension plan and their argument is that it must be set within the provincial framework. They are provincialists where the pension plan is concerned. They are such provincialists that they go out of their way, on a matter in which they have no confidence and I would think a great deal of ignorance, to slur and slight our unemployment insurance plan in an effort somehow to indicate that the unemployment insurance plan is not working and is a failure. I just wanted to put that inconsistency on the part of the teachers federation on record, because some of the senior trustee associations might be watching and it might do the federation well suddenly to be faced with an irony such as that.

I did want to talk about the Time and Reader's Digest situation but I am not going to have the opportunity because time is pressing in. Time is always pressing in. However, I should like to say that I compliment two of the members on the Liberal side who spoke out against the bill. I know I was puzzled over the fact that this change in the budget was not handled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) but was brought in by the present Prime Minister. I understand that the Prime Minister was informed last week that several Canadian magazines have to fold within a few months unless they get some assurance that there will be legislation, and furthermore that the legislation will not give Reader's Digest and Time any special status.

The burden of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, tonight is directed toward the S.I.U. situation on the great lakes. This is a matter which has been very close to all of us. I think it was an emotional event for many of us last year when we voted to set up the trusteeship because it was inimical to the experience and attitudes of many of us. I should like to argue that the trustees adopted the wrong argument right from the start. Instead of taking the Norris commission report as their guide and following its recommendations, they decided to ignore it. They decided to make their own independent assessment of the situation and devise policies which they considered more suitable. The reason why they refused to abide by the advice of Justice Norris is obvious. Because his recommended procedures for creating democratic unionism on the great lakes would have been a long, difficult task, involving the trustees in years of ceaseless effort and toil, they chose the easy way. They looked at the situation and concluded that the cause of all the labour troubles was the existence of competing unions among the seamen. Put them all in one union, they thought, and there would be no longer any reason for that one union to stage boycotts or strikes, or harass shipping in any way.

Looking for the easy way out, they selected the S.I.U. as the best union to be given a monopoly over all sailors. Why? Because the S.I.U. already had the great majority of them, and it would be a lot simpler to assist the S.I.U. in gobbling up the rest than to try to get the smaller unions to replace the S.I.U. No matter that the S.I.U. was a job-selling racket; no matter that the inquiry of Mr. Justice Norris had exposed it as a hoodlum empire. It existed; it was the biggest organization; so it should be the one to represent all the seamen. Also, it had the big American stick of boycotts in American ports against a Canadian union.

The trustees, and apparently the federal government, were concerned only with restoring peace on the lakes. Peace at any price—peace at the price of surrendering to the very hoodlums that the Norris commission exposed that the trustees, at least according to my impression and that of my colleagues, were assigned to clean out. This is the kind of peace the trustees have negotiated—a peace based on unconditional surrender to the S.I.U.

I think we know that the trustees have made a token effort to democratize the S.I.U., and I expect that some time next fall they will proclaim that the work of purification is complete; that free elections are being held, and that the S.I.U. is now worthy to be readmitted into the Canadian Labour Congress. But, no free election, no free referendum can be held while the enforcement machine of the S.I.U. remains intact along the waterfront.

The minister seems doubtful, even now, about the real tactics of the S.I.U. He seems to have difficulty in accepting that there is still a "do not ship" list. Well, they call it a registry of charges now. If the minister wants to find it I suggest he go to the fourth floor of the S.I.U. building in Montreal. Let him go to the north side of the room where he will find a robot filing system next to a large grey filing cabinet. That is where he will find the R.O.C. list which is, in effect, a "do not ship" list.

The trustees have apparently accepted Leonard J. "Red" McLaughlin as being a reformed character. As vice president of contract enforcement, McLaughlin was chief "enforcer" of the S.I.U.'s hoodlum empire in Canada. Mr. Justice Norris found that $72,000 out of $80,000 of Banks' "play money" in the brief period examined was not accounted for in any way. The remaining $8,000 was accounted for by meaningless chits—"$500 for information", "$1,000 for public relations", and so on. McLaughlin was in charge of the money. Yet Mr. Charles Millard says Mr. McLaughlin was a reliable servant of the union. Scores of sailors were brutally beaten in "jackal attacks" and many, such as Fred Neubauer, who had both his kneecaps broken by a crowbar, came forward to testify. These beaten sailors had one thing in common: they opposed the S.I.U. I would like to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) and Mr. Charles Millard who they think paid out the money for these professional beatings? Why, the man who was in charge of the money, of course.

Leonard McLaughlin has been named—not charged, but named—along with Banks and an ex-S.I.U. Vancouver port agent, as co-conspirator in the formal charge against Banks for the beating, maiming and half-killing of Richard Greaves, national president of the national association of marine engineers. Leonard McLaughlin was both the architect and the safe-keeper of the "do not ship" list, an infamous list now called the report of charges which contains the names of between 5,000 and 10,000 Canadian sailors. This vicious "do not ship" list is in effect at this moment in every S.I.U. hiring hall from Halifax to Vancouver, maintained by the maritime trustees in the name of the parliament of Canada. Every sailor who ever showed a spark of resistance to the Paul Hall-Hal Banks-Leonard McLaughlin hoodlum machine has his name on the "do not ship" list.

Mr. Justice Norris found McLaughlin to be a completely untrustworthy witness. He found McLaughlin responsible for the falsification of S.I.U. records. But the trustees now say he is a reformed man. McLaughlin was in charge of S.I.U. elections. The fraudulence of S.I.U. elections was spelled out in detail before the Norris commission—more votes recorded for Banks, McLaughlin and the rest of the hoodlums than there were ballots cast. In a S.I.U. referendum a busy little group is described sitting around marking ballots by the bushel. But Mr. Charles Millard says McLaughlin is reformed. How naïve is he? And how naïve does he think we are? I wonder if the trustees have read about the role of Leonard McLaughlin and Paul Hall in the so-called Todd trial, described in great detail in the transcript of the Norris commission, in which Hall, Banks and McLaughlin turned a trial into a farce to destroy the protest movement against Banks' dictatorship. That was in 1952. I wonder if they have read of the role of McLaughlin at so-called conventions of the seafarers international union—conventions attended by only about 50 or 60 delegates—in support of one-man rule for Banks in Canada.

What an incredible defeat for the forces of decency in the Canadian labour movement is now unfolding before us. After a three year battle and a year long inquiry and report, the spoils, in the form of the clean unions, the exonerated unions—the national association of marine engineers, the Canadian brotherhood of railway, transport and general workers and the Canadian maritime union—are to be cut up and given to the criminals—the union found guilty—the seafarers international union. To this list I might add the Canadian merchant service guild—a clean if numerically weak body which the S.I.U. would have little trouble gobbling up in the future.

Why has this come about? It has come about because the trustees have let Paul Hall use his one club—control over the United States ports—to dictate terms of unconditional surrender. Instead of a spectacle of which we might be proud—Canadians demanding rights for Canadian ships and Canadian unions in American ports and threatening to close our ports if they do not open theirs—we have Paul Hall saying: If you want to sail into Chicago where my goons run the waterfront, you must (1) put my man McLaughlin in as president and (2) hand over the Canadian maritime union and the C.B.R.T. to me.

Well, the trustees have capitulated and the Minister of Labour defends them. And it is not just McLaughlin. Banks remains as vice president of the S.I.U. of North America, resident in Montreal—I ask hon. members to note that. The moment the trusteeship ends, McLaughlin again takes orders from Hal Banks. I want to know why the Canadian Labour Congress is silent about this. I want to know why Maurice Wright has not spoken up. He is the man who put together those extracts given to the Norris commission stating the C.L.C. position as to shipping on the great lakes. When one considers all the things the C.L.C. said before the Norris commission, why has it failed to respond at this new and crucial stage of the battle? Why does it appear to be making the very same mistake the Canadian labour movement, the T.L.C., made in 1948-49 when it helped to import the S.I.U. thugs in the first place? The answer to this question, I regret very much to say, is to be found in the fact that the Canadian Labour Congress is not yet fully able to act as a mature national labour centre in Canada, defending Canadian interests and expressing Canadian views. It is moving in the direction but it has not arrived yet at that point of development.

In a crisis between the Canadian and United States labour movements such as is involved here; with Paul Hall, a vice president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O.; with Hal Banks stronghly backed by George Meany, president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O.; with the powerful maritime trades department run by Paul Hall—in such a power struggle it would appear that the Canadian Labour Congress has to back down. I hope I am proven wrong. In the next few days, and especially at the C.L.C. convention which opens on April 20 in Montreal, the rank and file delegates, if not the leaders, can show me I am wrong and I hope they do. I hope we hear from Bill Dodge and Bill Smith about what I think is a sell-out by the national union in connection with a trusteeship such as this. If they fail to do this and the C.L.C. does not go on record in opposition to the continuation of the Paul Hall-Hal Banks-Red McLaughlin hoodlum empire and if they do not speak out for a Canadian resolution of the great lakes problem, rather than a solution dictated by American labour thugs, it will inevitably raise questions of a very fundamental kind about the relationship of any political party to the Canadian labour movement.

[Mr. Fisher.]

But what concerns us here in this house is something much more direct. We passed an act to establish a trusteeship to bring to an end the instruments of violence on the great lakes. The trustees instead have fallen prey to those whom they were commissioned to manage and control. Surely it is not possible for us to have continued confidence, on the basis of the facts as they are known to us, in these three misguided gentlemen, or in the bland assurances of an increasingly implausible Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen).

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, earlier today, in the course of what I think we will all agree was an inspiring contribution to this debate, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) called upon members of the house and upon Canadians generally to work for the strengthening of our confederation. I intend to begin my remarks this evening by referring to one aspect of this problem, trade and trade policy.

As Minister of Trade and Commerce my duties have taken me into every major area of this country and I have been impressed, as I have never been impressed before, by the diversity of Canada. It has been said by a distinguished historian that "Canada's existence does not and never has depended solely upon national uniformity. The Canadian confederation came into being not to crush but to reconcile regional diversities." I think one might go further and say that these regional diversities can survive and flourish only if they are reconciled in a thriving and united confederation.

These considerations, it seems to me, are just as relevant to the economic life of our country as to questions of language and culture. There must be room in the Canadian system for every region to achieve its true and full economic potential. There are bound to be variations from time to time, of course, in the rate of growth of different areas. However, as part of our nationhood we must see to it that no region is allowed to fall too far behind in economic development and living standards.

This is a responsibility that the federal and the provincial governments share together and must discharge in understanding and co-operation. Economic sectionalism may sometimes produce short term advantages for the sections of the country that indulge in it, but it is surely the road to economic weakness and retardation for the country as a whole and thus for its parts. Sectionalism of this kind is even more ill advised and self-defeating today than when it was rejected a century ago by the founders of this country. If Canada's industries are to compete with those of the European economic community, the European free trade association and the United States they must be permitted to operate within our much smaller economy on the most rational and efficient basis possible. They must not be forced or induced by sectional economic policies to fragment their operations or produce in areas that are basically unsuitable for the type of industry concerned. Their products must receive fair and reasonable treatment throughout our country regardless of their centre of operations.

In his remarks the other day the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) referred to "steps recently taken by the Quebec government in banning the export of lumber", which he depicted as improper both legally and otherwise. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that his words reflect some misunderstanding which I think should be corrected. As I read it, the announcement made by the minister of mines and forests for the province of Quebec was to the effect that it was intended to enforce more strictly existing legislation concerning logs for lumber and veneering purposes taken from crown owned lands.

Apparently it is the intention of the province of Quebec now to enforce regulations which have been in effect for many years governing the use of logs taken from timber limits under lease from the crown in the right of the province. I see no constitutional question involved here. The lands under these timber leases are the property of the crown. The conditions under which the limits may be enjoyed by the leaseholders are matters of contract between the leaseholders and the crown. I believe it is correct that every province in Canada with major forest resources attaches important responsibilities to the use of logging timber leases whether for manufacture of lumber, plywood, pulp and paper or other forest products.

I might suggest to the hon. member for Peace River that he examine the statutes of his province affecting the conservation and use of natural resources, particularly oil and gas. I see no suggestion that what is intended in Quebec is "banning the export of lumber" as was stated by the hon. member. The government of Quebec is concerned with the supply of logs for manufacturing within the provinces as governed by conditions attached to the leases. As I think I have indicated previously to the house, I have had some informal conversations with members of the Quebec administration about this matter and the minister, Mr. Cliche, has recently made a statement on this point that I hope members of the house will find reassuring.

In making these remarks I do not wish to belittle the concern of the hon. member for Peace River. Like him, I am concerned about the question of barriers to trade and about economic sectionalism generally within Canada because I believe that freedom of trade between the provinces is of the utmost importance to the health of the Canadian economy. There is a heavy responsibility upon all of us, whether we are in provincial or federal governments or whether we are in our respective legislatures, to ensure that any intervention we make will strengthen and not weaken Canada. I can say for the federal government that we will discharge that responsibility.

I am hopeful that by building up the habit and practice of co-operation between federal and provincial authorities in the trade field we shall be able increasingly to reconcile divergent regional interests. At the conferences of federal and provincial trade ministers and officials during the past three months, which I and my officials called, we sought to find ways of working together more effectively in promoting Canada's external trade. While the federal government has the responsibility to take the leadership in this field, the provinces, we have recognized, also have a vital role to play.

Matters relating to external trade policy are, of course, the sole responsibility of the federal government. Canada must be able to speak with one voice at international trade conferences and negotiations and must be in a position to enter into international trade agreement commitments and to fulfil them. I should like to say to hon. members that this was acknowledged by all the provincial ministers without exception.

All of this brings me to make a few remarks about the forthcoming round of tariff and trade negotiations, as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) invited me to do during this debate. In his budget speech the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) referred to the prospect that these negotiations, known colloquially as the Kennedy round, would rank with the important trade negotiations that have taken place under the auspices of GATT since the end of the war. Hon. members may recall that the basis of these forthcoming negotiations was the decision of the GATT trade ministers last May when I attended the conference in Geneva on behalf of Canada. At that time several things were decided which I should perhaps recall: First, that the trade negotiations should begin on May 4, 1964; that the negotiations should be based on the principle of reciprocity; that there should be the widest possible participation in the negotiations; that the negotiations should cover all classes of products, whether industrial or agricultural; that the negotiations should deal with both tariff and non-tariff barriers to trade; that they should be based on a plan of substantially equal linear tariff cuts for certain of the more highly industrialized countries; that the trade negotiations should provide for acceptable conditions of access to world markets for agricultural products, and that every effort should be made to reduce barriers to exports of the less developed countries. It was on the basis of these principles as agreed to last May in Geneva that a trade negotiating committee was established to work out or negotiate a plan to supervise the conduct of the negotiations. This committee has been at work and it has been trying to work out the negotiating rules relating to the countries participating on a linear basis, and particularly the question of the depth of the tariff cut, and the way of dealing with this problem of tariff disparities.

Now, since these negotiating rules will have an important bearing on the results, one can say that the negotiations which we have been talking about as if they were to begin on May 4, have really already begun. These negotiations have, in fact, now been in progress for some months. Since this matter is of very considerable interest not only to the members of this house but to the community at large, I should like to deal briefly, and I hope clearly, with the problems that are now under discussion.

The essence of the problem of tariff disparities is to develop equitable rules for negotiations of equal linear tariff cuts between countries with differing tariff levels or structures. This problem, as hon. members may well recognize, arises particularly between the European economic community and the United States because the tariffs which now surround the European economic community are the result of an averaging process, a process which was necessary in order to make one community out of the six countries that entered into the European economic community. During this averaging process most of the tariff peaks were removed. The United States, on the other hand, has many low rates, but more particularly high rates in certain sectors, rates that are substantially above the rates of duty for the same items in the common market tariff. The six contend that where their tariff is significantly below the level of the comparable United States tariff an equal linear tariff cut would not yield an equivalence of benefit. Last May it was agreed that the trade negotiations committee should develop a criteria for determining where significant tariff disparities exist—that is disparities which are meaningful in trade terms—and to determine what special rules should be applicable for tariff reductions in such cases.

Since the likelihood is that where tariff disparities are found to exist there will be a smaller cut in tariffs, the question of the number of items accepted for special treatment has an important bearing on the total scope of the negotiations and on the question of reciprocity of benefit. It may also have an important bearing on the exceptions which would be made to the general rule, and particularly upon the general position of countries other than the United States and the European economic community, who will be affected by the depth of the tariff cuts made by them. Although progress has been made, the chief countries concerned have not yet resolved these difficult issues. Further meetings are scheduled between now and the opening date of May 4.

The second and perhaps most important point that was referred to the trade negotiating committee was the depth of the tariff cut. The United States trade legislation allows for cuts of up to 50 per cent on an across the board basis and with few exceptions. It also permits the removal of United States tariffs where the rates are 5 per cent or less. The discussions that have been going on in Geneva have been going forward on the working hypothesis of a 50 per cent cut. Whether this will become the actual rule for tariff reduction remains to be agreed. How much of the tariff of the United States, of the European economic community and of other countries will, in fact, be reduced in these negotiations cannot be finally known until the end of the negotiations. It will depend on the extent to which the participating countries are prepared to exchange meaningful concessions. The actual average incidence of the cut will be determined, not only by the general rate, whatever that may be, but also by the number of disparities involved and the number of exceptions made.

We for our part, and I am speaking now on behalf of Canada, are hoping that our trading partners will be prepared to go as far as possible in offering reductions to barriers to our export trade. There is every evidence to suggest that the United States administration is determined to offer maximum concessions to other countries within the scope of the authority received from congress. The United Kingdom and the continental E.F.T.A. countries have indicated that they intend to make substantial and positive response and they are interested, like the United States, in keeping exceptions to the minimum and narrowing the list of disparity items. The European economic community, on the other hand, has reaffirmed its support for a major round of trade negotiations but attaches great importance to a satisfactory resolution, from its point of view, to the problem of tariff disparities and to other matters bearing on the scope and balance of the negotiations.

I have referred to exceptions. These are items which countries may consider it necessary to withhold from their linear offer. It was agreed by the minister last May that such exceptions should be kept to a bare minimum; that they should be subject in each case to confrontation and justification. The United States, by its own trade legislation, is required to exclude from its tariff offer lead and zinc and petroleum. Other countries do not have such legislative requirements. They may, however, be expected to come forward with certain items on which they do not feel able to offer tariff cuts. Such lists of exceptions and the scope of them might well become a key element in the negotiations themselves.

For example, it would clearly limit the value of the negotiations for Canada if items of particular interest in our trade were included in the exceptions lists of countries where we have important markets.

The working out of negotiating rules with respect to trade in agriculture is also proving to be both delicate and difficult. It is agreed that trade in agriculture should be an integral part of the negotiations and that the negotiations are to deal with the creation of acceptable conditions of access to world markets for agricultural products.

Here, however, special measures of protection as most hon. members know, designed to support farm economies by one means or another make it difficult, indeed well-nigh impossible, to apply the same negotiating rules to basic agricultural products as can be applied to the negotiations in the industrial sector. In many cases, some very important for Canada as an agricultural exporter, the tariff is not the effective barrier to trade. In other cases, the tariff is used in combination with other restrictive devices. None the less, for efficient agriculture producers whose international trade has a substantial agricultural content, meaningful negotiations on agriculture will be a critical element in a successful negotiation. This is so for Canada and for the United States as well as for Australia and New Zealand. The problem of finding a satisfactory negotiating base has had the added complexity that the European economic community is still in the process of formulating its common agricultural policy. It will require a good deal of imagination and good will to work out a solid settlement with the community in an area in which, for most basic agricultural products, the key element affecting production and therefore the scope for imports is the level of the support price, the system and the price being protected by a variable levy at the frontier which has the effect of bringing up the price of competitive imports to the level of prices prevailing in the domestic market.

While it is too early to be clear about the prospects in this sector, negotiations have been initiated for world cereals arrangements and there appears to be a readiness to bring agricultural supports and domestic production policies under international negotiation and confrontation. Meat groups and dairy products groups have been established to look into the possibility of special international arrangements for these products. Canada and other traditional exporters are placing the emphasis on access and satisfactory international prices. The Six tend to approach the question from the basis of acceptance of their agricultural system and a form of negotiation which would be related to it but which would emphasize the status quo rather than the expansion of competition between domestically produced and imported products.

I trust that between now and May 4 sufficient progress will have been made to permit us to see our way ahead in the agricultural sector as well as for industrial goods and materials.

I have dealt at some length with these matters because reports about them have, in some cases, tended to create uncertainties and doubts about the Kennedy round of negotiations itself. From what I have said I am sure the house will appreciate that the difficult and complex nature of the issues under discussion make it inevitable that progress will take time. Delays and problems should occasion neither surprise nor discouragement. The negotiations are scheduled to open in Geneva on May 4. A period of initial assessment will no doubt follow. By autumn we can expect the beginning of an extended period of intensive negotiations. It will, I think, be a year or more of negotiation before we reach the end of the road, and the road will not be smooth. Given effort and good will, the final results can, however, be substantial and worth while.

So far as our preparations here in Canada are concerned, hon. members will have seen the Prime Minister's announcement of February 21 appointing Mr. Norman Robertson, under secretary of state for external affairs, as Canada's chief negotiator, with responsibility to the government for Canada's participation in the negotiations. I think we are all grateful also that we have been able to get the services of Mr. Hector McKinnon, who is one of the most experienced negotiators in our service.

A tariffs and trade committee has been established, and has invited briefs from all Canadian interests concerned. There has already been a good response from Canadian interests, and briefs are coming in in volume. The Canadian business community is showing greater interest in these negotiations than in any previous negotiations, and I am certainly encouraged by the response we are receiving.

The committee is busy and the government is looking forward to having the benefit of its advice as the process of consultation, analysis and assessment goes forward. Later in the year a group will proceed to Geneva to negotiate in the Canadian interest, and we expect that through the actual negotiating stage necessary liaison with Canadian interests will be maintained through Ottawa.

Sometime during this debate reference was made to commonwealth trade. This was high on the agenda of the meeting of the commonwealth economic consultative committee I attended last May in London, on the eve of the GATT ministerial meeting, and at that time commonwealth ministers agreed on the continuing importance of commonwealth trade. They also agreed on the need for a general expansion of world trade and on the importance of this for all commonwealth countries.

Commonwealth countries generally have been playing an active role in the preparatory stages of the GATT trade negotiations. Whether they be developing countries, or chiefly agricultural exporters like New Zealand and Australia, or countries like Canada and the United Kingdom, each has made clear the important benefits for trade which they see possible through the Kennedy round, and there has been very strong support throughout the commonwealth for the forthcoming round of tariff negotiations.

As in the past, any major world trade negotiations involving substantial reductions in barriers to international trade will inevitably involve adjustments in the commonwealth preferences. To the extent, for example, that the United Kingdom reduces its most favoured nation rates, the margins of preference of commonwealth countries in access to the British market would be reduced. Similarly, a Canadian participation inevitably involves adjustments in preferences that, for example, the British are accorded in this market. While no detailed discussions have been held with the British government on this matter, we have been in touch and the two countries will be consulting closely throughout the negotiations with a view to ensuring that, whatever adjustments in the preferences may be necessary, they are worked out in consultation. Similarly, we shall be in continuing close touch with the other commonwealth countries.

At the United Nations conference on trade and development, in which my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, participated, the question of extending new preferences and adjusting existing preferences is being actively studied as a possible means for assisting the less developed countries to improve their lot. It is important to understand that so far as our preferential arrangements with the less developed members of the commonwealth are concerned, criteria additional to considerations relating to Canada's trade directly with these countries will be brought to bear and may affect the future of these preferential arrangements.

Both my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I, have indicated to the house the sort of considerations that the government will be bearing in mind on this question of preferences.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to the position of state-trading countries in relation to these international negotiations. As hon. members are aware, Canada has found some important and valuable markets within the Sino-Soviet bloc. There is every reason to believe that this area will continue to have substantial food import requirements that we should be in a position to supply. The framework for these commercial exchanges has generally been worked out through bilateral negotiations in which I had some participation, and in which, I understand, one of the ministers of the former government had also. It has so far not been found possible to bring state-trading countries into a multilateral trading framework.

One of the challenges of the future, as market economies seek to develop closer commercial ties with socialist planned economy countries, will be to see whether a broad and more or less continuing framework of multilateral trade can be developed, in which state-trading countries and the needs of market economies can be fitted together on a mutually satisfactory basis.

You will see, Mr. Speaker, from the problems I have discussed how difficult and complex a situation faces both the GATT conference, and the United Nations conference now in progress. The finding of the way through them will require patience as well as diligence. We should expect what appear to be delays and set-backs from time to time. This is in the nature of important world trade negotiations. However, I am encouraged by the progress that is being made, and look forward to the launching of the Kennedy round on May 4 next, and to the serious and worth-while negotiations that lie ahead. In them Canada will seek to play its full part.

In so doing, the government believes that it is acting not only in the interests of the people of Canada but also of the people of the world at large.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to the less serious part of my speech I would like to make an announcement. The score, after one period of play at the Maple Leaf Gardens, is Toronto one Detroit one.

[Translation]

Now, Mr. Speaker, we heard a speech from the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) in which he dealt in a very eloquent manner devoid of any partisan prejudice, with the problems facing the Canadian confederation.

The Prime Minister expressed some concern about the present situation. He went even so far as stating that the time for building up the Canadian nation was over, and that the challenge facing Canadians in 1964 was to save the Canadian nation, neither more nor less.

As far as I am concerned, I must say that those are feelings which certainly are to the credit of the Prime Minister, but when I heard him say so this afternoon, two things came to my mind which recently impressed me.

First of all, the too obvious inability of the government to turn those fine feelings into action. Second, in spite of the Prime Minister's obvious goodwill federal-provincial relations never were at such a low ebb.

As a member from the province of Quebec, I have—as all the other members in this house, I think—the progressive evolution of our Canadian confederation at heart. However, I cannot but repeat that, for Quebec and the whole of French Canada, confederation has always been considered as a pact between the two great founding races of this country. The document, which was by no means perfect, nevertheless made a splendid contribution to the development of a great country on this American soil.

If we look back at the last century of this country's history, we must admit that it has been a real success so far as human relations are concerned. Those who conceived it deserve all our gratitude. They knew how to reach a compromise when it was needed.

If we consider the situation as described by the Prime Minister this afternoon, we should not hesitate, we Canadians of 1964, to apply to present problems the same spirit of compromise which was so successful in 1867. By compromise, I mean the term defined by the late president John F. Kennedy in his remarkable book entitled "Profiles in Courage", that is the compromise to which politicians must resort in dealing with state matters.

Here is how the late President Kennedy defined the word compromise:

[Text]

We shall need compromises in the days ahead to be sure, but these will be or should be compromises of issues, not of principles. We can compromise our political positions but not ourselves. We can resolve the clash of interest without conceding our ideals. And even the necessity for the right kind of compromise does not eliminate the need for those idealists and reformists who keep our compromises moving ahead. Compromise need not mean cowardice. Indeed it is frequently the compromisers and conciliators who are faced with the severest tests of political courage as they oppose the extremist views of their constituents.

[Translation]

I think that is a lesson in political history which applies to today's situation. And I do not hesitate for one second to call upon my compatriots and urge them to accept that definition in their relations with Canadian citizens in the rest of the country so that we can go hand in hand and build a great Canada for several more generations.

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister specially dealt with the position of Quebec within the Canadian confederation. Since the last world war, great changes have happened in Canada, and especially in the province of Quebec. Quebec was swept by the great technological revolution which shook the free world in the fields of economy, social relations, education and national aspirations, because there is in Quebec a new vision.

The new generation has become conscious of the great opportunities which are opened to her in the field of technology and economy. Our youth is attracted by technical education. Our universities, our great schools of engineering, commerce and technology have doubled or tripled their enrolments.

Quebec was recently described by a reporter as a young giant waking up and becoming conscious of his strength; and I am convinced that all sincere Canadians are cheering at that surge of French Canadians. It is unavoidable that such a sudden awakening will create disturbances, but we must not let the initiative fall in the hands of extremists. On the other hand, we must not see separatism in every one of the least claims put forward by Quebec, nor talk about concessions every time Quebec wants her rights to be recognized.

This afternoon, the Prime Minister seemed to be seeking a way to prevent that division which may have occurred between the two major ethnical groups in Canada from getting any wider. He was looking for a means to strengthen national unity, a formula which would ensure for our country as brilliant a future as we seemed to have a few years ago.

I should like to suggest to my English speaking friends to imitate the example of Belgium and Switzerland and, in that connection, I call the attention of the house to a book written by a great journalist and a prominent member of the press gallery, Mrs. Ann Francis. That work, which was published by the Canadian institute of international affairs, is entitled: "Language—Bridge or Barrier".

Mrs. Francis wrote that booklet following a trip to Switzerland and Belgium. She described the situation existing in both countries and I believe the government could find there excellent solutions which could be applied to today's problems.

Let us remember that we have the example of Belgium where centralization has caused the dispute between Flemish and Walloon; so much so that today the country is divided and bloody riots break out at regular intervals. On the other hand, we have the example of Switzerland where minorities are treated intelligently and where the majority has established an atmosphere of peace, prosperity and mutual confidence, which has allowed Switzerland to develop and become a country respected everywhere in the world.

Let me quote the words of the minister of external affairs of Switzerland when asked by Mrs. Francis about his secret to remedy the situation and give satisfaction to the minorities, the minister had this answer:

"We have had our troubles. It took us many years to find the answer. Quite simply it is this. We spoil them".

Dr. Hans Zbinden, a leading sociologist at the University of Berne, said to Mrs. Francis:

[Text]

"We must not only respect minorities. We must make them feel we love them for their diversity".

[Translation]

Mrs. Francis added the following:

[Text]

These are not merely beautiful theories to impress a stranger. According to Dr. Hermann Weilenmann, a foremost Swiss historian:

"Although fewer than 30 per cent of the population speak romance languages, they are represented in the federal cabinet by three out of seven councillors. In the same way, there is a tendency to give linguistic, regional and often religious, minorities proportionally more voice on commissions and in the departments of the federal government and the cantons than their numbers would warrant. Likewise minorities are often given more subsidies than the majority to make them take a greater interest in communal affairs".

These might seem to be quite strong arguments in favour of greater advantages for minorities in Canada.

[Translation]

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that they must be quite serious after all, especially when they face such a situation over there, and that we should find among these various suggestions a formula that could be applied to Canada and which would solve our linguistic problems.

This afternoon, the Prime Minister expressed his deep concern over the situation facing us. His voice was not as depressed as when he made his statement on the results of the last federal-provincial conference, but I think that we understand his concern and we are in sympathy with him.

His government is on the verge of getting blamed, in Quebec, for double taxation which will no doubt result from the way Quebec was treated at that federal-provincial conference. His government is once again forced to withdraw its pension plan because it was obviously ill-prepared and it was too anxious, for some unknown reason, to impose its point of view on the provinces.

As far as the Conservative party is concerned, we are in favour of a national pension fund, but we want a plan which will respect the rights of the provinces in that field and will enable all Canadians to enjoy a well-deserved, comfortable and dignified retirement.

Mr. Speaker, we are at the crossroads in Canada, and I am of the opinion that all hon. members should make every effort to bring about the best understanding possible between all groups in the country. As for us, Conservatives, we have a long tradition of fostering mutual respect between Canadians and we wish to assure the house that we will fully support any measure designed to strengthen the bonds which unite the two great founding races of our country.

I wish to remind you that we must give evidence of tolerance and mutual respect because we are responsible for the future of a great country. I am convinced that we will not elude this challenge and that every one of us will do his duty. On the other hand, I hope the government will pull itself together, be better prepared and introduce a truly serious policy, carefully thought-out pieces of legislation that the house could really support unanimously.

[Text]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I realize that this is rather a late hour to be participating in a debate such as this, but nevertheless I appreciate the opportunity of making a few observations with respect to the issues before us. We have dealt down through the course of this debate with a great variety of subjects. There are those who have been dealing with problems which face Canada as far as its very survival is concerned. There are those who have been dealing with the forces which would divide and destroy us. Others have talked specifically of issues which have to do with their own respective ridings. Tonight my remarks will be a mixture of several of these topics.

First of all I should like to suggest that we take a look at the budget which was introduced some time ago, and at the budget address delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). It seems to me that the Minister of Finance has been trying to hide behind the royal commissions on banking and finance and taxation which have been set up to study these respective fields. While the minister has been trying to hide behind these commissions the Canadian people have been bowing under an almost unbearable tax burden. We realize that these commissions will be doing a very valuable job of work. We are looking forward with anticipation to the reports which will be brought in. But nevertheless I do not think we should wait until they are brought in before some definite action is taken to alleviate the conditions under which the Canadian people are presently living. A number of the proposals introduced by the budget were very welcome, but it appears that no attempt has been made to deal effectively with the major problems which are facing us. Or having studied them the minister seems to have given up in despair and hopes that the royal commissions will bail him out of a seemingly hopeless and impossible situation.

I hope that we in the Social Credit party have made it abundantly clear that we do not believe in opposition just for opposition's sake.

Mr. Woolliams: They have not got any opposition in Alberta at all.

Mr. Patterson: I think it is obvious that a lot of people have shown extreme wisdom in their choice of members in the provincial legislature and they have certainly endorsed the Social Credit administration for many years, and will no doubt do so for many years to come. As I was saying, I hope that we in the Social Credit party have made it abundantly clear that we are not interested in opposition just for opposition's sake, but do endeavour to criticize constructively and offer what we believe to be valid alternatives worthy of consideration and study. Therefore, in line with this principle we have consistently advocated the expanded use of the Bank of Canada as an effective means whereby our monetary system can more adequately fulfil its function in the economic life of the nation. More especially so in two particular fields; one, the control and liquidation of our national debt, and second, the provision of social capital through a municipal development bank.

I am not going to deal too fully with the first point tonight because my colleague from Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), speaking in the debate some time ago, dealt in detail with the question of our national debt. I believe that this is becoming a matter for increasing concern to the Canadian people. It used to appear that the attitude was: "Well, what do we care? As long as we get the services we require what do we care where the government gets the money?" I submit that those days are gone and that the people of Canada are now asking the question: Just how much longer can we continue with deficit financing, adding to our national debt year after year after year, and building up debt charges to the point where they are now well over the $1 billion mark annually?

Mr. Woolliams: Why do you vote for the Liberals then?

Mr. Patterson: You would not want us to vote for the Conservatives, would you?

Mr. Woolliams: I certainly would.

Mr. Patterson: I do not know why. As we think of that particular problem I suggest that the Minister of Finance has not done very much in an endeavour to resolve the matter. I know he has referred to the necessity of bringing the budget more into balance, but we find that the policies which have been advocated are not doing very much to accomplish that laudable objective. I believe the time has come when we must pay attention to this matter of finding some way to finance our national economy without plunging the country deeper and deeper into debt.

My second point concerns the provision of social capital through a municipal development bank. We appreciate the fact that the government has heeded our recommendations to a certain degree. Down through the years we have strenuously and consistently advocated the setting up of a municipal development fund. In response to that the government did provide for the establishment of a municipal development and loan fund. However, even though we acknowledge that this is a step in the right direction, there is a vast difference between the proposals which we made in this connection and the regulations under which that fund is operating.

We believe that the money for this particular bank should be provided through the Bank of Canada, and provided at just the cost of administration. This money should be lent to the municipalities for capital development in the social field, the building of hospitals, schools and all these other things which are not revenue producing but which do provide services to the people. In this way we believe that the municipalities could find a great measure of relief from the present staggering situation in which they find themselves, and will be able to go forward and provide these much needed services to the ever-expanding communities.

Therefore we ask the Minister of Finance tonight just what success has been achieved through the municipal development and loan fund. We have not heard very much about it. There was a great deal of talk when it was set up and there were portrayals of what this would mean to the municipalities in the fields of providing services and easing the burden of the municipalities in providing job opportunities. We had a great deal of discussion relative to these matters, but it seems to me that we have not heard very much in recent days of this particular program and the way in which it has succeeded —or rather not succeeded—in the realization of these particular objectives.

We suggest very sincerely, Mr. Speaker, that our proposals are much more realistic and would have had a far greater chance of reaching the objectives that the minister outlined when he announced the setting up of the municipal development and loan fund. Again let me mention them. First of all is the proposal to provide services to the municipalities. The municipalities are finding it almost impossible, in some cases completely impossible, to find capital at reasonable rates of interest in order to keep up with the immediate demands of their expanding communities.

We believe that our proposals would have assisted to a far greater degree in the accomplishment of this particular objective, the easing of the burden of financing upon the municipalities. The point has now been reached where municipalities have overreached themselves in an endeavour to fulfil their responsibilities, but now they are coming to the end of the way and are facing an impossible situation.

As far as job opportunities are concerned, we feel that far more would have been provided if the proposals we made with respect to the municipal development bank had been followed. We have made other suggestions during the course of the years and I should like to deal briefly tonight with the question of taxation because this is something which is vital. Other nations have faced this situation and decided that something must be done. Yet our own national government has made no progress along this path toward easing the burden of taxation on the Canadian people. Once again, Social Crediters have throughout the years urged a complete revision of the whole tax structure of Canada. We have heard members of other parties rising on occasions to make this same plea. But we have consistently advocated this course—a complete revision of the whole tax structure—and we do this because we believe it is time for us to face the realities of the situation. We know that this is one of the tasks before the commission on taxation as it makes its inquiry. We certainly hope this matter will be dealt with. But somehow or other we lose confidence in many of these commissions that are set up. They carry through their inquiries and then submit some recommendations, possibly, but many times they are simply apologists for the status quo; they do not recommend anything which is fundamentally different. Possibly they recommend a few things that may ease the situation, but unfortunately many of them fail to get to the root of the trouble and fail to make the radical recommendations which would achieve the results desired by the Canadian people.

As far as the easing of the tax burden is concerned, I think the United States has set an example. If I remember correctly, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) referred to this matter during his budget speech and indicated that the Canadian government was not willing to follow the same course; they did not believe it was in the best national interests at the present time. Well, I do not know when it is going to be in the best national interest. I do not know how much longer we shall be able to keep going. It seems as though the people are reaching a point where they cannot endure much more. We ask the question: Why can we not have some forward looking change as far as our tax structure is concerned? I know the minister will say that we are just awaiting the recommendations of the commission on taxation. Well, I hope we do not have to wait too long and that when these recommendations do come in the minister will not delay very long before he brings in some fundamental changes and reforms in this field.

We believe these levels of taxation which retard development and economic progress should be eliminated. We could reach a point at which taxes stifle development and stifle progress. Instead of increasing the national revenue they could actually decrease it. We trust the minister will give consideration to these matters in the near future. The present criterion as far as taxation is concerned seems to be how much the traffic will bear.

Is there not some new way in which we can raise a few more million dollars for the treasury? Is there not some way whereby we can impose another tax here and another tax there, because we need the money and are obliged to find additional sources of revenue and additional fields of taxation? How much will the traffic bear? That seems to be the question. But I suggest to the Minister of Finance that it will not bear very much more.

I wish to mention one tax in particular. There was an indication in the budget speech that the minister and the government would not proceed with the additional increase in the sales tax. There were those who sincerely hoped there would be an announcement along those lines. There were some who were optimistic and who really expected it. Perhaps there were others, more like Doubting Thomas, who were content to wait until they had heard such a statement from the minister himself. Unfortunately, we found the hon. gentleman was determined to continue this tax—that he was resolved to allow the increase to take effect. Of course we are still receiving petitions opposing this tax. I know it is of little use to quote from them tonight, because the minister has already made up his mind. If all the briefs and all the speeches and all the pleas and all the requests which have been made to him in the past on this subject have gone unheeded, I am sure one or two more would not make very much difference tonight in the closing minutes of this debate. Nevertheless, I believe the minister would have been wise had he acceded to these requests and taken a position other than the one he did. I wish to refer to a statement made in the publication "British Columbia Forest Industries" volume one, No. 3, of March 1964 under the heading "Taxes Weaken Competitive Position." The writer points out that the effect of taxes such as sales tax on the tools of production make Canadian production less competitive on world markets, where 70 per cent of British Columbia's forest output is sold, and also inhibited the flow of capital needed. That is just one opinion. There are many others which could be quoted.

I should like, also, to mention the question of the redistribution of tax revenue. Of course we know this is a matter which is under active consideration, that it has been discussed at length in the dominion-provincial conference and, no doubt, it will continue to be an important subject at other conferences yet to be held. I am sure everyone at all levels of government recognizes now that there must be a redistribution of tax revenue so that each level of government may be able to take care of its constitutional responsibilities. I should like to make some specific suggestions to the minister. In case he has forgotten, there are still some ways in which he can ease the burden of taxation on the people of this great nation of ours. I am not going to speak in generalities. I intend to bring what I have to say down to several brief statements.

I see the time is passing and if I were following the role I followed for quite a few years I would say I was going to give the skeleton of my sermon. But this is not a sermon, tonight, I know. I should like to make some specific suggestions relative to taxation, especially as it affects ordinary people—not the corporations, not those in the high income brackets, necessarily, but those at the lower income levels. Surely, some of these things could be tidied up so as to bring alleviation to various groups of people. We have advocated, and we continue to advocate, that a depreciation allowance on private homes be permitted as a logical income tax deduction. We also believe that home property tax allowances should be deductible for income tax purposes. We have recommended, and still recommend, an increase in basic exemptions.

I think it is highly ridiculous that we still stick to a basic level which was set years ago, when we all know that the cost of living has risen tremendously over the intervening years. I suggest that if $1,000 was necessary to buy the essentials of life years ago it takes much more than $1,000 to buy those same essentials today. It seems to me that was the criterion when the basic exemption was set. So we suggest that this matter be reviewed with the objective of raising the basic exemptions for income tax purposes.

There is one other matter in this field I should like to mention. The minister may say it does not involve very many people but I should like to bring it to his attention once again. I have done so before and I also submitted a letter to him. The matter concerns the inequities in taxation so far as workers are concerned. I sent the minister a copy of a letter I received in which one of these inequities is set out in detail.

The letter is from a logger. He set forth all his expenses for travel, and so on, and then compared his situation with that of a railway worker. He pointed out that the railway worker was allowed to deduct his travelling expenses but one engaged in logging was not given the same consideration. I am not going to take the time to read the letter although I should like to put it on the record. However, I bring it to the minister's attention once again in case the letter was pigeonholed somewhere and he has forgotten about it. I hope he will drag it out and tidy up some of these things that irritate some of our workers. I believe that the concessions granted to workers in certain fields should also be granted to workers in other fields as well.

To sum up my observations with regard to the tax field, I suggest to the minister that Canadians cannot shoulder any additional taxes, and if this trend continues I think the goose that lays the golden egg is going to be a goner.

Mr. Woolliams: He is dead now.

Mr. Patterson: There is just one other matter to which I should like to refer very briefly, the situation of superannuated civil servants. I know this question has been raised many times. I suppose the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has raised it more than anybody else and I have also had occasion to raise it. We have asked the minister to review the pension regulations, and so on, but so far there does not seem to have been any positive action in this regard. Whether or not it is right I do not know, but it has been brought to my attention that rather substantial increases in pensions are being contemplated for those who retired after 1947. As I say, I do not know whether this is true but I have been told it is. I think this is right and proper.

But I should like to raise the matter of those who retired prior to 1947. I have correspondence from some of these people who find themselves in almost impossible financial circumstances because the amount of pension they are receiving at the present time is so inadequate that they cannot maintain a decent standard of living. Therefore may I make a plea once again that in reviewing the legislation relative to the pensions of superannuated civil servants consideration be given to those who retired prior to that year in the same way that consideration apparently is being given to those retired since. There are some other matters to which I should like to refer but I believe my time has almost expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks, I should like to express my gratitude and my thanks to the people of the fine riding of Laurier who made it possible for me to speak in this house which embodies the best parliamentary traditions in the world.

I consider that as a duty because an opponent of mine, accompanied by his father, insulted my constituents on the night of February 10 last when the Liberal party scored a victory.

I have here a photocopy of a Montreal newspaper, the Gazette, of February 11, 1964, which shows a picture of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) with the caption: "You call it democracy, I call it ignorance."

A little further, the newspaper stated the following:

[Text]

Sipping a Coke and drawing on a thin cigar, Mr. Caouette declared Montreal voters to be sick, sick, sick.

[Translation]

In the same article, the reporter had this to say:

[Text]

Someone else said: "The people in Montreal are like sheep. They move only with a mass movement."

[Translation]

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I hasten to render a tribute to those gallant, hardworking, honest, reliable and intelligent people who put common sense always ahead of every consideration. Those people tried to render a tribute to hon. members and to the Pearson cabinet for the splendid work they accomplished during the first session. To encourage the representation and the cabinet to pursue their policy of full employment, of economic revival and Canadian unity, those people put their trust in a Liberal.

They remembered, and will long remember, that the course of our party has been indicated since 1877 by the true founder of Liberalism in Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, when he said:

I am a Liberal. I am one of those who think that everywhere, among the human race, there are abuses to be reformed, new horizons to conquer, new forces to develop.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I did not mention the untiring devotion, loyalty and sincerity of all those who, near or far, worked together to form that famous Liberal team of the county of Laurier which has always been the envy of our political opponents.

Unfortunately, only 40 per cent of our people exercised their right to vote, whereas, in 1962, 64 per cent of the people and in 1963, 68 per cent went to the polls.

It is generally recognized that a by-election does not cause as much enthusiasm as a general election. As a matter of fact, in 1949, in my riding, at a by-election, only 31 per cent of the electors voted.

That fact is no indication, however, that the Liberal party was losing ground in my riding, since the Liberals received 49 per cent of the ballots in 1962, 44 per cent in 1963 and 51 per cent on February 10 last.

All my opponents lost their deposits, because the people expressed their absolute confidence in me. I can understand the grudge and the fury of my opponents, but I will never admit that they should depreciate and insult the population of my riding.

I consider that it was a Liberal victory over the Ralliement Creditistes. I consider that the people of Laurier caused, to bite the dust not the son, Gilles Caouette, my opponent, but rather the father, the hon. member for Villeneuve, who, in all probability, wished to have two seats in this house and draw two indemnities. The Montreal newspaper the Gazette—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. While the hon. member for Laurier has the floor, some Liberal members, all around him and closer to the microphone than he is, are chatting, discussing and talking together, so that we can hear his friends' conversation better than his own speech. Perhaps what he says is not very important, but we would appreciate hearing him just the same. Therefore, I would request that his colleagues, at least, permit the hon. member for Laurier to speak in order that we may hear what he has to say.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Laurier has only a few minutes left to finish his speech.

Mr. Leblanc: To summarize the first part of my speech, I will say that La Presse, in its issue of February 22, 1964, stated this:

If people had really wanted to express feelings that are contrary to the general political opinion prevailing in the rest of the country, they would have voted in far greater number.

To go on to something else, Mr. Speaker, it was with particular interest that I found on page 14 of the March issue of Selection du Reader's Digest, an article entitled "How to create new jobs".

That article not only reflected my own convictions, but also those of the Pearson government, and it gives me pleasure to quote from it the following extract:

We need business contractors, big and small. The role of the state should consist in giving them greater encouragement and not put grit in their bearings.

Our Liberal government has always promoted small free enterprise by giving it technical assistance and lending it money. It was given that encouragement for social, economic and political reasons.

Our Liberal government has always put into practice the principles enunciated by His Holiness Pope John XXIII in the encyclical Mater et Magistra. Here is an extract from it:

At the outset it should be affirmed that in economic affairs first place is to be given to the private initiative of individual men who, either working by themselves, or with others in one fashion or another, pursue their common interests.

The Liberal government set up a board to assist small private industries. On the other hand, it is against commercial combines, mergers and trusts.

Our Liberal government understands that to govern democratically is not mainly to lead free and intelligent people but rather to give leadership to a nation so that it may reach its goal.

It must take into account the common good rather than the private one. And what is common good? I quote from a definition given in this respect by His Holiness Pope Pius XII:

External conditions as a whole which are necessary to the citizens for the development of their values, their functions their material, intellectual and religious life.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; it being 9.45 o'clock p.m. it is my duty pursuant to section 6 of standing order 58 to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion (Mr. Gordon) agreed to on division.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Resolved, that schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out tariff items 219a, 326m, 326n, 399a, 410c, 410d, 410e, 683 and 848, and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duty set opposite each of these items, and by inserting therein the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of duty:

Progress reported.

Mr. MacNaught: I think it would be the desire of all hon. members if you would call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacNaught: Since there is not unanimous consent to call it ten o'clock, we will take the second reading of the electoral boundaries bill.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

The house resumed from Thursday, March 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pickersgill (for the Prime Minister) for the second reading of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation to the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): This is the next item of business to come before us, and it is of considerable importance. We spent two or three days on it earlier in the session, and I presume the house is of a mood to proceed with it fairly rapidly. I believe it will be called as the matter of business for tomorrow, in addition to the time we may spend on it tonight. I am quite prepared to make some contribution to this debate now, and I will complete my remarks when we reach the committee stage.

Twelve years ago the subject of redistribution was in front of this house. I made an intensive study of the problem and prepared a major speech on the subject. However, I was seated in the back row against the curtains, and everybody who occupies that position today will understand why I did not get an opportunity of contributing to that debate. I find now that I have a chance to put some thoughts on the record with regard to this very important subject. I am in agreement with the mover of the motion, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and others who have spoken in this debate, that we have now reached a land mark in Canadian history and we are going to deal with the problem of redistribution in perhaps a more sensible manner than has been the case in other years.

What I have to say is in the same mood and temper of the remarks made by others who have spoken in the debate. It is a serious consideration of this problem and I have no intention of referring to incidents in the past illustrating how redistribution was dealt with at that time. We are coming of age in Canada with regard to this problem and are simply attempting to do now what perhaps we should have done many years ago. We are following the example set by other countries.

One thing which concerns me, and I am going to limit my remarks to this subject, is the attitude that will be taken by the commissioners when they approach this problem. I am not going to enter into discussion as to whether there should be one commission or ten, although I prefer only one. But no matter how many commissions there are, when the commissioners finally get down to work I am concerned about how they will approach the problem, because we have had a variety of opinion expressed in the house with regard to the tolerance factor which has been written into the bill.

It may be that the commissioners will have uppermost in their minds—unless they have seriously considered this problem—strict representation by population. It may be that they will have other views with regard to how they conduct their operation, and I do not know how parliament can be assured that they will interpret the will of parliament when they undertake their task. They may lean more to strict representation by population than perhaps would meet with the opinion of those hon. members who have already addressed the house.

Two or three hon. members who have spoken have gone very far towards the strict representation by population idea. Others have expressed the idea that the tolerance should be anywhere from 20 per cent to 33⅓ per cent. We are not setting out in the bill, although this will be discussed when we reach the particular clause, a very strict set of guidance rules for the commissioners, except for the tolerance figure which is to be written into the bill.

Reference has been made to the experience in some countries. New Zealand and Australia have been mentioned, but I think the commissioners' attention should be drawn to the experience in the British Isles where, in 1944, when they started on this problem of taking care of redistribution by a commission, they introduced a tolerance figure of 25 per cent into their act. With their experience based on that, the commissioners then discovered it limited them in making divisions of the constituencies, recognizing the county and borough divisions in the country, and the special features of certain areas in the United Kingdom.

Therefore, in 1947 the British parliament passed an act to modify the 1944 act, and the 1947 act had a very interesting phrase introducing it. It is called an act to relax the rules as they were set out in the third schedule of the 1944 act, and in the 1947 act they rescinded the rule which set the tolerance figure at 25 per cent and left it open, without restricting in any way the activities of the commissioners.

If you read the reports of the commissioners for England proper, for Scotland, Wales, and Northern Ireland—because they have the four commissions—you find reference by the commissioners to the advantage they found in the removal of that restriction. Consequently we should consider very seriously whether or not the experience in England should be given weight. Rather than tie the hands of the commissioners can we not leave them the freedom that perhaps they will require in dealing with certain areas?

The second thing I would like to spend some time on, but I have only three minutes left tonight, is to say that no matter how much we like to talk about representation by population—it is an attractive subject and many years ago I made a speech on it myself, but I have changed my opinion since then—Canadian experience is not solely that of representation by population because, throughout our history, we have recognized area representation, and we are familiar now with the smaller representation of the Atlantic provinces, particularly Prince Edward Island.

We are also familiar with the small representation figure required for the Yukon and Mackenzie. We know, from our early history, that Manitoba and the Northwest Territories of that particular period had a number of seats in this house when their populations warranted perhaps only one. So, throughout our history we are familiar with representation which is not strictly related to population.

It seems to me that we are set with this pattern for Canada. No one has suggested changing the representation for Prince Edward Island, or wiping out the senatorial floor. No one has suggested changing the representation for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, because we think it is advisable to have people representing the hinterland of our country. I think this aspect of Canadian history on redistribution should be uppermost in the minds of the commissioners when they undertake their work. If they approach this with the knowledge we in the house have concerning these problems, then when they come to apply their plans for each province they will make allowance for area representation and will not attempt to follow strictly a representation by population rule.

At the same time our hope is that the great disparities will be discontinued, these tremendous disparities in our urban centres.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Churchill: Oh, I thought the house would want me to go on; but it is now ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May we hear from the acting house leader as to the business for tomorrow and the balance of the week?

Mr. MacNaught: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we will continue with this debate, and when it is concluded we will take up the resolution preceding the Post Office Act amendments. Then we will go on the budget resolutions. On Monday there will be a motion to go into supply.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX "A"

REPORT OF THE SEVENTH MEETING OF THE CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

The seventh meeting of the Canada-United States interparliamentary group was held at Washington and Cape Kennedy from Tuesday, January 14 to Sunday, January 19, 1964. Twenty four members of the congress of the United States and 24 members of the parliament of Canada participated. In accordance with established practice at previous meetings of this group, discussions were conducted in a frank and informal manner and without regard to political affiliation. It should also be emphasized that the talks were entirely off the record and, in no sense, official discussions between the governments of the two countries. They were simply an unofficial exchange of views by parliamentarians interested in one another's problems.

The agenda for the meeting was worked out by agreement among the four co-chairmen, Senator George Aiken of Vermont, Representative Cornelius Gallagher of New Jersey and the two Canadian Speakers. Once an agenda had been agreed upon and the Canadian delegation selected, a series of four oral briefing sessions were held. These sessions were attended by ministers, deputy ministers and other senior government officials, who addressed the delegates and led question and answer periods. The oral briefings were supplemented by extensive written material provided to each member of the delegation and prepared by the appropriate government departments, notably external affairs, defence production, trade and commerce and labour.

The delegation we had the honour of leading represented Canada with great credit and we wish to express our appreciation to the leaders and whips of all political parties for their co-operation in the selection of delegates who were able to make a significant contribution to the discussions. A glance at the list appearing as Appendix "A" to this report will reveal the unusually high calibre of the delegation. For example, the representatives of the Senate included the only Canadian who has attended all seven meetings of the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group (Senator Sydney Smith), a privy councillor (Senator McCutcheon), a senator with long experience in both Canadian houses (Senator William Taylor), a senator who has made valuable contributions to earlier meetings of this group (Senator Inman), and a senator whose eloquence and Irish wit more than compensate for any lack of seniority (Senator O'Leary).

The delegates from the House of Commons included three privy councillors (Mr. Starr, Mr. Monteith, and Mr. Martineau), a national party leader (Mr. Thompson), a parliamentary secretary (Mr. Byrne) and a former parliamentary secretary (Mr. Nesbitt), a party whip (Mr. Knowles), the chairman of the defence committee (Mr. Sauvé), the deputy speaker (Mr. Lamoureux), the deputy chairman of committees (Mr. Batten) and a former provincial attorney general (Mr. Fairweather). Backbench representation was a happy blend of youth and experience and of various political affiliations and included Mr. A. J. P. Cameron, Mr. McIntosh, Mr. Brewin, Mr. Latulippe, Miss Jewett and Mr. Chrétien.

The Canadian delegates and their wives were welcomed at the opening plenary session on Tuesday, January 14, by the United States co-chairman who emphasized their great satisfaction that the interparliamentary group was renewing its sessions after a lapse of almost two years. Later the same day, Representative Gallagher was host at a luncheon in the new Senate office building for the Canadian delegates, who then visited the House of Representatives. Meanwhile, the wives of the Canadian delegates were taken for a tour of the library of congress and the supreme court building, a luncheon in the Capitol with Mrs. Wayne Morse and Mrs. Cornelius Gallagher as co-hostesses, followed by a tour of the Capitol and of Washington. That evening the members of both delegations and their wives were guests at a reception given by the Canadian ambassador and Mrs. C. S. A. Ritchie.

Following the plenary session, the group broke into two committees. Committee I discussed defence and foreign policy matters of joint national interest, such as defence production sharing, hemispheric defence and NATO relations; committee II focused its attention on economic matters such as trade with communist countries, aid to the trade with underdeveloped countries, and labour problems on the great lakes. In each committee, a number of items not included on the agenda came under discussion, such as the recent crisis in Panama, Canada and the organization of American states, the Passamaquoddy power project and the Canadian decision to declare a 12 mile exclusive fishing zone. The first committee met under the co-chairmanship of Representative Gallagher and Speaker Macnaughton; the second committee was co-chaired by Senator Aiken and Speaker Bourget. The membership of the committees is shown in Appendix "A" to this report.

At the conclusion of the business sessions which are summarized in the committee reports appearing as Appendix "B" to this report, the Canadian delegates proceeded to the floor of the United States Senate where they were welcomed by Senator Aiken, Senator Mansfield, Senator Holland and Senator Young. An extract from the Congressional Record of January 15, which is printed as Appendix "C" to this report, contains the statements of welcome. Following a luncheon at which the Canadian delegates were guests of Senator Aiken, a press conference was held by the four co-chairmen.

Late in the afternoon of Wednesday, January 15, the members of both delegations and their wives had the great honour of being received personally by the President and Mrs. Johnson at the White House. That evening the Canadian delegates and their wives were the guests at a reception and dinner given by the United States delegation and addressed by Secretary of State Dean Rusk.

On Thursday morning the members of both delegations and their wives paid a solemn visit to Arlington national cemetery where Speaker Bourget laid a wreath at the tomb of the unknown soldier. The United States co-chairmen paid a similar tribute at the site of the Canadian Cross. Speaker Macnaughton laid a wreath at the grave of the late President John F. Kennedy as a mark of respect from the people of Canada.

Thursday afternoon the group left Washington by air for historic St. Augustine, the oldest city in the United States. Here the program included a reception and dinner offered by the United States delegation and attended by the mayor, members of the chamber of commerce and ranking city officials.

Friday the party proceeded by bus to Cape Kennedy where the following day, an extensive tour was made of the installations of the national aeronautics and space administration (NASA) and the U.S. air force. This included detailed explanations by the responsible scientists of the various space programs such as Ranger, Titan, Gemini and Saturn, and on the spot inspections of the several launching sites, affording the Canadian delegation an insight into the complexity and magnitude of the United States space program.

Both delegations returned by air to their respective capitals on Sunday, January 19.

It was the consensus of those members of the United States and Canadian delegations who had attended previous meetings of the Canada-United States interparliamentary group that the seventh meeting was among the most successful to date. From the Canadian standpoint, this was due, in very large measure, to the care that went into the selection of delegates and the preparations for the meeting and to the responsible attitude of all delegates. It was gratifying to us, that, without exception, the Canadian delegates attended all meetings and other functions and participated to the very fullest extent in the discussions.

We would not wish to conclude this report without mentioning the important contribution made to the success of the meeting by the wives who accompanied most delegates. As it was well said on another occasion, their presence more than doubled the effectiveness of the exchange in the promotion of good will and understanding.

We should like to record our appreciation to President and Mrs. Johnson for their graciousness in receiving the delegation. We should also like to express our thanks to the co-chairmen, Senator Aiken and Congressman Gallagher, and to the members of the United States delegation for the warmth of our reception and to congratulate those responsible on the excellence of all arrangements. We should also like to thank the R.C.A.F., the Department of Transport and the United States air force for taking care of all transportation arrangements. Finally, we wish to acknowledge the excellent staff work on the part of officials of various departments of the Canadian government who assisted us so greatly with the organization of the meetings and in our preparations for the discussions.

Dated at Ottawa, March 6, 1964.

Maurice Bourget,	Alan A. Macnaughton,
Speaker of the Senate.	Speaker of the House of Commons.

COMMITTEE REPORTS

COMMITTEE I—DEFENCE AND FOREIGN POLICY

The Present Situation in Panama

The present crisis in the relations between the U.S. and Panama was discussed as part of the larger problem of the hemispheric relations of Canada and the U.S. The maintenance of active control by the U.S. over the Panama canal, including the preservation of the security of the canal, was justified by U.S. delegates as vital not only to the defence of this hemisphere but also for the commerce of all maritime countries that have access to its facilities upon the payment of uniform and modest tolls. In this connection, it was pointed out that Latin American countries in particular rely on the canal for their participation in world trade.

Several U.S. delegates explained the genesis of the present crisis. The flag issue was only a symptom of more basic issues. Among the reasons advanced for the crisis were the economic disparity between the loving conditions of U.S. and Panamanians working in the canal zone, a growing nationalist sensitivity in Panama, approaching elections in that country in which candidates use the presence of Americans as a campaign issue, and communist-inspired activities.

In response to a Canadian inquiry comparing the U.S. role in Panama with its role in the Suez situation, it was pointed out that the Suez canal had been privately owned, whereas the U.S. has treaty rights agreed to by two sovereign governments. The Panama canal, unlike the Suez canal, is not a sea level canal and requires the presence of highly skilled and efficient personnel for its successful operation. Moreover, the cost of the canal was borne entirely by the U.S. The gross investment by the U.S. in the canal, exclusive of investment in military facilities is about $1.7 billion. Of this amount, $1.1 billion has been recovered from revenues, leaving an unrecovered net investment of $600 million. For the last fiscal year the net revenue to the U.S. from the canal was only $2.3 million. Ancillary work in connection with the construction of the canal, such as health measures, made the isthmus a habitable piece of territory; economic improvements have accrued to the advantage of the Panamanian citizens. It was noted that Panama itself has not advocated internationalization of the canal.

Canada and the Organization of American States

The discussion of the present troubled situation in Panama led into consideration of the question of Canada's joining the organization of American states (O.A.S.). Several United States delegates expressed the strong belief that it would be very desirable that Canada join without further delay. The statements of Canadian delegates reflected the complexity, from the Canadian viewpoint, of the question of Canadian membership in the O.A.S. On the other hand, it was pointed out that for a relatively small country Canada was already well extended in international affairs, with commitments in many areas of the world. In addition, unlike the United States, Canada has no history and tradition of close association with Latin America but has looked to Europe and the commonwealth connection, and there are some who maintain that joining the O.A.S. would be inconsistent with these historical ties and attitudes. Further, it could be anticipated that difficult problems would confront Canada from time to time as the second North American country in the organization. On the other hand, several Canadian delegates expressed the opinion that too much weight has been given to these negative considerations and that the time has come for Canada to give most serious consideration to joining the O.A.S. It was suggested that there is a need for Canada, with its skills and resources, to contribute more directly to the development of Latin America, bearing in mind the constant danger of social unrest and subversion arising from low living standards. It was also recognized that Canada could and should take an active interest in the progress and development of the newly emerging countries in the Caribbean. It was noted that the fact that many Canadians are of French origin and tradition is a great asset in relations with Latin America. United States delegates stressed that Canadian membership in the O.A.S. would in itself be a great asset to the organization and would add to it a further measure of dedication to democratic principles. Canada's basic philosophy of government is little different from that of the United States and both, along with all Latin American countries, have in common a spirit of independence and recognize the need for mutual security of the hemisphere.

Sharing of North American Defence and the NATO Alliance

The committee noted the mutual responsibilities of the United States and Canada for North American defence and reviewed their respective commitments to NATO in the light of changing economic, military and political considerations.

The new special committee on defence of the Canadian parliament recently visited NATO Europe and members recalled European concern about future United States and Canadian intentions with regard to maintaining forces in Europe. Such concern is leading France, for example, to develop her own independent nuclear deterrent in the face of continued communist threats to world peace. As European defence resources and power increase, the question arises whether Canada and the United States, being the two non-European countries in NATO, should review their changing role. Is it normal and desirable for North American forces to be stationed indefinitely in Europe? The newly established special committee on defence of the Canadian parliament has in effect endorsed Canada-United States defence arrangements, and the United States delegates welcomed this evidence of continued Canadian interest in co-operation in defence matters.

In the light of the heavy burden of defence costs and such new strategic developments as the ICBM, it was debated whether Canada should continue to contribute some small fraction to the now massive western deterrent forces or should develop a new and different role. One approach might envisage the Canadian contribution as a small but well equipped mobile force available for any appropriate world peace keeping mission.

Much discussion concerned the problem of control of nuclear weapons within the western alliance and the position of some members of NATO with respect to the development and maintenance of independent national nuclear capabilities. The committee considered some of the possible means of dealing with this situation, such as the proposed seaborne multilateral nuclear force, or MLF, and recognized the difficulties in the way of finding a solution to this problem which would be satisfactory to all members of the alliance. It was suggested that the incentive to develop independent nuclear capabilities might be lessened by finding some way of associating all members of NATO more closely with the decision making process in respect of the possible use of these weapons. United States delegates noted that several United States proposals within NATO with this objective in mind had failed to be accepted. It was agreed that the major endeavour should be in the direction of reducing the danger of nuclear war by determined efforts in the pursuit of peace. It was pointed out that the disarmament talks could be an extremely useful vehicle in this regard. The test ban agreement was the result of a desire of nations in achieving the goal of a lasting peace.

In general the committee concluded that the success of the alliance to date could accommodate some minor adjustments of forces but that both Canada and the U.S. must and would continue to meet their agreed commitments to NATO and North American defence, while looking to other allies to carry out an appropriate portion of the defence burden as their resources increased.

One good working example of defence co-operation among interdependent allies was the Canada-United States defence production sharing program.

The committee recalled that in recognition of their joint responsibilities for North American defence, the program had been initiated to encourage Canadian industrial participation in U.S. defence requirements to balance Canada's continuing procurement from U.S. sources of major weapons following the Canadian decision to abandon her own independent development of certain major defence equipments. The five years experience with the program had demonstrated that it was a practical and sensible approach to co-operation in industrial research, development and production founded on mutual understanding and of practical advantage to both countries. Although, for the first few years of the program, Canadian production sharing procurement from U.S. companies had exceeded U.S. procurement in Canada, more recently United States procurement in Canada has exceeded Canadian procurement in the U.S. However, the current Canadian requirements for U.S. armoured vehicles, and the anticipated completion of certain U.S. aircraft procurement from Canada indicated that the program in the future would tend to a long term balance.

The U.S. and Canadian members were unanimous in their support of the defence procurement objectives and emphasized the desirability of sharing not only defence production but also the earlier essential phases of research and development where each country has specialized and unique capabilities to support North American defence needs.

In conclusion the committee recognized that there remain several outstanding subjects of contention between the two countries which is an inevitable consequence of two nations sharing a continent and a broad variety of responsibilities. Among these issues are such matters as the Canadian withholding tax on the earnings of foreign investment in Canada, Canadian export incentives in the automobile and automobile parts field, and the proposed United States interest equalization tax. The Canada-United States interparliamentary group provides a most useful forum in alleviating such problems to achieve better understanding and relations.

COMMITTEE II—ECONOMIC MATTERS

Free World Trade

The committee discussed current problems and prospects of trade between Canada and the United States and with other free world countries. It was agreed that with respect to world trade in general the two countries have similar interests, such as the maintenance of export markets for agricultural products and problems in common such as continuing balance of payments deficits, although the latter problem results from different causes in each country.

The two delegations exchanged views on the prospects of the forthcoming Kennedy round of tariff negotiations and on the problems posed for both Canada and the United States by current policies of the European economic community. Each delegation requested the other's views as to the prospects for extensive tariff reductions in the Kennedy round. The U.S. delegation expressed cautious optimism for the general lowering of tariffs but expressed misgivings with respect to agricultural products. The Canadian delegation indicated that Canada will join in the effort to attain tariff reductions in many areas but expressed concern as to the high level of certain specific U.S. tariffs. It was pointed out the GATT member countries have agreed that the formula for across the board tariff cuts would not be appropriate for Canada in view of Canada's particular pattern of trade and economic activities, but that Canada would be prepared to pay in full by tariff concessions for all advantages gained in the negotiations.

The committee discussed in some detail current problems of trade between Canada and the United States. It was pointed out by the Canadian delegation that while Canada's over-all world balance of trade is favourable, its balance of trade and payment with the United States, its principal market, is chronically adverse. Canada, it was emphasized, therefore views with concern any restrictions on the entry of Canadian goods into U.S. markets. Members of the Canadian delegation expressed dissatisfaction, for example, with U.S. quota restrictions on Canadian dairy products, such as cheddar cheese. The Canadian delegation further emphasized the great importance which is attached to the U.S. market for Canadian lumber, among other reasons because of increased competition from the Soviet union and Scandinavian countries for certain European markets.

Trade with Communist countries.

Members of the two delegations expressed general agreement that certain forms of trade in non-strategic goods with communist countries are proper and advantageous. There were, however, differing opinions as to the desirable over-all volume of trade with communist countries and as to the specific communist countries with which trade should be conducted. Specifically, the Canadian delegation did not share the view of the U.S. delegation that a firm embargo should be maintained on trade with Cuba and communist China.

The question of extending credits to communist countries was discussed. Members of the U.S. delegation expressed the view that there should be strict limits on the extension of credits to communist countries, not because these countries are regarded as bad credit risks, but because it is feared that the extension of liberal credits will enable them to divert resources to purposes inimical to western interests. Members of the Canadian delegation expressed the view that, with certain exceptions, communist countries should be granted non-discriminatory terms of trade.

There was frank discussion of the policies of Canada and the United States with respect to trade with Cuba. Members of the U.S. delegation noted with concern that part of the wheat sold by Canada to the Soviet union has been diverted to Cuba. Members of the Canadian delegation expressed the view that there is considerable misunderstanding in the United States as to the scope of Canadian trade with Cuba. Canada's trade with Cuba, it was pointed out, consists only of non-strategic goods, is on a small scale, and has diminished in recent years. Members of the Canadian delegation pointed to the inconsistency between the sale of wheat to the Soviet union by the United States and its maintenance of a strict embargo on trade with Cuba and communist China. The United States delegation asserted, in response, that Cuba was, for historical reasons, an area of exceptional United States interest and concern. This concern, in the view of the United States delegation, is reasonable and necessary and one which the United States hopes will continue to enlist the sympathetic understanding of its friends.

The deliberations of the committee revealed differing opinions with respect to trade with communist China. Members of the United States delegation expressed the view that communist China should be denied trade as well as diplomatic recognition and admission to the United Nations as long as it refuses to renounce force as an instrument of national policy and refuses to accept the continued existence of the Chinese nationalist government in Taiwan. Members of the Canadian delegation endorsed the need for a continuing embargo on trade in strategic goods with communist China but questioned the view that a policy of rigorous embargo on trade in non-strategic goods would prove effective as a means of deterring Chinese communist aggression. It was agreed by both delegations that the trade policies of their two countries with respect to the communist bloc should be governed by considerations of their own economic and political needs as well as by their desire to deny significant economic benefits to potential antagonists.

Law of the Sea

By mutual agreement the committee devoted considerable time to a thorough discussion of the situation created by the announcement by the Canadian government of June 4, 1963 that it intends to declare in May 1964 a 12 mile exclusive fisheries zone, the 12 miles to be measured by a straight headland to headland base line method. The Canadian delegation explained the particular problems presented for the Canadian fisheries industry by the presence of large numbers of foreign fishing vesels operating close to the Canadian shoreline. The Canadian delegation also emphasized that in the statement of policy of June 4, 1963, the Canadian Prime Minister declared Canada's intention to enter into direct discussions with interested foreign countries, the United States and France in particular, with a view to protecting treaty rights and taking into account claims to historic rights by those countries.

There was general agreement in the committee that in the matter of fisheries rights and the closely related question of territorial waters it would be highly desirable to proceed by way of an international agreement. Some United States members suggested that another effort be made in concert with other interested governments to call together as soon as possible an international conference to discuss fisheries conservation matters and to attempt to arrive at an international convention, quite possibly one based on a 12 mile fisheries limit, which would allow for direct bilateral arrangements concerning any traditional rights. The Canadian delegation drew the committee's attention to the fact that the Canadian government would prefer an international agreement and had so stated but that the failure of the Geneva conference of 1960 and of subsequent consideration of the problem had led to the conclusion that international agreement on the fisheries issue and the related question of territorial waters was not to be expected in the near future. Consequently, the Canadian government considered it imperative that action be taken by Canada to protect its fishing interests.

Some members of the United States delegation emphasized that, apart from the merits of the proposed 12 mile fisheries limit, the long established principles of international law involved in this whole question were of vital importance. In accordance with this view, it was contended by the United States delegation that the resolution of the issue as a matter of international law by means of international negotiation was at least as important as the contents of any agreement that might be reached.

The committee noted that the executive branches of the two governments were continuing their discussion of this question and the hope was expressed that any differences of opinion would be amicably resolved.

Interest Equalization Tax

The committee discussed the proposed United States interest equalization tax bill and also the tax measures invoked by Canada which will affect United States subsidiary companies in that country. The Canadian measures were designed to encourage Canadian ownership of domestic industry while United States measures were designed to help solve the United States balance of payments problem. The Canadian delegation pointed out that Canada was the country most directly affected by the interest equalization tax proposals and was most appreciative of the exemption granted to Canada by the United States on new issues of securities. They expressed the hope that this exemption would be extended to cover existing securities. While both delegations expressed regrets at these restrictions on the traditional free flow of capital between the two countries, they recognized that these measures were necessary expedients designed to solve critical problems in each of the two countries.

Labour problems on the Great Lakes

The Canadian delegation outlined in some detail the background to the serious problems which have been created on the great lakes by differences which had arisen within the Canadian labour movement as to union representation on great lakes vessels. It was pointed out that following increasing violence and the closing of the St. Lawrence seaway in June of 1962, the Canadian government, at the urging of the Canadian Labour Congress, appointed an industrial inquiry commission. Justice Norris, the industrial inquiry commissioner, recommended in his report that the maritime unions involved be placed under trusteeship. It was emphasized that the Canadian government took the view that developments left no other choice but the appointment of a trusteeship, either government or private.

The United States delegation indicated their understanding that the United States government had attempted to prevent difficulties in United States ports, and that the department of labor was doing everything possible, within United States law, to protect Canadian shipping.

The committee viewed this question with concern because of its continuing adverse effects on Canadian-United States relations and expressed the hope that every effort would be made to reach a satisfactory resolution of the problem.

Passamaquoddy Power Project

The U.S. delegation drew the committee's attention to the recent report of the department of the interior which recommended the construction of a tidal power project in Passamaquoddy bay. This project would be associated with hydroelectric developments on the upper Saint John river. Development of these two projects would require resolution of a number of questions and agreement of both the United States and Canada.

The Secretary of State has been instructed by the President to enter into negotiations with Canada as soon as possible. While there have been technical discussions, formal negotiations have not yet commenced. The U.S. delegation pointed to the benefits of joint development and expressed the hope that it might be possible to begin negotiations at an early date with a view to reaching a constructive agreement.

Roads to Alaska

The committee discussed the economic benefits that could accrue to both countries through improvements in the Alaska highway system. They also explored the specific problems involved in any improvement of the system including paving and relocation.

A member of the Canadian delegation expressed the view that there would have to be some agreement between the two countries on the sharing of the considerable costs involved in these improvements.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

Extract from the Congressional Record
January 15th 1964

VISIT TO THE SENATE BY MEMBERS OF THE CANADIAN PARLIAMENT

Mr. Aiken: Mr. President today the Senate is signally honored by being visited by 24 members of the parliament of Canada, our closest friend among all the nations and one with which we have more than 3,000 miles of common boundary.

Our friends from the north have been here to discuss matters which pertain to their country and ours—both matters in which we have a co-operative interest and some matters in which we have competitive interests.

At this time I wish the Record to show the presence in the Senate chamber of these distinguished visitors. We appreciate their visit far more than can be expressed by mere words.

I take pleasure in introducing them to the Senate. Following their introduction luncheon will be served in the reception room.

First I am delighted to introduce to the Senate the Speaker of the Canadian Senate, Hon. Maurice Bourget. He and I are really neighbours, for his home is only a short distance across the boundary between the Province of Quebec and Vermont. He is co-chairman of this parliamentary conference. (Applause.)

The other members of the Canadian Senate who are visiting the Senate today are: Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon a former member of the Canadian cabinet, as are several of the others whom I shall introduce. (Applause.)

Hon. W. H. Taylor. (Applause.)

Next is a lady Senator, Hon. F. Elsie Inman, who, I believe, has attended the delegation meetings for as long as I have. (Applause.)

Then we go to the Pacific coast, where Hon. Sydney J. Smith represents British Columbia. (Applause.) I know that his record is as good as mine in attendance at the seven parliamentary conferences which have been held during the past few years.

Last, but not least in the Senate. Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary. (Applause.) As his name might indicate, Mr. O'Leary is very plain spoken in discussions. We are very happy that he is with us.

Now I come to members of the House of Commons from Ottawa. I present, first the speaker of the Canadian House of Commons, Hon. Alan A. Macnaughton. (Applause.) He is a neighbor of mine. He lives just across the Vermont border in the province of Quebec. He is also co-chairman of the delegation meetings.

Hon. Michael Starr, another member from New Brunswick, is an ex-Cabinet member of Canada. (Applause.)

Hon. J. Waldo Monteith, who also has been a Cabinet member. (Applause.)

Hon. Paul Martineau, who is also an ex-Cabinet member and who has almost been something else—almost. (Applause.) He has held a prominent position in the Canadian government. When I said "almost" facetiously, we anticipated that he might be Speaker of the House of Commons. He served as Deputy Speaker.

Now we come to Mr. Herman M. Batton. (Applause.)

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt. (Applause.)

Mr. Jack McIntosh. (Applause.) In Vermont we think a great deal of the name "McIntosh." We sell about a million bushels a year of the MacIntosh apple, easily the best apple grown. I believe the applause is for you, Jack, and not for the apple. (Laughter.)

Mr. Robert Thompson. (Applause.)

Mr. Lucien Lamoureux (Applause.)

All the Canadian political parties are represented in this delegation; but as sometimes happens in the United States, it is difficult to tell from the appearance of a member to which party he may belong. So I am not trying to identify any of our guests by party affiliation.

Mr. Stanley Knowles. (Applause.)

Mr. James Byrne. (Applause.)

Mr. Maurice Sauvé. (Applause.)

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron. (Applause.)

Mr Andrew Brewin. (Applause.)

Mr. R. G. L. Fairweather. (Applause.)

Mr. Henry Latulippe. (Applause.)

The next member, who received her education in the United States, is Dr. Pauline Jewett, a graduate of Harvard. (Applause.)

Finally, Mr. Jean Chretien. (Applause.)

I know that the conferences have been attended 100 per cent, which should be a good object lesson for some of our own committees. The attendance has been exceptionally good, in spite of the fact that because of certain emergencies that arose two or three members were unable to attend all the sessions.

There have been fruitful discussions, and we have become well enough acquainted so that when the discussions were over, everyone wished to talk some more. That is a sign of a good meeting.

Once more, I wish to tell our friends how glad we are that they could be with us.

Mr. Mansfield: Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. Aiken: I am happy to yield.

Mr. Mansfield: I deem it an honor and a privilege to join the senior Republican in this body, the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont (Mr. Aiken), chairman of the subcommittee on Canada of the committee on foreign relations. To the best of my knowledge, under a Democratically controlled congress, he holds the only chairmanship—a well-deserved honor.

Mr. Aiken: A rather well-controlled Democratic congress. (Laughter.)

Mr. Mansfield: We are delighted to have our colleagues from Canada in the chamber.

We are especially happy to have Speaker Bourget and Speaker Macnaughton present, because they bring together neighbors who really know enough about each other so that once in a while they can quarrel and get away with it.

The Senator from Vermont (Mr. Aiken) has mentioned the fact that 3,000 miles of border lie between us. It is a border which is indefensible because it needs no defense.

Coming from the State of Montana, I should like to say, as I have done so many times, that my state has the longest border with Canada. We extend 700 miles along the southern part of Canada, bounded by British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan. We have close and intimate ties with our neighhors in those three provinces. We celebrate "Canadian days" throughout the year because we like to get Canadian dollars, too, occasionally.

It is good to have you here. You do us honor by visiting us in this Chamber. We are extremely happy that the interparliamentary conferences which began under the chairmanship of the distinguished Senator from Vermont (Mr. Aiken) and have continued under his leadership since that time, have been so fruitful in bringing about better understanding and greater tolerance between our two peoples.

I hope that this will not be the last time you will visit this chamber. I only hope that the next time you visit the Senate, at least some of you will sit on the Democratic side of the aisle, so that we may have a fair representation, too.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Holland: Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. Aiken: I yield.

Mr. Holland: Mr. President, I have enjoyed exceedingly the great pleasure of meeting these fine Canadian visitors.

I cannot claim, as can the distinguished Senator from Vermont (Mr. Aiken), to be a next door neighbor to Mr. McIntosh, whose name has been given to the best Vermont apple; and I cannot claim, as can the majority leader, to have the longest border with Canada. But I can claim that we have our full share of Canadian visitors every year in the State of Florida which in part I represent and that we are proud to have retained many thousands of them as citizens. They are among our finest citizens.

So, from this side of the aisle, I extend the warmest possible welcome. We hope it will be warm when our distinguished friends reach Florida tomorrow afternoon, so that the warmth of our welcome can be more evident than in the present environs of Washington.

I have known of no occasion in which the complete, non-partisan nature of an important operation of the Senate and of the House of Representatives has been so well evidenced. In the Senate the distinguished Senator from Vermont has been chairman of the delegation and chairman of Committee No. 1. The distinguished Senator from North Dakota has been chairman of Committee No. 2. Senators on this side of the aisle, of whom there have been several of us, have been quite content and happy to serve under their leadership.

I hope these distinguished Senators of the minority party have enjoyed their leadership fully, because I do not believe they have had the opportunity to enjoy it, so much as they should, perhaps in other activities of the Senate.

We are delighted to have had these Canadian ladies and gentlemen with us. Speaking only for a part of this great nation, which may be farthest from Canada, may I say that your coming here and our visits with you have been but a symbol—and a significant one—of the warm friendship which prevails between your great country and ours, and which we hope will always prevail, because the might of these two countries together and the friendship of these two countries together have a weight in world affairs which cannot be measured by any ordinary method. It speaks for itself as being one of the great friendships of our troubled world.

Mr. Aiken: I deeply appreciate the remarks of the Senator from Florida. The Senator has performed yeoman service as a member of the U.S. delegation, as have all the other members, except the two who were interrupted, one by sickness and one by an emergency.

I appreciate the fact that in the presence of our distinguished visitors from Canada, the center aisle of the Senate Chamber is eliminated, just as we always eliminate the international boundary between the United States and Canada when we are thinking of North American welfare and the welfare of our two countries.

When I introduced Mr. Andrew Brewin and Mr. Jean Chretien, they were outside the door and I was a little too fast for them. They are now in the Senate chamber. The Canadian delegation has a 100 per cent attendance. Let that be a lesson to us.

Mr. Young of North Dakota: Mr. President, I wish to join Senator Aiken and say what a pleasant experience it has been to work with so many distinguished members of the Canadian parliament. It has been a wonderful experience. I should like to take the present occasion to say a word about the International Peace Garden, which is located on the border between Canada and the United States. The garden is dedicated to the peace which has existed between our two countries for more than 150 years.

Mr. President, the purpose of the International Peace Garden can be best summed up by quoting the beautiful words inscribed on the cairn located in the center of the Peace Garden astride the international boundary:

> To God in His glory—we two nations dedicate this garden and pledge ourselves that as long as men shall live, we will not take up arms against one another.

The International Peace Garden is one of the most beautiful spots in the world. It is visited each year by thousands of people from the United States and Canada. Construction is continuing through the financial cooperation of the Canadian government, the province of Manitoba, the state of North Dakota, and the government of the United States.

I extend to everyone an invitation to visit this beautiful spot.

Mr. Mansfield: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, as a mark of respect and honor, that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair for the purpose of allowing Senators an opportunity to meet our Canadian visitors.

There being no objection, the Senate (at one o'clock and 23 minutes p.m.) took a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

At one o'clock and 29 minutes p.m., the Senate reassembled on being called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. Walters in the chair).

Mr. Mansfield: Mr. President, is the Senate still in the morning hour?

The Presiding Officer: The Senate is still in the morning hour.

APPENDIX "B"

GREAT LAKES—REPORT ON LOW WATER LEVELS

Several hon. members have recently expressed concern respecting the low water levels currently prevailing throughout the great lakes basin and I can now make a statement concerning this matter. On page 1,647 of Hansard I provided the hon. member for Leeds with the water levels at Kingston, Ontario, and Prescott, Ontario, and the outflows of lake Ontario since 1938. I am tabling today two reports of the international joint commission dated December, 1958, and April 5, 1961. The first report summarizes all available information on the comparison of lake Ontario water levels including the effects of precipitation, evaporation, winds and barometric pressure changes, ice retardation and crustal movement, diversions into and out of the great lakes basin and operation of the outlet control of lake Ontario and lake Superior. The second report deals with methods of regulation and includes the text of orders of approval for the construction and operation of the St. Lawrence power project.

As hon. members will realize the principal cause of current low water levels is the abnormal low precipitation which was about 3" below normal during 1962, and 5" below normal in 1963 over the great lakes basin. In addition above normal temperatures have caused higher than usual evaporation. Due to the enormous storage capacity of the great lakes levels change very slowly and while the normal seasonal rise will produce some improvement for the present, below normal levels will obtain generally during the balance of this year. Hon. members will recall that some 12 years ago the situation was quite the opposite with much damage resulting along the shoreline during the high water levels. These cycles have persisted over the period of water level records on the lakes and there is no evidence to show a long term rise or fall in the average water level.

In view of the concern which has been expressed in this house and the complexity of the problem and profusion of available reports and data, I have asked the water resources branch of my department to prepare a report summarizing the studies on the fluctuation of the levels of all the great lakes as well as the effect of regulatory measures both in operation and proposed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 15, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PROCEDURE

TABLING OF SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to present to the house the second report of the special committee on procedure and organization. At this time I would like to recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who is chairman of the subcommittee on procedure of the general committee which prepared the report just tabled.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise merely for the purpose of giving oral notice, which I will later give in writing, that on Friday on behalf of the committee I shall move that the house concur in the second report which Your Honour has just tabled. I give this notice now so that hon. members can read the report in Votes and Proceedings and, we hope, be ready to concur in it when it is moved on Friday.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*INCREASE IN SALARY OF C.B.C. PRESIDENT

Question No. 104—Mr. Ricard:

What standards were used to determine and justify the amount of the increase granted December last to the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Mr. Alphonse Ouimet, when his salary was raised from $20,000 to $40,000 per year?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer this question in some detail.

The board of directors of the C.B.C., on October 30, 1963, unanimously recommended that the salary of the president of the corporation be established by the governor in council at $50,000. In support of this recommendation, a number of considerations were adduced:

(1) In the absence of any action by the governor in council to establish a salary for the president, as was required under section 25(1) of the Broadcasting Act of 1958, the present incumbent from the time of his appointment in 1958 continued to receive only the salary of $20,000 which had been approved for him in 1954 when he occupied the lesser position of general manager of the corporation, under a full time chairman of the board;

(2) The Fowler commission had judged the salaries of both the chairman and the general manager to be seriously inadequate in 1957;

(3) The responsibilities of the chief executive of the corporation had grown many fold since 1954;

(4) The Glassco commission has stated that a substantial increase in the salaries of the chief executive officers was needed;

(5) The prevailing rates of remuneration for positions of comparable responsibility in industry ranged as high as $100,000 per annum;

(6) The salaries of chief executives in other crown corporations, holding offices of comparable responsibility, were substantially higher; and

(7) The limitations imposed on other C.B.C. salary scales by the abnormally low salary set for the president placed the corporation at an increasingly serious disadvantage in attracting men of competence and experience to fill senior posts.

In considering the recommendation of the board of directors, the government recognized the force of their arguments. However, in order to maintain a reasonable relationship between the remuneration of the president and that of other senior officers of the public service, it was felt necessary to fix the salary at the lesser amount of $40,000 per annum. This was done by order in council P.C. 1963-5/1855, dated December 20th, 1963.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Prime Minister for the answer he has given, even though it seems it has taken a long time to get it.

Some hon. Members: Order.

CANADIAN RAILWAY BOARD OF ADJUSTMENT

Question No. 269—Mr. Rideout:

1. On what date was the present Canadian railway board of adjustment No. 1 constituted?
2. For what purpose was this board created?
3. What was the actual cost, per year, per party, during the period April 1, 1954 to March 31, 1963, covering the actual function of the board?
4. What items would this amount cover?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. The agreement between the railway association of Canada and six trade unions which first established Canadian railway board of adjustment No. 1 was dated August 7, 1918. In a further agreement dated April 15, 1921, the board was continued.

2. The preamble to the agreement of April 15, 1921 states as follows: Whereas the parties hereto, guided by a desire to aid in the preservation of industrial peace in the Dominion of Canada, have resolved upon the appointment of a board composed of members to be selected as hereafter prescribed, which shall have full power and authority to determine all differences which may arise between any of the said railways and any of the classes of its employees abovementioned, and which are not settled between the officers and employees of the railway concerned, including the interpretation of wage schedules or agreements, having due regard to the rights of the several classes of employees and of the railways respectively.

3. and 4. This information is not available in the Department of Labour.

IMMIGRATION TARGETS FOR 1963

Question No. 294—Mr. Hales:

1. In the month of January, 1963, did the then minister of citizenship and immigration establish any targets or objectives for immigration in the year 1963 and, if so, what were such targets or objectives?

2. What was the actual immigration to Canada in 1963?

3. For what reasons was it not possible to achieve the targets or objectives established in January, 1963?

Mr. Tremblay: 1. Yes. The then minister communicated certain views and an immigration objective for that year in a confidential document to the then acting deputy minister. So far as the department is aware, the target or objective was not publicized.

2. 93,151.

3. Without commenting further on the objective referred to in the answer to part 1 of this question, the fact remains that an increased number of immigrants did come to Canada in 1963 as compared with 1962. The government anticipates that a further increase in immigration will occur in 1964, and intends to provide every facility to the immigrant and to the department toward this end.

TENDERS FOR TURBINES

Question No. 341—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Has the government asked for tenders on the building of turbines that have previously been built in Canada by the Canadian Westinghouse Company?

2. Is there any possibility that these turbines are going to be built in England rather than in Canada, and thereby increase Canadian unemployment by so doing?

Mr. Drury: 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

SALES OF INDIAN RESERVE LANDS

Question No. 448—Mr. Howard:

Since January 1, 1963, have any Indian reserve lands in Canada been sold and, if so, by name of each reserve and band so affected, what was the name and address of each purchaser, the purchase price, and the area sold?

Mr. Badanai: Yes. See attached table.

Question No. 513—Mr. Cooper:

In connection with the last signed contract for the Saskatchewan river dam (a) what was the amount of the contract (b) who signed the contract on behalf of the government (c) on what date was the contract signed?

Mr. Beer: (a) As of March 20, 1964, the last signed contract for the Saskatchewan river dam was for the supply of fly-ash material from the Saskatchewan Power Corporation in the amount of $204,315; (b) S. C. Barry, deputy minister of agriculture; (c) February 18, 1964.

RENOVATION OF AGENT'S OFFICE, SAUGEEN INDIAN RESERVE

Question No. 533—Mr. Loney:

1. What additions and renovations are being made to the agent's office at Saugeen Indian reserve No. 29?
2. What is the name of the contractor for this project?
3. Was the contract let by public tender?
4. What was the price quotation submitted by the successful bidder?
5. At what date was the contract let and when did the project commence?
6. What is the name of the inspector and what are his qualifications?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Construction of an addition to the existing office to provide additional working space.

2, 3, 4, 5. The work was performed on a day labour basis. However, orders were placed in accordance with the government contracts regulations with a number of firms for special items such as heating, plumbing and electrical work. The total cost of the project was $7,712.48 and the work commenced on December 6, 1963.

6. The project was under the supervision of Mr. F. C. O'Keefe, regional construction supervisor, southern Ontario region, Indian affairs branch. Mr. O'Keefe is well qualified for the position having some 20 years of experience in the construction field in a supervisory capacity.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE, P.F.R.A. AND ARDA

Question No. 543—Mr. Stefanson:

Has an advisory council or committee, to assist P.F.R.A. and ARDA, been established and, if so (a) when was it set up (b) who are members of this committee (c) when and where were meetings held (d) are any meetings planned for 1964, and if so, where and when will they take place?

Mr. Lamontagne: In so far as the question relates to the Department of Agriculture:

1. (a) Under provisions of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act a P.F.R.A. advisory committee was established in 1935. This committee became increasingly inactive during the mid-1950's, but was re-established as the P.F.R.A. rehabilitation committee in October 1962.

(b) Mr. Norman Roebuck, 63 Haultain, Yorkton, Saskatchewan; Mr. Roy Clark, 117-20th Street, Brandon, Manitoba; Mr. Fred Croy, Stonewall, Manitoba; Mr. Harry Shearer, Elm Creek, Manitoba; Mr. James Cameron, Youngstown, Alberta; Mr. Arnold F. Christie, Grande Prairie, Alberta; Mr. Deane Holroyd (deceased), 1737-15th Avenue South, Lethbridge, Alberta; Mr. Boyd Anderson, Fir Mountain, Saskatchewan; Mr. W. H. Hollier, 1618-100th Street, North Battleford, Saskatchewan; Mr. Ed. Wright, Eastend, Saskatchewan; Mr. H. J. Collison, Star City, Saskatchewan.

(c) Meetings of the committee were held in Regina on December 6 and 7, 1962.

(d) At the present time there are no definite plans for the holding of a meeting during 1964.

In so far as the question relates to the Department of Forestry: no.

IMPORTATION OF BATHROOM FIXTURES, TORONTO

Question No. 555—Mr. Howard:

Does the government or any agency or branch thereof have any knowledge that American Standard Products (Canada) Ltd. of Toronto is importing bathroom fixtures into Canada for the purpose of having them given the Canadian standards association (CSA) stamp of approval so they may be used to circumvent the effect of a strike at its Lansdowne plant by the international brotherhood of potters and, if so, what action does the government contemplate taking to prevent this?

Answer: The Canadian Standards Association (CSA) stamp of approval is indicative only of conformity with a set of voluntary standards established by the particular industry itself. The government of Canada does not enforce the provisions of the code with respect to the entrance of imported goods. The code becomes mandatory only by action by provincial or municipal authorities.

The government of Canada has no knowledge of the purposes of the importations in the instance cited.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, P.E.I.

Question No. 585—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What are the reasons for delay in the construction of post offices at Mount Stewart and North Rustico in P.E.I.?
2. When is it now planned to commence construction?
3. Has land for such buildings been obtained and, if so, from whom and at what price?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Site problems and cost and staff limitations prevented undertaking the construction this year at many locations including Mount Stewart and North Rustico.

2. Decision as to future programs has not been made.

3. No.

*ARMS AND AMMUNITION REMOVED FROM HIGH SCHOOLS, BRUCE COUNTY, ONT.

Question No. 587—Mr. Loney:

1. Were orders issued by the Department of National Defence to remove the small arms and ammunition of the cadet corps from the high schools in the county of Bruce and, if so, from which schools were the small arms and ammunition removed?
2. When were the orders carried out at each school?
3. Who was in charge of the removal operations and when will the small arms and ammunition be returned to each school?

Mr. Cardin: 1. Small arms ammunition was withdrawn from the following cadet corps in the county of Bruce: 246 Kincardine district high school; 411 Walkerton district high school; 730 Lucknow district high school; 2391 Hanover high school.

2. 26 February 1964.

3. The area cadet training officer. Some small arms ammunition has been returned to the corps at Walkerton and Lucknow. The ranges at the Hanover corps are undergoing repairs therefore no supplies have been reissued. The corps at Kincardine has been inactive since 31 December 1963 and no reissues have been made there. Additional supplies are issued on a demand basis with one month's supply only being held in stock.

RESEARCH PROGRAM, URANIUM CITY

Question No. 598—Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake):

Does the international atomic energy agency, to which Canada annually contributes, plan a technological and research development program at Uranium City?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We have been informed that the international atomic energy agency is not planning a technological and research development program at Uranium City.

"HANSARD" PUBLISHING COST, MARCH 27, 1964

Question No. 602—Mr. Caouette:

What was the cost of publishing Hansard for Good Friday, March 27, 1964?

[Translation]

Answer: It cost the public printing bureau $4,258.55 to publish in English and in French all parliamentary papers such as the House of Commons Debates, Votes and Proceedings, Routine Proceedings and Orders of the Day, Debates of the Senate and Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.

The public printing bureau called in the required staff to publish the parliamentary papers. Those employees put in a full day's work in their respective occupations and they did supplementary work which cost $4,988.36. That expense was charged to other government departments.

ROADS TO RESOURCES, GUYSBOROUGH COUNTY, N.S.

Question No. 607—Mr. Armstrong:

1. What work was done in 1963-64 in Guysborough county, Nova Scotia, under the roads to resources program?
2. What was the cost to the government of Canada of this work?
3. What work remains to be completed in the county under any prevailing contract?

Mr. Laing: 1. Four miles of grading and ten miles of paving was completed.

2. $76,757.62.

3. Forty six miles of road to be paved.

LAKE ONTARIO WATER LEVELS

Question No. 623—Mr. Matheson:

1. What was the water level in lake Ontario in March 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, and 1964?
2. What have been the causes of the present low water level of lake Ontario?
3. Has lake Ontario reached its lowest water level for 1964?
4. To what extent is lake Ontario expected to rise this year?

Mr. Laing: 1. The March monthly mean water elevations of lake Ontario at Kingston referred to the international great lakes datum (1955) are as follows for the years indicated:

Year	Water Elevation (Ft. above sea level)
1959	243.81
1960	244.10
1961	243.61
1962	243.26
1963	243.26
1964	242.33

2. The low levels of lake Ontario have been caused primarily by abnormally low precipitation. During 1962, precipitation over the great lakes basin was about three inches below normal while in 1963 it was over five inches below normal. This abnormally low precipitation was accompanied by increased rates of evaporation due to higher than normal temperatures, thus further aggravating the low level condition.

3. Yes. On March 1, 1964 the water elevation at Kingston was 242.01 feet above mean sea level. On April 1, 1964 the water elevation had increased to 242.58 feet above mean sea level.

4. Based on the March level of the great lakes above lake Ontario and assuming average run-off in the basin of the latter, it is forecast that lake Ontario will achieve a maximum water elevation of approximately 244.50 feet above mean sea level in July 1964.

WINTER WORKS PROJECTS, CHAPLEAU COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 631—Mr. Laprise:

1. How many requests were made, in 1963-64, under the terms of the winter works program by Chapleau county municipalities?
2. How many of these requests were accepted, and what was the amount approved in each case?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. Thirty three applications were received from municipalities in the county of Chapleau under the municipal winter works incentive program 1963-64.

2. Thirty three applications were accepted. The municipalities participating and the estimated federal government share of payroll costs are as follows:

Municipality	No. of projects	Estimated federal share
Amos (town)	1	$ 53,880
Amos Ouest	1	12,000
Barraute (village)	1	3,600
Barville (village)	1	33,000

BUTTER OIL SALES

Question No. 639—Mr. Rondeau:

1. To whom has butter oil been sold since 1954?
2. What was the cost price per pound?
3. Has any butter been thrown away, destroyed or rejected in the province of Quebec and the county of Shefford since 1954 and, if so (a) what quantities were involved (b) to whom was the rejected oil sold (c) at what price was it sold?

Mr. Hays: 1. There were no butter oil sales prior to August 1960. From that date to March 31, 1964, butter oil has been sold to the following firms:

Co-operative Agricole de Granby, Granby, P.Q.; Central Creameries, Charlottetown, P.E.I.; Kraft Foods Limited, Town of Mount Royal, P.Q.; Palm Dairies Limited, Edmonton, Alberta; Fraser Valley Milk, Vancouver, B.C.; Shefford Dairy, Lawrenceville, P.Q.; Olive & Dorion Limited, Montreal, P.Q.; Milk Products Limited, Montreal, P.Q.; Dominion Dry Milk, Montreal, P.Q.; R. A. Chisholm Limited, Toronto, Ontario; United Dairy & Poultry, Toronto, Ontario; Birks-Crawford Limited, Vancouver, B.C.; Geo. Hodge & Son Limited, Montreal, P.Q.; Black Diamond Cheese Co., Belleville, Ontario; L. Shapiro, Toronto, Ontario; Lovell & Christmas, Montreal, P.Q.; Weddell Limited, Montreal, P.Q.; Legrade Inc., Montreal, P.Q.; Canada Cold Storage, Montreal, P.Q.; Swift Canadian Company, Toronto, Ontario; Beaver Trading Company, Montreal, P.Q.; Balfour Guthrie, Toronto, Ontario; Eastern Townships Produce, Sherbrooke, P.Q.; Canada Packers Limited, Toronto, Ontario; World Food Program, Rome, Italy; Grace, Kennedy & Company, Montreal, P.Q.

2. The sale price per pound basis Montreal has been: export, 27 cents; domestic up to May 1, 1963, 78½ cents; domestic since May 1, 1963, 65 cents.

3. As of April 1, 1964, there has been no loss of butter or butter oil in the county of Shefford.

3. (a) In the province of Quebec 6,578,942 pounds of butter and butter oil were involved in a fire at St. Denis Sur Richelieu during 1963. (b) Salvageable butter and butter oil were sold to Shefford Dairy, Lawrenceville, and Longueuil Meat Exporting Company, Longueuil. (c) The sale price for salvaged butter was $17 per box. The sale price for inedible butter oil varied between ½ cent and 5½ cents per pound.

In addition to the loss at St. Denis the board lost, through a fire at Montreal in 1960, 6,608 pounds with no salvage value. An additional 8,064 pounds were salvaged and sold at 44¾ cents to Henri Laurier & Fils of Montreal.

NATIONAL DEFENCE DISMISSALS BECAUSE OF AGE

Question No. 640—Mr. Churchill:

Are civilian employees of the Department of National Defence dismissed from employment on the grounds of age before reaching 65 years?

Mr. Cardin: The normal retiring age for civilian employees of the Department of National Defence is 65. There is provision in the Public Service Superannuation Act and regulations whereby a deputy head, with the concurrence of the civil service commission, may at any time, for reason only of age, terminate the employment of a contributor who has attained 60 years of age. It is the policy of the Department of National Defence to retire persons between age 60 and 65 years, by reason of age, only in unusual cases where continued employment involves a serious problem.

NATIONAL DEFENCE HEADQUARTERS, OTTAWA

Question No. 643—Mr. Mather:

1. Are plans for the construction, on the Lebreton flats property in Ottawa, of a national defence department headquarters being prepared by private development interests and, if so, are these plans being prepared on instructions of the government?

2. Have other competent developers been asked to submit proposals for the use of this property as a national defence headquarters and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Cardin: 1. and 2. No.

FREE TRADE BETWEEN CANADA AND BRITISH CARIBBEAN COUNTRIES

Question No. 644—Mr. Matheson:

1. Has the government considered the advisability of joint studies with British Caribbean governments respecting the mutual advantages to be gained by the establishment of a free trade area between Canada and the British Caribbean?

2. Does the government plan to initiate discussions on this matter with the prime minister of Trinidad and Tobago during his visit to Canada?

Answer: 1. There has been no recent initiative for a joint study of a possible free trade area between Canada and the British Caribbean. This question, as the hon. member will be aware, has come up from time to time and we, of course, are constantly reviewing various ways of expanding the present close relations between Canada and the West Indies. With the dissolution of the federation an added complexity arises, since we continue to need to deal individually with members of the British Caribbean, some of whom have recently reached full independence.

2. The visit to Ottawa of Dr. Eric Williams, the prime minister of Trinidad and Tobago, has been arranged for a general review of the relations between our two countries and our mutual concern in world trading developments. Dr. Williams comes here after an extensive tour of the African continent and we will be interested to gain his impression of these areas. It is certainly my intention to meet with the prime minister of Trinidad and Tobago, if this is possible, and to have a general discussion on trade.

POST OFFICE SITES, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 646—Mr. Coates:

1. What are the names of the individuals contacted at Advocate Harbour, Collingwood, Southampton, and Wallace, by officials of the Department of Public Works, or their agents, regarding the securing of sites for proposed post offices for these areas?

2. What were the offers made to the individuals in question for the proposed sites?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Advocate Harbour, no site was investigated. Collingwood, a site owned by Mr. E. Colburne and another site owned by Mrs. Hodgson were investigated. Neither site was suitable for our purposes. Southampton, Mr. Arnold Goodwin was contacted. No suitable site was found. Wallace, a suitable site owned by Mr. William C. Reid was investigated at this location.

2. Wallace, the department accepted Mr. William C. Reid's offer to sell for $1,000 and this is now in the process of acquisition.

METHOD OF ESTIMATING UNEMPLOYED

Question No. 679—Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson):

Have any changes been made in recent months in the method or manner of estimating the number of unemployed in Canada and, if so, what are they?

Answer: No changes have been made in recent months in the basic method of estimating the number of unemployed in Canada. However, a revised sample, of improved design, using the latest information on population distributions, is in course of preparation for use in the labour force survey. It will be introduced progressively, province by province, as the revised sample for each province is completed. The revised sample will not involve any change in the wording of the questionnaire used or in the enumeration procedures followed. A revised sample for Alberta was completed last November and field trials have been carried out since that time. This revised Alberta sample was brought into use for the March 1964 survey.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Motion No. 21—Mr. Smallwood:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters, memoranda or other documents forwarded since April 22, 1963, by any member of parliament representing an electoral district in the national capital region, to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the Secretary of State or any official of these departments or to the civil service commission on the subject of collective bargaining for public servants.

Mr. Stefanson: I move this resolution for the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose (Mr. Smallwood), who is in hospital and unable to be here.

Mr. Pickersgill: I indicated before in the house that I wish to speak to the hon. member who is moving this motion, and in his absence I hope that both this motion and the next one will be allowed to stand.

Motion stands.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND SOLICITOR GENERAL

Motion No. 36—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between Maître Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Blake lake, Megantic county, and the Solicitor General, since March 1, 1963.

He said: I ask that this motion, also No. 37, be allowed to stand until I have seen the minister.

Motion stands.

DISPOSITION OF INDIAN RESERVE LANDS, BURNS LAKE, B.C.

Motion No. 60—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all applications for, and inquiries relating to, the purchase, lease or rental of Indian reserve lands in the Burns lake Indian agency since January 1, 1963.

Mr. Badanai: We have no objection to this motion.

Motion agreed to.

N.H.A. LOANS—KITIMAT, B.C.

Motion No. 66—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or any branch office thereof and the Aluminum Company of Canada, or any other person since January 1, 1958 relating to the question of loans under the National Housing Act in the community of Kitimat, B.C.

He said: May I have permission to withdraw this motion, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

REPRESENTATIVE LISTS OF SUPPLIERS

Motion No. 78—Mr. Nielsen:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the representative list and/or representative lists of suppliers (now in use) as defined by paragraph 2 (e) (ii) of the government contracts regulations being P.C. 1954-1971 dated December 16, 1954 from each department of the goverment.

Mr. McIlraith: May I ask that motions Nos. 78, 79, 80, 81 and 84 be allowed to stand.

Mr. Nielsen: In so far as these motions are in my name, Mr. Speaker, I am agreeable. There are two other hon. members involved.

Motions stand.

R.C.M.P. SPACE IN MUNICIPAL BUILDING

Motion No. 86—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all observations and reports concerning space or the location thereof for the R.C.M. Police as referred to in the answer given to question No. 300 of the present session of parliament.

Motion agreed to.

RESERVE LANDS, BURNS LAKE INDIAN AGENCY

Motion No. 90—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government or any agency or branch thereof and any other person, group or organization relating to Indian reserve lands in the Burns lake Indian agency since January 1, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN ALBERT GARANT, ROBERVAL, QUE. AND PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 93—Mr. Gauthier:

That an order of the house do issue for copies of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and documents exchanged between Mr. Albert Garant of Roberval, Roberval county, and the Minister of Public Works, the deputy minister, or other employees of that department, since March 1, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN ALBERT GARANT, ROBERVAL, QUE., AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 94—Mr. Gauthier:

That an order of the house do issue for copies of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and documents exchanged between Mr. Albert Garant of Roberval, Roberval county, and the Postmaster General, the deputy postmaster general, or other employees of that department, since March 1, 1963.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, on December 9 of last year, pursuant to a notice of motion, the correspondence requested was produced for the period April 8, 1963 to October 23, 1963. If the hon. member will limit his request to the period from October 23, 1963 up to the date of his present motion, it will be accepted.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion acceptable subject to the reservation of the minister?

Mr. Gauthier: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUDGER BOUCHARD, CHAMBORD, QUE., AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 95—Mr. Gauthier:

That an order of the house do issue for copies of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and documents, concerning the Chambord post office, exchanged between Mr. Ludger Bouchard of Chambord, Roberval county, and the Postmaster General, the deputy postmaster general, or other employees of that department, since March 1, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUDGER BOUCHARD, CHAMBORD, QUE., AND PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 96—Mr. Gauthier:

That an order of the house do issue for copies of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and documents, concerning the Chambord post office, exchanged between Mr. Ludger Bouchard of Chambord, Roberval county, and the Minister of Public Works, the deputy minister, or other employees of that department, since March 1, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH U.S. ON EATON-KAYE CASE

Motion No. 98—Mr. Fisher:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Department of National Revenue and the American authorities under the tax agreement between Canada and the United States with regard to the Eaton-Kaye case and any opinions which may have been obtained from the American authorities on the position of the securities and investment involved in the estate of the late Mrs. Eaton-Kaye since January 1, 1961.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, it will be seen that this notice of motion for the production of papers relates to one estate tax return, and the department is therefore prohibited from giving the information by virtue of section 55 of the Succession Duty Act.

Mr. Fisher: I would like to have it transferred for debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

TERRITORIAL PARTICIPATION IN DOMINION-ONT.

Motion No. 99—Mr. Martineau:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence including letters and other documents exchanged, on the one hand, between the government, the Minister of Justice or other governmental agencies and, on the other hand, any person or association with regard to the construction of the penal institution for women planned by the government at Cornwall.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: I understand there is no objection to have this motion stand for another week.

Motion stands.

TERRITORIAL PARTICIPATION IN DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCES

Motion No. 100—Mr. Nielsen:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all replies by the premiers of the provinces to the letter of the Prime Minister directed to the premiers respecting the participation by the governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories in future federal provincial conferences.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable subject to the consent of the premiers of the provinces concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the Prime Minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SHIPPING

NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S. RESPECTING GREAT LAKES WATER LEVELS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the question I wish to ask has to do with the critical situation with regard to the water levels on the great lakes, a matter that greatly affects potential shipping this year, as well as carrying with it detrimental effects in various fields of endeavour.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the fact that the situation is most serious—for example, the lake Huron water level being at its lowest since records were first kept in 1860—any negotiations are being undertaken at present with the United States with respect to the Chicago conduit which draws off 3,000 cubic feet per second of drainage from the great lakes, and whether there is any co-operative plan now being considered by the governments of Canada and the United States with regard to this very important matter that will effect the economies of our two countries.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I share the right hon. gentleman's appreciation of the seriousness of this situation that seems to be cyclical on the great lakes, but which is certainly very serious at the present time. I am not aware at the moment of conversations which may or may not be going on with the United States concerning this matter, but I will be glad to look into it and make a report to the house at the earliest possible date.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

SUBMISSIONS TO ROYAL COMMISSION BY MEMBERS OF PUBLIC SERVICE AND ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister?

Could the Prime Minister assure the house that federal civil servants can, without danger of retaliation, submit briefs or reports to the Laurendeau-Dunton commission?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will have to look into this situation and give the hon. member a reply tomorrow or the next day.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question? Could the Prime Minister consider at the same time the reports submitted personally by members of the Canadian armed forces?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to inquire into that also.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR RELATIONS

MARITIME UNIONS—INQUIRIES RESPECTING ADMINISTRATION BY TRUSTEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has received any protests from the Canadian Labour Congress regarding the ascension to the S.I.U. presidency of Mr. McLaughlin.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker.

May I take this opportunity to answer a question asked the other day by the hon. member for Ontario regarding the operation of seamen's hiring halls, in which the hon. member inquired whether employers have the privilege of rejecting an employee referred to them from the halls. I am advised by the board of trustees that the answer is yes.

I undertook to inquire further from the board of trustees regarding certain questions raised by the Leader of the Opposition and by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. First, with respect to the d.n.s. list of seamen, I have again been informed by the chairman of the board of trustees, Mr. Justice Dryer, that no list exists either in the form of a "do not ship" list or of a "registry of charges" list. Furthermore, the trustees have informed me that they have had a complete check made in all S.I.U. port offices from Halifax to Vancouver, including the fourth floor of the S.I.U. building in Montreal, and are fully satisfied that no such lists exist in any of these offices.

As I mentioned on Thursday last and again on Monday, the trustees are prepared to have the claim of any seaman whose name appeared at any time on lists that were in existence in earlier years investigated, and are presently endeavouring to have the facilities of the appeals board extended to adjudicate such claims. Commander Robertson, who presently constitutes the maritime appeals board, has limited powers covering cases extending back to a period of not more than three years. These powers are being exercised and the trustees are taking steps to have them extended, as I have indicated.

Another matter raised yesterday concerns S.I.U. fees and dues. As I indicated, provisions are set out in the constitution covering these matters. Probationary members are required to pay a probationary fee of $240 including six months' regular dues at the rate of not more than $40 per month for the six months. The constitution further provides that the payment of dues and initiation fees may be waived or reduced for organization purposes in accordance with such rules as are adopted by a majority vote of the executive board. Applicants for full membership are required to pay an initiation fee of $100 after the probationary period. This amount may be changed only by a majority vote of the membership. The monthly dues of $4 may be changed only by a majority vote of the membership.

I might add that I am assured by the trustee in charge of S.I.U. administration that reform of union financing is now under active consideration.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Has the minister not received communications recently with regard to this list? Has he not, within the last two or three days, received a letter from Toronto in this connection? Will he look this up and see whether it is so? Second, will he tell us the name of the trustee in question who is in charge of S.I.U. operations?

Mr. MacEachen: I will be glad to check into the matter of the letter. The trustee in charge of S.I.U. administration is Mr. Charles Millard, a member of the board.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he is taking steps to ask the trustees whether they will inquire into the statement made by my hon. friend from Port Arthur last night to the effect that if they would look in a particular place on the fourth floor of the S.I.U. building in Montreal they would find the famous list which is now said to be non-existent; at least it was there yesterday evening if steps were not taken to remove it.

I should also like the minister to find out from the trustees if Mr. John Wood and Mr. Michael Sheehan, who were members of the S.I.U., have applied for reinstatement. If they have—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is already quite long. I suggest that if the hon. member wants all this detailed information he should put the question on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO NEW DEPARTMENTAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister of external affairs. In view of the opening this morning of the new and most impressive British high commission building which is located around the corner on Elgin street, on a most valuable and convenient piece of real estate, does the minister have any plans for his most important Department of External Affairs building or for new housing facilities in an equally valuable and convenient location? I am particularly concerned that as Canada reaches toward final autonomy—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is of great interest to all hon. members, I am sure, particularly if there is an opportunity of getting the east block; but would the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—DISCUSSIONS WITH FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Is it true that secret negotiations are going on at the present time between the Quebec provincial government and the federal government?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, negotiations are always taking place between the government of Quebec and the government of Canada on a variety of subjects.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Has Mr. Lesage informed the right hon. Prime Minister or the Canadian government that he might impose double taxation in that province?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Can he tell the house if he would let the Quebec government's actuaries meet with the officials of the federal government to discuss both the provincial and federal pension plans?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this seems to me to be a very good suggestion. As a matter of fact the experts have been looking at the plans of both governments.

[Later:]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Following press reports from the province of Quebec today, will the Prime Minister say whether he has offered a package deal on cost sharing programs to the premier of that province?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows we are having discussions with the government of Quebec and with other provinces on pension plans and related matters. I hope to be able to make a full statement on this matter in a day or two, but pending the completion of these discussions it is very difficult for me to say anything in the house.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

AMHERST, N.S.—REQUEST FOR WORK ORDERS TO PREVENT LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. Will the Minister of Industry give serious consideration to increasing the volume of overhaul and repair work to the Enamel and Heating Company of Amherst, Nova Scotia, in view of that company's intention to lay off 100 men in the next week as a result of lack of this type of work?

Mr. Speaker: There is great importance to this question, but I think it should be on the order paper.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, this is a most serious matter. Cumberland county has been designated a depressed area, and if the Minister of Industry can take some action immediately these men might not be laid off.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the importance of the question has now reached the Minister of Industry.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. With regard to the comments he made in his budget speech about unemployment in designated areas, does the minister intend to co-operate with his colleague the Minister of Labour in order to find a solution which would extend the winter works period in designated areas?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is perhaps unnecessary to say that the members of this government co-operate with each other on all occasions and on all subjects.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to continue to pursue that practice.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am convinced that the Minister of Finance co-operates with all his colleagues, but I would like to know whether he will co-operate with the Minister of Labour, in order to find a specific solution to that urgent important and current problem, to wit the extension of the winter works period in designated areas?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: I have nothing further to add, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Labour has had an opportunity to check into his files to see if he has had a submission from the Canadian mayors and municipalities regarding the extension of the municipal winter works incentive program?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm my understanding that no representation has been received from the Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities with respect to an extension of the program.

Mr. Nowlan: They must have fallen down on the job.

QUEBEC—ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRY IN EASTERN TOWNSHIPS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Industry a question. As the minister recently visited the eastern townships, in order to get some first hand information on the industrial position of that district, does he have any statement to make with regard to the help extended in a general way to industry in that part of the country?

Mr. Pigeon: Abolish the tax on building materials.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Not today, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my question to the Minister of Labour. Could he inform the house whether unemployment will be fought on a regional basis?

Mr. Pigeon: Abolish the tax on building materials.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not quite sure how I should describe this question, but it is far too vague and wide.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR HEARING BEFORE CONVERSION OF STATION CJBC TO FRENCH LANGUAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State. On February 25 the Secretary of State advised the house that he would consult with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as to whether they would hold a public hearing in Toronto before radio station CJBC was converted to an all French station. Is the minister now prepared to advise the house of their decision?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to answer that question tomorrow.

REFERENCE TO MORNING NEWS BROADCAST THIS DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, who answers in the house for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. In view of the contents of the C.B.C. national news program broadcast at 8 a.m. this morning, eastern standard time, and heard over station CBO, Ottawa, would the Secretary of State inquire from the C.B.C. if that corporation has decided to declare political warfare on the government of the province of Ontario?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will, Mr. Speaker.

REPRESENTATIONS WITH RESPECT TO PROGRAM PUBLICITY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Secretary of State. Could the minister report on his inquiries or on the representations that might have been made by organizations such as the Jeanne d'Arc or Lacordaire societies concerning the nature of beer ads shown during T.V. programs on the C.B.C.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Not today, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Obviously there is a spirit of co-operation in all parts of the house with a view to shortening the question period. But today we had from the same minister two examples showing why it will be difficult to attain our objective if ministers will not answer the questions put to them.

On two occasions today, and apparently with some satisfaction, the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) gave an answer which did not satisfy the members of the house when he said he would reply later or make inquiries, because most of the time he does not give an answer in the house, even two or three weeks after the question has been asked.

That happened in my case on several occasions for questions I had asked at least three weeks or even a month before. I did not get the answer which was promised me.

I think that the ministers should be the first to co-operate if we want to shorten the question period, but this applies more particularly to the Secretary of State who often acts with arrogance, as shown by his smile in the house.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I must register my disagreement with the statements of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) asked me whether I would agree to inquire from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and I replied I would. In the circumstances, I could give no other answer.

When the hon. member for Lapointe asked me to make a statement, I answered I was not ready to do so. On the other hand, had the hon. member given me notice of his question, I probably would have been able to answer satisfactorily.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, my point of order concerned similar questions asked in the past, which have not yet been answered. If the minister so desires, I may refer to numerous instances in that respect.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question?

Would the minister consider my question of a few minutes ago as notice?

Mr. Lamontagne: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY AS TO CONFERENCE LATER THIS YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice.

In view of the importance of the matter and of public reports, can the Minister of Justice confirm whether a constitutional conference is going to be held in Canada later this year? If so, where and when, who will participate, and what will be the agenda of such a conference?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the minister take this question as notice.

[Later:]

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning the ruling Your Honour just made on my question to the Minister of Justice. I would appreciate your advice, but I had always understood that a minister decides whether to take a question as notice, not Your Honour. You may rule me out of order by suggesting that my question be placed on the order paper, but in this case the minister was rising to reply to my question when Your Honour made that suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: Then in order to be doubly sure may I suggest to the hon. member that he put his question on the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

REPORTED SHORTAGE OF LABOUR ON FARMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he is aware of an acute labour shortage in agriculture, particularly on beef and dairy farms?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Of course, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the situation. We have been doing some studies recently and have found that over the last 10 years we have been losing about 3 per cent of our farm labour force each year, and we are now down to about 600,000. We are considering this very serious problem. I cannot say anything further than that at the moment, but we do recognize that this is a serious problem.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): A supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. I asked him the other day whether he had any intention of setting up the standing committee on agriculture soon. Is the minister ready today to give us a date as to when that committee will be operating?

Mr. Hays: I can only assure the hon. member again that it will be very soon.

LEGALITY OF ACTIONS DURING TRANSFER OF DUTIES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Could the minister tell the house whether he has now received a report from his legal officers concerning the orders in council dealing with the respective powers of the Minister of Agriculture and of the Minister of Forestry and the signature of both ministers for the period of February 3 to February 20? If so, could he inform us as to when he intends to report to the house on that subject?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I have started getting preliminary reports but I will have to study them myself before I form a final opinion. I will be in a position to report to the house next Tuesday.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

INQUIRY AS TO POLICY RESPECTING RETIREMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the minister of defence. Is it a fact that some personnel in the R.C.A.F. are being retired before the expiry of their normal service term? If so, is any arrangement being made for compensation in this regard?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is true; but perhaps I should take the question as notice and give a more detailed answer tomorrow.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REDUCTION IN PAY AND ALLOWANCES FOR SEA CADET OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the hon. member for Saint John-Albert asked a question with regard to the reduction in rates of pay and allowances for sea cadet officers. I am now in a position to give the hon. member the following information.

As part of the over-all reduction of defence expenditures, and to bring the pay and allowances received by sea cadet officers in line with the reduced amounts available to Royal Canadian Navy reserve active list officers, the number of days pay and allowances that a sea cadet officer may receive for the performance of divisional drills has been reduced from 30 to 20 days per training year, normally September 1 to August 31. As this change is only effective from April 1, 1964, there is no question of taking away pay for work which has already been performed. Sea cadet officers will be paid for the total number of days pay and allowances, up to a maximum of 30 days, earned from September 1, 1963 to March 31, 1964. However, those who have already earned 20 or more days pay and allowances prior to April 1, 1964 will not be eligible for further pay for divisional drills for the balance of the training year.

I can also inform the hon. member that necessary instructions are being issued to all sea cadet corps in order to ensure that there is no misunderstanding as to the effect of the foregoing change.

BLANDFORD, N.S.—CONSTRUCTION OF NAVAL RADIO STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. On March 11 the associate minister informed the house that his department would investigate the possibility of having the proposed Blandford radio station facilities located at Beaverbank. In view of the unemployment in this area and the uncertainty caused by the fact that tenders have already been called for the construction of a receiver building at Blandford, will the minister inform the house whether a final decision has been reached regarding the placing of these facilities in this particular area?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the department has looked into the possibility of using the facilities that we have in Beaverbank. It was found that from a technical point of view the radio station contemplated for Blandford could not be placed at Beaverbank. However, the department is still looking into the possibility of using the facilities at Beaverbank for other purposes.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does this mean that the development will proceed at Blandford, as originally planned, for the radio receiving station?

Mr. Cardin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he intends to place before the house very shortly the resolution in his name for the setting up of the special parliamentary committee on defence, in the light of the complexity and importance of the tasks assigned to it. How soon, in other words?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it would be the hope of the government that we could bring forward the resolution to set up the committee very soon, and perhaps almost simultaneously with that introduce the legislation amending the National Defence Act so that this bill could be referred to the committee for study.

INQUIRY AS TO RECOVERY OF STOLEN ARMS AND AMMUNITION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice a question, of which I have given him notice in order to comply with requirements. Can the minister tell the house whether the arms and munitions stolen from armouries have been recovered?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I must say that, at the time the last were seized, practically all arms stolen from the Shawinigan armouries had been recovered. Other developments will soon be announced, but all reports published in the newspapers with regard to the recovery of the arms stolen from the Shawinigan armouries are true.

[Text]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has anybody been arrested in this regard and charged with an offence under the Criminal Code of Canada? I wish to pose this question to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Favreau: Yes. At the instance of the attorney general of Quebec, who is responsible for the administration of justice in his province, three persons have already been arrested and charged.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED ELIMINATION OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the level of unemployment is quite alarming in eastern Canada and especially in Quebec, does the government intend to abolish the 8 per cent tax on building material as soon as possible, in order to boost the Canadian economy?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is not urgent in itself although I realize its great importance.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I asked this question because it is very urgent, since the Canadian economy is unsteady at present. In addition, taxpayers, home builders, municipal authorities and school boards are complaining against this discriminatory tax which is crippling the Canadian economy—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have already told the hon. member that the question is very important; but I believe the question was asked yesterday or the day before, and it seems to me the order paper is the proper place for this type of question.

HOUSING

REPORTED HALTING OF LOANS BY APPROVED LENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the question I asked him the other day regarding the drying up of mortgage loans from approved lenders, and his reply that this matter was being given immediate and urgent consideration at the present time, I wonder whether he can report any progress on this question.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government is considering urgently and almost daily certain proposed amendments to be presented in connection with the National Housing Act. I would not want my hon. friend to think that my answer of the other day encompassed any immediate change or any prospective change in the rate of interest on National Housing Act loans. This is a matter, however, that the government has under consideration all the time.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

POLICY RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION OF SMALL POST OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Are the small post offices formerly built under the winter works program in all areas of Canada now being constructed only in so-called designated areas? If so, when and in what way was government policy changed in this regard?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, last summer a special vote was provided in the estimates of the Department of Finance to provide for accelerated winter projects not otherwise provided for in the main estimates. These accelerated projects had application to areas designated by the Department of Industry and the Department of Labour as areas of high winter unemployment. I would have to make further inquiries with respect to the post office aspect of that general program.

REQUEST FOR ANNUAL REPORT OF DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that later this week we may be discussing the resolution in his name on the order paper, I wonder whether the Postmaster General could indicate when the report of his department for 1963 will be tabled in the house?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, it was to have been filed some time this week, and I am surprised if it has not been.

Mr. McBain: I did not hear the answer.

Mr. Nicholson: As far as I know it has been filed. If not, it certainly will be within the next day or so.

NATIONAL PARKS

WOOD BUFFALO—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING TRANSFER TO PROVINCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I should like to ask him whether representations have been received from the government of the province of Alberta suggesting or requesting the transfer of Wood Buffalo national park to provincial jurisdiction.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): No representations have been made to me, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources said that he would be presenting a new statement of policy respecting the development of tourist accommodation within the national parks. Can he tell the house when that statement will be available?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have almost completed a general statement in respect of the objectives and principles of our national parks management, and I hope to place it before the house at a very early date.

SOCIAL INSURANCE

RETURN OF APPLICATION CARDS FILLED OUT THROUGH MISUNDERSTANDING

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour. Now that he has undoubtedly received the telegram from the Quebec Catholic teachers corporation protesting against social security numbers, could he tell us whether he has given instructions so as to enable those who had already completed their cards to withdraw them if they so desire, since they were in no way obliged to do so?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker.

PROTEST FROM SECRETARY OF ALBERTA TEACHERS ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. W. Fane (Vegreville): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have done quite a few push-ups trying to be noticed. I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received a protest in the last few days from Mr. S. C. T. Clarke, executive secretary of the Alberta teachers association, protesting against the fact that the teachers of Alberta are being required to apply for social insurance numbers. If he has received this telegram, will he inform the house what he proposes to do about it?

Mr. Speaker: If I remember correctly, it seems to me that I suggested to many members who had similar telegrams from their geographical localities, they should put these questions on the order paper.

SHIPPING

CONSIDERATION OF RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING MERCHANT MARINE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the house if he will follow up the report submitted by the national federation of metallurgists about building up a Canadian merchant marine?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether any negotiations have yet been commenced with the government of the United States, or have there been any requests for such negotiations, concerning a joint cost sharing program involving the paving of the Alaska highway?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I answered a similar question a few days ago when I said that at this time officials of the department are making studies and surveys with regard to the cost and the economic benefit of this project. Until a complete report is made no negotiations will be entered into with the government of the United States.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I also asked the minister if he had received any requests from the government of the United States for the commencement of such negotiations.

Mr. Deschatelets: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Public Works. With the transfer of authority for the maintenance of the Alaska highway from defence to public works, does the minister have anything to report on the resumption of negotiations between the United States and Canada for the completion of the highway?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I answered a similar question a few minutes ago. May I say to the hon. member that as soon as the surveys now going on are completed I will gladly report to the house on the decision which will be taken in respect of any negotiations with the United States government.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT IN POSITION OF RETIRED EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I wonder whether he is yet in a position to implement the promise he has made to me on two occasions, first on February 27 and again on March 20, to make a report to the house on the possibility of improving the pensions of Canadian National employees already retired.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman, who is usually very accurate, has somewhat abbreviated what I said. I said I would make inquiries of the railway about the matter. I am going to see the president of the C.N.R. this week and I will raise the question with him at that time.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the minister's accurate memory, does he not recall that on March 20, when he last made that promise, he said he would report on the matter at an early date?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will report on it at an early date.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pickersgill (for the Prime Minister) for the second reading of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I should like to deal with one aspect of the question of redistribution, Mr. Speaker, which has not been mentioned too frequently in the house. I am not going to deal with the question of rural versus urban ridings, but I should like to deal with the disparities which exist between various urban ridings. I am referring particularly to the difference in population which exists between the old city ridings and the new suburban ridings, the places where the greatest growth in the country has taken place. This condition applies right across the country whether you pick Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton or Vancouver. You find a number of ridings which have existed for a period of time within a city and you find the suburban ridings which have had a marked increase in population in recent years.

One of the members taking part in this debate earlier said you could tell the constituency from which a member came, by what he said on the redistribution bill. I shall not pretend to be any different from the rest in that connection. I represent a riding in which there has been a 100 per cent population growth since the last redistribution. I should like to deal particularly with the distribution of parliamentary seats in the lower mainland area of British Columbia, that is the area around Vancouver, bearing in mind that the same sort of situation exists in other major centres of the country. It exists in Ottawa, for example. The ridings of Carleton and Russell have grown a great deal, while some of the older city seats have not grown to the same extent.

In the lower mainland of British Columbia, that is the greater metropolitan area of Vancouver, there are 11 representatives in this house, six of whom come from the city of Vancouver and five from what I will call the suburban ridings. Each member from Vancouver represents, on an average, 64,500 persons, if I have done my calculating correctly. Each member from a suburban riding represents an average of 107,000 persons. If you make the same sort of calculation for the city of Toronto and the areas surrounding it, you will find the same disparity. I have looked at the population figures for surburban ridings and I find that in almost every case between 1951 and the present time they have grown by over 100 per cent.

These are the areas, Mr. Speaker, which are continuing to grow, so that the longer redistribution is postponed the more out of date will be the figures we arrived at a number of years ago. These ridings which have grown 100 per cent in population in the last ten years will continue to grow, and in perhaps two or three years time the population will be 150 per cent of what it was at the time the last redistribution took place. I believe it was the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) who, earlier in this debate, said perhaps there should be a growth factor taken into account in determining the allocation of members within a province and around the major metropolitan centres. I do not know whether or not this is possible, but I think in order to be fair to these places something of that sort should be considered by the commissioners when they begin their work.

If the bill passes in its present form, I understand the province of British Columbia will gain one member in this house. Obviously, this member should represent a new riding in the lower mainland area. Apart from that, if we are to come anywhere close to representation by population—I say that deliberately because I know we will never achieve that—there will have to be other members added to that particular area as a result of redistribution within the province, and perhaps the amalgamation of some of the ridings which have decreased in population or which have not grown. In the very few remarks I am making, I want to underscore the need to give adequate representation to the suburban areas around the major metropolitan centres of Canada.

I should like to suggest also that, contrary to what has been said by many members, the 20 per cent disparity in the average riding in any particular province which is mentioned in the bill is a figure with which I agree. This is the figure which was used in Australia. I mention Australia because it is like Canada in many ways, in that there are large rural areas and the Australians seem to have worked this out quite satisfactorily. As a matter of fact, in Australia they have a party called the country party, and I understand that in recent years this party has been in coalition with the Liberal party to form the government of that country. Perhaps at some future date in this country we will have a coalition of the country party and the Liberal party to form a government, and we will have a better government.

I should like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that this redistribution which we are considering is long overdue. I hope this bill will not be held up too long, so that the commissioners can be appointed in each province. Then, possibly 12 months from this time they will have completed their work and a bill will be before the house to complete this redistribution. It would be a great shame to go through another election in this country based upon the 1951 census and the improper distribution which exists now. I again urge that the 20 per cent allowance is good enough and you can get a great deal of variation with it.

[Translation]

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, before going any further, I want to tell the house that the political future of rural constituencies is at stake as soon as we start dealing with the motion now before us. Furthermore, I wish to put on record certain comments which, in my opinion, can apply to all rural ridings in my province, the province of Quebec.

I should like all hon. members to listen to me closely, because our action in supporting the bill to come will influence the political future of rural ridings and the quality of the work to be done by each representative of those constituencies.

While conceding that the saying "rep by pop" must be put into practice, we should not lose sight of geographical considerations, the high and the low density of population and all those factors to be taken into account when the time comes for redistribution.

I agree with part of clause 13 of Bill No. C-72, except for the percentage. In that matter, I differ with the hon. member who preceded me, perhaps because I represent a rural riding, but also because we should keep the proportional representation as efficient as possible in view of the future of those rural ridings. To my mind—and according to several hon. members from all political parties—the percentage of 20 per cent would not be high enough. Some will say that there is no difference in representing an urban population or a rural one.

Let us say, for instance, that this percentage of 20 per cent is applied. It would mean that, in the province of Quebec, we would have 70,123 as a quotient after dividing the total population by the number of seats in the house. There would be ridings with a maximum population of 84,147, and others with a minimum population of 55,100. A county like Nicolet-Yamaska, a population of 45,192 which I represent in the house—and this applies to several other rural ridings in the province of Quebec, of which there are 13—should have a minimum population of 55,100.

Therefore, first of all, 12 to 15 parishes would have to be added to the 36 already included in that riding; second, to the 57 municipalities of the riding of Nicolet-Yamaska, there would have to be added another score, which would mean 75 to 80 municipal councils; third, some 15 to 20 post offices would have to be added to the 40 already existing in the riding of Nicolet-Yamaska, which would give a total of 55 post offices, fourth, to the 62 rural mail carriers of this riding 20 should be added to bring the total up to 82; fifth, at present, the rural riding —the example I offer is that of Nicolet-Yamaska—is being served by four offices of the unemployment insurance commission and four national employment offices. It would be necessary to add parishes which would be served by a fifth national employment office and a fifth office of the unemployment insurance commission; sixth, to the parishes of that part of the riding located in five provincial ridings should be added parishes which would be located in a sixth or a seventh provincial riding; seventh, this would considerably extend the mileage, the distance between the limits of the riding, and render difficult the communications between the member and his electors. As the rural telephone lines are shared by several parties in a rural constituency, there is no question of confidential conversations over the telephone. Moreover, the elector must always pay for long distance calls when he wishes to speak with his representative.

The members for rural ridings have a lot to do. The people in these ridings rely on their member; often times, he is the only channel through which they may communicate with their fellow citizens belonging to other classes of society.

Let us avoid passing a measure which could only muffle the voice of this section of the population which is too often overlooked.

These added parishes would mean extra work for the member of a rural riding who is already burdened with other official functions. This would compel him to spend more time visiting community centres, for such centres wish to keep their own entity, of which they are proud—and I do understand them. The member would then have to meet with more municipal authorities, to look into a greater number of postal problems, and so on, and this would apply in every field. In a word, the member for an overly enlarged rural riding would have less time to devote to his legislative duties.

As a concrete proposal, I ask the government—not only on my own behalf, but also on behalf of the representatives of rural constituencies—to include in this bill a tolerance of 33⅓ per cent instead of 20 per cent. With such a margin, in a Quebec constituency the maximum population would be 93,500 and the minimum about 46,750. This maximum number would enable to divide in half some constituencies now overpopulated while increasing only by a few thousands the population of rural constituencies.

The representatives of urban ridings will object and maintain that there is too much difference between the population of urban and rural constituencies. Quite frankly, we must admit that this is a very important improvement and I intend to prove it with a few figures taken from the last census of the province of Quebec.

But before having a quick look at the constituencies of the province of Quebec, may I submit another argument in favour of the widening of that margin. If that tolerance remained at 20 per cent, several rural constituencies would disappear. Is that the wish of the house? Or is it the wish of the government? I do not think so, at least, I hope not. Our duty, as members of parliament, and the duty of the government, is to protect those constituencies in order to avoid too great a decrease. We will all have to answer for the action taken in the next few days or weeks. If the margin was set at 33⅓ per cent, 47 constituencies with more than 46,750 people but less than 93,500, would not be affected.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to read the list of those constituencies but, with the consent of the house, I should like to have it printed in Hansard.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. Does the house give unanimous consent to the hon. member to have this table printed in Hansard?

Mr. Pickersgill: I apologize to the hon. gentleman for not catching what the table was about, and I would be grateful if he could indicate precisely what it is.

Mr. Vincent: This is a list of the ridings in the province of Quebec that would not be affected by the margin of 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the hon. gentleman say who did the arithmetic?

Mr. Vincent: The census of 1961.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then I am only too happy to have it put in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to is as follows:]

Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes, Beauce, Beauharnois-Salaberry, Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere, Chambly-Rouville, Champlain, Chapleau, Charlevoix, Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie, Chicoutimi, Drummond-Arthabaska, Gaspe, Gatineau, Hull, Lake St. John, Lapointe, Levis, Matapedia-Matane, Megantic, Cartier, Hochelaga, Lafontaine, Outremont-St. Jean, Papineau, St. Antoine-Westmount, St. Denis, St. Henry, St. James, St. Mary, Verdun, Portneuf, Quebec East, Quebec West, Quebec South, Richelieu-Vercheres, Richmond, Wolfe, Rimouski, Roberval, St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville, St. Maurice-Lafleche, Saguenay, Shefford, Sherbrooke, Riviere du Loup-Temiscouata, Three Rivers, Villeneuve.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: While this margin of 33⅓ per cent would affect these other ridings by increasing or decreasing their population, whichever may be the case. Once again, Mr. Speaker, I request permission to place on record a list of the ridings the population of which would be less than 46,750 or more than 93,500.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Vincent: A few moments ago I was saying that the member for a rural riding has a lot more representation work to perform, more organizations to meet, and this, I believe, everybody will admit. In cities or in urban ridings, there is often only one municipal council, one post office, one mail distribution, one unemployment insurance office and one national employment office. The distances are shorter and communications easier when one travels or phones. Many constituents work in the same locality and they have the same problems. Therefore, less work is required on the spot from the member.

Far from me to suggest that even if a member for a rural riding has more representation work to do, he actually works more than the representative of an urban riding, or even that the urban representative works less than his colleague from a rural riding. No.

What happens is that the member representing a rural riding has less time to study legislation and the general problems of his country. That must be taken into account because the political future of rural ridings, I say it again, depends on that margin of 20 or 33⅓ per cent. Besides, if I am not mistaken, Hon. Jean Lesage himself stated, when he was elected Liberal party leader in Quebec, that as leader he preferred to represent an urban riding because he thus had more time to himself.

What about the defeat at the polls of a former premier of Quebec, Hon. Adelard Godbout, who represented a rural riding. He confirmed himself later that had he represented an urban riding he would have had more time to look after his party's business and that it was the lack of time which led to his defeat, because he could not be in his riding often enough.

Another example I could quote is the case of two ministers who succeeded each other in the federal electoral district of Lotbiniere. Both of them, although of different political parties, were defeated in this rural constituency, and the main reason given by the voters is the following: "We have not seen them often enough in our parishes, at our ceremonies", or else, "they were incapable of maintaining an office in their riding on account of their duties and obligations as ministers".

Furthermore, whether we impose upon the commission or commissions—I have not yet had time to study this aspect of the matter, but I shall go back to it at the committee stage—a tolerance of 20 per cent, it would mean that, in some cases, where for reasons pertaining to geography, economy or others, even if they had good reasons to do so, the commissioners wanted to fix the limit at 21, 22, 23 or even 26 per cent, they would be required under the law to retain a tolerance of 20 per cent. The commissioners would, therefore, be required to ignore some geographic or economic factors, because the law of this parliament would compel them to fix this limit at 20 per cent.

I should now like to outline two situations that members of the electoral boundaries commissions will certainly meet with.

Let us take a rural riding where, for certain economic reasons, the population is expected to increase considerably. In spite of this expectation, electoral districts will have to be redistributed temporarily and later on, that is, in five or 10 years, other major changes will have to be made. This example applies to several rural constituencies located in the vicinity of cities, and more especially to the riding of Nicolet-Yamaska, whose population is expected to increase considerably in the next five or 10 years due to the setting up of steel complex in the near future.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I wish to tell you that the question we are dealing with at present is very important, since we have to decide whether we should accept a 20 per cent tolerance or a 33⅓ per cent tolerance. If we accept a 20 per cent tolerance, it will be absolutely impossible for us to take a reverse action. On the other hand, if we accept the 33⅓ per cent tolerance, we shall not regret it, because in 10 or 20 years time, we can always change it.

Finally, I wish to repeat the assertion I made earlier. Whether we accept the 20 per cent or the 33⅓ per cent tolerance, the political future of rural counties is at stake. Let us not be mistaken; an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): As one who comes from the province of Saskatchewan, the province which according to the bill before us is supposed to lose more ridings than any other province in Canada, I feel it is my duty to take exception to this measure.

I am not asking that special consideration should be given to the province of Saskatchewan, but I should like to bring the case of this agricultural province to the attention of the house and compare it with the situation in other provinces where the population is more condensed and where such a high proportion of the electorate live in industrial cities. To say that the vast area of Saskatchewan can be represented adequately by only 13 members is almost ridiculous. Some of our ridings are immense in extent; they stretch many hundreds of miles in every direction. If redistribution takes place according to the bill, then many municipalities will be cut up even more than when there were 17 ridings in Saskatchewan. School districts will also be affected, many of them to the extent that they too will be cut up and divided. The same applies to hospital areas. According to the bill a 20 per cent tolerance in this respect is allowed; but in an area like Saskatchewan I think 20 per cent is not the right percentage, that it should be at least 33⅓ per cent. The problem is roughly the same in the province of Manitoba, with 14 members compared with Saskatchewan's 17. Nevertheless we must take into consideration the fact that the province of Manitoba is far more industrialized than the province of Saskatchewan. We have in Saskatchewan large cities, like Saskatoon and Regina, which may also have more than one representative. This will mean that here, too, more members will lose their ridings, mainly in agricultural areas.

I think that when the commissions are set up they should consider that, instead of having 265 members of parliament as we have at the present time, it might be justifiable to increase the number so that these large agricultural areas or other large areas which were previously represented in this house are not cut up to the extent that hardship is created. As I have said, municipalities, school districts and hospital areas are going to be affected.

As I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, I am not pleading for Saskatchewan, but I should like to bring to the attention of the house the fact that if this redistribution bill is brought into force these areas I have mentioned will have to be given special consideration. Saskatchewan has the largest number of agricultural areas in Canada. It is not my intention to delay the debate on Bill No. C-72, but I thought I should, as a member from Saskatchewan, take this opportunity of bringing forward the special case of the province of Saskatchewan to the attention of the house.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I, too, coming from the province of Saskatchewan, would like to join my colleague from that province in a few short comments on this Bill No. C-72 which has been introduced by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill). It is a bill to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions, and under this proposed legislation I feel that Saskatchewan does require some special provision or consideration. This point was considered when the question of redistribution was discussed in this house in 1952, when the then government under the leadership of the venerable and capable prime minister of the day, the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, felt justified in giving Saskatchewan such consideration. This consideration was supported at that time, I think, by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), whose remarks were recorded at page 1143 of Hansard for April 21, 1952. Some of his remarks were referred to by my colleague the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden); I do not intend to read them again but his comments are worth noting.

The situation in the west is such that approximately 30 per cent of the members of this house come from Manitoba and west of Manitoba, the other 70 per cent coming from eastern Canada. Therefore, with this distribution of our population I feel that western Canada has always had one strike against it as far as representation of areas is concerned. Singling out Saskatchewan by way of example, if the formula proposed in this bill were implemented Saskatchewan, as it has been pointed out, could lose four members. To Saskatchewan this would be approximately a 25 per cent loss of representation, and this to an area of great importance to Canada. As my hon. friend from Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) pointed out, the importance to Canada's economy of this part of the country is tremendous. Saskatchewan is known as the bread basket of the world, and the loss of four seats would be a tremendous blow to the province unless special consideration were given.

Just to put the matter into perspective, Mr. Speaker, let us look at the possible gain to other parts of Canada, such as an urban centre like Toronto. It has been suggested that this great urban metropolis might gain four, five or possibly six seats, bringing its total representation up to, say, 26 members. Let us compare the representation of this one urban centre to that of a whole province, such as Saskatchewan, which might be confined to only 13 ridings. I think that this puts the problem into perspective on a geographic basis. True enough, Toronto has a large population; but looking at that population and comparing it to the population of Saskatchewan, and looking at the economic problems of that condensed area of Toronto, I feel in all justification that it could be represented by less rather than more members. I also feel Saskatchewan should at least maintain as many as it now has.

Another factor which should be considered in the present scene as we see it today is that the responsibilities of this great nation of ours in world affairs mean that, figuratively speaking, the world is becoming smaller and our contribution more complex. With our entrance into external affairs and world problems this means that this House of Commons has to sit sometimes six, seven or even eight months in the year in order to carry on the nation's business. This means that members from large rural areas, such as those in Saskatchewan with large geographic boundaries, have no time to get back home and meet personally representatives from the municipalities, which representatives are like ourselves elected, discuss with them the problems in their various municipalities, and meet one's constituents personally.

If the boundaries are enlarged this will mean that greater hardship will fall on the members representing these larger constituencies and it will have an adverse effect on the welfare of their constituents. True enough, people will argue that with modern means of transportation we can get around more quickly. That is true, but we must compare this state of affairs with members who represent ridings such as mine. Or let us take the constituency of Mackenzie up in the northeast corner of Saskatchewan or the Meadow Lake area in the northwest. We require transportation by air in order to get around our constituencies.

Mr. Nowlan: I have to use a motor boat.

Mr. Southam: Yes, some hon. members have to use a motor boat. Much time is spent in travelling. Therefore, this suggestion about increasing the boundary areas should get, as I say, very special attention.

[Mr. Southam.]

With these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will close; but I again make the plea to the Minister of Transport that the commissions which are to be set up should take special notice of the problems I have mentioned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say about two words—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must advise the house that if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) speaks now, he will close the debate.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I only have a few remarks to make on the matter now before us.

Surely, great prudence will be required in the consideration of this bill, so that there will be no discrimination on the part of the government on that matter of redistribution. I have great confidence in the civil servants, including Mr. Castonguay who is very able, very dedicated, and who is doing an excellent job. Several criteria will have to be taken into consideration concerning redistribution. First of all, the area; second, the low density of population; third, the geography; fourth, the provincial divisions.

May I point out that as far as certain ridings of the province of Quebec are concerned, there is a quite rigid section in the British North America Act providing that the delimitations of certain ridings must remain unchanged at the provincial level, so far as the province of Quebec is concerned, such as the ridings of Pontiac, Hull, Argenteuil, Huntingdon, Missisquoi, Brome, Shefford, Stanstead, Compton, Wolfe, Richmond, Megantic and Sherbrooke. Those are permanent ridings which cannot be changed. Their delimitations cannot be changed by the province of Quebec for redistribution purposes, without an amendment to the British North America Act. At that time, those provisions were made to give justice to English speaking minorities in the province of Quebec which had settled in certain particular ridings.

I want to mention this fact in the house, even if it does not come under federal administration. In any case, with regard to redistribution, the government has to consider the English speaking minority in the province of Quebec, but also the French minorities in the various provinces of this country.

If, for instance, in provinces like Manitoba, Ontario and New Brunswick, there are important communities of French speaking Canadians, the fact should be definitely considered in a redistribution, so as to avoid discrimination and to enable those homogeneous groups, with the same culture, language and traditions, to be represented in Ottawa by a member meeting those requirements, if they so desire.

This also applies to the English minorities in the province of Quebec. It would be unfair to the French minorities in other provinces of this country, as well as to the English minority in the province of Quebec, to cut up ridings so as to deprive those minorities of their right to adequate representation.

The English minority in the province of Quebec should not be absorbed by the French majority, no more than the French minorities in the English provinces of this country should be absorbed by the English majority.

To my mind, there should be a special clause stipulating that the rights of the French speaking minorities in the other provinces, as well as those of the English minority in the province of Quebec, be considered.

As I said a moment ago, the British North America Act contains a section which, as regards redistribution in the province of Quebec, provides for counties whose limits or frontiers cannot be changed. That should also apply to constituencies in certain parts of the country where there are French Canadian localities.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to delay the passing of this bill and I will only ask the minister to bear that point in mind, a point which I consider of the utmost importance, at the time of the redistribution of ridings. I would be pleased if the minister could say a few words on the subject.

[Text]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say just a very brief word before we complete the discussion at this stage. I certainly will not take up many minutes of the time of the house. I think the minister in this instance will perhaps be eligible for some sort of award when we complete the consideration of the bill, because it will be the first bill the government has not pulled out of on its own, amended, changed—

Mr. Nowlan: Or ruined.

Mr. Winkler: That is correct, or ruined, before bringing it back into the house. The point I should like to make is in conjunction with what I said earlier this week in the house with regard to redistribution. I think the minister and the government should consider very, very seriously the point in regard to the tolerance figure now contained in the bill. I believe that in a country such as Canada we cannot have representation by population right at the basis of our thinking. This cannot be an exact basis for consideration. I believe that the confusion—and I say this very honestly—which the government has created and which exists in the country today in many other fields will only be compounded if they endeavour in the first instance to start off from a very, very narrow base such as the 20 per cent they have indicated or the 10 per cent that someone else has indicated. I think it should not be any lower than 33⅓ per cent; then as the years go by and this question comes back for consideration this figure can be reduced and the people of Canada will understand the function of the bill as it follows each census.

We know that in Great Britain there is no tolerance figure; this situation is left entirely in the hands of the adjudicators in regard to setting the areas of population and territory as well. Therefore I suggest very, very strongly to the minister that he should consider this point before we reach the committee stage; that he should be prepared to amend this figure to 33⅓ per cent. I say this on behalf of his own well-being as the minister presenting the bill, and also as a politician. I think he may have some other point in mind here in the way the constituencies will be established. We do not believe for one moment that he is going to eliminate a constituency, but he may contort it sufficiently that somebody will be placed in a position of disadvantage; and you can be very sure, Mr. Speaker, that it will not be the minister or any of his supporters.

We want him to know that we are cognizant of these things and we plead with him at this stage—I personally plead with him—to adopt a tolerance figure of 33⅓ per cent to begin the function the bill is supposed to carry through, or eliminate it and leave the matter entirely in the hands of the commissions concerned.

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I only want to speak briefly, and put a point of view to the minister before we pass this bill. I have listened to this debate and followed it up by re-reading the presentations that have been made to this stage. I found some very interesting things in those presentations. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who now supports a limited tolerance, in 1952 when his party had a large representation from the rural areas of the country did not have this view. It is quite apparent that the changed circumstances have changed his view. His confrere, who spoke about rural tyranny, had nothing much to support that point of view. I do not know whether it was rural tyranny when the farmers of the country supplied grain to Britain under a fixed price agreement initiated by a Liberal government which did not bring them the returns they could have obtained by selling in the world market as did the Americans. On the other hand, industry in this country had cost-plus contracts for defence needs while the farmers provided grain at a fixed price. It has been argued that they lost millions of dollars by doing so; in fact, some say as high as $600 million. If that is rural tyranny perhaps we should have more of it to help to build up this country and to support the efforts that Canada makes to keep the world free.

I suppose it was rural tyranny that produced the great abundance of wheat which has lifted our economy at the present time. I say that our farmers have played their part in building the country since confederation, will continue to do so and deserve a proper voice in the government of the country. All arguments in favour of representation by population fall flat because, in the case of certain provinces there is a floor so far as representation is concerned below which the number of their members cannot fall.

In view of the great extent of Canada I think a tolerance of 20 per cent by way of variation is completely unreasonable and cannot be argued to be sufficient. I do not think that a larger voice for rural Canada as opposed to representation by population produces tyranny at all. It has not produced it in this house or in government measures in any way, shape or form in the history of the country. When one considers the obligations of those who represent rural areas and the problems they meet in consulting with their constituents, I think the figure of 33⅓ per cent which we have put forward is very reasonable.

I represent a strictly urban community. The only complaint I have had from these people is that they would like to know when the boundaries are going to be changed so that people whose interests are centered in the city of Regina can vote for a representative or representatives of the city of Regina. I have not tried to find out what the 20 per cent figure might do to my constituency and the whole area of the city of Regina. I have not tried in any way to get prior information, for the sake of argument, with regard to what might have been developed on certain bases, but I do submit that the tolerance of 20 per cent ties the hands of this non-political commission.

I fully agree that the commission should be non-political. I think it is time we had such a commission, but such a figure does not give the commission enough leeway with regard to the situation in Regina where we have a population of 120,000. The city is not large enough for two members and if the figure of 20 per cent is used and Regina is carved up to meet that tolerance the result will be that areas will be taken in that have no relationship at all to the city, and no great interest in the problems that the residents of the city want their representative to deal with.

That is the only representation that has been made to me. The people who live in the burgeoning areas outside the old city boundaries all vote in the constituency of Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, I believe, and they all complain that their voice is therefore not heard so far as the affairs of the city are concerned. It is also passing strange in my opinion that in 1952 the legislature of Saskatchewan, composed wholly of Liberal and C.C.F. members, adopted a resolution unanimously with regard to the situation in Saskatchewan, which was forwarded to a Liberal government in Ottawa and, in the words of the then prime minister, was given attention; but at the present time they have not raised their voices at all. I can only think the reason is that they would like to have fewer than 17 Conservative members from Saskatchewan and they think the only way they can accomplish this is by remaining silent and letting the over-all number of members be reduced.

Mr. Prittie: Would the hon. member answer a question?

Mr. More: I will answer if I have time when I finish. I do not intend to be interrupted now. This is a passing strange situation. I do not speak politically because I do not know whether I would be returned if all of the city of Regina were in one constituency, but I believe that these people have a reasonable claim when they wish to be represented by someone who knows what their interests are.

As I say, it is passing strange that the matter has not been raised in the Saskatchewan legislature. We were only going to lose three seats in 1952 and now we are going to lose four, but nobody in the Saskatchewan legislature is paying any attention whatsoever. There is no move on the part of the federal Liberal government to consider this factor. I think it is evident that the figure has been placed at 20 per cent because both the C.C.F. and the present government believe that their strength lies in the urban areas and they believe that such a tolerance will give them the best break in those areas.

When the 1952 redistribution took place the area north of the tracks in Regina was considered to be strong C.C.F. territory. They had a Liberal representative for Regina and that area was carved off because it was thought this would make the riding safe for that representative. That area was put into Moose Jaw-Lake Centre which was represented by an unbeatable man as a C.C.F. member by the name of Ross Thatcher, who I think has something to do now with the Liberal party so far as the present campaign in Saskatchewan is concerned. The Liberals conceded that area to him and added north Regina to it, thinking that it would be a safe C.C.F. seat and that they would get rid of John Diefenbaker. He was the man at whom all this carving was really aimed. He was the man they wanted to get rid of. They wanted to assure the election of a Liberal in the one riding while conceding the other area to Thatcher. But this political manoeuvring did not work out. Neither of these ridings is represented by a Liberal and they have not been for some time. John Diefenbaker is still here. This kind of monkey business failed.

I am glad to see the matter of redistribution being referred to a non-political commission headed by a distinguished public servant in whom I have every confidence. However, I say his hands are being tied too much by the figure of 20 per cent and I hope the minister will tell the house that the government will give consideration to changing the 20 per cent to 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. Prittie: Will the hon. member permit a question now?

Mr. More: Yes.

Mr. Prittie: Does the hon. member realize that there is nothing in this legislation causing a reduction of seats in Saskatchewan, but that it is an automatic operation under the British North America Act?

Mr. More: There were changes made in the B.N.A. Act in 1952. No changes to help Saskatchewan at this time have been mooted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should caution the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I really apologize to hon. members when I say that although it is customary in closing a debate to deal with all points that have been raised during the debate I am going to refrain from doing so on this occasion. I would not have risen at all except to say two things. One I had not intended to say until the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler), the chief whip on the other side of the house, spoke. He spoke as though in some mysterious way in what we were doing the government was going to have something to do with redistribution. It is not. I think we have given every possible evidence that any government could give in the kind of legislation we have introduced and in the kind of suggestions we have already entertained for improving that legislation, that what we want to be sure of is that the government will not, any more than the opposition, have any influence on this redistribution, that the redistribution will be done by commissions that will be set up, I hope, as a result of this legislation and that it will be done fairly, bearing in mind the point I made a long time ago when we first started this debate, that after all our duty in distributing the representation in this country is to see that the people of Canada are represented, not to elect John Diefenbaker or Ross Thatcher, to mention the last two people referred to, or anybody else.

Every elector in Canada, whether he is a Tory or a Creditiste or a Liberal or a Social Crediter or an N.D.P. or a C.C.F.'er or even someone who will not join any party is just as much entitled to be represented in this house, as long as he has a vote, as any other citizen of Canada. I think we have paid far too much attention in the past, and I hope we will not in the future, to this argument about whether one party or another may get some transitory advantage. I think the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. More) did us a service in pointing out that a lot of these calculations have rather gone awry.

I might also remind the hon. member for Regina City, because I think it is only fair to recall the facts, that the amendment that was made to the British North America Act in 1952, to which he referred, was made at the instance of Mr. Louis St. Laurent and Mr. J. G. Gardiner. This amendment was made for the purpose of taking account of the very fact to which the hon. gentleman referred, namely, that the rapid urbanization that had resulted from the war had resulted in the growth of Saskatchewan not comparing with that of the other provinces, and the loss in membership that would have taken place at that time would have been inequitable, so a period of time should be allowed to elapse to see whether or not that trend would be changed.

Mr. More: I should like to say to the minister that I support him wholly. I did not want to give any idea, as a result of my remarks, that this was not so. I said the resolution came from the legislature and that the former prime minister (Mr. St. Laurent) had paid attention to it, so there was a change made.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not seeking to quarrel with the hon. gentleman. I was seeking to agree with him. Outside of the house I nearly always agree with him about everything. He is one of those members, and I wish we had more colleagues over there, with whom it is rather hard to disagree even in the house.

The point I was making is one which I made before, namely that we are going into committee in a very few minutes on this bill and I want to emphasize once more the position which has been taken by me and by my colleagues on the treasury benches. This bill, although in form it has to be a government measure under our rules, is one for which the government feels it has no more responsibility than any other member. Any improvements that can be made to it from any quarter of the house will not be cast aside without a hearing. I hope that if we do make any changes they will not be described as somersaults or referred to by some of the other descriptive phrases that are used in this house. I hope they will be accepted in the spirit in which we have approached this from the beginning.

I hope there will be in all quarters of the house an effort to make this measure fair and make it workable. Both things are important. A measure can be theoretically fair, but because it did not follow the proper, traditional geographical boundaries in this country, it may be quite unworkable and create anomalies. I agree with the hon. member for Regina City that, as far as possible, we want to avoid constituencies being half urban and half rural. This is not a very satisfactory situation, but it cannot always be avoided. Where it obviously can be avoided, it is certainly better because it is easier for a member to represent the specialized interests of his constituency. He can be just as good a Canadian if he represents Regina City as he can if he represents Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale.

There is one point I think I should like to make. I have listened carefully to the arguments that have been made by hon. gentlemen of the official opposition. They have suggested they would prefer to have one commission. I might say that if hon. gentlemen wish to move an amendment, of course we will not attempt to have it ruled out of order. However I do not believe I could vote for such an amendment, and I will tell you why. I do not believe I could vote for it because I do not believe the job could be done in the time that we feel it ought to be done, that is to say as nearly a year as possible, with one commission. It is felt this legislation should come into effect in 1966 which is, after all, five full years after the census. The commission which was set up in Ontario nearly two years ago has so far only succeeded in dealing with metropolitan Toronto, according to reports I received. It is expected that this commission will take at least another year to complete its job. The commission now functioning would not have any more difficulties than our commission for Ontario would have. I believe this experience bears out what I have said.

I have also read recently about the latest efforts of the commission in the United Kingdom. There are four commissions there, one for England, one for Wales, one for Scotland and one for Northern Ireland. Of course the English commission has a much bigger job than the other three put together. There is no doubt that the commission in the United Kingdom was rather pressed for time because of the magnitude of the problem.

This is the reason we feel this job can be done better by ten commissions. There is no question but that we are very fortunate, and I say this without hesitation, because this and the other place put a stamp of approval upon Mr. Castonguay by legislating him as the representation commissioner. I feel we are very fortunate in having a man of his ability, background and experience to serve on all ten of these commissions. I think everybody understands he is not going to attempt to do the detailed work on any one of them. The reason we want him to be on all of them is to make sure they will be moving in step, that they will be following substantially the same rules.

Apart from the one point I have mentioned with regard to the ten commissions, and I think I would vote against any amendment to reduce the number, I would hope my views on this subject would commend themselves to a majority in the house. I would even hope that upon reflection they would commend themselves to virtually everyone in the house. Apart from that, any other suggestions for amendment to any other section of the bill, will be considered on their merits. I am speaking for myself, as sponsor of the bill, and I do not feel I should attempt to speak for anyone else in the house. I intend to look at these things dispassionately and if I think any amendment is an improvement, I am going to say I would vote for the amendment. I can do that because the Prime Minister, technically, is the sponsor of this bill. I am not sure I even have the right to be speaking now.

Mr. Nowlan: I did not want to raise the point.

Mr. Pickersgill: However, since I have started, it is too late to raise the point now.

Mr. Knowles: I do not believe we should allow the Minister of Transport to carry on in sin, if that were the case. Actually, according to the order paper, we are resuming a debate on the motion of the Minister of Transport, so on this interesting and rare occasion he is in order.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, one always feels happier to be legitimate. I thank the hon. gentleman for rendering a judgment in this case.

I do say again, as I said earlier when introducing this bill and in referring to the bill we put through in the last session of parliament to set up the office of representation commissioner, I greatly appreciate the manner in which all parties and members in the house have approached this subject and I hope that we can now fairly quickly bring it to a conclusion in the same non-partisan way.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Before we begin the discussion on this clause, Mr. Chairman, I have a suggestion to make to the committee. It is quite evident from the speeches made throughout the period of second reading, including those made today, that the most controversial clause in this bill is the one relating to the tolerance figure. We might make much better progress if we could agree, when we reach that clause, to allow it to stand, go on with the other clauses of the bill and later return to it.

The reason I make this suggestion is because occasionally, when a clause is very controversial, a lot of time is spent considering it, with the result that hon. members think they may have spent a lot of time considering the bill, and may not give the scrutiny they otherwise would to the other clauses. I think we would make better progress if we could agree to deal with all the other clauses first.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Mr. Nowlan: So long as it does not preclude anyone from making references to the quotas.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not at all.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Nowlan: No, I do not think anyone could expect clause 1 to go through without some discussion of the general features of the bill. I am sure the Minister of Transport has been pleasantly surprised this afternoon with the progress already made, and we would not want to put too much of a strain on his emotional capacities by passing clause 1 so quickly.

As the minister has pointed out, there are some clauses of the bill which are more controversial than others that can be dealt with very quickly, and it is a matter of the record that we shall deal with the quota clause later on. That is an excellent suggestion and we should proceed on that basis.

It is also a very happy thing that apparently we have a high degree of unanimity on the fact that we are dealing with this matter in a non-political manner. Those of us who have been members for a long while and have gone through redistributions in bygone days, realize the difficulties a political committee has in trying to deal with this matter. One of the fundamental problems in trying to draft a bill such as this is to leave a substantial authority with parliament and, at the same time, not have the matters referred to a commission coming back to a parliamentary committee and there going through the log-rolling and the political mill which is inevitable.

I can speak with some feeling on this matter because I had something to do with trying to draft a bill in former years that would meet this requirement. I remember the heated discussions we had in various committees, and in other places which I am not reporting on at the moment, as to whether one could draft a bill which would maintain that parliamentary control and at the same time remove this from the parliamentary committee. This bill purports to do that in a rather ingenious way. It is, of course, bypassing parliament, once parliament approves it, to something like another place where they can debate or reject, but they cannot amend. Frankly I think this is the best solution that could be arrived at.

It is an absolutely impossible problem which is involved in the passage of a bill such as this, if you are going to take it out of the political arena and, at the same time, have any report that comes back referred to a parliamentary committee. There may be better solutions. The mind of man runs to great solutions when he is under enough pressure, but personally I am prepared to accept this solution as one that reasonably meets the situation.

I also want to join with the minister, as I have on other occasions, in his tribute to the representation commissioner. I think the House of Commons is very fortunate in having the gentleman who has been named take over this office. Speaking personally, and for all my colleagues, in fact I am sure for all hon. members, I think it augurs well for this bill that we have a gentleman of his experience, ability, character, and tradition of elections and political pressures accepting this office.

As the minister says, there are two avenues which we could travel on this road. The former government of the Leader of the Opposition (right hon. Mr. Diefenbaker) brought forward a bill which proposed one commission. This present bill follows very closely the principles which we laid down, except that in place of one commission it proposes a commission for each province. Arguments can be made for either course.

The argument in favour of one commission is that you would have a higher degree of uniformity than by having ten separate commissions, and the principles applied in one province would have effect in all provinces, whereas with ten individual commissions you might have differences arising between the provinces. As against that you have the argument that one commission would take more time to carry out its work than ten commissions. Further, and this is both the strength and the weakness of the proposal, ten individual commissions will be able to apply their knowledge of the conditions in each province in bringing forward a report which would be perhaps more acceptable to an individual province than would be the case if there was only one general commission.

Against that you might have differences of approach, and differences in application of principles which would create confusion. The one guard against that is the fact that we have the representation commissioner on each of the ten commissions, and with his knowledge and experience we would probably get a high degree of uniformity in the commissions' application of principles. Though I would have preferred only one commission, I am not going to quarrel very strongly at this time with the proposal to have ten individual commissions.

There needs to be a great deal of explanation given in connection with this matter. We have had some misunderstanding in the house as to the effect of the bill and as to the effect of the British North America Act regarding the proportion of provincial seats. Unfortunately there will be a reduction in the membership of the house elected by some provinces, provinces which would naturally resent the fact that they are going to lose members. The province from which I come is going to lose one member. At one time in our history that province had a solid 18 Liberal members but that, of course, is a memory it would like to forget. Its membership will now be reduced to 11 and if the senatorial floor were to go, which one hon. member tried to remove the other day, its membership might go down to less than that in the future. In any event, there is a great deal of explanation which needs to be given when we discuss the bill in greater detail.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

I do not intend to deal with the principle of this measure any further at this time. I presume other hon. members will wish to speak briefly on the first clause. I agree with the minister that we should get on with the consideration of these clauses—not rapidly but giving them careful scrutiny—and I think the Canadian people will look upon the passage of this bill when it is finally passed, as I am sure it will be, with a great deal of pride and satisfaction.

There has been a good deal of complaint about this institution recently. Parliament it has been said, is going to the dogs. We have had commentators who could hardly find their way to the House of Commons if they arrived in Ottawa with a map and compass, pointing out to us the error of our ways. It is true we have had our difficulties—and we shall have them again. But this is what parliament is for. Most of these commentators forget that the word "parliament" is derived from the word "talk". It may be we talk too much—and perhaps I am doing that at this very moment—but we must never forget that members are sent here to express their views. When the time comes, it will be found that parliament gets along fairly well, and when members of the House of Commons are prepared to change the course which has been followed for a century as far as representation is concerned and leave the representation of their constituencies and the boundaries of those constituencies to be determined by an independent commission over which they would have no control, except to approve the findings or send them back for review in certain circumstances, I think it speaks well for the Canadian parliament and that the Canadian people can derive some satisfaction that we have achieved such a high degree of unanimity on this matter.

As far as we on this side are concerned, we will give full support to the general principle of the bill. We ourselves brought in a bill which, apart from the number of commissions envisaged, was almost the same as the measure now before us. This has been a fundamental principle with us for a long while, as it has been for the government, and I am glad to see that we have finally got the bill through second reading and are at the committee stage.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I should like to echo the sentiments of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. I do not often get the opportunity to be an echo to him, so when the opportunity does come I grab it.

I think it is fair to say that the attitude shown toward this legislation is a credit to the House of Commons. As the hon. gentleman has indicated, we do not often get patted on the back by others, so perhaps it will not do any harm if we pat ourselves on the back today. The fact is that we are dealing with a subject matter which for nine decades or more has been a most explosive one. I suppose few issues have generated as much ill-will in parliament as has the question of the redistribution of the seats in the House of Commons. For it now to be clear that we are capable, with the concurrence of all parties, of approving a bill which refers this matter to a group of independent people is, as I say, a credit to parliament.

It is true it ought to have been done long ago. As the Minister of Transport has pointed out, what we are dealing with here at this time is not the seats of particular members who happen to be here but the representation of the Canadian people. This way of doing it is a proper way, and I am sure we are all glad we have reached this red letter day in our history. As the previous speaker has said, there will be differences over some of the details. I welcome the suggestion of the Minister of Transport that clause 13 be left until the others have been disposed of. Actually, my colleagues and I do not quarrel with the 20 per cent figure which is contained in that clause but I recognize it is a subject of contention, so let us dispose of all the matters we can agree on and then have the battle, if battle there must be, over that particular clause.

There are one or two other clauses concerning which we think amendments ought to be made, and in at least one case I have the necessary amendment ready. I should like to say one word to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings by way of correcting a reference he made a short while ago. He intimated that Nova Scotia might soon be protected by the senatorial floor and he made a reference to someone—I gather it must have been to me—as wanting to remove that floor in an action taken a few days ago. I would remind the hon. gentleman that I did not seek to remove the floor at all. I may have tried to remove the Senate, but in the bill I put forward I retained the floors which the Senate now provides. In others words, I may have tried to do away with the cat but at least I tried to preserve the grin, and maybe that is what counts in this matter.

Mr. Nowlan: I think the baby would go out with the bath water.

Mr. Knowles: If it is only a grin that is left it could not swallow the baby, anyway.

Most of what needs to be said can be said on the various clauses. We join with members of all parties in the house in welcoming this opportunity for parliament to show its sense of responsibility toward this very important matter. There are details which remain to be considered, but the main point of what we are now doing is that we are making a decision to have the redistribution of constitutencies done by an independent body. This is a most welcome step.

Mr. Olson: There are only 30 or 40 seconds left until five o'clock. All I want to say is that we join with the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings and with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in saying that the passage of this bill to set up this commission will indeed be a red letter day and a proud day for parliament.

I sincerely hope this parliament will show the same spirit and attitude toward the recommendations of the commission when they come back to us as has been shown here this afternoon.

May I call it five o'clock?

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock and in order to permit the house to proceed to the consideration of private members' bills, shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again?

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions and public bills.

PENSIONS

SUGGESTION TO REDUCE QUALIFYING AGE

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of reducing the qualifying age for old age pensions, without a means test, to 67 years by 1967.

He said: I think the purpose of the proposal which stands in my name is so easily grasped that it is not necessary for me to devote any great length of time to outlining it. The intention is clearly outlined in the resolution which is now before us—to reduce the qualifying age for old age pensions, without a means test, to 67 years by 1967, that being of course our centenary year. As I put it, we are aiming at age 67 by 1967.

In my view there are two good reasons why this should be done, or at least why the principle of the resolution should be sent to an appropriate committee for study. In the first place I am sure it is well known to every hon. member in this house that there are many thousands of families across the country with senior citizens in the 65 to 70 years of age brackets, who do not have quite enough to live on and who have a little bit too much to die on. In effect, they have to eke out their existence until—if they survive—the age of 70, and then can qualify for a pension without the means test.

On that point I am encouraged to note, particularly in the last few days, that the department of health and welfare, in its outline of the proposals of the Canada pension plan as they may affect the flat rate pensions which now exist, says that it is the intention of the government to make the pension available in time to come at any age between 65 and 70 on what is called an actuarially reduced basis. If taken at age 65 the amount, I understand, is to be $51 a month. For those who choose to receive old age security on the actuarially reduced basis prior to age 70 there will be no means test. If this proposal is carried out I think it will be a worth-while, progressive social step. However, had that provision or anything like it been put into effect in years gone by, how many tragic homes would have been saved from the poverty stricken conditions which exist in them today due to the existing regulations, which condemn people to live until 70 before they can qualify without a means test to receive the $75 a month pension?

The resolution before the house, as we have heard, proposes that by our Canadian centennial year, 1967, which is only 33 or 32 months away now, we as a people should be prepared to pay the maximum pension of, say, $75 a month to all Canadians at age 67, which is in effect going a little more than half way between the ages of 65 and 70. This will, as I said, be taking a progressive step to aid in the comfort and security of our senior citizens.

Hon. members might be interested to know how many citizens would be affected if this were done. The last census figures I have for June 1, 1963 show that there are 99,000 Canadians aged 67, that there are 95,000 aged 68 and 91,000 aged 69. These are round figures. There is a total of approximately 286,000 in the age groups I seek to have pensioned at $75 a month. Of that total it is estimated that about one fifth are already on pension. The over-all percentage is 21 per cent for the age group 65 to 70. The percentage of those on pension gradually increases, of course, with age. In broad terms there are something like 200,000 senior citizens in the bracket which would be benefited by the no-means-test pensionable age of 67 by 1967.

It is my opinion there is even greater need to reduce the qualifying age of the pension and to increase the amount of the pension itself. Thousands of our older people are in effect eating their homes, which in many cases constitute their sole wealth and their sole bar to pensions. It is a question which is sometimes resolved in favour of death and sometimes in favour of pensions. In the meantime, everything that we learn about automation and the material abundance which modern production is ready to shower upon us indicates that there is a greater need to find useful jobs for our middle aged workers, and again underlines the need for a progressive revision in the qualifying age for pensions.

It is worth considering, Mr. Speaker, that in almost all other lands the pension age is now lower than 70 years. That is so whether the country concerned has a universal pension, a contributory pension, one based on years of service, or a combination of those and including a means test. The principle of a lower retirement age has been established in most countries, regardless of the type of pension and other social legislation which they have. In Great Britain, for example, the pensionable age is now 60 for women and 65 for men with a means test. In Switzerland it is 63 with no means test. In New Zealand it is 60 with a means test. In Denmark it is 62 and 67 with no means test. In the United States it is 62 and 67 with a means test. In the U.S.S.R. it is 55 and 60 with no means test. Canada, ranking very high in the world's industrial production and national wealth, has a pension age too restrictive to meet modern circumstances.

Second, in urging that this resolution be passed or sent forward to a committee for study, I might say it is very timely in view of our approaching centennial celebrations. At that time, and as I say it is only a few months away, we will undoubtedly be doing many things and undertaking many projects and a large group of our citizens, including our young people, will be involved. Therefore I think it is very fitting that at that time we should also do something for our older people. I think the centennial gives us a very appropriate opportunity in this connection. It would be very timely in our history to make this gesture on behalf of our older people, who after all are responsible in so many cases and in so many ways for much of the wealth and well-being we have in Canada at the present time.

In taking my seat may I say to hon. members that if they cannot agree to come to a vote today on this measure I would very much appreciate, as I think would many thousands of the people in this country, the principle of this resolution being referred to an appropriate committee for study.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I can see that a reconciliation is taking place.

First, may I congratulate my hon. friend (Mr. Mather) who spoke before me, for his generous intention in introducing this resolution. However, in spite of the figures he quoted and the situation which prevails in the various countries that he mentioned in order to draw a parallel between the security system in Canada, I do not believe that, under the present circumstances, we ought to envy any other nation because, if there is a country where social legislation is well advanced, I think it is certainly Canada.

Mr. Speaker, there are some people—and I do not pretend to share necessarily their opinions—who are not much in favour of the universal pension plan, because they claim that many people who would be in receipt of a pension do not need it at all, and I really believe that at the present time we cannot claim that there are people so unfortunate that they cannot find the necessary subsistence.

I realize that our social security system is especially concerned with old age security, and the efforts to set up a pension plan in this country, efforts which continue—one has only to refer to the statement made yesterday by the Prime Minister—are precisely aimed at solving the particular problem mentioned by my hon. friend.

The Canada pension plan provides for standard old age security allowances for 65 year old people. However, besides that, an allowance related to the gain should be provided, and the Canada pension plan has been designed to include this supplementary allowance. One has only to consider briefly the results of such a scheme to see how a participant can take advantage of it, if he decides to retire at age 67.

If his average contributory gains entitle him to a pension of $100, first he is eligible to the pension related to the $20 gain, to which $61 are added for old age security, which gives him a total pension of $81 per month.

In the case of an older citizen who wishes to retire, if his average income is $200, his pension based on his taxable income will be $40, plus $61, so that he will receive a total of $101 as old age security pension—and this is in the case of a 67 year old retired citizen.

On the other hand, if such a citizen has average monthly earnings of $300, he will be entitled to a pension based on those earnings amounting to $60. This person will thus receive total pension of $121, in view of the monthly amount of $61 that must be added as old age security payment and, here again, this is in the case of a 67 year old pensioner. One could keep on this subject—

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member quotes those figures, does he mean the provincial pension plan of Quebec or the Ottawa plan?

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, the pension plan I am speaking of is the national pension plan of Canada. My hon. friend, having heard the Prime Minister's statement must know that negotiations are now under way to carry out that national pension plan.

Mr. Speaker, to prove to the mover of this resolution that this pension plan more particularly aims at helping the people of the 65 to 70 age group—and I shall more particularly discuss the case of those of age 67, because this resolution would grant a pension to people of 67—I shall say that, if the contributor had a wife the same age as himself, that is 67 years, the combined monthly pension would be increased by another amount of $61. Thus, the old age security pension for the wife and the combined amounts of the monthly pension which I just mentioned would amount to $142, that is $60 plus $82, and $197 respectively. The benefits paid to a 67 year old person would therefore be much more generous, under the proposed plan, than if the people of 67 were only to receive the $75 old age security pension.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned a moment ago the statements of the right hon. Prime Minister, who said that the government was studying the details of a pension plan which the government of the province of Quebec intends to submit on a provincial basis. Without waiving the principles on which the Canada pension plan is to be based, the federal government can consider the opportunity of making a few changes in its pension plan which would ensure that, once passed, it would be the same for the whole of Canada, which is obviously desirable.

Mr. Speaker, it would be interesting to quote a few figures to show to what extent the old age security system has evolved in this country. If we consider the number of pensioners aged 70 or over, there are in Canada, 971,123 beneficiaries which represents an expenditure of about $885 million. As far as old age assistance is concerned, that is the help granted to indigent people in the 65 to 69 age group, there are 105,000 beneficiaries, which means an expenditure of $20 million for the federal government as well as for the province, as it is a joint plan where each government contributes an equal share. Therefore, we can say that 105,000 Canadian citizens get this old age assistance provided for those who are 65 years of age.

Mr. Speaker, in the field of social security, the government does all in its power to help those in need and to give the minimum required to all citizens. I said and I repeat, without any shortsighted partisanship, that anyone sitting on this side of the house can be proud that he stands for a political philosophy which provided for the setting up of the finest social security system one would find. When the national pension plan comes into force—I know it is the deep desire of any hon. member that this plan should have national scope—it will be a crowning piece of which any Canadian can indeed be proud.

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, we must commend the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) for the resolution he brought before the house, which provides us with an opportunity to state a point of view which I think is shared by all hon. members.

When I heard the hon. member for Lotbiniere praise this government without any reservation, I looked back to the amendment moved by the official opposition, to grant a $10 raise to our senior citizens, starting April 8. Well, the hon. member for Lotbiniere voted against that proposal.

Such is not the case with the resolution now before us, because the hon. member for New Westminster introduced a motion to the effect that the house should consider the opportunity to grant an old age pension to any person having reached the age of 67. It goes without saying that our senior citizens, considering their contribution to the development of our economic resources, for the greatness and the prosperity of Canada, are expecting, and rightly so, a generous treatment from the federal government.

But, on the other hand, I feel we should not think only of older people but also of those who are not yet old enough to be entitled to the old age pension. Even if the principle set forth by the hon. member for New Westminster is acceptable to all members, we still must not forget that those who are in need and between 65 and 69 years old can receive the old age assistance pension.

Today, because of mechanization or automation, people 60 years of age and over find it rather difficult to get a job. Now, would it not be better if the government, instead of paying a universal old age pension to all persons 67 years of age, would spend that money on those who are 62 years old and in need, so that the maximum or minimum age at which a person is entitled to an old age assistance pension could be reduced by two or three years? There is another point to consider, and it is the difference between the old age security or assistance pensions received by married couples and unmarried persons. If the husband and wife are both 70 or over, they actually get $150 a month. This amount enables them to meet the bare necessities of life.

On the other hand, a widow or an unmarried person only gets the $75 now provided under the act. This is not enough, because the expenses for rent, heating and essential requirements have soon taken up all this sum which is really inadequate for a person living alone. Therefore, I wonder whether the government, through social legislation, should not consider providing more assistance to those people, as the Quebec government has done. As a matter of fact, the Quebec government presented a social security measure whereby widows and single persons 60 years old or over would receive an old age pension of $75 a month, effective April 1. The situation of those people should retain the attention of all hon. members.

A moment ago, the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) spoke enthusiastically about the national pension plan. Everybody shares his opinion, but the Canadian people and hon. members are anxious to know when the government will come forward with a definite pension plan since, during the past two weeks, the government withdrew twice. And again this afternoon, the premier of Ontario stated in the Ontario legislative assembly that the Prime Minister of Canada had asked him, and the request had also been made to Quebec, to reconsider the possibility of adhering to a new pension plan likely to satisfy most of the requirements of the Canadian people.

No doubt, all those provisions will some day apply throughout Canada, and at that time, we will perhaps have to give some thought to this social security system which should be extended to the most needy people who would not be able to benefit from this new provision if they exceed the age limit provided for in the act.

If the hon. member for New Westminster is to be commended for introducing this motion, we must consider his comments and try to find a means of analysing the needs of the various classes of society, of those who have reached retirement age, so that we may offer to the rest of the world the example of a country which has devised a social legislation that will meet the needs of all classes of society.

[Text]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) on introducing this motion. I think it is fair to say it is very short, clear, simple and in a very few words states exactly what the intent is. As far as this party is concerned, we would hope that this kind of motion would be supported for several reasons.

I believe that if it were accepted and the government did in fact change the old age security qualifications by reducing the age to 67 it might in fact be an economic asset to the country, rather than costing money. I say that for this reason. Every year for the past number of years we have had an unemployment problem in the country and a large number of those on the unemployment rolls, to whom we must make payments through the unemployment insurance commission, are younger people just entering the labour market. So, Mr. Speaker, while we agree that the age limit could and should be lowered and that the means test should be removed, we think there is perhaps some merit in suggesting that one qualification should remain, namely that persons in this age group be retired. At the present time we know that there are two considerations so far as the means test is concerned. One is income and the other is assets. I have no objection at all to removing any consideration of the assets a senior citizen may have acquired in his lifetime from what is now considered to be the means test.

However, I think it would be well to retain as a qualification for receiving this pension that the applicant be retired. This would, of course, open up additional opportunities for the younger people to move into the labour market. I am thankful to the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) for providing us with statistics. He said there were something like 286,000 Canadians in this age group. I do not believe there is any way of knowing, at least the hon. member did not provide us with this information, how many of the people in this age group are today holding jobs. If these people were eligible for pension when they retired, these jobs would become available to younger Canadians. Surely every hon. member in this house would agree that it is far better to have a large number of people at the upper end of an age group receiving a pension than to have those people at the lower end of the age group receiving unemployment insurance benefits.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have long disagreed with some of the provisions in this means test. As the hon. member for New Westminster pointed out, the people who are subject to it are required to dispose of all their assets, their homes and everything accumulated during a lifetime before they become eligible for a pension. I know on a number of occasions I have had to advise senior citizens in my own constituency who had reached the age of 65, who did not have a job but were not eligible for old age assistance because of the means test, to dispose of their assets for living expenses. I assured them, of course, that after they had reduced those assets to a certain figure they would then become eligible for this payment. It is very difficult to convince elderly people to dispose of their home and spend the last few dollars in their bank account. It is difficult to convince them they should dispose of a farm, for example, and everything they have saved for their old age. In many cases these people on farms have actually retired, but they do have these few assets and the only way in which they can qualify is to dispose of these assets. I feel this is wrong.

If this motion is not going to be accepted in its entirety, Mr. Speaker, and I do believe it is a very reasonable motion because it only reduces the age limit by three years, some very real and important changes should be made in the means test. One other thing that is important to people in this age group is the medical card which is provided by some of the provinces. I certainly urge that some arrangement be made between the federal department of health and welfare and the provincial authorities responsible so that something can be done to make sure these senior citizens get a medical card. Many of the people with whom I have discussed this question are not nearly as interested in the few dollars they may be able to get under old age assistance as they are in the security that comes from having a medical card they can present to a doctor in the event they become ill. Perhaps some consideration, therefore, could be given to this question at the same time.

These are all the remarks I want to make at this time. I hope this matter comes to a vote so that we can at least obtain the consensus of the house, and I can congratulate the hon. member for New Westminster upon raising this question.

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to say a few words about this motion.

I am pleased that we are asked to examine a measure whose purpose is to help our senior citizens. However, I would have preferred that the mover provide for pensions at the age of 65 instead of 67. I feel that the government should consider the possibility of introducing before 1967 some legislation in favour of the aged.

First of all, we could find some means of setting up a pension which would be paid to those who have reached a reasonable age, while they are still alive and not too close to the grave, to enable them to spend their last days on earth under decent conditions.

Suggested Reduction of Pension Age

Moreover, we could give them an adequate amount to meet their needs, without fear of spoiling them; we could provide them with free medical and dental care, free transportation on trains, and other services, in order that our senior citizens who toiled and moiled to develop the country would be able to end their days with a modicum of comfort.

The motion says:

—without a means test—

This is a very important point because, without that, we would be unfair to those who succeeded with great difficulty in saving up a few dollars for their old age.

Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of the centennial we will celebrate shortly, I feel that the government should also think about another group of older people, those between 55 and 65. The government should do something for those people who, for one reason or another, cannot get a pension now and are unable to earn a living because of their physical condition.

Under the present plan, they are too young to get the old age pension and not disabled enough, under the law, to get the pension for the disabled. But those older citizens urgently need a pension just the same because of their poor health. In fact, do you know that a 50 year old man is sometimes in poorer shape than a 65 year old man in perfect health? Many factors are involved and the government should take them into account.

I urge the government to look after the welfare of those people and I trust that it will. There still remain a few years to improve the condition of those aged people, who are entitled to our respect and for whom we must do something on the occasion of the centennial of confederation. Through their work and intelligence, they have contributed to the development of this Canada in which we live and which we want to improve constantly in order to make it a truly wonderful country.

[Text]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think that the intent of the mover of this motion, as the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) stated, is quite clear. However, I think that this motion as a good illustration of some of the general problems of private members' motions in relation to the conduct of the business of the house.

The mover has asked that the subject matter should be sent to a committee. The house has before it a piece of legislation to which it has given first reading, the Canada pension plan, which very specifically deals with retirement age. Listening to the remarks of the hon. member who moved the motion, it was not clear to me which legislation should be specifically amended for the purpose he has in mind. Did he have in mind the reduction of the age under the federal Old Age Security Act, which is the pension now payable to all after they reach their 70th birthday? Is this the specific legislation he seeks to amend? If so, the Canada pension legislation will amend this legislation, specifically with regard to retirement age.

Mr. Barnett: Is the hon. member aware of the fact that this motion was on the order paper before we knew we were going to have a Canada pension plan?

Mr. Francis: I am perfectly aware of the timing of the resolution, but I am calling the attention of hon. members to the fact that the house has to deal in an orderly way with the business put before it. I would have thought, after a piece of government legislation had been laid before the house specifically dealing with the subject matter of this resolution, the mover of the resolution might have withdrawn it, or might have deferred seeking consideration of it until the house was in committee dealing with the Canada pension plan legislation.

If the government had not taken any initiative on this matter and had not presented any legislation to the house, then the hon. member would have been correct in presenting a private member's motion on the matter.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Francis: Certainly.

Mr. Knowles: In view of the fact that the government's pension legislation is presently being reviewed, so that we are in the dark as to what may come up, does he not think it a good idea to have a suggestion of this kind put forward at this time for consideration?

Mr. Francis: I thank the hon. member for his question because his questions are usually informative, but may I suggest the next implication of such a resolution is that it should not be implemented by unilateral action of this house. It should be the subject of discussion between the federal and provincial authorities, the very kind of discussion which I presume is taking place now, and which has taken place in recent months.

If the experience of the house on social legislation under our constitution means anything, and it must, I would have preferred the wording of a resolution which would have said something to the effect that the government should initiate discussions with the provincial authorities for appropriate amendments to the legislation now in force. This is not the wording of the resolution before us, and the adoption of this resolution would not only have implications for the old age security scheme but for the federal old age assistance program, which should be discussed with the provincial authorities.

Mr. Knowles: Is the hon. member not aware of the fact that anything now in existence without a means test is purely federal, and that the provinces do not come into anything without a means test?

Mr. Francis: I see I am going to have to spell this out in a little more detail for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). There is a piece of legislation which deals with pensions on a means test basis between the ages of 65 and 70 years, and the adoption of a pension program without a means test after the 67th birthday would certainly have an implication for the existing program of old age security benefits, and at the very least would call for discussions with the provincial authorities. I do not think the hon. member would contend otherwise. I would be surprised if he did.

Mr. Olson: May I ask the hon. member a question. If he reads the motion on the order paper he will see it says "should consider the advisability." Surely that must answer all the objections he raises so far as consultation with the provinces is concerned, because it would naturally be expected that would be part of the consideration of advisability.

Mr. Francis: Again, I am following the discussion which was so ably initiated during private members' hour yesterday by a colleague of the mover of this resolution, who raised the fundamental of the functions of private members' hour. I contend that, at this stage, when there is legislation before the house which deals very specifically with the point raised here, it is not a wise contribution to put the house through this form of discussion, which duplicates the work already being done.

My contention is that if the mover of the motion feels this is the most appropriate form of action, then I suggest to him he has an alternative, and I refer him to the Canada pension bill, No. C-75, which has already been given first reading. Clause 33 of that bill says:

> Subject to this part, for each month commencing as described in section 43,
> (a) an earnings-related pension shall be paid to a contributor who
> (i) has reached 65 years of age and is retired from regular employment, or > (ii) has reached 70 years of age;

That is the point at which the appropriate amendment could be put in specific terms before the house, and I think this would be a more appropriate form of action for the hon. member moving the motion.

Suggested Reduction of Pension Age

There are two or three other basic questions which give me some concern. I have listened in the house to other motions presented by the hon. member and some of his colleagues, motions for which I have had a great deal of sympathy. They have related to the including of such things as mental and t.b. institutions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. I have listened to a large number of other resolutions, all of which would have the effect of causing very important expenditures in terms of money. I am aware that money is not the only means by which we judge these matters but, by the arithmetic of the hon. member who introduced this motion, 99,000 persons age 67, as well as 95,000 persons aged 68, and 92,000 persons aged 69, a total of 286,000 persons come into this category.

He estimated that under the old age assistance program approximately 21 per cent of those within the ages 65 to 69 years are currently drawing the means test benefit, and he boosted his estimate to say that something like 200,000 additional persons would be eligible for pension as the result of the adoption of his motion. This would cost something like $180 million a year, at $900 a year per person, and it must be remembered that we have the problem of priorities in the expenditure of public funds.

The mover of the motion contended that there was a great deal of hardship, as no doubt there is. There are many families who are too proud to apply for the means test benefit. He is putting forward his proposal that we should extend the federal pension without test of means, without test of retirement, on this basis, and that presumably priority should be given to this action over many other worthy social measures currently before the house.

I admit the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) does not quite agree with this. If I understood him correctly, he said the retirement test would be a legitimate means of restricting some of the persons in these age groups who have accumulated fairly substantial personal resources in the course of their lives. He also seemed to feel that the purpose of a pension should be to aid employment opportunities for people in the younger age groups, and not to keep older people in jobs while at the same time they are drawing pensions. This is what I understood to be the purport of his remarks. He would differ with the resolution as it is presented to us, by agreeing generally to the kind of retirement test which I understand is incorporated in the Canada pension plan.

Again, we must go back to the whole question of what we are trying to do on an age basis with respect to universal retirement.

The hon. member who introduced this motion might well have presented to us some of the reasons for his selection of the age year 67. The only reason, I gather from his remarks, was that it lends itself to a slogan—"67 for 1967". I wonder if that is really good enough to justify the choice of the base year for retirement benefit. According to statistics which are increasingly available, we can anticipate a continuing increase in the life span. We also hope there will continue to be high levels of employment in Canada and that we shall need the services of as many people as can be properly given employment, realizing that it may well be in the best interests of the health and peace of mind of our senior citizens that they should continue to be employed. In short, we must judge the retirement age on some rational basis. It must be related to the state of health of people in their older years, the life expectancy, employment practice, and so on.

One of the problems we shall have to consider more seriously than we have done so far, is what provision shall be made in our society for the increasing number of people who are able to retire, especially if we incorporate, with their pension provision, compulsory retirement tests. It is of course very nice to retire. I am sure many of us think that when we retire, if we have the resources to do so, we shall be enjoying a pleasant state of affairs. But in terms of public policy and the evidence we have from those who make it their business to study the problems of older people, I think the conclusion is generally held that there is such a thing as an optimum age which we should consider as a basis for our pension program.

It is perfectly clear that many people wish, for good reason, to retire at an earlier age than 67. How far should we extend the operation? How far, and with what financial inducement, should we make it possible for these choices to be made? How far should public policy go in exercising a degree of compulsion through such devices as retirement tests, and what should be done to provide facilities for keeping older people in good health and engaged in useful activity after retirement? What program should we develop along these lines?

I have the feeling that while this is a most desirable resolution, there are other factors to be considered. As my colleague from Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) used to say, supporting it is equivalent to being against sin. No one can object in principle. However, I think we must consider such other factors as priorities in the budget, and the sum of money involved in adopting a principle of universal payments without restriction through means tests. We have to weigh this expenditure against the cost of other things we would like to bring in by way of welfare measures, and there are many such measures which I think the house would wish to consider. For example, we have extended family allowances in respect of children in school. We plan to spend a lot more money in encouraging young people to choose and fit themselves for careers. More money is to be spent on the development of research, generally, in Canada. All these things are claims on our national income. So we would have to consider very carefully how far we should go in reducing the universal retirement age and bringing in measures which would encourage general universal retirement at an age when men and women are still in good health, and taking them away from activities which may well be an explanation of the levels of health and activity which they enjoy.

One last comment I should like to make relates to what was said by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson). He referred to measures which he hoped would be forthcoming to encourage the provision of what he called medical cards. Certainly the problem of adequate health services for people in these higher age groups is one which should command high priority. Many provinces, particularly in western Canada, have shown a commendable concern for the development of health services through publicly supported means, by agreement in most cases with the medical profession. In the case of Saskatchewan, I believe this scheme is directly administered by the province. Without question this is one of the fields which should be examined as part of any general examination of matters relating to the retirement age.

I, for one, put a higher priority on the provision of a fund which would give every province in Canada encouragement to enter into agreements with the medical profession which would provide adequate medical care for men and women in these age groups, many of whom are barely self-supporting but who are not self-supporting when an additional burden of ill health is thrown upon them, than I would on the particular motion before us. The recommendation made by the hon. member is something which will, no doubt, come about as we gradually develop the earnings-related pension benefit plans, which I am sure are part of the unfolding picture in Canada today.

May I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being six o'clock, the hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nowlan: May I inquire of the acting leader of the house what business we shall be dealing with tomorrow and the rest of the week?

Mr. MacNaught: Tomorrow we shall continue with the committee stage of the boundaries bill and, if it is finished, we shall proceed then to the third reading of that bill. Last night I announced we would take up the resolution preceding the Post Office Act amendment. If that is finished tomorrow, on Friday we would proceed with the second reading stage of that measure and then to the budget resolutions, and on Monday a motion to go into supply.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 16, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF ADDRESS ON BIRTH OF THIRD SON

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a message from Her Majesty the Queen signed by her own hand, which has been transmitted to me by His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. Speaker:

The address which you have sent to me and which conveys your congratulations to myself and to my husband on the birth of our third son has given me very great pleasure and on this happy occasion we both deeply appreciate the kind sentiments and good wishes which you have expressed.

TRADE

TABLING OF EXCHANGE OF LETTERS RESPECTING U.K. CEREAL IMPORT POLICIES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on March 19 and on earlier occasions I have informed the house of the discussions that have been taking place with the British government concerning their proposed new cereals policies. Hon. Lionel Chevrier, Canadian high commissioner in London, yesterday signed on behalf of the government of Canada an exchange of letters constituting an agreement between the Canadian government and the government of the United Kingdom concerning Britain's new production and import policies with respect to cereals. I ask leave of the house to table the text of this exchange of letters and supporting documents.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house grant leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: Similar agreements have been concluded between Britain and its other principal overseas cereal suppliers, Argentina, Australia and the United States. I regard these arrangements as constructive and helpful. I am confident they will strengthen trade in cereals between Canada and Britain, and that they can contribute to the working out of broader cereals arrangements of an international character. These arrangements with the British and with their other principal overseas cereal suppliers were worked out in a spirit of close co-operation and understanding.

These arrangements are complex. I am reluctant to take the time of the house to comment on them at this time, although I am prepared to do so. Instead, Mr. Speaker, I have prepared an explanatory memorandum and I would ask the consent of the house to have it printed as an appendix to today's Hansard to assist hon. members in their study of the agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, ordinarily in a matter of this importance we would expect the minister to make a statement. However, I quite appreciate that the matter is highly technical and I presume that any statement he might make would not be brief. I think it would be helpful to the house if the minister had leave, without creating a precedent, to table this statement at this time. Then hon. members would have an opportunity of studying it and at a later date could ask questions in the house dealing with it.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of statement referred to above, see appendix.]

OLD AGE SECURITY

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Did the Prime Minister receive a request from the Quebec government, at the federal-provincial conference or since then, to the effect that it be handed over the whole administration of the Old Age Security Act, as far as the province of Quebec itself is concerned?

Could the Prime Minister also tell me what compensation the Quebec government is asking to take over that administration?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No such request has been received.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REPORTED ACTION IN SELF DEFENCE BY CANADIAN TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to a report concerning action taken by Canadian troops in the United Nations force in Cyprus. I should like to ask whether the action taken by Major Tremblay, who said he had to take this action in self defence, was in keeping with instructions from the Canadian government. Was the government consulted; and if the instructions issued by the United Nations do not permit such action being taken, could they be amended so such action could be taken without violation of instructions?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Whatever action was reported as having been taken by the Canadian contingent participating in the force would be pursuant to the relations between the Canadian contingent and the commander of the United Nations force. Canada does not give direct instructions to the Canadian contingent. These are given by the commander of the force, who in turn is responsible to the United Nations. The action purported to have been taken is consistent with the instructions laid down by the secretary general.

SOUTH VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, bearing in mind reports today of what appears to be the increasing gravity of the military situation in South Viet Nam. I wonder whether the minister would consider informing the house of the situation there, as well as Canada's involvement in United States policy.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As I said the other day, the military situation in South Viet Nam has for some time been of concern to Canada as a member of the supervisory and control commission in South Viet Nam. However, it is not clear to me what the hon. member means when he speaks of a developing crisis or of Canadian involvement in United States strategy. I would simply say, we are not in any way involved in the sense of the implication of the question.

[Mr. Pearson.]

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he is yet in a position to make a statement to the house with regard to the negotiations with certain provinces about the Canada pension plan. If not, does he hope to be able to make that statement tomorrow?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yesterday I said I hoped to be in a position to make that statement in a day or two. I expect to be in a position to make it not later than Monday of next week.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Does the Prime Minister inform the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare of the decisions he makes following his negotiations with Mr. Lesage concerning changes to be brought to the Canada pension plan?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is the government considering holding a constitutional conference representing all the provinces so as to discuss, and if possible agree upon, amendments to the British North America Act which will permit the Canada pension plan to embody benefits which now are limited only to the provinces?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that can perhaps be done without the kind of full scale constitutional conference to which the hon. member refers; but I hope that in my statement on Monday I will be able to throw some light on this.

Mr. Nowlan: Thank you.

INCOME TAX

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO BEHAVIOUR OF OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue.

Since the incidents which occurred last year at the Quebec city income tax office seem to be happening again this year, could the minister order an investigation in that office concerning the work of income tax inspectors and assessors?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that this question was asked during the last session, and in spite of its importance I do not believe it is sufficiently urgent to ask at this time. If the hon. member would put it on the order paper I am sure he would get an answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, it is true that this question has been asked on several occasions last year. However, the situation is not the same this year due to certain circumstances. Since the same thing is happening and that we keep getting a great number of letters in this connection, I wonder whether the minister could not tell us at least if he intends to conduct an investigation into the matter. I feel that this problem is very urgent, because the fiscal year has just ended.

[Text]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to take this question as notice. It is obviously a question that cannot be answered without notice.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Then, could the minister consider the question as notice and give me an answer tomorrow?

[Text]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS FROM FEDERAL CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is the minister in a position to inform the house of the outcome of the talks which were being held with the Alberta provincial authorities in connection with the Colonel Belcher hospital in Calgary?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I am not yet in a position to report to the house on that matter, but I am hoping I will be able to do so before too long. I think the hon. member will appreciate that there are many details which have to be looked into. There is nothing new to report at the moment.

Mr. Harkness: As a supplementary question, could the minister assure the house that before any final arrangement is made in connection with this matter, the veterans organizations, particularly those in Calgary, will be taken into consultation?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, I can certainly give my hon. friend that assurance.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): As a supplementary question, would the minister use the occasion of his attendance at the annual convention of the Canadian Legion to make a statement clarifying the position of veterans hospitals?

Mr. Teillet: That is certainly my hope, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): My question is supplementary to a previous question asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and I wish to direct it to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The hon. gentleman said he intended to make a statement in clarification of government policy regarding veterans hospitals. Is my correct understanding that he intends to make this statement at a Legion convention rather than in the House of Commons?

Mr. Teillet: I do not know what the purpose of that question may be, but I have said before in this house that the question of clarification is a difficult one because I have to deal with each case on its own merits. It would only be when I had a clearcut case before me that a situation could arise to which the hon. member's thinking would apply. This is what I hope to be able to do, and it was in that context that I answered the previous question.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Would the hon. gentleman inform us what answer he has given to a telegram sent to him from the Royal Canadian Legion in Calgary, which reads as follows:

> Number one branch of the Royal Canadian Legion expresses strongest possible opposition to proposed Belcher hospital solution. Unable to see logic of this policy when veterans are presently being denied admission.

What answer has been given to this telegram?

Mr. Teillet: I do not have the answer to the telegram before me. I would be glad to look it up and report.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO NUMBER OF RECIPIENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): In the absence of the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to his parliamentary secretary. According to the latest d.b.s. figures there are 456,000 Canadians unemployed. Could the parliamentary secretary tell us how many Canadians are taking advantage of the unemployment insurance fund at present?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely this is a question requiring detailed information which the parliamentary secretary may or may not have at the moment. I suggest that it be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN CONFEDERATION

SUGGESTED REARRANGEMENT INTO FIVE PROVINCES INSTEAD OF TEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether his government is going to support the suggestion of the premier of British Columbia that a new territorial definition of the provinces should be made in Canada, so that instead of ten provinces we would only have five?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important suggestion into which I would not care to go at the moment.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RIGHT OF MEMBER TO CRITICIZE PUBLIC SERVANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General, who is the acting house leader. Does the hon. gentleman consider it unconstitutional for a member of parliament to criticize a public servant in the House of Commons?

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, neither the Minister of Justice nor myself, under the constitution, can give an opinion of that nature.

COMPLETION OF TRANSLATION OF BEAUCHESNE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) about the translation of Beauchesne's. I am pleased to tell him that the work has been completed and the text sent to the publishers. It is expected that the proofs can be corrected within the next few weeks and that the work will be published in June or early July.

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

SHIPPING

APPRAISAL BY INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION ON GREAT LAKES WATER LEVELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister table the appraisal made by the international joint commission on the situation as to water levels in the great lakes, recently forwarded to the government by the commission?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to take that into consideration.

AGRICULTURE

STEPS TO IMPROVE POSITION OF EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he tell the house what steps he intends to take, in conjunction with the provincial government, to solve the problems of eastern farmers who are now in a deplorable economic stagnation?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this is a wide, broad, general question to which perhaps the minister may have the answer, but I very much doubt if he could give a detailed answer at this time on such a wide question.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say we are working on it.

[Later:]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture once again. My last question was pretty wide in scope, but the malaise existing in the eastern provinces is also pretty wide in scope. Has the government any announcement to make to the house with regard to what it intends to do to raise the low incomes of all eastern farmers?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, we are working on this matter on behalf of all the farmers in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not see where there is any supplementary question. Yesterday I ruled a similar question out of order but today I allowed it in order to get the matter settled. I do not see how any supplementary arises at this stage.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to ask the minister whether he intends to establish a policy designed to help Canadian tobacco growers who are discriminated against by the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

[Text]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is not the first time I have brought up the question in this house, as have other hon. members also. This matter was brought up last fall during the previous session, and right now the minister is delaying and taking his time in giving a definite answer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is indulging in an argument, not raising a point of order.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, this is a point of order. I think the minister should at least tell the eastern farmers what he intends to do to help them out of their financial problems which exist today and which are so very lamentable. I think the government are faced with some drastic measures which they will have to take sooner or later.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. gentleman will study his standing orders he will see that he should not make argumentative statements at this time.

TOBACCO—REQUEST FOR PUBLICITY EXPENDITURE TO HELP GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, whom we are happy to see in the house?

In view of the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) has $400,000 at her disposal to undertake an advertising campaign against the use of tobacco, does the Minister of Agriculture intend to ask the house to vote a similar amount so as to assist tobacco growers who will be adversely affected thereby?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Has she consulted the tobacco growers associations before publishing a volume against the use of tobacco?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

PUBLICATIONS

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON FOREIGN OWNERSHIP OF NEWSPAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question. Has there been any further development in the last week or so in government policy on daily newspaper ownership by other than Canadian interests? I raise the question now because of rumours in Toronto about the sale of certain newspapers to foreign interests.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no new development in the last week or so on this matter.

TRADE

RAPESEED—REQUEST FOR EFFORTS TO EXPAND MARKETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce which is of urgency before the western farmers start seeding. Since Canada is the world's largest exporter of rapeseed, and since this grain is not under the jurisdiction of the Canadian wheat board, would the minister not have his officials look into the possibility of finding additional markets, particularly in Asia, so the farmer can diversify his crops and not put all his eggs in one basket?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I thank the hon. gentleman for acknowledging the great accomplishments of this government in the field of exporting rapeseed. I can assure him that not only are we following up this matter and trying to expand the market still further, but that an oil seeds mission is in fact about to leave for Japan.

SOCIAL INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO APPLICATION BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether he has signed up for a social insurance number yet.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am waiting to get a suitable cameraman to take a picture of me doing so.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR ANNUAL REPORT OF DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): My question is directed to the Postmaster General. I wonder if the hon. gentleman can explain to the house why his report for 1963 which was tabled on April 2 has not as yet been delivered; at least I have not received my copy.

Mr. Knowles: I have mine.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): My first information was that they would be put in the mail today, but I then asked if they could be delivered to hon. members' rooms and I was told they were all delivered before the house met this afternoon.

Mr. Hales: Would the Postmaster General say whether there had to be an alteration made to this report?

Mr. Nicholson: There had to be a correction in the date of the report signed by myself. It was a clerical error; it had been dated earlier than the date when I took office. I noticed it myself and promptly had it corrected.

Mr. Hales: Does the same explanation apply to the letter signed by the deputy postmaster general?

Mr. Nicholson: I would think so. It is purely a question of the date. I caught it myself before distribution was made and directed that it be changed.

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Postmaster General can say why the original copy that was tabled earlier on April 3 contained on page 5 a letter from the deputy postmaster general dated April 1, 1963 and addressed to Hon. Azellus Denis; because I believe the election did not take place until April 8 and the Postmaster General was not sworn in until April 22.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I asked the same question, and that resulted in the correction.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR HEARING BEFORE CONVERSION OF STATION CJBC TO FRENCH LANGUAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Wellington South asked me some time ago if the board of broadcast governors had arranged for a public hearing concerning the conversion plan for station CJBC in Toronto. I am informed by the B.B.G. that the board has no plans to hold a public hearing in this respect, and that the conversion involves a question of programming, which is a matter resting with the C.B.C. I am further informed that in the board's opinion it does not have the right to order a public hearing in this respect.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN CIVIL SERVICE APPLICATION FORM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Oxford with respect to changes in the civil service application form. Section 40, paragraph 1 of the Civil Service Act requires the civil service commission to give preference to Canadian citizens either by birth or naturalization. To implement this the commission must verify claims to Canadian citizenship. This is done, without any discrimination, by asking for birth certificates in the case of citizens by birth and, in the case of others, by requesting information which will enable the commission to check claims against the records of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

FINANCE

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON DRUGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has he had extensive representation for the removal of the sales tax on drugs in Canada; and if so, is the government contemplating taking that step?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The answer is no to both questions, Mr. Speaker.

REFUNDS OF SALES TAX TO CHURCHES, SCHOOLS AND HOSPITALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of National Revenue. Could the minister say whether a satisfactory formula has been devised by the Department of National Revenue to provide the refund of the sales tax on building materials as it applies to churches, schools and hospitals; and if not, when does he expect to have one?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that this question requires further investigation than one could expect at this time. May I suggest the order paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO POLICY RESPECTING RETIREMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Have the 500 officers in the air force who are being retired prematurely been notified individually of their retirement, or are they still being kept in suspense?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether they have yet been notified, but if they have not they will be at once.

The hon. member for Bow River asked a question yesterday in this regard, and I may say now that approval has been given to a proposal to advance the release date of a number of R.C.A.F. aircrew and air traffic control officers. These officers numbering about 500 are surplus to present and anticipated requirements during the normal period of their unexpired service.

The group concerned consists of an equal number of short service commissioned officers, serving extensions, and permanent commissioned officers nearing the end of their service career. Their termination of service is in no way a reflection on the officers concerned. On the contrary, their loyal and devoted service is recognized. Both categories have been selected to preserve a reasonable age spread among aircrew officers. Future programming confirms that these personnel will remain surplus to requirements, and in consequence it is planned to release or retire them this summer. All concerned, both short service and permanent commissioned officers, are included in the special benefits plan now being considered by the government for service personnel no longer required.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question. Are similar mass lay-offs being planned among the officer personnel of the army and navy?

Mr. Hellyer: Reductions will take place whenever surpluses are determined and whenever it is not possible to provide adequate employment for the personnel.

Mr. Nielsen: Could the minister advise the house whether he or his department is now planning any such mass lay-offs in the army and navy among the officer personnel?

Mr. Hellyer: There are no immediate plans in this direction but as the integration process goes forward reductions will take place in all three services, as announced previously.

Mr. Eldon Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Is any extra compensation planned for these men who are being let out now before their service expires?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have just indicated that the government is now considering a plan which will have this effect.

SHAWINIGAN, QUE.—AMOUNT OF CLOTHING STOLEN FROM ARMOURY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence which is based on an answer to a written question which was given me yesterday. It refers to the items and quantities of military equipment stolen from national defence property since last September, and my interest in part was as to the amount of military clothing which was taken from the Shawinigan armoury in Quebec, the amount being unknown to me.

The answer I received from the minister reads "Unknown amount of military clothing, February 20, 1964, Shawinigan armoury, Shawinigan, Quebec". Can the minister explain that answer and give the house some indication why it is impossible to ascertain the amount of military equipment stolen?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): I will be happy to look into this matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, "looking into the matter" is scarcely enough. I placed a written question on the order paper which stood there for almost two months, and this is the type of answer which is produced. The quantity of equipment is unknown to me, and the answer I get is "quantity unknown". Surely this is a flagrant abuse of the rules affecting answers which should be given in the house.

Mr. Speaker: The minister has said that he will look into the matter, and I think he should be given time to do so.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question was very voluminous and I cannot say any more at this time than that I will look into the matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

SUBMISSIONS TO ROYAL COMMISSION BY MEMBERS OF PUBLIC SERVICE AND ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Following the question I asked yesterday, could the Prime Minister tell us today whether federal civil servants can personally submit briefs to the Laurendeau-Dunton commission without fear of reprisals from the government? Are members of the armed forces in the same situation?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I said that I would look into this matter and reply as soon as I am able. I am not able to reply today, but I hope to do so either tomorrow or on Monday.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROSECUTION FOR REPORTED VIOLATION OF WELFARE REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is properly addressed to the Minister of Justice, but in his absence I will address it to the Prime Minister, since it concerns his riding. On page 11 of today's Globe and Mail a situation is revealed which violates or takes undue advantage of welfare payments. I am wondering whether the Prime Minister can tell us if the Department of Justice is investigating the possibility of prosecuting the people mentioned in this story for obtaining welfare payments under false pretenses.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker. I am not familiar with this story but I will be very happy indeed to look into it; and if the facts are as alleged I should think prosecution would be undertaken.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RESEARCH INTO AIR POLLUTION FROM VEHICULAR TRAFFIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I will direct this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is any research being carried on by the minister's department with a view to discovering ways and means of curbing air pollution by vehicular traffic, which is becoming an increasingly serious threat to the health of the nation?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my department is conducting research into air pollution generally and we are keeping a close eye on efforts aimed at reducing the noxious gases from internal combustion engines. We are also in close contact with the United States public health service, which is spending vast amounts of money on this problem, and we are expecting to benefit from any developments which may take place there. Also automobile manufacturers in Canada and the United States have intensive research projects under way with a view to introducing measures to control pollution.

CANADIAN FLAG

ADOPTION OF RED ENSIGN BY PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Now that the Manitoba legislature has approved a bill naming the Canadian red ensign as their official flag, has the Prime Minister heard of any other legislative bodies which are about to follow this good example?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

FELICITATIONS ON OPENING OF HALL OF CONFEDERATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the inauguration of the confederation hall which took place yesterday, no doubt the minister will allow us to congratulate him on having chosen such a name for this splendid hall.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to accept those congratulations which I shall pass on to those responsible, and not necessarily the minister.

Mr. Ricard: The previous government.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF BILINGUAL INSCRIPTIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Cote (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Public Works. Since the government is in favour of a bi-national confederation, has the Department of Public Works started to put bilingual inscriptions on federal buildings throughout Canada?

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend's question deals with the national policy on public buildings throughout Canada. After I have secured the proper information I will be glad to answer him in a few days, or as soon as possible.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPRESENTATION ON COMMITTEE TO ADMINISTER DISASTER FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the government received a request to name a representative to a committee to administer the Alberni valley and west coast disaster fund? If so, what action has the government taken on this request?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is quite true that I received a wire from Mayor Hammer of Port Alberni asking us to make such an appointment. This request was supported in a telephone conversation I had with Mr. Lawrence Wallace, deputy minister of welfare for the province. I told them I would hesitate to make an appointment to a committee to disburse a fund to which at this moment we were not contributors.

I think I should tell the house that, very commendably, the member for the riding returned to his riding and remained there for several days. I believe he will agree with me that in general the immediacy of the situation has been taken care of and that the opinion is firmly held and there is every confidence that full reconstruction will take place. As I have already reported to the house, we are awaiting the report of the Earle firm of adjusters, at which time we expect the provincial government to advise us of their intentions.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

The house resumed, from Wednesday, April 15, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith—Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Pearson)—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I have a few brief remarks I should like to make.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I believe the hon. member for Medicine Hat had the floor.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I believe the hon. member for Medicine Hat had the floor yesterday.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I am perfectly happy to defer to the hon. member.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I had spoken for about 30 or 40 seconds yesterday before five o'clock, and I will take about the same amount of time now on the first clause of the bill. I simply want to say that our party stated its position at the resolution stage. There are a number of questions we want to ask. We will seek a number of clarifications, particularly with regard to clauses 12 and 13. There are other clauses, of course, such as clause 17 with regard to which we will want a more detailed explanation. However, we are prepared now to proceed with the clause by clause study and to raise these matters as they come up. That is all we have to say at this point.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks I should like to make on this bill, which is being piloted through the house by the Minister of Transport. I am grateful to the minister for the open-minded view he is taking of the problems involved for the purpose of having as fair an assessment of the situation as possible made, with the hope that a solution can be arrived at which will have the general support of all parties in the house. I think this should be our objective. Some members are a bit mystified as to why the Minister of Transport should be piloting this bill, and someone has facetiously suggested that it has something to do with telegraphing votes. But having said that may I say I do not subscribe to that view at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can assure the hon. gentleman that is not in the least necessary in Newfoundland.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): There are two or three things I wish to bring to the minister's attention. I have noted his statement that it is proposed to stand clause 13 until a later time because in his view it is controversial. Arguments have already been put forward by many members indicating why they believe there should be a greater variation than 20 per cent allowed from the unit of representation as far as certain areas are concerned. These arguments have chiefly had to do with rural areas. I agree with them, but I am not going to discuss that point further at this time.

However, I think this same principle applies with great force to another important segment of Canada, and I refer to suburbia. I commend to the minister's attention the speeches that have been made by the hon. member for Carleton and the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond, I believe, in this connection, as well as those by other members. I regret though that as I understand their remarks they have set out certain premises and have come to conclusions which are diametrically opposed to the conclusions that I think the premises justify.

If the minister will bear with me, I say that for this reason. They are concerned with rapidly growing areas in Canada, and I think it is the wish of everybody in the house that these areas should be fairly represented. But I should like to point out that I do not believe this objective can be achieved by having a limited deviation from the unit of representation. If you take the extreme case where the deviation has diminished to the vanishing point and you have an area with the exact population of the unit of representation in 1961—let us say 70,000 for the sake of argument—by the time the commission undertakes the redistribution of this area they will be forced under these circumstances to make the area one constituency regardless of its present population or its rate of growth. On the other hand, if there is a deviation of 20 per cent allowed they can cut the riding down to an area that had a population of roughly 54,000 in 1961, and this would be a desirable thing if it had grown very rapidly in the meantime and now had a population of perhaps 150,000. However, they could make the redistribution even fairer if they were given greater leeway to take into account the rapid growth that might occur from one redistribution to another. In some cases the growth will have already taken place since the last census by the time the commission undertakes the redistribution.

If you were to allow a deviation of 30 per cent, for example, you could take a riding with a population of 45,000 in 1961, let us say, and still make it into a riding now even if its population should be much above the unit of representation at the time the commissioners are making the readjustment. To take an extreme case, let us say you have an area where there were only 10 people living in 1961 and which may have a population now of 200,000. You would have to do the redistribution on the basis of the fact that there were 10 people living there in 1961. That would be the only variation that would be allowed.

I feel that perhaps this has been overlooked, but I believe if the minister studies these speeches carefully he will come to the conclusion to which I have come, namely that this is another forceful argument for allowing a greater tolerance, at least in this first redistribution which is being conducted on rather an experimental basis. In this way these rapidly growing areas can be reasonably well accommodated and they will not have a population the size of two normal constituencies even at the time they are created.

The other point I want to raise just for a moment relates to dual ridings. I hope the minister will be able to find himself in a position to have one of his colleagues move, at the proper time, that the appropriate section be amended to allow the commission to recommend the retention of the existing dual ridings if they so wish. I do not believe the commission should be obligated to maintain dual ridings, but I believe it should have that option. Dual ridings have perhaps some disadvantages but they also have advantages, and in some ways they are fairer than single ridings to the people who elect members to parliament.

I believe that in Prince Edward Island at first there were three dual ridings which were eliminated following the census of 1891, and five single ridings were created. At a later redistribution the dual ridings were again created, so there must have been a good reason for them. They have continued to be recreated at every redistribution since that time. I believe there is perhaps even greater force to the argument that the other dual riding should be retained, but I will not go into that argument.

However, I should like to give one illustration of what I am talking about. You could have a situation in an election when a member of parliament is elected to this house by a majority of one vote.

Mr. Pickersgill: We have one.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I agree with the theory that members of parliament represent everyone in their constituencies, the people who have voted against them as well as the people who have voted for them. I wholeheartedly support that view. Nevertheless, it is seldom that you have that sort of situation in a dual riding. In a single riding, as the political pendulum swings from one party to another you reach a point where a member is elected by a very small majortiy. In a dual riding it is very rare for the candidates of any one party to get exactly the same number of votes, although in the case of Queens the other member for Queens and I polled very close to the same vote on most occasions. In dual ridings there is usually a spread of votes between the candidates of any particular party, with the result that as the political tide moves you have an area in which you have members from two different parties elected. In that situation everybody in the riding feels that at least one of his men has been elected and he is represented in the House of Commons in a very particular way.

This is only one of the arguments for dual ridings. There are a number more. I am not wedded to any particular view as to whether dual ridings should be continued or eliminated, but I should like to see the commission concerned given the option of studying that particular question and then coming to whatever conclusion they may think proper rather than have parliament, in a rather arbitrary way, say that dual ridings should no longer exist.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might rise to speak to a point of order in a completely non-controversial way. My point of order does not relate to what the hon. gentleman said about dual ridings but is related to the first part of his speech. We did have, I thought, an understanding that we would save the discussion on tolerance until we got to clause 13. I did not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I wonder if we could not agree to wait until we get to clause 13 in order to avoid having that debate twice.

Mr. Woolliams: If I may speak to the point of order, I may say that on the first item I intend to speak about a number of subjects that are rather interlinked, one of which may be the tolerance factor. When we get to that particular section of the bill we can deal with that subject in particular way. However, on the first item we can deal with the subject in a general way and discuss how it will affect the whole situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: We had a rather long debate on second reading in which this subject was rather well canvassed. I do not want to seem restrictive in any way, but I just wondered if hon. members did not feel they could keep this particular subject until we come to the clause dealing with it. I assume that the big debate is going to be on this subject, and I thought perhaps general observations could be made on the first clause.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I was only trying to save time. I was trying to put forward this point of view so the minister would have time to consider it, because to my knowledge it has not been raised before.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not believe the point had been raised before.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I did not want it to come as a surprise to the minister if he had not considered the point when the particular section came up. I had finished my remarks, and if the minister had not raised this point I would now be seated.

Mr. Churchill: If I may speak to the same point the minister has raised, I would say I was not present yesterday. However, I have read Hansard very carefully and I did not interpret what was said by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings as agreement on the proposition now put before us by the Minister of Transport. I intend to speak on item No. 1 and I may refer to the tolerance factor. It is all very well for the Minister of Transport to say we have had a lengthy debate on this subject, but there are some members who spoke on the resolution stage, some on second reading, and others have not had an opportunity as yet to speak. So far as I am concerned, I spoke for ten minutes the other night, and I will not submit to any restriction with regard to item No. 1.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate what the minister has said in relation to some restriction, and I should like to direct my introductory remarks to that point. I would have taken part in the debate on second reading, but since I wanted to particularize I thought the best way to do this would be to speak to clause 1 in committee. I hope that in so far as my remarks may be general and not particular there will be no agreement to prevent me from saying what I want to say. I hope to be brief, anyhow.

This is the first time I have had an opportunity of speaking on this subject because I was unavoidably absent during the debate at the resolution stage. I am sure the minister will bear with me. I believe we all want to congratulate the minister upon bringing forward a piece of legislation which will result in the establishment of an independent body to deal with redistribution and get away from any form of gerrymandering. Every ten years we have a census, and as a result we find there has been an increase in the population of our country and we must therefore adjust our constituencies. We have all agreed on that. We have always tried to get some form of representation by population.

I believe the population of Canada at the present time is 18,238,247 and, irrespective of the method being used, it has always been the endeavour to follow some rule of representation by population. Of course we have never had a perfect formula, the reason being that we are put together as a rather complex country and we have some very complex problems; but I think any political science student or student of history would agree that we have tried to achieve, with some equity, representation by population.

Other problems have been mentioned. Sometimes the cartoonists in various newspapers have referred to the agriculturists of the country as wanting to have greater representation in the House of Commons than other groups. I think I can speak for that group in this regard, not only because I represent, as I said previously, a partly agricultural riding but because my early career was connected with agriculture. I do not think the farmers or agriculturists have ever asked for greater representation than other groups. This is just one of those things which grew up in the course of the development of the country itself.

Years ago, before western Canada became industrialized, it was primarily an agricultural area covering Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba and even some parts of British Columbia, and because it was such a vast area there was a large tolerance factor given to it. One has only to look at a map of the prairies and see the constituency boundaries as they presently exist to realize how large some of the ridings are. I believe these will be subject to some real revolutionary change if some of the rumours we hear are true.

A number of these constituencies are 300 miles long. The boundary of the riding of Bow River extends west to the British Columbia border, and proceeds east of Calgary for about 100 miles. The constituency is about 70 miles deep; therefore it measures roughly 250 miles long and 60 or 70 miles wide. Like many other constituencies in Canada it surrounds a large city, the city of Calgary, whose suburban areas have moved out into former rural areas, with the result that for the last ten years one third of the riding's population has been formed by city people living in such areas as Thorncliff and Forest Lawn.

This might be a good time, when we are considering the equity that must be put in the bill with regard to the problem of tolerance, to place on record the fact that it is not unusual for a candidate to put anywhere from 12,000 to 20,000 miles on his car if he is to cover his constituency. This is the basic reason why the agriculturists, over the years, have had greater representation than the cities in the House of Commons, and as an analogy to that I should like to refer to the provinces themselves.

When we look at the composition of the provincial legislatures such as British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and even the eastern provinces, we find that the agricultural areas probably have greater representation in them than students of political science would like to see. The reason for this is the very one I have just outlined, and it is the reason we should consider this bill very carefully when we come to decide how much tolerance is to be given. It is because the primary industry of the country was, for many years, agriculture.

We all, even those members from western Canada, realize the tremendous industrial development that has taken place in eastern Canada; and we all know, including the minister himself, who I understand is a western raised boy from Manitoba, that the west also is becoming heavily industrialized and in the next ten or 20 years may become almost as industrialized as Ontario and Quebec.

Toronto at large has about 17 or 18 constituencies and some people feel that, because there has been pressure for closer representation by population, cities like it will get more representation. However, I am sure even the minister will agree that constituencies in the centres of cities, be they Calgary, Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver or Winnipeg, do not measure up now to the average quotient figure of 70,000 electors. Therefore they will be cut down and the suburban representation increased, with the result that the city of Toronto will probably gain only one constituency. I do not have the experts' figures here, but I believe that cities like Toronto and Montreal have not had representation by population for some time.

I have some figures here to show the discrepancies that exist in certain of the provinces. Alberta has a constituency with a population as low as 42,000 while the hon. member for Calgary North, who I am glad to see is in his seat, has the largest riding, holding some 134,000 people. The lowest population constituency in New Brunswick has about 23,000 people, while Saint John has 101,000. Ontario has one constituency, I believe Bruce, with a population of 29,000, while York-Scarborough has a population of 267,000. Quebec has one constituency with a population as low as 12,000, while the constituency of Mercier in Montreal has a population of some 250,000 odd, almost the same size as York-Scarborough.

These figures are not exact, but they illustrate the facts I am emphasizing. Manitoba has one constituency as low as 40,000 and another with a population as high as 116,000. Saskatchewan has one as low as 37,000 and another with a population as high as 95,000. These figures speak for themselves. They emphasize that not only is there not representation by population, because the scales appear to have been weighted heavily in favour of the rural areas, but also show that representation by population is not true of the city areas because there has been a tremendous influx of population into the suburban areas, and that is why members of parliament sometimes find they are representing as many as 200,000 people.

Now, I want to go into the principle for a few moments, and in doing so I wish to refer to section 51(1) of chapter 304 of the federal statutes, which is an amendment to the British North America Act, well known to the minister and other hon. members present. It outlines five rules. Basically there are 18,238,247 people in Canada; more than 18 million. The first thing you have to do is look at the rule. Section 51, subsection (1) says:

> Subject as hereinafter provided, the number of members of the House of Commons shall be 263.

Looking at that, one would think there would be no problem at all. One could merely divide the 263 into the total population. But there are some safeguards which have been introduced in order to protect minority rights, and to protect those provinces where expansion has been slower than in the rest of Canada. Let us look at the formula we have today. We have what we call a Senate cushion; that is an expression I would coin in this regard. Under this arrangement there cannot be fewer members in the House of Commons from a province than there are senators from that province. I believe this rule is well known to the minister, but at this time I believe it would pay us to review the situation.

So the first thing to do is to subtract the members from those provinces which are affected by that arrangement. If you take 263 members as laid down by the act, you must then subtract the members representing the provinces to which I have referred. What are the provinces which would benefit under the redistribution proposals at the present time? I am informed they are New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island; the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are excluded anyhow, so we can forget about them. But there are ten in New Brunswick, four in Prince Edward Island, one in the Yukon and one in the Northwest Territories. This adds up to 16. Deduct 16 from 263 and you arrive at the quotient, a figure which comes to 247.

Let me review briefly what I have said. The act calls for 263 members. We deduct the representation of those provinces which, because of their lower population due to a lack of expansion, cannot have fewer members than they have senators. This number amounts to 16, bearing in mind the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. We are then left with 247. Now, the population of Canada is 18 million in round figures. Next we take the population of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and we subtract the total from the 18 million. This gives us a figure of about 17.5 million people. Then in order to arrive at the quotient we divide this latter figure by 247 and we find that every constituency, if we could achieve perfect boundaries and true representation by population, would contain approximately 70,800 people. Now, there are in western Canada, as everyone knows, 24 senators; I believe there are six from each province. The rule which protects the maritimes against losing their representation and which excludes them from the strict rule of representation by population does not apply and has not applied to western Canada because our population has for a number of years been much higher than the floor provided. The safeguards which protect the maritimes certainly do not protect western Canada because I trust we shall always have more representation than six members from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. In this regard one might say this afternoon, though I do not wish to press the point, that western Canada, in the absence of any other rules, has been discriminated against.

It would be interesting, I think, to put on record the degree of representation at the present time. Newfoundland, the new home of the minister, at the present time has seven members. Let us see what might happen under the formula which is before the committee now. Those seven members would be retained. Nova Scotia has 12 members and this number would be reduced to 11. Quebec has 75 members whose number might be reduced by one to 74. Ontario has at present 85 members and this province would gain three seats for a total of 88. So while Quebec would lose one, Ontario would gain three. Manitoba at the present time has 14 members and would lose one, its representation being reduced to 13. Saskatchewan would be the hardest hit. At the present time the province is represented by 17 members and it would appear, if this formula is not changed, that its representation would be reduced from 17 to 13.

An interesting point occurs to me. I know that the administration, or the officials of the department, may not agree with me about this. Possibly the officials of the Department of Justice would not agree with me, either. But I believe there is food for thought in section 51, something which has been carefully analysed by this committee. As far as I know —and the minister may have some other information, because I have worked on this for only a short time and there may be judicial interpretations of section 51(1), although I do not think there are, because I do not believe the matter has ever come before the courts—

An hon. Member: What act?

Mr. Woolliams: The British North America Act. Let me read an extract from rule 5. It says:

> On any such readjustment the number of members for any province shall not be reduced by more than fifteen per cent below the representation to which such province was entitled under rules 1 to 4—

Rules 1 and 4 of the said act I have already discussed; that is how we arrive at the quotient of 70,842 if there is to be perfect representation by population. So what they say is this. If Saskatchewan had 20 representatives in 1952, because rule 5 of section 51 provides they cannot be reduced to 12 or 15—12, I believe it was—rule 5 applied and they got 17 members. So Saskatchewan, because of that special rule 5, has been given more representation since 1952 than otherwise it would have been given. The administrative officials, I believe, say this. It may be correct. But I think there should be some hard thinking on this point that because the rule was applied on the last occasion it cannot be applied again. That is interesting. If members will look at this section they will find it says:

> —than any other province that according to the results of the then last decennial census did not have a larger population; but for the purposes of any subsequent readjustment—

And we are dealing with a subsequent readjustment now.

> —of representation under this section any increase in the number of members of the House of Commons resulting from the application of this rule shall not be included—

I say this to the minister. We are not increasing the number of members of the House of Commons by this legislation. That is the first question I pose. We are not increasing the members of the House of Commons. We will probably end up with 264 members where previously we had 265. Under the formula we will now arrive, properly and legally, at 264. So we are not increasing the over-all picture in Canada.

I will come to the next question, Mr. Chairman, which I think the minister should consider very carefully. We are not increasing the number of members of parliament from the province of Saskatchewan. So if we are not increasing them at large and we are not increasing them provincially, I ask the minister to consider with his legal officers whether rule 5 does not apply today. This is a subsequent readjustment. I am going to emphasize this point because it is awfully important to western Canada and to the members sitting here from Saskatchewan. If that province is going to lose four seats it may be very important to them. If the legal officers are wrong, and if the interpretation of this section happens to be different, Saskatchewan may only lose two instead of four, and this means a great deal to western Canada.

This is a question I pose to you, Mr. Minister. I want to read this again because I think it is very important:

> —but for the purposes of any subsequent readjustment of representation under this section any increase in the number of members of the House of Commons resulting from the application of this rule shall not be included—

I ask this question once again. We are not increasing the number of members in this house; we are decreasing them by one. The legislation will reduce by four the members who represent Saskatchewan. Was there a question that you wanted to ask?

Mr. Choquette: The only question is, how long are you going to speak?

Mr. Woolliams: All I say to you, sir, is that if you want to go out for an afternoon cup of coffee and you are not interested in the seriousness of this bill, that is what I suggest you do.

Mr. Choquette: I am interested in the bill.

Mr. Woolliams: I say with the greatest respect, and I think the minister will agree with me, that I am raising some pretty serious questions as far as western Canada is concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I assume the hon. member is addressing the Chair.

Mr. Woolliams: I am, and I assume that you are doing the same thing at the moment while you are sitting down.

Mr. Dinsdale: Touché.

Mr. Knowles: I was just wondering, in view of what the hon. member said, whether you, sir, were planning to go out for a cup of coffee.

An hon. Member: Do you know you look like Red Skelton?

Mr. Woolliams: Well, I may look like him, but I haven't his bankroll.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, while the hon. member is looking for his notes I wonder if he would entertain a serious question.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, I would.

Mr. Knowles: That is an admission as to the last one. As the hon. member knows, all of us are concerned about the application of these senatorial floors, and some of us have some views about them in terms of what they do to the balance of representation. Is it not correct that for all practical purposes the provinces of western Canada have a floor of ten, in view of the fact that their population is greater than the populations of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick?

Mr. Woolliams: They have a floor of ten.

Mr. Knowles: Is there not a rule in section 51 which says that no province shall have fewer members than another province with lesser population? Therefore though by one part of section 51 our floor in the prairie provinces seems to be six because we have only six senators—as far as I am concerned that is six too many—in point of practical arithmetic our floor is ten, is it not?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, as long as the population of Saskatchewan remains greater than the population of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. I just picked Saskatchewan because, though I think at the last census, Saskatchewan was slightly higher than Manitoba, I think now the population of Manitoba is higher than the population of Saskatchewan. But they are the only two provinces that seem in any possible peril at the present time. It would appear to me that the hon. gentleman is quite right and that ten is the practical floor for Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Mr. Woolliams: I agree with the minister, and the only reason I raised the question of six was this. I said that if the rule was applicable to the west, then I agree with the hon. member's interpretation in that regard.

Mr. Knowles: I thank my hon. friend.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you. I know that all of us have done some studying of this matter. I certainly am not by any means holding myself out as an expert, because this matter is pretty complicated, and needs a lot of research. I would say that members of the House of Commons who have been here for a considerable length of time, who have seen much of this legislation pass and have been here at other times when we have readjusted the constituencies, have that experience which I do not enjoy.

I want to deal with several particular points that I have tried to make. First of all I say that to be fair to western Canada we must have a high tolerance. I know what the answer is going to be, and it can be debated. It is said that at the present time—and you can point a finger at us—we in western Canada have more Conservative members of parliament. But I would say this is supposed to be a long term or long time bill; the formula as to tolerance will probably change with changing circumstances. However, the fact is that we should forget about where the representation is from, and I say that western Canada will be discriminated against by the fact that Saskatchewan will lose four members.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. He says that western Canada would be discriminated against by the loss of four members. Of course the matter of how many members are given to each province is not in question in this bill, as the hon. member has recognized; it is governed by the constitution of Canada. Any discrepancy, therefore, between rural and urban representation would be within the constitution. Does not the hon. gentleman think that the discrepancies are far greater in eastern Canada, particularly in what he and I were brought up to call eastern Canada—I mean Ontario and Quebec —than they are in western Canada? I think the difference between Scarborough and Bruce is far greater than the difference between Calgary North and Bow River.

Mr. Woolliams: I agree with the minister, but as I pointed out earlier in my remarks, the discrepancy between York-Scarborough and other constituencies in Toronto is identical with the discrepancy with regard to Bow River, because the change must come within the whole of Toronto proper. I feel we should protect the people of western Canada and other people concerned in just the same way as the maritimes are protected by the rule to which I have referred. I believe the tolerance figure—particularly because we have so many rural constituencies—should be at a higher level.

I have said that I think we should take a careful look to see whether rule 5 can be interpreted in the narrow sense, whether it does or does not apply to a second occasion. I think also that we should be very careful with regard to the tolerance used in connection with large areas and rural constituencies. I have also mentioned the difficulty of getting around a large rural constituency in western Canada. I said, and I repeat, that I do not think the farmers or agriculturists have asked for a heavier representation in the house; it is done to assist the member to better represent the area from which he comes.

Therefore I say that if we wished to have true representation by population we would repeal the whole of section 51 and the other rules that apply. I think we should make certain in the act itself that the commission set up is an independent body. I will discuss this question more fully when the particular clause comes before the committee, but I think it should be set out very clearly that the head of that commission should be the chief justice of the province or a member of a superior court appointed by him. It says as worded now, "from his court". That might be interpreted to mean merely the court of appeal, which would include the remaining three or four judges. Perhaps the chief justice would feel that, because the act suggests his appointment he has an obligation or responsibility to appoint someone other than himself. But whether the chief justice of one province or another has been appointed by a Conservative or by a Liberal government, I want to say that in the 20 years in which I have been before the bar I have found, particularly with men at the chief justice level, that they are not only steeped in jurisprudence but have been carefully chosen not only because of their wisdom but because of their public relations ability to understand all forms and levels of human behaviour. I feel that a man of that calibre is the kind we need to head these commissions, if we are to have ten commissions in Canada, or if we are going to have just one commission with subcommittees, whichever the case may be. The bill at the present time proposes to set up ten separate commissions.

With regard to placing an objection before the commission itself. I think that ten days is not long enough and that it should be extended to 60 days or even longer. I would also ask whether the objectors are going to be armed with all the information. First of all, they should be allowed to see the proposed maps of the province delineating the constituencies and what each constituency will contain by way of population, so as to enable them to decide whether they have real objection. Probably that is the reason that the tolerance figure should be enlarged to 30 or 35 per cent, because it is just impossible for some areas to be represented by one member of parliament only owing to its diversification. For example, I draw the analogy of my own riding, which has the tourist trade of Banff, coal mining in Canmore and Drumheller, the ranchers in the foothills and the wheat growers around Drumheller. There is a great diversification of industry in the province and it might be better that those people with similar interests be in one area.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time expired at four o'clock; in view of the interruptions I thought he should be allowed an additional five minutes.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. member has a sentence or two perhaps the committee would be tolerant, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, I am just finishing. I feel that wherever possible the constituencies will keep the nucleus which they have. If the constituencies are going to be enlarged, it is far better that the nucleus be retained because those people residing in the constituencies have often lived there for years. Sometimes their fathers and grandfathers have grown up in constituencies like Bow River, Saskatoon, Regina or Winnipeg. So wherever possible the nucleus should be kept together.

One other point arises here. Where a discretion is given to the commission itself, I should like to know what kind of discretion will be exercised. What is meant by an equitable discretion? How far can the person exercising the discretion go? Should there be a legal floor? Is the legal floor quotient to be 70,000 with a 30 per cent drop or rise? That is the question. How much is to be left to the discretion of the commission? I hope that the commissions will not turn out to be a rubber stamp for other people's work. I hope that, whatever the tolerance be, when a change is made it is made equitably and with proper discretion. I would emphasize that if evidence is prepared for the commission, and I think evidence has to be prepared, it should be made available to anybody who requires it, so that if an objection is made the objector is armed with the same material as the commissioners or the counsel who appears before the commission.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I will take only two or three minutes of the committee's time to make one or two suggestions. The first is in connection with a matter brought forward to some extent a little while ago by the hon. member for Queens, namely that some consideration should be given to the growth which is taking place in certain areas since the last census was taken. By the time the commissions which are appointed report, it will have been at least four years since the last census was taken, and during that period a considerable change in population will have taken place in certain districts. I would suggest that one of the terms of reference for the commissions concerning the general rules under which they would operate should be that consideration shall be given to the growth which has taken place in some areas since the last census was taken. I also suggest that consideration be given to what one might call growth areas, areas in which it is quite apparent that growth will continue. If that is done, we will obviate very severe discrepancies arising in the future no matter what the tolerance be. I hope that something might be written into one of the clauses of this bill which would lay this down as a consideration which the commissions would have to take under advisement, when deciding what are the boundaries of the various constituencies.

I mention this particularly, because I have seen the bad effect caused by the absence of this consideration in my own city of Calgary. Prior to the last redistribution in 1952 there were in effect three constituencies in the city. There was Bow River, which took in the eastern part of the city plus the rural area to the east and to the north of it; there was Calgary east, which I represented and which really took in the central part of the city and the rural area to the south; and there was Calgary west, which took in the western part of the city and the rural area to the west and north.

In the Redistribution Act of 1952, in spite of the fact that a considerable amount of growth in population had taken place in the city of Calgary since the previous census was taken, and that it was quite apparent that this would continue at a very rapid rate, the number of constituencies was cut down to two, with the result that the two constituencies in Calgary at the present time are two of the most populous constituencies in Canada. I hope that mistakes of this kind will not be repeated and that the inclusion of a provision something along the lines I have suggested in the terms of reference of the commissions will ensure that there be some insurance, shall I say, against a constituency becoming too large in terms of population before the next revision of boundaries takes place.

The only other point I want to mention at this time is with regard to some remarks made by the Minister of Transport yesterday to the general effect that it was undesirable to have mixed rural and urban constituencies. If I misinterpreted what he said I know he will correct me. I think that the converse is the case. Mixed rural and urban constituencies are very desirable and from many points of view. For eight years I represented a mixed rural and urban constituency, and as far as the interest of the people is concerned, and as far as the more impartial attitude, shall I say, toward questions affecting urban people on the one hand and rural people on the other is concerned, a member who represents a mixed constituency of that sort has a great advantage. I say that because he gets both points of view and can also do something to reconcile those points of view when they are opposed to each other. Therefore, rather than making any attempt to try and ensure that constituencies are either purely urban or purely rural, I would hope that there would be a considerable number of constituencies which would at least be of a mixed nature.

As far as the composition of this chamber and the representation of the people of Canada is concerned, I think that this would be of distinct advantage rather than disadvantage. I put that before the minister, ask him to think about it and perhaps reconsider the attitude he expressed before.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit me to say that really what I was doing yesterday was trying to agree with the hon. member for Regina City who had made the point. I had not given much thought to it, and perhaps the hon. member could carry on the debate with the hon. member for Regina City. The matter is very unlikely to arise in my case anyway.

Mr. More: Mr. Chairman, I do not want words put in my mouth. I did not say that mixed constituencies were inappropriate. I said that the complaint from my area had been that people outside the area of the city could not vote together with the city people. I did not say anything about mixed constituencies.

Mr. Pickersgill: All I did was agree with what the hon. gentleman said, and if I misunderstood him I did not know what I was agreeing with. In any case I can assure the hon. member I have no intention of seeking to direct anyone in this matter and I really have no very strong views on it one way or the other.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I was not thinking of the matter from the point of view of its possible application to the Minister of Transport. I was thinking of it from the general point of view of improving representation and thus the welfare of the country as a whole, as I am sure the minister is. But one reason in particular why I have mentioned this matter is that at the present time there is a considerable area around every urban centre of any size in which the majority of the people are really people primarily interested in and connected with the city. They live in the country but they earn their livelihood in the city. Their interests lie primarily in the city although in many cases they may carry on some sort of small agricultural enterprise and sometimes not so small.

In the case of my own city of Calgary, for at least 20 miles in every direction around Calgary perhaps two thirds of the total population are people who work in the city of Calgary, who gain their livelihood there but live outside the city limits. This is another reason why I think a certain amount of what I call mixing of urban and rural areas is a good thing. The fact is that in many cases the attaching of a portion of rural area to a city riding simply means that you are including in that riding for the most part people whose interests are primarily in the city rather than in the rural area. These are the only two suggestions I wish to make. With regard to the first one in particular, I hope the minister can find some way to include it in a definite form somewhere in the bill.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I have a suggestion I should like to put forward, but first of all may I say I do not agree with the statements made by some that because New Brunswick has a senatorial floor everything is rosy. We are going to have some very serious problems when the final decisions are made. We have communication problems. In addition, the French-English situation in New Brunswick has to be considered in the new constituencies. I see that the hon. member for Charlotte is following the debate very closely. His riding is alongside mine. The population of my riding is four times that of his, but I think we both have many problems. He has to cover the islands and a tremendous extent of coastline. I do not consider that either one of us works harder than the other, but there is the problem of keeping in touch with people which looms larger in a rural riding than in a large metropolitan area.

This leads me to my proposal. I suggest that when we come to clause 13 it might be possible in some way to stagger the tolerance so that, looking ahead to the census of 1971 and the results that might be anticipated then, we could have some fairly general objectives. There will probably be two elections before 1971. There will be a census, of course, in 1966 and another in 1971. I do not want to go into any detail now, but it might be possible to place the tolerance at 30 per cent now and 20 per cent in 1971 with the result that we would have some objectives to work toward.

I think this would have a fairly good effect, in that it might answer some of the problems raised by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) with regard to the tremendous growth of urban areas. I looked at the parliamentary guide where there are some interesting facts. My own constituency includes the greater Saint John area, which I suppose is the population centre of New Brunswick, although Fredericton and Moncton are becoming larger each day. I noted that in 1867 the constituency was Saint John city. A little later it became Saint John city and county. Then Albert county was added and it became Saint John city and county and Albert county. Saint John city and county and Albert county had two members, but before 1935 one member was taken away from the dual constituency. This is the situation now. There is one member from Saint John city and county and Albert county. I would imagine that after the changes are made resulting from this legislation we will almost be back where we were in 1867, regardless of the tolerance, with one member for Saint John city as we know it now, in the same way as there was one member for Saint John city in 1867. I do not know what this proves. I suppose it shows that after 100 years we are right back where we started so far as redistribution is concerned.

But without entering into all the details of my constituency or with regard to New Brunswick generally. I throw out the suggestion quite seriously that it might be possible to formulate some definite idea as to what our final objectives should be for 1971 so that the dislocation of constituencies and members will not be as great. This factor looms very large in the maritimes. I am not speaking in any partisan political way, but I would point out that in the maritimes the member becomes closely identified with the voters. If we start to change the constituencies then, no matter whether the member is hard working like the hon. member for Charlotte and myself, it will take quite a few years for the member to become identified in the same way with his constituents. If we could spread out the process over a ten year period it would not be undemocratic and I think everybody would be better off.

There is another point that has not been put forward lately but which I think should be considered. It has to do with the tolerance, but I merely bring it forward in a general way so that we can be prepared for it. I should like to know what difference there would be in the actual boundaries with a tolerance of 20 per cent as opposed to a tolerance of 30 per cent. In other words, are the serious initial changes not made at the 20 per cent level, and how much greater would the difference be at the 30 per cent level? I am thinking of a figure of 30 per cent and I am wondering what greater dislocation there would be with an additional 10 per cent tolerance.

Perhaps the minister might prepare himself to say something on this point in a general way. I appreciate that he certainly does not want to deal with what he thinks will be the result for every constituency in the country, but it is my impression that once the changes have been made at the 20 per cent level there may not be that much more difference. In other words, you are really only playing around with a few housing developments in the urban areas.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I think we should examine with the greatest of care the bill now before us. I appreciate the desire of the Minister of Transport to get this thing pushed ahead. That is the general idea when you are on the government side. My experience in the House of Commons has been that legislation does not normally detain the house unless it is highly controversial. On the other hand, legislation that is put through the House of Commons sometimes contains errors. Our job as legislators is to examine legislation with the greatest care when it comes before us. If there is any wasted time in the house, it is wasted on other aspects of our life here. I feel therefore it is important for us, when we are dealing with something which is going on the statute books, to make sure it is correct.

We have had plenty of experience with having to alter bills which have been brought before us. We have accepted in principle the bill to set up a brand new system to deal with redistribution. The principle which has met with general acceptance here has been to remove from the field of political controversy one of the most highly controversial subjects that affects politicians. Having done that, we are not content with making this major change, the first one in a hundred years, but some people want to go further and place certain restrictions within the bill. The advocates of strict representation by population have been heard. I am suggesting that we move slowly on some of these matters and that we examine the situation which has existed in the past in Canada.

The other night when I was restricted as to time and was speaking on the second reading of the bill, I indicated I had some concern with regard to what might be in the minds of the commissioners. The mere fact you select a man as a commissioner does not endow him with any special intellectual capacity to judge an issue. The persons who are going to be selected as commissioners are not likely to be persons who have had practical experience in politics. They may be men of very sound judgment, and I hope they are. Nevertheless, there has to be a background of experience for persons who are going to decide a question as important as this particular one.

I am not at all sure that the commissioners who will be working on this job will have the necessary background. I expressed some concern the other night that they might ignore the opinions expressed in the House of Commons. I hope they do not. I expressed concern that they might be swayed by opinions, one way or the other, expressed in this house, and they might not get the consensus of the House of Commons with regard to this particular matter. I suggested that if the commissioners had, over the years, given any serious consideration to the matter, they might have been imbued with the theory of "rep by pop" and might be swayed that way unduly. I did suggest, too, that I was converted from the "rep by pop" attitude a number of years ago. I went into that subject very fully at one time, and I certainly changed my mind when I came to study the Canadian scene and the redistributions that have occurred in Canada.

I want the commissioners to have in their minds the fact that in this country we never have had strict representation by population, attractive as that idea is. In fact, we have varied from it in every redistribution. We are living at the moment under the redistribution that took place about ten years ago, the ninth redistribution. There were eight former redistributions, starting from confederation. The quota per member rose from 18,000 to 54,000 when we reached the ninth redistribution, and the number of members has increased from 200 to 262. The difference in population by constituencies has varied all the way from a low of 10,000 to a high of 40,000 in the first two redistributions and from 10,000 to 80,000 or more in the six later redistributions. Prior to the ninth redistribution made about ten years ago, there was a constituency in Canada with a population of 10,000; one with 17,000; one with 18,000; and at the top of the scale there was one with 159,000; another with 115,000 and another 101,000. In all of the eight redistributions prior to the one of 1952, only one tenth of the constituencies were within the allotted quota of population, which gives hon. members an idea of the great discrepancies that have persisted.

Hon. members have pointed out the great discrepancies that persist at the present time. These are most noticeable within the large cities. These figures have been put on the record, so I will not repeat them. I am interested in attempting to use this medium to instruct the commissioners with regard to the history of redistribution in our country.

I should like them to reflect upon the exceptions that have been made to the representation by population principle. Mark you, when people in the past were talking about redistribution, they always mentioned the necessity of equalizing the many constituencies. Sir Wilfrid Laurier suggested the population should be equalized between the constituencies of Canada; that municipal boundaries should be considered and there should be a larger number of people in urban than in rural constituencies. Sir Robert Borden agreed with that attitude and added that attention should be paid to community of interest and geographical features. So, down through the years people have had these factors in mind, but the diversity has occurred year after year.

Let us not forget, as was pointed out a few minutes ago, that if redistribution takes place within the next 12 months, we will then be four years away from the census. If the election is deferred for another two years, we will be six years away from the census. The growth of the various urban and suburban populations will inflict upon certain areas the discrepancies that are apparent at the present moment. I hope to deal with that matter in a minute or two, if I have the chance.

Then, I hope that the commissioners will have in mind all the exceptions to representation by population which have been so numerous amongst our provinces. From 1914 to 1946, Ontario retained 82 seats although by 1933 she should have had only 78. This situation resulted from a special clause in the British North America Act which has since been repealed. In 1915 the senatorial floor was placed in the act which has given protection to the Atlantic provinces. When the province of Manitoba was formed a good many years ago, her population was too small to warrant even one member, but she was given four. That was in anticipation of an increase in population.

When British Columbia entered confederation her population would have entitled her to one member, and she was given six. In 1886, prior to the formation of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Northwest Territories were allotted four seats, although only two would have been justified on the basis of their population. In 1903 the territories were given ten members, although they were entitled to only six.

We are also familiar with the splitting of the Yukon and the Mackenzie into two seats, although their population factor would not warrant so high a representation. The commissioners should bear this in mind when they try to work out the application of representation by population. In fact, in the history of Canada we have never had it, and we are not going to have it in the future. It is not going to be strictly applied because of the tremendous growth of urban centres presently taking place, and that is why we may be making a mistake in the legislation we are placing on the statute books.

This is a one-shot effort by the commissioners. We are not making provision for a review of the constituencies in two or three years time, yet all of us realize how quickly suburban developments can be put up in this country, and how quickly thousands of people will move into a certain area.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder would the hon. gentleman permit a question. On June 1 each year the dominion bureau of statistics publishes estimates of population. Does he think that a commission, in working out the tolerances, should take into account the growth that has taken place since 1961?

Mr. Churchill: I think that matter should be seriously considered by the committee, in view of the fact that the finding will be made four years after the last census; but that does not answer my other problem.

Mr. Pickersgill: I merely asked the question because that is what I thought the hon. gentleman was driving at, and I agree with it.

Mr. Churchill: It is one factor that should be taken into account because, even where I live in Ottawa, a suburban development started last fall. It is going up at a rapid pace and soon there will be several thousands of people living not very far from me, on what was vacant land just five months ago. The committee should examine the bill to see if some amendments could be made along that line. But that does not answer the problem that will arise prior to the next decennial census. Supposing there is an election—and don't get nervous—in 1965, and then another one before 1971; that means there will be two elections before the 1971 census, with perhaps another following two or three years later, with the result that we shall again be out of balance.

The only answer to that problem is perhaps what they have done in Great Britain. That is why I drew attention to the experience of Great Britain, when I was speaking the other night. I hope the commissioners will examine the activities of the British people in trying to solve this problem of redistribution. They coped with it in 1944 and they amended their act in 1947, with the express purpose of relaxing the rigid formula of a 25 per cent tolerance which they had written into it. They wiped that out, and they consolidated the act in 1949. They have passed two amending bills since that time, which have not seriously upset the main basis of their operation, and I hope the commissioners will look into their experience. In fact, I hope the committee will examine this British practice because it is a country which has had the experience of doing this for some 20 years.

As I understand it, although they do not want their boundary commissions to be changing the constituency boundaries every year, nevertheless they are in a position to make changes if the population increases at a rather great rate in certain areas, and we should be prepared to do something like that.

They also have some leeway, so far as England is concerned, with regard to the membership of the House of Commons. It is a loosely worded phrase, but it does permit them to alter the membership a little bit. This might be necessary in some instances where you require an extra seat by splitting a very large constituency. I do not see why we should not have a look at that, especially when we are putting on the statute books something that is to apply for a considerable length of time.

I would like the commissioners to look at the British practice. I would like this committee to examine the situation in Great Britain where they have their four area divisions of England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland; and for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland a fixed number of seats has been written into the act. This has been done in order to provide for representation to less populated regions, so that they can maintain their position of representation within the House of Commons and not gradually be cut down—they will not pass out of existence—to the point where their representation would be very low.

I think a relationship can be shown between the situation in Canada and the situation in Great Britain. Here in Canada we have a situation, by the process that has been going on under the senatorial floor, which is written into the act, where the Atlantic provinces correspond to, say, Wales or Scotland, because under the floor for the Atlantic provinces the number of seats in the maritimes will not drop below 31. They will drop to 32 in this redistribution, but they will not go below 31, and even if the populations of Quebec and Ontario were to increase at the same rapid rate they have shown in the last ten years—which is about 3 per cent —the representation from the Atlantic provinces will be maintained in the house. I favour this. I think it is proper and I would not like to see that representation reduced.

Why should we not seriously consider something like that for other parts of Canada? Some hon. members have pointed out the effect the present redistribution will have on Manitoba and Saskatchewan. In 1952, by quite a bit of skilful footwork, the representation of Saskatchewan was not as seriously reduced as could have been the case. But we are now faced with the situation, pending the interpretation which the hon. member for Bow River has asked for, whereby Saskatchewan will lose four seats and Manitoba will lose one.

Here is a major discrepancy which I think we can avoid if we give serious attention to the bill before us and make a proper amendment. Under the census of 1961 the combined population of the four Atlantic provinces was given as 1,897,425. Now under the distribution of seats to which they are entitled at the present moment they will have a combined total of 32 which gives them a quotient of 59,294. Set that against Manitoba and Saskatchewan. The combined population of those two prairie provinces is 1,846,867 according to the 1961 census—only 30,000 fewer than the population of the four Atlantic provinces. The seats to which they will be entitled under the redistribution now contemplated will be 26 and the quotient per constituency will be 71,033 which is, incidentally, higher than the quotient which has already been estimated for Canada as a whole. Here, with our eyes open, we are establishing a discrepancy between two very important areas of this country. I suggest we should guard against doing so, because why should the Atlantic provinces have 32 seats in this house while the prairies provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan with a population almost the same, have only 26? Immediately one finds a variation of six seats as between two of the great areas of Canada. This situation is one which I think should be examined.

Then, as has been pointed out, we have a somewhat nebulous protection, which I think has been mentioned, for the provinces out there in the absence of a senatorial floor. So by 1971 it is conceivable that Manitoba and Saskatchewan representation could drop from 26 seats to 20 and that the Atlantic provinces would then have 31.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman has forgotten the 15 per cent rule. I do not think it would be possible to fall from 15 to ten in one single drop.

Mr. Churchill: We have to get a legal opinion on that 15 per cent rule, do we not?

Mr. Pickersgill: On the basis which is usually accepted, not on the interesting variant which was offered by the hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Churchill: Interesting variants are very acceptable in this house sometimes. I am pointing out what might happen unless we take the time to examine this bill very carefully. One does not like to be continually apologetic, or on the defence, but again let me say I am not approaching this matter on a partisan basis at all.

I have been trying to make a serious study of this situation. Twelve years ago I came to the conclusion that in the light of the history of redistribution in this country we should accept the fact that we cannot get strict representation by population, desirable as that might be, and that we should allow for area or regional representation as we already do in the case of the Atlantic provinces. I direct the attention of the committee to the fact that area representation or regional representation for Manitoba and Saskatchewan might be the answer to this particular problem. It is difficult to forecast population trends accurately. I tried to do so 12 years ago, and when I look back at my records now I see I underestimated the trend. But I did foresee the increase in population in Ontario and Quebec and the loss of seats in some of the other provinces.

It appears at the present time, however, that the increase in population in the central industrialized provinces will go ahead faster than in the Atlantic provinces or in the prairie provinces, though the population is increasing at a good rate in Alberta and British Columbia. While I am suggesting consideration of regional representation in order to avoid too great a discrepancy between two very important areas of our country, I am at the same time suggesting that this will not change the balance of power in the House of Commons. I would not necessarily restrict the increased representation which should properly go to those areas of Canada where the population is growing very rapidly. I do not advocate at the present moment a large increase in the membership of this house. That might be a mistake. At the same time, I dislike seeing a decrease in the representation of important areas of our country. This is why I am satisfied that there should be no further reduction in the representation of the Atlantic provinces.

I think it is to the advantage of parliament to have the representation we do have from those provinces. I think it is important to Canada's economy to have spokesmen here in Ottawa who can interpret the special condition of the Atlantic provinces and represent the views of their people, so that in the economic contest which goes on constantly the interests of the Atlantic provinces shall not be neglected, as could happen if their representatives were outweighed in numbers.

The same considerations apply, I submit, to Manitoba and Saskatchewan. A population increase there might not keep up with the national average. We are not predominantly industrial societies, although we are making giant strides in that direction. We shall continue along with Alberta, to be great primary producers of agricultural products. The point of view of this region requires expression here in the House of Commons—I am sure no one will deny that this is the case—and I believe its representation should not fall below what is the present total for that region.

Members of the House of Commons represent not only people; we represent the interests of an area, and economic factors. I know we say we represent everybody in our constituencies, but there are a lot of people there who wish we did not represent them. With the division of this country into ten provinces we speak from time to time with a united voice on behalf of our own provinces, even though we may belong to different political parties, and I think this provincial representation is a factor which should be taken into account.

I believe my time is running out, Mr. Chairman, and I put these matters before the committee in the hope that we may take our time over this bill. I do not mean we should stretch our considerations out for weeks, or anything like that, but I hope we will not attempt to rush it through, that there will be plenty of time to consider the subject, and that if we are able to make certain amendments we shall put ourselves in a position where the disparities presently obtaining in Canada may be considerably reduced. I close on this note—that we should look at the British experience with regard to the tolerance figure which they wiped out. We should consider approaching representation by population while at the same time remembering regional representation.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if I might rise on a small question of privilege. I am sure the minister would not wish to leave an incorrect impression as a result of his intervention when my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre was speaking. During my argument I made it clear there was no question but that section 51(5) applied on the first occasion. There was only the question whether it applied on the second occasion, the subsequent occasion. The minister left the impression that I said it did not apply at all. I am sure he did not mean to leave that impression.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman. All I meant to suggest was that the hon. gentleman had suggested an interpretation of this clause that I had never heard before; that was all.

Mr. Woolliams: If I may just finish on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman; just because the minister has never heard that interpretation before, if the judiciary have not interpreted it that does not mean the interpretation that has been accepted for 10 or 15 years happens to be the correct interpretation. Nor did I submit in my argument that my suggestion was right or wrong; but I asked the minister a couple of questions. I said that as the members of the House of Commons at large are not being increased and as the members of the province of Saskatchewan are not being increased, what about the interpretation of that section? I think they are proper questions. I was not questioning whether the rule applied. It has been applied in the past, and will be in the future unless it is repealed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman should not get excited about this. I think he had a perfect right to suggest a new interpretation. The fact that everybody I have ever heard of up to now thought it meant one thing does not mean that it does mean that at all. The hon. gentleman may have made a discovery like Columbus did; but, you know, when Columbus made his discovery a lot of people were sceptical.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could ask the Minister of Transport a question. My question is based on the very interesting observations made, particularly in the latter part of his remarks, by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. When I refer to the "interesting observations", I mean his suggestion that consideration might be given to area representation or something of that nature, particularly in cases when provinces like Manitoba and Saskatchewan are called upon, under the rule as it now exists, to lose seats.

My question is this: Is the government considering or, as a result of the discussion taking place on this bill, would it consider asking the house to make the necessary amendments to section 51 of the British North America Act? I suppose that in effect I am saying to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre what has been said already, that the bill now before us is not one that makes changes or could make the kind of changes he has proposed. But it does seem to me that his suggestion should be given consideration, and perhaps the hopeful thing or the encouraging thing to come from the minister would be the assurance that this would be considered and that, if necessary, amendments to the British North America Act would be brought before the house, so that we could work out something of the nature suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful for the addition to my remarks. I omitted to mention the fact that some of the things I was proposing were of course not strictly applicable to the bill and would require an amendment, as suggested, to the British North America Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is exactly the point I was going to make, Mr. Chairman, that the speech made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, and particularly his references to the English commission—and I use the word "English" because they are not applicable to the Scottish or the Welsh or the Northern Irish commission, but only to the English commission—would of course be very difficult of application under the present rules in Canada because, though the commissions are directed not to make the house too large, they are not restricted as to the ceiling. We are under the constitution of Canada, where the ceiling is set out in the British North America Act as amended, and nothing we could do within the ambit of this legislation could change that.

If it was the wish of the house that the constitution be amended to change the rules that apply in the constitution and to change the proportions between provinces, of course it is possible to do that. That has been done before; it was done, in fact, in 1952. I think there are some people who suspected me of being the actual author of rule 5, and I have never been able conscientiously to deny that I had some part in devising that rule. The feeling at that time that was shared by the whole house was that because of the war and the sudden and rapid shifts of population during the war—and we did not know whether they were going to continue—Saskatchewan did represent a special case. I would point out, as an old Manitoban—and I do not think either member for Winnipeg would disagree with me—that I would find it very hard, and I think even the members from Saskatchewan would find it very hard, to suggest that Saskatchewan should have more members in this house now than Manitoba, because it is well known that, though there was a difference of 5,000 in favour of Saskatchewan in 1961, it is somewhere about 20,000 in favour of Manitoba today. I think it would be rather repugnant to any of us, as rule 5 says, to give to a province with a smaller population a larger number of members than a province with a larger population. I would think at the present time one would feel very uncomfortable about having any difference under any rules between the representation of Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

But the matters that have been raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, the hon. member for Bow River and one or two others are very large questions that, strictly speaking, sir, are not within the ambit of the legislation now before us, as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre clearly recognizes. But certainly if there is any strong demand, strong feeling, in the house or in the country that something ought to be done about these matters which have been raised, I think the government, particularly in a matter of this kind, would be bound to take notice of them. However, Mr. Chairman, I would hope that now we have had a number of general speeches we can perhaps get on to the detail of this particular case of legislation while giving consideration to these larger questions.

Mr. Woolliams: Because of your remarks you have just lost the Saskatoon by-election.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I had just a very brief remark to make on this bill, but it being five o'clock I think I should call it five o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if permission could not be given to the hon. gentleman to make his remark, if there is any hope of getting through clause 1.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, much as I would like to hear the hon. member at the present moment, I think we should now carry on with private members' business and stick to the rules.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, and in order to permit the house to proceed to the consideration of private members' business, it is my duty to now leave the chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions and public bills.

IMMIGRATION ACT

AMENDMENT PROVIDING FOR DISCLOSURE OF REASONS FOR DEPORTATION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-18, to amend the Immigration Act (disclosure of reasons for deportation).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to bring hearings of deportation proceedings into line with principles of natural justice, into line with the solemn declarations contained in the bill of rights, and into line with the intention expressed in the Immigration Act that every would-be immigrant should have a fair hearing as to his admissibility. This bill, if it were adopted, would have the effect of putting an end to the type of proceeding which has been described as farcical by the highest courts in the land.

To explain the situation, it is necessary for me to review briefly the Immigration Act and the procedures which have grown up under that act. The Immigration Act is based upon the vital necessity, if Canada is to grow and prosper, of encouraging immigration into this country. It is also based upon the necessity of regulating the flow of immigration by reasonable restrictions. The act sets out in great detail the people who are prohibited from entering Canada. These prohibited classes include those who are mentally or physically defective, those with criminal records, alcoholics, drug addicts, prostitutes, members or supporters of subversive organizations, and those who are likely to become public charges. The act also excludes those who do not comply with the regulations contained in the act. This last prohibition is the most important of all, because I would say that in nine cases out of ten applicants are excluded by the regulations rather than by the prohibitions in the act.

The regulations, which are passed by the cabinet under the authority of the act, really lay down the main criteria of admissibility. The first stream which is admitted are those who have the skill and training which make it likely they will be able to establish themselves successfully in Canada. The second stream represents persons whose relationships to those already in Canada justify their admission. The regulations also provide for a system of documents, visas, letters of preexamination, and medical certificates. These documents can be issued by immigration officials in the country of origin. This enables the applicants to be examined so as to determine whether they are eligible for admission under the act and regulations.

The act further provides for a hearing by special inquiry officers, with a right of appeal from their decision to an immigration appeal board, or in some cases to the minister. The special inquiry officer is required by the statute itself to receive evidence, although he has some wide discretion as to the type of evidence, and to permit the applicant to be represented by counsel. He then determines whether the applicant is admissible under the standards of admission set up by the act and regulations.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is perfectly obvious that the intention was that parliament desired to provide a full and fair hearing for those who sought admission to the country. This indeed has been declared to be the fact by the courts on a number of occasions. The courts have also made it clear that a fair hearing requires the person who is threatened with deportation to be furnished with particulars of the objections to his admission, so that he can make an appropriate answer to those objections.

It is necessary, Mr. Speaker, to refer very briefly to some of the decisions of the courts. I can tell the house that I do not propose to quote legal excerpts at great length, but in 1932 Mr. Justice Duff, who later became Sir Lyman Duff, the chief justice of Canada and one of the very greatest judges produced by this country, or by any other country as far as that is concerned, in what was known as the Samegima case, which dealt with the deportation of a Japanese immigrant, had this to say, as reported at page 642 of 1932 Supreme Court Reports:

> The jurisdiction of the board, as an investigating body, is limited to the investigation of the facts alleged, a condition, again, implying intelligibility of allegation. Indeed, unless the person concerned is to have a reasonable opportunity of knowing the nature of the allegations, what is the purpose of requiring his presence? The deportation order must fully state the reasons for the decision, in respect of the allegations. The spirit, as well as the frame, of the whole statute, evinces the intention that these provisions are mandatory.

Then he went on to make this observation:

> I gravely fear that too often the fact that these enactments are, in practice, most frequently brought to bear upon Orientals of a certain class, has led to the generation of an atmosphere which has obscured their true effect. They are, it is needless to say, equally applicable to Scotsmen. I admit I am horrified at the thought that the personal liberty of a British subject should be exposed to the hugger-nugger which, under the name of legal proceedings, is exemplified by some of the records that have incidentally been brought to our attention.

I want to inform the house, Mr. Speaker, that the "hugger-nugger" to which the learned jurist referred is still going on. In fact, it is not only on but it is the normal procedure.

Later the immigration department found a new way to get around the requirement which was indicated by the judge, namely the requirement of a hearing. This was revealed in the Brent case, which was heard by the Supreme Court of Canada. I am very conscious of this case, Mr. Speaker, because I was the successful counsel in it. Mrs. Brent was a young lady who lived in Buffalo and she wanted to marry a Mr. Brent who lived in Toronto. The department of immigration refused to admit her. The real reason was that she was suspected of Trotsky-ite associations, but this was not stated in the order of deportation. The reason put forward was that she had failed to comply with the regulations in that a special inquiry officer had deemed her to be unsuitable for admission to Canada by reason of the economic, social, industrial, educational, labour or health conditions prevailing either in Canada or in the country from which she came to Canada. She asked what these conditions were and why objection was taken to her, and she was told: "You can read the regulations".

The courts, and finally the Supreme Court of Canada, struck down that regulation on the ground that parliament had delegated to the cabinet and not to special inquiry officers the right to set up the standards of admissibility to Canada. They also held that before a person is ordered to be deported he is entitled to know the objections to his admission in order to give him a fair hearing; and Mr. Justice Rand in the Supreme Court of Canada described the proceedings in that case as farcical. Again I say that these same farcical proceedings are carried on to this day.

After this decision the immigration department found a new and ingenious way to get around the intent of parliament. The present Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) was then minister of immigration. I do not know whether he was responsible for this ingenious way of getting around the decision of the supreme court, but the method was as follows. It was provided by regulation that before anyone could be admitted to Canada they had to have a visa, a letter of pre-examination and a medical certificate. The only people who could provide these documents were the immigration officers; and the only people who could provide a medical certificate were the doctors appointed by the department. So that when it was decided to exclude a person, for whatever reason or for no reason, the would-be immigrant would be refused a visa or a letter of pre-examination. Or they would not be allowed to get an appointment to see a medical officer. Then they were solemnly deported on the ground that they did not have the piece of paper which the immigration department had refused to give them, and refused to give them without giving any reason for so doing.

Then a hearing is held and the hearing is concerned with whether they have this piece of paper. They are solemnly sworn in and are told they are entitled to have counsel, but the only question that comes before the special inquiry officer is, "Have you got this piece of paper?", which he knows you have not got because he is the only person who can give it to you, and he has no intention of giving it to you. The result of this so-called hearing is a foregone conclusion.

I have before me a typical case of the reasons why a visa is refused. It is a letter sent out a week or two ago to a Canadian who wanted to bring his brother and his family to Canada. This is what the letter says:

> Information has been received that the above named—

The brother and his family.

—cannot meet requirements for admission to Canada. It is regretted that a favourable decision is not possible.

That is all. In other words, all the information you are given or are entitled to receive is information to the effect that you do not meet the requirements of the Immigration Act.

I can give the house an illustration of a typical case under this particular regulation. I mentioned it during the discussion of the estimates of the department last session. It is the case of a Scots lady. She had come to Canada to rejoin her first husband whom she had divorced. When the immigration department found out about that she was ordered to be deported. There was a hearing on the matter and the ground that was given to her was that she did not have a letter of pre-examination. She was asked: "Do you have a letter of pre-examination?" She had to say no, of course, that she had never even heard of a letter of pre-examination. So she was solemnly ordered to be deported because she did not have this letter of pre-examination. After the hearing was over she spoke to the immigration officer and he told her the real reason. The real reason, he said, was that she was living in sin with her previous husband. He said: "That is the real reason you are not be allowed into the country".

The procedure of refusing admission by reason of failure to have a document, which in turn is refused without any reason given, has received the legal imprimatur of the Supreme Court of Canada, with Mr. Justice Cartwright dissenting, in the recent Espaillat case. But because the department can now claim that it has the legal power by this device to effect the deportation of people without any real reason therefor does not make it right. Indeed in my submission it is very wrong. It denies the elementary principle of justice. It deprives the hearing prescribed by parliament in the act of any reality. It is totally inconsistent with the bill of rights passed by this parliament. I remind the house that section 2 of the bill of rights provides that no law of Canada shall be construed or applied so as to deprive a person of a right to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of his rights.

The fundamental right to a fair hearing is contained in thousands of cases. The sort of practice we now have and which we are now discussing is a cloak behind which people can be refused admission on any discriminatory ground that the officials see fit to employ. In addition, refusal of admission to Canada without grounds given can mean that someone may be excluded, shall we say, because of malicious gossip, in some cases mistaken identity in the country from which they came, some incidental attendance perhaps at a communist meeting, a mistaken police report. Any of these things, undisclosed to the applicant, can be used and are used from time to time as a reason for the refusal to admit people into this country.

These are real rights, Mr. Speaker. They are human rights. These cases are cases of husbands seeking to bring their wives to this country or parents seeking to bring their sons or daughters to this country. They are rights which are not only human rights but rights conferred by the statutes of Canada, and those rights should not be denied without the opportunity for a hearing. The fundamental elements of a fair hearing are contained in thousands of cases, are summed up in the Latin maxim, audi alteram partem, and were expressed by Sir John Fortescue in his quaint English way in 1723 when he said:

The laws of God and man both give the party an opportunity to make his defence. I remember to have heard it observed by a very learned man upon such an occasion that even God himself did not pass sentence upon Adam before he was called on to make his defence. "Adam" says God, "where art thou? Hast thou not eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee thou shouldst not eat?

As Sir John Fortescue says, the same question was also put to Eve. The purpose of my bill, Mr. Speaker, is a simple one. It is that expulsion from Canada, this other Eden, this demi-paradise, if I may borrow a Shakespearean phrase, should not, any more than the expulsion from the original garden of Eden, be without an opportunity to answer any adverse allegations that may be made. The purpose of the bill is to re-introduce the fundamental right that a fair hearing shall be given to a person whose rights are being dealt with.

I can anticipate some of the arguments that may be made on the other side. I am glad to see the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Tremblay) in the house. He has not been in office very long. I hope his term of office will be one of substantial reform in this field. I know these matters are not simple. There are arguments on the other side about security, but in my view security grounds are no excuse for the denial of fundamental rights. Indeed, security reasons really do not have much to do with this matter. Even in time of war when people were interned they were given the reasons why they were interned, after they were interned they were given a hearing at which the reasons for their internment were disclosed. You cannot tell me that all sorts of people should be denied the right to know why their sons and brothers cannot be brought into this country by the simple edict: You do not meet the regulations and we will not tell you why. That was never the intent of parliament.

I have become sufficiently familiar with the proceedings of the house to know that I would be over optimistic to expect this bill to be passed in the brief hour that we have to discuss it. But I do urge hon. members of the house, particularly the government members who happen to be here, that they urge that this blot upon the administration of our immigration law that goes to the very root of the administrative process be removed. The present procedure—perhaps I have tried to detail too technically how it works out—has the result that an arbitrary administrative decision can be substituted for the process contemplated in the Immigration Act and by parliament itself. I do urge upon those members who are listening to me that if they agree with some of the things I have said they make sure that the minister thoroughly understands their position, so that in due time when he has become more familiar with his duties as minister he may himself bring legislation before the house which may incorporate the basic and fundamental principles provided in the act.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) on bringing forward this bill. I agree with him and I want to incorporate his remarks in mine so I can be quite brief. I should like to draw the analogy immediately that the same problem arises when certain people in this country apply for citizenship. I have said this ever since I have been a member of the House of Commons, even when the Conservatives were in power, and I still want to repeat it now that the Liberals are the government.

I am convinced, and I say this with respect, that the procedure has become a bureaucratic frustration of justice in relation to a fair hearing on a deportation order and a fair hearing on the rejection of a citizenship application. There are hundreds of people in this country who have been refused citizenship. After a certain period of time, the act provides that they can apply again. Sometimes their application is accepted, they pass the judge's hearing and the application gets down to Ottawa. Then, because some file exists that only the bureaucrats and the minister can see, this person is refused citizenship in this country. Surely, a person has a right to a fair hearing to find out what the evidence against him is.

I can give one example. I know a man in my own riding, and I am not going to give his name, who has applied twice for citizenship. This man's father was a citizen, but because this man went over to Europe, for some technical reason he has to apply for citizenship and has been refused. The only reason for the refusal that we can find, and this is hearsay because we cannot examine the file, is that he attended a meeting of Tim Buck's in East Coulee or some other place. I recall that when I was practising law in the town of Tisdale I went to hear Dorise Nielsen, who was a good friend of Tim Buck. I heard her on many occasions, but I did not go there because I was a supporter of Tim Buck. I have always been a Conservative. I am certain, whether this man attended one of Tim Buck's meetings or not, he should have been given a fair hearing. If the refusal of his application for citizenship is based on the fact he is a communist sympathizer, then he should be told of this so he can meet it. How can you meet something if you are never presented with it, if you can never go before a board and say, "What have you against my becoming a Canadian citizen?" There may be five points presented and the applicant cannot answer them. Somebody can judge whether or not he is a credible witness with reference to those five points.

It seems to me, and I say this with respect, that this particular department has a tendency in this direction. I agree with the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) that this word "security" is used rather loosely. We are told questions cannot be answered because of security reasons. This department is flaunting the law. This bill would not be before the house if the department would implement the law as it is. As I understand it this bill really is directed at a hearing by a special inquiry officer who settles doubtful cases referred to him by an immigration officer. His duties are found set out in sections 23 to 29 of the Immigration Act, being chapter 325, volume V of the revised statutes of 1952. If he finds that a person seeking to come to Canada is not eligible under the regulations, he makes a deportation order.

The Immigration Act does not require a special inquiry officer, or other appeal authority, to state the reasons for deportation. However, the forms include a space entitled, "Reasons for Rejection". As the hon. member for Greenwood pointed out, there are judicial decisions to the effect that reasons for deportation should be given in words. The department has got around this ruling, as the hon. member for Greenwood says, be refusing to give him an immigrant's visa, or something else. They say, "You have not got this document that only the department can supply; you have not got it, so then you have not won your case. Your appeal is dismissed." What a terrible usurpation of natural justice.

There are two decisions referred to in connection with this matter. One was referred to by my good friend from Greenwood. The first reference is re Offman, 62 D.L.R. 223, 1921, and the second is re Samegima, 3 W.W.R. 56, 1931. These cases, as mentioned by the hon. member for Greenwood, state that it is not sufficient reason to say that the applicant is in Canada contrary to the provisions of the Immigration Act and effected entry contrary to the provisions of section 33, subsection (7) of the said act. These decisions have been followed in recent cases. However, the sponsor of the bill claims that the reasons now being given are that the applicant does not possess an immigrant visa, a proper medical certificate or some other document. Since the immigrant visa can be refused without reason being given, since the medical certificate can be refused without reason being given, the result is the same. In other words, the department and its officials are usurping the law of Canada, the law laid down by the parliament of Canada.

I want to repeat that I believe it is high time that, in a democracy such as Canada, people who apply for citizenship, who have served Canada in many different ways and have been here 20 or 30 years, were given reasons for the refusal of their citizenship. If one reason is, "You are a communist and you cannot become a citizen of Canada", then that person should be told this. He should be told he does not qualify because of security reasons, not because he attended some meeting or did something while at university. This is getting down to the level of McCarthyism. I am not blaming the minister particularly, because some of the ministers before him have not done anything to remedy the situation. People come to the offices of members of parliament or go to the offices of lawyers in the various cities, but no one can get information for them. The department is breaking the law. The law is not being enforced in Canada.

I support the bill wholeheartedly. As I say, I am not blaming the minister, because this dirty linen was on his doorstep when he took over. However, it is high time somebody cleaned up this situation. How can we expect new citizens to apply for citizenship or to value democracy when the department is usurping the law? I want to repeat that this is a bureaucratic frustration of justice and it is up to us as members of parliament to speak out against it. I support the bill and I congratulate the hon. member for bringing this problem before the House of Commons.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have followed with considerable interest the comments of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) who introduced this bill. The bill purports to require of the department the reasons for deportation beyond the lack of a visa or other document, et cetera, and that they be given in each case where deportation is ordered under the Immigration Act.

The explanatory note attached to the bill reads as follows:

> The purpose of this amendment is to give reality to the hearing by a special inquiry officer provided for by sections 27 and 28 of the act and to put an end to proceedings in which the only issue in the hearing is whether or not an applicant has an immigrant visa or other document, which can only be granted to him by officials of the immigration department and which are refused without reason.

It seems clear to me from the explanation given that the bill is intended to operate in those cases, principally if not entirely, where visitors to Canada apply for the privilege of permanent admission or, in any event, refuse to leave Canada in accordance with the conditions governing their original entry. In such cases the individuals do not have in their possession an immigrant visa or other document prescribed by the regulations as being prerequisite to securing "landed immigrant status".

The explanatory note contains two inferences which I do not think I can let pass without comment. The first of these is that the department withholds immigrant visas or other documents, and orders deportation without reason. This, if taken at face value, would certainly indicate a complete lack of responsibility on the part of the department, absolutely at variance with the facts. The department takes a very serious view indeed of the whole matter of deportation and I can assure hon. members—

Mr. Brewin: On a point of order, may I say to the hon. member that the statement they refuse without reason does not mean it should be without reasons given. I am not suggesting that the department acts without reason.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I cannot accept the hon. member's point of order as a point of order.

Mr. Badanai: The hon. member takes exception to my statement that his bill refers to deportation without reason, and I would point out that this is not true. The department takes a very serious view of the whole matter of deportation, and I can assure hon. members that deportation proceedings are not instituted without good reason. The second implication, which is another interpretation, is that the possession of a visa or other document is really not important in itself, and some other substantive reason for deportation is required.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to make it perfectly clear that in all deportation cases, the reasons for deportation are given. These reasons may be the lack of visa or other documentation.

Where the lack of visa or other documentation is given, and this seems to be the core of this issue, according to the hon. member the implication is that this is not good enough, in that the department must prove the individual is being prohibited under some other section of the act or regulations as well. This ignores two essential and fundamental areas in immigration as it applies to Canada and to most, if not all, other countries of the world.

The first of these areas is concerned with the necessity of conducting immigration in a fair, orderly and efficient manner. The administration of the legislation related to immigration—and this includes the admission and control of those seeking permanent admission as immigrants as well as visitors—is a much larger and more complicated job than is generally realized. This year, for example, we expect to receive more than 100,000 immigrants. Our aim is for a greater increase. We also expect that in excess of 30 million visitors will come to Canada in 1964, the United States contributing the major share of this influx.

I should like to say that I have a great deal of sympathy with the principle and the reasons for the hon. member's introduction of the bill under discussion which, in effect, proposes an amendment to the Immigration Act that would reveal the reasons for refusals by the department in granting an immigrant visa, or admission to Canada as a landed immigrant, or where deportation is ordered because of the lack of an immigrant visa. As everyone appreciates, it is the responsibility of nations to decide who shall be admitted to their territories, and to take considered measures to allow in the number and character of people who wish to enter as permanent residents.

A word about the concept of immigration to Canada, and the assignment of responsibility in the application of legislation may be of interest to hon. members, who may not be familiar with it. When the present Immigration Act was before a committee of the house prior to its passage by parliament, considerable discussion took place. The present act was passed in 1952, and replaced chapter 93 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927.

At that time, and in line with previous concepts of immigration to Canada, it was the almost unanimous view of members that immigration generally should not be a matter of law, contestable before the courts in individual cases, but a matter basically of ministerial responsibility. The legislation itself reflects this concept to a very considerable extent. The minister is responsible for explanations of policy and for the administration of the legislation. Naturally, the minister is accountable to parliament for his conduct of the serious and onerous responsibilities placed on him. Having regard to these principles then, a visitor to Canada has no "right" to gain permanent admission to Canada and the department, through the minister, must accept responsibility for refusing permanent admission where this occurs.

The government is actually encouraging people from other countries to visit Canada. On February 21 of this year a 15 man group representing the Canadian travel industry, and sponsored by the travel bureau of the Department of Trade and Commerce, visited the British Isles, West Germany and France, for the purpose of stimulating visits to Canada. They especially appealed to hunters, fishermen and skiers, and invited European travel writers and travel agents to visit Canada.

I am informed that this travel trade mission, during the three-week tour, had arranged 20 Canadian holiday presentations and meetings and held nine press conferences, which received excellent publicity. Several members participated in television and radio interviews. Good will toward Canada was evident everywhere they went, and preparations are being made by the travel bureau to launch a comprehensive program to attract visitors from Europe for the 1967 centennial celebrations.

It is only natural that with an ever increasing stimulation for travel, with low cost air transportation available almost for every purse, it is comparatively easy for anyone to visit Canada. In these days of rapid communication and greatly increased international travel, Canada has been endeavouring to reduce to the greatest possible extent, consistent with the national interest, formalities required of visitors to this country. In this direction, within the past two years Canada has waived the non-immigrant visa requirements for visitors from all major western European countries seeking entry for three months or less.

This is a desirable step. However, in addition to increasing the traffic of genuine visitors, it also provides an opportunity for those who have been refused immigrant visas abroad for good reason, to come to Canada ostensibly as visitors and then seek to remain. The arrangement can also be used by persons who hope to gain permanent admission but who are unwilling, for their own reasons, to follow established immigration procedures which would involve applying for immigrant visas abroad.

They hope to gain a special advantage for themselves over their compatriots by securing temporary entry to Canada and then demanding permanent residence. These practices are not restricted only to persons who enter without non-immigrant visas, but the concessions granted can make Canada vulnerable unless careful control is exercised. And it seems to me that most of these cases of deportation stem from this group of visitors, who come to Canada as visitors. In most cases they are visiting relatives and then they apply for permanent residence.

To administer the legislation related to the admission of immigrants, the government has established quite extensive facilities abroad. In some areas the Department of Citizenship and Immigration has its own visa officers and in other regions it has co-operative working arrangements with the Department of External Affairs and British posts to service prospective applicants in their country of residence.

All this is designed to provide for the pre-examination of prospective immigrants where the necessary background inquiries can be made. To attempt to complete this task in Canada on any general scale would lead to administrative chaos and loss of effective control of the immigration movement. In brief, control, not only of individual admissions but of the over-all movement, is dependant to a substantial degree on the immigrant visa or its counterpart, the letter of pre-examination.

In order to establish the fact that we have competent officers in charge of these examinations, let me give the house an example of their qualifications which, I am sure, will be of interest to all hon. members. Senior officers in charge of posts abroad are required to have the qualifications, experience and demonstrated ability to administer a post, including the supervision and direction of other officers engaged in visa offices and informational activities. As a means of improving the calibre of the staff abroad a new class series has been approved for the overseas service, with the mandatory requirement of university graduation for appointment to the career service.

These qualifications require university graduation and a minimum of four years experience, two of which must have been in a responsible capacity overseas as a visa officer or in the counselling or informational areas of work, plus a broad general knowledge of Canadian government, economy, geography, society, people and institutions, and possessing an ability to assess, counsel and deal satisfactorily with people under all circumstances, including competence in dealing with groups, ability to participate in public meetings, film shows and speaking engagements.

Prior to posting abroad, all officers receive intensive training in the specialized fields related to the assigned post and are given an extensive tour of Canada, including discussions with responsible officials in government, industry and business on every aspect of the Canadian economy, to equip them to provide factual information to potential newcomers.

I might add that members of the legal profession are called upon to act in particular situations as special inquiry officers at each regional headquarters under the following conditions: (a) when indications are that the case may be contentious; (b) cases where an inquiry has commenced with an immigration officer and subsequently develops into a contentious case; and (c) almost all cases where the appellant is represented by counsel.

Where an immigration officer in the field becomes aware of a person who may be deportable under section 19 of the Immigration Act, an investigation is made and a report, with related documents, is forwarded to the immigration branch headquarters. If the director, immigration branch, considers that the situation warrants it, he orders an inquiry to be held.

Where an appeal results from an order of deportation following an inquiry or further examination, it is dealt with directly by the immigration appeal board. The appeal board is headed by a member of the legal profession who is a Q.C., and the other members are senior officials.

When the board reaches a decision its findings and recommendation are referred to the minister and the case is reviewed on his behalf by a senior immigration official to determine if the outstanding order is to be implemented or if proceedings are to be deferred. If the minister decides that deportation is to be carried out, administrative arrangements are made under the supervision of the head, deportation section, admissions division, branch headquarters.

The immigrant visa or letter of pre-examination are the only effective means of control and their lack must be sufficient reason for deportation if efficient administration in the national interest is to be maintained. The alternative is to re-instate the non-immigrant visa requirements and in the case of all visitors, conduct a rigorous and searching examination to determine whether, in all respects, they can meet the requirements of the legislation. The effects of such procedures, which I would certainly not recommend, would be unwelcome to say the least.

Apart from the extremely important problems of control and administration, there are other reasons for using the lack of visa alone as the cause of deportation, for instance: (a) The individual may have a medical condition, e.g. a social disease, which would make him prohibited from entry under the act. It would be embarrassing to the individual to reveal this. (b) The person may have benefited from an amnesty for a conviction in his past life. The conviction in itself could bring him within the prohibited class. To use it as a cause for deportation, however, exposes the situation and can cause serious harm to his reputation and personal interests.

I realize that if it is at all possible to do so it would be desirable to tell an applicant whose application for admission has been refused the reason for the rejection of his application. I must say I have an open mind on this and I can assure the hon. member that considerable attention will be given to some of the suggestions he has made, provided this can be done in accordance with the best interests of the individual concerned, and of course in the interests of Canada. I should like to inform the house that this matter is now under searching examination by those responsible for the administration in an effort to resolve this difficulty in as just and equitable a manner as possible, having regard to all the legitimate humanitarian and other circumstances involved.

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) said the bill of rights had something to do with this. I wish to make it clear that the bill of rights does not affect the validity of a deportation order properly issued under the law. The bill of rights simply ensures than an individual is given all the safeguards which are contained in the law. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) referred to certain situations where an applicant for Canadian citizenship is refused that status and is not informed of the reasons for refusal. I can assure the hon. member that the minister will look very closely into that complaint in connection with the examination of citizenship procedures now under way.

It is difficult to make generalizations about matters of this kind. However, hon. members can be certain that there is no desire on the part of the minister or the department to act in an unnecessarily arbitrary or bureaucratic manner as suggested by the hon. member for Bow River. At the same time, parliament has placed on the minister of this department the responsibility for exercising discretion in the granting of admissions. This is not an exercise which the minister takes lightly and while it may not be in the public interest to give explanations in detail in all situations, hon. members may take it as a matter of record that a very exhaustive examination of the circumstances is undertaken before a decision is reached on matters of accepting landed immigrants.

It is not the intention of this government to deny to applicants for citizenship any privileges which, in conscience, they may properly be granted and as I have indicated, the department will again look into this matter to determine what, if anything, might be done with respect to methods introduced for the examination of applicants for citizenship in the future.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Melfort-Humboldt-Tisdale): It gives me great pleasure to say a few words on this bill, No. C-18, introduced by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), and I should like to say at the outset that I congratulate him on having brought this measure forward. I have no legal training and I cannot make such an eloquent presentation as my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) has made. At the same time I should like to say there is much merit in the bill which the hon. member is asking us to consider.

Every member of parliament at one time or another has been confronted by people who came to this country and afterwards applied for citizenship papers and were refused citizenship. Every member of parliament at one time or another has been confronted by people who have received notice of deportation. I think our Department of Justice and our Department of Citizenship and Immigration should give serious consideration to having some changes brought about in our immigration laws.

First of all I think they should employ people to study the psychological behaviour of the immigrant. It is not the easiest thing for an immigrant coming from Europe or any other country to adjust himself to a new life and new customs. There is no question that some immigrants take a long time to break their ties with the old country, and because of this they may do something which later on they regret. Our officials should give serious consideration to these matters, because I know people who have said what they should not have said but as time has gone on they have adjusted themselves to our way of life, our country, our customs and our regulations and have become different people altogether.

I know of cases where immigrants who applied for citizenship were refused this privilege and who at the same time were raising families born in this country. I know of a husband who has not received his citizenship papers, but his wife, the mother of the family, has received them. As I said, sometimes these people make mistakes. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I do not think this system should continue from year to year. And what is much worse, these immigrants are not given an explanation for their citizenship papers having been refused, and sometimes when they are deported they are not given the reason for their deportation. We have in this country a bill of rights. The bill of rights should not apply only to the Canadian citizen; it should have the same applicability to a landed immigrant. He too should have the right to present his case, and if injustice has been done it should be corrected.

I am very much in favour of this bill, Mr. Speaker. I hope it will come to a vote, or if not, that at least it will be presented to a committee so it can be discussed in detail. I see that I have very little time left. I would definitely like this bill either to come to a vote or be referred to the appropriate committee. I am very pleased that I have had the opportunity to say these few words on this bill.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to commend the proponent of the bill. I think its subject matter is certainly important and pertinent at this time. I should also like to commend the last speaker, the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp). I think that in his address to this house we heard a very moving plea for the subject matter of the bill, and I think those of us who are interested in its subject matter are particularly interested by reason or virtue of some association we have had with persons who have become citizens of this country and have played such a very great part in its development and growth. In fact, some of those people who were new citizens not too many years ago have even become members of this honourable house. I often wonder how many other good men and women we have rejected who might have made a contribution just as effective, just as important, as have some of those good men and women, simply because our procedures were too restrictive, simply because while on the one hand we preached the doctrine of the necessity of immigration, on the other we did very little in the past to encourage it, to make the road easy, to make the road just, to make the road equitable.

As is the case with other hon. members, I do not associate the present minister and his associate with this situation. They have not yet had time to do to the immigration policy, practices and procedures what we hope will be done during their tenure of office, namely make them broader, wider, more just, and make the procedures such that for the first time they are up above the table, instead of down below somewhere, where we have to crawl on our hands and knees to find among the dust why people have been precluded from entering this country in the past. I do suggest, as the parliamentary assistant said, that this is not as simple a procedure as would be a courtroom procedure. However, I think we have all known of cases where, for reasons unknown and for reasons undisclosed, immigration was not permitted. I have seen, in my limited association with this department over the past ten years or so, several ministers who intended fully when I spoke to them to correct these things. I have heard them publicly on many occasions deprecate the fact that immigration must be in some way hidden. They have said that the reasons for refusal of permission to enter the country or to stay here as a citizen should be brought out in the light of public disclosure where a person would have, as he has in any matter affecting civil rights otherwise, the right to defend himself or herself, the right to hear why he or she is being refused.

I know that many ministers in good faith and with the best of intent have intended in the past to remedy this deplorable situation that has existed for so long; but somehow the weight of bureaucracy, of circumlocution of the department has been too much for their efforts. It is to be hoped, with this new enlightened government and with this new minister who is, I know, keen to do these things, and who has the very able help of his experienced parliamentary assistant, that under this administration we will succeed in remedying this situation which lesser beings have not been able to do in the past.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It is my duty to inform the house that, the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will now resume the business interrupted at five o'clock.

REDISTRIBUTION

PROVISION FOR BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS AND READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and to provide for the readjustment of such representation in accordance therewith—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I should like to deal with one subject in particular before we leave clause 1 of this very important bill dealing with redistribution. Before I proceed with the point with which I wish to deal—that is, one commission versus ten commissions—I think it might be in order to point out that this bill appears to be in four major parts. There are two points on which the committee seems in agreement, agreement not yet having been reached on the other two. The committee seems to be in general agreement on the non-partisan approach to this whole matter of redistribution. We appear to believe in the principle of referring the adjustment of electoral boundaries to a judicial tribunal, with rules for that tribunal. The other matter we seem to be in general agreement on is that parliament should have the final word. The two points on which we do not seem to be too close as yet, are those dealing with the percentage of tolerance to be applied, and as to whether we should have one central, national, independent commission or one commission in each province.

I should like to confine my remarks to this question of the number of commissions. I think that if we were to have ten different commissions across the country we could not help but have ten different viewpoints. We would have great difficulty in reconciling the viewpoint of say, Prince Edward Island with that of, for example, British Columbia. I think that if we were to have ten commissions we would have no continuity of thought. Uniformity would be lacking in this whole matter of redistribution. I know that the minister who introduced this bill feels that more time would be taken if we had only one commission as compared with ten. I am not so sure about this. I do not agree with him on that point. It has always been my experience that if a matter requires to be discussed in an organization of any kind, you can get the work done, and much faster, by one commission or committee than if the matter is delegated to ten different committees.

The minister has emphasized this matter of time. I do not think time is the most important consideration at this time. We should be very careful to take all the time that is necessary in order to do a good job. We should compare this question of ten commissions versus one with a sales organization which might be considering opening up sales areas in all parts of the country. This sort of project would be mapped out in the head office. Perhaps a sales manager would go across the country to break down the sales areas; but there would be more direct and closer contact with them with a central office than if there were ten offices scattered across the country. This analogy can be applied to the question of setting up ten commissions across the country. Also, we must realize that any commission will only be as good as the men appointed to it.

Nothing has been said so far about the great duplication which is going to take place. If we have ten commissions we will require ten of everything.

Nothing has been said in this committee about the cost. It is high time someone in this committee, preferably someone on the government side, stopped and considered the cost of some of the activities being carried on in government these days. We have a great opportunity at this point to stop and think of the cost of ten commissions compared with one central, independent commission.

As hon. members are aware, the commission to be appointed in each province will be made up of four persons. There will be the chairman. No extra costs will be involved here, because his salary will be paid through the courts. Both the government appointee and the opposition appointee are to be paid. According to this bill they are to be paid a per diem rate, and also travelling and living expenses. If we take a look at the cost of the per diem, we will find that a figure of $100 a day is what is paid by the C.B.C. to such commissions. Perhaps $50 a day would be an average figure. If we take this figure for the two appointees, assuming that the commission was in operation for a whole year an expenditure of some $25,000 is involved.

As I say, there would be four members to each commission. If travelling and living expenses for the ten commissions were calculated at the moderate amount of $25 a day, this would add up to another $25,000. Ten commissions would require ten offices. Miscellaneous expenses would also be incurred. We are going to need secretarial help in all of these offices. The representation commissioner will have to travel across the country. I have taken nominal figures for each of these items, and one single commission will cost approximately $69,000. Multiply that by ten and you have an amount of $690,000 representing the cost of operation of ten commissions across the country—a conservative figure, I would say.

If you think this is out of line, Mr. Chairman, let me refer you to our own blue book of estimates for the last fiscal year, 1963-64. According to page 362 the royal commission on banking and finance cost this country $199,300. The commission on health services cost $275,500; another commission on pilotage cost $301,220. If you add these figures and take the average you will find it is approximately $258,000. With the setting up of 10 commissions costing $690,000, less, say $258,000 for one central commission, it would cost roughly $432,000 more than if we had one central commission. I venture to say that before all these commissions finish their work it will cost the country half a million dollars more to have ten commissions than if we had one central commission. I bring this to the attention of the committee because no one has mentioned the cost of ten commissions as opposed to one and it is a point that should be given serious consideration.

There are many other things I might say about the bill but they have been discussed very well. I do not think we should be in too much hurry with this legislation. We must be sure that we do a good job because it will be another ten years before it is revised. With a population of 19 to 20 million people Canada is overgoverned now. If you ask the average Canadian citizen he will tell you we are overgoverned. Personally I hope that when this redistribution is finished we will have no more than 265 members in the house. I think the average Canadian citizen would like to see fewer members rather than more.

I commend the minister for bringing this legislation before the house. As I said at the start, we believe in the non-partisan approach and a judicial tribunal with rules for its guidance. We agree that parliament should have the final say. I hope that before the bill passes, the committee amendments will be made in respect of the tolerance figure because the fact is that rural ridings, because of their very nature, should not be required to have the same population as urban constituencies. I have expressed my views why there should be one independent national commission. One commission can do just as thorough a job as the very costly and expensive set-up of ten commissions throughout the country. Having in mind the few amendments that I hope will be made to the bill, I am sure we will enact legislation that we will be proud of and that future generations will thank us for it.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, one problem which I find rather disturbing was presented to the committee very ably this afternoon by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. I refer to the matter of unequal representation as between similar areas of the nation. I do not think anyone can quarrel with the minister's statement that Manitoba and Saskatchewan, having equal population, should also have equal representation. However, I was intrigued by the comparisons made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in which he showed that the combined population of Manitoba and Saskatchewan is almost equal to that of the Atlantic provinces. It seems to me that in all fairness an amendment should be made to section 51 of the British North America Act establishing a formula whereby the provinces losing seats would be protected to the extent that no serious discrepancies would be allowed to exist between areas as far as representation is concerned.

As I have said, no one can seriously quarrel with the fact that Manitoba and Saskatchewan should have equal representation, but as these two provinces encompass a large part of central Canada it is reasonable to assume that in regard to representation a comparison with the Atlantic provinces could be made. As mentioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, redistribution would leave Manitoba and Saskatchewan with 26 seats compared with 31 for the Atlantic provinces, although the populations of the two areas are almost equal. Under these circumstances I think the government should give consideration to amending section 51 of the British North America Act to give Manitoba and Saskatchewan an electoral floor of 14 seats each. The elected representatives of the people for that area would have a far better opportunity to keep in close touch with their constituents than would be possible with an enlargement of the constituencies to any great extent. With any further enlargement it would be almost physically impossible to provide proper representation.

Aside from the question of the vastness of the constituencies I am particularly disturbed about the representations concerning the constituency of Churchill, a riding which takes in two thirds of the province of Manitoba and yet would fall far short of a quota. Any enlargement of that area would simply make it physically impossible for the member to do the job he is expected to do as the elected representative. There is also the factor of rivers and the lack of access roads which constitutes a real problem. I hope these matters will be taken into consideration by the commission when it is doing its work.

Every province, of course, will face the possibility of losing some of its historic ridings in the shuffle. This is not only to be regretted but, if possible, it should be avoided. I am not going to mention particular ridings but there are ridings of that nature in every province, some dating back to the time of confederation. I believe, however, that Manitoba and Saskatchewan have a special problem, representing as they do a large and important part of the Canadian economy. The minister is a native of the prairies and I should like to appeal to him to bring to the attention of the government the particular problems of the prairie constituencies where the populations are smaller and the areas to be represented are vast I hope the minister will provide this information to the government and bring to their attention the necessity of giving serious consideration to providing equal representation as between these two prairie provinces and the Atlantic provinces.

We in the prairies do not expect miracles to happen, but there have been times since confederation when special compensations have been made because of certain features which would make it impossible for the area concerned to have the proper representation. I hope some consideration will be given to an amendment to section 51 of the British North America Act to put a floor under those provinces which are expected to lose members as a result of redistribution. I do not believe it is unreasonable to expect that in the case of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, with equal representation, this floor should be 14 members.

Mr. Enns: I should like to make a few brief comments on this subject. I want to echo pretty well what my colleague from Manitoba, the hon. member for Lisgar has just said. I do feel that Canadians are not in the mood to accept any suggestion to increase the membership of this house. I merely wanted to lend some emphasis to this thought by making a comparison with the United States. If we think of ourselves as having about one tenth the population of the United States, then we would suggest that the United States congress should consist of 2,600 members. I believe everyone agrees this is an exaggerated representation. I feel the people of Canada are adequately represented by the present membership. While there may have to be some amendment to section 51 of the British North America Act, I do not believe Canadians would want the membership of this house increased.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I want, for a few minutes, to express my views on Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of boundaries commissions. I carefully listened to the remarks of hon. members who preceded me, and speaking objectively, I can state that the ideas expressed by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) are very similar to my own with regard to the standards to be set for going ahead with the bill.

As far as I am concerned, I shall advocate a tolerance of 33 per cent instead of 20 per cent. I believe that the difference established in this way between urban and rural ridings would be the most logical and fair, as the many economic, geographical, human and social factors which characterize a riding would be taken in consideration.

As the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska said, such a tolerance would establish the maximum population for a Quebec riding at about 93,500 and the minimum at 46,750. I consider those figures quite fair.

To support this statement I shall quote my own riding of Compton-Frontenac, which, at this time comprises about 45 parishes, for a population of 42,366. Including two provincial counties, the federal riding I represent is vast, and rather complex, because of its economic, and even social, diversity. The basis of 33 per cent would certainly include five or six communities in the riding and the population figure would rise by 7,000 or 8,000.

This means that the member's task will become harder, and his representation work wider, because that area is quite large even now. Though a tolerance of 33 per cent would entail some practical disadvantages, it is far better than 20 per cent, because the riding would at least keep its agricultural pattern.

As it is, the rural riding representative has less time than his colleague from the city to spend on legislation and on problems brought before the house. But it is essential to give our population an opportunity to see that some general work is being accomplished by the house member and that is why I think that even if the number of parishes were to be increased, their nature would be relatively the same, the problems would be relatively identical and the representation work would become easier.

But with the 20 per cent tolerance, my riding—I take that one, but I could take any one of the 28 ridings put on record yesterday by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska—would be cut down to almost one third or one half of its present area. In my riding as in many others, all across Canada, there is a certain regional interest which must be maintained. Surely, splitting of a riding which would reduce that factor of regionalism to a feeling which cannot be found within political structures, would not be in the best interest of the citizens, or would not tend to provide in this house a more homogeneous and better balanced representation.

Moreover, if we look further, if we look into the future, we all agree that our population will almost double within 25 years. It means that at that time, the situation will require a new redistribution and that the basis of 33 per cent now suggested will leave room for that, while the 20 per cent basis would not allow any changes, because of the too radical carving up it would require at this time.

To conclude my remarks I should like to underline once again the following points. It is essential not to cut down a rural community—often indirectly governed by regional interests—into a so-called riding just to give a new value to urban ridings. We must guard against setting up extremist procedures but we must strive to solve as many problems as possible while respecting, in our reforms, a certain established order so that politics will finally help us to provide a better direction and definition.

If urban centres seem to have some overpopulated ridings, on the other hand, others are not so heavily populated.

I think that the solution would be to divide urban ridings and maintain rural ones intact.

I agree with several hon. members of the house, especially with those who represent rural ridings, because we have many parishes, and we have to cover extended areas during an election campaign or to inform our constituents.

Incidentally, I could say that when I wish to visit every section of the constituency which I represent, I have to travel almost 1,000 miles by car to visit its 45 parishes. If 25 to 30 other parishes are added to them, well I think no member will be able to visit the whole riding during a one month election compaign.

Therefore, I feel it would be much better not to change anything in rural ridings and if urban constituencies are considered overpopulated, the best thing would be to divide them up.

[Text]

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, the centralization and decentralization aspects of this bill are features which are deserving of some additional consideration. The bill proposes that ten commissions be established, one in each province, and there is the question of whether a centralized authority, under Mr. Castonguay's direction, would be in a better position to work up the figures for each of the constituencies and let them be the final figures. However, the plan in a sense is to decentralize and establish a commission in each province thus giving the appearance of local determination, with the thought that commissions with local people on them would make decisions that would be more fair and equitable to all concerned. It remains to be seen whether this will work out or not.

I believe with the statistical work that will be required—and there will be a tremendous amount of statistics involved—it will be necessary to have a central agency making an over-all plan, delineating a map, and presenting that map to each provincial commission. When that is done there may be one alternative, two alternatives or three alternatives, but it will be pretty much a question of the individual provincial commission performing the function of a rubber stamp, to say which one of those alternatives will be accepted.

Without going into all the statistics of shifting boundaries and so on, a local commission would not be in a position to do that unless its members had the figures at their elbows and unless they would, shall we say, familiarize themselves to a large extent in dealing with the figures with which they must be familiar in order to bring about these boundary shifts and changes.

What I am trying to say is that the centralized authority will have to do most of the spadework in bringing figures together, and it will be just one step further to have a provincial commission say with which of the plans submitted to it that it agrees. For the life of me I cannot see how, in the province of Alberta where I represent the Macleod riding, it would take a year to decide on the boundaries of constituencies if all of the statistical material were worked out in advance.

I should also like to point out that I have been unable to find any provision in the bill whereby the commissions intend to seek the advice of local members of parliament, or to co-operate with them. There is no one in a constituency who knows more about it than its member of parliament. He also knows equally as much as most other people about the adjoining ridings, with regard to where the boundaries may be changed. For instance, I am thinking of my own riding which contains four Indian reserves, or parts of four Indian reserves, with a fifth Indian reserve close at hand to it. It could be that in considering the adjustment of constituency boundaries, since I already have four Indian reserves, adding one more reserve to my riding might not be a bad change to make, because I have to deal at present with a tremendous number of Indian problems. There is a certain similarity between the problems of these reserves and it might be well to bring them all under one member of parliament.

On matters of this kind I suggest that a member of parliament would be in a good position to discuss them with the people who will determine the boundaries of the constituencies, and would be in a good position to assist them in making a determination, and thereby avoid mistakes.

Above all, what we want to do in this matter is avoid as many mistakes as possible. It is sometimes said that we progress by mistakes, but I am sure the Minister of Transport is not one of those who wishes to advance by mistakes; at least I hope he is not. However, it could be that unless this matter is handled properly many, many mistakes will be made, and once a determination has been made this machinery the act proposes to set up is not sufficiently flexible in order to bring about changes.

There are a couple of other points I should like to mention. For example, rural constituencies because of their very nature and their problems are, in a sense, quite different from urban constituencies, and in so far as possible they should be kept as rural constituencies. Many of the rural constituencies cover large areas. For instance, my riding is about 140 or 150 miles north and south, and 150 miles east and west. In such a tremendous area population is very scattered, and some parts are very thinly populated. But that area requires attention and has its problems just the same as other places. It requires the servicing of industry and it takes a lot of travelling to cover it thoroughly.

It would be to the advantage of its residents to have the riding left as a rural constituency so that the thought and attention of its member of parliament can be devoted primarily to rural problems. If that is true, and without going into further detail on the nature of these various problems, I think there must be a 33⅓ per cent tolerance to overcome the factor of the tremendous areas which rural constituencies cover, as compared with urban constituencies. With the advent of the motor car and the concentration of population in cities, in contrast to the rural areas, it is only fair that at least a 33⅓ per cent tolerance be given with respect to the number of people in a rural constituency as compared with the number in an urban riding. With these few remarks, Mr. Chairman, I turn the floor back to you.

Mr. Bigg: I just wish to add a few words to what has already been said on this question of redistribution. I should like to begin by mentioning just one constituency where the application of any rule of thumb would not work out at all, and I refer to the Northwest Territories. I think the total population of the territories is in the neighbourhood of 20,000, and as hon. members probably know it is by far the largest. I am certainly surprised that we should be thinking of including an even greater area as part of this already immense riding.

My own constituency has a total area of some 65,000 square miles and at least half of it is without roads. In fact, I believe some 40,000 square miles are without roads. Large regions are not even served by airports. It is really a part of the north country and should be included among the areas to which special consideration should be given if they are to be covered adequately. I should like to see a clause in this measure—call it an emergency clause—to deal with circumstances of this kind. I think the government should give quite special consideration to these areas—areas whose coverage presents peculiar and singular problems. It is obvious that there are vast stretches of this northern country where an hon. member cannot get around his constituency in a normal way and I think a clause should be written into the elections act to take into account the special difficulties caused by the nature of the territory, the scarcity of communications and the unusual expense which anyone representing these areas has to bear. I cannot understand how a member representing the Northwest Territories can possibly get along, bearing in mind the expenses they must bear.

As the commissions begin their work, I think they should certainly consult the local members, not necessarily to take their recommendations—I realize there may be political recommendations made—but in order to take advantage of realistic and practical suggestions which might well save the government and the people of Canada both time and money. After all, our only reason for being here is to represent our ridings, and if it is physically impossible for a member to move around the constituency he represents, something should be done to help him do so. This is why I maintain every effort should be made to set up the boundaries in a realistic fashion. Let me give the committee one or two illustrations of what I mean. The hon. member for Jasper-Edson has to travel a hundred miles through my district of Athabasca to get to the town of Smith in his own constituency. There is no other way of getting there. It seems to me it would be logical to alter the boundaries between these two districts, because I can certainly get to that particular locality to handle the complaints or to attend to the wishes of the people there much easier than can the hon. member from next door.

The use of arbitrary lines to mark constituency boundaries often leads to trouble. We have used meridians, and when this is done, except perhaps where an interprovincial boundary runs along a meridian, a great deal of difficulty is often encountered. I have at least four Indian reserves in my district and the meridian cuts right through them. It seems ridiculous that two members have to be consulted about the affairs of one Indian reserve when one is dealing, for example, with a complaint. Surely the boundaries of reserves are plain enough. In such cases I should like to see the commissions call on members for advice even if they do not intend to take it.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief. After hearing several hon. members state their opinion on Bill No. C-72 which provides for the establishment of electoral boundaries commissions, I wonder if the setting up of ten commissions will not be more confusing than anything else.

I am inclined to believe the hon. member from the western provinces who said a while ago that the cost of establishment and operation of ten commissions would be excessive. In the past, a parliamentary committee and the chief electoral officer were entrusted with redistribution when the occasion arose.

At that time, from all points of view and in every part of the country, that parliamentary committee, composed of representatives of the various political parties, carried on its activities with understanding and honesty, and this to the satisfaction of the voters and the districts concerned.

For instance, I recall that in 1947, at the time we were proceeding with the redistribution of electoral districts in Canada, I was representing Pontiac county which included all the old provincial Pontiac county, the Quebec Temiscamingue county, as well as the Rouyn-Noranda county, part of Abitibi east and part of Abitibi west. At that time, when the commission decided upon or adopted a reorganization or redistribution policy, the members concerned were invited to the committee, and proceedings went along on a friendly basis. My riding was divided in two. In spite of all that was said then about alleged political partisanship and interference in the redistribution, I feel that everything was on the level.

On the other hand, I am of the opinion that ten commissions would create more confusion than anything else. A parliamentary committee that would invite the federal members to discuss and submit their points of view, their objections, if any, would be more normal and more proper.

Ten commissions may oppose two or three provinces to accept a larger representation. For instance, a commission will be set up for the small province of Prince Edward Island, which has only four members of parliament and will cost the same as the commission which will determine the limits of the ridings in the provinces of Ontario, Alberta and Quebec. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that all this will be really confusing. And the same thing will happen as when the government, for instance, asked all Canadians to submit a national flag design. At that time, ten thousand flag designs were sent in, when Canada does not have a flag and when the government could have acted to give a flag to the country.

The same thing applies to redistribution, we talk of a 20 per cent margin for a population of 70,000. Others suggest a tolerance of 33⅓ per cent rather than 20 per cent, giving as a reason that such a tolerance of 33⅓ per cent would be of a greater help to the rural constituencies.

In this connection, I agree with the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) who mentioned earlier that we must protect the rural constituencies not only in Quebec but throughout Canada.

Some rural ridings covering an area of more than 100 square miles are inhabited at the most by 100,000 people, while in cities such as Toronto and Montreal, urban ridings covering one square mile have a population of 100,000 and even more sometimes.

It must also be remembered that in urban ridings, the needs of the people are almost all the same. There is not the diversity that is seen in our rural areas. Thus, for instance, in my own riding, there is a variety of problems related to mining, agriculture and forestry; there are also the everyday problems and even, as pointed out by my hon. friend from Megantic (Mr. Langlois), the unemployment problem.

Such diversity is not found in urban ridings, and in cities like Montreal, some ridings have 25,000 electors, others have 32,000, 33,000 and sometimes even 150,000. We do not object to giving adequate representation to cities like Montreal or Toronto. But we are strongly against any move to decrease representation of rural ridings to the benefit of urban ridings. In fact, I do not think that we could accept such a representation or such a redistribution.

It has already been pointed out that during an election campaign, the representatives of rural ridings must travel thousands of miles, while those in urban ridings have only to go from door to door to meet several hundred electors in the same apartment building.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that it is the proper time to deal with the establishment of electoral boundaries, since we are only concerned at present with the setting up of ten commissions, but just the same I hope that the few remarks which I wished to make will be taken into serious consideration.

I do not think it would be in the best interests of Canada to advocate the establishment of ten commissions which will certainly not give satisfaction. Let us take our responsibilities as members of the federal parliament, since redistribution comes within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

The provinces are increasingly jealous of their autonomy and since they are themselves ready to respect federal autonomy, I believe it is up to the federal parliament or a federal parliamentary committee to decide on redistribution throughout Canada, so as to maintain federal unity.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Commissions to be established.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, I have a few short comments to make on clause 3.

Following the brief observations made by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) respecting the establishment of commissions to report upon the readjustment of the representation of the provinces in the House of Commons and in accordance with the very principle set forth in the bill, that of representation by population, I should like to propose an amendment.

In order to improve that representation by population in Canada, the house should reduce the number of the proposed commissions, because there is no point, as I have said before, in setting up ten commissions, because some would only represent four federal members and would have but a few problems to deal with, especially, for instance, in the case of the maritime provinces.

Some members have said that if we have only one commission for the whole country, its work would not be efficient. On the other hand, others have contended that if only four commissions were established, there would not be enough commissioners to settle all the problems.

For my part, I would think that if we want to have a number of members proportionate to the population, these commissions should be established on the same basic principle, that is, a commission for the western provinces, including Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, would be sufficient, because it would represent a good deal of the population of Canada, that is about 40 ridings. A commission could be set up for the province of Ontario which would include about 80 constituencies, one for the province of Quebec, including approximately 75 constituencies, another for the maritime provinces, for about 35 constituencies.

If the principle of representation by population has been put forward, I feel that the same principle should be applied to the establishment of the electoral boundaries commissions.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne):

That the number ten be replaced by the number four.

And I also move that the following be added at the end of section 3:

That those four commissions be divided as follows: one for the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia; one for Ontario; another for the province of Quebec, and the last one for the maritime provinces, namely New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

[Text]

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words about the amendment. I may say to the hon. member for Shefford that this was precisely the idea we started with when we began to consider this measure, when it was brought to my attention, as I think I told the house quite frankly in the last session of parliament at the first stage of the discussions on this whole business, and was made clear to us that we could not really hope to have an election under a redistribution before 1967 or 1968 if we had only one commission, because of the time that would necessarily elapse between the establishment of the commission and the time it would complete its work—

Mr. Woolliams: Oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Bow River interjected at that point. I might point out to him that he ought to look at the history of the provincial commission in Ontario and see how long it has been engaged already in the task; and up to now it has dealt with metropolitan Toronto and not the rest of the province. Everyone who has studied these things has come to the same conclusion. We then thought, and it seemed a very reasonable thought, as the hon. member has put it forward now, that perhaps the tasks would be about equal—not quite; but about equal in proportion and in size—if there was one commission for the four provinces east of Quebec, one commission for Quebec, one for Ontario and one for the four provinces west of Ontario. That seemed to have the attraction of creating problems of about equal proportions.

When we began to think that, unless these commissions for the western and eastern provinces were to be of inordinate size, there would be only one resident of each of these provinces on the commission, whereas in the case of Ontario and Quebec there would be three or four, and again in the case of one commission for the four western provinces there would be only one representative from Manitoba, one from Saskatchewan, and so on, it did not seem to us that this would prove very acceptable to the population.

With regard to the point made by the hon. member for Wellington South, I know he was speaking sincerely and it certainly sounds reasonable to suggest that the more commissions the greater the cost. However, I doubt whether in this particular circumstance this is true at all. The commission in Prince Edward Island, for example, is not going to have a very extensive task. There will always be four constituencies, or constituencies to elect four members, so that commission should not have to work for a whole year; it will work only as long as required to do the job. The same is true of Nova Scotia and the same is true of New Brunswick. It seems to me that if we had one commission for those four provinces it would more likely take longer than if we had a separate commission for each province.

Those of us who had to do with the matter of drafting were very much fortified in this view by the experience of Australia, which experience we examined. Although the population there is much smaller, and in some respects it is a more homogeneous country perhaps than Canada, Australia has six commissions, one for each state. I reached the same conclusion, but quite independently, as that reached by the representation commissioner after his return from Australia, when he advised me that he had also come to the conclusion that the most efficient and satisfactory way to carry out redistribution would be to have ten commissions. That is why the legislation was brought in in this form.

As I indicated before adoption of second reading, Mr. Chairman, we are not making this matter of confidence or anything of that sort, but I said that I felt that ten commissions would be much more satisfactory than one commission; and I think one commission would probably be more satisfactory than four, though it would take even longer.

In the circumstances, therefore, I do not feel I can support this amendment, although I can easily understand why the hon. gentleman has put it forward.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I shall say a few words on the amendment submitted by my colleague, the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau).

The Minister of Transport raised some points against such an amendment, and all those who put forward any arguments must have cudgelled their brains for a long time to find such sophisms.

Indeed, there was not a valid argument against the amendment. It is obvious that a single commission for the four maritimes provinces will take longer than four commissions would, that is, one for each of the four provinces. With four commissions, one for the west, one for Ontario, one for the maritime provinces and one for Quebec, it is to be expected, as there are 35 counties in the four maritime provinces, that the commission responsible for those provinces will probably complete its task before the one responsible for Ontario, with 85 ridings.

It might perhaps take a longer time to have the work of the four maritime provinces done by one commission, instead of four, but that one commission for the four maritime provinces will certainly not finish its job before the Ontario commission, as that province comprises 85 ridings, or before the Quebec commission, which will have to deal with 75 ridings.

With ten commissions, as advocated by the Minister of Transport, some of them in certain provinces, would be completing their task in a few weeks, or a few months, whereas, those responsible for other provinces, would finish their work much later.

In the meantime, commissions having completed their work would have nothing to do while remaining on the federal government payroll. On the other hand, if only four commissions were appointed, with four secretariats, four personnel services, etc., a considerable amount of money could be saved and it would not take a longer period of time to establish the boundaries of the constituencies. Even if the four maritime provinces had only one commission, it would complete its work ahead of the Quebec and Ontario commissions.

The work for the country as a whole would not be delayed either should there be only one commission for the western provinces where there are only 72 ridings, or less than in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the Minister of Transport who contemplated earlier the appointment of four commissions, was right at that time; it was an appropriate thought, a bright idea—he has had a good idea for once, he should consider it again and carry it out.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that to have four commissions instead of ten would be more economical and that it would not delay by any means the fixing of electoral boundaries. On the other hand, the work would probably be more efficiently done since it would be concentrated in the hands of four commissions instead of ten.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, there is another point which was not raised by the hon. member who spoke before me.

Throughout the debate which preceded examination of this bill, in committee, it was said that a member of parliament should represent people and not mountains, lakes, rivers or so many square miles of territory.

Consequently, according to the same principle, the proposed commissions should represent people rather than mountains, rivers or other water courses.

That is why I say that four commissions would represent people rather than square miles of territory.

[Text]

The Chairman: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Rondeau) negatived: Yeas, 7; nays, 81.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, this clause has been the subject of much debate in the house, some favouring one general commission as against ten, and we have just disposed of another variation. The Minister of Transport seems to be of the opinion that with 10 commissions the work will be done much more speedily than if it is arranged in some other way. He appears to be contemplating a period of 12 months for the completion of this task. I suggest there is a real danger of this objective not being achieved with 10 commissions, because if you look further along in the bill you discover that one of the members of each of these 10 commissions is to be the representation commissioner. So in actual practice it may well be that the work of the 10 commissions will be retarded because the representation commissioner has to be present at the meetings of each of these 10 commissions. He is only one man and he has to attend these meetings in 10 provinces. I think this is a matter which should really be reconsidered.

It is for that reason that some of us had in mind the setting up of one main commission of which the representation commissioner would be a member, and the work of that commission might be sublet to subcommittees in the provinces. I think that would tend to speed up the work rather than the present proposal doing so. I think the work should be done within a year, of course, and perhaps it can be done in a shorter time if the work is pursued expeditiously.

There is another reason why I like the idea of one general commission with subcommittees by provinces working under it. That reason is that the application of the act, the interpretation of the sections and the general method of approach to problems which arise will be determined by a senior body, a commission which has supervision over the whole country. I would expect that with 10 separate commissions we might have 10 varieties of solutions to the major problem which will affect each province, the closing of the gap between various constituencies. It is just possible that if there are a number of commissions operating within the provinces we will have considerable discontent and discussions which might well be avoided, whereas if there was one general plan and that general plan was applied by the subcommittees in each province the picture as a whole would be more complete. That is one of the dangers I see in the suggestion of 10 commissions.

I mentioned earlier that with 10 commissions there may very well be delay. I now say that in addition there may be 10 varieties of solutions to the problems that will be drawn to the attention of these commissions. Is this what we want to do? Here we are setting up a method to be followed on the basis of the last census and which will be followed in the future after subsequent censuses.

At the resolution stage and on second reading the Minister of Transport said that the government is not unalterably committed to anything in the bill, that suggestions will be seriously considered and might even be welcomed, and that modification of the bill might be acceptable after due consideration. I put this before him now. He weighed in his mind the idea of four commissions for four areas and then came out in favour of 10 commissions because he thought it would expedite the work, but I doubt that he weighed carefully the two factors I have just mentioned. Will he now put his mind to these points and let us see if we cannot come up jointly with an alteration here that will do a better job for us? Frankly, I do not see the work being done within the time limit the minister has put before us and I am a little dubious about the separate activities of 10 commissions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. gentleman has put the point directly to me I should like to say it is almost exactly a year since I first began to give serious consideration to this matter. In fact, it will be a year next Wednesday. It was on the very first day that the government took office that I was entrusted by the Prime Minister with the task of trying to prepare this legislation. I do not think a day has passed in that time that I have not reflected on some aspect or other of this very difficult problem because I realize, as so many members have said, that this is a historic departure we are taking. I have given, I think, just as much consideration as my mind is capable of giving to this question and, as I indicated when I spoke just before second reading, it was the only point in the whole bill on which, so far as I was personally concerned, I felt I had reached a conclusion that this was the preferable way of doing it.

The suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is certainly not without its attractions. He suggests that there should be one over-all commission, a kind of appeal body, and ten subcommissions; but on balance it seems to me that would be a more complicated structure. It means that everything has got to be looked at twice and it seems to me that any advantage that arrangement would have is equally well fulfilled by the arrangement of having the representation commissioner as an ex officio member of each one of the ten commissions, and without the duplication of consideration that would be involved by having one commission with ten subcommissions.

As for the matter of time, it would certainly take far longer. It is not contemplated that the representation commissioner will attend all the meetings of all the commissions, and I think it would be a wasted effort if he did. He will undoubtedly exercise a co-ordinating function and will attend meetings from time to time. As the time required for these various commissions will obviously be different because of the difference in the magnitude of the problems, I do not think there will be much difficulty about his being able to go to some of the smaller provinces, where the job will obviously be done earlier, for their final meetings before some of the other provinces are ready for the final stage. So that on reflection I do not think I would conclude there is any real danger on this particular score.

As for variations, I have a couple of amendments I am going to propose that have been suggested by the debate on both sides of the house when we come to the relevant clauses, in order to try to ensure that the rules of procedure will be kept in line. But I am not sure that all those social, historical and traditional considerations that various members have suggested in the course of the debate are not apt to have more account taken of them by commissions, in each case composed of three people resident in the province and conscious of the background and history of the province, than would be the case with an over-all commission on which, unless it was very large, there would not be the same local representation.

It may well be that, because of the different character of the different provinces the tolerance will be exercised, and ought to be exercised, in a somewhat different way in one province from another. As the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre rather indicated this afternoon, a rather rigid adherence to the representation by population principle will more likely come from a single centralized commission than from a series of ten commissions each familiar, because they would be composed of people living in the province, with these local considerations which are, I admit at once, very important.

I think one hon. member stated that as far as possible we ought to try where possible to have the new constituencies based on a nucleus of the existing constituencies. I agree with that and I think most members of the house agree with that. This, again, is something that will be provided better by three people resident within a province than by someone looking at it from outside the province, as would be the case with a single commission. I think we have gone over most of the arguments, one way or another, and after a lot of very careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that, while there is a lot to be said for both schemes, on balance I think the job would be done better and I am quite certain it would be done more expeditiously, if we had ten commissions instead of one.

Mr. Churchill: I am grateful to the minister for his comments, but I should like to ask him this question. Earlier in his remarks he mentioned that the representation commissioner would not be attending all the meetings of each provincial commission, but he would be a co-ordinator. Now, what does this mean? Is this the man to whom the provincial commissioners refer their problems when they are trying to make a decision? I am not expressing any lack of confidence in the representation commissioner; I know him quite well. Nevertheless, is it the representation commissioner who is going to be the chief adviser to each one of these provincial commissions?

He has knowledge of the constituencies. Obviously, he must be working in advance on the maps of the constituencies. Is his mind set along one particular line or another? We do not know. Yet, if he is to be the co-ordinator his views are going to carry a great deal of weight with the provincial commissions. I just wonder whether this is perhaps the wisest method. If he is in doubt himself, is he going to come to the Minister of Transport for advice because he has no means of consulting with all of us here?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, sir.

Mr. Churchill: If the reports I have heard are correct, for example, and some people have mentioned them in the house, the maps are already prepared for every constituency in Canada and every constituency is going to be altered, or nearly every one. I suggest immediately that is the wrong approach. If commissioners coming fresh to the job are going to be presented with maps showing the divisions within their province based strictly on the representation by population principle, which is the only one upon which maps could be drawn, the commission will start off on a wrong tangent.

Perhaps there is another approach. I do not know what is in the mind of the commissioner who is going to be the co-ordinator. I think the approach should be from the known to the related unknown; that is, to take the constituencies as they are, you see how closely they come to the quotient that is set and you leave unchanged just as many as you can because of the historic associations with so many of our constituencies. Then, you gradually work your way to the point where you approach the quotient for your province, but at the same time taking into account whatever tolerance is permitted. Of course, my view of that is that there should be a wide discretion in the hands of the commission.

It is a little disturbing if the representation commissioner is to be the co-ordinator, and perhaps if this is so the representation commissioner should meet with some committee of this house so that we know what is in his mind before he starts on his travels.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman asked me a question at the beginning of his remarks, and I should like to answer it. I seem to have created a misapprehension in his mind. I suggest that he look at clause 7 of the bill which indicates quite clearly that all four commissioners have an equal voice at any meeting. If there should be a draw it would not be the representation commissioner but the chairman of the commission who would be the judge who would have to decide on the vote. In using the word "co-ordinator", I had in mind that it would be possible for the representation commissioner to suggest what one commission was doing with a view to keeping the uniformity which the hon. member for Bow River and others suggested would be desirable. As I understand it, if we enact the bill setting up these independent commissions, none of us is going to try to tell the commission what to do, beyond the rules we lay down in the bill itself. I am sure they will all read these debates, at least I hope they will. Beyond that, none of us is going to try and tell them how to do this job. We are going to try and establish a procedure in this bill for getting the best possible commissioners and then trust them to do what parliament intends them to do within the limits parliament has laid down.

Mr. Knowles: As the Minister of Transport indicated a few moments ago, Mr. Chairman, there is some attractiveness to the proposition advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, namely that it would be desirable to have only one commission. There is something that looks rather tidy about that, and I think we all understand the motives of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in advancing this proposition. However, this is a subject upon which there has been a good deal of thought by all of us, and we, in the New Democratic party feel that it would be preferable to have a separate commission to do the job in each province.

I am not going to take the time to go over all the arguments. They have been made and they have been answered. It seems to me that the argument that one commission would be more economical than ten is countered by the fact that one commission would have to do much more work and therefore require much more staff. Any suggestion that it would be simpler is also offset by the obligation of having a staff that would have to work in the various provinces.

It seems to me that the overriding argument is this. After we have established this commission we want the job of redistribution to be as satisfactory as it can be to the people of Canada, and that means to the people of the areas affected. I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and I would be met with some strong feelings on the part of the Manitoba people if the boundaries in Manitoba were drawn by a commission, based at Ottawa, that would not have on it people who belong to Manitoba. I think in the case of Manitoba, and this applies to all the rest of the provinces, we will get a more satisfactory job done. We will get recognition of the local conditions, geographical, topographical, sociological and all the rest, much better if we have a commission for each province. Therefore this is simply to reaffirm the position we have taken in the past and to say, having thought the matter over, that we feel the clause should carry in the form in which it now appears in the bill.

Mr. Woolliams: I think the minister somewhat misinterpreted the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in reference to the question of a co-ordinator. May I just ask one simple question. This is one Canada, although it is true it is made up of ten provinces, but by the provision of this bill you have ten distinct commissions. You have ten bosses, and if it comes to a question of principle, of interpretation of the bill, who is the boss?

An hon. Member: You.

Mr. Woolliams: That is a good answer. It certainly should not be any individual member of parliament because we are only going to be safeguarded—putting the words back into the mouth of the minister—if it is the rule of law that governs and not a person in an administrative capacity on the front benches.

On the question of co-ordination, you say it will be the chief electoral officer, but it must not be forgotten that he is a member of every commission, and there may be one interpretation of the law in one province and another interpretation in another province. The only safeguard we have is the fact that it does come back to parliament and somebody can complain, but that does not seem sufficient.

What the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre had in mind was that if there were one commission that does not mean it would do all the detailed work. It would be the top boss, with subcommittees under it. It is something like the judiciary. Each province has a supreme court, but if there is a national question to be decided it is the Supreme Court of Canada which decides, and that decision is final. You often have the supreme court of one province making a decision one way and the supreme court of another province making a decision another way, but once the matter is raised on a national scale there is only the one decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Again I ask, who is the co-ordinator? The chief electoral officer is only one man and he cannot attend all these commissions when they are sitting simultaneously. What you are really setting up are ten distinct bodies and ten distinct bosses, and they may interpret the law in different ways. That is what I gathered from the argument put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, and I think that was behind the thinking of the previous government.

The minister says his government has been thinking about this thing for a year, but the previous government had a bill on the tracing board which I am sure he studied, and it provided for one commission. We do not want to balkanize this country. I know we have problems of overlapping in federal and provincial rights, but surely in this matter there should be one distinct boss.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would just like to say a word about that, because I think the hon. gentleman has forgotten what he said earlier this afternoon in praise of the judiciary. The chairman of each of these commissions is going to be a high court judge, who is accustomed to interpreting the law, who is paid a salary to interpret the law and, after all, this law will not be a very complicated one. The job to be done is very complicated, heaven knows, but the law is not very complicated. Further, as the hon. member rightly pointed out, all these reports do come back here and if any one of these commissions has seriously misinterpreted the law, no doubt exception will be taken to that decision and, if you like, the final court of appeal is right here.

I can say, as I said in replying to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, his argument has many attractive features. I do not think it is a case of black and white at all. It is just a question of which one is preferable and for my part, balancing the advantages and disadvantages of the two, I think what we have recommended is preferable.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask this one question. Suppose an argument did arise in reference to the question I posed this afternoon, regarding the interpretation of section 51(5) of the British North America Act, and the commission in Saskatchewan takes a different point of view to what the minister has said has been the point of view over the years, who would decide that question—the commission sitting in Saskatchewan or the nine other commissions? Who would have the final authority on that? You have ten distinct commissions, nine differing with Saskatchewan, and you would have an uproar. There should be one Canadian boss.

Mr. Pickersgill: That point is not for the commissions to decide at all. That point is decided by the constitution, and the bill does provide that the commissions will be informed how many members, according to the provisions of the law, there are for each province, just as parliament has been informed when this has been done by parliament. If the interpretation that is made of section 51 is questioned by anyone competent to question it then, of course like any other question of interpretation of the law, I think I am right in saying this would possibly have to be decided by the courts.

Mr. Woolliams: That may be the point, but what court? Say it is the chief justice of the province of Alberta or Saskatchewan. To interpret the law he must understand the framework of the law under which he is operating. If he interprets the law differently from another commissioner in another province, then you have confusion. I do not think that question is properly answered. The minister says go before the courts. What court would that go before?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think the hon. gentleman understood what I said. I said possibly it might be taken before the courts, and he raised the question with respect to Saskatchewan, and said there might be more than one interpretation of section 51 of the British North America Act. Well, under the legislation section 51 of the British North America Act is not going to be interpreted by this commission from Saskatchewan.

The commission from Saskatchewan will be given what I might call the accepted interpretation, and if anyone wants to challenge that in the courts, and say it is not the proper interpretation, it would be challenged by the ordinary processes of law. I would remind the hon. gentleman that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre quite rightly regarded the practice in England as a model in many of these things, and they do not have one commission for the whole country. They have four, one for each of the divisions of the country.

Mr. Churchill: But in that connection the chairman of each of the commissions—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Lake St. John.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I thank you for recognizing us, for I realize several members of the official opposition had a chance to put forward their point of view, and I would like to state mine very briefly. Whatever the decision taken tonight or tomorrow, as to whether it is appropriate to establish one commission or ten commissions, I believe it will be extremely difficult to create a perfect commission, as the commissioners will certainly experience difficulties or face certain problems.

Nevertheless, to echo, at it were, the remarks of the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) in this connection, I may say we unanimously recognize that with ten commissions, we shall have a better chance to do justice to the provinces.

Like other hon. members, we have fought to a certain extent in order that the provinces may have a fair representation and may express their views. I feel that the proposal placed before us tonight, namely to establish a commission for each province, is entirely in line with the aim of confederation which is that each province should be able to express its own views.

Some hon. members have said that this procedure would be much more expensive. Personally, I do not think so, for if the commission, for instance, sitting to establish the boundaries of electoral ridings in Prince Edward Island—the smallest province in the country—worked only one week to complete the job, it certainly would only be paid on that basis for its work. On the other hand, if the Ontario commission had to work two or three months to complete its job, it would also be paid on that basis.

This way, I think we would avoid all the travelling that would go on if we had a single commission which would have to move about, from Vancouver to Halifax, to hear representations or claims from the various groups concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the ten commission formula is probably the best we could consider at this time, even if it has some disadvantages. That is why I think we should accept that clause as it is and carry on our discussion of this bill.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 4 and 5 agreed to.

On clause 6—Appointment of chairman, etc.

Mr. Knowles: Clause 6 is the clause which provides for the manner in which the members of the various commissions are to be appointed. We have now established, by the clauses we have passed, that there will be ten commissions and that each commission shall consist of four members. The wording of clause 6 as it now appears in the bill, provides for the chairman of the commission to be appointed by the chief justice of the province from among the judges of the court over which he presides. It also provides for the fourth member of the commission in each province to be the representation commissioner. The other two members are to be appointed on the nomination, in one case of the Prime Minister, and in the other of the Leader of the Opposition.

As we indicated in the debate on the second reading of this bill, we think an improvement could be made with respect to the naming of those two commissioners. We can understand the motivation which led to the wording of the clause as we now have it, but we feel that if we are to get this business of redistribution completely away from partisan considerations, or at least as far away as it is humanly possible to do so, we should not have two of the commissioners in each province appointed by persons who, though they can be named as Prime Minister and Leader of the Opposition are, in fact, the heads of two of the political parties in this country.

We have paid some attention to the debates on this matter in the past. As I recall, the present Minister of Transport when he was on the opposition side of the house took a stand for the naming of the commissioners in the former legislation in a way which seemed to call for the naming of these persons by parliament either by their actual names or by the offices they held. We feel this is what should be done. Instead of having these two commissioners named by the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition they should be named in a manner which would involve the setting up of categories or positions from which they would be chosen. We have drawn attention on several occasions to the situation in Manitoba where for a number of years we have had an independent commission. That commission consists of the chief justice of the province, the president of the University of Manitoba and the chief electoral officer. My thinking with regard to what might be done in terms of setting up a commission of four members stems from the experience of Manitoba. We have a provincial boundaries commission of three in Manitoba consisting of those I have named. I think a desirable commission for redistributing the federal constituencies in Manitoba would be the chief justice, the president of the university, the chief electoral officer and the representation commissioner.

I suggested earlier that this might be a pattern to be followed across Canada. However, several difficulties were raised when we were considering second reading. One was that there was not a president of a provincial university, just one person holding such a position, in all the provinces. That does present a difficulty and one we have to meet. There was also the question of whether or not persons outside the employ of the federal government would accept a position on the commission. How, it was asked, could we by legislation name the chief electoral officer of a province or a president of a provincial university to a commission which comes under the federal parliament. These objections were raised in the debate and they were real objections which had to be met.

As a result, my colleagues and I did a little thinking about it. We did some work on it and I produced, a few weeks ago, an amendment to this clause—an amendment which was actually in two parts. One was an amendment to the clause itself and the other was a schedule to the act. The gist of this amendment was that these two commissioners should be named by the chief justice of the province, if there was someone in that position, from among persons in categories set out in the schedule. And in the schedule which I drafted I submitted several categories such as chief electoral officer, surveyor-general, registrar of vital statistics, president of the university, and so on. At one time I had quite a lengthy schedule. I might say I showed this amendment to colleagues in my own party and to members of other parties and it got around that I had this proposal. I was very pleased and complimented when I learned it had come to the attention of the representation commissioner himself. He discussed the matter with me and he asked me if I would like to show him my proposed amendment. I was happy to do so. He then rendered me a service which I think we all welcome when it is done. He had a law officer look at it and come up with an alternative draft of the proposal I had made. So the amendment I am now about to offer is an amendment incorporating an idea produced in this corner of the house, though the language which, as hon. members will recognize in a moment as somewhat legalistic, is the language of the law officers of the crown. I may say I am hopeful that this amendment may be acceptable. Indeed, I am so hopeful that I have had it mimeographed, and it can be distributed among the hon. members in the chamber. I must apologize for the fact that my French is not good enough to enable me to translate this lengthy document, but that will be done.

As I say, the purpose of this amendment is to alter the way in which these other two commissioners are to be appointed. My proposal is that one of them should be chosen from among the chief electoral officer, the surveyor-general or the registrar of vital statistics of the province or the holder of any similar office in the province, and that the other one be chosen from among the president or other similar officer of, or a member of the faculty of, a university, college or other educational institution providing courses at a post-secondary school level in the province. If hon. members will reflect for a moment they will see that the net result of the subamendment would be that we would have for each province a commission of four, consisting of a person appointed to be chairman by the chief justice from the court over which he presides; the representation commissioner, and two others, one of them a person such as the chief electoral officer and the other the president of the university or someone in a comparable position.

When one sets out to make a provision of this kind he also makes arrangements for these appointments to be made. He also has to make the necessary arrangements in case the desired persons are not available. The wording of my amendment, which is a bit lengthy, therefore tries to take care of these contingencies. With that explanation, Mr. Chairman, I shall in a moment read and present the amendment. As I say, this is based on the idea that we think these commissions should be completely independent and that there is still a little suggestion of partisanship in the present arrangement whereby two of them are named, one by the leader of the largest political party in the country and the other by the leader of the second largest political party in the country, even though their titles in the bill are those of the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition.

I therefore move, Mr. Chairman:

That clause 6 of Bill C-72 be amended by striking out subclauses (1), (2) and (3) thereof, and by substituting therefor the following:

"(1) The chairman of the commission for a province shall be appointed by the chief justice of the province from among the judges of the court over which he presides, and the two other members other than the representation commissioner shall be appointed by the chief justice of the province from among such persons coming within any of the following classes as the chief justice deems suitable, that is to say:

(a) the chief electoral officer, the surveyor-general or the registrar of vital statistics of the province or the holder of any similar office in the province; or

(b) the president or other similar officer of or a member of the faculty of, a university, college or other educational institution providing courses at a post-secondary school level in the province;

except that not more than one member shall be appointed from among persons coming within the class described in paragraph (a) and not more than one member shall be appointed from among persons coming within the class described in paragraph (b), and in the event that within either or both of those classes there is no such person able to act as a member of the commission the chief justice of the province, with the approval of the representation commissioner, shall appoint such member or both of such members, as the case may be, from among such persons resident in the province as the chief justice deems suitable.

(2) In the event that there is no judge of the court over which the chief justice of the province presides able to act as chairman of the commission, or where for any reason no appointment of a chairman or of either or both of the two other members other than the representation commissioner is made within the time provided therefor by this act, the Chief Justice of Canada or in the event of his absence or incapacity the senior puisne judge of the Supreme Court of Canada shall make the appointment or appointments from among such persons resident in the province as he deems suitable."; and by renumbering subclause (4) as subclause (3).

If hon. members have an opportunity to look at this and compare it with clause 6 as we now have it, they will see that this proposed amendment strikes out the first three subclauses and puts in the two new ones that the amendment outlines. Then it retains the present subclause (4) but renumbers it as subclause (3). The total effect of the amendment is to leave intact the provision for the appointment of the chairman of each commission, and to leave intact the fact that the representation commissioner is a member of the commission, but to make this alteration that we propose, namely that the other two, instead of being appointed on the nomination of the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, will be appointed in the manner indicated from among the categories set out in this amendment.

I dare to believe, Mr. Chairman, from the discussion that we had on this matter on second reading, the discussions we have had on this matter in the past and the general desire that this whole business of redistribution shall be as far away from partisan politics as it is possible to make it, that this amendment will commend itself generally to hon. members of the house.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we all agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the unanimous desire of this whole house is to avoid any semblance of partisanship whatsoever, although none of us had time to master the long, involved and detailed amendment which he has brought forward. I know the hon. member would think it an insult if we accepted this amendment at such short notice, because it certainly is worthy of much more careful consideration than we can give it between 9.57 and ten o'clock.

The hon. member says he wishes to avoid partisanship, and of course he does. He refers to a wide category of people. I can think, for instance, in this connection of one university in the province of which I have some knowledge where the head of one of the departments happens to be the president of the political party for which the hon. member is now speaking. I am not sure whether that diminishes the partisanship, or whether it would not be better to let the nomination be in the hands of the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. Also in the same university the president happens to have been a former leader of one of the major political parties of this country and a premier of a province. I am sure he is entirely divorced from any political suggestions whatsoever, but I would just as soon accept the nomination of a politician, the Prime Minister or the Leader of the Opposition, as I would one who due to circumstances over which he unfortunately, from his own standpoint, had no control, finds himself in the position where he is now a university president.

I think there are many factors in this matter which deserve very careful consideration. My own feeling offhand, in agreeing that we must avoid partisanship, is that perhaps the best way to avoid partisanship is to recognize the fact that there is partisanship and we are going to accept responsibility by having the best appointments made by political officers who have a responsibility to the country as a whole. However, Mr. Chairman, that matter can be discussed much better, I think, tomorrow morning. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker may I ask the acting house leader whether he intends to go ahead with this bill tomorrow or let public opinion have something to say about it and switch to some other subject.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue with the committee stage of this bill. When that is completed we will go ahead with the resolution preceding the amendment to the Post Office Act, and then the budget resolutions.

Mr. Churchill: We have not given the press gallery a chance to do objective reporting on this bill. They need more time.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM REGARDING CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM CEREALS AGREEMENT

Under this co-operative agreement the government of Canada, other co-operating governments and the government of the United Kingdom declare their agreed objectives with respect to world trade in cereals. These are, first, that the world market for cereals should be improved through the establishment of a better and more economic balance between world supplies and commercial demand and that to this end there should be the provision of acceptable conditions of access into world markets for cereals in the furtherance of a significant development and expansion of world trade in cereals. Second, that there should be the assurance of supplies of cereals and cereal products at equitable and stable prices and the creation of greater stability in the levels of international prices for them. We have agreed that these objectives should be sought in such ways as would take into account the interests of both producers and consumers and of importing and exporting countries.

As the house is aware, negotiations are now going forward under GATT auspices, and in the context of the forthcoming Kennedy round of trade negotiations, for a comprehensive world grains agreement. In these negotiations we shall be co-operating closely with the United Kingdom, cereals exporting countries and other countries in pursuit of these broad objectives. Pending the conclusion of long term international cereals arrangements the government of the United Kingdom declares in this agreement its intention of introducing adaptations into its existing cereals policy with the objectives of permitting greater stability in the United Kingdom market and of maintaining a fair and reasonable balance between home production and imports. This balance would be broadly based on the present supplies to the United Kingdom market from domestic production on the one hand and cereals imports on the other and would provide the opportunity for domestic producers and overseas suppliers to share in the future growth of the United Kingdom market in a fair and reasonable way.

The new British cereals arrangements are to be introduced on July 1. Under this arrangement the British will seek to discourage the growth of domestic cereals production above a level consistent with their stated objectives by disincentives limiting financial assistance to producers in relation to specified volumes of production. In addition a system of minimum import prices is to be applied designed to prevent prices in the United Kingdom from falling to very low levels and so to limit the amount of the deficiency payment which would otherwise be payable to producers. A list of the products involved and of the minimum import prices to be applied to them have been tabled with the exchange of letters. There has also been made available to the house a comparative table showing the dollar per bushel equivalent of the minimum import prices, basis c.i.f. United Kingdom, for items of direct interest to Canada and the current market prices for these items. The minimum import prices for Canadian wheat are well below current market prices. Accordingly, trade will proceed in the normal way without a levy.

The proposed minimum import price for screenings of a fibre content of 15 per cent or less could give rise to a levy on Canadian exports. There was insufficient time to clear up this point before the United Kingdom government considered it necessary to issue its minimum import price order. However, the United Kingdom government has given the assurance that it will consult with the Canadian government and other co-operating governments with the object of working out a mutually satisfactory solution which would avoid possible damage to Canadian trade in this product. In the meantime no levy would be imposed on Canadian screenings. Finally, special arrangements have been made for wheat flour which will fully safeguard Canada's preferential position in the British market. Paragraph 13 of the United Kingdom letter sets forth the general British assurances concerning the maintenance of the benefits enjoyed by Canada as a preferential supplier to Britain.

Under the exchange of letters procedures are established for making any necessary changes in the products covered by the minimum import price system and in the minimum prices to apply. Such changes are to be worked out in consultation or agreement with the co-operating governments concerned.

The government of the United Kingdom will take action to maintain the levels of the prescribed minimum prices by such levies as may be necessary for this purpose. The government of Canada has undertaken to co-operate so far as practicable in the operation and observance of the prescribed minimum import prices. On this basis Canadian sales of the products concerned will be exempt from any levy except in the circumstances stated in paragraph 8 of the British letter.

Under the arrangements which have been made with the United Kingdom government the minimum import price arrangements are to be reviewed in consultation with co-operating governments before the beginning of each crop year or on request during a crop year. In addition not later than the beginning of December in each year the co-operating governments will review with the United Kingdom government the extent to which the objectives set forth in the British letter are being achieved. Amongst other things this review will be concerned with the maintenance of a fair and reasonable balance in subsequent years between domestic production and imports in the light of supply and marketing conditions, including the relative efficiency of suppliers and changes therein. In this connection the United Kingdom government have stated their intention that changes in their domestic guarantee arrangements should be made as necessary to this end.
