Mr. Peters: And prevent bloodshed.

Mr. Churchill: I will deal with the statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who purported to say, and did say, that at the confidential meeting on Tuesday the house leaders all agreed that the Minister of Justice would have unanimous consent for the house not to sit on Good Friday. That is not my recollection of the meeting at all; and the hon. member says subsequently he consulted with his colleagues and reported back unanimous consent would not be refused. I was not asked to do this or to report back.

There was none of this at all. There was a general expression of opinion that it would be unlikely anybody would refuse assent not to sit on Friday, but there was no agreement made, and time and time again the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, "Well, I cannot commit all my party. You know I have two chaps there who are a little difficult, so I will have to consult, or perhaps if they are out of the house when the time comes we can get the thing through without their knowing anything about it." I declare as false the statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that there was an agreement that no one would object to unanimous consent being given with regard to Good Friday.

Mr. Knowles: There was, if the word agreement means anything.

Mr. Churchill: He mentioned the fact that the government house leader in the meeting on Tuesday advised us that he was putting on the order paper a motion that the house should stand adjourned from Thursday until Monday the 30th. Then the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said that at my request this motion was withdrawn. I made no request at all. I said to the government house leader: You do that and you are in for trouble; you are breaking the word of the Prime Minister of this country—and this had been done. The Prime Minister had announced the term of the Easter recess, and I said: You are holding a gun at the head of the opposition and if you put that motion on the order paper there will be considerable debate, and if you compel us to come back, as apparently you intend, on Monday, I doubt very much if the house will make much progress. There was no request.

We are quite prepared for anything. Let the government lay out its business. We are equal to it. But the house leader took cognizance of the statement I made and, having, apparently, consulted with his colleagues, he finally reported back that the motion had been withdrawn. Then he was unable, in the course of the ensuing days, to arrange things with his side of the house in order that the work might be done in a suitable manner. I warned him on at least three occasions that it would be almost impossible to get supplementary estimates through the house in the time he had suggested. In fact he asked us if we would put through the supplementary estimates and interim supply on Friday, March 13. I told him that this would be altogether impossible. I said: Look back at some of the debates in the past and you will find that the Liberal opposition took anywhere from six to eight days on some occasions to pass interim supply, and that on supplementary estimates the Liberal opposition took, on one occasion, 12 days to pass a series of them. That was in the early part of 1962; and in the middle of April of 1962 the Liberal opposition took seven days on supply and two days on an appropriation bill.

So I said: You are asking us to pass in one day both supplementary estimates and interim supply, which is just impossible. I do not know how many warnings a person needs. I told the leader of the house that it was simply ridiculous to attempt to have the budget debate completed in its entirety before the recess. But of course the hon. gentleman was under the gun from the Minister of Finance who was annoyed with last year's house leader for tripping him up in the budget debate by not having that debate running continuously. So there is a good deal of dissension on the other side of the house and the house leader was, apparently, unable to persuade the Minister of Finance to abandon his way of thinking. In consequence we had four days of the budget debate before the time for recess, days in which we could have been dealing with the supplementary estimates if, in the opinion of the government, they should have been passed by March 31.

It has been normal to pass these estimates by March 31, but the Liberal opposition two years ago decided that this was not necessary. We did not force the issue. It has already been related that two years ago they took three days in March and another four in April, plus two days on the appropriation bill to get through final supplementary estimates. That experience obviously indicates that if supplementary estimates are not passed by March 31 the world does not come to an end; the position can be set right by the Appropriation Act.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who, I think, should immediately join the Liberal party instead of playing around at the game as he is doing—I now believe some of the stories in the press about the consultations going on between the Liberals and the N.D.P., because here you have the apologist for the Liberal party once again rising in this house to explain things away and help them out; I do not know what he is aiming at—

Mr. Knowles: One man against the truth.

Mr. Churchill: It may be he wants to become permanent Speaker. I do not know.

Mr. Douglas: That is about as cheap as you are.

Mr. Churchill: Now we are hearing from the toy soldier—the man who was telling us all about toy soldiering the other day in this house, and I said then, and repeat it now, that if he had smelled gunpowder he would not talk that way. But he bounces up and down like a little jack in the box and has nothing to contribute to the debate.

Well, the apologist for the government sitting with the New Democratic party has attempted to point out that no blame attaches to the leader of the house. Quite a bit of blame attaches to the leader of the house, in fact, and more blame attaches to the Minister of Transport. The Minister of Transport sat here on Thursday and allowed his colleague to be destroyed. The Minister of Transport was Acting Prime Minister. Fortunately we have the minister of external affairs back, a minister who is senior to him, and if the Prime Minister is away in the next day or two we shall have this experienced hand at the helm and he will keep things under control. But on Thursday, the Minister of Transport, the Acting Prime Minister, sacrificed the leader of the house, because all that the experienced Minister of Transport had to do, having had experience as house leader himself, having been here for a number of years, having been in the cabinet before, having worked behind the scenes, knowing parliament as no one else knows it—all he had to do was to rise in his place on that occasion when the house was facing a crisis and say: The word of the Prime Minister of this country will be kept and the house will stand adjourned until April 6. But he did not do this. He sat silent and the poor house leader fumbled and bumbled his way through.

Let me draw attention to the fact that at five o'clock on March 26 when the house leader was dealing with the business of the house there was an exchange of opinion as to what we would do. The house leader wanted us to see how much we could get done between five and six, omitting private members' hour. In rather vague phrases he asked us to see how much we could get through. I asked him: What happens if we do not complete the business which the government has in mind? I said, as will be found reported on page 1523 of Hansard:

> Let us be clear about this. What happens if by six o'clock we have not finished the program which the government have in mind?

Time was beginning to run out. Then the hon. gentleman said:

> May I suggest to the house leader for the opposition that we reserve decision on that point till then, if we get to that point.

I do not know what that means. At any rate, I said "No", as Hansard reports. Subsequently, the house leader said, and I quote:

> I propose to ask unanimous consent of the house, when we reach that point, to sit later this day to see how far we can go with these supplementaries.

The hon. gentleman was uncertain as to what he was about. I said this:

> —let us settle this matter. The minister says "to see how far we can go." What happens if we do not get very far? Do we complete the business and have an Easter recess or do we not?

To which the hon. gentleman replied:

> I think it would be proper if I were allowed to confer with the hon. gentleman while the next hour proceeds.

Then from five o'clock until ten minutes to six I was here watching, waiting for a call, to be summoned to another "confidential" meeting. Time was running out, and at ten minutes to six I went to his office and others appeared, and nothing was accomplished because the house leader did not know what to do. He was going to ask if we would sit from six o'clock on, and see what we could accomplish, but he had no plan and he did not know how he was going to get himself out of his difficulty.

This is no way to run a government; it is no way to run the business of the house. I thought that the experienced people on the other side would assist the Minister of Justice; but they have sacrificed him. They do not care. I thought the Minister of Finance would come to his assistance, or the Minister of Transport. But oh, no; they did not do that. Then the minister really got himself into difficulty at six o'clock by saying, "This house will have to sit tomorrow, Good Friday". Of course, he said he did not agree with that, but nevertheless the house would have to sit unless there were unanimous consent to proceed, and he was holding the club over our heads to proceed Thursday evening to complete—

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, may I ask the hon. gentleman to quote in extenso the text and to read into the text the words which I clearly remember having added, namely, "a procedure with which I personally do not agree"; that is, sitting on Good Friday.

Mr. Churchill: I will accommodate the minister, Mr. Chairman. This is what he said, as is reported at page 1532 of Hansard:

> May I have permission to draw to the attention of the house the fact that unless, somehow, we have unanimous consent to proceed, then otherwise, under the rules this house will have to sit tomorrow, Good Friday—

Up to that point—

Mr. Favreau: Then, "a course with which"—

Mr. Churchill: I will continue, but this is what he said up to that point. He was threatening the house that unless something happened by unanimous consent, the house would be compelled to sit on Good Friday. Then, of course, he said:

> —a course with which I personally would not agree.

He was keeping an escape hatch, of course, for himself; but nevertheless the threat was there, "Continue during Thursday evening, and unless we have unanimous consent we will have to sit on Good Friday". He would not cite a terminal date for what he might want to do on Thursday evening, and had we sat again at eight o'clock on Thursday and continued until ten or eleven o'clock, another three hours only would have been given to the estimates. I had so frequently warned him that the "supps" could not be passed in that time and all he had to do was look back in Hansard or ask some of his colleagues —for example, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Up to that point on Thursday evening we had spent seven hours on supplementary estimates. Two years ago the Liberal opposition spent seven days. So things were to be railroaded through this house and the opposition, of course—and properly—would have been subjected to criticism for rubber stamping the largest group of final supplementary estimates that have been presented to the House of Commons in 14 years. If hon. members look back at the record, they will see this is so.

That is what we were faced with on Thursday evening. So we have reached this stage where the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre attempts, once again, to save the government. I wonder what he is afraid of and what his party is afraid of.

An hon. Member: An election.

Another hon. Member: It isn't you, anyway.

Mr. Churchill: Well, the N.D.P. and the Liberal party have tried to destroy me for a number of years, without success.

Mr. Knowles: We will leave it to you from now on.

Mr. Robichaud: You are destroying yourself.

Mr. Churchill: I have heard this story for a number of years, and I am still here. I realize that the Liberals do not like it; they would like to see me out of the house. But I happen to be still here, and while I am here I assert my right to be heard and I deny the false statements of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I deplore the fact that he has now destroyed the confidential meetings of the house leaders.

Mr. Bell: Shame.

Mr. Churchill: I suggest that the only course now open for the government is to select a new house leader on their side and attempt to make better progress in the future. I make one further appeal through the Acting Prime Minister. I make one further appeal to him, the diplomat, to approach the Prime Minister and suggest to him that the word of honour given in this house has been broken by the action of those who were left here to carry on the business last Thursday. If we cannot rely upon the word of the Prime Minister of Canada, what assurance have we for the future?

Mr. Pigeon: The same old gang.

Mr. Churchill: I do suggest that the Secretary of State for External Affairs do that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, will my hon. friend permit me to observe that I am sure he will agree that if there is one hon. member of this house whose word we can accept, it is that of the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Churchill: I wish we could accept the word of the Prime Minister, but I drew this to the attention of the house the other day.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Churchill: I refer to his statement with regard to the Easter recess, and this afternoon in the house his statement with regard to the veterans hospitals—one answer to me; another answer to another member. Those answers being contradictory. What reliance can we place on him? Until the Prime Minister takes control of and directs the affairs of the government side, the House of Commons will gradually be destroyed. I could point out, again, what reliance are we to place on the Prime Minister's word with regard to what went on with the Department of Agriculture; the statement read to us the other day by the Minister of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Churchill: I make one final appeal to the Secretary of State for External Affairs: Let the word of the Prime Minister be observed. On page 1358 of Hansard the Prime Minister is reported as having said this:

> Mr. Speaker, I thought it had already been indicated to the house that it is our hope and intention to adjourn Thursday evening and resume our session on April 6. There is one reservation to that, of course, and that is on the understanding that interim supply is passed by the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, will the hon. gentleman permit a question. Will the hon. gentleman read the comment that he made immediately after that?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: I said:

> No, you did not say that the other day.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly.

Mr. Churchill: The "other day" the Prime Minister had—

Mr. Knowles: Who talks about accepting the Prime Minister's word, then?

Mr. Churchill: When the Prime Minister first referred to the Easter recess he did not indicate the necessity of passing interim supply. These are his words. I gave them on Thursday, and this will be found on page 1533 of Hansard. These are the words of the Prime Minister:

> I informed the house the other day that today I would announce the plans for the Easter recess. It is proposed, Mr. Speaker, that the house should adjourn at the end of business on Thursday, March 26 and reassemble on Monday, April 6.

Subsequently he repeated that statement and added the rider or reservation that interim supply be passed by the house. He had not said that earlier, and we passed interim supply very quickly on Thursday. We lived up to the suggestion of the Prime Minister and accepted his reservation because we realized that interim supply is essential so that government business may be carried on and salaries may be paid. We lived up to our part of the bargain and I ask the Prime Minister to live up to his.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Churchill: Certainly.

Mr. Knowles: Since the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre indicated that it was his purpose to draw attention to the falsity of certain statements which I had made when I spoke earlier, will he indicate precisely what statement I made which was false.

Mr. Churchill: I do not mind the question and I am sorry the hon. member was not paying closer attention. I direct his attention to two false statements. One was when he mentioned the motion which the house leader was putting on the order paper. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said that I requested that it not be put on, and I dealt with that. I said that I made no request whatsoever. What I said was: "You put it on and you are in for trouble".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: They were prophetic words. He has been in trouble without that and he has been sacrificed by his colleagues.

The second false statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was this. He said that we all assured the government house leader that he would have unanimous consent not to sit on Good Friday. I say that is false; no such assurance was given.

Mr. Knowles: May I just point out that when I spoke earlier I said with respect to the notice of motion that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre had objected to it and that I myself made the suggestion that it be withdrawn and that we proceed by unanimous consent. So I suggest that any attempt to say that this is false has been treated by the house in the manner in which it deserves to be treated. As for the other statement, I am afraid I do not understand the meaning of the word "commitment" if it is not a fact that we all assured the Minister of Justice at these meetings not once but on several occassions, that there would be no denial of unanimous consent for the purpose of not sitting on Good Friday.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I am not quite sure where this debate is taking us to. If we are not careful we will be in exactly the same position next Thursday night that we were last Thursday night, namely making public spectacles of ourselves and of the house.

I should just like to say a word of thank you to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre because I think he has done a service to the house and every member in it by making certain matters clear. I was not at the meetings which have been referred to as confidential meetings, but the hon. member for Fraser Valley, who is the house leader for our party, always reports to me following these meetings and tells me exactly what happens. He reported to me last Tuesday night and again reported in much detail to our caucus meeting on Wednesday morning. I understand that this is the duty of a house leader and that these meetings are not some secret and confidential gathering of five select members of the house. These five members come together for the purpose of working out a logical procedure to enable us to make some progress and fulfil the purposes for which we are here. Therefore I am grateful that this matter has been made clear for the record, both as I understood it and as I think practically all the members of the house who were so informed understood it.

It seems to me that last Thursday just prior to six o'clock it was the wish of practically every member in this house—

An hon. Member: What do you know about it? You were not here.

Mr. Thompson: I beg to differ; I was here until ten minutes past five. I carefully checked then and it was the opinion of practically every member of the house that we take our Easter recess. I would not have left if I had not thought that this was the understanding. I believe that what happened later that day and again on Friday is not something that most members, if they examine their own conscience, wanted to happen nor expected to happen.

I also make it very clear that very few members of this house really wanted to come together on Good Friday. I think that what happened on Friday is a precedent which we ought to be ashamed of, and if there is anything in the events of the last few days which should bring us to the conclusion that we had better pull up our socks and act a little more like responsible men it is this very fact. As it stands we are caught in a trap of our own design. This is a thing which destroys the confidence of the public in parliament and which makes our own work in this house very much more difficult than should be the case.

The situation as it relates to the events of last Thursday centres around the passing of the supplementary estimates. I would just remind the members who have sat in the house for many years that only six or seven years ago, and in all the years prior to that time as far as the record shows, it was the custom of the house to approve supplementary estimates and interim supply such as these with a minimum of debate. In fact, in checking over the records today I found that it seldom took more than half an hour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Thompson: Well, if you check the records you will see that is so in the case of both the Conservative and Liberal administration prior, shall we say, to the years prior to 1957 and 1958.

Mr. Bell: This involves a quarter of a billion dollars.

Mr. Thompson: I do not know what all the fuss is about. We have six motions of supply facing us in the months ahead. We also have the estimates for the coming year. True, the amount of money involved here is a large one, but tomorrow is March 31, which is the end of the fiscal year, and this money has already been spent. Instead of discussing these supplementary estimates we are discussing just about everything else under the sun. My only hope is that we will face up to the realities and responsibilities which are before us and come to grips with them, instead of beating about the bush and indulging in a lot of horseplay.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has said to us. I think it confirms the reason why he was fired from the position of minister of trade and commerce when he held that portfolio in the government. If the Minister of Justice has learned nothing else from his difficulties of the past few days I am sure he will have learned this much, that never again will he place any faith in what the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre tells him.

Inasmuch as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre mentioned my name and the name of my confrere, the hon. member for Timiskaming, as being members with whom a whip might have difficulty in getting acceptance of certain proposals, may I say at the outset that that is quite true. May I also say why we have indicated this attitude to our whip so far as his dealings with other house leaders here are concerned. It is because the hon. member for Timiskaming and myself, especially during the period from 1958 until prior to the election of 1962, had many direct and indirect dealings with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre when he was then house leader for the government, and we came to appreciate then that you cannot place much faith in his integrity when it comes to making commitments.

We told this to our whip; we said that as long as that gentleman was involved in the discussions we wanted to issue a caveat and protect our position because, as sure as heaven, when he came into the house he would say exactly the opposite of what he had said when taking part in these secret and confidential meetings.

Mr. Churchill: That is false, and you know it.

Mr. Howard: So far as these so-called secret and confidential meetings are concerned, to me they have never been secret or confidential. Good heavens, we would take the hide off our whip if he ever came to a caucus meeting and refused to tell us what went on in these discussions, and so would every other party, unless the Tories are different. Does their house leader not tell them what is going on? Does he not report to them? Does he not go to caucus? Maybe they do not believe him either.

So far as our party is concerned, we want to know from our whip what discussions have taken place, what suggestions have been made, what commitments have been made. It is not normal practice to disclose what goes on in caucus although I think it is a shame that we do not on some occasions. I think we should at times, because after all in caucus we are also dealing with public business. However, I will say that what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has related here this evening is precisely and identically what he reported to our caucus following these discussions. I think it is a shame and disgusting to see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: You are right, North Centre.

Mr. Howard: Winnipeg South Centre. When one is groping for polite words to apply to that hon. gentleman it is easy to make a slip of the tongue. It is a shame to see a former member of the cabinet come into the house and try to twist and distort the truth and the facts so as to leave a false impression of what went on with the house. As far as I am concerned, if we never have any more secret meetings we will be better off, if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, the house leader for the Tories, is going to be involved in them.

When it comes to the question of the accusation against our whip—I had better refer to him as our whip because I may get the constituencies mixed again—of being a potential member of the Liberal party just because he stands up to defend a member of the government who has been much maligned by both the Leader of the Opposition and the Tory house leader, all I can say is that surely to heavens you can tell the difference between a man wanting to defend and protect a person from being maligned and the kind of distortions that the Conservatives have been making.

The Chairman: Order. As chairman of the committee—will the hon. member kindly resume his seat—I do not wish to intervene in this discussion, but it has been the impression of the Chair that particularly during the last few minutes we have been straying more and more from the resolution which is before the house. I realize we got away from it perhaps unconsciously, but I feel we have reached the point now where all that had to be said has been said and perhaps things that should not have been said have been said, and I would be very pleased to recognize an hon. member who would like to discuss the estimates that are before the house.

Mr. Howard: Why did you not say that before six o'clock?

The Chairman: I do not, of course, want to get involved in a discussion with the hon. member but at the request of the hon. member who has just interjected I did read the resolution to the committee and, as Hansard will show, I did indicate that I thought we had strayed quite a distance away from the particular resolution before the committee. Having allowed a number of hon. members to discuss the proceedings which preceded today's sitting, I considered that other hon. members who felt that they were personally involved should be allowed to enter the debate. That is why I have not intervened for the last hour. I do not wish to intervene at this point but I feel that a word of caution is perhaps in order now and I would earnestly invite the co-operation of all members of the committee to get back to the item before us.

Mr. Gundlock: Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to come back to the item under consideration. As a matter of fact, I am glad that I do not share some of the secrets that some other members have. I do think though that with even a simple consideration of the rules the Minister of Justice could have avoided everything that has happened.

Several days ago, as a matter of fact weeks ago, I asked questions in the house under this particular item having to do with administration of agriculture, and to me administration is the same as policy. To my mind administration and policy are practically one and the same thing. I put several questions to the Minister of Finance who is not in the house tonight. I assume that the President of the Privy Council is taking his place.

The Minister of Finance told me that this was a good item under which to ask my questions and I am glad that we are here today discussing it. As a matter of fact, there are many items before us totalling a quarter of a billion dollars. The questions I asked, particularly on March 13, have not been answered.

Mr. Winch: What phase of agriculture is the hon. member now discussing?

Mr. Gundlock: Item No. 1, administration, and to me administration is policy. The two are inseparable. The questions I asked at that time had to do with administrative policies affecting research and several other items. The Minister of Agriculture was not in the house at that time and tonight I think we should be able to ask him to answer some of those questions.

One question in particular had to do with the Farm Credit Corporation. At the time the Minister of Finance said he would bring it to the attention of the minister responsible, but at that time we were not sure who the minister responsible was.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are not yet.

Mr. Gundlock: Maybe we are not yet. But the Minister of Agriculture is here. He has been in the west and we have seen newspaper reports to the effect that there will be sweeping changes in the Farm Credit Corporation. Is it not fair that the Minister of Agriculture should rise in his place at this point and explain? That is why we are here today. We could not pass a quarter of a billion dollars of estimates in a few short minutes. We need some questions answered. I asked these questions having to do with item No. 1, administration, which to me means policy. The only policy we have heard has been on the hustings. If you only knew, Mr. Chairman, what some hon. members opposite say on the hustings you would not blame us for asking certain questions here.

I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture, who makes announcements outside of this house in connection with this item, if we could not have some explanation? There are members in this committee who have good, practical advice to offer the Department of Agriculture and the minister, and I believe the minister knows this. The reason this item was allowed to stand, Mr. Chairman, was that we could not ask a question under this item as there was no responsible person at the moment amongst hon. members opposite.

I should like to ask the minister, quite seriously, under this item, what new policy or what new regulations might be made in connection with the Farm Credit Corporation? Is the minister ready to answer?

Mr. Hays: I am quite prepared to answer all the questions just as soon as all the questions have been asked.

Mr. Gundlock: This is the reason we are here today. We are being asked to pass estimates totalling a quarter of a billion dollars without any answers or any explanations. Would the minister care to answer that question?

The Chairman: My understanding of the proceedings, since we started this afternoon, has been that hon. members were to be given an opportunity of asking questions or making statements of a general nature, following which the minister would make a statement in reply. If the minister replies to any particular question along the way, that is up to him to decide. I would suggest that there are other members who still desire to make speeches of a general nature, and probably they should be allowed to make their contribution before the minister makes his statement.

Mr. Gundlock: As I stated at the outset, I asked a question on March 13 and the Minister of Finance, who is not here tonight, assured me he would bring it to the attention of the minister. This is the reason we are here today. These specific questions were asked, and will the minister now give us an answer to them?

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nowlan: I should like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that there are many items here which have no bearing whatever on the close of the financial year. I am thinking, for instance, of this stabilization board item and the butter write-off. There are scores of items—I will not say scores because I have not checked them—there are many items which could very properly be allowed to stand until such time as we return, if we do have an adjournment. There are other items which, possibly, the government may say it is essential to have passed. This would appear to me to be one way in which we could make some progress and still reserve the right to debate certain items.

There is a salary item, for instance, and if the minister were to say that item is essential to be passed between now and March 31, that is something to which we would have to give very careful consideration As I have said, there are items here, such as the write-off on butter, which could be allowed to stand and which would give one an opportunity later to deal with agricultural matters. I am wondering if any progress could be made in dealing with these estimates if we could have an agreement or a discussion as to which items the government feels are essential to be passed between now and tomorrow night. Personally, I do not believe any of them are essential, but I am not entirely cognizant of all the problems. There may be salary problems and there may be bills which have to be paid. I think possibly some of the creditors may be held up and the civil servants may be paid instead. In this way, Mr. Chairman, I think we could make real progress. The government could withdraw from the appropriation bill the items which are not essential between now and tomorrow night. In the meantime, we could pass those which the government says are essential, and reserve the right to debate some items. I am sure we would find items in every department on which we could have a debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might say a word in response to what the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has said? Possibly we could follow the procedure of standing this item with which we are dealing now, and then just go ahead with the other items. If there were any one that the opposition felt they wanted to allow to stand for special discussion, that could be considered. In the meantime, perhaps the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings and the president of the council could confer briefly to ascertain whether or not something along the line he has suggested might be possible. I would include the house leaders, of course, but the president of the council is representing the Minister of Finance and has the kind of information that is necessary for such a discussion.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, the debate which is now taking place is the result of one of the more evident weaknesses of this government. I refer to the refusal or the inability of ministers to answer questions in the house. Each and every day questions are posed to these ministers, and inevitably one or the other looks around, almost using mental telepathy and saying to one another: You answer this one; I don't know what it is all about. Each one of us would concede that a new minister should be allowed a period during which to become familiar with his department. However the same weaknesses are evident in the more experienced members. As a colleague of mine from another party said to me the other day, "Rod, you cannot help sometimes feeling sorry for them, they are in such a state of confusion".

The other day the hon. member for Oxford asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question with regard to advertising cheese in foreign markets. The minister replied that every company had been notified and every company had an opportunity to take advantage of this notification. I at once went to the telephone and called the Ontario cheese producers who sell some 65 million pounds of cheese per year. They told me that they were not informed and did not even know what I was talking about. Just today, sir, there was another example of this weakness. The Prime Minister, in answer to a question concerning hospitalization, gave the opposite information to that which the Minister of Veterans Affairs gave to the house a few days ago.

Sir, on Good Friday Canadians again experienced another black Friday under Liberal rule. We all remember the pipe line debate when many of the ministers opposite tried to bulldoze business through. Last Thursday they held a club over the opposition's head, demanding that it pass expenditures of some $240 million without even an opportunity to debate, question or scrutinize these bills.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, some of the ministers responsible for the first black Friday have since gone to the Senate. Some have been demoted and some are still there, but as one sits on this side of the house each day it becomes more and more evident that the government is disintegrating. In all fairness to the people of Canada I say the government should immediately re-organize itself, or else bring some of the younger backbenchers, full of blood and vigour, up to the front benches. The only other alternative it has is to resign and face the people of Canada.

The Chairman: I had expressed the pious hope a moment ago that perhaps we might return to vote 1e of the Department of Agriculture. Perhaps I could have the co-operation of the hon. member to return to the consideration of agriculture estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to interrupt for one second to put the question again which I put in response to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, when I made the suggestion we should stand the item we are now on and go ahead with other items on which there is no desire for prolonged debate, while the president of the council and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings are conferring, as I understand they are at this very moment?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, Mr. Chairman. We are most anxious to hear from the Minister of Agriculture who has sat in solitary silence for so long. There have been many questions asked of him and we want to have the answers before we finish vote No. 1, which is the general section. I cannot understand why a minster would sit here day after day and not give us any answers. If we get answers we will get on, but we will not go very fast unless there is a recognition on his part, or on the part of the triumvirate now looking after agriculture, that we have to get answers. If he cannot give answers perhaps some of the associate assistants or supervising ministers would be able to provide them.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was agreed upon at the very outset of these estimates, six sitting days ago, that the general speeches would be made on this vote, and the Minister of Agriculture has indicated three or four times that he would like to hear all the speeches and reply to them all at once. No objection was taken to this.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister cannot reply when he is not here.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the right hon. gentleman would not wish to be unjust. The Minister of Agriculture has been here all evening. He went behind the curtain for a moment or two and he will be back in the house. If hon. gentlemen are ready to say they have completed their general speeches that would not mean they could not ask specific questions, and as soon as there is an indication that general speeches have been concluded the minister would be delighted to reply.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So that the record will be straight, the hon. gentleman says that the situation he has placed before the committee extends over a period of—10 days was it?

Mr. Pickersgill: Six days.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Six days. It now extends over a period of approximately ten and a half hours. Let us get it in hours.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we ought to make that record complete. We took all day on March 13, all afternoon on March 16, all afternoon on March 18; we took practically all of the government time on March 25 and took a considerable time on March 26. That is five sitting days, as much time as the government had that was given by the house, and now we are on the sixth day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Seven hours.

Mr. Pickersgill: Those were the same kind of days the right hon. gentleman talked about in 1962.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I just want to say to the minister that we are going to get answers to these questions and no amount of evasive subtlety is going to be a substitute for information. Let that be clear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I quite agree with the right hon. gentleman.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Cape Breton South, on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: Not necessarily, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I might point out that the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac has the floor, but I will recognize the hon. member if he has a point of order or a question of privilege. This is the only way he can get the floor at this stage.

Mr. MacInnis: I am very glad you brought my attention to the fact that I do have a point of order. You of course, sir, were completely prepared to recognize me on three different occasions but I would point out that the Minister of Transport, back to his rude ways, got to his feet on three occasions and carried on without proper recognition from the Chair. Since a point of order was requested of me, I give that. You were fully aware of the fact that members were about to rise when the Minister of Transport, back to his very rude tactics, once again jumped in his place and without recognition from the Chair spoke, which according to the Speaker himself is not allowed.

Mr. Nugent: On a point of order on what the Minister of Transport has said, since there has been so much misunderstanding I want to be sure of what will happen when the Minister of Transport said, "after the general speeches were concluded." Now, a lot of information has been asked for, and it is quite possible some of the information forthcoming may prompt another speech. I do not want this to go through without that reservation being contained in it, that if information is serious enough to give rise to another speech there will be time for that.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac.

Mr. Webb: In closing I would like the minister, when he replies, to give us the prices of cattle for April, 1963 and each succeeding month until the end of the year, and the same information with respect to hogs. I also ask him to give us the figures on cattle exports to the United States in 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963 and 1964 to date.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, my remarks on agriculture will be as scarce as the answers which hon. members who are vitally interested in the subject have been failing to get from the Minister of Agriculture, because I am very anxious to see the business expedited in order to get to other matters which are of much keener interest to me. I am sure a few answers from the responsible minister would expedite the business of the house so that we can reach other matters of importance in my area. I have in mind the situation of which the Minister of Labour is aware, where U.I.C. benefits are going to be a very important issue very shortly. It would be very helpful if the committee could get to the labour estimates and a way could be found to supplement the unemployment insurance fund.

By the silence emanating from the other side of the house with respect to answers to agricultural problems, it appears to me the government has decided to sit back and say nothing, allowing the Conservatives to talk all the time about agriculture, so that later on the government can say the Conservatives have been filibustering. However the answers sought from the Minister of Agriculture are necessary to expedite the business.

I wonder if the hon. member in the far right hand corner on the Liberal benches would care to get up and give us a dissertation on his conscience. He seems to have a good deal to say from his seat—he is pretty hard to identify—

Mr. Cameron (High Park): On a point of order, is the hon. member referring to me? I did not open my mouth. If I did open my mouth I would say something more to the point than the hon. gentleman who is speaking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Cape Breton South has the floor and I think he should be heard without interruption.

Mr. MacInnis: I only hope that the silence on my part will not be referred to as a take-off on the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, am I to stand here, having been recognized by the Chair, to listen to remarks emanating from the other side of the house? I notice that the Minister of Fisheries is quite vocal in intervening. Am I to stand here and try to make a few remarks with regard to this matter—

Mr. Robichaud: On a question of privilege, as my name has been mentioned I want to state that I never said a word. I was just looking and laughing.

Mr. MacInnis: There is one question I would put to the leader of the house and to all responsible occupants of the treasury benches. Just how far is this committee prepared to go in allowing ministers of the crown to rise without being recognized by the Chair? The Minister of Fisheries got up and said he did not say anything. He was not recognized by the Chair. He says he did not make an interjection and, while saying this, he is making an interjection.

Mr. Robichaud: On a question of privilege; when I rose, I rose on a question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis: And on a point of order, Mr. Chairman: You did not recognize the minister on his question of privilege.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think I must appeal to the good sense of the committee to get back to the problem which is before us and address itself to the job which faces us.

Mr. MacInnis: The problem before the committee, whether we are willing to recognize it or not, is that of prying a few answers from the Minister of Agriculture. In order that the business before this committee might be expedited and in order that we might get on to other matters of concern to hon. members I would implore the hon. gentleman to get up and give us a few of these answers. Some of us are anxious to deal with other matters including the position of the unemployment insurance fund, which has dried up.

Mr. Hays: I am pleased to be able to give an account of the supplementary estimates as far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned and I shall do my best to answer all the questions which have been asked in this connection. I have listed these questions, but there are matters I may have missed and, if I could be reminded of them, I will endeavour to answer those questions, too, to the satisfaction of the committee.

I think, first of all, I should make a short statement in reply to what was said by the Leader of the Opposition. There has been considerable discussion on this matter of the transfer of certain functions between myself and the Minister of Forestry. Some, probably wishfully, have attempted to imply that certain functions have been taken from me against my wishes. I would like to assure them that any such interpretation is entirely without foundation. I am in complete accord with the arrangements which have been made.

The government and I, as Minister of Agriculture, have only one goal in agricultural matters and that is to administer agricultural policies as soundly and progressively as possible in the interests of Canadian agriculture.

The Minister of Agriculture has a wide range of heavy responsibilities. He is responsible for the administration of over 30 statutes and a number of non-statutory policies through a department of around 10,000 employees. In addition, as the Prime Minister has announced, he is to be responsible for railway branch line rationalization. It is perfectly logical, and indeed desirable, that some responsibilities should be transferred to another minister who is conveniently able to carry them. This is the reason why ARDA, MMRA and feed grain policy have been transferred to the Minister of Forestry, and I repeat that there was complete agreement between us on this.

The acts which remain with the Department of Agriculture are as follows: the Agricultural Products Board Act; the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act; the Agricultural Products Marketing Act; the Agricultural Stabilization Act; the Animal Contagious Diseases Act; the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act; the Canada Dairy Products Act; the Canada Grain Act; the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvement Act; the Cold Storage Act; the Crop Insurance Act; the Department of Agriculture Act; the Destructive Insect and Pest Act; the Experimental Farm Stations Act; the Farm Credit Act; the Feeds Act; the Fertilizers Act; the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act; the Hay and Straw Inspection Act; the Humane Slaughter of Food Animals Act; the Inspection and Sale Act; the Live Stock and Live Stock Products Act; the Live Stock Pedigree Act; the Maple Products Industry Act; the Meat and Canned Foods Act; the Meat Inspection Act; the Milk Test Act; the Pest Control Products Act; the Prairie Farm Assistance Act; the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act; the Seeds Act; the Wheat Co-operative Marketing Act; and the Criminal Code, section 178, race track betting. So hon. members can see I have not been stripped of all of my acts.

There seems to be some effort to create the impression that the powers of the Minister of Agriculture are gradually being whittled away. In the debate on supplementary estimates on March 13 the right hon. Leader of the Opposition referred to responsibility for the Canadian wheat board having been taken earlier from the Minister of Agriculture. Presumably he considers this wrong, or a reflection on the Minister of Agriculture, that the wheat board should be under the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Well, he was the head of the government from June, 1957 onward yet it was not until October of 1960 that the wheat board was placed under the minister of agriculture. Are we to interpret it as a reflection on the then minister of trade and commerce that the wheat board was taken from him at that time? Or, if the wheat board is considered to be a proper responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture, why was there a delay of three years before action was taken at that time? In fact, it is by no means an improper arrangement for certain measures such as the ARDA program to be placed with another minister whose interests and other responsibilities are clearly associated with them.

I would point out, as has been stated by the Acting Prime Minister, that there is to be a three man executive committee to co-ordinate policies for agriculture. It is to consist of the Minister of Agriculture as chairman and the ministers of trade and commerce and forestry. No one need have any fear that there will not be full co-ordination between the different ministers and departments having responsibility for agricultural matters.

I have had some experience in working with both private and public bodies. I have never been associated with any group in which there was better team-work than there is in the government of which I am proud to be a member.

Mr. Chairman, the first hon. member who spoke as far as my estimates are concerned had something to say about calf hides and cow hides and their price. Of course, this does not come under my department but I can honestly say that I realize this is a great problem to the people who have stored many of these hides, some of them for years. As a matter of fact several people who have thousands of hides in store have come to see me and they have been to see the Minister of Trade and Commerce. There is a serious world problem in so far as hides are concerned. This year so far—and this answers another question—we have exported something like 175,000 head of cattle. Our exports generally run as high as 500,000 head. We are very fortunate in Canada vis-à-vis the situation that existed in the United States when they had a great surplus of cattle. They had been importing something over one million head from Australia; they were bringing in almost the same number from Mexico. This was causing them great concern. Twelve per cent of their beef was being imported, and they were moving to do something about this. They put on certain quotas; that is, red meat quotas in so far as beef cattle are concerned. This is the situation in the United States, and it does not affect Canada. I think they were very careful not to disturb the Canadian position. However, we found ourselves in the position where we had to slaughter something like 300,000 more head of cattle in the year than we generally have to slaughter in Canada. This gave us, not a matter of 6,000 or 7,000 more hides, but many thousands more hides, and we were already having a marketing problem. Hides have been substituted by plastics and this sort of thing, and I think we are going to have some difficulty in so far as hides are concerned for quite some time until possibly there is a new market or a new use found for hides.

I was also asked the question about prices of cattle. I realize that prices of cattle are not as high as they have been in the past, but I partly explained why this is so. The price of our cattle in Canada today is higher than that of United States cattle. This has not been the situation for many, many years. In other words, when our slaughterings of reds and blues—which are quality cattle in Canada—reached, say 18,000 heads, we would generally go on the export market and would move our cattle across the line into the United States market. It was not possible to do that this year. If we had been able to move them across into the United States, our live cattle today would have been possibly 16 cents or 17 cents a pound. In other words, our cattle must be 5 cents per pound higher than American cattle before American cattle can start to move into Canada.

Since June 15 this year we have consumed more beef per capita than we have for many, many years. It would look as though we are consuming at the rate of about 81 pounds of meat per capita. I humbly suggest to the committee that there is only one reason for our consuming this amount of beef, and that is because of our buoyant economy. People who work are people who buy our meat, and if we had not had a decline in unemployment it would have hurt not only the beef producers but most of our agricultural products. This is the situation that exists in so far as hides are concerned.

Another question one hon. member asked me was in connection with feed grain. A great deal was said today about agricultural policy. In so far as our feed grain is concerned, on August 27 we changed the policy, or whatever you wish to call it. I think the feed grain act started in 1941, whereby the federal government provided freight assistance from the great lakes to eastern spots in so far as western grain is concerned. Due to the tremendous sales of wheat and the amount of wheat that might have to move to seaboard, both to the Pacific coast and to the eastern coast, a great many consumers of feed grain were terrifically worried about their position so far as feed grain was concerned. This was a reasonable attitude for them to take.

We knew as early as the middle of August that there would probably be some difficulty in getting this feed to eastern spots. Therefore we decided to pay not only the freight rate but also the storage charges on grain from October 15 to April 15 in order that we might not only stop the speculation by the people supplying this grain to the producer, but also to help stabilize the price. If a buyer from Granby wanted to buy grain that was coming from western Canada, they could buy it and pay for it when they saw fit at any time before they were to sell the grain to the eastern farmer. This also helped to stabilize the grain situation in so far as feed grains are concerned. This policy did even more than we expected it might do. We thought that toward the end of navigation we would have enough grain located in eastern Canada and would not have to bring any down by rail. As at last week we had 47 per cent more grain, or something like 21 million more bushels, on spot in eastern Canada and it will not be necessary to bring any by rail to eastern Canada.

There was some mention of the price of grain now at eastern spots. I am happy to report that, although wheat is somewhat up, No. 1 feed barley is $4.38 a ton less than it was a year ago; No. 1 feed oats are $2.50 a ton less than they were a year ago; and Ontario corn is $1.08 less than it was a year ago. As I said, we do have on spot ample grain to take care of the requirements of the feeder in eastern Canada, and this is the first time for many, many years that this has been possible. This is coupled with the fact that we have shipped more grain out of Canada from both east coast and west coast and have had a record year in this connection.

What is the stability of the grain that was moved into eastern spots? In Quebec, in December, the cost of No. 1 feed oats was $2.43 per cwt. and in March it is $2.46, or 3 cents difference, which is a very small amount. Feed barley was $2.40 per cwt. in December, and in March $2.44. In Montreal, in December, oats were $2.48, and in March $2.49. In so far as barley is concerned, in December it was $2.39, and in March $2.43. So we feel that this policy of paying the storage and the freight, has helped stabilize the situation and has also helped us to gather ample amounts of grain in eastern locations for the eastern farmer. I am sure that if hon. members go out in the country, as we have done on many occasions, and ask the farmers, these farmers will assure them that this situation although it may not be perfect, has certainly effected some improvement. We hope that next year we will be able to improve it even more, and I am sure this is also the wish of every member of this house.

In so far as dairy policy is concerned, my hon. friend from St. Hyacinthe-Bagot spoke yesterday about this matter. Hon. members will remember that on May 1, 1963 we did change the dairy policy and took the subsidy off fluid milk, but we did put a premium on cheese. I telephoned yesterday to get the price of milk at Granby and St. Hyacinthe. In 1963 uncooled milk was $2.85 per cwt., cooled milk was $2.95 and bulk tank milk was $3.00. In 1964 uncooled milk was $2.95, 10 cents higher in the constituency of the hon. member than it was in 1963. Cooled milk was $3.05 per cwt., 10 cents higher, and bulk milk was $3.10, again 10 cents higher. I think this condition has existed all over Canada.

Now perhaps I might say a few words about butter. We have been storing butter since 1957 because of the very high support required, 64 cents a pound butterfat. In 1963 we changed our dairy policy and put a premium on cheese milk. The thinking was that if we did this it would result in larger cheese production, and we had a market for all our cheese. I do not know the exact figures but it seems to me that the Canadian producers converted more milk from butter to cheese, which resulted in 18 million pounds more cheese being produced, compared with the previous year, and cheese for which we had a market. I realize we have more cheese in store today, but this does not concern us as much as being able to level off the consumption and production of butter.

Then I was asked what we were doing about exporting butter to Great Britain. I made an announcement some time ago in this house, I think in early fall, that we had decided that the time had come when we should start to move some of our butter stock. We had been able to level off production and consumption, and it was costing us $350,000 a month storage, so we decided it would be better to take a loss and to move this butter into a market if possible. I am pleased to report that we have been able to move some of this butter. In moving it into Great Britain we first had to get the permission of the quota countries sending butter to Britain, and they allowed us to send five million pounds. I also think we supplied them with $4\frac{1}{2}$ million pounds of butter oil.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, may I move that we rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the motion carry?

Mr. Peters: Next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House,
Ottawa, March 30, 1964

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wishart F. Spence, puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, 30th March, at 9.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

Royal Assent

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General has been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act respecting the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1965.

It being 16 minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 31, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN CONFEDERATION

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF ENTRANCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before we proceed I think the house will agree, particularly in view of the fact that the provinces are foregathered in Quebec, that today it would be appropriate in this house to mark the fifteenth anniversary of the entry of Newfoundland into confederation. I am sure our association with that province in the Canadian family will mark a period of national unity in which citizens in all parts of Canada will share in the prestige and achievements of our country.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will agree with the sentiments expressed by the Acting Prime Minister. The entry of Newfoundland into confederation brought about the achievement of a dream which existed from the days prior to confederation and throughout the intervening years, and made possible the establishment of one Canada. Indeed, as one enters the House of Commons and sees those words "The wholesome sea is at her gates, her gates both east and west," one must conclude the writer forgot her gates to the north, but all those seas actually became part of our country on the entry of Newfoundland into confederation, to which it has given so notable a contribution.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Democratic party would like to associate themselves with the remarks which have been made by the Acting Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in commemorating the fifteenth anniversary of Newfoundland's entrance into Canadian confederation.

I think all of us believe that Newfoundland joining the Canadian family has been a good thing for Newfoundland and for Canada. We trust this newest member of the Canadian family will long enjoy its association, that the spirit of unity which brought Newfoundland into confederation will permeate all the provinces of Canada and that we shall continue to build in the spirit of unity, a great nation on this northern half of the North American continent.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, we in the Social Credit party join with the Acting Prime Minister and the leaders of the other opposition parties in expressing our own feeling of gratitude on this fifteenth anniversary of Newfoundland's entry into confederation, at the progress that has been made, and at the general attitude of Canadianism that has been displayed by these our youngest brethren.

I think there is a lesson to be learned from Newfoundland, a lesson that has been developing during the last fifteen years in which the people of Newfoundland have become thoroughly convinced of the benefits which are theirs in being part of Canada. You may recall, sir, that when the decision was made to come into Canada it was only a very small majority of the people of Newfoundland who thought that was the right thing to do, but today there is practically a unanimous feeling amongst those people, and they are happy and proud to be part of Canada. This is a lesson which we should be more conscious of than we are.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, when Newfoundland joined the great Canadian family, 15 years ago, I was a member of this house and we welcomed Newfoundland into our confederation with enthusiasm.

Since then the people of Newfoundland have sometimes wondered whether they had taken a good step forward and done the right thing in becoming part of Canada. Today I think Newfoundland is perfectly happy to be one of the Canadian provinces.

On this anniversary I wish Newfoundlanders a great deal of prosperity and an ever-increasing contribution to the emancipation of each of the Canadian provinces. We are very glad to extend to that province our wishes for many more years within the Canadian confederation.

[Text]

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): On this fifteenth anniversary of Newfoundland entering confederation perhaps I might be permitted to ask the Acting Prime Minister a question. Is it the intention of the government at the current federal-provincial conference to make good on its oft repeated pledge to restore term 29 of the terms of agreement under which Newfoundland joined confederation?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend, who has been a very experienced minister of the crown and, I might say, a very agreeable member of parliament, will not mind me saying that you do not settle that kind of question at a conference. You do it by legislation in this house.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the Acting Prime Minister give us some hint as to the form this legislation would take, since I think the main point of term 29 was that a royal commission would be set up eight years after Newfoundland joined confederation, which was seven years ago, and which was done by the government of which he was a member.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure my hon. friend does not want to mar this anniversary event by inappropriate or embarrassing questions, which can, of course, be very easily answered in the proper context. He asked me for a hint, and I will be glad to give him a hint if we make some progress today.

BRIDGES

SARNIA, ONT.—ESTABLISHMENT OF BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-4, (from the Senate) respecting the international bridge over the St. Clair river known as the Blue Water bridge.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

APPREHENSION OF PERSONS RESPONSIBLE FOR ARMOURIES THEFTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. It has to do with the news article which appeared in Le Devoir this morning to the effect that a number of individuals are in the custody of the police having been arrested in connection with thefts from the armouries. Is the minister in a position now to confirm that this is so, and also let the house know to what extent there has been a recovery of the arms which were removed?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): My attention was taken by a number of other matters during the course of this morning, and the first I heard about the news to which the question refers was around 12 o'clock. I asked that the facts be investigated and that a report be made to me, but I must tell the right hon. gentleman that at present I have no information which I could give to the house. If I should receive a report later on which in my view would enable me to make disclosures, and if doing so would prove useful, I might try to revert to this point of our proceedings in order to make a statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, possibly we could get an equally succinct answer from the minister of defence. Has he any information as to the arrest of any persons charged with having broken into the armouries? I ask him this because he mentioned earlier that there was the closest liaison between the mounted police and the local police forces, as well as the armed forces.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): That is true, Mr. Speaker, but at the moment I am waiting for a report from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the answer is complete; it is that there is no liaison.

DISBANDMENT OF FIGHTER SQUADRON 410

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Does the disbandment today of that most famous of all the Canadian all-weather fighter squadrons the 410, Cougars, confirm the fact that this government has at long last recognized the passing of the bomber threat?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dinsdale: If that is so, Mr. Speaker, why is the squadron with the greatest seniority and the most battle honours being disbanded at the present time?

Mr. Hellyer: I will take the question as notice Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST THAT OFFICERS' COMMISSIONS BE IN BOTH LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

In view of the fact that commissions which are given to French speaking members of the armed forces are written in English only, is it the department's intention to remedy the situation so that, in future, officers' commissions will be in French?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I shall make inquiries to ascertain whether the assertions of my hon. friend are accurate and well-founded.

Mr. Pigeon: They are well-founded.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

INQUIRIES AS TO ASSISTANCE TO B.C. AND ALASKA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I believe the minister of northern affairs has been designated as the minister to give attention to the plight of those who have been adversely affected by the flood in the Alberni valley. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if he could give the house any report as to what the government have done to help the victims of this disaster, and what plans they have to assist those who are in need.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I think yesterday the deputy provincial secretary in Victoria, Mr. Lawrence Wallace, asked for the intervention of the army, and within a very few hours there was a reconnaissance party in Alberni. Beginning, I think, at midnight last night the army started moving in a total of 240 men, and today at noon they began bringing in some heavy equipment designed, I believe, to repair municipal services in the general area.

I want to tell the hon. member that, thankfully, it would now appear that the over-all damage is much less than was at first anticipated. This does not in any way detract from the enormous loss to individuals. We are now informed, on a preliminary basis, that 45 houses have been totally destroyed, some 14 have been very severely damaged, and 375 more houses have more or less damage. This, of course, is a very severe loss, and is one reason why this morning I sent a wire to Hon. Wesley Black, minister of social welfare, asking him to supply us with a copy of the assessment of the damage to these private properties and to give us some indication of how they intended to compensate these people who otherwise are not covered by insurance at all. This is the nature of the severity in that area and, of course, to these individual persons it is extremely severe.

I understand that inquiries are being made concerning a disaster fund that I think still exists in the province of British Columbia. It is in charge of one or two trustees, and that fund may be released. In addition, a new disaster fund has been started. I think the hon. member himself is probably the only member present in the house who visited the scene last Saturday. He gave his commendation to that fund, and I understand that very worth-while contributions are being made. I think we should all assist this fund, because it is an excellent exercise in humanism in itself.

I was talking to Mayor Fred Bishop of Alberni this morning, and he advised me that the civic leaders there, and indeed the people, were most gratified at the action taken by all levels of government and by the various agencies that are contributing to overcome the difficulty in the area.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the most pressing need is for assistance to the people who have been rendered homeless—I understand there are 77 families with no roof over their heads and another 233 families who have been placed with their neighbours, and that these people need bedding, clothing, cooking utensils, dishes and furniture so they can be taken care of—has the government given any consideration to the possibility of making a substantial contribution to the Alberni valley disaster fund, which might be the most immediate way of helping those who are in need at the present time, pending looking into the question of rehabilitation?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has raised this matter I think I should read to the house the wire that I sent to Hon. Wesley Black this morning, which I think relates to any action we might take:

> Am advised army unit now moved into Alberni area on request of Mr. L. Wallace. Thankfully over-all damage appears less than first anticipated. However individual losses of homes furnishings and businesses constitute grave misfortune to people without coverage. Please be good enough furnish me with copy of report assessment of damages to private property and your proposals for assistance in such cases. Am advised army moving in heavy equipment today to assist civic authorities restore municipal services.

I would expect to receive a wire in response from Hon. Wesley Black.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government will give consideration to calling fairly early the supplementary estimates of the Department of Finance so we can have some discussion of this matter which I think is of immediate interest.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman unfortunately could not be here all of yesterday. He knows some of the problems which I hope today we will be able to resolve.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is a related one directed to the Acting Prime Minister. I am sure all Canadians have been disturbed and concerned about the continuing reports of damage and loss of life that have taken place in the neighbouring state of Alaska. Has Canada offered, or does it intend to offer, any assistance to the tremendous rehabilitation program required in Alaska as a result of the earthquake there?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, perhaps my hon. friend will recall that yesterday the Prime Minister mentioned that he had sent a communication to President Johnson expressing the sympathy of the Canadian people and the Canadian government over the tragic events in Alaska last week end. The Prime Minister indicated in his message that he had expressed Canada's willingness to assist in relieving those tragic events. There has been no response to the communication which the Prime Minister sent to the President.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—TERMS OF REFERENCE OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of press reports this morning that active fighting has taken place in Cyprus involving troops under the United Nations command, I should like to ask the minister this. If fighting should break out today in Cyprus between Greek and Turkish Cypriots in the area controlled by Canadian troops under United Nations command, just what are Canadian troops under UN command instructed to do?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend, who has a long experience in international affairs, having been parliamentary secretary to my predecessor, will understand that Canada, as a contributing member of the international peace keeping force, will do all that it can, pursuant to the directives of the commander of that force to maintain peace and order, and the good name of the United Nations and that of Canada.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I would ask the Minister of National Defence if he can now report to the house on the hospital facilities available to Canadian troops serving in Cyprus under United Nations auspices.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): The situation is as I outlined in response to a previous question by the hon. gentleman and there has been no change since then. I understand an offer has been made by the Austrian government to supply a hospital unit for the peace keeping force, but no decision has yet been taken by the secretary general in New York.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAOUETTE—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN "LE SOLEIL"

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In a copy of the newspaper Le Soleil which has just arrived and more especially in the column of Mr. Amedee Gaudreault, the following report can be read:

> Mr. Real Caouette has no further need for Mr. Robert Thompson's contradictions. On Monday March 16, he stated in the house: "It is understood that we are quite pleased with the decision taken by the government on Friday last (to send troops to Cyprus—

Mr. Speaker, following three or four speeches given in the house, I was only speaking in jest when I said:

> It is understood that we are all quite pleased with the decision of the government.

while actually, I was not pleased at all. I never approved in any way of the sending of troops to Cyprus, and more especially of the manner in which it was done. Moreover, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) is aware of it.

Mr. Amedee Gaudreault, like most newspapermen of his ilk has lied barefacedly and utterly.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

REQUEST FOR SURVEYS OF CONSUMER PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, notice of which I have given, but in his absence I should now like to direct it to the Minister of Industry. My question is, in the light of the Canadian Consumers Association survey revealing short-filled cartons of fruit juice and milk products in Toronto, a survey which I understand was undertaken with the co-operation of the government, will the minister consider initiating or co-operating in similar surveys in other Canadian cities on behalf of Canadian consumers?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Department of Trade and Commerce will be most willing to co-operate fully in similar surveys elsewhere in Canada.

CROWN ASSETS

CRANBERRY PORTAGE, MAN.—MAINTENANCE OF WATER SUPPLY AND HEATING SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. In view of the generally apparent interest in the house in obtaining information as to possible assistance to some of these unfortunate disaster areas, I wonder I could get an answer to a question a little nearer to home. In light of the fact that today is the day on which the closing of certain army establishments and the mid-Canada radar line in northern Manitoba takes place I should like to refer to the answer the minister gave me on March 16 in reply to several questions I asked concerning the plight of the people at Cranberry Portage, Manitoba. At that time the minister said:

> A representative of the Department of Defence Production is going to Manitoba to ensure that the necessary arrangements for the interregnum are made.

Does the minister realize that as of today some of the essential services of this community are being cut off, particularly the water service to the new school and the heating service? I am wondering whether the minister can tell us now that the government will take some action to restore these services.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I would be very surprised indeed if the hon. member's information is correct that the water supply to the new school has been cut off.

Mr. Simpson: I understand it is.

Mr. Drury: I will check on that right away. I understand that the heat has been cut off to a number of government buildings which will no longer be occupied. I do not think that will concern the hon. member particularly. However, I will check immediately on whether or not the water has been cut off to the school.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CANADIAN ARSENALS—PROPOSED SALE OF THREE PLANTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Can he tell the house why the government wants to sell three of Canadian Arsenals' main plants, two of which are located in Quebec and one in Ontario?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): For two reasons, in principle, Mr. Speaker.

First, there are not enough orders for those three plants. Therefore, it will be necessary to dismiss some employees. We also have to dispose of the plants so as to maintain employment.

Besides, the operation of those three plants is very expensive for the government in their present state, and the government wants to avoid those operating costs.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. When the government sells those plants to private enterprise will there be a clause in the contract providing that the employees working at present in those plants, may keep their jobs?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can rest assured that the government will do its best, in short anything that it must do, in order to protect the vested rights of the employees.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STUDY OF ECONOMIC PROSPECTS FOR HALIFAX AND SAINT JOHN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise the house whether the Atlantic development board has been asked to make special studies of the future economic prospects of the ports of Halifax and Saint John?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I was authorized about ten days or so ago by the government to ask the Atlantic development board to have special studies undertaken of the ports of Halifax and Saint John with a view to analysing the problems, particularly the economic problems, confronting those ports and to recommend steps that might be taken by the government of Canada to assure their economic future. I gave this direction to the board in a letter I addressed to the executive director on March 21 and which there is no reason to keep secret, so I would be glad to table it.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a supplementary question. How will this tie in with the investigation being presently conducted into winter navigation, which has a tremendous effect on Halifax and Saint John?

Mr. Pickersgill: As the hon. member will know, being well informed about these matters, there are two investigations. These investigations are virtually complete and the results, I understand, are being reported to a meeting of the board on April 20. It was because these investigations seemed to point in the direction of a more intensive study of the two ports of Halifax and Saint John that the government took the decision to have this particular study made.

Mr. Bell: May I ask the minister if he has received a request from the Atlantic division of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to have the Atlantic development board use its resources to find the main causes of the region's lagging economy. If so, what are the thoughts of the board in connection with these charges?

Mr. Pickersgill: The secretary or director—I am not just sure from memory which title he has—of the Atlantic section of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association did me the courtesy of sending me a copy of a letter he addressed to the chairman of the board making a request along the lines the hon. gentleman has suggested. I am very hopeful the board will regard this request favourably.

Mr. Bell: Will the minister assure the house that these charges about a lagging economy will be looked into? Because when the Conservative government went out of power the Atlantic provinces were in good shape.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman only needs to look at the comparative employment statistics of a year ago and the present time to see that they are much better now.

Mr. Bell: What about Bell island and Cape Breton?

UNITED NATIONS

DISARMAMENT—CANADIAN ATTITUDE TOWARD PROPOSALS FOR OBSERVATION POSTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and he may prefer to answer this question when his supplementary estimates come before the house. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the house whether the important proposals made, I understand, by the United Kingdom government at the disarmament conference at Geneva for observation posts, some of which are to be in Canada, affect this country and how the government views them?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The question, as my hon. friend said, is one that would lend itself to fuller discussion on the estimates. However, I may say that the proposal is one that Canada supported at the last United Nations general assembly. This proposal is designed to establish observation posts on each side of the iron curtain to eliminate surprise attacks.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION TO COVER TEACHERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Could he tell us whether it is true that the government is considering including the profession of school teacher in the list of eligible occupations under the Unemployment Insurance Act?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): As my hon. friend knows, the Gill committee made a number of recommendations to increase the coverage of the Unemployment Insurance Act. One group recommended for inclusion was the teachers. This and other matters are under consideration presently by the government.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Labour. Is the purpose of this recommendation to enlarge the coverage to include professors, or is it to enlarge the field of taxation so the minister can get more money for his unemployment insurance fund?

Mr. MacEachen: The reasons for the recommendation are set out in the report itself. Presumably the committee had in mind the need to maintain the financial position of the fund and to increase the responsibility of dealing with unemployment. This, as I said, is still under consideration and no decision has been reached.

AUTHORITY OF FINANCE MINISTER TO MAKE LOANS TO FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the present power of the Minister of Finance to make loans to the unemployment insurance fund runs out at midnight tonight, can the minister give us a report on the state of that fund; and is it in a position to meet the calls on it within the next week or two?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that we will be able to deal with the supplementary estimate providing for a loan to the fund within the next short period, so that the fund will be able to bear its responsibilities within the next week or so. At present the reserves are not adequate to finance the benefits beyond a very short time.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, is the item in the estimates regarding this matter one of those that must be passed fairly soon?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I noticed how careful the minister was when he answered that question, that the authority would be needed—

Mr. Byrne: Question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was not speaking of the parliamentary secretary, who was never careful in anything. The question I ask is this. Is it not correct that the fund is in such a position that the government will be able to provide the necessary assistance even if action is delayed for ten days. Is that not correct?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not want to put this in a provocative way, but my information today is that unless the particular item is approved this week, the commission would be in difficulty to make benefit payments by the end of the week.

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour if he had the figures at his disposal when he spoke about a week ago in Peterborough and said there was not any unemployment?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, not even in Peterborough would I make such an exaggerated statement.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

POLICY RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION OF SMALL POST OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): May I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Are the small post office buildings which have been constructed in the last few years under the winter works program all over Canada now being erected only in the so-called designated or depressed areas?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I would ask the hon. member to put the question to the Postmaster General who is in charge of the program of building small post offices for this year.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, then I direct this question to the Acting Prime Minister, and wish to say I would have directed it to the Postmaster General except that unfortunately he is out of the country on business. I direct to the Acting Prime Minister the question which I just directed to the Minister of Public Works. Are the small post office buildings, which have been constructed all over Canada in the last few years under the winter works program, now only being erected in the so-called designated or depressed areas and, if so, when did this policy change?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall see that this question is brought at once to the attention of the minister in charge.

Mr. Nesbitt: As a supplementary question, in view of the fact that I received a letter from the Postmaster General this morning stating this was government policy, and since the Postmaster General is not here, is there someone on the government front benches who can answer the question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it seems apparent that my hon. friend is satisfied that he already has the reply. If that is the case, then he is out of order in asking for a reply which he has already received. However, I shall try to help my hon. friend, who I know is very interested in this question, and we shall give the answer as quickly as we can.

Mr. Nesbitt: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the question I asked was if the policy was changed, when was it changed; and since this has always come under the Minister of Public Works previously I directed my question to that minister.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REVIEW OF FORMULA TO DETERMINE DESIGNATED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I have a question for the Minister of Industry which relates to the formula set by statistical analysis that the government uses to determine designated areas. Has the government in hand at the moment a review of this formula? Is there any chance at all of it being changed or altered within the next month or two?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the question of the criteria has for some time been under consideration. When and if any changes might emerge I would not like to say now.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister tell us if it is worth while for any of the regions or areas that are bothered by the present analysis to come to Ottawa to make any formal presentation of arguments for a change in the designated areas? In other words, I know there are a number of parts of the country concerned over this, and I think they should have an indication as to whether briefs or formal presentations to the minister would do any good.

Mr. Drury: The Department of Industry welcomes advice from whatever quarter it may come. If there are those who are of the opinion that the present criteria are unsatisfactory we would be delighted to hear in what way they might be unsatisfactory and in what way they might be changed.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO SECURITY MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice. Could he tell the house what extraordinary security measures have been taken in connection with the Quebec federal-provincial conference, and why?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I do not think any extraordinary security measures have been taken. However, if measures had to be taken, I am sure that the R.C.M.P., knowing as it does what it has to do in such circumstances, took them.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Has the minister read press reports on this matter, such as the one published in today's Ottawa Journal which states:

[Text]

Police shadow delegates—conference opens behind unusual security screen.

[Translation]

I should like the minister to let me know whether or not extraordinary steps have been taken in respect of that conference.

[Mr. Fisher.]

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I must intervene to point out to the hon. member that I think the question is going beyond the limits.

Mr. Martineau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this second question arises from the statement the minister has just made. Apparently he does not know whether or not some extraordinary precautions were taken, and there are press reports to that effect.

Mr. Speaker: I do not see the point of order.

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice?

Could the minister tell the house categorically whether or not unusual security measures have been taken regarding the federal-provincial conference being held at the present time in Quebec?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but this question is out of order.

Mr. Martineau: On a point of order, I consider that this is a very important question; and if the minister does not know whether security measures have been taken by the R.C.M.P., which comes under his jurisdiction, then the least he could do, I submit, is to find out and give that information to the house.

Mr. Speaker: I suggested that the question was out of order because in my opinion it was an argumentative question, and I think that has been demonstrated this afternoon.

Mr. Martineau: May I say that in my opinion it is not an argumentative question but a question of fact. We want to know whether or not extraordinary measures were taken. Surely the minister can answer that question.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, while the question is out of order, I should like to point out that even if I answered it by yes or no, in either case the public interest would not be served, quite the contrary.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, does that answer of the minister mean that when he answered the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) a few moments ago, he did not know whether or not measures had been taken and that he has just received information in that regard?

[Later:]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker. I rise on a question of privilege as a result of the answer given by the minister.

My question of privilege is this. Must we accept the minister's answer to the effect that it is not in the public interest that the house be given information in regard to a question of general interest? In my opinion his answer denotes arrogance towards the house.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The point at issue is a point of order, not a question of privilege. It seems to me that if the hon. member has any definite facts which should be brought to the attention of the Minister of Justice, it is his duty to do so. But if it is just a general inquiry I think we are right to assume that the local authorities are taking all precautions.

Mr. Martineau: I am very glad to furnish definite facts, because definite facts have been published in the newspapers.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is against the rules to read newspapers—

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker himself has asked for definite facts and here is what is stated: "There are dozens of plainclothes police from the R.C.M.P.—

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member—

[Text]

Mr. Martineau: I am speaking on a point of order, and I think on my point of order I should have the right to explain—

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the hon. member if he is prepared to take responsibility for the report as published in the newspaper?

Mr. Martineau: You have yourself asked me if I had any definite facts, and there are reports of definite facts in the newspaper. I am asking the minister whether or not special precautions have been taken. Surely the minister can say whether that is so, and if it is so I think this house is entitled to know why. That is all I am asking of the hon. gentleman.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, about the point of order, I think that the questions asked by the hon. members for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) and Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) are unbelievably stupid.

If measures have to be taken in Quebec at this time, I feel that the federal government as well as that of the province of Quebec should assume their responsibilities. Neither the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue nor the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot should worry about that now. They should stop wasting the time of the house with such stupid questions.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I feel that the hon. member for Villeneuve has not added anything to the point of order that I raised.

Unfortunately, the house still completely ignores how matters stand and the reason given by the minister is worthless, because it has already been published in the press that special measures had been taken. In my opinion, if in the public interest these measures should not be disclosed they should not have been published in the press.

Since these measures have already been publicly discussed, I feel that the house has the right to be advised of the nature of these measures.

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: This is really developing into an argument. May I state the opinion of the Chair, that I refuse to believe that law and order has broken down in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege and ask your protection so that when we are speaking we will not be interrupted by the hon. members opposite who are trying to prevent us from expressing our opinions or raising objections.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ricard: You see, Mr. Speaker. Consequently I am asking you to grant us the protection to which we are entitled. We only ask for bare justice, nothing more.

[Text]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I interrupt to ask hon. members opposite to follow your orders and take the responsibility for what they say.

Mr. Speaker: In the spirit of Easter I am going to call upon the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF SALES TAX ON RETREAD TIRE INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance or, in his absence, the acting minister. Is the government aware that the imposition of a sales tax on the retread tire industry is seriously threatening the financial solvency of this important small industrial activity?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall take that question as notice.

PREVENTION OF PROFITEERING FOLLOWING EXCISE TAX INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of National Revenue. With the imposition by the government tomorrow, April 1, of the 8 per cent tax on building materials and production machinery, what steps are being taken by the government to ensure that the increased tax is not charged to purchasers of materials stockpiled or in store prior to April 1?

Mr. Speaker: I think this question was asked yesterday.

Mr. Martineau: On a point of order, I think the minister was about to make a reply. The question was asked yesterday but no reply was given, because the minister was absent.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Finance): The minister was not absent yesterday, but this question was asked and dealt with at that time.

AIRPORTS

EDMONTON—POSTPONEMENT OF FEES FOR DEPARTMENTAL SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister postpone the collection of fees from the city of Edmonton for departmental services at Edmonton industrial airport, due to start tomorrow, in view of the request of the mayor of Edmonton for consultation on this problem?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I had not been aware there had been any such request. Of course if the mayor of Edmonton has made a request of that sort I will give it the most careful consideration.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

OTTAWA—OPENING OF WESTERN SECTION OF QUEENSWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can he inform the house what is the latest date on which the western section of the Queensway in Ottawa will be open for traffic, and is it the responsibility of the national capital commission?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the westbound traffic lane was scheduled for opening last October and the eastbound section was to have been completed shortly afterward. Unfortunately these deadlines were not met because of the contractor's delay in completing his work. It is expected that the section will be completed some time in May.

May I add that there is a committee known as the Queensway committee, composed of representatives of the province of Ontario, the N.C.C., the city of Ottawa and the public works department. This, of course, is a cost sharing project, and this committee meets at least once a month. This is our only responsibility in this project, and I wish to emphasize that unless something unexpected happens this section will be opened around May 15.

INDUSTRY

URANIUM CITY, SASK.—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF STOCKPILING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): I had a question for the Prime Minister, but in his absence perhaps the Acting Prime Minister will take it as notice. What plans, if any, has the government for preventing Uranium City from becoming a ghost town? Will the government consider extending its stockpiling program and use the uranium mines at Uranium City for this purpose as well as those at Elliot Lake?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I will do as the hon. member suggests and take this question as notice.

PETERBOROUGH, ONT.—REPORTED REMOVAL OF PLANTS TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry and ask whether he would go to Peterborough or send one of his deputies to meet the Fisher Gauge people and persuade them to stay in Peterborough rather than go to the state of New York—

An hon. Member: Is that a question?

Mr. Stenson: Yes.

An hon. Member: Are you a Speaker?

Mr. Stenson: —to which they are at the present time negotiating to move part of their business because of the tax being imposed on production machinery.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have already paid one visit to Peterborough. I will undertake, on behalf of the Department of Industry, to see that whatever persuasive efforts we can employ will be used to encourage the Fisher people to remain in Canada.

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and ask whether he is aware that Outboard Marine and Manufacturing Co. of Canada, located in Peterborough, Ontario, has stated that it will now be necessary to move the production of their snowmobiles to the United States because of the government-imposed tax on production machinery.

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

EXTENSION OF HOSPITAL INSURANCE TO VETERANS HOSPITALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): I had a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs but in his absence perhaps the Acting Prime Minister would deal with it. Would the Acting Prime Minister give consideration to the possibility of making appropriate arrangements for payment under hospitalization schemes for those veterans who require to enter veterans hospitals and who do not qualify for admittance under the terms of the veterans charter?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I think that question is one for the order paper. However, since it has been asked I will bring it to the attention of the appropriate minister.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what protection is available for the esteemed hon. member for Qu'Appelle should war erupt between the Soviet union and red China?

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to whom I should direct this question, but perhaps the Acting Prime Minister would be the appropriate person. I should like to ask him, or whichever other hon. gentleman might be able to supply the information, which of the members of the cabinet will be appointed as acting prime minister for tomorrow, in view of the significance of that date.

Mr. Churchill: The Minister of National Defence.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in view of the character of the question I think it had better go unanswered.

TRANSPORT

APPLICATION OF REPORTED INCREASE IN WHARFAGE RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the former acting prime minister, the Minister of Transport; and perhaps in view of the fact that today is the fifteenth anniversary of Newfoundland's entry into confederation, it might have been more appropriate if the hon. gentleman had been acting prime minister today.

I should like to ask the hon. gentleman a question arising out of an answer he gave on March 26 with regard to regulations with respect to wharfage rates. At that time the minister indicated that there were, as he put it, certain administrative difficulties which had been encountered, and that clarification of these difficulties was being proceeded with. I wonder whether these administrative or other difficulties have now been resolved, and whether the minister can indicate what is the effect of the new wharfage rates as they apply to fishermen.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I apologize to the hon. gentleman for not having spoken to him about this matter yesterday, as I intended, but he will understand that in that never-never land of yesterday it was difficult to do so. Perhaps I could answer today that the administrative problem which I found it a little difficult to explain fully until I had had a rather detailed explanation was that there were certain of these wharves—I believe you call them floats in Prince Rupert—which were used not merely for loading and unloading fish but also for tying up fishing boats and were also being used for tying up pleasure boats, which congested them, and there were some quite serious administrative problems.

As for the particular case to which the hon. gentleman referred, I have a note here that the floats in which the co-operative was interested in Prince Rupert have been offered to the city of Prince Rupert on a nominal rental basis. I should not say this without being sure, but I believe it is a dollar a year. If the city takes them, any arrangement regarding use or charges would then be a matter between the city and the fishermen.

I am told the city is interested. If the city is not interested, then the department is prepared to offer them to the co-operative on the same nominal fee basis, so the problem would not arise at all. I can assure the hon. member that any vessel which merely unloads is not charged any dues in accordance with the regulations.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROSPECTIVE LAY-OFFS AT POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. The hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Some hon. Members: Orders of the day.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member does not care to ask his question, I will call upon another hon. member.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis: I intend to proceed with the question of privilege when order is restored in the house. If necessary I will stand here until that order is given to me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis: My question of privilege in this case is that any time I rise, members on the opposite side of the house are quick to come to the assistance of the Chair and continue to make remarks from their seats, and I think as a member of this house I am as entitled to the floor as hon. members on the opposite side, who seem to get it without the recognition of the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis: The question I wish to ask the Minister of Labour is this. What progress has been made in providing alternative employment for the men to be laid off at the Point Edward naval base in Sydney?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have dealt with this question several times, and today I have nothing to add to what I have already said. When further information is available I will be glad to advise my hon. friend.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Would the Minister of National Defence make the house aware of the meeting which took place with a delegation from Sydney which returned to that city quite optimistic about future developments at that base? Would he now reveal to the house just what this delegation did get from the minister on that occasion.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think this question has already been dealt with. We did receive a delegation, which was most understanding of our problem as we were of theirs. We indicated to them that every effort is being made to find an alternative use for the base and the facilities there, and to assist in finding job opportunities in the community. We also indicated that these matters are being pursued with diligence by the Department of Labour and other departments of government.

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. MacInnis: Both the Minister of Labour and the Minister of National Defence have, on every occasion this question has been asked—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member about to debate the question or does he want to ask a question?

Mr. MacInnis: Given the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, I will draw to your attention that on the last three occasions this particular question was asked—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacInnis: —you yourself ruled it out of order because there was no national importance and no emergency in the question. I would, however, draw to your attention that this afternoon you have permitted questions on highways, and you have permitted a joker on the front bench of the Liberal party to make remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is quite right in saying that considerable leeway has been given this afternoon. It was given for the deliberate purpose of trying to create a new spirit in this house in order to get on with the business before the house.

Mr. MacInnis: Then let us have it on both sides of the house, instead of just one.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL FOR CROWN CORPORATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Is the selection of lawyers acting for certain crown corporations based on political considerations?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply; supplementary estimates (E) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1e. Departmental administration—to extend the purposes of vote 1 of the main estimates for 1963-64 to include the gift detailed in these estimates and to provide a further amount of $60,000.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, when the house rose last evening I was dealing with a question from the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) in connection with butter exports. He had referred to the fact that the United Kingdom had made some increases in its butter import quota this year, and he wanted to know whether we would be participating in that trade.

The situation is that in April, 1962 when the United Kingdom butter market was seriously depressed under very heavy imports, the government of that country placed butter imports under quota and gave quotas to the regular supplying countries. Canada is not a regular commercial supplier of butter to the United Kingdom, and indeed the price of butter in this country does not permit Canadian exporters to engage in competitive world trade at world prices.

However, last fall when there was a temporary shortage of butter in the United Kingdom the government of that country issued a special open quota, and Canada was able to participate in this to the extent of some 5½ million pounds, at of course considerably subsidized prices. There has, as the hon. member stated, been a minor increase in United Kingdom quotas this year to regular suppliers. If these countries are not able to meet their quotas, or if a shortage should develop in the United Kingdom, we would hope that Canada would again be able to participate in some business, as we did last fall.

In addition to butter, we have been able to dispose of some 18 million pounds of butter oil, including 4½ million pounds to the United Kingdom. I can only add that we are actively endeavouring to secure additional outlets for the heavy accumulation of butter since 1957, and there are some encouraging prospects that more trade will develop.

Yesterday, in dealing with milk prices, which was a matter raised by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, I quoted some milk prices which I had secured by telephone from plants in his area for 1963 and 1964. There is a variety of sources from which milk prices might be secured and a variety of bases on which these might be quoted. So far as I am aware the only official record is that issued by the dominion bureau of statistics, which quotes average prices for each month basis f.o.b. farm. These d.b.s. monthly figures for the province of Quebec in 1962 show a range of from $2.60 per cwt. to $2.84 per cwt. for manufactured milk. The same statistics for 1963 show a range of prices from a low $2.63 per cwt. to a high of $2.92 per cwt. In every case from the month of May 1963, when the new support program was instituted, to the month of December 1963 the d.b.s. figures show a higher price in 1963 than in the equivalent month of 1962.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: May I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: After I am through I will be glad to answer any questions. The hon. member wanted me to answer these questions the other day, and if he will give me time I will be glad to answer all the questions which were asked. This difference ranges from a low of 2 cents per cwt. to a high of 11 cents per cwt. Without taking the time of the house to read these figures I will place them on the record. I should add that these figures include all the subsidies paid by the government, and I should like to table these figures issued by the dominion bureau of statistics covering January to December in years 1962 and 1963.

Mr. Vincent: There is no provision for that.

Mr. Hays: These figures include all the subsidies.

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee that the figures now supplied by the minister be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Might I ask whose figures these are?

Mr. Hays: These are all dominion bureau of statistics figures.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, yesterday I made exactly the same request; I asked for some documents to be printed in appendix to Hansard, but my request was rejected.

[Text]

The Chairman: The hon. member knows it is not customary for Hansard to publish copies of letters and documents of the type the hon. member wanted to table. What he suggested at the time was that the documents to which he was referring be tabled, and I advised the hon. member that there was no provision under our rules to table that type of document. They could be tabled in the sense that they could be put at the disposition of other hon. members, but what the minister is now asking is that these figures be printed in Hansard as an appendix, and that can be done with consent of hon. members.

Mr. Hays: As part of my speech.

The Chairman: Yes, of course, as part of his speech. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Includes all subsidies.

Mr. Hays: While official d.b.s. figures are not available for 1964, the record which the department has from certain individual plants indicates that prices so far this year have been higher than at the same time a year ago.

There were some questions about ARDA. The member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue suggested that I had taken credit for ARDA. I am not aware that I have ever done this, either in the house or elsewhere. Indeed, both here and outside the house I have given credit to the previous government for several pieces of agricultural legislation including ARDA, the Farm Credit Act, the Agricultural Stabilization Act. What I have said is that any impression that this government has been dragging its feet on ARDA is not correct, and to illustrate that I gave figures in the house on March 26 on the value of ARDA contracts entered into before and after May 1, 1963.

Here again I have these figures and I should like to place them on record for hon. members. Up to May 1, 1963 the value of ARDA contracts amounted to $2,185,000. Since May 1, 1963 to the present they amount to $11,094,456. This is the amount of contracts under ARDA since May 1, 1963.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm requested that we take steps to encourage agronomists from Quebec to come to Ottawa. I can assure him that I share his hope in this respect and I am very pleased, as I know he will be, that in a recent civil service competition for the position of director of the department's plant products division the successful applicant was a very valued and highly respected officer of the department who for some years occupied the position of district supervisor of the plant products division in the province of Quebec.

The hon. member also urged that attention be given to the matter of agricultural research in Quebec. He will recall that in my statement on the department's main estimates last year I indicated that it was our intention to establish a new agricultural research labratory in association with the agricultural faculty of Laval University in Quebec. This is being done in close association with the Quebec department of agriculture and with Laval University, and I am pleased to be able to inform him that the arrangements are going forward. I am also pleased to inform the hon. member that we are now at the point of securing title to additional land for the horticultural research station which the department is developing at St. Jean, Quebec.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition suggested that employees of the animal diseases research institute in Hull had had to wait five weeks for their pay cheques, and inquired whether this was because of any uncertainty as to which department they came under. I am sure the right hon. gentleman will appreciate that there has never been any suggestion that the department's health of animals branch would not remain in the Department of Agriculture. The delay to which he refers has nothing to do with regular pay cheques. Recently salary increases were authorized for certain prevailing rate classes, retroactive to October 17 last. Because of recent changes in pay office procedures with regard to this group of people there has been some delay in issuing the cheques to them covering the increased salaries for the retroactive period. However, I am informed that these cheques either have now gone out or will be going out very shortly.

On Thursday last I made reference to the recent approval by the government of certain construction grants administered by my department, and on reading Hansard I note that there is some possibility of misunderstanding in connection with my remarks. I should not like to mislead anyone and therefore I should like to make it clear that I was referring not solely to cold storage construction grants but rather to the group of construction grants which includes those for cheese factory amalgamation, curing room construction and potato warehouse construction. You may remember that I said it seems to me we should take a whole new look at cold storage facilities so that they will better serve those who require these facilities.

Within the last few months about 12 grants have been approved and another six are being processed. Up until the time the government authorized these grants the three programs had been largely suspended since June of 1962.

Some members asked about farm credit and crop insurance legislation. I think the house has been informed of the intention of the government to bring in amending legislation to these two statutes, and I referred to this in my statement in the debate on the main estimates of the Department of Agriculture for 1963-64. I think hon. members will appreciate that I am not at liberty at the moment to disclose the precise nature of the amendments which will be proposed to the house but these, of course, will be made known when the legislation is introduced. I think it will be found, however, that the amendments to be introduced will strengthen these two very important statutes.

The hon. member for Villeneuve raised the matter of assistance to young farmers to become established in farming, and assistance in the consolidation of old farms. Loans made under part III of the Farm Credit Act are designed primarily to assist young farmers to become established in farming. During the past two fiscal years the corporation has approved 431 loans—

The Chairman: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Pigeon: We are so happy to see you in the house, so go on.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fane: He has a lot of time to make up.

Mr. Hays: I will repeat what I was saying. Loans made under part III of the Farm Credit Act are designed primarily to assist young farmers to become established in farming. During the past two fiscal years the corporation has approved 431 loans under part III in the province of Quebec for a total amount of $8,475,500. In Canada as a whole the number of loans under part III has been 1,083 for a total of $21,290,200 during the same period. In other words, about 40 per cent of the loans made by the corporation under this section of the act to establish young farmers have been made in the province of Quebec.

In addition, the Quebec farm credit bureau makes loans to establish young farmers. During the same two-year period they have approved over 2,100 loans for this purpose, for a total amount in excess of $19 million. It is worth noting also that, of the total funds advanced by the Farm Credit Corporation under its total lending program, about 52 per cent is used for the purchase of land, either in the establishment of new farming enterprises or in the consolidation of farm units.

The hon. member for Kent commented on the support program for two crops in which his area specializes, namely soybeans and sugar beets. The support program for the forthcoming year for both of these commodities is under study by the agricultural stabilization board and it is expected that their recommendations will be made shortly. In the meantime it should be pointed out that the current support price for soybeans is the highest that has ever been in effect and is set at 100 per cent of the base price.

While sugar beets produced during 1963 were supported at the highest percentage ever in effect, namely 109 per cent of the base price, it is not anticipated that returns to producers will fall to the support level. I am sure that hon. members will be interested to know that in Ontario the growers last year received an average of $15.58 per ton for their sugar beets, all of which was paid to them by the processors, compared with a total of $11.58 in the previous year, of which $3.08 consisted of government payments, both federal and provincial. In this connection it should be noted that the payments received in any one year refer to the return on beets harvested in the fall of the previous year.

Reference has been made by the hon. member for Lethbridge to the sheep industry and to the effect that the importation of lamb has had on the price of the Canadian product. In this connection it should be noted that of the total imports of lamb and mutton into this country during the first two months of this year approximately 74 per cent was in the form of boneless mutton which is used for manufacturing purposes, and thus does not compete with lamb on the domestic market.

I might say in this connection that I am sure some of our government reports are a little misleading. To avoid this we are now designating the amount of mutton that is coming in in the form of boneless meat, and also lambs, so there will be a truer picture in so far as the producers are concerned.

Government assistance to the sheep industry at present takes three forms: A quality premium on sheep and good lambs which in 1963 totalled just under $579,000; a wool deficiency payment based on a support price of 60 cents per pound for certain grades, with the payment on the 1962 crop being just over $704,000; in addition, lambs are supported by a deficiency program based on a national average support price of $18.80 per 100 pounds for good lambs.

The hon. member also made reference to investigations into promotional programs and investigation into marketing procedures. I understand that the sheep industry has recently formed a national sheep council. One of the principal objectives of this organization will be, I believe, the promotion of sheep and wool, and I can assure hon. members that my department will be pleased to co-operate with this organization in any way possible.

The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska referred to hide prices and requested the reason for the difference between the prices quoted for hides by the dominion bureau of statistics and the prices received by farmers in his area. I regret that I have not yet been able to get information to clarify this matter entirely. I will however have the inquiry pursued. In the meantime I am informed that the dominion bureau of statistics quoted price is based on what are called salted hides, which are hides that have gone through certain stages of preparation prior to tanning and are of a certain standard of quality. While without further information it is impossible to account completely for the differences quoted by the hon. member, it is entirely possible that differences in quality, methods of preparation and distance from markets may account for much of the price difference.

Several hon. members inquired as to cattle and hog prices in Canada over the past several years, and also exports of live cattle. I have the material here, along with certain additional information concerning imports and comparable prices in the United States. Since this is rather voluminous, and in order to save the time of the house I would suggest that it might be better to have the table included in Hansard with my statement.

Basically it shows that, while prices for cattle are at present somewhat lower than they have been since 1961, they are strengthening and at present are above the figure for the comparable period in 1960. In both Canada and the United States cattle prices have dropped from the high levels of 1962 and prices in the United States of course have an impact on values in Canada.

Hog prices show much the same picture, with the differences in general being smaller and with the present accumulated price being considerably higher than the price in effect in 1960. I have all the figures as to the prices in 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963 and up to this time in 1964 for two grades of cattle, choice steers and good steers, for Canada and the United States, and the hog prices as well. I should like these figures to go along with my statement. They might be included in Hansard which would save me having to go over them. Otherwise I should like to read them.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Mr. Diefenbaker: In so far as the figures are concerned there is no objection. However, the minister also said that he has included in these tables his observations thereon. Any observations he should read.

Mr. Hays: There are no observations, Mr. Chairman.

[1] Preliminary

Those are about all the questions that were asked, I believe, Mr. Chairman. I should like to summarize what I have been saying for just a moment. It seems to me that someone asked about policy in so far as agriculture is concerned. I should like to assure hon. members that any policies that are good for the farmer will not be torn down. We are going to improve them if it is at all possible.

Shortly after the war, in 1946, I met a group of agriculturists in the city of Buenos Aires. They asked me, what do you think Argentina is famous for? I think probably every person in the world would have no problem in saying Argentina is famous for the production of beef. I asked them, in turn, if Argentina is famous for the production of beef, for what is Canada famous? They said paper and pulp, wheat and dairy cattle. This rather impressed me because you can ask the same question of anyone today in about 30 countries and you will receive the same answer.

It seems to me that any agricultural policy we formulate should have due regard for our geographical position. We have 482,000 farmers in Canada who are vigorous, who have a lot of get up and go. I think they could be producing a good many lines of seed stock that are required around the world, not only for livestock but for grains and vegetables. I believe this is the sort of thing that should be considered in any policy we establish. What has happened to our hog production in Canada in the last seven to ten years? We know the job that the Danes have done with their hog production and their famous bacon. We know that with the same amount of feed they have a return of $4 more per hog, and when you multiply this by approximately 140,000 hogs produced in Canada each week and then multiply that by the number for the year you will realize that our farmers are losing between $30 million and $40 million a year.

I could go on to deal with other products. I believe that we, in Canada, have a job to do in so far as efficiency is concerned. We should remember that a yield of two more bushels per acre gives our farmers $100 million more. In so far as swine are concerned we have a job to do, the same as we have done in connection with dairy cattle, which are in demand all over the world. I believe that it should be our policy to harness these 56 experimental stations we have in the research department that are doing an excellent job. We should also harness all these exhibitions, so that we can tie up every group and perhaps direct them into producing seed stock for the rest of the world. I look forward to the year 1964. We know that 1963 was a record year for agriculture, and we face 1964 with hope. We know that climatic conditions may change the results for any year, but we are looking forward to having the biggest year we have ever had in 1964.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was one question which I thought perhaps I might answer because I think it was more properly directed to the statement I made the other day than to the statement made by my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture. Perhaps I might dispose of that particular question if the hon. member for Provencher would not mind.

Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition said, as will be found in Hansard at page 1572:

> —as yet we have had no information as to what actually took place during those 17 days.

This was from February 3 to February 20.

> In particular, we want to be furnished with a record of all the directives and orders made by the Minister of Agriculture between those two dates in connection with the branches which were transferred to the Minister of Forestry.

The right hon. gentleman, on Thursday, as recorded on page 1520 of Hansard, made a reference to this matter in these terms:

> I think they will have to pass an order in council to ratify what was done.

This was at the very conclusion of what he had to say.

> Indeed, when they have done that they will have to come before the house and ask, and they will receive—ask and ye shall receive—forgiveness for what they did and legalization for what they ought not to have done.

Now, sir, I did in the observations I made last Thursday give all the information that the officials had been able to gather for me or that I had been able to gather for myself on this particular point. Up to that time research had indicated that the only thing the minister had done personally, in his personal capacity in respect of those things under the order of February 3 that had been transferred to the Minister of Forestry, was to sign those eight ARDA agreements. Of course, the officials had proceeded under the authority given to them by the minister to do the things that are normally done in the department. I indicated also that happens in every case of the transfer of duties. It also happens in every case of the transfer of ministers. I have a good many examples I could give. I do not believe anyone has ever maintained there is anything illegal about that. Government would be paralysed if the authority given by one minister was not valid until a new authority had been signed by another minister. I think everyone with any experience in government knows that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is quite different from the situation here.

Mr. Pickersgill: In the case of the transfer of duties of the travel bureau, which I think was the last case under the government of the right hon. gentleman, 77 days elapsed between the passing of the order and the completion of all these authorizations. There is, therefore, nothing unusual in these matters at all.

However I believe the government owes a most complete explanation to the house about this matter. I have no hesitation in saying that the government is responsible to the House of Commons. I have always maintained this doctrine from both sides of the house, and have done my utmost to uphold it. I am going, right here and now, to ask my colleague the Minister of Justice if he will have the officers of his department look at the whole record of this period very carefully. It will not be completed within a day or two, but I doubt if it will take very long. I am going to ask him if he will have them do this with the utmost diligence. If the house will allow us, we would then do what the right hon. gentleman has said, and that, is if anything needs to be rectified, we would do our best to rectify it. We would come here frankly and explain what had been done. I hope the minister will feel that he is able to give the undertaking I have suggested.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The observations made by the Minister of Transport are of such a nature that naturally the house will accept his undertaking to do what I believe should have been done earlier. However, that is all past now. I would point out that the suggestion that what has taken place here had any relationship whatever to the transfer of duties for the tourist bureau is a preposterous statement. In this case there was an entire vesting of the powers over a particular department, or sectors of a department, on February 3. Was there anything done by the Minister of Agriculture during that period of time, until February 20, which would not be legal? If the Minister of Justice will have this looked into in the manner suggested by the Minister of Transport and a report given to the house, that will clarify the situation.

Then there should be legalization of whatever is found to require further action in order to ratify and approve what has been done. I am sure, in the spirit in which the minister has placed the matter before the committee, namely that if wrong has been done and serious error committed the government will ask for forgiveness, then in the spirit not only of Easter, to which reference was made today, but as always in the spirit of this house, we will do our part to assure that what ought not to have been done and was done will be corrected.

Mr. Favreau: In view of the disposition of the committee I shall not ask my colleague, the Minister of Transport, to put his question on the order paper. Rather, I will be glad to give the undertaking immediately to the committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is one of those emergencies.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, we witnessed today one of those very rare occasions when the Minister of Transport comes before us in sack cloth and ashes and seeks repentance for those things he ought not to have done. The confession made by the minister will considerably shorten my remarks this afternoon, as I was going to make the plea that he give consideration to the government's reviewing of the events of those fateful 17 days and to introducing a remedial measure to take care of the mistakes and errors committed during that period.

We on this side are very pleased to see the Minister of Agriculture in his place today and to hear him make a statement that covered a wide range of subjects. I do not intend to go over all those subjects, but we on this side would like to discuss agricultural policy a little more fully with him, and particularly to discuss those aspects of the department which have a bearing on what can be done to relieve pockets of distress in agriculture, the low income farmers in distressed areas, and those parts of agriculture which are not enjoying the degree of prosperity that agriculture in general is enjoying.

Despite all the statistics quoted to show the agricultural situation is improving, there are always pockets of distress, and most of the branches of the minister's department which could have been helpful in those areas are now transferred out of his jurisdiction. Last night he suggested he still had some 30 odd branches to take care of. He gave the impression that he was tremendously overworked, and that it was going to be difficult for him to keep track of all the problems he would be faced with in administering the branches that remain under his jurisdiction.

He certainly did not take that attitude when he first assumed the portfolio. He was running about the country auctioning bulls all over the place, and never seemed to worry whether the Department of Agriculture had any administrative leadership. But now when he has lost part of his department he suggests there is too much for him to do, and that therefore he was quite agreeable to the transfer of some of his responsibilities.

During the course of this and the preceding session of parliament we have posed a good many questions to the government and have received a variety of answers, but I am beginning to wonder how much we can depend upon the word of ministers when they reply to questions asked by members of the opposition. As recorded at page 3632 of Hansard for October 16, 1963 the hon. member for Kootenay West wanted to know where the Minister of Agriculture was on the previous day, when there was a debate in the house on agricultural matters. The Prime Minister replied that the minister and his associate at that time were away in the west, looking after the grass roots, but it turned out that the minister was in Kingston selling bulls. I wonder, are we going to have a continuation of this type of misleading statements and answers to our questions.

Again, as recorded at page 2608 of Hansard for July 25, 1963, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle asked the minister whether he could report to the house on the resignation of his acting assistant deputy minister, Dr. Kristjansson, and in reply the minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, I know of no intention on the part of anyone to resign. Everyone seems very, very happy.

I ask, why did Dr. Kristjansson leave the department? I think the answer was given the other day by the hon. member for Port Arthur when he referred to the events taking place within the department in regard to ARDA. Dr. Kristjansson was one of those men who pushed the ARDA program, who believed in it and what it could do. The fact that he left the department is an indication that the minister cared little what transpired, or what direction was given to the department in regard to ARDA.

I have just been advised, and I wish to put this on the record, also, that Dr. Kristjansson had resigned the day before the question was asked, and the minister did not know anything about it. This gives some indication of how much he knows about what is going on within his department.

Just the other day the hon. member for Skeena asked a question regarding cold storage, to which the minister replied that he had been taking a very close look at the problem. This is something the minister is doing all the time. He is the closest looking person I have ever known. No matter what question is asked, he says he is going to take a close look at it. Members of the government have been examining problems minutely for the past year, but we have not seen any results of this examination.

The minister said, as recorded at page 1525 of Hansard for March 26:

> In so far as cold storage is concerned, we have taken a very close look at every application we have received and most of them have been approved. Hon. members will remember that the previous government had an austerity program and cold storage grants were frozen.

A little later the hon. member referred back to this particular point and said:

> I wonder whether I could pose one question to the minister about cold storage activities. I think the minister said that in the last few weeks they have approved more applications under the Cold Storage Act than were approved in the previous 18 months.

The minister replied:

> This figure may not be too accurate—

I wholly agree with that statement. The figures and information given to us on many matters concerning agriculture are certainly not too accurate.

On the same day the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska posed a question to the minister concerning hides, and the minister replied:

> I do not know. I cannot answer this question, and I am sure no one else can answer it. The law of supply and demand enters into these things.... This is the first time I have heard of it.

Well, he left the impression that this was news to him. Then on Monday, in his statement, he refers to the same subject again and says: "As a matter of fact, several people who have thousands of hides in store have come to see me and they have been to see the Minister of Trade and Commerce". So this was not such a new matter, after all, two days later. So, on the strength of these statements which have been made in the house constantly by members of the government I do not think members of this house will wonder at all why we are constantly putting questions to this government in an effort to get answers in which we can place some faith.

I have dealt with the question of misleading statements. The minister said last night that he was overworked. I wonder just how much work there is left for him to do when most of his department has disappeared from under him. What has he got left? Is there such a great effort involved in the administration of the act concerning race track betting? I wonder how many hours a day he spends on that. He must be overworked providing leadership in connection with the pest control act. Perhaps he could broaden its scope a little so as to include some of his colleagues in the cabinet, and bring them under control. I am sure great qualities of leadership are needed to take care of the administration under the Live Stock Pedigree Act. I give the minister credit for putting up a valiant struggle to retain some portion of his department.

We all know that some of these duties are administrative in nature but there are several important facets to the department, branches which will play a very important part in the development of agriculture. The farm credit program is one of them; PFRA is another. The price stabilization board and the crop insurance program are also important parts of the department which require leadership and administration. I hope the minister will be left to provide this administration. I should like to believe him when he says he has the interest of the farmers at heart and that he is anxious to pursue policies which are beneficial to agriculture. I think perhaps he will do that, if he is left alone to do it. But I am a little suspicious about that group which was there in 1957 and prior to that time—that bunch which ignored and completely forgot the western farmers, and farmers in general in this country, and we are a little concerned that the minister may be pressured from all sides to do little and to do less. I can assure him he has the wholehearted support of members on this side of the house, if he has any battles to fight with other members of the cabinet.

The minister told us there was to be a liaison committee consisting of three members, the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Forestry. After reading some of the statements which have been made by those ministers I am seriously in doubt as to what type of co-operation one can expect from three men who have such varied views on matters having to do with agriculture. The Minister of Forestry takes one view, the Minister of Agriculture takes another and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, whose statements we have heard much about in western Canada, seems to hold a third view. We sincerely hope there will be some co-ordination of effort between these three ministers, because having regard to the way in which responsibilities have been taken away from the Minister of Agriculture, the closest co-operation will certainly be required if there is to be any co-ordination of agricultural policy. We certainly hope to see evidence that this troika, as someone has called it, can work and produce effective legislation.

The minister takes great pleasure these days in referring to the progress made by agriculture when he visits the constituencies. I think he can do this with some justifiable pride because the income from agriculture is improving. But I challenge him to give us one instance of any action taken either by the government or by himself which has resulted in the improvement of the agricultural situation in this country, other than the continuation of those policies which were instituted by the previous government.

In conclusion, let me say this: We should like to assist the minister in every way possible. We should like to make sure that he appears before the house occasionally to give us a review of his activities. We are looking forward to the debate on the estimates of his department during which we can discuss policy in general. I should include, at this point, a reference to the Minister of Forestry who now holds an important portfolio—the administration of the ARDA program and its related branches. This is a most important program as far as agriculture is concerned. We should like to know what the government's proposals are, what its hopes are and what its plans are. We hope there will be co-ordination, though I am sometimes doubtful how those hopes will materialize.

I have here a copy of an article which appeared in Time magazine last fall. This is required reading. Discussing the new Liberal government, it says:

The new Pearson government is, by common consent, better staffed with cabinet talent—

We look across the floor and wonder where the writer of this article got that idea.

—and has a clearer view of the direction it intends to take—

"All directions" is about the answer to that.

—than any previous incoming Canadian administration. It has thought out its position on defence—

We have had some examples of how clearly they thought out that position. The article goes on:

—on foreign affairs, on biculturalism, and it has done its homework in economics.

We shall ask the Minister of Finance about that. I prefer to say that as far as I am concerned this government, like Christopher Columbus, did not know where they were going, did not know where they were when they got there, did not know where they had been when they got back, and they did it on borrowed money.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, we are now discussing supplementary estimates for the Department of Agriculture amounting to $127,343,681, and this amount raises the estimates of this department for the fiscal year ending March 31 to $300,564,831. These figures leave us thoughtful, considering the minor importance given by the government to Canadian agriculture, especially to the farmers of eastern Canada.

The main estimates for 1962-63 merely allotted $161 million to agriculture, while in the main estimates for 1963-64, the amount was $172 million.

We are now being asked to approve supplementary estimates in the amount of $127 million, thus raising the total to more than $300 million. However, if we consider the 1963-64 estimates, we find that the total estimated expenditures are of $140,124,860. It is therefore obvious that we shall be asked again during the next session to pass another series of supplementary estimates.

On the other hand, if we consider the total estimated expenditures in the main estimates, we find that in 1963-64, agriculture accounted for only 2.7 per cent of the expenditures and that for 1964-65, it accounts for only 2.1 per cent, or a decrease of .6 per cent.

Who will support this decrease which comes at a time when expenditures are increasing? Certainly not the western farmers who had the good fortune to have a bumper crop and to see their income increase. No, once more the eastern farmers will bear that burden, even though they are already in a precarious situation. The government shows but indifference to their condition, it shows complete disregard for their problems and if, from time to time, it brings in an appearance of solution, they are just half measures, temporary piecemeal solutions.

If you look at page 477 of the Canada Year Book, 1963-64, you will see that the Quebec farmers net income has been continuously decreasing since 1959, while that income shows an almost continued increase for the Saskatchewan and Alberta farmers.

Here are some figures bearing out those findings: in Quebec, in 1959, net income was $191,848,000; in 1960, $185,686,000; in 1961, $179,073,000; and, in 1962, $179,668,000. They show a steady decrease, except in 1962 when the situation remained almost the same as the previous year. In Saskatchewan, for instance, in 1959, net income was $240,862,000; in 1960, $372,981,000, that is an increase of over $130 million; in 1961, there was a decrease of $137,792,000, and in 1962 the income was three times as high as the previous year, amounting to $503,795,000.

Everybody is aware of last year's harvests; they will keep up this high level.

We are happy that the western farmers enjoy a good income. But we urge the government to give special attention to the eastern farmers who remain in a state of economic and financial stagnation which is a disgrace. The farmers of Quebec as well as of New Brunswick see their situation getting worse and worse because of problems requiring urgent action by the government.

Proper means have to be taken to make agriculture a paying proposition.

To that end, it must be recognized, or at least recalled that the farmers are the basis of our society and its various structures, and that without them, it would become impossible to hold in position those who are at the higher levels.

Neither would our armed forces go very far if the farmers refused to yield their production. Therefore, in order to be logical, we should admit frankly that we owe our very existence to them.

The farmers, besides being the support of each and everyone, are the largest consumers. They are the ones who largely contribute to our trade, transport, industry and every other sector of our economy.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, I would like to list their needs as consumers.

They must have a decent home, as every other citizen does, a heating system and all sorts of equipment and furniture as we all do.

Moreover, the farmer must have huge buildings for his farm, and all the required equipment connected with it.

Farmers need various structures, according to their production.

Moreover, our farmers need various other things, like farm implements and machinery, separators, milking machines, milk coolers, and water pipes, all things which are very expensive.

In addition, they must have a wide range of mechanical equipment, such as tractors, trucks, sowers, fertilizer spreaders, harvesters or combines, hay presses, threshing and binding machines, and many other items which it would take too long to list.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

They must have a great many other things like chain saws, wood-cutting and working equipment, repair workshops, because they cannot constantly go to the garage or call upon the services of mechanics.

I think that my list is long enough to prove that the farmers are great producers, but also great consumers, and rank first in our economic structure.

Of course, the farmer has to incur many expenses, and it is inconceivable that the government may think that in Quebec, for instance, with an average income lower than $1,500, he can manage to meet his responsibilities. It is a mathematical as well as an economic impossibility, which has consequences in other fields.

The farmer, whoever he may be, needs machines and tools. The government should without delay study means to allow grants to farmers, in order to help them pay for the machinery without which, today, it is impossible to farm on a profitable basis.

Likewise, grants should be allowed for fertilizers, in order to help the farmer increase his production potential and improve the quality of his products.

Indeed, money can be found to make war machinery, machinery designed to destroy. I believe the government and the Canadians are clever enough to make production machinery intended to assist agriculture and maintain life in a country where citizens wish only to live.

Our economists and our ministers of finance often speak of economic cycles. By way of simplification of great theories, I may say it is undeniable that when agriculture is prosperous at home, all other sectors of our economic life benefit.

We all know that farmers can produce. I have given proof that they are also great consumers. The basic law of economy, the law of supply and demand, proves that by improving the lot of farmers, we would give our economy a shot in the arm which is badly needed at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, it is unthinkable and intolerable that the government does not give greater attention to agriculture. Instead of a reduction in the budget in relation to the balance of expenses, a tremendous increase in the estimates of this department would have been necessary to face the alarming situation which prevails now.

Previous governments always thought that the farm credit board, through farm loans, would save farmers from their precarious financial situation. On the contrary, in the majority of cases, this board served only to put farmers into debt, and the loans that were made helped only in crippling farmers who did not have the means to repay the loan.

Our farmers, who have long operated on a submarginal basis, had to obtain loans, to go into debt. However, their products have consistently sold at a price lower than the current price. The farmer does not want all kinds of loans, new financing systems, but rather to be able to sell his products at a reasonable profit, in order to meet his obligations.

In my opinion, the best way to help farmers would be to set up market prices that would enable farmers to sell their products at a profit, because more than 80 per cent of farmers in the province of Quebec operate on a submarginal basis. In the circumstances, how is it possible to be prosperous in a province or in a country? So it is the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture to take under consideration the suggestions I am making.

Since the farmer does not have the required income to pay his debts, he cannot make the necessary improvements to modernize his operations, so that his expansion will keep pace with industrial and technical developments, and be competitive with any commercial product that can be put on the market.

A farmer should be exempted from that shameful 11 per cent tax because he is one of the largest consumers of building materials of all kinds since he is always building something. He needs all types of constructions. Why should he pay that 11 per cent tax?

What happens is that the farmer can no longer hope to compete on an equal footing with other areas of the economy. People are leaving the farm to live in the city, thus adding to the number of unemployed. There is nothing in farming to encourage young people to try and make a future of it. We cannot blame the young generation for showing little interest in agriculture because it is not a paying proposition.

In some counties over 50 per cent of our farms have been abandoned. The farmers are not the first ones who should be blamed; but rather, the government should be blamed for its inaction and its lack of interest because it is mainly responsible for the present predicament in which farmers find themselves.

I know that the government does not want to do much to organize or increase farm production because there are already surpluses and governments are afraid of them. In a civilized country, it would be logic to be practical and we should recognize that surpluses are not a misfortune for the people, but rather a windfall. The officials of the department are clever enough to find new markets for such surpluses. Why not organize farming on an economic basis?

I know there are surpluses, but that should be a blessing for the whole population instead of a penalty as our economists try to point out at the present time. Farmers have to pay heavy interest on loans made to them by the farm credit board, that is 5 per cent although the provincial government reimburses 2½ per cent. Now, if there is an authority in the field of agriculture, why force a government to take funds out of the general revenue of a province or of the country to pay interest to lending institutions?

The Liberal party has enough clever men to ask those vested interests to make sacrifices and lend that money at a rate of 3 per cent to prevent a province from levying taxes on the tax revenue from all taxpayers.

Everyone must take his responsibilities and I am asking you, hon. members of the government, to take yours and to ask high finance in Canada to take its responsibilities also.

Farmers living on average farms have to pay, out of a meagre income, municipal and school taxes which are getting higher and higher. In my riding, the owner of an average farm pays more than $500 for school and municipal taxes. That is preposterous. Farmers are in a frightful economic situation. You should see them and realize their position before it is too late.

I have here a letter, or rather a request, that people from my riding and from the neighbouring constituencies have sent me. It says:

Hon. Harry Hays,
Minister of Agriculture,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Hays:

Enclosed you will find a petition, signed by a group of farmers in the counties of Compton, Stanstead and Sherbrooke, asking that subsidies now being granted for the transportation of grain by railways also apply in the case of transportation by trucks.

I feel their request is legitimate and that granting it would help substantially to raise the income of farmers in eastern Canada and especially in Quebec.

I hope therefore, Sir, that you will give serious consideration to this letter and that you will be kind enough to set forth the views of both the government and your department on the matter.

Yours truly

I think the hon. gentleman could surely do something about that, because eastern farmers have to import 60 per cent of the feed grain they need. For those reasons, I feel it would be appropriate to subsidize transportation by trucks and that this would be of great assistance to the farmers.

I also take it upon myself to make a suggestion to the government and especially to the Minister of Agriculture. We know that, during the seeding season, farmers lack farm help while a great many unemployed in our cities do not know what to do and have to be content with unemployment benefits.

Consequently, farmers are wondering whether it would not be possible to extend the winter work period in order that they may hire the help they need, that is unemployed people, to do the bulk of the work. Would it not be possible for the government to pass a special bill in favour of farmers, perhaps under the winter works program, so that salaries could be paid to city people going out to help the farmers?

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, we have been dealing with the subject of agriculture, particularly the administration item, for some time and I want to conclude on behalf of Her Majesty's loyal opposition by saying that we are very happy that the minister was able to spend two days with us between his peripatetic pilgrimages. While he did not cover the entire field, as one can understand, he did answer a variety of questions that were asked. Therefore may I say on behalf of those for whom I speak that under all the circumstances we feel that this item might now be passed.

There is one matter on which I should have liked to hear him but I do not want to hold up his estimates. That matter is one to which he made reference in the course of his remarks last evening. He said, as I understood him, that he is now in charge of railway branch line rationalization. There is a great deal of interest in this matter, particularly on the prairies, and a general statement by him at a very early date is most necessary and would be most acceptable. Certainly so far as the people of western Canada are concerned they feel strongly that the plans for railway abandonment should be proceeded with very slowly and that rather than piecemeal abandonment there should be railway line consolidation. I do not intend to deal with that at any length, except that I should like to hear the views of the Minister of Agriculture because this is a tremendous field of responsibility which he has assumed.

Mr. Pickersgill: The right hon. gentleman does not seem to realize that this responsibility has not yet been stripped from me but will be shortly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As usual the Minister of Transport has interrupted. With a provincial election about to take place in the province of Saskatchewan I have read and heard that he is about to make a visitation there to place before the people the true facts in connection with this matter. I would not let him do that. I say to the Minister of Agriculture: You look after your own department and do not let them bite off anything more; do not let them interfere with you. I read the other day that the Minister of Agriculture had said that some of the eastern ministers were very difficult to deal with, and they were exerting pressure on him because they thought he was doing too much for western Canada. All I can say is that anything that can be done to assist agriculture in all sections of the country will receive the support of the opposition at all times. He stated a moment ago that his purpose is to maintain those things that are good, and to make improvements in order to assure an ever-increasing opportunity for farmers, as indeed for all sectors of the community, and in those aims he will receive the fullest support of the opposition.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, first of all I am afraid I cannot agree with the right hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I believe this is about the third or possibly the fourth time he has spoken on these estimates and there are certain hon. members who have not yet had a chance to speak.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not mind.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): He gave his vinegar speech yesterday and his honey speech today, and if another occasion arises we may have some other variety of speech from him. I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture a problem that is hanging over the heads of some of the farmers in my constituency and which has arisen for two or three reasons. One has to do with the unusually heavy snowfall this winter, together with the fact that the snow is still there. This is very unusual. We have not had a single thaw so far and the result is that as one drives along the highway it is not unusual to see snowbanks 12, 14 or 16 feet high.

Hon. members may recall that some four years ago there were very serious floods in that area. There was a lot of publicity at the time in the national newspapers and on television and a great amount of attention was paid to the situation. Funds were raised to assist the flood victims and the people of the area responded very generously. I believe they raised in excess of $50,000 locally which amount was met by funds from various government departments.

However, at that time one particular group was completely ignored. I refer to the farmers of Mount Joy township. The funds that were raised were all directed toward the assistance of householders who had suffered extensive damage to their homes, furniture and property. The result was that in the allocation of the funds a farmer could only receive assistance if his home had been damaged. It is well known that farmers show a little more foresight than city dwellers and erect their homes on the highest part of their land. The result was that the farm had to be totally inundated before the farmer's home would be damaged.

Extensive damage was done to the farms. Many of them were strewn with logs, stumps and other debris and there was considerable expense involved in clearing the debris off the land. In addition, the fields were waterlogged, which in many cases resulted in total crop failures. However in spite of this damage these farmers were unable to qualify for the assistance that was provided to the flood victims.

I believe I can understand the reason for that, Mr. Chairman. I do not think that the Department of Agriculture had made any preparations beforehand to meet such a situation, one which could well arise again from time to time in various regions of the country. What I should like to know today is whether the minister or the department has any plans to meet such an emergency, should it be repeated. There is a distinct danger of such a situation arising again in the same area this year because of the unusual circumstances I have outlined. Many of the farmers have not been able to recoup the losses they suffered four years ago and if such a situation should recur many of these farmers, who have had a rather tough time over the last three or four years, in all likelihood would be wiped out. May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the house has been proceeding at a good and useful pace in the study of these estimates during the course of the afternoon. I am quite sure we will all find it very useful to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Timmins as soon as possible and I wonder whether there could be general agreement to waive the private members' hour for today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, it seems that we get into a great amount of difficulty when we start to juggle the rules, so I suggest that we stick to them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, public bills.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING WAGE EARNERS' ASSIGNMENTS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On behalf of the hon. member for Winnipeg North, I should like to move second reading of this bill so that the Solicitor General can move an amendment to have the subject matter referred to the special committee that has been set up for this purpose. I believe it has been understood that on some occasion, and I believe today is the occasion, a number of bills on the order paper are to be given this treatment. Therefore, I move second reading of this bill for that purpose.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre been authorized by the hon. member for Winnipeg North to move this bill on his behalf?

Mr. Knowles: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (for Mr. Orlikow) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-3, to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move that the said bill be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the special joint committee on consumer credit for further study.

Amendment agreed to.

SMALL LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT REQUIRING STATEMENT OF TRUE INTEREST RATE CHARGE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Orlikow) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-13, to amend the Small Loans Act (advertising).

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move that the said bill be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the special joint committee on consumer credit for further study.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MacNaught: If we could have unanimous consent, I suggest that you call order No. 11, Bill No. C-20.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Private Bills

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE MAXIMUM INTEREST RATE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Orlikow) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-20, to amend the Small Loans Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I assume that in connection with this bill the hon. member also has authorization of the hon. member for Winnipeg North?

Mr. Knowles: Quite.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move that the said bill be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the special joint committee on consumer credit for further study.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, if we could have unanimous consent I suggest you call order No. 14, Bill No. C-23.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE

PROVISION FOR DISCLOSURE AND RESTRICTION OF INTEREST IN CONSUMER CREDIT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Scott) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-23, to provide for the control of consumer credit.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move that the said bill be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the special joint committee on consumer credit for further study.

Amendment agreed to.

PROVISION FOR CONTROL OF USE OF COLLATERAL BILLS AND NOTES

Mr. Maurice Rinfret (for Mr. Ryan) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-63, to provide for control of the use of collateral bills and notes in consumer credit transactions.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move that the said bill be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the special joint committee on consumer credit for further study.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MacNaught: If we could have unanimous consent, I suggest we call order No. 42, Bill No. C-51.

Mr. Knowles: Has the minister not forgotten one, namely Bill No. C-44?

Mr. MacNaught: Yes.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING OFF-STORE INSTALMENT SALES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Orlikow) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-44, to amend the Bills of Exchange Act and the Interest Act (off-store instalment sales).

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move that the said bill be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the special joint committee on consumer credit for further study.

Amendment agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO PREVENT FRAUD IN RETAIL CREDIT TRANSACTIONS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-51, to amend the Bills of Exchange Act (instalment purchases).

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move that the said bill be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the special joint committee on consumer credit for further study.

Amendment agreed to.

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT TO PLACE CEILING ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (for Mr. Orlikow) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-52, to amend the Interest Act.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move that the said bill be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the special joint committee on consumer credit for further study.

Amendment agreed to.

APPLICATION OF INTEREST RATE IN SMALL LOANS ACT

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-53, to amend the Interest Act (application of Small Loans Act).

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I move that the said bill be not now read the second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the special joint committee on consumer credit for further study.

Amendment agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE RULE RESPECTING INSANITY

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-14, to amend the Criminal Code (insanity).

He said: I had not expected I would have an opportunity of introducing this bill during this week. I think perhaps it is a very appropriate week in which to introduce a bill dealing with the subject of insanity. The purpose of the bill which I am introducing is to amend the Criminal Code so as to abolish what is known as the M'Naghten rules in respect to criminal insanity and substitute an up to date modern rule in its place.

One man is responsible for this bill being presented before the house. He is a young man by the name of Ronald Markle, who is a constituent of mine, now serving a sentence at Kingston penitentiary. He is 33 years of age, married, with seven children.

Markle suffered from a strange malady. In the course of two or three years he set fire to schools, churches and apartment houses. He was undetected by the police, and there was no rational purpose in his actions. Some time in 1962 he gave himself up to the police and asked for treatment. He pleaded guilty to nine charges of arson in a magistrate's court. He was not represented by counsel, and was convicted and sentenced to a total of 24 years in the penitentiary.

On appeal, the court of appeal saw nothing wrong with this sentence. However the public were more sensitive and a committee of citizens was formed to aid Markle. The press became interested and eventually the former minister of justice, the Hon. Mr. Fleming, directed a new hearing, and on this new hearing the sentence was reduced to 12 years.

Under the laws of Canada in regard to criminal insanity as they presently stand, there is no doubt that Markle was not insane. He appreciated the nature and quality of his actions; he knew that they were wrong. Indeed that was the very reason he gave himself up to the police and asked for treatment. He was, therefore, under our law criminally responsible for his actions. But it is equally clear that his acts were irrational and were the product of mental illness. What Markle needed, and needs, was not punishment but treatment.

The purpose of the bill before the house is designed to amend the inadequate provisions of the Criminal Code in regard to criminal insanity, and bring them up to date and in line with enlightened, modern medical opinion. The purpose of the bill is to ensure that where acts are committed by reason of mental illness, the persons involved are considered as sick persons requiring treatment, and not as criminals requiring punishment.

To use the language of a famous American judge, Judge Jerome Frank:

> A society that punishes the sick is not wholly civilized; a society that does not restrain the dangerous madman, lacks common sense.

The present bill is designed to abolish the M'Naghten rule of criminal insanity and substitute for it a modern test adopted by the United States court of appeals in 1954.

The M'Naghten rule was framed by English judges in 1843, more than 120 years ago. M'Naghten fatally shot Edward Drummond, secretary to the prime minister, Sir Robert Peel, in an attempt to kill the latter. M'Naghten explained that he had made a mistake; that he desired to kill the prime minister. He gave this further explanation:

> The Tories in my native city have compelled me to do this; they follow and persecute me wherever I go and have entirely destroyed my peace of mind.

There is no doubt that M'Naghten suffered from insane delusions. Nine physicians and surgeons called to the witness stand testified that he was insane, and the presiding lord chief justice directed a verdict of not guilty. M'Naghten spent the rest of his life in a mental institution.

The public, however, were indignant at the crime, ascribing it to a political plot. The House of Lords put questions to the 15 English judges who laid down what has since been known as the M'Naghten rules. The basic rule is that to establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be proved that the accused was labouring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing or, if he did know it, that he did not know that what he was doing was wrong. This test, slightly altered, remains the law of Canada today. It is contained in section 16 of the Criminal Code, part of which is sought to be repealed by the bill before the house.

The Criminal Code provides that no person shall be convicted of a criminal offence in respect of an act or omission on his part while he was insane, and it goes on to define insanity as follows, in subsection 2:

> For the purposes of this section, a person is insane when he is in a state of natural imbecility or has disease of the mind to an extent that renders him incapable of appreciating the nature and quality of an act or omission, or of knowing that an act or omission is wrong.

Subsection 3, which I need not read, goes on to deal with specific delusions. It will be noted that the key phrase is the word "appreciated" and this is used rather than the word "know" in the original M'Naghten rules, but since 1843 a very great deal has been learned in the fields of medical and psychiatric knowledge.

In the Durham case in the United States in 1954, an American court of appeals in Washington, D.C., substituted a new rule, which is the basis of the amendment I propose. The provision which that court adopted was that the accused is not criminally responsible if his act was the product of mental disease or mental defect.

Judge Bazelon, who wrote the judgment of the American court of appeals, has made the following statement:

> In this century the chorus of protest (against M'Naghten's rules) has become deafening. In a poll taken a few years ago 80 per cent of 300 American psychiatrists pronounced those rules unsatisfactory.

One of the greatest of American judges, Mr. Justice Cardozo stated flatly:

> Everyone concedes that the present definition of insanity has little relation to the truths of mental life.

Judge Bazelon tells us that the main criticisms of the right-wrong test are fourfold:

> First, it misses the point entirely because whatever "insanity" means, the term refers to abnormal conditions of mind that cannot all be gathered together under the rubrics, "know" and "wrong." Second, the test is based on an outmoded theory of faculty psychology derived from phrenology.

—a rather ancient science—

> —that dividend the topography of the mind into separate compartments. Modern psychology views a man as an integrated personality and reason is only one element of that personality, and not the sole determinant of conduct. Third, the test poses to the expert an ultimate question involving legal and moral, as well as medical issues. Fourth, the test has so strait-jacketed psychiatric testimony that insanity is defined exclusively in terms of extreme psychosis and patent organic deterioration.

From the judicial point of view, Judge Bazelon says:

> What all this controversy adds up to, practically, is whether we are to have more and freer psychiatric testimony. I myself have no hesitance in taking the position solidly in favour of freer and fuller expert testimony.

He goes on to state:

> This is exactly what we did in the District of Columbia five years ago when the United States court of appeals adopted the Durham rule. Under this new, more liberal rule——which description I hope will commend it to the hon. members opposite—

> —a modern and comprehensive body of law governing the administration of the insanity defence is being slowly built up on the basis of continuing experience. At the same time, the community's fears that great numbers of dangerous persons would be freed to attack again, are being put to rest. Nothing of this sort has happened. Defendants acquitted under the Durham rule have been sent to mental hospitals, many of them for longer periods than they would have served in prison, and they appear to get into less trouble after release, than prison convicts.

Therefore the fear that is sometimes expressed that if this rule is changed people will be let out and will more readily commit other crimes has no basis in fact.

In 1955 the American law institute, composed of a leading body of distinguished lawyers, judges and scholars, urged the liberalization of the M'Naghten rules. In a recent study sponsored by the American bar foundation in 1962 under the title "The Mentally Disabled and the Law", the following conclusions are reached:

> It is desirable to broaden the class of the mentally disabled who are held criminally irresponsible without removing the issue from the jury. The M'Naghten and irresistible impulse tests defined too narrowly the class of persons who should be hospitalized rather than imprisoned. These tests also prevent psychiatric witnesses from presenting an adequate word picture of the defendant's mental condition because they are phrased in terms having little relevance to current learning in the field of psychology. The product test remedies both of these defects.

I am aware, along with other hon. members who are familiar with this subject, that this matter was dealt with in 1957 when a royal commission presided over by Chief Justice McRuer made recommendations contrary to those of the bill I am now placing before the house. It so happens that Chief Justice McRuer was a former partner of mine and of the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron). I worked closely with him as junior counsel and I have the greatest respect for Chief Justice McRuer, a respect which was deepened by my personal knowledge and experience. I know he is held in great respect by members of the legal profession. Nevertheless, I find the dissenting report of that commission, prepared by Her Honour Judge Kinnear and Dr. Jones, professor of psychiatry at Dalhousie University, far more persuasive and compelling. Indeed, with great respect, it seems to me that the chief justice in this report has erred by adopting a too legalistic approach to the problem. He rejected the proposal to amend the Criminal Code upon the basis of the contention that the word "appreciate" in the code substantially differentiates the Canadian law from M'Naghten's rules.

This is a refinement which, as the dissenting report indicates, not even judges and lawyers are able to appreciate.

The preferable view seems to me to be that adopted by the so-called Gowers commission in Britain, which quotes statements of doctors with experience in mental diseases appearing before it, as follows:

> The M'Naghten test is based on an entirely obsolete and misleading conception of insanity, since insanity does not only or primarily affect the cognitive or intellectual faculties, but affects the whole personality of the patient, including both the will and the emotions.

One or two misconceptions should be cleared up. This change in the law is not proposed because of any softness of outlook toward those who commit criminal offences. Indeed there are many cases in which persons who are mentally ill, but criminally responsible under the M'Naghten rule, receive sentences, serve their terms in jails or penitentiaries and are released while still suffering from mental illness. These people time and again commit further serious crimes.

The real question, after all the theoretical discussion, is whether the proper remedy is punishment or treatment. I know that many people, feeling indignant at the horrible anti-social acts which are sometimes committed, believe the answer is punishment. Unfortunately, punishment works no cure and indeed may intensify the criminal impulses of the person punished. An inmate of a mental hospital, however, should not be released from the hospital until it is certified that he is cured or at least not dangerous to himself or others. Psychiatrists can make mistakes but there is no reason why the law should not direct attention to the right question, which is: Has the person involved been cured of the mental defects which, if he is released, will make him a danger to society? The prison warden at the expiration of a criminal sentence has no right to ask such a question before he lets the prisoner out, possibly to endanger the public.

In the Durham case, the court said:

The legal and moral traditions of the western world require that those who of their own free will and with evil intent commit acts which violate the law, shall be criminally responsible for those acts. Our traditions also require that where such acts stem from and are the product of mental disease or defect, moral blame shall not attach and hence there will not be criminal responsibility.

In our society the essential aim of the criminal law should not be to induce mass fear of punishment but to reaffirm the value of each individual by due process in his conviction and purposeful treatment thereafter.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that this bill which I have introduced will probably suffer the fate of many other private members' bills. It is however my earnest hope that the government will give serious consideration to this matter which I have brought forward.

There are many other fields in which we reject the impact of modern thought and science, but is there any reason why we should insist in our criminal law in asking a question framed 120 years ago, when psychiatric knowledge was in its infancy? Is there any reason why this parliament in 1964 should not gain a reputation throughout the civilized world for a modern and enlightened attitude to the question of criminal responsibility? I urge the government to give the most careful attention to the amendment of the criminal law in this respect.

I would like to conclude by quoting the words of Winston Churchill, who in the midst of the darkest days of the world war made the following statement:

The mood and temper of the public with regard to the treatment of crime and criminals is one of the most unfailing tests of the civilization of any country. A calm, dispassionate recognition of the rights of the accused, and even of the convicted criminal against the state.... Those are the symbols which, in the treatment of crime and criminals, make and measure the stored-up strength of a nation and are sign and proof of the living virtue in it.

Mr. Speaker, the maintenance of an obsolete and antiquated law of criminal responsibility would show that we in this house in Canada were failing in this test. I suggest it is in this spirit that the members of this house should consider that the time has come to make sure that there are no more cases in Canada like the case of Ronald Markle, now being punished for a crime for which according to our modern knowledge and judgment he was not responsible mentally or morally. If we in this parliament do something about this type of problem we will be measuring up, in Mr. Churchill's words, to one of the "tests of civilization".

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Brant-Haldimand): I am sure the house is grateful to the honourable and learned member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) for bringing to our attention this most important aspect of the criminal law. I trust that if I indicate some difference of opinion between myself and the author of Bill C-14 he would not think I am treating his enlightened efforts in too summary a fashion.

It is true, as the hon. member stated, that we are still administering the law as it was laid down and applied in the trial of Daniel M'Naghten almost a century and a quarter ago. The main criticism of section 16 of our criminal law is, as I understand it, that the law has not kept pace with medical science and knowledge. It is contended that as medical science threw back the frontiers the law has not been modified. That, of course, is the object of the bill introduced by the hon. member for Greenwood.

I am sure the hon. member would agree that his proposition is not a novel one. I do not say that in any desire to detract from the worthiness of his efforts. My purpose and my justification are simple. It is my submission that the M'Naghten rules have stood the test of time. While it is true that on one hand the M'Naghten rules have their strong critics, on the other hand there may be found their strong supporters.

I propose, with deliberate economy of language, to outline the historical background of the M'Naghten rules and their progress. Forty years ago—in 1924, to be precise—Lord Justice Atkin headed a 27-man committee, a committee of eminent and outstanding men both in the law and in medicine, who were reinforced by an opinion from the British medical association. They brought forth a recommendation that the M'Naghten rules should be modified. That recommendation died on second reading in the British parliament. In 1953 a royal commission was again established in Great Britain and the question was given searching and careful inquiry. Once more the British medical association came forward, and the committee, armed with their report, went a step further than the Atkin committee and recommended to parliament that the M'Naghten rules be abrogated. Once more that recommendation died in the British House of Commons.

The hon. and learned member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has stated that in 1957 Chief Justice McRuer headed a commission to examine the same question. I share the hon. member's respect for the chief justice of Ontario and I should like to put on the record the conclusions of the majority report, which may be found at page 46 of the report and which reads in part as follows:

> There should be no change in subsection 1, 2 and 4 of section 16 of the Criminal Code.

Then the majority report goes on to deal with the law suggested by the hon. member for Greenwood, sometimes known as the laws of the state of New Hampshire. This is what the report said:

> The repeal of section 16 and the substitution of the laws of the state of New Hampshire or those of the district of Columbia would not make for a better administration of justice in Canada.

How is it that the M'Naghten rules, subjected to the severest criticism, have withstood the onslaughts of medical associations, of legal committees and royal commissions? An appropriate consideration in answering that question, I suggest, is to determine the purpose for which the M'Naghten rules were formulated. The object of the criminal law, as I understand it, is to protect society, and while there should be other considerations than deterrence, nonetheless the prime purpose of the law is to protect society from the depredations of dangerous and vicious people.

[Mr. Pennell.]

It should be borne in mind that the M'Naghten rules are not set forth as an all-embracing definition of insanity. Perhaps it is more accurate to say that they do not define insanity at all. They set forth a standard of criminal responsibility.

In that regard I wish to point out—and I cannot emphasize this too strongly—that even in 1843 when the judges brought forth the M'Naghten rules, they were aware of the fact that the medical association had a much broader view as to the definition of insanity. But the judges who brought forth the M'Naghten rules started from the fundamental proposition that every person is presumed to be sane and responsible in law for his acts. Then they went a step further and said that if the person desired to escape criminal responsibility it must be proved that either he did not know the nature and quality of his act, or if he did know it, he did not know that it was wrong. The hon. and learned member for Greenwood pointed out in his lucid statement that this is putting the question in the strait-jacket of the right or wrong test. He calls to our attention that modern medical science shows that you cannot, in determining insanity, put the human mind into separate compartments and determine this question solely on the principles of reason, and it must be determined by looking at the whole human function. I concede that, judged solely by medical standards, it is difficult to defend the M'Naghten rules, but I respectfully suggest that in practice they have worked and I am not aware of any substantial miscarriage of justice because they have been maintained in the Criminal Code.

I would, in this great conflict between the M'Naghten rules and the medical association, borrow the words of Mr. John Robinette, the treasurer of the Law Society of Upper Canada and one of the leaders of the bar in this country. This is what he said in giving his opinion before the royal commission:

> It seems to me that it might be worthy of consideration to exclude from the code entirely the word insanity, and what is now section 16 should merely provide that under certain circumstances a person shall not be criminally responsible for his acts or omissions, leaving out any reference to insanity because I think that is probably what causes some of the controversy between the medical profession and the legal profession.

There is a general maxim that if the law satisfies the public conscience, then it is doing its duty. It is my humble and respectful submission that over the years the M'Naghten rules have satisfied the conscience of the majority of the people in this country and no one can place his finger on any substantial miscarriage of justice because the rules are still in the Criminal Code. I do not, Mr.

Speaker, pose as any authority in this matter although I have had occasion to defend people charged with capital murder and have argued this subject matter in the court of appeal with divided success. But I respectfully submit that no matter what it is you put to a jury, whether it be the M'Naghten rules or the watered down and broader rules suggested in Bill No. C-14, invariably the jury will ask themselves this question, "Did the man know that what he was doing was wrong?" In this connection I would bring to the attention of the house that even under Bill No. C-14 psychiatrists would concede that a man, even by their standards, could be insane and would yet know that what he was doing was wrong. I do not propose to weary the house with a long list of legal citations; suffice it to say that several cover my point. In the leading case in Australia, Sodeman v. The King, the defence were able to bring forth three medical experts who all testified, without reservation, that the accused man did not know the nature and quality of his act and did not know that it was wrong. The prosecution brought forth no evidence in rebuttal. The jury convicted, and subsequent appeals failed.

I have had occasion to make a study of five cases reported in the British Notable Trials series, all involving a defence on the grounds of insanity. On each occasion medical evidence was brought forth to show that the accused man did not know the nature and quality of his act, and on each occasion a verdict of guilty was recorded. That brings me back to my original proposition, that while in theory the M'Naghten rules are open to great criticism, in practice they have worked and any other rule that might be substituted would also be subjected by the jury to the searching question, "Did the man know it was wrong when he committed the act?"

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Does he think that because a man like Markle knew that what he was doing was wrong, but nevertheless acted as a result of mental illness, it is appropriate that he should be treated as a criminal and should not receive treatment as a sane person?

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, may I say to the hon. member that if this man knew it was wrong, he could be held criminally responsible, bearing in mind that the law is merciful and takes into consideration these mitigating factors and will give such a man treatment. So we have to weigh the one danger against the other—whether he should be set free into society or be kept incarcerated for a definite period receiving the treatment.

I come back to the proposition I was making earlier. I believe the M'Naghten rules have, generally speaking, worked well.

In conclusion, may I say that I hope the government will not close the door to the bill proposed by the hon. member. I will be the first to acknowledge that some of the submissions that I have put forth are subject to objection, and many may be easily rebutted. My purpose in asking the government to keep the bill alive and later on to send it to a special committee is twofold. In the first place I believe discussion of this bill during private members hour is not sufficient for an important measure of this nature. Second, I would ask the government to consider that "no man's land" where a person falls between one who is clearly sane and one who is clearly insane. At the present time there is not sufficient legislation, in my humble opinion, to assist such a person.

The principle of diminished responsibility, which is in existence in India, Pakistan and Scotland, has worked in practice. It would provide some mitigation for those who, while they are not insane within the meaning of the rule, yet because of some mental infirmity or illness are not fully accountable for their actions. Therefore, in closing I would again commend the hon. member, though I may differ with him on many points, and I urge the government to give earnest consideration at a later date to convening a committee to consider this very important problem.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all commend the hon. member for bringing to the attention of the house this important matter, which is one which has been discussed at bar meetings and by medical groups for a good many years. I am sure that nearly every lawyer remembers discussions which started off with the words: "When will we get rid of the M'Naghten rules?" I confess that personally my own sympathies would have been very much in the direction of Bill No. C-14 were it not for the fact that on Friday, November 22, 1962 I happened to have the privilege of sitting down in Toronto with the distinguished and learned member who brought this bill to the attention of the house to hear Lord Devlin, a privy councillor and a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary of London, speak on mental abnormality and the criminal law in a series which was published under the style "Changing legal objectives". I might add that my hon. friend's bill in present form had actually been introduced to the house prior to that lecture.

Lord Devlin, who spoke from a very wide and deep knowledge of criminal jurisprudence in the United Kingdom, certainly gave new insight to the implications and significance of the rules in M'Naghten's case. In the first place, he asked his listeners clearly to distinguish considerations of punishment and sentence in the evaluation of this rule respecting liability. One of the matters which is in our minds with respect to the Mc'Naghten rule is that this is the rule which on certain occasions would convict a man to death who perhaps, if modern psychiatric standards were applied, should be deemed insane. Lord Devlin asked us, first of all, to bear in mind that everything which is sought to be accomplished in the hon. member for Greenwood's bill would be better accomplished by amending the Criminal Code respecting penalty. That is to say, with respect to capital murder there would be no compulsory sentence of death; the maximum penalty would be death or such other penalty as the trial judge in his discretion deemed proper. For my own part I should like to see capital punishment eventually abolished, and I think we are moving in this direction. With regard to non-capital murder there would be no longer a compulsory life sentence, but a maximum penalty of a life sentence or such other lesser penalty as the trial judge in his discretion might deem proper.

Supposing it were possible, Mr. Speaker, by amendment to the code, for a judge to be free with regard to applying an appropriate penalty. This is the general direction which is being taken in all our criminal legislation under the new concept that punishment is now giving place to treatment, that many criminals are better rehabilitated by treatment than by punishment. Suppose a judge were free in any particular case to determine, perhaps even by way of appeal or with the assistance of the parole board, whether or not the appropriate sentence for a crime should be treatment or punishment. If it were possible to distinguish and to separate punishment for a person suffering from mental disability of some kind from the fact of his conviction, then what is the real fault with the M'Naghten rule?

It is true that in the early days the rules in M'Naghten's case were stringent. In the case of The King v. Jessamine, which is reported in 1912 Ontario Court of Appeal Reports, the court was considering section 19 of the code, which reads as follows:

> No person shall be convicted of an offence by reason of an act done or omitted by him when labouring under natural imbecility, or disease of the mind, to such an extent as to render him incapable of appreciating the nature and quality of the act or omission, and of knowledge that such an act or omission was wrong.

This case was authority for the proposition that the burden of proof of insanity is upon the defence. That proposition was not actually spelled out in the comments of the learned proponent of the bill, but I think it was inferred. Without evidence to go to the jury the prisoner cannot be acquitted on the plea of insanity.

Since this case of the King v. Jessamine criminal jurisprudence has shown progress and development. On October 25, 1956 the McRuer royal commission brought down its report. They considered the case of Rex v. Cracknell, reported in 1931 Ontario reports at page 634, which dealt with section 16 of the Criminal Code. That section says:

> (1) No person shall be convicted of an offence in respect of an act or omission on his part while he was insane.

The insertion of the word "or" is of considerable importance. Because if the accused did not know that in killing his wife he was doing what was wrong he had no guilty intention and therefore was not guilty of murder, even though he might have appreciated the physical, not the moral, nature and quality of his act.

So really in layman's language it boils down to this, that the true meaning of the M'Naghten rule according to modern jurisprudence is to ensure that without proof of mens rea—that is, without proof that a man is capable of knowing, and in fact knows, that what he is doing is wrong—he shall not be convicted, whether he is sane or insane.

Mr. Justice Holmes has said that laws exist not for the scientific satisfaction of the legal mind but for the convenience of the lay people. One of the real problems—and surely this is spelled out very clearly in the report of the McRuer royal commission to which I have referred—is the problem of what we can provide by way of substitution for the test set out in the M'Naghten rules. Proposed in this bill is a new text—that a person is insane if the act or omission is the product of mental disease or defect. But what does that mean?

It is conceivable that such words could produce great difficulty, Mr. Speaker. Certainly this language "the product of mental disease or defect" is fraught with all kinds of difficulties. We could then have a most learned argument among psychiatrists. What the M'Naghten rules have assuredly done, both in English jurisprudence and Canadian jurisprudence, is to provide some standard of certainty. Lord Devlin suggested that there really is not much of a problem any more about the test of knowing the nature or quality of the act because obviously if a man does not know the nature or quality of the act he will be certifiable and he will never come up for trial. The real question is whether or not he also knows the act was wrong. Lord Devlin poses the rather important question of why we should seek to have one standard for a person of normal mind and another standard with respect to morality for a person who has something less than a normal mind. I quite appreciate the liberal sentiments and the humanitarianism of my hon. friend—

Mr. Brewin: It is just common sense.

Mr. Matheson: —in presenting this bill to the house, but why should a man of a somewhat diseased mind be free to do what he knows is wrong any more than any other person? If we are prepared to effect reform by way of penalty, if we are able in a particular case to allow psychiatric evidence and advice to come into the picture, whether it is a matter involving sexual assault or murder or other crimes that may be attributable in some way to mental abnormality, if we are able to consider these factors, in what way is the convicted person hurt?

Lord Devlin has indicated to us this proposition, that one of the important things from the standpoint of treatment is that the person who has control over the individual with the diseased mind will have some kind of certainty with respect to controlling treatment. I am sure there is not a member in the house interested in penology who is satisfied that we are doing what we should in our penitentiaries or jails with respect to psychiatric care. Quite frankly, we do not have enough people to do this important work.

Mr. Fisher: Why do you not spend a lot more money on it?

Mr. Matheson: I think we should. I hold the view that such treatment is of critical importance. At this time we are rapidly moving toward a figure of 10,000 people in our federal penitentiaries. It is obvious we are not providing nearly enough treatment services. I am addressing myself however to the argument placed before us by Lord Devlin with regard to a person who is convicted, for instance, of the crime of arson as suggested by the distinguished proponent of the bill, namely that if the individual is confined for a certain length of time it is possible for the psychiatrist to work with him and if the man makes notable progress the psychiatrist will be the first to make a recommendation through the proper channels that the man be allowed out on parole or ticket of leave or something of that kind which, while allowing the man his liberty, will at the same time ensure the continued treatment that is so necessary in this type of case.

Does it help simply to throw out this proven test, which is ultimately the old test of mens rea? When we boil down the rule in M'Naghten's case what we really find is that only a man who in fact knows that what he is doing is wrong shall be convicted, whether he be sane or insane. If the Criminal Code were to be changed in the manner suggested in the bill we could have a situation where a guilty minded person could walk out of a court room free. It is true there are other provisions now under the Criminal Code whereby the court could actually order that a man be placed under mental observation. I think this is the kind of thing we may be compelled to do in a good many cases where there is not actually a conviction but where a person comes clearly within the terms defined in Bill C-14.

What harm is there if such a person is actually convicted of the criminal offence charged when he comes before an intelligent court that is prepared to listen to psychiatric evidence and to be guided by it on the question of whether or not the man should go to a penitentiary or to jail or to a hospital, or should even be kept under psychiatric observation in his own home for some time? I am sure that the contribution made by the hon. member in bringing this bill to the attention of the house is worth while. I do not think it is fair to overemphasize the fact that there was a minority report by the royal commission. Chief Justice McRuer has a high reputation, as the hon. member himself said, among those who are interested in criminal jurisprudence.

Mr. Brewin: The minority report makes very good sense, if you read it.

Mr. Matheson: I have read the minority report and I have very high respect for Her Honour, Judge Kinnear. However, I would point out that the chief justice of the high court of Ontario, who has conducted many capital cases and has had a long and wide training in criminal law, obviously has benefited from much broader experience, much closer, I submit, to the experience of Lord Devlin, than can possibly have been had by such a distinguished and scholarly person as Her Honour Judge Helen Kinnear.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I want to make some very brief observations. I agree with what the hon. member who proposed the bill has said. His argument was reasoned, eloquent and very intelligent and I accept it in its entirety. I do want to point out to the house that I understand that last year a committee on criminal law reform was established in the United Kingdom and in its third or fourth report it dealt with this matter among other things. Although I do not have the material here, it is my recollection that as a result of the committee's report the principle of diminishing responsibility was introduced in the United Kingdom.

Finally, I want to put forward the proposition that if at the time the M'Naghten rules were laid down there had been medical people with the knowledge and learning that exists today in the field of psychiatry the M'Naghten rules would not have been laid down as they were then. We would have had rules far more humane, far more intelligent and far more in line with what we should have in this country today.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fisher: Carried.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for consideration of private members' business having expired the house will revert to the consideration of the business interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, before five o'clock I had been dealing with the problems faced by the farmers in my constituency over the past four years as well as the danger that is hanging over their heads at the moment as a result of the very unusual conditions occurring this winter. These conditions result from a combination of a heavy snowfall without a thaw, and also the fact that there has been very little frost in the ground. As any good Canadian, particularly from the northern part of Canada, will realize this is a very dangerous combination.

I was wondering, Mr. Chairman, if the minister had given any thought to this matter, if he has any plans to meet a situation of this kind or if this situation had come to his attention. The farmers of northern Ontario have always been in a very unfortunate situation. When anyone in Canada, or possibly any place else in the world, thinks about northern Ontario he generally thinks of gold mines, copper, zinc, asbestos, silver and so on. Few people realize the farming potential of this part of the country. I believe that as time goes on and as we see what is developing in southern Ontario where some of the choice farmland in Canada is being gobbled up by sprawling factories and so forth, we will come to realize very quickly that this great farm country of the north is capable of great things. I do not think there is any question about that at all.

The question I am raising tonight is this: When this country comes into its own, will the farmers who have struggled for so long to develop these farms still be there to benefit, or will they be forced by circumstances such as I have outlined here tonight to leave those farms? One farmer told me that the vegetable farmers of Ontario are in a very tough situation. At about the time the crops down in the Niagara peninsula come on the market, they meet competition from the tail end of the United States production. Then when the production from the Holland marshes come on the market, it meets competition from the tail end of the production in the Niagara peninsula. When the agricultural production of northern Ontario comes along, it meets competition from the tail end of the production from the Holland marshes. The result is that the vegetable farmers are faced with a depressed market all the way along the line. I believe this problem has been sadly neglected in the past. I believe more attention should be paid to it, and I would be interested in hearing from the minister whether or not he has any plans or if these farmers are really as forgotten as some of them seem to believe they are.

Mr. Peters: I had expected the minister would like to answer some of these questions that have been raised. However he may intend to do this later, because I think we are going to have some time during which he will be able to answer these questions. We have heard a great deal about how important this item in the estimates is. While I know that the amount of money is not large compared with the over-all cost of the department, it is an administrative item and therefore there is a great deal of interest in it beyond what would be warranted by the amount of money it covers.

I was interested this afternoon in the statement made by the minister as well as the one he made on March 26. In my opinion, these statements were long overdue. I have always been one of those who felt that the minister, if he were as good an auctioneer as people say, and keeping in mind the Hays farms in Ontario, might be one with whom it would be unwise to tangle. I am quite sure he has capabilities which have not been apparent to date. However as I say I was pleased to hear the statement he made today. I should like to congratulate both the minister and Mr. Phillips who, I believe, probably had something to do with writing his speech. I have met Mr. Phillips a number of times. He is a very smart gentleman from the Department of Agriculture who acted as public relations man for the agriculture committee. While I do not know his functions, I do know that he has many of the answers to the problems of agriculture. I think this is what we want in parliament—some answers.

The problems of agriculture are pretty well known to anyone who is interested in reading any of the farm publications. These problems have been faced by farmers for many years. It is true that many of these problems cannot be solved by the farmers themselves. They are going to have to be assisted through government agencies, through research and marketing schemes. I believe the role of the Department of Agriculture will be found in the field of redevelopment. I have been concerned by some of the statements that have been made in relation to ARDA. I believe it is true that ARDA was not born overnight. It was not a program developed to solve any particular problem at a specific time, but was a program for rural redevelopment and was aimed at solving some of the problems of agriculture over a long period of time.

I am surprised when I hear the minister say how much better it has been in the last few months than it has been for several years. I wonder how much better. I do not think it is good enough to say there have been so many loans advanced or so much money spent under the ARDA program. I feel we want to know the direction in which the program is heading. We should like to know how much progress has been made in this program for the redevelopment of agriculture. This is a long term program and the amount of money that is being spent is not of particular interest. What is of interest is what is being accomplished with whatever money is being spent. We know that agricultural matters will no doubt receive a great deal of attention during the latter part of this week at the dominion-provincial conference taking place in Quebec, because there is a similarity in the problem as between one province and another. Of course the similarity in that respect is not as marked in what is being done under ARDA.

We used to listen with rapt attention to the former minister of agriculture when he was telling us his dream that all the problems of agriculture would be solved by the ARDA program. But at one time we saw ARDA being used as one of the political planks in an election campaign, and it was something we were no happier about then than we are now, when we hear the present minister talking about endorsing more ARDA projects over the last few months than were endorsed in the preceding number of years.

This is not too important. What is important is the result of the projects being developed, in what field they are being developed, and how they fit in with the over-all picture. If ARDA is to solve the problems of the farmer we should know in what field ARDA development is taking place.

Many years ago in eastern Ontario a farmer could make a good living off 20 acres of arable land. He might have had a 160 acre farm, although many of the farms in the Ottawa valley were just 80 acres; but the farmers' living was made off 15 or 20 acres of cultivated land. Many of the farms had, and still have, up to 40 acres of substandard land which does not produce a reasonable crop.

It is interesting to know how much agriculture produces in earned income. Just the other day we were talking to a farmer who had a specialized crop and who estimated he was getting $5,000 an acre from his farm. In western Canada an acre produces about 17 bushels of wheat, which nets about $35 an acre. There are many farmers in eastern Canada who earn less than that per acre. In fact there are some who do not get more than several hundred dollars net income from their entire farms.

It was with this in mind that I personally endorsed the ARDA program and felt it had a role to play in the future of agriculture. This meant we would do some of the things which the former minister of agriculture advocated, although we disagreed with some of the things he said because they were too visionary. It may not have been possible to put one farmer in charge of a block of 20 or 30 farms and have him handle the reforestation, working for the government as a tree farmer and supplementing his income up until the time the trees were of harvestable size, although this is something that is being done by many municipalities in the United States which have small wood lots from which they raise enough money to pay the total taxes of the townships.

I believe we should receive a detailed report from the minister with regard to what is happening. I can tell him what is happening with one ARDA project in my area. It is a project I welcome, where the provincial government has taken in an area of about 640 acres, about half of which is cleared. It is very good land, and in my opinion will provide grazing for quite a large number of cattle. In fact it is safe to say its productivity will be equal, in grazing terms, to a plot five times that size in western Canada. But without waiting to see what development the ARDA people would do, some businessmen in the area have made application to run beef cattle on that land. They wish to rent it themselves and put up the money to raise cattle.

I am sure the government would not be willing to provide those businessmen with a feeding lot to fatten their cattle, but there are some businessmen under the impression that this is going to happen. If it did develop this way, then it would be a very poor method of helping to solve agricultural problems.

I have before me the figures which the minister gave in relation to the number of projects developed under ARDA, but it is important that he tell us what the intention of the government is in relation to ARDA as it affects rural development today. If the government intends to reforest many of the substandard agricultural lands I believe that is worthwhile, but it is not a project suitable to my area. Community pasture is something which will work in some areas but it is completely unsuitable in others. The need for pasture is being met on a commercial basis by companies set up for that purpose in many areas, and this is something which should be considered.

There has been a very bad approach to water conservation in many parts of the country, particularly in Ontario where there is such a great abundance of water but where nothing is being done to conserve it. The little clay belt in northern Ontario at one time had an abundance of water, but in Timiskaming over the last five or six years farmers have had to deepen their wells because the table level has been continuously dropping.

This is one area in which the federal government is responsible because it provides the moneys for the construction of reservoirs on small streams and rivers.

I next wish to deal with the problem of farm credit. Those of us who had anything to do with the Veterans Land Act were very pleased with the amount of credit given under V.L.A. for the benefit of veterans. Most of the veterans had a very happy record of repayment and, more important, the number of veterans who settled on the land and who could make a living off it was very sizeable. Everyone agreed when the old farm loan board gave way to credits arrangements made through the Farm Credit Corporation that this was a step in the right direction. There were weaknesses, of course, and one of the weaknesses was that seldom, if ever, was the land given a proper valuation where it was to be used solely for the purposes of agriculture.

[Mr. Peters.]

It is easy to value land at reasonable rates in the Toronto area where the industrial community is vying with the agricultural purchaser for land. Land values become substantially increased and probably bear a fair relationship to the agricultural potential of that land. In many cases the agricultural potential is far below the actual value of the land. But in other areas, in my own area in particular, the cost of clearing the land is greater than the value which the department allows for a loan in respect of that land. I am not talking about land cleared a hundred years ago. This is land which was cleared within my own lifetime. I believe it is not too difficult to ascertain its true value because one has at least to take into account the total cost of clearing the land and the work done on it. It seems to me that the value placed on such land is often far too low.

There is another problem to which I should like to direct attention. How can young people be encouraged to become farmers? Unless their fathers are willing to mortgage the home farm it is impossible today for young lads to go out and buy enough land to set themselves up as farmers. I know of no young farmer who was able, on his own, to buy a farm which was an economic unit. Yet is this not exactly what we have to make possible in order to get young people on the farms? I say this in the light of the fact that the average age of our farmers today is well over 50. It seems to me this is one of the fields in which the Minister of Agriculture should engage his efforts, and that he should give the committee the benefit of any studies he has conducted with regard to this problem. It may be that the federal government will have to make available to more young farmers the type of education which is given at the Ontario Agricultural College, Kemptville, and some of the other junior colleges. This would make it possible for a department to evaluate the knowledge of students attending the courses who are likely to need to borrow comparatively large sums of money to purchase the agricultural land they will require.

The minister knows that many people who have been farming for a long time are only now able to pay off mortgages they raised many years ago. So agriculture is not in the happy state in which some other industries find themselves. The future does not look good and this is because we have not yet given to agriculture the over-all consideration it deserves. The other day the minister read out a list of acts affecting agriculture. He said the administration of these acts formed part of his responsibilities and that the taking away of one or two of these measures did not make a very big difference. I disagree. I think the minister must be well aware that the establishment of these various agencies within his administration has only been an excuse for not developing an over-all policy which would concern itself with agriculture in general. On many occasions farm organizations come to Ottawa and ask for a handout, or perhaps I should say for specific pieces of legislation to help in a particular field. Even the stabilization act, from which farmers derive so much benefit, concerns itself with a specific field. Its benefits are felt in specific areas and it is difficult to relate them to any over-all agricultural policy. I think the time has arrived when we should make up our minds what we intend to do about agriculture, what the potential is, how it relates to the industrial potential of this country and what its future is likely to be.

Earlier this afternoon the minister mentioned that when he was in Argentina the people there told him that Canada was known for three things—pulp, that is, paper; dairy cattle and wheat. I was asked the other day if I would be willing to help in the purchase of a large number of cattle for the export market. I do not consider that I am qualified to do this job. I was asked because I do have some knowledge of the dairy field and I suppose if it were a question of buying black and white cows I could have been of some assistance.

An hon. Member: From Kirkland Lake?

Mr. Peters: No, we do not buy cows from Kirkland Lake, but in New Liskeard we export cattle all over the area, even to Rouyn and the ridings of other hon. members from Quebec who are here this evening. We are always happy to export them there, because the provincial government grants a subsidy on purebred cattle which are exported and this means we get a much better price, particularly in Abitibi and Timiskaming, for cattle exported to Quebec than to many other areas. However, a problem has arisen with regard to the export of cattle. Everyone is aware that when we ship wheat from Canada the Canadian government guarantees the grade and condition of that commodity. Yet this does not apply in the case of cattle exports.

A year ago we allowed the shipment of a large number of cattle to Cuba which gave the industry in Canada a very bad name. As I understand it, when he hired a buyer to buy cattle, Castro specified a maximum price to be paid. This meant that the buyer was not necessarily buying the best cattle available; he was buying in a limited market. I think the result did a great deal to hurt the market we had established in central and south America where our standard, for a number of years, has been very good. We are selling now, to countries like British Guiana, and the government of that country is interested in supporting the registry which has been established in Canada. I think this is a field in which the government should be taking a much more active interest in order that the best possible commodity may be supplied from Canada, leading in turn to the establishment of a better reputation and of a higher volume of sales abroad. I think the government should supervise these operations and give assistance to private enterprise in this field.

The minister will be happy to know that when I had been consulted in this connection I had expressed the opinion that the Hays farms were able to give the best service. The Hays farms is the one place to go because they have the facilities to look after a large quantity of stock. While this is a private enterprise I think it is impossible to guarantee classification and a grade that will be maintained. This must be done in a way which will maintain the standard. I think this is more important at the present time than the money that is being paid for those commodities.

The minister of course is aware that in agriculture there are many other fields which need some assistance now. One of those fields is going to involve the assistance that he has from the branches with which he is now connected, but it is also going to need the assistance of other departments, one of which is the Department of Trade and Commerce. I refer of course to sugar beets. If you ask the housewife in Canada today what is the greatest problem in this country, she will tell you it is the price of sugar. If you travel over every part of Canada this is probably the problem that she will say rates highest on the list of Canadian problems—that is, the price of sugar. If this is so, why do we not decide to grow sugar beets, and why does not the government decide right now that they will guarantee and underwrite the price of sugar and will govern the import of cane sugar, so we can provide a restrictive market for sugar in this country and the means of supplying a large section of the sugar industry with home produced sugar beets. As everyone knows, the sugar beet industry can be expanded rapidly in Canada. We could plan this spring to provide, probably, enough sugar beets to supply the needs of Canada without a great deal of effort. But to do this we would have to guarantee the producers of the sugar beets a reasonable return for their money. Many farmers who produced tobacco last year would find it advantageous to go out of tobacco this year, and they would find their land to be quite capable of producing an immense tonnage of sugar beets.

This does not apply only to my area. In the province of Manitoba there are areas which are producing almost half the requirements of that province. I can remember as a young lad that in northern Ontario we were producing mangolds and sugar beets, and it seemed there were miles and miles of rows that had to be hoed by hand. These were large sugar beets, as I remember, and I am sure that most parts of Ontario and Quebec are suitable for the production of this commodity. It is a very simple matter. This is not something for which you have to plan, like beef cattle, where it takes three or four years to get into the field and costs a very large amount of money. All you would have to do in this connection is be assured of a market. Every farmer could plant sugar beet seed and be in production almost overnight. I am also informed that the facilities necessary to convert this commodity for the raw sugar industry do not constitute an expensive proposition. What does the minister say about it? So far he has been silent. Here he has an opportunity to do something in this connection with a very simple subsidy and a guaranteed floor price for sugar beets. He can provide a set price for sugar for every housewife in Canada. He would be the darling of every Canadian housewife and every Canadian mother. When the housewife went to the store, she would find that sugar was the same price this month as it was last month, and it would be the same price in the months to come. The minister can provide this guaranteed price for sugar with the very simple expedient of determining now a policy in this connection. I think this is all the country asks in agriculture namely that we provide leadership.

I was approached not long ago by the cheese producers.

An hon. Member: How wonderful.

Mr. Peters: Well, Mr. Chairman, there is a backbencher over there who does not say much when standing up, but sometimes makes an odd comment—and they are always odd. I had a very interesting talk with the officials of the Ontario cheese producers association. I am not going to outline the mechanics of the plan they proposed, but they are of the opinion that a 1 cent subsidy this year will solve many of the problems in both the domestic and export cheese markets. Hon. members may be aware that the Ontario cheese producers were able to sell last year almost 10 million pounds more cheese than they did the year before; and they were able to absorb this through their marketing agency. They expect this to be increased this year, if they are lucky and other aspects of the dairy industry remain the same. If this is the case, they will have an increase in their sales volume.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, would you mind a member from an area that is highly dependant upon fish and fisheries products making a comment or two about agricultural matters? While the city of Prince Rupert is perhaps considered to be the salmon and halibut capital of the world, it is also vitally interested in grain and in the shipment of grain for export, because we have there one of the terminal elevators of the Canadian government. I should like to make a comment or two about this matter and hope that before this item passes the minister will indicate to the committee what the government intends to do and will give us information which is a little more expansive than he has given to the house so far with regard to this grain elevator. I have asked the minister on a number of occasions about this. I have asked questions on the orders of the day about it, and the answer I get on each occasion is that the matter is under consideration. This has been going on for some weeks now—in fact, ever since the house reconvened. We would like to know at least whether the minister is getting near the end of his period of consideration and whether he is in a position to make some announcement on this question.

This is a question not only of vital importance to the economy and the people of Prince Rupert but to Canadian National Railways, who would ship the grain by boxcar into Rupert and to the farmers on the prairies who produce and store that grain, particularly barley, for which the Prince Rupert elevator has been used for some time. I will not go into the economic reasons, the statistical analysis and other arguments for the increase of the capacity of the grain elevator in Prince Rupert, which incidentally have been presented to the minister on a number of occasions, and latterly in a very well documented and prepared brief by the Prince Rupert chamber of commerce of last November, of which I have additional copies which I hope to distribute to the members of the agricultural committee when and if it ever gets mobile.

I wonder whether, to give what I think is an interpretation which is favourable with regard to the consideration the minister is giving to this matter, I could quote briefly from some correspondence dating back to January of last year. I wish to quote just a sentence or two. One of the letters is dated January 15, 1963 from Hon. Alvin Hamilton, the then minister of agriculture, and is addressed to Mr. Edward T. Applewhaite, who was then the secretary of the Prince Rupert chamber of commerce. I might say that Mr. Applewhaite was a former member of this house and occupied the esteemed position that you hold, Mr. Chairman. He was well respected by everyone in the house on that occasion, and I have the privilege of succeeding him in office. In this letter to Mr. Applewhaite of January a year ago Mr. Hamilton winds up by saying this:

The conclusion we came to after very careful consideration is that we cannot at this time recommend an increase in the capacity of the Prince Rupert elevator. I have requested the board to keep the matter under constant review, bearing in mind the current pattern of grain movement.

I think he would be referring there to the board of grain commissioners who had authorized a study of and an inquiry into this question, and incidentally they reported and recommended favourably on an increase in the facilities at Prince Rupert.

Then on May 23, 1963 there was a further exchange of correspondence between the Prince Rupert chamber of commerce and the minister. On that day the present minister wrote a letter—at least, I have a photocopy of a letter which bears a rubber stamp indicating it had originally been signed by H. W. Hays—the last sentence of which is as follows:

However, the situation is that the government is planning no present extension of its elevator facilities on the Pacific coast.

It will be recalled that this was at the time, or just prior to the time, of the last immense sale of grain.

In the fall of last year when that announcement was made the premier of British Columbia, Hon. W. A. C. Bennett, sent a telegram to the Minister of Trade and Commerce congratulating him and the government on arranging the largest ever sale of Canadian grain. The premier's telegram is in part, as follows:

The shipments will tax the handling capacity of Canadian ports and I would ask you to give special consideration to the port of Prince Rupert. If there is any way our government can be of assistance to you in this matter please call on us.

So in September of last year there was an offer of assistance from the premier and the government of the province of British Columbia.

The reply to that telegram of the Minister of Trade and Commerce on September 27 was, in part, as follows:

You may rest assured that the port of Prince Rupert will be used to its utmost capacity right up to the end of next July.

So there is an indication of a more favourable attitude toward the use of the grain elevator at Prince Rupert as at September of last year.

Then His Worship Mayor Lester of the city of Prince Rupert sent a telegram to the Minister of Agriculture about this matter on October 3 last. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, in replying to that telegram—and this is a most significant statement and far more important than any of the others which had been made prior to it—said this:

The Prince Rupert elevator is one of the most efficiently operated in all Canada—which is what everyone who has any knowledge of its operations has always said—

—and I can assure you that fuller use will be made of its facilities.

You will have noticed earlier, Mr. Chairman, that in writing to the premier of British Columbia in September of last year the Minister of Trade and Commerce had said that "the port of Prince Rupert will be used to its utmost capacity". Then later on in October of last year, in writing to the mayor of the city of Prince Rupert, he said "and I can assure you that fuller use will be made of its facilities". All of that indicates that there is a growing need to increase the capacity of the grain elevator in Prince Rupert.

I also have before me, Mr. Chairman, a memorandum to the board of grain commissioners which recommends favourably in this regard. I should like to quote part of this memorandum.

It is our considered opinion that even with additional storage capacity of one million bushels, the maximum volume of grain which could efficiently be handled through the Prince Rupert terminal annually would amount to no more than 12 million bushels. This amount was, in fact, handled at Prince Rupert in the year 1952-53, but it must be stated that it was not an efficient operation because of the limited capacity of the elevator. For most of the years since the elevator was reopened in 1951, we have handled approximately 10 million bushels through the terminal each year and in each of these years the operation could not be considered efficient for the same reason mentioned above.

To support our contention that an additional one million bushels storage space is required at Prince Rupert to have an efficient operation with the same annual volume as is presently being handled, we wish to make the following observations which we feel would justify the necessary expenditure for the additional storage.

I do not want to read the memorandum in its entirety, because it is a document of three pages, but facts and statistics are given in detail as to why the grain elevator in Prince Rupert should be expanded. The memorandum, which incidentally is dated April 12, 1962, almost two years ago now, concludes in the last two paragraphs as follows:

Certain other advantages would accrue from the additional storage, such as much easier planning for the Canadian wheat board and the ability to handle more than one grain.

The present workhouse is capable of handling a volume of 12 million bushels annually. We feel that the additional one million bushels storage space, which we feel is necessary, would be justified by the savings in overtime and casual payrolls which can be effected over a period of years.

This memorandum was respectfully submitted by Mr. A. H. Wilson, general manager of the Canadian government elevators.

Without going further into all the reasons and arguments, apart from the necessity, for increasing the facilities in Prince Rupert I would merely ask the minister once more whether he has come to any conclusion about this particular grain elevator and the need for expansion. There is no real argument against the expansion of the facilities there. Surely if we are going to proceed year after year working that elevator—and it is one that we own—almost to its full capacity, which is in the neighbourhood of 10 or 11 million bushels, in an inefficient way when the expenditure of perhaps $1,250,000 or $1,500,000 at the outside, from what I have been told, would make its operation more efficient, then surely we should go ahead with that expenditure. I cannot say anything else, except to ask the minister please to finish his considerations and tell us what he is going to do. I ask him to be efficient in his own considerations and to expand the most efficient grain elevator in all Canada, namely the elevator at Prince Rupert, and make it even doubly efficient. How about it?

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Howard: No; we have at least one unanswered question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the terminal elevator at Prince Rupert, this elevator is designed to carry 1,250,000 bushels and it handles a turnover of 850,000 bushels. This year it was to be used for No. 5 wheat, but we had a very small amount of No. 5 wheat owing to climatic conditions. The grades were much higher than anyone anticipated, I think. I am quite sympathetic to what the hon. member has said, and I am sorry that I cannot say tonight some of the things I should like to say. But I can say this, that all of the storage facilities which are controlled by the Canadian government in one way or another have been carefully discussed, and I hope in the not too distant future that we will be able to present something to the hon. member which will be satisfactory in so far as the Prince Rupert terminal is concerned.

Mr. Rapp: How about the Tisdale terminal?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I certainly appreciate the minister's answer although I am sorry it was not more definite, because this matter has been on the fire for some years now. In fact, two years ago the previous government ordered an inquiry to be made into the matter and that inquiry reported favourably. It is true that the government of that day did not do anything, but this was typical of them and I was hoping we would have a different approach and that the present government would move with speed and alacrity, if for no other reason than by way of contrast to the lack of action which existed before.

I should like to make these comments with respect to what the minister has said. It is true that the elevator's capacity is reputed to be 1,250,000 bushels. However, it is well known that for one reason or another the rated capacity is very seldom reached because the elevator just does not handle that amount of grain. Taking into account the cleaning process, the different grades handled, the fact that some of the bins may not be full and things of that sort, I think that the proper figure for its working capacity is in the neighbourhood, as the minister said I believe, of 850,000 bushels. I gather this is what the board of grain commissioners says is the figure, although the people in Prince Rupert put the figure closer to 900,000. I have also heard the figure of 800,000 used for the working capacity of the elevator; but the fact is that the figure we should look at for the working capacity is between 800,000 and 900,000 bushels. This is the basis on which the elevator operates—not what it will hold if every bin is filled right to the top, a situation that I would say would never develop.

I think I should also point out that with a working capacity of 800,000 to 900,000 bushels the elevator is never in a position of having sufficient storage space to load two ships at the same time. After the elevator has loaded one ship the next ship has to wait until the storage capacity is filled up again and the grain goes through the cleaning process and so on.

I have a letter here from the Minister of Trade and Commerce pointing up the matter of the size of the ships, which is an additional factor in considering the expansion of the facilities there. On October 31 last the Minister of Trade and Commerce wrote me in reply to a letter of mine complaining about the small amount of grain moving through the port. Apart from other information in the letter he had this to say:

In early October a vessel left Prince Rupert with an all-time, record-high volume of grain, viz. 786,000 bushels of No. 5 wheat, destined for China. On October 23, the vessel Amstelstad was loading over half a million bushels of No. 5 wheat at Prince Rupert, also destined for China.

We have an elevator here with a working capacity of 800,000 to 900,000 bushels and if one ship comes along, as happened, and takes 786,000 bushels of grain there is not very much left for another ship that might be in port or might be coming into the port. The result is that this second ship has to wait until sufficient grain has been moved into the port by the C.N.R., and the grain has been cleaned and so on. I merely point this out for the benefit of those who may not be familiar with the situation. While the rated capacity of the elevator is a million and a quarter bushels, as the minister says, that is not the figure we should concern ourselves with but rather the operating capacity which is such that one ship can take a sufficient amount out of the elevator to leave the elevator in the position of not being able to be used to load grain after the ship has left.

As I say, we appreciate the statement of the minister and I intend to communicate immediately with the people in Prince Rupert. Every day that I and the minister are here on orders of the day I intend to ask him further questions with respect to whether he has finished his consideration of this matter.

The Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, while the minister is in such a genial mood and before we leave this item perhaps he could answer the questions I raised about the farmers of the Timmins area, the problem they are faced with and whether the government is better prepared to meet the situation than was the case four years ago.

Mr. Hays: I think the hon. member asked two questions. One had to do with the climatic conditions existing this year with 12-foot snow drifts. The government co-operates of course with the governments of the provinces if help is needed in such areas. If flood conditions arise or other disasters take place and the province declares that they cannot cope with the problem then the federal government comes into the picture and helps. This has been done in Nova Scotia and Alberta I think we also helped the government of British Columbia this year in moving feed into such areas.

In connection with the vegetables that the hon. member mentioned, may I say that we do have a seasonal duty. I do not recall just how much it is. Sometimes it is in effect for seven or eight weeks and applies to peaches, for instance, or any of these seasonal crops. I would be glad to get this information for the hon. member so he will be familiar with the situation and I would be interested in knowing what crops are involved in the problem. Certainly we would be glad to take a look at the matter.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, with relation to the crop problem I wonder whether it has come to the minister's attention that in Ontario difficulty has developed in small areas and the problem has been solved in many ways over a period of time. I should like to draw on only one example. The hon. member for Timmins has the same problem but it is fairly specific. In my constituency we had limited area damage by hail last fall, but the damage in that limited area involving about two townships was almost complete, so far as feed grain is concerned to meet the farmers' requirements for the year.

The situation is such that crop insurance as we know it federally, or as it has been developed provincially and municipally, is of no value to the farmers in my area because of the fact that they are engaged in mixed farming. If they had a guaranteed revenue from their feed grain this would only represent one tenth of their cash crop and, in fact, the feed grain is used in the production of their cash crop generally. However, the damage was sufficient to eliminate all their income because they had to go out and purchase feed grain. The result is that they are now in the position where it will be almost impossible for them to get seed grain this spring. They feel, and I think justifiably so, that they should be able to look to the provincial or federal governments for assistance in the purchase of certified seed grain to meet their requirements and that this should not be done as it has been in many years with relation to other seed grain programs of an emergency nature, whereby repayment was taken care of by making it a charge on the land itself.

A petition has been forwarded to the provincial department of agriculture from my area in this regard and I am sure that the minister will be asked for some assistance. It should be borne in mind that this only highlights the problem that we have had with crop insurance and the ability of the farmers in many areas of Canada to take advantage of crop insurance. In this particular case the major part of the income of the farmers is derived either from beef or dairy products, and crop insurance would have very little effect because the farmer would have to insure grass, hay and feed grains.

The possibilities of insurance against hail damage were very small. The fact that such damage does not occur too often in some localities has meant that it has been a very expensive proposition for the farmer to carry hail insurance.

I believe that the problem raised by the hon. member for Timmins calls into question the whole crop insurance program. I am not asking the minister for an answer tonight, but I would suggest that the crop insurance program instituted by the former government has been in effect long enough for us to see that there are many weaknesses in the program. The majority of farmers can take no advantage of it whatever. I hope the minister will keep this fact in mind because it is one of the major problems of farmers, in so far as crop damage is concerned.

Item agreed to.

25e. Institutes, stations, farms, laboratories and services—operation and maintenance—to extend the purposes of vote 25 of the main estimates for 1963-64 to include a grant of $3,635 to assist in publishing a scientific treatise, $1.

Mr. Thomas: May we have an explanation of this vote? It is stated that the grant amounts to $3,635, and yet there is only one dollar listed in the estimates.

Mr. McIlraith: The significance of the one dollar item is that the vote authorizing the publication contains enough money, and this was in the main estimates, but the wording of the item is not wide enough to permit the grant to be used for this publication.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether it is his intention to increase subsidies granted for research work carried out at the experimental farm of L'Assomption concerning tobacco of different varieties, as well as fruits and vegetables?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: We do a great deal of research at both Harrow and Delhi in so far as tobacco is concerned. We do a great deal of research at Summerland, British Columbia and also in Vineland in so far as food is concerned. I believe that in the estimates this year we have pretty well covered this area but I would be glad to take the hon. member's question into consideration and see whether these stations are receiving ample amounts in so far as tobacco research is concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say one more word. I am in favour of continuing research at Delhi and Harrow, but we must not forget that the temperature and the soil are quite different from what they are in the province of Quebec, and it is imperative for certain varieties of tobacco, such as cigar tobacco, that experimental research be carried out at L'Assomption, and not in another province.

Item agreed to.

30e. Institutes, stations, farms, laboratories and services—construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $220,000.

Mr. Thomas: Could we have an explanation of where these buildings are being placed? Is it one building or several?

Mr. Hays: You mean an explanation of item 30e?

Mr. Thomas: Right.

Mr. Hays: The main estimates amount to $3,525,000 and the supplementary estimate is for $220,000. This money is required for expenditures in connection with a steam converter, Fredericton, New Brunswick, $11,000; acquisition of land at St. Jean, Quebec, $62,000; acquisition of land at Lennoxville, Quebec, $125,000; construction of a research laboratory and administration building in Swift Current, $169,000; installation of a water main at Lethbridge, Alberta, $46,000. We lost our dairy barn by fire last fall and part of the amount contained in this item was used to rebuild it.

Item agreed to.

50e. Dairy products division—grants and other assistance in accordance with cheese and cheese factory improvement act, $97,500.

Mr. Ricard: According to what the minister was saying this afternoon, his new policy with regard to cheese has been a whale of a success. I should like to ask him now how many new factories were built as a result of this new approach to this dairy product?

Mr. Hays: These cheese factories are privately owned and controlled, but the government did participate in storage facilities for cheese. We did have a large increase in the production of cheese which I think was the result of our dairy policy introduced in May, 1963. As the hon. member for Timiskaming mentioned, we did have a market. The cheese board was successful in selling a great deal more cheese in Great Britain. I think the cheese business is in a very healthy state. These people who have been manufacturing cheese are quite capable of looking after their business, and they make a good product.

Mr. Ricard: I have no quarrel with the minister's statement that our cheese is a very good product. We know that, and we have known that for a long time. However, I should like him to tell me how many new cheese factories have been built as a result of this changed dairy policy?

Mr. Hays: I could not tell the hon. member about the expansion of the factories, but I would be glad to look into it and give him this information later.

Mr. Ricard: I would say there were none.

Mr. Peters: I should like to continue the few remarks I was making about cheese earlier this evening. I did not complete my remarks on the first item because I knew this item would be coming up. I find, from speaking to the cheese producers, that they have been very diligent in obtaining markets. They have been able to develop an excellent market in Great Britain. This is one fact hon. members should remember because this is one agricultural commodity that has been sold at good prices in Great Britain. Last year there was a premium of 17 cents a pound on Canadian cheese sold in Great Britain and there was almost an assured market for that commodity.

I think the Ontario cheese producers should be complimented on the way they have run their agency. Hon. members may be aware of the fact this agency held large quantities of cheese last year to maintain the price and maintain a market. The market in Britain cannot be expanded rapidly, although by very good management the board was able to obtain a market for an extra 10 million pounds of cheese in Great Britain last year. Production had increased by more than that amount, so there was some cheese held in storage. They held it themselves in order to maintain the market. The producers believe that the subsidy on butter made a difference in the price of cheese.

The cheese producers have asked the government to increase the subsidy on the export of premium cheese by 1 cent a pound. They expect this year that they will have to increase their share of the market in Great Britain by 7 million pounds, and they believe production of cheese this year will be 10 million pounds over that of last year, and 20 million pounds over that of two years ago.

The cheese producers work out long term sale contracts with their buyers, with delivery guaranteed at a specified date, something in the way that the wheat board has been able to sell grain on a guaranteed forward price, but they have only been able to do this because they have been able to guarantee that an additional quantity of cheese will not be put on the British market, which would lower the price agreed upon with those buyers who have made advance orders. They are to be commended on doing this, and the minister should be very interested in cooperating with them.

The British market is the type of market upon which our cheese producers should concentrate. It is one that is very stable and warrants the expectation of more exports from Canada. We should look at this amount of $97,000, not in terms of the subsidy we are paying, but in terms of the terrific surplus we had a few years ago and the problem of disposing of surplus dairy products in other ways.

The government is to be commended on the fact that we have been able to increase the amount of the product that can be sold and at the same time not interfere with other dairy commodities. I was always very surprised to find that when the government said it had solved the problem of skimmed milk this was doing nothing to solve the butter problem, and when it was solving the butter problem it was at the same time creating a terrific problem for the cheese industry.

Unless I am very badly misinformed this is a field in which the government has done a good job in assisting the cheese producers. I am pleased the minister has told us we are getting rid of large surpluses we had in the butter field, particularly of butter oil, but I would like him to tell us whether the cheese producers have contacted him about their problem and requested a 1 cent subsidy increase for premium cheese on the export market.

Mr. Hays: In reply to the hon. member's query, as a matter of fact we were paying a premium of 4 cents, and after May 1 we reduced it to 3 cents. We feel that 3 cents is ample, and the cheese board has been able to send quite a bit more cheese to Great Britain. However we feel that an increase of something like 2 million to 4 million pounds of cheese a year is all that can be expected or else the British market may be flooded.

Our cheese is a raw milk cheese. It is produced at the time when the cows are out on grass, and the minute they return to the barn this is the end of the production of cheese that is acceptable for export to Great Britain. We feel that probably the producers of milk for conversion to cheese should take into account this geographical factor, that when the cows are out on grass they produce this cheese which is acceptable for export, and I think the producers are realizing this much more each year.

I do not know how many times I have met with the cheese people, the soft cheese people and the people interested in manufactured milk, and I think we are on top of the problem. At present we have about 50 million pounds of cheese in storage, but we do not want to overproduce because it is much more difficult to store than butter.

We were pleased to level off the consumption of butter and put more milk into the production of cheese. Coupled with this, the world price of powdered milk has increased. All in all, I think the dairy farmers are pretty happy about the way the dairy problems have been resolved, and they have resolved many of them themselves. It has not been entirely due to the government. The dairy farmers have been doing a great deal themselves and we appreciate this.

Mr. Peters: It is this 1 cent in which we are interested. I am quite sure Hector Arnold, the president of the cheese board, has been to see the minister on a number of occasions, and it is this differential between the 4 cents previously paid and the 3 cents now paid that they are interested in. Exports this year will be another 7 million pounds on top of the increase made last year, and the producers believe the additional 1 cent subsidy would allow the board to handle the storage of more cheese without cost to the farmers themselves.

The minister was correct in mentioning that there has been an easing of the problems of the dairy industry and that this has not been entirely due to the government, but I would urge him not to be too confident as there can be an explosion at any moment in the dairy industry because of the new developments taking place in sterile milk products and other aspects of the dairy industry, including the vegetable oil aspect.

In my humble opinion the minister should be prepared to give assistance to the various commodity groups in the dairy industry because before long, whether it is through the system of premiums for grade milk or not, there will have to be an equalization of the price paid to the producer for basic milk as a commodity. I suggest that the minister be sympathetic to the cheese producers, because if cheese production increases greatly there will be an explosion in the problem of storage.

I think it should be clear that the reason why Canadians lost their market in Britain was because the Canadian government was willing to buy that surplus and dump it on British markets to the embarrassment of marketing boards in that country. I think the minister should give more consideration to this board than to some of the other agencies because this board was spending its own money, the money of its own producers, to develop this market, and we should do all we can to see that its activities are maintained and expanded.

Mr. McBain: I think this is the proper item under which to bring up the question I have in mind. I feel the minister himself will be interested in this. I know that years ago he was a producer of Holstein cattle and I must say that some of the top production cows of Canada came from that herd. The other day a handbook came to my desk called "Farming in Canada". It contained 32 pictures and I am wondering what image would be given of agriculture in Canada if these pictures are published abroad. The first has to do with Holstein cows and the words below the picture read: "The Holstein will give eight quarts of milk a day". Well, we know that a quart of milk is two and a half pounds and if a cow milks 300 days a year this amounts to 6,000 pounds. If my memory serves me correctly our annual yield per cow is something like 9,500 pounds. I am wondering whether this booklet was produced under the authority of the Department of Agriculture and whether the minister has had a chance to scrutinize it, in which case I think it should be withdrawn.

In the same publication is a picture showing beef cattle in Ontario. Underneath, is the caption "Aberdeen Angus". These cattle have long horns on them.

An hon. Member: Texas Aberdeens.

Mr. McBain: I hear someone saying "Texas Aberdeens". Well, we know that for years Aberdeen Angus in Canada have been polled. I would say they are definitely shorthorn cattle.

Another picture shows a sow and piglets in Alberta. Well, we did produce one of the outstanding breeds. We had the Lacombe hog a number of years ago. This picture shows a sow with eight piglets. Unfortunately, she only has three faucets on one side of her feeding station; I hope she has three on the other side. No wonder these piglets look thin and undernourished. One is definitely a runt. The sow is not a big hog. I hope the minister will scrutinize these pictures and withdraw them because they will give a poor image of Canadian agriculture abroad.

Mr. Vincent: I have a short question to ask with relation to the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvement Act. Is the minister in a position to tell the committee if there have been any requests rejected by the government under this act during the fiscal year 1963-64? I have in mind requests for the homologation of factories. Were any requests rejected by the government?

Mr. Hays: I do not know, but I would be pleased to look into this matter and let the hon. member know.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Having just returned to this chamber from my office I do not know for sure whether this subject has been discussed or not, but I think it is important that it should be brought up before we pass along to another item. In connection with grants and other assistance under the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvement Act we have found in the past in our part of the country that these small cheese factories play a most important function in our agricultural economy. Many of these factories were founded not to make large profits to divide among shareholders at the year's end, but to supply a means whereby farmers could have a market for their milk. A number of them barely managed to keep going from one year to another, and I am afraid that is still the situation. Amalgamation has been a great thing. We have found it good in our part of the country. But in many areas amalgamations have run their course and if this government really wishes to help farmers in the cheese producing districts it should turn its attention toward helping to provide the funds needed by these small factories for capital investment.

I beg the minister to pay close attention to the following resolution which was passed recently by the Ontario cheese producers association at a meeting here in Ottawa:

> Whereas it is desirable to encourage the diversion of milk to the manufacture of raw milk cheddar cheese
> And whereas many of the cheese factories are filled to capacity during the flush season
> And whereas it is almost impossible for factories to purchase another plant to form an amalgamation
> And whereas the cost of amalgamations are almost prohibitive except with large companies
> And whereas the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvement Act was enacted over 20 years ago
> And whereas some of the smaller and medium size plants will require additional plant and equipment facilities to handle the proposed diversion of milk
> Therefore be it resolved that the federal government review the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvement Act and allow subsidization to cheese factories without amalgamation where the need for additional facilities can be proven.

I would underline the importance of action in this regard and suggest to the minister that if he wishes to do something for the cheese industry he should lend his energies along these lines. The country co-operative cheese factories of the type I have mentioned have very little money behind them. If a boiler is condemned by inspectors on the ground that it is unsafe, a real hardship is created because the cost of a new boiler to these small factories is almost prohibitive. In some cases they have been obliged to quit business altogether in situations such as this and I recommend, therefore, that subsidies be allowed to factories of this type with respect to capital investment, excluding trucks.

I do not recommend that any subsidy be given for trucks on the road, but for such things as vats, pumps, pasteurizers, curing room equipment, boilers and the stainless steel, high priced equipment that it is necessary for these cheese factories to buy, in order to compete in the modern methods of production. I think that now is the time, because of the great importance of our raw Canadian cheddar cheese, which is in such great demand in Great Britain and other parts of the world. Here is the chance to help a great industry, a basic industry, a primary industry and an industry, incidentally, that is celebrating its 100th anniversary in the coming year, an industry that throughout a century has helped make Canada great.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether any progress has been made in negotiations with the United States with regard to increasing their import quota of specialized cheeses from Canada.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, we have a quota with the United States of 500,000 pounds. I believe that last year we imported something like one million pounds of soft cheeses. I am personally quite hopeful that we will be able to resolve some part of this problem. Certainly over the last few years we have lost a great deal of the United States market in agricultural foods. In 1963 we exported something like $214 million worth; in turn we imported something like $514 million worth. I think we have a very strong case in this regard. They have surplus problems in the United States. I have discussed this matter with the secretary of agriculture and I think if the hon. member will leave this to us—and the U.S. election is not too far off—we are hopeful of getting something done.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question. Because of the proposed action of the governments of Australia and New Zealand to raise their prices to Britain with respect to cheese products, for the first time in four years, and also because of the results of the milk shortage in Britain last year, which resulted in a decline of some 30 per cent in the production of butter and 7 per cent in the production of cheese, would the minister consider offering every incentive to the producers of cheese in order to obtain more of this lucrative business in Britain this year? Last year they were helped to overcome this shortage by the giant surpluses of cheese that they had in stock. I would ask the minister if he would give this matter every consideration.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, is the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvement Act, and the grants and subventions under it, one of those things that was subjected to the austerity freeze following the 1962 election?

Mr. Hays: I think this is so, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Howard: I take it the freeze has been completely thawed out in this item.

Mr. Byrne: We are selling soft cheese now.

Mr. Hays: I think we indicated today that with regard to the three combined grants, warehouses, cheese and cold storage, we had approved 13. I think there are six applications that are being looked at now.

Mr. Howard: Are those applications under the Cold Storage Act, or the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvement Act?

Mr. Hays: I am not sure of the separation of these; but this combines all three.

Mr. Howard: What I wanted to know primarily was this. We have complained about this situation time and time again, and the Minister of Transport used to do the same thing when he was in opposition. I refer to the operation of the Cold Storage Act and the fact that because it is primarily in the hands of the Department of Agriculture, and because the great bulk of grants and subventions under the Cold Storage Act are for agricultural products, fisheries products applications and cold storage warehouses for fisheries products generally have gotten short shrift from the Department of Agriculture. All I am trying to do is see if we cannot bring some spring thaw to bear on the freeze that applies under the Cold Storage Act.

The other day the minister said there was a partial lifting of this austerity program. He did not go any further than that. I wonder if he could tell us just how his department is operating in connection with the Cold Storage Act. Is the minister agreeing to applications? Has he partially lifted the freeze? What is the criteria; what is the reason? How does one application qualify, when another does not? It would be very helpful to us if we could obtain this information.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I may say to the hon. member that the Minister of Transport is doing his very best to thaw us out every day.

Mr. Howard: The Minister of Transport is dealing with a variety of other things. If he spends too much time applying heat to you, then other things in his department are liable to go a little awry; and we have some problems for him also. How about acting on your own initiative, and never mind the prodding of the Minister of Transport?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is going to be flowing shortly.

Mr. Howard: The minister says it is going to be flowing shortly. One could easily expand upon that word "flowing"; it could apply to all sorts of things.

[Mr. Hays.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, if we could unfreeze some of these estimates the minister would have a little time to give to unfreezing this matter.

Mr. Howard: That is quite true, but the minister has had all sorts of spare time at his disposal on 'plane and car trips, and so on, recently. It is a wonder he did not do it then, rather than waiting until the last minute and saying that if we unfreeze the estimates, he can do it. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that the minister has agreed that he is going to lift the freeze under the Cold Storage Act, that the Minister of Transport is going to help him lift it and the friends of the Minister of Transport in the cabinet—if he has any—are going to help him to this.

Item agreed to.

Production and marketing branch—

60e. Fruit and vegetable division—Assistance in construction of potato warehouses under terms and conditions approved by the governor in council, $117,000.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell us where these potato warehouses are located?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, they are located at Joliette, Mont Laurier and Isle Verte.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, before I ask my question, I should like to say how thrilled we would be, while the house is in committee, to hear the eloquent Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) talk to us about agriculture, for he loved to dwell on that subject when he was in opposition and he proved he could talk about agriculture. We are surprised at his diplomatic silence. Now, here is the question I should like to put to the Minister of Agriculture: Was he officially asked by the department of agriculture of the province of Quebec to amend the legislation concerning the construction of potato warehouses? Did he receive a request from the Quebec department of agriculture about that?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: If it has been received by the department, it has not arrived at my desk.

Item agreed to.

76e. Health of animals division—Payment of compensation to owners of animals affected with diseases coming under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, which have died or have been slaughtered in circumstances not covered by the above act and regulations made thereunder, all as detailed in the estimates, $7,946.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if there are any districts in the province of Quebec where dairy cattle have not yet passed the brucellosis test?

Mr. Hays: I do not think I can give an accurate answer. There are many, many areas which are now brucellosis free. I will be glad to look into this matter and let the hon. member know the position.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, while the minister is looking into this question perhaps he will also look at the last listed item under vote No. 76e. I see that this indemnity is payable to one Evert-John Vandenburg and Preferred Finance Corporation Ltd. My question to the minister is, does he not think that this is stretching the law far beyond its original purpose? Surely this finance company is not in the cattle raising business now, and I think there should be some check made on this particular item.

Mr. Hays: I would be glad to look at the conditions under which they raised these cattle.

Mr. Ricard: Is it the intention of the department, in view of the mounting prices of dairy cattle, to increase indemnity payments in cases of slaughtering?

Mr. Hays: Yes, we are looking into this at the moment.

Item agreed to.

91e.—Livestock division—Special grant to royal agricultural winter fair, Toronto, $98,242.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, last fall I asked the minister what consideration was being given to making grants to other agricultural fairs. The royal is, of course, the largest agricultural fair in the country and has been of great assistance in providing a show window for Canadian produce, but I have received a number of inquiries as to the intention of the government with regard to the support of class B and class C fairs. In my opinion these fairs probably do more for agriculture than many of the big fairs. I do not wish to take anything away from fairs such as the western Ontario fair, or the eastern Ontario fair which is held in Ottawa, or any of the western fairs; but to a certain extent these class A fairs have become, as I am sure the minister will agree, industrialized, and a visitor is likely to see more products of industry at these fairs than at industrial fairs themselves. I have attended the fair in Ottawa on several occasions and have seen demonstrations of all types of industrial machinery. The booths are usually rented, not by agriculturalists or those in related fields but by those in home building fields, automobile manufacturing, and so on.

On the other hand, grade B and grade C fairs, particularly the little ones, produce the results. I have referred before to a family in my area which showed potatoes at a class C fair. After many years this family went on to win the world championship for potatoes. They have gone from the little class C fairs to the royal fair and the Chicago fair and have been exhibitors in all the major agricultural shows of the country. But they got their start to show their produce in a little rural community, how to package it and handle it. They obviously learned how to produce it as well.

A large share of the credit for livestock production goes to the contribution made by some of the kids in the 4-H clubs who have exhibited at class C fairs the cattle they have raised. In many cases they have gone on to become some of the largest breeders in the country. I remember my father telling us about the days when he showed cattle at the Ontario Agricultural College and at the royal, and of the thrill it was. He had exhibited at class B and C fairs and after years of hard work had raised championship cattle. Personally I believe the training I received in judging and showmanship at agricultural fairs in my community has stood me in good stead, although I have had little connection with agricultural productivity in recent years.

I believe that if the federal government wants to contribute to the future they should not overlook these class B and C fairs. If the minister visits some of them—for example it is not too far from Ottawa to Vankleek Hill or some other areas—he will find that real agricultural fairs are held there. The people who go to them are the real farmers, and they bring with them the cattle on their farms, not showcase cattle. They bring the cattle which are going to make a necessary contribution to their community.

I would ask the minister to look into this question and to tell us whether he is prepared to take an added interest in these class B and class C fairs. I do not object to this contribution of $98,242 being made to the royal agricultural winter fair at Toronto; I think this is an international show and a credit to Canada. It is the ultimate of our agricutural shows. But I think that some contribution will have to be made by the federal government if we are to maintain our small fairs. We all know what is required by way of establishment of permanent quarters for these fairs, but I think that most of the fair boards agree that it is more and more difficult to resist the erosion which is taking place as a result of industrial enterprises wanting to subsidize the operation of the fairs. It will not be long before these fairs are classed as industrial rather than agricultural fairs, which is something which I do not want to see and which Canadian agriculture cannot afford at the present. Therefore I hope the minister will say that he has considered the matter and is prepared to do something in this field.

Mr. Hays: May I just point out that we are considering supplementary estimates, and during the main estimates we will have quite a bit to say about our exhibition policies.

Item agreed to.

95e—Livestock division—Grants to agricultural organizations as detailed in the estimates, $25,000.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a brief comment with regard to the contribution to the 4-H clubs, which I think is a very worthy one. In fact, I am surprised at such a small amount, and I presume that this item, like the other estimates, will be thoroughly discussed later. These 4-H clubs play an extremely important part in the encouragement of our young people to enter agriculture, and I hope they will not be lacking funds in this regard.

Item agreed to.

120e—Plant protection division—To extend the purposes of vote 120 of the main estimates for 1963-64 to include compensation for hydrangeas destroyed pursuant to the Destructive Insect and Pest Act, $14,000.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, I am a little concerned about this item, which includes compensation for hydrangeas which have been destroyed. I am not a horticulturist; my wife does the flower growing at our place, but I am wondering if the minister could explain the item.

Mr. Hays: The problem here is the incidence of nematode, which is a disease which grows on tubers like potatoes and so on. This was being carried. We import a great deal of our hydrangeas from Belgium and such places and those that were coming with dirt were not allowed in because of fear that they might be bringing in nematode and hurting the potato fields of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and so on.

Item agreed to.

165e. Agriculture Rehabilitation and Development Act—administration, operation and maintenance, $10,000.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, quite a number of questions have been asked in this field and I am particularly interested in obtaining from the minister a breakdown of what are the projects he has O.K.'d in the province of Ontario so that I may see what they are and how they fit into the program.

Mr. Hays: This particular amount has to do with travel. I am sure the minister in charge will be very glad to deal with all the expenditures on the main estimates, but this particular amount is for travel alone.

Mr. Peters: What travel and removal expenses are involved? What did these people do?

Mr. Hays: Perhaps I can explain it in this way. In the first instance these ARDA programs are investigated by the federal government and after that has taken place our officials get together with the province and decide on the sharing of the program as between the province and the federal government. As I indicated, since the first of May we have had a great deal of this activity and there was simply not enough money in the original estimates to take care of all the travel involved with regard to all the ARDA projects across Canada.

Mr. Peters: The minister mentioned before that he had eight or ten people in this department. I presume this amount is not just for their travelling expenses. Do we pay the travel expenses of the provincial government officials who are involved in matters concerning ARDA?

Mr. Hays: I would not want to mislead the hon. member. It is my understanding that we only pay the federal expenses but I remember that in May of last year shortly after I became minister we sent people to Newfoundland. We also did a lot of work in British Columbia and Saskatchewan and these men were on the move all the time investigating something like 136 different applications, with the result that we just ran out of money for travelling expenses.

Item agreed to.

171e. Payment of the balance of contributions to Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan for expenses incurred in respect of crop insurance in the amounts that would otherwise have been paid to those provinces if the agreements entered into by Canada pursuant to the Crop Insurance Act on the 31st day of May, 1962 with Prince Edward Island and on the 1st day of June, 1962 with Saskatchewan had been entered into on the 18th day of July, 1959, $9,342.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if he has communicated with the authorities of the province of Quebec with a view to entering into an agreement, under the Crop Insurance Act, whereby this act would apply in the province of Quebec?

Farmers in general, and more particularly those engaged in the production of special crops, such as the tobacco growers, wish to be protected. I think the Quebec government should definitely take a stand in this regard, especially in order to ensure the protection of farmers engaged in the production of special crops.

Practically every year tobacco growers sustain heavy losses due to draught or hail, especially hail.

Could the minister tell the house whether he has communicated with the Quebec authorities with a view to extending the application of the Crop Insurance Act to Quebec?

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Pigeon: No, Mr. Chairman. I addressed a direct question to the minister and I want an answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has nothing to do with this item.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I asked the Minister of Agriculture a specific question and I should like to have an answer.

Mr. Favreau: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The item now before us applies only to Saskatchewan and Prince Edward Island—

Mr. Vincent: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would remind the Minister of Justice that crop insurance applies to all Canadian provinces.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Not this vote.

Mr. Vincent: We are discussing crop insurance which may apply to all the provinces of Canada, provided they enter into an agreement with the federal government. We know that at the present time the federal government is in consultation with the province of Quebec with regard to crop insurance, and the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has asked the minister—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I should advise the hon. member that this particular vote, 171e, applies to Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan only.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: If I am not mistaken, Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with an amount of $9,342 that has already been paid to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Prince Edward Island. Then, the other provinces have nothing to do with that item.

Therefore, since the money has already been spent, I cannot see why we should not approve that item in favour of those two provinces and wait until the regular estimates are brought before us to claim the rights of the province of Quebec.

[Text]

Item agreed to.

172e. Estimated amount required to recoup the agricultural commodities stabilization account to cover the net operating loss of the agricultural stabilization board, including loss resulting from revaluation of inventory, as at March 31, 1964, $122,235,000.

Mr. Cardiff: This is the largest amount we have come to yet. I wonder whether the minister would mind explaining this item to the committee.

Mr. McIlraith: The item is to provide more accurate information for the House of Commons and it is comprised really of two different amounts, the actual losses on sales of commodities purchased and sold at a lower price, and on the inventory held over, with the valuation taken as of the time the estimates were prepared, which in this case was January 31, 1964. Therefore the item as shown should be an accurate reflection of what the situation was.

Mr. Nowlan: It does not involve a payment of any kind.

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Mr. Thomas: Does this involve the consumer butter subsidy?

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that this item is such a large amount and in view of the fact that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition pointed out so very well to the house that we should examine these matters carefully, I think we should call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, may I remind the house, without wanting to press any issue, that we have been dealing with these supplementary estimates for seven days already, and while we are not pressing to increase the number of hours of sitting, I am quite sure that most of us would be pleased to sit one additional hour tonight so that the minister may answer more of the questions of the hon. members.

Mr. Churchill: We are quite prepared to sit an additional hour, but I regret very much that the minister should say that we have taken seven days on these estimates because, as he knows, this is quite incorrect. We had 30 minutes on one day and one hour on another day. Let us not get into that argument. If the minister really wants co-operation, that is not the way to get it. However, we are content to sit for another hour.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Irrespective of whether it is seven days or whatever it is, it has taken us three days to get down to the consideration of the estimates before the committee. I still say we should call it ten o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. members of the New Democratic party want to co-operate a little, they should understand that they cannot change anything in the estimates since the money was spent in 1963-64. Most members would very much like to take a few days' rest and I feel that members of the New Democratic party are helping neither the house nor the Canadian people by insisting on our sitting tomorrow, possibly even the day after, and refusing to agree to our sitting an extra hour.

We are in favour of sitting two additional hours, if necessary, to consider the estimates concerning those expenditures which have been made and cannot be altered.

[Text]

Mr. Howard: Apropos of what the hon. member for Villeneuve has said, if I may be permitted to comment even though it is ten o'clock, I thought we came here to conduct the business of the country and not to have holidays.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No, take a vote.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, it is ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the house that unanimous consent be given for this house to commence its sitting tomorrow at ten o'clock and to continue, as was suggested, in order to get on with the business of the country?

Mr. Peters: No, Mr. Speaker.

It being three minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply this day]:

50e. Dairy products division—Grants and other assistance in accordance with the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvement Act, $97,500.

171e. Payment of the balance of contributions to Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan for expenses incurred in respect of crop insurance in the amounts that would otherwise have been paid to those provinces if the agreements entered into by Canada pursuant to the Crop Insurance Act on the 31st day of May, 1962 with Prince Edward Island and on the 1st day of June, 1962 with Saskatchewan had been entered into on the 18th day of July, 1959, $9,342.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 1, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES—EXTENSION OF SITTING HOURS TO DISCUSS UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I raise this question of privilege at this moment because it will lead to a suggestion which may need to be acted on under motions, which we should reach momentarily.

Yesterday the house learned with, I think, an element of surprise of the precarious state of the unemployment insurance fund. Like other members of the house, we in this party feel that any concern over this matter should be allayed as quickly as possible. We feel arrangements should be made today for dealing with the item in the supplementary estimates which would provide authority for loans to be made to the unemployment insurance fund.

Therefore we of the New Democratic party feel that arrangements should be made for this item to be dealt with, and toward that end we are prepared to suggest, and we do so unanimously, that there be a sitting of the house tonight from eight o'clock to ten o'clock on the understanding that the item respecting the unemployment insurance fund be called not later than eight o'clock this evening.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman has made a suggestion. I had intended to rise on motions and suggest that since this is the eighth day on which the house has been considering these supplementary estimates—I say this in the spirit of trying to meet the proposal the hon. member makes, because it will be recalled that we dealt with supplementary estimates on the 13th, 16th, 25th, 26th, 30th and 31st of March, and we shall be dealing with them today—it does seem to me the hon. gentleman is right in suggesting that the consensus in this house is that it might be desirable for us to meet tonight. I would suggest that we meet between the hours of seven and eleven o'clock. This would be without any prejudice, of course, to a careful examination of the matters before us.

The suggestion the hon. gentleman has made is one which fits in with my interpretation of what I think is the feeling of the house, having in mind that we have been dealing with these matters this week and that we shall wish to continue this tempo of discussion. I would strongly suggest that the course proposed by the hon. member is one which we might take into account, and I suggest the hours between seven and eleven.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, to begin with I would point out that the hon. gentleman, with that capacity for being non-provocative, misstated the situation with regard to the time taken on these estimates. He mentioned "seven days". In fact the following is the time taken: on Monday the 16th, one hour; Wednesday the 25th, 30 minutes; Thursday the 26th, one hour. I point out that the suggestion that we sat for the number of days to which he referred is entirely baseless.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I just say that I agree fully. I was not trying to suggest that the supplementary estimates had been the subject of discussion during the whole of those days. I just mentioned that we had discussed them on those days.

Mr. Ricard: You were trying to suggest that we took the whole day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the high minded reason for the suggestion, but it is none the less completely ill founded. Having said that, we are here for the purpose of doing the business that is required to be done—

Mr. Habel: Then get your members back.

An hon. Member: How about you?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. gentleman making a contribution from his usual position?

Mr. Starr: Yes, the same position.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I find it very difficult to understand what has happened here. Excepting for the dollar item and the subsequent item we were given no explanation of the situation connected with this particular fund. We used to be told "Oh, if a new government comes in all these difficulties will end; there will be no overdrawing of the unemployment insurance account". I am not going into detail in that connection, but I have the record here which shows that over and over again, when those who today sit—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, they speak of the danger to seals. I warn you over there that you are in difficulty too in this house. These are the trained seals of the government.

An hon. Member: Skin them alive.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I point out, sir, that what has happened results from the action of the government itself. The information I have is that there are some $15 million unappropriated in the 1963-64 funds—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Ricard: Sit down. Don't keep interrupting.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Bigg: You made a touching little speech yourself.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I could have debated the merits of this question, but I deliberately refrained from doing that because I made a proposal, under privilege, that arrangements be made for an item to be called at a specific time in order that we could debate that item. I am interested in the right hon. gentleman's remarks, but it seems to me they would be appropriate to the item when we get to it. My suggestion is that we get to the item as quickly as we can.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, the same point of order that has been raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. My point of order is that before the members of this house agree to sit any extended hours today surely we are entitled to hear from the government the true story of the fund as it is at the present time. We have not had any statement from the government side as to what arrangements have been made to provide additional funds, and we understand that arrangements have been made. Also, we do not know how long the new arrangements will last, as far as the fund is concerned. I think it is absolutely necessary that we know this.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I speak to the point of order. I think there is really no difficulty, procedurally, on this. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made a very sensible suggestion that we should meet this evening—

Mr. Knowles: From eight to ten.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, from eight to ten; that was a modification of my proposal. The hon. member raised, as a reason for so doing, the desirability of discussing a matter having to do with the unemployment insurance fund.

I think this was a reasonable suggestion, and I am sure the Minister of Labour would be very anxious to co-operate in dealing with that matter. But this is hardly the moment to deal with that question in itself. The only question now before the house is a suggestion as to our procedure for the balance of this day, and the suggestion is that we meet tonight. I have suggested from 7 to 11, but if there is some objection perhaps we can compromise and meet from 7.30 until 10.30. The only question now is for us to have an understanding that we will meet tonight, and I suggest 7.30 until 10.30.

Mr. Knowles: Eight to ten.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Very well; we will meet from 8 to 10, and at that point seek to deal with the matter before the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If I may interrupt the right hon. gentleman, may I suggest I call the item "Presenting reports by standing and special committees" and then move on to motions; and if the Acting Prime Minister has any suggestion to make in particular with regard to the unemployment insurance fund or to hours of sitting, he can make it at that point. Then the Leader of the Opposition will be well within the rules and have ample opportunity, if that meets with the wishes of the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was well within the rules a moment ago, if I may say so with deference. May I say I like that spirit of co-operation between the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the government; because I was informed this morning that the minister was going to make the suggestion. However, in that fine spirit of co-operation which always prevails between the N.D.P. and the government, it was to be pretended that the suggestion came from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: That is as false as you usually are.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I agree that motions is the proper time to make the suggestion which was made by my hon. friend for Winnipeg North Centre. We have stated our respective positions, and I do not think there is any need to take up further time of the house. My suggestion is that we sit tonight from 8 until 10, and I hope this will be the consensus of the house. I may assure my right hon. friend that if there is any thought of lack of co-operation in his mind, there is no intention of it. We want to see whether we can agree in this house this afternoon on the procedure and the time we propose to take today on the discussion of the business before us. I have made my suggestion, and I hope it will meet the wishes of my right hon. friend and those who sit behind him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we have always desired to co-operate—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The degree of agreement is apparent from that response. I appreciate the approval that statement has received from the government side of the house. However, I would point out this, that the government has not come clean with parliament at all. They brought us back here, although there is no objection to that whatever because the business has to be done. But they concealed the facts regarding the unemployment insurance fund and now find themselves in a difficult position.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I think it is about time the right hon. gentleman began to observe some of the proprieties of the House of Commons. There was no concealment whatever. On March 6 the supplementary estimates tabled in this house indicated the necessity for replenishing the fund, so there was no concealment whatever.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Everybody realizes there was an indication in the estimates and also in the supplementaries, so why did the government not go ahead instead of allowing the time of the house to be used for other purposes? They thought they could push us into a position where we would not look into this matter carefully. This is what they tried to do. As a matter of fact I am informed that they had available as of last night some $15 million unused, and all that was required was an order in council before the end of the year.

Mr. MacEachen: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the hon. gentleman allow me to continue? I have the floor.

Mr. MacEachen: I rise on a point of order. The right hon. gentleman is debating the merits of this particular matter on orders of the day, or on motions. We will have an opportunity of dealing with the merits of this question later when the item is called. In the meantime I would ask the Chair to ask the right hon. gentleman to observe the rules that every hon. member has to observe.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know the facts hurt the hon. gentleman, and that is why he jumps up on imaginary points of order. The position of the fund is directly attributable to the bumbling administration of this government. I want to make that very clear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the right hon. gentleman feels very keenly about the position he takes on this matter. I am sure, however, he will agree with me that at this particular moment, in this phase of our discussion, it is not in order to discuss a matter of substance. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre showed forbearance in that regard. If we were to permit or if Your Honour were to permit a general discussion of this subject, it would mean that all hon. members would have a right at this moment, before the item has been reached, to discuss it.

We will have an opportunity of discussing it. The Minister of Labour will be very anxious to deal with this matter. I am sure the right hon. gentleman will agree that we want to regularize this discussion, and I suggest it is not in order at this time to discuss the merits of the question. We should wait until we reach this item, and we will arrange that that be done today. We will have an opportunity to discuss it, particularly as we may meet tonight between the hours of eight and ten.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was not speaking on the merits of the proposition, I was speaking about the demerits of the government. I want to make that very clear. They are asking that the house sit extra hours, and to that we have no objection. I am simply pointing out the fact that what has happened is another result of the bumbling attitude of this government and the hiding of the facts by the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker: I do not wish to cut off any hon. member who wishes to make a contribution, but it seems to me fairly clear, if I understand the situation correctly, that the Acting Prime Minister has moved—

Mr. Pickersgill: Suggested.

Mr. Speaker: —suggested that this house do sit from eight o'clock until ten o'clock this evening, and that is the matter under discussion.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I take it that this is a motion which the Acting Prime Minister has moved and is therefore debatable.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not move a motion. What I did was simply to indicate that I thought this would be the feeling of the house, but the house is master of its own rules. If this were the consensus, then no formal requirement would be necessary.

Mr. Douglas: In that case it becomes an order of the house, and we would agree to that. I rise simply for the purpose of saying, as my colleague has said, that we are quite willing to meet this evening from eight o'clock to ten o'clock on the understanding that the question of the replenishment of the unemployment insurance fund will be dealt with during that period, or at least will be dealt with during the day and that it be called no later than eight o'clock.

I want to say that in making this suggestion my colleague is certainly not acting on behalf of the government or in collusion with the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, we have had this sort of insinuation on two or three occasions from members of the official opposition, and I want to say it is deeply resented. As a matter of fact the records of this session of parliament will show that we have voted against the government much more often than we have voted with them. As a matter of fact we only voted with the government on one amendment, and the official opposition also voted with the government against one of our amendments. We do not take orders either from the government or from the official opposition. We are here to facilitate and expedite the business of the house—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: —and we will take an independent attitude in so doing. We support the suggestion of the Acting Prime Minister—

Mr. Bell: You would not sit at ten o'clock this morning.

Mr. Douglas: —but I want to say to the government that I hope the impasse into which the House of Commons has manoeuvred itself will be a lesson to the government not to bring in supplementary estimates and interim supply almost at the deadline, when parliament either has to rush through them without proper consideration or has to sit beyond the time when we intended to adjourn.

This has become an all too common practice. Supplementary estimates and regular estimates are left until the dying days or hours of the session and then are rushed through without proper consideration. It is true that some time has been spent on the agriculture estimates. I want to remind the government there are a lot of estimates still to be dealt with, and this house need hardly be reminded that these are supplementary estimates, which means that the money has been spent. It is money which was not provided for in the regular estimates, which means that these expenditures were the result of an emergency or represent gross miscalculations by the departments in estimating their monetary needs for the fiscal year.

Members of the house have a right to expect from the government a very clear explanation why these additional sums are needed. They are not small sums. There is some $240 million of expenditures and almost $57 million in loans, investments and advances, a total of almost $300 million. In spite of the hour and the time I do not think we should be asked simply to slide these items through because the government was derelict in not presenting them to the house at an early enough date so they could be given proper examination and consideration.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we are quite prepared, subject to the conditions which I have already stated, to sit this evening, but we think the house should take whatever time is necessary to examine these estimates and pass them properly even though we have now gone into what was to have been the Easter recess.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we in this group are quite prepared to co-operate by sitting this evening. We would love to get down to business and deal with the matters at hand. I had to return to the house, and I might say I found that parliament and parliamentary procedure have reached a new low in the thinking of the people across the country because of what has taken place in the last few days. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it would be a good thing if we could agree to get ahead with the business and leave all the wrangling for another occasion.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I go along with some of the members on this side of the house in that sometimes we have to put a great deal of water in our wine to digest the food that the government on the other side of the house feeds us. There is one thing I do not quite understand, and that is why this problem could not have been discussed a little earlier in the day, following the usual procedure so that members of all parties could have been made aware of the situation and could have come to a decision on it.

So far as we in this corner of the house are concerned, we are quite willing to sit the extra hours tonight, but we only hope the government does not make a habit of this night sitting; else we are likely to start sitting on Sunday afternoons. Since the government puts its foot in the noose it can call itself lucky that sometimes the opposition is there to take it out.

I hope this will be the last time we have to sacrifice not only the Easter recess but also Wednesday nights, as this seems to be becoming a habit of the government, seeking 24 hour sittings and getting nowhere with them. We have a lot of estimates to pass and, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam pointed out, their presentation has been delayed to the last minute so they can be pushed through in one block and the opposition will have opportunity to say very little on them. I would ask the government to take this under consideration and arrange to have the Easter holiday at the same time as everybody else in the country, and the same applies to Christmas.

Mr. Speaker: Order. By agreement it is ordered that this house do sit from eight to ten o'clock this evening.

Mr. Peters: I hope you will point out, sir, with the caveat the government has given, that the labour estimate will be brought forward at that time if it has not already been called.

Mr. Jorgenson: And, Mr. Speaker, could we have an assurance from the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) that they will not block the passage of this?

Mr. Howard: The last thing I have to do is concern myself with asinine questions like that.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Did the urgency in regard to replenishing the U.I.C. fund arise overnight Monday?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker. As I have stated already, the government indicated the necessity for this action in the item in the supplementary estimates; that is, that it would be required for the current fiscal year. The forecast of the commission was quite clear.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister said that the urgency was indicated in the supplementary estimates, which were placed before the house quite some time ago. Nevertheless the urgency of this matter had to be drawn from the Minister of Labour by way of questions on this particular subject yesterday after the matter was brought to his attention.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. What is the hon. member's question, please?

Mr. MacInnis: The matter was brought quite clearly to the minister's attention on Monday evening.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacInnis: Why, then, was it necessary to draw information from the minister on Tuesday by way of questions?

C.N.R. EARNINGS AT RADVILLE, SASK.

Question No. 240—Mr. Watson (Assiniboia):

What was the total revenue earned by the Canadian National Railway at Radville, Saskatchewan for each of the years 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962, and 1963?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

On branch lines, the revenues derived from traffic originating at stations where no agent is located are reported through the first agency station through which the traffic passes. Such is the case at Radville and Avonlea, which are agency stations located on the Weyburn and Avonlea subdivisions respectively. As a result, available earning figures for those two stations include revenues derived from several other stations and are not representative of actual earnings derived from traffic originating at either point. To produce the requested information would involve considerable time and expense. However, when a study is undertaken preparatory to the filing of an application for abandonment of any line, it is necessary to extract actual earnings for each station. In connection with applications filed with the board of transport commissioners for the abandonment of the Weyburn and Avonlea subdivisions, it was necessary to determine the actual earnings of each of the stations on those lines, and the revenues for the year 1959 at Radville and Avonlea were $115,896 and $119,050 respectively.

C.N.R. EARNINGS AT AVONLEA, SASK.

Question No. 241—Mr. Watson (Assiniboia):

What was the total revenue earned by the Canadian National Railways at Avonlea, Saskatchewan for each of the years 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962, and 1963?

Mr. Pickersgill: See answer to question No. 240.

HOURS OF WORK OF C.N.R. EMPLOYEES

Question No. 281—Mr. Gauthier:

1. Are C.N.R. train employees ever compelled to work 16 hours a day and, if so, are overtime benefits paid after eight hours?

2. Do these employees enjoy the holidays recognized by other associations in this country?

3. Are any of the stations on the Chambord-Dolbeau line open when the train comes through on Sunday mornings and, if not, has the company made any inquiry concerning the possible loss of passenger business by the C.N.R. as a result of this lack of service?

[Translation]

Answer: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Running trades employees in road service cannot be completed to work over 12 hours. The men are sole judges of their condition and may advise a dispatcher with at least one-hour notice of their desire to take rest after 12 hours on duty. Their pay is based on mileage or hours, whichever is greater, for any one tour of duty, and any overtime is paid on this basis in accordance with the terms of the wage agreements.

2. Statutory holiday provisions are not contained in the collective agreements for running trades employees in road service on any major railroads on the North American continent. However, statutory holiday conditions for daily-rated yard employees are comparable to those of other industries.

3. Yes.

QUEENSWAY, OTTAWA—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION

Question No. 289—Mr. Smith:

1. What total financial or equivalent contribution is the government of Canada required to make to the construction of the Queensway in the national capital area?

2. To the 31st of December, 1963, what contribution has been made by the government or any of its agencies?

3. To the 31st of December, 1963, what has been the total amount expended by all governments, federal, provincial and municipal, upon the planning and construction of the Queensway?

4. In what stages is the Queensway being constructed?

5. Of course, what stages have been completed?

6. What is the target date for completion of the other stages?

7. When is it anticipated that the whole project will be completed?

8. Have there been any discussions between the government of Canada or any of its agencies, and the government of Ontario or the corporation of the city of Ottawa for the purpose of endeavouring to expedite the completion of this project?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Canada, through the Department of Public Works, contributes to the cost of the Queensway on the basis provided for in trans-Canada highway agreement which is 50 per cent of the equivalent cost of constructing a two lane highway. Canada's contribution, through the Department of Public Works, is presently estimated at $7 million.

Canada's contribution through the national capital commission is the land for the right of way of the Queensway, part of which is a former Canadian National Railway right of way crossing Ottawa from west to east, acquired as a result of a comprehensive railway relocation scheme—no value is placed on this former right of way—together with the additional lands required to widen the former railway right of way to a maximum width of 180 feet. The cost of the land required for the widening is estimated at $5 million. Further, the national capital commission is to landscape the right of way, approaches, exits, ramps and interchanges at an estimated cost of $450,000. The national capital commission will also maintain the landscaping of the right of way at an estimated annual cost of $35,000.

The extent of Canada's total financial contribution will not become definite until the design and construction of all stages has been completed.

2. Department of Public Works, $4,917,943; national capital commission, $4,529,000 for the lands required for the widening of the former right of way, $348,000 for landscaping construction and $4,000 for maintenance of landscaping.

3. Shareable cost as provided for in the trans-Canada highway agreement, $9,835,886; national capital commission, $4,881,000 as shown in 2 above. The federal government has no record of the non-shareable costs incurred by the provincial and municipal governments.

4. Stage I, Rideau river to east city limits; stage II, west city limits to Carling avenue; stage III, Carling avenue—O'Connor street; stage IV, O'Connor street—Rideau river.

5. Stages I and II.

6. Stage III, the section of stage III from Carling avenue to Bronson avenue should be open in May 1964. The section from Bronson avenue to O'Connor street by the fall of 1964.

Stage IV, the section of stage IV from O'Connor street to Metcalfe street will be open in the fall of 1964. On the section from Metcalfe street to the Rideau river, final design to contract stage is not complete and as the province is the construction agency and completion will involve decisions by all three levels of government participating in the agreements, I am not in a position to state a completion date.

7. Answered by part 6, stage IV.

8. A Queensway committee made up of officials of the province of Ontario, the city of Ottawa, the national capital commission and the Department of Public Works meets monthly to discuss Queensway matters, review proposed planning with the consulting engineers and to expedite the progress of work over the entire project.

C.N.R. RAIL LINES BUILT AND ABANDONED SINCE 1954

Question No. 378—Mr. Cyr:

1. How many miles of railroad has Canadian National Railways abandoned since 1954 and, what areas were serviced by those lines?

2. How many miles of railroad have been built by Canadian National Railways since 1954 and what areas are serviced by those new lines?

[Translation]

Answer: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Since 1954 the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada has authorized the abandonment of 567 miles of line in various areas across the system.

2. A total of about 585 miles of main track and approximately 550 miles of sidings and industrial spurs have been constructed in various areas across the system.

REPORT ON CRASH OF T.C.A. PLANE

Question No. 439—Mr. Fisher:

1. When is a report expected from the investigators of the air crash of the DC-8F at Ste. Therese?

2. Does a transcript exist of the tape made by the tower at Dorval of radio traffic with the aircraft and, if so, what does the transcript say?

3. When did T.C.A. receive notice of the U.S. FAA ruling of 1961 that all U.S. jet aircraft must carry recorders?

4. Was this ruling considered at any time by the board of directors or by the management committee of T.C.A.?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. It is not possible to estimate with any accuracy when the report of the investigators will be completed. However, it can be stated that the report will not be completed before early summer.

2. A transcript of communication between the aircraft and the air traffic control units at Montreal international airport does exist. The transmissions are all of a routine nature and do not provide any indication that the flight was in difficulty.

3. T.C.A. received original notice in August, 1957 with an amendment in July 1958, stating a requirement for compliance by U.S. air lines in May 1961.

4. T.C.A. management considered this ruling, but due to certain limitations in recording equipment at that time, elected (along with many other world air lines) to defer the project pending development of units of a more advanced type.

T.C.A. has now embarked on a program involving what it considers to be the best and newest recording equipment available.

NEW VOCATIONAL SCHOOL ACCOMMODATION

Question No. 461—Mr. Starr:

1. How many new vocational schools or additions have been approved under the amended Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act from January 1, 1964 to date, and where are they located?

2. How many new technical schools or additions have been approved under the amended Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act from January 1, 1964 to date, and where are they located?

3. What student capacity has been added in the period January 1, 1964 to date?

4. What is the total cost of these projects?

5. What is the federal government's share of the cost?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. Seven new vocational high schools have been approved under the technical and vocational training assistance agreement since January 1, 1964. They are listed as follows:

Quebec: Donnacona vocational training.

Ontario: Barrie North collegiate; St. Mary's district C.I. (additions and alternations); St. Catherines secondary; Saltfleet, Dewitt road composite (The school is located between Stoney Creek and Winona near Hamilton).

Alberta: Peace River, Peace River high school.

B.C.: Vancouver, Point Grey junior-senior secondary school (additions and alterations).

2. Three new trade schools have been approved during the same period:

N.S.: Amherst, interprovincial trade school for the deaf.

Quebec: Montreal, institute of deaf mutes; la ferme, school of agriculture (Abitibi Co.).

3. The student capacity of the schools approved since January 1, 1964 is 3,921.

4. The total cost of these projects, including buildings and equipment is $10,461,930.

5. The federal contribution approved for the above projects including equipment is $3,092,931 which represents 50 per cent of the cost to be borne by the province for buildings and equipment (excluding academic facilities). The municipal contribution to these projects is estimated at $4,276,070.

The federal contribution to expenditures by the province will be increased by 25 per cent when agreements are completed with the provinces pursuant to Bill C-105 which amended the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act to permit a 75 per cent contribution to training facilities to March 31, 1967.

Questions

MILK DISTRIBUTION IN SCHOOLS

Question No. 491—Mr. Rondeau:

1. Does the federal government assist any provinces in the distribution of free milk in schools and, if so, in which provinces?

2. What was the per capita figures of milk consumption in each province?

3. How many pounds of surplus butter does the federal government buy annually?

Mr. Hays: 1. No.

2. The per capita figures of milk consumption, in each province, as provided by the dominion bureau of statistics for 1962 is:

WHARF CONSTRUCTION, STORMONT, N.S.

Question No. 493—Mr. Coates:

Is a wharf to be constructed at Stormont, Guysborough county, Nova Scotia and, if so, when will tenders be called?

Mr. Deschatelets: The department is presently investigating the provision of deep water wharf facilities in the Stormont area of country harbour. Surveys will be undertaken this spring to determine costs. When this information is available the department will decide if the construction of a wharf is justified.

WHARF TENDER, TOBERMORY, ONT.

Question No. 498—Mr. Loney:

1. Has the lowest tender quotation of $2,291.30 by Percy Speers, Wiarton, Ontario (slip, ferry wharf, Tobermory, Bruce county Ontario), received final approval and, if so, at what date will construction of this project commence?

2. If final approval has not been given, what are the reasons for not accepting the lowest tender?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Yes. Construction is expected to commence the middle of April 1964.

2. Not applicable.

EXPENDITURES IN CANADA BY U.S. GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Question No. 506—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How much money was spent in Canada in each of the past three years by the United States government through its department of health, education and welfare and agencies like the national institute of health in research in the natural and biological sciences?

2. Has the government any information as to plans by these American agencies to reduce these grants in the coming year?

Miss LaMarsh: 1 and 2. This information is not available.

SUGAR—STEPS TO REDUCE PRICE

Question No. 507—Mr. Peters:

To control and reduce the consumer price of sugar will the federal government consider (a) the establishment of an agency to acquire domestic sugar surplus from commonwealth countries on long term contracts (b) consider the establishment of a provincial-federal distribution agency to provide stable sugar prices to consumers (c) increase the subsidy to Canadian sugar beet producers?

Answer: For reasons which were indicated to the house on February 19, after there had been discussions with commonwealth and other producers the government concluded that it would not be in the interests of the Canadian consumer to enter into long term contract arrangements for supplies of sugar at that time. Since that time world sugar prices have been falling with an attendant decline in the price for refined sugar in Canada and the futures market forecasts still lower prices as the year progresses.

(a) The discussions with commonwealth producers did not disclose any surplus of sugar available to be acquired on long term contracts at advantageous prices.

(b) Stability of sugar prices in Canada is dependant upon stability of prices in the world market from which the bulk of Canadian supplies are drawn.

(c) The level of support under the agricultural stabilization board is being considered at present and an announcement will be made in due course.

CONTROL OF BULK CEMENT TRANSPORTATION

Question No. 511—Mr. Peters:

Is it the intention of the government to prosecute the cement companies for the establishment of a monopolistic control over the transportation of bulk cement by selected carriers?

Mr. Favreau: No decision regarding prosecution or other criminal proceedings in respect of alleged contraventions of the substantive provisions of the Combines Investigation Act is made unless and until a report is received from the restrictive trade practices commission or evidence is referred to the attorney general of Canada by the director of investigation and research. No report regarding the industry concerned has been received, nor has evidence been referred to the attorney general by the director.

PROSECUTION OF SUGAR REFINERIES

Question No. 512—Mr. Peters:

Is it the intention of the government at this session of parliament to prosecute the sugar refineries who have manipulated the consumer price of sugar to the detriment of the general public?

Mr. Favreau: No decision regarding prosecution or other criminal proceedings in respect of alleged contraventions of the substantive provisions of the Combines Investigation Act is made unless and until a report is received from the restrictive trade practices commission or evidence is referred to the attorney general of Canada by the director of investigation and research. No report regarding the industry concerned has been received since the report of the commission concerning the sugar industry in eastern Canada dated February 3, 1960, as a result of which prosecution proceedings have already been taken, nor has evidence been referred to the attorney general by the director.

DESIGNATED AREAS, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 516—Mr. Mather:

How many designated areas are there in the province of Saskatchewan?

Mr. MacEachen: None.

LAKE ONTARIO WATER LEVELS

Question No. 518—Mr. Matheson:

1. What has been the average level of lake Ontario each year commencing 1938?
2. What has been the discharge or outflow from lake Ontario each year commencing 1938?
3. What has been the average level at Ogdensburg each year commencing 1938?

Mr. Laing: 1, 2 and 3. The following table gives the mean annual water levels and flows for the period 1938 to 1963 inclusive at the points indicated. Annual mean levels of the St. Lawrence river at Prescott, Ontario have been substituted for those at Ogdensburg, New York, but as these points are on opposite sides of the river the water levels at one are reflected at the other. Water levels are expressed in feet above mean sea level referred to the international great lakes datum (1955) and flows, in cubic feet per second.

HYDROGRAPHIC SURVEY, BRAS D'OR LAKES

Question No. 520—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Has a hydrographic survey been carried out recently in the Bras d'Or lakes and has such a survey been completed?
2. When was the last survey carried out?
3. When was the first survey of the Bras d'Or lakes carried out?

Mr. Benidickson: 1. A hydrographic survey was made in August 1963 from McKinnons point to North basin and of the channel through the swing bridge at Grand narrows in Bras d'Or lake. This was only a reconnaissance survey and obtained the information required at that time.

In June 1963 a hydrographic survey was carried out of the northern entrance to Great Bras d'Or. This survey is completed.

2. A survey of the Bras d'Or lakes, north of Grand narrows, was carried out by the Canadian hydrographic service—1941-1947. The northern entrance to Great Bras d'Or has been resurveyed periodically since.

3. The first survey of the Bras d'Or lakes was carried out in 1852-1857. This is the only complete survey made of Bras d'Or lake, south of Grand narrows.

BREAKWATER EXTENSION, INDIAN BEACH, N.S.

Question No. 521—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Is consideration being given to the construction of an extension to the breakwater at Indian Beach, North Sydney, Nova Scotia?
2. What is the estimated cost of such an extension and how soon will tenders be called for this project?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

BRIDGES OVER TRENT CANAL

Question No. 530—Mr. Stenson:

1. Has the Department of Transport had any negotiations with the Ontario department of highways regarding bridges to be built over the Trent canal system of Lakefield, Buckhorn, or Burleigh Falls and, if so, on what date will construction of the bridges commence?

[Mr. Laing.]

2. Is the Department of Transport considering building new workshops at the depot in Peterborough?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. The department has had negotiations with the Ontario department of highways regarding the construction of bridges at Buckhorn and Burleigh Falls but not at Lakefield. Dates for the start of construction of the former bridges have not been set.

2. Yes, in due course but not immediately.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS FOR RETURNING LOGGERS

Motion No. 9—Mr. Latulippe:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of all letters, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Minister of Labour or officers of his department and officials of the national employment office, unemployment insurance commission, the competent authorities in Maine and Vermont, officials of the United States department of the interior and labor secretariat, and between the unions and the Canadian and American companies concerned with the problem of Canadian loggers permanently or seasonally employed in the United States forest industry who cannot obtain unemployment insurance benefits on their return to Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that this motion is to be withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH LUMBER ASSOCIATION ON SALES TAX

Motion No. 10—Mr. Latulippe:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the Minister of Finance or any other officer of his department and the Canadian association of the lumber industry or one of their representatives or members, in connection with the 11 per cent tax on building materials.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, in connection with this motion I should point out to the hon. member that there is no such correspondence, but the government is prepared to accept the motion.

Motion agreed to.

LOANS TO STUDENTS

Motion No. 29—Mr. Langlois:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the Prime Minister or any minister of the cabinet and Mr. Jean Lesage, premier of the province of Quebec or Mr. Gerin-Lajoie, minister of youth, concerning interest free loans to university students, as mentioned in the speech from the throne.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have motion No. 29 passed today if possible. I have contacted some of the ministers with respect to motions No. 30 to 52 inclusive, and I would like to have these stand seeing that quite a few of the ministers are absent from the house today.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Regarding motion No. 29, this is agreeable, subject to the usual reservation.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion subject to the reservation expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ANNUAL LEAVE, PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYEES, TERRACE, B.C.

Motion No. 57—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all regulations, or letters or communications relating to, or directed to, employees in the public service of Canada who are employed at Terrace, B.C. and relating to the question of seniority being or no longer being the determining factor in the scheduling of annual leave.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I understand the hon. gentleman would be willing to have this motion stand today.

Mr. Howard: I would be glad to co-operate in any way with the Minister of Transport on this matter.

Motion stands.

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING BILL ON INDIAN CLAIMS

Motion No. 59—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government and any agency or branch thereof and any other person, group or organization since December 20, 1963 relating to Bill No. C-130 of the first session of the twenty sixth parliament entitled an act to provide for disposition of Indian claims.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, we would have no objection to accepting this motion on condition that the word "and" at the end of the second line be replaced by the word "or", which I think the hon. gentleman means. Otherwise there would be a demand for the filing of confidential information.

Mr. Howard: Yes, that could be "or" or a comma, either one.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the minister is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN RESERVE LANDS, BURNS LAKE, B.C.

Motion No. 63—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government or any agency or branch thereof and any other person, group or organization relating to Indian reserve lands which are now situated in the Burns Lake Indian agency between the period of January 1, 1954 and December 31, 1962.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask permission to withdraw this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

N.H.A. LOANS, KITIMAT, B.C.

Motion No. 66—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or any branch office thereof and the Aluminum Company of Canada, or any other person since January 1, 1958 relating to the question of loans under the National Housing Act in the community of Kitimat, B.C.

Mr. Favreau: Could we stand this motion in the absence of the minister?

Mr. Howard: Yes.

Motion stands.

QUEBEC—CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING UNIVERSITY GRANTS

Motion No. 69—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or documents exchanged between the Prime Minister or any minister of the government and any universities of the province of Quebec, regarding grants between December 1962 and March 1, 1964.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I request that this motion stand.

Mr. Speaker: The motion which was just read, No. 69?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Speaker, No. 69 is to stand.

Mr. Langlois: I agree to have it stand until I meet the minister.

Motion stands.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DIRECTIVES FROM MINISTER OF FORESTRY

Motion No. 75—Mr. Jorgenson:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all directives, changes in regulations and authorization for expenditures from the Minister of Forestry from the period February 3, 1964 to March 13, 1964.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have agreed to withdraw motions Nos. 75 and 76 pending the investigation in accordance with the promise made to the house by the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: Then motions Nos. 75 and 76 are withdrawn.

Orders discharged and motions withdrawn.

R.C.M.P. SPACE IN MUNICIPAL BUILDING, TERRACE, B.C.

Motion No. 86—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all observations and reports concerning space or the location thereof for the R.C.M. Police as referred to in the answer given to question No. 300 of the present session of parliament.

Mr. Favreau: May I ask that this motion stand so that I can look into the matter further?

Motion stands.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PIGEON—REPLY BY JUSTICE MINISTER TO ORAL QUESTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, following a question I put yesterday to the Minister of Justice. In this respect I refer to page 1600 of Hansard, and I quote:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is the selection of lawyers acting for certain crown corporations based on political considerations?

And the minister's answer was:

The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

The minister deceived the house and considered members as April's fools, since he makes a selection as regards lawyers and notaries acting for the government.

It seems to me that he favours only those who are recommended by Liberal members and defeated Liberal candidates.

The minister has what I call a patronage list.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that the question of privilege of the hon. member was out of order, since in view of its purpose it should have been raised this morning rather than yesterday.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, this morning we did not sit.

An hon. Member: April's fool.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—POSTPONEMENT OF SAILING OF SHIP "JOHN ERICSSON"

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would ask the Minister of Labour whether he is in a position to explain the postponement of the sailing of the Upper Lakes vessel John Ericsson, which I understand is one of the ships boycotted by the longshoremen in Chicago last year. Does this action indicate that the difficulties of last year on the great lakes are approaching settlement?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I would hope that the thought expressed in the right hon. gentleman's final sentence is correct. The decision on the part of the Upper Lakes Shipping Company not to send the Ericsson into Chicago at this time is a decision made by the company, likely in the interests of creating a favourable atmosphere at the present time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I take it from the minister's answer that this was not a decision which was determined by the direction or suggestion of the trustees?

Mr. MacEachen: I can tell the right hon. gentleman that the trustees have been anxious to work out a solution to the harassment on the great lakes in parts of the United States, and I think it would be correct to say that they may have expressed their concern to the president of Upper Lakes Shipping on this particular point.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

INQUIRIES AS TO ASSISTANCE TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I know that any decision by the federal government to give aid toward rehabilitating the people in the Alberni valley depends on an application being received from the government of British Columbia. However, in view of the fact that the people in that area and a committee headed by two mayors, of which the honorary president is the lieutenant governor of the province, are making a nation-wide appeal for funds to help those who are destitute and homeless, I wonder whether the federal government has made any decision with reference to the suggestion I put to them yesterday, that a substantial financial contribution be made to the Alberni valley disaster fund.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): If I may say so, I think the sequence of events now is such that we would have to await a decision or advice from the provincial government; because I have now had a wire from Hon. Wesley D. Black telling us that we will be advised of the extent of the damage after a provincial cabinet meeting to be held on Thursday. So I think any participation by the federal government should now await a request from the provincial government.

Mr. Douglas: I recognize that this would be true with respect to a general rehabilitation program. What I am asking is this. Would the government be prepared to consider making an immediate contribution to the fund designed to help those who are homeless at the moment?

Mr. Laing: I am certain that the remarks of the hon. member will be noted by the cabinet; but again, if we are to participate in the work of rehabilitation in that area which addresses itself principally to those who suffer as a result of the complete destruction of 45 homes, we should probably await a report from the provincial government because we have been dealing with them.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In connection with the matter raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, may I say that a telephone call reached my office a few moments before the sitting opened to the effect that the damage runs into tens of millions of dollars and that some indication on the part of the federal government—with full respect, of course, to the constitutional proprieties to which the minister has made reference—would raise the hopes of those people and give them determination. I do not think the minister would be interfering with the constitutional division of power and the need for a direct request for assistance from the province of British Columbia if he could indicate—and I know he would receive support from all parts of the house in doing so—that a substantial contribution would be made to the disaster fund.

Mr. Laing: I sincerely hope that the estimate of the damage given to the house by the right hon. gentleman is inaccurate. I have from Mr. Black this morning a statement that the preliminary estimate made by the civic authorities is a total of $5 million, including the industries concerned in that area. I think in the light of these statements which have been made we should still await a report from the province, but I am certain that the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam will be duly noted by members of the government.

INDUSTRY

PETERBOROUGH, ONT.—REPORTED INSTALLATION OF PRODUCTION EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): I have a question for the Minister of Industry. In view of the implication left yesterday by the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac, is the minister aware of press reports in the Globe and Mail indicating that Outboard Marine Corporation will instal $100,000 worth of production equipment in Peterborough this year in order to manufacture snowmobiles, mainly for export to the United States?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I thank my hon. friend very much for this information, which I am sure is most welcome.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

THETFORD MINES, QUE.—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Would the hon. gentleman consider extending the winter works program to the end of May in the Thetford Mines district to relieve the situation which has arisen following the lay-off of 600 men due to the closing of two asbestos mines?

Mr. Speaker: I think this is an appropriate time to suggest that that is the type of question which should be placed on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think my last question was one that should be put on the order paper. I asked the Minister of Labour whether he would consider extending the winter works program. Would the minister consider that solution, in order to help these 600 men who are out of work at the moment, plus the others who were out of work before that?

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister just in the event that I do not have the privilege of the floor between eight and ten tonight. I am wondering whether the Acting Prime Minister would care to make any comment on the serious situation which exists in Canada with regard to unemployment. I do not mean with regard to the fund but with regard to the people unemployed.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that I ruled on this question last week.

FINANCE

REPORTED INCREASE IN NUMBER OF BANKRUPTCIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): My question is one for the Minister of Finance but in his unavoidable absence may I address it to the acting minister. Inasmuch as there has been an increase of 15.3 per cent in the number of bankruptcies in the year 1963 as compared with 1962, could the hon. gentleman tell us what action the government is contemplating to assist small businesses in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MAIL TRUCK ROBBERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Postmaster General I should like to direct my question to the Acting Postmaster General and ask whether he can give a report to the house on the robbery that occurred last evening in mid-town Montreal, in which it is reported that $400,000 was stolen. Also, can he say if it is the policy of the department to leave mail trucks carrying as much as $42 million unprotected by armed guards?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Acting Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Postmaster General I might read a statement which covers this matter.

At 7.30 last evening the mail truck for the service between the Montreal post office and the C.N.R. station was held up at the corner of Lagauchetiere and University streets in Montreal. Two trucks and six armed, masked men took part in the hold-up.

The post office vehicle was boxed in at the traffic light and the railway mail clerk, who was accompanying the mail, and the truck driver were taken from the post office truck, handcuffed together, placed in one of the other trucks and pillow cases pulled over their heads.

The post office truck and the mail have not yet been located. The information indicates that there were 31 money packets on board the missing mail truck and some of them are believed to have contained payrolls. The matter is being investigated by senior officials of the Montreal city police and post office investigators.

This morning's press and radio indicate the amount of the loot as $400,000, and have also indicated that mail trucks have carried as high as $42 million on a trip. It is not known where the press and radio obtained this information, as an accurate amount of the loss will not be ascertained until the respective banks have been contacted, and I have no knowledge of any mail truck carrying $42 million.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, last night at 8.20 p.m. the highway motor vehicle service between Valleyfield and Montreal was held up at Caughnawaga. Two motor vehicles were involved in the hold-up and at least two armed men took part. The truck and mail have been recovered in this case but the locked bags have all been ripped open. Investigators are checking to ascertain the loss in this particular case, but it is not believed that any money packets were carried. The matter is being investigated by the Quebec provincial police.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works who answers in the house for the Postmaster General in his absence?

Does the Post Office Department intend to ask Senator Azellus Denis to make an inquiry into those robberies?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

EXTENSION OF HOSPITAL INSURANCE INTO COMPREHENSIVE HEALTH INSURANCE PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister, in addressing the federal-provincial conference, suggested that the government of Canada was prepared to withdraw from the hospital insurance field in return for giving to the provinces a certain abatement in personal income tax. I want to ask the Acting

Prime Minister whether this means that the government has now forsaken any idea of extending the hospital insurance plan into a federal-provincial, comprehensive health insurance plan that will cover all health services.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend would agree that as the conference is now dealing with matters having to do with health and welfare, it would be desirable to await the return of the Prime Minister, which I anticipate will be some time tomorrow afternoon.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as this is the 32nd day of this session I wonder whether I could ask the Minister of Justice, in his capacity as house leader and chairman of the striking committee for the standing committees of the house, when he might be in a position to announce the membership of those standing committees.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we will convene the committee at the first opportune moment and appoint the committee membership.

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Associate Minister of National Defence. Your Honour requested me to put an urgent question on the order paper, which I did on February 27, and I have not as yet received a reply.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): I will look into the matter, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED "HANSARD" CORRECTION BY MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I make two short corrections in Hansard? I do so only because confusion might be created. In Hansard of Monday, March 30, on page 1574, column 1, in line 4 of the middle paragraph, "we" should be "he".

Then on page 1576, the same date, column 2, the middle of the column, the phrase "One man against the truth" should be "Just standing for the truth".

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in connection with the correction to Hansard offered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, which he did with rapid-fire speed, perhaps in the hope that nobody would notice it. But I turned up the the page, and as reported in the second column of page 1576 the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said:

One man against the truth.

I saw that remark in the blue sheets which were handed to me along with material of my own which I had to read. Now the hon. member is attempting to correct this for some reason known only to himself. I heard the statement as Hansard recorded it, and as I heard it, it was directed against me. But in Hansard it reads as though directed against the hon. member himself. Now he wants to change it. I suggest that Hansard stands as it is now, "One man against the truth", and with the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in front of it.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, in opening his remarks just now, accused me of making this correction in a rapid-fire manner so that no one would notice it. If I wished to make a correction without anybody noticing it all I would need do is to go to the Hansard office or to send back my proof sheets so corrected. It was precisely because I realized that this was a correction to which the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre might take objection that I made the correction publicly in this house. It is my recollection that what I now say I said is what I did say the other night; but if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre wants to make an issue out of it and wants to have a vote of the house on it, I do not mind. Perhaps the best thing to do is to let the whole exchange between us appear in Hansard as a question of privilege and let the readers sort it out for themselves.

Mr. Speaker: I think the exchange speaks for itself.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

METHOD OF PAYMENT OF TROOPS IN CYPRUS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Could the minister assure the house that Canadian soldiers stationed in Cyprus will be paid in Canadian money and not in U.S. money?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): According to the department's policy, our forces are paid in the currency mostly used in the country where they are serving.

Mr. Pigeon: In what currency will the Canadian forces be paid?

Mr. Dupuis: In Diefendollars.

Mr. Pigeon: The dollar devaluation was an excellent thing for the Canadian economy.

In what currency are they being paid?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister going to reply, or is he taking the question as notice?

[Translation]

Mr. Cardin: Up to now, Canadian troops have been paid in United States currency, but they will draw their pay in Cyprus' currency as soon as possible.

ARMOURY GUARDS—REQUEST FOR VETERANS PREFERENCE IN APPOINTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of National Defence the other day whether he would give the house information on the status of the guards who had been hired in the armouries. I wonder whether he has the information now.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not received it as yet.

TRANSPORT

HEARING ON ABANDONMENT OF CANADA SOUTHERN LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister indicate whether today a time and place has been named for the hearing by the board of transport commissioners in regard to the contemplated abandonment of the Canadian division of the New York Central Railway known as the Canada Southern Railway Company?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): No, sir.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of External Affairs, vote No. 1e.

Mr. Churchill: No, we are still on agriculture, the big item.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, when the house adjourned last night I believe we were on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, vote 172e. Since there are only four items left I wonder whether we can complete them before we go on to the other departments.

Mr. Favreau: If I failed to tell any of the hon. gentlemen opposite that the government intended to proceed with the estimates of the Department of External Affairs first, then that is my error and I beg to be excused therefor. But if we cannot proceed with them today we will have to proceed with them tomorrow, because I understand the minister may not be available tonight.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I think most of us were of the opinion that we were going to continue with agriculture. Personally I have no objection; it was just the way in which the Chair was calling the items.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, may I just explain so the committee will not be under the impression that the leader of the house is not taking hon. members into his confidence. I had asked, because I cannot be here tonight and perhaps for part of this afternoon too, that we might take my supplementary estimates first. My request was based on the possibility that we might not be here tomorrow, but as that is apparently not the situation, we can proceed with them later. But I did want to explain so that the committee would not think the house leader was not acting in the best of good faith.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1e carry?

Mr. Churchill: No, Mr. Chairman. This is not my understanding at all, unless I am completely—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is quite right. I had just explained, Mr. Chairman, that as there is some disposition not to go ahead with external affairs today—although I had hoped we could—in view of the timetable I think we ought to proceed from where we finished last night.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

172e. Special—Estimated amount required to recoup the agricultural commodities stabilization account to cover the net operating loss of the agricultural stabilization board, including loss resulting from revaluation of inventory, as at March 31, 1964, $122,235,000.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would care to give the committee a breakdown of the amounts included under this item, which represents the bulk of the supplementary estimates of his department. I think the committee is entitled to an explanation of it.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam mentioned that possibly there might be some reason why the supplementary estimates were so large in some departments. I recognize the fact that the agriculture estimates represent over half of the total supplementary estimates, and this is due to the way in which the stabilization payments are handled.

There is a "guesstimate" in the main estimates as to how much will be required by the Department of Agriculture under the stabilization act. Since the commencement of this act the amount required by the stabilization board was always included in the supplementary estimates.

The amount of $73 million in vote 172e represents the total sum required under three different programs, and the difference of $48 million is due to a suggestion by treasury board that the payments be handled in a different way. They suggested that the amount of butter, butter solids, butter oil, and that type of thing, carried in the inventory should be shown at their market value. Therefore this is shown as a loss in the inventory and is a much truer picture than used to be the case when the cost price was included in the estimates. Therefore the difference between the $122 million and $73 million, approximately $48 million, which is required under the act is a revaluation of the inventory plus storage costs.

The hon. member is asking what this covered. There are three different ways in which the stabilization board operates. The first is the purchase of agricultural commodities at prescribed prices. This method is commonly known as the offer to purchase. The products we handle by the offer to purchase method are creamery butter, cheddar cheese, cattle, oats not under the Canadian wheat board and barley not under the Canadian wheat board.

The second method of support is the deficiency payment method. Products supported by deficiency payments are eggs, hogs, sheep, lamb, sheep wool, honey, soybeans, sunflower seeds, sugar beets and wheat not under the Canadian wheat board. This would be wheat grown other than in the prairie provinces.

Then the third method by which the stabilization board handles some products is by the payment of subsidies. The subsidy payment program covers milk for cheese, milk for butter, butterfat content of cream, dried casein and caseinates and tobacco. The total amount being appropriated is $122,235,000. I would be glad to give a picture of the inventories if this is what the hon. member wishes.

Mr. Jorgenson: This is what I asked.

Mr. Hays: In so far as butter oil is concerned, that is butter that was converted into butter oil in 1958, we had an estimated 2,124,468 pounds still in storage throughout the year. We sold 1,562,478 pounds and the loss amounted to $1,042,675. This was the amount of the loss on the 1958 butter oil. The 1959 butter oil amounted to 30,244,506 pounds, and of this we were able to sell 13,984,170 pounds. The loss was $9,448,661. In 1960 the inventory for butter oil was 47,179,352 pounds and sales amounted to 6,283,280 pounds. The loss amounted to $4,821,793.

I could go on and give all these figures, but if I may summarize the whole picture, including the amount of canned cuts and canned hams that still remain and that go back I think to some time in the sixties, it amounts to a loss of $6 million. The losses on this amount of inventory total $27,824,982. This refers to the program under which we purchase products.

In so far as deficiency payments are concerned, we supported eggs, wool, sugar beets, honey and that sort of thing. The net losses on eggs for 1959-60 amounted to only $37. The loss on wool for 1962 production year amounted to $29,912. The total including all the deficiency payments for 1963 amounted to $700,000, and that is for lamb, wool, and that sort of thing. The payment for sugar beets amounted to $720, which is down this year because of the high prices for sugar. I believe the floor price is $13.80 a ton, and I believe that even in Ontario the producers received something over $15 a ton. In so far as honey is concerned, the deficiency payment amounted to $75,000. The total cost for deficiency payments on milk used for cheddar cheese amounted to $4,301,297. Under the program in so far as butter was concerned, that is butter selling to the consumer at 64 cents, the support for the producer under this program cost us $11,947,372, plus $22,408,921, and for dried casein the cost was $1,878,520. The total amount was $41,353,027.

When you take all the program that I have just mentioned, the total amount was $73,776,260. The difference between this amount and the $122 million, is the change of inventory which amounted to $48,458,986. I could give you the picture for all commodities.

Mr. Thomas: Would it be possible to have these figures included in Hansard today?

Mr. Hays: I can see no reason why they should not be included in Hansard if the hon. member so desires.

Mr. Thomas: I suggest that this be done.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree to have these figures included as part of the remarks of the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Danforth: May I just question the minister a little further on this inventory? I am not clear on this. The minister referred to the revaluation of the inventory and this loss of $48 million. Does this mean that if these products were offered for sale there would be this loss, or can the minister give me more information about this revaluation of the inventory?

Mr. Hays: Probably I could best explain it this way. Take 1958, and we find the butter oil inventory amounts to 561,990 pounds. Our sales of butter oil were made at something over 27 cents, 27½ cents. Last year, if my memory serves me correctly, we had 81 million pounds of butter oil. Throughout the year we were able to sell, along with some we lost in the fire, something like 18 million or 19 million pounds. The remainder of that amount of butter oil, about 61 million pounds, is now valued, or the 1958 part of it is valued at 27 cents. This would be the seaboard price, possibly on board ship. We wrote it down at $398,000, and 1959 was written down at $11 million. The same is true of butter solids. The estimated selling price is 52 cents a pound, and if we moved any butter, as we did into the United Kingdom this year there would be a further loss if we were to receive less than 52 cents a pound. But at the moment the butter oil in storage is valued at 27 cents per pound or some such amount, and the butter at 52 cents a pound.

Mr. Danforth: In effect this is just a book or estimated loss of roughly $48 million and not a real loss.

Mr. Hays: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Thomas: There is another point I should like to clear up. Last evening I asked if the amount of $122 million included the consumer butter subsidy. The President of the Privy Council said no. However, from the minister's explanation today I gather there is about $41 million for the consumer butter subsidy involved in the amount of $122 million.

Mr. Hays: Probably the President of the Privy Council did not quite understand the information I gave him. This $122 million includes all programs as well as the write-down. It includes all programs as well as inventory adjustments.

Mr. Thomas: And this goes all the way back to the beginning of operations under the stabilization act?

Mr. Hays: No, this is for the year 1963-64.

Mr. Thomas: And only for 1963-64.

Mr. Hays: Yes.

Mr. Douglas: If I understood the minister correctly, the breakdown of this $122 million is roughly something over $73 million for deficiency payments—

Mr. Hays: Of one kind or another.

Mr. Douglas: I do not think there is any need to question those. They are a very good investment in providing agricultural stability. The balance is some $48 million in inventory losses on agricultural products in storage.

Mr. Hays: And the operating charges.

Mr. Douglas: Yes. I wonder whether the minister has a breakdown of how much of the $48 million is due to price changes and how much is due to spoilage or loss of the actual products themselves. Would it be all due to price changes?

Mr. Hays: I think this is correct. There probably has been some spoilage. We lost some in a fire, of course, and in canned pork and that sort of thing there has been some spoilage, but other than that there has been very little spoilage up until this time. This is why we were so very anxious to start moving some of the butter oil that has been on hand since 1958. The butter that we have sold has been very well received.

Mr. Douglas: I take it there is no breakdown as between the loss due to spoilage and the loss due to price changes.

Mr. Hays: No, there is no breakdown.

Mr. Langlois: With regard to the spoilage resulting from the fire, if I remember correctly the minister gave some figures not too long ago. Was the loss by fire in that particular storage in the millions of dollars?

Mr. Hays: I do not remember the total amount involved in that fire. There was not too much that we were able to recover because the product was in the form of butter oil and it was almost impossible to put the fire out. Most of it was destroyed. We did sell some of it that was not fit to restore. I do not have the exact figures but I will be glad to get them.

Mr. Douglas: Does the stabilization board carry insurance on products in storage?

Mr. Hays: No.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I had a question along the line of the one just asked. I understand that the minister has no definite figures with him with regard to the fire at St. Denis Sur Richelieu. I also wanted to ask him about insurance. Why does the government not have insurance on these stocks?

Mr. Hays: I suppose it would be because the government of Canada is the largest business in Canada and probably the feeling is that the government should carry its own insurance. Certainly this would seem a very sensible approach to me. Earlier in the year I did give exact figures as to the amount of butter destroyed in the fire, the amount that we were able to recover and so on.

Mr. Ricard: I think the minister is going a little too far when he says he has given all the figures. I think at the time he did not have all the figures, and this was the reason I was prompted to ask the question. I would appreciate having the figures at a later date.

Mr. Hays: I will look into the matter and give the hon. member all the figures.

Mr. McIlraith: I think I perhaps owe an explanation to the hon. member for Middlesex West. Last night a question was asked by the hon. member for Huron relating to this item, and in answering it I pointed out there were two different parts to the item, one having to do with the loss on actual purchases and sales and the other having to do with revaluation. I related the subsequent question to revaluation. It will be noticed that the question asked by the hon. member for Middlesex West followed a question asked by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings while I was dealing with the subject of revaluation of inventory. His question appeared right after my remarks but it was actually asked while I was speaking, and I related the butter subsidy question to the question of revaluation. I am sorry if my answer in any way misled the hon. member, but that is how it came about.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister if it would not be the proper thing to insure the butter in the warehouse at St. Denis Sur Richelieu. I know for a fact that the people there are quite concerned. They fear another tragedy which could be the cause of great loss. For instance, the butter oil, as it did the last time, could go down the drains and block all the drains of the municipality. The municipality are quite interested in this matter, and they would like to have an assurance from the minister that he intends to do all he can to make sure that what happened last fall will not again threaten this village. I should like very much to have the minister give me his assurance now that he will look into the matter and will do all he can so that the people of my riding, particularly those of the village of St. Denis Sur Richelieu, will be reassured.

Mr. Hays: I would be very pleased to send a directive to all people who store butter in Canada telling them to be sure not to have a fire.

[Mr. Hays.]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question of the minister in French.

[Translation]

Was the storage plant which burned down at St. Denis Sur Richelieu owned by the government? I understand that there is no insurance in the case of government buildings. So, I should like to know whether this St. Denis storage plant was the government property?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: I could not answer that with certainty. My understanding is that it did not belong to the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, if the storage plant, which was burned down did not belong to the government—and I understand that the government was paying so much a pound for butter stored—and if the facts prove to be true, I think that the person, or the company, which owns the storage plant has a measure of responsibility to the government whose products it stores.

If, for instance, a company takes my goods in storage, I shall assure myself before handing them over that the company is covererd by insurance to protect those items stored on my behalf. It seems to me, therefore, that the government should also before paying out many thousand dollars in storage costs, see to it that the firm, or the person who owns the storage plant is insured, because it is not up to the government to take up insurance on products it wants to store.

That is the government's responsibility. The government should see to it that its products are duly insured when they are stored elsewhere than on government premises.

[Text]

Mr. Hays: I would be glad to look into the mathematics and pass them on to my hon. friend. I suppose there would be many different rates, with one rate for the storage of butter, but this is a situation concerning the storage of other things. I would be glad to give the hon. member information in some detail as to why the government does not pay insurance. It is probably cheaper not to pay it, and I can't tell him what it would cost to pay it.

Mr. Vincent: That was not exactly the question. The question is why the owner of this storage plant is not paying insurance on the stock he is putting in storage for the government, because he is paid so much a pound to store this stuff.

Mr. Hays: In this case it certainly was not carried at his risk. He would want a different rate if it were carried at his risk.

Mr. Ricard: The minister will remember that at the time of the fire at St. Denis I kept in close contact with him. I was asked many questions by the village council of St. Denis and he and I exchanged quite a few letters and also held many conversations. I would now like to ask him whether he has received a resolution from the village of St. Denis asking help from the government for that municipality, due to the excessive expense this municipality had to undertake because of the fire?

I want to tell him that the people there are under the impression that it is the responsibility of the Department of Agriculture to give the necessary protection because this was material belonging to the government, and it is the government's responsibility to see that no damage is done to the municipality.

Mr. Hays: If the request has come into the department it has not been drawn to my attention yet. I am quite sure the storage people were paying real property tax and supporting the fire department, and the city probably felt it was their responsibility. I know that when I was mayor of the city of Calgary we would welcome the government storing things in our city and we would take a chance on looking after fires. That is what fire departments are for.

Mr. Ricard: But that is a big city compared to St. Denis.

Mr. Moore: I would like to ask the minister how much less money was paid out to producers of milk used in evaporated and condensed milk plants since the 25 cents a cwt. subsidy was removed?

Mr. Hays: I do not believe I have that exact figure. We did not pay the subsidy on the milk that went into the manufacture of condensed milk or for soft cheeses, but we did pay a premium, not 25 cents but 30 cents, on milk used for the production of cheddar cheese. Those engaged in the production of soft cheeses had to bid for this milk and the producer received the same amount as the cheddar producer. I gave those figures yesterday.

If the hon. member is speaking of soft cheeses, the amount the manufacturers had to pass on to the consumers would be about half a cent for each small can, and it was less than 1 cent a pound on soft milk cheese. Therefore in order to get milk the people supplying the producers of soft cheese and the condensers, had to bid against the cheddar milk buyers and they passed this on to the consumer. The d.b.s. figures I gave yesterday indicated that the price of milk to the producer has increased in every province.

Mr. Moore: Well, naturally the price of distributed milk could be up because that is controlled by no one but the local provincial boards, but with respect to the condensed factory which I have in mind, and with which I am closely connected, they have raised the price of milk on their own to compensate for the loss of the 25 cents, and they naturally had to raise the price of a carton of condensed milk cans to the consumer. However, the rise in price was not enough to compensate the actual producer for the 25 cents a cwt. he had formerly obtained, and I cannot see that this constitutes a rise in the price of milk.

Mr. Hays: Our d.b.s. figures do not indicate this. They indicate the producer is receiving more for his milk than he did a year ago, including the subsidy.

Mr. Moore: It may be only in the one area.

Mr. Hays: The d.b.s. figures cover all of the areas although there may be regional spots where possibly the price of milk was somewhat lower, but if producers were good operators, for the most part right across Canada they received more for their milk.

Mr. Ricard: I have here a copy of an invoice for a 3.3 test for Mr. Gilbert Bergeron of Ste Rosalie who sells his milk to Carnation, Waterloo. For a 3.3 test on June 15, 1962, his price per 100 pounds was $2.89. For a 3.3 test on June 15, 1963, his average was $2.80 per 100 pounds, in other words 9 cents less than when the Conservative government was in power. Of course, if the minister is going to compare a 3.3 test with a 3.5 or a 3.6 test he will certainly arrive at a greater amount for 1963, but I ask him not to compare a calf with a bull.

Mr. Langlois: I wish to speak on the question of insurance for the storage of butter and cheese, which was raised by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot.

May I ask the minister whether he does not consider it good reasoning to insure this particular government property in the same way as all other government property is insured. It might not be often that we experience such a fire as the one to which I referred, but once is enough, and I should like to know whether the minister is considering taking out insurance coverage in respect to such premises. I do not see why the government should take the risk of sustaining such heavy losses.

Mr. Hays: The policy of the government as it has existed, as I understand, for years and years is that no government property is insured, for the reason that the risk is so widely spread and the amounts involved are so high. I know many cities which do not carry fire insurance on their buildings for similar reasons. Certainly, we could insure against such damage as the hon. member referred to. But if we consider the costs involved—90 million pounds of butter, 61 million pounds of butter oil—and add the fact that it was costing us until recently $350,000 a month to carry storage charges, it becomes apparent that it is probably cheaper for the government to carry its own insurance on the stock than to insure it.

Mr. Peters: This is a very large item and I think the minister is to be congratulated on the clear explanation he gave, though the breakdown is still difficult to follow. There have, in the past, been suggestions that when items of this nature are set down in the estimates they should be broken down into divisions which make them more easily understandable. This particular estimate involves almost half the total supplementary estimates asked for and it includes most of the deficiency payment items, the subsidy payments as well as revaluation.

These, I would point out, are in unrelated fields. On one hand, there are two forms of making subsidy payments. On the other, there is revaluation. I think they should be kept separate. Those who are interested in agriculture in general wish to know how much is being spent on deficiency payments and to what extent agriculture is being subsidized through such payments. Not only those engaged in agriculture should have this information; I think the public as a whole should be aware of it. The vote speaks of an amount required to recoup the agricultural commodities stabilization account to cover the net operating loss of the agricultural stabilization board, including loss resulting from revaluation of inventory. In my opinion we are dealing here with two entirely different matters. Revaluation of inventory must reflect a change of attitude on the part of the government toward this particular question. We have always been concerned about the disposal of inventory and I should like to know if there has been a change of thinking about the way in which these surplus products should be disposed of.

When the Liberal party was in opposition, their spokesmen on agriculture came out strongly against the selling of canned goods which had been held by the government for a lengthy period of time to the companies which had originally produced them. Objection was taken because such products were then sold on the market at their original prices. This is what happened in the riding of Burnaby-Coquitlam last year after a large transfer of inventory had been made in very suspicious circumstances. Well, the Liberal party were at that time much opposed to practices of this sort and it seems odd they should now bring in an estimate, thrown in together with a stabilization fund item, indicating that there has been a revaluation of inventory involving sales. I am sure the committee would appreciate a much more precise breakdown in connection with some of these controversial items, because it might then be possible for us to deal with these questions in a much more intelligent manner. I do not blame the minister, because he has nothing to do with this matter. But his department has, and all departments of government have an obligation to honour commitments which have been made. Those commitments have to be honoured by the civil servants. I am sure there are a number of them from the Department of Agriculture sitting in the gallery this afternoon. I charge them—and I think the charge is a good one—that they split these items up so that they are more intelligible and really portray what the estimates represent.

Even those who are very familiar with the workings of the Department of Agriculture would have difficulty in understanding what these figures refer to, and though I do not congratulate the minister very often I think he should be congratulated on the knowledge he has shown on this subject and the manner in which he has explained the subjects covered by this vote. However, it seems to me that the department has done a very poor job of breaking this item up and they should really do better if members of parliament are to have some understanding of the operations of the Department of Agriculture.

I think that before the main estimates are brought down the minister should explain to us what changes have been made in this inventory. If we add the two figures which have been given us we arrive at a total of $73 million, representing the amount paid in deficiency payments, subsidy payments and revaluation. I point out that there are a number of subsidies, or payments, which are I think handled in a different way from payments made with respect to such items as tobacco, milk, cream, casein products, and the rest. The picture is not very clear, and one of these days the committee will have to be given a much better account of how we are handling the commodities which we are collecting and subsidizing.

I should like to know whether the minister has anything to add to what he said about the disposition of canned products. Some of them have been in storage for so long that I think their value has been eaten up by the cost of storage.

Mr. Hays: I wish to thank the hon. member for his kind words. I also wish to say a word about my department. I am perhaps one of the most fortunate ministers in the cabinet in that I do have an outstanding group of civil servants. Perhaps it was my fault that I did not make a better distribution of the breakdown. It is all in the annual report of the stabilization board, and possibly I should have had this report distributed to all members, knowing that the supplementary estimates were coming up for consideration.

Canned pork which we still have in stock amount to 503,352 pounds and we value them at $227,968; canned hams account for 1,969,054 pounds and they are carried on the inventory at $1,076,284.

Mr. Peters: Are any of these goods being disposed of by selling them to the companies which had produced them for distribution by those companies?

Mr. Hays: I do not wish to mislead the hon. member, but I think most of the canned goods have been tentatively sold on an option basis to firms awaiting an opportunity to sell them. This was arranged some years ago and now we are cleaning up. Today pork is supported under a deficiency program, so we do not have to buy it as such. When the price falls below a certain point we make a deficiency payment to the hog producers.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I realize it is a little early to ask about this, but has any consideration been given to disposing of our canned meat products and shipping them to the armed services overseas, in Cyprus for instance? I do not suggest that we should revive the bully-beef program of the first world war, or anything like that, but hon. members will recall that a few years ago small cans of pork were put on the market and those which carried the government of Canada label were a very good buy. I think most housewives missed these products when they were taken off the market. They were not a substandard grade of product but were an excellent grade. It might be possible for us to utilize some of these products for our armed services, military hospitals and some of the other agencies and dispose of them in that way. This would be a disposal at the market cost of the product.

I would suggest that we take a look at some of the ways in which we have been disposing of these products in the past and substitute for them other methods that will eliminate the surplus without causing havoc in the particular industries concerned. At the same time we could provide a product that would be sold on its true valuation. In other words, instead of writing off, in this case almost $500,000 in our inventory, we could utilize the products that we have and would probably recoup this half a million dollars. It would seem to me this idea is well worth investigating.

We would not like this to be the sole diet of the troops, or anything of that nature; but I would think some of these products could be utilized in this manner. We could arrive at a much better method of disposing of them than has been the case in the past.

Mr. Danforth: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, it is because I do not understand this matter thoroughly but I am still rather disturbed about this revaluation of inventory when it deals with a sum in excess of $40 million. The minister has stated that this in itself can be characterized as a book loss and this loss will not be accrued by the government until the stock is moved. In other words, we have over $40 million put down here as a charge when, in effect, it is not a loss until this stock is moved.

Furthermore, if my understanding is correct this $40 million is based upon the present market value of the inventory as compared with the value when these things were purchased. I believe I am right in this. In two months the market value could change upward 10 per cent or 20 per cent, or downward 10 per cent or 20 per cent, which would mean that this estimated inventory loss in excess of $40 million would be very wrong. I hope the minister will give us a little more detail on this matter. I would like to know why, in regard to this particular estimate, this new system was introduced, this change in policy, which in effect gives us $40 million that can be played with in the manipulation of the figures of the Department of Agriculture, because it is not a loss until this product is moved or sold.

Mr. Hays: I think it is quite a normal procedure in accounting practice to deal with something at the market value or the lowest cost. It is just the same as on any statement. If bonds drop $10, you value them accordingly and suffer a loss; and if they go up, you have made some gain. I think this was the thought treasury board had in mind when they asked the Department of Agriculture to take another look at the stocks they were holding.

Mr. Danforth: Can the minister say why this was done, Mr. Chairman? I am interested in this matter.

Mr. Hays: I suppose, Mr. Chairman, because it is good accounting practice; this is probably the main reason. It shows a much truer picture. We have disposed of some 18 million pounds of butter oil, as I said, at around 27 cents a pound. With regard to the butter oil remaining, the cost of storage is now valued at this amount. We are selling butter at 52 cents a pound; the solids, or butter, are valued at 52 cents a pound. When you add what it costs to store it, and so on, the amount is considerably higher. I do not think this has been a true picture, and I think that today we have given a very true picture of the stocks now held by the Department of Agriculture.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 172e carry?

Mr. Churchill: No, Mr. Chairman; this is a very interesting point. Would it not be wiser to bring in a supplementary estimate much later this year, after these products have been moved? Why do it in advance of the disposal of the products? Supposing the butter oil is not sold at all; what do you do with the $48 million in the interval? Is it available for other uses, or will it be returned to the receiver general?

Mr. Hays: I think that to show a true picture in 1965 we should revalue this inventory and add the cost of holding these commodities. If the price is up, we will indicate that our stocks on hand have gone up in price. If there is some loss, I think we should indicate that. I think this gives a true picture to the Canadian taxpayer. He knows how much we have stored and what it has cost us to store it.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, the minister is aware of the fact that the agricultural stabilization board has not put out its annual report for this year. Is he in a position to tell us if there was a surplus in last year's operation, or a loss, taking into consideration the question asked by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.)? Can the minister give us this information, in terms of last year's operation? Does the report show a loss or a profit in this regard?

Mr. Hays: This is the figure I gave, Mr. Chairman. It cost $73 million for the stabilization board to do business last year. This is for the support in connection with the three different schemes under which they support these various commodities, plus the breakdown of the inventory, which is an additional $44 million approximately. This gives us an operating loss for the fiscal year of $122 million.

Mr. Peters: My question is in terms of the over-all picture. We are only dealing with the supplementary.

Mr. Hays: No, this is with regard to the whole operation of the stabilization board. It has always been done on supplementary estimates, because I do not think you would know the position at the beginning of the year. It is a sort of "guesstimate" in the budget as to how much money the stabilization board will require for the coming year; but it has always been handled in the supplementary estimates. I think the hon. member has a very good point in this connection, and before this question is discussed we should distribute the agricultural stabilization board report so that hon. members will be more familiar with what has taken place. From time to time last year I said we would be supporting lamb at so much, we would be supporting sugar beets at $13.80, and so on. Some of this support was at 80 per cent and some was at 100 per cent. I think we should have the report of the board before we discuss this matter.

Mr. Peters: How have we made the payments so far? What is the financial arrangement that permits these payments, because certainly some of this $122 million has been paid to date. For instance, the $73 million must have been paid over a period of 12 months at so much a month. How did we get the money to pay these things? Have we a revolving fund for the stabilization board?

Mr. Hays: This is done under the authority of the statute. For instance, we support hogs. We did not pay anything out in respect of hogs. With regard to lamb, for instance, we paid out $700,000. We pay this direct to the producer after he has marketed his lambs to the commission or packing firm. This is done after they have been graded because they are supported on a grade basis. This is the procedure under the stabilization act.

Mr. Peters: What I am wondering about is the technique of getting the money. This $122 million includes the $73 million, which is the total amount. This is the final windup of the account. Have we provided for a revolving fund?

Mr. Hays: Yes, we have a revolving fund of $250 million.

Mr. Peters: What is the state of the fund now? What is the balance in the fund? Does the $122 million bring it up to $250 million?

Mr. Hays: I do not exactly know in what position the fund is now but I am not getting any letters from people who have not been paid. I hope these might pass tonight because we are going to be about $73 million short.

Mr. Baldwin: I want to speak about a matter which appears later, but am I not correct in pointing out that these items are put in the supplementary estimates—possibly the President of the Privy Council can bear me out on this—as a result of a recommendation made by the public accounts committee in 1961, so that there would be a peg on which details could be provided before the money was spent? In other words, this is an estimate of a probable loss, and it permits members in this committee to discuss government policy which results in a loss of this kind before the money has been spent. Following the year's operations I assume there will have to be another item to cover the exact amount spent.

I think the report of the public accounts committee recommending this policy was filed a year or two ago. I assume that normally this item would be in the main estimates, in which case there would be an opportunity for a fruitful debate at a later date. Perhaps that may be confirmed.

Mr. Hays: I want to thank my hon. friend for explaining this much better than I could. I am just a farmer from southern Alberta.

Mr. Baldwin: And I am just a farmer from northern Alberta.

Mr. Hays: In essence the hon. member is exactly right.

Mr. Danforth: May I ask two further questions. Is this the first time an inventory loss has been recorded in such a fashion, and second can we expect this to be an annual policy on the part of the government from now on?

Mr. Hays: Yes. This inventory will now be computed from market prices.

Mr. Langlois: May I refer back to the question from the hon. member for Timiskaming and the answer of the minister concerning the $250 million revolving fund. Is this $122 million taken out of the revolving fund or just the $73 million? If so, how do you put it back?

Mr. Hays: I should get my hon. friend from northern Alberta to explain this. There is provision made for a $250 million revolving fund. We have this amount to work with and to support all of the programs under the stabilization board. What we are now doing is recouping some of this amount. We have not used all of it but it is a revolving fund. It operates similar to section 88 of the Bank Act, where a farmer can borrow money through a short term loan, pay back some and borrow more.

Mr. Langlois: What I want to know is this. Is the $122 million taken out of this fund, or is the $44 million taken out, or just the $73 million?

Mr. Hays: It all goes back into the revolving fund.

Mr. McIlraith: It is going into it.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that what the minister has said cannot be correct for the simple reason that what we are doing is revaluing the inventory. You cannot put the $48 million into the revolving fund because you did not take it out. Certainly the inventory must be separate from the revolving fund. If not, then we have been discussing two or three matters under this item which are not compatible.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, might I just attempt to explain this. The $250 million figure includes the inventory. The fund has an amount of $250 million in it and the inventory is bought out of this. Therefore your inventory value plus the cash on hand at the end of the year equals $250 million. If you value your inventory down by $44 million you have to put this amount back in cash in order to bring the value of the inventory plus cash on hand up to $250 million.

Mr. Langlois: Then at the moment there is only $73 million, because $44 million relates to the selling price of these products. At the moment you are therefore talking strictly about cash.

Mr. Hays: The present state of the agricultural stabilization board finances amounts to $250 million less $122 million, less the current inventory of $63 million, which leaves $65 million.

Mr. Peters: Well, may I just ask for the assurance of the minister that when he brings in the main estimates there will be in future a breakdown in the supplementaries which will probably accompany the main estimates so that this procedure is more easily understood, because this is obviously quite a complicated financial arrangement. There are another three items here which are similar, and there should be a breakdown of each one so that the picture is much clearer to hon. members.

Mr. McIlraith: There is a breakdown of this item available, and if I have permission I could have it inserted in Hansard. I think it, together with the two sheets filed earlier today, gives all the detail asked for by the hon. member.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister give a general indication of this document before he asks that it be placed on the record?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. The production year and commodity is in the first column and the estimated inventory at March 31, 1964 follows. That shows the number of pounds or as the case may be. Then the unit purchase cost is shown; then other costs such as storage; then the current inventory; then the current unit market value; then the calculated inventory value; and lastly the estimated operating and inventory loss. These columns are then totalled and a figure of $9,800,000 odd is arrived at for storage charges. Each column is totalled, and the estimated inventory loss amounts to $48,458,986.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What were the storage charges?

Mr. McIlraith: In round figures, $9,880,000.

Mr. Danforth: Does that give us the same breakdown and detail on the values themselves or on the operating loss?

Mr. McIlraith: It shows item by item in detail.

Mr. Danforth: The complete inventory?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. I think this should answer all the questions asked.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that this information be printed in Hansard as part of the minister's remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

173e. Estimated amount required to recoup the agricultural products board account to cover the net operating loss as recorded in the account as at March 31, 1964, $1,018,400.

Mr. Peters: This is another vote that requires some explanation of what we are carrying on account of the agricultural products board, and what were the losses?

Mr. Hays: This is the estimated amount required to recoup the agricultural products board for the net operating loss up to March 31, 1964 in the amount of $1,018,355. Perhaps I should read the explanation. The inventory of skim milk powder as at April 1, 1963, was 13,357,977 pounds, and purchases from April 1 to December 31, 1963 amounted to 22,167,224 pounds. Other costs amounted to $64,685. Sales to December 31, 1963 which included 7,036,039 pounds supplied to the Department of External Affairs for international relief purposes accounted for $3,322,988. You will remember when the hurricanes and that sort of thing were taking place, this relief was granted. The balance of skim milk powder to December 31, 1963 amounted to 3,875,099 pounds valued at $406,852. Anticipated purchases from January 1 to April 30, 1964—you will remember we are dealing with the figures to December 31—900,000 pounds, and inventory as at March 31, 1964, this is estimated, 3,875,099 pounds valued at $406,852.

The cost of the whole program, that is costs of sales and donations, amounted to $3,322,988. The recovery from external affairs, they gave it away and repaid us, amounted to $490,380, so our loss on the whole transaction amounted to $951,950. There were expenses amounting to $30,405, making a total of $982,355. The anticipated further loss on sales from January 1, 1964 to March 31, 1964, this is another estimate, is $36,000. This gives us a net operating loss as at March 31, 1964 of $1,018,355.

Mr. Danforth: May I ask the minister if in this particular instance there was any revaluation of the inventory, whether it was included in this $1 million, or was included in the other vote? Has any revaluation been carried into this farm products board account?

Mr. Hays: In this particular case, I do not believe there has been any revaluation of inventory. I do not believe there was any revaluation carried in vote 172e.

Item agreed to.

174e. Estimated amount required to provide for the operating loss of the Farm Credit Corporation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, $1,377,000.

Mr. Doucett: I should like to ask the minister for an explanation of this amount of $1,377,000 for the Farm Credit Corporation for the fiscal year just ending.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Hays: The amount of money the Farm Credit Corporation has lent to farmers is substantial. We lend it at 5 per cent and this loss of $1,377,000 is the difference between the price that the government has to pay for the money they lent to the farmers and the cost of operating. This is in the neighbourhood of 1 per cent or something like that. In other words, we may be borrowing money at 5¾ per cent, so it is costing us about a half of one per cent to operate.

Mr. Doucett: I should like to ask the minister if there is any breakdown of the amount of operating costs or the amount of difference between what is paid for the money and what is received for it?

Mr. Hays: Well, I can give the hon. member those figures, or if he wishes we could have them printed in Hansard. The interest on earnings amounted to $14,900,000; the accrued interest on loans from the government of Canada, $13,200,000; appraisal, supervision and legal fees cost $500,000; salaries and employee benefits, $2,767,000; travel, $306,000; office accommodation, $215,000; office supplies and services, $199,000; provision for depreciation, $37,000; miscellaneous, $53,000. Subtracting the earnings we come up with a net operating loss of $1,377,000.

Mr. Doucett: Has there been any change in the method of bookkeeping within the last year, such as was explained in connection with one of the former items?

Mr. Hays: No, there has been no change.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I deny the remarks made a few days ago by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) with respect to the Farm Credit Corporation.

The hon. member for Lapointe was misinformed and has been unfair to this corporation which, in my opinion, does excellent work and has a very able staff.

At the time the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister amendments were made to the Farm Credit Act.

We may say today, that, due allowance being made, the Farm Credit Corporation is lending just as much money in the eastern provinces as in the western provinces, but prior to the amendment to the act, it was very difficult for the eastern farmers to obtain loans from that corporation.

For the information of the hon. member for Lapointe, I wish to point out the fact that the province of Quebec and the maritime provinces, due allowances being made, have obtained as many loans, if not more, than the western provinces.

As far as the province of Quebec is concerned, we find that it is in a special position, being the only province with a farm credit organization of its own.

The hon. member for Lapointe has been unfair, I would even go so far as to say dishonest in respect of the federal Farm Credit Corporation, which does not practice discrimination in any province of the country, and I want to pay tribute to its devoted staff for performing excellent work in the interest of the farmers.

[Text]

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I think that the Farm Credit Corporation is still under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture. I note that there is a loss of $1,377,000 brought about by the difference between the interest rate of 5 per cent charged to the farmers on the money they have borrowed and the rate of more than 5 per cent at which the government has to borrow money. What is the minister's personal opinion? Would he say that the rate of 5 per cent should be changed to balance out the loss, or would he be of the opinion that the rate to farmers should remain at 5 per cent as it is now?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, the government is unanimous in anything it does, of course, and as this is a matter of policy anything that the government does will be announced at the proper time.

Mr. Rapp: As the minister is from the west I should like to suggest to him that the rate should not be changed from 5 per cent to a higher figure.

Mr. Baldwin: Reduce it to 4½.

Mr. Ricard: I should like to ask the minister a question. Has he at hand the figure showing the number of farmers who did not meet their obligations in regard to loans they have made from the government? If he has, can he give a breakdown showing how many there are in each province who have not met their obligations?

Mr. Hays: I am sorry I do not have that information. I know the number is very small, almost negligible. I also know that the United States lends a great deal more money to farmers under their plan, and the number there who do not meet their obligations is also almost negligible.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I want to make only one or two comments. This is a large item and having regard to the way it is listed anybody looking at it might well think that the farmers are not repaying the money they have borrowed, and that as a result there is a loss of more than $1 million. The minister mentioned that this amount included legal fees, and this reminds me of something I have wanted to say for a long time. In my part of Ontario politics are being played so far as the Farm Credit Corporation is concerned. It was only a matter of a few days after the government changed when the lawyers in charge of these loan transactions were also changed. I think this is a disgraceful situation. I have no interest at all in these people.

An hon. Member: They were the right ones in the first place.

Mr. Peters: My friend can say that maybe they were the right ones in the first place, if he likes. I am not going to say whether or not these lawyers are competent, but I am finding that there is just about as much trouble in getting things done by the Liberal lawyers as there was with the Conservative lawyers.

Much of the delay taking place with regard to farm credit loans is the responsibility of the legal people involved in searching titles and arranging for sales. I believe that the changing of lawyers on a political basis is not advantageous to the farmers. The Farm Credit Corporation must be a non-political organization if it is going to function satisfactorily, and it must retain the services of the best lawyers available, whether they be Liberal, Conservative, N.D.P. or Social Credit in their political philosophy. What we are interested in is their legal capabilities, not their politics.

Anyone can check in my riding and he will find that what I am saying is true. This disgraceful action took place with the sanction of all the lawyers. I met several of them and they were laughing about the fact that the lawyers had been changed. The result was that transfers already in progress were held up for many months because new lawyers had been appointed on a political patronage basis to handle them.

I suggest this is one thing that the minister should investigate because it does not lead to satisfactory operations. In my opinion it makes the government look rather silly when it plays around with political patronage in a professional field. It adds insult to injury to those who expect legal people to act in an impartial way. How can they be considered impartial, how can farmers be expected to trust them if they know that they are only political hacks who are getting a few beans from the government by way of legal fees?

I hope this matter is given some consideration and that the responsible senior civil servants will quit playing the cheap, political establishment politics that many officials in the Department of Agriculture have been prone to play for a long time. Such conduct leaves a bad taste in the mouths of the farmers in my area who were in the process of obtaining loans and then found that politics in the legal profession had interfered. A number of them came to me and complained.

I am quite happy to say that in the main the members of the legal profession in my area do not advertise their politics. I would find it very hard to say what the politics of most of them are, but it is very easy to realize that politics have entered into the matter when one sees the lawyers being changed a few days after the election and loans being held up because of this action. I am not suggesting it has meant a million dollar loss to the Farm Credit Corporation, but I do suggest it has meant a loss of prestige to the department and the Farm Credit Corporation, and it is not to their credit.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make one comment. In so far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned we have one thought in mind and that is the servicing of the farmers. With regard to the Farm Credit Corporation, I can assure the hon. member that there are going to be more changes if the farmers are not serviced with greater dispatch than they have been in the past.

Mr. Peters: It does not have to be on a political level at all.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, my question has been partially asked and partially answered, but as a strong booster of the Farm Credit Corporation, which the previous government initiated, I want to emphasize again the very good repayment record of the farmers. I wish the minister could give us some indication of just what the small percentage of loss is in that regard and also enlarge on the operating loss, because in the last report of the Farm Credit Corporation it says:

> Costs of salaries, office accommodation, and other operating expenses increased from $2,466,717 in 1961-62 to $3,186,399 in 1962-63.

If there was a similar increase last year in the costs of salaries, office accommodation and other operating expenses I would think this would account for most of the operating loss. Would the minister explain if that is the case?

Mr. Hays: This is not exactly so. In 1962 the Farm Credit Corporation had loans amounting to $304,423,000. As at December 31, 1963 the amount was $320 million and it has increased since that time. The cost per $1,000 of loan has not substantially changed. There have been increases in salaries for all these people working for the Farm Credit Corporation and this has to be taken into account in the increased costs.

Mr. Pascoe: I have one more question with regard to the annual report. The minister said that a substantial part of the operating loss was accounted for by the difference between the interest rate on the borrowings from the Minister of Finance and the interest rate on loans to farmers. In the annual report it is stated:

> To finance its lending operations, the corporation borrowed the following sums from the Minister of Finance during the fiscal year: $26,000,000 at 4½ per cent interest...; $11,500,000 at 5¼ per cent interest...; $22,500,000 at 4¾ per cent interest—

Most of the borrowings were at a rate considerably below the 5 per cent interest charged on loans to the farmers.

Mr. Hays: It costs about 1 per cent to operate.

Item agreed to.

175e. Estimated amount required to recoup the prairie farm emergency fund to cover the net operating loss for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, $1,940,000.

Mr. Baldwin: I wish to take a few minutes on this, as I think I am entitled to, being a farmer from northern Alberta who helped to get a farmer from southern Alberta out of the bog in which he appeared to be. While last year was a good crop year generally in western Canada, in the Peace River country we sustained very serious crop losses, one of the few years that has happened.

As a matter of fact I think the Minister of Agriculture was up there, doubling in his capacity as a governor of Rotary—

Mr. Hays: And minister.

Mr. Baldwin: —yes, and minister. I may say I found it hard to distinguish sometimes between his Rotary and his political discussions. However, as a result of this crop condition, in the Peace River country we have had almost every type of loss, loss as the result of drought, loss due to too much water, frost, crops covered by snow, and so on.

Mr. Knowles: What about Social Credit?

Mr. Baldwin: This is a blight which we have been suffering under for a long time. Under the previous administration we made benefits available to a great number of people under the P.F.A.A. aid program. At the time we did this it was pointed out it was a matter of trial and error, and further changes would possibly have to be made. In addition, we introduced the Crop Insurance Act which was to supplement P.F.A.A., but in Alberta the provincial government has not seen fit to introduce the provisions of the Crop Insurance Act.

I may say here, parenthetically, that the people of this area have had the utmost co-operation and assistance from the staff, the inspectors, supervisors and the superintendent here in Ottawa. I have had great help from them, and so have the farmers. It has not been a case of administration, but I am suggesting that because of this condition it is an opportune time for the minister to take a look at both of these pieces of legislation which are designed to dovetail together. I suggest that in the north country we have a cross section of all the losses and all the problems which can be met by farmers, and the minister should have his officials take a look at the results which have occurred when the final figures come in after the P.F.A.A. aid program is completed, and apply their direction with a view to coming up with recommendations for changes.

What was done was excellent. In fact, if I recall correctly, the number of people who can be served under P.F.A.A. has been doubled; but now it is apparent we will have to supplement this program, as was intended when it was introduced. I would urge the minister to use this area as a model, and come up with suitable recommendations dealing with the joint program of the Crop Insurance Act and the Prairie Farm Assistance Act to provide changes which we will require in western Canada.

Mr. Peters: Are there any further developments in the hearing concerning a director and one of the members of the house, in relation to P.F.A.A.?

Mr. Hays: I would not be able to comment, as I think this inquiry is still proceeding.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business as provided in section 3 of standing order 15.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that perhaps we could suspend private members' hour and go on with the discussion of my estimates, as I cannot be here tonight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we suspend the private members' hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. Is it agreed that we take the external affairs estimates?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

1e. Departmental administration including the expenses of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization ministerial meeting in Canada, May 1963, $56,000.

Mr. Peters: We have waited for a long time for an opportunity to hear the minister report. If he does not say something now, there would be no point in our waiting for another time in the future when he would be available.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think we are all here not so much to hear the minister but to get the estimates through. However, I am willing to answer any questions, if my hon. friend has some. This particular item arises out of the net shortage in our communication services for the fiscal year 1963-64.

Mr. Starr: Is that for Washington?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, this is our communication services all over the world, including NATO. The main estimates for 1963-64 included $1.3 million for telephones, telegrams and all other communication services. The shortage results from a heavier volume of messages from our embassies all over the world.

The expenses of the NATO ministerial meeting held in Ottawa in May, 1963, exceeded by $24,000 the original estimate of $380,000 provided for in the supplementary estimates for 1963-64. That represents the amount asked for in this first item.

Mr. Howard: I would like to spend some time to express a point of view about the NATO organization. I have always looked a bit askance at our participation in NATO because of its structure, and because of the fact that for some years it has rested almost entirely upon the military basis, that being one of so-called massive nuclear retaliation. In fact that has been the situation since 1954.

If memory serves me correctly, the Liberal party was in office at the time of the formation of NATO when article II was put into effect, providing that NATO might be an international organization which would concern itself with economic advancement of the various NATO nations. While there have been general references to this purpose, nothing has been done in a determined way to move NATO from its military concept into one of economic co-operation and activity, except references made by delegates who attend the annual NATO parliamentary conferences. Delegates from all parties in this house have attended those conferences, and have found that parliamentary delegates from other countries on many occasions expressed great concern about the necessity for transforming NATO into an organization for economic co-operation and advancement, or least expanding the participation of NATO in the economic field. I think it is perhaps 15 years —this year is the fifteenth anniversary of the formation of NATO—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The anniversary will be on the fourth of this month.

Mr. Howard: The minister informs me, and I thank him, that the fifteenth anniversary of NATO will be on the fourth of this month, a few days hence. Well, even though this was the great thought, the great anticipation that Canada had when it entered NATO, namely that NATO could be used to promote economic activity among various members of that organization, so far we have not made any step in that direction except as far as the parliamentary conferences are concerned, and their recommendations have not been heeded. To me, this is unfortunate. I am one of those who believe that the major threat which the communist nations present to the western world is a threat which arises from economic strength, not from military power. A few years ago, about 1957, the price of aluminum on the world market dropped tremendously. There was a curtailment in the expansion program in Kitimat in my own constituency, and a decline in aluminum production in North America and in other countries of the western world generally. After it was all over it took a year and a half or two years to realize what had happened. What had happened was this: the Soviet union had, in effect, dumped a volume of aluminum on world markets, undercutting the world price as it existed at that time, and the United Kingdom, an importer of aluminum, bought Soviet aluminum. This brought the world price down and resulted in an economic recession in that industry in the western world. The Soviet union took the action it did for a special reason, not because it had a surplus of aluminum but because it wanted to drive the world price down so that it could buy up the surplus aluminum in other nations in the western world at a price lower than existed then on the world market. This illustrates the type of damage which can be done to the economy of the western world by communist nations depending on economic measures rather than on military strength.

I see the Secretary of State for External Affairs nodding his head. I hope because of his years in the house, his prestige and his experience, it is a nod of agreement with what I am saying. It makes me feel even more confident that I am on the right track than I would normally be.

It seems to me in these circumstances that what we must do is make sure that NATO is an organization which works to the mutual advantage of the nations participating in it. And I believe this advantage must come directly through economic activity and co-operation. It is true we have a free trade community, the sixes and the sevens, the organization for economic co-operation and development, and the like. But all of these have been superimposed upon the various nations of NATO and it seems to me that if article II is really to mean anything we must make far greater progress in its implementation.

Canada is in a special position to urge that this be done because, regardless of the fact that we now have nuclear warheads on our soil, we are still a non-nuclear nation. We do not produce nuclear weapons and I hope no one has given any thought to our producing them. In any event, we are not large enough to do so; we have not the finances at our disposal—perhaps that is the only thing which prevents us. In any event we are not a nuclear nation now, and because of the prestige we enjoy we could bring some pressure to bear on other countries in NATO to transform it into an organization for the economic development of all the participating nations. I should like to see this take place. I know the minister would like to see it. I know the Prime Minister would, too, because he was one of those responsible for article II being placed in the NATO charter. I am sure there is no one in the house who would disagree with the concept that NATO should be used for the economic advantage of the various nations which compose it, as well as of others, but up to the present time nothing has been done about it and it is for this reason I am reluctant to endorse the concept of NATO, not because of the potential which exists but because it rests exclusively on the so-called massive retaliatory nuclear force of the United States. To me this is detrimental, and a handicap to what we are trying to do in the councils of the world.

I do not think I should go much further now into this aspect of NATO. I wish merely to make known these views which are purely personal, and which may or may not represent the views of anyone else in the committee. But I would very much like to see the government take all possible steps open to it in the various ministerial meetings, in the NATO council meetings and in the parliamentary conferences to drum away at this view that we have far more to gain by co-operating economically than we have by co-operating in a nuclear or military way.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if the minister would care to take advantage of this item in order to bring us up to date on events in Cyprus. In particular, can he tell us what the hopes of mediation are on that island?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): First of all, may I say to the hon. member for Skeena that I listened with interest to what he had to say and, as he had mentioned, I have indicated that with regard to the basic proposition that he outlined, I am in accord.

However, I think the hon. member would wish me to point out that it was never the intention to transform the North Atlantic Treaty Organization from a military into an economic alliance. As he says, article II of the treaty is one to which Canada attaches a great deal of importance. Both the present administration and the government headed by the Leader of the Opposition have always stressed our view that economic co-operation between the members of the organization was vital to the unity of that body, as well as being in the interests of the participating members. Nevertheless, article II, though an important article, is only one of the articles of the treaty. NATO was conceived as an alliance to provide for the defence of its members in the face of the intransigent position taken by one of the great powers in the United Nations. This intransigence resulted in a number of the members of the United Nations, particularly on the western side, being placed in a difficult position vis-à-vis the armed might of the Soviet union. There continues to be a need for the maintenance of this alliance in spite of the improved position which now exists as between east and west, particularly since the events of a year ago last November. I think it is only correct to say that there has been a very great improvement in the consultative processes of NATO during the last few years and particularly since the establishment of the organization for economic co-operation and development—the organization to which the hon. member for Skeena directed our attention—which is better known by the letters O.E.C.D. It is an organization that provides for the members of NATO, and certain European members that are not in the alliance, and for Japan which was admitted to the O.E.C.D. with the support of Canada when the right hon. gentleman was head of the government of this country.

In addition to the O.E.C.D. we have the Kennedy initiative for an improvement in the co-operative economic measures as envisaged by the President of the United States, and by other countries. Since that initiative was launched we have all endeavoured to improve the economic consultative processes and the economic welfare of the countries in the alliance and those not in the alliance which are members of the O.E.C.D. So that much of what was intended by article II—I do not say all—is now being done by O.E.C.D. and under GATT, particularly following the initiative of the late President of the United States.

I may say to my hon. friend that last November I attended for the first time a meeting of the O.E.C.D., which is directed by the former minister of finance of Denmark, the well-known economist Mr. Kristensen, who will be known to some hon. members of this house. I can say, from that experience and from continuing experience, that some of the work contemplated by article II is being very vigorously pursued by the O.E.C.D. In addition, of course, economic strategy vis-à-vis the Sino-Soviet bloc, to which my hon. friend so ably directed our attention, is discussed on a continuing basis in the economic advisory committee of NATO. My hon. friend may be sure that on that committee Canada, through its spokesmen, is vigilant in the pursuit of the objectives which are implicit in article II to which he attaches such importance and to which Canada under this, the preceding and former governments, has attached great importance.

But, Mr. Chairman, I would not be discharging my obligation as Secretary of State for External Affairs if I left the impression that there was not in the opinion of the government a continuing need for Canadian support and participation in NATO. There are, of course, differences of method being pursued by some members of the organization. There is, however, no basic difference as to the ultimate need and purpose of the alliance. Canada believes that it is in the interests of her defence at the present time to continue wholeheartedly in support of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Our defence is predicated on the existence of this organization as much today, in the face of the present level of armaments, as at any time since the organization came into being.

With regard to the question put to me by my hon. friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, when I was in Geneva a few days ago attending the United Nations trade and development conference I took advantage of the presence there of Secretary General of the United Nations, U Thant to discuss the participation of Canada in the international peace keeping force in Cyprus. There was also an opportunity to discuss this question with Mr. Spinelli, head of the United Nations in Europe and the secretary general's representative in Cyprus, and with Lieutenant-General Gyani, the distinguished Indian soldier to whom has been entrusted the command of the United Nations peace keeping force. There was an opportunity, during these discussions, of conferring on matters inevitably involved in an operation of this kind. The discussions had to do with the establishment of the terms of reference to be extended to the forces by the United Nations, the directives to the force commander and the role that the United Nations force would play in this whole operation.

The secretary general will be reporting one of these days to the security council. It is not possible for me, in the interests of the assignment that has been given to Canada and to other participating members in the United Nations force, to reveal the full directives. However, I am satisfied, and so are my colleagues and the other participating governments, that the arrangements thus far established for the operation of the force are designed to make effective the functions of the force in Cyprus. At the same time, they take into account the understandable interests of the participating countries, which at the present time include the United Kingdom, Canada, Sweden, and the forces from Finland and Ireland. In the case of Sweden, Ireland and Finland, the full complement of participating forces has not reached the island, but forces are coming every day from these countries. As they join Canadian and United Kingdom forces there is, in accordance with the security council resolution, a withdrawal of British forces, which will reduce to a total of 3,500 as compared with the total of 7,000 British forces in Cyprus when the force became operational last Thursday.

I saw the secretary general a week ago Sunday night. I discussed with him, not only the matters to which I have referred in a general way, but also the desirability of a mediator being appointed at the earliest possible moment. Under the terms of the resolution passed by the security council on March 13, the full authority for the appointment of a mediator resided with the secretary general, but he consulted with a number of countries including Canada. We made known our views to him, since he asked for our advice. While our concurrence in the appointment of the distinguished Finnish diplomat, a former prime minister of Finland, was not essential, his well-known qualities in the field of diplomacy and mediation seemed to us, as they did to others concerned with the island of Cyprus, to indicate that he would be the kind of man to whom this very difficult task could be entrusted.

The arrival of Canada as a member of the force was greeted with gratitude by all sections of the island of Cyprus, notwithstanding some stories in the paper only yesterday that some criticism was made. There was general relief on all sides about the establishment of the force. Because we were the first to arrive, great satisfaction was expressed at the decision of Canada to participate in the force, and to do so on terms which did not demand any financing of our participation out of the resources supplied voluntarily by a number of countries, notably the United States and the United Kingdom.

The other day Archbishop Makarios welcomed the United Nations commander and spoke with gratitude of the presence of the United Nations force in Cyprus. It is significant that a vice president who represents one of the other communities on the island also expressed directly to the commander—as indeed he did directly to the Canadians—his satisfaction at their presence and his assurance of co-operation. This is, as was pointed out by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam when we discussed this question a few days ago, a difficult operation, and we were wise to anticipate that the difficulties may be greater than they now seem to be. However I hope this anticipation will not be justified. We are ready, and we indicated when we joined together in supporting the decision for Canadian participation, to face the dangers which it is anticipated may lie ahead.

I am satisfied that the force went to Cyprus at a crucial time. We decided to participate in this force the day after Turkey indicated her dissatisfaction at the conditions prevailing on the island. I had an opportunity when in Geneva to discuss this matter in greater detail with Mr. Erkin, the foreign minister of Turkey. He expressed his country's satisfaction that the force had been established and that Canada was participating in it. I also had an opportunity when in Geneva to discuss with one of the ministers of the government of Greece matters involved in our participation. I need only report to the committee that the same satisfaction and gratitude was expressed by the government of Greece. So that we have all of the official bodies on the island, in Greece and in Turkey which have an interest in the preservation of order supporting our participation in this United Nations force.

Just to make my story complete, I should add that when the Minister of Industry was in Athens the other day attending the funeral of the King, at my suggestion he discussed this matter with the foreign minister of Greece. This was before the establishment of the force. I am grateful to him for doing so, and as a result of this discussion we were able to take some steps which led to a decision.

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that many in Canada are interested in the operation of this force. At no time would I take umbrage at questions related to the directives or the terms of reference given to the United Nations force, not by Canada but the United Nations. Once we joined the force, we recognized that we belonged to a United Nations body. My first meeting with General Gyani impressed on me that this commander of the United Nations force was, obviously and from his record, a very distinguished soldier. I am sure he is also a wise man who understands the delicate command which has been assigned to him. I know that he will discharge his responsibilities in a way which will assist the United Nations force in its endeavour to maintain peace on the island.

The functions of the force are different from the functions of the mediator. Under the terms of the security council resolution, there is no relationship between the two except the obvious one, which would be nonlegalistic. The United Nations force is a police body sent to Cyprus by the United Nations for the purpose of preserving order. It will be the function of a mediator to do what he can to unravel the regrettable and tragic differences which prevail between the two communities. We still have problems. I will not be expected to reveal the nature of these. What we all want is to see a force which will preserve order, and I would not want to add to the problems of the United Nations peace keeping force in any way as a result of any comments or responses I might make. I simply remind the committee that both with regard to the terms of reference and the directives which have been issued, we are satisfied that they should enable the force to discharge its obligations as effectively as circumstances on the island will permit; and thus far they have permitted the fullest and most effective operation of the force.

With regard to the status of forces agreement, that has not yet been finalized but the attorney general of the government of Cyprus has given the secretary general an assurance that we may count on the kind of status of forces agreement which existed for the United Nations force in the Congo. It took some three and a half months before that status of forces agreement was concluded.

Finally, in answer to my hon. friend's question may I say that the United Nations presence through this peace keeping force is essential. I am also satisfied, from all I know about this matter, that the participation of Canada is essential. I am satisfied that if Canada had not taken the decision which it did, we might have been faced with a situation which would have been much more serious—and I will not elaborate on that. I conclude by saying that this operation continues to be in the tradition of Canada under all governments so far as peace keeping obligations to the United Nations are concerned.

The method of financing this operation is by no means satisfactory. As the right hon. gentleman said when he spoke a few days ago, as a result of the ad hoc financing arrangement in this particular situation we may have established an undesirable precedent. I hope not. I believe there was a precedent before, in the financing arrangement for the less important but very desirable observation mission which is now operating in the Yemen, in which Canada plays a part.

The three months duration of the term of this force in Cyprus will come to an end three months from the day when the force became operational, and that was a week ago tomorrow. At that time, under the terms of the security council resolution, the force must come to an end unless in the interval the security council has renewed the authority of the secretary general.

I should like to think that the situation in Cyprus would improve by that time. I have no reason to believe it can or will improve sufficiently to warrant the withdrawal of the force. At that time, regrettably, the United Nations may be face to face with a situation similar to that which existed when this force was being considered prior to March 13. I hope that this whole experience in Cyprus, more particularly in Cyprus than in other similar situations, will cause the nations of the world to recognize that if there is a détente at this time in the relations between east and west, that can only be furthered by giving the United Nations which is the only available body for this purpose, the opportunity of providing for the kind of police forces that are essential in situations such as Cyprus.

I conclude by saying that this country need not have any second thoughts, in my judgment, about the wisdom of the course it took in the establishment of this United Nations peace keeping operation. Our participation was essential and we are honoured to discharge this function alongside countries like Sweden, Finland, Ireland and the United Kingdom and the forces of Cyprus, both communities. All this is designed for the purpose, not of imposing a political solution upon the people, but of preserving the peace in that very important and strategic area until a solution is found.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, in the few moments between now and adjournment, I want to assure that others shall have an opportunity of expressing their views, and therefore I am going to restrict myself to a few observations. I thank the minister for the outline of the views of the government based on his experience at Geneva following conversations which he has had with those whom he named. I know General Gyani very well. There is no one in the military world who, I believe, has the same capacity and ability to discharge a difficult and delicate position such as his. I saw him in operation in the Middle East command. He has not only military capacity, but above all he has that diplomatic finesse that enables him to communicate with those under his command, and also the people in the area in which the force operates.

I need not say, however, and I am sure the minister will not take this as criticism, that while the outline he gave was eloquent and couched in grandiloquent language, the information which he provided did not equal the diction which he used. He has told us nothing about the directives. I realize that it would have been within his discretion—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no discretion on my part. If I were to give those directives I would be violating the request of the United Nations itself, as well as the agreement amongst the participating countries. I am sure my hon. friend, who had important experience with the Congo, will understand why I am saying this.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I cannot argue with that. When the minister says he has been advised not to give any information in this connection, I would be the last to ask him to depart from that admonition he has received. But it does impress me as being extraordinarily strange that Canada, contributing an 1,100 man force out of 7,000, should not have available to her people the basis, the general basis rather than the particular directives, on which the force will operate.

What is to be its role? In general, it is to be a peace keeping role. However, we do not know the circumstances under which it is to be discharged. Questions have been asked as to whether there would be power in the force to disarm guerrilla bands and the like. We have no information in that connection. It is not for me to conclude that the view held in some quarters is actually the correct one.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

But generally speaking, the criticism that has been made of the force is this: It is a powerless force. I should like the minister to outline in general terms, keeping strictly within the circumference of the areas upon which he can give precise information, what is the authority of this force? We know what its purposes are. We know its objective is to maintain the peace until a permanent settlement can be secured. But surely Canada, making a contribution not only of manpower but also a large monetary contribution to the United Nations force, should be entitled to more information than the minister provided today.

Reading the editorials across the country, there is a feeling among the Canadian people as a whole, that Canada is entitled to more information than has been given as yet. I am not going to say any more in that connection. The minister, in general terms has spoken of the hope that the force will achieve peace, and that the United Nations will have available at all times a force to be used when the circumstances demand international action for peace. We believe that, and the minister was fair enough in his remarks to refer to the government of which I had the honour to be the head. We made available this force, the Royal 22nd, as the force which could be used at any time Canada decided a United Nations force should be dispatched. We believed that was necessary. This force, therefore, was available when difficulties arose in Cyprus which demanded that a force be sent there. Inasmuch as Canada took the lead in providing a trained force for the purpose of assuring mankind that Canada would play her part in peace keeping operations at any time under the United Nations, surely we are entitled to more information than we have had today.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my right hon. friend permit me to interrupt. I know he does not want to give a wrong impression. Will he not agree that when the Congo force was established and when the government of which he was a member agreed to participate, the same position was taken by the government of that day as I have taken today? In the light of events at that time, it was the correct position, I am sure. There was no revelation of the directives to the force then. I say to the right hon. gentleman that we are not taking this course because we do not want to give information. If we were to give this information, we would not be contributing to the reason for which the force was established which was to try to bring about an accommodation and preserve the peace in the very difficult situation that exists.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I do not accept the analogy at all. The Congo situation was quite different. I am speaking now from recollection but I do not believe that there was any question whatever at any time as to the directives upon which that force operated not being made available.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They were never made public.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman says they were not made available.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And should not have been.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We clearly stated what the purposes and powers were and the force discharged its authority in pursuance of the information we gave to parliament which was based on the arrangements made. I cannot understand the reason for the secrecy here. What possible reason is there why a force sent as a peace force should operate in a vacuum of secrecy?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no secrecy. My right hon. friend should not say that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The situation apparently is that the people of the nation which has contributed this force are to know nothing else but that a contribution was made in men and money. No one is to know how the force will operate and what the concept is upon which it will discharge its responsibilities. I must say that the words of the minister in that connection do not impress me. I feel we ought to have more information than is available to us in the newspapers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would my right hon. friend—I know he has been very generous with my interruptions—allow me to call his attention to the statement made by General Gyani himself as found in the Times of London of March 28 and reported in these words:

> On the question of what directives had been received... and what orders were being given... General Gyani could not, or would not, give any precise answer.

The reason is the reason I mentioned. I ask my right hon. friend—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the minister with the greatest of attention—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right. I am sorry.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and I also maintained silence, but the minister does not like what I am saying. Certainly General Gyani is not going to reveal that. General Gyani is the general in command of all the forces. We are here in the parliament of Canada and our hands are not tied in the way that the general commanding these forces would find his hands tied. Certainly I know what General Gyani said, but I am not speaking to General Gyani. I am speaking to the Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada in the parliament of the country, and I am asking what the general directives are and how this force is to discharge them. Certainly the comparison between the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his own parliament and the general chosen to command the nationals of four or five countries blended together in the United Nations force is quite out of place. I do not want to keep the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam from having an opportunity to speak and that is the reason I conclude for the time being.

Mr. Douglas: I should like to thank the Leader of the Opposition for giving me a moment or two to say something. I wish to make two comments with reference to the outline which the minister has given. First of all, with reference to NATO, I do not have the time now to discuss this matter in any detail but I should like to say that I cannot agree that O.E.C.D. has really taken up the role which was assigned to NATO under article II. I think a much wider role was envisaged, a role of economic aid to underdeveloped countries, and in my opinion O.E.C.D. so far has not carried out this role to any reasonable extent.

Second, I had hoped that the minister would give us some information about the proposed multinational nuclear force because, while we in this party have supported NATO as a military alliance set up to provide a deterrent against Soviet aggression in Europe, the fact remains that a nuclear force under the command of NATO would in our opinion present a series of difficulties which we think would make it necessary for Canada to reappraise its whole association with NATO. I will not elaborate on that at the moment.

Let me say one word with reference to the Cyprus situation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Of course we are not participating in the multinational force.

Mr. Douglas: I should like to know whether or not we are going to participate, whether we have been invited and to what extent we have committed ourselves. This is what I was hoping the minister would say, and if he does not do so on these estimates I hope he will say something on his main estimates.

If I may take a moment I should like to say something about Cyprus. I agree with the minister that Canada has good reason to be proud of the role she is playing. May I also say that the minister himself has played a commendable role in helping to bring about this force, and all Canadians are proud of this fact. But I think what has been said by the Leader of the Opposition is something which the government must take cognizance of. This parliament dispatched troops to Cyprus, and while we are heartened to have from the minister the assurance that the government is satisfied that the terms of reference and the directives are satisfactory, it should be remembered that the people of Canada have committed their sons and their treasure to what may be a battlefield. Therefore I think we have a right to know that they are amply protected and that they will not be hamstrung by the directives.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I may assure my hon. friend that they will not be hamstrung and the directives do not permit that.

Mr. Douglas: This is what we would like to know. Is it true, as has been reported, that they will not be allowed to remove roadblocks?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the situation.

Mr. Douglas: The newspapers have reported that they will not be allowed to remove roadblocks. Troops cannot move in mechanized vehicles unless they can remove roadblocks and drive away any military forces that insist on restricting them. Second, I think the whole question of disarming guerrilla forces ought to be cleared up. If this is going to be left entirely to the Greek government, does this mean that the Greek government is going to disband only Turkish guerrillas and leave Greek guerrillas armed, or under the subterfuge of taking them into the national militia to allow them to roam about the country? What is the position of the United Nations force if it sees guerrillas attacking defenceless villages and helpless men and women? Can they intervene or are they there purely as a showpiece? Are they in a position where they can not only defend themselves, but can also intervene to prevent civil war?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure my hon. friend would not want the country to get the impression that they cannot defend themselves. I assure my hon. friend that the directives will enable them to defend themselves to the full. I must say to my right hon. friend, the former prime minister that, knowing the responsibilities of government and knowing the situation in Cyprus, what he said today was not calculated to assist in the discharge of that very difficult assignment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I say to the hon. gentleman that that statement is uncalled for and improper, and indicates that in order to get away from answering he resorts to that subterfuge.

Mr. Douglas: Out of the three minutes I had, Mr. Chairman, the Leader of the Opposition and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have taken one and a half, so I suggest that we call it six o'clock.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am very sorry. I would be agreeable to go on.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

L27e. To authorize the Minister of Finance, notwithstanding the Unemployment Insurance Act, to credit, on such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine, to the unemployment insurance fund such sums as may from time to time be required by the said fund; the aggregate of the sums outstanding at any one time not to exceed $55,000,000—To extend the purposes of vote L27a of the estimates for 1963-64 to cover requirements in the fiscal year 1964-65, $1.

Mr. Knowles: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a brief statement in explanation of this request to authorize the Minister of Finance to credit the unemployment insurance fund such sums as may from time to time be required by the fund, the aggregate of the sums outstanding at any time not to exceed $55 million. This is the purpose of vote L27e of the estimates for 1963-64 to cover the requirements in the fiscal year 1964-65, and that item will be found in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964.

The unemployment insurance fund at the end of the fiscal year closing yesterday had a debit balance of $4½ million. As we know, the heavy months for disbursements are the months of April and May, when disbursements from the fund usually outrun the income to the fund. Therefore the purpose of this particular item is to authorize the Minister of Finance to make loans to the fund to tide it over the period of the next two months, and as the requirements of the next two months are made known by the treasury officers of the unemployment insurance commission, the requests will be made by the commission for these advances.

I may add that the necessity for making this request arises from the longstanding condition that has prevailed within the fund, namely the excess annually of disbursements from the fund over income to the fund, and if one wishes to examine the situation for each of the fiscal years from 1957 to the present time, he will realize that each year there has been a substantial drop in the fund.

I think I ought to put these figures on the record because they indicate the cause of the situation with which the fund is faced. For example, for the fiscal year 1957-58 the fund dropped $130 million. In 1958-59 it dropped $235 million; in 1959-60 $134 million; 1960-61 $181 million; 1961-62 $118 million; 1962-63 $57 million, and in the fiscal year which ended yesterday the drop was $14 million, the least by a long shot of the lowest of the preceding years I have mentioned.

The fact is that the experience of the fund over the past year has reflected the improved employment situation and an improved labour market situation. For example, in the past six months the benefit payments from the fund have declined, in comparison with the year preceding, by something like 14 per cent, and the contributions have increased by a significant percentage, 4 per cent over the comparable six months of the preceding year.

Notwithstanding these improved circumstances within the fund, the accumulated inheritance of the preceding years, combined with the $14 million drop last year, has resulted in a debit balance of an estimated $4½ million for the fiscal year ended yesterday. In order to make our payments for the next two months we are asking the house to authorize this particular item. We expect that as income reaches an excess over disbursements in the months ahead we will pick this up and the fund once more will be in the black.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, we have listened to the very short statement, delivered by the Minister of Labour in a very casual manner in order to minimize the existing situation, but it is quite evident that the fund is broke. Of course the fund went broke a number of times in previous years. This is something we all know, but there was never an attempt made to cover it up. It was always the policy to come to parliament and give a straight statement of fact, so that parliament could vote the necessary authorization to lend money to the fund in order that those receiving unemployment insurance benefits would not be deprived of them.

The Minister of Labour has the faculty of always injecting political aspects into his statements. He goes back over the years and says the fund has dropped during those years, but on the other hand we hear him saying that conditions have improved tremendously and that unemployment is not in evidence in Canada any longer. If that is so, why is it that over half a million unemployed Canadians are drawing unemployment insurance benefits?

I feel the government has pressured the committee to pass these supplementary estimates because this was the main item it wanted passed; but a lot of questions arose in our minds. It is easy to say that the supplementary estimates have been before parliament since March 6, the day they were tabled.

There was a $1 item. Surely at that time the government must have been advised by the unemployment insurance commission that the fund was running out and that authorization to lend money was needed. I would not be at all surprised if they knew approximately, or exactly, when the fund would be dry. It would have been so easy for this government to have been honest and forthright. It could have come before parliament last Thursday and said: We need this item because the fund is running out and people will not be paid unemployment benefits. But they chose another course. They chose to sit quietly and demand that the committee pass all the items, including this particular item they needed. Now the cat is out of the bag. This is what the government wanted the committee to pass. This is why we are dealing with the unemployment insurance item today.

It is obvious that yesterday, when a question was asked so innocently and casually by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and replied to by the Minister of Labour—

Mr. Knowles: I did not know the hon. member would regard me as innocent.

Mr. Starr: —to the effect that the fund was running out and, later on, when the Leader of the Opposition questioned the Minister of Labour about this matter, that the situation was bound to be disclosed. As recorded on page 1595 of yesterday's Hansard, the Minister of Labour said:

> —I certainly do not want to put this in a provocative way, but my information today is that unless the particular item is approved this week, the commission would be in difficulty to make benefit payments by the end of the week.

Surely to goodness the responsibility of a minister of labour cannot be left to the last minute. If the hon. gentleman was doing his job properly he would have known before yesterday that this fund was in a precarious state. Can you imagine, Mr. Chairman, the unemployment insurance commissioners calling on the hon. gentleman yesterday and telling him they were going to run out of money at midnight? How could anyone swallow a story of that kind? But this is what the government hopes to get away with. Why did this government not take parliament into its confidence on Thursday last? As I said earlier, we could have dealt with this matter expeditiously, as we intend to do today, and the house would have adjourned for Easter, and the Prime Minister's promise would have been kept. We know, today, that this was the only item which had to be passed on a basis of urgency. Why did members on the treasury benches opposite not tell us on Thursday that this was an urgent matter? They said nothing. They allowed the committee to believe they wanted all the items in the supplementary estimates passed, hoping no one would pay any particular attention to this $1 item—hoping it would pass unnoticed and that the people of this country would not have known that this fund is now bankrupt.

Mr. Knowles: But for my innocent question.

Mr. Churchill: That is right; a planted question.

Mr. Starr: What happened yesterday? The Minister of Labour has not taken us into his confidence. Did the government get another $15 million yesterday. Was this appropriated for the fund? The hon. gentleman should answer this question honestly. If so, it must have been appropriated by means of the Governor General's warrant of last year and, in that case, what is the legality of spending this amount in the present fiscal year? Have members of the government sitting opposite conferred with the Minister of Justice to ascertain the legality or otherwise of using this money which they appropriated yesterday, or is this another example of illegality such as this government is getting into the habit of displaying? We had an example not too long ago of the law being broken. Here is another.

The first information we had of this situation was when the member for Winnipeg North Centre asked that innocent question. I repeat that the government tried to conceal the fact that the unemployment insurance fund was broke, and that in doing so they gave clear evidence of irresponsibility. The question arises: Who wanted to keep this information from parliament? Who got the idea that parliament should not be told that the fund was on the brink of bankruptcy? Was it the Minister of Finance? Was it the Minister of Transport? Whose idea was it? If it was the idea of the Minister of Finance, then he went to Quebec and left the Minister of Labour holding the bag. The Minister of Labour had been selected to go to Quebec and we wonder why he is here today. Was the bag left with him—empty? The hon. gentleman now admits that they hid this situation from parliament and today, when the situation has become acute, he asks parliament for approval to make this loan.

[Mr. Starr.]

The minister should tell us now whether or not an appropriation of $15 million was made yesterday and whether it has been ascertained that the money appropriated yesterday can legally be spent during the current fiscal year. Regardless of the fumbling, irresponsible government that we see before us now, we as members of parliament have a responsibility to pass this item, so that over half a million unemployed Canadians shall not be deprived of their unemployment insurance benefit payments.

Mr. Knowles: I suppose I should make it clear at the outset that I am not an innocent abroad. I realize that when the hon. member for Ontario used the word "innocent" he applied it to my question, not to me.

Mr. Pickersgill: What is the hon. member guilty of?

Mr. Knowles: I am guilty of having asked the government and the house to schedule a debate on this item at eight o'clock tonight so that any concern or alarm which might be felt in the country as a result of yesterday's news can be allayed.

I am glad to join with the hon. member for Ontario in saying that it is the responsibility of this committee to pass this item this evening so that the people who have to draw unemployment insurance benefits can be assured positively that there will be money in the bag to pay their claims. As the hon. member for Ontario says, it was because of a question which I asked yesterday that the minister admitted that this difficulty was facing us. Hence our request today that we sit tonight, even though it is not usual for us to sit on Wednesday evenings, and get this matter cleared up.

I hope that in the course of the further remarks which I trust he will make the minister will make it clear that the passing of this item, even though it is only $1, has the legislative effect of ensuring that there will be sufficient money in the fund to pay all claims which may be presented during the period when the fund is being built up by further contributions.

It seems to me that, even though the whole question is somewhat technical, we should have a more detailed explanation than the Minister of Labour has yet given us. It has been my experience here that these $1 items are sometimes much more complicated than the items for millions or hundreds of millions of dollars. It has also been my experience that items in the estimates that legislate seem to have different results. I can recall items in the estimates, that I thought applied only to the fiscal year in which they were passed, having a continuing effect down through the years. Then on some other occasion we find that an item in the estimates that had legislative effect seems to be spent by the end of the fiscal year.

Actually we are being asked in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year 1963-64 to extend the provisions of a supplementary estimate that was also passed in the fiscal year 1963-64. I refer to supplementary item L27a, which was in the supplementary estimates "A" for the fiscal year 1963-64, which authorized the making of loans by the Minister of Finance to the unemployment insurance fund up to an outstanding aggregate at any one time of $55 million. There is nothing in the wording of the estimate L27a, which was finally passed the night we prorogued in December, that puts any time limit on the lending power provided in that estimate.

I would like to have either from the Minister of Labour, the Acting Minister of Finance or the Minister of Justice an explanation as to why this borrowing power ran out as of midnight last night, in view of the fact that there was no cut-off date in the wording of the estimate as it was passed last December. Was it because the full $55 million had been lent, or is there some other reason? I think that even though this is a technical situation, it should be cleared up. The vote that is now before us does not provide any more money. The vote we had before us last December provided $55 million and the authority to lend it. The vote tonight is merely for $1, which is the legislative symbol, but no additional money is provided.

I think this whole question of the relationship between the $55 million lending authority that we provided last December and the vote tonight should be made clear to us by the minister. If it is—and I assume it is—a fact that there is a legal requirement to get further lending power at this time, I think the minister should explain to us why he let this matter run down so close to the wire. If the government had authority yesterday to borrow money from the Minister of Finance for the unemployment insurance fund, and if there was some question as to when these estimates might get through, and if there was even some question as to whether Their Honours in the other place might stay here for such purposes as we call upon them, why did he run this risk? Why did he not borrow the money yesterday before the authority ran out at midnight last night? If I seem to be asking these questions in a critical vein, Mr. Chairman—and perhaps I intend to be critical in any case—it is because I think we should have an explanation so that we know what this is all about.

I can readily understand the concern of the hon. member for Ontario, though I am afraid I do not share his view that the matter has been concealed. After all, it has been in the supplementary estimates that have been before us for two or three weeks, and if we did not see this item ourselves, some of the alert members of the press gallery saw it and came to us and warned us what it was all about; so we have known about this matter for some time. Therefore even though it was not concealed, in the sense that it was kept secret, I think we do have a complaint that the government did not tell us the importance of this item at one of the times when we were making arrangements for the business of this house. I think the government should have told us it was planning to go down to the wire and let the unemployment insurance fund become almost empty, and were running the risk of parliament not passing this supplementary estimate; and if the senators did not stay here to give royal assent to the bill, they were running the risk of letting the fund be emptied some time this week or next week.

I think it is unfortunate that even in one night's news, as it happened last night, the alarm was spread across Canada that unemployment insurance benefits might not be payable because of this complicated situation. Perhaps more needs to be said as we go along, Mr. Chairman, but I think the main impression that should be created by tonight's debate and by the passing of this item is that this alarm can be set aside; that the fund will have money to pay the claims. But I think to this house, to parliament, the minister and the government owe an explanation. When the minister is making that explanation perhaps he will tell us at the same time what the government's plans are at this session with respect to amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act or, perchance, to a complete overhaul of that act. He will recall that when we were discussing his main estimates last November, we asked for certain things to be done at this session. He gave us a list of priorities, of certain things that were sure to be done and certain things that he would try to get done. I believe an overhaul of the Unemployment Insurance Act was one of the things promised for this session. However, it was not in the speech from the throne and so far we have not seen any legislation with respect to this matter. Surely if the fund is in this precarious position it is time that this promised overhaul of the Unemployment Insurance Act was proceeded with. As I say, Mr. Chairman, we want the main impression tonight to be one of certainty so far as the unemployment insurance fund is concerned; this is what the public must learn from what happens here tonight. But we in parliament have coming to us from the minister a very clear explanation of the whole matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, now that the various parties in the house have agreed to pass this item of the supplementary estimates, in order to enable our unemployed to receive their insurance benefits, I shall only very briefly take part in this debate so as not to draw it out unduly. I just want to make a few remarks which, I think, are called for at this time. Last year the Gill commission, the cost of which was paid with public funds, submitted a report suggesting solutions for some problems among which the one we are facing tonight, that is an unemployment insurance fund without funds.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me appropriate to stress that we did not yet see any legislation in this house to enact some recommendations in this report. Personally, I would not carry out all those recommendations, but some of them at least might have eliminated the problem before us tonight.

To my mind, Mr. Chairman, the unemployment insurance fund cannot be very long-lived considering its condition, and the rules will certainly have to be changed so that the situation which has prevailed for the past two or three years does not become permanent.

I certainly do not want the unemployment insurance benefits to be delayed because in the province of Quebec we have 173,000 unemployed at this time and in the whole of Canada almost half a million.

In my riding, more particularly with a labour force of 13,000 people, there are about 3,000 without jobs, which is almost 25 per cent.

I would hate to be one of those who would delay the carrying of these estimates, because that would delay the payment of unemployment insurance benefits to unemployed who need them badly.

My own area is very much affected by unemployment. I should like to tell the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) that the winter works program helped my area somewhat, since there are now 800 men working in my riding, a factor which eased the pressure on the fund.

However, following the ill-advised decision of the minister to shorten by a few weeks the duration of the winter works program, he will have more jobless to look after starting May 1.

That is why I am of the opinion that the Minister of Labour, following his decision to reduce the winter works period, will have to find a new formula and to set up a new program which might be entitled summer works program, since the winter works program will be closed.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, I have one observation to make about the special sitting this evening, and it is that the press gallery seems to be more alert than some of our cabinet ministers. I know the government has a habit of taking 60 days of decision, but this time they do not have 60 days. As I mentioned once before this government has a habit of bringing things up at the last moment and getting everyone in a whirl in trying to force things through without hon. members knowing what is going on. I think the minister should have some explanation to make for our sitting tonight.

One question which comes to my mind is why his commissioners have not brought to his attention this state of affairs. The hon. member for Ontario mentioned this matter a little while ago. Everybody hoped and expected to have an Easter recess, but it appears the unemployment insurance fund would have been drained before the end of the Easter recess. I imagine the minister or his commissioners were up to date. If they were not, why not, and why was the minister not told about this? The unemployed have enough trouble trying to get work, or trying to squeeze a little money out of the government, without our having to tell them that the insurance fund is broke, a state of affairs which has resulted from the government's negligence through not voting the necessary cash. In my constituency two mines closed down a few days ago laying off 600 workers, and like the hon. member for Lake St. John I would be the last to wish these people more trouble, on top of the trouble they have already, as a result of their not being paid their unemployment dues.

Across the country there are over half a million unemployed. I was saddened to hear last night over the national network that the unemployment insurance fund was in a very critical state. Similarly this evening it was sad to hear that the house has to have a special sitting after the deadline for this fund has passed so as to vote the necessary funds in the form of a $1 vote under this item. I hope that the government will not require other additional sittings for a similar purpose in connection with other fields, or that I shall not hear another broadcast on the national network indicating the government was not up to par on its business, having forgotten to do something of this sort.

Another matter which was raised by the hon. member for Lake St. John, a matter which I have brought up myself at different times—although the minister has always told the house he was taking it under consideration—concerns the Gill report which was presented some time ago. I am wondering why the government has not set up a committee to study this report. I do not approve of all of it, but there are some points in it which are worthy of consideration. In view of the high rate of unemployment in the country today every possible opportunity should be taken to reduce the figure and to help our unemployment offices across the country. I think the report has a few recommendations to make about the unemployment insurance fund, and if some of these had been put before us we might never have been faced with this situation tonight. At least, we would have passed these items before the Easter recess. Therefore I would urge the minister to consider the Gill report and to make sure he provides the necessary funds in the future, so if we do have an Easter recess we might take 10 days free of worry about whether or not the unemployment insurance fund is broke. The government should consider other possibilities which might present themselves, instead of bringing things in at the last moment. Although the members of my party are willing to sit here tonight because this matter requires discussion and clarification, it does not necessarily mean we will make a habit of it; I think everyone in our group is of that opinion. Nevertheless we are all expecting an explanation from the minister for this state of affairs today.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: I would not miss this opportunity of making some comments on the matter now before us. I think that on this matter I also speak on behalf of hon. members from the province of Quebec.

Once again it is our responsibility and the responsibility of parliament to come to the rescue of the government which manoeuvred itself in a deadlock.

I shall take only a few minutes, so that the government may get without further delay the assistance it needs so badly.

Mr. Chairman, it is in order to mention some things so that the Canadian people will be aware of what is happening in this House of Commons and of the stand taken by the government which is responsible for looking after the interests of the nation.

We have had similar situations in the past. And our friends opposite who were then in opposition could not find the proper words to qualify our lack of vision and good will in that matter.

I have before me some of the questions the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) asked when he was himself on this side of the house. I wish he were here tonight in order to recall some of the questions he then asked concerning the replenishing of the unemployment insurance fund.

In fact, when referring to Hansard of February 17, 1961, it is noted that the member for Essex East asked what step the government would take to replenish the unemployment insurance fund in order to comply with the vested interest of the eventual claimants under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

He asked a similar question as reported in Hansard of April 27, 1961. He again asked the same question on June 27, 1961, as reported on page 7111 of Hansard. On September 8, 1961, as reported on page 8108 of Hansard he asked a similar question. Finally, on January 31, 1962, once again as reported in Hansard, he asked the former minister of labour what he would do to replenish the unemployment insurance fund.

We have been led to believe by those who sit on treasury benches that they know the answers to all the problems, and as they claimed, there would be no more unemployment if they came into power.

In spite of the fine promises they made in order to assume power, there are still 500,000 unemployed in Canada, of whom 173,000 are in the province of Quebec.

No mention is made whatsoever by Liberal members from Quebec of measures that should be taken nor do we hear from them suggestions likely to help the minister to bring some relief to the unemployed anxious to work.

Mr. Chairman, I shall say no more, so as not to delay any further the business of the house and to prove that we, on this side of the house, are doing our utmost to help the present Minister of Labour to get out of the tight corner where he finds himself now.

I only wanted to remind the Secretary of State for External Affairs that when he was sitting on this side of the house, he was worrying much more about unemployment than he is at present.

If the members of the government would learn their lesson, if the fund deficiency would wake up the ministers into taking their responsibilities and the firm resolution to work more in the interests of the unemployed, I would be the first one to rejoice.

[Text]

Mr. MacInnis: I have only a few words to say on this particular matter. No one is more aware of the situation in Cape Breton than the minister, and of course I have knowledge of what the situation is there. The fact that we are dealing with this item tonight is of no importance. The important thing is that something is being done, despite the fact that on Monday evening the minister was warned it was necessary to make this move. The information he gave to the house was given in response to a question by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The importance of this matter was brought to his attention quite clearly on Monday evening.

I say this because I am most anxious to see that the thousands who are unemployed in Cape Breton will be entitled to the benefits that are due to them. In addition to that, I should like to remind the minister of the situation in Cape Breton today where the miners of district 26, numbering 7,000 in all, are now idle because of a strike. The miners are idle because the mines cannot be served with the necessary hoppers to carry away the production. I should like the minister at this time to clear up the question of whether or not those who refuse to work at a strikebound plant qualify for unemployment insurance. This question was brought up some time ago. I am quite sure the answer is that a man who refuses to enter a strikebound plant remains entitled to these benefits.

The railway unions are involved in this same dispute because their constitution does not require them to cross over any picket line. They are also, therefore, unemployed and are not aware of the situation in respect of unemployment insurance. These men are honouring their contract and, at the same time, are honouring the idea that no union man shall cross a picket line. I believe these men are qualified to draw unemployment insurance benefits because their contract calls for them to protect life, limb and company property. On this basis, these men have not crossed this picket line so I feel they are qualified to draw unemployment insurance benefits. I hope the minister has brought to the attention of union officials the request I placed before him, and has answered the union officials in that vein.

I would say also that it is fortunate we are able to sit tonight as a result of a change of mind on the part of the members of the N.D.P. who were not willing to sit this morning, but who were willing to sit this evening to deal with this very important question. A change of mind is always good. Yesterday they were unwilling to forgo private members' hour but today, to satisfy the legitimate request of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, they changed their minds and we did deal with government business during private members' hour. I would implore the minister to look closely at the situation in Cape Breton and the qualifications of the miners and the railway workers to draw on their unemployment insurance. I ask that everything be done to expedite this matter in their interests.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. McIlraith: There is one point arising out of the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that I think should be clarified and that is an explanation of the need for the vote in this form. If hon. members will read the item in supplementary estimates (A), they will see it reads as follows:

To authorize the Minister of Finance, notwithstanding the Unemployment Insurance Act, to credit, on such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine, to the unemployment insurance fund such sums as may from time to time be required by the said fund; the aggregate of the sums outstanding at any one time not to exceed $55 million.

Now, supplementary estimates (E), which are before us, contain the item we are considering, L27e, which reads as follows:

To authorize the Minister of Finance, notwithstanding the Unemployment Insurance Act, to credit, on such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine, to the unemployment insurance fund such sums as may from time to time be required by the said fund; the aggregate of the sums outstanding at any one time not to exceed $55 million—

Mr. Knowles: So far, it is the same.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

—to extend the purposes of vote L27a of the estimates for 1963-64 to cover requirements in the fiscal year 1964-65, $1.

In other words, the item now before us merely grants authority to the Minister of Finance to credit the fund in the fiscal year, 1964-65. If the original item is looked at, it will be seen that the credit could not have been put in the fund last year for use in April and May of this year. That is the nature of the difficulty.

Mr. Knowles: Would the minister point to the words in the vote of last December that limit its use to that fiscal year?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, that will be found in section 2 of the Appropriation Act, and perhaps I could just read part of it:

The total of the amounts of the item set forth in the supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending the 31st day of March, 1964 as contained in schedule B—

And that is less certain amounts authorized by this act, and then I continue quoting farther down:

The amount authorized by this act to be paid or applied in respect of any item may be paid or applied only for the purposes and subject to any terms and conditions specified in the item—

It will be seen that the item and the sections of the Appropriation Act limit the item to the last fiscal year.

Mr. Knowles: So far we just have to take your word for it.

Mr. McIlraith: I hope my word is correct.

Mr. Churchill: The preamble to the act says that.

Mr. McIlraith: That is the difficulty. It is a case of not being able to use money of last year for the present fiscal year and not having the authority this year to make the transfer, so it is a matter of clearing up the rather technical requirements of the legislation as it stood.

Mr. Starr: Was an appropriation made yesterday in the amount of $15 million either by order in council or in some other form?

Mr. McIlraith: No. I was rather surprised to hear the assertion by the Leader of the Opposition to that effect, but there was no such grant made.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, we live in a rather strange world. I have sat in the house for some seven years and in every one of those seven years have heard the minister of labour tell the house about how rosy the employment picture is, how it is improving all the time, how every year it is a little better than last year and how it is certainly better than when the terrible former government had the reins of office in their hands. In spite of this here we find ourselves sitting on a Wednesday night, which is a strange experience, in the middle of an Easter recess, which is also a strange experience, and once more being told by the Minister of Labour how much better the unemployment picture is than it was before, merely because we have lost another $14 million out of the unemployment insurance fund in the last year.

I am not sure of the exact figure but I believe that in 1957 when I came here the unemployment insurance fund stood at approximately $950 million or $960 million. I did a quick addition of the minister's figures tonight and, unless I got the figures wrong, the fund has dropped $879 million since 1957. We had $950 million or $960 million in 1957 and I distinctly recall that on two occasions the house voted $25 million to spruce up the fund. Last year we voted another $55 million, making a total in all of well over $1 billion. I would say it is about time that the house and the country should be given a few more facts in regard to the fund and a little less propaganda from the government of the day.

However, Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak primarily on another matter tonight. It is a problem that disturbs me considerably and one that has been growing and growing as the months have gone by. I think the practice involved is becoming quite prevalent across the country because I have heard of it happening not only in my own area but in many other areas. In fact, I have even had workers in Ottawa come to me and ask me to try to help them out of similar situations.

At first I thought the practice was confined to some of the local officials in the unemployment insurance offices, but from a letter I received today from the minister I find that if the minister's office is not encouraging or implementing this policy they are at least going along with it holus-bolus. I think I have found something to indicate the reason that the loss in the unemployment insurance fund is not as bad this year as last year. It may be due in part to this practice which is growing up. In my opinion it is a very insidious practice and should be stopped.

The best illustration I can think of has to do with a man in my constituency who has a crippled leg. He was employed at the Adams mine in Kirkland Lake, some 80 miles from Timmins and about 50 miles from his home town of Val Gagne which is halfway between Kirkland Lake and Timmins. The minister states in his letter that his information is that this man was fired because he was caught sleeping on the job. But this is not quite as bad as it may seem, as expressed in those base words.

The man was employed as a cage tender. I would point out to those hon. members who are not familiar with mining terms that a cage tender is very similar to an elevator operator. On any job where an elevator or cage of this nature is being used and the operator is on the graveyard shift, and only gets a call maybe every hour and a half or two hours, it is quite understandable that if he is warm and comfortable he may doze off. I do not think this is a terrible thing because if anybody wants the cage all he has to do is ring the bell and the tender will answer it, unless he is sleeping so soundly that he does not hear it. My colleague says that as an old fireman I do not sleep through bells and that is very true. The mine for which this man was working had a policy that anyone caught sleeping would be automatically discharged. The man was discharged, and because he was discharged for cause he was subject to the normal six-week disqualification as far as unemployment insurance is concerned. After that time however he qualified for unemployment insurance. Some time later this man, who does not speak very much English, received a form in the mail containing a whole series of very simple questions such as "how much would you like to earn". The man, being optimistic, said he would like to earn $75 a week. "What would you like to do?" He said he would like to drive a truck. After all, he has a crippled leg and cannot do every job. "Where would you like to work?" His wife and family live in Val Gagne so he said he would like to work there. However, what the man did not know was that he put his foot in six or seven carefully laid traps that resulted in his being disqualified indefinitely. He did not understand why he was disqualified indefinitely.

I went home on the week end and he came to see me. I looked at the correspondence and I showed him that he had disqualified himself because he had restricted his area too much and there were not that many truck driving jobs in Val Gagne. He said he knew that, but he would drive a truck in Timmins or Kirkland Lake where there are lots of truck driving jobs. But he had not said that. They asked him where and he said in Val Gagne.

As soon as I explained what he had done he went back to the office and reapplied. Lo and behold a letter came back saying that he was disqualified again because he only wanted to drive a truck. Their interpretation was that he was confining himself to driving a truck. This was not the man's intention at all. They asked him what he would like to do and he answered by saying that he would like to drive a truck. So he was disqualified again.

When I explained the situation to him he went back and reapplied but he was still disqualified. He was disqualified once for the area, once for the wages and once for the occupation. Finally they ran out of reasons for disqualifying him and they came back with a real dandy. They finally disqualified him on the ground of credibility. To date the man is still disqualified.

As I stated earlier, my objection is that the minister and his department seem to have swallowed this line holus-bolus because I have here the letter I received from the minister which reads in part as follows:

> I understand that Mr. Julien subsequently completed a statement to the effect that he was restricting his availability to employment as a truck driver in Val Gagne only.

That, Mr. Chairman, is not a statement of fact. It is an opinion derived from a questionnaire sent out by the department which the man filled out very innocently, but the department drew their own conclusions from it and disqualified the man.

[Mr. Martin (Timmins).]

Mr. MacInnis: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: Was the letter referred to by the hon. member signed by the Minister of Labour?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Yes. He goes on to explain the fact that the man made an appeal to a board of referees from the insurance officer's decision and that his case was heard on November 20, 1963. I quote:

> The board, after considering all the facts—

What facts, Mr. Chairman?

> —unanimously dismissed the claimant's appeal and upheld the decision of the insurance officer.

He goes on to explain how he applied on two different occasions, and the reason he applied on two different occasions is because for the first time this man had explained to him just exactly what he had done.

I thrashed this out with the local officers in Timmins, and had them admit to me that if a man told the truth he would automatically disqualify himself, but if he turned out to be a real good liar he would qualify for insurance benefits. I ask the minister, is this a practice which is allowed to grow up in his department and in unemployment insurance offices across the country, and what is the reason for it? Is it to dress these figures up so that they will look a little better, so that we can hear more propaganda like we heard tonight, when the minister said the fund dropped only $14 million last year compared with $57 million the previous year?

How many of these cases exist across the country? If we find that out maybe we will find that the only difference between the figures this year and last year has been the number of people who have been disqualified by this insidious method. The minister should take a look at the situation immediately. Whenever it arises the people involved have to fall back on their communities and go on local municipal welfare. It is time something was done about it.

Mr. Winkler: It is not my intention to detain the committee at length, but I certainly concur in the speech made by the hon. member for Timmins with regard to the case he has brought forward. I find that immediately one goes beyond the boundaries of the larger urban centres, with their complex situations with regard to labour unemployment, this is a very common practice. Exactly the same situation exists in my part of Ontario, and obviously this is a practice which is condoned by the minister's department to disqualify applicants in cases where a very few miles are involved.

The applicant is usually refused the advantage of benefits. He may be offered employment in an adjacent town, but in a lot of instances the job is gone before he gets there. The minister should take a close, long look at this practice because it certainly must reflect itself in the figures he quoted this evening. He would find a considerably larger number of people would be involved if a more honest approach were taken to such cases.

I listened to the minister giving the figures with regard to the amount of money required over the past few years, and with regard to the diminishing amounts required in the last two years. This in large measure represents the policies of the former government and the success which they had. In fact this was pointed out to us by the former minister of labour when he told about the employees of a large firm who assured him this was the case, and expressed their gratitude.

In regard to the importance of the critical situation which faces the unemployment insurance fund, it was the hon. member for Cape Breton South who first drew attention to it, as reported at page 1585 of Hansard for Monday, March 30, when he said:

> Some of us are anxious to deal with other matters including the position of the unemployment insurance fund, which has dried up.

I understand, as stated by the President of the Privy Council this evening, that under the appropriations bill the government does not have the authority to make expenditures from the fund regardless of how much money was left in the fund after midnight of March 31, but I wonder exactly how much money is left in the fund. I do not think the minister has given us this and, as was stated by the hon. member for Ontario, the reason for this special sitting tonight is that this is the important item which must be passed, and this was the reason why the situation which existed last Thursday evening occurred.

I can see no other reason for the whole development that has taken place up to this evening. Again no one has disagreed to sitting tonight in order to take care of this crisis. I shall have more to say about this next week when we resume the budget debate, but I blame the Minister of Finance for the situation, no matter how much responsibility falls on other ministers who are present this evening. He must have been aware of the situation or else he was delinquent in his responsibilities to the people, and particularly to the Minister of Labour, in not seeing that the situation was dealt with expeditiously last week.

The Minister of Finance is not present tonight and, as I say, I shall go into this further next week. I believe he should take a close look at his responsibilities to the parliament of Canada and see that the business of the house is expeditiously handled, so that the Minister of Labour will not be placed in such an embarrassing set of circumstances.

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) was saying a moment ago that he was speaking on behalf of the Quebec members. Apparently he is ashamed for he has been hiding behind the curtain ever since—

Mr. Ricard: I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Plourde: He may very well speak on behalf of the eight Conservatives, but as far as we are concerned we can uphold our rights ourselves.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot rose on a question of privilege.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that I was probably guilty of a slip of the tongue when I said a little earlier that I was speaking on behalf of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Beaule) because I do not think it would be an honour to do so and I would rather not speak for him. I apologize. I intended rather to speak for hon. members of the Conservative party on this side of the house.

Mr. Plourde: For the eight Conservative members. However, I must say that it is not the hon. member for Quebec East but rather the hon. member for Quebec West and that the latter is still able to take care of himself when the time comes.

In the province of Quebec, especially in my riding of Quebec West, I know that there is unemployment. That is why I am happy to be here tonight to see that these estimates are passed, because I would not like those who are entitled to unemployment insurance benefits to be deprived of them.

It is nice to hear the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) say that unemployment is decreasing since, according to him, the amount that parliament has to supply for that item is lower this year.

On the other hand, if we had before us the amounts of the estimates spent on unemployment assistance, we might doubt his words because they bring to our mind, in a way, what the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin) said a little earlier: They are going to great lengths to prevent workers from being eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. Because a great number of unemployed who are not eligible for unemployment insurance benefits are receiving unemployment assistance.

If the minister can tell the house what has been the increase in unemployment assistance this year, we might find out where is the trouble and see at the same time that the number of the unemployed has not decreased that much.

It was just a play on words: unemployment assistance for those not eligible for unemployment insurance, but those eligible for unemployment insurance are listed as unemployed.

[Text]

Mr. Rapp: It is not my intention to speak for very long, but I should like to say it is gratifying for me to see the concern shown by the Minister of Labour and also by the committee for these unemployed people who receive unemployment insurance benefits. I should like to point out that there are thousands and thousands of farm labourers who, when they are unemployed, cannot receive unemployment insurance benefits. These men also have families to look after and on many occasions I have had bills on the order paper asking this house to provide that they, too, might be included under the Unemployment Insurance Act in accordance with the recommendations of the Gill commission.

My bills were talked out, but I wish to use this occasion to urge the minister to give serious consideration to their subject matter the next time one is introduced. Indeed, if this could be done before my bill comes up for consideration it would be even more appreciated by the farm labourers and by the country as a whole.

Mr. Churchill: I do not wish to prolong these proceedings to any great extent but, as other members have pointed out, we have now discovered what was being hidden from us last week. We have found out the main item in these estimates which required immediate attention by the committee—an item which should have been dealt with last week. I now wonder why people on the other side of the house failed to respond to our suggestion last Thursday, when the whip of our party twice asked them if they would disclose the essential items so that we could look at them and see if we could not pass them quickly. I myself said to the acting prime minister at four o'clock on Thursday: Extract from the list of estimates those which are essential and must be passed; let us have a look at them and see what we can do, and if they are not too great in number, and you will stand the other items, we will accept an appropriation bill, not printed or typewritten, but in oral form, which would be a most unusual procedure. This was the co-operative spirit we showed on Thursday last, but no response came from the other side. And all the time they knew that this item needed immediate attention.

It is strange this should have been deferred. On Monday the Minister of Finance is reported to have said in the corridors: I am terribly afraid the press will find out about the unemployment insurance fund. What was he afraid of? Then the word began to go around that the unemployment fund was exhausted.

Mr. Knowles: That is probably why he said it.

Mr. Churchill: Then people across the country were disturbed as to whether their cheques would be available. I think it is disappointing that the Minister of Labour was not more forthcoming in his answers. On Tuesday, just yesterday—mention has been made tonight of the manner in which this matter was brought to his attention—he gave three or four answers. First of all, as recorded on page 1595 of Hansard, he said this:

> —It is my hope that we will be able to deal with the supplementary estimate providing for a loan to the fund within the next short period, so that the fund will be able to bear its responsibilities within the next week or so.

Note the words "within the next week or so". He went on:

> At present the reserves are not adequate to finance the benefits beyond a very short time.

Well, he lulled everybody into calmness. He talked about "the next short period". He spoke of "within the next week or so" and "a very short time". I heard his answer and I thought: Well, everything is all right for a couple of weeks.

Mr. MacEachen: Would the hon. gentleman read the answer to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Churchill: Oh, I have them all underlined.

Mr. Pickersgill: Don't forget half the words.

Mr. Churchill: The answers are these, and Hansard records them. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked a supplementary question:

> Is the item in the estimates regarding this matter one of those that must be passed fairly soon?

The hon. member did not say "immediately". He said "fairly soon". Naturally he would say that, after the statement about "a short period" or "a week or so". And the answer given reads: "Yes, Mr. Speaker", a straightforward answer. Then the Leader of the Opposition questioned the minister as follows:

> Is it not correct that the fund is in such a position that the government will be able to provide the necessary assistance even if action is delayed for ten days? Is that not correct?

My right hon. friend was justified in asking that question, based on the answer given earlier by the Minister of Labour—"the fund will be able to bear its responsibilities within the next week or so".

Mr. McIlraith: No, read the answer.

Mr. Churchill: I am going to read the answer. I am saying that the Leader of the Opposition was justified in asking the question he did, in view of the previous answer by the minister which I have just read. Let me repeat this. The Leader of the Opposition was assuming that everything would be all right for another ten days. But the Minister of Labour, being concerned, then answered as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not want to put this in a provocative way—

May I interrupt the quotation here and say I cannot understand why the Minister of Labour should follow the bad example set in this house by the minister of external affairs, that of using a great number of words when just two or three would suit his purpose. I suggest to him that if he is looking forward to his future he will select someone else in his group as an example. He went on to say:

> —my information today is that unless the particular item is approved this week the commission will be in difficulty to make benefit payments by the end of the week.

Note the phrase "my information today". He did not know the day before. He did not know last week—

Mr. Pickersgill: Stick to the words he used.

Mr. Starr: Use your patience now; do not get excited.

Mr. Churchill: He spoke of the difficulty of making benefit payments. He did not say: The fund will be broke; we cannot get out the cheques. Finally, in a corner, the minister admitted that this item had to be passed in order that the cheques could be sent out this week. Why was that not said to us last week? Why could not the government have taken us into its confidence and admitted that this was the case? Why did they not say this was an essential item in the supplementary estimates?

But oh, no; there was concealment.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was just in the estimates, that's all. That is concealment, is it?

Mr. Starr: There was concealment. You just stuck the thing in and didn't tell the house about it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can't you read?

Mr. Churchill: I am receiving quite a bit of assistance, Mr. Chairman. I do not require this assistance at all, with respect to people on both sides of the house. Why all this concealment? The acting prime minister—

Mr. Knowles: Which one?

Mr. Churchill: The Minister of Transport. He interjected and said that the item was in the estimates. Of course it was; we saw that. But why would the Minister of Labour say that the fund would be able to bear its responsibilities within the next week or so and then, within a minute and a half, say the item had to be passed this week? Either he does not know what is going on in his department or he was concealing facts from the house, and this is what we object to.

Mr. Pickersgill: How childish.

Mr. Churchill: Or else he was under the impression that some of the money that was made available by special warrants last year was still available. But the unemployment insurance commission would surely advise him as to what was required. However, Mr. Chairman, that is the situation. A full disclosure on the part of the government would have expedited the business of the house, but they kept this away from us.

The Minister of Finance was terribly afraid that the press might find out on Monday. What arrant nonsense. We are quite prepared, and would have been prepared last Thursday or earlier, to pass this item with regard to the unemployment insurance fund, because we naturally want, as does everybody in this house, people to receive benefits from this fund. But this is the treatment they have received from this government—just fumbling and bungling along. I think they are falling apart at the seams and are not long for this world.

Mr. Pigeon: It is the same old clique.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I want to say immediately that I concur fully with the remarks of the hon. member for Timmins. Never have I, in five years, received anything like the mail that I am receiving today and have received in the last few months from applicants applying for unemployment insurance to which they are undoubtedly entitled. Each and every day these letters are arriving.

An hon. Member: How many?

Mr. Webb: Quite a number. I would also like, sir, to ask the minister whether he, his department or the unemployment insurance commission have at any time issued a directive to the officers to disallow any doubtful claims or claims which might be disallowed on any grounds at all. I should like the minister to answer this question, because it seems very obvious to me that this directive has gone out. Day by day we hear that unemployment is dropping, and is dropping rapidly. I ask then, sir, what is the reason that time and again I see in the newspapers that the staffs in the unemployment insurance offices have been increased? These are questions I should like to ask the minister.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say something in this connection because I am probably as confused as the Canadian public are going to be. There appears to be a doubt—and I hope the minister can clear this up—as to what money we need and whether there was any reason for requesting this special sitting tonight, and also whether the government is prepared to bring in an appropriation bill covering this $1 and ask us to pass it tonight so that the fund may be supplemented.

Mr. Pickersgill: How ridiculous.

Mr. Peters: Well, it is ridiculous for us to be here if we do not know whether it is necessary. It was not ridiculous for the Minister of Transport to try to make a deal to have four or five items passed which obviously we shall have to discuss under a separate appropriation bill. I am wondering whether it is necessary for us to be here, Mr. Chairman, and I cannot see much merit in our doing this to satisfy the Senate before they decide to go home.

Last year the minister said that the depletion in the fund amounted to $14 million, but we did have the borrowing power, by statute, through a previous supplementary estimate, to raise $55 million. I am not sure, and I do not know whether hon. members know if we borrowed that $55 million. If we did, this amount would be added to the $14 million by which the fund was depleted, which would make a total cost last year of $69 million in connection with unemployment insurance. I do not know whether this is true and I do not think the country knows yet. Perhaps we are going to find out. I imagine the minister would have had an obligation to borrow money some time ago when he saw the fund going down to the breaking point, when we had spent $14 million, in view of the fact that the authority to raise more money had already been granted by parliament for that year.

[Mr. Webb.]

The minister said that it would not be fair to borrow from the $55 million the day before the end of the fiscal year. However, as I understand it we have already spent $14 million and at least that amount of money would be a legitimate charge against the $55 million that we have already O.K.'d. I think these are matters which should be given serious consideration. There are other matters in connection with the unemployment insurance fund that I should like to discuss, and will discuss on this estimate; but I think we should know exactly what we are doing in relation to this extension of the power to raise another $55 million. If the $55 million was raised last year, I think we should know about this. If the $14 million was spent, I think a good question to ask is why we have not raised at least $15 million out of the borrowing power we already have. It seems very foolish to me to go within a week of a deadline before doing something to put more money into the fund. Knowing something about the operation of the fund and the payments from local offices, I know it is sometimes difficult to get the money from the bank to the local unemployment insurance office. I would therefore think that if there was no money at all in the fund at the end of March we should now be prepared to pass an appropriation bill for this statutory item of $1 so that the fund may be replenished—not a week from now but tonight or tomorrow morning at the latest. I think the minister owes us a complete explanation of just what are the borrowing requirements; how much he is prepared to borrow; how soon he has to borrow it, and how much money is still in the revolving fund with which the unemployment insurance offices operate.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad to try and deal with some of the questions that have been raised by my hon. friend from Timiskaming. However, before doing so I should like to deal with the suggestion that there has been any concealment as to the state of the unemployment insurance fund. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, in the characteristic fashion to which we have become accustomed in this house, has suggested that there has been some deliberate effort to conceal the fact that this sum of money was required to replenish the fund. This, of course, is quite untrue. The supplementary estimates were tabled in the House of Commons on March 6. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman read the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Churchill: Oh yes, I read them.

Mr. MacEachen: I wonder whether the hon. member for Ontario read the supplementary estimate—

Mr. Starr: Yes. You are not the only one who is a member of the house.

Mr. MacEachen: —asking for this amount of money. If he did read this estimate, when did he expect that these sums would be required to replenish the fund? In July or August of this year? Or does he remember from his years of experience as a minister that the months when replenishment is required are April and May? If he read the supplementary estimates he must have realized at once that the fund was in need of replenishment for the months of April and May of this year. That is obvious.

Mr. Starr: May I ask the minister a question. Why did the minister and the government allow these supplementary estimates to stand for 25 days if the matter was urgent?

Mr. MacEachen: I think it was reasonable for me to expect that the supplementary estimates would be dealt with in this session, as they have been in former sessions; if they had been dealt with in this session as in former sessions this would have been passed by now, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. Winkler: May I ask a question. What does the minister mean by "this session?"

Mr. MacEachen: My hon. friend need only refer to an elementary text to get a definition of the word "session". It is obvious that if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and the hon. member for Ontario had read the supplementary estimates they would have known that there was a requirement for a replenishment of the fund, and that the government was coming to the house for funds in the course of these supplementary estimates. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had no difficulty in framing a question yesterday about this fund. His question was answered accurately. Every part of the answer was fully consistent one with another, and there was no effort to conceal any matter whatsoever. If hon. gentlemen opposite had wanted to find out about the fund, all they had to do was pick up a telephone any day of the week and call the unemployment insurance commission. Any of the commissioners would immediately have given my hon. friends the most recent available data on the fund.

Mr. Starr: It would have been 30 days old.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and the hon. member for Ontario have read the budget papers. If they have they would have realized—the papers were tabled some weeks ago—that the state of the fund is as I stated tonight in my statement. They would have realized that from reading the budget papers some weeks ago. We on the government side expect the opposition to do its homework and become informed from the information made available through documents tabled in the House of Commons.

Mr. Winkler: May I ask the minister a question. Did the minister understand, as we understood, that even if we had done that the passage of the supplementary estimates before last Thursday night was not necessary?

Mr. Pickersgill: What does that question mean?

Mr. MacEachen: I do not understand the question.

Mr. Winkler: Did the minister understand, as we did, that the passage of the estimates by last Thursday night before the recess was not necessary?

Mr. MacEachen: It was always evident to me that this supplementary estimate would have to be dealt with in order to replenish the fund for the months of April and May, and I suggest that any hon. member who had taken the trouble to read these supplementary estimates and the budget papers would have reached the same conclusion. That is why, when I was asked this question I answered it as a matter of course, and I was surprised that anyone else in the house should think that this information was novel or new in any way because it had already been made available in documents tabled in the house.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, may I ask another question so as to bring us up to date. Does the fund need to borrow money this week under the terms of this vote? In other words, is it now necessary that this vote be passed this week?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is necessary.

Mr. Winkler: That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member for Timiskaming raised a very important question with respect to the $55 million which has been authorized in the past fiscal year. It will be recalled that last April and May the commisison borrowed $35 million on the strength of Governor General's warrants. Later on these Governor General's warrants were validated by the house through the supplementary estimates to which the President of the Privy Council made reference. Under that authority the commission received a total of $35 million. It borrowed the money in April and May and it was repaid in June and July.

It has been suggested that the commission ought to have borrowed money on the strength of the remaining $20 million authorized by the estimate passed last year. I thought that this would be entirely inappropriate; that a drawing should be made on the last fiscal year appropriations, for an expenditure in the current fiscal year seemed to me to be inappropriate. Who would be more inclined to criticize the government for taking this course of action when at the same moment supplementary estimates were before the house for consideration than hon. gentlemen opposite?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some confusion concerning the borrowing powers of the unemployment insurance commission.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, have I still the floor?

The Chairman: The impression of the Chair was that the minister had concluded his statement.

Mr. MacEachen: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: He was being interrupted.

Mr. MacEachen: I yielded the floor to a question from the hon. member for Timmins.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): As I understood the minister, $35 million out of the $55 million authorized last year had already been borrowed. So that left $20 million. What is the difference between borrowing the first $35 million and borrowing the second $20 million?

Mr. MacEachen: The initial $35 million was borrowed for an expenditure in the fiscal year which ended yesterday. If an additional sum had been borrowed under that authority it would be for an expenditure to be made in the current fiscal year, which I thought would have been quite inappropriate, especially as this committee is examining at this very moment the supplementary estimate which would give the appropriate authority. Therefore I refused to take that course of action and relied on this supplementary estimate to give the proper authority. That is the situation with respect to that particular matter, and I think in that situation we acted properly.

Mr. Thomas: Another question in that regard, Mr. Chairman, if the minister will permit, is this. Are we to understand from this discussion that the House of Commons should hold a midnight session on March 31 each year in order to fix up the powers of the unemployment insurance commission to borrow? We need the money today. We could not borrow it yesterday. Therefore it seems to me that midnight on March 31 would be a suitable time to hold a special session each year in order to vote this authority.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the suggestion to sit tonight to deal with this particular item was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The government was delighted to accede to the suggestion because it was evident to us that this item had to be passed.

Mr. MacInnis: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. MacEachen: I do not mind answering questions, but I should like to complete my statement, such as it is. Then, if hon. members wish to ask questions I will be glad to answer them.

I believe the hon. member for Timmins asked about the fact that the fund this year had dropped $14 million. At the beginning of the fiscal year there was a balance in the fund of some $9 million. The estimated debit balance at the end of this fiscal year is something like $4 million, so that the drop in the fund this year totals some $14 million. We are still in a position, despite the balance, as I have stated in the fund, that we will be able to make payments because of certain cheques that have been issued that have not yet been drawn down. This was rather a mystery to me, but it was cleared up in consultation with the commission.

Hon. gentlemen opposite suggested in their statements that the use of the word "today" in my answer of yesterday indicated that I had just learned at that moment of the condition of the fund. The fact is I used that expression because I had been talking to the commissioner and the director of the insurance branch just before I came into the house for orders of the day. It was most natural that I would use that expression because I had received recent information from those gentlemen in my office.

I can assure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that, given the passage of this supplementary item and royal assent this week, I trust by tomorrow or Friday, of this particular item, there will be sufficient funds for the payment of benefits from the treasury officers of the commission on Monday of next week. In the light of that fact, potential recipients need not be concerned about the possibility of not receiving benefits.

Last session there was some discussion concerning the Gill committee report. The intention of the government, as stated by the Prime Minister, given parliamentary time is to proceed with action this session on the Gill report, undertaking the fundamental changes that must be made if we are to overcome the difficulties that we are facing in this particular situation. It is a fact that the condition of the fund reflects the improved employment situation. I have never said that the problem of unemployment in Canada was solved. I have stated that the employment situation has improved. The payments from the fund and the number of claimants on the fund have both decreased quite considerably and have improved the financial condition of the fund. The improved employment situation is not only reflected in the condition of the fund but also in the employment statistics released by the dominion bureau of statistics. There has been no effort, Mr. Chairman, certainly not on the part of the Minister of Labour nor to my knowledge on the part of the commission, to decrease the financial obligations on the fund by a stepped up effort to disqualify any applicants. No directive has been sent out by the government to the commission on this point; certainly no change has been made and no instructions have been issued to the commission.

I believe all hon. members have expressed understandable concern about individual persons who have been disqualified. I have attempted to examine each of these cases, but I would remind hon. gentlemen that the commission is responsible for the administration of the insurance act. There is a procedure, beginning with a board of referees and going up to an umpire, by which these claims can be adjudicated. It is not possible for the Minister of Labour to adjudicate personally any of these claims or the possible findings of the commission or the ultimate decision of the umpire. I would be glad on the basis of the views that have been expressed tonight to discuss the matter with the commissioners with a view to at least making the situation more understandable to the individuals who, because of regulations, are disqualified.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South has referred to a difficult situation that has arisen in Cape Breton. It is a very complicated situation involving several unions; one on strike, one refusing to cross a picket line and another with its members denied work because of the actions of the other two unions. The commission is investigating this situation to determine the eligibility for benefits of each of these groups, who are eligible and who are not.

Mr. MacInnis: I hope the minister is not including in his reference to investigation of the qualifications of these different groups, the large number of mine workers. Has the commission not already ruled on the eligibility of a claimant, namely that he is not required to take employment at a strikebound plant? Does this ruling not qualify the railway men as persons who are entitled to unemployment benefits?

While I am on my feet I should like to put now to the minister a question that arose as a result of a remark he made. The minister stated flatly that the sitting tonight was at the request of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It may be that the hon. member brought this question up at the opening of today's sitting, but is the minister not aware of the fact that the Acting Prime Minister, in accepting the proposal of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, said he had every intention of asking the house to sit tonight not from eight to ten but from seven to eleven? Is there any liaison between the Acting Prime Minister and the Minister of Labour on this very important issue?

Mr. MacEachen: I think the answer to that is quite clear. The Acting Prime Minister suggested extended sittings, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested that the extended sittings deal with this particular matter. This is my understanding.

I do not want to adjudicate on the qualifications of workers for benefits in Cape Breton, but it is clear to me that the mine workers will be eligible, those directly involved in the work stoppage will not be eligible for benefits, and the other category is being investigated.

Mr. Howard: I should like to pose a question to the minister and my question is related to the foresight of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre today in suggesting that this particular item be dealt with this evening. None of us, I expect, can forecast with any certainty that these supplementaries will be passed by any particular date. On the basis of that, and to guarantee that there will be sufficient money in the unemployment insurance fund to pay the claimants, would the minister, in consultation with his colleagues, be prepared to introduce a special appropriation bill covering the particular item before us so that we can guarantee that the appropriation bill will be passed and the money available, even though we might not deal with the other estimates?

Mr. MacEachen: I can assure my hon. friend that whatever procedure is necessary to ensure the payment of benefits, that will be followed by the government.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, would the minister like to take this opportunity to answer the charges made on national television on Sunday in respect of the situation at Bell Island? The national employment office was accused quite openly of lack of co-operation in the labour situation there. If the minister is not aware of what took place on the program perhaps he would investigate the matter and it can be brought up later. If these charges are true I think they cast a very serious reflection on the national employment office, because of their lack of co-operation. I am not speaking about the employment situation there but simply the refusal of the officers to co-operate.

Mr. MacEachen: I thank my hon. friend for bringing the matter to my attention. I had not been aware that a complaint had been made and I will certainly investigate it because it is my desire that the national employment service should co-operate constructively in the situation.

Mr. Bell: I am sure that some of the minister's very loyal colleagues and friends from Newfoundland will be able to bring it to his attention. As there is a minute or two left I should like to make one comment. When the government sets up a timetable, as they must do, to get certain matters through, including this item, before the Easter recess they had better be careful that the Minister of Finance does not come along and upset the applecart, because he is the real culprit in this whole business. He is the reason we are sitting here.

Mr. Langlois: I should like to ask one short question relating to applicants for unemployment insurance. Is it a fact that the officers in some of the local unemployment insurance offices are not there to help applicants receive unemployment insurance? I have been told that by an employer and also by an unemployment insurance officer, that they are clearly and specifically not there to help men receive unemployment insurance. What is the man going to do who does not know how to read or write? Does the minister know anything about this situation and, if not, will he inquire from the commission?

Mr. MacEachen: I will be glad to inquire on this point.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I want to raise a couple of matters and one of them does not involve any action that would displease the house. If the situation is as it was originally portrayed, then I do think that the government on behalf of the commission should be prepared to move an appropriation for this particular item.

With regard to the matter raised by the hon. member for Timmins, I am sure that members of the minister's own party will agree it is a fact that letters and directives have been sent out from the commission indicating that vigilance should be exercised with regard to people abusing the fund, and that in many cases this has been interpreted by local officials to mean a closer scrutiny for the purpose of getting rid of people already drawing benefits. The minister has said that these matters can be taken up through various channels. I have been a member of several boards of referees and I can assure the minister there is not a chance in hell of winning a case. I sat on one where the officials of the department were talking about married women who were pregnant. The girl in question certainly was not pregnant, and this was not a factor at all. Yet all the references that were being used had to do with married women who were going to have babies and therefore were unable to work. This was not the case at all, but these were the references that were being used. There is no chance of winning one of these cases.

I do not think there is any point in taking them to a board of referees because the operation has been very unsatisfactory, nor do I think there is much point in taking them to an umpire. On the board of referees there is a representative who is impartial, a representative of labour and a representative of management and so far as the board in North Bay is concerned I defy anybody to be able to say from sitting there and listening for an hour or so who represents what or whom. There is complete neutrality in representation.

Another problem has arisen which relates to some extent to the point raised by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert with regard to the television show the other day. The situation is that people who are no longer drawing benefits receive no assistance from the placement service of the unemployment insurance offices. This charge is being made in my area. I have investigated some of the cases and I think some of them have merit and some do not. But the fact is that young people who are not eligible for benefits receive very little assistance from the placement service, and I believe this situation is general across the country.

I would urge the minister to call together the industrial relations committee and submit the Unemployment Insurance Act to it for revision. There are abuses, and the fact that we have to borrow money for the fund and have done so on other occasions is an indication that the fund is not in a healthy state. This is not good enough for people who have paid their contributions, and when they now face the necessity of drawing benefits find that they have to wait on the whim of parliament to pass a supplementary estimate that will provide a loan to replenish the fund.

We have had the unemployment insurance commission before us in recent years and I believe that the modifications that were made to the fund were advantageous. I think the minister has an obligation now to refer the whole unemployment insurance problem to the industrial relations committee again, and I strongly urge that he call the committee immediately and refer the whole problem to it.

Item agreed to.

50e. Administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act—To extend the purposes of vote 50 of the main estimates for 1963-64 to include a grant of $1,500 to the Canadian association for adult education to assist in defraying the expenses of the national seminar on guidance and counselling held in Canada in November, 1963 and to provide a further amount of $720,000.

Mr. Howard: This seems to be an inordinately large amount of money. Surely they cannot have underestimated their expenditures to this extent, especially when almost half of the total appropriation, $350,000, is for office stationery, supplies and equipment. Could we have an explanation from the minister? Does this involve the national registration program, or just what is involved here?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the principal cause of this supplementary is to pay for expenditures in connection with the registration program, including office space in various parts of the country, equipment and so on. I can give the house a breakdown in a moment.

Mr. Thomas: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, did I understand you to call item L27e on which we have spent the evening? Is that passed or is it not?

The Chairman: It is passed. Shall item 50e carry?

Mr. Starr: No. I think the minister is looking up some information to give the hon. member for Skeena who asked the question.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Howard: Before the minister proceeds I wonder whether I might say this. There are some other remarks and explorations we would like to make into this field of numerical designation for employees, and so on. I wonder if the appropriate thing at the moment would be to call it ten o'clock, and approach this tomorrow.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, in order to satisfy the very legitimate curiosity of the hon. member, and of other hon. members, may I suggest that you do not see the clock for a few minutes, so as to allow appropriate questions to be put on this item.

Mr. Howard: You recall, Mr. Chairman, we specifically sat from eight to ten o'clock this evening for the sole purpose of dealing with the unemployment insurance fund, and I do not think a few minutes this evening or tomorrow will make that much difference. Tomorrow we would approach it with a fresher mind.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being ten o'clock this house stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 2.30.

It being four minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply this day]:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 2, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CRIMINAL CODE

COMMUTATION OF DEATH SENTENCE IF CONVICTION NOT UNANIMOUSLY CONFIRMED ON APPEAL

Mr. Robert Temple (Hastings South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-85, to amend the Criminal Code (commutation of death sentence).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Temple: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide that in the case of an appeal from a death sentence to the court of appeal, the death sentence shall be commuted to life imprisonment where the court has not been unanimous in confirming the conviction.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING ABANDONMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Minister of Transport that I am sorry I did not give him notice of this question, but it has to do with an article appearing in the western press entitled—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am afraid I did not catch the name of the periodical.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —"Pickersgill to outline rail abandonment stand". Mr. Thatcher announced this the other evening in Saskatchewan. I would like the minister to confirm or deny that the position of the government is that there will be no abandonment allowed either to the C.N.R. or the C.P.R. until the federal government has fully examined all the circumstances and made a thorough study of all the problems involved.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Of course, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman, being an old and experienced member of the house, knows perfectly well that his question is totally out of order because he is asking me to confirm or deny a newspaper report, which our standing orders forbid us to do. But since the right hon. gentleman has given me a very welcome opportunity to say something about this subject, I am very happy to make a brief statement about it.

My statement is this. The policy of this government in this matter is well known. It was iterated and reiterated a dozen times by my predecessor at the last session of parliament, and it is a policy that was instituted by the right hon. gentleman's government, which he seems to have forgotten. It is that the railways were invited to indicate to the board of transport commissioners all the lines that they were even considering abandoning, on the understanding that no abandonments would take place and no hearings would be held until the new legislation had been disposed of.

That, we thought, was one of the good things done by the previous administration. We still think this is a good idea, and I am happy to say that was the position the railways agreed to take. I do not know that we could have imposed it on the railways, or at least on one of them, but they accepted it.

My hon. friend the President of the Privy Council gave notice in the last session of parliament of a resolution to precede a bill which was set out in detail in Votes and Proceedings, I think on December 6, and it is the intention of the government to recommend to parliament, if the house approves the appropriate resolution, a bill to set up a railway branch line rationalization authority which, if parliament also approves, would be under the jurisdiction of my hon. friend from Calgary South, the Minister of Agriculture, who naturally would have at heart the interests of the most important of all users of the railways, namely the wheat farmers.

It was not by accident that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister chose the Minister of Agriculture for this responsibility, because he felt that this would be a tangible way of indicating to the farmers of western Canada that the interests of the producers would be put first and the balance sheets of the railways, as I said the other day, would have to take second place in this matter.

That is the policy of the government. I think it is a wise and sound policy. I think it is wiser and sounder because of the great success which the wheat board has had under this government in selling wheat all over the world. I only hope that some day before this session is over we will be allowed to get on with this legislation and get it through the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to thank the hon. gentleman for his terse reply, particularly his statement that in the policy announced he intends to follow in the footsteps of the government of which I had the honour to be the head. I am also glad to learn of the circumstances under which the Minister of Agriculture gets his appointments. I thought it was because the rest of the Liberal party had been abandoned, leaving him as the only qualified candidate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. gentleman misunderstood one thing I said. I never suggested that we were going to follow in his footsteps, because his administration's footsteps got nowhere. We do expect to get somewhere.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question. The Minister of Transport has indicated that it was no accident that the Prime Minister had chosen the Minister of Agriculture for this responsibility. Is this in any way to be interpreted as meaning that the other responsibilities which were placed on the Minister of Agriculture were accidental?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, sir. It is an indication that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister thought that the Minister of Agriculture, being a farmer living in western Canada and representing a western constituency, could do this job better than the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Could I ask a supplementary question. Is it not a fact that the Minister of Agriculture is the only Liberal member from either Alberta or Saskatchewan?

Mr. Pickersgill: That situation will be changed very shortly, I hope.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture now knows that he was appointed not because the rest of the Liberals had been abandoned but because of his qualifications. I now ask the hon. gentleman, in view of his last statement, is he going to provide for early by-elections in Saskatoon and also in Nipissing?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure that in this, as in other respects, we will be able to move a little faster than the right hon. gentleman did.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

COMBINES

MEAT PACKING—REPORTED PURCHASE OF BURNS AND COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the other day I directed a question to the Minister of Justice with respect to the fact that an anonymous group were seeking to buy out the Burns meat packing company. It has now been confirmed that the Toronto group in question has succeeded in purchasing the company, and I ask the minister whether this matter has been looked into by the restrictive trade practices branch of his department to see whether there is any indication that the combines legislation is being contravened.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me this question was asked two or three weeks ago, but if the minister wants to answer that is fine.

Mr. Douglas: It could hardly be asked two or three weeks ago since the deal was completed only yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to have to take exception, but there have been rumours about this deal for about a month and a half.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order—and I do not intend to enter into a debate with the Chair—I pointed out that there were rumours and I asked the minister about them. He stated he would take the question as notice. I now ask him to answer it, in view of the fact that the rumours have been confirmed and the takeover has been completed. I do not see why I should have to argue with the Chair on a simple question which the minister should be prepared to answer.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the director of investigation and research presently has that matter under consideration.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, may I ask whether any action is being taken by the minister's department with reference to the last investigation into the meat packing industry, which was conducted by the restrictive trade practices branch?

Mr. Favreau: I think, Mr. Speaker, this would be a question for the order paper.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Does the minister intend to go to Quebec city to assist the Prime Minister of Canada who is wrecking the federal-provincial conference?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is out of order.

AGRICULTURE

SUBSIDY ON GRAIN TRANSPORTED BY TRUCK

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry, who is responsible for the implementation of certain policies concerning feed grain.

Could the minister tell us when he intends to announce his policy as regards subsidies for the transportation of feed grain by trucks, in the province of Quebec, something which is now being done in Ontario?

Hon. Maurice Sauve (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, a meeting is to be held within a few weeks, and the people chiefly concerned will be asked to attend.

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Could the minister give us the names of the main people who will be invited to that meeting?

Mr. Sauve: Mr. Speaker, until those people have been personally invited, I think it would be better for me not to answer that question.

[Text]

SOYBEANS—REPRESENTATIONS REQUESTING SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Knowing of the minister's stand as to encouragement of the soybean growers of Ontario, can they count on his support of their representations to the government for a floor price of $2.50 per bushel?

Mr. Speaker: Well, unless the Acting Prime Minister wishes to answer—

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I am sure the hon. gentleman knows of my long interest in this subject, and that answers the question.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORTED NEW PRACTICE OF SENDING CHEQUES BY MAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour based on a newspaper report from my constituency that unemployment insurance cheques are now being sent to jobless men and women by mail, rather than having the recipients call for them. Has this new policy been adopted, as the newspaper report puts it, to "avoid line-ups at unemployment insurance offices"?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there has been a growing practice of distributing benefits by mail, and the commission has found this to be very satisfactory.

GRAIN

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—INCREASE IN ELEVATOR CAPACITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Could I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture and ask him, before he becomes overburdened with new duties or completely unburdened of his present ones, whether he has yet made a decision about the grain elevator at Prince Rupert.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are still considering it.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED USE OF TRAWLS IN CATCHING SEALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries, or in his absence to the Acting Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister's attention been brought to the fact that trawls with hooks, baited with herring, are proposed to be used in the catching of seals in the gulf of St. Lawrence near the Magdalen islands? If not, in view of the cruelty of this method would the minister have an immediate investigation made?

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and try to bring in an answer tomorrow.

INDUSTRY

TAXES IN OTHER COUNTRIES ON PRODUCTION MACHINERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry. Is there any country in the world other than Canada that taxes production machinery?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have not got all the taxation laws of all the 142 countries of the world at my finger tips, so I will take the question as notice.

AUTOMOBILE PARTS—POSSIBLE U.S. REPRISALS AGAINST CANADIAN POLICY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production. Following a report to the effect that United States are planning to use reprisals in protest against the Canadian government decision to give assistance to the automotive industry, can the minister tell us what stage has been reached in the implementation of the formula he has devised to promote the automotive industry development in Canada?

In addition, can he tell the house what concrete results have been derived from this policy up to this time?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, needless to say that I cannot go into details at this stage. However, I can say that results to date indicate great success. However, I do not think that the time is right to give a complete report.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. In view of the great success indicated by the minister, can he tell the house if he is considering other similar projects which would be implemented in eastern Canada with as much success?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, successful results are obtained of course in areas where the automobile industry has settled in Canada.

As far as eastern Canada is concerned, the industry which settled there seems to be meeting with success also.

SHIPPING

EFFECT OF LOW WATER LEVEL IN LAKE ONTARIO AND ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources would care to make a statement respecting the low water levels now prevailing in lake Ontario and the upper St. Lawrence river.

[Mr. Stenson.]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been the subject of a number of questions from members of the house in recent weeks. I might say at once that the great lakes system is one of the more complex drainage systems in all the world, and because our concern is very great I would much prefer to take this question as notice and make a full statement either tomorrow or Monday.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister is investigating this matter will he also see to it that when ship diversions take place because of low water in the St. Lawrence, such diversions will go to Halifax and Saint John rather than New York as was the case last year?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister if consideration is being given to the development of the Grand canal system to cope with the continuing problem that has been raised by the hon. member for Leeds.

Mr. Laing: We are aware of the proposal in respect of the Grand canal.

NEWFOUNDLAND—USE OF ICEBREAKER TO ASSIST SEALING SHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport and ask him if he received a request to send an icebreaker to the assistance of the sealing ship Lady Johnson off the east coast of Newfoundland. If so, what success did the icebreaker have in freeing the ship?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that unless there is special urgency to this question, it should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Tucker: The urgency is that there is a crew of 18 on that ship, and in view of the danger I think the question is important.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I can say now that the mission was successful.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES BEFORE APPOINTMENT OF DIVORCE JUDGE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Could he tell the house whether the Quebec and Newfoundland provincial authorities will be consulted before the federal government proceeds with the appointment to the exchequer court of a judge whose duties will be to hear divorce cases from these two provinces?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this question is of great urgency. Anyhow, it should be put personnally to the minister rather than in the house.

[Text]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST THAT OFFICERS' COMMISSIONS BE IN BOTH LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) asked me a question which implied that officers' commissions were written in English only. I am pleased to inform my hon. friend that officers' commissions have always been, and still are, obtainable in both languages. The officer in question can select either language.

I should also inform my hon. friend that a notice was sent to all cadet officers reminding them that they may obtain their commissions in the language of their choice.

[Text]

ARMOURY GUARDS—REQUEST FOR VETERANS PREFERENCE IN APPOINTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): On Monday last the hon. member for Timiskaming inquired if official status had been given to the people hired as guards for armouries. He also asked if the veterans preference applied to those chosen for guard duty.

In reply to the first part of his question, I can inform him that these men have been hired as watchmen. In so far as the veterans preference is concerned, these men are employed on a temporary basis under the authority of section 24 of the Civil Service Act, and while the majority are entitled to statutory preference for war service, in view of the temporary nature of the employment this was not one of the conditions imposed.

I might add that it has now been determined that watchmen will be required for an indefinite period and the establishment of civil service classified positions has been requested. When authority has been received, normal recruiting action by the civil service commission will be undertaken to appoint, on a regular basis, qualified applicants for these positions.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REVIEW OF FORMULA TO DETERMINE DESIGNATED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production, and I hope that this time I will receive a more complete answer.

Did the minister revise the criteria used to designate the depressed areas of this country, and may we expect to have soon a list of the new areas to be designated?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already announced that a revision will be made next summer, when new areas will be announced, if any.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. In view of certain observations that have been made, has there been a change in the criteria used to determine these areas?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Can the minister give the house the assurance that there will be consultation with the provinces prior to the setting up of new criteria?

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

1e. Department administration including the expenses of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization ministerial meeting in Canada, May, 1963, $56,000.

Mr. Douglas: When we were discussing this item at six o'clock yesterday I was in the process of making a few remarks on two aspects of the minister's statement. The first had to do with NATO, and I was asking the minister if he would, in the course of this discussion, tell the committee something about the proposal to create a NATO multilateral nuclear force. I think this committee and the people of Canada are entitled to know what proposals have been made in this regard and whether Canada has received any invitation to participate in such a force. I think too we should like some assurance from the government that Canada will not participate until this matter has been fully discussed in the House of Commons.

There are many Canadians who support NATO in its role of seeking to deter military aggression in Europe but who, nevertheless, would be strongly opposed to a multinational nuclear force being set up by that organization. I think it has been commonly known that for some years West Germany has been exceedingly anxious to become an independent nuclear power. There are many of us who feel that the setting up of a multinational nuclear force would simply be using the back door in order to accomplish this end, and I should certainly like to have some assurance from the minister that no such step will be taken by Canada and that if Canada is approached in this regard the matter will be thoroughly discussed in this house. We have already had some experience of the government entering into treaties for the acquisition of nuclear arms without referring those treaties to parliament. We certainly do not want to wake up one morning to find that a multinational nuclear force has been established, that Canada is a member of such a force, and that this house has had no voice in reaching that decision.

The second matter about which I was desirous of making some comment is the part Canada is playing in the peace keeping assignment on the island of Cyprus. I think we all recognize that this is a role which Canada is ideally fitted to play. We have neither the wealth nor the technological know-how to be a nuclear power, but we have a part to play; and the most effective role we can perform is that of contributing to peace keeping forces in various parts of the world under the direct control and direction of the United Nations.

While I agree with all that has been said about the inequity of Canada having to bear the entire cost, nevertheless I believe that whatever the expenditures we are making in this regard, they will be much more worth while than many of the expenditures we have made in the past for military hardware which became obsolete before it was produced. But as to the cost of these operations, I certainly think the cost of any peace keeping operation ought to be borne by all the nations which belong to the United Nations.

I think most Canadians are wholeheartedly in support of Canada making this kind of contribution to the peace of the world. However we should recognize two things; first, that in a delicate situation such as this the Secretary of State for External Affairs finds himself in a difficult position. He is dealing with the United Nations, and if the communications which are sent to him are secret and confidential he has to recognize that fact. I think we must also recognize that when we turn forces over to the United Nations they come under United Nations command, and that to some extent we have lost our national sovereignty in that respect. On the other hand I think we, as members of parliament, ought to say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that we hold him accountable and responsible for seeing to it that the troops which Canada contributes to United Nations peace keeping operations are fully protected and are given every opportunity to carry out effectively the task which has been assigned to them.

The second thing which has to be recognized is that the secretary general of the United Nations is in an equally difficult position. He has, in Cyprus particularly, a most delicate mission to perform. This is not an instance in which United Nations forces are dealing merely with aggression. In that case the operation, though it might be a serious one, would be comparatively simple; where an act of aggression has been committed the responsibility of the United Nations is to stop the aggressor and protect the victim nation. But in Cyprus we are dealing with a civil war, and a civil war which is all the more serious because it affects two neighbouring nations which gave every indication of their intention to intervene. Had they intervened they could easily have started a conflagration which might have spread throughout the Mediterranean and perhaps throughout the world.

In carrying out the instructions of the security council to send a peace keeping force to Cyprus the secretary general of the United Nations had, therefore, to have the consent and the authorization of the government of that country. In consequence I am sure that a certain amount of negotiation and compromise was found necessary.

But bearing this in mind, I am sure that we as members of parliament must make it clear both to the secretary general of the United Nations and to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is our spokesman before that body, that there are three things about which we are concerned. We are concerned, first of all, that the Canadian troops who have become part of the United Nations peace keeping force shall have full and complete authority to protect themselves at all times and take whatever measures may be necessary to carry out effectively the task which has been assigned to them. They must never be allowed, because of red tape, to find themselves in a situation in which the directives they have been given are inadequate to provide complete protection. They must never find themselves in a position where those directives are so indefinite that they do not give them the clearest possible mandate to do the job which they have been sent to Cyprus to do.

The second thing we have to make clear to the secretary general is that the Canadian forces must not be hampered in carrying out their duties; that once an agreement has been reached with the government of Cyprus the United Nations forces must have freedom of movement and access to whatever areas require their presence, and that they will not be hamstrung by interference or manipulation.

Third, I think we have to make it clear to the United Nations that in our opinion there must be an eventual disarming of the guerrilla forces on the island of Cyprus. As long as there are bands of armed civilians roaming about Cyprus there is almost certain to be trouble, and this is almost certain to involve the United Nations peace force. I know it has been suggested in press reports from Cyprus that the government of Cyprus would prefer that any disarming of civilians be left to the Cypriot government. Normally this would seem to be a logical conclusion. The fact remains, however, that it is doubtful whether the Turkish Cypriots would be as prepared to accept disarming by the Greek Cypriots as they would by the United Nations forces.

The situation is further complicated by the reports, which I presume are accurate, that the Cypriot government has already taken many of their armed civilians into the militia, and therefore they would not normally be disarmed. I think it is very easy to visualize what will happen. If the Greek Cypriots endeavour to disarm the Turkish Cypriots while the Greek Cypriots themselves continue to be armed, under the pretence that they are part of the militia, it seems to me that the whole armed conflict will erupt once again. I know this has to be negotiated and that it is not easy to reach these goals quickly, but I think it has to be said in this parliament and it has to be recognized by the secretary general of the United Nations that we would feel much easier in our minds if steps were taken promptly to begin the disarming of civilian guerrillas, both Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots, thereby lessening the likelihood of bloodshed and lessening the chance that the United Nations peace keeping forces, the Canadians amongst them, might be caught in a crossfire between these two groups.

Mr. Chairman, I think we in this parliament have to recognize that the human race is now in the process of building something which is entirely new in human history. We are seeking to build, brick by brick, a system of collective security based on the rule of law. There aren't any precedents; there are no established patterns, and we have nc techniques for carrying this out. Men have long dreamed of the idea of the rule of international law, but to build up the kind of forces required, to decide the chain of command, to agree on the methods that will be used has to be worked out painfully and painstakingly. Therefore I think we have to be extremely patient. We have to recognize that if we are to have collective security based on the rule of law, there must be some surrender of national sovereignty both by any nation where a peace keeping force is operating and by the nations which contribute forces to the international police force. For that reason one cannot take too hard and fast a position. We have to feel our way. We will have to take a pragmatic approach. It will have to be a process of trial and error.

I think we are fortunate in the secretary general of the United Nations, who is a very distinguished gentleman. We are fortunate in the mediator who has been selected to endeavour to bring together the various factions in Cyprus. But I think as members of this house it is our responsibility to remind the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the secretary general of the United Nations that we, having decided to send these men to Cyprus, feel we have a responsibility, and that we intend to discharge that responsibility and shall keep on insisting that the terms of reference, the directives and the status of forces agreement which is now being negotiated shall all take cognizance of the three points I have mentioned; namely, the complete right of self defence and full protection for our forces; free movement and the right to go wherever it is necessary to go to perform their duties, and that we urge upon the United Nations and upon the government of Cyprus the necessity for moving very quickly toward the disarming of the guerrilla bands as a first step toward bringing peace and harmony on the island of Cyprus.

I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs will express these concerns to the secretary general of the United Nations, and that he will tell the officers of the United Nations that the members of parliament and the people of Canada are concerned and would like to know more about the terms of reference and the directives, because we hold those who sit in positions of responsibility accountable for the Canadians whose lives and well being we have placed at the disposal of the international police force.

The Chairman: Shall this vote carry?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to cover the ground already covered, but last evening I asked a number of questions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and was far from satisfied with the answers I received. I again return to the question that was mentioned in a passing way by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, the leader of the New Democratic party. I refer to the circumstances under which Canadians will serve in the force in Cyprus.

I am not here for the purpose of endeavouring to secure information which ought not to be available to us, but I think when the Canadian people provide an armed force which constitutes a large part of the peace keeping force in Cyprus, and pay the shot as well, parliament has the right to the information which has not yet been vouchsafed to us.

I mention this because the position taken by the minister last evening was that the information for which I asked would cause great difficulty if it were given. Indeed, he said it would be a matter of serious concern. I know he was not too serious when he said that, although when one reads it in Hansard—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was very serious.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will deal with the question of seriousness in a moment. These words are so far removed from the usual way the hon. member replies to questions that I am going to place them on Hansard again. He said, as reported at page 1678:

> I am sure my hon. friend would not want the country to get the impression that they cannot defend themselves.

I am the one he was referring to as "my hon. friend".

> I assure my hon. friend that the directives will enable them to defend themselves to the full. I must say to my right hon. friend, the former prime minister, that knowing the responsibilities of government and knowing the situation in Cyprus, what he said today was not calculated to assist in the discharge of that very difficult assignment.

That was simply a ridiculous coup monté and nothing else. The information I asked for is available in the press. Surely the minister would not have the committee believe that that which is available in the press should not be available to parliament. I have an article before me which appeared in a newspaper of yesterday's date, and I should like to quote from it. It has to do with an interview which the writer of the article had with Archbishop Makarios.

> British officers and soldiers have complained bitterly that they have been powerless to keep the peace without the right to disarm civilians, to make arrests, order curfews, or remove roadblocks. The United Nations force is operating under the same limitations—

I ask the minister whether it is not correct that these limitations have been imposed, that they are known to exist. I suggest to him that details respecting these limitations, about which fullest information has been given to the press, should be revealed to parliament. I recognize there are matters of security which do limit the extent of the information which can be given, but I hope the hon. gentleman is not falling into a habit which has become all too common with ministers opposite, namely that of refusing to give facts to parliament or indeed of presenting facts in a way which does not reveal the true situation.

We in Canada are most desirous to do our part to ensure and maintain the peace of the world within the limitations which are incident to our population and position. We are going to spend several million dollars on this force. We are doing so when certain of the powerful nations of the world which are members of the United Nations are deliberately refusing to make contributions. I could point to the U.S.S.R., which is in default I believe some $59 million; France is in default some $40 million for the peace keeping operations; and other countries as well refuse to play their part even in assisting the financing of the peace keeping operations which are of the essence of an effective United Nations. That being so, surely Canada has the right to know the circumstances under which this force, part of it placed under United Nations command, is going to operate. I ask specifically and within those limitations of security which are necessary why it is that members of parliament have to secure information from the press rather than in parliament.

There is another matter which has recently arisen, within the last few days, concerning NATO. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam referred to this body. I am not as optimistic as I was about the future of NATO. There has been a weakening of that body and in its collective purposes during the last couple of years. That is understandable. So long as there is threat of armed conflict, those who are joined together in concert to meet a potential danger or threat tend to remain united. When the threat is lifted the cement, as it were, which holds the organization together becomes weakened. I believe in this institution. I do not think we would be here had it not been born some 15 years ago and stood effectively united against the overwhelming threat which has faced not only western Europe but all mankind.

However, those who believe that the threat is now gone belong to a school who have not carefully studied events since 1945. Every now and then there is a defrosting between east and west. Every now and then there have been hopes that new détentes have been established, but after a period of time the west is suddenly brought to the realization that the aims and purposes of communism are unchanged and that these détentes, if you can call them that, have often simply been detours on the part of the U.S.S.R. That being so, we must maintain NATO.

Therefore I ask the minister why it is that he or his office has taken the unprecedented step in the last few days of cancelling the biennial tour of Canada by the young European NATO political leaders. I understand that the American segment of the tour will go on as scheduled but that the normal four days' stay in Canada of these young, potential political leaders has been withdrawn. The information I have is that it was at the suggestion of the Department of External Affairs. I have a great deal of information on the subject but I shall not read it into the record.

I know that when young Canadians went abroad in 1961 and 1962 they learned more about NATO than they could have learned in any other way, and they came back to Canada imbued with an appreciation of and an enthusiasm for the institution, and were able to carry this message to their respective colleges and universities. This group which was to come consists of some 25 youth leaders. Two years ago I met a group like this when they came to Canada. They formed a warm impression of Canadian friendship and, above all, they came to understand the determination of Canada to stand with NATO.

I hope it is not correct that these NATO country youth leaders are to be told Canada is not interested in them. Unless they are welcomed here that is the impression they will get. I have the correspondence that has passed between the Department of External Affairs and interested persons in Canada, and I trust the minister will have this matter looked into at once. Canada cannot afford to ostracize herself from the opportunity to have the representatives of 15 countries come here. We place ourselves in a most unenviable position unless whatever directions have been given in this connection are revoked. If they are not revoked it will mean these young people will come to North America and not be the guests of a country that did so much to build up NATO.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No. I do not want it carried without hearing what the minister has to say on these two matters.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not want to take up the subject matter of last night's discussion, but the right hon. gentleman has dealt with it again today and perhaps I owe it to him to make a reference.

I appreciate the attitude he takes as to the desirability of the house being fully informed on information that might be given without prejudice to the operation of the United Nations peace keeping force in Cyprus.

As I said last night, the right hon. gentleman had considerable experience as prime minister during the operations of the United Nations peace keeping force in the Congo, and I may recall that in 1961 a question was put to him with regard to the tragic loss of life among the Ghanaian contingent participating in that force. Happily in that particular situation Canadians were not involved, but the tragic circumstances provoked a question as to the right of the Canadian troops to defend themselves.

There was no doubt that the troops from Canada, and others in the United Nations force, had a right to defend themselves in that situation to the fullest possible extent, as they have on Cyprus. But I was interested in the reply the right hon. gentleman gave on that occasion, which can be found at page 4539 of Hansard for Tuesday, May 9, 1961. I mention this not because I wish to be controversial but because I want to state the problem. I am sure this will be appreciated by the right hon. gentleman and other members of the committee. On that occasion he said:

> Canadian military personnel in the Congo are assigned to the United Nations and are under the authority of the United Nations Congo command. It is the United Nations command which has direct responsibility for the safety of United Nations troops, as well as for their effectiveness in carrying out their tasks.

He continued:

> On the question of self defence, United Nations troops in the Congo are still under basically the same orders as those issued by the first United Nations commander, General Von Horn. These orders provided, in general, that members of the United Nations forces are authorized to use their weapons in self defence and to maintain positions which are considered tactically essential to the United Nations operations. These orders have been reinforced and given more detailed interpretation by the current commander, General McEoin.

Then he went on:

> In the light of the special difficulties and dangers faced by this non-combatant peace keeping United Nations operation, Canadian members of the force have been given specific instructions by their Canadian commanding officer, derived from instructions issued by the United Nations commander. In essence the orders to Canadian troops provide that they may use their weapons for defence in certain clearly defined circumstances. Resort to force is, of course, to be used only if normal discussion or negotiation has proved impossible or unavailing.

No one took exception to that statement. Indeed, the present Prime Minister commented, inter alia, as recorded at page 4540 of Hansard for that date:

> It may not be easy to lay down, in the words of the Prime Minister, the clearly defined circumstances which would justify the use of defensive weapons, but I am sure every effort will be made by the United Nations to make sure that in the attempt to do that, the safety and security of those concerned is the first consideration.

It occurred to me that this exchange offered a parallel to the situation which currently engages our attention. The language which I used yesterday about the right of self defence, and more particularly a few days ago on orders of the day, was admittedly in general terms but not any more general, and understandably so, than the language used by the right hon. gentleman in the difficult circumstances that confronted the United Nations peace keeping force in the Congo.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, we must keep before us three documents; first of all, the terms of reference of the force, the directives given by the United Nations to the force commander and by the force commander to those under his command in Cyprus; and then there is the status of forces agreement.

With regard to the directives, I must say that these are in their very nature private and cannot, for the reasons I stated yesterday and on other occasions when this matter was discussed, be made public. In every operation of the United Nations this has been the practice, no less so in the case of the Congo than for other peace keeping operations of the United Nations. I suppose those with much greater military experience than I have had would say that this is true in any military operation, whether it be fully military or, as in this case, partly military.

With regard to the terms of reference of the United Nations force, and so we will have a complete record of this whole aspect of the problem, I should like to set out the terms of reference as provided in the resolution passed by the security council on March 4. They are in the following general words:

Recommends that the function of the force should be, in the interests of preserving international peace and security, to use its best efforts to prevent a recurrence of fighting and, as necessary, to contribute to the maintenance and restoration of law and order and return to normal conditions.

At first glance those words may seem to be far too general to offer an adequate basis for the activities of the United Nations force. I have compared these terms of reference with the terms of reference in other such basic documents of the United Nations, and I find that the language, while differing in some particulars, is basically the same. These particular terms of reference were carefully chosen and will remain the source of authority for the directives which will be issued to the force from time to time.

These directives are not immutable in character. They may be changed, and as situations arise will undoubtedly be varied by new directives. It is obvious that in the discharge of the function of the force these directives, if made public, would not assist the very purpose for which the force was established and sent to Cyprus. This is particularly so in this situation which, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam pointed out, involves a rivalry between two communities on the island and an interest on the part of two neighbouring states.

It will be seen that the terms of reference and functions of the force empower the force, first, to prevent a recurrence of fighting; second, to contribute as necessary to the maintenance and restoration of law and order; and third, to promote a return to normal conditions. These terms of reference are sufficiently broad to cover an infinite variety of situations and activities in which the force may become involved without unnecessarily tying the hands of the force and of the force commander as to how he is to discharge his heavy responsibilities. I believe that the United Nations command will be in a position to deal with almost any situation, and that the directives which will flow from the terms of reference will be sufficiently elastic to allow the Canadian and other forces both to protect themselves and to take effective peace keeping action.

Commenting on what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said, there is no doubt that we have the right, and we have asserted that right to see to it that the Canadians as well as other members of the United Nations force are able to take measures to protect themselves fully. Those measures will be taken in a manner calculated not to add to the difficulty involved in the assignment which has been given them.

I may say to the house quite frankly that on a number of occasions when I discussed matters involved in this question with the secretary general, both in New York and in Geneva, I told him about the interrogations that had been made in the house. He understood perfectly the concern of members of this house, a concern which he himself shares, to make sure that the opportunity of self defence is provided and that, to use the language of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, the force is not hamstrung in the activities which it pursues. I communicated again last night with the secretary general to make sure there would be no misunderstanding. As a result he has issued an aide memoire which I believe has been circulated to all member states, certainly to those interested in this particular operation, in the following words:

The terms of reference of the peace keeping force in Cyprus are set forth in paragraph 5 of the resolution adopted by the security council on March 4, 1964. The secretary general has instructed the commander of the force that the activities of the force which are exclusively under U.N. command are to be kept at all times within the framework of the security council terms of reference and no action not entirely consistent with them is ever to be undertaken.

In addition, the commander of the force does receive from the secretary general from time to time as a matter of course both general and detailed directions relating always to the terms of reference for his guidance in the discharge of his command. This being in accordance with usual practice in a military force has been the rule scrupulously followed with regard to all other U.N. peace keeping operations. Naturally those directives are entirely internal and cannot be made available for any public use.

In the interests of the successful discharge of the heavy responsibility which has been placed on the shoulders of the secretary general, I believe he had no alternative but to take the same position as was taken by his predecessors. It is the same rule which has obtained in respect of United Nations operations in Korea and in the Congo, and I am sure it will be applied in any future peace keeping operations.

The role of the United Nations in Cyprus is that of a policeman, just as it is in UNEF, just as it is in the Congo. Like any policeman, his function is public knowledge and the manner in which he discharges that function takes place in the full glare of publicity. His mere presence discourages lawbreaking, but where that in itself is not enough he may apply the minimum degree of force to discharge his responsibility. He is authorized, in addition, to defend himself as necessary.

All these things we take for granted as part of the police function in an ordered society; yet we do not insist on publication of the instructions that the policeman receives from his chief every day, nor would it be conducive to the fulfilment of his responsibilities if his every movement and intention were broadcast for the benefit of potential wrongdoers. These conditions are identical with those under which the peace keeping force in Cyprus must operate.

I recognize that I have a responsibility as Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is not an easy one but I accept it. My duty, within the limitations laid down by the United Nations, has been and will continue to be consistent with the assignment given to the United Nations peace keeping force. It is to see to it that the Canadian and other members of the United Nations peace keeping force are not prejudiced in any unjustified way.

Now, what I have said with regard to disclosure does not apply to the status of forces agreement. Yesterday I mentioned that there were consultations under way in New York between the foreign minister of Cyprus and the United Nations with regard to the status of forces agreement. I am happy to say that agreement was concluded late last night. While I am not in a position at the moment to table the status of forces agreement, I hope to be able to do so within a short period—just as soon as the full text has been made available.

With regard to the question raised yesterday by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, the status of forces agreement establishes explicitly that the force and its members, together with its vehicles, vessels, aircraft and equipment, shall enjoy freedom of movement throughout Cyprus. The status of forces agreement is in the main, although I have not got it for tabling at the moment, somewhat similar to the status of forces agreement for the Congo. I may say that because of the Congo experience, it was possible for the secretary general and his colleagues to prepare an agreement more quickly in this particular instance than in the other to which I referred.

Mr. Douglas: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask him if the status of forces agreement provides not only the legal right of free movement in Cyprus, but does it also give the United Nations forces the right to remove impediments which may have been put there by groups other than the legal government of Cyprus?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes; as I indicated yesterday, it does. This is implicit in one of the clauses. I think it is section 11 of the agreement.

With regard to the question about multinational forces which was put to me by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I would remind him of the announcement of policy made in this house on June 7, 1963 when the Prime Minister said, as recorded at page 790 of Hansard:

—I can assure the house, although I do not need to, that Canada has no intention whatever of developing national nuclear forces or of manufacturing national nuclear weapons. While we will give this proposal consideration, as indeed we are bound and are anxious to give consideration to any proposal made to us by any of our NATO allies—and we do not exclude the United States from that group—I do not think that it will be likely that we would wish to add to our existing responsibilities and commitments by participating in this kind of multilateral nuclear force. But this is a matter which will be given the consideration it deserves.

This proposal is not a NATO proposal. It is a proposal in which, consistent with this declaration of policy, Canada is not now participating.

With regard to the question of disarming guerrillas, I noted what the hon. gentleman said. He will recall what I said in that context a few days ago in this house. The position of the United Nations with regard to this question is part of the directives and general principles laid down by the secretary general and of the aide memoire to which I have already made reference.

In so far as the question concerning young NATO parliamentarians is concerned, I have not got the full answer but I hope, before we are through, that I may have it. Perhaps I could give it later.

Mr. Rapp: It is not my intention to delay the passage of this item, but since I have been here all week and my Easter holidays are shot a few minutes more will not do any harm. The reason I would like to speak on this item is that last year I was a member of the Canadian delegation attending the NATO conference. I must say this was an educational experience and one which was very useful.

There are 15 nations that make up NATO. They include Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Norway, France, Germany, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States. Strictly speaking, NATO is considered a military alliance, but to my surprise I find there were other aspects to this organization. When the delegates were assigned to the different committees I found that I had been assigned to the scientific and technical committee. This committee dealt mostly with matters pertaining to agriculture.

Amongst the subjects discussed were land reclamation and water pollution. I took advantage of the opportunity to speak about P.F.R.A. during the meetings of this committee to which I had been assigned, and referred to what had been done under it so far as our prairie regions were concerned. I also informed the committee that we had another plan, namely ARDA. There were two countries that were very much interested in this new program which was approved in 1961, and they were the United States and Turkey. These countries are faced with problems similar to the ones we have in Canada. It was therefore gratifying to find that these countries were very much interested in these programs. I suppose other Canadian delegates who were assigned to this committee, such as the hon. member for Lanark, had a similar experience.

Another matter in which I was greatly interested was the attempt to bring the tariffs of the NATO countries into line so these countries would enjoy better trading relationships. All in all, I must say that this was a very successful conference. While NATO may be considered a military alliance at the moment, nevertheless I think as time goes on more and more countries will realize that the other aspects of this alliance are very important. But these are important too, so that the relationship among these NATO countries may be such as to bring about greater harmony in all phases of our life.

Mr. Winch: I must admit that I did not realize until recently that the question of NATO was to be opened up and discussed the way it has been on a supplementary estimate. However since other members have opened up the entire subject of NATO and the Secretary of State for External Affairs has made some comment on it I feel obliged, myself, to make some comments and ask for some information with regard to this organization, our responsibility towards it in Canada, and decisions which have been made on the authority of the minister.

My first question arises out of the promise made across Canada by the Prime Minister that, having fulfilled the commitment allegedly made by the previous government with regard to nuclear arms, the present government would consult with the NATO authorities and endeavour to negotiate itself out of any nuclear position. My question is therefore: What action has the government taken through the minister of external affairs to negotiate Canada out of a nuclear commitment within the NATO framework?

I should like to follow this up with another question—I presume the hon. gentleman is the only one who can answer it. It is my understanding that there has been a renegotiation of Canada's commitment to NATO with regard to four R.C.A.F. squadrons in France. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs be kind enough to give us a clear and lucid explanation of these negotiations which, I believe, were conducted a few months ago, based on the isolationist policy of de Gaulle who takes the position of God Almighty unto himself and declares he intends to develop his own nuclear force, irrespective of what the rest of the world or the NATO countries might think. We were told in the defence committee in Paris last fall that in exactly six years France proposes to have three atomic submarines all equipped with atomic missiles and that four years thereafter her entire military force, air force, army and navy, will be completely nuclear equipped. Having this attitude in mind, on what basis has the minister negotiated a change in policy concerning our four squadrons in France as a result of which two of these squadrons are to be moved from France to Germany but two are to remain in France because de Gaulle refuses, in accordance with his policy, to bring his own air force in Germany back to France because they could not be nuclear equipped? He keeps his air force in Germany where it can be nuclear equipped by the United States.

On what basis are we now to keep two of our squadrons in France where they cannot be equipped in any way. I should also like to ask, under this new arrangement whereby two squadrons go to Germany from France and two are held in France, who is paying, Canada or NATO? Why, in the case of our two squadrons which remain in France, has there been a change to a reconnaissance and conventional role when these planes were constructed during the lifetime of the previous administration to perform a role which was solely a nuclear role? These changes have, I understand, been made in the last four months as a result of negotiations with NATO regarding our air force in France.

Since we are getting into a detailed discussion on NATO, let the minister give us an answer to at least these two questions. I ask him again, how far has progress been made with the commitment to renegotiate Canada's nuclear role in NATO and, second, on what basis do we maintain two air squadrons in France, non-equipped, when de Gaulle says France will keep hers in Germany, although we are maintaining ours in France itself to no purpose?

Mr. Peters: I only want to ask several questions. One affects the problem raised by my hon. friend from Vancouver East in relation to our policy in NATO toward France. It would seem to me, and I am not an expert in external affairs, that there must be some change in the attitude taken with regard to France. The fact that Canada finally succumbed to United States influence with regard to the possession of atomic weapons must have had some effect on French opinion and I am curious to know what the attitude has been and what, if anything, can be done to improve the relationship between France and Canada.

In the second place, I am extremely interested in the situation which has developed in Cyprus. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has done exactly what he has always done, and as ministers of external affairs have done for a very long time. He has talked a lot of mumbo-jumbo which members of parliament do not understand, and which I am sure the country is not supposed to understand, either. The subject of external affairs has always been in a field apart. I am always surprised to find that in my party, as I suppose in other parties, everybody who wants to be somebody wants to be an expert in external affairs. I have no such ambitions but I believe the question of Cyprus is so important that the Canadian public should understand what is happening and be well aware of what is going on. The minister used a number of Latin words which I do not understand, and it is not surprising we do not know what our troops are going to do. I now ask the minister of external affairs to tell us, not as a minister in charge of a department but as acting prime minister, why the request which was made by a number of members to the government, that they be provided with free transportation to Cyprus during what was to have been the Easter holiday, was denied.

Most of us do not speak the language of the participants in the cold war on the island of Cyprus. Speaking neither the language of the Turks nor the language of the Greeks, we would probably only be able to converse with those connected with the old British regime and others who were able to speak our language. I and the other members interested in going to Cyprus were not wishing to go there as a delegation of the government. We were not going there as representatives of a NATO organization or in any other official capacity; we were only going in order to find out some of the answers which I am sure we are not going to learn in the House of Commons, although some of these answers must be available to every soldier in Cyprus today.

I think it would not have hurt one little bit, because the V.I.P. plane—and I have checked this—is going to Cyprus with space available for three or four members of parliament if they want to go. These members were not asking that their expenses be paid by the Canadian people; we were only asking for transportation to Cyprus. We are willing to go there without the usual amenities that are afforded visiting members of parliament. I think this government was scared to let us go because we would know the answers to some of the questions that have been asked in this house.

I am sure that if I spoke to some of the soldiers in Cyprus they would be able to tell me what they are supposed to do on that island. I would be very surprised if they could not tell me, because if this were the case they would be doing whatever they wanted to do and would not be under direct instruction. I am sure that no secrets would be revealed if I were able to talk to the troops. I would be very surprised if the members of the Canadian contingent, or those of the Irish and the other contingents were able to find out anything that is of a secret nature, because of our inability to converse in the languages of the island. I know the hon. member is going to say that most of them are French, and this is perfectly true.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member tell us the names of the members who asked to go to Cyprus this week?

Mr. Peters: Arnold Peters was one. I cannot speak for the others, but I know that others wanted to go in an unofficial capacity. I can only speak for myself, and I asked to go. The Congo seems very far removed from here, but Cyprus does not seem so far away. I personally would have liked to go there to see what the economic situation is—not so much in terms of the orders given to the troops because, while this is important, that is their business and I agree with the minister in this respect. He is probably well aware of these instructions, and we presume the instructions are fair and reasonable and will afford protection to our troops. If this is not the case, we will replace the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Certainly the leader of the official opposition, in view of his past experience in connection with such forces, would know something of the guarantees that would be given in the circumstances.

I confess that I did not know where the island of Cyprus was and I had to look it up on the map. I suppose when I went to public school and studied geography I knew where it was, but I have forgotten since then because I suppose I have not been particularly interested in it; I have never had reason to pay it too much attention. I believe that we in Canada will have to make a different type of contribution to Cyprus in the form of economic assistance and, probably, technological assistance, before these problems can be settled.

I am told that most nations which have been concerned with the island of Cyprus have found things on that island to be too expensive, and one of the problems is that the amount of money that can be raised through the economy of that country is not sufficient to keep the people on the island. If this is so, members of parliament would be in a much better position to devise methods of helping the island if they visited that country. So what, if some members of parliament occasionally went to the army barracks and had a meal? I do not think this would bankrupt the government.

I think this club connected with the Department of External Affairs should not exist. I am of the opinion that this club has been very exclusive up to now and will have to be less exclusive in order that some members who are interested in this particular field may obtain some information.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, before the hon. member attacks the club too strongly, may I just tell him that I know of no objection or law which would prevent my hon. friend going to Cyprus.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I do not feel so strongly about it that I intend to pay for a commercial passage in order to go to Cyprus.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: I do not want to do this for a vacation. Four or five days in Cyprus would, in my opinion, not necessarily be a vacation at this time. Many people would find that out. I do not want to go there for social reasons. I wish to go there in order to ascertain some of the conditions that exist on the island and methods in which we can assist these people. I would be doing this in my parliamentary role.

I know the minister has not refused permission. Permission hinges upon whether transportation is given through another department. But I do think that if we are going to look intelligently at the problem as it affects Cyprus we will have to think, not so much in terms of roadblocks, of guerrilla bands in a particular area of the island, but in terms of the economic situation of the island community and the type of aid Canada could give to assist in the development of the island and its economy. We should also be giving consideration to what can be done to enable the two groups on the island to get along in harmony. It is my understanding that the poverty on that island is very severe and this is one of the deciding factors behind the operation of the guerrilla forces in the community. I have only read this.

If I had the opportunity to go to Cyprus, and if—there are many "ifs" in this—we had been given an Easter recess, and if I had been able to learn anything on arriving there in view of the fact that there would be a language barrier, I think I could have made a much greater contribution. I suggest to the minister that he should not be so reluctant in this regard. I think only a limited number of members would be willing to sacrifice four or five days in order to go to the island. It seems to me that if we went in a non-official capacity—and certainly we would have to go in such a capacity, or we would be a delegation—and were able to consider the situation in Cyprus and also in some of the other areas in which Canadian forces are involved, our understanding of these questions might be much greater than it is at the present time.

Yesterday the minister mentioned Yemen. I think I would not be too wrong if I said that most members of parliament do not know where Yemen is and have no idea of the conditions or people in Yemen. I may be wrong and I may be doing a disservice to members of parliament. But we are supplying to Yemen a certain number of Canadian personnel to help solve the problems of that country. According to some of the reports that have been given us by the minister, this is a rather dangerous mission and there may be other things that are necessary in Yemen. Far be it from me to run myself down. I have met people from Yemen at the United Nations. I have heard some of the discussions, and I think we are perhaps overstating the situation. However I do think an opportunity should be given for members of parliament to visit these areas, provided such visits do not interfere with other commitments.

I agree that it would be different if this were to be a delegation. I think the Minister of National Defence will have to make the decision as to whether facilities are available for such visits. This is the responsibility of the people concerned, but I think there should be no reluctance to make allowances for these purposes. One of my friends keeps travelling around this part of the world. He was in several South American countries, and several times during his visits there happened to be a revolution in progress. I suggest that this is purely accidental, because he immediately leaves and the revolution goes on anyway. Many hon. members know the former member to whom I am referring, and it does seem unfortunate.

However, I do not think this will happen again and that the situation will be hurt by members of parliament.

I am sure the minister of external affairs, with his wide experience of travel across the world, will be of the opinion that greater understanding of the problems of the people to whom he speaks, including those in Cyprus, is essential, and this is made possible by his ability to visit these areas. I suggest the government reconsider the request which has been made by a number of members of parliament who would like to spend a few days in areas where Canadians are contributing to world peace. I think they should be allowed to make such a trip, not only with the encouragement of the government but also with the blessing of the minister of external affairs.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be a good idea to send the hon. member for Timiskaming to Cyprus so he can see exactly what is happening. Because when he speaks in this house we sometimes sleep.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words if only to prove to my hon. colleagues that I am here this afternoon.

Looking at the supplementary estimates concerning the aid to other countries, we realize the insignificance of amounts, which moreover were obtained after numerous representations. On the other hand, if we consider that within a few hours, it was decided to send Canadian troops to Cyprus, at a cost of about $2.6 million—to send them only, not to bring them back—we can wonder what sort of peace-making role our country is supposed to play. Canada is considered a middle-sized country, whose role should not be solely to preserve peace but to be an example to the world. We notice however that we are ready to spend $2.6 million for military purposes.

On the other hand, if we consider the amounts that are earmarked for foreign aid, we find that they represent about $2,250,000. This means that our country would rather encourage those who sell military equipment than those who sell food products which could be given to underdeveloped countries, or rather emerging countries. We have often heard that our country is doing the best it can, considering its population; but that it is not good enough, and our country should do much more to help those countries which are being developed and to fight hunger and poverty in the world.

I think there would be a way of making things easier since a country is rich only if its citizens are rich, a country cannot be considered a wealthy one if all its citizens do not enjoy a certain degree of economic comfort. I think, therefore, that the government could also help Canadian citizens live a better and easier life; this would permit Canada to help those countries which are being developed and to fight hunger and poverty in the world.

If the democratic countries cannot solve that problem, countries with another ideology will, and then we will try to fight them on another front.

Mr. Chairman, we should consider, not necessarily under these supplementary estimates but in years to come, granting more specific assistance to foreign countries and allocating a larger share of the external affairs' estimates to this item.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I have two observations for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin).

In the first place, in regard to our troops now in Cyprus, I hope they will not take root there as our Canadian military representatives did in the Gaza strip where they have been since 1956. So, I hope that our troops now in Cyprus will not remain there as long as was the case in the Congo and everywhere else.

Second, as far as the assistance given to underdeveloped countries in particular is concerned, I stated in this house the importance of helping missions. I submitted at that time that missions of any denomination that are already set up in Africa, in Asia or anywhere else can more easily and more efficiently than anybody else help the people and consequently, they need assistance. I wonder whether the Canadian government could not help those underdeveloped nations through our missions and through the representatives we have in those countries.

I make that observation in good faith and I hope that the minister will find an opportunity to tell me whether it is possible and whether there could be some way to assist officially the missionaries who dedicate themselves in the various missions throughout the world.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I merely want to say that when we were in power, the then prime minister had voted an amount of $300,000 for scholarships to French speaking countries and for student exchanges. I am asking the minister whether this government intends to increase that contribution.

We are assisting many countries through the Colombo plan, which is excellent, but I am wondering whether it would not be desirable to contribute also, in some other ways, to the development of French speaking African countries in the economic field as well as in other fields.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Certainly. The hon. member shall see, when we discuss the main estimates for 1964-65, that we have proposals to make to assist those French speaking African countries.

[Text]

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I was wondering, before the item carries, whether the minister has anything to say on the proposal advanced by my colleague the hon. member for Timiskaming. I have had the opportunity in the past of taking some of these trips and I have visited countries to see first hand some of the conditions which exist there. I think this has enabled me to form a better idea of the circumstances and is of assistance when matters of this kind come up for discussion in this house. In addition, I think it is of very great benefit to the morale of our soldiers to receive a visit from their members of parliament. If I may add to the proposition of the hon. member, the government will not be put to additional expense. We are not asking for a special flight for this purpose; merely that we be granted the advantage of occupying any empty seats on V.I.P. aircraft engaging in such missions.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Peters: I should like a reply, Mr. Chairman, because there is no point in my writing another four or five letters. Perhaps the minister will reply, not as external affairs minister but as acting prime minister. I think he would have the capacity to say whether this can be agreed to in the future or not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All I can say to my hon. friend is that this would involve powers which even the Prime Minister does not possess. Naturally this would have to be a matter for consideration by the department concerned. However, I have noted what my hon. friend has said and I agree that, given the proper moment, visits of this kind are useful. I can do no more at present than note with great interest the observations made by my two amiable and distinguished friends from northern Ontario about their desire to travel. I hope it will not be misunderstood when I say it would have been very fortunate for both themselves and others if it had been possible for them to do that during the past week.

Mr. Winch: Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs in a position to reply to my basic two questions regarding the fulfilment of the government's promise to try and negotiate us out of the nuclear role in NATO, and what was the basis of the negotiations that led to the closing of certain NATO bases in France?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With regard to the last two questions I really think these would be more appropriate at another time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister should be in a position to answer the question about the NATO parliamentary group. The tentative itinerary provided for the visit to take place in Canada between May 13 and May 16, for lectures on Canadian history, political and economic, with a briefing on Canada's position in external affairs, a government luncheon, luncheon with the Canadian NATO parliamentarians association, and a visit to Montreal. Arrangements were made for some 25 parliamentarians to come here but suddenly, on March 30, the minister's office, in a letter written by Mr. J. D. Edmonds advised:

> —I am writing to tell you that after a great deal of consideration and after seeking advice from a number of quarters, and because of the great pressures and demands upon my time, I have reluctantly come to the conclusion that it will be impossible for me to assist you in the implementation of the visit to Canada of the European young NATO political leaders.

It is very important that these young people have an opportunity to visit our country, particularly after arrangements were made. To cancel those arrangements suddenly will certainly not bring any encomiums to Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sorry I did not answer that question and I thank my right hon. friend for reminding me of it. So far as I know there is no basis for thinking that any official invitation had been extended to these young people, and consequently there was no cancellation of an official invitation. The hon. member for York Centre had written to me about this matter on March 12, and I indicated to him subsequently that this was a commendable project, to have the young NATO political leaders anxious to visit Canada and learn more about it.

I fully agree with what my right hon. friend has said about the desirability of exchanges of this sort, but we had made no provision for funds for this project. However, I have listened to what the right hon. gentleman had to say, and I understand the hon. member for York Centre sent me a further letter yesterday which I have not yet had an opportunity to see.

The person who made the request was a Mrs. Nancy Powis, who came to see my assistant several weeks ago about the possibility of such a visit, as did the hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And the hon. member for Bruce.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My right hon. friend says the hon. member for Bruce, and I suppose he saw one of my staff. There are no funds available for this purpose, but I shall look into the matter in view of the representations which have been made again today.

Item agreed to.

10e. Representation abroad—construction, acquisition or improvement of buildings, works, land, equipment and furnishings, $225,000.

Mr. Peters: Will the minister explain where these buildings are being erected and the acquisition of land is taking place? Even with the limited experience I have, I have always been surprised that Canada does not seem to have enough money to operate its external affairs offices in a proper manner. I know of one area where we have an establishment of embassy size and where a much lesser establishment could do a better job. We could present a much better picture of Canada if we did not over-extend ourselves; in other words, we should not push our status unless we are able to maintain it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is in Helsinki and Islamabad in Pakistan.

Item agreed to.

15e. Canada's civilian participation as a member of the international commissions for supervision and control in Indo-China, $6,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister bring the committee up to date in regard to conditions generally in southeast Asia, particularly in those areas that are danger spots? What is his view as to the degree of danger that exists in South Viet Nam? Does he not agree that what is taking place there is one of the gravest challenges to the western world and to freedom itself? What, in his opinion, is the degree of success being attained by the western forces in that area to prevent the spread of communism? I do not want him to go into great detail, but if he could give an outline it would be helpful.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The situation in Indo-China generally causes justifiable concern. The conflict between the two regimes in North and South Viet Nam presents the world with a difficult and dangerous problem. As the right hon. gentleman is well aware, Canada has an interest in Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos, as a member of the international supervisory commissions in those three countries.

The situation in Laos, since the reactivation of the commission, has been strained by continuing difficulties, largely arising out of the failure of certain members of the commission to recognize the validity of the Canadian claim that majority decisions of that commission are needed, in the present situation, rather than an insistence on the rule of unanimity. The commission there continues to serve, under difficult circumstances, as best it can.

While the commission in Cambodia has not been very active it continues to serve important purposes. It may be put to more active use, depending on the outcome of certain discussions that are now taking place with the members of the Geneva accord group. This involves recent proposals from the government of Cambodia through Prince Sihanouk. It may be that in the course of the next few days or the next few weeks, there will be some indication of a decision to meet the current situation there.

The situation in Viet Nam is a serious one. Warfare continues and generally speaking the west is deeply involved by implication in this situation. The international supervisory commission has continued to function since the change of government in Viet Nam and we, as a member of that commission, are following the serious events there with the concern about which my hon. friend spoke. I do not think that I can add anything more, except to concur in what my right hon. friend said about the serious developments there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the situation deteriorating in South Viet Nam to a degree that is threatening and challenging?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would not say that it is deteriorating, but there is no cause for believing that the situation has substantially improved.

Item agreed to.

99e. Contribution to the Canadian Red Cross in aid of disaster victims in East Pakistan, $10,000.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, this is the first of five items under the external aid office. The various items call for contributions with respect to disasters or need in East Pakistan, Barbados, Yugoslavia, Brazil and the Caribbean islands. They add up to $50,500. In terms of the way we vote money here the total is really quite small and I am sure there will be no question but that the house will vote these items readily.

Since these items will be charged to the fiscal year 1963-64, I wonder whether the minister can now give us a figure representing the total of Canada's contributions under the heading of external aid for that fiscal year? Could he also tell us what the intended total is for the fiscal year 1964-65?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The total—

Mr. Knowles: If I can get the minister's attention, in the first place I should like a specific total of what we spent under the heading of external aid for the fiscal year 1963-64, to which these items are being charged, and I should also like an estimate for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend is asking for the bilateral grants. For 1963-64 the total was $50,400,000 odd. For 1964-65 it is estimated that the total will be around $75,600,000. Of course, this does not take into account in 1964-65 the program I have announced; the loan program and the increases in bilateral aid will bring our program up to somewhere between $170 million and $180 million.

Item agreed to.

103e. Emergency relief in the form of canned hams and powdered skim milk to the government of Brazil, $5,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, this particular item has to do with aid and assistance to the government of Brazil. There has been a change in the government there brought about by a revolutionary military coup. What is the general attitude of the Department of External Affairs toward the recognition of governments that follow a coup such as has taken place in Brazil? Has there been any determination yet as to the recognition of a new government?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I cannot of course comment on the situation in Brazil. It is too recent. With regard to the policy generally pursued by the government and, indeed, by Canada over the years concerning recognition, may I say first of all that recognition of the state is one thing and recognition of the government is another. With regard to the recognition of a government we would want to bear in mind the durability of tenure of the government itself. If this were apparent, all other things being considered equal we would extend de facto recognition. The question of de jure recognition would follow.

Recently we recognized a country with which we do not have any ideological community of interests. It had been admitted into the United Nations and as we were members of that body—I refer, of course, to Mongolia—we accorded that country recognition, although we do not presently intend to establish a mission there. Our procedure in this instance followed exactly the procedure two years ago by the former administration in the recognition of Albania. Conditions there were similar to the situation that attended our recognition of Mongolia.

In the case of commonwealth countries the question of recognition does not usually arise. My right hon. friend will remember interrogating me one day with regard to the government of Zanzibar. In that instance we did withhold recognition because we wished to examine developments there, in consultation with other members of the commonwealth.

With regard to recognition generally, the situation would be much as I have stated. There are, of course, some countries with which we do not exchange diplomatic missions; this is one way of effecting recognition. The mere acknowledgement of the existence officially of a country is another way of extending recognition. In some countries the ideological complexion has had something to do with the policy of recognition, although we feel generally that the isolation of countries in this interdependent period in the history of the world is undesirable.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has there been any discussion as yet between the governments of Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States as to the recognition of the new government of Brazil?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Item agreed to.

115e. Assessment for membership in the international (including commonwealth) organizations that are detailed in the estimates, including authority to pay such assessments in the amounts and in the currencies in which they are levied, notwithstanding that the total of such payments may exceed the equivalent in Canadian dollars, estimated as of February, 1964, which is $977,500.

Mr. Peters: This is a million dollar item and relates to the assessment for membership in international organizations, including the commonwealth. I have wondered what the addition was in this case which warranted the extra million dollars?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The total vote is about $977,000. I believe $4,500 will be to reimburse the Department of Finance vote for unforeseen expenditures from which funds were provided to meet the additional assessment for Canada in the commonwealth educational liaison unit. The house will note with interest, I am sure, that in the month of August this year the commonwealth educational conference will take place. This will be the third meeting since the one held in London, the last meeting being in New Delhi. This conference will bring together educators from all parts of the world. It will be a conference of very great importance, one that will be welcomed to Canada and one that will have very important commonwealth significance.

The $973,000 will go for our membership in the organization for economic co-operation and development about which we spoke yesterday. An amount of $646,648 was provided in the main estimates for 1963-64, to cover our assessment in the O.E.C.D. for the calendar year 1963. The O.E.C.D. budget for 1964 is forecast at 90 million francs, up 19 million francs from 1963. The construction of a new headquarters building accounts for some of this substantial increase in the budget of the organization.

Mr. Peters: Can the minister tell us what major project is now being undertaken in O.E.C.D.?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend did not hear the excellent speeches made yesterday by the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I recommend strongly that he read their observations. This organization, as my hon. friend knows, is an organization that was set up to promote the economic interests of its member states. The member states are made up of the NATO countries and other non-NATO European countries, plus one country in Asia, Japan. The organization is directed by a distinguished former Danish economist and minister of finance, Mr. Kristensen.

In addition to furthering the economic interests of this group of countries, it seeks to encourage increases in the external aid programs of member countries, and contributes through such programs to the improvement of the standard of living in the underdeveloped nations of the world. This is an organization which I believe is doing important work.

Mr. Peters: I agree entirely with the minister. I was wondering just where O.E.C.D. was doing this work. I am wondering if Canada should be giving leadership to have O.E.C.D. do something for the development of Cyprus at the moment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend will recall the reply I gave to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam several weeks ago when I mentioned that Canada had put forward a plan for consideration with regard to the very situation to which the hon. member directs our attention. This is a matter that is receiving the attention as well of O.E.C.D.

Item agreed to.

146e. To reimburse the agricultural products board for the export value of skim milk powder donated to international relief agencies, $490,400.

Mr. Peters: Yesterday, during consideration of the estimates for the Department of Agriculture, we discussed this $490,000 which is to reimburse the agricultural products board for the export of skim milk powder donated to international relief agencies. I am wondering why this full amount was paid to the agricultural products board. Why did the government not economize on this interdepartmental transaction? In other words, we paid the full price for this skim milk powder while other agricultural products were written off. As I remember it, there was a large sum written off in the revaluation of inventories. Would it not have been possible to obtain this product at less than the book value, because the purpose to which it was put was for relief and it came from our non-disposable surplus? Would it not have been possible to transfer this to external affairs for foreign aid?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): These products are bought at concessional prices.

Item agreed to.

149e. Assessment towards financing the Laos international commission, $84,100.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What has been the total cost to Canada as a member of the Laos international commission? The amount of the assessment here seems very high, considering the fact that the commission is composed of such a few persons. I wonder how it is made up?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have not got a breakdown for the other countries. The total for one year is, I think, $360,000 for the three commissions in Indo-China. I do not have a breakdown of the total amount required for each of these three commissions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the total personnel?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It varies. In Laos, I think it is 26; in Cambodia, which is very small, around four or five, and in Viet Nam it is around 45 to 50.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: That concludes consideration of the supplementary estimates of the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank the committee. I wonder if it would be agreeable if we were to sit right through the hour from five to six—in view of what I said about Cyprus and that trip?

An hon. Member: I agree.

Mr. Howard: If the Secretary of State for External Affairs is desirous of going to Cyprus we should not detain him. I think we should call it five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motion for the production of papers.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

REMOVAL OF ARMS AND AMMUNITION

The house resumed from Thursday, March 19, consideration of the following motion of Mr. Bell:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters, memoranda or directives made by the minister and/or the Department of National Defence regarding the rounding up of arms and/or ammunition.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to ask the unanimous consent of the house to withdraw this motion. I may say I intended to withdraw it anyway, but I had thought to exercise my right of reply. However, in an effort to be co-operative I am willing to forget that this afternoon, and ask that the motion be withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to withdraw this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

GRAIN

PROVISION FOR DISPOSITION OF GRADE EXCESS AND OVERAGE

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-17, to provide for the restitution and distribution of the proceeds of grade excess and overage unlawfully confiscated and converted in 1955 and continuously thereafter under an act intituled an act to amend the Canada Grain Act to the use and purposes of the governor in council.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Speaker: I have two statements to make in connection with this bill. First, I have a few not too brief remarks on a matter of interest which was raised by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) as to the procedure which the Chair has followed in the past and is following at the present time with regard to assisting members, or whether or not members should receive notice that their bills are in order or not. I think it would be useful, generally speaking, if I made a statement with regard to the question raised by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi and then dealt with the bill which the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) wishes to bring forward this afternoon.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi rose toward the end of February to direct a question to the Chair. The question is found in the following words on page 281 of Hansard of February 27:

Last session and the session before, a number of these bills were determined to be out of order at the time of second reading. I remember at one point speaking to the Chair about this, and the house leader for the government during the last session said he felt some method should be devised whereby private members could be informed before second reading if there were anything substantially wrong with their bills. I should like to ask the Chair whether any method has been worked out whereby private members might be given this information before second reading, and I do so in view of this caveat that has been entered to all these bills.

To summarize, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi suggests that a member having a public bill before the house should be notified in advance, that is, before second reading, if the said bill is to be declared out of order. This cannot be done for different reasons. First, so many public bills have been introduced by private members that the study thereof may be completed, in some cases, only on the eve of their being called for second reading. Second, if the Speaker has any doubt as to a bill being in order it is possible, as often happens, that he might call on the members to assist him in coming to a decision. How could he do so if he had already advised the mover that his bill will not be accepted? To quote from Beauchesne, citation 71(6), page 61 of the fourth edition:

In all matters of doubt, the Speaker will consider attentively the opinions of members of experience, or sometimes, instead of expressing his opinion on either side, may ask instructions from the house or reserve his decision on the point in discussion, or suggest that the house may, if it thinks proper, dispense with the rule in a particular case. In doubtful cases, he will be largely guided by circumstances.

In the third place, the Speaker has no assurance that all bills will be proceded with. Why, then, should he rule on bills which may never be called? The time to give a ruling is when a question is raised in the house. It certainly is not one of the duties of the Speaker to rule in advance on hypothetical questions or on points of law before they arise.

Citation 70(6) at page 60 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, is to the effect that—

The Speaker decides questions of order only when they actually arise and not in anticipation.

Now, citation 364 at page 270 states:

Leave to introduce a bill is not always granted as a matter of course. The house is free to refuse it—

In the citations which follow many examples are given where the Speaker rules out the motion for first reading as being out of order on the grounds that it involved a charge upon the revenue, or for other reasons. Evidently in those cases no previous notice could be given to the hon. members sponsoring such measures.

In the circumstances now prevailing, the members have the advantage that all their bills are introduced, receive first reading and are circulated. They have been given notice by way of a caveat that these bills will be studied and, if necessary to declare any out of order, that this will be done only after serious consideration. This procedure has been agreed to by the house itself.

May I remind all hon. members of a certain standing order which is to be found in our standing orders, and suggest that if any of them wish assistance in the drafting of public bills, or as to their legality, they should consult with the parliamentary counsel. It is up to the members to inform themselves as to the rules of the house and their application in the past. The guiding principle is declared in section 54 of the British North America Act and in our standing order 61. In other words, bills involving an expenditure of public money or taxation, and all measures involving a charge upon the people, must be preceded by a resolution. It should be noted also that a resolution is required not only when an amendment seeks to increase the amount previously approved by parliament, but also if it changes the modality and conditions of the grant authorized by the original legislation.

Therefore, before introducing their bills in the house, hon. members should take the trouble of reading the decisions of speakers in the past as found in Beauchesne's third edition, these decisions being summarized as comments following the related standing orders in the fourth edition.

The Speaker is the servant of the house and is responsible for the enforcement of its rules. As stated by Beauchesne:

He declines to submit motions to the house which obviously infringe the rules which govern its proceedings.

In other words, the Speaker does not make the rules but he is bound by them and by the decisions of former Speakers as they have been interpreted in the past.

So much by way of reply to the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. I hope that statement will be of use to hon. members generally. I come, now, to the bill which is presently before the house, Bill No. C-17.

For different reasons, which I will try to summarize as briefly as possible, I must regretfully rule the motion for second reading of this bill to be out of order.

The argument made by the hon. member to justify the passage of this measure is found at great length in the preamble thereto, to which I will refer later on, and in the explanatory notes.

The preamble, for instance, states in its conclusion that "His Excellency the Governor General did not recommend the appropriation of grade excess and overage of the proceeds thereof to the use and purposes of the governor in council, as required under section 54 of the British North America Act" and also that "the amendments purporting to be so enacted are and ever have been unlawful of purpose and null and void in effect". In an attempt to further clarify the situation, it is stated in the explanatory notes to the bill that "Without the Governor General's recommendation, the 1955 provisions were and are unlawful."

Then the bill goes on to say that the full amount of the loss shall be paid out of the public officers guarantee fund or, if not, then recovered from the officials responsible and be disposed of for the construction of a public terminal elevator at the town of Tisdale and for other purposes. I am unable to see how such a plan could be worked out, nor am I ready to admit to the insufficiency of the resolution which preceded the introduction of "An act to amend the Canada Grain Act" in 1955. If there was a defect in the procedure there is no doubt that the point should have been raised and decided at that time. This has always been the position adopted by my predecessors and has been accepted by the courts.

For instance, as far back as 1926, in the exchequer court in the case of the King, plaintiff, and Irwin, defendant, where the defence had claimed that the Naturalization Act "was in the nature of a money bill and was not properly introduced into the house and was void" it was held, "that when a statute appears on its face to have been duly passed by a competent legislature, the courts must assume that all things have been rightly done in respect of its passage, and cannot entertain any argument that there is a defect of parliamentary procedure lying behind the act."

The argument for the validity of this act rests on premises which I unfortunately am unable to accept. To quote the words of Lord Halsbury in a decision respecting the commissioners for income tax, we must "proceed upon the assumption that the legislature is an ideal person that does not make mistakes."

And now Willis J. in Lee v. Bude and Torrington Junction Railway Co. (1871) L.R.6, C.P.576 at p. 582, used words which I would like to adopt. He said, "If an act of parliament has been obtained improperly, it is for the legislature to correct it; but so long as it exists as law, the courts are bound to obey it...Having neglected to take the proper steps at the proper time to prevent the act from passing into a law, it is too late now to raise any objections to it."

I therefore consider myself bound by the opinions and decisions I have referred to or cited, and cannot entertain any argument that there is a defect of parliamentary procedure lying behind an act as a matter of fact. It is, as has been said, a case where the maxim omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta applies with great force and rigour.

As the trust moneys mentioned in the bill and proposed to be recovered as suggested in clause 2 thereof for the general advantage of the beneficiaries cannot, by virtue of what I have already said, be so recovered, it seems useless to repeat the reasons I gave last session in ruling out of order another bill of the hon. member respecting the Tisdale grain terminal on June 13, 1963, and which is to be found at pages 987 and 988 of Hansard of that date, or the ruling by Mr. Deputy Speaker on December 10 when he ruled out a government bill which had been introduced without a resolution. This was quite a lengthy decision so I will quote only a couple of lines. He said, "The new act will change the conditions attached to the spending of these moneys by the original act and, to this extent, the bill now before the house would appear to be a money bill."

Before closing my remarks I would refer to the drafting of this bill; more particularly to the long preamble of two pages and a half, which is more in the nature of an argument, an explanatory note and a discussion, than in the proper and usual form of such part of a bill.

Standing order 72 provides expressly that, "No bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape." In the caveat I gave on Thursday, February 20 on the introduction of 68 public bills by private members, I stated that each of these bills would be scrutinized and that if any defects were found therein so far as the practices and usages of the house are concerned, it would be brought to hon. members' atttention. This I am doing now. As stated by the conference of commissioners on uniformity of legislation in Canada in 1942, "Preambles should be avoided. An act should explain itself and if reference to a preamble is necessary in construing any provisions of an act, it would indicate that the draft requires revision."

Sir Allison Russell, K.C., expresses the same opinion in his book on legislative drafting when he further states, "It is only in exceptional cases, usually those where constitutional changes are being enacted, that a preamble is now used to explain the object of an act. A preamble cannot restrict or extend the enacting part, when the language and scope of the act are not open to doubt."

However, it is not mainly on account of the preamble that I have to declare this bill out of order, but for the reasons given previously.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, naturally I am not in a position to argue against your decision. However, it is beyond my understanding why one legal official would say that this bill is not out of order while another legal official says that it is out of order. In my opinion the reasons for the bill which are given in the explanatory notes are fully explicit. The farmer has the right to use these overages to his advantage. If the overages are under the direction of the governor in council and the governor in council can say for what purposes they are to be used, I cannot understand why the bill should be out of order.

I am not going to object to Your Honour's ruling and I fully accept your decision, but at the same time there must be some other method adopted in this house which will resolve this type of difficulty, where a member receives legal advice from one official that does not coincide with the opinion of another legal official.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the hon. gentleman whether he submitted his bill to the parliamentary counsel, because the parliamentary counsel shares my opinion with regard to this bill, namely that it is out of order. Did the hon. member take the matter up with parliamentary counsel, as is his right, of course?

Mr. Rapp: No, Mr. Speaker, I did not.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might be permitted, since Your Honour referred to me in the opinion, to say just a word by way of explanation. I realize at once that I am not strictly in order, any more than the hon. member was when he commented on what Your Honour had to say. However, the hon. member did telephone me this morning about his bill, and I confess I had not looked at the bill at all. The hon. member gave me a general idea about it, and I am afraid it was completely out of my mind at the time that this question of order had arisen in a previous case. I did undertake to say something about the bill if the hon. member spoke. I would just like him and the house to know that I was acting in perfect good faith, and I was not in any way seeking to mislead the hon. member.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, as the seconder of this motion I should like to say just a word or two on the bill. It has been my experience in the house that private members' bills are not treated strictly on legal grounds. I can understand the argument applied in regard to statutes, namely that matters interfering with the rights of individuals and placing restrictions upon them should be very, very strictly ruled upon. But surely a private member's bill is the only way we have in Canada of bringing forward what we think are inequities in the law and giving them some airing before the highest court in the land. We do not look upon this as an appeal to a court of appeal, but to public opinion. The number of private bills which get through are very few; they are nearly always talked out, sometimes with the help of the officials of the house. I do not think that this bill would even get to a vote if it were debated at length; but apparently there has been widespread dissatisfaction with the way private property has been expropriated, and this is our only opportunity to give the matter a proper airing. Perhaps this short discussion we are now having may have that effect. But I do not think we should be too restrictive in private members' bills because this hour provides the only opportunity to discuss such matters.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all hon. members realize that it gives the Chair no satisfaction to rule bills out of order, but it is my duty to find whether there are any faults in a bill, and if so to say so to the house. May I remind all hon. members that they are entitled to aid and assistance, and if they will consult with parliamentary counsel they will get that aid and assistance. Otherwise if hon. members want to take the risk before presenting their bills without first discovering whether the bills conform with the rules and regulations, then that is up to them. But they need not take that risk; all they need do is present their suggestions and ask for aid and assistance of parliamentary counsel, who is there to assist members. It is my particular job as Speaker to try and make sure that any bill which is presented to the house is in proper form, and it is my duty so to declare out of order a bill which is not.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, just going back to the point that it is difficult to warn members before second reading, it appears to me that the length of argument put forth by Your Honour against this bill is an indication that considerable time was spent developing the argument to rule this bill out of order. Therefore there would have been ample time to let the hon. member know that the bill was not in order.

COASTAL FISHERIES PROTECTION ACT

PROVISION FOR EXTENSION OF FISHING ZONES

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-27, to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act (12-mile fishing zone).

He said: Mr. Speaker, when this measure was before us last year I said we were well aware of the fact that the government had announced its intention to negotiate a 12-mile fishing limit for Canada, but I added that while we were aware of that fact we were quite unaware of the details of the type of 12-mile fishing limit the government had in mind. I think I should reiterate those words today. I am glad, for the reasons stated last year, that I left my bill on the order paper as it might serve as a contrast to or as a comparison with what we understand the government is intending in the form of a 12-mile fishing limit.

This bill calls for——a declaration by the Queen in parliament that Canada within those 12 marine miles seaward of her coasts has, to the sole use and benefit of her nationals, the right to fish exclusive of all others: as well an affirmation of Canada's obligation to protect and conserve the live resources of those seas to that same end.

This bill would repeal paragraph (b) of section 2 of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act and would substitute the following:

(b) 'Canadian territorial waters' means a fishing zone extending seaward to a limit 12 nautical miles from the baseline from which the breadth of the territorial seas of Canada are measured headland to headland and includes inland waters of Canada.

To show something of the feelings, I might almost say of dismay, which are held in a wide section of the British Columbia fishing industry at the reports of the government's intentions with regard to its 12-mile fishing limit plans, I should like to quote briefly from a publication of the Pacific trollers' association entitled "The Pacific Troller". I am quoting the January-February edition 1964, and I think it reflects the feeling of many fishermen of British Columbia, as well as in other parts of Canada.

> When the Minister of Fisheries... announced the government's intentions to declare a 12-mile territorial limit in May of 1964, the entire fishing industry was elated with the good news...
> Having taken such a courageous stand when the need was evident, why has the government now softened the tenor of its original announcement?

According to this publication—

> The members of the Pacific trollers' association are greatly alarmed at the government's attitude, which points to granting historic fishing rights within the proposed 12-mile limit to such countries as have exploited our shoreline fisheries in the past.

That is specifically the United States. The Pacific trollers' association urge:

> That no permanent recognition be given to historic rights prior to a trial period, of some years, in which to assess the effectiveness and further complications of an extended fishing limit; it being our opinion, that there are many trials ahead for those countries who have and those who will seek to extend the areas of protection for their fishermen—
> We implore our government to consider this one opportunity to better the position of its own fishermen. The entire Canadian fishing industry has fought long and hard for extended fishing limits. Those who might claim historic rights offer nothing in return. The fishermen of our day feel no obligation to historic rights. In their minds the only rights deserving recognition are those in which there is an equitable exchange.

In brief, Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that what we hear of the government's plans and negotiations to establish a 12-mile fishing limit for Canada underlies the fears expressed in the quotation to which I have just referred. I think the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) would do well to call together the standing committee on marine and fisheries, at which time we could discuss freely and frankly all of the important problems and aspects involved in what is about to be done. In my opinion, Canada like so many other countries—I think some 50—should take the perfectly reasonable step of staking out her 12-mile limit and offering time to others to negotiate with Canada to the end that international agreement to a limit is reached. The bill I introduced last year, and which I have left in the form it was, would do this. On behalf of Canada it would establish a 12-mile fishing limit, and I urge hon. members to support it, at least to the extent of directing it to the attention of the fisheries committee.

Mr. Joseph P. O'Keefe (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say I am entirely in favour of the principle of the bill and have no doubt that it is one of the most important bills to come before the house since the session began. Coming from Newfoundland, which is primarily a fishing industry province, I can state that unless this bill, or one like it is passed, as promised by the Prime Minister, there will shortly be no Newfoundland fishery at all.

During the last few days the newspapers have been full of articles about seal hunters, and there has been a lot of talk about the terrible atrocities perpetrated on innocent seals. But the problem is far more serious than that. It is so important that the livelihood of all fishermen in Newfoundland is at stake.

I see many defects in the bill as it stands, but I am completely in favour of the principle contained in it, providing for the establishment of a 12-mile fishing limit. I hope it will receive the due consideration not only of the members who represent fishing and coastal districts but also of members who represent the interior of the country. Even though Newfoundland is at one extreme end of our country and while we are not one of the "have" provinces at the moment, if some of the developments in Labrador come to fruition—and I feel they will under the guidance of Mr. Smallwood—then the province will become one of the richest in Canada. Meanwhile the principle contained in this bill is one which we support wholeheartedly.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) on presenting his bill at this time, even though one wonders whether it is a propitious time to do so, since the Prime Minister has committed himself to the principle of a 12-mile territorial waters limit for Canada. But if we debate the bill in a responsible way, we can bring out points that will be useful to the different parties in the negotiations presently under way and which are designed to work out a mutually suitable arrangement.

The sponsor of the bill made some reference to historic rights. I did not get a chance to write down what he said, but I gathered he was quoting from a pamphlet put out by the trollers' association of B.C., in which they express some fear that the government would go back on its announced intention with respect to a 12-mile limit. I have been advocating this 12-mile limit for a great many years. I have done so because the livelihood of 90 per cent of my constituents depends upon its being established, and I can assure the hon. member that my constituents are just as vitally interested in this matter as are the trollers of B.C.

However we must take a responsible attitude and realize there are such things as historic rights and treaties between Canada and other countries which cannot be treated as scraps of paper or brushed aside. Fishing has been the main industry in my province for over 400 years. It was carried on by the fishermen of European nations long before Newfoundland came under British rule and long before it was peopled with permanent settlers. Those nations acquired historic rights, and if we want to create a responsible image of Canada we must recognize these facts.

There is, however, another consideration, and a paramount one, the right of people to make a living. No civilized nation in the world could insist on retaining historic rights which result in depriving the people of a country of their means of livelihood. That is why I said at the outset that this bill was important to my province, and in particular to my constituency.

Each year, at about this time of year, the fish come in from the ocean and are very plentiful in a narrow strip of water along the west part of my riding, and it often happens that at this time of year the ice comes out of the gulf and encloses a sheet of water along the coast. In many places the ice comes in right to the land and at other places it stretches two or three miles off shore. Yet in that narrow strip of water, which is perhaps 80 miles long, not more than 12 miles wide at the widest point and diminishes in width almost to zero, 50 to 60 draggers belong to other countries fish. There are Spanish draggers, Portuguese draggers, French draggers, draggers from almost every European country one could mention. This is the time of the year when the fishery in this section of my riding is at its peak. My constituents are depending upon the fishery for their livelihood because either they get the fish now while they are there, or they do not get them at all. Their whole livelihood is at stake.

Yet with such a concentration of foreign draggers in this small stretch of water my constituents dare not go out to try to earn their livelihood. They cannot risk putting out their gear because these foreign draggers would destroy it. The gear costs thousands of dollars and many of my constituents have had their gear destroyed by the operations of these draggers. In this 12-mile wide stretch of water operations by foreign draggers can be carried on with perfect legality and yet they result in taking away the livelihood of 7,000 or 8,000 people.

Mr. Mather: I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. It is in line with his description of the conditions affecting his constituents inside this 12-mile zone. Would he not agree that in setting up a 12-mile limit for Canadian fishermen it would be well to allow for negotiations and a phasing out period whereby we would finally be rid of some of the evils he has outlined with regard to these so-called historic rights of other countries?

Mr. Carter: Yes, that was the point I was trying to make. These historic rights have very serious results but you just cannot brush them aside. If we are going to work out a satisfactory solution to the problem I think we must proceed on the basis of recognizing that they exist and recognizing the harm that is being done by adhering to them. I am sure that any reasonable, civilized country would want to come to a solution that would prevent these harmful effects, but I think we would defeat our own ends if we simply proceeded on the basis that there were no such historic rights.

Another feature of the bill is strict adherence to a 12-mile limit. There are places where this is impossible and for it to apply strictly it can only apply in places where there are 24 miles of water between Canada and a foreign country. There are places in my riding where there are not 24 miles, not even 15 miles. South of my constituency lie the French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, which are fishing settlements. Like the Newfoundlanders, these people depend on the sea for their livelihood. At the nearest point between St. Pierre and Miquelon and the Burin peninsula, which is part of my riding, there is a distance of only nine miles while the average distance separating them would be about 14 miles. I do not think it would be reasonable for Canada to say that 12 of those 14 miles would be Canadian waters. I think we have to be reasonable in situations like this and work out a mutually satisfactory solution, because we want justice. We want the harmful effects prevented and we want to do unto others as we would have them do unto us.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Carter: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: I take it his reference to the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon was for the purpose of saying that he anticipates that the French will not have the historic fishing rights to which he has referred?

Mr. Carter: No, that is the very opposite of what I said.

Mr. MacInnis: Then why does the hon. member refer to the distance between his own constituency and the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, if it is his intention that the French shall have these historic rights and the privilege of fishing on these grounds?

Mr. Carter: I think my hon. friend would understand better if he would remember that I said that at the closest point between St. Pierre and Miquelon and Newfoundland there is a distance of only nine miles. How can you get a 12-mile limit of territorial waters out of nine miles is a mathematical—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Problem.

Mr. Nowlan: It needs an Einstein.

Mr. Carter: —operation that is a little too much for me to deal with today.

Mr. MacInnis: If the hon. member does not mind, I would remind him that the nine mile stretch would be available for both the fishing fleets from St. Pierre and Miquelon and those from his own constituency, and therefore there would be no need of a 12-mile limit at that particular spot.

Mr. Carter: No. In broad general terms, Mr. Speaker, I think the principle of the bill is reasonable. It is necessary for the conservation of our resources and it is certainly essential for the welfare of my constituents. It is a principle on which we can stand, on which we can insist where it is possible to implement it, but I do not think we can insist on it in places where it clearly is not possible. There are exceptions to every rule and these exceptions have got to be ironed out between the parties concerned on a basis of what is conceded to be sensible and reasonable, and on the basis of doing unto others as we expect them to do unto us.

Mr. Nowlan: I take it the hon. member is suggesting that we should have negotiations in dealing with this matter, rather than a unilateral statute such as is proposed here?

Mr. Carter: Yes, I think I mentioned in the early part of my speech that negotiations are going on and that I questioned the propriety of debating this measure because the subject matter was more or less sub judice in view of the negotiations already in process.

Mr. Howard: In the light of the co-operative attitude of the government on other private members' public bills, I wonder whether it would agree to move, as they did the other day, a motion that the subject matter of this bill be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries where the whole problem can be dealt with. I see the Acting Prime Minister nodding his assent to that suggestion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No.

Mr. Howard: I am sorry I misunderstood.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was agreeing to a very wise suggestion made to me by the hon. member for Essex South (Mr. Whelan).

Mr. Howard: Could I have an answer to that suggestion? Apparently the government is not disposed to take that course.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government is going to bring in a measure later.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to talk out the bill so my remarks will be very brief. I simply wish to express my support for the principle of the bill introduced by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) which is now under discussion in the house. In presenting the position of the government the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) I believe referred to the fact that this measure was superfluous because the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) had already made a declaration to the effect that Canada was going to proceed with a declaration of a 12-mile fishing limit. I spoke on this subject some months ago, and pointed out that the government of British Columbia, as well as the organizations there, are vitally interested in this matter and support the principle. I believe the principle has general support right across the country.

There are some problems that have been referred to, but certainly the vital one is the matter of historic rights. I was going to suggest that as between the presentations of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) and the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, we find a middle course and have a phasing out period. Then, a little later in the discussion, the hon. member for New Westminster referred to that matter. I do not believe it is an insuperable difficulty.

At the moment we know that if the historic fishing rights are maintained, then our own fishermen will be at a disadvantage. It is pointed out in an article in the Globe and Mail of December 5, 1963, speaking of the maintenance of historic rights, that this would continue an incongruous arrangement in which, for conservation reasons, Canadian trawlers are prohibited from fishing in coastal waters which are open to foreign fishermen. I do not believe that is a desirable situation in which to put our fishermen. Therefore, even if we recognize the historic rights principle, we ought to recognize as well that Canada has prior rights in some of these waters. Some way should be found through negotiation to resolve this problem to the satisfaction of Canada and the other nations as well.

We do not want to repudiate arbitrarily any commitment into which we have entered with a nation, but I believe other nations will have to recognize this matter is of vital importance to Canada. There seems to be some hesitancy about calling a meeting of the committee on marine and fisheries. We have discussed this matter on many occasions in the past, but there has been some hesitancy in calling the committee together. I think it is about time the committee got into action to deal effecively with some of the problems that are of vital concern to Canadian fishermen, certainly to British Columbia fishermen whom I have the honour to represent. I would therefore support the principle of this measure and trust that the house will give favourable consideration to it.

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) is to be congratulated for introducing this measure for discussion. As he knows from some of my colleagues on this side of the house, and indeed from even an elementary knowledge of geography, this particular piece of legislation is one that is most important to the fishing industry of Newfoundland. There has been a suggestion from the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) that the subject matter of this bill be referred to a committee. It seems to me that we in Newfoundland are very heartened by this attitude, and by the attitude of the present administration toward this problem. We were all very pleased with the announcement last May by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), and we are all aware that certain negotiations have taken place.

I expect that in the very near future Canada will declare the 12-mile limit. It seems to me that one could go on at great length about the merits of the 12-mile limit. I have heard no suggestion from any quarter as to the disadvantages of it, particularly so far as our fishermen are concerned. There are two things that are being said from time to time in discussion of this problem in Newfoundland. The first is that it will be a difficult thing to enforce a 12-mile limit, hence there will not be the substantial improvement it is hoped there will be. It is said that trawlers or draggers will continue to violate, perhaps with greater ease, a 12-mile limit.

In so far as that is concerned, I would say the 12-mile limit would be easier to enforce than the 3-mile limit. In many areas, particularly along the eastern coast of Newfoundland, the fishermen actually go from six to eight miles off shore rather than 12 miles to engage in what is known as the inshore fishery. If a trawler violates the 12-mile limit there will be a couple of miles of grace to apprehend the culprit. It would seem the 12-mile limit would leave a little leeway and would clear the ground for the inshore fishermen.

The inshore fisherman of Newfoundland is one who, in the past, has been lost in the shuffle. Perhaps I could cite a reason that the fishermen were not well disposed to confederation in 1949. In 1890 the Bond-Blaine treaty, which would mean so much to Newfoundland, was virtually scuttled by an unimaginative dominion government. I am very glad, and the people of Newfoundland are very glad to know that the present Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) are prepared to make atonement for this previous unimaginative and unenlightened action on the part of the Canadian government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired and the house will now resume the business interrupted at five o'clock.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

20e. Administration of the Immigration Act, $133,800.

Mr. Peters: Some time ago the question was asked, what is to be done under the Immigration Act in relation to the admission of nationals from countries to which various forms of restriction are applied?

The last time this matter was being discussed I mentioned that many of the Chinese immigrants who do enter this country enter under the authority of orders in council. The number involved is close to 40,000 people, every one of whom was an exception to the rules established by the act. I am informed that since then a large percentage of those who were permitted to live here by order in council have applied for the protection of the amnesties which were granted on at least three occasions by ministers in charge of immigration and citizenship.

The difficulty which arises now is that the offences which took place prior to the last amnesty are continuing to take place. People are still entering this country illegally and applying under the order of July, 1962, for an amnesty in respect of their offence. This situation is serious because it comes extremely difficult to change or improve the immigration laws at a time when it is not possible to stop the lawlessness which is taking place under the existing provisions. The swing of the pendulum must be stopped before the act can be changed and modified.

What bothers me is that I have been made aware in various ways of a number of these cases, and I find that in each one little has been done to ascertain why the offence was committed in the first place. Some of these cases are unusual. One which came to my attention involves a father—a Canadian citizen—who sent his own daughter, also a Canadian citizen, back to China. She married her brother there and then brought him out to Canada as her husband. She has applied for regularization of the position under the terms of the amnesty, and this matter has now been resolved. Other cases are not so easily resolved. Some are still under investigation by the R.C.M.P., but when the inspection reached the stage of looking into the orders in council, that was the end of the matter.

In a legislative sense we have been able, by passing orders in council, to legalize what is essentially an illegal situation. This makes it difficult, if not impossible, for the R.C.M.P. to do anything about it. I had some dealings with several R.C.M.P. officers who were carrying out investigations in my riding. They of course were shortly told that they were not to visit me in the parliament buildings—that they were not to visit me at all. In fact this matter was closed.

I put a motion on the order paper for the production of all the papers and for the names of all the people involved. The reply was a voluminous one. I do not see how it will be possible for any individual to investigate these cases; I do not know how he would go about it. But I can say I am pretty disgusted with the R.C.M.P. and with the department itself for not pursuing these matters.

The nationals in this country who are vitally interested in the immigration laws were promised from time to time during the term of office of the former government that changes would be made. I give credit to the former government for stopping the orders in council; they stopped these exceptions to the law. This of course brought the whole process to a standstill in certain areas. Now I presume, we are going back to the old system of passing orders in council. I think it is a shame that we in this country cannot find out exactly what has been happening in the past and see that it does not happen again. I would like to suggest that the present minister is having a look at the channels of immigration in Hong Kong at the present time with a view to establishing the old system of bringing in immigrants under orders in council, so that he would have the opportunity of carrying out investigations which are outside the scope of the immigration branch. But I know that if we are really to be honest about what has happened in the past we must admit that there is hardly a member of parliament in this house who is not in the disgraceful position of knowing something about this immigration business, particularly about what has happened in the past with regard to Chinese immigration. I do not think there is a member here who does not have some knowledge, and who is not now sitting tight and doing nothing about the knowledge he has.

I think this question must be brought out into the open so that everyone may know what is wrong with our immigration system, particularly as it affects Asiatics. If this frankness is expressed, the minister of immigration has an obligation to introduce new laws which will eliminate the excuse for abuses such as have taken place in the past. I have told the Chinese people in my riding that the government intends to change the immigration laws as far as the Asiatic people are concerned. I have told them that the government has promised to do this, that we have the word of the minister that it would be done this session. I cannot say that today, because hon. gentlemen opposite have not said they are going to change the law this session. But for three of four years we have been told that changes would be made. We have been given assurances to that effect. One investigating officer asked me how there could be these changes when the problems facing the immigration branch are the same now as they were four or five years ago, before the big investigation took place.

At the time the cabinet changes were made I was very hopeful that the then minister of citizenship and immigration would be left in charge of that department because he had done some good work with respect to the problems of Indian affairs. I had hoped he would be in a position to make certain decisions which would have clarified this situation with regard to immigration in general and Asiatic immigration in particular. Perhaps this only happens in my area, but I think if hon. members would really get around and talk to the Chinese people in their ridings they would find that many things are happening that have not been made public in the past. These are the things, in the main, which we should prevent by legislating changes in the act. You cannot really blame a person in this country for wanting to bring over some of his close relatives, a son who is over the age of 21 or a mother who is under the age of 60, but very often these relatives do not meet the terms of the regulations as they apply at the present time. These people must wonder why we in parliament cannot solve some of the problems and why we allow the discrimination, that is so evident, to continue under the Immigration Act.

I see that the Minister of Justice is here. I think that perhaps he has more to do at the moment than he can handle. But if he has any time left over, I would like him to offer some assistance in the field of immigration because I know he has some understanding of the problem. This is a field that must be understood and a great deal of sympathy and consideration must be given to it. We in this country should be progressive enough to double our population in the next ten years. If we really wanted to do something for confederation we would increase the flow of immigrants into this country. We are a very large country in which many, many areas are not being developed at the moment because we do not have the population with which to develop them. I know the charge is often made that if we change the immigration laws and increase the number of immigrants into Canada we will increase unemployment. But in what fields would we increase unemployment? Is it not true that we will have to feed these people, house them, clothe them and provide the other services which are now surplus to our requirements? In this way we will be performing a great service to many of these countries which today are not able to feed and clothe their people. I should like to know, Mr. Chairman, whether it is the intention of the government to do nothing to solve the mess that is well known to exist in respect to immigration.

The other day I phoned an R.C.M.P. inspector because I was advised a particular matter came within his department. This matter concerned an investigation by the passport department of the R.C.M.P. The inspector said he would look into the matter and would phone back. This was several weeks ago. He has no intention of phoning back. Unless the government make up their minds that they want to do something about it, I am sure the inspector will not do anything about it, any more than will the constables further down the line. I think this is a field in which the government is very vulnerable, and we as a nation are very vulnerable, because of the anomalies which exist in our Immigration Act.

I do not know whether the present minister intends doing anything about it, but I make the suggestion to you, Mr. Chairman, that he probably will not, because this is a department that requires a very strong minister. This problem requires someone who will spend a great many hours each day formulating a program that will cope with the problems which have obviously existed in the past. This situation requires someone farsighted enough to know that part of the future of Canada will rest upon the type of immigration policy that we develop.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I know the minister himself is not here but I wonder whether somebody else can give us an explanation of this item. There is here an item of $60,000 for publication of departmental reports and other material. It seems an inordinately large amount of money for the publication of departmental reports. I wonder whether we could have an indication of what this is for or what the material is that is mentioned in the item. Also, was there an item in the main estimates for this purpose?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I take it that the hon. member is asking about that part of the item that refers to the publication of departmental reports and other material. The difficulty there is that the stock, or the regular supply of informational material that they use apparently ran out and had to be replenished.

Mr. Howard: Would this item refer to forms for letters, reports and that sort of thing?

Mr. McIlraith: It refers to the kind of pamphlet that the immigration department regularly uses and distributes.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, in answer to a question asked in the house not long ago it was stated that the minister intended to make a trip to Hong Kong for the purpose of considering a possible increase in immigration from among the refugees there. I wonder whether there is anything to report in connection with the trip the minister made to Hong Kong.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, the reason the minister is not here tonight is that he is in Hong Kong at this moment. He is trying to deal with the very point raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming, namely seeing whether we can do anything to improve immigration from among the Chinese population in Hong Kong.

Mr. Baldwin: Was there any spare room on his 'plane?

Item agreed to.

35e. Trans-oceanic and inland transportation and other assistance for immigrants and settlers, subject to the approval of treasury board, including care en route and while awaiting employment; and payments to the provinces pursuant to agreements entered into, with the approval of the governor in council, in respect of expenses incurred by the provinces for indigent immigrants, $230,000.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, from the wording of this item I gather it refers to assistance provided by the Canadian taxpayer to immigrants to reach Canada and to provide for them until such time as they become established in this country. Is this the item that used to appear in these estimates—the amount used to be $3 per day per person—which was paid to assist immigrants who came to Canada? Is that what this item represents?

Mr. McIlraith: A large part of the item has to do with the payment of family allowances for the first year immigrants are here; that is, before they come under the family allowance statute. The balance refers to welfare assistance payments. The reason for the increase in this amount is that in 1963 there was an increase in the movement of immigrants from 74,000 to 93,000.

Mr. Howard: Could the minister give us the breakdown of this $230,000? What amount relates to family allowance payments and how much relates to other things?

Mr. McIlraith: The expenses required out of the family allowance provision amount to $390,000; the increased need for welfare assistance, due to the larger movement of immigrants during 1963, amounts to $35,000. This gives a total additional requirement of $425,000, offset by savings of $195,000 in other parts of the main estimates.

Mr. Howard: I wonder whether the minister can explain if it is the policy of the government—and if it is, it is news to me—to pay family allowances to people who do not qualify or do not meet the requirements of the statute under which family allowances are paid. If this is the case, why do we not amend the statute and make this provision all-inclusive, rather than employing two different methods in this regard?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, this was in operation under the previous two governments, since 1955. It has been paid for children of immigrants in lieu of family allowances.

Mr. Howard: Just because it has been in effect since 1955 is not a very good reason to keep it in effect. If we are going to do this why do we not do it under the Family Allowances Act so that payment to children is effected, whether it be an actual family allowance payment or an amount of money which is equal to a family allowance payment?

Mr. McIlraith: This provision covers immigrants only. It is not quite the same as a family allowance payment. In addition it does not involve whatever the technical adjustment to the income tax return is called, which a citizen who receives family allowances deducts under the income tax provisions. That is why it is done in this way rather than under the family allowance statute.

Mr. Howard: Then it cannot be a payment in lieu of family allowance. It is an amount paid to children of immigrants.

Mr. McIlraith: It is called family assistance, a slightly different terminology. Whether it is a new sort of family allowance or not, I do not know.

Mr. Howard: But you just said it was.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can say a word on this because I instituted this provision when I was minister nearly 10 years ago, and I am rather surprised that the hon. gentleman who has been here for so many years has only now learned of it.

Mr. Nowlan: That is a pretty poor explanation.

Mr. Pickersgill: In order to prevent visitors to Canada from drawing family allowances for their children, it has always been provided in the law that the children must be here for a year. Anyone coming to Canada has to be here for a year before his children are eligible for family allowances. During a period of high immigration this seems very unfair to families of immigrants who are being encouraged to come to Canada. Therefore rather than amend the Family Allowances Act, this family assistance has been paid under the immigration vote.

Mr. Howard: The hon. gentleman should not be surprised that I was surprised to hear about this, because when the President of the Privy Council recounted to the committee the history of this item he said it was to pay family allowances in that period of one year. That is what surprised me. I knew there were payments under the immigration vote to immigrants who were in Canada, but I thought it was in the nature of $3 per day, or it used to be something like that. In any event, whether or not it is family allowance or in lieu of family allowance, or some other designation is given to it, when one considers the hon. gentleman's government, the one which preceded it and the one which preceded that, and the secret manner in which governments operate these days, is it any wonder we cannot get any information about what is going on?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I should just like to drag into the light of day something about which I have been endeavouring for five years behind the scenes to get a satisfactory answer, so far without success. Therefore perhaps I can get the answer in public that I could never get in private. It concerns a man who to all intents and purposes was a veteran of the Canadian army. He served in the Polish brigade, which was part of the third Canadian division. He has also been interned both by the fascists and the communists. He spent sometime in a fascist concentration camp and five years in a Siberian communist concentration camp. Then he returned to Poland and for the last six or seven years has been endeavouring to gain admittance to Canada.

As far as I can find out the only reason he has been excluded is because a sister-in-law of his whom he has never seen in his life is a well known communist in Timmins. I should like to ask the minister or the department responsible whether that is a justifiable reason for excluding this man, or are there other reasons. Offhand I would say that one of the best influences we could have on some of our Canadian communists is the presence of people who have spent some time in a communist concentration camp. It would be an excellent influence on them, I think. I would ask the minister whether he can give any satisfactory reason why this man is denied entry to this country. I am sure the former minister is quite familiar with this case because I discussed it with him, as I did with the minister before him and the minister before him. I wonder whether there is any justifiable reason for this man's continued exclusion from this country.

Mr. Favreau: If I may speak on this, as a very proud former minister of citizenship and immigration, the question raised by the hon. member is one which, in my opinion and I know in the opinion of the present minister, is of great importance at the present time and I hope the hon. member will believe me when I say it is under consideration and study.

Mr. Peters: I have a request of the government under this item. Amongst other things we have allowed a certain amount of transportation, to the tune of a quarter of a million dollars. I know a family who want to return to Czechoslovakia; I think that is their country of origin. The husband worked here for some time and became involved in a mine accident, since when he has been unable to hold a job. The municipality has been paying welfare but this family seem to be just unable to maintain themselves. They are having difficulty with medical bills and wish to go back to their country of origin. I am wondering whether there is a section of the act which allows payment of travelling expenses to families such as this who want to be repatriated to their country of origin. They will be glad to leave.

Mr. McIlraith: I rather think there is no legislative provision for that kind of expenditure; but I am not very sure of my ground on this and would prefer to draw the matter to the attention of the minister on his return, rather than have my answer taken as correct.

Item agreed to.

Indian affairs branch—

50e. Indian agencies—Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, and equipment including expenditures on works on other than federal property, $43,000.

Mr. Howard: I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to make a general comment about the Indian affairs branch, its structure and organization. For a period of 10 years one Colonel Jones was the director of the Indian affairs branch. Without attempting to say anything disrespectful about Colonel Jones as an individual, I am quite sure that the procedures and disciplinary concepts and attitudes of a colonel were taken holus-bolus from his military background and transplanted into the Indian affairs branch. Unfortunately, as a consequence I think the Indian affairs branch became somewhat ossified and fairly strict in whatever it attempted to do.

Let me cite an example. A couple of years ago the Indian affairs branch developed a policy with respect to Indian housing, in which there were four different methods that Indian people could participate in the building of houses. I phoned someone in the department to ask for a copy of the brochure outlining this scheme. It has been distributed far and wide among the agencies and the bands, but even though the person I spoke to on the phone said he would send me a copy, a week went by before I received it.

Normally when one is dealing with a government department and phones for something, somebody in the clerical section will put it in the mail, but in every request I made to the Indian affairs branch during the time Colonel Jones was there, there was always a delay. In this particular instance I got a letter from Colonel Jones about a week or so later, referring to the conversation I had with somebody else, and enclosing a copy of the brochure. I cite this as an example of the overly strict rigidity which prevented that department from doing anything worth while, other than in an administrative way, when Colonel Jones was the director.

Colonel Jones has now retired and the present director is Mr. Battle, who I gather is a person of an entirely different nature, background and interest, and many people in the branch hope, as I do, that Mr. Battle, with all the assistance he can get from the minister, will be able to transform the Indian affairs branch into something worth while. He has only been a short time in this position and miracles do not work overnight, especially when one tries to apply them to a branch such as Indian affairs.

When the main estimates for this fiscal year come before us, I hope the minister will be able to report on the changes that have been wrought in the Indian affairs branch and that we shall not have to persist in looking at it in a critical way, as has been necessary in the past.

Item agreed to.

60e. Welfare—operation and maintenance including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $25,000.

Mr. Howard: I wish to read the words outlining this estimate. They are:

Welfare—operation and maintenance including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $25,000.

And the detail shows:

Grant to the province of Manitoba towards community development.

This may be a play on words but I think it represents the psychological attitude of the people who prepare the estimates, an attitude which many people have adopted in regard to welfare, but I do not think a grant, or an expenditure of money made directly by the Indian affairs branch for the purposes of community development should be classified as "welfare", because is is not welfare. The sooner we get away from the concept of welfare as applied in the Indian affairs branch to our native people the better, especially as it is applied to keeping those people in almost abject poverty and starvation. I merely make this as a suggestion for the future, because such words and designations used by the people who prepare the estimates are not in keeping with the enlightened and forward approach which we should have to Indian affairs and the Indian people in this day and age.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Howard.]

70e. Economic development—operation and maintenance including the grants and contributions detailed in the estimates, $65,000.

Mr. Peters: I think the public are entitled to know what is the present state of the project called Ookpik, or something like that where a little imaginary owl developed in the Arctic has been violently abused, according to recent newspaper reports.

The Chairman: The suggestion is made that the point now raised by the hon. member does not relate to vote 70e.

Mr. Peters: Well, it very likely relates to the handicraft development program, though it may be the wrong department.

Mr. McIlraith: It relates to the Eskimos, not the Indians. The Indian affairs branch comes under the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and that is what is before the committee at the moment. The Eskimos come under the jurisdiction of the department of northern affairs, and Ookpik belongs to the Eskimos.

Mr. Peters: That is downright discrimination in the handicraft field. It is disgusting when you go into many shops and see totem poles for sale that are manufactured in Japan. Not long ago I spoke to one Indian chap who was developing and selling native Indian handicrafts in Ontario and Quebec, and it was his opinion that the department was doing absolutely nothing to help in this field. He had made application for assistance here in Ottawa, and he had a small store. I would like to know why he found it so difficult to get assistance. He said many of the people he had contacted in the department were patronizing in their attitude, patting him on the shoulder and saying, "You are doing a fine job," but they were not really interested in helping him obtain genuine Indian handicrafts. He showed a great deal of initiative but I understand he has gone out of business since that time.

In the northern areas especially there seems to be no co-operation between the native handicraft workers and the buyers. There is no assistance from the department and there has been a reliance on the Hudson's Bay Company for any trade that is done.

The Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Mr. Howard: I thought the minister was on the verge of giving some answer on the points raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming, and I want to make some comments myself.

Mr. McIlraith: With reference to the case raised by the hon. member, if he cares to give the name of the person involved I shall undertake to have the case looked into. But so far as the general activity is concerned this vote is to authorize moneys to provide, in respect of Indian commercial activities, for the instruction and supervision of Indians, the furnishing of materials, the purchase of finished goods and the sale of such finished goods. Projects concerned with the production of Indian handicrafts, particularly some of the larger projects, have attracted greatly increased participation by craft workers this year, requiring unusually heavy expenditures and involving increased outlays for materials and supplies. That is the reason for the large supplementary which is greater than the vote in the main estimates.

Mr. Peters: Is there organized assistance for Indians in the handicraft field in the same way as there is for Eskimos under northern affairs? The Eskimos have been assisted in forming co-operatives so they can do this work. I am interested in the Ontario Indians, particularly the Manitoulin Indians and the Temagami Indians, bands of the type that have been operating as tightly knit organizations. Does the department send in people to train them and give advice as to what kind of products can be sold? The little bird or animal that the Eskimos have has been a pretty good deal for them and I wonder whether similar assistance has been given to the Indians.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not know how closely the two programs can be compared, the one for the Eskimos and the one for the Indians. However, there is this development program for the Indians which provides assistance for their training in handicrafts and in selling their products. As I said a moment ago, it will be noted from this particular vote that the project seems to have gone particularly well and there seems to be a sharply increased demand for this kind of developmental assistance. That is the reason we are in these supplementaries asking for an amount greater than the amount in the main estimates under this heading.

Mr. Peters: Is there any way that the department can protect the Indians against the importation of facsimiles? I refer to totem poles, Indian type slippers and Indian type beaded belts. We find them being imported from Japan. When you buy them at an outfitter's shop you find they are stamped "made in Japan". Because this is a protected field and because the Indians are having such a difficult job adjusting to our business community, I am wondering whether we have considered the idea of restricting the sale of facsimiles in Canada.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member has raised a pretty large question. As he knows, any imports into this country require to have the country of origin marked on them. Then there is the protection to be obtained, as was the case with Ookpik, through the trade mark legislation or design mark legislation, or possibly the copyright legislation. In certain circumstances these acts can all be applicable to certain products. About all I can do now is to draw the minister's attention to this point to make sure that the department is applying the existing legislation to the maximum extent possible to protect the products of the Indians in the handicraft field.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, with regard to what the minister has just said, unfortunately the native Indian people do not know anything about copyrights or copyrighting for design and that sort of thing. Although it may be a bit late now, it might be a worthwhile venture for them to try to establish their rights, especially the west coast Indians who developed totemic carving. Incidentally, this carving is the only truly original North American art form developed on this continent. These carvings appear on totems, house poles, house fronts and now on plaques. These figures represent the inheritance of families of Indian people and are truly theirs if anything is theirs. Other countries have seized upon them and they now come back to this country in the form, for instance, of grotesque totems from Japan. They are sold as authentic Indian totemic carvings when in fact they are not.

A prime example of this is in the field of the argillite carving of the Haida Indians of the Queen Charlotte islands. For many years they have carved their tribal stories, their crests and the like on a slate called argillite and the work they do is beautiful. Many of the younger fellows are now taking up the old art handed down to them from their forefathers. These carvings are representative of an art and culture far surpassing most other art forms that exist in North America today. They bring a reasonably decent price. The price for an argillite totem carving is anywhere from $6 to $7 an inch and if they are larger poles, say three feet high, the price can range up to $20 or $25 an inch and in some cases more than that. They are well worth it too because of the beauty of the work that is done.

However, right in north Vancouver, British Columbia, there is a company operated by an individual by the name of Boris Mange who bought or somehow acquired some of the original authentic argillite carvings depicting the stories of two or three Haida families. I do not know exactly what his process is, but it is a chemical process involving the breaking down or liquefying of fibreglass which is then poured into rubber moulds and out of the mould comes a flat object which is scratch by scratch the same as the original. From a distance of a foot or two one cannot tell the difference between an artificial totem and an original carving. It is only when one picks up the artificial carving, holds it in his hand, finds it is much lighter and looks on the bottom that he finds it is not an authentic carving at all. It is only by close examination that this can be discerned.

These mouldings or castings have been sold and are probably still being sold in shops all across Canada. They are represented as authentic Haida or Indian carvings. I saw them first a year and a half or two years ago in a jeweller's shop on Elgin street. I was walking by the shop and saw this carving in the store. I was amazed to see them in Ottawa and I went inside to inquire about them. I had a lengthy argument with the operator of the shop as to their authenticity. He showed me a communication from a wholesaler in Toronto—I have forgotten the name —to the effect that these were authentic argillite carvings.

They were not authentic at all, they were substitutes. I have seen similar signs in other curio shops in different parts of Canada representing these mouldings or castings as authentic Haida argillite carvings. They are not. All that is shown on them is a shortened version of the individual's name on the bottom. This could be interpreted by those not familiar with the peculiarities of one of our native tongues on the west coast as the name of the individual. In fact, it is not. It is a shortened version of the name Boris Mange.

How does one protect himself against the mechanism of the individual whose sole concern is not the production of anything artistic or cultural but the production of a commodity purely for profit? Our native Indian people are not conversant with the copyright law. In fact, I understand from people in the legal field that this is a specialized branch of law which is highly complex. One almost has to make a lifetime study of the Copyright Act in order to appreciate all the intricacies of it. I believe that the crown, some government agency, could make a particular study of the copyright law and assist the native Indian people in attempting to protect, by law, their own designs which represent their inheritance from their families.

Whether or not this has ever been suggested before, I could not say. It was only upon invitation, following the minister's explanation, that I rose to deal with the question. I would appreciate some answer from the Minister of Justice or perhaps the Minister of Transport who at one time was the minister of citizenship and immigration. Could a study be made of the copyright law to see whether or not it could be used to assist the native Indian people to protect their own designs, and particularly the designs of the west coast people in their totemic art?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned the problem is being raised, in this fashion, for the first time. I can say one thing, that this is certainly one aspect of the matter which ought to be given consideration and looked into.

Mr. Howard: It is very kind of the minister to say it ought to be looked into. Will he look into it or will the government look into this particular aspect of it? If it would, it would be a great service.

Mr. Favreau: I took it for granted that everybody knew, with a government like this government, when it knows something ought to be looked into it will be looked into.

Mr. Howard: In dealing with any government, my experience has been you have to tie them down, hogtie them, get them to put it in writing, and then you have to look for the loopholes, particularly when you are talking to a lawyer.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Civil service commission—

1e. Salaries and contingencies of the commission, $131,000.

Mr. Peters: Would the minister care to explain the increase in these salaries and contingencies of the commission?

Mr. McIlraith: It is for salaries, and for the whole general administration of the civil service commission.

Mr. Peters: Was there any item covering the commission in the original estimate?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, there was an item for $5,011,600.

Mr. Peters: I notice that it has cost a considerable sum to advertise for recruiting purposes. I am sure that every member of parliament could offer some suggestions with regard to the system that has been used. I do not believe this large expenditure produces the results it is intended to produce. I should like to use as an example the translation staff. The former secretary of state was continually talking about recruiting for that staff. I expect he was using this system.

The charge has often been made, and I think quite legitimately, that a department head often frames the advertisement for an employee in such a fashion that only the person he has designated is available for that position. Then there is the problem with respect to jobs that are classed as bilingual. I am sure some hon. members have noticed, as I have, advertisements for secretaries receiving a salary of less than $4,000 per year. The advertisement said she had to do 90 words a minute in shorthand and 50 words a minute on the typewriter in both languages. I would suggest if you found someone who could do that they would probably not be working for $4,000 a year. If they were, they would be working for the former secretary of state, because that is the type of person he required.

I do not know how long it is since we looked over these advertisements. As everyone knows, most of them are published in the post offices. A lot of them are sent to members of parliament, but they do not get anywhere for the very good reason that many members of parliament do not believe in going into that field of employment placing when we have an employment service through the unemployment insurance commission. I am sure that there must be a lot of duplication and waste in the presenting of these publications. In many cases, it appears to me they are directed only to those people the department heads wish to have. I should like to know if any change is contemplated in this procedure or if any changes have been recommended?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if he intends to apply the recommendations of the Glassco commission to the civil service commission?

I would also like to ask a supplementary question. The Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) stated some time ago that bilingual employees would get a special bonus. Is that the opinion of the minister and does he propose to implement the Secretary of State's suggestion?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: With regard to the first question asked by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, I want to point out that part of these supplementaries is for the establishment of a language training school. This school will provide an opportunity to unilingual civil servants to become bilingual. Some $16,000 of this supplementary is intended for that very purpose. As to the second question the hon. member asked, I am not aware that the Secretary of State made such a suggestion in the form in which it has been put forward. With regard to what was said about implementing the recommendations of the Glassco commission, I would not want to give a dogmatic answer without having before me the recommendations of the Glassco commission in detail concerning the civil service commission because I have found that with so many of these recommendations one might adopt a large part of the recommendation but there might be a defective part that one did not wish to adopt.

However, this subject matter is receiving very active attention. As I well know, a great deal of time is being spent on it now, with a view to implementing the recommendations of this particular royal commission. Some 70 of these recommendations have, in fact, been put into operation already and the new legislation which will be coming before this house later this session will provide an opportunity for discussing the matter more fully. I do not think I am improperly disclosing the legislation because it was referred to in the speech from the throne, but it is proposed that one of the ministers, the president of the treasury board, will have the responsibility, when the legislation is brought in on this subject, for bringing about the type of recommendation made by the Glassco commission, and examining the management of government.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to put another question to the minister. I would like to ask him if he shares the opinion expressed by a member of the government, namely that bilingual employees should get increased salaries. This is a direct question.

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: I have never heard that proposition put forward in that form and I would think the answer of any responsible person would have to be that, surely, this would not be the basis for a bonus if the duties to be carried out did not require the use of both languages. Surely the hon. member does not suggest that it should. It is a matter relating to a qualification for the particular work to be done.

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, but the Secretary of State said that.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not think the hon. member will find he did so, in the form in which he has put it. If he disagrees, I would want to see the statement to which he refers. Personally I have no recollection of my hon. friend making such a statement and I have discussed related subjects with him from time to time at considerable length. I believe the hon. member will find that this added qualification, if you like, of being able to use both languages is better provided for by being integrated as a qualification for a particular job.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: I have another question to put to the minister. I know that he is intelligent and that he will give a straight answer to my question. If an employee speaks both languages, does the minister agree to give him a bonus, that is an increased salary or a special incentive?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: I think the question as posed is unfair. Let me point out the reason for the difficulty about giving the kind of answer the hon. member wants. Suppose you have a requirement for elevator operators where no language is required to be used at all—

Mr. Pigeon: That is a bad example.

Mr. McIlraith: Does the hon. member suggest that one man has to be paid more than the other because of the language qualification? Surely that suggestion is not inherent in the hon. member's question.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask another question. Let us suppose that in the Department of Transport, for example, a branch director is bilingual, that is he can attend to the French speaking public as well as to the English speaking public. I should like the minister to tell us if he feels that it would be logical for such an employee to get a bonus or a special salary?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: No, because the factor of the bilingual requirement is taken into account in setting the qualifications for the position, and the salary for the position has already been increased compared with what it would otherwise have been, because of the requirement for that added qualification.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: I ask another question: can the minister assure the house that the civil servant who speaks both languages will get an increased salary from this government?

[Text]

Close your mouth, or stand up to speak.

Mr. McIlraith: No, what I did suggest is that where this is a requirement for the position it carries with it a higher salary.

Mr. Ricard: I should like to ask a few questions of the minister. The hon. gentleman said there were special classes for civil servants to acquire a second language. Is he in a position to give us any information as to the number of civil servants who are taking these courses, and has he a breakdown showing us how many French speaking persons and how many English speaking persons are attending them?

Mr. McIlraith: No, I cannot give an answer offhand though I certainly would be glad to get the information for the hon. member. The courses seem to be in great demand and it is a matter of organizing them in order to meet the demand. I am sorry I do not have the detailed information.

Mr. Ricard: Can the minister not give us an idea of the numbers of those actually attending these courses?

Mr. McIlraith: I do not think I would wish to do so. I have been too long a member of the House of Commons to hazard that type of guess. But I will get the information.

Mr. Howard: May I say at the outset that I agree with the answer the minister has given in reply to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm about the payment of a premium or bonus if a person is bilingual. I think the minister's answer is a correct and reasonable one in view of the circumstances. If this were not the position taken by the minister and by the government, I would say that we in British Columbia would soon realize that in the case of an employee in the Department of Transport, for example, an official in the position of being an inspector of some sort, the ability to speak English and French equally well would be useless to him in his official capacity. He would be much better off if he were able to speak, say, English and Norwegian, or English and Haida, or English and some other Indian tongue. If there were to be premiums for bilingualism we would have to relate them to the effectiveness of being bilingual, and the advantage of being bilingual in English and French in Prince Rupert, for example, would be negligible as far as the performance of the job was concerned, and its relationship with the general public.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the reason why I am asking this question is, of course, on account of the large number of Canadians who speak French, and when they exchange correspondence with Ottawa, they have the right, as taxpayers and because the French language is recognized as official at the federal level, to be served in their own tongue.

The minister gave a rather evasive answer and refused to commit himself. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister why the present government created a royal commission on biculturalism, why it is spending fairly large sums of money to conduct a nation-wide inquiry, and all that if it refuses later to take a position and inform the house whether it favours an increased salary for bilingual employees. The Secretary of State advocated that many times. It is all very well to have royal commissions on biculturalism, but I feel the government is wasting the people's money and such inquiries are meant but to fool the public, as shown by the government's refusal to take a stand and say what it intends to do in the case of bilingual employees.

Here is a precise question I am asking the minister and I would like him to answer yes or no. Is it the government's intention to give a bonus to an employee who speaks both languages and holds an important position in the government service?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I think I have already given an accurate answer to the hon. member's question. The hon. member is trying to attach a bonus, or added payment, or whatever you call it, to the speaking of two languages. All salaries and all payments to all employees of the government service have been related to the duties they perform. They have been salaries for the work done or for the requirements of the position being filled.

I recognize as well as, or perhaps better than, the hon. member the necessity for having, in positions where there is any probability at all of a person having to speak either of our two main languages an employee who is able to converse in the two official languages. I recognize that better than the hon. member. In those positions certainly it will be a requirement of the position that, to the extent possible, if we can get the personnel to fill the positions, they will be filled by persons having mastery of the two languages. But I would point out to the hon. member that this was not the question he posed to me. He merely posed a question as to whether, in those other areas of the country in which there is no probability of a person being required to use the second of our two languages, either French or English as the case may be, a bonus would be paid to a bilingual person when no requirement exists in the position for this qualification. In other words, the language qualifications have always been related to the position and the requirements for the position. That is the way the added benefit will be received by particular employees.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I realize that it is important for the civil service to hold a competition for a government job in order to know whether the applicant is qualified. But I would like to know from the minister whether he would deem it advisable to mention on the civil service commission's notices of competition that for the higher positions in the civil service a special treatment relating to salary, be granted bilingual employees?

Does he agree that such a reference should be made on the notices of competition of the civil service?

Mr. Habel: Have you ever asked that of your leader?

Mr. Pigeon: I did and it was granted on several occasions.

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, the payment made for all employees in the government service, so far as I know, has been made on the basis of payment for the position. This is the case with regard to all government employees. The payment has been for the work being done, the training and work required to be done, rather than for some personal reason in respect to the person receiving the payment. I would think that is a reasonable position. Certainly the persons who have discussed this very large and very important question with me have always put it forward on that basis. They consider that any added benefit required to encourage bilingualism should be on the basis of a required qualification for a position warranting a higher salary for the particular position. That is the situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, on March 5 last, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) said in Toronto that French Canadians employed by the federal government in Ottawa were frustrated and unfairly treated. I am, therefore, asking the minister whether he agrees or not with the views expressed by the Minister of Justice who said in Toronto that French speaking Canadians in the federal civil service were frustrated and unfairly treated?

[Text]

Yes or no.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I think I have a right, as long as I comply fully with the rules, to answer a question in the way I wish to answer it and in the way that I think will do justice to the question. I cannot be circumscribed in the form of that answer by the wish or request of the hon. member, however much I may wish to please him. I think he should recognize that fact in asking me to answer a question. I will not for one moment accept the proposition that bilingual staff in the civil service in Ottawa have been in any way frustrated, thwarted, or discriminated against.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIlraith: They have been in great demand, to my certain knowledge, over a period of years.

[Translation]

I am very sorry, Mr. Chairman, that I do not understand the French language very well.

[Text]

It is a matter of great regret to me that I do not understand the language well myself. But I have had to deal with this problem, as a member from this area living among great numbers of civil servants for years, and I know it is not right to say that this section of the civil service has been thwarted, or frustrated, when the fact of the matter is that there is a great shortage of them and a great demand for them. There are opportunities for promotion open to them that are such as to capture the imagination of eager young people who want to advance themselves in the public service.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIlraith: I myself, as minister in the former portfolio which I held, spent a great deal of my time seeking to find ways and means of getting more of them to come into the public service and serve those areas of the country, particularly the St. Lawrence river areas, where the positions required that the persons filling them should speak both languages. I can tell the hon. member that I did not find any source of supply that could nearly meet the demand. If he wants my statement to be backed up by my giving him the titles of the positions, it can be done.

That is the history of opportunity for bilingual civil servants in Ottawa. That is why I am so very pleased with the work now being done by the government, part of it through this estimate, in making available training facilities to enable present civil servants to become bilingual more readily. This is a need in our country that is very real; and it is a mistake to say that there has been any discrimination against or any frustration on the part of any section of the civil service on account of language. That simply is not so, and has not been the case.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I should like to make a comment on this interesting and important point which has been raised. I believe the government should consider the creation of a new category within the civil service for those who are truly bilingual. I do not place in this category a person like myself; although I can understand and read French, I cannot express myself in the French language in the way I should like. The reason for this is simple; it is because I am thinking in English, and to be able to think in English and express myself with precision in French I would require training similar to that of the simultaneous interpreters we have in the chamber.

We have examples of what I mean in the civil service, and good examples here in the house. Some hon. members have not one person living in their constituencies who speak French. Other hon. members may not have one person living in their constituencies who speaks the English language. I think that if an hon. member of this type has a bilingual secretary, what happens after three or four years is that his bilingual secretary becomes a unilingual secretary. If you do not practise both languages constantly, sooner or later one of them is lost. I recall hearing a former member say that it is not enough to have a language in your head; you must also have it on your tongue before you become fluent.

Let me take as an example the riding of Danforth in Toronto. I do not think there is any need for the hon. member for Danforth to have a bilingual secretary. Similarly I do not think there is any need for the hon. member for Beauce to have a bilingual secretary. But for members from a constituency like mine, which is half French speaking and half English speaking, and in many other constituencies across the country similarly divided, I think there is a very definite need for a bilingual secretary. Many times I have difficulty and am put to delay and considerable personal expense in getting my letters translated so that I can reply to my constituents in the language with which they are more familiar. I can read their letters but I cannot write back without my words being correctly translated. If you do not know a language well and try to write it, it is easy to make a tragic mistake which can backfire badly.

I recall going to the United States not many years ago, and when I was near Boston, Massachusetts, I had occasion to go to a garage, the proprietor of which had a French name. I talked to him and found that he came not too far from where I was born and raised in the province of Quebec. He came from Magog, which is about the same distance from Sherbrooke as my town, but on the other side. I spoke to him in French and to my surprise he said he was sorry, that he did not speak French. He told me he had been there for eight years, it is unbelievable that a man can forget his mother tongue in eight years. But that was true, and was because he never had the chance to speak French.

I think that where there is a need for a truly bilingual person in the civil service a special category should be created and a rate of pay offered as an encouragement. It is not the easiest thing in the world, particularly for a person from the far reaches of Canada, to prepare to handle a job of this kind. However, I think this is something which is needed, and needed badly, and people who have this facility are a great deal more valuable than those who have only the one language or the other. Therefore I think the government should consider the creation of a special category and provide a special rate of pay for people with this ability.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, on March 5 last, in Toronto, the Minister of Justice brought a serious charge against the civil service commission. He stated that French speaking Canadians were frustrated, in other words, that they were discriminated against. Therefore, I would ask the minister this specific question: is it his intention to ask the Laurendeau-Dunton commission to make an inquiry within all departments of the federal government in order to determine whether his assertion is correct?

I believe that the Minister of Justice brought a serious charge which reflects upon the honesty and the reputation of the civil service commission regarding the way French speaking Canadians are treated.

Could the minister tell the house if he would approve of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission making a full inquiry in all federal departments not only in regard to conditions with respect to French speaking Canadians but also with respect to English speaking Canadians?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether there is much I can usefully add to what I said previously. I read the text of the speech delivered by my colleague the Minister of Justice in Toronto with considerable interest and great care. My understanding of his speech is very different from that of the hon. member who has just spoken. If the hon. gentleman proposes to make these assertions about that speech I wish he would quote the text and refer to it precisely, because we are at variance as to the contents of the actual speech.

As to his second question, this royal commission has been appointed and its terms of reference placed before the house. That matter was dealt with at the time and I certainly do not think it would be proper for me to interfere with, or intervene in, its work. I certainly have not thought about intervention, so all I can say to the hon. member is that I will consider his rather novel suggestion. However, I do not offer him any encouragement or give him any reason to suspect that I will take any action other than to note his remarks and see whether there is anything to this point. I do not think this item is the place to discuss the work of this royal commission and the possible extension of its terms of reference.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, when, some time ago, I asked the Minister of Justice a question concerning the statement he made in Toronto on March 5, he did not deny anything, he said nothing about that.

Once again, and for the last time, I am putting the question to the minister. If he wants us to pass this item without any trouble, it is up to him to give a definite answer, yes or no.

This is what I am asking the minister: does the government intend to amend the Civil Service Act so that employees who speak both languages, that is French and English, and who get, say, $4,000 or more a year may have a special bonus, that is a special payment, as advocated by the Secretary of State during the last election campaign?

If the minister refuses to answer categorically, clearly and plainly to my question, we will keep the minister on this vote for a week.

Mr. Habel: Well, this is blackmail.

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes, it is blackmail.

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: I do not know whether the committee would respond kindly to such a naked threat as that. I do not think the hon. member quite appreciated the nature of his threat and I would hope, when he thinks it over, he would modify it.

Mr. Pigeon: No, that is serious.

[Translation]

No, I am asking the minister to tell me whether, as advocated by the Secretary of State, the government intends to grant a special bonus to bilingual employees, because they speak both languages?

I would like to know exactly what the minister thinks—

Mr. Deschatelets: What did you do during the six-year period you were in power?

Mr. Pigeon: —and I do not want the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) to answer me, but the minister of—

Mr. Deschatelets: What did you do during the six-year period you were in power?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a point of order—

Mr. Pigeon: I have a point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is not because you are on the government side you have more right than I.

The Deputy Chairman: The Minister of Transport on a point of order.

Mr. Pigeon: I have a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: The Minister of Transport on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: If the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) wishes to speak to the house, all he has to do is to rise.

Mr. Habel: It is none of your business.

Mr. Pigeon: If the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) also wishes to speak in this house, all he has to do is to rise and to let us hear him.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am raising a serious point of order, and it is that we are considering the estimates of the civil service commission, the supplementary estimates, the additional sums required to carry on the services about which the policy is already determined. Your predecessors in the chair have on many occasions ruled, particularly on supplementary estimates, that the discussion must be relevant to the estimate.

I have never before heard any member of the committee successfully maintain that until an estimate should be passed the government must declare some policy, on which the government itself had not necessarily reached any conclusion. To suggest that the estimates will not be passed until the government adopts a new or different policy is making, as my colleague the president of the council suggested, a kind of threat that I am sure the hon. member, who is a very amiable hon. member most of the time, never seriously intended to make, because the hon. gentleman is not at the moment in the government.

He is not at the moment a member or even a supporter of the government. Until this government is defeated, it has the responsibility for formulating policy, and then the house can decide whether it approves that policy or not. It is a very strange doctrine to suggest on a supplementary estimate, when the rules are very clearly stated that discussion must be strictly relevant to the particular item, that the government has to make a declaration about a policy that has not been formulated at all. I am sure that on reconsideration the hon. gentleman would not wish to persist in that sort of course.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, after the statement made by the Minister of Transport, I feel that the government is dishonest—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: —and is behaving hypocritically towards the Canadian people.

Thousands of dollars are now being allocated for a royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism—

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I think that the Chair should make a ruling on the point of order just raised by the Minister of Transport. After all, as the latter pointed out, we are now considering supplementary estimates.

Vote No. 1e is made up of four particular items none of which can justify a debate of the kind in which the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is presently engaged.

Therefore, I am of the opinion that, if we want the house to consider the supplementary estimates, in a constructive way, as the opposition claims it wants to do, then let us address ourselves exclusively to the vote under consideration.

Mr. Ricard: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is the practice, I believe, when supplementary estimates are under consideration, to have a general debate on vote No. 1, and that is what is happening at this time. To shorten the debate, after it has been going on for more than half an hour, would mean that a new method is being used to prevent us from dealing with the question under study.

I believe that the Minister of Justice will admit that by carrying out his suggestion he would simply prevent us from obtaining information with respect to the civil service and to some methods which are followed within the service.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I should like to make some comment relevant to the point of order raised by the Minister of Transport. I think members of the committee will agree a good deal of latitude has been given this evening regarding vote No. 1e, but if the debate is to proceed certainly the Chair will have to ask all members to be particularly relevant to the item before the committee. I would ask the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, if he wants to continue his remarks, to have them relevant to the item before the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I will abide by your ruling. However, I feel that the item under consideration allows me to make some general remarks.

Since the Minister of Justice got up to call me to order, and I think he did it in good faith, I wish to ask him—Mr. Chairman, I will wait until the Minister of Justice has stopped talking with his colleague.

I ask the Minister of Justice to tell us whether it is true that on March 5 last, he stated in Toronto that French Canadians were frustrated by the civil service commission in Ottawa. I ask the minister to give me an answer. If he answers me, we will cooperate and I will be pleased to facilitate, if need be, the adoption of the estimates.

Mr. Favreau: Even though this has nothing to do with any of the four items under study, I must say that I have too much faith in my hon. friend's intelligence to believe that he would speak as he does after having read my speech.

I shall then make a point of sending him a copy.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the statement—

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Pigeon: O.K. I will come back, don't be worried.

Mr. Pickersgill: Go and get the speech.

Mr. Howard: That sounded like a threat to the Chair. It is always pleasant to listen to the volatile Union Nationale member from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

An hon. Member: This is an honour you don't have.

Mr. Howard: I do not know if I would use the words "honour" and "Union Nationale" in the same breath.

Mr. Pigeon: Come to my riding and say that and you will be defeated. You will lose your deposit.

Mr. Howard: If that is an invitation from the hon. member even to set foot where he is, I must decline.

Mr. Pigeon: You are so stupid, you know.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if Hansard caught that, but there was some reference to stupidity by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Pigeon: I hope it did.

Mr. Howard: I must say he is a master of that himself and undoubtedly will know what it means more than I do. I should like to ask the minister who is handling these estimates a question concerning the operations of the civil service commission having to do with the manner in which it establishes so-called eligibility lists for vacant positions. I do not know if I am using the right term, but apparently if a vacancy is posted people can bid on that particular job and then take an examination of some sort. Following the examination a list is established of the people eligible for that particular position. What policy is there with regard to the length of time that such an eligibility list is valid after it is originally established?

Mr. McIlraith: Appointments, as the hon. member knows, are made from the top of the list when the list is established. Normally the list is retained for one year. The period of time for which a list remains valid is determined by the commission itself but my understanding is that normally it is a year, although in the case of a large class where there is a very long list and few have been called the commission may maintain the list for a longer period, and sometimes does.

Mr. Howard: I wish to object to the procedure of establishing closed eligibility lists even for a period of a year, and I would certainly object even more strongly to establishing them for a longer period of time. I am aware of an instance or two in this field and it was because of them that this matter first came to my attention.

Presumably the process of opening up a vacancy to competition is to give people who feel they are qualified the opportunity to bid for the job, and the person who establishes qualifications greater than those of the other contestants is posted to the position. But when you maintain a list of this sort in existence for a period of one year you are then preventing, should a vacancy occur in the same position, anybody else from bidding for the particular job, because a list has been established and that is it. It is closed and it is valid for a particular period of time.

In some cases this works to the detriment of individuals. I know of a case in point about which I have had correspondence with the commission. The circumstances were that a position became vacant and was filled. Then the job subsequently became vacant again within a very short period of time because the person who originally filled it was promoted to a higher position. A woman working in the same section of the department, who knew the office procedure, the personnel, the problems and so on, asked for the right to bid on the particular job and was advised she could not because there was a closed list in effect. The next eligible person on that list lived in a community some 500 miles away by air and 900 miles away by road, and the woman who wanted to bid on the job was told she would have to wait to see whether this woman who was some 900 miles away by road was going to take it.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has just complained to me, Mr. Chairman, that I am speaking so loudly he cannot hear the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

This woman found herself prevented from even bidding for the vacant position, because of this closed list. I think this is unduly restrictive and interferes with what I consider to be the normal and reasonable right of a person, under the civil service structure, to bid for a job and to take a test to see whether or not he or she can fill the particular position.

Perhaps the maintenance of an eligibility list for a period of a month would not be an unreasonable interference with a person's right to bid for a new job, because I can see that all sorts of difficulties might arise when a person takes a new position. Although he has passed the test and qualifies for the position some difficulty may develop, with the result that he cannot fill the position or, as was the case in this instance, he may be promoted to a higher position. There are a variety of difficulties which might crop up and could result in the person's being found unsuitable or leaving the job within a period of a month, and it might result in unnecessary expense if the whole process of conducting a competition had to be gone through again.

But a one year period is far too long a time to maintain an eligibility list. I think people in the public service would be treated much more fairly if the minister, or somebody else, would take steps to see that the length of time eligibility lists are maintained is considerably shortened. In this way the right of the individual employee, according to what I understand is a principle of the operations of the civil service commission, to bid for a vacant, more senior and higher paid position and to enter into a competition with others for the particular job would be preserved. Once you have a list established you interfere with this principle for at least that period of time.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this large and rather important aspect of the hiring practices of the civil service commission is one that should be debated when the minister to whom the commission is answerable is presenting his main estimates.

Rather than attempting to argue the matter now I would prefer to leave it for debate and discussion at that time. However, I will see that the point raised by the hon. member is drawn to the attention of the minister specifically concerned.

Mr. Howard: I have communicated these views to the commission in a much shorter form, because they are contained in a letter and I wanted to express them publicly. I did not really expect to enter into conversation with anyone as to the propriety of my suggestion. I simply wished to air the matter publicly so that it would be on the record. The minister has indicated that cognizance will be taken of the point and I hope that some alteration will be made as a result.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, everybody knows that French speaking employees earning $5,000 or more a year, in all the federal departments, represent about 5 per cent of the total.

When the Minister of Justice made his statement in Toronto, the civil service association raised protests. If the Minister of Justice made such a statement, it was certainly justified.

It is for that reason that I am asking the government what they intend to do to correct or improve this situation. We all know that during the last election campaign, the Secretary of State and others travelled throughout the province of Quebec stating that the French speaking civil servants were discriminated against and did not have a fair share of positions. Well then, I am wondering what the government intends to do to remedy this situation.

As I said before, the government has spent hundreds of dollars to create the royal commission on biculturalism in order to try and find a solution to the problem, but in practice, the present government refuses to face up to its responsibilities and to take positive action.

Let me give an example, if I may. During the last session, the Minister of Industry appointed two deputy ministers, neither one was French speaking. I ask the minister once again whether he intends to carry out the suggestions made by the Secretary of State during the last election campaign, in view of the fact that those undertakings were published in all French newspapers. Does the minister intend to give a bonus or a special pay rate to bilingual Canadians, whether they be French or English speaking? I should like to have a specific answer from the minister; otherwise, we would have to force the government to state its position, even if we have to discuss this item for three weeks.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Pigeon: No. I would like to know from the Minister of Justice, who is responsible for the fair treatment of all Canadian citizens and who has the great responsibility of administering justice in the country, whether he intends to implement the promises made by the Secretary of State to the effect that bilingual Canadians—of either French or English origin—employed by the federal government should get an increased salary when they speak two languages and possess two cultures.

Mr. Chairman: Is the item carried?

Mr. Pigeon: No, Mr. Chairman. I would like to say this: I know that most members on the government side do not agree with the views expressed by the Secretary of State and do not want by any means that the French culture should spread in the civil service and that bilingual Canadians should take their rightful place within the civil service, whether they are French or English speaking.

But what I cannot understand is that, during the last election, the Secretary of State made promises throughout Quebec, saying that if the Liberals came into power, bilingual Canadians would get a fair treatment and benefit from a special bonus for being able to speak both languages.

It is all very fine to have a royal commission on bilingualism and to try rousing Canadian opinion from sea to sea, but I think that it is high time for the government to go ahead and take some action. The government should tell us what it intends to do, whether it means to keep the promises made by the Secretary of State and grant a special bonus to bilingual employees in the federal civil service to those in the higher positions.

That is what we want to know. Even if the members sitting on the treasury benches try to have this item rushed through, I want to obtain a precise answer, I want the responsible minister to simply tell us: we shall grant a special bonus to bilingual employees or we shall not.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm would perhaps agree to reply to a question? Could the hon. member assert that the members of his party will give his request for a special bonus for bilingual civil servants, the same support he is requesting from the Liberal members?

I think his party, in this respect, did not give more, and he should not ask for more.

Mr. Pigeon: I am happy to belong to this group, because my leader, when he was in power, presented the Canadian Bill of Rights and granted equal rights to all the citizens in this country. More especially—

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): I wish I had a direct reply.

Mr. Pigeon: —more especially—I shall give you an example. When we were in power, we appointed Mr. Chagnon—

Mr. Habel: Yes or no?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes. We appointed Mr. Chagnon associate deputy minister of agriculture and we gave him responsibilities equal to those of the deputy minister.

Mr. Habel: Name some more.

Mr. Pigeon: A few weeks later, there was a change in government and I can tell you that, in the federal Department of Agriculture, Mr. Chagnon can no longer make any decisions.

An hon. Member: That is false.

Mr. Pigeon: He has no responsibilities at present and he did complain about that.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member wanders somewhat from the item now under study.

Mr. Pigeon: I do not think I am wandering from the subject, because I am entitled to speak of a particular department and a particular official, since we are studying an item concerning the civil service commission. I am entitled to speak about this.

The Chairman: The hon. member will admit that I was merely trying to help him by making this remark.

Mr. Pigeon: Would you please repeat, Mr. Chairman? I did not understand.

The Chairman: The hon. member will recognize that I was trying to help him.

Mr. Pigeon: I want to emphasize that I hold you in high esteem, but you certainly wanted to help the house, and perhaps more especially the government, which is very embarrassed by the statement made a few months ago to the effect that a special bonus should be given—

[Text]

The Chairman: Order; is the hon. member for Skeena rising on a point of order?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 3, 1964

The house met at 11 a.m.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TABLING OF OPENING STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER AND FINAL COMMUNIQUE

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies in English and in French of the communique of the federal-provincial conference held this week in Quebec city, and copies in English and in French of the opening statement which I made dealing with conditional grants and shared cost programs. I propose to make a more extended statement on the conference itself on Monday; meanwhile members will have these documents before them for examination over the week end.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question concerning the documents arising out of the federal-provincial conference which he tabled this morning? The right hon. gentleman said we would have them over the week end. In what way? Are they being made an appendix to Hansard or are copies being supplied to members?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am sorry. I should have inquired whether the house would like to have these documents appear as an appendix to Hansard. I meant to have done that.

Mr. Knowles: I suggest that that be done. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is it the wish of the house that the documents tabled by the Prime Minister this morning be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of documents above referred to, see appendix.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the order: Motions:

March 27—The Prime Minister:

That, immediately after royal assent has been given to the bill providing for the appropriation based on supplementary estimates (E), this house adjourn until Monday, April 6, 1964.

Mr. Speaker: Motions. The Prime Minister. Stand?

Mr. Pearson: Stand.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, would it not be appropriate to withdraw this motion?

Motion stands.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRIES RESPECTING MATTERS DISCUSSED AND STATEMENTS MADE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, while the Prime Minister has said that he intends to wait until Monday, I am sure the house would welcome some statement today regarding the conference in Quebec city, which turned out to be—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —a fiasco. I should like to ask the Prime Minister, with reference to the pension plan, whether he is now in a position to tell the house that the plan will be proceeded with even if two provinces do not participate. For I recall that on March 14 he stated that the absence—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —of two provinces would destroy the possibility of this bill. Will the government go ahead with the bill regardless of how many provinces may enter the scheme?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will ignore the right hon. gentleman's introduction to his question about the conference except to say that I recognize his authority to speak on conference fiascos.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This one is a superlative example.

Mr. Pearson: As to his particular question, I am glad to inform the right hon. gentleman that the government intends to proceed without delay with the consideration of the Canada pension plan, and nothing happened at the Quebec conference which will interfere with our desire, indeed our determination, to get this plan into action.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether, if two or more provinces do not join the plan, his determination is equally certain.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman's hypothetical question does not affect our determination to proceed with this matter.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): In welcoming the Prime Minister's statement that the government will proceed with the Canada pension plan, may I ask him this. If the two senior provinces decide to stay out, will the right hon. gentleman consider reverting to the terms and conditions which were outlined on July 18 last rather than following the terms which are now on the order paper, in view of the fact that this modification was made largely to ameliorate some of the difficulties which obtained between the federal and provincial governments?

Mr. Pearson: That, of course, is also a hypothetical question, though it is an important one. When the hon. gentleman talks about provinces staying out, I would remind him that only one province has indicated its intention to proceed with its own plan. We are proceeding on the assumption that there is only one province which has indicated such an intention and that, therefore, nothing has happened which would alter our determination to go ahead with our own plan.

Mr. Douglas: I certainly hope the Prime Minister's statement proves to be true. But does he not take the statement by the premier of Ontario as indicating that Ontario may follow the course proposed by the province of Quebec?

Mr. Pearson: I did not interpret the statement in that way. If the hon. member reads the text of what was said at the press conference given by the premier of Ontario he will see that the premier did not commit himself to any course of action. He has not committed himself to any course of action since we first introduced our plan.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would like to take it as notice and deal with it when he makes his full statement on Monday. The federal and provincial administrations have, as I understand it, agreed to establish a joint ministerial committee to review finances. My question is, will the third level of government be included in such consultations?

Mr. Pearson: In federal-provincial committees and meetings of the kind to which the hon. member has referred it has been the custom in the past and, I think, the constitutionally appropriate custom, to have the municipalities represented by the provinces to which they are responsible. If there is to be any change in this constitutional procedure, that change would have to be made by agreement with the provinces. Indeed, I think it would have to be initiated by the provincial governments.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In connection with that plan to convene a conference representative of the federal and provincial governments, if I understood the Prime Minister correctly he indicated at his press conference last night that all the provinces had agreed to this plan. I would ask him whether Premier Lesage did not say last evening, in his statement to the press, at the bottom of page 1, after referring to the interpretation of the projects:

> Be that as it may, I merely say we would like to give further thought to this question before making a statement.

I ask the Prime Minister this. Did he or did he not have an assurance from Premier Lesage, as he apparently indicated in his statement last evening, that the province of Quebec would participate in these conferences?

Mr. Pearson: The premier agreed with the communiqué in which the nature of this inquiry was set out and its desirability was referred to. Premier Lesage joined the other premiers in welcoming such an inquiry. He has not yet indicated the intention of his government to participate in the actual membership of the committee itself. He is waiting to hear from us as to the nature of the committee and the kind of representation, and he has informed us, as he informed the press conference yesterday, that he would then decide whether Quebec would actually participate in the representation on the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

There were reports coming from the federal-provincial conference to the effect that the federal government would transfer a larger share of direct taxation to the provinces. Could the Prime Minister tell us whether that policy would apply only to provinces not taking part in the health insurance program or to all provinces?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, there would be no distinction made with regard to any province in this matter.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, should the Quebec government impose double taxation, could the Prime Minister now tell us if the Liberal government in Ottawa intends to withdraw proportionately from that tax, which would apply in Quebec, as was the case in 1954 under this same Liberal party?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that is a matter of government policy. No consideration has been given to it and no consideration can be given to it, of course, until we find out what the plans of the government of Quebec are.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, does the government intend to study the policy advocated by the previous Conservative government to the effect that direct taxation would be proportionately handed over to the provinces at the rate of 1 per cent per annum at present or does it intend to put directly at 20 per cent the transfer to the provinces out of the revenue of direct taxation?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of policy which will have to be considered.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister can match the assurance he has given us about the Canada pension plan by confirming the government's intention to go ahead at this session with its announced intention to extend family allowances to those 16 and 17 years old?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we have heard nothing on this point which would warrant any intereference with or any delay in the plans we have put forward. However, this matter did come up at the conference, as my hon. friend knows, and in the communiqué the federal government merely stated that it would study the views expressed by all the premiers on this matter at the conference.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does this apply also to the matter of student loans; and in view of the fact that the premier of Quebec has indicated the intention of his government to appeal this matter to the courts, is it the thought of the federal government that there might be a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada to determine the question of the constitutionality of these measures?

Mr. Pearson: That would be one way to clear up this matter. I think I should add that we would not have introduced these proposals if we had had any doubt whatever as to their constitutionality.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has just made a summary statement, and in that connection I ask him this question. Is it the opinion of the government, received from the law officers of the crown, that the system of loans proposed in the speech from the throne is entirely within the competence of the federal parliament?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have just said that, and I am glad to repeat that we think this is within the competence of the federal parliament, particularly in view of the procedure we intend to propose whereby these loans will be made to individuals through the banks with the federal government guaranteeing the banks.

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the family allowances to be paid to 16 and 17 year old students. Were the provincial governments consulted before the minister decided to enter this field?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there were no consultations with outside people, including the provinces, before the presentation of the budget.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Does he intend to withdraw or amend the bill concerning loans to students as a result of the protests of certain provinces?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I have already dealt with that matter.

Mr. Douglas: May I put a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of his offer to the provinces at the federal-provincial conference at Quebec city, that the federal government is willing to withdraw from the hospital insurance plan and will grant the provinces a 13 per cent abatement of personal income tax for taking over this program, does this mean the federal government has forsaken the idea of extending the hospital insurance program into a comprehensive federal health insurance program?

Mr. Gordon: In the first place, my hon. friend has put words into my mouth that I have not uttered. There have ben discussions about contracting out of a number of the shared cost programs including hospital insurance. The formula for arriving at fiscal compensation for such contracting out has not yet been settled. I do not think I can add anything more in answer to the first part of my hon. friend's question.

As to the second part of the question, this is a matter of government policy upon which I am not in a position to comment at this time.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister whether or not one term for granting the abatement of personal income tax to any province contracting out will be the condition that they must continue to give reciprocity to other parts of Canada with reference to hospital insurance?

Mr. Gordon: There was some discussion on the part of the provinces, particularly by the province of Quebec, on this point. They made it very clear that if they did contract out they would provide reciprocity and an exchange of services with the other provinces. They pointed out also that they would continue the plan.

Mr. Douglas: That is not the question I asked the minister. Would this be a condition which the federal government would impose upon granting them an abatement of personal income tax? Would this be done only if they were willing to continue reciprocity with the other provinces?

Mr. Gordon: In answer to the hon. member's first question I said that the terms and conditions have not yet been settled, so I think it would be premature for me to comment on one particular condition which is something that I am sure will be given the closest consideration.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. My question is related to the subject of the hospital insurance plan to which reference has already been made. Would it not be a good idea to defer any alterations in that plan until we have the report of the royal commission on health services, particularly in view of reports that this commission may well recommend a nation-wide health insurance scheme?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point the hon. gentleman has made, that no changes should be made in matters of this kind before the report is received, and indeed there is to be a meeting of provincial ministers of health and the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare very shortly. I take it the hon. member's question is referring, however, to a change in the plan and not to a formula with one province contracting out of the plan.

[Later:]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice which he may want to take as notice. As one of the ministers charged with the responsibility of negotiating with the Quebec government in connection with the administrative transfer of Eskimo responsibilities, can he advise the house whether this was discussed at the recent federal-provincial conference, and whether Mr. Levesque and his government have given their consent to having the agreement brought before parliament for consideration?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it was not discussed either before or after the conference.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada. Does he share the opinion expressed by the premier of Ontario to the effect that representatives, in Ottawa, of the provinces which will not participate in the Canada pension plan should not be allowed to express in the house their views on that subject nor vote nor move any amendment whatever?

Since half the government is made up of members from the province of Quebec, does the Prime Minister share the opinion of the Ontario premier?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I should be asked whether I share the opinion of the premier of a province, especially an opinion which I did not hear him express in Quebec.

[Later:]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, according to reports in the newspapers certain discussions took place at the conference relative to offshore mineral rights. I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether any decision has been made as to the procedure to be followed in resolving the dispute over offshore mineral rights.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this matter was raised by the premier of Nova Scotia at the end of the conference and received rather brief discussion in the circumstances. I informed him, as I am glad to inform the house, that this matter is under consideration. It is a very important matter both legally and economically. It affects not only Nova Scotia but a good many other provinces, and affects them in rather different ways. It is complicated, but we are proceeding with our examination and hope to be able to work out a satisfactory conclusion which may make unnecessary a reference to the courts.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Does she agree with the premier of Ontario when he intimated in Quebec city that the pension plan introduced by the province of Quebec is better than the one put forward by the federal government.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will give me your consideration in addressing a question to the Prime Minister which I think is of the utmost urgency. In view of the experience of the Prime Minister at this recent provincial-dominion conference and others, would he take under consideration the calling of a dominion-provincial conference of an enlarged character, including both governments and oppositions, in order to try to bring down to a definite basis, not in two or three days but after the necessary consideration, the future of Canada as a nation, so that we can get away from all this provincialism, parochialism—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Socialism?

Mr. Winch: —and all the rest of it which affect not only the people but the provinces and country as a whole? I think this is an urgent matter in which most of us are very interested. Is it possible in view of your responsibility as Prime Minister, sir, to give this type of leadership to Canada by calling such a conference with such purpose in view?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has indicated to the house the urgency he attaches to this matter, and it is an urgency shared by all of us. But I am sure he would not expect me to deal with such a fundamental question as that on orders of the day.

Mr. Winch: Will you take it under consideration, sir?

Mr. Pearson: I will be very glad to take it under consideration.

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister arising from his government's repeated proposals for contracting out of national programs. How long does the Prime Minister think it will take his government to complete the separation of Quebec from the rest of Canada?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of question which is not designed to strengthen national unity and should not be asked by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, does—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member asking a new question? There is no supplementary involved.

Mr. Nasserden: This is following upon the answer I received from the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister not think that suggestions which promote the contracting out of national programs do more to disunite this country than anything else done in recent Canadian history?

Mr. Pearson: No.

Mr. Langlois: On a point of privilege, I think the hon. member on this side of the house should probably go and work for Mr. Robarts in Ontario and start converting the Conservatives instead of the people from Quebec.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that several members have asked questions this morning with regard to the federal-provincial conference, can the Prime Minister tell us whether the last federal-provincial conference has been helpful in strengthening national unity or rather has resulted in further complications?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This question is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Does the government intend to bring about a reform of the constitution which would take into account the present problems or will we allow it to fall apart without trying to find real solutions to such problems?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Once more, these questions are purely hypothetical.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, referring to the question I put a moment ago to the Prime Minister, I wish to say that the answer he gave does not tally with that of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). I asked him what was the policy of the government in the case of provinces who asked that direct taxation powers be returned to them and if the policy would apply to all provinces even though they are not participating in joint health insurance programs?

The Prime Minister answered then:

There would be no distinction made.

Could he give us a more elaborate answer, since the Minister of Finance has not heard anything about that yet?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I feel it my duty to interrupt. That type of question is, in my opinion, out of order at this time. The Prime Minister has already stated that he will make a detailed statement on Monday. He has suggested that members read the papers which he has filed this morning. May I suggest to the hon. member that he wait, read those papers and listen to the statement.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice?

Since there are serious differences of opinion between the provinces and the federal government regarding certain fields of jurisdiction and powers, does the Minister of Justice propose to call a federal-provincial conference in order to find a way to revise or re-think the Canadian constitution and define the respective limitations of the various governments?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, although I do not agree with the first part of my hon. friend's question, I can say that if and when the government decides to take such action, it will be announced in the normal way.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Should the legislation on the Canada pension plan be brought forward after a final decision has been made by Ontario to contract out, if that is its intention, and in view of the fact that Quebec has already opted out, does the right hon. gentleman not think that the house will be put in a most awkward position in that members from Quebec and Ontario, the majority of members in this house, will be dealing with legislation which in no way affects their provinces but which does have a definite effect on the other provinces involved?

Mr. Pearson: That is a hypothetical situation which I hope and believe will not arise.

[Mr. Langlois.]

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance concerning the federal-provincial conference just ended.

Since the whole thing apparently amounts to nothing but a real financial problem, could the minister tell the house if he is thinking of reforming the financial system or remaining at odds with the provinces?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since the pension plan has been given the name of "Canada pension plan", does that mean that Quebec, with its own pension plan, is no longer a part of Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to say that my hon. friend's technique in asking questions has not improved while I was away.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I would have a further question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Does he not believe that if he really wants co-operative federalism, particularly in connection with a pension plan, one of the ways of achieving it would be to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) to resign or to switch to another department?

[Text]

PENITENTIARIES

PROPOSED LOCATION OF NEW WOMEN'S PRISON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the Minister of Justice if the days of indecision are over and he is now able to inform the house whether a positive decision has been made as to the location for the proposed new penitentiary upon which work was supposed to have started early this year?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I suggest that this is a question for the order paper, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Winch: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the announcement made some time ago that construction was to start early this year, which would require planning, can the minister not now inform us whether a decision on the location has been made?

Mr. Speaker: In spite of the importance of the question, I believe the minister is entitled to notice and the question should be put on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Justice and ask him is he able to inform the house whether the public statement made by his predecessor, Hon. Lionel Chevrier, to the effect that the Department of Justice had made its decision as to the construction of the women's penitentiary at Cornwall, was true or false?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I trust the hon. gentleman will allow me to take further cognizance of whatever statement he is presently referring to, and consequently allow me to take the question as notice.

ST. PIE DE BAGOT, QUE.—CANCELLATION OF CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Justice take a few minutes, at the same time, to review the case of the St. Pie de Bagot penitentiary?

Mr. Deschatelets: That matter has long been settled.

[Later:]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

When I put a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) with respect to the St. Pie de Bagot penitentiary, some time ago, he suggested, by a nod, that the matter was settled, that this project was cancelled.

Would the Minister of Public Works tell us whether the plan for the construction of a penitentiary at St. Pie de Bagot has been cancelled, as suggested by the Minister of Justice?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot is asking that question again.

When the house studied the estimates of the Department of Justice last year, the minister said to the hon. member that the project for the building of a penitentiary at St. Pie de Bagot was definitely abandoned, in anticipation of the construction of a penitentiary in the north of Montreal.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not see any pressing urgency to this question. If the hon. member wishes a detailed answer, would he please put the question on the order paper.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I would very much like some more information. I have been asking those ministers across the floor about this all of last year and I could not get any reply. That is why I grasped the opportunity this morning to ask for some more information.

Mr. Deschatelets: May I answer this by saying that this project to construct a penitentiary in the riding of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot has been abandoned, period.

Mr. Ricard: Because there is a Conservative member in that riding.

COMBINES

ONTARIO—REFUSAL OF BULK PICK-UP CEMENT SALES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Brant-Haldimand): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is the minister able to state if an investigation is about to be or is being conducted under the Combines Investigation Act as a result of the almost simultaneous action of four large cement manufacturing companies in Ontario refusing to accept bulk pick-up sales?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. The director of investigation and research under the Combines Investigation Act informs me he is fully aware of this situation and can be expected to take any action under the Combines Investigation Act that the statute may require. The general practice, however, and I think it is in the public interest that I should follow it, is that no information is given out as to whether a particular inquiry is in fact being pursued, unless and until a report is published.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

KNOWLEDGE BY FINANCE MINISTER OF FUND CONDITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Was he aware of a financial crisis existing in the unemployment insurance fund on or before Thursday, March 26?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes; several years ago the fund went down very much.

Mr. Pigeon: The same old bunch.

Mr. Pearson: You are very touchy about it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the minister now under tutorship?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the days when my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs was interested in political questions I believe that on occasion he drew to the attention of members of the house the crisis that existed from time to time in the unemployment insurance fund.

In answer to my hon. friend's question, I was aware that the authority for the fund to borrow expired on March 31. Therefore provision was made in the supplementary estimates which were tabled on March 6 to continue this authority into the future.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS FROM FEDERAL CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question relating to the hospitals operated under her department, as to whether they would suffer the same fate as veterans hospitals, and she indicated at that time that nothing was to be changed and no policy decision had been made about that matter.

I have here the Prince Rupert Daily News of March 23, wherein there is reference to a statement attributed to Mr. Speaker Murray of the legislature of British Columbia, to the effect that he has discussed the question of the Miller Bay Indian hospital in Prince Rupert with Hon. Eric Martin, minister of health for the province of British Columbia, and also to the effect that the days of the Miller Bay Indian hospital may be numbered; in other words that they may be drawing to a close. Would the minister care to comment on this?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should be very grateful if my hon. friend would let me have a copy of that report so I could investigate and advise him later.

SPORTS

REQUEST FOR GRANT FOR 1966 QUEBEC FESTIVAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

According to a morning paper, the minister is reported as having announced yesterday the payment of grants in the amount of $540,396 to 37 national sport associations.

Not having heard this announcement, but relying on this press report, I ask the minister whether her department has decided to allow the grant requested for the organization of the interprovincial games in the Quebec area.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It does seem to me this is a question for the order paper, unless the minister has the information at hand.

INDUSTRY

URANIUM CITY, SASK.—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF STOCKPILING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production—a similar question was asked a few days ago—concerning the rather serious situation in Uranium City. What action will the government take in order to assure the continuance there of the institution that produces uranium, so that this city, which was built around uranium, will not suffer irretrievable loss?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, as the right hon. Leader of the Opposition will be aware, this is a matter which has been of concern to the government. In consultation with other interested parties we are endeavouring to formulate a policy which will ameliorate the undoubtedly difficult circumstances which are being experienced in Uranium City.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister. Is he in a position to give any general indication of the plans in this regard? I realize the limitations under which he would operate to answer that question, but the people there would like more than the expression of the expectation of a hope.

Mr. Drury: Not at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister at least assure the house that Uranium City will be given the same treatment that is being accorded the uranium industry in Elliot Lake, Ontario?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, Uranium City will be given the same consideration that is being given to Elliot Lake.

TAXES IN OTHER COUNTRIES ON PRODUCTION MACHINERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): I should like to address this question to the Minister of Finance. It is the same question I put to the Minister of Industry yesterday. I did not have an answer then, but since the Minister of Finance drew up the budget he may, I feel, have this answer. The question is, is there any country other than Canada which taxes production machinery?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I do not know how many other countries there are, and in any event I am not familiar with the tax structures of all of them.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

POLICY RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION OF SMALL POST OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. My question is further to one asked of the minister last Tuesday concerning the government's policy with regard to the construction of small post offices under the winter works program. Has government policy in this regard been changed recently, inasmuch as it has been indicated to me that these small post offices are only to be built in designated areas? If government policy has been changed, when was it changed, and how?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that a second question has been asked on the same subject, because the last time the hon. member who has asked this question informed us that he had received a letter from the Postmaster General covering his point. I think it is well known that the Postmaster General is the one who determines where there is a need for the construction of a post office, and in what community. When this is done the Department of Public Works is asked to proceed with the construction. If the hon. member has any further questions to ask on this subject I think he should await the return of the Postmaster General to throw some more light on the matter, if the hon. member is not satisfied with the letter he has received.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Inasmuch as the Postmaster General indicated to me that it was up to the Minister of Public Works to make the decision as to what was to be done and the policy to be changed, could the minister tell us whether the policy has been changed in this regard?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I will take this supplementary question as notice and upon the return of the Postmaster General I will answer my hon. friend.

THREE RIVERS, QUE.—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MAIL TRUCK ROBBERY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Postmaster General, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Postmaster General.

Is the minister able to make a statement to the house about the theft of a mail truck in Three Rivers? If so, is there any connection between the first, second and third thefts?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, all the newspapers reported yesterday that a second theft had been committed in a royal mail truck in the outskirts of Three Rivers. Full details were given and I can assure the house that the Post Office Department, in co-operation with the police authorities, is taking the necessary steps to deal with this situation and protect crown property.

However, until we get a complete police report we cannot say if there is any connection between those thefts.

I might add that it is not believed that a large sum of money was taken.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Is it true that, on various occasions, requests were made to the Post Office Department by police authorities in the province of Quebec and in other provinces for better protection equipment, that is for armoured cars and an armed driver during the transportation of that money?

Mr. Deschatelets: I am not perfectly aware of the policy which applies in such cases. However, I can assure the house that the Post Office Department is now taking steps to meet that situation and give adequate protection to government property.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, just a supplementary question to enlighten the minister as to what I meant a while ago. The Montreal Gazette wrote yesterday that an official had stated:

[Text]

Came from high office from Ottawa.

[Translation]

Was that order issued by the minister's office or simply by the commissioners' office?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, the Postmaster General will be back next week. I shall therefore let him consider this matter and he will advise the hon. member later.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Inasmuch as there have been numerous serious mail robberies in the last two days, I wonder whether the government will consider the appointment of Senator Denis to assist the police in their investigations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

PUBLIC WORKS

EXERCISE OF PATRONAGE, PRINCE EDWARD-LENNOX CONSTITUENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Is Mr. Woolsey, the former Liberal candidate, consultant for the Department of Public Works in the riding of Prince Edward-Lennox and in control of the patronage there?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that unless the minister wishes to answer, this question is certainly one for the order paper, assuming it is in order.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Because of the implication of this question, Mr. Speaker, would you allow me to answer it? The answer is no.

Mr. Alkenbrack: A supplementary question. Would the minister then care to comment on this item in the Picton Gazette of April 1, which is contrary to the statement just made by the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think any comment is called for at this stage.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REMOVAL OF ARMS AND AMMUNITION FROM QUEBEC CADET CORPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence in order to check the accuracy of an answer given to me some time ago. I base my question on an article by Mr. Blair Fraser in Maclean's magazine for April 4, page 2. He is writing about the removal by the military authorities of arms from the cadet corps and he refers to the cadet commander of Ashbury College as follows:

> He discovered that while Ashbury College on the Ontario side of the Ottawa river had been stripped of everything it possessed, the cadet corps across the river in Hull, Quebec, had not lost any equipment at all.

Some time ago I asked the minister a question which was numbered 203, and the return given to me was numbered 2423. My question was:

> From which cadet corps have weapons and ammunition been removed by the Department of National Defence?

The answer was:

> Weapons and ammunition were removed from all cadet corps in the province of Quebec.

My question is, is Mr. Blair Fraser accurate in his statement, or is the minister accurate in his statement?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I think the answer to the question would depend on the date of the answer.

INQUIRY AS TO RECOVERY OF STOLEN ARMS AND AMMUNITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence a question which I put to him before. Has any recovery been made of the substantial quantity of arms and ammunition stolen from national defence armouries?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Not in addition to those I have already mentioned, Mr. Speaker.

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR PROPELLED SUBMARINES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence.

In his white paper the minister announced the intention of his department to buy three nuclear submarines. Will they also be equipped with nuclear Polaris rockets?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker.

QUEBEC—POSSIBLE ATTEMPT TO FORM REVOLUTIONARY FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Minister of Justice with reference to the theft of arms and ammunition and other military equipment from armouries. My question is this. Have the R.C.M.P. indicated to the minister any suspicion in their minds that an attempt is being made to form "a revolutionary force modelled on the Irish republican army with its own war room, chain of command, staff officers and guerrilla bands," as indicated in an article by Peter Newman in Maclean's magazine?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED USE OF TRAWLS IN CATCHING SEALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Fisheries. Is the acting minister in a position to reply to the question I asked yesterday regarding the proposed cruel method of catching seals by using hooks?

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Acting Minister of Fisheries): In reply to the hon. member for Trinity-Conception I may say that the subject of adequate regulation of the seal fishery is now under very careful review by the Department of Fisheries, and the possible use of the method outlined by the member yesterday will be included in that review.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED BANK MERGER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Has the government received any representations on the question of a merger between the Toronto-Dominion Bank and the Bank of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The answer is still no, Mr. Speaker.

HIGHWAYS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING STEWART-CASSIAR ROAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and ask him whether any negotiations or discussions are currently under way between himself or his department and Mr. Gaglardi of the province of British Columbia, or officials of that province, with respect to the Stewart-Cassiar road under the roads to resources program.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): We have been approached by the government of British Columbia in the person of Mr. Kiernan, who was minister of mines at that time. He asked us to find an additional $7,500,000, approximately, because at the time the roads to resources program was laid down the province of British Columbia chose to apply the entire $15 million to the construction of the Stewart-Cassiar road.

Mr. Kiernan has told us that this money is entirely used up but there are some 90 miles of the road still to be completed in the most difficult section, and his estimate is that this work will cost, in all, another $15 million. He has applied for $7,500,000. We told him that inasmuch as the agreement with respect to the roads to resources program has not been completed in all the provinces it would not be possible for us to make an extension under that program for a single province at this time.

AGRICULTURE

REPORTED PRESSURE FOR APPOINTMENT OF QUEBEC MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister?

At a meeting held during the week end, the general council of the union catholique des cultivateurs referred to a statement made in Winnipeg by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), to the effect that the appointment of Mr. Maurice Sauve was the result of pressures exerted by members of parliament from the province of Quebec. Could the Prime Minister either deny or corroborate such a statement?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Agriculture has already denied that he made the statement.

CROWN ASSETS

VANCOUVER—DISPOSAL OF SITE OF R.C.A.F. STATION KITSILANO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry who, I believe, is responsible for the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. In view of the fact that the R.C.A.F. plant at Kitsilano is now under control of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, will the minister tell us what is the present situation in view of the urgent request made by the city of Vancouver in this respect?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The present situation is that the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is exploring the most advantageous way to Canada of disposing of this property, and in this connection discussions have been held with the city of Vancouver.

Mr. Winch: Will the minister assure us that no disposal will be made until he has received the presentation of the city of Vancouver with regard to this matter?

Mr. Drury: There have already been discussions with the city of Vancouver.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Civil service commission—

1e. Salaries and contingencies of the commission, $131,000.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, before we pass the supplementary estimate now before us, I would like to make a few remarks concerning the civil service commission.

At this time, French speaking citizens in Canada sometimes wonder about the civil service commission, and the relations which French Canadians may have as federal employees.

I do not consider myself competent to delve very deeply into existing conditions in Ottawa as far as French speaking citizens are concerned. But today I would like to quote as witness a prominent Canadian politician who certainly occupies one of the most important posts in the federal capital. I refer to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) who, as we know, has been deputy minister of justice for several years and who is obviously familiar with the attitude of the civil service commission in respect of French speaking civil servants.

The Minister of Justice recently made a speech in Toronto. I would like to read out a few extracts, and then ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith) four questions with regard to vote 1e now before us.

The experience gained by the Minister of Justice would clearly warrant that his statement is based on some true facts. According to the Ottawa Journal of March 5, 1964, the minister said this:

[Mr. Winch.]

[Text]

Favreau blames civil service for Quebec's "quiet revolution".

[Translation]

The beginning of the article reads as follows:

[Text]

Nothing has caused such "strong and deep-rooted frustration in Quebec" than the position of French Canadians in the federal civil service, especially in the departmental headquarters establishments in the national capital.

The "brushing aside" of French in Ottawa has "fed the so-called quiet revolution" in Quebec.

[Translation]

And the article continues as follows:

[Text]

These and other statements bearing on bilingualism in the civil service were contained in a speech today at the Empire club in Toronto by justice minister Favreau. He spoke of the feeling now existing among French Canadians as "serious and dangerous", and put the blame largely on the language situation in the civil service.

[Translation]

Again, the article continues:

[Text]

Mr. Favreau's was the strongest attack yet made by any member of the cabinet against what he charged had been years of discrimination against French Canadians in government service.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, that is the reason why—

[Text]

Mr. Tucker: Will the hon. member permit a question? Will he state the source or writer of the article?

Mr. Pigeon: All the newspapers across the country.

Mr. Vincent: The Ottawa Journal, March 5, 1964, on the front page.

That is why the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) asked the President of the Privy Council if he was in agreement with the statements made by the Minister of Justice.

Everybody knows that in Quebec, and more particularly during election campaigns, we heard a great deal of talk about the relations between French Canadians and English Canadians and the part which French Canadians are playing in federal politics. As a matter of fact, those who are sitting on the government benches today are always singing the same refrain during election campaigns, but when they come to Ottawa they keep mum. They even remained silent during 22 years and on account of their attitude, we are wondering what happened to those fine speeches made during election campaigns.

Mr. Chairman, I now wish to point out certain remarks made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) who, according to precedence, ranks tenth in the cabinet and whose position is higher than that of the Minister of Justice who only ranks nineteenth. And as reported on page 6 of the appendix to Hansard for June 25, 1963, the Secretary of State said:

To that end, various projects are now being considered such as a review of the recruiting and examination system, special courses within the various departments, a premium for bilinguism, the creation of a bilingual institute of public administration, where all university graduates might train before taking up their posts in the federal service.

We shall start with that over-all program next September. From now on, we want all civil servants truly to understand the bilingual and fundamentally bicultural character of Canada. More particularly, we want French Canadians to be able to serve their country in their own language and not to have to forget it when going to work.

Mr. Chairman, before those estimates are passed and following the statement made outside the house by the Minister of Justice, who surely has some experience in the federal civil service, and the one made by the Secretary of State in a speech delivered on June 25 in this house, I should like to put four questions to the President of the Privy Council. I would like him to answer these four questions before we pass his estimates.

Question No. 1—At present, what progress has been made in the review of recruiting methods and examination systems? When I say this, I refer to certain statements.

Question No. 2—Where does the project with regard to special courses within various departments stand?

Question No. 3—Where does the project of premiums for bilingual civil servants stand?

Question No. 4—What progress has been made with respect to the creation of a bilingual institute of public administration where university graduates could train before taking up their duties in the civil service?

I would like, if it is at all possible, to have the President of the Privy Council answer these four questions.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, the speech I made in Toronto, last March 5, has since been reported in several different ways by some hon. members.

I must say that had I not been sure of the validity of the speech I was going to make before the Canadian Imperial Club, in Toronto, I could only be proud of it now in view of the approval it has received.

It is obvious that this speech was not about a review of the civil service, on March 5, 1964, because the situation within the civil service was not the subject matter of my remarks that day. I simply tried, as I had been requested to do, to point out some guide lines; I said that they were not all the reasons for what is brewing and what is happening now in the province of Quebec.

I said also that if the French language had been disregarded in business as well as in the civil service mainly through neglect on the part of French speaking Canadians in the field of education as well as through some deficiencies in the school system in Quebec, which are being corrected wonderfully today, the blame lay also to a great extent with the indifference of English speaking Canadians. I added that, in the past, the civil service had been one of the areas where the results of those deficiencies among French speaking Canadians and that indifference on the part of English speaking Canadians had been most noticeable.

I also added that, fortunately, thanks to measures now implemented and arrangements proposed to correct the situation, there is a substantial improvement in the bilingual situation in the civil service and there is reason to have great hopes in that field.

Mr. Chairman, as far as the past is concerned, what I have said is correct but my words are distorted—unconsciously or involuntarily, I am prepared to admit it—when people say that my speech dealt with the present situation in the civil service. All I uttered was a word of encouragement for what is happening now or what will happen in the future.

What happened is this. In the Ottawa Journal following, no doubt, a phone call and with no ill intent on the part of the news reporter, three paragraphs of my speech were singled out. The newspaper realized that those three paragraphs were out of context, and on the following Saturday, that part of the text mentioning the civil service was reproduced in two full columns on the editorial page. To my great satisfaction, that same newspaper, eight days ago I believe, published an editorial of which I am proud and which was based on a speech I had made in Montreal and in Toronto. It said:

[Text]

If the Minister of Justice had less courage or had been a lesser man, he would have pronounced his Toronto speech in Montreal and his Montreal speech in Toronto.

[Translation]

For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to withdraw from what I said but I simply wish to add this. There are at present, within the civil service, very encouraging signs concerning bilingualism, and I think that we only have to take an inventory of this government's policy and of the steps now being taken, or under discussion, to know that we can hope for a full measure of justice, within the civil service, as regards the application and the use of the two official languages in this country. As I said, that same measure of justice will be applied to those, among the unilingual officials who were not completely prepared, in the past, to accept their position and for whom, the fact that they are not French speaking will not be an obstacle to promotion or a matter of discrimination.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Minister of Justice for having thrown some light on the speeches he made in Montreal and Toronto.

The minister mentioned the education system in the province of Quebec. I agree with him that it is being improved, but one must recognize that it is under that system that the minister himself was educated and became an outstanding lawyer. Thus, it certainly contributed, in the past, to the education of distinguished French Canadians.

One should not blame the whole system of education which prevailed in the province of Quebec before 1960, inasmuch as the Minister of Justice himself, like many others in the house, received his education under this particular system, which prevailed in the province of Quebec before this famous peaceful revolution we have been witnessing since 1960.

Now, Mr. Chairman, were it possible, I would be happy if the Minister of Justice, while he is in the mood, would answer the four questions I just had passed onto him on a sheet of paper.

Could the Minister of Justice answer the four questions I am directing to him?

Mr. Favreau: Obviously, our system of communiciations is not perfect—well, I had not seen them before the moment I rose—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman—

[Text]

The Chairman: Does the minister wish to reply to these questions before I recognize another hon. member?

Mr. McIlraith: I shall try to answer them to the best of my ability. The first question had to do with the language courses. There is a language course being conducted by the civil service commission, and in addition authority has been given to several of the departments to set up their own language courses. I think the program in that field would be found rather satisfactory, and if the hon. member wants more detail about it I would hope to arrange for him to get it, as I believe it would meet the kind of problem he has in mind. I am sorry to say I do not have a list of the departments here, but I know of three which have language courses, northern affairs, transport and agriculture.

As to the examination system, I am not able to answer that question because the commission is dealing with it and work is being done on its revision. I am unable to give a definitive answer on that.

With regard to the bilingual institute of public administration, the government has not had the opportunity to give final consideration to this matter, because the preparatory material is only now being obtained. Quite active work is being done on the part of the staff in getting the kind of material that needs to be assembled in order to have the policy considered and a decision taken.

In the discussion last night I had understood the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to be speaking about pay bonuses, but on reading the French text of his remarks I now find he used wider language than that, and that there was some reference made to incentives. That question is part of the work being done by a section of the staff group, and where we appeared to be a little at cross purposes last night was in dealing with the method of taking care of the situation, and as to whether this method would be by way of an additional qualification for a job. Pay, of course, is based on the requirements for the job, and in a great number of jobs bilingualism will be a requirement.

As I say, I had understood the hon. member to be speaking last night about a pay bonus, but now I know he used wider terminology and was dealing with something more in the nature of an incentive. This subject is of the utmost importance. Work is proceeding on assembling the material and in taking the steps as rapidly as they can be taken to deal with the situation and to bring about a more satisfactory solution, in the sense that any Canadian coming to Ottawa to do business with the government will be able to converse in his mother language with the officials he might reasonably expect to meet.

Mr. Vincent: I have here the words used by the former secretary of state, which received wide publicity in my province. He used the words "a premium for bilingualism."

Mr. McIlraith: What is the reference?

Mr. Vincent: It will be found at page 1548 of Hansard for June 25, 1963.

Mr. McIlraith: Would you read the sentence?

Mr. Vincent: It reads:

To that end, various projects are now being considered such as a review of the recruiting and examination system, special courses within the various departments, a premium for bilingualism, the creation of a bilingual institute of public administration—

Mr. McIlraith: That is a very accurate statement of the situation, and these things have been moving forward very rapidly. Some of them, like the language courses, are well under way. On others, such as the institute of public administration, the policy decision has not yet been taken because the preparatory work is still being done and has not been completed to the point where a final decision can be taken. That sentence which the hon. member has read is a very accurate statement of the situation, and I would point out that a great deal has been done in the interval. The subject is one of very great interest and concern, and I would hope—

Mr. Pigeon: You play with us, I think. Answer yes or no and we will stop the discussion. We asked you a direct question.

Mr. McIlraith: I would hope that when the minister to whom the civil service commission reports speaks on his general estimates we would have a thorough discussion on this matter, and incidentally the general estimates have already been tabled. Much as I would like to answer yes or no to please my hon. friend, these questions are not the kind that can be answered yes or no. I would like to please him but it would serve no useful purpose to attempt to answer in those terms.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, I listened carefully a while ago to the Minister of Justice and I must congratulate him for the courage he showed when he made his two speeches, one in Montreal and the other in Toronto. Now, if more speeches like that had been made these past few years, the situation would be less critical today as regards the education system which, at least in the opinion of some previous speakers, would only date back, under its present form in the province of Quebec, to 1960.

Let me tell you that we, in the province of Quebec, have been striving for a long time to achieve as high a degree of bilingualism as we could wish for and that the system of education was changed, not in 1960, but long before that, for, when I started teaching in 1956, the new system had been in force for eight years. Therefore, it is not the business of the provincial Liberal party of 1960, and this is nothing new, because the province of Quebec was already aware that a change was called for. There were tentative efforts, upheavals, changes, and changes are still being made, but at least we had the courage to change and to depart somewhat from our traditions, by learning a language and discarding the rest.

If we make the effort to learn another language, it is because we believe it might prove useful to us, otherwise we would not take the trouble. The Canadian people is fully aware of this and I think it is time parliament also understood that as long as a second language is learned only for learning's sake, there shall never be any true bilingualism in the federal civil service. The person who speaks both languages fluently has not only an additional asset, but if he is working in the civil service, he gives double satisfaction. When it is recognized that a knowledge of both languages is an asset, that a bilingual person possesses supplementary or superior qualifications compared with the person who knows only one language, allowance being made for basic qualifications, only then will we have real bilingualism at the level of the civil service.

When an industry needs a technician or an engineer, it does not look for it in a school of medicine but in an institute of technology. If a student wants to specialize in commercial sciences, he attends the school of higher commercial studies and if he wants to be a doctor, he goes to the faculty of medicine.

Now, if the federal government wants efficient men in the civil service, if it wants a team of competent men, it should first have a plan and set up a school to teach and guide the civil service people, in order that they may become efficient men. Many promises were made in that respect during the last election campaign. If the Minister of Justice or the Secretary of State did not make those promises themselves, I heard them say in my riding that a bonus would be granted all bilingual civil servants.

Let the government keep its promises and do what it says it will do. If a person makes the effort required to learn a second language in order to be of service to the federal government, the person should be paid for that service. That should in no way amount to discrimination against other people, for anyone remains free to learn a second language, be it French or English.

I feel it is time we begin to appreciate at its proper value the knowledge of a person who is perfectly bilingual and serves his country in its two official languages.

It is up to the federal government to recognize that advantage. Much ground has already been covered. We are not blaming English speaking Canada, but we rather blame the Quebec representatives within the federal government who, for years and years, were rather unconcerned and when I say that, the Minister of Justice knows very well what I am trying to imply.

There was a deficiency on the part of members from Quebec. Of course, there were some who fought for the French fact. Henri Bourassa brought up the matter often enough to enable the Liberal and Conservative governments to understand the situation. Now, it is up to this government to take a decision because if the province of Quebec is changing its education system to meet today's needs, it behooves the federal government to take the necessary steps to keep pace with the facts.

And only then may we say that we have qualified civil servants because they will have studied to become fluent in both languages.

If I wished to learn mathematics, I would attend a school where mathematics are taught. The federal government should establish a school of languages in order to provide this service to civil servants. It should improve the knowledge of its employees in order that they may give the best possible service to the Canadian people.

I think that by giving a bonus to those who speak both languages, many federal civil servants would learn the other language and thus they would be in a position to render greater services not only to the civil service commission, but also to the whole Canadian population.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Justice made a long statement earlier which, more or less, amounts to an admission that he made a statement in Toronto to the effect that French Canadians in the civil service were frustrated.

On the other hand, I am rather astonished to find that the minister spoke of the Quebec education system as if nothing had been done in the past. By disparaging what had been done in the province of Quebec in the education field before 1960, I think he is running himself down. I most strongly protest against this new crop of people in the province of Quebec who speak ill of everything done prior to 1960; this is doing a disservice to the province of Quebec and national unity in general.

I want to advise the government of the province of Quebec to guard against such an attitude, for as far as education is concerned, the authorities in Quebec seem to want to give as much importance to the agnostics as to the Catholic or Protestant majority in Canada. I feel that the Quebec government is making an error and I have been offended when the minister tried to downgrade the Quebec system of education—

[Mr. Langlois.]

The Chairman: Order. May I remind the hon. member that his remarks must be related to the item now before the house?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I share your views, but I believe it would only have been fair if you had given the same kind of advice to the minister when he ventured on these grounds.

The Minister of Justice says that French Canadians are unfairly treated in the civil service, but what about his attitude during the many years he has been deputy minister of justice in Ottawa when his friends were in power? What suggestions, if any, did he make to the government at that time to improve the French Canadians' position in the federal public service?

He stated in Toronto recently that French Canadians were being frustrated. Is the minister condemning by the same fact the administration under which he was working as associate deputy minister of justice? The minister is admitting publicly before the nation that he failed in his duty and responsibilities by not making suitable recommendations at that time.

Not so long ago, that is on June 25, 1963, the Secretary of State said, as reported on page 1548 of Hansard, that the government would give a premium for bilingualism. Would the President of the Privy Council tell us if the Secretary of State was speaking for the government? Was he or was he not? That is all we want to know.

During the election campaign, throughout French Canada, Liberal candidates promised that a Liberal government would give a premium to bilingual employees.

Mr. Chairman, it is all well and good to make promises, but I want the minister to tell us if that promise will be kept soon. That is all we want to know in order to caution the government, for the future and especially during election campaigns, not to make promises, not to indulge in political blackmail, not to deceive the population, in short not to treat the people of Quebec like fools.

Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact I have here a copy of the Liberal party propaganda during the last election campaign and here is what I find:

Bonus to bilingual federal civil servants.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister whether he is going to carry out that promise made by Liberal candidates and repeated here by the Secretary of State. I want to know whether this government is going to grant shortly a bonus to bilingual employees.

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, if the reference to the remarks in Hansard of June, 1963 is the same as that given by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska, it is a correct reference to the policy and position of this government. What was said in that speech is being carried out very rapidly and very well.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a final question. When is the government going to amend the Civil Service Act in order to grant a bonus to bilingual employees? I ask him to tell us when it is going to happen, since he claims to be in favour of the system and he supports the measure?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether there is much use in continuing this discussion in this way because I find myself in difficulty over the language used by the hon. member. As I understood it, the word used last night was "bonus". When I read the French text of Hansard I find the hon. gentleman used a wider phrase; he varied his words two or three times. If he means that these people will have greater financial benefits because of the added qualification which they use in their work, then they already receive this benefit. For instance, the whole basis of the pay of a translator is on his having a knowledge of both languages. Many positions are set up as bilingual positions and the added language qualification attracts a bonus which is added to the pay set for the position.

So if the hon. member is using the word "bonus" in that sense then they do get a bonus. If he is using the word "bonus" in this sense, that both bilingual and unilingual employees are engaged for similar or identical positions where only a unilingual qualification is required—and in some parts of the country there is no reasonable expectancy that the second language will be required for the efficient performance of duties—then I would think there would be no reason to pay a bonus to those employees who were bilingual and not to those employees who were unilingual. That is why I have been very careful to steer away from giving the hon. member the kind of dogmatic answer which he is seeking to extract from me.

I hope this explanation gives the hon. member the information he requires. I recognize the importance of the subject, but would hope that discussion of it could more adequately be continued when the main estimates are before the house, when the appropriate officials and the minister concerned will have the details available.

I think it is proper to remind the hon. member that these estimates are supplementaries and that the practice of the house for as long as I can remember—and I have been in it for quite a while—has always been that either the Minister of Finance or some other minister puts all the supplementary estimates through the committee. It has not been usual to have detailed discussions of policy, particularly on items like this where what is being asked for is a very small amount by way of additional costs relating to some of the items in the main estimates, and where there is nothing new in the supplementary estimates themselves.

Although I have no wish to cut off any legitimate discussion, I would hope I have correctly stated the position taken by succeeding governments in this kind of situation, and that we might move on with our discussion.

Mr. Langlois: I do not agree with the minister when he said that a bilingual person doing the same job as another in a region where only one language was required should not be entitled to a higher salary. I consider that sheer discrimination. If one man is superior in his qualifications he has the right to superior remuneration from the government. That is the case all over the country and in business. Because a man is located in one spot and his salary is cut down—

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Langlois: — that is sheer discrimination on the part of the government.

Mr. McIlraith: It seems to me the hon. member is mixing up two things here. He is talking about the qualifications of a given employee on the one hand, and then asking for higher pay for an identical position on another. The situation which I posed in my remarks is quite a different situation from that put by the hon. member. What I dealt with was limited, as I tried to point out unsuccessfully, it seems, to the method of handling this problem. The method which seems to be the most talked about and which is the fairest is to pay an employee for the work he does. That is the responsible method. It may happen that a person who is bilingual may feel that he is not employed to the full extent of his qualifications if he is filling a position where bilingualism is not a requirement of the position. Such situations do arise, but they are not confined to the element of bilingualism. There exists a real distinction between the qualifications of a person and those required to adequately fill a position. That was the distinction I was trying to draw, and I think that is the true position.

Mr. Langlois: I am sorry if I did not hear correctly, but—

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, are we not getting a little technical in this discussion, and are we not performing precisely the type of function which can be performed more efficiently by the committees which are presently being set up—

Mr. McIlraith: They are set up.

Mr. Favreau: —by the committees which have been set up? I suggest that in view of the somewhat technical type of discussion which is emerging we get back to the very nature of the supplementary estimates which are before the committee, and that the discussion be limited to those estimates.

It is true that as far as the civil service commission is concerned it so happens that the four items, the supplementary estimates which are being discussed in this committee, are listed under vote 1e, but that is just a coincidence. When we discuss supplementary estimates I submit that even if vote 1e is called for a department, it does not enable the discussion to be extended to all its branches.

Take, for instance, the Department of Fisheries. The first vote we have in these estimates is vote 30e. Then surely the committee could not have the pretext it has now —and I say it is only a pretext which is being used because, as I am pointing out, it so happens that under vote 1e the four supplementary items are presently listed. I suggest that no further discussion should take place which does not specifically concern the four items listed.

Mr. Langlois: On a point of order, there is a subsection here under item 1e which I think has something to do with recruiting. If the minister is afraid of going into too many technicalities, why did he talk about this subject during the last election campaign? He talked about it then and now he does not want to face it. He says he does not want to talk about it.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: He did not say that he would not do it.

Mr. Langlois: If he does not want to talk about it now, he should not have mentioned it one or two years ago. This is not a technical matter but rather one of principle.

Mr. Prud'homme: That is not what he said.

[Text]

Mr. Langlois: I do not know whether I heard correctly what was said a while ago, but it appeared to me the minister said there were two men in a given locality who needed only one language; if one had two languages and the other had one they would both get the same recognition—

The Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. member still speaking on the point of order?

Mr. Langlois: Yes, because I think the point of order was brought up by the Minister of Justice after a statement had been made by his colleague. I should like the Minister of Justice to explain that statement. It was said these two men were both in the same locality. One was bilingual and one was not. How does the minister consider that one has a superior qualification to the other when in point of fact they both receive the same recognition as far as salary is concerned? Bonuses were mentioned a while ago. I do not know how the minister got all these words jumbled up. The bonus which members opposite were talking about during the last election campaign referred to language qualifications. In consideration of his additional language qualification a man would get a bonus or receive a higher salary. Is the minister willing to stick to that proposition which was put forward by members on his side of the house during the election campaign, on election platforms, or was it just another promise intended to get people to vote Liberal?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think that the hon. member for Megantic is in order. It is his responsibility and his duty to raise the matter of a bonus for bilingual persons.

We are celebrating this year the centenary of responsible government—

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Pigeon: It is our duty to protect—

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, regardless of the present historical situation in Canada, however close or remote this centenary might be, it does in no way affect the point of procedure involved, which is whether the present discussion is in order.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, on the same point of order. I am quite prepared to respect the opinion of the Minister of Justice, but that does not mean that he is infallible. As we have seen the beginning of this session, he made many mistakes—

We are celebrating this year the centennial of responsible government, and it is the responsibility of hon. members to get information and answers to their questions.

Mr. Deschatelets: Not on a matter of government policy.

Mr. Pigeon: We simply wish to know this from the President of the Privy Council. Is he in favour, as it was advocated by the Secretary of State and his party in the province of Quebec during the last election campaign, of giving a bonus to bilingual employees, yes or no?

If he answers this, the debate will end.

Our forefathers fought for a responsible government, and we are entitled to obtain definite answers from the minister. Otherwise, he should not be surprised if we do not co-operate. We are celebrating the centenary of responsible government—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: That is what Lafontaine and Baldwin fought for and it is our responsibility to protect our rights.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member for Megantic want to add something to the comments on the point of order?

Mr. Langlois: Yes. If you want to take it that way, it could be related to that. Mr. Chairman, let us take vote 1e, under publicity for recruiting purposes. Why call the argument out of order, when an amount of $65,000 is to be voted for that purpose? Was it not publicity for recruiting purposes when it was said during the last election that bilingual civil servants would get a bonus? That is what we were told during the last election, Mr. Chairman. Therefore, I ask the minister this question: Why was the matter mentioned if it was not publicity for recruiting purposes?

Today, we are told that the point is out of order. It is certainly in order, as you did write it into the estimates yourselves. That is just the point on which we speak. Has a bonus been awarded or mentioned?

[Text]

The Chairman: Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

Mr. McIlraith: The committee is clearly interested in the subject, and I am wondering whether you might be disposed not to see the clock.

Mr. Howard: I can see it quite clearly, Mr. Chairman.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House in committee of supply, civil service commission, vote No. 1e.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, before item 1e is carried, I would have a brief comment to make.

I refer to a fact concerning the civil service commission to which I drew the attention of the responsible minister twice during the last session.

The civil service commission has advertised job opportunities in a town located in my constituency, the town of Chibougamau. On the posters the citizens of Chibougamau as well as those in the Lake St. John area are asked to submit application forms. I would point out here that Chibougamau is in the constituency of Chapleau and not in that of Lake St. John.

I would, therefore, ask that in future when the civil service holds competitions the citizens of the constituency of Chapleau be invited to apply.

Last year the responsible minister told me that he would deal with the matter. Other notices of competitions have appeared since, and there has been no change. Consequently, I would ask that in future, the citizens of Chapleau as well as those of the town of Chibougamau be asked to apply when there are civil service jobs available, especially in the Department of National Defence and the Post Office Department.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Pigeon: On division.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

25e. To sustain technological capability in Canadian industry by supporting selected defence development programs, on terms and conditions approved by treasury board, $5,500,000.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps the minister could give us an explanation of this item. I think I know what the explanation may be. I take it these are moneys which we are advancing from time to time to certain companies producing for national defence in order to assist in industrial development in this field. I wonder whether the minister would confirm the explanation of this item and also perhaps for a minute—

Mr. Churchill: Thirty seconds.

Mr. Nowlan: Someone says 30 seconds but we will say a minute—give us the results that are accruing from these expenditures.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I take it the hon. member has reference to vote 25e. The main estimates contained an appropriation of $10 million to sustain technological capability in Canadian industry by supporting selected defence development programs. Under this item a forecast is made of development programs which have a likelihood of success and a forecast is made of the amount of success which might be achieved during the year. From time to time Canada is fortunate in having success achieved more rapidly than we had hoped, in which case a higher expenditure than originally forecast is needed.

This supplementary estimate of $5 million does represent a measure of the successful acceleration of our development programs. If it would help the hon. member and the committee I might mention some of these by way of example. One of the larger ones has been the Caribou II aircraft, a project undertaken for the development of a short range take-off and landing aircraft with a military application, in which a great deal of interest has already been shown by the United States army. Hon. members will recollect that for a while it looked as if the United States would not continue its interest in this aircraft, but I am glad to say that the interest has been resumed.

Another one is the development, in conjunction with some of our NATO partners in Europe, notably the United Kingdom, of a drone known as the CL-89 being developed at Canadair for battlefield surveillance. This is coming ahead very satisfactorily indeed. Another example would be the integrated guidance system being developed in Ottawa by Computing Devices Limited.

I could go on and cite other examples which I would suggest are testimony to the ingenuity, perseverance and technological capability of Canadian industry in developing these new devices for the armed forces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, there is only one matter I want to deal with particularly. In his concluding words the minister paid a compliment to the technological development of Canada after having referred to the interest of the United States in the Caribou II. I am wondering why it was that the Royal Canadian Air Force decided to buy Hercules transport aircraft in the United States to the number of 16, as I recall, rather than doing something to make this $55 million order available to Canadian industry. Is there not an aircraft industry in the city of Montreal that could have provided transports sufficient for Canada's purposes? Certainly a boost of $55 million in orders would have given a tremendous impetus to the aircraft industry of this country.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, there is no question but that the aircraft industry in Montreal is fully capable of producing 16 aircraft of the kind required by the Royal Canadian Air Force for transport purposes. However, the cost of the taxpayers of Canada would have been very substantial indeed in comparison with the cost of buying them from an existing operating assembly line in Georgia. Consequently the decision was taken to purchase them at a substantially lower cost in the United States.

While on the face of it this may seem to represent a lot of job opportunities in the aircraft plant in Montreal, I recall to the house that the defence production sharing program is designed to take care of situations precisely such as this whereby, as a counterpart to Canada being free to purchase its limited requirements of any given item of equipment in the United States, the United States for its part will make purchases from Canada of a corresponding value of military equipment from Canadian manufacturing plants. Canadair in Montreal, to which reference has been made, has been favoured in this production sharing program to a very large degree, particularly in respect of the CF-104 interceptor aircraft, amongst other things.

It may interest the right hon. gentleman to know that at the moment, with this production sharing arrangement of a two way flow of the procurement of military equipment, the balance in favour of Canada is something of the order of $70 million. While it is true that the recent order for Hercules aircraft does represent a substantial purchase in the United States, we will see that this is adequately compensated for by purchases by the United States or on behalf of the United States armed forces from Canadian manufacturers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I realize, as the minister has said, that defence production sharing is a two way street, but when we were in office we greatly increased the favourable amount of expenditure for Canada. However, I would have thought that on a matter such as this Canada could very well have filled this order and that the fullest consideration should have been given to the merits of the matter.

The minister says that the cost of these aircraft was much lower than would have been the case if similar transport aircraft had been purchased from Canadair. Having said that, I suggest he allow the house and the country to know what was the amount per unit which was asked for a Canadian transport aircraft by Canadian industry. We found ourselves in that position on occasion when military requirements produced in Canada would have cost so much more than almost equally good equipment which could be purchased elsewhere that, in the general picture of defence sharing, orders were given abroad.

However, I should like to hear the actual story from the minister, who is fully conversant with this matter. It is only in the last few days that I have received the strongest protests from Montreal in this regard. Indeed these protests have come from persons who are quite close to the minister and who found it difficult to understand why an order such as this went elsewhere, when transports could have been provided in Montreal that would have assured the preservation and expansion of the aircraft industry. There is nothing more difficult today than the maintenance of the aircraft industry, as the minister knows. In the United States, I speak from recollection only, I believe there are only three major aircraft concerns left today. The others have had to close down or join the existing ones. Canadian aircraft produced by this country have had a superb performance record and represented the highest of our Canadian technology. I should like the minister to give us the facts rather than the general conclusions that he has given us.

Mr. Drury: In respect of the particular aircraft in question, the Hercules aircraft, the difference in cost between having the 16 purchased in Montreal rather than purchased at the Lockheed Corporation in the United States, would have been about $2 million per aircraft or a total of $32 million extra. To pursue this particular line of endeavour at exorbitant cost, to engage in uneconomic operations, to fly in the face of our argument in favour of the rationalization of defence industry with the United States, would possibly have led to a serious breach in the understanding we hope will be reached whereby Canadair will be producing, as part of the production sharing arrangements, components and substantial parts of the TFX aircraft which, as the hon. gentleman knows, is going to be ordered in substantial numbers by the United States air force.

If the position of the Canadian government should be that we are going to produce all our own military equipment, even on an uneconomic basis, then the willingness of the United States to have us share in the production of their military equipment, notably the TFX, I think would be seriously prejudiced. I am quite sure the right hon. gentleman would not wish this to happen. I have given an indication of the magnitude of the uneconomic nature of this operation. In my opinion it would not make sense for us to engage in an uneconomic operation when we can secure the aircraft at a lower cost and at the same time have the equivalent U.S. expenditures made in Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is just one more question in connection with the figure given by the minister, the $2 million more per unit. Was the minister referring to Caribou II aircraft in that price, or was he referring to the Hercules?

Mr. Drury: The Hercules.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would not the Caribou II have been sufficient for the Canadian air force, and what would have been the cost of them?

Mr. Drury: No; the Caribou aircraft is completely different and designed for a completely different purpose. What the Royal Canadian Air Force is seeking and needs is a long range, high speed, large capacity transport aircraft. These are not the characteristics of the Caribou II. The outstanding feature of it is the short take-off and landing, but a limited range and, by comparison with the Hercules, a very limited capacity.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I only have one question to ask the Minister of Industry and Defence Production. Following the decision taken by Trans-Canada Air Lines to buy American aircraft, can the minister tell the house what will be the value in dollars and cents of the parts which will be manufactured in Canadian aircraft factories, such as Canadair, for instance?

[Text]

Mr. Drury: If the hon. member does not mind, I shall reply in English. The arrangements between Douglas Aircraft in the United States and de Havilland in Toronto with respect to the DC-9 aircraft, which is the one under discussion, provide that total purchases from de Havilland Aircraft in Canada may well exceed the total cost of the aircraft being bought by Air Canada for its purposes. If the DC-9 goes as well as it is hoped, it is likely the total expenditures by Douglas at de Havilland will be greater than the total purchase price paid by Air Canada for the aircraft required.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Chairman. Can the minister tell the house what amount of money will be spent at Canadair, should certain parts be made there?

[Text]

Mr. Drury: Well, Mr. Chairman, there are some subcontracts from de Havilland to Canadair with respect to the DC-9, but I am sorry I do not know precisely what they are.

Mr. Ricard: Could the minister give us any definite estimate as to what amount of money we can expect from the United States? It is all very well for him to say it may exceed the purchase amount involved, but this will not satisfy the people in Montreal working for Canadair or for the other aircraft companies. We want something definite. I think it would not be too much trouble for him to give these figures, and we shall be lenient with respect to a differential of 5 or 10 per cent.

Mr. Drury: Unfortunately the hon. gentleman is asking me to forecast the future sales throughout the world of the DC-9. I think he will recognize it would be imprudent for me to engage in that kind of crystal ball gazing.

Item agreed to.

35e. Canadian Arsenals Limited—administration and operation, $501,100.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the people of St. Paul l'Ermite are now very worried about the fate of the Canadian Arsenals plant, where a number of employees have been laid off.

Can the minister tell the house whether he anticipates an increase in the work force in that plant at a future date, following possible contracts obtained in the United States or in Canada?

I also want to ask the minister whether there is a possibility of reviewing the agreements between the municipality of St. Paul l'Ermite and the federal government in respect of the grants the latter is paying the municipality in lieu of school and municipal taxes. The responsibilities of the municipality of St. Paul l'Ermite have been increasing constantly, and it would be important to review the arrangement and raise the federal grants in lieu of school and municipal taxes.

I would be grateful to the minister if he would answer the first part of my question and tell me whether he intends trying to obtain rather big contracts large enough so that the work force would be increased, instead of being reduced as it is now the case.

[Text]

Mr. Drury: In response to the first part of the question, the only possible client of Canadian Arsenals is the Department of National Defence. The United States is quite firm that it will not contemplate placing orders with Canadian Arsenals when its own arsenals, like ours, are being under used and under employed.

I would be misleading the hon. member if I were to suggest that it appears from the white paper that the position of Canadian Arsenals in the near future will substantially increase its work, particularly the kind carried out at St. Paul l'Ermite, which has reference to filling of fixed round ammunition. It is unlikely this is going to increase substantially in the future. In response to the second part of the question I shall be glad to look into the matter of the grant in lieu of taxes paid by Canadian Arsenals to the municipality.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, just like in Quebec city, there is in my riding a plant of the Canadian Arsenals Company Limited, and I think that the same problems arise there as throughout the province, if not throughout the country.

Could the minister inform the house whether the supplementary estimates of the Canadian Arsenals, and more especially their administrative and operational costs, include the tenders called for the sale of those plants, since it is widely rumoured that the plants in Quebec city and Valcartier will be put up for sale, to be operated by private enterprise as manufacturers of ammunition and other commodities?

Would the minister tell us therefore whether the amount of $501,100 includes the disposal costs of the Quebec city and Valcartier plants?

[Text]

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, there is a proposal to dispose of the plant at Valcartier but there is not at the moment a proposal to dispose of the plant at Louise basin in Quebec. As the hon. gentleman knows, the so-called citadel plant on Palace hill has now been closed down and in the not too distant future will be disposed of, but in so far as the hon. member has referred to the plant in Louise basin, this will be retained by Canadian Arsenals. Included in the supplementary estimates, vote 35e, are funds required for the administration of Canadian Arsenals, which include the operations to which I have made reference.

Mr. Peters: Is there anything under this item for the storage and maintenance by Canadian Arsenals of the Bomarc missiles?

Mr. Drury: The upkeep of the Bomarc missiles is the responsibility in situ of the R.C.A.F. and not of Canadian Arsenals.

Mr. Peters: Do we keep a storage of spares in the Canadian Arsenals set up?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

1e. Departmental administration, $61,900.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, there are many things one can say about finance but I am not so sure this is the time to say them. Most of them have been said during the past week, and the minister is not here at the moment. We understand why he is not here because of the load he has been carrying, and it is perhaps just as well he was not in the house to hear some of the kindly comments made about the way the affairs of the department were administered, which resulted in the situation we found ourselves in yesterday, and which I understand is not yet solved.

I am not sure whether there is an appropriations bill coming up this afternoon or not, but we were told yesterday one was imminent, or coming over the horizon, with respect to the unemployment insurance fund.

Under this vote we have professional and special services, and I would ask the parliamentary secretary what were the professional and special services amounting to $29,500 as outlined in this item?

Mr. Benson: Professional services consisted of several items. The largest one of them was the firm of James R. Carmichael and Company, engaged to provide a technical review of the existing government workshops and other government services, and this cost $18,000. There was another item for P. Maury Mitchell, $2,500, and Professor Hood was engaged as a special consultant for $2,900, and so on.

Mr. Mather: As we come to the end of our happy Easter holiday period, I have three good will suggestions to make to the Department of Finance, and if any one of them were adopted it would be in the interest and the welfare of the people of Canada. If I have one minute for each proposition, Mr. Chairman, I think I can confine myself to that time. In the first place I would urge the Department of Finance to take an early look at adopting the well established practice of the United States finance department in exempting from personal income tax the interest portion of mortgage payments on homes. Anybody who has bought or sold a house in Canada must be well acquainted with the fact that the interest portion of the payments for these homes—and most of them are bought on credit—are very heavy and continue for a very long time. The Americans stimulate the home building industry and encourage home building and the establishment of homesteads by this practice of exempting from income tax the interest portion of the mortgage payments. I urge that we consider this.

My second proposition is that Canada should cease to be one of the few remaining countries in the world which has no capital gains tax on stock market speculation profits. The point was urged a week or two ago by my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, and I reiterate it, that we are losing many millions of dollars of revenue which could come to us legitimately. This revenue could be obtained were we to impose a capital gains tax on stock market speculation profits.

My third and final proposition is this. I think when we consider the fact that something like 40 cents out of every federal dollar goes to pay either the interest on our federal debt or goes to the amounts that we spend on defence, this is a situation which requires very serious study in depth by us all. We have only to consider the vast amounts of money involved in these two channels of expenditures, and I think if we put our heads together, perhaps in a special committee or in a special review, this would be well worth while; it would perhaps result in substantial savings to the taxpayers. It is a fact that we now spend, just to pay for our federal borrowings, $2 million every day. It is another fact that we spend on defence purposes, when the value of some of these defence purposes is very dubious, $2 million every 12 hours. These are immense expenditures, and if we do not come to grips with this problem and reduce these expenditures I fail to see how we can ever hope to make substantial progress in easing the burden on our taxpayers. These are my three propositions, Mr. Chairman, and I hope the Department of Finance will be good enough to take them into consideration.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I will be pleased to bring these matters to the attention of the Minister of Finance.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) if all the provinces signed with the federal government an agreement to benefit from the municipal loans program. The minister must have received protests from some organizations about those loans about which some provinces are not too happy because they represent interference by the federal government in a provincial field of jurisdiction.

Would the minister tell us if it is true that the auditors of the Department of Finance in Ottawa go through the provinces' books and if he feels that this is interfering in a field which, normally, should come under provincial and not federal jurisdiction?

[Text]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member is speaking to vote 38e, which we have not yet come to. I will attempt to get the information he has asked for and give it to him at that time. If it is not readily available, I will get it after the estimates are concluded and pass it on to him.

Item agreed to.

30e. Royal Canadian Mint—Administration, operation and maintenance, $128,600.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question on this item. With regard to the Royal Canadian Mint I have found there has been a fairly stabilized vote in the estimates in the years I have been in this house. May I ask just what is meant by this additional vote when it includes an item for "Professional and special services" and an amount of $65,000 for "Express on coin shipments", in view of the fact that in past years this has always been a regularized vote, very rarely requiring a supplementary vote? What is the reason for asking for this amount now?

Mr. Benson: I am very pleased to answer this question, Mr. Chairman. With regard to the item for professional and special services, a survey of the mint facilities was carried out by a firm of management consultants, Stevenson and Kellogg Ltd. This is the reason for the additional vote.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, may I ask if the report of Stevenson and Kellogg will be filed in this house? This is an administration item, is it?

Mr. Benson: It is administration.

Mr. Winch: Will the report on this survey be filed in the house?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Chairman. The second question raised by the hon. member concerns the additional cost involved in express on coin shipments. It happened that the mint worked at almost full capacity this year, operating 21 hours a day, and an additional 75 million coins were turned out. The original estimate was based on 325 million coins and actually 400 million coins were turned out during the year. The additional express shipment costs arise from this, as do the additional costs for suppliers for coining and medal work. The extra repairs and upkeep of equipment costs arose because the mint was operating to such a high percentage of capacity.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, may I ask whether by any chance the item for supplies for coining and medal work has anything to do with any work for special medallions or coins for the Quebec centennial or the centennial of Canada? Is this included here at all?

Mr. Benson: I understand it is not, Mr. Chairman. It is simply that there were many more coins turned out during the particular year than had been originally estimated. The original estimate of the number of coins was 325 million; the actual number turned out was 400 million. This is just the additional cost involved.

[Mr. Benson.]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I think the parliamentary secretary might express to the governor of the mint, Mr. Parker, and his staff our appreciation for the tremendous load they have carried. This astronomical increase in the production of coins is shown here in the additional express costs, and this additional production was carried out by a mint which was built many, many years ago, is not streamlined and does not have the accommodation for this large production. I think we have in the mint a group of officers and men who deserve the commendation of this house.

Mr. Benson: I will be pleased to pass that commendation on, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the mint is completely swamped at the present time, particularly in the production of silver dollars which are a commemorative item this year—it is said that the orders will be delayed by at least six months—can the parliamentary secretary indicate whether the Stevenson and Kellogg report into the administration of the mint made a recommendation for new accommodation, and how long is anticipated before this can be completed? Coming from a silver industry community, I would be very happy to see this type of increase continue for many years. The amount of silver being used has warranted an increase in the price of silver, and therefore we are very happy about the situation. But I believe the people in the mint are working under conditions which present an almost impossible task, and it looks as though this is not an extra load but is the normal increase that is taking place across the world in the production of coins. The government should have some plan in this regard and should be prepared to give us some outline of that plan for improving this situation, because it does not amount to an emergency but is a continuing and growing problem that will be with us for some time.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, the survey carried out this year was in connection with plant and lay-out, for which this additional estimate is being put forward. Many of the recommendations of Stevenson and Kellogg are being carried out in the mint now with regard to the matter of plant and lay-out. The second stage, which is the designing of a new mint, a new operational unit which will have a much higher capacity than the existing mint, is under study at the present time.

Mr. Peters: I realize the parliamentary secretary may not be able to tell us when, but it seems that no matter what they do with the present facility they will not be able to meet the demand or to keep up with it.

Mr. Benson: I understand that we will have the report in about six months and that it will take from two to two and a half years to complete the new mint.

Item agreed to.

38e. Administration, $68,000.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, this is the first time that the word "salaries" is used in this department. I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary can tell us whether any salaries are outstanding as at the end of the month. I know there is another item of some $11 million which I think is of special significance, but there was a report current in the building today that some employees who were casual, rather than on salary, could not get paid because the money was not available. I wonder whether there is any substance to this report and whether the parliamentary secretary can deal with the matter now.

Mr. Benson: Although this does not necessarily apply to this department—

Mr. Nowlan: No, I realize that.

Mr. Benson: —as I understand it all current salaries have been paid. However, the retroactive increases are being held up until the estimates are through the house. These are the retroactive increases only, not the regular salaries.

Mr. Nowlan: Then all salaries due and current at the moment have been paid, and all wages as at this week end have also been paid?

Mr. Benson: Yes, except for the retroactive portion of them.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, there is one matter which I have wanted to raise all week and I think this is the best item under which to raise it. I think all Canadians were pleased when the Prime Minister indicated to President Johnson that Canada would be quite willing to help in any way we could in providing assistance to the victims of the earthquake in Alaska. This points up the fact that in Canada we really have no machinery for dealing with civil disasters in our country. In the United States there is established machinery whereby at the request of the governor of a state an area is declared a disaster area, and legislative machinery immediately moves into operation to deal with the emergency situation and to help the victims of the particular disaster. I have long thought that we in Canada ought to have some type of machinery established to deal with civil disasters. I recall the Rimouski fire in Quebec, the Humber flood which affected a large number of people in the suburban areas of metropolitan Toronto, the Red river flood which inundated a good part of the city of Winnipeg and the city of St. Boniface, and other disasters of that type which we had to meet on an ad hoc basis.

It takes a certain amount of time to work out a plan of operation between federal, provincial and municipal authorities, as well as charitable organizations who are willing to help. The Canadian people in all these disasters have been most generous, and the delay has not been anyone's fault. The delay has been occasioned by the fact that we have no legal machinery which automatically moves into operation.

I want to use this item to suggest that the government give consideration to consulting with the provinces with a view to preparing civil disaster legislation, so that when any natural disaster takes place there will be an agreed division and apportionment of the costs between federal, provincial and municipal authorities, making use of the emergency measures organization, the army, the Red Cross, the health organizations, all of whom can move into a disaster area immediately, take up their posts, know what are their responsibilities, know what authority they have, and be able to co-ordinate the efforts of private organizations to deal with the situation.

I am not saying this in any spirit of criticism; we have just never faced up to the problem in this country. I think the government could make a good name for itself as well as serve a very useful function by giving consideration to legislation of this type, and I think the provinces would be very glad to co-operate.

The emergency measures organization, which I personally always thought had some value mainly in the field of civil disaster, has operated very well wherever there has been a situation which required their services. But, of course, they have no authority and can only assist the municipal and provincial authorities. They have no funds at their disposal; they have no legislative authority; and they are greatly hampered in doing the job which I think they could do. I think that what happened in the Alberni valley last week is a very good example of this. The minister of northern affairs, who was given responsibility by the federal government to attend to this matter, has in my opinion, been most assiduous in trying to help, and I think the government has responded so far as it has been able to do so.

Last Sunday I spent the entire day in the Alberni valley visiting Alberni and Port Alberni, and when I returned to the mainland I sent a telegram to the Prime Minister. I am very glad that the troops were moved in and I know that any further assistance, so far as permanent rehabilitation is concerned, depends on an appeal being received from the provincial government. I feel certain that if and when the provincial government makes such an appeal the government of Canada will respond, and I hope they will respond generously.

I want to remind the government that in the Rimouski fire and the Red river flood—I think also in the Humber flood but I am not quite sure about that—persons whose homes were damaged or destroyed were enabled to replace them completely. Even small businessmen were assisted in the restoration of their places of business. But in the Alberni valley the damage will be worse. In the other instances people could claim flood damage, but I am told by some of the insurance adjusters that in the case of the Alberni valley this damage is considered to be caused by a tidal wave and is not covered by the ordinary flood insurance provisions. I do not know whether or not that is correct, but if it is correct it means that these unfortunate people will not even get flood insurance. I think roughly 50 homes were completely demolished, and the estimate I received was that 300 homes were badly damaged. And when these people say "badly" they mean that homes have been moved off their foundations, sometimes toppled over on their ends, all furniture smashed, all bedding, clothing, dishes and utensils rendered useless; so these people are in very difficult circumstances.

It is true that in terms of degree it does not amount to anything like the disaster which has been experienced in Alaska; but for the several hundred families which are directly affected it is a disaster. I have been urging all week that in addition to what the federal government is prepared to do to rehabilitate these people at the request of the government of British Columbia, the government should in the meantime give some serious thought to making a substantial financial contribution to the Alberni valley disaster fund. I think this would do two things. First, it would enable the excellent committee which has been set up to know they have some money behind them, and would enable them to take care of the people who are homeless. The committee has as its honorary chairman the lieutenant governor of the province, and I believe wires have also been sent to the premier of the province and the leader of the opposition to act as honorary vice chairman. The mayors of two cities, Mayor Hammer of Port Alberni and Mayor Bishop of Alberni, have set up an excellent committee; they are getting good co-operation from the emergency measures organization and private organizations like the Salvation Army. They have a very good welfare officer there from Vancouver and I think they have the machinery to do a very adequate job of looking after those who are homeless. When I left there on Sunday evening there were still 77 families without a roof over their heads. I think some 233 families had been placed with their neighbours and they had some temporary accommodation. But all these families will, when they get back into their homes, require not only the money needed for the rebuilding of those homes but, in addition, all the furniture, bedding and other things which are necessary to set up housekeeping.

I think it would be a tremendous boost to the morale of these people if the government were to announce it would put a very substantial sum into this disaster fund. This would not preclude the government from sitting down later with the government of British Columbia and working out some shared program for the cost of the replacement of these homes and places of business. However, in the meantime, while the British Columbia government is making its survey and getting ready to make its representation to Ottawa, I feel something should be done immediately.

I recognize the minister's difficulty. He cannot intervene in a provincial situation without the consent of the provincial government concerned. But I do not think it requires consent from anyone to make a contribution to a disaster fund. I believe in the old idea that help delayed is virtually help denied and that the sooner we do something, the better.

I would therefore make these two requests to the government: First, that thought be given to enacting some type of civil disaster legislation so that when we face situations of this kind in the future legal machinery will be available whereby the people affected can be cared for expeditiously and effectively. Second, I ask that in this particular instance the government give some thought to making a contribution to the Alberni valley disaster fund, so that these people on the committee may have some money to take care of the immediate situation, pending a report on what must be done to rehabilitate these communities.

Mr. Winch: May I add a few words to what has been said by my hon. friend from Burnaby-Coquitlam? I was a member of the British Columbia legislature at the time of the major flooding of the Fraser river—the most serious floods we have experienced in British Columbia and one of the greatest disasters ever to hit our province. The army and the militia responded to the emergency but the arrangements for taking care of those directly affected were such that, to the best of my knowledge, it was 18 months or two years before responsibility was accepted and settlements were made.

Once again we have been faced by a major disaster. My reason for wishing to add a few words to what has been said by my hon. friend from Burnaby-Coquitlam is that at the time of the flood disaster I was not only a member of the British Columbia house but leader of the opposition, and at that time I made an appeal in the legislature for legislation of exactly the kind my hon. friend is asking for now, that is, the establishment by law of a disaster fund applicable anywhere where the need arises. Why is it that we have to wait year after year, almost decade after decade, before consideration is given to a recommendation of this kind?

I have an additional reason for speaking in support of the appeal which has just been made to the government, and that is the present reported state of the emergency fund. May I direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who is in his place and who has been given authority in this situation, and ask him to tell us the extent of the emergency disaster fund at the present moment? I have recently left our reading room and according to what the Vancouver papers say it consists of $50,000 guaranteed by the premier of British Columbia, $50,000 from a power company and $12,000 from anonymous donations. Thus, according to these newspaper reports, $112,000 is the extent of the disaster fund. Again, if the papers are correct, the damage amounts to an estimated $5 million not including the damage done to industry itself. This situation is pretty darned rotten, when a disaster fund produced by anonymous contributions and two guarantees amounts to $100,000 in the face of a need of that magnitude. No fund, nothing, no direct contribution from the federal government.

I certainly hope the observations of my hon. friend will be heeded. First, a disaster fund should be created, available on call whenever it might be needed and, second, consideration should be given, now, to the immediate provision of necessities by the federal government to those who are in need.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to review what has already been said. I believe the emergency measures organization is fully effective in carrying out the ordinary duties which follow disasters whenever they may take place. Indeed I recall one or two occasions when the services of that organization were made available and it carried out its responsibilities in a manner which brought honour to all who were engaged. However that is not why I wish to speak.

My observations have to do with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, that the government of Canada might well consider making a contribution to the disaster fund. I feel that action along this line would receive general support in the house and I rise merely to repeat what I have said on earlier occasions in the questions I have asked, namely that anything done by the government in this connection would receive the support of the opposition.

Certainly, the constitutional division of responsibility denies the making of any direct contribution to the areas which have been subject to disaster but I can see no difficulty about a contribution being made to alleviate the conditions under which many families find themselves in the Alberni area. The other day I stated the information I had was that the loss ran into tens of millions of dollars. The minister said the estimate of total damage he had was $5 million. I brought his estimate to the attention of the people who had communicated with me and they told me they thought it was far too low. I recognize, of course, that immediately after a catastrophe strikes the estimates sometimes far exceed what subsequent investigation actually determines the losses to be. Suffice it to say that I wanted to make clear that any assistance given to that fund will receive our unqualified support.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, the first two hon. members who spoke decided to use this item to impress upon the government the advisability of setting up some organization of a permanent nature which would take over automatically in the case of disasters in the country. I think the idea has much to commend it, but I do want to say that in respect of the difficulty in the Alberni valley there has been the closest co-operation and instantaneous action on the part of E.M.O., the Canadian Red Cross, the civil defence organization and various other agencies.

I have attempted to keep in touch as closely as I could with Mayor Hammer and Mayor Bishop of the two cities. After my wire to Hon. W. D. Black on Monday, in which I asked him to furnish us with a copy of the assessment of loss, he advised me that they were holding a cabinet meeting on Thursday and he would get in touch with me immediately thereafter. Yesterday I talked to the two mayors again and asked if in their view it would seem reasonable for us to withhold any decision as to the making of a contribution to the fund until after this meeting of the British Columbia cabinet on Thursday. I pointed out that if we were making a contribution to the repairing of the damage it would be several times the $50,000 that the province of British Columbia has contributed.

I believe that yesterday the provincial cabinet appointed a firm of insurance adjusters, E. A. Earl and Associates of Vancouver, who have been asked to make an assessment of the damage and to report to the government in one week, so that from the viewpoint of our participation the matter apparently has been delayed a week. I want to tell hon. members that if we are not called upon to participate in the ordinary course of events, with the province in the rehabilitation, I will have no hesitation in recommending to my colleagues that a very substantial contribution be made to the disaster fund, but I rather expect that we may be asked to participate in the rehabilitation of the community as a whole.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to belabour this point or delay the committee, except to make one observation about the minister's remarks. I quite agree with what both he and the Leader of the Opposition have said about the emergency measures organization being most effective and most helpful. I had the privilege on Sunday afternoon of sitting in on a meeting chaired by the two mayors, which was attended by representatives of all organizations, including a representative from the emergency measures organization, and I quite agree that E.M.O. can serve a useful purpose in co-ordinating the efforts of the different groups.

This does not alter the fact that neither E.M.O. nor anyone else there had the authority to spend one red cent. A representative was there from the department of social welfare and he said, "I have no authority". The two mayors said, "We have no money". The Red Cross and the Salvation Army were the only two groups which said that they had received some authority from their national organizations and could spend up to X thousand dollars, neither of which amounts, or both together, would be enough to make a reasonable approach to the problem, let alone solve it.

I am not suggesting that legislation be brought down to set up a permanent organization. What I am suggesting is that we set up legislative authority so that when, on the request of a provincial premier, an area is declared a disaster area the federal government will be authorized to move in troops or engineers where necessary, and so that funds will automatically be available on some prearranged percentage basis. In this way the committee which is established including a federal representative, a provincial representative and a municipal representative will know that they can proceed immediately to buy clothing, bedding, and whatever equipment they need to take care of destitute people.

That is my real concern, and I point out that there is still nothing being done about it. When you go to visit a home, as I did, and see six or eight inches of mud on the floor, all the furniture overturned, the house sitting at an angle of 45 degrees and the man and woman who have been up all night trying to bail out the water and shovel out the mud while having no place to sleep, and not even being able to prepare a meal for themselves, then it is not enough to say that in a week or two the governments will get together and do something about it. What I am pleading for is the kind of machinery under which organizations can move into an area knowing that they can draw on the federal and provincial treasuries for some stipulated amount of money which would have to be accounted for, but which could be used immediately to set up outdoor kitchens and emergency shelter, so that people who are in dire circumstances will not be allowed to go in want.

We have had a number of disasters in Canada and it would be very interesting to trace how many funds were set up and where those funds are today. In the case of many of these funds there was a residue, after everything had been taken care of, and the money is lying somewhere; but before you can spend that money you have to find the trustees of the fund, which is not easy. If we had some sort of national organization set up and funds were raised, then anything that was left over after a particular disaster had been taken care of would revert to the fund and would be available for use in the next disaster. We would always have some money on hand and those charged with the responsibility of trying to render help in an emergency would know that those funds were available. This is what I am pleading for and I hope the government will give some thought to it.

Item agreed to.

45e. Grants to municipalities in accordance with the Municipal Grants Act and regulations made thereunder, $2,800,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, would the parliamentary secretary give a statement setting out the number of loans that have been made under the Municipal Grants Act since the act came into effect?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I think the Leader of the Opposition is on a different item. Item 45e is the one now before the committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, perhaps the parliamentary secretary would answer that even at this stage. He has that information.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I will get that information and pass it on to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, if the committee will allow me I should like to refer generally to the estimates before the committee. I understand that the other place has adjourned until this afternoon. They have been waiting in expectation for several days for the appropriation bill. There are certain items in connection with the estimates that I believe deserve immediate attention. There is, of course, the replenishment of the unemployment insurance fund. That has received the consideration of the committee. Then there are certain items dealing with salaries, and also an item dealing with veterans. All of these items are of an emergent nature if the information that has been given to the committee is to be regarded as entirely in keeping with the facts. That is particularly so with regard to the deficiency in the unemployment insurance fund. We want to co-operate in every way. There is obviously no possibility of the many more items that still remain being passed. I make the suggestion that if there is any emergency, an appropriation bill be brought in now covering the items I have mentioned that are of immediate necessity, and in so far as the official opposition is concerned we will forthwith pass the resolution and the three readings. Then, these particular items could receive the attention of the other place this afternoon and also receive royal assent.

If, however, there is no emergency and there is no need for those items being passed this week, then I am not pressing the government for action. Either there is an emergency in the fund which was not brought to our attention except by the indirectest of indirection, until Wednesday, or there is no emergency. I am not going into that now. The Minister of Labour is in more than affable good humour at the moment as compared with the last couple of days. Since he is in that happy mood, perhaps this indicates there is no emergency such as that which existed two or three days ago. If an emergency still exists I suggest that the committee, in a desire to co-operate, may rise, report progress and then the appropriate resolution could be introduced covering those three items. The bill could be passed because we have discussed these matters fully. In that way, everyone would be satisfied that a good week's work had been completed.

My colleague suggests that perhaps all the items that have been passed so far could be included in this bill. Then, perhaps the Minister of Labour would continue to be as congenial as he is at the moment. I make that suggestion in a desire to co-operate to the fullest degree.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if I may say a word about the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition. As the committee will recall, last Wednesday evening when we were discussing the item relating to the unemployment insurance fund, a discussion which we had as a result of our proposal, the hon. member for Skeena made a particular request that whatever else happened that item might be put into final legislative form this week. I believe the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Labour gave an assurance that this would be done. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the suggestion that is now being made by the Leader of the Opposition is in line with the suggestion made by us in this party two or three days ago. We would support the proposition that a bill be brought in incorporating the items that have thus far been passed in committee of supply, or as far as the government can go, and that such a bill be passed this afternoon.

Mr. McIlraith: We had a bill printed including all the items that were passed up to last night, because those were the latest printing arrangements I was able to make. I had in mind, depending on what happened as these items went along this afternoon, asking leave of the committee to introduce such a bill.

Now, this new suggestion I would want to discuss—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not pressing that; bring the bill in as it is.

Mr. McIlraith: I would want to be left free to discuss the new suggestion with the law officers of parliament, because I am not sure it is possible to have a bill ready containing items that are not yet passed, including the items named by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister would simply call those items, I think we would pass them automatically. They are the ones for the veterans, for salaries, and so on. The items for veterans, and so on, would have to be passed. In other words, we cannot have them included without passing them.

Mr. McIlraith: I realize that, but I am afraid I had not succeeded in completing my remarks. I am not sure that it is possible to have these items included, for technical reasons only. I should like to leave part of the suggestion open at the moment until I have had an opportunity of consulting with the law officers of the crown, to see if it is possible to have the items which we would pass in the next few minutes included in the bill.

I had proposed introducing a bill at four o'clock, if that meets with the wishes of the committee. This bill would include all the items that have been passed up to that time. If it is possible, I am very agreeable, of course, to including the items mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition.

Now as to the other items I am not able to say with certainty that the failure to pass them will not hold up certain payments. I am sure the former minister of finance will understand that. However, if the committee will continue dealing with the items I will see what, if any, items we can add to those which were passed prior to last night and are in the bill.

Mr. Nowlan: I take it the $11 million item, which we are almost up to now, could be passed. I take it that is the retroactive salary increases?

Mr. Douglas: Item 45e has to do with municipal grants? Is this the item about which the Leader of the Opposition was asking earlier?

Mr. Benson: No, he was asking about loans, and I undertook to give that information later. These are grants in lieu of taxes.

Mr. Douglas: These are grants in lieu of taxes?

Mr. Benson: Yes.

Mr. Loney: Could the parliamentary secretary give us the details concerning the additional amount?

Mr. Benson: The main estimates contained provision for $27,700,000 and supplementary estimates (A) for $1 million. This item requests an additional $2,800,000. This arises because during the current fiscal year it has been possible to authorize for payment of more grants to municipalities than during the same period last year. These take some time to process, but we are getting caught up and they are on a current basis. This has resulted in a reduction of the backlog of grants to municipalities.

Item agreed to.

56e. To authorize the treasury board to delete from the accounts certain debts due, and claims by, Her Majesty, each of which is in excess of $1,000, amounting in the aggregate to $268,434.88 of which $15,943.01 represents three items that have been carried as assets in the statement of assets and liabilities, $15,945.

Mr. Douglas: This is merely an amount of debt that we are being asked to wipe out?

Mr. Benson: The total amount of debts being written off comes to $268,434.88, as shown in the schedule. I can give the general reason for these debts being written off by the various departments, if this would suffice. Under the Department of Trade and Commerce there is $13,259.26, which is a loss on the sale of shares originally purchased to gain access to a building in Sydney, Australia, for use by the Canadian commercial counsellor and staff. They were carried as an asset in the accounts, instead of being written off.

Under the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Veterans Rehabilitation Act, the sum there represents the failure to repay two student veteran loans. Under the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, this represents the amount by which each original soldier settlement loan was reduced by treasury board authority, pursuant to provisions of order in council P.C. 98/6761 of November 1, 1945. Write-off action for these reductions has long been delayed but has now received treasury board approval. There are ten debts involved.

Under the Department of Justice, this was debt resulting from overpayment of salary and related benefits, where actual service was performed with no evidence of fraud, and collection would create a hardship. Under the national capital commission, this is debt resulting from the illegal employment of one person over 70 years. Under the Department of National Defence these were debts resulting from the illegal employment of persons over 65 years, where actual service was performed with no evidence of fraud, and collection would create a hardship. There are ten debts involved.

Under the Department of Transport, these were debts resulting from failure to repay telecommunication services, and for the supply of hydroelectric power during temporary shutdown of the Welland canal. There are two debts involved in this. Under the unemployment insurance commission this was overpayment made for a staff training course given by consultants. The debtor pointed out that the course had been given to C.N.R. employees at a loss, on the understanding that the insurance commission would undertake to pay. Under the Department of Veterans Affairs, these are debts resulting from the overpayment of allowances under the War Veterans Allowance Act, and there are 80 debts involved.

Item agreed to.

70e. To supplement other votes, subject to the approval of the treasury board, for the payment of salaries, wages and other pay list charges, $11,000,000.

Mr. Nowlan: I take it this is the item that covers the retroactive increases.

Mr. Benson: Yes, the retroactive increases.

Item agreed to.

77e. To provide that, for the purposes of the Public Service Superannuation Act, a person who died during a period ending before February, 1962 in which he was absent from duty without leave, and in respect of whom a death benefit would have been payable had he died under similar circumstances on February 1, 1962, shall be deemed to have been a public service participant throughout the said period, $1.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a brief word on this item. It is another legislative item which makes certain changes with respect to the Public Service Superannuation Act, and I urge on the government that it give more active consideration to the plight of retired civil servants. If it has not got time to bring in a bill, then I would like to see the government introduce one of these estimates for $1 that would change the terms of the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act, so as to make further increases in the pensions of civil servants already retired.

As the parliamentary secretary knows, this is a matter which has been considered over and over again by various ministers, but a while ago we were told by the Minister of Finance that these people would have to wait and see what the Canada pension plan might do for them. It is now obvious the Canada pension plan is not going to do anything for civil servants already retired. I hope one of these days, when improvements are being made in public service superannuation legislation, something will be done for civil servants already retired, and I hope it will be done soon.

Item agreed to.

80e. Government's contribution to the hospitalization (outside Canada) plan, $100,000.

Mr. Knowles: I have no doubt the parliamentary secretary has a note explaining this item. Could he give it to us?

Mr. Benson: Briefly, this supplementary estimate is required as a result of an amendment to chapter 34 medical services of the Queen's regulations and orders of the Royal Canadian Navy, royal Canadian army and the Royal Canadian Air Force. This amendment introduced charges for medical services in service hospitals, and changed the basis of charges for hospital care. The charge to participants under the hospital insurance outside Canada plan who received in-patient care in service hospitals on or before September 1, 1963, was increased from $16 to $23 a day, as a result of the amendment, requiring the additional amount beyond the $425,000 which was authorized in the original estimates.

Mr. Winch: May I just say briefly I was hoping this went beyond that, because there is a hospitalization plan now all across Canada. There is also one in the Scandinavian countries and in the United Kingdom. If one goes from the Scandinavian countries to the United Kingdom he is covered by hospitalization, and if people go from the United Kingdom to the Scandinavian countries they are covered. I was hoping we would extend our hospitalization plan to accept this, so that when we go overseas we would be covered and when overseas visitors come to Canada they would be covered. I hope this will be considered by the government.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes the supplementary estimates for the Department of Finance. The Department of Fisheries is next.

Mr. Nowlan: I wonder if I might make a suggestion to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. Probably the house leader at this moment is having some discussion as to how many items we could go through this afternoon and, as the Leader of the Opposition pointed out, we are prepared to pass certain ones, and some of them have already been dealt with. There are some other cash items, however, and we are particularly concerned with the Department of Veterans Affairs. These items include payments of war veterans allowances. So far as the official opposition is concerned we are prepared to pass the veterans affairs items very quickly, so that they might be included in any bill which could be brought in a little later on this afternoon.

I understand there are also two items in the estimates of the Department of Labour which were bypassed the other afternoon when we dealt with unemployment insurance. If we dealt with veterans affairs, and time permitted, I suggest we go back to the two items in the labour estimates which we bypassed the other day, if that is agreeable to the house leader.

Mr. McIlraith: I have one problem. Since speaking on this subject a few minutes ago I have raised the question of what can be included in a bill at this stage for almost immediate passage, and for sending over to the other place. I am advised that it is not going to be possible, without taking some time, to add items to the bill already printed, which includes the items passed up until last night; but I have a suggestion which I think will deal with the problem.

If we bring in an appropriations bill for all the items passed up to last night, pass it and send it over to the other place, then having passed the items mentioned by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings later today, we can bring in another appropriations bill on Monday and get it over very quickly.

Mr. Nowlan: All right.

Mr. McIlraith: I would like to do it the other way but I am informed it is just not physically possible.

Mr. Knowles: That seems to make sense. Since we are in an hiatus between finance and fisheries, may I suggest this might be a good time to bring in the bill that implements everything that was done up until last night, and while Their Honours in the other place are considering it, we can see how many other items we can pass for another bill for Monday.

Mr. Douglas: I have one other suggestion to make. When we come back to these estimates I would like the minister to set them out in order of priority, so that we can deal with those which are needed most, so that when the bill comes in on Monday, it would cover the items which the minister considers most pressing.

Mr. McIlraith: I have another suggestion. If there is any possibility of getting a second bill ready later this afternoon I should like to leave that possibility open.

Mr. Knowles: Let us rise and bring in the bill.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. McIlraith (for Mr. Gordon) moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, the sum of $130,793,985 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. McIlraith (for Mr. Gordon) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-86, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1964.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the said bill be read a second time? By unanimous consent, now?

Mr. Knowles: Now, by leave.

Mr. McIlraith (for Mr. Gordon) moved the second reading of the bill.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, as this appropriation bill was ready this morning, and the government did not see any way of adding to it, I think it was unfair that it was not presented earlier, for the benefit of the other place.

Clauses 1 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time? By unanimous consent, now?

Mr. Knowles: Now, by leave.

Mr. McIlraith (for Mr. Gordon) thereupon moved the third reading of the bill.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if you would call vote No. 50e of the Department of Labour.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

50e. Administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act—To extend the purposes of vote 50 of the main estimates for 1963-64 to include a grant of $1,500 to the Canadian association for adult education to assist in defraying the expenses of the national seminar on guidance and counselling held in Canada in November, 1963 and to provide a further amount of, $720,000.

The Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Item agreed to.

55e. Transfer of labour to places where employment is available and expenses incidental thereto, in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $18,000.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, would the minister care to explain to what areas this vote refers. Does it refer to the Bancroft and Elliot Lake areas, or are there other areas involved?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the areas involved are Bell island, Newfoundland, and Sudbury, Ontario.

Mr. Peters: Are there continuous applications for a number of areas at the present time, and is there still a backlog in Sudbury? It would appear there was in Bell island, according to the picture the other night. Also, is it completed at Bancroft and Elliot Lake? There has been quite a transfer there, I understand.

Mr. MacEachen: For the fiscal year just ended the total expended was $55,000. We need an additional sum as mentioned here to meet the expenses for workers and dependants from Bell island and Sudbury. I might tell my hon. friend that during the past fiscal year expenses were paid for 38 workers, 402 dependants and 97 sets of household effects. Transfer from Sudbury and Bell Island are as follows: Bell island, workers, 1; dependants, 273; household effects, 58. I believe that almost all the dependants from Bell island were located in Ontario. For Sudbury the number of workers was 58; dependants, 129; household effects, 39. I understand that a great proportion of this group was located at Thompson, and I believe a few in Elliot Lake. It may interest my hon. friend to know that at the present time the national employment service tells me there is a shortage of miners in Elliot Lake, for understandable reasons.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether this particular fund is available to assist railway employees to move themselves and their families when the areas in which they have been located are on rail lines which have been closed down or abandoned.

This is a problem which deserves serious consideration by the government. Railway employees established in certain areas, naturally expecting to remain there, find themselves under the circumstances completely out of work and have to move to other locations. This is something which the representatives of the railway unions have pressed for strongly, and I think action in this regard should be considered. I would ask whether this item covers such a situation as I have placed before the committee.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, to my knowledge this particular form of transportation assistance has not been made available to railway workers. The particular areas, as my hon. friend knows, are declared eligible for this kind of assistance. I have asked the offices of the department to review this whole question of providing assistance for workers who wish to move from one part of the country to another, because it is my suspicion, if not my conviction, that at present this form of assistance is rather restrictive. To be eligible individuals must undergo a rather strict means test, and I think it might be possible to widen the program to include certainly a class of workers who are not absolutely destitute or completely without funds. I think these suggestions made by the Leader of the Opposition ought to be considered and will be considered in light of the review which is now under way in the department of this particular matter of providing assistance to workers displaced from one area, and who wish to go elsewhere.

Mr. MacInnis: A further question to the minister on that point. Despite the fact that one individual may be in what could be considered a high employment area, nevertheless he may be unable to get a job. Therefore, what yardstick is used in deciding whether he is eligible for assistance? After all, it matters not to an individual in that position whether there are hundreds more like him or not; the fact remains that the individual is out of work and is directly affected.

Mr. MacEachen: I think the present policy is that when a particular area is declared a surplus manpower area the individuals in that area become eligible. I agree with my hon. friend that the plight of a man who is unemployed and unable to find work in an area of high employment may be as severe as the position of any individual in an area which has been declared a surplus manpower area owing to general conditions. The suggestion made by my hon. friend will be considered, because I believe that the desire to increase mobility of workers is a worthy one, and if it can be achieved through assistance of this kind is a pretty worth-while investment.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell the house whether the government has considered or will consider the possibility of setting up such a fund for the municipality of Parent, since the radar station located there has been closed down or will be in the near future? In view of the fact that the radar station provided practically the only employment for the local citizens, will such a fund be made available to them?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: I will be glad to ask for information about the particular area in question and to see whether it is eligible under present policy; and I will consider what can be done in light of that policy.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

70e. Assistance, in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the governor in council, for the construction of fishing vessels in respect of which capital subsidies authorized by vote 222 (Canadian maritime commission) of these estimates may not be paid, $200,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask what the situation is with respect to fishing vessels since the withdrawal of the subsidies.

Mr. McIlraith: I am not clear what subsidies have been withdrawn. I do not quite follow the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it not a fact that subsidies for the construction of fishing vessels are no longer in existence? Am I not right in that?

Mr. McIlraith: No, I think they are still in existence. There are a great many fishing vessels being built under subsidies at the present moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister would tell the committee how this $200,000 is made up, that might answer my question.

Mr. McIlraith: In the main estimates there is an item of $300,000 to provide assistance for the construction of fishing vessels in respect of which capital subsidies are authorized. The vote number is 222. This supplementary estimate is for $200,000. By October 1963 applications for payment of subsidies had exceeded the anticipated requirements and an additional allotment was made. In addition the department had on hand nine claims for subsidies to be paid and also notice of application for subsidy had been received for another 14 vessels. Since the department had no funds available to meet these additional requests an allotment of $200,000 was obtained, and this supplementary item is to recoup this allotment of $200,000. I do not know what more detail I can give, but the subsidies are being paid.

Mr. Howard: Can the minister give the committee some indication of the division by dollar amount of the expenditure on this subsidy on the east coast and on the west coast?

Mr. McIlraith: I do not have it before me, but I will try and get it.

Mr. Howard: When does the minister expect to get it?

Mr. McIlraith: I can tell the hon. member now that part of this item is for the lobster trap indemnity account, and none of that affects the west coast since they have not succeeded in producing the kind of lobsters which are most popular. I will have this matter turned up in a few minutes, however.

Mr. Howard: Actually I am not talking about lobsters but about item 70e, which is the subsidy for fishing vessels. I know we do not harvest lobsters on the west coast. It has been tried, but someone told me that they forgot to take the plugs out from the claws when they put the lobsters in the water, and they starved to death.

Mr. McIlraith: That story has been told on the estimates for the last 23 years.

Item agreed to.

5e. To authorize reimbursement to the lieutenant governors of the provinces of Canada of the costs of travelling and hospitality incurred in the exercise of their duties up to a maximum per annum for each as detailed in the estimates—To increase the maximum per annum for each of the lieutenant-governors of the provinces detailed in these estimates, $6,000.

Mr. Knowles: Does the wording of this item means that in the case of the three provinces indicated in the details of the estimates the maximum expense allowance for the lieutenant governors is being increased? Another question would be as to how these various figures of the expense allowance for the various lieutenant governors are arrived at?

Mr. McIlraith: The amount of the allowance for travelling and hospitality used to be tied to the census figures but in 1963-64 there was a change, bringing the amount of this item to $6,000. It was found, however, that this arrangement was not permissible in the case of Manitoba, Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan and this item in the estimates is to bring those three lieutenant governors into line with the others.

Mr. Knowles: I do not wish to delay on this item because it is not one of major importance, but I am afraid I cannot find anything in the estimates to correspond to the figure of $6,000 to which the minister has referred. The vote for 1963-64 varied all the way from $7,500 to $18,000 for the various provinces. I wonder if the minister has got hold of the right note for this item.

Mr. McIlraith: The item is to be found on page 156 of the main estimates. After the details are considered, and these supplementaries added to the total, it will be seen—well, quite frankly, I am not sure of this explanation. The matter is again being looked at and I believe it has been changed in the main estimates for the coming year. This was intended, apparently, to take care of an anomaly in computing the allowances, and I am not clear about the explanation. That is the situation. I am sorry. It ought to be more precise, but I think I had better leave a more precise explanation until we reach the main estimates.

Mr. Knowles: In view of the minister's admission that he does not quite know what this is all about, I will not hold him up any longer.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

1e. Departmental administration including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $10,000.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Under this item, which deals with the administration of justice, I think it might be a good idea to bring to the attention of the committee a case of what might be considered poetic justice. I should like to read to the committee something which I discovered on my desk today—something which has to do with certain procedures in this house of recent date. The document is entitled "The Easter Game" and it goes as follows:

The strangest weird and eerie tale
Of all the Easter stories
Is this about the "Easter Game"
Of Liberals and Tories.
The Liberals had a crafty plan
It simply would entail
A happy Easter holiday
If silence would prevail—

Mr. Winkler: On a point of order. I do not think this is the sort of thing which should be put on record at this point in our proceedings today. It has no bearing on our proceedings and only serves to halt the progress we are making here this afternoon.

Mr. Howard: I would point out to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce that the gentleman who sits in front of him, the Leader of the Opposition, took a considerable length of time earlier this week to deal with exactly the same subject matter as my hon. friend wishes—

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order. Are we dealing with the estimates or are we discussing some other matters?

The Chairman: I understand the hon. member for Skeena is raising a point of order.

Mr. Howard: On the point of order raised by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, may I remind Your Honour that the Leader of the Opposition dealt with this subject matter. He did so in a manner different from the one used by my hon. friend from Timmins. One was prose and the other is poetry. That is the only difference.

Mr. Winkler: May I say something further on the point of order? I think that in the course of the proceedings which have taken place this week there has been enough personal attack, and quite enough effort has been put forth to assassinate people both in this house and in the other place. So I think we could well do with less of that sort of thing today.

The Chairman: I think the point of order raised by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce is well taken and I am sure the hon. member for Timmins will agree that, although the submission he is trying to make is put in a poetic way and may be of interest, it has no bearing, it would appear to the Chair, on the item we are now considering, namely vote 1e of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): If I might be permitted to say a word on a point of order, it would appear to me that we are having a repetition of what happened last week, when something was condemned before it was ever heard or listened to.

Mr. Winkler: It seems to me there was a fair contribution from that quarter of the house as well.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, my comments on the Department of Justice will have to be, not in poetry but in the more usual form of prose. Inasmuch as this item involves a grant to the Canadian corrections association to assist in defraying the expenses of the fifth international criminological congress to be held in Montreal in 1965, I should like to make some comments about the general question of criminological procedures and to express my regret that because of a sort of parting gift by the former minister of justice, all the background policy and previous attitude of the government, and certainly of the former Conservative government when the department was headed by Mr. Fulton, seem to have been wiped out to satisfy a political promise.

I know that this may upset some people in Cornwall, but I just do not think that Cornwall is the place to put the new prison for women. Anybody who has paid any attention to criminological or sociological matters is of the opinion that penitentiaries and prisons should be placed in those areas where sociologists, criminologists and people interested in this field can have easy access to these institutions in order to work with the prison officials, and particularly the inmates, from the point of view of bringing about their rehabilitation. As far as I am concerned, the decision to build the new prison for women at Cornwall detracts from any such program.

Anybody who has been through the existing women's prison at Kingston will certainly agree that it is an antiquated and disgraceful structure, in which nothing useful is accomplished outside of locking people behind doors, and that there is certainly a need for a new prison. But in my view the new prison for women should be constructed within the complex that exists at Kingston, rather than being transplanted to some part of the country removed from the benefit of all the good work that can be done by people from Queen's University, and those in the penitentiaries branch who are already working in the Kingston complex.

I also wish to express some concern about the proposed drug treatment centre at Matsqui. After my national leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and I visited the B.C. penitentiary last winter I drove up the Fraser valley to Matsqui the following day to look at the situation. The ground is levelled off and there is a nice wire fence around the property in preparation for the establishment of this new so-called drug treatment centre. But so far I have not heard a single word from anybody in the government with regard to just what is supposed to take place at that centre. The government seems to have no policy and no ideas with regard to rehabilitation from a clinical or sociological point of view.

If nothing more is going to be done in dealing with people addicted to narcotics than has been done in the past, then to all intents and purposes the $7½ million or whatever the amount is that is going to be spent at Matsqui is a waste of money. I say that because all we will be building is another prison in which we can lock up people and, when their time is up, open the doors and let them out again so they can start the whole process all over again of looking for drugs, being apprehended and tossed into jail once more. This is what we have been doing in Canada for years, and so far we have achieved absolutely nothing except to fill our prisons—in the west in any event, where there is a high incidence of narcotic addiction—with people who are unfortunately addicted to narcotics.

We have not turned a single stone in the field of so-called drug treatment. We have not heard a word in this regard from this government, its predecessors or from the provincial government of British Columbia which is concerned with the general question of health. We have had nothing but the following of procedures used in the United States, which have been an abject failure if anything has. While we are not taking action under this item, I say that before we blindly proceed to endorse the building of another prison complex at Matsqui and give it the fancy name of a drug treatment centre, we had better ask some searching questions and get some sensible, farsighted answers from the government as to just what it intends to accomplish and how it intends to proceed at this drug treatment centre. If we do not do so we will just be spending another $7½ million or $8 million on another prison which will accomplish precisely the same thing in the field of drug treatment that prisons have accomplished in the past—absolutely nothing.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we are spending this $10,000 to have the fifth international criminological congress held in Canada in 1965. Unless the Department of Justice comes up with something worth while I should think we should be ashamed to have this congress meet in Canada. We are very far behind in penal reform. As the hon. member for Skeena has mentioned, we have built prisons to contain people, rather than correctional institutions to help to rehabilitate them.

In my own small way I have examined several aspects of this problem and I find that the new states of Alaska and Mexico, and other countries, have made much more progress than we have. In some cases they have not had the benefit of a royal commission report, such as that of the Fauteux commission, but yet we have done very little by way of reform to make us proud of what we have accomplished in Canada. Since this congress is meeting in Canada I would think we would want to be able to show other nations the advances we have made, but the fact is that in the whole field of justice there is very little in this country of which we can be proud. Certainly this is true when you find the province of Ontario putting through a bill such as was introduced in the legislature a few weeks ago.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the Department of Justice could at least pick one field and concentrate on it, so that we would be able to have something to show the congress with regard to the advances that are possible in Canada in the correction of criminals. If we picked one field we should at least be able to give some leadership to the congress in that field. Canada is not such a backward country that we cannot pick out and concentrate on making advances in one field. In this way we would be able to show the delegates who will be attending the congress that there is at least one aspect of criminology in which we are better than other countries.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I cannot let this item go by without making a brief comment on it. We have waited a reasonable length of time, being reasonable people, and I should now like to ask the parliamentary secretary—I believe the Minister of Justice is unavoidably absent—whether the government has definitely decided to move the women's prison from Kingston to Cornwall. A good many people in my district who work at the prison are naturally much concerned about this decision. They are people who have put down their roots in the district through purchasing modest though comfortable homes, and they want to know what the future has in store for them. The interests of these people should be considered.

Then again, the various associations of social workers throughout the district are protesting this pending move. I wish to point out, as has been done before, that Queen's University is well equipped to treat these inmates from a social or psychological aspect. We have two good hospitals in the area that are well equipped to handle any emergency. They are the Kingston General hospital and Hotel Dieu, both well equipped and staffed, and both of which are expanding. I would say to the parliamentary secretary, who represents the Department of Justice here, that he should think twice before making a move of this kind. We in the bay of Quinte district are very much concerned about it.

Second, Mr. Chairman, I should like to know if the Department of Justice has abandoned the tenders system in connection with the purchase of beef on the hoof for the penitentiaries at Kingston and Joyceville. I have been told, without any personal inquiry on my part, by the producers of this type of beef that they no longer are invited to tender. These tender forms are no longer mailed out to them. What is going on under this new administration which was going to introduce a new era of service to the public? I ask the question, have you abandoned the tenders system? The supplying of this material now goes to one or two people, no doubt some of your own pets. I would admonish the government to get back to the good tenders system that we used to have in 1962, under which the penitentiaries received good beef at a fair price, and all producers had an opportunity to sell their beef.

Third, Mr. Chairman, although I deplore the necessity of more prisons in this country, I must say I welcome the announcement made the other day by the hon. member for Kingston that a new prison would be constructed. He did not say it would be constructed in Prince Edward-Lennox, but he said it would be at Millhaven. He might more correctly have said at Bath, Ontario, in Prince Edward-Lennox, which is the constituency I represent. The present administration is not the author of this plan. It dates back to the former administration which was studying decentralization of the prison system as long ago as 1959. This announcement is the fruition of the plan. As its representative in the house in the last two parliaments, I have been lauding the merits and the advantages of the location of Prince Edward-Lennox. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that Prince Edward-Lennox accepts the trust that has been laid on its shoulders. We will work with the rest of Canada in the best interests of the penal institutions and for the public good of Canada.

Mr. Macdonald: I should like to reply briefly to the observations made by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox. With regard to the proposed shift of the women's penitentiary, I would remind the hon. member that the minister has indicated in the house and elsewhere he will be receiving representations from interested institutions such as the John Howard Society, the Elizabeth Fry Society, and so on. I am much obliged for his observations about the local effect of the suggested changes, and I will bring those to the attention of the minister.

In so far as the hon. member's second observation is concerned, I regret that I am not personally able to respond to it. I will bring that to the minister's attention so that at some future date the hon. member may be satisfied in this regard.

Mr. Winch: I am somewhat amazed at the discussion that has taken place under this supplementary item. In view of what has been said, therefore, I should like to add a few words of my own.

First of all, with regard to the women's penitentiary, I may say that if hon. members who have spoken within recent minutes were here when I asked a question on orders of the day they would remember I asked the Minister of Justice whether or not the previous minister told the truth or lied when he made a public statement that it was to be moved to Cornwall. The answer I received was, "I will have to take this as notice". Another question I asked was whether or not any decision had been made. The answer was, "Put the question on the order paper". Obviously no definite decision has been made.

What does surprise me, sir, is the remark made by one of my own colleagues in my own party, and the hon. member who just resumed his seat, concerning the relationship between the women's penitentiary in Kingston and Queen's University. I wonder if both hon. members know what the dickens they are talking about. What is the relationship between Queen's University and the women's penitentiary in Kingston, and what has that to do with whether or not the penitentiary should be kept in Kingston? If my information is correct, and I am sure it is, Queen's University does not have a psychiatric department in its medical school. What is the relationship, then, on the basis of psychiatry, between Queen's University and whether or not there will be a women's penitentiary at Kingston? So far as I am concerned, it is very clear, and I have been interested in penology for 30 years. The important consideration is not the location but the job that can be done. When I first heard there was a probability of a new penitentiary being built away from Kingston, I made inquiries. There was talk of Cornwall being the site, and I found that one month ago there was only one woman from Cornwall in the Kingston's women's penitentiary.

I disagree with the construction of a new narcotics centre in the Fraser valley, but if it goes ahead it will mean that one third of those now serving in Kingston penitentiary, the third who are narcotic addicts, will be transferred to the Fraser valley. Of the balance of those now in Kingston one third come from Ontario and Quebec, and one third from the western provinces, and almost all of those from B.C. will be transferred to the narcotics centre in the Fraser valley.

I regret very much that parochialism should be the deciding factor in the location of an institution. I have heard it said this was to be done on a patronage basis, so I made inquiries and I found that in none of the areas suggested yet has the federal government any property, nor has it taken option on any property for the establishment of a women's penitentiary. Therefore when members get up, whether they be from my own party or otherwise, I hope they will realize what they are talking about.

Do not tell me about Queen's University in relation to a penitentiary because it has not got any department of psychiatry or psychology, and do not tell me about patronage when there is no government owned land or government opted land. We are greatly behind in meeting the need for a new women's penitentiary, but it should be established on the right basis of modern penology.

I agree completely with the hon. member for Skeena in his remarks about the $4 million or $5 million narcotics centre in B.C., because it cannot do the job. Such a centre is years behind modern understanding and, as the hon. member for Skeena said, what we are doing is putting up a new prison, and treating addicts as criminals instead of sick people, as they are recognized to be throughout the rest of the world. Both the federal and provincial governments would save millions of dollars if we treated them as sick people and not as criminals.

I did not know that this supplementary estimate would lead us into such a discussion, but I do hope questions of parochialism and provincialism will be set aside and we shall consider the matter on the principles of modern penology and criminology rather than on the proposition of constituency expediency.

Mr. Douglas: Do I take it from the remarks of the parliamentary secretary that no final decision has been made with reference to the location of a women's correctional institution? Second, has any provision been made in the estimates for 1964-65 for the construction of such an institution?

[Mr. Winch.]

Mr. Macdonald: As I stated, the minister has indicated his willingness to hear from the various associations with respect to the location of this particular penitentiary. I think it can be assumed that their views will be taken seriously and that to the extent they can be accommodated or should be accommodated, this will be done. As to the second question I am afraid I cannot enlighten the hon. gentleman at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are a couple of matters that deserve to be considered. One is the statement of the hon. member for Vancouver East who says that there is no department of psychiatry or psychology in Queen's University. There is one member here fully conversant with that, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, who is temporarily out of the chamber, and I think he should be given the opportunity of clarifying this uncertainty.

An hon. Member: He is here.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He is the hon. member for Kingston and would be able to give the committee the fullest and most complete information in this regard. He was here a moment ago—

An hon. Member: He is here now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I beg his pardon. I was not looking in his direction.

If the minister were here I should like to ask him a direct question. I do not like directing questions to the parliamentary secretary because he does not cover the entire field, excepting on the perimeter. Did Hon. Lionel Chevrier have any authority for making the statement that he did, on the occasion of the celebration in his honour prior to his departure for higher spheres of service, that the women's penitentiary was to be established in Cornwall. I am not entering into the merits or demerits. It was a strange place for an announcement like that, but I would ask the parliamentary secretary, within the purview of his more or less limited knowledge, whether he can say Mr. Chevrier spoke with authority or merely with enthusiasm?

Mr. Macdonald: As the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, my purview in this respect is limited, and unfortunately the answer to that question is beyond my purview.

Mr. Benson: The Leader of the Opposition raised a question with respect to Queen's University. I know as a fact that there is a department of psychology at Queen's University, and in addition there are a good many psychiatrists in Kingston. I think the per capita number of psychiatrists in Kingston compares most favourably with that of most places on the North American continent. There were a couple of other points raised by the hon. member—

Mr. Winch: You said a department of psychiatry?

Mr. Benson: Psychology.

Mr. Winch: If there is a department of psychiatry—

Mr. Benson: Psychology.

Mr. Winch: I have been in touch with the government on this very matter and I was informed that there was no department in Queen's University.

Mr. Benson: There is a department of psychology.

Mr. Winch: Not psychiatry?

Mr. Benson: I said psychology.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, it is five o'clock and I wonder if I might interject something here. I have taken steps to endeavour to have a bill prepared covering those items of the estimates that were passed today that were particularly important, with reference to veterans affairs, as was mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition, and one or two salary items. If that bill can be prepared I should like later to ask the permission of the house to interrupt private members' hour in order to have the appropriation bill, including those items, dealt with by the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are agreeable.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. McIlraith) if he can tell us at what time this second appropriation bill might be ready, so we can avoid interrupting the speech that might be in progress?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I am just waiting for it to arrive. I cannot tell at the moment. It should arrive in the next few minutes, but I cannot give any more precise time than that. I am going to check on that now.

CANADA FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT DISCRIMINATION BECAUSE OF AGE

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-28, to amend the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act (age discrimination).

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this measure that stands in my name I am very hopeful of getting the rapt attention of all hon. members, the more so because I am very sure that with few exceptions all hon. members fall into the category which this measure would assist; that is, the category of the older worker. The explanation of the bill is as follows:

> The chief purpose of this bill is to add age discrimination to the list of prohibited employment practices unless age is a bona fide occupational qualification. A secondary purpose is to prohibit the employer from including in an employment application form, advertisement or written or oral inquiry, a question or request for particulars as to the applicant's race, national origin, colour, religion or age unless by reason of a bona fide occupational qualification.

I am sure that all hon. members are acquainted with the good reasons for putting forward such a measure, but it may be that not all are so well informed as to the many states and administrations which already have this type of legislation in operation. I have here a summary of this type of legislation which has been in effect in the United States for a number of years. As long ago as 1960 there were at least ten states with laws on their statute books to protect the older worker from discrimination. The acts in these states vary in detail but their end goal is to protect the older worker against discrimination because of age.

In New York state they added this provision in 1958, specifying the ages as 45 to 65. However, interpretive rulings of this provision, issued by the state commission against discrimination, state that discrimination because of age "shall mean discrimination based on an over age", and it is not limited to the ages specified. Thus an employer may not discriminate against a person solely because the person is over the age the employer desires to employ. I gather it would be unlawful for an employer to specify, for instance, that he wanted a bookkeeper under the age of 35. As I say, the legislation in the different states differs in detail. Louisiana had an act of this type 30 years ago, in 1934. Their law makes it unlawful for any employer having 25 or more employees to adopt any rule for the discharge of any employee or the rejection of a new employee under 50 years of age. The penalty in that state is a fine of up to $500 or a jail sentence of up to 90 days, or both.

I am sure that many hon. members are aware that in the last few months the government of British Columbia has proposed to put on its statute books similar protective legislation to defend the employment rights of the older worker. I am sure, also, that many of us are quite well aware of the need for some type of law to this effect. We have all heard of cases where a person of, say, 40 years of age, or 45 or 50—the age varies with the industry concerned and the circumstances—has been unable to gain employment because he is considered to be too old. In some cases the reason given is that an older person becomes less efficient and tends to slow down on the job. Another reason, however, is the effect of the growth of private pension plans in industry. A number of industries find that it is difficult to fit an older worker into a pension plan because by the time he reaches the normal retirement age he will not have put in enough service to qualify for a pension. We in this party, of course—and I know this applies to many hon. members in other parties—have advocated the necessity in Canada of setting up a comprehensive, portable pension plan for the whole country. It is regrettable that this was not done many years ago. However, the implementation of such a plan makes the pension barriers along with other factors more harmful to the people in the older age brackets seeking employment, and this bill attempts to overcome the situation.

In fairness both to the present administration and to the previous one, both ministers of labour concerned have taken good stands to encourage the employment of older workers. The present Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) has issued an excellent leaflet in which he says that older workers can offer accuracy, dependability, mature judgment, stability, lower absenteeism rates, lower labour turnover and lower accident rates. The previous minister of labour when he was in office made a statement which I think was most admirable on this point. He said:

> Justice and freedom of opportunity to every individual as spelled out by the United Nations was adopted by 58 countries, including Canada, in the universal declaration of human rights, in December 1948. Is it justice and freedom of opportunity to raise obstacles to employment against any segment of society, for any reason, including age? Should not all individuals have an equal right to jobs which they are capable of doing whether they are 20 or 70 years of age?

It might be of some interest to hon. members, and perhaps of encouragement to them, to consider the following statistics with regard to the efficiency and success of older people, some rather notable ones included. For example Benjamin Franklin invented bifocal glasses at the age of 78. He was also appointed ambassador to France when he was in his 70's. Thomas Hardy, the English novelist and poet, wrote some of his best poetry shortly before his death at 89. Verdi composed four notable musical compositions at age 85. William Ewart Gladstone was British prime minister at the age of 82. Albert Einstein was active in science until his death at the age of 75. Winston Churchill became prime minister at 65 and served either in that office or as leader of the opposition until his resignation at the age of 80.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I feel that until Canada has what we all hope will become a comprehensive portable pension plan it is very much in the interest of the older workers that they be protected by some such legislation as proposed by this bill. I urge all hon. members to consider the fact that there is no reason why the immediate effects of developing technological revolution should fall more heavily on one group of Canadians than another. I should very much like that the subject matter of this bill be referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think the mover of this bill should be congratulated on the purpose he has in mind, and as he indicated at the beginning of his remarks it is one which should be shared by every member of this house. He even went so far as to say that a large number of us personally might, should we not be fortunate on future occasions, benefit by the measure he is proposing. I think that while we all agree with the purposes of the bill we must look carefully at a piece of legislation which attempts to do something which, though we all think it right and proper, may yet fail because of the way it is drafted to accomplish the purpose it has in mind. I am not sure whether this is the case, but I have some doubt about the wording of the bill as now presented.

The mover of the bill in a very good and clear statement cited legislation in two states of the country to the south of us. The two examples he referred to involved a type of legislation which is not the approach incorporated in the hon. member's bill. He mentioned New York state and one of the southern states, if I recall correctly; but in both cases the legislation was drafted specifically to deal with the problem of older age groups, and the older age groups were more specifically defined.

The legislation we are asked to consider does not mention any specific age. It seeks modification of the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act and makes it an offence for an employer to refuse to employ an older person or even to ask questions, verbal or written, concerning age unless age be a bona fide occupational qualification. I listened with some interest for guidance on how the hon. member felt that this particular concept should be applied in the administration of the law, but I was disappointed that he did not elaborate on this aspect because it seems to me that is the core of the legislation by which he feels we should attack the problem.

We agree that the problem is discrimination against older workers, but discrimination on the ground of age takes place in many circumstances and at different stages of life. I am sure hon. members at this time of year have the same kind of problem which was faced by myself on a few occasions in connection with students who are concerned about summer employment. If there is one group in society I feel a great deal of sympathy for—and most of us were students not so long ago—this is the one. But the kind of discrimination faced here is usually the reverse kind; employers do not want a student who is younger than 19 or 20. The younger students at university find the problem of age discrimination working adversely against them, and for reasons which I think are quite understandable. There are not enough jobs to go around, and the first approach of the employer is to take the older students.

The draft of the legislation presented to us would make it just as much a prohibited employment practice to discriminate against younger workers going on the market as it would against older age groups. Possibly this is what the mover of the bill has in mind; if so, he did not give any indication that he was concerned about the general problem of age discrimination at different stages of life. As the legislation is drafted I think it raises the very serious problem of whether or not we would be putting a law on the books which would not be enforced and generally respected. If the intention is purely discrimination against older workers, then I think we should adopt the approach set out in the New York state law, of spelling out the age groups concerned.

The problem of discrimination is a very subtle one, Mr. Speaker. It is a very difficult one for any legislative authority to prohibit by legislative action. There are many good reasons for this, and the mover of the bill has this in mind in providing an escape door by including the expression "a bona fide occupational qualification". For example, the problem of military service comes to mind, where retirement is compulsory at an early age for reasons which few of us have really questioned in terms of purpose. On many occasions occupations such as that of air line pilot, for example, have been subject to an age discrimination, perhaps unfairly, although I would not pass judgment quickly on that question. The mover of the legislation presumably assumes that this type of occupation would require a bona fide occupational qualification. But there is a large grey area here where the problem of determining what is a bona fide qualification and what is not would call for very careful administrative interpretation. I am not saying it cannot be done but I am seriously concerned in my own mind as to whether or not a blanket proposal of the nature suggested in this legislation is the most effective means of dealing with the problem. I would prefer to say that a negative prohibition is one approach, and no doubt it is a useful approach.

I for one have no quarrel whatsoever with legislation which attempts to prohibit discrimination on the grounds of race, national origin, colour or religion. It seems to me that a democratic society has learned that legislation is needed to help in the over-all attack on this kind of discrimination. But along with these other measures there must be positive inducements which range from education to the incentives which the government introduced in the last budget, and which we applied for the first time in terms of encouragement to create employment for men and women over 45 years of age.

This positive approach does not follow any single line of attack. I was pleased to hear the hon. member refer to the educational material distributed by the employment service of the Department of Labour which draws attention, very nicely and very convincingly, to the desirable attributes of older workers and the circumstances in which they should be sought out. Very few of us, when we choose a dentist, or a solicitor to give us advice, or a doctor, are worried about whether that man or woman is over 45 years of age. If we do have a preference at all it is probably for the older, more mature, more experienced person. If there is a problem in discrimination here, it is a question of discrimination against the younger person, especially in professional practice. Society has been conditioned to accept the performance of the older citizens in this area as being, on the whole, a superior performance.

The government, very wisely I think announced in the last budget certain incentives designed to create additional employment opportunities for older workers. In the case of men and women who had been unemployed for at least six of the previous nine months and who are over 45 years of age, the government took the approach that if an employer could establish that there was a vacancy on his labour force in which he could employ such a man or woman the government would provide a subsidy amounting to $75 a month or one half the earnings, whatever was the lesser. As a result of this encouragement there has been a healthy start in the process of making additional employment opportunities available to older people. But this has to go together with a program of community education and "selling", in the best sense of that term, the advantages of this type of legislation. By the end of February, according to the best information we have, there were 1,986 applications under the older workers program.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a question? He has referred to the program undertaken by the federal government, a program which imposes the older worker on private industry by making assistance available. Is the hon. member not aware that while promoting this program the government itself is running counter to this program by advertising job positions with an age limit attached thereto?

Mr. Francis: It is not easy for me to answer a general observation of that kind. The hon. member alleges that the federal government have announced competitions containing age barriers and puts notices of such positions in the press. Is that the comment?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes, they have done exactly that in the job opportunities they have advertised. They continue to advertise these positions with age limits attached to many of them.

Mr. Francis: I am not aware of any competitions advertised recently with a condition of that nature included, but if the hon. member has examples that he can bring forward I am sure this government will give careful consideration to them, because one of the things we have tried to do is to set a good example as an employer—that is, the government of Canada in its own capacity. It may be that some crown agencies and corporations are slow in reflecting the most up to date thinking on this question, but it is certainly the intention of the government to remove such practices and substitute better personnel practices wherever the need for it is drawn to the attention of the administration. If the hon. member has a specific civil service competition poster, or any other evidence of the type of activities he described, perhaps he would bring them to the attention of the government, or to my attention, and we will be pleased to make recommendations to see that this kind of thing is stopped; because I think we all agree it does not represent the type of policy we are trying to implement today.

[Mr. Francis.]

Mr. MacInnis: I should like to point out to the hon. member that this matter has already been drawn to the attention of the Minister of Labour, who did not object to the practice when the question was put to him.

Mr. Francis: In a sense, we are dealing with a hypothetical situation, because I do not have details of the situation about which the hon. member is complaining. But I am confident that if these things are brought to the attention of the minister they will be dealt with properly and effectively.

The number of placements approved was approximately 1,333. The number of actual placements was somewhat lower, at 936, and it is estimated by the end of March of this year 2,350 applications will have been approved and about 1,300 people placed under this program. No doubt we would have been happier had the numbers been even greater, but we are pleased with what has been accomplished. We are confident that in the future we can base an improved program upon the experience of the recent period.

Among the problems which a government faces in developing a program of this nature is the basic employer preference for younger workers. This is insidious in its nature and is part of the tradition of a frontier society. In 1900 the average expectation of life was 46; a man aged 50 was written off in the minds of many people. We know that the situation has changed today, but the cultural attitudes of a previous generation do not die easily in our society. One of the main reasons for discrimination against older workers is, as the hon. member who moved this bill pointed out, in the area of pension schemes. He mentioned that the group he represents in this house has for some time supported the principle of a nation-wide portable pension scheme which would help meet this difficulty. So does this government, Mr. Speaker. I point out that one of the things which the Canada pension plan will do is just this: It will make it much easier to provide pensions for workers who move from one area to another.

An interdepartmental committee of the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Labour, the department of insurance and other groups examined the factors which influenced employers' attitudes in discriminating against older workers, on the grounds that pension plans do not give them adequate benefits. Under certain types of pension plans, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that an employer has to contribute larger sums of money for workers who have fewer years of contributions prior to retirement. These contributions draw interest for a shorter period. The employer is frequently concerned about the public relations aspect of retiring a man at 65, who may have worked seven, eight or ten years for him, with a very modest pension. No employer likes to be in the circumstance of having anyone go on formal retirement, having served even for a short period with his organization, on a pension which is grossly inadequate to sustain that person in a minimum standard of living.

The problem involves a combination of re-examining the different approaches to pensions, in particular having regard to the money purchase type of plan instead of the unit benefit type of plan, removing arbitrary retirement age barriers, and in addition recognizing that a certain proportion of older employees in the labour force of the country does not create any significant addition to payroll costs measured in the aggregate. It also involves examining the particular occupations within the employment force of a firm in which older workers can be more conscientious and more effective.

The Department of Labour has cited a number of interesting examples in which specific employers came to the employment service with age discrimination in mind. One particular case of a records clerk was cited where the turnover had been very serious among younger workers who had taken the job. They took the job for a short period, worked at it, were proficient in their duties but were ambitious and became dissatisfied with the future prospects in that job, and left it in a short time. The older worker who was more anxious to maintain a good attendance and performance record, who did not have an unreasonable or accelerated expectation of promotion and was prepared to take the job and perform it to the best of his or her ability was a much more satisfactory job placement. A re-examination of placement, a re-examination of job requirements and a re-examination of our thinking in terms of how and where older people can be employed is something which has to come, and must in many cases be the really effective means of enforcement. The legislation is prohibitory in the form in which it is suggested. Legislation alone cannot achieve the purpose which the mover of the bill has in mind.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must interrupt the hon. member to advise him that the time allotted to him has expired.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on the bill. I was not aware it was coming up today and consequently I do not have with me certain correspondence which would be applicable. It is a rather interesting coincidence that I received in the mail today a letter from a constituent dealing with this very subject. I have to check the facts, of course, and make sure that the submission made to me is accurate, but the correspondence that came to my hand today has to do with a former civilian employee of the Department of National Defence. He has been released from employment and the letter dismissing him contains the phrase "because of your age".

The age of the person dismissed was given to me as being 61. I have no idea whether the Department of National Defence sets an age limit for its employees. I would have assumed that they might consider letting people out at age 65, although I have no knowledge of the actual situation and there is no one here now from the Department of National Defence who could answer the question immediately.

Obviously a bill of this nature is required in order to direct the attention of members of parliament to a problem which exists in our society. If a person may be dismissed on the ground of age without any further reason, and if that age is only 60 or 61 it seems a bit odd at the present time when the government is busy attempting to provide employment for people over the age of 45. If this bill should go to a committee, and I have no desire to delay the proceedings so that it will not be dealt with in that way, I hope to be able to present this specific case to that committee for investigation. It might be of some assistance to the committee in determining whether a bill of this nature is adequate under the circumstances.

It seems to me that it might direct the attention of the government to the activities of the Department of National Defence with regard to their civilian employees and it would be helpful for us to know just what the terms of employment are for those employed in the Department of National Defence. Had I known this bill was coming up today I would have had the correspondence with me and I could have been more specific in my representations. I am pleased that the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) has drawn our attention to this problem and I hope that it is given further study.

Mr. Marvin Gelber (York South): Mr. Speaker, George Bernard Shaw is reputed—

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, if I may interrupt the proceedings at this stage—

Mr. Gelber: George Bernard Shaw will have to wait.

Mr. McIlraith: —in accordance with the intimation I gave when we were in committee of supply I would ask the house to be good enough to give unanimous consent to consider a further appropriation bill covering those items of the estimates up to but not including the Department of Justice, which we have passed today. It would include all the items that have been passed in committee of supply today. If we could interrupt the proceedings now we would put through that appropriation bill and send it to the other place.

Mr. Nowlan: We are perfectly satisfied with that, Mr. Speaker, so far as the official opposition is concerned.

Mr. Churchill: May I make one suggestion? In fairness to the hon. member whose bill is before us we should agree that it will hold its place on the order paper, rather than being dropped to the bottom of the list.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, I would think that is fair.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I would urge that we either accept the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, or an alternative suggestion which I was just writing out and which I would be prepared to move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena, namely that Bill No. C-28 be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on industrial relations.

My colleague from New Westminster would be quite happy if that were done and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre could then make his representations. I wonder whether that would be acceptable. If so, I would move that amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena, and it need not be debated at all.

Mr. MacNaught: I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is the one we will follow.

Mr. Knowles: You will?

Mr. Howard: No co-operation at all on that side. It is a two way street, you know.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order; is it agreed that Bill No. C-28 will retain its position on the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house agree to give unanimous consent now to terminating private members' hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Will the house also give unanimous consent to reverting to government business?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. McIlraith (for Mr. Gordon) moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, the sum of $23,368,648, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agree to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. McIlraith thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-87, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Knowles: I trust the bill is in sufficient form that it can legally be put through?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, that is what took a bit of time and is what we have been engaged in checking during the last hour I have been with the law clerks. We were making sure it was.

Mr. Howard: Have we got a copy of the bill here?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, there is one.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

On the schedule.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask, does the schedule include all the items of supplementary estimates (E) that we have passed in committee of supply up to the present time?

Mr. McIlraith: Just those passed today, and the other bill included the others.

Mr. Knowles: That is what I mean; the two bills between them include everything passed up until this time?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes—that is, unless the committee passed an item in my absence.

Schedule agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the bill be read a third time; now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. McIlraith moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House, Ottawa,
April 3, 1964.

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber on Friday, April 3, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

May I suggest to hon. members that if there is no other business before the house in this instance the house might suspend for a short period at the call of the Chair.

At 5.54 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 6.40 p.m.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the acting government leader if he can tell us what has happened to the very important bill we passed earlier today, Bill No. C-86?

Mr. MacNaught: I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I am unable to inform the house on that point.

Mr. Churchill: I wonder if the acting house leader could tell us the business for next week while we are waiting?

Mr. MacNaught: On Monday, we will proceed with the consideration of the balance of the supplementary estimates; then, we will take up the second reading of the pension plan bill and after that the budget debate.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, in connection with business of the house for Monday, hon. members might be interested in knowing that on Monday's order paper under the heading "Introduction of Bills", there will be a bill in my name entitled, "An act to amend the British North America Act 1867 (abolition of the Senate)."

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bill:

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

It being eight minutes after seven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

To authorize the treasury board to delete from the accounts certain debts due, and claims by, Her Majesty, each of which is in excess of $1,000, amounting in the aggregate to $268,434.88 of which $15,943.01 represents three items that have been carried as assets in the statement of assets and liabilities, $15,945.

67e. To provide that where a person would, except for the fact that he has a period of elective pensionable service to his credit under the Public Service Superannuation Act, be eligible to count the period of elective pensionable service under a pension plan of a public service employer as defined in that act, the person may elect, in a manner prescribed by the treasury board, to receive a return of contributions in respect of the service in lieu of any other benefit payable to or on his behalf in respect of the service, $1.

68e. To authorize the deletion of $531,182,000 from the accounts of Canada, of which:

(a) $524,849,000 is shown in the accounts as the unamortized portion of the actuarial deficiency in the Canadian forces superannuation account, and

(b) $6,333,000 is shown in the accounts as the unamortized portion of the actuarial deficiency in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation account, and the charge of that amount to net debt as an adjustment in respect of prior year's transactions, $1.

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

12e. Contribution to Nova Scotia, in accordance with such terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve, in respect of a program of forest stand improvement which will provide employment in Cape Breton, $91,000.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Special—

77e. Estimated amount required to recoup the fishing vessel indemnity account and the lobster trap indemnity account established under vote 540 of the Appropriation Act No. 5, 1955 and vote 527 of the Appropriation Act No. 6, 1956, to cover the net operating losses in the said accounts as at March 31, 1964, $197,000.

70e. Assistance, in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the governor in council, for the construction of fishing vessels in respect of which capital subsidies authorized by vote 222 (Canadian maritime commission) of these estimates may not be paid, $200,000.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

B—Unemployment insurance commission—

55e. Transfer of labour to places where employment is available and expenses incidental thereto, in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $18,000.

50e. Administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act—To extend the purposes of vote 50 of the main estimates for 1963-64 to include a grant of $1,500 to the Canadian association for adult education to assist in defraying the expenses of the national seminar on guidance and counselling held in Canada in November, 1963 and to provide a further amount of, $720,000.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Conservation and development service—

30e. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $32,000.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Governor general and lieutenant governors—

5e. To authorize reimbursement to the lieutenant governors of the provinces of Canada of the costs of travelling and hospitality incurred in the exercise of their duties up to a maximum per annum for each as detailed in the estimates—To increase the maximum per annum for each of the lieutenant governors of the provinces detailed in these estimates, $6,000.

APPENDIX

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—COMMUNIQUE AND OPENING STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Communique of the Federal-Provincial Conference, Quebec City, 2 April, 1964

The governments of Canada and of the ten provinces of Canada met in Quebec city from March 31 to April 2, 1964. In the spirit of co-operation which had marked their last meeting in November 1963 they continued the discussion of problems of common interest.

The subjects examined included shared cost programs and conditional grants, and the relation of these to fiscal arrangements. There was also an exchange of views on other aspects of fiscal relations.

The federal government outlined its proposals for loans to university students, which were examined at some length. There was also discussion of the effects of the extension of the federal program of family allowances to cover children aged 16 and 17 who are students. Before taking action on the federal proposals, the views expressed by provincial governments will be considered.

The federal proposals for the Canada pension plan were further discussed. The government of Quebec indicated that its proposed plan would be one which could provide portability of benefits with the Canada pension plan, and there was general agreement to ensure the widest possible pension coverage for Canadians.

Future liaison arrangements were discussed, together with a calendar for federal-provincial meetings of various kinds during 1964. Other subjects were: the possibility of extending the hospital insurance program to cover mental health and tuberculosis; the Canadian 1967 world exhibition, in which all provinces indicated their intention to participate; reciprocal arrangements regarding the taxation of government departments and agencies; submarine mineral rights; the proposals of some provinces for further federal assistance to highway construction; and the problem of the distribution of hate literature.

It was agreed that the federal government should immediately enter into detailed discussions with provincial governments concerning contracting-out arrangements for shared cost programs. Such negotiations would apply to programs which are of a permanent nature and which involve fairly regular annual expenditures.

The federal government suggested, and provincial governments agreed, that there should be a joint review of the nature and extent of federal and provincial taxes in relation to the financial responsibilities which nowadays have to be carried by federal and provincial governments. This should be a review in depth, but it ought to be undertaken promptly. In furtherance of this agreement, the conference gave consideration to a proposal to establish at once a tax structure committee, which would work under the auspices of the federal-provincial conference.

This committee would consist of one minister from each provincial government and three ministers from the government of Canada. It would have expert assistance, and would be charged to deliver an interim report before the end of the current year. This interim report would be reviewed at a further federal-provincial conference. The committee would be expected to produce a definitive report by a fairly early date in 1965.

It was agreed that an important purpose of this review would be to increase the range of tax resources available to the provinces, in order to meet their increasing responsibilities for education and other services.

A joint review of the tax structure is not to prejudice the early solution of the urgent financial problems confronting the provincial and federal governments. This will require mutual accommodation to reconcile their expenditure and revenue requirements.

All participants in the conference agreed that their efforts must be directed to finding mutually satisfactory fiscal arrangements to ensure the continued strength of both federal and provincial governments, working together in the interests of a prosperous and united Canada.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE 31 MARCH 1964

CONDITIONAL GRANTS AND SHARED COST PROGRAMS—OPENING STATEMENT BY THE PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA

In my opening statement at our meeting last November, I suggested that we should approach that conference as the beginning of a new chapter in federal-provincial relations. At this conference, certainly, we are continuing with the same chapter, but whereas the main cross-heading in November was fiscal arrangements for the financial year which is now upon us, today it is shared cost programs; the results of our discussions will be reflected not in 1964 but in 1965 and subsequent years.

I will begin by very briefly summarizing the federal approach to this problem, which I set out on November 26. We believe that in the past shared cost programs have been essential to remove the obstacles created by the uneven fiscal capacity of the provinces and the competing demands on provincial treasuries. These programs have made an essential contribution, I believe, to the economic and social progress of Canada, and to the reduction of regional unevenness in that progress. However, changing conditions—including, above all, the development of our system of equalization of revenues in the shared tax fields—now offer us more alternatives than we had in the past. It is appropriate, therefore, to consider whether some of the shared programs should now be changed, with federal withdrawal and a full assumption of provincial responsibility.

In the first place, what are the programs we are talking about? The general phrase "conditional grants and shared cost programs" covers, as we all know, a great number of varied arrangements between Canada and the provinces. Fundamentally, however, the programs divide into two kinds; one, those which provide current services; two, those which finance capital projects. The prime examples of the first are hospital insurance and the four welfare assistance programs. The capital programs include the trans-Canada highway, ARDA, and the construction of technical and vocational schools.

With capital programs, the expenditures on any one project are for a limited time. In effect, the federal and provincial governments are sharing in building a highway or a dam or the like. When it is built the expenditures stop. Thus, while some of the programs are fairly long term, they are not permanent. Their number and extent depends on a continuing series of decisions. The capital programs therefore are, by their nature, a flexible instrument of federal-provincial co-operation. How many new projects are started, as existing ones are completed, will depend on changing conditions which none of us, I am sure, would claim to foresee.

It may well be that if, as we certainly should hope, economic development over the years results in provincial governments becoming more equal in the relation between their responsibilities and their resources, the need for the federal government to share in the costs of capital projects will diminish. But that, if it happened, would not be withdrawal from existing programs. It would be a natural run-down, as some programs end without others taking their place. There would be no alteration of commitments and therefore no fiscal compensation involved. Indeed, the concept of tax changes equal in value to the expenditures forgone obviously is not applicable to programs which by their nature involve very different expenditures from year to year.

This run-down of capital projects, as all provinces become more able to finance them for themselves, is a possible and desirable development. But it is not inevitable. We can all imagine economic conditions taking shapes that would make more shared programs necessary. That is to say, the federal government's general responsibility for employment and economic activity in the country as a whole might, in circumstances of slow economic growth, require us to initiate more, rather than less, capital programs jointly with the provinces.

That is not a decision that we in Ottawa should or could ever take alone. Federal power in this field is restricted to taking initiatives, to putting proposals to the provinces. New programs cannot be started unless at least two parties agree to do the sharing. There is, therefore, no question of undertaking such programs without consultation. But, in the general interest of Canada, the federal government should be willing to take the initiative and propose new joint programs if and when economic circumstances require them, even though the general trend is away from such programs.

These, however, are issues for the future; bridges which may have to be crossed at a later date. The present question is, what changes, if any, should be made in the existing shared programs for current purposes?

Provincial governments have been aware for some time of the federal government's general approach. If provinces so wish, we are prepared to consider transferring to them full responsibility for shared programs that involve regular expenditures and are well established. In return we would alter our fiscal arrangements in such a way that the size of the expenditures transferred would be closely matched by the extra room made available for provincial taxes.

Such a change cannot be made by our decision alone. The existing programs are covered by agreements which in the major cases run for several years ahead. For the period of the agreement, we can completely withdraw from the program concerned only if all provinces so wish.

Therefore the only early change that we can make by federal policy, without the unanimous consent of the provinces, is to allow contracting out. That is to say, the federal government would withdraw in the case of provinces that so wished but maintain the program for provinces wishing it to continue.

Even on this basis, the federal government's freedom of action is limited. Let us take as an example by far the largest of the programs, hospital insurance, which in the fiscal year now beginning is estimated to cost the federal treasury over $400 million. The agreements with each province provide that it will receive 25 per cent of the per capita cost of the program in the province plus 25 per cent of the average per capita cost in all provinces. Thus if one province were to exercise a right of contracting out and then departed from the existing scale of the program, as it operates under the agreement with all provinces, the present basis for calculating cost shares would disappear. Contracting out by one province would alter the amounts due to other provinces under the agreements as they stand.

Accordingly, for this particular program, there is only one kind of contracting out which it is directly in our power to implement, pending renegotiation of the agreements with all provinces. It would be a revision not in the program but in the related fiscal provisions. That is to say, a province that wished to contract out would undertake to continue, for an interim period pending revision of the existing agreements, a program identical with the program provided in all provinces under the agreements. In that event there would be no effect on the federal payments to other provinces. The difference for the contracting out province would be that it would not receive payments from the federal government but instead there would be a financial equivalent in the form of an increased abatement of federal taxes for residents of that province.

This would be, I recognize, a rather rigid kind of contracting out. It must be understood, however, that it is the only kind we can provide without renegotiation of the agreements with all provinces. If such renegotiation is agreed to by all, then of course we can consider a more flexible system now. Alternatively, greater flexibility could be achieved in time by our giving notice at an early date of the federal government's intention to make thoroughgoing changes in the agreements. While the notice period required is lengthy, it would be advisable to consider at this conference whether such action is desirable.

We would propose that the compensation to a province contracting out in this way would take the form of equalized tax room in the field of personal income tax. The amount would be substantial—for provinces as a whole, of the order of 12 or 13 per cent of personal income tax.

So long as a contracting out province was maintaining the program on the same basis as other provinces, there would be no difficulty in calculating the compensation due. Any difference between the actual amount and the value of the tax room could be adjusted by adding to or subtracting from the province's equalization payments.

We would have to enter into somewhat more complicated arrangements if, following a renegotiation of the existing agreements, the contracting out province made its program different from that provided in other provinces. Actual costs would no longer provide the proper standard for compensation. On the other hand, we recognize that no province would be happy to contract out if it thereby received compensation related only to the cost of the program in the past. Some allowance for escalation of costs would be necessary. On the other hand, there would be unfairness to other provinces if this provision for escalation lasted for more than a few years; furthermore, there would be disadvantage to other provinces if the allowance for escalation exceeded the actual rate of increase in costs in whichever of the participating provinces that rate is lowest.

There are two other aspects of contracting out of hospital insurance which I should mention. First, the federal government would be anxious to assure that any contracting out arrangement would provide continued coverage, on a reciprocal basis, for people who move from one province to another. Second, some very valuable technical co-operation and standard setting has been encouraged by the hospital insurance scheme. Contracting out would remove the direct financial incentive for such co-operation. We would hope that suitable administrative arrangements could nevertheless ensure continuation of the same consultation and co-operation.

I have discussed hospital insurance at some length because it is by far the biggest of the current shared cost programs. Financially, indeed, it alone accounts for more than half of the programs which could be withdrawn in exchange for the abatement of federal taxes.

The next step, I think, is to hear your views. I have made it plain that the federal government is in principle willing to substitute equalized tax room, in the field of the personal income tax, for its share of hospital insurance. Without unanimous agreement this could not be put into full effect, as a nation-wide change, until 1970, after the expiry of existing agreements. If, in the meantime, only some provinces want to take over full responsibility for the program, we are willing to provide for contracting out. I have attempted to analyse what exactly, in this situation, the federal government can itself arrange with a contracting out province, and what would depend on the consent of the provinces as a whole. I am sure we can all see that the problem is complex. Clearly the time for the federal government to make a definite proposal is after hearing your views in more detail.

Before we do that, however, I should refer briefly to some of the other programs. The next most important, taken as a whole, are the assistance programs. Three of these are the so-called categorical programs which provide allowances for disabled people and blind people and old age assistance to those under 70. The fourth program, and of course the most expensive, is unemployment assistance, which operates in practice as something close to a general assistance program.

In my opening statement in November I indicated that, in the federal government's view, any changes in these welfare programs should be based on a review of the four programs as a whole. We cannot see any equitable basis for tax abatement as a substitute for some of the programs, without taking the others into account.

It was agreed at the November conference that there should be a general review of the joint welfare programs, and meetings of officials have since prepared the way for a conference of ministers of welfare which has been proposed for May. I suggest that it would be premature, meantime, to discuss contracting out arrangements for those programs.

There are, however, a great many smaller programs which we are ready to discuss now. The forestry programs, for example, were recently continued for one year. We would propose to extend them for a further two years—that is, for three more years in all. At the end of that time our present fiscal arrangements will be revised in any event. If, for the further two years, some provinces wish to contract out of the forestry programs, that can be arranged, with compensation to be paid in cash as a supplement to equalization payments.

The health grants are, in our view, a program of continuing value which we wish to sustain. We propose to go on offering them to provinces which so wish. We are, however, prepared to consider alternative arrangements with provinces which would prefer to contract out.

Before leaving the subject of health I should mention the hospital construction grants, although they are of a capital rather than a current nature. They have been a very valuable program in the past, but we believe that they will pretty well have achieved their purpose by the time existing commitments come to an end. That will be in 1968. Any province which wishes to contract out meantime should be able to do so.

There are some smaller programs which we are disposed to terminate, with due notice of course, and others for which contracting out with compensation can be arranged. However, I think that the next step in our discussion today should be a general exchange of the views of all the premiers. We are all aware, I am sure, that this is a complex subject. The approach that I have suggested, looking at the principal programs one by one, appears to provide the best way of making practical progress. The programs are too varied to lend themselves readily to discussion in principle.

This program by program approach should not, however, obscure the broader objective. There may be various criticisms of particular programs, but those criticisms in themselves are not so substantial as to require discussion at the level of this conference. The underlying reason for our discussion is the growing belief that, provided there is adequate equalization, services provided by the provinces should be paid for by taxes which the provinces raise. I do not think anyone quarrels with that principle. Certainly the federal government does not. The problem is how to apply it equitably. There are great practical difficulties in assessing compensation for existing programs on a basis that is fair to all provinces. I have outlined one approach. I do not say that it is certainly the best. When we have heard your views we may want to make other suggestions.

For example, it would be possible to consider, instead of the program by program method, what might be called a linear approach. By that I mean the rewriting of existing agreements so that the percentage of the federal contribution to the whole range of shared cost programs would be gradually reduced over a period of years. That might provide a more satisfactory basis for calculating the degree of abatement of federal taxes that would be fair compensation for all provinces; the abatement would, of course, be phased to go along with the reduction in federal costs.

I mention this alternative to suggest that we should none of us enter this discussion with closed minds. We are examining the future of programs which have, on the whole, served well in the past. Our aim now is to find out whether, with changing conditions, there may not be even better ways of doing things. There are few devices so good that they do not in time require re-examination. But it should not be a re-examination in which we deal only with pressing immediate problems. It should be a re-examination based on a look at the future and a full regard for the considerations which will truly maintain and strengthen the unity of our country in the years ahead.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 6, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the house on Friday that I would make a statement on motions on the recent federal-provincial conference held in Quebec city. Owing to the importance of the matters dealt with at this conference, I should apologize for the fact that the statement will be, I think, somewhat longer than is normally desirable in statements on motions; but I hope in this particular situation that will be understood and accepted. Even then it will not be possible for me to deal with all the matters discussed at Quebec, or perhaps fully deal with the three or four that I propose to mention.

The first matter which we discussed there, which is of immediate importance and interest to the house and indeed is before the house now, was the Canada pension plan. That matter of a contributory, nation-wide pension plan had been discussed at the conference held last November, and this was a continuation of the discussion we had at that time in the light of developments which had occurred in the meantime. I think it can be said that in the light of the discussion at Quebec the provincial and federal viewpoints have come closer together and that at the end of the conference there could be no doubt that pension coverage broadly of the kind proposed in the bill before this house will be made available in all Canada. It is quite true, of course, and indeed it was indicated before the Quebec conference, that the province of Quebec has announced its determination, its decision, to go ahead with a pension plan of its own. It will therefore be necessary for any national plan to work with the provincial plan.

I think it is also obvious that if other provinces, especially other big provinces, decide to go ahead with their own pension plan—and no decision of that kind was indicated at the conference in Quebec—this would make for certain administrative difficulties in regard to the Canada pension plan but would not make a Canada pension plan impossible in any way, shape or form. It is our view, and I think our view will be shared by many people, that a single national plan is preferable to national coverage by federal and provincial plans. Nevertheless, what I might call the mixed system would be unavoidable if a province or provinces decided to go ahead with their own plan. It is not the intention of the government, Mr. Speaker, to do anything by withdrawing the Canada pension plan to interfere with national coverage and we shall proceed to go ahead with our own plan as put before the house.

During the conference at Quebec the premier of that province gave a very useful clarification of his own government's thinking on pensions, and while it would be a breach of confidence for me to discuss his statement in detail, which has not yet been put before his own legislature, I think it is right to say that all those who were at the conference were impressed by what they heard of the Quebec plan. It is not identical, as is known, with the proposed federal plan. I think in some respects it is a less desirable plan than the federal plan, although that might not be true in the minds of those who drew it up for provincial purposes. But it is a plan, and I think this is the important thing, Mr. Speaker, with which it will be possible for a national plan to co-operate, and ensure by that co-operation complete portability between the provincial plan and the national plan. Mr. Lesage, the premier of Quebec, made it quite clear at the conference that he would work with the federal government to ensure that that kind of co-operation takes place if and when both plans are in effect.

No other province, as I have said, indicated at the conference an intention to establish a pension plan of its own. If one or more should do so the federal plan, of course, is so designed that it would still work with other provinces as long as all the provincial plans were compatible with portability, as is the proposed plan for Quebec. This is not, I repeat, to say that in our view a series of provincial plans is the best way to approach this important problem because that would make for administrative difficulty, but the purpose of our initiative in the federal government would be achieved if there was basic pension coverage of a portable nature available to all Canadians. The conference at Quebec city last week made this conclusion plain, that it is the desire of the provincial governments and the federal government to achieve this objective in terms that reconcile federal and provincial jurisdictions.

There were other matters that were discussed, some of them of importance and, indeed, in one or two cases of a controversial character. These controversies arose during the discussions. May I refer to the proposal for the extension of family allowances to age 18 that was put on the agenda by the federal government because certain proposals had been made in this house for that purpose. It is our view that the government's proposal for this extension is a simple extension of the program which this parliament legislated in 1944.

No new principle is involved and, in the government's opinion, no constitutional issue is raised by this proposal. The purpose of family allowances is, and always has been, to assist families in the support of children while they are dependant. In 1944, this purpose was pretty well served by establishing 16 as the cut-off age. Most children at that time began to have earnings and comparatively few extended their education beyond that age. The situation has now changed and more and more children remain dependant beyond the age of 16. We propose, Mr. Speaker, continuing the allowance to 18 instead of 16.

In making that extension, we will apply the same tests as to whether a child is dependant as there have been before, and we made that clear to the conference. There was discussion of this subject at the conference and there have been discussions outside the conference, which seem to assume that the present allowances are paid unconditionally to any child up to the age of 16. This is not the case. In order for a family to be entitled to the allowance under the present act, a child must be either at school or unfit to attend school and, in the case of a girl, she must remain unmarried. I should like to make this clear by reading section 4(2) of the Family Allowances Act, 1944:

> The allowance shall cease to be payable with the payment for the month when the child: (a) ceases to be maintained by a parent; (b) ceases to be resident in Canada; (c) attains the age of 16 years; (d) dies; or (e) in the case of a female child, marries.

This is the section in the present act. The new proposal, as we attempted to make clear at Quebec, simply maintains the present conditions in the section, but instead of reading "sixteenth birthday", if all proposals were adopted in their present form it would be "eighteenth birthday". This would be the only change made. No jurisdictional question would be applicable, then, to the amendment we propose to the legislation which the parliament of Canada passed in 1944.

Having made clear our view of the constitutional position, I hope, I should like to go on to recognize, as we recognized at the conference, that in the case of Quebec there is a real, practical problem in this area which does not arise in the case of any other province, because in Quebec students of the ages of 16 and 17 already receive from the provincial government an allowance which, although different from the family allowance in form, does have much the same effect. It is the government's intention, therefore, to consider, in the light of the discussions at the federal-provincial conference what we can do to avoid duplication between federal and provincial actions in this field in these age groups.

Now, another subject which received a good deal of discussion at the conference was the proposal of the federal government in respect of loans to students. In examining this question, Mr. Speaker, we discussed some jurisdictional problems which would arise out of a proposal of this kind. Here, again, a constitutional point has been raised, and in some quarters has been emphasized. So far as I know, no one has challenged the right of the federal government to make loans or, as would be the case in this proposal, to guarantee loans through the banks.

The Quebec view, as expressed at the conference, recognized that this is in itself constitutional but added the rider, and I quote from the statement:

> —provided they are normal loans on which interest is charged.

The lending may be unconstitutional, it is suggested, because we propose the students should get the loans without paying interest while they are studying. That view on unconstitutionality we are unable to accept. If we have jurisdiction over banking and credit —and that is not challenged—then it seems to me clear that this includes the right to make certain loans especially attractive, if parliament regards that as a policy in the general interest of Canadians.

But here again, in the implementing of policy, there are certain practical problems, as we recognized when we put this and the previous matter I have mentioned on the agenda for the Quebec conference before bringing a detailed measure before parliament. In many provinces, not only in one province but in many provinces, there are already student loan schemes of various kinds, and so we want to ensure that there are adequate funds for the needs of all students and that they can be borne, where necessary, without burdening the student with interest while he is a student, and yet this can be in an administrative way which will be satisfactory to the provinces. The Quebec conference provided a good practical discussion of the ways of achieving this objective and, as the communique points out, in our further consideration of the matter we shall take the views of the provinces, as expressed in Quebec, into consideration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the one subject which provided the most discussion at the conference was that of shared programs and the possibility of provincial governments contracting out for their provinces from certain of these programs. The policy of the federal government in this field, which had been announced more than once before this conference, was stated again at the conference, as I think will be made clear in the opening statement I gave at the conference, and which is now attached to Hansard of last Friday. It is that the federal government is willing to negotiate appropriate contracting out arrangements with any province so desiring, in respect of shared cost programs which are of a continuing or permanent nature and which involve fairly irregular annual expenditures.

Any arrangements worked out, and this was accepted in Quebec last week, should provide (1) that the contracting out should be accompanied by equivalent fiscal and financial compensation; (2) that any contracting out should not prejudice the position of the other provinces which remain in the programs and, (3) that the federal government should do what it could to ensure national standards of services in respect of the shared cost programs. This can be done in a variety of ways by conditional grants, conditional fiscal compensation, and indeed in other non-fiscal ways.

At Quebec, having discussed this question of principle, we made an examination of the major shared cost programs which were appropriate for the application of these contracting out principles. The only province at the conference which indicated its desire to contract out from any of these programs was the province of Quebec, although others thought that there should be more consideration given to provincial wishes, provincial needs and provincial priorities in initiating any new programs, so that the provinces should have more responsibility for the administration of such programs. There is no difference of opinion between the provincial governments and the federal government on that score, and perhaps in the future improvements can be made in that direction if new programs are initiated.

We agreed at Quebec that detailed negotiations should begin at once with any province desiring to contract out of any program, detailed negotiations for each individual program concerning which a province might wish to contract out by the application of an appropriate formula.

The first phase of contracting out arrangements—and this was put to the conference—would apply to an interim period during which any province would continue the shared program exactly as it is but would receive equal compensation in the form of tax room and equalization payments. Negotiation on these points will be conducted individually with the provinces which so wish and the other provinces would be kept informed, on the understanding, which they have a right to insist on, that contracting out by any province will not affect the programs for the other provinces. New arrangements for contracting out beyond this interim period will also be considered in technical negotiations but they will necessarily raise further issues of policy of concern to all the provinces whatever their future intentions regarding these programs, and so these arrangements which are worked out and informally adopted concerning them would be taken back for general federal-provincial discussion.

I think it is fair to say we came to a very satisfactory agreement at the conference with respect to this question of shared cost programs—how to deal with any province which might wish to contract out from a particular program or from particular programs in such a way as not to prejudice the interest of the others and in such a way as not to prevent the federal government discharging its obligation or doing what it can to ensure comparability of services across the country.

Then we discussed at some length, also, the question of fiscal relations. I may say that discussion on this important subject was very much to the point and very frank, and did indicate as hon. members know, certain differences of opinion not only between the provincial governments and the federal government, as one would expect—such differences have existed at every federal-provincial conference—but also differences of opinion and emphasis in some respects between provincial governments themselves. But there was general agreement that the problem was one of recognizing the needs and responsibilities of both levels of government, federal and provincial, and providing for as fair a division as possible of revenue sources between them in order to meet increasing responsibility.

The provinces made it clear that their responsibilities have increased, were increasing and were not likely to diminish, especially in the fields of education and communication, and that their existing sources of revenue were not sufficient to deal with these increased responsibilities. The spokesmen for the federal government, while recognizing this, emphasized that the federal government had its own increasing responsibilities to discharge to the Canadian people as a whole—responsibilities to deal with employment and unemployment, to direct economic and fiscal policies in the best interest of the whole nation, to equalize services and ensure comparable development in so far as government can do this, across the whole country; otherwise Canada will become a land of permanent "haves" and "have-nots" and the strains on our unity, already so great, would become intolerable. This was a federal responsibility we could not lose sight of as we discussed ways and means of helping provincial governments to discharge their responsibilities. No federal government can discharge its responsibilities to Canada by weakening itself financially, economically and politically, no matter how great its concern for provincial difficulties and its desire to help the provinces overcome them. I think, Mr. Speaker, we made that position clear to the conference. Therefore, in my view the federal government must remain strong enough financially and constitutionally to do the work allocated to it in our constitution. The spokesmen of the federal government made it known at Quebec that it intends to do what is possible to ensure this, while willing to examine every possible way of helping the provinces. As the communique states, there must be "mutual accommodation to reconcile their expenditure and revenue requirements."

For the current fiscal year, Mr. Speaker, that accommodation has been made, and it has been made I think in terms which do indicate the desire of the federal government to assist the provinces whenever that is possible. The accommodation made last November did not meet with the wishes of all the provinces, and no financial accommodation I have ever read about in these relations between the federal government and the provinces has at any time met the wishes of all the provinces. But it was laid down at our conference last November that certain changes could take place, and they have been reflected in our budget which has resulted in an additional amount of expenditure being transferred by the federal government to the provinces of $87,448,000. The arrangements for the current year had been made then, in November, so that in this matter the conference last week at Quebec was looking ahead beyond the current year. It was looking ahead in terms of the immediate necessities of the provinces, and we recognize those immediate necessities as we recognize our own. But we have been looking further ahead from the immediate necessities, and we agreed right away that to look ahead was to try to get away if we could from the ad hoc, piecemeal approach to this problem which has been followed over the years.

[Mr. Pearson.]

It was in that spirit that I proposed at the conference an approach toward finding a solution for these fiscal problems, an approach which I believe had never been made before. I suggested that the federal-provincial conference as a body—not the federal government, not a provincial government, but the federal-provincial conference as a body—should institute immediately a joint examination and review of this whole problem of fiscal relations. It would be a review of the nature and extent of federal-provincial taxes in addition to the financial responsibilities which nowadays have to be carried both by provincial and federal governments. It would be a review, as we put it in the communique, in depth, but it would be undertaken with all possible speed with the aim of producing a definite report by an early date in 1965. This proposal, which is in the communique, was welcomed by the premiers of all the provinces; indeed it was warmly endorsed by them. We in the federal government are now working on detailed proposals for the composition and terms of reference of a tax structure committee which we will be submitting to the provinces without delay. We will then ask the provinces, following the general agreement as to the desirability of the inquiry in itself, whether they will agree to take part by nominating a representative to the committee.

Perhaps I could conclude by reading what I said on this point at the last meeting of the conference:

> I think that our discussions have shown one thing above all with unquestionable clarity: we have not been getting to the roots of our problems. Our uncertainties take varying shapes, but we have in common a real uncertainty as to the nature of contemporary federal-provincial relationships within confederation.
> We all know that the answer to this problem will determine our survival, will govern our future as a federal state extending from coast to coast. We all know also that we will not find an answer through the kind of piecemeal consideration we have been giving to it. At our recent meetings we have been, I think, fairly successful in finding ad hoc solutions to points of immediate difficulty. As a group we have been reasonably adept at partial solutions and finding political and financial expedients. That is useful and essential. But it is not enough. We have to go deeper. The question is how.

Then I said:

> My suggestion is this: We as a conference should appoint a committee consisting of one minister from each provincial government and, say, two or three from the government of Canada. We should charge that committee, which would have to have full-time experts, to review the nature and extent of federal and provincial taxes in relation to the financial responsibilities which now have to be carried by both federal and provincial governments.
> This would be no ordinary committee. The inquiry will require great wisdom and expert knowledge. It will also require devotion to the ideal of a strong federal government and strong provincial governments, working together for the realization of a prosperous and united confederation.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a speech which began almost apologetically ended on a note of promise for the future. The setting up of a committee of 13 to look into the whole question of fiscal relations is indeed an indifferent conclusion to a most unsuccessful conference. I am surprised at the need for such committee to be set up because I seem to recollect that the premier of Quebec and the leader of the Liberal party, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), met together just one year ago and publicly agreed that the Liberal party had the solution to these problems. Now one year later we have the admission on the part of the Prime Minister that all they have had to date have been piecemeal, haphazard, ad hoc decisions; but now a new vista has opened before him and those associated with him which will bring about a new fiscal arrangement. As far as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) is concerned, he said on his arrival in Quebec: "I bring you no blank cheque". I am sure that all the premiers when they left agreed that that is exactly what they got following three days of discussion—a cheque completely blank, not filled out in any particular.

I do not want to go beyond the scope of the discussion which can take place at this point, but I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you would not consider it improper or out of place if I were to suggest that the Liberal party when in opposition had plans for Canadian unity to solve these problems, and to solve them finally and definitely. Now less than a year later we find divisions, cleavages and fissures in the Canadian confederation never equalled throughout the years since 1867. We believe —and there is no division between us and the government in this connection—that the strength of confederation is the major responsibility and objective if the federal system is to be maintained in law as well as in spirit. The Prime Minister has endeavoured to leave the impression that the recent conference was successful. It was a success in that it brought these various representatives together and they left in such good spirits; but the almost unanimous view of Canadians as a whole is that it was an abject failure. Indeed, to realize this one has only to read the press statement that was issued by Premier Lesage, which incidentally has not been filed or added as an appendix to Hansard, which set forth his view of that conference. No matter how much diplomatic finesse is apparent in the final communique, the conference was one of complete innocuity.

I am not going to refer in particular to the various matters with which the Prime Minister has dealt. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister smiles. I saw a picture of him in the Toronto Star and it said, "Pale Prime Minister speaks to press". This is the first time in history, sir, that I have known that difficulties changed the colour of one's hair from grey to black. The picture is well worth studying because it indicates that the day of marvels is not yet passed. We have heard about the doctrines of co-operative federalism. Do you remember, sir, what we used to hear about this? Co-operative federalism has in 12 months become synonymous with the epigram "60 days of decision".

What about the opening statement? The Prime Minister went before that conference and his remarks were limited to generalities. His only definiteness throughout the entire statement was with respect to contracting out provisions. The proposals advanced, as outlined in that speech, were indefinite, vague and general; there was nothing indicated of the leadership which we were led to believe would be given at this conference. In essence the proposals added up to vague declarations of good will and hopes of the future as to what might take place in the years ahead. I said there was no plan. There was, however, one striking plan placed before the premiers. It was that if the provinces would take over the administration of the act in regard to hospitalization, the Prime Minister would turn over to the provinces up to 40 per cent of the income tax. Well, sir, that plan had about the same hope of acceptance as if he had said they would turn over all the income tax to the provinces provided they took over the national debt of Canada.

That is the uncertainty here. This was a make-believe conference; one in which no action was taken, no determination was made; and it concluded with the expression of the desire of setting up a committee of 13, which has all the appearances of window dressing designed to conceal the failure of the federal government to have any plans to place before the conference.

I am very much concerned with the extension of contracting out. Is this one Canada, or is it not? Is it appropriate that the federal government should endeavour, or almost express the desire to engage in contracting out? Is it not a fact, sir, that contracting out, carried on to the degree envisaged by the Prime Minister, will mean in time the legalization of the de-confederation of our nation; the piecemeal dismemberment of the basic principles of confederation? Surely the Liberal party today does not subscribe to the disintegration of our country through setting up a variety of plans in every part of our country covering such matters as come within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada? And yet that is where the diplomatic dawdling of one year on the part of this government has brought this nation. It has been diplomatic. The Prime Minister was diplomatic when the premier of Quebec set forth what he wanted in the month of April, 1963; and today the same situation prevails. But what does the premier of Quebec now say? As far as the Canada pension plan is concerned, which is still referred to as a national plan, I am not going into details at this time before we have the opportunity to debate that matter; but does anyone say a national plan can be envisaged with one, or two, or more provinces abstaining? What has taken place in the thinking of the government? Only a month or so ago the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) said—and this was also said during the Ontario election— that if more than one province refused to go into the plan, that would be the end of it. What has taken place in the interval to change that thinking? The Prime Minister says they would establish what he called a mixed system. I agree that never in the history of this country has a government been more qualified for that description in its dealings with the affairs of this nation.

Then there is the question of family allowances. There was no question, according to the Prime Minister, that they were entirely within the jurisdiction of the federal government, without regard to the fact that a rider is attached providing that the children eligible for this payment continue in school. What does the premier of Quebec say following this wonderful meeting of minds, to use the expression that was indulged in on one or two occasions by one of the officials close to the throne? What happened in this meeting of minds? The premier of Quebec says he is going to challenge this in the courts. A year ago there was happiness in the family as between the federal Liberals and the provincial Liberals; they saw eye to eye. Now they see eye into eye. They look at one another with that challenge, and they are going into the courts. That is what this country has been brought to within a few short months.

Then there is the question of loans to students. This is the substitute sop for the plan that was promised to the student body of Canada—10,000 scholarships. What has happened to the scholarships? They have gone with the Canada development corporation.

An hon. Member: Gone with the Liberal wind.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: One wonders how a government could have found itself in such difficulty in so short a time. There was reference to the setting up of this committee. We have had any number of discussions with regard to looking into the problems of taxation and the fiscal relations between the federal government and the provinces. We have had a royal commission on that subject and now, after all these divisions and separations, the only part of the remarks of the Prime Minister that showed any enthusiasm was as he placed before us that nebulous scheme that holds out, as Mr. Lesage has said, no hope for the problem that is faced by this nation at this time.

I am not going to quote from the various press references on this occasion, but I do say that the premiers of Canada generally went home not only unsatisfied but uncertain as to the future of this country. I do not want to read into the record the press statement made by the premier of Quebec, so I will only refer to one or two comments. In so far as the plan for the committee of 13 is concerned he said:

—it was agreed that action would quickly be taken to study the mechanism of contracting out and of applying them.

He said they would look into that. On the second subject and an equally fundamental one, that of fiscal arrangements, with regard to which a committee of ministers will make a study in depth, he had this to say:

If we have understood the correct interpretation of the project, this would be the true and deep justification for the intergovernmental committee which has been proposed—I merely said that we would like to give further thought to this question before making a statement.

The Prime Minister said today it has been agreed to, so it must have been agreed to since this press statement was made by the premier of Quebec. But then the premier of Quebec went on to say:

For this committee in itself does not settle, nor does it promise to settle with the dispatch which we believe indispensable, the problem of fiscal arrangements—

Then he quotes words he used in the brief and goes on to say:

These words and the tone of urgency in which they were couched were not written without sober thought. Very precisely they mean that we do not believe that Quebec can wait any longer for steps to be taken.

Here we have a renewal of the ultimatums of last April that were delivered by the ministers of that government. Nothing is said about an increase in the share of the provinces in the taxation field, but the premier of Quebec had this to say:

—three figures, 25-25-100, cannot remain a dead issue....We must say that the government of Quebec is not satisfied—

Then he goes on to say with regard to education that what has been done in the two most recent initiatives of the federal government constitute encroachments on the most important sector of provincial jurisdiction, that of education. He says that loans to students are in the same position. Then he goes on to say:

> —we cannot accept that the federal administration commit the error, regardless of the good faith in which it would be committed, of thus invading a field which is incontestably of our jurisdiction and which, furthermore, we have occupied for the past three years.

Yet in the face of that the Prime Minister tries to leave the impression that all is well. Sir, a great challenge has come to this country, a challenge whether or not we are going to have one Canada, which has been the policy of the Conservative party from the days of Macdonald and Cartier to today. What happened at this conference constitutes a challenge to that whole concept; and it is not the provinces that are responsible for what has taken place, for the tremendous upheaval in the thinking of the people of Canada. Those responsible sit in the government ranks on the treasury benches. A year ago they said they had the answers; today they say that a committee of 13 may have the answers.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's report on the federal-provincial conference held in Quebec city last week was interesting but discouraging. Many had hoped that at this conference the heads of the governments of Canada would be able to demonstrate a measure of statesmanship that would prove they were conscious of the fact that the greatness of a country depends on more than just the sum total of its parts. One became conscious as the conference proceeded that the representatives of some parts of Canada seem to have lost sight of the fact that they were Canadians as well as speaking for the provinces which they represented.

The Liberal party has always boasted that it and it alone can provide national unity in Canada. I want to say that if last week was a demonstration of the Liberal party's idea of national unity, then heaven help us in the years that lie immediately ahead.

The Prime Minister has mentioned three matters and I should like to say a word or two about each of them. The first is the Canada pension plan. We welcome the statement of the Prime Minister that it is the intention of the government to proceed with this plan even though some of the provinces may institute plans of their own. So far the only province that has indicated definitely that it will proceed with a provincial plan is the province of Quebec. I do hope that every effort will be put forth to persuade the province of Ontario to join the federal plan.

There is one feature which I am sure is of interest to the premier of Ontario and which in my opinion is negotiable. That is the matter of the funds under the plan which are available for investment. In its original form there was no division of the funds with the provinces. In the measure now before the house I believe the proposal is that 50 per cent of the funds will be available for provincial investment. It may be that the provinces, particularly the province of Ontario, would settle for a larger percentage of that fund, and I personally can see no objection to agreeing to 75 per cent or 80 per cent of the fund being used for provincial investment. If that would keep Ontario in the plan I think it ought to be proposed to them.

There is one thing I hope the government will not do. I hope it will not agree to any further curtailment of the benefits which are to be made available to the contributors and participants in the plan. The Prime Minister said, if I took down his words correctly, that "pension coverage will be made available in all of Canada." I assume he means by this that every person in Canada will be covered by a provincial plan or the federal plan. This will at least be better than nothing. But a patchwork plan, with some people belonging to a provincial plan and some to a federal plan and where no matter how many administrative difficulties are resolved there will still be an abundance of red tape as people move from one part of the country to the other, will be a plan that is second best to the original idea of a Canada-wide pension plan.

I hope too that if the government is not able to persuade the provinces of Quebec and Ontario to forgo the establishment of provincial plans it will revert to the plan which it envisaged last July, which was much more generous to the participants and which was trimmed down deliberately by the government in order to meet the objections of certain provincial premiers.

The second thing to which the Prime Minister made reference was loans to students and the extension of family allowances to cover those 16 and 17 years of age who are still attending school. I hope the government will proceed with both of these measures, irrespective of any threats to test their constitutionality in the courts. I am not a constitutional expert, but I am sure the government has looked into this matter. The federal government already guarantees bank loans for home improvements, for small businessmen, for fishermen, for farmers and for municipalities. Certainly the guaranteeing of loans to students, even though part of the interest is to be forgiven, would seem unlikely to raise any serious constitutional problem.

So far as family allowances are concerned, these have been unchallenged for years, and the extension of the age from 16 to 18 ought not to seriously affect and will not, in my opinion, seriously affect the principle.

The third thing to which the Prime Minister has made reference is the shared programs. I want to say to the Prime Minister that I was disappointed that he, in his opening statement, raised this whole question of shared programs, and raised it in a way which in my opinion will do great harm to the bonds that hold confederation together. I readily admit there are many shared programs that need to be reexamined. There are many conditional grants which are much too rigid, with the result that the provinces cannot make effective use of them. A number of the shared programs should be reexamined and in some cases discarded in return for some form of unconditional grant, some further tax abatement or a further adjustment in the equalization grants.

The Prime Minister himself, in his opening statement, selected the hospital insurance plan to illustrate that it might be possible to turn this program over to the provinces in return for a 13 per cent abatement in personal income tax. I know that this agreement has not been concluded, but the Prime Minister's statement amounted to an offer. I hope that the house and the government will keep in mind what is involved if the Prime Minister's offer is accepted. Health and welfare programs are part of the atmosphere that produces a sense of identity in a country. The fact they are Canadians entitles them—from one part of this country to the other, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to enjoy certain basic health and welfare rights, not because they come from Prince Edward Island or British Columbia but because they are Canadian and have inalienable rights, is the thing that gives people a Canadian identity. The fact they are Canadians entitles them—without any red tape or having to fill out provincial forms or go through a lot of administrative bureaucracy—to these benefits wherever they are in Canada and, in certain cases, wherever they are in the world.

Now, we are destroying this concept the moment we turn hospital insurance over to the provinces. It is all right to say that for the first few years one of the conditions of receiving tax abatement will be adherence to certain national standards. How is the federal government going to enforce such standards? With the passage of time these plans will change in each province. They have changed already in some provinces. Some provinces charge so much a day, some have a sales tax and some have a per capita tax. There are already variations. I submit that in a quarter of a century we will not recognize the hospital insurance plan if the day comes when its administration and financing is done by ten separate governments.

There is a more serious objection. The Liberal party has been committed for 40 years to the establishment in Canada of a comprehensive national health insurance program, jointly operated by the federal and provincial governments. The logical development was to extend the hospital insurance plan and add to it step by step the various health programs such as medicare, dental care and optomertic care, drugs and other health services. The day that hospital insurance is fragmented between the provinces across Canada, the hope of extending that program into a comprehensive national health insurance program goes down the drain. I hope the government will think this matter over very carefully before proceeding along the lines outlined by the Prime Minister.

I recognize that there is a problem in the province of Quebec and that the government may have to make special arrangements for that province. I ask the government, in making special arrangements for the province of Quebec, not to forget one very basic principle, namely that a concession made to Quebec which might help Quebec will not help the other provinces, and that the government has to keep in mind the differential in the per capita revenue from taxes levied in the different provinces. The giving of a tax abatement to the province of Prince Edward Island will never allow Prince Edward Island to operate a hospital insurance plan or a comprehensive health program. The small provinces must not be lost sight of in the government's desire to appease the very legitimate aspirations of the two larger provinces. These smaller provinces cannot manage these health and welfare programs alone, even if the government gives them a tax abatement. They have not the revenue resources at their disposal to manage programs which, if the government thinks they are expensive today, will be tremendously more expensive within the next decade or two.

I say to the government that while special concessions and special arrangements may have to be made with the province of Quebec because this is a bilingual and bicultural country, I hope the government will not adopt policies that will fragment the rest of Canada.

I am saying to the government that the statement outlined by the Prime Minister of Canada the other day in Quebec city is a serious one. If the government proceeds with it they are setting their feet along a trail that will lead to the weakening and balkanization of Canada and with it the loss of a sense of identity without which no people can become a great nation.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, this not being the time to debate the matter my remarks will be brief. I am convinced, however, that we are dealing with what is the most serious and most critical single problem we have in Canada.

As I listened to the remarks of the previous speakers I could not help but think that perhaps in this situation we have an important role to play as a house of minorities. This is something which does not concern one party but which concerns all of us as representatives of the Canadian people. This is no time for a partisan approach to this problem. We must somehow join hands, both provincially and politically, to try to find an answer to the problem before Canada ceases to be a nation at all.

Speaking very briefly to the several points which have been mentioned, so far as pensions are concerned there are two basic objectives behind any pension plan, be it provincial or federal. These are that security be guaranteed to our people, particularly when because of age or for other reasons they are no longer able to earn their own living; and second that the arrangements which provide this security be made on such a basis that portability will permit an individual to carry that security which he must have, and which we all desire him to have, with him, regardless of the conditions or situation in which he finds himself.

I am concerned whether or not we can have a truly national plan if 30 per cent or 65 per cent of our people, because of the actions of their governments in their particular provinces, refuse to go along with it. I would caution the government not to proceed too quickly just because it was its original intention to bring about a national pension plan, for fear that it may bring in a program that will defeat the very purpose which it is intended to accomplish.

Whether it be a unanimously agreed plan or whether some of the provinces choose to opt out, the fact remains that it must be a pension plan which will have some degree of uniformity if it is to guarantee the portability and security which we are attempting to achieve. Therefore I trust the government will not plunge into this thing because of any commitments it may have made previously, and I urge it to proceed cautiously, having regard not only to the provincial aspects but to the economic situation in Canada.

In relation to family allowance extension and student loans, if we have been able to carry on with this phase of our programs without being challenged, as we have in the past, there can be no valid reason for challenging it at this point. These two very important matters, although they may seem minor, must be carried through, and I trust they will, because they involve the education of our young people and the provision they must make at this time for their future means of livelihood.

In relation to fiscal policies, and this also includes the shared programs, the federal government should take the lead in setting out a pattern in which the autonomy of the provinces is truly respected. I cannot see how this or any government can continue to hang on to certain responsibilities relating to fiscal policies and shared programs that were taken away from the provinces on a temporary basis during wartime, and which have not been returned since.

I believe all the provinces—remembering there are some that must receive help and others that do not need help, and that because of this somehow there must be a continuing program of equalization—would be much happier if they knew exactly just how far the federal government was going to go in respecting autonomy, and if at the same time the federal government made clear to the provinces the responsibilities they have to maintain in order to secure the necessary funds for our nation to continue as a nation.

This problem will not be solved by dividing ourselves into ten pieces, or by neglecting or paying mere lip service to the basic autonomy we regard as essential for the provinces. In this regard we must remember that Canada is a nation and we all have responsibilities, both individually and as provinces, to this nation. We must remember that there is only one taxpayer in Canada and that all taxes collected by whatever form of government come out of his pocket. That taxpayer is and includes all of us.

Whether we call the answer to the problem co-operative federalism, or whether we call it confederation as it was originally spoken of when we came together as a group of provinces, the fact remains that there must be a foundation on which a nation can stand. Unless we recognize that and give it definite form, then it is impossible to continue as a country.

That is why we must regard this particular statement which the Prime Minister has given as of such magnitude that it is the most important thing we have facing us in this session. Therefore I urge that we all face it from this aspect, and I would ask the government that it take the lead in setting up not just occasional federal-provincial conferences—though we have had many in recent months—and not just a study in regard to fiscal policies, but some kind of permanent machinery to make a more careful study of the whole question of confederation to determine by what means we can continue as a nation in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) may speak about the constitutionality of certain steps taken during the last federal-provincial conference; the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) may continue to play politics with these matters; the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Douglas) may fear a balkanization of Canada, but there is one thing which still remains and should not be forgotten: we are now experiencing in Quebec a desire, a pride and even more, a passion and an aggressive eagerness to take in our own hands our possibilities, our facilities and our means of development and self-attainment.

That is, Mr. Speaker, the basis of all discussions such as those which were held during the last federal-provincial conference. Exactly a year ago yesterday, the Quebec premier said:

> Twelve months will elapse before the next budget is brought down. Either the central government, whichever party comes into office on April 8, will avail itself of the 12 coming months to take into account Quebec's requirements, or we, in Quebec, will have seen to it, during the same period, to make the necessary decisions in fiscal matters.

We have waited a year. That period seemed long to us. During the past year several happenings have stressed the insistence and determination of Quebec to recover and take over control of its destiny and the sovereignty of its means of action.

At that time it claimed 25, 25 and 100 per cent of three sources of income. The majority said: this is only the beginning, we want 100 per cent.

Perhaps some members will not understand what this means, but we know, because we are proud of our destiny and we believe in it.

The federal-provincial conference took place in two stages and ended up as a complete failure, in spite of what the Prime Minister may say, he might shut his eyes on the matter or be blinded by his entourage. It might be that entourage which is mostly to blame, and especially the French Canadian ministers, who far from being brilliant, dared not take their own place and who acted as flatterers and yes-men, rather than being the spokesmen and flag-bearers of the French Canadian people in defence of their deep and fair claims.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) may say that everything is fine, but it is because he is not aware of what is happening at the present time in the province of Quebec. And the other French Canadian ministers can remain deaf and dumb because they care more for their quiet life, their little job, than for the rights of their compatriots within confederation which they should be fighting for.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest to the hon. member that while criticism of the action of the government is well within the rules, language bordering on personal attack is neither in good taste nor is it within the rules.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: It may be that in the past we, in Quebec, tried again and again to find guilty parties everywhere, without exactly finding the right ones, because in most cases they belonged to our own people.

Many times, in the house, I deemed it advisable to let the present government know how serious and determined the people of Quebec were about their rights. We deemed it advisable to make suggestions, radical sometimes, but always logical, realistic and sensible.

The Prime Minister and his government chose not to listen. The federal-provincial conference is over and we do not hesitate to state that it was a dialogue between deaf people.

We are still talking of the statement made earlier by the Prime Minister on the constitutionality or granting family allowances at 16 or 17 years of age. Since when is there anything in the Quebec legislation making it compulsory to attend school up to 18 years of age? Since when? We believe that is a direct interference of the federal government into the educational field of the province of Quebec. The intrusion first started into well defined fields and as each year goes by we see the federal government intrude in other educational fields. We are determined to put a stop to these intrusions.

Today, following the federal-provincial conference, what do we hear in the province of Quebec? As far as the people are concerned, it has been a failure. The federal-provincial conference was an abject failure, and that fact has been confirmed in editorials published by various newspapers in the province of Quebec.

May I quote only one editorial published in Le Soleil on April 4 and written by Mr. Henri Dutil. It reads as follows:

The last call has really been sounded and we may have seen the last federal-provincial conference. That is the opinion now prevailing in serious circles where the affairs of the nation are discussed daily.

Now, we may read in l'Action the following item, signed by Jean Hubert:

The fact that the Quebec premier, Mr. Jean Lesage, considered that he should personally issue a different press release from the official one, points unquestionably to the gravity of the situation.

The problem did not take shape overnight. It is due to growing federal intrusion in provincial affairs, and more particularly in the taxation field.

I shall also quote Mario Cardinal, writing in Le Devoir:

Perhaps confederation never has seemed as publicly threatened and at such a high level.

And there is the large heading of an article by Jean-Pierre Fournier, which says:

Confederation torn apart.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are reports and editorials which deal with the present situation.

We saw students make a public demonstration to try and open the Prime Minister's eyes, during the federal-provincial conference, and make suggestions which were serious in themselves and should have been taken into consideration. But nothing was done. Today, there is some talk about celebrating confederation. Listen to what is being said in the province of Quebec in respect of confederation. Practically nobody there believes in a confederation, the centennial of which should call for a celebration.

And who is responsible? Ottawa has its share of responsibility.

If we take a closer look at that situation, we realize that there are in fact persons to blame, not only in Ottawa, but directly within the provincial government. Incidentally, about that federal-provincial conference, may I point out the stand taken by the Quebec premier on that occasion?

We cannot forget that he was once a member of the federal cabinet which made headway in the spoliation of the rights of French Canadians by the federal government. We cannot forget either that he was then a champion of centralization, here in Ottawa.

We wonder whether it is not for that reason that he is so soft towards infringements by Ottawa.

Now, he claims to be an autonomist, and we are really amazed by the lack of seriousness in his fight against that new centralization.

We only have to recall that when arrangements on taxation rights were made during the last war, to enable the federal government, because of the urgency, to take over certain direct taxes to meet the needs of war, it was provided that after a period of one year, an order in council passed by a province could end that centralization of taxation rights. Why does not Mr. Lesage take such a step? Why does he not take back those sources of income and why does he not put an end, in a unilateral manner, to that infringement by the federal government into the field of direct taxation?

Is the premier of the province of Quebec serious when he fights to regain our fiscal rights? Today, we indeed have cause to wonder.

You recall what happened at the time of the last federal-provincial conference. Beaten by Ottawa, he has now changed and wants to turn against the people of Quebec and deprive them through double taxation.

Mr. Speaker, I take advantage of this forum to tell the government of the province of Quebec that when one has rights, he does not discuss, he takes them, especially when the law allows him to do so. I believe it would be appropriate to quote the statement of Premier Manning of Alberta who said, as reported by the newspaper Le Soleil of April 4:

Premier Jean Lesage was not roaring like a lion.

It was laughable to read some accounts of the alleged threats during the federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Speaker, at least we tried discussing, but to no avail.

Studies, committees, conferences, discussions, meetings among 13 ministers, all that, from now on, should end.

From now on, we shall take the necessary democratic means to recover what belongs to Quebec. We shall take those means when and where they are required.

As I said, we have nothing against the other provinces or the other citizens of Canada. We do not want to take anything away from them. We want only what belongs to us and we shall get it.

Mr. Speaker, I shall close my remarks by quoting a sentence of the mayor of Montreal, Mr. Jean Drapeau. As stated in Le Devoir of this morning, Mr. Drapeau said:

There are three different trends among French Canadians: co-operative federalism, a binational confederation and independence for Quebec; there is no doubt that it is mostly between these last two alternatives that some day a choice will have to be made.

Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat this last part of the sentence:

There is no doubt it is mostly between those last two alternatives that some day a choice will have to be made.

And Le Devoir goes on:

Such are the terms, which leave little room for ambiguity, in which the mayor of Montreal,

Mr. Jean Drapeau, predicted yesterday the failure of Canadian co-operative federalism.

Mr. Speaker, I say to everybody and to the country as a whole: if you still want Canada to remain united, accept the theory of bi-nationalism, and do it before it is too late, or else it will be complete and total separatism.

Mr. Speaker, those words contain no threat and no ultimatum. They simply constitute an expression of an implacable reality and an irreversible movement from a proud and noble people who understands that it must control its economy, its educational system and its social institutions, to expand in accordance with its own aspirations.

Henceforth, our activities will converge along these lines, and you can believe me when I say that we shall win, with or without the co-operation of Canada as a whole.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the same caveat given by the Chair about this type of bill I call on the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-88, to amend the British North America Act, 1867 (abolition of the Senate).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to implement the fundamental principle of democracy that the laws of a country should be made only by the elected representatives of the people. Its aim is to remove the possibility of the legislation enacted by the elected representatives being interfered with or delayed by a body of persons which has no mandate from the people of this country. The Senate being such a body this bill proposes its abolition.

Clause 1 of the bill provides that the parliament of Canada shall consist of the Queen and the House of Commons; the rest of the clauses in the bill make the necessary consequential amendments to the British North America Act.

I should like to express my thanks to our parliamentary counsel for his assistance to me in drafting this bill.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Knowles: I am sure that in view of this fact, Mr. Speaker, your caveat was unnecessary.

In view of the interest in this bill I wonder whether, after it has had first reading, there might be unanimous consent to its being put at the top of the list of public bills for discussion on second reading later this week.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Although the detail of the proposed bill is not before the house its stated purpose makes it abundantly clear that no matter how the bill may have been drafted, or by whom, the proposed bill would be unconstitutional. I say this because its effect would be to alter radically in a unilateral manner the composition of the parliament of Canada.

The British North America Act contains guarantees to certain provinces such as Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and more recently Prince Edward Island, whereby the representation in this house from those provinces is linked to the number of senators from those same provinces. To abolish the Senate without the consent of those provinces, and in fact of all the provinces, would be to brush aside constitutional guarantees solemnly made, and as solemnly observed to date, in order to ensure the original entry to and continued participation in Canada of those provinces so affected. The hon. member has not this consent nor could he get it. Further, such a bill would have consequential effects on the Representation Act, the details of which I need not go into but which, I submit, result from the same defect I mentioned previously.

Finally, I submit that it has never been in the contemplation of the constitution of Canada nor in the concept of our parliament that either the House of Commons or the Senate should have the right even to introduce legislation to abolish the other. To concede that the Commons could legislate the abolition of the Senate must lead to the equally absurd proposition that the Senate could legislate the abolition of this chamber. On these limited grounds of unconstitutionality—and there are others—I submit that any proposed bill to abolish the Senate is presently out of order and should not be read even the first time. It is repugnant, sir.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the point of order which has been raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). First may I say that I must express surprise that he presumed to comment on the details of a bill which has not yet been printed, and therefore which he has not seen, although Your Honour has in your hand, a copy of the bill. The hon. member for Edmonton West suggested that a problem is raised in connection with representation in this house. As Your Honour can see if you look at the bill, a copy of which you have in your hand, it contains clauses dealing with that very point, namely the basis on which certain floors are provided for representation in this house. I am also amazed that my hon. friend, being the learned lawyer he is, referred to these senatorial floors as though they were provided in the original British North America Act. Such is not the case; they were not written into the act until 1915.

Therefore I suggest that the points raised by the hon. member fall to the ground. The fact is that under Section 91A of the British North America Act we have the right to amend our constitution with respect to matters which are exclusively federal. We have already done so with respect to the representation in the House of Commons. There are other bills on the order paper with respect to matters of representation and the qualifications required of a senator. Both the present government and the previous one have made such proposals. I suggest that with regard to the right of this House of Commons to introduce and deal with such a bill and send it on to the other place there is no question whatsoever; and I feel that the advice I received from our parliamentary counsel is superior to the advice which has been tendered to Your Honour by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will have noticed that I gave a caveat at the beginning of the introduction of this bill, and at this time it seems desirable to refer hon. members to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 71(5):

The Speaker will not give a decision upon a constitutional question nor decide a question of law, though the same may be raised on a point of order or privilege.

In the circumstances it seems to me there is only one thing to do, and I will do it now. Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Knowles) which was agreed to on the following division:

British North America Act

Mr. Knowles moved the first reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Some hon. Members: Next sitting.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest in this bill and the desire that there seems to be to debate it, would the house give unanimous consent to it being placed at the top of the list of public bills so that second reading could be taken tomorrow?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Speaking for the official opposition, we would certainly do that in order to give the members of this house an opportunity to stand up and be counted on the question of the abolition of parliament; because under section 17 of the British North America Act parliament shall consist of the Queen, an upper house styled the Senate, and the House of Commons. We hope that these people will have an opportunity of standing up and voting for this.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, though there may be bills of equal or even greater importance on the order paper, in view of the stand taken by the Leader of the Opposition, and in view of the necessity of clearing up this violation of the bill of rights on the part of the official opposition by refusing to allow even the introduction of a bill—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: If a bill is not suitable for introduction, it should not appear on the order paper. However, once it is on the order paper it should be introduced.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I am shocked and amazed at the right hon. gentleman refusing to allow a bill of this kind even to be introduced for discussion in the House of Commons. I think he ought to be given every opportunity, as quickly as possible, to explain his unbelieveable position on this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked unanimous consent of the house to have this bill put at the top of the list. Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Edmonton West said no.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Did any hon. member say no?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Knowles: Five o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. Cashin: With reference to the vote that was just taken, I may say I was paired and had I not been paired I would have voted for the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Chretien: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHURCHILL—DROPPING OF MOTION FROM ORDER PAPER

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege. I should like to inquire why the motion standing in the name of the Prime Minister was dropped from the order paper without the authority of the house? The motion read as follows:

March 27—The Prime Minister:

That immediately after royal assent has been given to the bill providing for the appropriation based on supplementary estimates (E), this house adjourn until Monday, April 6, 1964.

It was called on Friday and the Prime Minister said "Stand", as recorded in Hansard. Why does it not appear on today's order paper?

Mr. Knowles: Because it was not in the possession of the house.

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that when a notice of this particular type is given, until such time as the motion is introduced, the Clerk of the house, when notified the motion is not being proceeded with, has the right to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask, then, what the purpose is in asking the house if it consents to the motion being allowed to stand, as was done on Friday? It was in the possession of the house in that it appeared on the order paper and the house must be asked what it intends to do about it. The house may refuse to let it stand.

Mr. Knowles: What does the hon. member want to do about that now?

Mr. Speaker: The house cannot refuse the request of the government to stand the motion. In the present case, I understand that a request to remove the motion was made to the Clerk and consequently it was taken off the order paper.

Mr. Starr: More short cuts.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GOVERNMENT PROPERTIES IN OTTAWA AND HULL

Question No. 68—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What is the estimated total value of government properties and lands in Ottawa and Hull?
2. What were the expropriation costs to the government during the past five years?
3. What (a) provincial (b) municipal (c) school taxes did the government pay during the past two years?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. Total accepted value of federal property: (a) within the boundaries of the city of Hull $8,053,025[1]; (b) within the boundaries of the city of Ottawa $117,350,000[2].

2. The expropriations made by the Department of Public Works in the Ottawa-Hull district, from December 1959 to December 1963 amounted to $619,384 in all.

The expropriation costs to the national capital commission in the past five years have been $11,984,580.

3. Ottawa: (a) Not available; (b) and (c) grants in lieu of municipal and school taxes paid to the city of Ottawa: (1) for 1962 tax year $5,369,121*; (2) for 1963 tax year $5,625,952*.

Hull: (a) Not available. (b) Grants in lieu of taxes paid to city of Hull: (1) for 1962/63 tax year $216,083; (2) for 1963/64 tax year $216,083. (c) Grants in lieu of taxes paid to Hull school commission: (1) for 1962/63 tax year $217,432; (2) for 1963/64 tax year $211,544.

[1] Approved assessed value on which the annual grant is paid under the Municipal Grants Act.

[2] Estimated approved assessed value on which the 1963 annual grant will be paid under the Municipal Grants Act.

* Interim payments representing 95 per cent of estimated final grants.

SHIPS CARRYING CARGO TO NORTH

Question No. 180—Mr. Smith:

1. How many cargo-carrying ships were employed by the Department of Transport and other government agencies for carrying cargo into northern and Arctic areas of Canada during the 1963 shipping season?
2. How many of these ships were built in Canada?
3. How many of these ships were Canadian owned?
4. How many of these ships were owned by the Canadian government?
5. How many of the ships were foreign owned?
6. What was the total tonnage of the foreign ships so employed?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. No cargo carrying ships were employed by the R.C.M. Police for carrying cargo into northern and Arctic areas of Canada during the 1963 shipping season, however, 15 vessels under charter or owned by the Department of Transport and two owned by the Hudson's Bay Company carried cargo for the R.C.M. Police.

26 by the Department of Transport.

2. 15.

3. 26.

4. 18.

5. Nil.

6. Nil.

*CREDIT FOR SEED GRAIN PURCHASES, MANITOBA

Question No. 250—Mr. Slogan:

In view of the severe crop failure experienced in the eastern and interlake areas of Manitoba, would the government extend the provisions of the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the powers of the Farm Credit Corporation to make it possible for farmers in this area to obtain credit for the purchase of seed grain?

Mr. Beer: Assistance in the procurement of seed in the circumstances referred to in the question is provided by provincial and municipal governments and is regarded as a provincial matter. The provincial statute in Manitoba under which assistance is available in unorganized areas is the seed and fodder relief act. In municipalities it is covered in the municipal act.

*REC-STONE COMPANY, VILLE D'ANJOU, QUE.

Question No. 257—Mr. Marcoux:

Does the Minister of Justice intend to ask the superintendent of bankruptcy to make an investigation into the case of the Rec-Stone Company of Ville d'Anjou, P.Q. and, if so, will the superintendent take steps to establish the role played in that company by Mr. Gerard Levesque, barrister?

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: 1. The Rec-Stone Company was declared bankrupt by virtue of a trustee's order issued on January 29, 1964. The first meeting of the creditors was held only recently, that is on February 20. Under the Bankruptcy Act, the superintendent of bankruptcy must control the administration of the trustees but it is not his duty to inquire about the conduct of people interested in a previous bankruptcy. It is up to the creditors to take that initiative.

2. Consequently, it is not intended to ask the superintendent of bankruptcy to make an investigation.

Questions

*CONDEMNATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Question No. 272—Mr. Klein:

Has the government given consideration to the enactment of legislation to provide that all propaganda and organizations based on ideas or theories of the superiority of one race or group of persons of one colour or ethnic origin with a view to justifying or promoting racial discrimination in any form shall be severely condemned as provided for in the resolution adopted by the general assembly of the United Nations on November 21, 1963, and subscribed to by Canada?

Mr. Haidasz: See answer to 274.

*LEGISLATION AGAINST RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Question No. 273—Mr. Klein:

Has the government given consideration to the enactment of legislation to provide that all incitement to or acts of violence, whether by individuals or organizations, against any race or group of persons of another colour or ethnic origin shall be considered an offence against society and punishable under law as provided for in the resolution adopted by the general assembly of the United Nations on November 21, 1963, and subscribed to by Canada?

Mr. Haidasz: See answer to 274.

*LEGISLATION TO IMPLEMENT U.N. RESOLUTION ON RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Question No. 274—Mr. Klein:

Has the government given consideration to the enactment of legislation to provide that "in order to put into effect the purposes and principles of the present declaration, all states shall take immediate and positive measures, including legislative and other measures, to prosecute and/or outlaw organizations which promote or incite to racial discrimination, or incite to or use violence for purposes of discrimination based on race, colour or ethnic origin" as provided for in the resolution adopted by the general assembly of the United Nations on November 21, 1963, and subscribed to by Canada?

Mr. Haidasz: The declaration on the elimination of racial discrimination, to which the question refers, was adopted unanimously by the United Nations general assembly last December. While a declaration does not impose any formal obligation on a country which votes for it, it does provide a standard of conduct for members of the United Nations and suggests guide lines for legislation. Most member governments will probably not take at this time any legislative action as a result of the declaration, since the human rights commission, on the instructions of the United Nations general assembly, is engaged in drafting a convention on the elimination of racial discrimination which will be the definitive document. If subscribed to by member states, the convention will require to be implemented and governments will have to consider whether legislation is necessary to carry out the articles of the convention.

Quite apart from these developments at the United Nations, a problem has arisen in Canada resulting from recent outbreaks of racial propaganda. Hon. members will recall the remarks on this subject made by the Minister of Justice to this house on March 10. Later, outside the house, the minister indicated that he favoured the principle of an amendment to forbid racial propaganda and that the real problem is to find a formula which meets the evil upon which all decent men agree without, at the same time, interfering with a proper freedom of speech. He indicated that the matter was being pursued energetically and that appropriate measures would be taken as early as possible when an acceptable formula had been found.

This answer also applies to starred questions 273 and 274.

*FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISHERIES COMMITTEE

Question No. 284—Mr. Howard:

Have any federal-provincial fisheries committees been established with any or all of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia and, if so (a) what was the date upon which each was established (b) what are the names and addresses of the members of each such committee, and (c) what are its duties, functions and authorities?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, as the answer to question No. 284 is lengthy, if the hon. member is agreeable may I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in Hansard?

Mr. Howard: I am quite agreeable.

[Editor's note: The answer above referred to is as follows:]

Yes. (see below)

Fraser river board: (a) April 1, 1959 (first board known as Fraser river basin board was appointed in 1948); (b) membership.

For Canada: Director, water resources branch (T. M. Patterson) Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, Ottawa. Director, Pacific area (W. R. Hourston), Department of Fisheries, Vancouver.

For British Columbia: Comptroller of water rights, chairman (A. F. Paget), water rights branch, department of lands, forests and water resources. Director of surveys and mapping (G. S. Andrews), department of lands, forests and water resources.

(Note: Membership is on basis of incumbents of positions. Present membership shown in brackets).

(c) The board shall plan, supervise and carry out such surveys and investigations as may be needed to prepare a comprehensive report dealing with engineering and economic feasibility of a partial hydroelectric power development of the Fraser river that would provide flood control. The board shall prepare broad estimates of the effects on public and private interests by reason of any developments. The board's report has been completed.

Federal-provincial committee on price and wage disputes in British Columbia fishing industry:

(a) October 18, 1963.

(b) Federal representatives: W. R. Hourston, area director of fisheries, Vancouver, British Columbia; J. J. Quinlan, deputy director of investigation and research (Combines Investigation Act), Department of Justice, Ottawa; G. R. Currie, industrial relations officer, Department of Labour, Vancouver, British Columbia.

Provincial representatives: A. W. R. Carrothers, professor of law, University of British Columbia, Vancouver, British Columbia; Dr. D. B. Turner, deputy minister of recreation and conservation, Victoria, British Columbia; C. R. Margison, assistant deputy minister of labour, Victoria, British Columbia.

(c) To exercise in detail the problems concerned with price and wage disputes in the British Columbia fishing industry and to submit to both governments recommendations of action necessary to minimize interruptions of fishing operations in the future.

FEED GRAIN IN ST. LAWRENCE RIVER AREA

Question No. 342—Mr. Peters:

1. Are the supplies of eastern feed grain, held in the St. Lawrence river area, sufficient to meet the current projected requirements of eastern users for the 1963-64 requirements?
2. What is the estimate of the number of bushels of feed grain that will be transported by rail from the elevators at the lakehead in the 1963-64 season?
3. What is the estimated cost, per bushel, to be paid for transportation, and how much, per bushel, will be covered by freight subsidy?

Answer: 1. Total supplies of feed grains in the east are sufficient to meet estimated requirements until the opening of navigation.

2. Board of grain commissioners statistics do not show feed grain loadings for the domestic market but do show total shipments by rail ex lakehead of 964,000 bushels of wheat, oats, and barley combined in the period October 15, 1963 and February 15, 1964.

3. Based on most economical means of transport, the estimated average weighted cost of transportation on western feed grains from lakehead to local feed mills in the east is 17 cents per bushel and the freight subsidy represents, on the average, an estimated 18 cents per bushel.

Other costs related to the movement, but not transportation per se, such as insurance and elevation, have not been included and the above relationship varies month to month depending upon lake freight transport rates.

EASTERN FEED GRAIN STORAGE

Question No. 343—Mr. Peters:

1. Since the implementation of the payment to elevators for stored feed grain in eastern Canada, what has been the cost for December, 1963, and January and February of this year?
2. How many bushels were stored in eastern elevators, and at what total storage cost per bushel?
3. Is the Department of Agriculture satisfied with the results of this program?
4. What are the results, in cost per bushel of feed grain, in saving to the farmer as a result of this program?

Answer: 1. Claims for storage assistance are not complete for any of the periods in question but the following amounts were paid in the months listed:

December	$ 27,938.93
January	79,111.66
February	107,309.33
Total	$214,359.92

2. The maximum number of bushels of western feed grains in store eastern licensed elevators at any one time in the period October 15 to February 29 was 30.8 million. The cost per bushel is 1/30 cent per day.

3. This government program was designed to stimulate the movement of sufficient feed grains to the east by the cheapest means of transportation, namely, lake freight. Sufficient stocks for feeding, and 45 per cent more than a year earlier, were in store at the close of navigation and therefore the results were satisfactory.

4. On grain in store on October 15, 1963 and taken out by farmers throughout the fall and winter the following savings per ton could accrue to the farmer:

	When taken out on
	Nov. 1	Dec. 1	Jan. 1	Feb. 1	Mar. 2	Apr. 15
Wheat	.17	.50	.83	$1.17	$1.50	$2.00
Oats	.30	.89	1.48	2.07	2.66	3.54
Barley	.21	.63	1.05	1.47	1.89	2.52

Additional savings could accrue to users as a result of the more satisfactory supply-demand picture.

FEED GRAIN PRICES IN EAST

Question No. 344—Mr. Peters:

1. What has caused the increase in price of feed grains to farmers in eastern Canada?
2. Is this considered by the government to be a reasonable seasonal mark-up?
3. Does it indicate a failure in the storage support program?

Answer: 1. The local supply and demand situation for feed grains including home-produced grains can cause certain price fluctuations but information available discloses no upward revision since December in the retail price of mixed feeds. Retail mixed feed prices are in general closely tied to feed grain prices.

2 and 3. Answered by 1.

*SURVEYS, MATANE-STE ANNE DES MONTS RAILWAY

Question No. 355—Mr. Pigeon:

1. What was the cost of the plans and the specifications which were prepared for the Matane-Ste Anne des Monts railway?
2. What amounts were paid to Matane and Gaspe surveyors for the survey horizontal control of air photography?
3. Who was awarded the contract for the survey vertical control and what was the cost of that work?
4. What air company compiled the maps from air photography and what was the amount paid for that work?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: 1. The total cost of the survey and the preparation of plans was $43,256.63, of which amount $24,728.23 was paid to Canadian National Railways for work done by the company, which also acted as the government's agent in organizing the survey as a whole.

2. Mr. Severin Pelletier, Matane, $5,100. Mr. Gilbert Sasseville, Ste Anne des Monts, $3,000.

3. No contract was awarded for the survey vertical control as the work was carried out by Canadian National forces.

4. The air photography was carried out by Photographic Surveys (Quebec) Ltd., Montreal, at a cost of $10,428.40.

R.C.A.F. HOUSING UNITS, SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.

Question No. 404—Mr. Douglas:

1. Were the 100 housing units which are located at Summerside, P.E.I., and occupied by R.C.A.F. personnel, built under the provision of the National Housing Act?
2. What were the names of the contractors involved?
3. What contribution, if any, was made by the federal government or any of its agencies?
4. Were there guarantees and, if so, what were they?
5. Are the R.C.A.F. personnel compelled to live in these housing units?
6. What are the R.C.A.F. personnel required to pay for occupancy of the premises (a) rent (b) taxes (c) electricity and fuel (d) any other expenses?

Answer: 1. Yes.

2. Hillcrest Housing Limited.

[Mr. Peters.]

3. The federal government through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation advanced 85 per cent of the total cost of construction, a sum of $870,015 to Hillcrest Housing Limited. This money was to be amortized over a 40 year period at 4⅛ per cent.

4. No occupancy guarantees were provided.

5. If there are any vacancies in the bulk lease homes married service personnel may be ordered into this accommodation.

6. (a) The rental rates are as follows: up to and including the rank of Cpl $80; Sgt, WO2 $85; WO1, Pilot Officer $90; F/O, F/L $105.

(b) Municipal taxes are the responsibility of the developer who owns the land and the houses.

(c) Personnel who occupy these houses are required to pay, directly to the supplier, for electricity, fuel and water. In return, such personnel get a utility allowance of $20 per month to cover a portion of this expense.

(d) It is understood that special taxes peculiar to the town of Summerside, i.e. poll tax, personal property tax, vehicle tax, are imposed on the individual tenant and may be as high as $6 per month. It should be added, however, that the present town administration have indicated that their tax structure is in the process of being revised, and this may provide some relief in so far as tenants are concerned. Tenants are also personally liable for any damages to their married quarters.

*POST OFFICE SITES, PARRY SOUND-MUSKOKA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 431—Mr. Aiken:

1. From whom, and at what price, were sites acquired for construction of the following public buildings in Parry Sound-Muskoka constituency (a) Britt (b) Rosseau (c) Kearney?
2. Are any of the parties named in part 1, consultants of the Minister of Public Works or Postmaster General in that constituency?

Mr. McWilliam: 1. (a) Britt—A site consisting of two parcels of land is being acquired from Mr. G. M. Taylor for $3,200 and the province of Ontario for $50. (b) Rosseau—From Mr. G. E. Foote for $1,850. (c) Kearney—From Miss Doris Gilbert for $1,500.

2. No.

*DIRECTOR OF METEOROLOGICAL BRANCH, TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT

Question No. 452—Mr. Coates:

1. Did the civil service commission alter the qualifications for the position of director of the meteorological branch of the Department of Transport after the applications for the position had been received and, if so, on what authority?
2. Is the present director of the meteorological branch of the Department of Transport a member of the Royal Meteorological Society, American meteorological society, Canadian association of physicists, Arctic circle, Oxford society, or Arctic institute North America, and if a member of all or any, what position or positions has he held in these societies?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. The civil service commission did not alter the qualifications required for this position.

One of the allegations made at the appeal board hearing was that there had been a change in emphasis from scientific to administrative ability as between the statement contained in the department's letter to prospective candidates and the criteria used later by the departmental rating board in assessing the candidates.

The appeal board concluded that the criteria used were sound and related to the duties of the position and recommended that the appeal be dismissed.

The civil service commission, satisfied that there was nothing irregular in the procedures followed by the department, nor indeed anything amounting to an alteration of the requirements, and satisfied also that the successful candidate's qualifications for the position were superior to those of the other applicants, approved the recommendation of both the appeal board and the rating board.

2. Yes, a fellow of the royal meteorological society. The Department of Transport has no record of the position held in the society.

WINTER WORKS GRANTS, ST. FELICIEN, QUE.

Question No. 481—Mr. Gauthier:

What winter works grants have been received from the federal government by the town of St. Felicien and the parish of St. Felicien for works carried out in 1962-63?

Mr. MacEachen: Under the municipal winter works incentive program 1962-63, federal payments in respect to the town of St. Felicien amounted to $120,140.96, and $16,463.42 was paid to the parish of St. Felicien.

LIMOUSINE SERVICE, TORONTO AIRPORT

Question No. 486—Mr. Addison:

1. What is the name of the company that operates the Department of Transport authorized limousine service from the Toronto international airport?
2. When was this contract awarded, for how long and for what amount?
3. What was the name and amount of each tender submitted?
4. Over the terms of the contract is there any ceiling on the amount the successful bidder may charge for taxi service?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Air Terminal Transport Limited of Toronto.

2 and 3. The agreement with Air Terminal Transport Limited, who had been providing this service previously was, in accordance with air line wishes, renegotiated on August 1, 1960, for a period of ten years; the concession fee payable by the company, effective from August 1, 1960, is as follows: During the first five years, the concession fee will be 3.75 per cent of gross revenue, and during the second five years of the agreement the percentage is to be increased by ¼ of 1 per cent each year of the second five years, so that by the tenth year of the agreement the rental will have reached 5 per cent of gross revenue.

4. The tariff charged by Air Terminal Transport Limited is subject to approval by the Ontario transportation board and the company files a schedule approved by the said board with the department.

POST OFFICE TENDER, LION'S HEAD, ONT.

Question No. 499—Mr. Loney:

1. Were tenders called for the construction of a post office, S.P. 8, Lion's Head, Bruce county, Ontario in December 1963 and, if so, what were the names and addresses of the tenderers?
2. What were the amounts of the quotations submitted in each tender?
3. Was the lowest tender accepted, and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Yes. T. M. Forbes, Wiarton, Ontario, was the only tenderer.

2. $39,525.60.

3. No, the quotation received was considered excessive. Tenders were called a second time with a closing date of March 18, 1964 and the only quotation received was from Beachall Construction Co. Ltd., Scarborough, Ontario at $23,576. This tender is under consideration.

*HIGH ENERGY NUCLEAR PHYSICS LABORATORY CENTRE

Question No. 502—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government now giving consideration to the proposal of the Canadian association of physicists made in 1956 and 1957, that Canada construct a high energy nuclear physics laboratory centre on a high energy particle accelerator in Canada and, if not, what were the reasons for refusing this proposal of the Canadian association of physicists?

Mr. Drury: So far as the national research council is concerned there is no plan at present to implement the proposal of the Canadian association of physicists to construct and operate a high energy laboratory in Canada. Although the desirability of giving maximum possible support to physics is recognized, obligations to support other branches of science must also be taken into account. With the rapid expansion of universities and a plan for corresponding rapid expansion in our program for scholarships and grants in aid of research in the next few years, it is not considered possible at the present time to embark on a project of such magnitude as a high energy laboratory which would involve an estimated construction cost of $25 million with estimated operating costs thereafter of $3.5 to $4 million per year. General support of physics in various fields in universities across the country including support for several medium energy laboratories is considered to be the most desirable way to spend whatever money is available for the next few years.

*ENCOURAGEMENT TO JAPANESE TOURISTS

Question No. 514—Mr. Basford:

1. Has the Canadian government travel bureau taken cognizance of the fact that on April 1, with Japan becoming a full member of the international monetary fund, individual Japanese citizens will be allowed to spend $500 each on pleasure travel over and above transportation costs?

2. What, in general terms, is the travel bureau doing to take advantage of this situation to encourage Japanese tourists to visit Canada and British Columbia?

3. Specifically to encourage Japanese tourists to visit Canada and British Columbia, is the Canadian government travel bureau (a) preparing and seeing to the distribution in Japan of tourist promotion pamphlets, brochures and material in the English or Japanese language and, if not, has such action been considered (b) endeavouring to send delegations to Japan of Canadian west coast travel, hotel, tourist, and municipal representatives to encourage Japanese-Canadian tourism (c) making or contributing to any effort to send to Japan a tourist promotion team to counteract the tourist promotion efforts of the ten Eskimos and Miss Alaska that the state of Alaska is sending to Japan, or the hula dancers that the state of Hawaii is sending to Japan (d) holding discussions and, if so, the nature thereof with any tourist officers of the province of British Columbia leading to the initiation of a co-ordinated Japanese tourist promotion program and, if not, will any such discussions be initiated by the tourist bureau (e) holding discussions and, if so, the nature thereof with any officers of the greater Vancouver visitors and convention bureau leading to the initiation of a co-ordinated Japanese tourist promotion program and, if not, will any such discussions be initiated by the tourist bureau (f) having (or had) any discussions with any officials of C.P.A., T.C.A., or other Canadian carriers to determine what efforts these carriers are making to encourage Japanese tourists to visit Canada, and in what way the travel bureau can assist and augment these efforts (g) having any officials in any government of Canada diplomatic, trade or commercial office in Japan acquire any special or expert knowledge of the tourist attractions and facilities of the west coast of Canada and, if so, what are these officials names and positions and how have they acquired such expert or special knowledge (h) having any of the full-time employees of the Ottawa office of the travel bureau acquire any special or expert knowledge of the special considerations applicable to Japanese-Canadian tourism and, if so, how many, and what is the nature of their special or expert knowledge (i) having or had anything done to assure that the employees of the San Francisco office of the travel bureau are in a position to encourage Japanese tourists intending to visit the west coast of the U.S.A. to also visit Canada and, if so, how will they so encourage them?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this very interesting question has to do with travel promotion in Japan. It is one page long. The answer covers five pages. Could I have the agreement of the house to table it?

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to tabling the answer?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the parliamentary secretary whether this is to be tabled or printed in Hansard?

Mr. Pepin: To be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer above referred to is as follows:]

1. Yes, consideration is being given to attracting more Japanese visitors to Canada.

2. The Canadian government travel bureau (a) recently rejoined the Pacific area travel association, in which 29 Pacific area countries are represented, to keep in closer touch with travel promotion needs and developments in the Pacific travel market, of which Japan is now expected to become a more important part; (b) the assistant director of the bureau, Mr. Dan Wallace, with the co-operation and guidance of Canadian Pacific Airlines, attended the P.A.T.A. annual conference in Sydney, Australia, March 2-6, and surveyed the travel potential for Canada of Hawaii, New Zealand, Australia, Hong Kong and Japan. During his four days in Japan, Mr. Wallace met with Canadian diplomatic and trade representatives, representatives of Canadian carriers, leading Japanese government travel promotion officers and travel agents, and the director of the United States travel service; (c) the bureau plans to recruit a travel promotion officer for Japan this year; (d) the bureau has recommended to the Department of Trade and Commerce that an official travel trade mission be sent this year to visit the Pacific countries, including Japan. This mission would be broadly representative of the Canadian travel industry, including members from British Columbia and other parts of Canada interested in developing more tourist traffic from the Pacific countries, including Japan, and obtaining publicity in these countries for Canada's travel attractions.

3. (a) The circulation in Japan of Canadian English language travel literature and posters is being increased, and this literature will later be made available in Japanese.

(b) See answer 2(d) above. The travel trade mission would include representatives of the travel industry from the west coast.

(c) See answer 2(d) above. Last year, the bureau co-operated with Canadian Pacific Airlines in obtaining permission for two members of the R.C.M. Police to visit Japan to assist in getting publicity for a C.P.A. inaugural flight. The bureau is now planning to work with C.P.A. in assisting a Japanese television team this summer in filming 13 one half hour programs on Canada.

(d) As the bureau develops its travel promotion program for Japan and the Pacific, it will initiate discussions on this development with the government travel bureaus of British Columbia and the other provinces and territories.

(e) The bureau's promotion program for Japan and the Pacific will also be discussed with the officers of municipal visitor and convention bureaus in Vancouver and other Canadian cities with a view to effecting closer co-ordination of efforts to attract more visitors from Japan.

(f) A number of discussions have already been held with officers of C.P.A., T.C.A. and other Canadian carriers with regard to their promotion plans to increase the number of Japanese visitors to Canada, and how the bureau could assist by the provision of literature, posters, displays and films, and by developing direct travel promotion in Japan through the appointment of an officer to be located in Tokyo who would actively contact travel agents and publicity media, and work closely with representatives of the carriers in Japan that are interested in developing travel to Canada.

(g) There is no organized program to ensure that Canadian government officials in Japan acquire special knowledge of the tourist attractions and facilities of Canada's west coast, but in their training programs and home visits, these officers do have an opportunity of acquainting themselves in a general way with the tourist attractions of all parts of Canada. Any officer appointed to represent the bureau in Japan will be thoroughly conversant with west coast tourist facilities and attractions.

(h) On several occasions since 1952, officers of the travel bureau have attended P.A.T.A. conferences to keep in touch with travel developments in Pacific area countries. While Japan's currency restrictions were in effect, the flow of visitors from Japan to North America was limited. As indicated in 2(b) above, the assistant director of the travel bureau spent four days in March in Japan studying this country's potential for travel to Canada, the special conditions attaching to such travel, and the efforts being made by other countries, including the United States, to develop this business.

(i) The manager of the San Francisco office of the travel bureau keeps in close touch with the P.A.T.A. organization, which has its headquarters there. The staff of this office, and of the bureau's offices in Chicago and New York—all of which are centrally located and accessible to Japanese visitors to these cities—is well briefed on the tourist facilities and attractions of the west coast and therefore able to assist Japanese visitors with their plans for travel to Canada.

PRIVATE AIRCRAFT LANDING FEES

Question No. 523—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to removing private aircraft landing fees and instead levying a three cent tax on gasoline?

Mr. Pickersgill: The matter of charges to be levied on private aircraft for use of facilities provided by the taxpayer is under continuing study but this particular proposal is not under immediate consideration.

C.N.R. REPORTS UNDER P.C. 1962-481 AND P.C. 1962-656

Question No. 524—Mr. Cyr:

On what date did the Minister of Transport receive reports from the C.N.R. pursuant to orders in council P.C. 1962-481 and P.C. 1962-656?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: On December 27, 1962, the chairman and president of the Canadian National Railways submitted to the Minister of Transport the report of the C.N.R. on the survey of a railway line from Matane to Ste Anne des Monts, and an estimate of the cost of such a railway line.

EXPENDITURES ON TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY, LOTBINIERE COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 528—Mr. Caouette:

1. What amount of money was promised or granted under the federal-provincial agreement on the construction of the trans-Canada highway (highway No. 9) relating to that part of the highway which goes through the federal constituency of Lotbiniere?

2. What is or will be the average amount paid per acre of land to the farm owners along the trans-Canada highway or on its access roads?

3. What criteria are used by the purchasing agents to establish a fair compensation for farmers who must cover distances of up to five miles in order to reach parts of their farms located on the other side of the trans-Canada highway?

[Translation]

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Canada pays half the construction costs of the two-lane highway under the agreement on construction of the trans-Canada highway. The estimated amount of Canada's share of the cost of work approved in the riding of Lotbiniere amounts to $5,076,000 to date.

2. Canada does not contribute to the cost of the land purchased by the province for rights of way or other purposes. Payments to land owners come under the province and the federal government has no information about the amounts paid by the province for such lands or the standards on which those amounts are based.

3. See answer to question no. 2.

*SENIOR OFFICERS, DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

Question No. 535—Mr. Pigeon:

1. Since February 3, 1964, how many deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers have been appointed to the Department of Industry and what is the name, address, and salary of each?
2. Among those appointed, are there any French Canadians and, if not, for what reason?

[Translation]

Mr. Drury: The answer to both parts of this question is no.

CHIBOUGAMAU-LAC ALBANEL ROAD, QUE.

Question No. 545—Mr. Laprise:

1. With reference to the joint federal-provincial roads to resources program, when was construction started on the Chibougamau-Lac Albanel road?
2. What is the estimated completion date?
3. How many men are now working on that project?
4. How many motor vehicles belonging to Canadians are being used in the construction of the road?
5. How many motor vehicles belonging to Americans are being used at the present time?

[Translation]

Mr. Laing: 1. The contract was awarded in December 1962.

2. Late in the fall of 1966.

3, 4 and 5. Since agreements concerning the roads to resources programs provide that building works come under provincial jurisdiction, only the province can answer parts 3, 4 and 5 of this question.

CONTRACT FOR WHARF REPAIRS, ARICHAT, N.S.

Question No. 547—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

With regard to question 363, when is a contract going to be awarded by the Department of Public Works to G. J. Forgeron of West Arichat, Richmond county, Nova Scotia, who is the low tenderer on repairs to the wharf at Arichat?

Mr. Deschatelets: The contract for wharf repairs at Arichat, N.S. was awarded to G. J. Forgeron, West Arichat on March 24, 1964.

RESTORATION OF H.D.-4 HYDROFOIL

Question No. 549—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

With reference to the answer to question No. 958, under date of July 22, 1963, on what date will the department concerned begin structural restoration work on the H.D.-4 in 1964?

Mr. Laing: The answer to question No. 958 (Hansard of July 22, 1963, p. 2449) indicated that a consulting naval architect was completing reports, drawings and cost estimates needed for the restoration of the H.D.-4. His report includes the disappointing news that restoration is not feasible and recommends reconstruction instead. Because some of the technical data is still missing and some of the components necessary for a historically accurate reproduction will be difficult to locate or reproduce, it is not yet possible to give a firm date on which reconstruction work can begin.

LENGTHENING OF WHARF, LIVERPOOL, N.S.

Question No. 552—Mr. Crouse:

1. Is it the intention of the government to lengthen the federal public wharf in Liverpool, Queens county, Nova Scotia?
2. How many feet will be added to this wharf and when will the work be undertaken?
3. What is the approximate amount of money to be allocated for this project?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. No decision has been reached in this matter. The department has the requirements of the fishing fleet at Liverpool under review.

2 and 3. The extent, scheduling and cost of increased public wharfage will be dependant on the requirements determined in 1 above.

METEOROLOGICAL BRANCH, TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT—MEMBERSHIP IN WORLD ORGANIZATION

Question No. 556—Mr. Coates:

1. Is the present director of meteorology, Department of Transport, a member of the world meteorological organization?
2. Are any of the staff of the meteorological branch of the Department of Transport members of the world meteorological organization?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1 and 2. Membership in the world meteorological organization is limited to states who have ratified or acceded to the world meteorological organization convention There is no such thing as personal membership.

OWNERSHIP OF MAIN DUCK ISLANDS, LAKE ONTARIO

Question No. 558—Mr. Alkenbrack:

1. Who are the owners of the Canadian group of islands known as the Main Duck islands in lake Ontario?
2. During their period of occupancy by the late John Foster Dulles, were the islands leased or owned by Mr. Dulles?
3. Under their present status, what is the government doing to ensure the protection of the herd of deer on the islands and the large flocks of migratory birds that rest there in season?

4. Does the federal government own any land used in connection with the functioning of Department of Transport safety devices and navigational signals, lighthouses, etc., used on the islands?

5. By whom was the dock built that serves the island on which the lighthouse is situated?

6. By whom is the above dock maintained?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. The Dulles estate.

2. Owned by Mr. Dulles.

3. These islands are a part of the province of Ontario, and come, therefore, under the relevant provincial legislation relating to the hunting of deer, and under the Migratory Birds Convention Act and regulations relating to the hunting of migratory birds. The area is patrolled by provincial game officers (who are ex officio officers under the Migratory Birds Convention Act) and by the R.C.M. Police.

4. Yes.

5. Department of Transport.

6. Department of Transport.

RECOGNITION OF ACTS OF BRAVERY OR HEROISM

Question No. 569—Mr. Basford:

1. What non-military medals, honours or titles is the government of Canada able to bestow or cause to be bestowed upon Canadian citizens in recognition of acts of bravery or heroism, or for outstanding contributions to the national life or development of Canada?

2. For the year 1963, on whom were any such medals, honours or titles bestowed?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. (a) All civil gallantry decorations and medals from the Queen, in recognition of acts of bravery performed at the risk of death or serious personal injury, are available to Canadian civilians on the recommendation of the government of Canada; (b) none.

2. On the recommendation of the government of Canada, the Canadian civilians listed hereunder received decorations and medals in recognition of acts of bravery during 1963: Herbert Joslin (deceased), Charles Garnet Robson, Ronald Leslie Tarr, Henry Leblanc, John Vatour, Douglas S. S. Ellis, Lyle Allen Roger Olsen, Isaac Peters, Barbara Ann Pilsinger.

EXPROPRIATION OF POST OFFICE SITES, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 570—Mr. Coates:

Were notices of expropriation filed at the registry office, Amherst, N.S., with regard to the acquisition of sites for the post offices at Westchester and Joggins and, if so, on what dates were these notices filed?

Mr. Deschatelets: Notice of expropriation with respect to Westchester, N.S., was filed and registered on February 12, 1964.

Notice of expropriation with respect to Joggins, N.S., was filed and registered on February 13, 1964.

WORLD FAIR EMBLEM DESIGNED BY PHILIPPE E. MALTAIS

Question No. 578—Mr. Belanger:

Did the 1967 world exhibition corporation give any consideration to the design for an emblematic shield representing the theme "Man's World" submitted by the artist Philippe E. Maltais of La Malbaie and, if so, why was it not adopted in lieu of the one rejected by this house?

[Translation]

Answer: The 1967 World Exhibition Corporation did consider the emblematic shield design submitted by Mr. Philippe E. Maltais of La Malbaie. However, on March 13, 1964, the board of directors confirmed its previous decision, dated August 12, 1963, by which the design submitted by Mr. Julien Hebert was selected as official theme of the exhibition.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT OF SEAMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour whether Leonard McLaughlin has been placed in control of the S.I.U. administration by the board of trustees?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What position does he occupy today with the S.I.U.?

Mr. MacEachen: My understanding, subject to checking it, is that Mr. McLaughlin is executive vice president of the seafarers' international union.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And has there been no appointment made of Mr. McLaughlin at all, as reported in the press?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no appointment of Mr. McLaughlin, according to my information from the trustees. Maybe my right hon. friend would permit me to make an observation or two with respect to the agreement or understanding reached between the trustees on the one hand and the president of the seafarers' international union of North America, Mr. Hall, on Friday last.

A public statement was issued enumerating seven points on which an understanding had been reached, one of which, to summarize it, was that immediately steps would be taken to restore the S.I.U. of Canada to the constitutional control of its members. Constitutional provision for succession to the presidency of the seafarers' international union of Canada will be implemented as a first step in restoring their control.

As I understand the situation—and this may assist the Leader of the Opposition—there will be no immediate change in the present leadership of the S.I.U. of Canada until the shipping season is further advanced. This period of time will provide an opportunity to ensure that the arrangements have been fully honoured before any change is made. When the change takes place, Mr. McLaughlin will not be appointed as president by the trustees but, rather, they will allow the provision of the constitution with respect to the succession of leadership to be put into effect. Mr. Turner, I understand, will remain as representative of the trustees who will continue to supervise the over-all administration of the union.

I might conclude by saying that the arrangement as outlined in the joint statement on Friday contemplates a cessation of harassment of all shipping in United States ports, and surely if that does come about, combined with the continued supervision by the trustees over the S.I.U., a major step forward will have been taken in resolving this problem.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Under the arrangements made between Mr. Hall and the trustees, is it not a fact that in accordance with the succession, McLaughlin will be placed in the position previously occupied by Banks?

Mr. MacEachen: I am sorry, but I did not follow the question put by the Leader of the Opposition. If he would repeat it I would be glad to answer it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The question is simply this: Was there any arrangement made between Hall and the trustees that McLaughlin should, in the ordinary course of events, follow in the succession and hold the position held by Banks at the time he was removed from office?

Mr. MacEachen: I should make it clear that the information I am giving to the house is information received from the trustees regarding a decision taken by them in their role as quasi administrators of this union. The situation as put forward by the Leader of the Opposition is correct, except, as I have stated, that the trustees will not take any action on their own account to appoint Mr. McLaughlin as president, and this change which is contemplated with the removal of Mr. Turner is not to take place until a period of time has elapsed to make it possible to observe whether the arrangements entered into between the trustees and Mr. Hall are fully honoured.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like permission to ask one further question. I am just wondering if McLaughlin has gone through some political dry cleaning, because if one reads the Norris report it says at pages 169 and 170 that he is a clever, resourceful and entirely untruthful witness—that he is devious and adept in carrying out the one-man policies of Banks, and that his subservience to and support of Banks in all circumstances was demonstrated from an early age.

Would the minister not think that this is the last person in the world—

Mr. Pearson: You hate to see it settled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What did the Prime Minister say?

Mr. Pearson: Apparently you do not want it settled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If we are to get a settlement by securing the help of a hoodlum like that, I wonder whether or not the cost is too high.

Mr. MacEachen: In reply to the comment made by the Leader of the Opposition, may I say this: It is a fact that the passage he referred to appears in the report by Mr. Justice Norris. It is also a fact that the three trustees, consisting of Mr. Justice Dryer, also on the bench of the supreme court of British Columbia, Judge Lippe of Quebec and Mr. Charles Millard, a very experienced unionist of unquestioned integrity, have all been in direct charge of this situation for a period of months, now, and they have concluded, in the exercise of the authority granted them by parliament, that this is an arrangement which will assist in the resolution of these difficulties. In this instance my opinion is not at issue because the trustees are exercising independent authority given to them by parliament.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): In view of the fact that the trustees were appointed by parliament, or set up under legislation passed by parliament, and parliament is responsible to the people of Canada for their actions, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he considers that taking steps which will lead to the appointment of Leonard J. McLaughlin, described by Mr. Justice Norris as "Banks' man Friday" will carry out the intent and desire of parliament, which was to free the shipping industry from the rule of thugs and to destroy the hoodlum empire which had victimized and terrorized the great lakes shipping industry for too long a period of time.

I should like to ask the minister whether he thinks that appointing Mr. McLaughlin to the post contemplated is likely to carry out that intention?

Mr. MacEachen: I must, once again, insist that the trustees are not appointing Mr. McLaughlin to the presidency of the S.I.U.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A play on words.

Mr. MacEachen: It is quite clear that they are not appointing him now. I will be the last to suggest that the situation is wholly resolved, but I do maintain it is reasonable for the House of Commons and for the people of Canada to give their support to the trustees, each of whom is a rather considerable person, as they excercise their responsibilities from day to day. They have concluded this arrangement which, if successful—and this remains to be seen, of course—will provide for the complete freedom of Canadian shipping in United States ports and will permit the trustees to continue as supervisors, I was about to say "masters" but that is not the right word, in authority over the S.I.U. of Canada, including Mr. McLaughlin, who may—and it is a question of "may"—after the passage of time, become president in accordance with the constitution of the seafarers international union of Canada.

Mr. Douglas: On a question of privilege. The minister has just made a statement which I think ought to be reconciled with the statement which was issued by the trustees and by Mr. Hall. That statement reads as follows:

> Immediate steps will be taken to restore the S.I.U. of Canada to the constitutional control of its members. Constitutional provisions for succession to the presidency of the S.I.U. of Canada will be implemented as a first step in restoring membership control.

I submit that the moment the trustees remove Mr. Turner, who is there at the present time, the office automatically goes to the first executive vice president, who is Mr. McLaughlin. That follows from the constitution. Therefore, it seems to me the minister is playing fast and loose with the house when he seeks to give the impression that the announcement made the other day does not automatically mean the appointment of Mr. McLaughlin when control has been turned back to the membership.

I want to ask the minister a simple question. Does he think that turning control back to the members, and the appointment of the vice president to the presidency is carrying out the purpose parliament had in mind when it passed the legislation setting up the board of trustees?

Mr. MacEachen: The first point is that the government has not taken any action whatsoever.

Some hon. Members: As usual.

Mr. MacEachen: It is an action taken by the trustees under authority given them by parliament. That is the first point to be made. The second point is this—it may appear an unimportant point to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam but this is a very important matter to the membership of the seafarers' international union of Canada, that Mr. McLaughlin, if and when he becomes president, will not become president by appointment by the board of trustees, but by the operation of the constitution of the union itself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock p.m., pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15 the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

Mr. Rapp: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, before you call it five o'clock, do I now understand that the house is allowed to debate every private member's bill on the order paper, according to the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), and is my bill ruled out of order incorrectly?

Mr. Speaker: I really do not see any question of privilege there. It may be a complaint but there is no question of privilege under the rules which, by law, if I may put it that way, I must enforce. Therefore, it being five o'clock it is my duty to call on the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. McNulty).

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

VOTING PRIVILEGES FOR PATIENTS IN PUBLIC HOSPITALS

Mr. Jim McNulty (Lincoln) moved:

That the standing committee on privileges and elections be empowered to consider the advisability of amending the Canada Elections Act in order to provide:

(1) that persons confined to hospitals be allowed to exercise their franchise in federal elections;

(2) that portable polls be provided for public hospitals;

(3) that transfers be allowed up to and including election day for persons confined to hospital; and, for such purposes, to recommend such amendments to the said act as may be deemed advisable.

[Mr. Douglas.]

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am proposing in this motion that the standing committee on privileges and elections seriously consider the fact that hundreds of thousands of Canadians in public hospitals are now being denied the right to exercise their franchise. It is my hope that the standing committee will make certain recommendations which will remedy this undemocratic situation.

I realize that this problem has been discussed in committee in a general way, along with other proposed amendments to the Canada Elections Act. I know there are those who feel that it would be very difficult to provide voting privileges to patients in public hospitals. However, Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that the acknowledged difficulties should cause us to wash our hands of the responsibility which we as parliamentarians have, the responsibility to assure to every citizen in Canada the right to cast a ballot.

In a democracy such as ours it is generally agreed that the common good is chiefly guaranteed when personal rights and duties are maintained. Our chief concern as elected representatives must be to ensure that these rights are acknowledged, respected, defended and promoted. All citizens of age have the inviolable right to vote, to state their opinions as to who shall or shall not govern in a democracy. Patients in public hospital are now denied this basic right. Members of the armed services and their dependants have the right to vote in military hospitals.

With respect, Mr. Speaker, I should just like to read section 27(1) of the Canada Elections Act, which is as follows:

(1) Every Canadian forces elector, as defined in paragraph 20, who is undergoing treatment in a service hospital or convalescent institution during the period prescribed in subparagraph (1) of paragraph 25 for the taking of the votes of Canadian forces electors at a general election shall be deemed to be a member of the unit under the command of the officer in charge of such hospital or convalescent institution, and a Canadian forces elector, as defined in paragraph 20A, whose husband is in such hospital or institution may vote at the place where her husband may vote or at the place where he could have voted before he went in such hospital or institution.

The members of the armed forces, as I say, and their dependants are allowed to vote in military hospitals. Their votes can be counted in their home constituency regardless of where the military hospital is located. Residents of homes for the aged and patients in Department of Veterans Affairs hospitals, sanatoriums and many other like institutions, are allowed to vote and have portable polls. Subsection (2) of section 27 of the act reads as follows:

(2) Whenever deemed advisable by the deputy returning officer who is authorized under these regulations to take the votes at a service hospital or convalescent institution, he shall, with the approval of the officer commanding such hospital or institution, go from room to room to take the votes of the bedridden Canadian forces electors.

In respect to other institutions, Mr. Speaker, section 45(14) of the act provides that:

(14) Whenever a polling station has been established in a sanatorium, a home for the aged, a chronic hospital, or similar institution for the care and treatment of tuberculosis or other chronic diseases, the deputy returning officer and the poll clerk shall, while the poll is open on polling day and when deemed necessary by the deputy returning officer, suspend temporarily the voting in such polling station, and shall, with the approval of the person in charge of such institution, carry the ballot box, poll book, ballot papers and other necessary election documents from room to room in such institution to take the votes of bedridden patients—

It is said, Mr. Speaker, that in many institutions portable polls are allowed under the act at the present time. One matter which has been brought to my attention is that in large urban centres people who are hospitalized may come from different constituencies and it would be difficult to record their votes. In this case perhaps we could set up a central distribution area in each province where public hospital votes could be sent and counted at the same time as the military votes, or they could be counted at some other time to be decided upon. It may be that we might have to set up special returning officers in each public hospital, just as we do in many of the institutions I mentioned previously.

I do not feel it is necessary for people to be present in the hospitals when the election writ is issued. I would hope that a transfer slip or affidavit could be issued which could be signed by the person voting in the presence of the returning officer, just as we now allow poll workers in all constituencies transfers up to and including election day. It is quite possible that we may have to set a time limit, perhaps 48 hours or so, so that the administration and recording of these transfers might be better concluded.

I do not intend to speak longer on this motion, but I should just like to ask the co-operation of all hon. members to allow this motion to go to committee. I am sure that no one in this house would want to deny his fellow citizens their democratic right to vote. I am also confident that the standing committee on privileges and elections would be able to examine all facets of this present problem and come up with a workable solution.

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the mover of this notice of motion, and I am very pleased to second it. As he has mentioned, people who are confined in such institutions as tuberculosis sanatoria or hospitals for the chronically ill, or who reside in a senior citizen's home, have a vote in a general election. All hon. members realize that at the present moment patients in a general hospital are not able to vote on election day. I should also like to point out to hon. members that if you happen to be in hospital at the time of enumeration, and are an urban voter, unless you are actually out of hospital by the time additions to the voters' list are made, you could be left off the voters' list despite the fact that you might have left the hospital and be quite fit to vote on election day.

At the present time veterans in D.V.A. hospitals have a vote. Veterans in any hospital have a vote, even if they are in an ordinary, public, general hospital, if they are being treated under the auspices of the Department of Veterans Affairs. The only difference is as to where the vote is actually counted. If the patient is in a D.V.A. hospital that has over 25 veterans, the vote is counted at their normal place of residence, no matter what part of Canada that might be. If the patient is being treated under the auspices of the Department of Veterans Affairs in a non-veteran hospital, his vote is actually counted in the poll where the vote is cast; that is, in the poll in which the hospital is situated. As the hon. member has mentioned, a veteran can vote even if he is incapacitated; the voting box can be carried from bed to bed. I should like to point out, also, that it could happen in an ordinary, general, public hospital where the person in question was a veteran and was under treatment by the Department of Veterans Affairs, that he would have a vote and three other people in the same room, because they were non-veterans, would not have a vote. I think this is unfair. I believe that everybody in the room should have the right to vote in a general election.

As an ex-physician I should like to state that most people who are in hospital are physically fit to vote. There are very few people in hospital who are so physically ill that they are not able to cast a ballot. Just as an example I should like to point out that almost all the occupants of a maternity ward would be quite capable of getting up and going anywhere in the hospital to cast a ballot. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about how many people lose the franchise because of their hospitalization. This does not include those who lose their vote because they are in hospital at the time of enumeration. With regard to the average number of patients in hospital in any one day in Canada, in 1961 this number was 176,000. However, we have to exclude those people in tuberculosis sanatoria or chronic illness hospitals, who do have a vote now; and we have to exclude the mental patients who, even with the changes in the act suggested by the hon. member would still not have a vote. The figures for 1961 shown in the budget review for general hospitals indicate that on any one day there are approximately 73,000 people in these hospitals. As we all realize, all these people would not have a vote; some of them would be children under the age of 21 and some would not normally have a vote because they were non-Canadian. But we are speaking here generally of between 40,000 and 50,000 people being unable to exercise their franchise because they were in hospital.

I feel very strongly about this, and I am sure all hon. members have received many complaints from people in their constituencies during election campaigns to the effect that just because they were in hospital they could not cast their ballot. The notice of motion brought forward by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. McNulty) would correct this situation and I hope hon. members will support this resolution.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly like to congratulate the hon. member who has proposed this resolution. I think in a day and age where we have seen, for example, many improvements in our advance polling facilities we realize that in many areas people who normally would have a right to vote should not be deprived of their vote. As I say, we have seen this taking place in recent years, when there have been many improvements in rural and urban areas in relation to advance polling facilities. The hon. member who has so wisely brought this subject before the House of Commons has now raised the matter of voting privileges for those confined to hospital. I think the hon. member who has just spoken has underlined the importance of the word "hospital" being given the broadest possible definition. In order to make this resolution and the study of it really meaningful, I think all hon. members will agree that the widest possible definition must be given to the word "hospital".

I am not quite sure, but I think the hon. member who has just spoken—who has had much experience in this field—made a direct reference to nursing homes. At the same time I should like to raise the subject of people who are actually sick and confined to their own homes. I think this is particularly true of sparsely settled rural areas which do not have the hospital facilities we would like them to have. Many advances have been made in recent years, but this situation is one of the facts of life. I know a great many old, and young, people who are sick and confined to their homes who are often, I think, unfairly, deprived of the right to vote. I hope this subject will be referred to the committee, as the hon. member has requested, and I hope the broader subject to which I have made reference will be included in the study. I am sure I speak for many hon. members when again I congratulate the hon. member for bringing this most important subject before the House of Commons this afternoon.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to speak for very long on this resolution because, like the other hon. members who have spoken, I favour the resolution and think it would be very helpful if the legislation were passed. We are all anxious that everybody entitled to vote should not be prevented by illness or anything beyond their control from having the right to do so. The effect of passing this resolution will no doubt be that the appropriate legislation will be drafted and perhaps referred to the committee on privileges and elections which, when it is reconstituted, will be considering detailed amendments to the Canada Elections Act. I think it is important that we do consider the actual detailed legislation, because while it is perfectly right that everyone confined to hospital should not on that account be deprived of their franchise, it is also important that consideration should be given to the conditions under which they are called upon to vote.

There have been some instances called to my attention—not in my own constituency, I must say—where it would appear that people, older people particularly in certain institutions, are sort of lined up by attendants and others to vote. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Harley) said that many people in hospital were physically fit to vote and were not unable to vote by reason of being physically disabled; but there may sometimes be people in hospital who are mentally quite unfit to vote and yet are induced by kindly persuasion to vote when they have no knowledge at all of what they are doing. I think this aspect of the matter should be considered when the actual legislation bringing this measure into effect is brought forward. I think we should all be brief and to the point in dealing with this particular resolution, Mr. Speaker, because it would be an excellent thing if its intent were put into effect.

Sometimes these private members' hours seem rather futile; nothing is passed and nothing much is done. I suggest it would be a good thing if we would pass this resolution, which we all approve of in principle, and indicate to those responsible for redrafting the Canada Elections Act that all parties in the house, all members of the house, I think, desire that the arrangements to vote for people who are ill in hospital should be effectively carried out.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part very briefly in the debate on the motion before the house. I think we all realize that one of the main objectives of the Canada Elections Act should be to enable the greatest possible number of electors to exercise their franchise. Unfortunately, it almost appears at times as though the effects are just the opposite. In the light of experience and observation I believe that we should seek constantly to improve our election machinery, especially with regard to problems that are beyond the control of the electors, and certainly the motion before us now is in that category.

In many instances the percentage of those who vote is lamentably small. In some nations the law requires electors to vote or face a penalty. However, the motion before us is not designed to prod the careless but rather to assist those who are willing to vote but who, because of circumstances, are unable to make their way to the polling stations. Illness is not a condition that one can regulate. It cannot be decided that illness or surgical operations shall only take place in the period between elections. In fact, in the last few years especially the period between elections has been so short that it would be ridiculous to think of any such situation.

Therefore I believe that in so far as possible our election machinery should be such that those who are stricken with illness will not be deprived of their democratic right to vote. I realize, of course, that there may be some problems and disadvantages such as have been referred to by other speakers today, especially in regard to the conducting of portable polls, but I believe that the dangers inherent in such a procedure can be minimized or completely eliminated once we decide that this is the fair and just thing to do.

One hon. member who spoke referred to the approximate number of people who are deprived of their right to vote under the present circumstances. I do not believe that the number is necessarily the criterion. I believe it is essential that we do our very best to see that every single person who can has the opportunity to exercise his or her franchise by marking the ballot and choosing those who will become their representatives in the legislative bodies of this nation. Therefore we support the motion and we trust that the house will give favourable consideration to it, to the end that it may be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections for consideration.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. McNulty) for bringing to the attention of the house this aspect of voting, which has been neglected in the past. I should like to bring to the attention of members of the house particularly the fate of people in nursing homes. I come from a constituency in which there are at least 17 nursing homes, each of them containing anywhere from 20 to 50 patients. True, not all of these unfortunate people are in a mental state to cast a rational vote under our democratic system. However, there are many people confined to nursing homes who are there because they were unable to get a bed in a general hospital or a convalescent hospital. Therefore, on account of some physical disability, and no mental disability at all, they have been deprived in the past of the right to cast their vote at federal elections.

That is why I should like to give notice that if this motion, as it should, reaches the standing committee on privileges and elections that committee should also consider the importance of granting voting polls in nursing homes in the constituencies across the country. At the same time I should like to associate myself with the views of hon. members who have emphasized the need also of extending the franchise to people who are in general hospitals at the time of a federal election vote.

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. McNulty) for having introduced this notice of motion. However, having been a member of the committee on privileges and elections last session and also being aware of the fact that this matter was discussed by the same committee in 1960, may I say I do not think any of the speakers today have dealt sufficiently with the practical difficulties involved in extending the franchise to people in hospitals throughout the country. It is all very well to state as a broad principle that we should enfranchise as many people as possible. However, there are practical difficulties with many groups of people, and because of the impossibility of policing the act or preventing abuses of the act or because of the extreme cost involved we are just not able to enfranchise them under the existing act.

When this matter was brought before the committee on privileges and elections last session we reached the conclusion that it was not practically possible to enfranchise people in hospital without having a permanent voters list and a system of absentee voting. It was on this premise and for other reasons that the committee passed the following motion:

That a study be undertaken under the chairmanship of the chief electoral officer for the preparation of a full report on the question of a permanent electors list and of a method of absentee voting, stating the arguments for and against the adoption of a permanent list; and

That the committee recommend to the government that it approach the governments of the provinces with a view to participating in such a study and to canvass the possibility of a joint permanent electors list.

After the bill establishing a commissioner of elections was passed last session, one of the terms of reference he was given was to conduct a study in detail of the question of a permanent voters list. He has the necessary funds and staff to undertake such a study. This matter has been discussed by many committees in the past but they were always a little shy of information on which to form any valid conclusions. I suggest that we are moving in this direction, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps we will have a permanent voters list and an absentee voting system, with the result that many of the difficulties I propose to raise now may not be valid in the future.

However, the chief electoral officer raised the point in committee that under the present act it was not possible or practical to extend the franchise to people in hospitals. Even if we did have these portable polling booths for hospitals, it would be impossible to process the ballots adequately, allot them to their respective electoral districts and still preserve the secrecy of the ballot. Reference was made this afternoon to the fact that we do have voting in veterans hospitals. This, of course, is true but it is done under a special provision of the armed forces voting regulations. Under these regulations it is necessary for the veteran to indicate at the beginning of the year what his electoral district is. This of course is the key to absentee voting, and is the procedure followed in connection with veterans hospitals. We are informed also by the department of health and welfare that the average stay in acute hospitals in this country is ten days.

In view of the provisions in the act now for advance polls, and the fact that most people who are going to find themselves in hospitals on polling day have an opportunity to vote at an advance poll, I do not think we need this change. All of us here who are involved in elections know that we cannot protect an uninformed citizenry against themselves. We have all received calls just before election day asking where a person can vote because he is going to be out of town. We have to inform these people that the advance polls are held on the Saturday and Monday of the week prior to voting day. These people feel they are being disfranchised. The provisions of the act are clear and the newspapers carry stories about the advance voting days, yet some people do not avail themselves of these provisions. I suggest that many people who find themselves in hospitals are in the same situation. They just have not availed themselves of the provisions which are already in the act for advance polls.

The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) raised the question of chronic institutions and nursing homes. Well, we do have provisions under the act for people in chronic institutions such as nursing homes, sanatoria, old age homes and other chronic hospitals. When the person is a resident of the institution on enumeration day, he is permitted to vote. I believe, however, the hon. member was referring to the smaller nursing homes that do not have a poll on the premises and it is impossible for these people to get out to a poll. This is quite a different matter and one that perhaps the committee should study. We could, perhaps, have portable stations for these institutions. The other difficulty in connection with extending voting to hospitals is that in many of our hospitals there are people who are not normally resident of the electoral district in which the hospital is located. This creates some serious difficulties in attempting to extend the franchise to these people. The hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene) suggested in the committee that perhaps 90 per cent of these people were actually residents of the riding in which the hospital was located, and we could make special provisions for them.

I feel, however, if we had a portable polling booth in these hospitals and some people were allowed to vote while others were not, this would be even more demoralizing to the patients. It would again point up the differences between rural voters and urban voters. In a metropolitan centre such as Toronto we might have people in hospitals from 30 or 40 electoral districts, and we would have to have a portable booth and a returning officer for each constituency. It would become extremely difficult. If we adopt some other form, like a ballot with an envelope on which we write in the constituency, it would still be difficult to preserve the secrecy of the ballot because we would have to indicate to whom this ballot belonged. In other words, the ballot would have to be checked against the voters list for the riding. The results would come in late and we would be faced with the same problems as exist in connection with the armed forces vote, when the returns come in a week later. There would only be a few people involved and the secrecy of the ballot would certainly be violated. I can see many difficulties in carrying out such a proposal.

The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. McNulty) also proposed some sort of method for transferring the ballot under which you get a transfer authorization. Again, the same problems exist. The transfers for which provision is made today are from one polling station to another within the same riding, and therefore the riding list can be checked to identify the elector. When we get to a situation of transferring ballots from one riding to another, the difficulty of getting these ballots back to the proper ridings and getting the vote recorded would be great.

Mr. Grafftey: Why?

Mr. Moreau: The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi asks why. He knows full well that there may be only two or three people in a particular poll involved in this procedure, particularly in rural polls. In the rural areas you could identify the vote much more accurately than you could in the urban centres. I have lived a good deal of my life in the rural area and I know you can predict the outcome of a vote very easily in such an area. You know there will be a certain number of Liberal votes, a certain number for the Conservatives and a certain number for the N.D.P. Then, you have a certain number of doubtfuls, perhaps anywhere from two to six. I suggest if these people happen to be in that category of absentee voter they would soon be identified for all time.

Mr. Grafftey: Not at all; you are wrong again.

Mr. Moreau: The hon. member says I am wrong. I would suggest that perhaps he could participate in the committee on privileges and elections this session and we might hear his proposals for rectifying the situation.

We also have the question of advanced polls and it has been indicated that the number of people in hospitals who were disfranchised was something of the order of 40,000. Some 80,000 people took advantage of the advanced poll in the last election. I do not know how many of those were expecting to go to hospital, but I suggest a good number of them were, and therefore took advantage of the provision that now exists.

Although I do not have any objection to the subject matter of this motion going to the committee, I would indicate I generally support extending the franchise on as broad a base as possible; but we have to uphold certain principles such as the security of the ballot. We should not be rushed into any legislation that will create extreme difficulties and from which a whole new set of abuses might flow. I am interested in having the matter come up again before the committee, but we will not get very far towards meeting the problem until we have a permanent voters list and a system of absentee voting.

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Moreau) referred to the previous committee, of which I was a member, and he has properly put before the house some of the problems we faced in that committee, where we had the advantage of the advice and experience of the chief electoral officer.

I may say I recognize those problems, but I do not believe they are insurmountable and I do not think it is true to say that we have to wait until we have a permanent voters list. In general I approve of this motion being sent to the committee, but I would prefer to see it wider in scope because a great many more thousands of people other than residents in hospitals are disfranchised under our present regulations.

There is one group of people in whom I am particularly interested. They are in full control of their faculties and are able to vote without any advice from anybody. They are the university students. However, they do not have any say about when an election will take place, and many months before the universities close they have succeeded in obtaining jobs elsewhere in order to earn money to pay for their tuition fees. Under the act they have a choice of either voting at their university or in their home constituency, but they end up 200 miles from either point and they are not willing to travel 200 miles at their own expense to vote.

The same thing applies to many people engaged in the construction industry. I have known workers living in northern Saskatchewan, northwest of Prince Albert, and working on construction jobs in southern Saskatchewan. Although the act provides time off for voting they do not have a desire to go back 300 miles to register their votes. I think all this can be overcome and I do not believe it needs a permanent voters list.

Rather than take up the time of the house, and so that this matter can come to a vote, I shall defer the suggestions I have to make, suggestions which come from discussions I have had with many people, and will make them in the committee of which I hope to be a member again, and where we will have the benefit of the advice and experience of the electoral officer. I hope the house approves this motion, although I would like to see it include the other classes of people I have mentioned. However, I am sure that their problems will be discussed in the committee.

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the principle of the motion but I must congratulate the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Moreau) for indicating some of the difficulties involved in implementing the proposal contained in it. As he said, this matter was discussed in the committee on privileges and elections in 1960 and again in 1963. The dilemma in which we find ourselves is that though there may be considerable difficulties in implementing the principle of the motion, nevertheless we are all of one mind in saying that the benefits of implementing it outweigh the difficulties involved.

The one solution that seems to remove the difficulties suggested by the hon. member for York-Scarborough, and the one which would also enable those people referred to by the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. More) to exercise the franchise, would seem to be a permanent voters list and some kind of absentee voting. I am inclined to feel, at least from the evidence which came forward at the last meeting of the committee on privileges and elections, and from the reference that committee made to the previous committee, that the difficulties are many.

One hon. member suggested, and I do not know whether I agree with his suggestion, that if there were a difference between urban and rural constituencies so far as the residency of a patient is concerned, perhaps the solution would be to make the hospital part of the constituency in which it is located. For instance, in the riding of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador it is reasonable to assume that the vast majority of patients in the principal hospital would be from that riding, but in an urban riding a great many patients in a hospital would ordinarily reside outside that riding.

For a moment I had thought the hon. member for Regina City was going to bring forth the argument that because university students are permitted to vote at their university, then perhaps patients in a hospital should be allowed to vote in the constituency where the hospital was situated. Had he gone that far there certainly would have been a presumption of reasonableness. I may say this is the first time the proposal has occurred to me but as he did not pursue it any further I shall not deal with it because, to be truthful, I do not know if I have a substantial argument. However, in a large hospital in a municipal area, with 500 patients, it is probable that not more than 50 or 60, possibly 100, would actually be resident in the constituency where the hospital is located. It seems to me more desirable that the majority of the patients should be enfranchised by having machinery whereby they could vote in their own constituencies. In saying this, again I come back to the suggestion of a permanent voters list and absentee voting.

I do not wish to talk about that particular proposal at this time because it is not directly contained in the motion before the house, but I do think the difficulties outlined by the hon. member for York-Scarborough present quite a problem.

To me the only solution seems to lie in a permanent voters list which, if it is to be successful, would involve participation by the federal and provincial authorities, which seems to be a very timely topic, and since we are discussing a great many other things concerning the federal government and the provincial governments then perhaps the laudable motives of the mover of the motion would be fulfilled through a permanent voters list. Not only would that solve the problem of hospital patients, but it would also help those classes mentioned by the hon. member for Regina City.

I think all hon. members have had dealings with electors who feel they have been unjustly deprived of their right to vote. It seems to me it is the desire of all of us to extend the franchise to the greatest number of people possible, and though a great deal of administrative difficulty may be involved, it seems to me that, collectively, the people who have responsibility in this field—and I include among them the members of the committee on privileges and elections—should have sufficient imagination and ability to devise a system whereby the right to vote is extended wherever practicable.

I am not only thinking of people in hospitals. In my own province of Newfoundland, many people engaged in the seasonal fishery find it necessary to move from one part of the island to another, and it is often the case that they find themselves disfranchised. At the present time the seal fishery is under way, and if an election were called many hundreds of people who have left their homes to go to the ice would be disfranchised. It seems to me we should tackle this question on a broader basis so as to deal not only with the case of those confined in hospitals but also with these other cases to which I have referred, as well as those which have been mentioned by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. More) and others who have spoken.

It is certainly my hope that the subject matter of this motion will be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. I trust this committee will shortly be constituted, because there is a good chance of continuity in its membership; a number of members who have already served on that committee would be available to sit on it again. I am sure they have the imagination and the ability to resolve some of these difficulties, and I feel this would be an appropriate occasion on which to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a few words on the hon. member's motion. I am certain that he introduced it in good faith, and I, for my part, believe that those sick people have a valid reason for not voting. We should therefore, accept it.

Why worry because an infinitesimal part of people, perhaps once in their lifetime, have to forgo their right to vote?

No, Mr. Speaker. To my mind we should rather worry about the very large number of people who are able to do their duty and vote, but stay away from the polls.

That is the alarming aspect, and not the case of a few voters who happen to be in hospital at the time. Illness is a thing that does happen to several people, during an election, and I might well be hospitalized myself and lose my right to vote. That is hardly a catastrophe, in so far as it happens only once.

Rather than amend the Canada Elections Act on such a flimsy point, we should proceed with a few much more urgent changes. If the hon. member has gained some experience in several elections, he should be familiar with the complications arising from those transfers in a riding, more particularly in the last days before an election.

If the Canada Elections Act is ever amended with regard to travelling polls, it should not only extend to hospitals, but to all people having to stay at home because of invalidity or other ailments.

[Text]

Mr. J. E. Madill (Dufferin-Simcoe): I should like to commend the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. McNulty) for having introduced this notice of motion. I have served as a returning officer and I know what it is like to face disgruntled people who have not been allowed to exercise their franchise.

There is another group of people whose complaints might be considered, if this motion is referred to the committee on privileges and elections, as I hope it will be. These are the people who have moved their place of residence between the date of the issue of the writ and the date of the election. If they have not moved very far it is possible for them to get back to the riding where they are registered so as to exercise their franchise. A man might be able to get back himself, if the distance was not too great, but he could not very well take his family back to vote.

How could this difficulty be resolved? Application might be made to a returning officer who would be in a position, if the legislation were changed, to issue a certificate to provide that the elector's name be removed from the list in his old riding and sent to the returning officer in the area to which he has moved, where it could be added to the list. This would avoid any possibility of the franchise being exercised more than once. I think the committee might give consideration to this suggestion at the same time as it considers arrangements for covering persons in hospital.

I realize that time is allowed for anyone to get to the polls, but if a man has moved, say 500 miles, it becomes almost impossible for him to be present. I had one man come to me, an engineer in the department of highways, who had moved a thousand miles. He had always exercised his franchise and he felt he was being deprived of a right which should not be taken from him. I do not intend to say any more at this time. I just put forward these suggestions for consideration in the committee.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Perhaps this notice of motion could be referred to the committee. I think the debate, generally, has been in favour of such a course, and perhaps a motion might be made to that effect.

Motion (Mr. McNulty) agreed to.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

FORT CHIMO, QUEBEC—ALLEGED DISMISSAL OF SCHOOL TEACHER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can he tell the house if it is true that, due to pressures from the government of the province of Quebec, teachers are leaving the schools in the Arctic, that is, those who teach the Eskimos and are under federal jurisdiction?

[Text]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is referring to a story concerning one of our teachers at Fort Chimo who resigned and gave an interview to the press in Winnipeg. This story concerns an unhappy employee, and there is nothing worse than an unhappy employee unless it is an employee who has resigned. I do not want to say anything concerning this employee which would affect his future because I met him when I was at Fort Chimo and I thought he was an exceedingly competent man, and I hope that some day he will work for northern affairs again. However, he has made the statement that he was forced to resign; he was not, because we offered him a post in Ottawa which he declined. He made the statement that he was forced to resign because of pressure from officers of the Quebec government, and I want categorically to deny this in every respect.

This employee had been running a small newspaper. As newspapers go it was rather a pathetic little sheet, but nevertheless it was a newspaper in that area. He had also been engaging in what amounted to editorial comment on the arguments which existed or were building up, or which appeared to be building up, between Quebec and the federal authorities. Our officials remonstrated with him on two or three occasions and finally it was decided that we should move him out of the area. He refused to accept removal to another place. He was then offered the post in Ottawa and came to Ottawa but he resigned shortly afterwards.

[Later:]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister whether it is correct that Mr. McTaggart, the principal in question, was asked by officials of his department not to publish any articles in this newspaper unless they were first submitted to the department for editing?

Mr. Laing: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have such a ruling, a ruling which has been in effect for some years.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask the minister whether the newspaper reports that all seven teachers who have been teaching at Fort Chimo have asked for a transfer are correct, and if that is so what are the reasons?

Mr. Laing: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not correct. We think there has been an indication that four teachers are leaving. In the case of two of them, one is a teacher returning to university and his wife, who was also teaching there, is of course going with him. We have had an indication that two others will terminate their employment also.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the minister checked to see whether it is true that Mr. A. C. McTaggart, a school teacher, resigned to protest, as he said, against the strong campaign led by the Quebec government with a view to taking over the administration of Eskimo affairs?

[Text]

Mr. Laing: A similar question was asked before the hon. member came in, and I think he will find his answer in Hansard.

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister. Could he tell the house whether, when he last discussed the transfer of jurisdiction of Eskimo affairs with Mr. Rene Levesque, of the province of Quebec, he promised the latter that no referendum would be held among the Eskimo people?

Mr. Habel: Why not ask your leader?

Mr. Pigeon: If the hon. member has a question to ask, let him stand up.

Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Cochrane keeps on interrupting without getting up. If he has questions to ask, he just has to stand up like a man.

Mr. Habel: I ask reasonable questions.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was going to suggest to the hon. member that this question does not have that tremendous sense of urgency which I think it should have at this time.

Mr. Pigeon: But the minister wants to answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: The new Speaker.

Mr. Pigeon: If you want to speak stand up and speak.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Northwest Territories.

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister of northern affairs. I should like to ask the minister whether there is any truth to the press report of this incident which states that when the minister visited Fort Chimo last fall the Eskimo leaders told him at that time that they did not want jurisdiction over their affairs transferred to the province of Quebec. Is that an accurate statement of what occurred when the minister visited Fort Chimo last fall?

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, since the minister has not answered my earlier question, may I ask whether at the time the minister visited the Eskimo people they asked him for financial assistance to help them move to other areas or to the Northwest Territories should this transfer take place? In his meeting last fall did the Eskimo people ask for financial assistance to move elsewhere, as the press reports state?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that the hon. member put this question on the order paper. This question has to do with something which happened last fall, and I am sure that if he puts the question on the order paper he will get a very full answer.

Mr. Rheaume: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this question has to do with something which has occurred in the house nearly every day for the last month, namely questions asked of the ministry as to what is occurring with respect to the transfer of jurisdiction over the Eskimo people to northern Quebec. If the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making an argument.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—POSSIBILITY OF INCORPORATING QUEBEC SUGGESTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister advise the house of any intention to amend the Canada pension plan so as to incorporate the added advantages which it is suggested are inherent in the plan for the province of Quebec?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are quite satisfied with the plan we have put before the House of Commons.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

Could the Prime Minister inform the house whether, in the event of a pension plan being adopted by the Quebec government, the federal civil servants residing in the province of Quebec will be allowed to participate in the provincial plan?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which can be decided during the debate on second reading of the bill. All these matters can be discussed at that time.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT OF SEAMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour regarding the statements which were issued on Friday by the board of trustees of the maritime unions and Mr. Hall of the S.I.U. of North America. In view of the announced intention of the board to withdraw Mr. Charles Turner and hand control of the union back to the S.I.U. so that its constitution will automatically put Mr. McLaughlin in as president, I want to ask the minister whether he considers that this action will be carrying out the intent and purpose of the legislation which was passed by this parliament last fall?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this question involves an expression of personal opinion on the part of the Minister of Labour. However, what I will say is that the terms of the trusteeship legislation will apply and the board of trustees will still be in full charge of the situation in the event that Mr. McLaughlin will become president of the union. The trustees will still have the same authority under the law which they have today, and in the circumstances I think it is desirable they should.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. Has the minister received any indication from the trustees as to what is meant by the third proposal in the statement, that:

> All possible steps would be taken to integrate Canada's maritime unions where it is in the interest of union stability.

Does this mean that the board envisages amalgamating the S.I.U., the C.M.U. and the National Association of Marine Engineers?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have not specifically inquired from the trustees what is the meaning, in the context posed by my hon. friend, of this particular statement; but I will be glad to draw this question to the attention of the trustees and ask them for an amplification of the statement with particular respect to the point raised by my hon. friend.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask one last supplementary question? Is there some written agreement between the board of trustees and the S.I.U.

of North America, or was there merely a press statement? The reason I am asking this question is to ascertain whether it would be possible to have it tabled and available to the members of the house.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that there is a joint statement indicating arrangements that have been reached, understandings, between the board of trustees, in the person of Mr. Millard as the representative of the trustees, and Mr. Paul Hall as the president of the seafarers' international union.

Mr. Douglas: Could this statement be tabled in the house?

Mr. MacEachen: I would be glad to ask the trustees for a copy and to table it.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether the government was consulted and gave its approval to the arrangement made between the maritime trustees and Mr. Hall of the S.I.U. whereby Mr. McLaughlin is to become president of the S.I.U., despite the recommendations of Mr. Justice Norris that Mr. McLaughlin as well as Mr. Banks be removed from all position in the S.I.U.?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, from time to time the trustees have discussed their problems with me. On each occasion I have pointed out to them that they are free and independent and are expected to exercise their responsibilities in that way, under the terms of the legislation. I have resisted every invitation—some made in this house—to direct or interfere with or restrain the trustees in any way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Labour, in view of what he said earlier today and what he has now said, whether if Caligula had succeeded Nero he would have regarded that as an improvement in the government of Rome?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, all I wish to do is respect the law passed by the parliament of Canada, which gives this responsibility to the board of trustees and not to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest to the hon. member that if he has a question to ask, he ask it; but I cannot possibly see any supplementary question here.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question for clarification. Is the minister's interest not in the welfare and interest of the Canadian seamen, who are concerned with this action?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour?

Two or three weeks ago the minister told me that he would inquire to see whether it would be desirable to extend the period of the winter works program in the areas having a more severe climate. Could he tell us today how matters stand in that respect and whether this period will be extended this year in those areas which have not been able to take full advantage of the program since the beginning of the season?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I am just asking the Minister of Labour how far that investigation has progressed. Moreover, I think that question has some urgency, in view of the fact that the winter works program will end in three weeks.

For those reasons I feel that my question is in order.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: If the minister wishes to reply, he may do so; otherwise may I suggest this is a question for the order paper. The hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Plourde).

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, the minister was rising to answer that question.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I shall be glad to answer my hon. friend and tell him that notwithstanding the consideration given to his proposal, it is not the intention of the government to extend the municipal winter works program beyond the date originally announced, or especially to apply at this stage the seasonal factors that he has in mind. Certainly his submission will be borne in mind for consideration for the future program.

WORLD FAIR

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON USE OF SYMBOL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question?

Could the Prime Minister make a statement to the house about the symbol for the 1967 world's fair which was rejected by the house and adopted just the same by the world exhibition corporation?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that has already been dealt with officially in the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Does the Prime Minister know that they adopted—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question has been dealt with, as was stated a short time ago. If the hon. member has a question, would he put it on the order paper? The hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Noble).

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Speaker, may I direct another question to the Prime Minister?

Is the Prime Minister aware that such a symbol was shown on television and that it was used to poke fun at the prime ministers of several countries?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that.

SHIPPING

EFFECT OF LOW WATER LEVEL IN GEORGIAN BAY AND LAKE HURON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. What measures does the government plan to take to cope with the serious low water situation in Georgian bay and lake Huron?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this is certainly a question for the order paper.

Mr. Noble: Mr. Speaker, this is a serious situation in my riding.

Mr. Speaker: There is no doubt about the importance of the question, but similar questions have been asked, I think, for the last three weeks.

Mr. Noble: I would like to ask a supplementary question. I ask the Prime Minister, owing to the fact that this is a matter of international consequence, has he been contacted by the United States government in respect of this problem?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. I know it is a serious matter, and if the hon. gentleman would put his question on the order paper that would give us a chance to make a thorough examination of the matter.

FINANCE

SALES TAX—REQUEST FOR SIMPLIFICATION OF REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to ask the Acting Minister of National Revenue. Is his department at this time receiving appeals from boards of school trustees across Canada urging a simplification of the regulations governing the sales tax as applied to building materials in school construction, without which they claim they will lose money; and if so, will his department consider these appeals?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure hon. members do not wish to see me getting up and down all the time, but this surely is also a question for the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—ACTIVITIES OF CANADIAN PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the reported heavy fighting in Cyprus yesterday and again today, in which there were casualties among the British troops of the United Nations force and in the area we understand Canadian forces were to occupy today, could the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the house whether Canadian troops have taken over these areas in which fighting has been taking place recently; and if so, have any special instructions been issued to them? In addition, perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs would care to comment on whether he thinks the position of Canadian troops under United Nations command has been jeopardized in any way by the unilateral breaking of the treaty by Archbishop Makarios.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, some hon. members on the government benches do not seem interested in the Canadian troops there.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first part of the question, there is no information immediately available that has not already appeared in the news media with respect to the position of the Canadian troops. As to the position of the British troops in the United Nations force the situation, of course, is more detailed. With regard to the second part of the question, we are aware, of course, that moves have been made over the week end by powers having treaty interests on Cyprus. It is clear that the problems raised by these actions are of direct concern to the United Nations mediator. These questions go close to the root of the basic problem between the two communities and it would be inappropriate at this time to add to the problem by commenting on something which is of immediate concern to the mediator.

Impartiality is the essence of the United Nations force on Cyprus and certainly I would not wish, and I am sure my hon. friend would not wish, to say anything at any time which could be construed as favouring one side or the other and thus making the role of our contingent more difficult or adding to the delicate responsibilities of mediation now being undertaken by the mediator.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us whether or not the Canadian troops took over those areas today that they were supposed to take over?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing further to add. As my hon. friend knows, the Canadians are part of the United Nations force and they take their orders from the commander of the international peace keeping body.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While agreeing with the minister's statement that this is a very delicate situation which ought not to be upset, may I ask the minister whether it would be possible to transmit this point of view to Archbishop Makarios who seems to be treading on a very delicate situation which may have very serious repercussions for the United Nations force of which Canada is a part?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that Canada's ambassador to Israel, who is also accredited to Cyprus, is in Cyprus and has been in Cyprus for several weeks and no doubt, consistent with the problems that face all on the island, he will discharge his responsibilities in a way that is calculated to do what my hon. friend perhaps has in mind.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Even the Prime Minister has to laugh.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SASKATOON, SASK.—SUGGESTION TO HONOUR LATE MEMBER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Could the minister take steps to see that the new veterans home now under construction in Saskatoon is named the Harry Jones veterans home in memory of the late member of parliament for Saskatoon who served in Her Majesty's forces and also as parliamentary secretary to the minister of the department? Has the desire of the people of Saskatoon to have this home so named been brought to the attention of the minister?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not had any representations made to me but I thank the hon. member for the suggestion and I will certainly take it under advisement.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED OVERPAYMENT OF BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. According to the most recent unemployment survey made by the dominion bureau of statistics over 467,000 people were listed as unemployed but during the same period of time the unemployment insurance commission paid benefits to 607,144. Can the minister advise the house why there is this discrepancy of over 140,000 people and whether or not this many people are drawing unemployment insurance benefits when they are apparently not unemployed?

Mr. Pickersgill: Ask the hon. member for Ontario.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: You have been there a year. How long does it take you?

Another hon. Member: You were there longer than that.

Mr. MacEachen: —I will be glad to take this question as notice.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question. Since the minister has taken this question as notice, will he also prepare himself to advise the house which set of figures he thinks is the correct one to use?

AGRICULTURE

TOBACCO—REQUEST BY GROWERS FOR FINANCIAL AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the hon. gentleman give any information to the house regarding the promise that was made last week to a delegation from the Ontario flue cured tobacco growers marketing board to the effect that their request for financial aid in processing and storing no sale tobacco would be given immediate consideration? Has a decision been reached on this matter by the government?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I met the delegation and assured them that we would take their proposals into consideration. We are still considering them.

Mr. McBain: If and when a decision is reached will the minister make the announcement in the house?

TRADE

REPORTED U. K. PROPOSALS RESPECTING PREFERENTIAL TARIFFS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether the United Kingdom government consulted with the Canadian government regarding the trade proposal which it has just submitted to the Geneva conference, whereby the countries outside the commonwealth would be entitled to import some raw materials from the United Kingdom under the same terms as the commonwealth countries?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to reply to this question? We have asked our delegation to the United Nations conference to give us a full report on these proposals, including the text of the statement referred to in the press reports and also referred to by the hon. gentleman. Until we have seen the text of the statement on these proposals I would hesitate to comment on them.

I should like to say one thing, however, that as far as restrictions on primary products are concerned the house will recall that in my statement on the GATT ministerial meeting in May of last year I pointed out that Canada would be prepared to join with other developed countries in removing barriers to the trade of less developed countries in these products. At present Canada has no quantitative restrictions on imports of products of interest to developing countries and our tariffs on tropical products and raw materials are generally low or have been removed altogether.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: I should like to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he tell us whether he has been informed of this proposal in advance, since in his speech to the conference—a speech which was well received—he referred to the possibility that Canada would agree to such an eventuality?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the president of the board of trade did not attend the conference 10 days ago. He arrived this morning only. We are not aware of this speech and we have asked for the information just mentioned by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As soon as this information is available to us, we shall provide it to the house.

[Text]

Mr. Martineau: I wonder whether I could ask a supplementary question. Inasmuch as the minister stated at the conference that Canada was considering abandoning certain commonwealth tariff preferences it now enjoys in the markets of commonwealth developing countries in order to stimulate trade in certain non-commonwealth developing countries and inasmuch as the proposal placed before the conference today resembles very much the proposal made by the minister, I wonder whether the minister had advance information on that proposal?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated what the position of the government is on that, as has my hon. friend, the Minister of Trade and Commerce. What I said on the subject was as follows:

> Canada would be prepared during the course of the Kennedy round of tariff negotiations to examine carefully any tariff preferences now enjoyed by Canada in the markets of developing countries which may be regarded as prejudicial to the trade of other developing countries.

TARIFF POLICY—INVESTMENT PROGRAM BY GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Industry. What steps is the minister taking with regard to Canadian General Electric's announcement last Thursday that tariff philosophies are not conducive to making needed investments in export facilities in Canada, and that they are setting up plants in Europe and Latin America rather than investing in export plants in this country?

Mr. Speaker: This is surely a good example of a question for the order paper.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR LARGER SHARE OF REVENUE

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a specific question to the Prime Minister. Since Mr. Lesage's ultimatum claiming about $150,000,000 more expired yesterday, does the Prime Minister propose to assure the house that the province of Quebec will get that amount before the end of the year, in order to avoid a disaster?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I must rule this question out of order. It is a hypothetical one.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have put a very specific question to the Prime Minister, and I am convinced that he will want to answer such an important question for the future of confederation.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I must say I do not think the Prime Minister should answer the question because I have ruled it out of order.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

1e. Departmental administration including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $10,000.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity when this supplementary estimate is being discussed to call the attention of the minister to some matters which I regard as being of very great importance to the future of this country. I appreciate that the minister has only recently assumed this particular responsibility and that he has other heavy responsibilities. However, I believe that in the past there has been a lack in his department of leadership in the field I propose to mention. This field, Mr. Chairman, is the preservation and protection of the fundamental rights and liberties of the individual.

We have recently witnessed an incredible situation in the province of Ontario, an exhibition of insensitivity of those in high places to some of the most elementary principles of democracy. I do not propose to discuss the situation in Ontario at length. Fortunately, that matter has been dealt with adequately by the people and legislature of that province. However, the incident points up in my submission the urgent necessity for the incorporation in the constitution of Canada of a bill of rights which will prevent invasion of the fundamental liberties by provincial legislatures.

The bill of rights passed by this parliament has obvious admitted defects. The Leader of the Opposition himself, whose name is associated with this bill of rights, recognized that the bill is only a first step. It has no application at all to the actions of the legislatures of the various provinces, or to matters within their legislative field. It is a fact, Mr. Chairman, historically speaking, that most of the grave threats to civil liberties in Canada have come from the provinces. I do not forget that it was a former federal government that passed the orders in council providing for deportation for Japanese Canadian citizens whose only offence was their racial origin.

Mr. Favreau: I rise on a point of order, please.

Mr. Brewin: I am not likely to forget it because I had to represent—

The Chairman: Order; the Minister of Justice on a point of order.

Mr. Favreau: There is no hon. gentleman in this house whom I would less desire to curtail because he is always sincere in his statements on matters of justice and other matters. However, in view of the fact discussions on these estimates, which are supplementary estimates, are now proceeding into the ninth day I suggest that standing order 59(2) should be applied. It states that speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the matter of a bill of rights should not be deemed to be included in the objectives of vote 1e which is for the purpose of making a grant to the Canadian corrections association to assist in defraying the expenses of the fifth international criminological congress to be held in Montreal in 1965. I repeat there is no attempt on my part to curtail discussion, but surely the hon. gentleman's remarks are not relevant within the meaning of standing order 59(2).

Mr. Knowles: You will remember some time ago, a couple of weeks ago, Mr. Chairman, you were in the chair when we first started discussing these supplementary estimates. I supported then the proposition that there should not be a general discussion covering the whole waterfront, but on each department where there was a general item discussion related to the general activities of the department would be in order. I believe that was the generally accepted view of the house.

What is now before us is item 1e of the Department of Justice. It includes certain other things which are in addition to money already voted for item 1 of the Department of Justice. I think anything that can be considered as being related to the Department of Justice, its general activities, should be considered in order now under the terms of the understanding under which we started this discussion some weeks ago.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman. We were also under the impression, when we began to discuss supplementary estimates "E", that on the first item of each department called, we would be allowed to deal with the general administration of one department only. That is why we refrained from starting a general debate on item No. 1 of the supplementary budget as a whole.

We are therefore surprised today to find that attempts are being made to curtail the debate on certain departments, because we feel that since we are dealing with the last supplementary estimates we are to see this year, we are entitled to a general discussion. No matter what the rules say, since an agreement was reached officially in this house, we should like to see it respected.

[Text]

The Chairman: I am in the same position as the Minister of Justice. I have no intention of trying to limit the discussion. I recognize that when we started a study of the supplementary estimates it was agreed by members of the committee we would have a general discussion on the first item of the department where there was an administration item such as this 1e for the Department of Justice. I am sure hon. members will recognize, in spite of this, that there must be some limitation. It does not mean, I am sure, that we should discuss everything that pertains in any way to the Department of Justice, and I believe hon. members will want to exercise some limitation.

I had some reservations myself about the tenor of the remarks made by the hon. member for Greenwood, and I felt that perhaps what he was saying was related more closely to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and concerned the Immigration Act.

Before I sit down, for the benefit of hon. members I may quote not only standing order 59 (2) referred to by the Minister of Justice, but also page 738 of May's sixteenth edition which says:

> Of course, it is quite obvious that it should be improper, as a general rule, to raise on a supplementary estimate the whole question of policy involved in the original estimate.

This, of course, is a general rule we have to bear in mind, even though we have recognized the fact that we could have a general discussion, and I am sure the hon. member for Greenwood will want to keep that in mind.

Mr. Brewin: I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I shall exercise the restraint you suggest. On the other hand I do propose to talk—if I am permitted to, and I think I am under the ruling you have made—about what I regard as one of the primary responsibilities of the Minister of Justice and his department. As I was saying, I do not propose to extend these remarks. Indeed, if I had not been stopped, I might possibly have finished by this time, but I will say to the committee and the minister that this question of a constitutional bill of rights for the protection of the fundamental rights of citizens, in my opinion is an important responsibility of his department.

While I recognize that the minister has only recently assumed his responsibilities, I hope that when his next estimates are presented he will be able to say something very definite about this matter. What I am saying today is that we, in this corner of the house at least, are serving notice that we expect some action from him in this regard.

I was pointing out the weaknesses of the existing bill of rights as passed by this parliament, and saying that one of its weaknesses is that it has no effect on provincial legislation which has constituted the main threat to civil liberties, with the exception, perhaps, of the Japanese Canadians, with which I was very familiar. With that single exception the invasions of civil liberties by provincial governments and legislatures has been more frequent. I am not going to cite them all now.

There was the press act of Alberta, the padlock act in the province of Quebec, and the acts of the legislatures of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island that restricted freedom of association.

There has also been the recent act of the legislature of British Columbia that interfered with the rights of trade unions to contribute to election campaigns, and we have had a situation where the cabinet of the province of Ontario brought forward legislation that has justly been described by the press as the most offensive and dangerous legislation ever introduced in that province. It was described, by the ill-fated introducer of it as, "drastic, dangerous, new and terrible."

We all know that a vigilant press, an aroused public and a determined opposition secured the withdrawal of that legislation, but what I am trying to point out is that the bill of rights had no application to that threat, and apparently had no educative effect on the members of the Ontario government who sponsored the legislation. Even in respect to legislation passed by this parliament, a series of decisions has made it clear that the bill of rights is ineffective as its general language gives way to specific legislation inconsistent with it.

What I suggest is needed, and I recommend this to the Minister of Justice, is the incorporation in the constitution, and binding on parliament and the legislatures of a clear statement of fundamental principles setting out the basic liberties of the subject. I think one of the primary duties of the department is the considering of the constitutional structure of Canada as a whole, and also giving a lead to securing such a fundamental bill of rights as I have mentioned. Then there would be no danger of provincial or federal invasion of this particular field.

This would of course involve consultation with the provinces, and will also involve consultation with other experts in the field. More than a month ago I put a question on the order paper to the minister, question No. 229, which has remained unanswered. It was in respect to this very matter.

The whole problem of federal-provincial relations which is concerning all thoughtful Canadians can best be resolved, I suggest, in the context of effective federal leadership in the field of a new declaration of fundamental principles upon which the whole Canadian compact and constitution is based.

Before I sit down I want to refer to just one other aspect of individual rights which I suggest is urgently needed, and I merely suggest it for consideration. It is the question of a proper system of criminal legal aid. I have had, and no doubt the minister has had, many briefs on this subject. As a matter of fact some of the best briefs I received were from the John Howard Society of B.C., and the B.C. civil liberties association. I do not propose to read this at length, but the brief of the John Howard Society of B.C. points out that our Criminal Code provides that a person is entitled in a criminal case "to make full answer and defence personally, or by counsel," and the bill of rights provides for a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice. These declarations which are in important statutes of this parliament, the Criminal Code and the bill of rights, require a fair hearing and evidence that a person should be able to make answer to criminal charges. But can a trial be fair and fundamentally just when an accused person attempts to defend himself without counsel?

That question has been dealt with by the United States supreme court. I shall not quote its judgment at length, but as recently as 1963 that court said:

> ...Reason and reflection require us to recognize that in our adversary system of criminal justice, any person haled into court, who is too poor to hire a lawyer, cannot be assured a fair trial unless counsel is provided for him.

That seems to be an obvious truth. I point out that the crown provides for the prosecution of those charged with offences in order to protect the fundamental rights of the public, but the fundamental rights of the accused cannot be forgotten.

The minister may say that this is essentially a matter for the provinces but I suggest that section 91 (27) of the British North America Act gives responsibility to the federal parliament in criminal procedure, and thus indicates that the federal parliament must take a lead in this field. I know many provinces are seeking to develop adequate systems of legal aid and I suggest this is a field for co-operative federalism. One of the responsibilities of the minister should be to call together those who represent the provinces in this field and work out a fully satisfactory means of providing legal aid, which in the United States is said to be a high constitutional right of every individual accused. This is something which should also be developed in Canada. The rights of people accused in Canada should be no less than the rights of people accused in the United States.

These are the two subjects, that of a constitutional amendment to make an effective bill of rights, and criminal legal aid, which I respectfully suggest to the minister could be receiving his earnest attention. I do not expect him to answer these questions now, but I do serve notice on him that we will look to him for a real lead in this field. For far too long the Department of Justice has been a department which has, no doubt, provided useful services to the government and to the country, but I think it has done all too little to blaze a trail in the development of the civil rights and liberties of all Canadians. I hope that under the leadership of the present minister the situation will change, and I serve notice on him that we shall continue to draw these matters to his attention.

Mr. Grafftey: In my brief remarks this evening I wish to touch upon the activities of the penitentiaries commission, which falls under the jurisdiction of the minister. I have asked him questions in relation to the subject I intend to bring up tonight. I have written a number of letters to various ministers and now I feel obliged to bring this subject up in the House of Commons this evening.

All of us in this house realize that the Minister of Labour has spent, and rightly so, hundreds of thousands of dollars of the taxpayers' money to encourage Canadian employers to employ older workers. Indeed, we are told—and it is apparent from the hon. gentleman's estimates—that employers are actually paid bonuses if they employ people over the age of 45. The other day in the house I put a question to the Minister of Justice. I asked him whether the penitentiaries commission withheld employment to applicants over the age of 45 years for positions other than custodial positions. The hon. gentleman told me—and I believe I am paraphrasing his reply correctly—that only those applicants who applied for jobs of a custodial nature had to be under the age of 45.

Some people may say this is only a small matter, Mr. Chairman, but I believe it is a matter of the kind which backbenchers must regard with a special concern. A gentleman in my constituency who is a war veteran—he had a very good record in the second world war—holds a licence as a plumber. I do not imagine that anybody, by any stretch of the imagination could declare that a plumber in a penitentiary was carrying out a custodial function. Well, on February 26, 1964, he received the following reply from the regional director of penitentiaries:

> Your application for employment as a plumber has been refused.

Why was it rejected? The reply went on:

> The maximum age for this position is 45, and you are 48 years old.

An hon. Member: Discrimination.

Mr. Grafftey: Happenings of this kind create a high degree of cynicism in the public mind. Far too often, governments say: Do as I say, not as I do. I do not intend to belabour this point further this evening. As I have said, I have written to the minister. I have written to the Minister of Veterans Affairs about this matter because he realizes that when people over the age of 45 are refused jobs of this kind in the government the whole notion of veterans preference is completely set aside. I have written, also, to the Minister of Labour because his department is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars trying to persuade employers in the private sector to employ people over the age of 45.

I think the incident I have cited shows that a ridiculous state of affairs exists. I am not, primarily, bringing the case of one man before the committee this evening. I think the government should start a whole investigation into the civil service commission and into the penitentiaries commission to see if any more anomalies of this type exist. I know that the minister, with his usual sincerity, will investigate this matter as quickly as possible and give us a satisfactory answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I only wish to make a few remarks to the Minister of Justice. I know that he is responsible for making sure that every bill submitted to the house does not violate the constitution; I know also that he does not shirk that responsibility. As a matter of fact, the other day, he gave a categorical opinion on the constitutionality of the pension plan bill and in particular on the constitutional aspect of section 3 of the said bill.

I must admit that I was a little bit dismayed to hear the minister give such a categorical and definite opinion on a matter which seems to raise very serious doubts in the minds of our country's experts in constitutional matters because such matters seem rather complicated.

In fact, section 3 provides that any non-participating province will have to submit to the following procedure:

1. First of all, give the federal government a 30-day notice of its intention not to participate in the national program;

2. On receipt of such a notice, the federal government reserves the right to decide on the validity of the alternative program proposed by the province—

Mr. Chairman, I believe I have imitators on the other side of the house. If my dear friends wish to explain the problem, I am quite willing to yield the floor to them—

3. According to the provisions of that section, it would seem that once a province has joined the national program, it will no longer be able to withdraw from it.

In my opinion, those three conditions restrict the legislative authority of the provinces concerning those pensions.

On the other hand, the provisions of clause 94A of the British North America Act are quite clear and leave no doubt as to the absolute jurisdiction of the provinces as regards pension legislation.

Here is part of that provision:

—that the parliament of Canada may, from time to time, make laws in relation to old age pensions in Canada—

The Chairman: The Minister of Justice is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I realize the importance of the question asked by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue. While I may have answered rather quickly the other day, it was simply due to my conviction on that point, but it does not mean that the matter does not call for a general discussion.

But hon. members know, and we announced it, that the bill on the Canada pension plan is to be called for second reading at any time now. I think that it would give us an opportunity of discussing the merit of clause 3 of the bill, rather than under the administration item of the Department of Justice.

I am certain that, even if we were discussing the main estimates, and not just supplementary estimates, this discussion, under the item now before us, and even under the main budget, could hardly be justified.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, as regards the point of order raised by the Minister of Justice, I must say that I raise this question because the constitutionality of our laws depends on the minister and his authority.

We are now considering item 1, and you have just accepted a discussion which was quite far from the subject. But, on the other hand, in order to assuage the minister's impatience, and perhaps your own, I may say that I have almost concluded my remarks. I have only two or three words to add.

When I was interrupted so pleasantly by the Minister of Justice, I was reading the provisions of section 94A, which, I believe, are clear and give the provinces an absolute right to legislate in matters of pensions. This section goes even farther, and indicates that the federal government cannot, through any legislation, prejudice this legislative power.

Now, as I have mentioned, here is a project the constitutionality of which the minister has to determine, and which encroaches, in three ways, on the absolutely clear power of the provinces to legislate in this field under their own jurisdiction.

In the circumstances, since the minister replied a little more quickly than he should have, I simply suggest that he should ask his officials to examine the various aspects of this section and that he should study them himself.

If I raise this matter at the present time, instead of waiting for consideration of the bill itself, concerning the pension plan, it is because I am convinced that the minister, having seen to what extent this measure encroaches on provincial jurisdiction, will withdraw, amend or repeal section 3, and place before the house a bill which, at first sight at least, will appear constitutional.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just one word and ask the minister whether he intends to amend the Criminal Code so that the provinces that want to may organize lotteries and sweepstakes. I am vitally interested in that matter. I know the minister will co-operate, because it concerns a promise made by several candidates of his party during the last election campaign, especially in the province of Quebec.

I have here a clipping from the newspaper La Presse of March 4, 1963 where it is reported that the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau), now parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, speaking in Malartic, promised, on behalf of his party, that the Criminal Code would be amended in order to enable the provinces wishing to do so, including the province of Quebec, to have lotteries. I know that the minister's answer will be yes, since the hon. member for Dollard and some others—

The Chairman: Order. Since the hon. member has now expressed his opinion and made his representations, I may take this opportunity to make a ruling on the point of order raised a while ago by the Minister of Justice.

Of course, I feel sure that the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue has realized the soundness of the point raised by the minister in the sense—

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: If the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue will let me conclude my remarks. —In the sense that we cannot anticipate an order of the house, in the case pointed out by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue, who himself admitted that he had to limit his observations, in a certain measure, in view of the fact that there was already an order of the house on the same matter.

In the case that has just been raised by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, we are faced with the same difficulty. There is at least one bill, namely Bill C-19, which is now listed on the order paper of the house. In the circumstances, hon. members are not entitled to enter into a debate with respect to that matter.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, in that case, I shall raise another point.

I know that the government intends to appoint a judge who will be in charge of divorce cases for the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland.

May I ask the Minister of Justice whether he intends to consult not only the civic authorities but also the religious authorities in the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland, because I do not believe that it is possible, under the constitution, to impose on the provinces concerned something they probably do not want, without consulting them and obtaining their assent.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, of course, the legislative measure mentioned by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is not aimed at setting up divorce courts for the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland.

I do not want to say much about it, because it is now on the order paper and will be discussed as soon as the order of the day is called. But nevertheless, it is indeed an act for the sole purpose of investing upon a judge the powers of a divorce commissioner, a position which was established by the house during the last session.

However, I think that when the bill in question receives second reading, I shall have the opportunity of explaining to the house what it is all about and the nature of the powers that this legislative measure will confer on an additional judge of the exchequer court.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, since this is another bill before the house and I cannot speak about it, just as in the case of sweepstakes, I shall try once again to deal with a subject which does not concern any bill now before this house, which will permit me to make my observations while conforming to your requirements.

Recently, the chiefs of police of Canada held a convention during which certain films shown over the television networks, particularly the C.B.C., were strongly criticized.

The Canadian chiefs of police association has submitted a brief to the Minister of Justice—when the former minister of justice was head of the department—asking him to find some way, not to impose people on the C.B.C., but rather to exert more pressure so that the C.B.C. itself might select a special committee made up, for instance, of educators, parents and religious authorities, in order to exercise some supervision on films shown on television, especially those shown at the time young people settle down before their television sets.

Police chiefs in Canada were unanimous to state that one of the main causes of crime and juvenile delinquency in general throughout Canada was the showing of movies exploiting crime, sex, and passion on television at hours when young people are among the viewers.

Without alluding to anybody in the C.B.C., I would ask the minister whether it would be possible to find a practical way so that T.V. networks, such as the C.B.C. itself, might set up an organization to supervise the movies shown at hours when young people are listening.

Because he received many letters from all over the country, from authorities of all religious denominations, educators and parents, the minister must be aware of the general concern over the freedom taken in that respect by the C.B.C. national television network which is financed by taxpayers throughout Canada.

Consequently, I would ask the minister whether it would not be possible to find, in consultation with the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne), a compromise which would enable the C.B.C. to recommend to the government the establishment of such a committee and to act upon the representations made by parents, educators, religious authorities, and also by the chiefs of police at their recent convention.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to labour that point too long either, but I wish to say that I have inherited from my predecessor, as suggested by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, the very policy concerning the association to which he referred earlier.

Mr. Chairman, for reasons which can be readily understood, I have not yet had the opportunity of considering to my satisfaction the problem and of establishing definitely under whose jurisdiction this whole matter comes nor the solutions likely to be brought forward. The problem can obviously be considered from many angles. First, the viewpoint of Canadians and parents who have to exercise their authority on their children; second, the time at which the programs are shown; third, the question of censorship and liberty of television; fourth, should the state-owned network be treated differently from privately-owned networks.

I can assure my hon. friend that as a citizen of this country and as a father, I am very much interested in this problem and that I shall do my utmost to discuss this matter with my colleagues.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a supplementary question?

Does the minister consider that each province could use its own censorship organization to supervise programs or films presented on the television networks? The province of Quebec has its own censorship organization; is the minister not of the opinion that this comes under provincial jurisdiction?

Mr. Favreau: I realize that all questions ought to be answered, provided they are in order according to our rules and regulations. But I feel sure that my hon. friend is now asking me for an opinion on a constitutional matter that I have no right to give to the house.

All I can say is that, when I was teaching law, that was a question I liked to ask the people in my class and they did not always come up with a perfect answer, in the sense suggested by my hon. friend. I feel it is premature to discuss it here, for this is not the right moment for that. Furthermore, the question is purely theoretical, since it is meant to determine whether or not such an act, if it were passed by the provinces, would be constitutional. But, to the extent that the matter falls within the scope of the question, I promised to take it into serious consideration, and I shall do so.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, before the item is passed I know that the minister wants to answer the question asked by my hon. friend from Pontiac-Temiscamingue on the constitutionality of section 3 of the bill concerning the Canada pension plan.

The Chairman: Order. I think that the hon. member for Three Rivers was not in the house when that point was raised by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue, but a question was asked and an answer given by the Minister of Justice, and we agreed that such matters were not in order and should be discussed some other time.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, the question was in order and I thought that the minister was ready to give me an answer, but later on I did not get any.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Peace River. Is the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue raising a point of order?

Mr. Martineau: I have no wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but before going on to another item, even if it is in order, I think that the minister should give us some explanations. After all, he comes to the house to have some votes passed, and the least he could do is answer the questions put to him.

The Chairman: I think the question has already been answered, though perhaps not to the satisfaction of the hon. member, but I think that under standing orders, the substance of the question raised is irregular because it tends to prolong the debate.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

Mr. Martineau: There is no question of drawing out the debate; the minister has only to answer yes or no.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, we have here a quite important question of policy and, even if we were discussing the first item in the main budget, I think that it is not up to me to answer a question specifically asked by my hon. friend from Pontiac-Temiscamingue because, according to the functions he has assumed, the Minister of Justice is the adviser of the crown in all constitutional matters.

It is therefore obvious that the same pretext might be used to raise questions with regard to the constitutional character of every statute, every clause and every item before us, and, for purely mathematical reasons, it would be an endless procedure. It seems to me that the discussion will be much more in order when the bill presented by the Minister of National Health and Welfare comes up for second reading.

[Text]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, in June, 1963, I asked the minister at that time a question with regard to the matter of the legality of the means proposed by the government in making a change of administrative responsibility for the Eskimos in northern Quebec. On June 28 I asked him this question dealing with the transfer of responsibility for the Eskimos:

> If any such agreement is reached, will it be submitted to parliament?

The minister then said the question was a hypothetical one and did not answer it. Since that time I have posed the question a number of times, as have other hon. members. It has now been admitted that an agreement of sorts has been reached between Canada and Quebec and I think this is an excellent time for the minister, sitting here not only in his capacity as Minister of Justice in respect of whose estimates we are now having a discussion but also, of course, as one of the ministers dealing with the question of this particular transfer, to answer this question. I make this very definite statement, Mr. Chairman, that as I understand it, the method which the government proposes to use is completely unconstitutional and should not be permitted. I want to illustrate this very briefly and put these points before the committee at this time. As has been admitted Canada secured, after trying to evade it, responsibility in 1939 as a result of a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. In the result the court answered a very simple question. The question was: Are Eskimos of northern Quebec Indians within the meaning of term 24 of the British North America Act, section 91? The answer was very simply: Yes, they are. This was the entire answer made by the Supreme Court of Canada. This being the case, by section 91 Canada has exclusive jurisdiction; but not the government of Canada, the parliament of Canada. I think—

The Chairman: Order. I have some doubt as to whether the point raised by the hon. member falls within the ambit of the resolution now before the committee. Perhaps the hon. member might enlighten the Chair as to how this relates specifically to the item before us.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, this matter turns on a question of the constitutionality of a step which is to be taken in connection with the transfer of responsibility for certain Canadian people for whom this parliament is responsible. It has been admitted in the house that this transfer is going to take place. I am suggesting that the method by which it is to take place is unconstitutional. In my view the Minister of Justice, as attorney general, chief law officer of the crown and adviser to the cabinet, is now answering for his estimates and is in the position where he should be prepared to hear argument that this is not a constitutional process which the government proposes to take.

I am basing my view, Mr. Chairman, on the fact that we have agreed indirectly that there shall be general discussion, which normally possibly would not take place but because of the desire to push through interim supply this general understanding was reached. As a matter of fact, just to illustrate my point, I had prepared myself to and wished to discuss this particular issue on interim supply, but I yielded to the request of the government and did not do so. Now the estimates of the Minister of Justice are before the committee and this issue I am dealing with involves the constitutionality of a very grave and important proposal that the government has made. I am submitting that the way they intend to do it is unconstitutional and I think the minister is the proper person to entertain this argument.

Mr. Laing: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? He made the statement that it had been admitted in the house that a transfer was to be made. Would he refer me to the quotation in Hansard where that statement was made?

Mr. Baldwin: I am sure my seatmate will be glad to look that up while I am proceeding with my argument.

Mr. Macdonald: That is a weak response.

Mr. Baldwin: It was during the course of a discussion when the Prime Minister, as I recall, made the statement that before the transfer was made there would be consultation with the Eskimos.

The Chairman: Order. The point I had in mind was that even though we are having a general discussion that discussion should relate to matters which affect the administration of the Department of Justice. The point being raised by the hon. member is very similar to others raised previously by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue and the hon. member for Three Rivers. In each case there is anticipation of legislation which may or may not come before the house. Perhaps there is not this difficulty in the case of the hon. member, but to my mind the discussion which he is starting now relates more closely to the administration of northern affairs than the Department of Justice. I wonder whether the hon. member has taken that into account?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, Mr. Chairman. May I say that if there were legislation dealing with this matter on the order paper I would not need to say anything. I would not be making this argument; I would not be speaking. What we are complaining about is that there is no legislation when there should be. That is germane to my complaint. There is no legislation. What I submit is proposed to be done here is proposed to be done, if it is going to be done at all, by order in council, which I submit is completely unconstitutional, completely improper. That is the point of my argument. There is no legislation before us at all. I suggest that the Minister of Justice has an explanation to make here.

I will not be very long. I should like to make these points to illustrate my reason for suggesting that what is proposed is unconstitutional. The minister may be able to satisfy my anxiety on this score. If he can I will be very happy indeed. I was pointing out that the 1939 case vested jurisdiction over the Eskimos of northern Quebec in parliament and not in the hands of the government. Surely it has been settled many years ago that the legislative branch is supreme and that the government only has such power as parliament chooses to give to it. Until the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources is in a position to indicate to the house that the government has jurisdiction to make this transfer, then I suggest there is no way it can be done save by legislation.

I will complete my very brief argument on this point and then sit down and hope that the minister may answer me. I recall that when my colleague spoke on this matter on an interim supply bill he indicated that the government should bring in legislation and then made the point that the effect of a statement made by the parliamentary secretary appeared to negative the suggestion and to indicate that legislation would not be brought in to implement the proposal.

I submit that if you examine section 91 of the British North America Act, Mr. Chairman, you will see the impropriety of what the government proposes to do. Without securing an act of parliament it is going to transfer jurisdiction by administrative process to a province. As far as that aspect is concerned, let me say that I make no objection to the fact that it might be eminently desirable in the long run for changes of jurisdiction of this kind to take place. This is not my argument. I am concerned with the manner in which it is proposed to be done. The government proposes to do it by means other than legislation. Let us consider what may be involved here—the health, education, welfare, the method by which property descends, devolution of estates and so on, relating to these Eskimos.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order which I will not press too hard, but because the supplementary estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources will be coming up at any moment now, I suggest very respectfully that item 1 of the estimates of the Department of Justice is hardly the place for this discussion. However, inasmuch as the hon. member has already gone quite far in asserting his very interesting position, I suggest that he be allowed to proceed even on my estimates but that we be allowed to answer this part of his speech when the northern affairs estimates are called.

The Chairman: I think this is a very reasonable position. Actually it is the position that the Chair adopted in the case of the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue who was allowed to complete his argument, although perhaps he did not have as much time to do so as the hon. member for Peace River. I feel that the committee of supply is not the place to get an opinion from the Minister of Justice on the constitutionality of a statute. However, as the Minister of Justice is willing to listen to the point of view being expressed by the hon. member for Peace River I feel he should be allowed to complete his argument.

Mr. Martineau: On the point of order.

[Translation]

On your point of order, Mr. Chairman, I must say that this discussion is quite relevant, since the Minister of Justice himself took part in the discussions regarding the matter raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

[Text]

The Chairman: I think his participation was to the extent of saying he should not be required to give an opinion.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, this is one of those famous compromises by which democracy works, though sometimes at greater length than it normally would. This is my submission. If I am correct in the assumption I have made from all of the questions and answers and what has been said on the subject, that it is the intention of the government to call this change an administrative change only and work it out by order in council without coming to parliament, then I submit this procedure is unconstitutional. I was making the point as to precisely what would be involved in these changes. They may call it administrative detail, but in fact it involves everything concerning the lives and the fortunes of 2,500 Canadians. True, there may be left in the hands of the federal government the empty shell of jurisdiction but active participation in all matters affecting these people will be in the hands of a provincial government.

If this is the position, what is going to happen to federal-provincial government responsibilities under sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act, that is if the federal government is going to follow the policy of making constitutional changes by order in council, rather than coming to parliament?

If this is the position, why is it not possible for them also by order in council to authorize a provincial government to issue a charter to a company to build a pipe line in order to permit that company to go to the national energy board? Why is it not possible for the government, upon the same basis of reasoning to give a provincial government authority, such as Mr. Bennett's government in British Columbia, by order in council and despite the provisions of section 91 of the British North America Act, to grant a charter to a group of people in British Columbia to operate a chartered bank? Why is it not possible, on the same basis of reasoning for the federal government, not parliament, to give to any other province authorization to raise its own army, and do it by means of order in council? This is precisely the basis of reasoning on which the government is now operating in their announced intention to proceed to make this constitutional change without coming to parliament. Parliament has exclusive jurisdiction. I use the word "parliament" as distinct from government. Parliament has exclusive jurisdiction with regard to Indians, and this includes the Eskimos of northern Quebec. Until parliament has given the government the right to give to a provincial government any of its responsibilities in respect of these Indians, then the action which the government proposes to take is completely unconstitutional and not within the purview of the government as opposed to parliament. This is the simple issue I raise, and I think it deserves an answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. The minister, as he pointed out a while ago, had an opportunity to practise and teach law in the province of Quebec. He was in a position to be personally aware, as I am also, of the delays caused in that province by the rather large number of cases cluttering up the roll of the superior court. Therefore, does he intend to appoint enough new judges to meet the needs of the people, thereby providing for the smooth administration of justice in that province?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I am aware of that situation. I know that the roll of some of the courts of my province are overcrowded and I also know that this causes delays. I must explain how vacancies are filled in the superior court. There are two jurisdictions in the provinces which see to the establishment of courts, as well as to the appointment of a certain number of judges for a particular court. Once the province has set the number of judges for appointment to a court, it is under the Canadian constitution that the federal government must fill the new vacancies and appoint those judges.

I have just received a communication from the chief justice of the province of Quebec who is at present discussing the situation with the attorney general of that province. If ther are no further developments, the whole matter will rest with the province and we shall not interfere.

As far as the appointment of any judge is concerned, both federal and provincial statutes must be considered.

Mr. Gregoire: I should like to put another question to the Minister of Justice. Does the minister also intend to see that judges of the appeal court and of the supreme court, are in sufficient numbers to meet the requirements of justice in our province?

Mr. Favreau: In the case of the supreme court, and the exchequer court, this matter, of course, comes under federal jurisdiction. But to my knowledge, no complaint has been received to the effect that the number of judges in those two courts is insufficient.

Mention was made earlier to a bill now on the order paper and tending to increase the number of judges in the exchequer court for a specific purpose, that is to grant powers to the commissioner for divorces. I am not aware of any complaint to the effect that there are not enough judges in the exchequer or in the Supreme Court of Canada or that there is any backlog in those courts.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a few questions regarding the construction of a penal institution in my riding, more especially in St. Pie de Bagot. I should like to know what reasons led his department and that of public works to cancel the decision previously taken to build a medium security prison in my riding, and especially in St. Pie de Bagot.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, as far as I know, that matter was settled before I took over as Minister of Justice. I do not think I can say anything more at this time. It might be possible to discuss this further when my department main estimates are considered.

I am not fully informed of the reasons which led to the decision reached in that case. I can say, however, that they are the same reasons which caused my predecessor to uphold, for instance, the decision he took in the case of Drumheller after extensive consultations. It would be neither honest nor realistic to go further than this. I readily admit that I am not aware enough of the facts referred to by the hon. member to give a complete and satisfactory answer.

Mr. Ricard: The minister could merely ask the necessary information of his parliamentary secretary (Mr. Macdonald) who is beside him at the present time. Indeed, I myself could, I think, inform the minister. But before going any further, I would like also to ask the minister whether he has considered taking the necessary decisions to make good the great injustice committed by his predecessor concerning the riding of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. Since the minister does not seem to have enough information to give a reply, I could make a summary of what happened at the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary but I shall just say that we have here a shameful example of patronage on the part of the present government.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I do not think it is permissible for an hon. member to make, on supplementary estimates, such unfounded accusations concerning recent events about which I am not sufficiently informed to make comments, as the hon. member is fully aware. Furthermore, those remarks are hardly relevant to vote No. 1e which provides for the approval of an expenditure of $10,000 to pay for the expenses of the international criminological congress which will be held in Canada in 1965.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I have a lot of respect and admiration for the Minister of Justice. However, I do not think I have to accept the directives he wants to give me. I have before me all I need to prove to the Minister of Justice that it is not an unfounded charge, but facts which speak eloquently for the action taken by the Liberal party and the present government. I will certainly not miss this opportunity to put before the house and the country the true facts so that the people of my riding in particular, those of Quebec and Canada as a whole may know how much the present government has indulged in small-time patronage.

In 1958, Mr. Chairman, the Department of Justice was planning to get new prison facilities because St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary had become too small. Therefore, at that time, I took steps to find, together with employees of the Department of Public Works and the Department of Justice, the lands necessary for the construction of a medium security penitentiary in my constituency. This institution was going to cost about $4,500,000 to build, and the work would allow the hiring in my constituency, of a good many people, about 200 heads of families. As you may well imagine, the citizens of my constituency learned with satisfaction that the then minister of justice, Mr. Davie Fulton, had decided to grant to that part of the country, a penal institution which would have brought great prosperity first to the town of St. Pie, and second, to the whole St. Hyacinthe area.

Mr. Chairman, it is now a quarter to ten and I see that the President of the Privy Council wishes to be recognized.

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the hon. member for yielding me the floor. We are expecting momentarily a message from the other place for royal assent at a quarter to ten, and I wonder whether in the circumstances it would be more appropriate for us to rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House,
Ottawa, April 1964.

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 6th of April, at 9.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I would ask the house leader if he will announce the business for tomorrow.

Mr. Favreau: Tomorrow we will proceed with the balance, I hope, of the supplementary estimates, after which the rest of the time during the day will be used for the debate on the second reading of the Canada pension plan bill, and the next first full two days will be taken to conclude the debate on the budget.

Mr. Peters: May I ask the house leader when it is his intention to establish the standing committees?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that it is the intention of the government to establish the standing committees right away. It is a matter of mechanics, getting the steering committee together to provide the names for the various parties. The proportion of the members on the various committees has been worked out already.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent of the following bill:

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

It being eight minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 7, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. AIKEN—ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to an answer given yesterday to question No. 431 as found on page 1810 of Hansard. This answer is wrong. The first part of the answer states that a site consisting of two parcels of land for a public building at Britt, Ontario, is being acquired by the government from G. M. Taylor. The second part of the answer states that Mr. Taylor is not a consultant of the Minister of Public Works or of the Postmaster General.

This latter answer is in error, because I asked a question on December 4, 1963, which is to be found on page 5409 of Hansard, relating to the consultants of the Postmaster General. The third part of that question was as follows:

From whom were recommendations for this appointment solicited by the Postmaster General?

This was the answer:

District director of postal service, North Bay, and Gerald M. Taylor.

This gentleman is a twice defeated Liberal candidate. My reason for raising a question of privilege with regard to the question answered yesterday is to indicate that he has used his position and knowledge to go out and take an option on a public site required by the government and then resell the property to the government. I am directing this matter to the attention of the minister and I would ask him to look into it, correct the answer and possibly also get a new consultant.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—TABLING OF LETTERS RESPECTING STATUS OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table an exchange of letters constituting an agreement between the United Nations and the government of the republic of Cyprus concerning the status of the United Nations peace keeping force in Cyprus.

EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In regard to the Alberni valley—

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, under—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lapointe on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, under standing order 26 I should like to ask leave to adjourn the business of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, the extension of the winter works program past April 30, in the areas adversely affected by a more severe climate.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the motion is quite in order and ought to be accepted by all members of this house.

It deals with a very specific question: the extension of winter works, after April 30, in areas where the climate is more severe. The matter is one of public importance. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) himself stated recently that unemployment was the number one problem facing the government today. Now, unemployment is especially high in areas which have to put up with a severe climate. At the present time it represents Canada's most acute problem.

It is obviously a matter of general interest, since it concerns a large number of regions, in all parts of the country, especially Newfoundland, New Brunswick, the province of Quebec, northern Ontario, a large part of Saskatchewan, northern Manitoba and northern Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, it is also a very urgent matter in view of the fact that only three weeks remain before the end of the winter works period, that is April 30; there is barely enough time to select the regions adversely affected by the climate and prepare a program to extend the winter works period in such regions.

To support my request, Mr. Speaker, I wish to read a telegram sent to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) by the economic council of the Saguenay-Lake St. John region at the request of its chairman, Mr. Raymond Lanctot, and signed by the secretary treasurer, Mr. Thomas Eugene Simard, following a proposal made by mayors Georges Hebert, of Arvida, and Alfred Hamel, of St. Felicien. I quote:

Economic council of the Saguenay-Lake St. John region at its annual meeting yesterday in Jonquiere resolved unanimously to ask you to reconsider your decision about the extension of the winter works program until May 31.

Several mayors attending this meeting stated that the people in their municipalities would suffer severe hardship if period—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Have you a motion to introduce?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I believe I am allowed under the standing orders to state the reasons for introducing my motion. Standing order 26 (3) reads as follows:

He then hands a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed to Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, here is the text of my motion.

I move, seconded by Mr. C. A. Gauthier, member for Roberval:

That the house do now adjourn in order to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, that is: "The extension of the winter works program after April 30 in areas handicapped by a more severe climate.

Mr. Speaker, since the debate on the supplementaries for the Department of Labour is completed and the discussion on the remainder of the budget can be delayed; since, on the other hand, this question is of extreme importance and urgency, we appeal against your ruling.

Mr. Lambert: You cannot do so.

Mr. Habel: You are out of order.

Mr. Gregoire: One can appeal when ruled out of order.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I have to decide whether the ordinary proceedings before the house should be adjourned under standing order 26, and to determine whether the motion moved by the hon. member for Lapointe is in order. The three essentials, of course, are that the question must be national in scope, there must be extreme urgency, and there must be lack of other opportunity to debate the matter.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

It seems to me that with certain estimates under discussion later this day and with the budget debate just around the corner, so to speak, there will be ample opportunity before April 30 to discuss this interesting matter. At the moment there is not sufficient urgency or lack of opportunity for debate to set aside the ordinary business of the house and receive this motion.

Under the circumstances I regret that in my opinion the motion should not be received.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as a precedent was set in February 1963—under similar circumstances the question was put to decide whether we were entitled to appeal against the ruling of the Speaker, the house voted yes and you did so yourself on that occasion—we appeal against your ruling to the effect that we are not entitled to appeal—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: If I may say so, I understand the great interest the hon. member has in this subject, in fact that all members have, but I may call to his attention Beauchesne once more, citation 100(7):

The house affirmed, on the 19th of February, 1932, that there is no appeal from the Speaker's decision, that a motion, to adjourn the house for discussing an urgent matter of public importance, cannot be made unless the member's statement shows that there is actual urgency for debate. The Speaker decided that his decision on this particular point was final. Mr. Ralston appealed from the "Speaker's refusal to permit an appeal from his decision." The Speaker was sustained by a vote of 72 to 47.

In the circumstances I can only suggest to the hon. member that in view of the precedents and in view of the reasons given, he might consider very carefully abiding by the Chair's decision.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: You all voted in favour last year.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the decision of the Chair from which the hon. member for Lapointe has appealed to the house. All those in favour of sustaining the decision of the Chair will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will pleased say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

And the members having been called in:

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

"The question is an appeal to the house from a ruling of the Chair which is as follows:

"The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) having asked leave to adjourn the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance"—

Mr. Speaker: Shall I dispense?

Some hon. Members: No, read it.

Mr. Speaker:

—"namely, that the house do now adjourn to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, that is the extension of the winter works program, after April 30, in areas handicapped by a more severe climate.

The Speaker decided that, since an opportunity to discuss this matter could arise in the near future on the budget debate, there was no urgency of debate as understood under the terms of standing order 26. Whereupon the hon. member for Lapointe appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

The Chair then decided that in accordance with certain past decisions of the house the Speaker's ruling in this regard was not appealable to the house. Thereupon the hon. member for Lapointe appealed to the house from the latter decision of the Chair.

The question the house is called upon to decide is whether the ruling of the Chair in such cases can be appealed to the house. Is it the pleasure of the house that the Speaker's decision be sustained?

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

BROADCASTING

ANNOUNCEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE OF COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the lapse of time since I rose originally I might direct a question to the Secretary of State regarding a pronouncement made yesterday by him to the effect that the federal government has decided to establish a special committee of inquiry.

Among other things he said that we have adhered much too closely to the American tradition of non-intervention in broadcasting by government. Does this mean that a method is being sought by the present government to be in a position whereby there can be greater governmental interference in broadcasting? What is the nature of this peculiar statement that ought to have been made in the House of Commons?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in the speech I made yesterday in Quebec city I listed certain problems faced by broadcasting in Canada at the present time and, if I may quote from what I said, I added:

> With this in mind and wishing to end the uncertainties in Canadian broadcasting the government now feels that the time has come to provide for an inquiry into those matters through a committee on broadcasting to be set up by the government.

I want to add today that when the terms of reference and the composition of that committee have been decided by the government I will be very pleased indeed to make a statement to the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister what right he has to make an announcement like this outside of the house, particularly when a broadcasting committee is going to be set up. In any event, what did he mean by the words I placed before him, in which he indicated there should be greater intervention on the part of the government. What did he mean by that?

[Mr. Groos.]

Mr. Lamontagne: I merely said, Mr. Speaker, that I thought the government should play a greater role in the cultural affairs of our country.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister what justification he had to make an announcement like that outside of the house when parliament is sitting, with the result that parliamentarians have to become aware of his considered opinions by reading what he has said outside of parliament.

Mr. Lamontagne: I think it was quite proper for me to make this statement to those people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: The same old gang.

An hon. Member: Contempt of parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. J. A. Habel (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. Is it not true that it is precisely the right hon. Leader of the Opposition who asked the government to intervene just a few weeks ago?

Mr. Lambert: Quite true; here, in the house.

[Text]

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. Will the minister give his assurance that the proposed changeover of Toronto radio station CJBC from English to French, about which there has been so much protest, will not take place until the question has had a thorough examination by this committee?

Mr. Lamontagne: I cannot give this undertaking to the house.

An hon. Member: Where are you going to give it?

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. To what intervention was the minister referring in his statement?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I did not refer to any government intervention in radiobroadcasting, but I did mention that it would be advisable and entirely desirable for the government to play a greater role in Canadian culture, a role which would enhance our culture.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. Could he tell us what kind of committee will be set up and whether the committee will have the opportunity of making a complete inquiry within the C.B.C. in so far as its budget and expenditures are concerned?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I have already stated that the membership and the terms of reference of the committee would be announced in the house shortly.

[Text]

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State if the assumption of the Leader of the Opposition that there is going to be a parliamentary committee is correct. It seems to me that was assumed in the question of the Leader of the Opposition. Is this correct or not?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, that position will be made clear when I make my statement to the house regarding the terms of reference and composition of the committee.

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Was the Prime Minister aware of and did he discuss with the Secretary of State the terms of his speech before the speech was delivered?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, I was aware he was making the speech. I discussed it with him in general terms. I suggest that my hon. friend should read the text and he will find it very enlightening.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the setting up of this committee will preclude the setting up of a parliamentary or House of Commons committee on broadcasting.

Mr. Pearson: Not necessarily, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State?

In the speech he made yesterday the Secretary of State mentioned the fact that a committee made up of Messrs. Stewart, Ouimet and Jamieson had been making studies about radio and television for almost a year, at the request of the government. Could he tell the house when a report will be submitted to the house about that investigation and if it will be referred to the committee of the house so that its conclusions may be studied?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, those three gentlemen were asked personally by my predecessor to review the matter of television in order to reach some conclusions.

They agree on some points and disagree on others, but I expect to receive a report before the end of the month. We will see then what can be done.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—INQUIRIES RESPECTING CONTROL OF SEAMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the joint statement issued by the board of trustees of the maritime unions and the S.I.U. of North America to the effect that control of the S.I.U. is now going to be turned back to its constituted officers, may I ask the minister if the notorious "do not ship" lists will continue to be issued, if there has been any accounting of the moneys which were turned over by the government of Canada for holiday pay to the union, and whether the statement that there will be an assimilation of all maritime employees into one union means that these unions are going to be merged into the S.I.U. I think these are questions which are perturbing the people of the country and members of this house, and I wonder whether the minister can clarify the situation.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the last part of my hon. friend's question, I undertook to secure that information for him but I have not received it yet from the trustees. I believe the other parts of his question are covered in the report of the board of trustees in a general way, but I will make specific inquiries and advise the hon. member just as soon as I receive the information.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I asked the minister this question some time ago and I repeat it now. Would the minister consider having the board of trustees of the maritime unions meet with the industrial relations committee of the house so these questions could be put to them, rather than our having to ask the minister questions which he naturally cannot answer without communicating with the board of trustees? It seems to me that such a meeting would be extremely useful. It would help the board to appreciate the point of view of members of parliament, and also help members of parliament to understand the policies which are being pursued by the trustees.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to give consideration to this proposal. I will communicate with the trustees to secure from them their views as to the desirability of making an appearance before the industrial relations committee, and I will so advise the house.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Would the Minister of Labour also inquire whether the hiring halls of the S.I.U. will still be used, and whether the same methods of providing employment will be carried on; or have any changes been made?

An hon. Member: Ask Paul Hall.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think this has already been announced. A representative of the board of trustees has been placed in each of the hiring halls to ensure that proper procedures are followed.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question. Would the minister clarify the words "proper procedures"? Does this mean that the old method of referring an employee to a shipping company for hiring by that company without any other choice will still be maintained?

Mr. MacEachen: I will be glad to take that question as notice.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In that connection I should like to ask the minister whether Mr. Leonard McLaughlin, the heir apparent to Hal Banks, is one of 15 defendants facing a charge of conspiracy, with the preliminary adjourned until June. Does the minister feel that a man with these qualifications should be placed at the head of the S.I.U. and enabled thereby to carry out the policies of his master, Banks?

Mr. MacEachen: I would expect that my right hon. friend would permit the court to make a finding with regard to these charges before he would find the man in question guilty.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The royal commission which recommended the ouster of Banks referred to this man in the most disparaging terms. The commission said he was really the playmate of Banks and carried out Banks' work. Does the minister now depart from the recommendations of the royal commission and almost give to this man McLaughlin a halo?

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The Minister of Labour suggested that we should await the decision of the courts to prove this man McLaughlin's guilt or innocence. Is this another way for the minister to say no to the protests of the other unions which came under the trusteeship voluntarily and which are now objecting to this procedure?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think that was more of a statement than a question.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to respectfully request the Chair to call hon. members opposite to order for this persistent hissing while I am trying to ask a question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis: I thought I made it quite clear the other day that as long as this attitude is adopted by members on the government side of the house, I am quite prepared to stand here and await your decision as to whether or not they will be called to order.

Mr. Speaker: Well the hon. member, I am sure, does not wish to embarrass the Chair. The Chair is not prepared to wait until the hon. member is ready to ask his question.

Mr. MacInnis: I take it then, Mr. Speaker, that the Chair is fully prepared to embarrass a backbencher on this side of the house who has to put up with that, and I do not think you should place that embarrassment on me or any other member of this house. Further, I call your attention to the fact the Minister of Labour was on his feet and had commenced to answer my question when you decided it was out of order.

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. What is the distinction which places Mr. Leonard J. McLaughlin in a category different from that in which the government placed Banks when it proposed a trusteeship to take over the S.I.U. and divest him of his office in that union?

Mr. MacEachen: This is a matter which has been decided by the trustees, and I have nothing to add to what I stated yesterday in explanation of that decision.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED NON-AGGRESSION PACT BETWEEN NATO AND WARSAW PACT POWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, notice of which I have given to him. Having in mind the current altercations between the Soviet union and the People's Republic of China, I wonder if the minister could tell the house whether in his opinion this might be a timely period for Canada to work toward a non-aggression pact between the NATO and Warsaw pact countries.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. gentleman was kind enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question. The current exchange between the NATO and Warsaw pact countries. People's Republic does not affect directly our attitude toward the question of a non-aggression agreement between the NATO and Warsaw pact countries. Our attitude remains as it was when I informed the house on this subject as reported in volume I of Hansard for 1963, page 420, when I answered a question addressed to me by the hon. member for Greenwood.

CYPRUS—GREEK AND TURKISH TROOPS STATIONED ON ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question on Cyprus for the minister of external affairs. Will the minister inform the house concerning the exact status of Greek and Turkish troops in Cyprus? Are there any Greek and Turkish regular army troops in Cyprus; in what numbers are they, and stationed in what localities and for what purpose?

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The question involving statistics, of course, is obviously for the order paper, concerning what localities and matters of that sort. There are roughly two to one in favour of the troops who have a Greek background.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a supplementary question. I am asking about regular army troops.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With regard to the Greek army?

Mr. Churchill: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, these are Greek and Turkish Cypriots.

Mr. Churchill: Do I understand there are no regular troops from either Greece or Turkey stationed on Cyprus?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are limited numbers of both, and the question is now being discussed as to their integration into the United Nations force.

CYPRUS—REPORTED TURKISH THREAT TO LAND TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is reported this morning that the government of Turkey sent a note to the government of Greece informing the Greek government that if any further killing of Turkish troops took place, Turkey would regard this as an attack on herself and would make landings on Cyprus. Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the house whether such a note was sent; and if so, the contents —the exact contents, if he is aware of them.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the government of Turkey sent a note to the government of Greece, not with regard to actions on the island in connection with Turkish Cypriot citizens, but with regard to the announced decision of Archbishop Makarios to abrogate the 1961 agreement.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Then the Secretary of State for External Affairs is informing us that no notes have been sent by the Turkish government to the Greek government concerning the killing of Turkish troops and the possibility of a Turkish invasion of the island?

THE VATICAN—ESTABLISHMENT OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since the Vatican will have a permanent observer at the United Nations, does the Canadian government intend to initiate diplomatic relations with the Vatican state?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I merely repeat the answer that has been given to that question over the years, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I put that question, it is because during many previous election campaigns, several Liberal members such as the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay)—

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member knows the rules as well as the Chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. If I put that question, it is because during the previous election campaigns the Liberal candidates made formal promises on behalf of their party—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CYPRUS—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN SUPPLY LINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. In view of the increasingly serious situation in Cyprus, is the minister now in a position to inform the house how the Canadian troops in Cyprus are getting their supplies, and particularly whether the supply line they are using will be adequate no matter what circumstances may develop there?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the commander of the United Nations forces has made arrangements to use the British supply line. This is being used for the Canadian forces, and I am sure it is adequate to meet any emergency.

DISBANDMENT OF FIGHTER SQUADRON 410

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Is the hon. gentleman now in a position to reply to the question which was asked him a week ago today with respect to the disbandment of 410 squadron?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): A week ago—I think it was the last day on which the hon. gentleman was here—he asked me a question with regard to the disbandment of R.C.A.F. No. 410 all-weather fighter squadron at R.C.A.F. station Uplands. This action was the outcome of the consolidation of air defence squadrons announced January 10. Previously the relatively small number of Voodoo aircraft belonging to the R.C.A.F.'s air defence command had been dispersed through five squadrons in five different locations. Although they were called "squadrons" they had a unit establishment of only 12 aircraft each, and this was long considered to be an expensive and not too efficient way of operating such a small force. Such an arrangement inevitably means a great deal of administrative, technical and support overhead for the amount of fighting effectiveness produced.

After studying the cost-effectiveness of this arrangement, I accepted the R.C.A.F. recommendation that the Voodoo aircraft could be more effective grouped in three squadrons rather than five. No. 410 squadron was selected by the R.C.A.F. as one of the two squadrons to be placed on the inactive list. The other would be No. 414 squadron located at North Bay, effective July 1 this year.

I am sure hon. members will join me in thanking the fine officers, N.C.O.'s and men of this proud squadron for the outstanding service they have given to our country.

TRADE

GATT—REPORTED ADOPTION BY CANADA OF FREE TRADE POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Huron): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. According to a news report in this morning's Globe and Mail, Under Secretary of State Norman Robertson, who leads a Canadian negotiating team to trade talks in Geneva in May, is likely to have a strong free trade mandate from Canadian business. Is this an indication that the government has adopted a free trade policy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am glad the hon. gentleman asked this question, because it gives me an opportunity of reporting in a brief way on what has been going on in this field.

First of all, in reply to the particular question which he raised arising out of the report in the Globe and Mail, I may say this report was apparently written as a result of repeated questioning by representatives of the press of the acting chairman, Mr. Hector McKinnon. He, in reply to these questions, had emphatically and frequently stated that since all submissions to the committee are regarded as confidential, no specific information could be supplied regarding the representations made by any industry or any industries.

In reply to frequent further inquiries as to whether the general trend of the submissions was in the direction of no reductions on Canadian tariffs, the committee has answered in general terms as follows. First, Canadian industry, contemplating the Kennedy round, appears today to be seized of the possibilities and potentialities in export trade and is providing to the committee many specific requests regarding concessions desired in the tariffs of other countries. Second, in many instances submissions state that provided the concessions requested are forthcoming, the applicant industry or company would be prepared to forgo at least part of the protection afforded by the Canadian tariff. On the whole the submissions reaching the committee are helpful and constructive, but by no means could it be said that, again on the whole, they favour or suggest the adoption of a policy of free trade.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): As a supplementary question, in view of the fact that some business was for and some was against this new policy of negotiating, would a list of exemptions be submitted to the house before the GATT negotiations in May?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, these negotiations will proceed over a very long period of time. The general position the Canadian government will take at these negotiations has been stated by me on a number of occasions, but so far we are not even sure what general position is going to be taken by the other countries participating on a linear basis. Until they have declared their position the Canadian government will not be in a position to make a response. It will be some time, I think, before we are able to make any further advance on the position I have already stated.

REPORTED U.K. PROPOSALS RESPECTING PREFERENTIAL TARIFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): While we are on this topic, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question regarding the speech made by Mr. Edward Heath, the minister for trade and industry in the government of the United Kingdom. Has the minister had an opportunity to study the text of that speech which, according to press reports, is to the effect that the government of the United Kingdom is prepared to extend the commonwealth preference to underdeveloped countries? I think there is much to commend such a proposal, but I am wondering whether the government of Canada was consulted and concurs in offering this proposal to the underdeveloped countries.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Trade and Commerce suggests that since I was making inquiries in regard to these consultations, I might deal with this question. There were consultations. Mr. Heath discussed this matter with our delegation and other commonwealth delegations in Geneva on April 4, and there was a discussion two weeks ago in London with commonwealth countries on the general question of preferences.

U.S. TARIFF COMMISSION FINDING RESPECTING STEEL REINFORCING BARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would the minister comment on recent press reports regarding the finding by the U.S. tariff commission that continued sales of steel reinforcing bars on the west coast of the United States by Vancouver rolling mills would be likely to injure United States industry?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the recent finding of the United States tariff commission that under United States anti-dumping legislation sales in the United States at less than fair value by Vancouver Rolling Mills Ltd. are likely to injure United States industry.

Representatives of the Vancouver firm have discussed this matter with officials of my department. We are considering the implication of this finding for Canadian trade with the United States in the light of certain special features of the case, and also the question of what might be done to assist the firm to mitigate the impact of this finding on its trade with the United States.

TARIFF POLICY—INVESTMENT PROGRAM BY GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fred E. Stenson (Peterborough): I would like to rephrase a question which I addressed yesterday to the Minister of Industry and put it to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My question is, what steps is the minister taking with regard to the announcement by Canadian General Electric last Thursday that tariff philosophies are not conducive to making needed investments in export facilities in Canada, and that they are setting up plants in Europe and Latin America rather than investing in export plants in this country? I feel this question is important because it relates to our exports, and the situation will certainly affect them very soon.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this is certainly a question for the order paper.

EDUCATION

VISIT TO CANADA BY GLASGOW UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerald Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question?

It stems from a report recently published in a Quebec newspaper to the effect that more than 200 students from Glasgow university would come and work in Canada this summer.

Does the government intend to contribute in any way to the visit of those students by paying, for instance, their fare or by finding them a job?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard this report and I know nothing about it. I shall look into it, but I think it would be very unusual indeed for the government to contribute to the expenses of a journey of this kind to Canada. However, I shall have inquiries made.

GRAIN

BARLEY—REASON FOR LOWER PRICE THIS YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce under whose jurisdiction the Canadian wheat board comes. Since the minister is aware of the fact that this is the week that final payments for barley for the crop year 1962-63 will be going out, could the minister inform the house the reason for the 15 cents lower price this year than last year, so the farmers can use this information as a guide when deciding on the kind of grain they should sow this year? This information will be very important to the grain growers in the west.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a full answer to this question; therefore I would like to take it as notice.

POWER

BAY OF FUNDY—ACTION BY ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to inform the house what further action is contemplated by the Atlantic development board with regard to the harnessing of the bay of Funday tides from a power point of view, as a result of the satisfactory results of the initial investigation?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): No, sir, I am not in a position to make any such report now. The Atlantic development board does not feel it should take any decision until the final report is received in May.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR INCREASED HOSPITAL GRANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I put a question to the Prime Minister on March 30, on which date he told me he might be able to make a statement after the dominion-provincial conference regarding the government's attitude toward the capital costs of hospital construction in metropolitan Toronto. Is he yet in a position to give us a statement as to the views of the government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are now examining this important matter in the light of the discussion we had in Quebec only a few days ago, and as soon as I am in a position to make a statement—I hope it will not be long—I shall be glad to make it in the house.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISCUSSION OF PROPOSED B.N.A. ACT AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as house leader.

In view of the general interest aroused by the matter, is it the intention of the minister to request, on behalf of the government, the unanimous consent of the house to reserve a whole day for a thorough discussion of Bill C-88 introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to amend the British North America Act?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I do not know whether the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue has changed his mind since yesterday, but it seemed to me that the vote given yesterday by the official opposition was sufficiently indicative of its attitude on that matter.

Mr. Martineau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the minister has tried to evade the question, I would ask him to give the house an answer to the question I asked.

[Text]

RESUMPTION OF SITTINGS OF AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Will the committee on agriculture resume its sittings fairly soon so that we may terminate the work we had started last fall, before Christmas?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would expect this committee will be set up as soon as possible. I realize there are many hon. members anxious to get ahead with the work, and I shall make every attempt to see this is done as quickly as possible.

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as house leader, and I do so because two or three questions have already been put today about house committees. In view of the fact that the striking committee has already agreed on the apportioning of the membership among the various standing committees, is there any reason why the names of the members of those various committees cannot now be reported to the house by the striking committee?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this a very timely question, and I am pleased to advise the house that we are waiting to obtain the final lists of names from the various groups within 48 hours.

Mr. Knowles: This has been the answer given several times. What groups have not given their lists? We have.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): And we have.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Justice, in his capacity as house leader, a supplementary question.

A very important committee, the consumer credit committee, was formed to which the bill has been referred.

Can the house leader tell us when the subcommittee will begin its work?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, it is up to the chairman of that committee to call the sittings. I shall discuss it with the hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. When will the chairman of that committee be appointed?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lapointe will perhaps allow me to discuss it with him. To my mind, it is a matter of internal administration which would not be of general interest to the house, more particularly after the general reply I made a few moments ago with regard to the setting up of all committees.

[Text]

AIR TRANSPORT

USE OF CRASH POSITION INDICATORS ON CHARTERED AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question to direct either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Transport based on a recent press release by the minister of northern affairs stating that crash position indicators would be required to be fitted on all aircraft contracted for in future by his department. Is it the intention of the government to adopt as a matter of policy a requirement that crash position indicators be fitted to all chartered aircraft contracted for by any department of the government?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): That is a question of which I would require notice. Notice having been given, I will try to get an answer.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

INQUIRIES AS TO ASSISTANCE TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would ask the Prime Minister whether a request has now been received from the government of British Columbia for federal assistance in connection with the Alberni valley and west coast tidal wave disaster; and, if that is the case, whether the government will assure the people in this area that financial help will be forthcoming to assist the smaller businesses to get going again, and to assist the private individuals who have suffered very serious material loss.

I am aware of the Prime Minister's general view on this subject, but I wonder if he is now in a position to give an assurance that action will be taken immediately in this connection. Mr. Macadam looked over this area on my behalf; he has now returned and made his report to me. I think the situation there is one which demands the earliest possible assurance from the government that the people living in the area will have the benefit of everything this government can possibly do to assist them.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The government has already stated that it will do everything it can to assist them in a situation of this kind, and if any request is made by the government of British Columbia, with an indication of the damage and an indication, too, that this damage is beyond the means of the locality and the province to deal with, then help will be given. Perhaps my colleague the minister of northern affairs may have had more recent information, but to my knowledge no such request has yet been received from the provincial government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would ask the right hon. gentleman if it is not the case that the deputy provincial secretary, Mr. Wallace, has asked the federal government for assistance and that this request was made four days ago.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): No, sir; the deputy provincial secretary has made no request. We have received a wire from Hon. Wesley Black advising us that a firm of assessors in the city of Vancouver by the name of Earle and Associates have been appointed to make an investigation and an estimate of all damage. This report will be available, it is hoped, within a week or ten days, and at that time the provincial government will advise us further. They stated in the wire "It would appear that we will require your assistance".

May I say I have been in touch with the mayors of the two cities concerned. I have been in touch twice by telephone with the hon. member representing the riding affected. He has advised me, as have the two mayors, that everything we have done thus far, including the procrastination, if the right hon. gentleman would like to call it that, or the delay in respect of making a contribution to the disaster fund until such time as a cabinet meeting has been held by the government of British Columbia, has met with approval. All concerned have agreed that this was the best policy and have commended us on the course we have taken.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

OTTAWA—FREE TRANSPORTATION OF LETTER CARRIERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Can he tell us why his department intends to give two or three bus tickets a day to its letter carriers rather than having them keep on travelling free of charge on Ottawa buses?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): If the hon. member would let us have particulars of the municipalities concerned we would be able to give a better answer. Let him put the question on the order paper, with particulars, and I will be glad to answer him.

[Mr. Pearson.]

COST OF SENDING NEWSPAPERS TO TROOPS OVERSEAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. I wonder if he will give some consideration to the effect which the recently announced increases in certain postal rates have had on the cost of sending newspapers to members of our armed services overseas. I understand that the cost of sending these papers has doubled, or almost doubled.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): I shall be pleased to take the question as notice.

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MAIL TRUCK ROBBERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Postmaster General. Last week several questions were asked in the house concerning the robberies of mail trucks that occurred in the Montreal and Three Rivers areas, and the Acting Postmaster General suggested that probably the minister would make a further reply on his return this week. I wonder whether the minister would give that reply today and tell us how much money was involved and just how many arrests were made.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): In view of the time lapse, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the question be put on the order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: The same old bunch.

SHIPPING

BAY OF FUNDY—REPORTED WATER POLLUTION BY OIL DISCHARGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of week end reports of serious bird killing and water pollution by oil tanker discharge in the bay of Fundy, will the minister say what action we may expect from his department and the other departments of government involved?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I will see that the matter is looked into at once, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

POSSIBLE LAY-OFFS OF MAINTENANCE OF WAY WORKERS IN MARITIME AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It is based on urgent and disturbing reports that the C.N.R. in the maritime area is now planning a revision of maintenance of way methods which will result in the loss of jobs by over 200 sectionmen. Will the minister look into this matter with a view to preventing a further increase in the already large number of unemployed in our area?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will draw the hon. gentleman's speech to the attention of the C.N.R.

Mr. MacEwan: It is about time you did something about it.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister and arises from the remarks made by him in the house yesterday. Does the Prime Minister not realize that his administration has deprived thus far all the 1963-64 class of 17 year old pupils of the benefits of the extension of the family allowance to those of that age still in school, because of the indecision and procrastination of the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is certainly out of order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES—STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR LAPOINTE RESPECTING SPEAKER'S VOTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It may seem a strange one for me to raise, but I do so in fairness to Your Honour and because I think the record should at all times be as straight as we can possibly keep it. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) earlier today said that in a division on a Speaker's ruling made in January, 1963, like the ruling that you, sir, made today, Your Honour voted against sustaining the ruling. I noticed your embarrassment at the time; you were not in a position to do any research. I have done it. The records are to be found at pages 3299 and 3300 of Hansard for January 31, 1963 and you, sir, did not vote either way.

Mr. Bell: Strange bedfellows.

Mr. Churchill: How did you vote?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I want at this time to apologize most sincerely for the error I have made. I made this error by including you with the rest of the Liberal party, which as a whole had voted against the decision it made this afternoon.

[Text]

MR. RICARD—OMISSION OF FORESTRY MINISTER FROM DIVISION LIST

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, to keep on with these questions of privilege, I believe I should call your attention to the error that seems to have been made yesterday when the question was put, as I cannot find the name of the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauve) among those who voted for the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I think that the Minister of Forestry was here at the time and that an error was made.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CRASH AT PRIMROSE LAKE, ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister in a position to report to the house on the crash of a T-33 jet trainer at Primrose lake, killing a Canadian and an American officer, particularly as to the reason for the flight and, if he can, the reason for the crash?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, at approximately 12 noon on April 6 an R.C.A.F. T-33 aircraft crashed at the upper end of Primrose lake, Alberta, while on a low level pacer exercise. The pilots, Flight Lieutenant Grant, R.C.A.F. and Captain Johnston of the United States air force were killed in the crash. The aircraft was destroyed.

There is no information yet as to the cause of the accident. The aircraft and pilots were at Cold Lake on detached duty from the central experimental and proving establishment, Uplands. The aircraft was on a position error calibration flight in order to test the accuracy of the instruments so that it could be used as a pacer for F-104 aircraft. Investigation is under way to determine the cause of the accident. I am sure all hon. members of the house would wish to join in an expression of deepest sympathy for the bereaved families of the deceased men.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

1e. Departmental administration including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $10,000.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, last night prior to the adjournment of the house, I directed a few questions to the Minister of Justice in order to clarify a situation which, I think, is detrimental to my constituency.

I am asking the minister if he had the opportunity of looking into the matter and if he is in a position to supply the information I asked of him. I think the minister has some information to give me.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, in order to be in a position to give the hon. member an answer this afternoon, I had a talk with the officials of my department and I obtained certain information. As I expected and mentioned yesterday, I felt sure that we could dismiss political considerations as motives for the decision taken.

I know, for instance, having checked on it myself, that in the case of the Drumheller penitentiary located in the riding of my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Woolliams), the decision was reached by the previous government. While my immediate predecessor was pressed by certain societies and organizations to have the penitentiary built somewhere else than in Drumheller, he had taken the necessary steps to maintain the decision taken and in the same way, the reasons behind the decision concerning the penitentiary originally projected for St. Pie de Bagot, were serious.

It is clear that the decision taken by the government to build a penitentiary in Drumheller was far from being based on political arguments and, particularly on Liberal political reasons.

May I say, for the information of the house, that the construction of that penitentiary might have been delayed if there had been political decisions, but this construction will start in April 1964 and will be completed by March 1966.

In the same way I knew that the decision taken by the previous government to build a detention unit in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, a decision by which my immediate predecessor, Hon. Mr. Chevrier, abided, was not maintained because of partisan political reasons. That decision of the previous government was maintained for serious consideration. Construction of the institution will start in June 1964 and will be completed in March 1965.

In view of those facts I was convinced that serious motives must also have determined the decision of my immediate predecessor not to proceed immediately with the construction of a medium security penitentiary at St. Pie de Bagot. Following a decision of the previous administration, two pieces of land were purchased. Since both were to be used for the establishment of two similar institutions, one in St. Pie de Bagot and the other in Cowansville, I must inform the house that construction at Cowansville of the medium security penitentiary proposed by the former government was undertaken in November 1963 and will be completed in January 1965.

Since it is the former administration that purchased two plots of land in the province of Quebec, there can be no question of political partisanship, in the case of Cowansville. As for St. Pie de Bagot, we reconsidered the decision merely because of the serious incidents which took place on June 17, 1962, in the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, which is a maximum security institution. It then became evident to this government that an addition to this penitentiary, or if you prefer an additional maximum security detention unit had become necessary, and this is more urgent than building a medium security detention unit.

For those reasons, my predecessor examined the circumstances and factors which had to be considered in that case; he consulted his advisors and asked them whether or not a medium security institution would be useful to supplement the staff or the available facilities at St. Vincent de Paul. Naturally, the answer was no.

Then the question arose as to whether another maximum security penitentiary should not be built instead of that medium security institution. It became clear, on examining the relevant circumstances and factors, that such a thing would be extremely dangerous, because of the relationship which would necessarily exist between the St. Vincent de Paul complex and that additional complex. Well, to establish a system in the public interest, this additional complex would have to be situated, not on the south but on the north shore of the St. Lawrence and this sufficiently near St. Vincent de Paul to avoid any possible danger in the regular transportation of prisoners at least from an institution to another, or from the institution to the courthouse or elsewhere in the institution.

It is clear that as far as convicts which have been given comparatively stiffer penalties are concerned, if the institution were situated on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, it would be a constant threat during transportation, because it is obvious that it would be a frequent and I would even say a constant invitation to underworld characters, to try to escape, or to facilitate the escape of prisoners and to stop cars at any time.

It is obvious that the longer the route followed by vehicles and the more frequent the trips, that is, every day, I believe, the greater the risks I have just mentioned.

But I should like to assure the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot and emphasize that the site at St. Pie de Bagot was not subject to a contract annulment and has not been discarded. This site is and will be preserved until it is necessary to build a medium security institution in the province of Quebec.

In the circumstances I am satisfied that the decision made to change the plans in the case of St. Pie de Bagot was no more political than the one made to proceed with the plans of the previous government in Brome-Missisquoi, Bow River and Prince Albert.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Minister of Justice for his information, but I think that he lacks some and I am going to prove, beyond the shadow of a doubt that the decision not to go ahead with the construction of St. Pie de Bagot penitentiary is a matter of petty politics on the part of the minister's predecessor. I am sorry to have to speak this way but the reaction from the people in my riding and the documents I have before me force me to do so and to show the house that we are confronted with patronage activities—I have no hesitation in saying it again.

May I go back a little over the background of that matter. On September 18, 1961, as I said yesterday, Hon. Davie Fulton announced the construction of a middle security prison at a cost of $4.5 million in the St. Hyacinthe-Bagot riding.

Of course many problems had to be settled before work could begin. However, Mr. Chairman, as I give you various details you will see for yourself that the Minister of Justice lacks a lot of information which I will be happy to give him.

I have here a contract signed on November 30, 1962, under which the Department of Public Works purchased four properties in the riding of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. I also have here a letter addressed to the architect, S. A. Cyr, which reads as follows:

[Text]

Dear Mr. Cyr:

I wish to confirm our telephone conversation and the discussions that you held with Mr. Simpson, at which time it was intimated that the originally intended young offenders institution is now in abeyance.

The department requires the services of a consultant to develop sketch plans and to prepare working drawings and specifications for a proposed maximum security camp and I would like to have your formal acknowledgment that you are prepared to undertake this work.

This was accepted by Mr. S. A. Cyr. Then there is another letter I want to place on the record. It is dated March 1, 1963, and reads in part as follows:

The original announcement that was made was, as you recall, to the effect that the institution to be constructed at St. Pie would be designed to accommodate 450 inmates and would require a staff of from 150 to 175 officers. Events since that announcement was made (including the disturbance that occurred at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary in June, 1962) have made it necessary to reconsider the program that was originally planned for this area. Let me say, however, that the reconsideration that has been involved is not designed, in any respect, to decrease the size of the operation that was originally planned. The operation will be at least as large as was originally contemplated and, if any changes are required, they will be designed to increase the size of the operation.

Here we have in black and white the fact that it was the intention of the department to build such an establishment at St. Pie. I know the minister has spoken in good faith. He comes here and stands up and says that the situation is contrary to what I have stated. He speaks in good faith but I say he has not got all the information he should have, and I am glad to supplement the information he needs. In a letter dated January 23, 1963, there is the following:

Construction is to start within three months on the first phase of the project—the construction of facilities to accommodate the more hardened criminals from St. Vincent de Paul institution. Within 15 months construction will start on the main institution along the lines originally proposed.

These are the facts, Mr. Chairman, and I am sorry that the minister did not have all the information he needed to have in order to establish the facts as they are before the committee. There is another letter dated April 10, 1963, from Mr. Cyr which reads in part as follows:

Kindly consider the present as my acceptance of the terms of employment of consulting architects as issued by the Department of Public Works of Canada.

I have here a copy of the terms according to which the architect was supposed to act on this project.

[Translation]

To end my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I have here a letter dated May 1, 1963, which reads as follows:

Mr. S. A. Cyr,
Architect and engineer,
490 St. Anne Street,
St. Hyacinthe, Que.

Dear Sir:

I have just received a phone call from Mr. Simpson asking that any work related to the proposed penitentiary in St. Pie be stopped.

That is dated May 1, 1963 and clearly indicates that this project for the building of a penitentiary at St. Pie de Bagot was suspended in the first weeks after the present government came into office.

I have said and I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that we are faced with a disgraceful problem of patronage, as only the members opposite can create.

Mr. Chairman, if you want further proof that the employees of the department concerned had decided to build a penitentiary at St. Pie de Bagot, all you have to do is to look over the site where you will find at each end of the piece of ground which was reserved for the construction of that institution, a huge sign about 12 feet by 12 feet, on which one can read: "Here a penitentiary will be erected". And there you will find the names of the then minister and deputy minister. But, strangely enough, immediately following the election of April 8, 1963, an artist—or rather a painter—was sent there to remove the name of Hon. Mr. Fleming and replace it by the name of Hon. Mr. Chevrier. As far as the name of your humble servant is concerned, it was merely painted over and a blank space left in its place.

Perhaps it is childish, but it shows the state of mind of the Liberals.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Ricard: Certainly.

Mr. Favreau: Would the hon. member agree with me that after April 22—not after April 8 last—Hon. Davie Fulton, no more than the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot—for whom I have great esteem—could hardly claim to speak on behalf of the government?

Mr. Ricard: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether the minister rose to ask me a question or whether he merely attempted to smother the flame. Yet he should know that it is easily lit up again.

In concluding I may say that last year I tried over and over again to get information on the intentions of the government.

I always received evasive answers. Yesterday I tried to draw the minister's parliamentary secretary into the discussion. It is peculiar that he was here yesterday but is not here this afternoon, when he could justify the answer he gave. In any case, last year I was completely unable to get any information on the intentions of the government. However, by a fortunate conjunction of circumstances I received a specific answer last Friday. I may thank the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) for sticking his nose where he should not have, but he told this house that the matter of the St. Pie de Bagot penitentiary was definitely settled, that the problem was definitely disposed of, that there was nothing more contemplated there. And yet, even today, the Minister of Justice says that that land is kept for future use.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the house to the fact that public funds were used for that purpose. A sum of $83,000 was spent to purchase land on which to build a penal institution. Professional people were paid to make studies in that connection. And then everything was cancelled, just to punish the electors of the riding of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot because they had dared to send a Progressive Conservative member to the house.

This is no way to curry favour with citizens of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. The citizens of this constituency are more and more set against the government and they only wait for an opportunity to prove, once more, to those who laughed at the people of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, that they have a long memory and will remember the very undemocratic attitude the Liberal government showed while it was supposed to re-establish on stronger basis the relationship between the citizens of the country.

I may say it is not the proper way to promote goodwill between the citizens of a country. I may add that by cancelling the decision of the former government to build this penitentiary institution, public money has been used to try to promote in a partisan way the interests of a political party which is becoming more and more unpopular among the people.

I am looking forward to the day when the population of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, and more particularly that of St. Pie, will have an opportunity to prove publicly to the government what they think about its administration.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I still maintain what I said, but nevertheless I consider the speech of the hon. member to contain a very serious charge of discrimination against himself and the hon. members for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey), and Bow River (Mr. Woolliams).

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I maintain the charge I have laid. The fact that penitentiaries have been built in three or four ridings does not mean that there has been no injustice in my own constituency. I still contend that serious injustice has been committed against the people in my riding.

[Text]

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, last week the Minister of Justice was in Quebec helping to set up a committee when several members, including the Leader of the Opposition, discussed—

Mr. Favreau: I do not want to raise a question of privilege here, but last week I was not in Quebec. I was detained here throughout last week by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Fairweather: I am sorry; the minister was not in the house, then, when the matter of moving the federal women's prison to Cornwall was discussed. I thought he was taking part in the setting up of the committee, but perhaps he wishes to dissociate himself from that frustrating week—that is, a frustrating week in Quebec, not here.

However, I want to discuss this change in the location of the women's prison. I want to do so calmly, and I want to do so factually. The relocation was announced as a "gift to the people of Cornwall" by the former member for Laurier, Hon. Lionel Chevrier. I think anyone interested in penology or penitentiary reform was as disappointed as I was, and I am sure all hon. members were, at this change of direction in the penitentiary service. I want to make a comment or two about it.

It has been suggested that this was a blatant example of pork barrel politics. These descriptive words are not mine, as a matter of fact, but are from a Globe and Mail editorial on the subject. The Toronto Star puts it just as directly in an editorial on March 11 which is entitled, "The Patronage Prison". Both the John Howard Society and the Elizabeth Fry Society have protested the Cornwall site in telegrams to the Prime Minister. I should like to quote from the Toronto Star editorial which says that the site is unsuitable on at least three grounds:

> It is too far from the homes and families of the inmates, making visits an expense and a burden. The new prison would be 275 miles from Toronto where 33 of the present 122 inmates at the prison for women at Kingston formerly lived.
> There are no Canadian universities or social research centres nearby. The nearest is Montreal, 75 miles away.
>
> There are no psychiatric facilities nearby and no psychiatrists.

The editorial goes on to make the following three points:

> First, the minister could refer to the Archambault report on prisons which recommended that the jurisdiction over female prisoners should be entirely provincial so that they can be kept in prisons closer to their homes.
>
> Second, rather than building one prison for all of Canada's female prisoners, three smaller prisons might be built, one in the west, one in Ontario and one in Quebec.
> Finally, if the decision to build only one central prison is irrevocable, let there be a new women's prison at Kingston, where there has been a tremendous community interest in prison work, where there is a climate of social research and where the academic facilities are available.

I would like to submit that the decision to move to Cornwall was expedient politically but had no justification in good penology practice. It ignores a thoughtful review of criteria for prison location and structure by the Canadian corrections association, dated March 18, 1963. This association, which is a branch of the Canadian welfare council has this to say:

> The Canadian corrections association is the national private organization that provides facilities for the inter-disciplinary study of problems associated with crime and delinquency, and for the exchange of information and ideas among those concerned with these major social issues.
> The association's membership is made up of staff and board members of the wide range of services in this field: adult and juvenile, institutional and non-institutional, public and private; faculty members from the various university departments; and interested members of the public.

I do not suppose the former hon. member for Laurier was a member of the Canadian corrections association.

> As part of its function, the association is directly interested in the developments in Canada's prison system that have occurred so rapidly in recent years—

I am going to interpolate here that this decision to go to Cornwall would be a direct contravention of the good practices set out in this blueprint. In its recommendations the Canadian corrections association has one statement of general principles that I would like to put on the record. It says:

> Any building should be designed to serve the program for which it is intended. A prison should be designed to give expression to modern treatment concepts.

It further says:

> An examination of what is involved in treatment is set out in the standard minimum rules for the treatment of prisoners and related resolutions adopted by the first United Nations congress on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, August 30, 1955.

This group certainly would not approve any move to Cornwall on grounds of alleged expediency.

> Prisons should be located within the limits or in the immediate vicinity of a major centre that has appropriate clinical facilities; it is an added advantage if the centre also has a university. At the same time, it is desirable to avoid locations where the institution will be surrounded in a few years by a housing development.

The association lists several criteria, and I am going to read only the ones that are particularly germane to this prison.

1. It should be in a location to attract and hold competent staff.

2. An urban setting prevents the staff from becoming ingrown. This is a serious problem and, with all due respect to Cornwall, is one that might occur when the prison personnel are isolated, so to speak, from the stream of thought that would be provided in a location such as Kingston or a university centre.

3. Community facilities, such as clinics, hospitals, technical schools, universities, etc., should be available, and it is again obvious that there is no university complex in Cornwall.

4. The prison can be used for the field placement of university students, students in medicine, psychiatry, social work, psychology, law, sociology and theology. All these things are available in the city of Kingston but none of them mentioned in the list of criteria are available in the politically expedient location of Cornwall.

5. The institution and the university can work together conveniently in research, and then there is the one I mentioned earlier that has been referred to by the editorial writers.

6. Visiting by relatives of inmates is easier.

There is one other aspect of this criteria blueprint that I would like to discuss, and that is the size. The Canadian corrections association says:

The appropriate size for an institution depends on the program and the type of inmate for which it is intended—

—but it should be—

—as small as possible.

Here is a perfect example where three small institutions across Canada could fit perfectly into the criteria set up by the best opinion in Canada.

The hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox participated in this debate the other day, and since then he has handed me a copy of a letter that the Kingston-Quinte branch of the Canadian association of welfare workers has sent to the Minister of Justice, dated March 30, 1964. I propose to make this letter part of the record:

Dear Sir:

The Kingston-Quinte branch of the Canadian association of social workers passed a unanimous motion at their last meeting that I should communicate to you our concern about the proposed move of the prison for women from Kingston to Cornwall. This group is composed of the majority of the professional social workers practising in the counties of Frontenac, Lennox and Addington, Hastings and Prince Edward. Our concern in this matter is with the part played by adequately qualified professional staff in any program for the rehabilitation of the prisoners.

We are quite aware that the plant and facilities at the prison for women are not appropriate for their function and that a more suitable building or buildings might be provided in the future.

However, in face of considerable physical difficulties, the prison for women at Kingston has assembled a treatment staff which has made substantial improvement in the rate of recidivism of women drug addicts. This staff would be dispersed by such a move, and the very valuable experience of the after-care program which has been built up over many years, would be lost.

Again I am going to interpolate that I do not think this loss is worth the political expediency of the move.

One of the advantages of the present situation has been the availability of consultation with the university, which provides a school of law and of medicine, and the opportunity to take advantage of the very extensive psychiatric services available in this community. None of these advantages exist in Cornwall, and we think these matters are very important in deciding the appropriate location of such an institution, if the emphasis on a program of rehabilitation is to be continued.

I believe there are very careful statistics available to document the improved outcome of the present treatment program, which should be given serious consideration. We think it is appropriate as a professional body, to bring this aspect of the situation to your attention.

The letter is signed, "Elizabeth J. Grey, B.A., M.S.W., President, Kingston-Quinte branch, Canadian association of social workers".

Here we have three groups, divorced as it were from the daily political activities of certain people, the Canadian welfare council, the Canadian corrections association and the Canadian association of social workers who make a compelling case against this change, and I urgently request the minister to follow the lead of a former minister of justice, Hon. Mr. Fulton, and recognize that in penology, as in many other aspects of our activities, the winds of change blow.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): In view of the fact that a fairly general discussion has taken place on this particular item, I should like to bring to the minister's attention a question that has arisen in my riding in connection with the lawyers appointed to look after Farm Credit Corporation business and to administer the—

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, the only justification—

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): I will only be a short time, and in view of the fact that a general discussion has taken place I think it is quite right for me to bring this up.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the minister rising on a point of order.

Mr. Favreau: Yes, on a point of order. If we are to have a minimum of order in the somewhat extraordinary type of discussion of the present supplementary estimates I think, short of abrogating it, we shall have to apply, so that it will retain a minimum of meaning, section 2 of standing order 59 which states:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

The only reason why, by some stretch of the imagination, the discussion which has taken place with respect to penitentiaries could possibly be justified was because the first item claimed is an amount of $10,000 in respect of the grant to the Canadian corrections association to assist in defraying the expenses of the fifth international criminological congress to be held in Montreal in 1965. The Canadian corrections association happens to be concerned with penitentiaries; that is the only pretext which could possibly be used as a basis for the discussion which was carried on here on the first item. I wish to repeat that we are dealing now with supplementary estimates, and the only part of the first item with which we are concerned is this question of the right to contribute a grant of $10,000 to the association. We are not concerned in any way with the general administration of the department. I submit, with respect, that if we are to terminate the study of these estimates there must be some limits, vague as they may be, within which the discussion ought to be contained.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister of Justice conveniently forgot the actual wording of the particular vote with which we are dealing—"Departmental administration including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates". This item concerns departmental administration and it happens that the particular item to which the minister referred is included. I have the strongest possible objection to the stand taken by the hon. gentleman in this connection. The item "departmental administration" always allows for a general discussion, however distasteful or inconvenient it may be to the government. I wish to make it very clear that we are asking for the right to discuss departmental administration, and when you make your ruling, Mr. Chairman, I want you to take these representations into consideration because we do not intend to be circumscribed by the caprice of the minister, or by his desire not to discuss certain matters which we consider to be of paramount importance.

I seldom rise on occasions such as this, but I wish to point out that it is difficult to get answers from this government. Day after day we hear interventions from members opposite: Put it on the order paper. I simply point out, once more, that when we do put questions on the order paper they are often conveniently forgotten. Questions are passed as orders for return—we never hear anything more about them. I think there are 25 orders for return which have been passed by the house but which have never been brought down. There are ten from last session.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the right hon. gentleman permit a question? Can he explain, for the benefit of the rest of us in this chamber, what relevance that has to the point of order which has been raised as to whether or not a general discussion on a certain item is in order?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes. Every time anything is brought up which the government does not like, or which the government does not find convenient, members on the other side immediately raise an objection. That is the relevancy. With the strongest possible emphasis I say that the words "departmental administration including . . ." allow for the fullest discussion.

Mr. Favreau: On a point of order, may I say I have too much respect for the right hon. gentleman not to realize that he is not unaware that the only reason why the title in darker letters is there is because, in the main estimates, the grant we are seeking the right to make is contained, or would be contained, under the item "departmental administration". Surely, the principle which allows members of all parties to discuss all aspects of the administration of a given department under the first item is one which applies only in the case of the main estimates, because the committee is dealing there directly with the question of the administration of the department in all its aspects.

The only matter which is raised here is the vote itself, not the title in dark letters. If it were otherwise we would be justified in discussing on this item the whole question of the R.C.M.P., for example; we would be allowed to deal with all questions which concern litigation between the government and other individuals or groups. In other words, under the guise of considering a grant to the Canadian corrections association we would be able to discuss all aspects of the affairs of the department.

I wish to point out, too, that it is only fortuitous that in this case the grant we seek leave to make is placed under the first heading, because in the case of many other departments the first supplementary vote required is not listed under what is normally the first item of the main estimates.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): I brought up this question with regard to the Farm Credit Corporation because it concerns the administration of the department as mentioned in the vote before us. Spring is coming on. We have not seen any main estimates. We have not had a supply motion. The estimates of the Department of Justice are not before the committee as yet.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, they are.

Mr. Favreau: They are tabled.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Yes, but they have not been brought forward for discussion.

Mr. McIlraith: How can they be? We cannot get this through?

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Yes, but there is the question of urgency. The spring is coming on. I should like to hear your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McIlraith: Before a ruling is made I should like an opportunity to be heard, particularly with reference to the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Ricard: Is this expediting the business before the committee?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, it is expediting the business before the committee. I rise only in an effort to do so, because I have some concern for the way in which the business of the house is carried on and I think the hon. member, if he would grant himself a moment in which to think, would agree with me that I do not usually take up much of the time of the house. When I do speak it is because I believe I have something to say which is of interest. I hope my remarks now will be in that category.

The point made by the Leader of the Opposition was that under item one, administration, it is proper to have a wide discussion on all matters affecting the department concerned. As a general proposition that is true enough; but the essential point, the point with which the right hon. gentleman did not deal, is that this latitude applies only with respect to the main estimates which amount, under this heading, to some $2 million. It has been traditional to have a general discussion on the administration item in the main estimates, but the practice with regard to final supplementary estimates has always been very different.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. McIlraith: Supplementary estimates usually provide merely for adjustments in amount because of the difficulty of estimating at the beginning of the year precisely what expenditures will be required by the end of the year, or else they are introduced to provide for new expenditures which have become necessary.

They comprise in the main, with one or two exceptions, items that are by way of adjustment. The practice with regard to supplementary estimates has been—and this will be found by anyone who checks over the record—that they take a very short time in the House of Commons.

Mr. Churchill: Will you look at the record for 1962? You spent 25 days on the estimates.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre would just contain himself and show his usual good nature until I finish my remarks, he will find that I shall have dealt with that subject. The practice has been that they take very few hours debate in the House of Commons. I think this is the thirty third session of parliament I have attended as a member of the House of Commons, although I am subject to correction as to that number. I did some research the other day on the question of the time taken on the final supplementaries. I am sorry I have not the sheet here with the precise figures on it, but the hon. member will find that in the last ten years in no case, with one exception, were the supplementaries ever called on more than two different sitting days of the house. The hon. member will find that is the case. With regard to the one exception to which I referred, he will find that there were something like eight to 10 days taken up and he will find, if he examines the record of the debate, that the reason that amount of time was taken on the final supplementaries that year was that the government of the day refused to submit a budget to the House of Commons to be debated, and refused to give any commitment to the House of Commons to let them discuss the main estimates; so that the traditional place for this kind of discussion, namely the budget or the main estimates, was denied the House of Commons. That being the case, the house in its wisdom took, I have forgotten whether it was eight or 10 days—

Mr. Diefenbaker: You took 25 days.

Mr. McIlraith: —to get a debate on that subject in order to have the kind of discussion or control of the financial policy and expenditures which is a traditional right of the House of Commons. That is the essential difference between what the Leader of the Opposition says and what the practice is. The practice is that speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under discussion—that is to be found in standing order 59(2)—and the item under discussion is a $10,000 item.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; it is departmental administration.

Mr. McIlraith: It is concerned with a particular grant to a particular association; that is the supplementary item before the house. The discussion the Leader of the Opposition is seeking to have is one that would have been relevant and proper when the item of $1,378,000 was before the committee of the whole. I believe that is the correct practice to be followed. Since already these supplementaries have now been before the committee of the House of Commons for 11 days or on 11 different days, I would hope that the committee would see fit, consistent with its thorough examination of the item, to permit the house to deal with the main estimates, the six supply motions and the remainder of the budget debate which is pressing and urgently requires the attention of this chamber.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I carefully listened to the remarks of the Minister of Justice and of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. I have to recall that before starting to consider the supplementary estimates, it had been agreed that when the first item of each department was called we might have a general discussion on the administration of the department. This may seem surprising, because the first item provides only the addition of $10,000 to the estimates of the Department of Justice.

I also would like to point out that those of us who have been here, in this house, for about two years, never yet had the opportunity of considering the budgetary estimates of the various departments. When the Conservatives were in power—and the Liberals will recall it, I am sure—we never had the opportunity of considering the estimates provided by the government. We never had the possibility of expressing an opinion in a discussion of the various departmental estimates. Since the Liberal party has been in power, it is the same thing. The estimates were submitted to the house last year at the very last minute, on the 17th or 18th of December, when we had stated our intention of adjourning the session during the holidays. We were asked to vote those estimates in just a few hours or, perhaps, a few days.

We have now been sitting for two years in this national parliament, and we are told that, under our democratic system, the opposition may scrutinize the estimates and criticize the general administration of the government. It is our third session here and we are again told that we have to pass all that in a hurry, even without having had the opportunity of criticizing the administration of the various departments.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I claim that an undertaking was entered into when we first started discussing these supplementary estimates. We never had the opportunity to examine and to comment in general on the administration of the various departments, and I suggest quite logically that, at this stage, when we have before us item No. 1e, we should have the right to discuss it.

Mr. Favreau: Would the hon. gentleman quote this undertaking or tell us where it is reported in Hansard?

Mr. Martineau: I have it here, and if the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Gregoire: I shall let the hon. member quote it rather than lose time.

[Text]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, in answer to what the Minister of Justice has just asked, there was a suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre at the beginning of the study of the supplementary estimates. He said:

> —namely that we should agree to take the supplementary estimates item by item and that there can be a general discussion on the first item of any department.

To that the Chair answered:

> These are very interesting remarks, and I would go along and suggest that the committee should go along with the last statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

That being so, the general discussion is permitted by the very ruling of the Chair at the beginning of the study.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I was on a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock p.m., the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, public bills.

British North America Act

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

ABOLITION OF THE SENATE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-88, to amend the British North America Act, 1867 (abolition of the Senate).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the House of Commons for the opportunity this afternoon to move the second reading of this bill, which would seek to amend the British North America Act in such a way as to abolish the Senate. I am grateful to the house, I may say, for the decision made yesterday on first reading, although I confess I was surprised that an attempt was made to prevent a member from introducing a bill. However, this attempt was overcome by a majority vote, in line with the tradition of this parliament whereby leave to introduce a bill is automatic, followed by first reading so that members may have the opportunity to read the printed bill and to see what it is all about.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think the hon. member, knowing the rules so well, will appreciate that comment on a vote held on a previous occasion is not permissible.

Mr. Knowles: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that welcoming a vote on a previous day is hardly out of order. I am also delighted, as a result of the discussion which took place yesterday, that the house agreed unanimously to permit this bill to be placed at the top of the list of public bills and thus be called for second reading today. As I listened to the words of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) yesterday, when he gave on his party's behalf unanimous consent, and as I read those words in Hansard, I felt he had committed this house to a moral obligation. He said that he and his party were prepared to give the required unanimous consent so that members of the house could stand up and be counted as to where they stand on this legislation. Therefore I feel that hon. members, having agreed to the debate this afternoon, are under a moral obligation to permit this bill to come to a vote and that they should not engage in talking it out. If that should happen, or if that should be threatened, I trust that at six o'clock there will again be unanimous consent to this bill's retaining its position at the top of the list.

Mr. Martineau: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles: Yes.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Martineau: Does he consider that within the sphere of one hour there can be an exhaustive discussion of this important bill?

Mr. Knowles: I recognize the difficulty of this being accomplished within one hour, but those were the terms stated by the Leader of the Opposition when he agreed to unanimous consent yesterday. I think either one of two things should be done. Either a vote should be allowed before six o'clock, or else more time should be permitted so that a vote can be taken on this issue. I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that this bill should not be talked out but that arrangements should be made so that members can stand up and be counted, giving an indication as to where they stand on this issue.

I also want to express the hope that on this very important issue we might have, in all parties if you please, what is sometimes referred to as a free vote. In other words, I hope we will not necessarily divide along party lines; and in particular if there are those on the government side who feel that they cannot vote for the principle of this bill by voting yes on second reading, that the other members on the government side will be free to vote for it if that is their view.

I want to say quite readily, Mr. Speaker, that I gave notice last Friday night of the introduction of this bill and I have brought it in at this time because the whole question of the Senate as a part of our parliamentary set-up has been brought into sharp focus by recent events. But it is not only because of recent events that I have introduced this bill. As hon. members know, the proposed abolition of the Senate is in the platform of the New Democratic party, and apparently I shall have to send a copy of the platform to a friend of mine in the other place who was under a misunderstanding last night.

As hon. members also know, many of us in all parties in Canada—and I can tell that this is so from the telegrams and messages I am getting at this time, many of which are from both Liberals and Conservatives—feel that this is a fundamental issue: Should our parliament have in it a body which has an equal say with the elected representatives, when the members of that body are not elected and are not responsible to the people of this country?

That is the basic issue. Are we really a democracy? Do we stand by the principle that the laws of a country should be made only by those who are elected by the people? If I make a mistake in this House of Commons, or if I vote the wrong way, or if I hold up parliament, I am responsible to the people of Winnipeg North Centre. I have to go back to them at the next election and face their judgment. But a gentleman in the other place can stand up and do something which does damage to many people across the country, and he is responsible to no one, not even to the person who recommended his appointment to that place. I suggest that there is a basic inconsistency in that position and that in this day and age our parliament should consist only of those who are elected by the people and who are responsible to them.

It is sometimes argued—in fact it is put up as the last argument for the retention of a non-elected second chamber in our parliament—that this was part of the original arrangement and was provided as a protection for minorities, particularly as a protection for the provinces of this country as such. I think the answer to that is to ask what the Senate has done to protect the rights of the provinces. What has the Senate done to protect minorities in this country? Any protection that has been provided either to the provinces or to the minorities of this country has been provided by parliament as a whole, through legislation emanating from this elected House of Commons, or by the courts.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that on first reading no debate was possible, certain debate did arise on a point of order, so that we have been given a preview of some of the arguments against this bill. One of the arguments made was that the bill is unconstitutional; that we do not have the right to amend our constitution in this way. You sir, in my view made a proper ruling when you indicated that it was not the function of the Chair to rule on constitutionality. After all, sir, if you started doing that your life would be a busier one than it is already.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Could he tell the house what hopes he anticipates his bill has of passing the Senate?

Mr. Knowles: I am coming to that in a minute if my hon. friend will let me. As I was saying, the question of deciding on the constitutionality of every piece of pension legislation or family allowance proposal, or anything of that nature, is surely not a function for Your Honour but must be a function for the courts.

It is my submission that under section 91A of the British North America Act parliament has the right to amend our constitution with respect to matters exclusively federal. We do from time to time amend our constitution as to the representation in this house among the provinces. We have taken steps to try to amend the constitution with respect to the qualifications of senators. I submit that this is a federal matter and that we have the right to make such an amendment in parliament.

It has been suggested as part of the argument against this bill that it is unilateral; that it is an attempt on our part, on the part of the House of Commons, to abolish the other place. I thought we had the reductio ad absurdum when it was suggested that, if that is the case, the Senate could bring in a bill to abolish the House of Commons. Surely it should be clear to all members that this is not a unilateral action on our part. This is a bill which to become law would have to be passed by this house and the Senate, and would then have to receive royal assent; so it is not unilateral action but parliamentary action.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. member allow a question. Would it not also require the consent of the provinces?

Mr. Knowles: That question is an assertion by the Leader of the Opposition, backed by some of his supporters. I am equally entitled to make the assertion that under section 91A it is not necessary to have the consent of the provinces to amend the constitution with respect to matters which are exclusively federal. Indeed, I ask the Leader of the Opposition, did he get the consent of the provinces before he proposed to amend the British North America Act with respect to the age of senators?

Mr. Nowlan: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles: I am asking the Leader of the Opposition, who is making no reply.

Mr. Nowlan: Will the hon. member permit this question? Does he not recognize a difference between abolition and a change in age? So far as the provinces are concerned, is there not a difference between whether a senator is 74 years and 11 months or 76 years old and whether the Senate is to be abolished entirely? The whole question of abolition goes to the root of the constitution of the country.

Mr. Knowles: I think the direct answer to the hon. member's question is no; it would not make any difference to a province so far as those two points are concerned. I have to watch my time, Mr. Speaker, for I have only 20 minutes. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) wants to know whether I think the Senate will pass this bill. I do not imagine that the Senate would pass this bill, certainly in today's atmosphere, if this house were to pass it, but I say to him and to the country that if the House of Commons passes a bill like this and the Senate defeats it, and if the House of Commons passes it again and the Senate defeats it, and if this goes on, and then there is an election, the Senate will come to realize that the will of the people must be recognized and such a bill would be passed. The only way you get something like this done, the only way you get any reform, is by starting it. That is why I am not a Conservative. I believe in looking forward.

An hon. Member: Just a Liberal.

Mr. Knowles: That of course is nonsense. Yesterday the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) suggested that my bill was improper because it would not protect the provinces from the point of view of the number of members they have in the House of Commons. He pointed out there are certain floors in the British North America Act with respect to membership in this house which are based on the number of senators that the provinces have in the other place. That has been the law since 1915. I suggest it was downgrading the Senate to say that is all it is, a body to provide certain numbers below which the numbers in this house will not fall.

Mr. Lambert: What a specious argument.

Mr. Knowles: The fact is that in my bill there are clauses that protect the representation of the provinces in this house on the basis of the number of senators that a province had in the other place on the last day of the Senate's existence.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Knowles: Make it fast.

Mr. Martineau: In view of the fact that the bill purports to amend section 133 of the British North America Act does the hon. member think this article can be amended unilaterally as proposed in the bill?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we are not on the clauses of the bill, but this is a very important point that the hon. member has raised. In so far as the bill amends any of the sections of the British North America Act other than the first one it amends, it does so consequentially. It does it only by taking out references to the Senate. The amendment to section 133 of the British North America Act makes no change of substance in section 133 as it now stands. All it does is to delete references to the Senate, the Senate having already been abolished by an earlier clause of my bill.

Mr. Martineau: The hon. member knows this will set a precedent—

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member knows I have only 20 minutes. It has been said in various ways that we have no right to take this action. In reply to that I should like to point out that at least two of the provinces of Canada have taken by themselves the kind of action that is proposed in this bill. I have in my hand a copy of chapter 28 of the statutes of the legislature of Manitoba for 1876. To go back to 1870 when Manitoba was constituted, it then had two houses, a legislative council and a legislative assembly, but by act of the legislature in 1876, which I have here, the upper house was abolished and the legislature of Manitoba was declared to consist of the lieutenant governor and the legislative assembly.

In the same way the province of Nova Scotia in the session of the legislature in 1928, that recently if you please, passed an act which abolished the legislative council and amended the constitution of the province. The Leader of the Opposition said yesterday that my bill would destroy parliament. That was a nonsensical observation. Manitoba did not destroy its legislature when it abolished the non-elected upper chamber; it strengthened the legislature. Nova Scotia did not destroy its legislature when it abolished its upper chamber; it strengthened the legislature. I suggest it would not destroy the parliament of Canada by one iota if we were to do away with the non-elected wing of it. We would be strengthening our parliament if we were to put it on the basis of complete parliamentary democracy.

Some hon. members have been saying that the House of Commons has been insulting the other place and my action has been characterized in certain ways. I could never say of the Senate what some people have said about it. There is just one quotation I should like to read. I will indicate its author, but I take it from page 339 of the book, "The Government of Canada", by MacGregor Dawson:

> A senatorship isn't a job, it's a title. Also it's a blessing, a stroke of good fate; something like drawing a royal straight flush in the biggest pot of the evening, or winning the Calcutta sweep. That's why we think it wrong to think of a senatorship as a job; and wrong to think of the Senate as a place where people are supposed to work. Pensions aren't given for work.

The author of those words uttered in 1942 is the gentleman who is now the senator for Carleton in the other place, my friend Hon. Senator O'Leary. That same gentleman and others have talked about the dignity that should be accorded to the Senate. I say that dignity is not something you get by having it accorded to you. Dignity is something you earn, and the Senate of Canada has not earned dignity so far as the people of Canada are concerned by the way in which it has acted in the last few weeks. It certainly did not earn dignity when it delayed to 35,000 unemployed people in this country, even by one day, payment of their unemployment insurance warrants to which they were entitled under legislation of this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friends want to put the blame on the Liberals. I will join them in putting all kinds of blame on the Liberals for their delay, their bungling and mishandling of the business of the house. But when we got down to the wire and the last day had come and the money for the payment of these warrants was not available except by parliamentary action, I say that anyone in this house or in the other place who acted as the Senate did was indulging in most undignified action. What was done deserves the criticism that has been heaped on the other place.

Some people say to me: Is there not a place for people like those who are in the Senate? Is there not a job for them to do in our Canadian set-up? I think there is. I believe there are roles for elder statesmen. I think that the kind of job which some of the senators have done in working on committees that have studied unemployment, aging, land use and other subjects have been good, have been constructive and worth-while efforts. But it is one thing to engage in a piece of research, one thing to do a job for Canada that is helpful to the elected representatives of the people, and another thing to have at the same time the right of veto or the right of delay with regard to legislation passed in this house.

Most Canadians are not aware, of course, of the fact that the Senate, unlike the House of Lords at Westminster, unlike the president of the United States with their temporary veto power, can go on year after year to the end of time, if it wishes to do so, saying no to legislation passed in this house. I raise this not as criticism of my friends in the other place, and I have many friends over there. I have known many of them when they were in this house and they are still friends.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: They meet me in the hall and I have lunch with them and we can still talk. They know, even if my Conservative friends in this house do not, that what is being discussed now is not a matter of personalities but rather a basic principle of democracy, and in that light I think the day must come when Canada will have to do certain things to improve our parliamentary set-up. We have got improvements to make.

Mr. Nowlan: May I ask one question?

Mr. Knowles: Just a minute. We have got improvements to make. I think there are real improvements that we must make in this House of Commons and in my view we on the opposition side of the house have just as much responsibility to make improvements as those on the government side. But that does not deny our right to look at the whole picture and to say to the people of Canada that we in this House of Commons think that the time has come for parliament to be put on a completely democratic basis. That is why I ask the house to consider favourably this bill which will do what we have a right to do, amend our constitution so as to make our parliament consist, as my bill says, of the Queen and the House of Commons, an elected body with final authority to legislate on behalf of the people of Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member referred to the veto year in and year out to the end of time. I should like to ask him how many examples he can give, other than the class or kind legislation which was unfortunate, of the veto ever having been exercised. How many cases have we had since confederation? I suggest the hon. member can count them on the fingers of one hand.

Mr. Knowles: The Senate vetoed the first old age pension bill and as far as I am concerned that is enough. It has vetoed several other measures as well. I thought my hon. friend was going to ask me whether there had been any examples of their doing it year in and year out. There are not, but that is not the point. The point is that the way our constitution reads, unlike that of other bodies, they have been given the right to reject what we pass this year, to reject it again next year and to reject it in the next parliament. No parliamentary constitution should read in those terms. Those were the terms in which people believed about a hundred years ago when they drew up our constitution, but today we recognize that parliamentary democracy means that those who pass upon legislation should be responsible to the people.

Mr. Nowlan: After that speech, will the hon. member answer my question? How many times has this been done? He has referred to the old age pension legislation, and as he knows this is a dead issue now. The class and kind legislation is the only instance of which I am aware during the 15 years I have been here. The hon. member has been alleging that they do this on many occasions, and will he give examples.

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friend is putting words into my mouth. I have not stated that the Senate has exercised unduly its veto power, which it has under the constitution. In effect, of course, it did so on Friday night, and I understand that today the Senate adjourned until April 20. It is going to be difficult for the government to suggest now that these supplementary estimates are urgent if the Senate is not coming back until the 20th of April. I suggest that just as justice delayed is justice denied, so legislation delayed is legislation denied. They are holding a whip hand over us. They are not responsible to anyone, not one man or woman over there is responsible to anyone, but we are responsible to the people who elected us. We have to go back to the people who sent us here, and I want our entire parliament to be on that basis.

Mr. John M. Turner (St. Lawrence-St. George): I hope the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) will allow that there is not only a moral right to vote on issues of importance before this house, but there is also a moral right to discuss them. Within those terms I should like, with the permission of the house, to discuss this bill in as objective a fashion as I can.

First of all, I should like to say that the incident which provoked the introduction of the hon. member's bill was an indefensible action by the hon. senator from Carleton in blocking the passage of an appropriation bill which contained money for the unemployment insurance fund. I should like to deal with this particular issue first because, as I said, it was the one which impelled the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to introduce this issue. The hon. senator for Carleton—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Starr: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question? When he said that the senator's action provoked the introduction of this bill, will he not admit that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said in this house that he had this bill prepared two weeks ago?

Mr. Turner: I can only reply that the coincidence in timing as between the rejection of the unemployment insurance fund money and the introduction of this bill is too fortuitous to pass unnoticed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member permit me to inform him that both he and the hon. member for Ontario are right?

Mr. Lambert: It was a grandstand job.

Mr. Turner: I think anyone who gets a split decision from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre can be grateful.

I want to say to this house that the hon. senator took the wrong time and the wrong issue—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Martineau: I submit that the rules forbid casting reflections on statements made by members of the other place.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member, if he refers to action taken in the other place, would make his point just as effectively.

Mr. Turner: I say with great respect that the exercise of the rights and privileges of the other place on this occasion affected human needs and human rights, and directly affected the right of the Canadian nation to pay back to the people who contributed to the unemployment insurance fund the money they needed.

Mr. Fairweather: You want a whipping boy; that is all you want.

Mr. Turner: I think the issue was put very fairly by an editorial in the Globe and Mail of April 6 in which it was stated that Canada failed not only in compassion but in fulfilling a statutory obligation toward the unemployed of this country.

An hon. Member: Talk on the bill.

Mr. Turner: I submit the hon. senator from Carleton could have found a better issue upon which to exercise the rights and privileges of the other house. He might have chosen a bill that was not a money bill, and one over which the Senate has no original jurisdiction.

Mr. Aiken: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. While we are discussing this question about the other place, I feel we should retain the courtesies and rules of our own house. I refer Your Honour to citation 147 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

> Allusions to debates in the other house are out of order, and there are few orders more important than this for the conduct of debate and for observing courtesy between houses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Aiken: While the debate does concern the other place, I think we must admit that they are still in existence and we must follow the rules laid down.

Mr. Cashin: I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: I had attempted to intimate in that last observation that we should refer to the other place rather than to individuals. I am sure the hon. member has heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka and I think he has made a good suggestion.

Mr. Cashin: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Turner: But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cashin: Speaking to the point of order that has been raised, I may say that the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has been referring to the collective action of the other place. With regard to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who preceded him, it was the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings who asked the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to make reference to the other place. You cannot have it both ways.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Turner: With all the respect I have for the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, I suggest to him it is very difficult to discuss this bill having to do with the abolition of the other place without referring from time to time to the other place.

Mr. Aiken: I only referred to the debate in the other place.

Mr. Turner: I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps the other place might have chosen a better issue upon which to exercise its privileges, in view of the fact that money bills are not within its originating jurisdiction under section 53 of the British North America Act.

Turning now to the bill which was introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I am going to suggest to him that in this instance he might be throwing the baby out with the bath water.

An hon. Member: Some pretty old babies.

Mr. Moreau: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. member for Cape Breton South would mind asking the hon. members of his party to give the same degree of attention and silence to the hon. member who has the floor that he demands in this house?

Mr. Winkler: Why don't you practise what you preach?

Mr. MacInnis: I am still here waiting for you to recognize the fact that I was on my feet.

Mr. Speaker: There was a point of order to my right. The point was made. The hon. member rose to ask a question. As the hon. member knows, the hon. member who has the floor need not give him the right to ask a question unless he wishes.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order I recognize the fact that the hon. member does not have to submit to questions, but now you have recognized a point of order made on that side, with respect to the fact that I was on my feet, and I call your attention, sir, to the fact that you ruled on that point of order before I said a word, and so therefore he did not have a point of order to begin with.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member wishes to ask a question now is the time to ask his question of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner), and it is up to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George to decide whether to answer it or not.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I rose to ask a question of the hon. member from St. George, or whatever the constituency is, and the hon. member seated over here on this side rose to call your attention to a point of order about me recognizing the rights of other members. I would direct your attention to the fact that you said there was a point of order raised over there. That point of order had to do with my being on my feet, and I would call your attention to the fact that up until that point I had not said one word; yet you saw fit to make a ruling on the fact that I was standing up, even though I had not said one word. How could you, sir, rule on such a point of order, and why not, sir, get up and call the attention of hon. members on the opposite side to their behaviour?

Mr. Speaker: It is at times such as this that the Speaker must have a controlled manner; at least I am told so. The hon. gentleman must realize that we only have an hour for this debate, and I would ask him to forget what has gone and let us get on with the matter before the house.

Mr. Turner: It is always a pleasure to take part in a quiet, friendly debate. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who introduced the bill neglected —I might say in a rather precipitate way—to explore the other avenues that might be open to him to achieve a more salutary performance in the upper chamber. He did not explore methods of reform. He did not explore the constitutional reforms available, nor the administrative reforms that might be discussed. Nor did he, I say with respect, deal with the constitutional problems involved in this bill and the practical consequences of it in terms of federal-provincial relations.

On reading the debates that preceded confederation, and the debates that preceded the London conference, I think it is quite clear that the purpose of the Senate was to preserve the territorial equality as between Upper and Lower Canada, and to preserve the rights of the maritimes. Anyone who takes the trouble to read those debates would find it an inevitable conclusion of such reading that neither Lower Canada nor the maritimes would have come into confederation had the principle of equality of representation in the upper house not been achieved.

That being so, it is not merely a question of analysing section 91A of the British North America Act, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did yesterday. It is not merely a question of analysing whether the federal government, with the unanimous consent of the provinces, has jurisdiction to abolish or even reform the Senate. The question, rather, is a practical one: Whether in terms of today's Canada the abolition of the Senate, which has as one of its historical reasons and impulses the protection of territorial equality among the partners to confederation is practically possible. The question is whether the provinces to this confederation would consent to such abolition. Whether the constitutional matter is decided one way or another—and I would say there are grave doubts that section 91A of the British North America Act is wide enough within its purview to allow this bill—whether or not there is constitutional justification for it, certainly the provinces would probably take great exception to an elimination of this historic right.

I would refer the house to reports of the proceedings of the 1950 and 1951 federal-provincial conferences at which this question came up, and every province, except Saskatchewan, filed in the minutes of those proceedings their veto against the abolition or fundamental constitutional reform of the Senate without their consent. That is a matter of record in the historical documents of this country and one which the hon. member, I say with the greatest deference to his knowledge and experience, has failed to consider.

I will concede with him that in practical terms today the other place has not been the first bastion of provincial rights. The growth of the cabinet system, the way the cabinets have been chosen in Canada, representing various regions and ethnic groups, the fact that the courts have traditionally been the first protection, certainly constitutionally, of provincial rights, the fact that in terms of practical politics any federal government that persisted in acting to the detriment of any section of the country could not long survive —all this has made the traditional role of the Senate as a protector of provincial rights less valid. But, speaking in practical terms, the records of this country show that the provinces almost unanimously have objected to any step that would abolish the other place, and this is recorded in the minutes of the federal-provincial conferences.

[Mr. Turner.]

Now, looking at the records too, may I refer to a speech made in Cobourg on January 28, 1957, during the election campaign of that epoch, when the Leader of the Opposition said to the people of Cobourg that his party promised to call a conference of the federal and provincial governments on reform of the Senate, if he were to become prime minister. I would like to read his words into the record:

> We will convene a conference of the dominion and provincial governments and on the basis of its recommendations will make the Senate an effective instrument of parliamentary government.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the hon. member what date that was?

Mr. Turner: January 28, 1957.

Mr. Greene: That was the vision.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has seen fit to answer a question, probably he would answer another. Would the hon. member take time out to read the Hansards of the other place, and for his own benefit read the last paragraph of the April 1, issue, page 258 and, having read it, will he reconsider his opening remarks?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I might say in answer to that question that I have read the words the hon. member refers to, and perhaps on this he could take time out.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member now identify the person who made the remarks?

Mr. Turner: There are two pages that the hon. member refers to.

Mr. MacInnis: I referred to one paragraph.

Mr. Turner: I would like to proceed with my argument. The basis of what I would like to say here is that the other place—and here we have a puzzle, what I once called a conundrum in this country—that the other place must either be given an opportunity of exercising a useful role in the parliamentary system, to exercise in Sir John A. Macdonald's own words, familiar enough to him, "a sober second thought" on legislation wherein he conceived the Senate would be the controlling or regulatory rather than the initiating branch of parliament, or it must cease to exist at all. Then, surely, and only then, would it be the duty of this house after a properly conceived and thorough debate to refer the question of reform to a federal-provincial conference. The problem as I see it is this: The other place is not given enough to do. Most of our legislation is introduced in this house as it has to be, under the terms of section 53, in respect of money bills. Most of the major bills brought before parliament have to do with money and, in consequence, they are introduced here, debated at length, and finally referred to the other place only at a late stage in the parliamentary session.

At one time the composition of the cabinet used to include a member or two from the Senate. This is another role which has been minimized of late years and, in consequence, the other place is less useful than it might otherwise be. My suggestion is that we should seek to achieve administrative reforms which would allow important legislation to be introduced from time to time in the upper chamber for consideration there, particularly when such legislation was of a non-partisan nature or not too controversial. Either we should do this or we should proceed to a more fundamental reform along the lines indicated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The hon. member has himself recognized the validity and effectiveness of the Senate committee system. There is, I am sure it will be agreed, a non-partisan attitude taken toward legislation, and I should like to direct the attention of the house—

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, I think the time allowed to the hon. member has expired and that members of other parties should be allowed to express their views.

Mr. Turner: With the greatest respect, I wonder if I might be given a few minutes in which to terminate, since most of my remarks were punctuated—

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the house that more time be allotted to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George?

Some hon. Members: No.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Yesterday I raised certain objections to this measure. I have now examined it in detail and listened to its proposer, and I am just as thoroughly convinced that this is a bad bill.

This bill does not seek to reform the Senate. This bill simply abolishes the Senate. This bill seeks drastically to alter the composition of the parliament of Canada. That is the issue before us today. We are not here to discuss reform of the Senate in any particular. This bill seeks to destroy parliament as we know it and as we have known it since confederation. I emphasize this particularly, because if the measure were aimed at the reform of the Senate there would be many matters which this house could discuss. It is generally agreed that the Senate could become more effective if a number of reforms were made. The official opposition has long been in favour of the reform of the Senate and has, in fact, brought forward resolutions in this regard. I would refer hon. members to Hansard, particularly to the reports of our debates in 1954, and suggest they read the speeches made by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), and others, all dealing with the matter of Senate reform. Let us be perfectly clear. We are not discussing Senate reform today but the complete abolition of the Senate.

The official opposition unequivocally opposes this bill because it strikes at the roots of parliament. Parliament is composed of the Queen, the Senate and the commons. Passage of the hon. member's bill through this house would be as illogical and absurd as it would be to suggest that the Senate could, in its turn, legislate the House of Commons out of existence, and I repeat this, notwithstanding the glib phrases used by the proposer of the measure before us.

I would also bring this to the attention of hon. members: In accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act as it now stands, the three provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are given constitutional guarantees as to their representation in this house. We need only look at history leading up to confederation. Let hon. members consider the development of the western provinces which also received a bloc of 24 Senate seats. We had the Atlantic provinces, we had Ontario, we had Quebec and we had the western provinces. There is no one, and I include the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who can say it was not a basic condition of entry into confederation that the rights of the provinces would be protected through their equal representation by divisions in the Senate. Changes of population in the interval have, of course, affected the position. When the four western provinces were allocated their 24 Senators, their population was minute. In contrast the population of my own province today outnumbers the present population of the original maritime provinces. Well, we have six Senators to their 24.

Mr. Knowles: What protection have they given you?

Mr. Lambert: But there is still protection. You do not have to use the police in order to get the protection of the police; they are there.

Miss LaMarsh: Like Robarts.

Mr. Lambert: I love the interruptions of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh); they are so helpful to her colleagues on other occasions.

It is alleged that the purpose of this bill is to implement the principle that legislation should be enacted only by elected representatives responsible to the people. If it is alleged that only an entirely elected form of government can be successful, I am sure history would prove that such a doctrine is fallacious. It is true that the party to which the hon. member belongs has advocated the abolition of the Senate for a number of years, but I say that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is bringing forward his bill at this time merely as a publicity stunt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert: They have brought forward resolutions in the past. The hon. member says he had a bill ready. But then he suddenly seizes the occasion, in a fit of pique to put it forward, and I suggest he is merely trying to capitalize on a situation which has already been over-dramatized in order to milk out of that situation every vestige of publicity that can be gained from it.

The hon. member wants to talk. I suggest that he read Saturday's Edmonton Journal where the exact impact of last Friday's action is indicated by the manager of the unemployment insurance commission office there, who says: "Fifteen thousand unemployed will not have one moment's delay because their cheques were due to go out Tuesday." This has been a case of over-dramatization. If the hon. member wants to talk about reform, fine. He is talking about abolition.

Mr. Knowles: But I do not want to talk about reform. I do want to talk about abolition.

Mr. Lambert: I will not, in the circumstances—

Mr. Olson: On a point of order. Surely it is against the rules for any member to impute motives to another member in the course of discussion?

Mr. Lambert: The hon. member is a great one to rely on that rule. I would refer him to his own speeches.

I do not intend to examine further the situation which may have prompted the sudden filing of this bill, but if the confession of error on the hon. gentleman's part after bypassing the rules of the house—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is difficult to hear the hon. member.

Mr. Peters: You are not missing anything, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, after having heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and others in this house confessing the error of bypassing the rules of this house some three weeks ago, I find it passing strange that the hon. member would now seek to criticize others who felt they should observe the rules. When this house flouted its rules, the hon. member did not seek to destroy it but urged greater adherence to our rules and perhaps some reformation in this house. When the third part of this parliament, or the Senate, found that it must adhere to its rules, and thereby did not meet, shall we say, the immediate desires of the hon. gentleman and, perhaps, the tyranny of a temporary majority, the hon. gentleman did not say "reform", he said "destroy".

Mr. Speaker, in the last couple of minutes that I have at my disposal, since other hon. members wish to speak, I say that I am thoroughly opposed to this bill. I repeat that there must be consent by the provinces, which are affected by this bill, prior to the abolition of the Senate. It is not a question of amendment; it is a question of abolition. In this regard I would say that every province in this country has a vested interest. It is not the case, as the hon. member said, of a province abolishing a part of its house. The federal government itself is not in the same position as the people in the provinces.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lambert: Not at the moment. I have very little time left. If there is an extension of debate, perhaps I will; but not at the present time. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is thoroughly bad. It seeks to weaken our constitution. It seeks unilaterally to alter the Canadian constitution without prior consultation with and consent of the provinces, for whom the composition of the Senate was an essential condition of their participation in confederation. The wisdom of elected representatives can never be complete, and it would be an extremely dangerous step to take for us to agree that a unicameral house would have greater wisdom than our present form of government of one elected house and one appointed house. After all, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member does not propose changing the Senate from an appointed body to an elected body so as to gain the benefit of the alleged principle of this bill that legislation should be enacted only by elected representatives responsible to the people. His purported remedy is merely abolition.

I would like hon. members opposite to be able to express their point of view. After all, by accepting first reading they were also accepting that they should flout the constitution of this country. I would like to see the members of the government and their backbenchers state their views in regard to this bill.

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, does not the point of order raised by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) really apply now, when this reflection is put upon the vote of yesterday?

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member now permit a question from one of those so-called backbenchers?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is that the discussion this afternoon has surely shown to the satisfaction of most members of this house that a full and exhaustive discussion cannot take place within the hour set aside for this debate. Therefore I would ask Your Honour to ask the house if it would give unanimous consent so that one day, perhaps tomorrow or within ten days, would be set aside for a complete discussion of what is certainly a most important bill.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the hon. member that in my opinion that is not a point of order. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson).

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I ask—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I point out to the hon. member that there are only about three or four minutes left, and perhaps he would be good enough to give them to the hon. member for Red Deer.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, now that the abolitionists and the conservationists have all had the chance to shout their words across the house, there are about two minutes left for something constructive.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert: Oh, the weight of that halo.

Mr. Knowles: Watch out; you will be sent to the Senate.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, while I do not condone the situation that exists at the present time in the Senate, neither am I in favour of the abolition of the other place because I believe that if the Senate were properly reformed it could fill a very useful and constructive purpose in our parliamentary system of government. That could be as a house of scrutiny, a house of second thought, a house from which we could draw many of our commissioners to deal with our public and governmental problems.

However, the Senate must be something more than a rubber stamp. If this house really expects the Senate to be nothing more than that, quite obviously it has become a very expensive rubber stamp and the bill we are now considering is an intelligent one. I would suggest, however, that what is wrong is not the fact that we have a Senate, but the shameful way in which both senators and the institution of the Senate have been treated by the present and past administrations of the old line party systems.

The Senate as we have it today is not that useful part of the government of Canada that was intended by the fathers of confederation. Instead it is a pasture for the political war horses of the old line parties who have outlived their strength and usefulness and are now put out to grass. It is a place, too often, to which the incompetent can be retired without disgracing the administration to which they once belonged. No wonder that a body composed in this manner commands little respect and that those members who try to discharge its function in a useful manner are flouted. Therefore I believe it is our responsibility at another time to debate intelligently and in a positive way methods by which the Senate can be reformed.

It is an indictment of our parliamentary system that in Alberta a Social Credit government for nearly 30 years, a C.C.F. government in Saskatchewan for 20 years, a Social Credit government in British Columbia for 12 years and, yes, a Union Nationale government in Quebec for 20 years have never been recognized; they have been ignored completely in this regard. I can think of an elder statesman who served in this house, who belongs to the party of the hon. member who moved this bill and who would make a very responsible and deserving senator if he were given that opportunity. I speak of M. J. Coldwell. Therefore I believe that in consultation with the provinces we ought to get together and reform the Senate and make it the useful body that it should be.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In view of the obvious interest in this bill, I wonder whether the house would give unanimous consent to—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles: Let me finish. I wonder whether the house would give unanimous consent to this bill being allowed to stay at the top of the list of public bills so it could have at least one more hour's debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to say that I do not hear unanimous consent given to the suggestion of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There are some noes. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we could not hear any noes. Where did they come from?

Mr. Speaker: There are noes. In order that there be no doubt at all, when I asked for unanimous consent I did hear noes.

Mr. Winkler: They were all from the Grits over there.

Some hon. Members: No. Pigeon, Pigeon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will resume the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

Mr. Pigeon: Same old bunch.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, supplementary estimates E for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964, vote No. 1e, Department of Justice. The hon. member for Wellington-Huron.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, we were on a point of order at five o'clock and I had been on my feet asking for the opportunity to speak to that point of order.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to speak to the point of order? The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, at five o'clock, as I think the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre will recall, I was on my feet speaking to the point of order.

The Chairman: I am willing to hear the hon. member if he wishes to address the Chair at the moment. I must say very honestly it was my feeling that the point of order had been raised, arguments had been made on both sides, and I was hoping that the matter might perhaps be allowed to rest there and that we could now hear the hon. member for Wellington-Huron. This would be my suggestion.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My remarks will be quite brief, as they would have been at a quarter to five if I had not been interrupted by the Minister of Justice and the President of the Privy Council. I am not one of the more loquacious members of the house so I thought I was perfectly in order in raising this particular question. It has to do with the appointment of lawyers by the Department of Justice to look after Farm Credit Corporation legal work. Before 1957 or 1958 there were not too many lawyers doing this work. I believe it was in 1959 that the Department of Justice divided the country into areas for the convenience of the farmers who were going to be served by the corporation. This action was taken for the convenience of the farmers and not for the convenience of the lawyers or the Farm Credit Corporation.

I have particular reference to a situation which has developed in that part of the county of Huron which I represent. After 1958 a lawyer in Wingham was appointed to look after the work in the eastern portion of the county. The lawyer who is now doing the work lives in Goderich, 40 or 50 miles away. I feel it is important for the convenience of the farmers in the area to which I have referred that the department and the minister should give consideration to appointing someone from the legal profession in the town of Wingham to look after the Farm Credit Corporation work. I should like the minister to take this into consideration.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I have three questions I should like to ask the minister. I am sure the first one is familiar to him. I should like to know the composition and the schedule of the firearms study committee he spoke about in the house on March 9. I ask this question because I have had representations both from individuals and Canada-wide organizations such as the Canadian wildlife federation regarding the membership of the committee and whether there will be any opportunity for fish and game clubs and other such organizations to make representations before the committee's report is embodied in amendments or changes in regulations. I think the minister is aware that these groups feel too much haste in introducing regulations that would limit the use of firearms according to age might wipe out their strong and extended programs for the thorough schooling of young people in the use of firearms.

The second question I should like to ask the minister concerns a matter about which some people have also made representations to me. It involves a judge of the Quebec courts by the name of Ouimet who sentenced a man to jail for 12½ months, I believe, for writing a letter to a newspaper criticizing a decision that the judge had made. I do not want to make any comments about it. I have read the decision of the judge and the letter in question and I am afraid that neither my French nor my understanding of the law is sufficient for me to make any comment. However, I wonder whether this sentence has been drawn to the minister's attention and whether any of his officials have looked at it from the point of view of its severity. I know that I have been critical of judges' decisions and have come close to writing letters that would have been no more vitriolic than the one in question here, and it is for that reason I should like to know whether this sentence has been looked at or whether the minister has heard anything from the provincial crown attorney or attorney general with regard to it.

The third question is a more general one, although it has a specific which I have raised with two previous ministers of justice. It is the old question of the replacement or retirement of incompetent judges. I think it is supposed to be understood that there is no such thing as an incompetent judge, but I do know of one particular situation that is bothering a great many members of the bar and also the general public. When representations were made it was pointed out that there was no place to which to shift the judge. The suggestion was made that perhaps such a judge could be shifted to a very large metropolitan centre like Toronto where he would not be any problem at all, but I gather the reply was that Toronto is already saddled with a couple of such judges and this just would not do.

I am serious about this question. I should like to know whether the minister is giving any consideration at all to how judges, particularly in the superior courts, who are not carrying out their functions properly and about whom there are complaints, can be either replaced or given some kind of honourable retirement. Since these are three separate and simple questions I have raised I would appreciate it very much if the minister would give me the answers right away.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, first of all may I say I am answering subject to the caveat I have entered three times already. I feel quite concerned about speaking on these matters because I am afraid I am completely out of order in doing so. As I said, I am sure in my own mind that an item seeking leave to pay $10,000 to the Canadian corrections association to assist in defraying the expenses of the fifth international criminological congress in Montreal certainly does not cover these subjects.

However, the hon. member who has put these three questions will at least agree that, in so far as I personally am concerned, I have never avoided any personal conversations, or refused to furnish full information on a personal basis. So far as the composition and details of the firearms committee are concerned, I must say that I do not have same at my fingertips. I do not have the names of the members. It is an interdepartmental committee that has had several sittings. I have already begun to look into the reports of that committee and have been discussing same not with the members themselves, but through one of my officials in charge of the criminal law section. I have already made one answer in the house to the effect that, for the moment, there was no intention of curtailing the use of firearms. The only limitations that were under study, not considered for recommendation but under study were, (a) the possibility of increasing the age at which a person could use a firearm without being under the control of a responsible person and, (b), preventing the use of firearms by certain people, inter alia people already found guilty of offences against our laws.

As to the second point raised with regard to the sentence which has been imposed by Mr. Justice Ouimet, I must say that, like my hon. friend, I am not in a position to state exactly the duration of the sentence involved. However, I recall quite clearly that this was one case where a person, having read about a sentence which included the condemnation to lashing felt that this was an undue type of condemnation to impose and wrote a letter to the newspapers which could have been termed at least inflammatory. The person concerned was charged, with contempt of court, because the judge, in imposing sentence, had not gone beyond the scope of his jurisdiction under the code. The person had inferred, in the language used, that the judge had been wrong in applying the law.

There are two questions raised by this incident. The first one is connected with the administration of justice. This is, of course, purely a matter for the provincial government under the British North America Act. The second question is one which I hope we are not going to discuss fully here tonight, and that is the matter of the propriety of henceforth maintaining in the code provision for a sentence to lashing.

In so far as the replacement or retirement of incompetent judges is concerned, I must answer that the question of revolving judges either by districts or otherwise is one for the chief justice of each court. It is governed also by the principles followed in administering justice in the provinces. Since I have not been responsible as yet for the appointment of any judges I can at least say that if some are incompetent, as my hon. friend alleges, they have not been appointed by me. I can at least promise the committee that I shall try to be careful to appoint judges who are as competent as it is possible to get them.

Mr. Aiken: At a later date I want to make a rather full statement in connection with the question of penitentiaries administration and the particular problem of minimum security institutions. For the time being I should like the minister to comment on a matter that is very seriously concerning me, and several other people who are in the same situation. I refer to the general policy of the decentralization of penal institutions.

It has been long recognized that there are many inmates of institutions who can be rehabilitated. However, these people have to be segregated from the others and given training programs. It is a very difficult matter to put a program like this into effect. The public is far from sympathetic and there are failures even under this type of program. I believe that within the administration of the penitentiaries branch possibly there are people who doubt the advisability of minimum security institutions and the segregation of different classes of prisoners. It takes a strong government and a strong minister to lay down a policy in connection with prison reform and to carry it out. If he does not do this himself the program will begin to disintegrate.

I am concerned because of a feeling that two things are happening, and I hope the minister can ease my conscience about both these things. First, I am concerned that the policy that was instituted some years ago by Hon. Davie Fulton of decentralizing penal institutions into many smaller units and into maximum and minimum security institutions, is being abandoned. Then, I am concerned lest there is an effort on behalf of the government to phase out minimum security institutions now in existence. I have recently had evidence placed before me that at least one minimum security institution already in operation may be in the process of being closed. I refer to the Beaver Creek camp. This, I feel, would be a reversal of the policy which was begun a few years ago and which has been quite successful. This camp is very close to me, and I have seen it grow and operate. It was well started and has had a very good history of keeping people out of trouble after they have been released.

There are indications that this government is giving in to those people within the penitentiaries branch who are against this type of penal reform. It seems to me that over the last few months the efforts of the government have been very largely turned towards building institutions on a patronage basis. I do not want to go into all the things that have been said about the Cornwall institution and the institutions that were supposed to have been put in Grey-Bruce, St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, and so on. But it seems to me that the attitude of the previous minister, in the statements he made, was that the penitentiaries branch was merely considered by the government for building institutions in the ridings of its own members, and taking them out of the ridings of members of the opposition. In addition to that, it appears that some of the institutions that were planned, the minimum security institutions, are not only not being built in the ridings of opposition members but are not being built at all.

That program was started. It was successful, and I would like an assurance from the minister that he is firmly behind those people within his penitentiaries branch who support the minimum security institutions and the decentralization of prison farms and penitentiaries. I have a fairly extended speech prepared but I do not want to delay the estimates unduly. However, this is a matter I do not want to leave until we come to the main estimates. I want to be satisfied that the minimum security institutions system will be carried through and that the minister is wholeheartedly behind it. I ask the minister to give me such an assurance.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, while we are considering the estimates of the Department of Justice, I should like to say that I am particularly disappointed to see that the minister has not provided special items which would permit the government to launch a full inquiry into bankruptcies occurring across the country, and particularly in the province of Quebec, where the situation is becoming increasingly alarming—

The Chairman: Order. The Minister of Justice is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to insist too much on the rules, but I am sure that up to now I have been very conciliating. I suggested that the only excuse we could have to discuss, on supplementary estimates, the question, for instance, of penitentiaries, which was discussed at some length, was in connection with the small grant of $10,000, which we are asking the house to approve and which is earmarked for the Canadian correction association. This association is concerned with penitentiaries.

However, we should bear in mind that, after the eleventh day, we are still on supplementary estimates. Even though discussion only lasted 30 or 40 minutes on certain days, we had at least eight full days of debate on the subject. I think that nothing in the present items justifies wandering, even for a short while, into the bankruptcy field, especially when budget items of my department will soon be submitted, at which time we will have every opportunity, on item 1 of the estimates of my department, to discuss such matters.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order. I should like to point out once again to the Minister of Justice, in his capacity as house leader, what the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) read to him this afternoon, namely that on the first item of the estimates of each department, we should have a general discussion on the administration.

We are now on item 1 of the supplementary estimates of the Department of Justice and, therefore, we are permitted a general discussion on the administration of that department.

As indicated by item No. 40, the Department of Justice also has estimates concerning application of the Bankruptcy Act.

Now, my colleague from Compton-Frontenac has exceedingly important observations to make on a most important point concerning fraudulent bankruptcy in the province of Quebec, and that concerns the administration of the Department of Justice. I think that the minister, instead of trying to block the suggestions made by the members of this house, should listen carefully to what is said about things occurring in the city of the Minister of Justice, not to say in his own riding, namely the practice of fraudulent bankruptcies.

The Chairman: Order—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, in concluding I may say that preventing us from discussing that point is a breach of the undertaking entered into by the Minister of Justice himself, in his capacity as house leader, when we started the discussion on supplementary estimates.

That is why I say that the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac is completely in order and quite justified in discussing the point.

I also cannot but wonder why, some members of our group are prevented from taking part in the debate. The hon. member for Compton-Frontenac is the first who wishes to rise on those estimates, but they are trying to stop him.

An hon. Member: He is the first one who is to be stopped.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member stated his point on the remarks started by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac. Would any hon. member like to make any other remarks on the point of order raised by the Minister of Justice?

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, might I say one word? I would ask the house leader whether there is a means of reaching a new understanding? If we consider ourselves blocked by those old agreements, I would ask for a new agreement to enable us to proceed more quickly with the discussion of the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I should say I never have deceived the house neither on that point nor, indeed, on others. It should not be implied that there has been some agreement between house leaders on that matter.

The agreement to which the hon. member for Lapointe referred, and the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue mentioned at noon, as allegedly recorded on page 876 of Hansard, is this. An attempt was made to limit the discussion to item 1 only of the estimates when there are all kinds of other items for each department.

It has been suggested that the discussion on section 1 could deal with all items, but that meant obviously only on such supplementary estimates as were requested from the house, so as not to limit entirely the discussion to section 1.

Mr. Gregoire: Could the Minister of Justice tell me once more what page of Hansard he is referring to?

[Text]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what page 876 of the French edition says, nor was I in the house when the hon. member for Timiskaming rose this afternoon.

Mr. Favreau: If my hon. friend will allow me, I was referring to page 876 in the English version, which he has.

Mr. Nielsen: Well then, may I refer Your Honour to page 879 of Hansard for March 13 last, where the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested the procedure that should be followed in discussing each department as it arose, that suggestion substantially being that on the first item of each department a general discussion of the department would ensue.

As recorded in the right hand column of that same page I had this to say:

> Mr. Chairman, I think, for the purposes of orderly discussion in the consideration of all these departmental supplementary estimates, we should have this matter clear at the outset. I had the same understanding as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, namely that we would have a general discussion on the first item of each department as it arose.

I believe Your Honour was in the chair at the time, although I may be mistaken in my recollection, and as recorded at page 880 you had this to say:

> Perhaps I may be allowed to conclude my remarks. The committee is in obvious agreement that this procedure should be followed—

—namely, that suggested by myself, as set forth originally by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

> —and I suggest that we follow it.

Surely there can be no attempt by the Minister of Justice at this late stage to limit the debate, in view of those previous commitments?

The Chairman: Order. It is perhaps a bit unfortunate that this matter has been raised from time to time. It is certainly a difficult point to rule upon, but in the opinion of the Chair there was, when we originated this discussion earlier in committee of supply, an understanding of some nature—I really cannot tell how far it went—that on the first item of each one of the departments where there is a general administration item there would be a discussion of a general nature. This has been my impression all along and this is why we have been following this procedure during the days while the supplementary estimates have been under consideration.

I point out that this does not mean we have suspended the ordinary rules of procedure in this committee. The general rules of relevancy still apply. Standing order number 59(2) still applies as does, of course, the citation from May which I quoted last night and which perhaps I should quote again for the benefit of hon. members. This reads:

> Of course, it is quite obvious that it should be improper, as a general rule, to raise on a supplementary estimate the whole question of policy involved in the original estimate.

As I said last night, this is a general rule which we have to bear in mind even though we have recognized that there can be a general discussion. In other words, my feeling is we have recognized that the committee may proceed with a general discussion on the first item where there is a general administration item. But the Chair should, I submit, rule on every particular intervention on its own merits so as to determine whether it follows the ordinary rules of relevancy which continue to apply, even in this debate.

Mr. Nielsen: I think that for the purpose of clarification I have to make two points. The first is that when we began this discussion on March 13 this committee was in unanimous agreement that we should proceed to a general discussion on the first item of the estimates of each department. There was no agreement confined only to general administration items. That agreement covered all departments.

The Chairman: I do not think we should go into the matter further. I said, and I feel my thinking is generous enough, that we should consider each intervention on its merits. I have studied all the observations which have been made. I have considered what I myself, said. If the hon. member for Yukon would go through all the comments which were made on the point of order originally raised by various members, including the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue, he would see that it was the feeling of the members who brought up this point that there would be a general discussion where there was a general administration item. I think, in fact, that this would cover most of the departments; if my recollection is correct there are few whose estimates do not begin with a general administration item.

However, I do not think we should make a general ruling. We should consider each situation as it arises. In the present instance the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac has begun a discourse on the administration of bankruptcy. It would not be possible for the Chair to make a ruling on whether the hon. member is in order or not because I have not heard enough of his discourse and I invite him to continue his remarks for the time being.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, the Bankruptcy Act is inadequate, almost useless as far as its practical application is concerned, and the impact of this inefficiency is felt almost in all areas of business but especially, perhaps because of its more fragile nature, by small industry, by our small traders, which is very understandable indeed, large companies being protected by lawyers who are expert in these matters, whereas the small trader, whoever he is, cannot afford to seek legal advice in view of the huge expenses involved.

The situation is such, Mr. Chairman—and I am certain that the minister, who is a brilliant lawyer, is aware of this—that Le Petit Journal for the week of March 15, 1964, published an article relating sensational revelations by a person in the know and entitled:

I worked in the fraudulent bankruptcy business.

That article describes the gigantic organization which controls this continuing fraud, and throws some light on the procedure used to entice tradesmen with financial problems to rush into the lion's mouth.

When newspapers have the courage to put before the population an article of this quality, it is hightime for legislators, and especially those who administer this famous act, to face up to their responsibilities and ask themselves frankly what changes are required in the light of recent events.

Mr. Chairman, may I quote in its entirety the introductory paragraph of this article, written by Mr. Conrad Bernier. It begins this way:

The season of the fat kine has been going on for some time for the experts in fraudulent bankruptcy. The number of their victims since a little over two years is unbelievable.

By its magnitude, by the strength and the complexity of its organization, the racket of fraudulent bankruptcies has taken such ugly, brutal and fantastic proportions that it is jeopardizing the entire local trade—

The author is referring to Montreal.

Allow me to mention to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) that as a small manufacturer, in Montreal only, out of ten customers to whom I sold goods, eight have gone bankrupt. I would therefore ask him to listen closely to this:

—which may be plunged in a complete chaos. The damages, states an eminent financier—

—and it is still Mr. Bernier who is writing—

—are huge and, faced with such gangsters, one feels very small, insignificant and lost. Those gangsters who hustle us and may even knock us down and squash us have corrupted and altered business to an extraordinary degree. The fraudulent bankruptcy racket has become an ever-spreading organization which must be hunted down and destroyed at all costs.

You can see as well as I do that those words leave no possible doubt as to the seriousness of the situation. Moreover, to assist him in his clean-up job, the Minister of Justice could surely rely on the solid support of his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp), whose competence and integrity would undeniably be major assets in helping him take the pulse of that situation, diagnose the disease and then apply the remedy required.

Reference was made to the setting up of a judicial committee or something of the kind in Montreal to have a look at the situation and probably submit a report which, like so many others, would wind up gathering dust in the departmental files.

The basic problem lies in the provisions of the act itself, and it is this act that should first be studied, revised, reviewed and amended. I intended to introduce a bill or a motion to that effect. I inquired of the house's legal adviser, but since he is overworked and that, according to him, such a revision would require almost a month's work and still, by a legal expert, it was considered almost impossible.

Only departmental officials can perform this work efficiently and officially, because questionings would no doubt be necessary. In fact, an entire legal machinery should be set up so as to throw some light on this unsavoury business that reeks of fraud and which our honest businessmen are practically unable to avoid, being blinded by a doubtful legality that leaves room for quibbling and interpretation by any sharp swindler.

Last year the minister of justice gave me several documents concerning bankruptcies following a question I had put on the order paper. Along with those statistics, some of which I will give in a few moments, I could read the following paragraph:

Who assumes the losses presumably suffered according to the figures given in those charts? The records at the office of the superintendent of bankruptcy do not give the total number of claims filed by the creditors, except when a dividend is declared. Consequently, the figures for the liabilities are those given by the debtors themselves and are only an estimation. Furthermore, when the secured creditors take back their securities, unless they give the amount really recovered, only an estimation based on the value of the securities can be made.

According to information available, we cannot distinguish between secured, preferred and unsecured creditors and determine the loss apparently sustained by each category.

It follows from this answer of the minister that the administrators of this act are as inefficient as the act itself.

A lot of technicalities are put forward and it is hardly possible to succeed with antiquated methods. Meanwhile, people who have devoted their whole life to building up a business, witness failure of their most legitimate ambitions and loss of the little they own because an inefficient act is unable to prevent swindlers from grasping their belongings.

Allow me, Mr. Chairman, to quote a few figures in support of my remarks. In 1958, in cases of non-summary proceedings, the estimated liabilities of debtors amounted to $34,330,098, and in cases of summary proceedings—

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I would point out that the item the hon. member is now discussing is No. 40 of the main estimates of the Department of Justice. There is no item on this subject in the supplementary estimates now before the committee. There is, therefore, debate going on with regard to a subject matter that is not before the committee.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac has practically finished his observations. I think he has something worth listening to and the minister possibly has something to learn from what the hon. member has to say. Would the committee be considerate enough to let the hon. member terminate his observations on this matter?

The Chairman: I might say that I have already expressed the views of the Chair on this general question, and I would be prepared to listen to the hon. member's speech.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Estimated liabilities of debtors totalled $34,330,098 and, on summary conviction, $10,062,138. Those figures have kept on increasing since 1958 and have reached a point where, according to 1962 statistics, liabilities on non-summary conviction were $69,989,460 and $10,749,735 on summary conviction. Gentlemen, the present avalanche of bankruptcies will no doubt reach new records for the last fiscal year.

I will just give you the total amount of apparent losses for 1962; on non-summary conviction, they totalled $15,695,662 and $5,779,801 on summary conviction. And, as the Minister of Justice stated in the quotation I read at the beginning of my remarks, because of the present provisions of the law, it is extremely difficult to determine those losses with a normal degree of precision. Consequently, those figures are but a poor indication of an unfortunate situation and I will be happy to provide the information I have to anyone who wishes to examine the question.

To conclude my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister the following question, and I would appreciate it if, with his usual courtesy, he would take it into serious consideration: would the Minister of Justice be prepared to make an inquiry into these fraudulent bankruptcies? In addition, would he be prepared to establish a committee or another body to study immediately the possibility of revamping the Bankruptcy Act. Finally, is the Minister of Justice ready to assume responsibility for instituting a temporary commission to scrutinize all bankruptcy cases, especially in Montreal and in the province of Quebec, until a preliminary report from the said commission has been submitted to his department?

Something must be done, for the situation has become tragic in several places; and the business community is becoming panicky, for it knows very well that the law, though existing, no longer protects them adequately.

Mr. Chairman, some tradesmen who have suffered from this situation asked me on several occasions whether there was in Ottawa a minister of justice or a minister of injustice. I would not go so far as calling the hon. member the minister of injustice, but if the situation in regard to bankruptcies continues and if the government and the Minister of Justice fail to face up to their responsibility, this will finally happen.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to briefly draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that recently the Department of National Defence announced the closing down of the radar station at St. Sylvestre. There is at that place an immense site on which the Department of Justice could base some projects.

On the other hand, I have been informed, that the Department of Justice was interested in that site which, will be vacant in July, since the radar station will then be closed.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to the vacancy of that site at St. Sylvestre, if he has any projects for some rehabilitation institution, because he could establish some very beneficial institutions there.

[Text]

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a few remarks to the Minister of Justice in connection with some letters I have received from presidents of rifle clubs. I have one in my possession from the Coleman rifle and revolver club, Mr. John W. Dean. I have another from the Okotoks shooting club, from the president Mr. Denis Gough. I have many others in my file which I have referred to the minister, but up to now I have not received what seems to me a satisfactory explanation of either his views or the views of his government with regard to bringing forward legislation to restrict the use of firearms by private citizens. Some of these clubs fear that some irresponsible legislation might be brought forward by the justice department concerning the ownership and use of firearms by private citizens. In essence their views, with which I agree, are that they do not think that further legislation, would be of any value, to unarm the irresponsible gunman.

I should like to add that when you go to outlying spots in western Canada the use of firearms is even encouraged among juniors. May I cite to the Minister of Justice an experience I had last summer at Aklavik in the Northwest Territories where the principal of the school conducted target practice in the basement of the school, teaching children the science of using firearms so that they might become skilled in shooting muskrats on the Mackenzie river delta. The same thing happened among the Indians at Old Crow. It is nothing uncommon to see young people in the west using 22's and other firearms to shoot gophers, and so on. I think it is a fine thing for these young people to gain experience, and the justice department should be encouraging them, rather than restricting the use of firearms and bringing forward legislation to this effect.

May I have the attention of the minister, because I am talking to him direct; it is his department which is concerned. I hope that he in turn will pay proper heed to these requests which are coming in from different gun clubs, and I trust he will think seriously before making any move to introduce further legislation to restrict the use of firearms in the hands of private citizens.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up a lot of time on these supplementary estimates, but there are one or two matters which I wish to draw to the attention of the minister. This is the first time we have had some of the estimates from the Department of Justice under consideration by the house for a matter of many months, so there is some justification on these supplementary estimates to probe a little deeper into the administration of this and other departments than is normally the case on supplementary estimates. Many of the estimates for the 1963-64 fiscal year were brought in prior to adjourning for Christmas, and in order to wind up the session some went through with less than one day's debate on the whole department. I think we should have an end to this criticism of members of the opposition who wish to bring up certain of these matters, because I would remind you that some of these matters we have had to keep to ourselves for more than two years.

I should like to ask the minister whether there is still a large backlog of cases before the Exchequer Court of Canada, particularly those concerning income tax appeals and matters of that kind. If there is, there is certainly something to this idea that justice delayed is justice denied. I know one or two cases where income tax appeals have been placed before the Exchequer Court of Canada more than two years ago and a decision has not yet been handed down. I think it is time to draw to the attention of the minister the fact that if this court is unable to cope with the volume of work coming before it something should be done to expand its facilities, or some other kind of arrangement should be made so that some decisions can be reached with regard to these appeals.

As I said, I did not want to take up a lot of time but this is something that has been troubling a lot of citizens of Canada for a long period. Therefore I hope the Minister of Justice will have something to say with regard to expediting these cases which have been before the exchequer court for months, and in some cases for years.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Aiken: Before the item carries, will the minister be kind enough to answer the question which I put to him earlier with respect to minimum security institutions?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the interest of my hon. friend in this particular question, but it seems that on the first occasion when there was an attempt to decentralize the institutions and establish an institution in Cornwall there was a big uproar, and I now wonder how we are going to deal with this question. But speaking more seriously, I would reassure my hon. friend, who I know has had no indication that I intend to depart from the new scientific and sociological norms involved in this domain, that my first desire will always be to keep in line with modern times and to consult those who are responsible both for the evolution and the application of these new norms. Whatever new rules or principles have begun to be applied will continue to be applied. I also make the promise, to which I will hold very firmly, to keep abreast of any developments in this most important field.

Item agreed to.

15e. Exchequer Court of Canada, administration, $15,000.

Mr. Peters: Is it the intention of the government to proceed with the amendments to the exchequer court legislation for which we asked in the dying days of the session prior to Christmas? What are the intentions with regard to this problem?

Mr. Favreau: This item is on the order paper. It is our intention to proceed with it as early as possible because this is the clear intention of the government.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in this matter. I have had a lifelong interest in sheriffs, and sometimes they have not been too far behind me. I notice an item here for payments to sheriffs. I thought sheriffs were provincial officers. Will the minister explain how it is that the federal government are paying sheriffs' fees?

Mr. Favreau: Sheriffs are used by the exchequer court, although they may be provincial officers, just as bailiffs, who are provincial officers, are also used for the purpose of serving processes.

Item agreed to.

45e. Gratuities to the widows or other dependants of judges who die while in office, $10,000.

Mr. Peters: Would the minister tell us how many widows are involved here?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I know there are at least two cases of outstanding gratuities involved and there is also provision here for whatever increase is necessary as a result of the recent increases in the salaries of the judges themselves. These gratuities are given to all widows of judges. They are relatively small and represent a proportion of the salary of the judge. So there are the two factors involved here, the increase in judges' salaries and the fact that there are two of these gratuities which are outstanding.

Item agreed to.

LEGISLATION

40e. General administration—estimates of the Clerk, $362,500.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on this matter. The matter under discussion here is the printing of debates. I am not sure which minister is responsible for that item to the house.

I wonder whether, before proceeding with our observations, the house leader should not tell us which minister of the government is responsible for the item now before us.

Mr. Lambert: It is Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I understand it is the Speaker of the house himself.

On that matter, I should like to draw the attention of the house on the fact that the French version of the debates of the house are often late in reaching us so that, on many occasions, we have to come to the floor of the house for the next day's sitting without having received a copy of the order paper in French and without a copy of the debates.

Only today the same thing happened again; we did not receive the French copy of the order paper.

Mr. Lambert: Yes.

Mr. Gregoire: We did not receive the French copy today, but—

Mr. Lambert: Yes, I had it in my office.

Mr. Gregoire: Then, Mr. Chairman, there must be privileged people—

Mr. Lambert: It was in my post office box.

Mr. Gregoire: —who receive it before some others.

The same thing happens for the French translation and printing of committee reports.

I feel, Mr. Chairman, that you should report to the Speaker to that effect and ask him to bring about some improvements.

I know that there is a lack of reporters, interpreters, translators, etc., and I believe we have been complaining about that for two years in the house.

I feel the time has come for the government to take the necessary steps and see to it that French translations, French printings of committee reports, French editions of the order papers, of Votes and Proceedings and of the official record of the debates are made available to us at the same time as the English versions.

This is an important point, because it makes it more difficult for us when we receive them late.

Another point which I would like to mention, Mr. Chairman, and of which we had a typical example this evening—and this could perhaps be an important suggestion—is that a moment ago, the Minister of Justice referred to a page of Hansard. It was the English pagination, which is not the same as the French one.

It often happens that hon. members refer us to such and such a page of Hansard. I then look in the French copy of Hansard. Or when someone speaks in French and then the hon. members only have the English copy, they are rather lost because the pagination is not the same as on their English copy.

For instance, page 876 quoted tonight in the English version will probably be page 875 or still page 900 in the French version.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether house officials could not find means to use the same pagination in the English as well as in the French version of Hansard.

Mr. Lambert: It is impossible.

Mr. Gregoire: Some rather difficult problems will have to be overcome no doubt in order to achieve this result, but I think it would be worth while.

Sometimes I quote an extract from Hansard and several members are unable to refer to it, because my quotation is according to the French pagination, while some members only have the English edition on their desks. The same thing happens when English speaking members quote pages from the English Hansard, while I have in my hand the French copy.

So, on this item, I think that I am in order when I make this suggestion. The officers of the house who are in charge of the English and French versions of Hansard should be asked to see that the page numbers are exactly the same in both editions, English and French.

It might simply be a matter of skipping some page numbers in the English version, since the French version is always longer. It might also be a matter of putting less matter on each page in the English version. Perhaps the form and size of the pages in the French edition should be enlarged. At all events, I think this is a problem for which it might be worth while to provide a solution.

I leave it to the staff of the house. I hope other hon. members will be just as interested to have the same page numbers in both editions used by all hon. members. Finally, I would very much like to see the matter considered so that a solution may be found.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, with reference to the suggestion or the request by the hon. member for Lapointe, he might perhaps be so kind, when proceeding with his research and finding the page in the English copy of Hansard, also to tell the house the corresponding page number in the French text. In this way, it would make things easier, and the problem would be automatically solved.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, it might be done in the majority of cases; indeed, I can well recall having done so on various occasions.

Mr. Lambert: And it has been appreciated.

Mr. Gregoire: But the problem is this: For instance, as it happened early this evening, when the Minister of Justice quoted the page number in the English version, he obviously had no time to find out the French page number owing to the speed of proceedings. Those are the very circumstances in which my suggestion would prove most valuable.

[Text]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we are again on the general administration item under legislation. First of all, I should like to comment on the remarks that have just been made and advise the hon. member that the matter of French translation and French publications appears to some to be in the process of being eliminated by his leader and by the leader of the government. If matters develop as they appear to be doing in some of our provinces it may be that this will not be a problem very long. It should also be borne in mind that the problem was not much of a one for many years but has grown in magnitude recently.

I think the Speaker should be in the house tonight because we are dealing with items under legislation for which he is responsible. I am surprised how little action has been taken with regard to the problems raised by many members of the house the last time we were discussing these estimates. It seems to me, and I have said this before, that there should be better arrangements than we have in relation to the staff of the house.

The other day I asked whether or not the staff were going to be paid for the statutory holidays of Good Friday and Easter Monday. I understood this matter was receiving consideration. It is not good enough, Mr. Chairman, to grant the staff a day off. This is not the accepted practice of organized labour and I do not believe parliament should foist it off on the people who work for this institution merely because they are unorganized. The general principle is that if statutory holidays are worked they are paid for with double time. I suggest the government should give immediate consideration to paying the staff for these two days that were worked through no fault of the staff themselves.

I feel this matter should not have to be raised continually. The government should do this, at least if they believe in normal labour relations. I have had a number of complaints recently from several departments with relation to vacation pay. Since the employees of the House of Commons are now on an almost yearly basis and no longer truly temporary, I believe it is necessary for the government to consider this matter. Really, it is the responsibility of the Speaker as chairman of the internal economy committee. It is his responsibility to see that vacation pay is granted. The suggestion is made that the staff will have time off and be paid for the time off. This is not the same thing, Mr. Chairman. The annual vacation with pay period should be a period in which the employee can choose which week or two weeks he will be on holiday and will be paid for it. This is the normal procedure in business and certainly should be the normal procedure in government.

The last time this item was discussed, we were told that the translations branch of the House of Commons were being treated disgracefully. There may be some explanation for what happened last week because it was generally understood there would be an Easter recess. However, during that week, as hon. members are aware business continued here and the members of the translation branch were divided between here and Quebec city. There were more members of our house translations staff in Quebec city than there were in the house. This meant that the normal rest periods provided for translators under international agreements in almost every other country of the world did not apply to Ottawa. I think this is a disgrace. The responsibility rests directly on the shoulders of the Speaker, who has done nothing about the problem although he is well aware of it.

There is another problem that has developed in relation to the cafeteria in the west block. This is a lovely building, but the men and women working in the cafeteria are on a split shift basis. They have a wash room in which they have to spend the two and a half hours between shifts, and it is not as big as the normal wash room in this building. This is not a rest room. If this room were in any other place some trade union officer would go to the Ontario government under the factories act and would be able to get better quarters than they have there now. I suggest that the Speaker take a look at the men's and women's wash rooms and then take a look at the room that is going to be the carpenter shop. It is a very attractive room and should be made the rest room for the staff in the west block, because it is adjacent to the wash room.

It seems surprising, Mr. Chairman, a member of parliament has to speak about these matters every time these estimates are before the committee. It seems to me that the Speaker has failed to do this job because he is not provided with the necessary people to tell him what the situation is. These matters should not have to be raised every time these estimates are before us. Do you know, Mr. Chairman, that some of the employees in the cafeteria receive the grand sum of $172 per month? This is less than a dollar an hour. No wonder the Liberal government has not agreed to put in a statutory minimum wage of $1.25 per hour. We do not pay our kitchen staff that kind of money. The take home pay of these employees is slightly over $120 and comes to a total of $170 with their meals. These people work on a split shift basis and have two and a half hours off in the afternoon. They leave at eight o'clock at night and they arrive here in time to make breakfast in the morning. I hope I do not have to raise this matter again, and that the Speaker or whoever is responsible will do something about it.

There are, of course, many other problems that affect this house. We are not in a very healthy state in so far as our relations with our ridings are concerned. I think it is generally conceded that what has happened in parliament the last little while has not improved the stature of parliament. There has been the question of the need for the elimination of the other place because they hold up these bills.

An hon. Member: What about you on divorce?

Mr. Peters: In my opinion, if the Liberal party had the gumption they would be justified in going to the electorate. The bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre could easily be passed here, and then if it was turned down by the other place this would be a good election issue. Whether or not the method we use in this house is a satisfactory one from our point of view, it is certainly not satisfactory to the general electorate. I am sure that the majority—

Mr. Grafftey: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. Grafftey: I sincerely ask him this question. Does he feel the people of Canada want an election right now?

Mr. Peters: I am certain the people of Canada do not want an election right now. The reason they do not, Mr. Chairman, is that there is not going to be any change in this mess unless some of us who really believe in the democratic process are willing to make some changes in the system we use.

I think it is very difficult for a constituent to look at his member of parliament and say, "I am in communication with him, and what I suggest to him will finally be given a hearing in the house". How can anyone really say this to a backbencher of some of the political parties that have been in this house during the last 20 years? Tonight another member and I were discussing a certain gentleman who is never here. How would his constituents know whether or not he is here? How are they going to make an impression on him? How are they going to bring to his attention the needs that they may have.

It is necessary for us to make changes in our system. These changes have been brought about in other countries. The governments of few countries run their business as haphazardly as we do. As the hon. member for Medicine Hat mentioned a few minutes ago, this is the first opportunity we have had in a long time to discuss the Department of Justice. I think we will all agree that we have abused the privilege of discussing supplementary estimates. Certainly many of the discussions we have been having should not take place on supplementary estimates. However, from the point of view of a member of parliament, Mr. Chairman, on what other occasion can these discussions take place? Many of these estimates have not been before us for almost two years. It seems to me a member of parliament has to take advantage of every opportunity as it comes along. The government has an obligation to decide when that opportunity is going to occur. I suggest we take a look at what some of the other countries in the world are doing. Most of them do not have a formal arrangement. They do not come to a deadline like Christmas and you will remember, Mr. Chairman, last year people cancelling their plane reservations because we were going beyond the day of adjournment for Christmas.

The Chairman: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but for the last few minutes he has been straying from the item before the committee. He has been discussing matters of procedure in the house, and this is the type of thing which should be discussed by a committee of the house that has already been set up for that purpose and is functioning. For that reason I think remarks along those lines would be out of order.

Mr. Peters: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of the operations of the house, and legislation is the item which is under consideration. We are now dealing with administration, which is the general item covering operations of the house, and I suggest these matters are relevant. It is no use referring to the committee, because it has been a complete washout in so far as solving the problems that come under the general administration of legislation. In England, for instance, they have been trained to the idea of having set periods of time in the operations of the house of commons.

The Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member would agree with me that this is the very matter that has been referred by the house to a committee. I do not think the hon. member would want to argue with the Chair that until such time as the committee has reported and the matter comes again before the house it should not be discussed under this item, or indeed at any time while it is under consideration by that committee.

Mr. Peters: It may be that the committee has been established, but I am certain it has not been constituted.

The Chairman: For the hon. member's information it has. It has been sitting and has actually made its first report to the house.

Mr. Peters: It still does a very poor job. I would suggest—

Mr. Fairweather: I would suggest you sit down.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member says sit down. That is all he ever does and he is getting broad across the beam from sitting.

Mr. Fairweather: I would rather be broad across the beam than be broad across the head.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member makes a better speech sitting down than he does standing up. If ignorance were a criterion he would be a very good member of parliament.

The matter of the relationship between a member of parliament and his constituency will have to be considered or parliament itself will reach a very serious impasse. It seems to me that the general administration item of this department is the one under which this matter should be considered. However, I will bow to your direction, Mr. Chairman, but I hope that some of the other matters I have raised in relation to the staff will be given very serious consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Chairman, I will not be very long but, after the few remarks made by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), I would like to give my side of the story. He says that we have been asking for our rights, as far as the French language is concerned, in the last few years only. Let us reverse the situation in the house for 24 hours only. Let us speak French only and let the English speaking element use the facilities put at our disposal in some committees.

The hon. member for Timiskaming is complaining because the hon. member for Lapointe wants to have identical page numbers in the French and English versions of Hansard. If we wanted to go further, as far as bilingualism is concerned, we should have a truly bilingual Hansard, that is to say the English version on one half of the page and the French version on the other. It would be a really bilingual book since each page would be written in the two official languages of the country.

When Hansard is printed solely in French, it is French; when it is printed in English only, it is English. I fail to see there any bilingualism.

Mr. Chairman, a truly bilingual book must have both languages on the same page, one alongside the other, so that it can be read in both English and French.

What is bilingualism? The French Canadian citizen is not always insisting on his rights without rhyme or reason, but he is always given the cold shoulder. That has always been detrimental to the French Canadians and we are asserting our rights.

In conclusion, let us take, for instance, Beauchesne's standing orders—

Mr. Lambert: They are not the standing orders.

Mr. Plourde: There has always been only an English edition. How can we uphold our rights when we do not even have these regulations in our own language and we cannot learn them?

When we are provided with a French edition of standing orders, we can assure you that when we rise to speak, Mr. Chairman, we will be in order.

Mr. Nasserden: Before this item passes, Mr. Chairman, I have one observation to make and it arises out of the role of the member of parliament. I think the best thing I can do is quote from an article in the Montreal Star of January 30, 1964.

Turner says M.P.'s power—

The Chairman: Order. I again hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but it seems to me this would be out of order if he is discussing the role of members of parliament under this item. This is general administration, in the sense of the operation of the services of parliament, but does not concern the role of members, their responsibilities and duties in this chamber.

Mr. Nasserden: That might be quite right, except for one thing, that by the remarks I have made I may have misinterpreted what I had in mind. I would like to quote from this article which says:

Turner says M.P.'s power now a myth.

Liberal member of parliament John Turner, urging an overhaul of house procedures, yesterday called for the return of the power and influence of the individual M.P. which is now a "myth."

Addressing a meeting of the McGill University Liberal club, Mr. Turner, himself a relative newcomer to the political scene—condemned what he termed the "Monopoly of information," and challenged that the bureaucracy—"that mandarin class of faceless experts, protected by the cloak of anonymity of a government department, operating beyond the range of the people's control"—is fighting a running battle with members of parliament.

"The M.P.," he said "is losing that battle with the civil service."

The Chairman: Order. This comment is obviously out of order. Certainly what the hon. member is quoting now, and the remarks he is making, could not by any stretch of the imagination be considered to come within the ambit of the vote now before the committee.

Mr. Nasserden: It certainly has something to do with what is before the committee because it deals with legislation and the business of the house. He went on to say—

The Chairman: Order please. I would ask the co-operation of the hon. member. I am sure he will appreciate that the position of the Chair is rather difficult in a thing like this. I know the hon. member wants to speak for just a few minutes, but I feel very sincerely and earnestly that we cannot at this point discuss the role, duties and responsibilities of members of parliament. If I were to allow the hon. member to do so, I expect we would have quite a number of other speeches along the same line. Actually, I had to intervene with the hon. member for Timiskaming a few moments ago, who agreed with my ruling that he was out of order, and I would ask the hon. member to co-operate with the Chair by not pursuing those remarks further.

Mr. Nasserden: I would conclude my remarks then by quoting the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George who said: "The M.P. is losing that battle with the civil service".

Mr. Olson: On the point of order you have raised, Mr. Chairman, I think it was agreed when we began to discuss these supplementary estimates—and this has been said a number of times—that there would be latitude for a general discussion on the items as they came up. Here it says general administration.

Mr. McIlraith: Read the rest of it.

Mr. Olson: When the estimates for the 1963-64 fiscal year were brought into the house for discussion, they were brought in on December 21, the last day of the session, and were rushed through under the pressure of time. Since we have agreed that there should be fairly wide latitude, and since what the hon. member is now attempting to discuss is certainly within the ambit of what was considered to be that latitude, it should be allowed.

The Chairman: I have already had an opportunity this evening to express my views about this. I think I have extended to hon. members the degree of latitude to which the hon. member for Medicine Hat has referred. It is obvious that there must still be limits to our discussion and it is up to the Chair to exercise its right to determine when those limits are being exceeded although, as I have said, it has been recognized that we should have a general discussion in certain instances.

Mr. Nasserden: I have a few remarks yet to make, Mr. Chairman, and I should like to read from a newspaper article the words—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: I again have to request the assistance and co-operation of the hon. member and ask him to abide by the ruling which has been made.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order; I hope you will also rule, Mr. Chairman, that continuous interruptions are also against the rules. Continuous barking of "order, order" is also out of order.

Mr. Howard: I understood, Mr. Chairman, that you were about to ask if I intended to rise on a point of order. I was not. I agree I may not get very far in my remarks—

Mr. Nasserden: If the hon. member is not rising on a point of order may I conclude my remarks?

The Chairman: Is the hon. member raising a point of order?

Mr. Nasserden: No, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Then, I would say that after hearing the hon. member for a minute or two, and being generous with him, I ruled that his remarks were not pertinent to the resolution before the committee. Perhaps he would look for another occasion upon which to make his contribution.

Mr. Nasserden: Well, in view of the hour, and other things, I will be glad to bow to that ruling though I do feel—and I say this in all sincerity—that my remarks, and the others I was about to make had a direct bearing on the matter which is now before the committee.

Mr. Howard: I had intended to deal with somewhat the same subject matter as my hon. friend from Timiskaming. I had intended to refer to the public dissatisfaction which exists with respect to the House of Commons, its members, its activities and our participation in them, and to suggest ways in which we might conduct ourselves in a better manner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard: These are things we should be trying to do here, in order to deal with public business in a manner which is fair and reasonable and in keeping with our responsibilities. I think this is a matter of extremely vital concern. It would not have been raised by members from different parties within a brief period of time if it were not a matter of general concern to the public and to the members of this house. I think this is one of the things we should be doing—discussing among ourselves and searching for ways and means of making the operation of this parliament effective.

It is true we have abused the procedures of this house. We have abused the rules as they apply to the consideration of the very estimates which are now before us, and I have participated in that abuse.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Howard: That may be shame, or it may be applause, for some other reason. But I say I have. And I say that other hon. members have abused the procedures and the rules which we had established.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think when I consider the remarks which are now being made by the hon. member for Skeena in the light of the observations which were made a moment or two ago by the chairman, I have to say to the hon. member that I cannot consider his remarks at this time as being relevant to the item in the estimates before us. I would ask the hon. member to adhere as closely as possible to the item under consideration. I recognize that there has been some leniency shown on the debate on the first item, but I think we still have to recognize the rule of relevancy and I ask the hon. gentleman to do that.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, if you will consistently—and I do not only mean yourself as an individual; I include the others who occupy the chair from time to time—if you would consistently and persistently enforce that rule of relevancy I would be the first to support you. But, so far, this has not happened. Unfortunately, what has occurred is that there has been laxity allowed in debate on some items and constriction enforced with respect to other items. This is most unfair to members of the committee and it leaves open the question whether or not the degrees of rigidity or licence allowed on any particular item depend upon the quarter of the house in which the hon. members concerned sit. I know that is not so, but that question does occur and that is, particularly, why I went as far as I could in my remarks a moment ago so as to run foul of the rules, which I knew you had in the back of your mind, and which you were intending to use.

I am asking now, Mr. Chairman, for the orderly conduct of the business of this committee. I know you cannot speak for others who may occupy the position of chairman, but I am asking that you use, persistently, the heaviest possible gavel and crack down on all members who offend against the rules of relevancy, whether they happen to come from this quarter of the house, in the N.D.P. group, or whether the offender happens to be the Leader of the Opposition, or anybody else. If you will do that, you will find me the very first to support you all the way down the line.

My hon. friend behind me says: "Do it right away". I will do it right away by sitting down and let us hope I do not have to raise too many points of order about other people being out of order.

Mr. Nasserden: There is one other point on this item which I should like to raise. It has to do with private members' bills. Since this government came to office bills which had been drawn up with the assistance of the assistant law clerk have from time to time been thrown out, when further study had been given to them after the Speaker had received them. I should like to persuade the minister of the desirability of providing for the assistance of the law officers so that when a bill has been drawn up by them for an hon. member and brought before parliament there shall be no question at that time with regard to whether or not the measure is fit to be presented to parliament. Surely, that is not too much to ask in the House of Commons of Canada. There could be a little saving if the proper scrutiny were given to the bills hon. members want to bring before the house prior to their being presented in the house. I just want to leave that thought with the government, because it is a practice that has grown up since this government came into office.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to belabour this point before the committee for very long, but as I came back into the chamber I noticed that the committee was on the legislation item and I do want to raise a point here that I am sure will be in order. I notice that this item involves the publishing of debates, and the next item is "Printing of other publications". I want to make a protest regarding the printing of Routine Proceedings and Orders of the Day. The reason I am making the protest is that there is distortion of questions by the various bureaus, whatever they may be, of the Speaker's department; that is, distortion of the questions that hon. members place on the order paper. This distortion causes the question to lose its democratic value out in the country and area to which the question applies. If an hon. member puts a question on the order paper, provided it is not, as we often hear Mr. Speaker say, argumentative, controversial or improper, I think it should be sustained as it is written.

I will give the committee an example. Last March 24 I put a question on the order paper regarding the mails of Canada. The question was directed to the department of the Postmaster General and referred to the mails in the county of Prince Edward. I submit, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that it certainly had a democratic, local interest, reason and value. The question read as follows:

> When will the Postmaster General open a post office in Rednersville, in Prince Edward county, in accordance with agreement to do so made with me by his predecessor last November?

I was giving the former postmaster general and the whole department the benefit of two months, because when I got back to my files I found he had made the agreement with me last September, not last November as I had written in the question. Hon. members will find this question—distorted, of course— on page 31 of today's Routine Proceedings and Orders of the Day. It was distorted by the bureau, or bureaus, as follows:

> Did the Postmaster General, during November last, agree to open a post office in the village of Rednersville, Ontario, and, if so—

Imagine—"if so":

> —when will such a post office be opened?

I had already told the Speaker and his bureau in my original question that the postmaster general had promised to open a post office in Rednersville. Mr. Chairman, I am sure you will agree with me that this is nothing but a flagrant distortion of a democratic question posed in the house for the benefit and in the interests of the constituents I represent in Rednersville, Prince Edward county. I hope that other hon. members, if they have met with this flouting of their purposes in being here, and the purposes of their representation in this chamber, will support me in this protest, because I am sure you will agree, Mr. Chairman, that this is a relevant and important point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Can the hon. gentleman name another single member of this house who has had a similar experience? The hon. member is making general statements. Can he name a single member on either side of this house who is in that position? The hon. member's question is being studied, but will he answer my question? He is making a general statement and I should like to know whether he can name any single member in any corner of this house who is in the same position.

An hon. Member: He doesn't get $27,000 a year to answer questions.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I can name a single person who is in that position, and that is myself, the representative of the people at Rednersville who have been wronged.

Mr. Nicholson: I said, "any other single person". If the hon. gentleman would listen, I said, "any single person other than himself". His case is being studied. Is there any other person in the house who has had a similar experience?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a few words and make a suggestion which I think is quite relevant to the item of "Publishing debates" because it has to do with the debates. Some time ago as the result of a committee study it was established that a member could send 16 Hansards in a complimentary way to his constituents. In talking generally with some other members in the past year or two I find I am not alone in not only having my complimentary list filled, but in having people ask me from time to time if they can get Hansard in this way. I know that some hon. members obtain an additional copy or two of Hansard and send them out under their own frank to individuals, just as though they were on a complimentary list.

I think it is a fairly general desire on the part of hon. members to have a larger number of complimentary Hansards available to them. I have heard the figure of 50 suggested and I have heard other figures suggested. Whatever figure is chosen, it would naturally have to be an arbitrary one; but I think some alteration should be made and there should be an increase in the number of complimentary Hansards available. As I have said, the number now is 16, which I think was established—I am guessing now, but it was perhaps 1948 or somewhere about that time; it may even have been before that period of time—and this number is not sufficient.

I leave this suggestion, Mr. Chairman, with the appropriate official of government that handles these things. Perhaps we could have a very short expression of opinion from hon. members of other parties as to whether they agree with the suggestion that the number of complimentary Hansards should be increased.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, while I was standing on the sidelines I heard that the Postmaster General wanted further proof of such occurrences as the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox mentioned. I do not want to refer to the department under his administration, but I should like to point out to the Postmaster General that under the administration of the former postmaster general I placed a question on the order paper. I have not the particular question at the moment, but my question was:

> Was any correspondence forwarded to the Postmaster General by officials or any person within the constituency with regard to the appointment of a postmaster?

His reply stated, in effect, that no official correspondence was received by the department. I wish I could find the particular question, but owing to the lateness of the hour—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member for Mackenzie. As long as he wishes to discuss the questions on the order paper, or the way they are handled, I think he will be quite in order; but when he begins to discuss the merits of a question regarding the Post Office Department, I think he is not in order.

Mr. Korchinski: All I wanted to do, Mr. Chairman, was set on the record that there were other cases similar to the one mentioned by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox.

Mr. Nicholson: With respect, Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nicholson: —is not dealing with the question I asked. Without in any way commenting on the previous administrator, my predecessor, I asked if there was any similar case on the part of any hon. member on either side of the house. He made the statement that there were several cases which had not received it for two months, and he quoted others. I said that there were no others during my administration.

Mr. Korchinski: I think I pointed that out.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I beg to differ with the minister. I did not say that I could quote other cases. I said that no doubt there are other members with similar cases.

Mr. Nicholson: With all respect to the hon. member, I think Hansard will speak for itself with regard to what the hon. member said.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I did not make the statement that there were other members with similar cases, because I cannot make that kind of statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Before the item carries, Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith) that following the lack of proper organization of the business of the house, hon. members have had to sit at a time when they would normally have taken a recess. Consequently, a large proportion of the house staff has had to work under very trying conditions when they should normally have been enjoying a well-deserved rest.

As I stated at the beginning of my remarks, that is due mostly to the lack of organization shown by the government and I should like to point out especially to the President of the Privy Council who is engaged in a conversation with one of his colleagues at present, that he should look after the interests of the house staff. The latter had to work unusually hard due to the government's lack of foresight. I therefore submit that the staff should be compensated by means of additional holidays or by supplementary pay.

[Text]

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we should let the remarks of the hon. member regarding questions on the order paper pass without my saying that I have had the utmost co-operation from the Clerk and assistant clerk of the house in connection with this matter. I do not think questions are put on the order paper to relate facts; I think they ask for information. I think the hon. member's problem is that he was making a statement which was not substantiated by the tabling of any items in this house. I want to say that I personally have had the utmost co-operation from the Clerk of the house.

Mr. Alkenbrack: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I was making a statement substantiated by a letter from the former postmaster general in the month of September, 1963. I should like to ask the member who just took his seat how a person can ask a question without making statements relevant thereto. How can anyone form an interrogative sentence in the English language without a certain amount of assertion implied by the interrogative form of the sentence?

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to say to the government that I will not press this particular matter now, but two hon. members have already made mention of the working conditions of some of the staff of the House of Commons. I will not elaborate on the matter but I should like to say that I know of no place where working conditions are as poor as the working conditions of many of the people who work in the House of Commons. I hope the commissioners of internal economy, with the Speaker, will review this situation so that we will not have to raise it again when the regular estimates come up. If some steps are not taken to deal with the general working conditions of the staff here we shall have to raise the matter at greater length when the general estimates are before the house.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

Dominion coal board—

140e. Payments in connection with the movements of coal under conditions prescribed by the governor in council, $3,914,600.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, this item calls for an expenditure of $3,941,600 and I think we should be entitled to an explanation from the minister as to what detail is involved here.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I would join with my colleague from Skeena in asking the minister for some details of the tonnage of coal which is being transported under this subsidy. At the same time he might give us a breakdown of the figures for coal shipments to Japan, which have been consistent with this subsidy. I would also urge the minister to consider a repeated request which I am sure he has received from coal operators asking that this subsidy, rather than being placed on an annual order in council basis as it is at the moment, be placed on a regular basis by the early introduction of legislation in this house which would provide, on a long term basis, fixed subsidies to the coal operators. This in turn would produce two results, one of which would be to let the operators themselves know just what assistance they can count on in the years to come. Also—and this is very important—it would assist importers of coal. I think particularly of the Japanese who have come to Canada on a number of occasions and asked the government to declare its policy over a number of years, so that they can make firm commitments over a period of three, five, or even ten years. I am sure that the minister, who has at heart the interests of the coal industry, will see that this legislation is introduced shortly, and we should like to have the figures and information requested both by the hon. member for Skeena and myself.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Martineau: I am wondering whether the minister can at least give us an answer. He may not have the figures available but I think he should give the committee some sort of undertaking in this regard.

Mr. McIlraith: The British Columbia tonnage of coal was 750,000 tons. The total cost was $2,362,500. That answers the first question. With regard to the other question, since this estimate is the closing out of last year's final supplementary estimates, the question of the form of the estimate for the new long term policy is surely a matter for the main estimates which have already been tabled. That part of the very valid point raised by the former minister will be covered in those main estimates.

Mr. Martineau: I am satisfied with that, provided the government does take the matter under consideration.

Mr. McIlraith: I can assure the hon. member that the matter is being given very active consideration.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Peters: Ten o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: It being ten o'clock shall I rise, report certain resolutions, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: Tomorrow?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the business for tomorrow and for the days immediately ahead will be the same as announced last night. Tomorrow we shall try to complete, I hope, the too short debate on the supplementary estimates. If there is some time left for other government business we will take second reading of the Canada pension plan bill. On the first available full day and on the second available full day, which might be Thursday and Friday, we will complete the budget debate. After that we will take up the resolution to set up a joint committee to study the Canada pension plan bill, following which we will carry on with the second reading of the Canada pension plan bill.

Supply—Items Passed

It being four minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply this day]:

PRIVILEGE

MR. PIGEON—REPLY BY ASSOCIATE DEFENCE MINISTER RESPECTING OFFICERS' COMMISSIONS

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I asked the Associate Minister of National Defence if officers' commissions were written in both languages. Last Thursday, April 2, the minister answered as follows:

I am pleased to inform my hon. friend that officers' commissions have always been, and still are, obtainable in both languages.

I have here an open letter, published in the press and signed by Mr. Francois Gendron of the Canadian cadet service, in which he complains that the Department of National Defence sent him a commission written in English only.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much that this is a question of privilege; nevertheless I will repeat to my hon. friend that commissions may be obtained in either English or French; the candidate can select either language.

A memorandum was even sent to all candidates reminding them that they can obtain their commissions in both languages.

INVITATION TO PARTICIPATE IN WORLD FAIR

Question No. 426—Mr. Latulippe:

1. To date, how many countries have been asked by the world exhibition commissioner, Mr. Dupuy to participate in the 1967 world exhibition?
2. What countries have been invited, how many have accepted the invitation and how many expect to do so in the near future?
3. Were these invitations made by Canadian embassies, consulates or legations abroad and, if so (a) to whom were they made (b) by whom were they made (c) what responses were received?

Questions

[Translation]

Answer: 1. Invitations to participate in the 1967 world exhibition have been extended through diplomatic channels, as required by the international convention of 1928, to 133 countries and territories.

2. Attached is a list of countries invited. To date the acceptances of seven countries have been announced and the corporation is in correspondence with 35 to 50 others about their prospective participation. Those which have accepted are Austria, Belgium, Britain, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Morocco and the Netherlands. It would not be in the public interest or courteous to the countries concerned to mention those which have indicated inability to participate. Already two countries which at first declined have now seen their way clear to participate. It would not be helpful to list those countries which, for the moment, indicate their inability to attend.

3. See attached list and answer to question 2.

Government—Invitation issued by:

Afghanistan: Permanent Mission of Canada to the United Nations in New York, U.S.A.

Albanian Peoples Republic: Permanent Mission of Canada to the United Nations in New York, U.S.A.

Algeria: Permanent Mission of Canada to the United Nations in New York, U.S.A.

Argentina: Canadian Embassy, Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Antigua: Office of the High Commissioner for Canada, London, England.

Australia: Office of the High Commissioner for Canada, Canberra, Australia.

Austria: Canadian Embassy, Vienna, Austria.

Barbados: Office of the High Commissioner for Canada, London, England.

Belgium: Canadian Embassy, Brussels, Belgium.

Bolivia: Canadian Embassy, Lima, Peru. (Canadian Ambassador to Peru also accredited to Government of Bolivia.)

Brazil: Canadian Embassy, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

PUBLIC WORKS SUPPLIES PURCHASES, LAPOINTE COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 429—Mr. Gregoire:

1. Is it the policy of the Department of Public Works, in purchasing maintenance supplies for public buildings, to buy such supplies locally?
2. Is this policy followed in Lapointe county?
3. How much did the department spend in Lapointe county, in 1963, on such maintenance products as soap, wax, paper, etc.?
4. How much was spent outside Lapointe county for those supplies which were to be used within the county?

[Translation]

Mr. McWilliam: 1. No. In the case of supplies which can be bought wholesale and which it was found to be more economical to buy from the manufacturer and to deliver wherever they are needed, the department's policy is to buy them wholesale.

2. The policy stated in answer No. 1 is followed in Lapointe county.

3. Nil.

4. $1,150.91.

CIVIL DEFENCE OFFICERS

Question No. 462—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Is there an officer in any department of the federal government primarily responsible for civil defence?
2. Who is responsible in each of the Canadian provinces and in the Northwest and Yukon Territories?

3. Is there a federal commissioner of civil defence and, if so, in what manner is his office organized and how does it operate?
4. Among the Canadian armed forces, are there any specialized units for civil defence operations?
5. Has the government had any fairly recent talks on the subject of civil defence with the provincial attorneys general or representatives of the premiers of the provinces?
6. How many emergency centres and underground stations has the government built in (a) each province (b) what were the costs involved (c) who will be in charge of such stations?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. The director of the federal emergency measures organization is responsible for co-ordinating the emergency planning activities of all federal departments and agencies, and providing assistance and guidance to provincial authorities.

2. Each province has appointed an officer who is in charge of the emergency planning activities in that province. Similarly, in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, the territorial authorities have designated emergency measures co-ordinators. The federal E.M.O. also has officers in each provincial capital to co-ordinate federal emergency planning activities with the plans developed by provincial authorities.

3. There is no official with the formal title of federal commissioner of civil defence. As has already been stated, the co-ordination of civil emergency planning at the federal level is the responsibility of the director of the emergency measures organization. Pursuant to order in council 1963-993 the organization has the status of a department of government. The Minister of Industry is the responsible minister. The organization is comprised of a headquarters staff in Ottawa, a civil defence college at Arnprior, and offices in each provincial capital.

4. All units both regular and militia undergo training in national survival and rescue work. At army headquarters there is a senior officer (major-general survival) with a staff, who is responsible for developing policy and plans for the Canadian army's role in survival operations and for the co-ordination of such matters with other government departments.

5. The last meeting with provincial ministers responsible for civil emergency planning was held in Ottawa on December 3, 1962, at which time all provinces were represented.

6. (a) A major emergency operating centre has been built in each of the following provinces: British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia. In addition there is a complex of emergency facilities in the vicinity of Ottawa. (b) $55,610,000 including land, buildings, and equipment. (c) The emergency measures organization has been charged with the responsibility for developing these operating centres under arrangements with the army whereby the latter is responsible for their maintenance, operation, and security.

DUTIES OF POSTMASTERS WHERE RURAL POST OFFICES CONSTRUCTED

Question No. 474—Mr. Coates:

Will any postmasters be relieved of their duties as a result of the construction of new post offices in rural communities?

Mr. Nicholson: There will be no change in postmasterships as a result of the construction of new post offices in rural communities, provided the postmaster will meet the conditions of employment and is willing to move to the new building.

*CONTRACT FOR HEADSTONES AND MARKERS, HALIFAX, N.S.

Question No. 476—Mr. Coates:

Was the successful bidder, W. T. Dauphinee Limited, Shelburne, Nova Scotia, for the headstones and markers in the Halifax district for the Department of Veterans Affairs for the 12 month period commencing October 1, 1963, the bidder who submitted the lowest bid of $12,400 and, if not, which firm submitted the low bid of $12,400?

Mr. Teillet: The successful bidder, W. T. Dauphinee Limited, Shelburne, Nova Scotia, was not the bidder, who submitted the lowest bid of $12,400. The firm of Tingley Monuments Ltd., Amherst, Nova Scotia submitted the low bid of $12,400.

Treasury board have ratified and confirmed the action of the department in accepting the tender of W. T. Dauphinee Limited.

TRANSFER OF CAMP HILL HOSPITAL, HALIFAX

Question No. 519—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Have any discussions taken place or are any contemplated between the Department of Veterans Affairs and any municipal government or the government of Nova Scotia regarding the transfer of Camp Hill hospital at Halifax to either municipal or provincial authority?

Mr. Teillet: No discussions have taken place. No discussions are contemplated at present.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY ROUTE, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 567—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton):

1. Has the government of Canada agreed to change the route of the trans-Canada highway north of Hartland in Carleton and Victoria counties, province of New Brunswick?
2. If so, is the newly established route to be on the western side of the Saint John river from a point opposite Hartland to another point at or near Grand Falls?
3. Is the construction of another bridge contemplated across the Saint John river between the present trans-Canada bridge north of Hartland and the Perth-Andover trans-Canada bridge?
4. If so, what is the estimated cost of (a) the bridge across the Saint John river (b) the highway from Hartland north (c) what percentage of the total cost has the government of Canada agreed to pay?
5. Has consideration been given to using No. 2 highway, from the eastern end of the bridge across the Saint John river north of Hartland, in the county of Carleton, N.B., to the eastern end of the already constructed trans-Canada Perth-Andover bridge in the county of Victoria, N.B., with appropriate variation in the standard of width and visibility through built-up areas to lessen dislocation of residents as well as reduce expenses?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. No requests for approval of such a change have been received.

2. Answered by No. 1 above.

3. No.

4. Answered by No. 3 above.

5. Yes, the route of the highway as now designated in the trans-Canada highway agreement follows No. 2 highway between the bridge at Hartland and the Perth-Andover bridge. Provision is also made in the agreement for the bypassing of any of the villages along the route by the shortest practical diversion where warranted by the dangers and inconveniences of passing through these populated areas. No submissions have been received to date from the province of New Brunswick relative to any change in the agreement for the construction of this section of the trans-Canada highway.

TUTOR JET AIRCRAFT

Question No. 574—Mr. Stefanson:

1. How many Tutor jet aircraft has the R.C.A.F. received delivery of to date?

2. Have the performance tests of this aircraft been completed?
3. Where were these carried out?
4. What are the results?
5. Have the flying instructors who have been selected to train pilots on this basic jet trainer received their training and, if so, where were they trained?
6. When will the pilot training program commence with this new jet trainer, and at what R.C.A.F. training stations?
7. What other aircraft will also be used at these training stations?

Answer: 1. The R.C.A.F. has accepted five Tutor aircraft to date.

2. The performance trials of the Tutor aircraft are not scheduled for completion until October 1, 1964. To date, only the cold weather portion of the performance trials has been completed.

3. Central experimental and proving establishment at R.C.A.F. station Uplands are responsible for conducting the flying portion of the performance trials. The cold weather trials were conducted at Churchill, Manitoba.

4. It would be premature to forecast the ultimate results of the performance trials at this time, however, the cold weather trials encountered only minor problems.

5. No.

6. It is proposed to commence the ab initio pilot training program in January 1965 at R.C.A.F. station Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan.

7. "Silver Star" (T-33) aircraft.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY ROUTE, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 583—Mr. MacRae:

1. Have consultations been held with the government of New Brunswick relative to the new location for the trans-Canada highway north of Mactaquac, as far as Meductic, both in the county of York, New Brunswick and, if so, has any agreement been reached as to such new location?
2. What is the estimated cost of this new routing presumably made necessary by the construction of the Mactaquac dam?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Yes, consultations have been held as to the possible effect of the Mactaquac dam on the location of the trans-Canada highway between Fredericton and Lower Prince William. No changes in the highway location between these points have been agreed upon to date.

2. See answer to No. 1.

COMPARATIVE COST SURVEY, HAMILTON FALLS HYDRO PROJECT

Question No. 596—Mr. Mather:

Has the government carried out a study or a survey to ascertain whether Canadian hydro development for Hamilton falls, Labrador has been made uneconomical by the growing availability of nuclear power at a lower than hydro power cost and, if so, what is the result of any such study or survey?

Answer: No such study has been undertaken by the government of Canada. The government has not been a party to any negotiations which may be going on in respect of the disposal of power developed at Hamilton falls, Labrador, nor is it aware of the precise power and transmission costs which may apply to that development. The government, of course, is keeping in close touch with the trends in the cost of power from nuclear sources.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 605—Mr. Armstrong:

1. Has the government of Canada agreed to a route for the trans-Canada highway between Antigonish and Sutherlands river, Nova Scotia and, if so, is the highway to pass through Kenzieville?

2. What work is to be done on this section in 1964-65?

3. What is the estimated cost of the work to be done in the present fiscal year?

4. When will tenders be called?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Yes, for those sections from Antigonish to James River and from the vicinity of Broadway to Sutherlands River. No information is yet available in regard to the location in the vicinity of Kenzieville.

2. Detailed information on the complete provincial programming of its 1964-65 construction program has not been received to date. Present approvals include the grading and gravelling of 5.1 miles from Antigonish town line to James River, and similar work on 6.9 miles from Broadway to French River. Contracts for this work have been awarded.

3. The estimated cost of work covered by contracts awarded is $1,485,000. This amount will increase in the event that provincial planning includes additional work on this section of the highway.

4. The province proposes to call early tenders for the construction of a bridge over the French river. Details have not been received from the province on the timing of other projects between Antigonish and Sutherlands River.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY BYPASS, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 606—Mr. Armstrong:

What was the cost of work done in 1963-64 on the bypass on the trans-Canada highway near Antigonish, Nova Scotia, and how much of this amount was paid by the government of Canada?

Mr. Deschatelets: The cost of work on the Antigonish bypass during 1963-64, shareable under the trans-Canada highway agreement, for which claims have been presented by the province of Nova Scotia totalled $161,-444.49. Payments by Canada on this account totalled $110,811.40.

RECEIPTS FOR CHARITABLE DONATIONS, QUEBEC

Question No. 609—Mr. Laprise:

1. Were income tax returns accompanied by receipts for charitable donations, for the years 1961-62, examined more methodically in the case of one province in particular, or were they treated the same for all parts of the country?

2. (a) What percentage of receipts for charitable donations not exceeding 10 per cent of a taxpayer's gross income were accepted or rejected for the years 1961-62 (b) what were the percentages (for receipts accepted and rejected) for the province of Quebec in the years 1961-62?

3. Is it present federal government policy to make any receipt for charitable donations in excess of $150 the object of special scrutiny if it comes from the province of Quebec?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. No, they were treated the same for all parts of the country.

2. The department does not keep statistics showing the percentage of charitable donations accepted or rejected.

3. No.

1. Has the government dock, 14 line, township of Innisfil, county of Simcoe (Kempenfelt bay, lake Simcoe) been inspected during the fiscal year 1963-64 by the Department of Public Works?

2. What was the condition of this dock?

3. What improvements were recommended?

4. What amount of money has been allotted for the needed improvement and repair?

5. When can we expect needed repairs to commence?

6. Does the government fully accept responsibility to individuals who are injured while using these facilities if the needed repairs are not done in 1964?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Yes, in July, 1963.

2. Good.

3. None.

4. Nil.

5. A further inspection will be carried out to determine if repairs are now needed.

6. The government accepts its responsibility as established by law in respect to the maintenance of its properties.

HEALTH INSURANCE v. PENSION PLAN, QUE.

Question No. 615—Mr. Rondeau:

Does the Prime Minister approve a statement to the effect that a health insurance program is more important for the province of Quebec than a pension plan?

Mr. Davis: This question was directed to the Prime Minister on March 24, 1964, and Mr. Pearson's answer will be found at page 1401 of Hansard of that date.

*REGULATIONS RESPECTING BABY SEAL SLAUGHTER

Question No. 620—Mr. Mather:

What steps are being taken to provide regulations which will put an end to the present slaughter of baby seals and to save the seal population from destruction?

Mr. Robichaud: As I stated in the house on March 26, page 1495 of Hansard, the whole matter of sealing operations on the Atlantic coast is under serious consideration and it is expected that before the opening of the 1965 sealing season more restrictive regulations will be in effect.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 30—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of Transport or the deputy minister or any officials of his department, since March 1, 1963.

Mr. McWilliam: In regard to motion No. 45, since there is no correspondence in connection with this motion probably the hon. member would like to withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: This is motion No. 30.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I must advise the hon. member for Megantic that there is no correspondence as far as the Department of Transport is concerned. Therefore, I wonder whether the hon. member wishes to maintain or to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, would it be possible to adopt motions Nos. 30 to 52 inclusive, on the understanding that the motions relating to departments for which no correspondence is tabled will be withdrawn?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: We must deal with motion No. 30. I understand from the minister that there is no correspondence. Does the hon. member wish to withdraw the motion?

Mr. Langlois: If there is no correspondence I will withdraw the motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND DEFENCE DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 31—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of National Defence or the deputy minister or any officials of his department, since March 1, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, there has been no correspondence received by the Minister of National Defence.

[Text]

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND JUSTICE DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 32—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the Minister of Justice or the deputy minister or any officials of his department and maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Quebec, since March 1, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE

Motion No. 33—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the President of the Privy Council or any officials of his secretariat, since March 1, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND ASSOCIATE DEFENCE MINISTER

Motion No. 34—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Associate Minister of National Defence, since March 1, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, I must point out that no correspondence has been received from Maitre Lessard by the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Gregoire: Received or sent?

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, did I hear the minister to say that no correspondence was received or sent?

Mr. Favreau: No correspondence in the sense of the motion.

[Text]

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Motion No. 35—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister without Portfolio, since March 1, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Dupuis: There has been no correspondence.

[Text]

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND SOLICITOR GENERAL

Motion No. 36—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondnce, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Solicitor General, since March 1, 1963.

Mr. Favreau: Can this motion stand, in view of the absence of the Solicitor General?

Mr. Langlois: Agreed.

Motion stands.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND HEALTH AND WELFARE DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 37—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the deputy ministers or any officials of that department, since March 1, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I am told that an answer to this motion would entail extensive research in at least 100,000 files. Such being the case, the hon. member might perhaps agree to let his motion stand, let us say for a week, so that it could be discussed with the minister concerned, namely the Minister of National Health and Welfare, with a view of restricting, if possible, the scope on the purpose of the motion.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I agree to the conditions and suggestion stated by the minister.

Motion stands.

[Text]

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND AGRICULTURE MINISTER

Motion No. 38—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of Agriculture or the deputy minister or any officials of his department, since March 1, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, there is no correspondence.

[Text]

Mr. Beer: There is no correspondence in connection with this motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND SECRETARY OF STATE DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 39—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Secretary of State or the under secretary or any officials of his department, since March 1, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, there is no correspondence.

Mr. Langlois: As for notice of motion No. 39, would there not be any correspondence?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Secretary of State has stated there was no correspondence exchanged.

[Text]

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND TRADE AND COMMERCE DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 40—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the deputy minister or any officials of his department, since March 1, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: There was no exchange of correspondence either between the person referred to in the motion and the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

[Text]

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 41—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys or the deputy minister or any officials of his department since March 1, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, again, there was no correspondence exchanged between the person mentioned in the motion and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

[Text]

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND NORTHERN AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 42—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or the deputy minister or any officials of his department, since March 1, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: One comment to make, Mr. Speaker. No correspondence was exchanged between the person concerned and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

[Text]

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND NATIONAL REVENUE DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 43—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of National Revenue or the deputy minister or any officials of his department, since March 1, 1963.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, with regard to notice of motion No. 43, there is no such correspondence in the head office of the Department of National Revenue; but since the person referred to is a practising lawyer it is conceivable that there could be correspondence in the district tax office. However, I would point out in that connection that if there is any such correspondence, if it relates to individual tax returns it is not producible under the law; it is required to be kept confidential.

Mr. Speaker: Then the motion should be withdrawn.

Mr. Langlois: I will accept it, subject to the reservation stated by the minister, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Did I understand the hon. member for Megantic to say that he would accept the motion under reservation? Because the Chair expressed the opinion that it should be withdrawn.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, according to the statement of the minister, if there is any correspondence at the local taxation office relating to private taxation forms or papers, I am not entitled to have that. I agree with that. If there is any other correspondence I would like to have it. If there is not any, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion, subject to the reservation stated by the minister?

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND LABOUR DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 44—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of Labour, or the deputy minister or any officials of his department, since March 1, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, no correspondence was exchanged between the person mentioned in the motion and the Minister of Labour.

[Text]

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 45—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of Public Works or the deputy minister or any officials of his department, since March 1, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Same answer in the case of the Minister of Public Works.

[Text]

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND FISHERIES DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 46—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of Fisheries or the deputy minister or any officials of his department, since March 1, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Since the information requested would require a great deal of research in departmental files, could I suggest, Mr. Speaker, for the reason mentioned earlier, that the hon. member's motion stand for another week, in order that the matter may be discussed with the Minister of Fisheries?

[Text]

Motion stands.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN LUC-GILBERT LESSARD AND VETERANS AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 47—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or other documents exchanged between maitre Luc-Gilbert Lessard, of Black Lake, Megantic county, and the Minister of Veterans Affairs or the deputy minister or any officials of his department, since March 1, 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: I would like to make the same suggestion in regard to this motion, on behalf of the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

DISPOSITION OF INDIAN RESERVE LANDS, BURNS LAKE, B.C.

Motion No. 60—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all applications for, and inquiries relating to the purchase, lease or rental of Indian reserve lands in the Burns lake Indian agency since January 1, 1963.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that the hon. member for Skeena allow this motion to stand, in view of the absence of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Howard: Agreed.

Motion stands.

QUEBEC—CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING UNIVERSITY GRANTS

Motion No. 69—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or documents exchanged between the Prime Minister or any minister of the government and any universities of the province of Quebec, regarding grants between December 1962 and March 1, 1964.

Motion agreed to.

REPRESENTATIVE LISTS OF SUPPLIERS

Motion No. 78—Mr. Nielsen:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the representative list and/or representative lists of suppliers (now in use) as defined by paragraph 2 (e) (ii) of the government contracts regulations being P.C. 1954-1971 dated December 16, 1954 from each department of the government.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, for reasons I have explained to the hon. member personally, I understand he is agreeable to standing these motions appearing in his name.

Mr. Nielsen: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Motion stands.

REPORT UNDER GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS REGULATIONS

Motion No. 79—Mr. Nielsen:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of any report made to the governor in council or to the treasury board (since April 8, 1963) pursuant to paragraph 3 (4) of the government contracts regulations being P.C. 1954-1971 dated December 16, 1954.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in view of my discussions with the minister this motion as well as Nos. 80, 81 and 84 can stand. I suggested that perhaps Nos. 88 and 89 might be combined with No. 84, if the minister wishes to hasten matters that way.

Mr. Speaker: Motions Nos. 79, 80, 81 and 84 stand.

Motions stand.

R.C.M.P. SPACE IN MUNICIPAL BUILDING

Motion No. 86—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all observations and reports concerning space or the location thereof for the R.C.M. Police as referred to in the answer given to question No. 300 of the present session of parliament.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member for Skeena whether he would be patient with me for one more week. I know he had the kindness to stand the motion last week, but it has not yet been possible for me to get this information. However, I am sure I can deal with this matter next week.

Mr. Howard: We are full of patience today, Mr. Speaker.

Motion stands.

MAIL ROUTE CONTRACT, RIVER JOHN, N.S.

Motion No. 91—Mr. MacEwan:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the government and any agency or branch thereof, and any other person, group or organization, regarding the R.R. 1 River John, Pictou county, Nova Scotia, mail route contract.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I think the third last word in the second line of this motion should be "or" instead of "and". If that substitution is made the motion is acceptable.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

MR. COATES—INFORMATION REQUESTED IN WRITTEN QUESTION GIVEN TO MINISTER

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Question No. 5 standing on the order paper in my name is dated February 18. It relates to information which I endeavoured to obtain from the government regarding the construction of the federal penal institution at Springhill, Nova Scotia. I have in my hand a release appearing in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of April 1, 1964 which reads as follows:

Tenders on construction of the new young offenders institution at Springhill will be called by mid-April and the federal government expects to award the contract by the end of April, for a construction start early in May, labour minister MacEachen said Tuesday.

Mr. MacEachen, Nova Scotia's representative in the federal cabinet, also told the Chronicle-Herald that a $254,590 contract for provision of high temperature water generators and auxiliary equipment at the institution had been awarded to Dominion Bridge Company of Montreal.

The content of that press release, Mr. Speaker, is the information I seek in my question which is on the order paper. Yet the government has been willing to provide the information to the Minister of Labour and to disregard my rights as a member of this house.

MR. RICARD—REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received a reply to the starred question I put on the order paper on February 20 concerning the salary increase of the C.B.C. president.

The other day I asked the Secretary of State if he could answer the question. It seems to me that it should not take so long to get information justifying the salary increase from $20,000 to $40,000 a year which was granted to the president of the C.B.C.

I should be most happy if the Secretary of State would provide a reply to that question today.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if that will be possible, but I will get in touch with the C.B.C. immediately to satisfy the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—INQUIRIES RESPECTING PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is he in a position to give a report regarding the incident that took place yesterday in Cyprus in which members of the Canadian contingent of the United Nations force was involved? At the same time, is he now in a position to give the house further information regarding the directives to the force and the circumstances under which the force may act when its freedom is interfered with?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the last part of the question, the position is no different from what it was last week, when I said that it was not in the interests of the force and of the assignment given to the force to give the directives. This was the position taken yesterday in the British House of Commons by Mr. Sandys when he indicated that the matter was one that rested with the secretary general and pointed out, as I pointed out last week, that directives to armed forces as such are never given out by any authority. Mr. Sandys said:

> Since recent incidents have caused some anxiety I think it right to inform the house that we are satisfied that the directions under which the United Nations troops have been operating give them adequate authority to use such force as may be absolutely necessary for self defence and to enable them to discharge their mission. The secretary general has assured us that he recognizes that the force must have the powers necessary to fulfil its task.

With regard to the first part of the right hon. member's question, General Gyani who is in charge of the force has made representations respecting this matter to the government of Cyprus.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What attitude has the Canadian government taken and what representations has it made regarding Canadians being interfered with as they were?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I may say to my right hon. friend that Canada is not holding itself aloof from developments which could have a bearing on the outcome of the problem in Cyprus. We have a high commissioner accredited to the government of Cyprus and he is in continuous contact with the Cypriot authorities. Our permanent mission to the United Nations is similarly in constant contact with the secretary general and the United Nations officials directing the United Nations peace keeping operation. We are availing ourselves of these proper channels for the expression of our views on such matters as freedom of movement for the United Nations force which was guaranteed by the Cypriot government in the status of forces agreement. I tabled yesterday copies of that agreement which clearly is not yet fully effective.

I might say that the Canadian and British forces in Cyprus deserve the highest commendation for the restraint they have shown in the trying circumstances which have arisen when freedom of movement has been temporarily denied to them. I am satisfied that the operations of the peace keeping force have reduced considerably the very great potential danger which existed on that island a few weeks ago and which has not completely disappeared.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: After all that verbiage will the minister now answer the question? Has the Canadian government made a protest with regard to the interference by Cypriots with that portion of the Canadian force that was interfered with yesterday?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that my method of response does not satisfy the right hon. gentleman. It is not my fault if I do not possess his great capacity for lucid expression, but I cannot add anything to what I have said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Loose expression.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs undertake to request the secretary general of the United Nations to release and publish the directives that were given to the troops, inasmuch as it is reported in the Globe and Mail this morning that in the parliament of the United Kingdom yesterday Mr. Sandys agreed to do this?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the views of Canada with regard to the directives were discussed by me with the secretary general about 10 days ago. With respect to the action taken by Mr. Sandys I can say that there is consultation on this point, but I am convinced from the information available to me now that the course taken by the secretary general in the circumstances is the right course; it is in the interests of fulfilling the assignment for which the international police force was established.

So far as the hon. member's question is concerned, I suggest that he might look at the status of forces agreement tabled yesterday; I think that agreement would perhaps give him some satisfaction.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the situation in Cyprus has been further complicated by the repudiation by President Makarios of the treaty with Turkey, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he himself, directly or through the secretary general, will make representations to Archbishop Makarios to make it perfectly clear that this parliament authorized Canadian forces as part of the United Nations force to maintain peace in Cyprus but not to protect the government of Cyprus against the consequences of its unilateral repudiation of an existing treaty?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the British government, the government of Turkey and the government of Greece are parties to the 1960 agreement. I would call my hon. friend's attention to the attitude taken by the British government in this matter; that government would have a treaty qualification to complain about any act that would involve the abrogation of treaty rights. The course this government must follow, based on the information before us, must be dictated by our view of the effect this will have on the fulfilment of the mission for which the force was established. Our representative in Nicosia is in contact with the government of Cyprus, and with the head of that government, Archbishop Makarios. In my judgment it is not in the public interest for me to say anything further at this time.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the foreign minister of Turkey has made it clear that any interference with the small Turkish force in Cyprus will lead to hostilities, I hope that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will make it very clear to the president of Cyprus that Canada would take a very dim view of having Canadian forces caught in a series of hostilities brought about by actions of the government of Cyprus.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend may well be assured that his point of view as expressed now and the point of view of the Canadian government, are not basically different.

[Later:]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which I should have asked earlier, because it is supplementary to those asked about the Cyprus situation. However, I wanted to make quite sure it was framed in such a way that the hon. gentleman would understand it. Does the government, with full knowledge of the facts, or with its knowledge of the facts, after assessing the detail of the terminology of the directives from the secretary general, accept responsibility for those directives being satisfactory in the exigencies of the situation?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank the hon. member for having put his question in language that I can understand. The question was so simple that the response is yes.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—PROTEST RESPECTING PRESIDENT OF SEAMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Has the minister received from the directors of the great lakes maritime union a telegram in which they protest strongly against the appointment of Mr. McLaughlin as president of that organization and, if so, what does he intend to do about it?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have received the telegram, and I intend to reply to it.

[Later:]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question supplementary to the one directed by my colleague the hon. member for Lake St. John to the Minister of Labour, and ask whether he considers the objections raised in the telegram from the S.I.U. to be valid objections; and could he indicate what his response is going to be to this telegram?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the telegram to which the previous question referred was not from the S.I.U., that is, the telegram I looked at this morning. The telegram I looked at was not in my judgment a fully accurate picture of the facts, and I would like to point that out in my reply.

Mr. Patterson: May I say that this telegram is from the S.I.U. members of the rights and welfare committee.

Mr. MacEachen: I shall check on that particular telegram, which to my knowledge I have not received yet.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Quebec West.

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, the question I wanted to put has already been answered.

[Text]

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—REPORTED ONTARIO INTENTION TO NOT PARTICIPATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the report in this afternoon's Ottawa Citizen of the speech made to the Canadian club in Toronto today by Premier Robarts, in which he is reported to have all but announced the Ontario government's intention to stay out of the Canada pension plan, can the Prime Minister say whether this differs from the understanding he had at the Quebec conference? Could he also say whether the federal government is still doing its best to persuade Ontario to stay in the Canada pension plan?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity of reading this report, let alone the text of what the premier of Ontario said. I will be very interested in getting the text of what he said and making any appropriate comments after I have studied it.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF SECRETARIAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister advise whether he intends that the proposed committee to study federal-provincial tax questions and priorities be set up as a permanent body for federal-provincial relations?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The question of a permanent body of that kind was not discussed at Quebec. It was not considered during our discussion as a permanent body.

Mr. Grafftey: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the federal government initiate any discussions at all relating to the establishment of a permanent secretariat for federal-provincial affairs at the conference in Quebec last week?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, we put the matter on the agenda and initiated discussion. The means of liaison between federal and provincial governments is a matter of considerable importance in which my hon. friend has already expressed a very deep interest. It is a very significant question. However, the general viewpoint expressed by the provinces was that it was more important at the moment to develop machinery for liaison between the governments inside each government rather than set up a joint liaison committee in Ottawa at this time. It was agreed, although this matter will be considered again, to see how this kind of liaison works before considering setting up a permanent joint liaison committee.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): In so far as this liaison committee is concerned, has the Prime Minister heard from Premier Lesage since last week as to whether or not he will join it?

Mr. Pearson: Premier Lesage at the conference called attention to the fact that he had been the first to act, and there is already a highly developed piece of machinery in his government for that purpose. We already knew about that.

[Mr. Knowles.]

AGRICULTURE

LEGALITY OF ACTIONS DURING TRANSFER OF DUTIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he is able to inform the house of the results of the research of the law officers of the crown on the orders in council affecting the respective powers of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Forestry?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I am not yet in a position to advise the house as to these matters which I have undertaken to consider.

Mr. Lambert: Is the minister able to tell us when he may be able to give us that opinion?

Mr. Favreau: As soon as I have occasion to receive a report from my officers and discuss it with them, and then take the responsibility for it.

Mr. Lambert: Will that be next year?

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF DAIRY PRODUCTS SUPPORT PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Could he tell the house what the government intends to do to support dairy products prices, under the Agricultural Prices Support Act, for the year beginning May 1, 1964?

[Text]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have to make the dairy announcement soon because the dairy year starts on May 1. We hope to be able to do this in the next week or so. We were delighted with last year's policy whereby dairy prices were higher than they had been for a number of years. We were able to level off production and consumption of butter, and we hope to be bringing in a policy that will be even better for 1964.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that this policy was announced on March 22, 1962?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: I would like to correct that. The dairy policy is announced just before May 1. We announced it in plenty of time last year, and it did work.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF ALLEGED WIRE TAPPING BY POLICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I wonder if the Minister of Justice would undertake to make an immediate study of the allegations made by a retired sergeant of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who was reported in the Montreal Gazette today as saying that he was appalled at the degree to which wire tapping is used by the police in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg.

Mr. Fairweather: May I expect an answer?

Mr. Speaker: I was going to suggest that the question would be a proper one for the order paper, and I noticed that the minister seemed to agree since he did not rise to answer.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I did not think it was a question but rather a suggestion that I should look into the matter. If that is a question, my answer is yes.

ONTARIO—REPORT OF POLICE COMMISSION ON ORGANIZED GAMBLING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Has the government received representations from the government of Ontario, or from anybody on its behalf, for amendments to the Criminal Code or any other legislative changes arising out of the Ontario police commission report on organized gambling in Ontario? If so, what were the representations and what was the nature of the government's response?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that this is also a question for the order paper.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

REPORTED INTENTION TO INCREASE AID TO WEST INDIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In the Halifax Chronicle-Herald under date of April 7, 1964 there is an article reporting that the minister made a statement in Bridgetown, Barbados to the effect that the Canadian government had announced a big increase in international aid and that some of this aid would be directed toward the British Caribbean.

Inquiries of the Ministry

In view of the importance to the maritime provinces of increasing trade between our area and the West Indies, would the minister now tell the house the amount and type of aid planned by his government for the British Caribbean?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I know the hon. gentleman does not expect me to make any statement outside the house that has not already been made in the house. The statement I was referring to in Barbados was one made by my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

NATURAL RESOURCES

REPORTED DANGER TO FISH LIFE FROM PESTICIDES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Before doing so, I cannot resist saying that never have I seen so much colour produce so little glamour.

In view of the fact that studies in the United States have proven that pesticides are much danger to fish life in streams, has the government received any complaints along similar lines in Canada? If so, what action does he intend to take?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): May I first of all thank the hon. member for his compliments on the celebration that we, in his old party, are enjoying today. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal party in British Columbia is still waiting for the resignation of the one-time vice president of the Liberal association of that province.

I want to thank the hon. member for having asked this question. I am quite sure that most Canadians are impressed by the report of the United States government in respect of losses that have occurred as a result of pesticides, particularly in water pollution. I am quite certain that those members of this house who were on the splendid committee last year investigating this matter will realize that many of the losses sustained in the United States are duplicated in this country. I am writing to the resource ministers of the various provinces suggesting that pollution of water, soil and air might well be a subject for discussion at the forthcoming resource ministers' conference to be held in Prince Edward Island in June.

Mr. Herridge: Glad to hear it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLICATIONS

EXEMPTION FROM SALES TAX OF "READER'S DIGEST" AND "TIME"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Will the Minister of Finance advise the house whether he intends to remove the so-called exempt status for two magazines, Time and Reader's Digest, in the light of reports of growing pressure within government ranks to have this exemption lifted?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour Is it his intention to consider prolonging the winter works program after April 30, especially in the designated areas which are suffering so much from unemployment?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to consider this proposal.

COMBINES

POSSIBLE PRICE FIXING BY CANADIAN SUBSIDIARIES OF U.S. COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Could he advise whether the officers of his department under the Combines Investigation Act are looking into the implications of the price fixing charges in the United States which might involve Canadian subsidiaries of the said companies and their activities in Canada?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): May I take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—SALE OF MEAT PACKING COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on March 5 I directed a question to the Minister of Justice concerning a specific company, Pacific Meat Co. Ltd. on the west coast, the sale of that company to another company, and the restrictive covenant in that agreement of sale. The question was taken as notice by the parliamentary secretary, and inasmuch as a bit more than a month has elapsed, I wonder if the minister could indicate whether he has an answer to the question or, if it has been answered, where I might find it in Hansard.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to answer that tomorrow.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can he inform the house whether the government has now abandoned its idea of sloughing off its jurisdiction with regard to Eskimos in nouveau Quebec?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, that was never the intention.

Mr. Nielsen: As a supplementary question, can the Prime Minister say when it is the intention of the government to set up the commission that was announced would be set up last May 4 by his minister of northern affairs?

Mr. Pearson: I shall have to take that as notice.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS FROM FEDERAL CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs which arises out of a telegram and another message from veterans, asking whether a decision has been made by the government to turn over the Colonel Belcher hospital in Calgary to the municipal authorities. Is there any further information in this connection, or is the matter still up in the air?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the position with respect to the Colonel Belcher hospital is the same as I indicated the other day, that negotiations are going on. Talks are being held and we are in the process, as I understand from checking it yesterday, of nearing a point where perhaps some agreement might be specifically talked about. I might be a day or so behind in my information, because I have not the full information in front of me, but there is no decision on it as yet.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister mean that negotiations are going on between the municipal authorities and the Department of Veterans Affairs to turn the hospital over to the municipal authorities?

Mr. Teillet: Talks are going on between the province of Alberta and the department with reference to the Colonel Belcher hospital.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Are the veterans being consulted or have they been consulted in recent days, and are they agreeable to this?

Mr. Teillet: I have not discussed this with the veterans in recent days, but the veterans were present at the original discussions. Until we have a complete proposal to talk about we do not see any point in discussing it with them at this time.

Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet may I answer some questions that were asked the other day, one I believe by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria with reference to Camp Hill hospital. I have the reply that I indicated then, that we have received no complaints in the department.

However, following the hon. gentleman's question there was a question by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, and I can state that the occupancy during the course of 1963 in Camp Hill hospital of patients falling under treatment sections 19 to 21 V.T.R., that is the military people, people coming under the Canadian Shipping Act and the R.C.M.P., was on the average 11 beds. No entitled veteran has been denied admission to Camp Hill hospital as a result of this activity.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs with regard to veterans hospitals and his answers to the Leader of the Opposition concerning the Colonel Belcher hospital in Calgary. Do the talks with the government of Alberta mean that the government here in Ottawa now has the intention of going ahead and turning the care of these veterans over to civil or provincial authorities?

Mr. Teillet: I did not get the last part of that question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. member would repeat it.

Mr. Pugh: Is it the intention of this government to turn over the veterans hospitals to the provincial authorities? Is the Colonel Belcher hospital discussion a preliminary, or a pilot? Is it a starter, or the first one, and is the same thing to apply to all veterans hospitals throughout Canada?

Mr. Teillet: As to the last part of the question, it would be impossible for me to generalize along those lines. As to the first part, if we can be satisfied that we shall be given the necessary safeguards and guarantees so that veterans' rights will definitely be protected, it is our intention to proceed with it.

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. On March 30, in answer to a question regarding these hospitals the right hon. gentleman answered as follows:

> I think it would be the intention, Mr. Speaker, that the hospitals be left in the control of the department.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether this answer also applies to the Colonel Belcher hospital in Calgary?

Mr. Teillet: The question of control, surely, involves two things. I do not like to discuss matters which are under negotiation, but the probability is that the buildings will remain under the control of the department. In the second place, we shall certainly remain in control when it comes to deciding who shall be admitted to hospital. We shall decide whether or not a veteran is admissible; that is not to be left in the hands of any civil authority, as was made clear the other day.

Mr. Baldwin: Are you not a civil authority?

Mr. Teillet: In that sense certainly we shall retain control.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF ALLOWANCES FOR CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was asked another question by the hon. member for Colchester-Hants, with reference to the extension of family allowances. I should like to report to the hon. member that all these sections of the veterans charter—there are three acts, I believe—make it possible for allowances to be continued beyond the ages of 16 and 17 in any case, based on the academic advance made, up to the age of 21, and in the case of children of war dead to the age of 25.

GRAIN

BARLEY—REASON FOR LOWER PRICE THIS YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale asked me a question about the initial payment on barley announced by the wheat board two days ago. The average final payment on barley of the 1962 crop was 18.2 cents per bushel compared with 30.2 cents per bushel for the 1961 crop, or 12 cents per bushel lower.

There are two reasons for this decline. First, the carrying charges applicable to the pool account just closed were 4 cents per bushel higher than the carrying charges applicable to the 1961-62 pool account. Second, the average market price realized by the Canadian wheat board for barley sold for the account of the 1962-63 pool was 8 cents per bushel less than the average market price realized for barley delivered to the 1961-62 pool.

The reason for the increase in the carrying charges is to be found in the fact that producer deliveries were considerably higher in 1962-63, at the figure of 77.6 million bushels, than in 1961-62, with a figure of 56.4 million bushels, and also because large export sales were made relatively early in the 1961 crop year, whereas a strong demand for the barley delivered to the 1962-63 pool account did not develop until the fall of 1963.

The reason for the decreased average market price for barley in the 1962-63 pool was intensified competition for export feed grain markets and a general decline in world feed grain prices.

The hon. member said farmers would be interested in this information as an indication of what they should now be seeding. May I just say that, speaking generally, I am reasonably optimistic about the future with respect to feed grain markets, particularly here in Canada, and I foresee the need for a gradually expanding acreage for the production of barley in the years ahead.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Would the hon. gentleman's statement apply to other feed grains such as oats? Can farmers take it that the lower price received for barley is not an indication that there is a smaller demand on the commercial market for barley and other feed grains?

Mr. Sharp: I anticipate there will be a very active demand for barley and feed grains generally in the coming year.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): I wonder if the minister would care to comment, on a note of optimism or pessimism, with regard to prospects for the marketing of wheat in the coming year.

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC WORKS

TRAFFICKING IN BUILDING SITES BY GOVERNMENT CONSULTANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would permit me to say I am interested to see that he and his party are celebrating today the plight of the unemployment insurance fund.

Some hon. Members: In the red.

Mr. Aiken: In the absence of the Minister of Public Works and in connection with the question of privilege I raised yesterday concerning government consultants, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he approves of consultants of the government, who are defeated candidates, trafficking in public building sites.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As far as the hon. member's preliminary remarks are concerned, I am grateful to him for giving me an opportunity to remind him and the house that when we left office the unemployment insurance fund stood at $854 million, and when we took office again the fund was broke. That I think is sufficient comment on the policies of right hon. gentlemen opposite. As far as the question itself is concerned, I can assure the hon. member we shall not follow in this matter the practices of himself and the previous government.

Mr. Aiken: On a question of privilege, perhaps I did not understand the Prime Minister's answer. I asked him whether he and his government approve of consultants trafficking in building sites. The question of privilege I raised yesterday concerned a consultant of the government who went out and purchased in his own name a building site which had already been negotiated for by the previous government, and then resold it to the government.

Mr. Pearson: Of course I do not accept the facts as stated by the hon. member, but I can assure him that I do not approve of illegal trafficking of any kind.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

QUEBEC—ESTABLISHMENT OF ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does he intend, as it is the case for the maritime provinces, to request from the government the setting up of a development bank for the lower St. Lawrence, Gaspe peninsula and Iles de la Madeleine areas, as was suggested by the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauve) in Mont Joli, according to a report published in Le Soleil?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have only the hon. gentleman's statement that this proposal was made by a colleague of mine, and I have to be very careful about accepting his reported statement in the press. However, I will be glad to look into it.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question concerning the Gaspe peninsula, from the economic standpoint. Does the government intend to reconsider its decision to abandon the construction of a railroad and go on with this construction which is essential to the economic development of the Gaspe peninsula and Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that the people of Gaspe will be very pleased indeed by the improvement in communication that is about to take place in that region under this government.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO RESPONSIBILITIES OF MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I would have a question for the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Dupuis), but seeing that he is not yet in his seat, I shall put it to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the Minister without Portfolio stated last week on television that he had a little to do with all departments, could the Prime Minister tell us exactly what are the duties of his Minister without Portfolio in each of the government departments?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that this question is not in order. It certainly is not properly framed—

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could we not ask the Prime Minister to give just a little portfolio to his Minister without Portfolio in order to satisfy the members—a little portfolio.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is not properly framed. It seems to me that at the time of the announcement of the appointment of the minister a statement was made outlining his duties.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to compliment the Prime Minister and his supporters on their very colourful appearance—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: —and to say that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. In view of the fact that this is the anniversary of the last election, and since the government has watered down nearly all its policies in the year that has transpired—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: —may I ask the Prime Minister whether he does not think that the red carnations which he and his supporters are wearing might more appropriately be replaced by pale pink carnations?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if we had pale pink carnations we might be accused of being fellow travellers of my hon. friend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: Well, aren't you?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is further evidence of the fine co-operation between those across the way and the N.D.P. There is very little difference in the colour; that is very apparent, and has been throughout the last few weeks.

SOCIAL INSURANCE

DISTRIBUTION OF APPLICATIONS TO QUEBEC PROVINCIAL EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister?

Could he tell us whether the employees of the Quebec provincial government are required to register and to have a social security card, and whether there has been an agreement in that respect with the Quebec government?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): That is a very important detail of the proposed legislation that will be discussed when the bill is before the house.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour regarding the application forms for a social insurance number. Were these forms sent out to the province of Quebec for distribution in that province? I ask this question in view of the fact that the legislation has not yet been passed. I would also like to ask him whether he would give the assurance to the Canadian people—and it does not appear on the application—that any information provided in this application form will be maintained on a completely confidential basis and will not be used for any other purpose or passed over to any other department?

Mr. Grafftey: Big brother.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the application forms for the social insurance number have been distributed to all employers in all provinces of Canada, including the province of Quebec. As I have already stated in the house, the obligation to register arises from authority under the Unemployment Insurance Act and applies to approximately 4½ million persons in the insured population. The remaining persons, whom we would like to have register, are asked to come forward voluntarily and register under this plan. If they are not part of the insured population, they cannot be obliged to come forward; but it would be our wish that in view of the proposed Canada pension plan they might in registering now, avoid the duplication that would be required later on.

The information that is available in these forms will be processed and maintained in Ottawa for government purposes—

Some hon. Members: Government?

Mr. MacEachen: —including the unemployment insurance commission and the proposed Canada pension plan.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Are you going to take their fingerprints too?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, would the minister give an unequivocal answer that the information contained on the forms used in this system, which bears a strange relationship to dictatorship—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —will not be made available in any way, directly or indirectly, to any other department?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this system, which the hon. gentleman suggests is akin to dictatorship, is precisely the same as the system followed by the unemployment insurance commission in the six years he was prime minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, not at all.

Mr. MacEachen: Precisely the same principle is involved.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all.

Mr. MacEachen: Precisely the same numbering appeared on the unemployment insurance books, and the information requested in such forms has always been available to government departments.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. MacEachen: Therefore, Mr. Speaker, to suggest that a new principle is involved is quite false.

Mr. MacEwan: It is not false.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister seems to have such difficulty answering this question. The question, repeated to him, is this: Is it clear and definite on his part and on the part of the government that any information given in these application forms will be used exclusively by the Department of Labour and will not be passed over to any other department? That is what I want to know.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will recall that the Glassco commission made a proposal that there be a common system of government record keeping and I am saying—and this is all the responsibility I can take—that this information is to be used for the unemployment insurance system and for the Canada pension plan.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And nothing else?

Mr. MacEachen: I am not in a position to indicate at this stage what system of government record keeping will be involved in the future, but that is the present attitude of the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh; income tax, and so on?

Mr. Pearson: Certainly not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister is butting in. I ask him, will he give the undertaking on behalf of the government that this information will not be made available to other departments of government? We want to know that this is not a snooping operation for the use of the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the same and, I would hope, more effective precautions will be taken in this regard as were taken under the regime of the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All this means is that it is going to be used.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question either of the Minister of Labour or the Prime Minister. Is it not a fact that the terms under which these numbers are to be given are spelled out in Bill No. C-75, which some of us have read—

Mr. Grafftey: Don't be so sanctimonious.

Mr. Knowles: —terms which make clear the basis upon which these numbers are to be used, and that they are not to be used for any other purpose.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker; and it is unfortunate that my right hon. friend opposite has not read that bill also; otherwise he would not have talked about dictatorship so freely as he did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that the government has refused to answer the question, and I again thank the hon. gentleman for his fine spirit of co-operation with the government. It is obvious they are together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister say whether as of today it is compulsory for each employee who comes under the regulations of the unemployment insurance commission to fill out these forms and sign them; and can he also say what is the final date for these forms being turned in?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is a fact, as has been the case since the Unemployment Insurance Act was passed more than 20 years ago, that the insured population are obliged to register and receive numbers. That fact has prevailed all those years and is still the case today. There is nothing new at all in principle, and my hon. friend ought to be aware of this. The program of registering and the issuing of social insurance numbers is under way now, and will continue for some weeks into the future. We hope all Canadians will come forward and register in order to ensure that this system of making social insurance benefits available in the form of insurance under the proposed Canada pension plan will operate efficiently.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question. What I am trying to determine is whether it is the responsibility of the employee or the employer to see that these forms are filled out as quickly as possible? Because the minister said that this matter has been in the regulations of the unemployment insurance commission for some time. Under the present system each employee has a number. If an employee does not fill out a form will he automatically be given a number transferring his number in his unemployment insurance commission book to a new book under this system? Whom is the onus upon?

Mr. MacEachen: I regret I do not follow the question asked by my hon. friend. If he wishes to put it on the order paper I will try to answer as quickly as possible.

Mr. Simpson: Let me ask one specific question. Is the responsibility of seeing that these forms are filled out on the employees or their employers?

Mr. MacEachen: It is the responsibility of the employee, the insured person, to apply for and receive a number. We are in this situation asking employers to register all employees, to make the application forms available to the employees, who will then fill them out. These forms will be returned by the employers to the local unemployment insurance office. In the case of an employee who does not want to take advantage of registering through his employer under the plan, that employee is certainly free to go to the unemployment insurance office, fill out a form and register.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister concerning this system. Is the government considering whether this system is going to be extended to other departments than those of the unemployment insurance commission and pensions?

Mr. Pearson: There is no necessity for extending this particular system for this particular purpose to any other department.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): A supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. There are a number of companies in my riding which already have a pension plan. Some of their employees have asked me about these cards, which seem to serve a dual purpose, one for the unemployment insurance commission and one for the administration of the pension plan. Will the filling in of these cards mean an automatic endorsation of the Canada pension plan?

Mr. MacEachen: Of course not, Mr. Speaker. The idea is that normally the unemployment insurance commission would be revising and renewing its books at this time of year. The numbering system under the unemployment insurance commission was becoming obsolete. Modern data processing machinery could not be used and a more effective identification system had to be employed. For example, I understand there are 50,000 Smiths registered with the commission, 10,000 of whom have the first intial "J". It is obvious that additional information has to be acquired in order to identify each contributor properly. In light of that and in light of the proposals in the Canada pension plan it was thought desirable to combine these operations at this particular time into one single activity. There is no endorsation of anything in this application form; it will merely make it possible to continue the efficient operation of the unemployment insurance commission and to apply the proposals contained in the Canada pension plan.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister? Could he assure the house that these application forms do not conflict with provincial autonomy or with the jurisdiction that belongs to the provinces?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, we would not expect to put it into effect if it was in conflict with the jurisdiction of a province, and there is no indication that it is.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): A further supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. A couple of weeks ago a question was directed to him on the order paper dealing with this matter, and I should now like to ask the minister how much of the $300,000 odd which has been allocated toward the campaign to introduce these social security cards has now been expended by the Maclaren advertising agency by way of advertising.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if this question is placed on the order paper I am sure the hon. member will receive a full answer, but I think I can say that for the past fiscal year the total sum has not been spent, but that it will be in the months of April and May when the advertising campaign reaches its climax.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NUGENT—REFERENCE TO REMARK BY JUSTICE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I was not in the house yesterday, but this matter has come to my attention. As reported at page 1859 of Hansard the Minister of Justice made this remark:

> I was detained here throughout last week by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

That statement is completely false, as hon. members know. He was detained here throughout last week by his own blundering incompetence as house leader.

SUPPLY

House again in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Royal Canadian Air Force—

35e. Operation and maintenance, $13,653,000.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks to make on these supplementary estimates. One of the reasons the debate has been protracted for such a long time is because—

Mr. Matheson: Because of hon. members opposite.

Mr. Nesbitt: If the hon. member for Leeds wishes to make some remarks he will have his opportunity—is because of the difficulty in many cases of obtaining adequate or any answers from the government. For that reason a number of members, I think even some on the government side, have found it necessary to spend some time over these estimates.

One matter about which I should like to inquire concerns the Department of National Defence and our forces in Cyprus. On a great many occasions members of this house have tried to obtain information concerning our forces in Cyprus, what they are doing there, terms and conditions of service, directives and the like.

The Chairman: Order, please. Before the hon. member proceeds further may I bring to his attention that we are now on vote 35e which concerns the Royal Canadian Air Force, operation and maintenance. I would ask him to restrict his comments to this particular item.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, it was my understanding, and I was in the house last evening when this point was thoroughly discussed, that it was agreed long ago that on the first item of each department anyone speaking would have reasonable latitude.

The Chairman: That is not the understanding. If the hon. member was in the house last night he will recognize that this argument was made by one hon. member and I took the liberty of disagreeing with it. My interpretation of any agreement or understanding originally arrived at is that on the first item, wherever there is an administration item for a department, there can be a general discussion within the limits of the ordinary rules of relevancy. I would feel very strongly and earnestly that this is the decision which was arrived at when we began discussion of the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Nesbitt: With great respect to Your Honour I would point out that this item refers to the Royal Canadian Air Force, operation and maintenance, and one of the details thereunder is travelling and removal expenses. Certainly so far as the Cyprus enterprise is concerned the Royal Canadian Air Force was used to transport some personnel there and one of the specific items here is travelling and removal expenses. With great respect, I really fail to see how Your Honour can suggest that one is out of order in discussing the Cyprus operation under this supplementary.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, this supplementary is for the year that is past. During that year there were no R.C.A.F. personnel in Cyprus, or who had anything to do with Cyprus. How the hon. gentleman can now bring Cyprus into the discussion of a supplementary estimate concerning the R.C.A.F. for the year that is past is very difficult to understand.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, with great respect to the Prime Minister, the Cyprus operation was commenced prior to April 1 of this year. These estimates are supplementaries to those of the previous fiscal year which ended on March 31 and, with all respect, I think it is quite conceivable that certainly some of the moneys in the estimates for that period would cover the Cyprus operation. I realize the government's sensitivity on the subject and the fact they do not want it discussed—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government's sense of responsibility.

Mr. Nesbitt: —but with great respect I feel I should be entitled to continue. If I may return to my remarks, I am to a large degree very sympathetic to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have had some experience in his line of work and I realize it is not always possible—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I assure my hon. friend that within the confines of what I am sure he would understand was desirable in regard to this situation, I would welcome the fullest opportunity for discussion, but certainly my hon. friend is completely out of order on this item. The force went to Cyprus only in the latter part of last month. It is true that the fiscal year ended on March 31, but the accounts for any involvement of the Canadian force in Cyprus could not possibly have been presented to treasury by this time. The hon. gentleman is so obviously out of order, Mr. Chairman, that I am sure he would not even require your suggestion that he is out of order.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, may I speak to the point of order? I would ask you to cast your mind back to the early part of the year 1962. This question of order was threshed out most thoroughly at that time and if my memory serves me correctly the present Secretary of State for External Affairs was most vociferous in upholding the principle that one can speak all around the subject.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the point at issue at all. The point at issue—

Mr. Pugh: Just a minute. The minister can have all the time he likes if he wishes to get to his feet again and speak, but I should like to complete my remarks. In the spring of 1962 there were 26½ days taken on supplementary estimates. I refer particularly to the Department of National Defence and the fact that the discussion of its estimates went on and on. Those in the opposition at that time spoke about the future potential of weapons, how much they might cost and went into all aspects of defence policy. They spoke on everything but the actual expenditures submitted in the supplementary estimates.

If Your Honour will examine the debates of that time I suggest you cannot come to any other conclusion but that the Cyprus expedition, which we are about to discuss, is a subject that is quite germane and certainly part of this debate. It has been said that what is before us concerns expenditures of the past year and has nothing to do with the Cyprus expedition. I suggest to Your Honour that in relation to expenditures previously made it is quite proper to discuss further expenditures which may be necessary and question of whether the government is prepared to cover all expenditures in the future. Surely this is part of the discussion.

For emphasis I come back again to the early part of 1962 when those opposite at that time, took 26½ days—

Mr. Pearson: That is absolutely false.

Mr. Pugh: —to cover what normally takes one or two days. They put on the greatest filibuster that has ever been seen. We on this side are talking common sense and we wish to put our views forward on the floor of the house.

Mr. McIlraith: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, no part of the Cyprus operation is covered by the estimates before the committee at the moment, and since there is no item covering it I have no information on the subject nor can I properly get it or give it. That operation is not being financed through these estimates. It is a matter that will have to come up when the new main estimates come before us. I would point out again that they have been tabled in the house and that the government is quite anxious to have them brought forward so there will be an opportunity to discuss them in committee of supply; but no part of these final supplementary estimates (E) relates to the Cyprus operation.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, with the greatest deference to the President of the Privy Council, I wish he had addressed the same sentiments to himself and his present colleagues on the front bench when they were over here, so far as the discussion of supplementary estimates was concerned. The experience of past years has shown that these highly commendable sentiments just did not mean a thing to the hon. gentlemen at that time; but now that they have been transported across the floor it would appear that the vice of those days has become the virtue of today.

Mr. Knowles: Is it not the other way around?

The Chairman: The hon. member for Vancouver East on the point of order.

Mr. Winch: No, Mr. Chairman, I want to speak on the supplementary estimates.

The Chairman: If I may give the opinion of the Chair again, the only thing I can do is refer hon. members to standing order 59(2) which reads as follows:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

We have before us vote 35e having to do with the Royal Canadian Air Force, operation and maintenance, $13,653,000, and the only thing I can do is to ask hon. members to cooperate with the Chair and relate their remarks to the particular resolution which is before the committee.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I have been in the house most of the time when these supplementary estimates have been under discussion. It was my clear understanding, having also discussed the matter with a number of my colleagues and certainly having been in the house last night—Mr. Chairman, I wish these continual interruptions by the hon. member for Leeds would stop. If he wants to say anything, let him get up and say it.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, surely there has been a decision of the Chair. Is that not the understanding of the committee?

Mr. Nesbitt: That is the question I was bringing up. With regard to all the other supplementary estimates that have been discussed it is my understanding that Your Honour's decision, concurred in and applied by the deputy chairman also—this point was brought up by the hon. member for Lapointe last night—was that when the first item of any department was brought forward there would be the widest latitude in the discussion.

I will agree that probably Your Honour is technically quite correct in your ruling, but in view of what has happened in connection with the other departments I think a general discussion should be allowed. It was my understanding, and certainly that of my colleagues, that there would be a general discussion on the first item. I do not know why there is one rule for one department and another rule for another, or one rule for one member of this house and another rule for another.

The Chairman: I cannot repeat too often the opinion which I have expressed before. This very point was raised last night by the hon. member for Yukon. If the hon. member for Oxford will look at the record for last night he will see that I expressed the view that the understanding that was reached by hon. members when we initiated discussion on the supplementary estimates was that when there was a general administration item for a department a general discussion would be allowed. This was the interpretation I placed on the understanding which was reached at the time, and this is the way I have explained it to the committee at various times. I see no justification for allowing a general discussion on a vote such as this, which is not a general administration vote.

In addition, if I may say one other word, my recollection is that I have been in the chair most of the time while we have been discussing supplementary estimates. This very problem which is being raised by the hon. member for Oxford was considered when we were on supplementary estimates for the Department of External Affairs and might have been relevant to a discussion on that general item. I cannot see how it can be relevant to the item now before the committee.

Mr. Nesbitt: With respect, Your Honour, the minister in charge—I have forgotten his official title—of these supplementary estimates has said that none of these accounts could possibly involve the Cyprus expedition. There are a number of things covered by this vote such as transfer and removal expenses for the air force. These are the supplementary estimates for the latter part of the fiscal year 1963-64. Certainly a number of them are estimated expenses for that fiscal period which ended March 31 of that year. Now, the Cyprus expedition, and matters related to it, commenced before March 31. I am sure even the Secretary of State for External Affairs could not suggest that did not happen.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I just said that.

Mr. Nesbitt: A number of Canadian aircraft were involved in transporting personnel to Cyprus. Since a number of these expenses are estimated and the estimates are for the fiscal year ending March 31, I cannot understand why these estimates would not cover the use of aircraft involved in the Cyprus operation. If the minister in charge of the treasury can explain that to my satisfaction, I might be inclined to agree with Your Honour. This does not make any sense at all.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have the floor, Mr. Chairman, and if the minister is not replying to my argument I intend to continue, unless Your Honour rules me out of order.

Mr. McIlraith: I thought Your Honour had given a ruling on the matter. The simple fact is that since the Cyprus expenses are not covered by this item of national defence, I do not have the details for the separate Cyprus expenditures. What is in the item is travel and removal expenses. I am at a loss to understand the hon. member's assertion that this is the first time the estimates of the government have come before the committee because the main estimates came before the committee, then supplementary estimates (A), (B), (C), (D) and these are final supplementary estimates (E). These are the usual final, clean-up supplementary estimates that go to the end of our fiscal year.

Mr. Nesbitt: That is just the answer I was looking for, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McIlraith: Additional costs were incurred because of the higher cost per move which went from $120 per move to $147 per move. Then, there were extra costs because of the withdrawal of the CF-100 squadrons from Europe in late 1962-63 and the disbandment of the 426 squadron and other units for which claims and costs were not paid until early 1963-64.

Another factor in the increase is the price increase for packing and crating and transportation put into effect by the Canadian warehousemen's association during the fiscal year. I think that is all I can give by way of an effective answer. I hope it does give the information the hon. member is seeking because, much as I would like to give him information on the other subject I do not have it for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. Nesbitt: I think that answers the question I was asking, and I thank the minister. As the minister just said, these are the final supplementary estimates for the fiscal year 1963-64 and involve estimated expenditures for the last period in the fiscal year. Of course, Mr. Chairman, we all know that the Cyprus operation commenced in the very last part of this fiscal year.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I suggest with great respect to my hon. friend that he is abusing the privilege of the house and the attitude the house has taken toward his continuous intervention. These estimates before the committee—

Mr. Pugh: I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: Order; we can only have one point of order at a time and the Secretary of State for External Affairs has the floor.

Mr. Pugh: I rise on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: The Chair can entertain only one point at a time. When the minister has completed his point of order I will be able to hear the hon. member on his point of privilege.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What I want to say, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pugh: I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, on my point of privilege—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have the floor.

The Chairman: Order; the hon. member will recognize that I cannot have two points under discussion at the same time. We are having one point discussed at the moment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I repeat to my hon. friend that at the appropriate moment I will welcome this opportunity, but I should remind the hon. member than when external affairs supplementary estimates were being discussed, we spent one afternoon and evening on the Cyprus question. I do not know whether or not my hon. friend was preoccupied with other important business, but if he was in the house he will remember that discussion.

Mr. Nesbitt: Quite a few things have happened since.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was initiated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. These estimates have been before the committee since March 6. There was no Cyprus operation so far as Canada was concerned until March 13. These two dates surely indicate clearly that the supplementary estimates before the committee at the present time could not conceivably involve any expenditure arising out of the Cyprus operation. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that since you have made a ruling the hon. gentleman ought to respect that ruling, and ought to give way to the hon. member for Vancouver East who has been trying to speak for a long time.

Mr. Nesbitt: The Secretary of State for External Affairs is very persuasive, as we all know, and I appreciate his point of view, but I must make—

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to rise on the question of privilege?

Mr. Pugh: I merely wish to point out to Your Honour that when the Secretary of State for External Affairs got on his feet on a point of order, the hon. member for Oxford was speaking on that point of order.

The Chairman: No, it was not my understanding that he was speaking on a point of order. I believe he was making a substantive argument.

Mr. Nesbitt: Well, I must say on the point of privilege, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has suggested to Your Honour and to the committee that I have been misusing the privileges of the house in discussing points of order with Your Honour. All I can say is that no member of the house, in the 11 or so years I have been here, has spent more time discussing points of order, appropriate and otherwise, than the hon. member for Essex East. To suggest that anybody else who deigns to discuss a point of order with Your Honour, or with whomever is sitting in Your Honour's chair, is abusing the rules of the house is a kind of logic that defeats any reasonable person.

While I frankly do not place much stock in the argument I have heard from the Secretary of State for External Affairs and from the minister in charge of the treasury, if Your Honour rules that I cannot discuss this matter of Cyprus, a matter of the greatest importance at the present time, I will obey Your Honour's ruling, but I think it is a very strange and odd attitude on the part of the government.

The Chairman: In my opinion the rules preclude the hon. member from discussing this matter along the lines which he was following a moment ago. If there is some way that any matter can be brought within the ambit and the limitations of vote No. 35e, then of course the Chair would not want to try to restrict the hon. member. But I feel we have a very specific item before us and that our discussion should be limited to this item in the light of the rule of relevancy.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I would like to deal specifically with the item before the committee, and in view of the fact that we spent 25 minutes this afternoon on procedure, I shall be very brief because it is my sincere thought that if we are brief and deal with the items in front of us, then perchance we might be able to finish the supplementary estimates by tomorrow night, which I hope we can do.

I would like some information about the Royal Canadian Air Force, and I hope this will be in order because it concerns something which occurred a number of weeks ago. I regret that the Minister of National Defence is not in his seat. I notice unfortunately he left the chamber just as his supplementary estimates were called, but I hope that the associate minister, or perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs, will be able to give the information I seek.

I am sure all members of the committee would appreciate some information as to what was the new arrangement that was worked out a number of weeks ago with France and with NATO relative to the R.C.A.F. The only information we got was that contained in the press several weeks ago, that two of the squadrons are being moved from France to Germany and two are being left in France.

The information received by our defence committee, when we were in France, was to the effect that there were French squadrons in Germany and that they would be kept in Germany because only by having them in Germany could the French squadrons be equipped with nuclear warheads. On what basis are we maintaining two of our squadrons in France when they cannot be equipped there for the purpose for which they were bought by the previous government?

What exactly is the role of the two squadrons now in France, and is it correct that a decision was reached with France and NATO a number of weeks ago that these two squadrons of CF-104 planes are going to have an entirely different role, and will have to be re-adapted or re-equipped to carry conventional warheads in their new role?

On what basis is Canada still maintaining two squadrons in France while France maintains squadrons in Germany? Second, what is their role? Third, because of some mistake, stupidity or misunderstanding by the previous government in its purchase agreements, who has to pay for the re-adaptation of these two CF-104 squadrons in France, and what is the approximate figure of the cost of that re-adaptation?

Mr. Cardin: I do not think I can let pass the reference made by the hon. member for Vancouver East concerning the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Winch: Well, he did leave just as the item was called.

Mr. Cardin: I realize he left, but he did not leave because he did not want to answer questions.

Mr. Winch: I did not say that. I said I noticed he left and I did not comment on the reasons.

Mr. Cardin: Just in case the hon. member might have that somewhere in the back of his mind, I would like to say the minister had to leave the committee, and it was with regret he did so. I would also like to say that I think there has been, on the part of the Minister of National Defence, a very frank and open discourse on what was happening in the Department of National Defence. Also, I believe there will be opportunities within a day or so, in the budget debate, when these matters can be brought up again. Further, as hon. members know, it is understood that all the national defence reorganization may be discussed in the special committee on national defence. It is most unfair if anyone should get the idea on these particular estimates, which are the fifth and last, that we are not willing to give the committee whatever information we can.

The hon. member was asking about the air squadrons in Europe. I do not think the difficult position of the Canadian government in that respect is a secret to anyone, and the purpose of sending the squadrons we had in France to Germany was in order to get out of an impasse which was not of our making. To do this we have given the squadrons remaining in France a reconnaissance role. All our squadrons will have a dual role, both strike and reconnaissance, but the aircraft of the squadrons in France will be limited to the reconnaissance role.

As the hon. member may appreciate, this was a course that was devised in order to have a useful role for our air squadrons, and I understand there is to be a sort of rotation between our squadrons in France and Germany so that they will be able to exercise both roles.

I do not believe I can add anything to what my colleague the Minister of National Defence has stated with regard to this matter both in the house and in the committee. I regret I cannot offhand give the cost of this particular move, but I will find out so that hon. members may have this information. I think the hon. member realizes that with regard to this matter of the air squadrons in Europe we are doing the best we can, having inherited a difficult situation.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the hon. gentleman how there can be a possibility of rotating R.C.A.F. planes between France and Germany when our squadrons in Germany are equipped for the handling of nuclear weapons, whereas our squadrons in France are now being changed over to use only conventional weapons? Are all the planes to be changed so that they may fulfil a dual role?

Mr. Cardin: They are being changed, now, so that they will be able to carry out a dual role, and the pilots will also be rotated.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I think I am allowed under this item to read a resolution passed by the district council of the Saguenay-Lake St. John national labour union.

We are considering today the administration of the Royal Canadian Air Force, and the resolution in question deals with the storage of nuclear arms at the Bagotville military base, which comes under the Royal Canadian Air Force, the expenditures of which we are now considering.

I will simply read the resolution:

At a regular meeting of the district council of the Saguenay-Lake St. John national labour union held at Arvida on January 19, 1964, a resolution was put forward asking the district council to protest strongly to the Prime Minister of Canada, and to the federal members of parliament of the district, against storage of nuclear warheads at the Bagotville base.

The council executive was directed to prepare the following resolution:

Considering the stand taken by the national labour union in previous conventions.

Considering the danger which such atomic weapons constitutes for the people of our district in case of war.

Considering that the mere presence of such nuclear warheads on our soil makes our district a potential target and can transform this area into a radioactive desert.

Whereas such weapons do not constitute an effective means of long range defence.

Whereas Canada can play a doubly effective part by working for peace.

Our council asks the district, especially all representative bodies of our district, to protest to government authorities in order that they may abandon their projects.

We hope that you will take this letter under special consideration; your viewpoint would be very much appreciated by our members.

Yours truly,

Saguenay-Lake St. John Regional Local of the National Unions.

And it is signed Elmer Proulx, secretary.

Mr. Chairman, I want to be the mouth-piece of the national unions of the Saguenay-Lake St. John area and I strongly support this resolution on their part.

The Chairman: Order. I allowed the hon. member to read the resolution he mentioned in order that we might determine its nature.

In my opinion, the question of nuclear weapons is not connected in any way, directly or indirectly, with the item under study; it even goes beyond the restricted limits of this item. Consequently, I invite the hon. member to restrict his observations to what he has just said.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, please note that in credit 35e now under study, mention is made of "miscellaneous materials and supplies, $1,150,000". Then, how can we say that in these miscellaneous supplies—nuclear weapons are also supplies, not only in winter but in fall and spring, they are miscellaneous supplies relating to airplanes at Bagotville?

I believe that these things, these supplies of fuel, gasoline, fuel oil, lubricants for aircraft and mechanical equipment, are related to the subject I am discussing now: supplies and upkeep of equipment. Supplementary estimates are being requested for the upkeep of that equipment at Bagotville, and I wish to say that I fully endorse the text of the resolution which has been approved unanimously by the labour union in my area and more especially in the Arvida-Jonquiere-Kenogami area.

The population, including the social and municipal bodies and the farmers' unions, object to the storage of nuclear arms in our area. But the government, here in Ottawa, refuses to recognize the objections raised by the whole population of one area.

Mr. Chairman, it becomes serious in my opinion when a government pays no attention and does not even care about the protests voiced by all the people, all the social and municipal bodies of an area, and keeps storing nuclear arms in a peaceful region inhabited by peace-minded citizens working peacefully and contributing to the development of our country.

The Chairman: I have listened with great interest to the remarks of the hon. member and I am sure he will agree with me that they are of a much too general a nature for the limited scope of the vote under consideration.

Mr. Gregoire: Then, Mr. Chairman, I will conclude by speaking of this vote to which, I want to make it clear, I am opposed. It includes an amount of $1,150,000 for miscellaneous materials and supplies which will be used for the storage of nuclear weapons at Bagotville.

I wish to register a protest also against the vote for gasoline, fuel oil and lubricants for aircraft and mechanical equipment if that material is to be used for the storage of nuclear weapons.

I protest against this vote concerning repairs and maintenance of equipment, if this includes equipment to be used for storing nuclear arms at the Bagotville military base.

I protest, and I object to these estimates, not only in my own name, but on behalf of the whole population of the Saguenay-Lake St. John district. I do it with all the vigour I am capable of, and Mr. Chairman, when you ask if this item is agreed to, please report that it is on division, and report further on division of the member for Lapointe.

Mr. Rynard: I should like to inquire what plans the department has for, or what the department intends to do with, the radar station in Edgar which is in my riding and which, I believe, will be closed as of July 1.

I should like to point out that this is a community of a certain size. It has its own fire brigade, its own power plant, three dormitories accommodating 500 people and about 85 housing units. The point I wish to make is that this is a responsibility of the federal government. An investment has been made amounting I believe to some $9 million. It has been accepted that the federal government has some role to play in education. For example, when vocational schools are constructed the federal government pays three quarters of the cost of the building and of the equipment used in the operation of those schools. I should like to go further and ask the minister what plans he has. Is he contemplating an educational centre or a vocational school, so that there may be continuity in this area?

I ask this because, as the minister knows, there is a choice between educating the people or making welfare payments, providing unemployment insurance, relief and so on. Therefore I say to him that while they are spending millions of dollars advising people to obtain more education so they will stay off the unemployment insurance and relief rolls, and so forth, on the other hand they cannot afford to close up a building such as this. I also want to stress the point that a great many workers have their roots in this community; they have been employed there for 11 or 12 years and have their homes in this area. Therefore I would appreciate an answer as to what the minister intends to do in this matter. I would state further that it is my opinion that some educational or semi-educational plan should be adopted in order that those buildings can be utilized to the full, in view of the need today for further education.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I think my hon. friend should know that the department is certainly not indifferent to what is happening to some of these communities where the radar stations are being closed down. Having said how concerned we are with what is happening, I think it is only fair also to say that I believe it would not be logical policy for the department to keep maintaining and operating stations which are no longer useful.

What has been done and what is contemplated in the future is that whenever one of these radar stations is to be disbanded, it is immediately turned over to crown assets. The Department of Defence Production and the Minister of Industry have in their own organization a group of people who are trying to establish contact with the provincial governments and other groups and associations to study how these radar stations might be usefully used. A real effort is being made in this sense in order to try and get the provinces interested in utilizing these very excellent facilities.

Another point, of course, is that most of these stations are in rather isolated areas, and it is difficult at times to interest people in going to these areas. However, Mr. Chairman, I can assure my hon. friend that everything it is humanly possible to do is now being done.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the minister for his answer. I would draw to his attention that this is not a particularly isolated area; it is just about seven miles from a city one way and it is about 15 miles from a town with a population of 15,000. Also, it is only four miles off a super highway. I am wondering whether the minister, through dominion-provincial relations, could in some way get a program going of some form of education without even going through crown assets and wasting that time.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, the hon member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has asked me whether he might ask it first.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Does he intend to provide the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean with a four year course, the same as Kingston?

Surely, the minister is aware that several of his colleagues from the province of Quebec, and particularly the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis), have formally promised, on behalf of their party, that the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean would have a four year course, the same as Kingston. That is why I am asking the minister whether or not that four year course will be established.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the interest my hon. friend has always shown concerning this matter. Other hon. members from both sides of the house are also interested in it.

Now, for the Department of National Defence, it was not only a matter of reorganizing the armed forces, but reorganizing also the military colleges. As I said before, we are carrying out a thorough study of military training with a view to revising it according to standards we consider necessary for our armed forces.

I regret no decision has yet been taken, and I am not in a position to give a definite answer to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask a supplementary question. I asked the minister a very definite question, that is if the government would keep the promise made by some of its members, in particular the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville. I am not asking that it be kept within a month or two; whether it is at the end of this year or next year, I am asking the government if it will keep the distinct promise made on behalf of his party by the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I would not like any misunderstanding about that. What I want to tell my hon. friend is that when the study I referred to is completed, we will take the most effective steps in the interest of the college and the country.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Chairman, with regard to the question asked by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon)—

[Text]

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I should like to raise two points with the associate minister. First of all, from time to time in the past there has been some difficulty about travelling and moving expenses with regard to the air force, the army and the navy. I think the minister will agree that within the last year or so criminal charges have been laid with regard to the falsification of moving expenses. There have been some irregularities in this connection. I am wondering, therefore, what steps have been taken recently to eliminate as much as possible the giving of kickbacks and the other irregular practices which have cropped up from time to time. I do not say that they have existed only in recent years, but they have occurred from time to time. I remember that when I was associated with the Department of National Defence back in 1957, this was a problem. It has exercised the Canadian warehousemen's association, and they themselves very much deprecate the existence of these practices. There is somehow built into the present system of the movement of service personnel a type of facility which leads to these practices. I believe this is caused by the competition. I do not know whether the Department of National Defence has worked out some arrangement with the Canadian warehousemen's association of policing this sort of thing. I know it is deprecated by service officers and certainly by the association as a whole.

However, we do know that such practices have existed and certainly excessive weights have been used at times. This has been drawn to the attention of the public by the Auditor General. I should like to receive an indication from the minister, either today or on some other occasion, as to just what has been done in order to tidy this up, so there is as little chance as possible for, shall we say, sharp practices in regard to moving expenses.

The other point I wish to raise with the hon. minister is this. Can he tell us at this stage—and there may be reasons why he cannot—what is to be the ultimate use of the four very large installations that were used by the United States air force as refuelling bases?

The last of these, Namao R.C.A.F. station, is to be phased out on July 1 next. There are some very extensive facilities. Some of the runways are used jointly with the R.C.A.F. and there are other buildings and what have you, such as fuel storage facilities, put up at the expense of the United States government, of which I am sure some very adequate use could be made, particularly at the two bases at Cold Lake and Namao.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, personally I have not been aware that there is any great wave of irregularities in connection with removal and travelling expenses. There are some recommendations contained in the Glassco commission report in this regard, but unfortunately I am not in a position to advise my hon. friend today what measures will be taken to correct the situation. However, I will look at the matter and inform him at a later date.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I wish to correct any misapprehension there may be. I am not saying there has been a great wave, but there have been cases. Individual members of the Canadian warehousemen's association have definitely spoken of this, and I would like to know what efforts are being made to control this sort of thing.

Mr. Cardin: I will look into the matter.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to detain the minister for external affairs, but when he makes a statement in this house I take a little time to think over what he has said and then I go back and examine the record to see whether or not what he has said is accurate. I am glad he is now here to listen to my submission, because a little while ago he attempted to make the case that the subject of Canada's participation in the United Nations Cyprus force should not be discussed under these estimates because the estimates were tabled on March 6. This is accurate. His statement concerning our participation in the Cyprus expedition was not made until March 13, so it follows that the estimates which were tabled on March 6 could not possibly have anything in them which would pertain to the Cyprus expedition.

I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that the subject of the troubles in Cyprus was raised in this house on Monday, February 24, by the hon. member for Edmonton West. The Prime Minister replied to him in these words which appear at page 129 of Hansard:

> There has been no additional request made of Canada for participation in any such force but, as the house knows, we have laid down certain conditions which we feel should be observed before Canada participates in a force of that kind.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Churchill: Obviously the government was considering the question of Canada's participation in an international force as early as February 24.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Long before that.

Mr. Churchill: When the Prime Minister and the minister of external affairs rose this afternoon to object to the hon. member for Oxford making a statement about the Cyprus expedition I knew that perhaps they were attempting to conceal something.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, my hon. friend has not helped his case by his last reference. There has never been any refusal to discuss this matter. Indeed, my hon. friend is now proving that we have had very considerable discussion. There is only one point before the committee at the present time and that is whether or not the particular item involves an expense which could be properly attributable to Canada's undertaking in the United Nations peace keeping force. That is the issue and no other. The question of Cyprus has been discussed many times in this house, but what we are now concerned with is this particular item of expenditure. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that unless the hon. gentleman addresses himself to that point he is not in order.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, we can always expect an intervention by the minister of external affairs no matter which side of the house he sits on.

Mr. Nielsen: And against the rules too.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, generally against the rules. I did not say that anything was being concealed. I said that perhaps there was an attempt at concealment. When the minister of external affairs is talking with that skill and verbosity which is his and his alone, there is sometimes the expectation on the part of some hon. members that there is concealment involved.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Be careful now.

Mr. Churchill: I am making no accusation. Yesterday I was asking him about regular forces from Greece and Turkey and he persisted in talking about Cypriot forces which I had not even mentioned; so the minister is sometimes not very clear in his activities.

I direct my attention specifically to the estimate in front of us, which is a vote of over $13 million, involving some $1.5 million for travelling and removal expenses, another item of $3.5 million for gasoline, fuel oil, and so on. It will take a little convincing to persuade me that these very large items are not related in some way to the expectation that Canada would participate in some overseas activity under United Nations command. Because as the minister for external affairs said when I mentioned February 24, the government was considering such a thing earlier than that. A government which boasted of its decision would surely have made plans prior to that with regard to the expenses for the air force and army. It might have interrupted the writing of the white paper by the Minister of National Defence; perhaps that was the delay which was caused. But I am sure he was figuring out how much more it would cost if Canada participated in a United Nations force. Consequently that is why I question the earlier intervention of the minister of external affairs in trying to persuade the house that nothing in these supplementary estimates pertain to that matter.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre permit me to interrupt him for a moment to make a request of the committee. In all the time devoted to government business today we have not put through one item of these final supplementaries. This is the fourteenth day that these final supplementaries have been called and brought before the committee, although admittedly on some days, for example today, the question period has been rather long and the period devoted to government business short.

The Chairman: Order. I regret I must interrupt the minister in order to permit the house to proceed with the consideration of private members' business. Shall I rise report progress, and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, before you proceed with private members' hour I should like to continue the request I was in the midst of making in committee to find out whether the house would consider forgoing private members' hour today in an effort to get at least some of these items through.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed we suspend private members' hour and return to committee of supply?

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make the suggestion that we go much further than giving up this hour. I see little value in giving up this private members' hour if it is going to do nothing to shorten this debate.

I do not think there is any reason to attribute blame for this. I think one should recognize that it has been a long time since members have had an ample opportunity to examine the various departments and to question the various ministers. There was a long time when there were no estimates. The general estimates for last session came in during the closing days of the session. Many members were willing to forgo questions they wanted to ask and matters they wanted to raise in the interests of winding up the session at a reasonable time. So I do not think that any real blame attaches to members for the fact that these supplementary estimates have taken a considerable period of time.

On the other hand, I think it is most advisable now to try to wind up the discussion of these supplementary estimates. As far as the members of this party are concerned, if some agreement can be reached we would be quite willing to confine ourselves to one speaker on each of the departments or, if that were not agreeable, to undertake that if there are any departments still not dealt with by ten o'clock tomorow night we will be prepared to let them go through with a view to winding up these supplementary estimates not later than ten o'clock tomorrow evening. But unless we can set some deadline for the disposing of these supplementary estimates it seems to me that merely taking another hour of private members' time does not add anything at all. It just means that discussion of the supplementary estimates may go on for another hour or for a stipulated period of time. If it is agreeable to the other parties in the house we would be prepared to give an undertaking to dispose of these supplementary estimates not later than ten o'clock tomorrow night. If we finish sooner, so much the better, but we would be prepared to terminate any discussion by ten o'clock tomorrow evening.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether we have reverted to motions or how we happened to be on this discussion. It is rather interesting to be attempting to settle the order of business of the house in this way. It reminds me very much of the Thursday before Good Friday when a member of the N.D.P. called it six o'clock and prevented just such a discussion taking place.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Speaker, I agree we should make some provision but I think this should be done through the house leaders. We have two days of the budget debate left and six supply motions to come up. These matters will take 14 days and in addition we have all the main estimates of the departments to consider. I am wondering whether we are going to get any legislation through the house.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam with respect to continuing through private members' hour today, but I cannot agree on any understanding that we should finish these estimates by ten o'clock tomorrow night. We have been waiting for quite a while to speak on some of these estimates and in my view not only the opposition but also the government must accept some blame for the fact that the house has taken so long to pass them. I know that some of our members have something to say on them. Therefore our party cannot undertake to terminate the discussion by ten o'clock tomorrow night, but we are willing to forgo private members' hour today.

Mr. Churchill: As far as our party is concerned we are prepared to give up private members' hour today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to dispense with private members' hour?

Mr. Brewin: May I say a word on that, Mr. Speaker? I am the private member whose resolution was to come up today. I am perfectly prepared to concur in giving unanimous consent to deal with these estimates. My own personal opinion is that they should have been disposed of some time ago. I am perfectly prepared to give up the time I would have had, but I suggest to those who represent the government in the management of the business of the house that they should make suggestions like the present one a few minutes before they intend to ask the house to deal with them. Just a few hours ago I was approached by the government whip and asked to be prepared to proceed today. I simply wish to suggest that a little more planning and forethought could well go into this sort of suggestion.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, we would certainly be ready to forgo private members' hour, but I think we should try to reach some understanding with regard to what is going to happen from now on. If we simply forgo this hour it means that we will have another hour on these estimates so that discussion of them can be stretched out a little more. I do not see anything to be gained by that. Therefore I think we should try to reach some understanding that discussion will terminate at a certain time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement among members to forgo the private members' hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bell: Postpone it.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Royal Canadian Air Force—

35e. Operation and maintenance, $13,653,000.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I was advancing an argument just before five o'clock, with which the Secretary of State for External Affairs seemed to be in agreement, that the large amount of money in this estimate must have had something to do with a proposed international commitment of Canada some time before the end of March because the Cyprus trouble was being considered by the government early in February. Unless the Associate Minister of National Defence is prepared to rise and say that not one single dollar of the travelling and removal expenses and the gasoline and fuel oil expenses had any relation whatsoever to an anticipated movement of troops and aircraft overseas, we can only assume that items as large as these must relate to that. Otherwise, if he says they do not relate to it—

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Churchill: I am still talking and the minister can wait. Let me make it clear—

Mr. Cardin: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Is the minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. Cardin: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member asked me to get up and state whether or not any of the amounts of money here were earmarked for the international force, and I do get up and say that there is no money in the estimates now before us that is earmarked for the international force.

Mr. Churchill: I did not ask the minister to get up immediately. He might have let me finish my sentence. I was going on to say that if he was going to get up and say that not one single dollar of this was in anticipation of paying the expenses of Canada's participation in an international force, then he was going to be in some trouble in explaining to us why these sums are so large, coming at the end of a fiscal year. I wonder what his explanation will be. Perhaps he would like to give it now in view of the answer he gave half a minute ago.

Mr. Cardin: I think it would perhaps save a lot of time if I were to take the different items and give an explanation of them. As far as the first item of $1,445,000 is concerned, the explanation is that which was given by the President of the Privy Council. It has to do with the removal and travelling of personnel. The average cost per move had been estimated too low at $120 per move and had to be increased to $147. There was additional cost in regard to transfers brought about by the withdrawal of the CF-100 squadrons from Europe late in 1962 and 1963 and the disbanding of No. 426 squadron and other units for which many claims and accounts were not paid until 1963 and early in 1964. Then another factor is the price increase for packing, crating and transportation put into effect by the Canadian warehousemen's association, and that accounts for this amount of $1,445,000.

In so far as materials and supplies are concerned, there is fuel for heating and cooking. The forecast was over-expended by $305,000 and this was mainly due to an underestimate for the 18 new radar units introduced into the R.C.A.F. in 1962-63.

Mr. Pugh: Did the minister mention radar equipment?

Mr. Cardin: Yes, 18 new radar units introduced into the air force.

Mr. Pugh: Where is that used; I wonder if the minister can tell us?

Mr. Cardin: I understand that these were taken over when we had a change-over of administration between the United States and Canada on the Pine Tree line.

Then, there is the item for gasoline, fuel oil and lubricants for aircraft. There has been historically a shortfall in the annual flying hours which logistic staffs have usually applied to estimates for oils and lubricants of 15 per cent. However, the 1962-63 totals were not available when the 1963-64 estimates were prepared. So far this year indications have been that the shortfall will be very small this year.

Mr. Nielsen: On that point, I wonder if the minister could assure the committee that none of the $3.5 million used for the purchase of these aircraft lubricants was used for lubricants or fuel for aircraft going to Cyprus in this operation?

Mr. Cardin: Because of the time involved, I would be morally certain that it did not. These estimates, of course, were made before we were involved in this operation.

Mr. Pugh: Just on that point, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I thought when we were having a few words with the minister of external affairs on this point, the understanding was that away back in February the armed services were preparing for the Cyprus operation. One branch of the armed services is the air force and one purpose of the air force is transport. I should like to know, and I am sure other hon. members would like to know, if any of these $3.5 million worth of gasoline and lubricants were used in these aircraft transporting Canadian personnel to Cyprus, or by aircraft on the island of Cyprus.

The minister would have to be very certain before he answered that question because $3.5 million is a lot of money. As has been pointed out before, these supplementary estimates (E) are the fifth supplementary estimates and are the final ones for the year. Surely the Minister of National Defence, the minister looking after these estimates and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have looked into these matters and will have looked into them as far back as Christmas time when the Cyprus operation or some other necessary peace keeping operation for which Canada would have to be prepared was in their minds. I said the minister would have to be careful in answering. Were there, to his knowledge, any of the oils or lubricants accounted for by this item used in transporting Canadian personnel to Cyprus?

Mr. Cardin: I am quite sure that the members of the house want to get ahead with the work of the committee and want to see this matter pushed through as quickly as possible. I have stated that I am personally sure there is not any amount of money involved in these items that was used in the transport to Cyprus. I am informed that the bills for that particular exercise have not been received as yet. I am morally certain that there is nothing for the Cyprus exercise that is reflected in these items.

Mr. Pugh: The minister is saying, then, that up until the final decision to go to Cyprus, which was after these estimates were prepared, the Royal Canadian Air Force was not prepared in any way, shape or form. None of these lubricants were used in these aircraft or in any of the aircraft which would have been used in Cyprus. It seems ridiculous to me to think that there was no preparation. Surely, there was preparation. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that it was well before February when preparations were made. Surely there was a state of preparedness on the part of the Royal Canadian Air Force and the other armed services in Canada which would involve these expnditures being made. We have heard that we have not had the bills for Cyprus, but have we had the bills for the preparations and are they part of these supplementary estimates?

The Chairman: Order; I am just wondering if the hon. member would not agree with me that at this point of his questioning he is going beyond the scope of the item? I assume that possibly the minister will want to reply to the original question he was asked, but I wonder whether we should not limit ourselves to this point now.

Mr. Pugh: With respect, Your Honour, I was just finishing my remarks. This is a fairly important matter and it goes back to the point of order which was debated a while ago.

Mr. McIlraith: And which was dealt with and cannot be debated again since a decision was given.

Mr. Pugh: It could be that we are talking about something that is quite germane at the present time, namely lubricants to the value of $3.5 million. Without getting into an argument, I am going to close now if the minister will tell us the expenditures for the preparedness of the armed services were contained in the original estimates and supplementaries (A), (B), (C), (D) and (E), and that no part of this $3.5 million is for the Cyprus force?

Mr. Cardin: I have answered the hon. member's question as best I can. I do not intend to go on trying to rationalize this particular matter. I think the hon. member realizes as well as I do that we have aircraft that are prepared and have been prepared for a long time. What I am saying is that the bills for the amount of money involved in having aircraft leave Canada to go to Cyprus have not yet even come in. I am morally certain that there is nothing in these estimates which reflects that operation and I am not believe I can say more.

If I may, I should like to continue reading the rest of the items involved. There is an item of $1,150,000 for miscellaneous supplies.

The main factors in the increase in the 1962-63 accounts carried forward for this year include underestimate for liquid and gaseous oxygen for new aircraft, Yukon CF-101 and CF-104; underestimate for chemicals related to increased requirements mainly for water purification chemicals for new radar sites; underestimate for miscellaneous cordate and textiles; new requirement for hexafluoride gas for FPS 26 and 27 radars.

Then we have repairs and upkeep of equipment and the deficiency in this primary is due mainly to the fact that this primary bore the brunt of the general shortage of operation and maintenance funds in 1962-63, resulting in $4,752,000 in accounts being carried over for payment this year. In addition, at least $2 million and perhaps as much as $6 million is needed to cover an unforeseen increase in repair costs of the LN3 navigation system for CF-104 aircraft.

The last item, $1,239,000 includes underestimation for non-residential school fees and school contributions. This completes the amount of $13,653,000 which I feel has nothing whatever to do with the operation in Cyprus.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago, I was listening to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) discuss the course given at the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean, and ask the minister for an extension of two years, as it is the case for the Kingston Royal Military College. He also mentioned that this promise was made by the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) during the last election campaign and that, of course, it would involve additional expenditures.

Now, I would like to know from the Associate Minister of National Defence whether the Minister without Portfolio, made that promise on his own, or whether he was authorized by the government to do so. Moreover, I ask the minister to tell us whether the government intends to carry out the promise made by the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville and extend the course at the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member is well aware of the long-time interest taken by the Minister without Portfolio in the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean, since it is located in his native city.

I believe that during the election campaign he probably may have expressed a strong desire to see a two year extension of the course at the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean. He obviously put pressure on the department at the very beginning, when we came into office. We did not need to be pushed, because we were of the opinion that we had to revise completely our system of military colleges.

At this time we contemplate a reconstitution of its framework. As I explained to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, we have not decided yet how we will proceed, because we shall await the report of those who are investigating in this respect.

I would have the hon. member know that the problem cannot be solved as easily as it would seem. It is a problem which might have many implications. We want for the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean something fine, although perhaps it will not be necessarily the same course as at the military college at Kingston. Consequently, I am not in a position to give a definite answer to the question of my hon. friend.

Mr. Langlois: I am quite willing to believe the minister when he says the project was but a wish made during the last election campaign and that the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville may have expressed a fervent wish, but I would prefer to use stronger words and say that the Minister without Portfolio did promise that, if a Liberal government were elected, another two years would be added to the course given at the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean. That is a bit more than a fervent wish, but you can take it anyway you like.

In any case, how could he make such a promise, when the government was merely wishing. Could it be that the Minister without Portfolio exceeded his rights in making that promise or that some responsible member of his party had told him that the thing was coming, in short, that it was one of the government's projects?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has as much experience in politics as I have, and there is no need for me to answer that question.

[Text]

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I had some difficulty in following the minister a few minutes ago. Could he tell me whether any of the expenditures under this vote were made at the R.C.A.F. station in Saskatoon during the past year, or in connection with the personnel and equipment of that station during the same period?

Mr. Cardin: I am sorry, I do not have that information.

Mr. Nasserden: I wonder if the minister would try to get it for us.

Mr. Cardin: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago I asked a specific question of the minister. The hon. member for Megantic also raised the same question. Not only the member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville but also other Liberal candidates during the last election campaign formally promised, on behalf of their party, that the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean would be placed on the same footing as Kingston and that the course would be extended to four years. I would like the minister to tell me whether this promise will be kept. If the minister refuses to answer specifically, I will have to go on with the debate up to six o'clock and probably tomorrow.

The Chairman: Order. I do not wish to prevent the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm from obtaining some information, but several questions have already been asked in connection with this point which furthermore he had originally raised. It seems that the hon. members who are discussing this problem should try to restrict their remarks to the item under consideration.

Mr. Langlois: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

I think it was raised twice, and it will again be raised on other occasions because this has to do with promises, made during the last election campaign but when we want to talk about them when the house is in committee of supply, we cannot get an answer as to whether or not this is so. A similar situation occurred the other day when we were considering the estimates of the civil service commission.

Here we have other electoral promises about which we want explanations; we just want to know whether they represent government policy or whether they were made to the voters as a kind of bait.

We want to know the difference between the two.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a question to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith) since he is probably in a better position to answer it than the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Could he tell us whether he is in favour of extending the course given at the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean from two to four years, like the course at Kingston, as promised by the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville as well as by several Liberal candidates, during the last election campaign.

I am asking a specific question and if the minister gives an affirmative or positive answer, he can be assured of our full co-operation for the passage of these estimates.

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: I shall try to be as concise as the hon. member was in framing the question. I promise the committee that my answer will not be more lengthy than was the question which has been asked. First, I do not accept the assertion as to what various Liberal candidates may have said during the election campaign. I simply do not know whether the hon. member is qualified to quote them accurately—whether he attended the meetings, and whether he knows or not.

As to the other question about the course at the military college to which he referred, I regret very much to tell the committee that I do not know anything about that course. I do not know whether it is the best possible course. I have always heard it spoken of in favourable terms; references made to it in my presence have always been highly favourable. However, to expect me to know whether the course is the right length or the wrong length, or whether it should be extended, appears to me to be somewhat unreasonable and I must tell the committee that I do not know. I have never made a study of it. On the other hand, I have reason to believe that my colleague, the Associate Minister of National Defence is thoroughly familiar with the college, the type of course and the instruction given there, and so on, and as far as I am concerned he has given a competent and complete answer to the question which was asked.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I believe the cabinet is divided on this question, because it was certainly discussed. Many ministers do not favour any extension of the course at the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean to place it on an equal footing with that at Kingston.

Once more I am asking the minister, and I hope to obtain his co-operation, because when he was himself in opposition I believe he declared himself favourable. Consequently, I am asking the minister whether he will implement the formal promises made by some of his colleagues to the effect that there would be a complete course at the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean.

This promise was made all over the province of Quebec. It was not reiterated nationally, in fact, it was restricted to the province of Quebec. However, I want to tell the minister that at the time of the next election, Liberal candidates will have to be careful if they make promises and not to make any promises they do not intend to keep.

The Chairman: Order. Once more, I must interrupt the hon. member. When he speaks about the next election or remote elections, he is wandering pretty far, it seems to me, from the item under study.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I am asking for the minister's co-operation. We are ready to pass these estimates as soon as possible, but I realize that it is impossible for us to obtain clear answers from the minister, from the President of the Privy Council, and from the minister of external affairs. We do not know the facts. We are asked to vote thousands of dollars, but it is impossible to know why those estimates must be passed.

We are celebrating this year the centennial of responsible government and it is the duty of the opposition to scrutinize the government's expenditures. I am asking the Minister of National Defence if, in the near future—I am not asking him to give a date—the government intends to "extend" the course given at the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean and thus to put it on the same footing as the course given at Kingston.

That is all I want to know. I am not asking him to set a date, to say that it will be in a month or two but he could say that it will be in two years, for instance, in order to keep the distinct promises made during the last election campaign.

Mr. Cardin: I would be very happy to get the co-operation of my hon. friend and I am convinced that, if he wants to co-operate, he will understand that in view of the fact that this matter is now under consideration, we are giving it all the attention it deserves and I cannot say now whether or not we will have the four year course.

All I can say is that we will give the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean what we feel is in the best interests of the cadets there.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, in the light of what the minister just said—

The Chairman: Order. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I have been sitting here for several hours waiting to see if the estimates would be passed and now the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm tells us that it is the duty of the opposition to give close scrutiny to past expenditures covered by the supplementary estimates.

It would seem to me then that we cannot discuss the expenditures which could be made two or three years from now if the course were to be continued at the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean.

I would ask the hon. member to wait until we examine estimates for future years and not past expenditures, since he will then have the opportunity of discussing them.

I am in favour of extending the course but I feel that this is not the time to discuss that question, especially since we have just agreed to dispense with private members' hour to save time.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member definitely accused me of delaying the passage of the estimates. I feel it is the duty of every hon. member to scrutinize the estimates and ask questions in order to have definite answers, all the more so because the government committed itself to carry out its promises within 60 days, though nothing has been done in that respect and we do not know how matters stand.

The Chairman: I do not see any question of privilege in that.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, the minister just said that this question was under consideration and that he was not in a position to tell us whether or not the course would be extended by two years.

All I can say is that during the last election campaign, the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville acted in excess of his rights towards the people of St. Jean and that he lied to them in making such a statement.

[Text]

Mr. Nielsen: I just have two or three brief questions to ask the associate minister. The first concerns the government's intention to increase the number of personnel at the R.C.A.F. station in Whitehorse, particularly in the technical field, as a result of the withdrawal of army technical personnel brought about by the change-over of jurisdiction from the Department of National Defence to the Department of Public Works in connection with Alaska highway maintenance.

The other question concerns Rockcliffe R.C.A.F. station. In view of the decision to remove all heavy aircraft from that station, can the minister tell us what plans are under consideration for the airfield, particularly with regard to air materiel installations there. Second, with regard to the establishment of a museum of aircraft in the three or four hangars available for that purpose at the station, might we have a little more information and, third, is it the intention of the department to transfer to the Department of Transport jurisdiction over the flying operations now handled by the R.C.A.F.?

Mr. Cardin: I realize these questions are all very important but I regret I do not have before me the information for which the hon. member asks. If he so desires I will try to obtain it for him. Unfortunately, I cannot give it to him without notice.

Mr. Nielsen: If the minister could simply give me an undertaking that he will write me a letter answering these questions I would be quite happy.

Mr. Cardin: I will do that.

Mr. Churchill: I have a few questions to put to the minister concerning the air force in Europe. This would be a good time to have an explanation of what is going on there. Would the minister tell us how many planes we have there now, how many of them are completely equipped for the purpose for which they are intended, and where they are stationed?

Mr. Munro: Filibuster.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, here is an interruption by an hon. member. I am asking for essential information, and we get the cry of "Filibuster".

Mr. Munro: That is exactly what it is.

Mr. Churchill: If a filibuster is desired such as the Liberals put up in 1962—

Mr. Munro: It was nothing to match this one.

Mr. Churchill: —of course we will contribute.

Mr. Nielsen: You only went close to 26 days then.

Mr. McIlraith: Eight days.

Mr. Churchill: I only want information from the Associate Minister of National Defence, and I am sorry the minister is not here. Is there a single, solitary plane over in Europe equipped to fight at this moment, because last November and December there was not one; they had no weapons on those planes; they did not have one single nuclear bomb ready to be fitted to the fuselage. At no time in Canada's history since the second world war was Canada's air force in a less prepared position than it was last fall and winter. I want to know, is it in a fighting fit condition now? If war broke out tomorrow, what could the Canadian air force in Europe do?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member claims that our fighting forces, and the air force, were in the poorest possible position in the history of Canada during last fall. That is not quite true—

Mr. Churchill: It is true.

Mr. Cardin: —because it was in an even worse position when the hon. member was himself minister of national defence.

Mr. Churchill: That is not true. The fighting squadrons were not disbanded over in Europe, and you know it. Tell the truth in this house.

Mr. Cardin: I am telling the truth, and I hope the hon. member will do the same. The hon. member is not asking questions to be informed, because what he is asking is already known. We are preparing the technical part of our weaponry so that we can arm our squadrons in time. I do not believe any aircraft are now armed. I understand they are working on the warehousing, or the storage, for the equipment.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, the Associate Minister of National Defence said that I was not asking questions for information. I was. He is not giving answers, because he cannot answer or he does not know or he refuses to give information to this house.

Mr. Winkler: The government would be embarrassed.

Mr. Churchill: I will ask him again. Is there one single, solitary plane of the Royal Canadian Air Force in Europe that is prepared for fighting action today or tomorrow? He has just told us "No". This has been the situation now for months. The Minister of National Defence disbanded the fighting squadrons that preceded the 104's before the 104's were ready for defensive action. I am asking the minister now: Are the nuclear dumps completed at the air stations in Germany? How nuclear bombs are there? How many of our planes are on alert in the enclosure in which they have to be placed when they have a nuclear bomb on the fuselage? Are they ready to contribute to the nuclear striking force of NATO?

Mr. Cardin: Surely, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is experienced enough to know that it would not be wise, for security reasons, to give the number of planes that are now in Europe or the number of bombs that are available. I think I have answered the question that he really wanted answered, but as far as the details of the number of planes and the other information for which he is asking is concerned, I think hon. members will realize that is not the type of information we would want to give out.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, the Associate Minister of National Defence is getting to be a bit ridiculous.

Mr. Cardin: Not as much as you.

Mr. Churchill: He says that parliament is not supposed to know the number of fighting aircraft we have available in our air force. What nonsense. Then why did they tell us the number of people who have gone to Cyprus? They should not have divulged that, because the Cypriots might find out. He will not inform parliament as to many planes we have in Europe and he will not tell us whether they are armed.

Mr. Nielsen: He doesn't know.

Mr. Churchill: I think he said they are unarmed. Our air force is defenceless in Europe—and parliament is not to be informed because, to use the phrase the Secretary of State for External Affairs uses all the time, "it is not in the national interest" for parliament to know any of these things. Where is the Minister of National Defence? We want more than white papers, you know; we want armed forces ready to fight. Where are they? The Minister of National Defence has now had almost 12 months with his study groups, and the air force in Europe is not ready for action.

Mr. Hahn: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I fail to see the relevance of this argument to the item in the estimates under discussion at the present time.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member may not see the relevance of the argument. It is simply this. We cannot get the answers to questions from the government. If they would give us the answers, we would move on to the next problem. I asked the Associate Minister of National Defence certain questions with regard to the air force in Europe—this is the item of the estimates that pertains to the matter—and he cannot give me the answers.

May I ask him another question. He told us earlier that the aircraft in Europe are to be modified so they can carry nuclear weapons as well as conventional weapons. Let him now tell us how many have been so modified and what is the cost per plane for that modification.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I answered that question a while ago and said I did not know how much it would cost.

Mr. Churchill: How many have been modified?

[Translation]

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Chairman, it has been drawn to my attention that some hon. members, especially the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langlois) and the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), have criticized the government because the course at the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean is not complete.

I understand that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm said that I had solemnly promised that the course would be a four year course. But, I have never solemnly promised a four year course. Now—

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Dupuis: Will you let me speak.

Now, when I was sitting on the other side of the house, I always requested that consideration be given to the feasibility of giving a complete course—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The minister should not question the word of an hon. member. He questions what was said by the hon. member for Megantic (Mr. Langlois), and what I stated myself. We maintain that the minister—

Mr. Dupuis: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Pigeon: —gave a solemn promise—

Mr. Dupuis: A private member, or a single member, like the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has no right to question the word of a minister, and more particularly not what I said.

Mr. Pigeon: I challenge your point of order.

Mr. Langlois: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I do not know what the minister is referring to, although he has questioned, as the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has said, the word of some hon. members and mine.

These are exactly the words I said earlier: if the minister made a solemn promise to his voters—

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Langlois: Let me finish. The Associate Minister of National Defence answered that the question of extending the course at the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean by two years had not been decided yet. If the minister did make this formal promise, I reiterate my earlier statement, that he lied to his voters.

Mr. Dupuis: To sum up the discussion, I never promised that there would be an additional course, but I promised that, as soon as the Liberal government came to power, consideration would be given to the advisability of a full course. I have proof here in my hand. I know that the hon. member for Megantic is quite sincere. I wonder whether the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is; I am wondering.

I promised my constituents to look after the matter, as opposed to what the Conservatives were doing when they were sitting on this side of the house. They fooled around for six years and did nothing for the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean, while I urged them to do something.

The Chairman: Order. If the minister wishes to correct the statements which may have been made concerning him, let him do it while remaining within the scope of the present debate.

Mr. Dupuis: May I say, Mr. Chairman, that my remarks will not go beyond the scope of the debate.

When I was sitting in the opposition I requested from the then minister of national defence that the advisability of giving a complete course at the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean be considered.

Now, on the 4th of November, the Minister of National Defence answered a letter of mine in which I had previously requested—

An hon. Member: In what year?

Mr. Dupuis: —and here is my request to him.

I shall give you all that, because it is interesting for the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, and to prove to him that we are looking after the interests of the voters, in accordance with what we say to them, during an election campaign.

On November 18, 1963, I wrote to the Minister of National Defence—and I would like the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to listen, because he would learn a few things:

[Text]

My dear Paul:

Thanks to the Liberal party, we have in Saint Jean, P.Q., a bilingual royal military college. However, as you know, this college dispenses only the first years of the course that has to be completed in Kingston. This situation is unfortunate and abnormal.

[Translation]

As you can see, my attitude has not changed since I have been sitting on this side of the house.

Mr. Pigeon: Convince your colleagues first.

Mr. Dupuis: Listen to me. I shall continue:

[Text]

We believe that the College Militaire Royal in Saint Jean should be organized in order to dispense the complete course, starting next September.

During the years when the Conservative party was in power, I made many interventions about this in the House of Commons. Your predecessors:

General Pearkes, Colonel Harkness and Pierre Sevigny, answered that they were giving serious consideration to this question...but nothing was done.

I do not believe that since I am sitting with the government, I should refrain from asking for a complete course at the College Militaire Royal de St. Jean.

As Minister of National Defence, you are the president of the C.M.R., and as such, I am sure, that you will be proud to give instructions in order to permit this college to give a complete course. Could you tell me what has been done up to now by your department in view of permitting such a course?

As the C.M.R. has been established by our party, I think that it is imperative for our Liberal government to complete that great achievement. Why should we wait any longer to take a decision when we all know that this has to be done one day?

Hoping to receive encouraging words from you very soon, I remain

[Translation]

And here is what the minister answered:

[Text]

I have received your letter of November 18, concerning the College Militaire Royal de St. Jean.

Subsequent to Lucien Cardin's appointment as associate minister——and the minister is here tonight—

—he asked for a full report concerning the establishment of third and fourth years at College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean. This report is now being studied as part of my review of defence matters, and I should hope to be in a position soon to let you know the department's decision concerning the proposal that the third and fourth years be provided at College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean.

[Translation]

I protest when the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm attempts, as usual, to cast doubts on my interest in my constituents and the fair claims of the province of Quebec. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm may well laugh, but during the six years when his government was in office he did nothing for the College Militaire Royal de Saint Jean. But I did write to my government and I continue to make the same demands as when I was in opposition.

I do not think it is very intelligent on the part of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to try to delay the debate—

Mr. Pigeon: Keep quiet.

Mr. Dupuis: —try and delay the passing of the estimates. You want me to stop talking. But you, yourself, are asking me questions and when you get the answers, you want me to stop talking. I want you to know that I will not. You are insolent in your remarks and you make claims which are totally inaccurate.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted very much to put the record straight to let the house, the riding of St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville as well as the whole province of Quebec know that when you belong to the Liberal party, whether you sit on one side of the house or the other, you keep on doing your work honestly. When in office, we still ask for the same things we did while in opposition, whereas some people, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm for instance, kneel before their leader, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) without asking for anything for Quebec during the six years their party was in power.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, on this side of the house we intended to vote these estimates before six o'clock, but since the minister does not want to co-operate with the ministers of his own party, we shall not be able to do so.

Mr. Chairman, to show the extent to which the Minister without Portfolio lacks judgment, he has written a letter in English to the Minister of National Defence instead of writing to the Associate Minister of National Defence who resides in the province of Quebec. This shows you his lack of consideration for the associate minister of defence. In other words, he admits that the Associate Minister of National Defence has little authority. He tried to—

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: Order. Would the minister resume his seat? I merely want to point out to hon. members that, in my opinion, this matter, which has been discussed, examined and debated for about an hour, has been settled, not only in its substance but through the many points of order which were raised. It seems to me then this would be the proper time to adopt the vote now under consideration.

Shall this item carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, before—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Pigeon: No, Mr. Chairman, I will not let this item go through—

Mr. Dupuis: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I want to get some information from the government, not orders.

The Chairman: Order. The minister is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order because the hon. member has no right to assert that I have no respect for the associate minister of defence, who is much more intelligent than the person who is trying to belittle me—

The Chairman: Order. There is no point of order concerning the remarks just made by the minister.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

[Text]

The Chairman: Order. Shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pigeon: You have a filibuster on your side and you will pay for it.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the leader of the house—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It would be more appropriate for the committee of supply to report progress.

[Text]

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the house leader if it is the intention of the government to go ahead with supplementary estimates tomorrow.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that because not one single item of these estimates has been passed today my speech is becoming very dull. My answer has to be the same as at the adjournment last night. We will be proceeding with the supplementary estimates tomorrow, and if they are completed, which I sincerely hope they will be, we will take second reading of the pension plan.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency wish to say something?

Mr. Marcoux: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to follow up on the question asked by the house leader of the official opposition (Mr. Churchill). I wish to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau), who is also the leader of the government in the house, whether it would be possible to call a meeting of the representatives of the various parties to try to come to an agreement and conclude the examination of these supplementary estimates. Would it not be possible to try, in every way, to secure the co-operation of the other parties? I feel very few would refuse to accept proposals made by the minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think that it is the proper time to launch a debate to that effect—

Mr. Marcoux: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —or on suggestions made.

[Text]

The government leader has announced the business for tomorrow and I believe that is the only thing we can take up at this time.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 9, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

TRADE

MEETING IN OTTAWA OF JOINT U.S.-CANADIAN COMMITTEE

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Hon. members will recall that when the President of the United States and I met in Washington last January we reviewed the work of the joint United States-Canadian committee on trade and economic affairs and agreed that it should meet again around the end of April. This committee was established in November, 1953 and normally meets alternately in Ottawa and Washington. It has now been agreed that the committee, which held its last meeting in Washington on September 20 and 21, 1963, will meet again in Ottawa on April 29 and 30.

Canada will be represented at this meeting by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the ministers of finance, trade and commerce, industry and agriculture. The United States delegation will be led by Mr. Rusk, the secretary of state, and will consist of the secretaries of the treasury, interior, agriculture and commerce and the under secretary of state. In addition Governor Herter, the President's special representative for trade negotiations, and the chairman of the council of economic advisers are expected to attend as are Mr. Robertson, the chief negotiator for the Canadian government on tariffs and trade and the governor of the Bank of Canada, together with the United States ambassador in Ottawa, and our ambassador in Washington.

This meeting will provide a valuable opportunity for the ministers of both countries to review economic and trade interests of common interest and concern. Canadian ministers look forward to welcoming their United States colleagues to Ottawa and having mutually useful discussions with them.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

APPREHENSION OF PERSONS RESPONSIBLE FOR ARMOURIES THEFTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice and ask him whether he could now make a report regarding the present position of the investigation being carried out in connection with the losses and thefts from the armouries. I have delayed making this request for a considerable time. There was a report in the press a couple of weeks ago of a number of arrests. Since then no report has been made to the house and, as this matter has been outstanding for weeks, I feel the minister should be in a position now to lift the veil of silence which has surrounded this whole matter.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I wish to thank the right hon. gentleman for having agreed, understanding the difficulty of my position, not to press questions on this matter in the course of the last ten days or so. I hope he will understand that I am not abusing the position when I say that for the reasons I have earlier stated in this house I am still not in a position to furnish an up to date report on this important and serious matter.

PROPOSED COMMON UNIFORM FOR ALL ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister please advise the house whether so-called spokesmen of the Department of National Defence have been authorized by him to indicate that there shall be integration of the armed forces to the point of having a common uniform by 1967? At the same time would the minister advise me whether he has completed his inquiries into the question of leaks in regard to the white paper, which I raised some two weeks ago.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the hon. gentleman has asked this question because it gives me an opportunity to correct the impression created by a newspaper story yesterday. It is true, as the press has reported, that the Department of National Defence considers July 1, 1967 as an acceptable target date for the unification of the three forces for planning purposes. I have said in the past that the integration to unification process would take approximately three to four years.

On the subject of uniforms, however, it will be some time before we start considering this matter. In the meantime there are more urgent tasks to be undertaken. A planning group is now working out the plans for the new single defence staff. Once legislation has been passed and the single defence staff is in existence, it will start to work on the formation of the headquarters organization, followed by the integration of field command organizations. So there is much work to be done before consideration can be given to the subject of uniforms.

I have no doubt, however, that the new defence staff will eventually study this matter, particularly the problem of utilizing present investments, both private and public, in uniforms and also the preservation of valued traditions. I am well aware of the great pride that service personnel, both regular and reserve, have in their uniforms, and there will be no decisions taken without full consideration of all the factors involved.

Mr. Lambert: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to take it from the reference to unification that the minister intends there shall be one defence force, or one armed force in this country, and there will be no distinction among the present three services or any of the units thereof?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I made it quite clear—and this is set out in the white paper—that the integration of the defence staff is the first step toward a single unified defence force for Canada.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, would the minister please answer the second portion of my question, as to whether he has yet been able to plug the leaks in so far as the white paper and other matters are concerned.

Mr. Hellyer: This matter is quite well under control, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister about something which does not appear in his white paper. Once integration has been completed, is it the ultimate intention to retain the positions of chief of the naval staff, chief of the general staff and chief of the air force under the head of the chief of all integrated services?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not the intention to retain those positions, and this will be set out in legislation to be presented to the house by the government I think either today or tomorrow.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. In answer to the hon. member for Edmonton West he indicated that the leaks within the Department of National Defence had been brought under control. Would the minister undertake to remove these leaks?

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that in accordance with the recommendations of the Glassco commission we are proposing to establish an integrated information service, which I think will be of benefit not only to the members of this house but to the whole Canadian nation.

PUBLICATIONS

EXEMPTION FROM SALES TAX OF "READER'S DIGEST" AND "TIME"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the right hon. gentleman advise us whether it is the intention of the government to proceed with the legislation in its original form with respect to the tax exempt position of two publications, Reader's Digest and Time magazine, or whether, as I indicated yesterday to the Minister of Finance, there have been pressures brought to bear on the government which might lead to the modification of its program?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The intention of the government in connection with this matter of policy will be quite clear when the legislation on this subject is introduced in the house.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—REPORTED ONTARIO INTENTION NOT TO PARTICIPATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if he is now in a position to answer the question I put to him yesterday with reference to the statement that had just been made by Premier Robarts concerning the Canada pension plan. My question was:

> Can the Prime Minister say whether this differs from the understanding he had at the Quebec conference? Could he also say whether the federal government is still doing its best to persuade Ontario to stay in the Canada pension plan?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have now had an opportunity of reading the text, or at least a partial text, of what Mr. Robarts said as it appeared in the Globe and Mail, and there was nothing in that text which would warrant any change in the government's proposal to proceed with the Canada pension plan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the premier of Ontario, who apparently has not made up his mind on this matter, will feel that it will be in the best interests of the people of Ontario to participate in that plan, and anything we can do to convince him of that fact, we will be very happy to do.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister that is perhaps partially supplementary to the one he answered a few minutes ago. Has the premier of Ontario had any communication with the federal government during the last few days indicating that he intends to set up a provincial pension plan?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is prepared to offer the provinces a greater share of the investment funds, as this seems to be the major objection mentioned in Premier Robart's speech of a few hours ago?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we have put forward our own proposals in this and other respects. After consideration of the views of the provinces those proposals will be considered by the committee of parliament if and when that committee gets the bill, and I hope it will shortly. All these things can be considered in detail at that time.

POWER

PEACE RIVER—APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works, but in his absence I will address it to the parliamentary secretary. Can the parliamentary secretary tell the house whether an application has been received for a licence under the terms of the Navigable Waters Protection Act with respect of the Peace river in British Columbia and, if so, has a licence been granted and to whom?

Mr. G. Roy McWilliam (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice and bring it to the attention of the minister.

BROADCASTING

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Could he tell us when he proposes to announce to the house the setting up of a committee on radio broadcasting and television? Also, could he tell us exactly what kind of committee he intends to form in order to inquire into that matter?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I intend to make a statement in that regard as soon as possible.

Mr. Gregoire: That is no answer.

[Text]

HOUSING

AID TO URBAN RENEWAL—EXTENT OF APPLICATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Will federal government aid for urban renewal areas, such as the Alexandra Park plan announced by the minister yesterday, include any N.H.A. or equivalent loans to the home and business owners whose premises will require to be rehabilitated?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the announcement made yesterday, my announcement was restricted to what is possible under existing legislation. The type of aid the hon. member is asking about is not possible under existing legislation. The matter is under study, and when government policy has been determined it will be announced.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR INCREASED NUMBER OF CANADIAN TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he tell us whether the secretary general or any other official of the United Nations has asked the government to increase the strength of the Canadian force in Cyprus?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since this matter is being discussed with the U.N. secretary general at present, I am not in a position to provide the hon. member with an answer.

Mr. Martineau: Am I to understand that the government is in touch with the secretary general at present concerning this request?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Our ambassador to the United Nations had an interview with the secretary general this morning, but he has not yet reported to me.

[Text]

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR DISCLOSURE OF DIRECTIVES TO PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is in two parts. First of all, has the government of the United Kingdom, through its minister of defence or its foreign secretary, requested the secretary general of the United Nations to make public the directives to the United Nations force in Cyprus? Second, has the Secretary of State for External Affairs himself made such a request to the secretary general of the United Nations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question, in so far as I know, is no, and the answer to the second part of the question is no.

Mr. Nesbitt: May I ask a supplementary question. Does the minister not think that the secrecy of these regulations or directives to the United Nations force encourages the Greek Cypriots to make dangerous experiments with the United Nations forces to see just how far they can go?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The answer to that question is no.

KOREA—REPORTED TRANSMISSION OF MILITARY INFORMATION TO CHINESE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell us whether he was aware, when he was secretary of state for external affairs at the time of the Korean war, of diplomatic intrigues to forward General MacArthur's plans of attack to red China through Great Britain, while our Canadian soldiers were fighting and dying in Korea?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am not aware of any such move, Mr. Speaker, and the reports have already been condemned as false by the British foreign office and by officials in Washington.

CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP IN ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he tell the house about the possibility for Canada to initiate negotiations of some sort with the Organization of American States? Can he tell us also whether representations from this organization have been made to the Canadian government?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is definitely the type of question which should be on the order paper. If I am not mistaken it has been asked once or twice before this session.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LANGLOIS—SPEECH BY TRANSPORT MINISTER RESPECTING HOUSE RULES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in connection with an article appearing in this morning's Montreal Gazette relating to the statement of the Minister of Transport to the Canadian association of broadcasters. The Minister of Transport said publicly that parliament was a complete failure, and he seemed to accuse everyone and everything in it, including the opposition, its procedures and so on and so forth, except himself and the government. To be more specific, he outlined a series of reforms which he feels should bring some sort of order out of chaos. He wants to abolish appeals from rulings of the Speaker, to allow procedural changes without unanimous consent, to ration the time allowed to most debates, and to reform the question period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, this would be a very good reform, but I am wondering whether the Minister of Transport would go along with it. The point I want to make is that the Minister of Transport, instead of making a declaration of that kind to the public, should speak about the matter first to the house and try to get reform on the part of all members, instead of trying to put the blame on the opposition when there is blame on the other side also.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since my name has been drawn into this perhaps I might be allowed to say that I made a speech in Quebec yesterday without having a text. I made it to broadcasters and being broadcasters, they made a tape of it. I am going to have a transcript made, as soon as possible, and I will send it to the hon. gentleman and to any other hon. member who wants to see it. I hope the hon. member for Megantic will support the suggestions I made in that speech.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me we have spent enough time on this subject.

Mr. Langlois: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, just for clarification may I say I am willing to accept it if the Minister of Transport will also accept his own suggestions.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the matter raised by the hon. member for Megantic causes me to ask a couple of questions of the Secretary of State, for after all questions are answered within three days in the United Kingdom instead of having to wait almost an eternity, as has become the custom lately in this house. Why is it that ten orders for returns directed by the house at the last session have not been brought down? I seem to recall that on February 25 the minister said he would see whether he could table the remaining orders for returns not then made to the house. In spite of the long period that has intervened since February 25 we are in the same position of being denied information that we should have.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly make inquiries immediately and try to satisfy the right hon. gentleman as soon as possible.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET REPORTED INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister inform the house regarding any steps taken or contemplated relative to the alarming increase in the cost of living of 2.5 points as of March 1, 1964 as compared with the same date one year earlier?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, government policy in this matter will be announced on an appropriate occasion. The government is doing everything a government can do to keep the country prosperous, which is the best way of keeping the cost of living down.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he indicate in a general way whether positive steps will be taken to help the population meet the increased cost of living which reached a peak during February?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: If I answered that question I should be participating in the budget debate.

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does the right hon. gentleman's reference to the budget and the increase in the cost of living indicate an assertion that the budget has contributed to the increase in the cost of living?

Mr. Pearson: The increased economic activity of Canada under this government has undoubtedly increased the pressures on the cost of living.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So we have inflation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF NOVA SCOTIA HOCKEY TEAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour as the minister from Nova Scotia. Is he aware of the fact that the Windsor Maple Leafs hockey team, champions of eastern Canada, are in the gallery on the road to the Allan cup; and will the minister agree with me that by winning the Allan cup they will be making Nova Scotia's usual contribution toward strengthening confederation?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the presence of this outstanding hockey team in the gallery. My hon. friend's question allows me to make at least one non-controversial statement in the house, namely that every member of the house wishes this team success on Friday.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STATEMENT BY MONTREAL MAYOR RESPECTING CO-OPERATIVE FEDERALISM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

The mayor of Montreal, Mr. Jean Drapeau, stated yesterday on television that he did not know what co-operative federalism was, and also that he did not believe the public could understand what it was all about. Would the Secretary of State explain to the house what constitutes the substance of the government's policy on federal-provincial relations? In brief, would he define co-operative federalism?

Mr. Pigeon: Here is the answer; it is a fiasco.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a very interesting statement, but I do not think the Secretary of State should be called upon at this time.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING SECOND ROUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works about a subject that has lapsed into obscurity recently. Is the minister in a position to report to the house about the progress, or lack of it if that is the case, that is being made in discussions with the various provinces on a proposed second trans-Canada highway?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice and some time next week I might make a statement.

[Later:]

Mr. Charles J. M. Willoughby (Kamloops): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Public Works following the question put by the hon. member for Skeena. Unfortunately I could not make myself heard at the time. I would now ask the minister this. In view of the fact that several weeks ago he suggested to this house that at the federal-provincial conference there would be a discussion on the possibility of co-ordinating plans for further trans-Canada highways, was this subject discussed at the conference?

Mr. Deschatelets: If I remember well, I said a few weeks ago that it would be inadvisable for me to make any statement before the federal-provincial conference took place. As I said in reply to a question a few minutes ago, some time next week I shall make a statement which will cover all aspects of this question.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that several mayors of the western region of the Lake St. John county are sitting in the galleries, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour, for their information, whether he intends to extend the winter works program in the areas designated as distressed areas, so that they may complete their projects?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I replied to that question yesterday and I have nothing to add to what I said at that time, namely that the matter would be given consideration.

BASIS FOR FIGURES RESPECTING NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Cote (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour; he is certainly kept very busy this afternoon.

Can the Minister of Labour tell the house if the official unemployment figures take into account some 600,000 citizens on social welfare who are also, for the most part, unemployed people living in hardship?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): May I just say that the sample survey covers a sample of Canadians from which is derived a total reflecting the number of persons in the labour force who are willing to work and who are out of work. That is the best figure we have, and it is somewhat different from the figure mentioned by the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Can the Minister of Labour tell us why he does not use the figures released each month by the unemployment insurance offices throughout the country, which give the exact number of unemployed they have on their hands? Why does not his department use those figures which are accurate and not just guesswork?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: There was a good deal of discussion on this matter some years ago, and I think it has been accepted by the house that the figures to be used are the dominion bureau of statistics figures based on the sample survey. It is obvious that the figures which are released by the unemployment insurance commission reflecting active claims in a particular period are not an accurate measure of unemployment. Other factors obviously enter into it; persons who claim benefits and take jobs before they collect benefits, and so on. The figure that has been accepted is the dominion bureau of statistics figure, and these others are used for other purposes.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—INQUIRIES RESPECTING ACTIVITIES OF TRUSTEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I should like at this time to provide information in reply to a number of questions asked this week concerning the activities of the board of trustees in the maritime situation. These questions were raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the hon. member for Ontario.

The first question concerns the integration of the seamen's union. The trustees have indicated that they do not favour the integration of licensed personnel in the S.I.U. To the contrary, they endorse the recommendations of Hon. Mr. Justice Norris that officers be separated from other personnel. They would favour the integration of engineers with other ships' officers if the engineers and other officers so desire. The trustees would favour integration of unlicensed personnel into one union, again only if the unlicensed personnel so desired. In this respect they endorse the recommendations of Hon. Mr. Justice Norris as to integration. The trustees do not favour any integration against the will of the seamen concerned. Hon. members will recall that there are provisions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act governing representation questions concerning unlicensed and officer personnel.

Another question raised concerned the "do not ship" list. There was no "do not ship" list in existence when the trustees were appointed, and there is not one now. Members of the trustees staff have been endeavouring to locate persons who at one time had been placed on the "do not ship" list and, where it appears they are interested, are asking them if they wish their case investigated. The trustee representatives in the hiring halls will see that the "do not ship" practice is not revived.

I have discussed with the trustees the suggestion made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that they meet with the industrial relations committee of the house. The trustees have carefully considered this suggestion and feel that a meeting with this committee at this time would prejudice their efforts to achieve the objectives defined by the Maritime Transportation Unions Trustee Act. This is particularly so since much of the information in their possession is felt by the trustees to be the property of the unions they represent. The trustees naturally understand and appreciate the interest shown by members of the house in the carrying out of the difficult tasks with which they are charged.

Finally there is the question concerning hiring halls, raised by the hon. member for Ontario. The methods of hiring are governed by law, collective agreements and the constitution of the union in question. As indicated earlier, the trustees have placed a representative in each hall who will endeavour to see that prescribed hiring arrangements are fairly followed, and the trustees will make suggestions for changes in the collective agreements and in the union constitution in this regard.

With regard to the specific question which the hon. member for Ontario posed, I understand a full member of the S.I.U. of Canada does have the privilege of accepting or refusing a particular referral. This privilege does not extend at present to probationary members. The rules governing these matters are now under review by the trustees and the unions.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): May I ask a supplementary question in respect of the last answer regarding hiring halls. Does the employer have the same privilege of rejecting an employee where a referral from the hiring hall is concerned?

Mr. MacEachen: I believe this would be covered by the specific agreement, but I will get this information.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the Minister of Labour if it is an oversight that there is nothing in his statement today regarding Mr. McLaughlin taking over the headship of the S.I.U.?

Mr. MacEachen: No; I have attempted to answer every question that was left unanswered at the close of proceedings two days ago.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Yesterday it was brought to the attention of the Minister of Labour that members of the rights and welfare committee of the S.I.U. were protesting strongly against the appointment of Mr. McLaughlin to the position he is to be appointed to. Has the minister anything to say with regard to this, and what action does he intend to take in regard to the trustees' decision?

Mr. MacEachen: Yesterday, as the hon. member for Red Deer points out, members of the house, including the hon. member for Lake St. John and the hon. member for Fraser Valley, raised questions concerning a telegram which was sent to me by S.I.U. members of the rights and welfare committee, signed by Michael Sheehan, John J. Wood and Omer Boudreau, directors of the committee. To my knowledge these persons are not currently members of the S.I.U. and the first one, I understand, is a member of the C.M.U. However, I have replied to this telegram and have pointed out to the persons signing it that these are matters for the board of trustees.

The only observation I could make at the present time on the contents of the telegram is that while the trusteeship act does permit certain action to be taken regardless of the constitutions of the maritime unions, it does not permit the constitution of any maritime union to be scrapped.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, as a further supplementary question, since the minister has told us the trustees do not think this would be a good time for them to discuss these matters with the industrial relations committee of this house, do the minister and the government share that view, or do they not think that perhaps the information that could be given would be illuminating to members of the house and therefore worth while?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this matter very carefully with the chairman of the board of trustees and with Mr. Millard, who undertook the negotiations in the recent crux, and it is the unanimous view of the trustees that a public appearance before a committee of the house would involve discussion of matters which at the present time would, in their view, prejudice their work as members of the board of trustees.

Having discussed that matter with the trustees I am bound to agree with them that at present it would not be in the interests of a solution of this problem to have that kind of situation develop. I do, of course, reserve the right to raise this question later on when these same circumstances may not prevail.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister in this connection whether the Banks McLaughlin "no ship" blacklist is still being followed. In addition, are those seamen who are on that blacklist still being denied employment on lake shipping?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the trustees advise me that when they took over there was no such list in existence. One of their staff is making every effort to right any injustice that may have been caused to a person whose name was placed on such a list, and any person who has a grievance in this connection is invited to come forward and have the matter clarified by the trustees.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister for that answer, but I would point out to him that last evening in Montreal I was informed that there are in fact seamen who are still being denied employment because of their absence from the list of those whom Mr. Banks and Mr. McLaughlin felt should have employment. I hope the minister will look into this, because this would simply mean a continuance either under Banks, McLaughlin, or the board of trustees of major wrongs that caused an intolerable situation.

Mr. MacEachen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly say the board of trustees are anxious to uproot any vestige of this d.n.s. list. If there is any member of the S.I.U. with a grievance in this connection he ought to come forward, either to the Minister of Labour or the board of trustees, and every effort will be made to right any injustice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And in this uprooting process I ask the minister does he not think that if McLaughlin carries on in the position of the president of the union, all the evils of the Banks regime will still continue?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. McLaughlin, if and when he succeeds to the presidency, will be under the close supervision of the board of trustees.

Mr. Knowles: With regard to the matter of the trustees appearing before the industrial relations committee, would it not be the prerogative of that committee to decide whether or not to summon them to appear before it? Will the minister not consider arranging for a meeting of the industrial relations committee so that it can make the decision?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would not wish to answer the procedural question which the hon. member raised without further consideration, but I am sure he would agree it is important at this particular stage of the matter that the views of the trustees be carefully considered by members of the house—

Mr. Knowles: This is a two way street.

Mr. MacEachen: —because it would be our wish to allow them, at this stage, to have a considerable amount of latitude with respect to matters which they are not in a position to discuss publicly. I have nothing to add to the statement I made earlier, and I must accept at this stage the views put forward by the trustees.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as a further supplementary question I would like the minister to tell us whether the officers of the all-Canadian unions now coming under the jurisdiction of the maritime trustees have expressed their satisfaction with the preference shown for Mr. McLaughlin by the trustees.

Mr. MacEachen: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): As a further supplementary question to the Minister of Labour, are the trustees, in permitting the S.I.U. constitution to be carried out in the replacement of Banks by McLaughlin, fulfilling any arrangements made with Paul Hall?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, two days ago I promised the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam I would table copies of the joint statement issued by Mr. Charles Millard and Mr. Paul Hall, and I shall do so now if I have permission. This request was made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and if I have permission to table a copy the answer to that question will be contained in the statement, which the hon. member could study.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to the tabling of the said document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Labour. If Mr. McLaughlin is to succeed Hal Banks in the presidency of the S.I.U., thus continuing the regime of Hal Banks, does the minister sincerely think that seamen with grievances about the "do not ship" list will come forward and declare openly what they think?

Mr. Speaker: I hardly think the minister can be called upon to answer that question. It is in the nature of a hypothetical question, and I believe the situation has been made clear this afternoon.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

OTTAWA—SUGGESTED DEDICATION OF HEADQUARTERS BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chretien (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State?

Since construction of the C.B.C. headquarters is practically completed in Ottawa, has the corporation taken a decision concerning the possibility of dedicating that building to the memory of John F. Kennedy, as I suggested last December?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the C.B.C. has made a decision in that connection but I shall inquire and report back to the hon. member.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Has the Secretary of State received suggestions concerning a specific name to be given to that building?

Mr. Lamontagne: I should like the hon. member to repeat the last part of his question which I did not hear.

Mr. Langlois: Has the minister received suggestions concerning a specific name to be given to that building?

Mr. Lamontagne: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It does seem to me this is the type of question which should be placed on the order paper. It illustrates how time can be used for, shall I say, better purposes.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Now that all the flowers have gone away, will the Prime Minister interpret for our benefit the interesting new parliamentary theory expounded by the Minister without Portfolio yesterday that "a private member has no right to question the word of a minister and more particularly what I", meaning the Minister without Portfolio, "said".

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): It is well known, of course, that one member in this house accepts the word of another whether he is a minister or not.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

MONTREAL—AMOUNT STOLEN IN MAIL TRUCK ROBBERY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Could he tell the house whether it is true that the loss following the theft of a mail truck in Montreal, on March 31 last, will amount to $2 million?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): There is little more to report at this time, except that the investigations are continuing. The amount involved is very substantial. It is not $2 million but it is still very substantial. The investigating staff of the Post Office Department are working closely with the police, and measures have been taken which it is hoped will prevent recurrence of such thefts. However, the investigation has not reached a stage at which we can make any definite statement at this time.

I can assure the hon. member and the house that this matter is receiving very close attention, and as soon as we have the detailed information a statement will be made. The amount involved is perhaps in the vicinity of half the amount mentioned by the hon. member, or perhaps a little more. I think it might be somewhere in the vicinity of $600,000 to $800,000, possibly more.

POSTMASTERS ACTING AS AGENTS FOR NEWSPAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. I have in my hand a circular received by a Regina resident from the Winnipeg Free Press seeking a renewal of subscription. At the bottom it says "Your Postmaster is our agent and will be glad to forward your renewal to us." My question is, are postmasters permitted to act as agents for newspapers?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): I hope not. I will take the question as notice and will certainly look into it.

POLICY RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION OF SMALL POST OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, on March 31 and again on April 3 the hon. member for Oxford during my absence from Ottawa asked the Acting Postmaster General, partly in that capacity and partly in his capacity as Minister of Public Works, some questions regarding the winter works program as it affected small post offices. He referred particularly to a letter which I had written to him and he questioned the Minister of Public Works regarding it.

I think, with respect, that if the hon. member had read the last two paragraphs of my letter, the answer is contained in those two paragraphs. What was referred to in those two paragraphs was the extended winter works program announced by the Minister of Labour last fall, it has nothing to do with the winter works program that has been in force over a period of years. It referred to the extended winter works program that was being terminated as of the end of April. There has been no change in the other program. When post offices are needed, if they fit in with the winter works program the Department of Public Works will be advised. This letter referred to the extended winter works program and nothing more.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Postmaster General can enlighten the house by telling us what is the difference between the extended winter works program and the original one.

Mr. Nicholson: I would be glad to answer that question, Mr. Speaker, but it might take some time.

Mr. Starr: Go ahead.

Mr. Speaker: I have no desire to cut off the Postmaster General, but questions are supposed to be urgent, pressing and of a type not capable of being put on the order paper.

COMBINES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—SALE OF MEAT PACKING COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Yesterday I undertook to answer a question by the hon. member for Skeena which revived a question he had put some time ago asking whether the Minister of Justice was aware of the circumstances involved in the sale of Pacific Meat Company to another company and the agreement made by Pacific Meat Company and the principals in the process of that sale, and whether a study could be made to determine whether there is an infraction of the Combines Investigation Act.

I should like to say in reply that the director is aware of the situation and can be expected to take any action under the Combines Investigation Act which the statute may require. The general practice, however, is that no information is given out as to whether a particular inquiry is being pursued unless and until a report is published. However, I may add—because this is general policy with the combines branch—that whether or not a formal inquiry is undertaken, the director of investigation and research examines all mergers such as the one in question here.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR COMMENT ON SPEECH BY PROFESSOR LASKIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Has the attention of the right hon. gentleman been drawn to the speech of Professor Bora Laskin, a leading authority on constitutional law, delivered before the Port Arthur Canadian club and reported in today's issue of the Montreal Gazette? If so, would he care to comment on that address?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, sir, I have no knowledge of that speech.

SHIPPING

EFFECT OF LOW WATER LEVELS IN GREAT LAKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is the minister prepared to make a statement with respect to his findings concerning water levels on the great lakes?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Our branch officials concerned are finding this a very complex matter. A complete statement is being prepared, and it will be of such length that I think I shall be asking the house to agree that it be printed without being read. However, it is not completed yet.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS, QUEBEC—CONSULTATIVE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Prime Minister a question concerning the setting up of the commission between the federal and Quebec governments, which he said he would take as notice. I wonder whether he can answer it today.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: Then I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the ultimatum that Mr. Rene Levesque has laid down in these terms:

> We will never accept a referendum to help a bunch of hypocrites get the answer they want.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In view of the lateness of the hour may I suggest to the experienced hon. member that he pose his question succinctly.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, had Your Honour not risen it would have been finished by now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Nielsen: Having regard to that ultimatum by Mr. Levesque, I wonder whether the Prime Minister will say if his government intends to consult with the Eskimos as to the setting up of this commission and as to a general agreement regarding the takeover.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this question has already been dealt with, and the supplementary estimates of this department will be considered shortly. If past practice is any criterion, the house will be able to deal with this matter in the next three or four days.

FORT CHURCHILL, MAN.—TRAINING SCHOOL FOR ESKIMO CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister advise the house whether it is the intention of his department to conduct a vocational training school or a training school of any nature for Eskimo children at Fort Churchill, and when he expects this program may be instituted?

Mr. Speaker: I think this is a question for the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

SOYBEANS—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. As he is not in his seat perhaps I can direct it to the parliamentary secretary. Since we are now perilously close to the planting season, can we now have the government's policy in regard to the support price of soybeans for 1964, under the stabilization act?

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will have to bring this question to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Pigeon: Where is the minister?

TOBACCO—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR ONTARIO GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence perhaps the parliamentary secretary could answer it. Has any decision yet been reached concerning the requested assistance to tobacco growers in southwestern Ontario? I would emphasize that this is a very urgent matter indeed.

Mr. Speaker: I think this question fits into the same category of questions for the order paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Justice is still house leader I would like to pose a question to him in that capacity. Inasmuch as a number of committees studying very important matters at the last session recommended in their reports that they be reconstituted at the earliest possible moment in this session, can the Minister of Justice in his capacity as house leader now tell us whether the Conservative party has filed its list of members for the committees, so they can be established?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes, and the members will begin being named tomorrow.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HAIDASZ—ANNIVERSARY OF MASSACRE OF WARSAW GHETTO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, on a point of special privilege, in unison with voices in other democratic parliaments of the world I would like to bring to the attention of this house that today certain Canadian groups across Canada are commemorating the sad anniversary of the courageous uprising of the people of the Warsaw ghetto. It is to be stressed that six million Jews, men, women and children, lost their lives almost 20 years ago at the hands of nazi persecutors. It is hoped that the Canadian government will do everything in its power in the future to prevent such massacres and attempts at genocide.

SUPPLY

House again in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Royal Canadian Air Force—

35e. Operation and maintenance, $13,653,000.

The Chairman: Shall this vote carry?

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, is the associate minister going to provide the answer to the question I asked yesterday on this vote?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member asked whether any amount of money in this item pertains to the R.C.A.F. station at Saskatoon. The R.C.A.F. estimates do not usually provide specific amounts for the operation and maintenance of any particular station.

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair cannot hear the minister, and I am sure the hon. member for Rosthern cannot hear the reply being given.

Mr. Cardin: The R.C.A.F. estimates do not usually provide specific amounts for the operation and maintenance of any particular station. However, it is estimated that the operating costs associated with the station at Saskatoon amounted to $1,700,000 in the fiscal year 1963-64.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

1e. Departmental administration, $19,000.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether he can give me some of the details of the first item, "Professional and special services", in the amount of $11,000.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Chairman, if I might answer the hon. member on behalf of the minister, this item is to provide for legal services by a lawyer appointed by the Department of Justice to assist the Department of National Health and Welfare in the drafting of the proposed Canada pension plan legislation.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, speaking on the first item of this department I should like to say to the acting minister that I am sure all the people of Canada are extremely proud of the accomplishments of our Canadian Olympic hockey team, which was assisted financially to a certain extent by the advisory council on fitness and amateur sport. The splendid efforts which were put forth by Father Bauer and his hockey team in Europe were greatly appreciated by the people of Canada.

I should like to ask whether it is the intention of the department or of the advisory council to carry on this same type of program or policy which was adopted last year. At that time it was adopted on a one year basis so as to recruit a Canadian Olympic hockey team. I am sure many people in Canada would like to know whether this step is going to be followed up in preparation for the next Olympics four years hence, or whether the whole idea will be scrapped. I would heartily recommend that the advisory council be asked to give very strong consideration to carrying on with this program in order to prepare for a strong Canadian representation in the field of hockey at the next Olympic games.

Mr. Munro: I shall be pleased to bring to the attention of the minister the hon. member's point of view. I do not believe there is any intention of scrapping the idea.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I should like to deal with a few very important matters concerning the interprovincial games of 1966 which will be held in Quebec, and with some statements made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh). However, I will raise these later when the general estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare will be before us, because I think that will be a more appropriate time.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I wish to put a single question, or rather make a remark to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I referred recently to him a problem which had been called to my attention by the Saguenay association for the blind, inquiring about the possibility of obtaining, through his department, passes allowing the blind to travel free on C.N.R. trains within Canada.

Has the hon. member made inquiries in his department and would he be in a position to inform me in that regard?

[Text]

Mr. Munro: I am well aware of the representations made in this regard by the hon. member. The matter has been sent to the department for report. I have not yet received this report, but I will check into it again today and try and have the information for the hon. member before the end of the week.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have only one question to put to the parliamentary secretary. Could he tell us, and if he cannot do so today he could give me the information later by letter how many requests he received from the Quebec government regarding building plans submitted to Ottawa for the construction of new hospitals in the province of Quebec, but more particularly in St. Henri, in Montreal, and in the city of Joliette, where there is an urgent need for a hospital, as well as in the city of L'Assomption?

If the parliamentary secretary cannot give me this information today, I should be obliged if he would give it to me later, either by letter or in the house.

Mr. Munro: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

[Text]

I would be pleased to do that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few words on the Olympics, in regard to the bobsled team from Canada. I understand that the bobsled itself had to be brought from the Olympics by the Americans; otherwise the team appears to have received fairly good co-operation from the Canadian officials. I am just wondering whether in future consideration could be given to a little more co-operation with those who take the trouble which this team took to take part in the Olympics. There is more involved than appears on the surface, and certainly we should have brought their bobsled back instead of having the Americans do it.

Item agreed to.

25e—Health services, including assistance to the provinces—To authorize hospital construction grants to the provinces, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory upon the terms and in the amounts detailed in the estimates and under terms and conditions approved by the governor in council, $2,000,000.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary two or three questions with regard to hospital construction grants. First of all I would refer to the auxiliary hospital program initiated by the province of Alberta two or three years ago, the building program in connection therewith having stopped in the last few months. I want to know specifically whether the federal government have rescinded their grants to these auxiliary hospitals on the ground that they are not active treatment hospitals. If so, is this part of the reason that the Alberta program has been halted?

Second, there has been a considerable amount of pressure throughout the country for an increase in hospital construction grants, and I would appreciate knowing, as I know a lot of other people in the country would, whether the government is going to increase these grants.

Third, I should like to raise the question of construction grants for nurses' residences as they affect religious orders. I should like at some time a statement from the department with regard to their position in this matter and whether or not they consider these residences as they consider ordinary nurses' residences. If I could get these answers later I will be content.

Mr. Munro: I am sure every effort will be made to supply the hon. member with the answers on the main estimates. As to his second point on hospital grants, I believe a statement will be made tomorrow in the house.

Item agreed to.

30e. Medical services—operation and maintenance, $950,000.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary could give us a brief outline of these additional costs for medical services and so on.

Mr. Munro: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Of the total amount of $950,000, $650,000 is required for hospital, doctors' and other professional and special services. This is because funds are required to meet the higher costs of hospitalization for tuberculosis and medical care and physicians and surgeons fees. These higher expenditures are due to an epidemic of tuberculosis in the Northwest Territories around Eskimo Point and to a greater demand for services of physicians and dentists.

Mr. Monteith: And the transportation item of $150,000?

Mr. Munro: This is an amount which is required to meet expenditure in excess of the original allotment as indicated by the trend in current expenditure. The outbreak of tuberculosis at Eskimo Point in the Northwest Territories has necessitated transportation of patients to treatment centres. The greater demand for treatment and services particularly in remote areas is increasing these expenditures.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Customs and excise divisions—

5e. Inspection, investigation and audit services, $90,000.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to relate a certain matter to the committee and to the minister handling these estimates, especially as he is now minister responsible for this particular department. I want to refer to an exchange of correspondence, part of which is between myself and the minister's predecessor, the late Mr. Garland. It dates back to January of this year, when the Vancouver fishermen's settlement service wrote to the deputy minister of national revenue for taxation in Ottawa and pointed out certain anomalies that had arisen with respect to fishermen and the filing of income tax forms for certain years.

I think I can do no better than to read part of the text of the letter to the deputy minister in order to indicate initially what the problem was. The letter reads in part as follows:

[Mr. Munro.]

> On July 9, 1963 this office filed notices of objection with you with respect to the assessments of Andrew Karjala and Arthur Moffatt. Our objection was based on our contention that the method of averaging fishermen's tax, as set out in the Farmers' and Fishermen's Guide 1962, and on which the reassessment of the returns in question was based, was in error. To date we have had no reply to our notices of objection, although more than six months have elapsed. We now have the 1963 edition of the Farmers' and Fishermen's Guide, and also form T2011, and we note that both of these prescribe a new procedure for averaging, which leads to the same result as our original returns for Karjala and Moffatt, and which contradicts the reassessment of their returns.
> We can only assume, therefore, that although the department has not seen fit to respond to our notices of objection it has nevertheless concluded that our objection was correct and has amended its own forms and instructions accordingly. We note also that the new form T2011 was printed in October, which proves that the department had accepted our interpretation at least three months ago.

I received a copy of that letter, as did the hon. member for New Westminster. I took the course of sending a copy of the letter to the late Mr. Garland in his capacity as minister of the department and asked him to deal favourably with the contention raised in the letter of January 20, 1964, from the Vancouver fishermen's settlement service. I received an interim reply that the matter was under study; then under date of February 27, 1964 I received this communication from the late Mr. Garland:

> Further to my letter of 10th February, 1964, I am pleased to advise that in the case of the notices of objection filed by the Vancouver fishermen's settlement service the taxpayers will be allowed to calculate their taxes in accordance with the method set out in the 1963 edition of the Farmers' and Fishermen's Guide.

As of March 13 the Vancouver fishermen's settlement service had not received any communication from the minister to the effect that he agreed with their contention. I do not know the reason for the failure to answer, but I note that the same thing occurred before with respect to the original notices of objection, in that no reply was received.

In fact what has happened is that undoubtedly these two fishermen, Karjala and Moffatt, were not the only fishermen who filed income tax forms for the year 1962 as prescribed in the Farmers' and Fishermen's Guide. Undoubtedly many thousands of farmers in Canada as well as many hundreds of fishermen filed income tax declarations according to the 1962 guide, and undoubtedly many of them had their returns reassessed.

It seems to me that there may well be thousands of people in Canada who are not aware of the exact situation because the minister or the department have not communicated the specific information in any public way. Certainly they have not done so to the Vancouver fishermen's settlement service, which raised the matter in the first place. Therefore I would think there must be thousands of people in Canada who, on the basis of the erroneous method of calculation in the Farmers' and Fishermen's Guide for 1962, have paid countless dollars in taxes which they should not have paid because their returns were reassessed by the department.

I am sure if the farmers and fishermen of this country knew that the department or the minister had come to the conclusion that the reassessments made on the basis of the 1962 Farmers' and Fishermen's Guide were in fact in error they would like to have the opportunity to re-examine their position and to re-file in accordance with the revised interpretation contained in the 1963 edition, which was authorized as correct by the late minister, Mr. Garland, in February of this year in the letter he sent to me.

I only raise this matter in a public way to point out the situation and to ask the minister to see that the original notices of objection or letters from the Vancouver fishermen's settlement service are replied to; and perhaps to make a public declaration of what the fact is so that those farmers and fishermen who may have paid countless thousands of dollars in taxes which they should not have paid will have the opportunity to reassess their position and re-file their forms for that year. There has apparently been an error on the part of the Department of National Revenue, and the farmers and fishermen should have the opportunity to get back a few dollars for their own pockets.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, there are two questions raised here. One has to do with particular taxpayers. I have no knowledge whatever, of course, in that regard, and even if I did there might possibly be some impropriety on my part in mentioning it.

The second question is a general one arising from the particular cases to which reference has been made. I think the best answer I can give the hon. member is that I will have all aspects of the statement made today by the hon. member looked into to see exactly what should be done and what the situation is. That I will do right away.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to express my appreciation. I have known the minister for some time and when he says he will look into something I know he will. I am sure that the taxpayers concerned will be appreciative of his comment. When the minister completes his study of all the aspects and implications of this question, I wonder whether he would consider making a statement in the house as to his conclusions.

Mr. McIlraith: I am not sufficiently familiar with the subject matter to know whether it is one which could be dealt with by a statement on motions, but I will see that the information is made available by whatever the correct method may be.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I should like to comment briefly on item 5e, inspection, investigation and audit service, under which we are asked to vote an additional amount of $90,000 to be added to estimates of $5,388,000 already voted for the year 1963-64. Besides, I note that for 1964-65, the same item involves an increase of $3 million.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out to the house that if we must vote more public funds to have field investigators harass Canadian taxpayers and priests in their own homes only to collect a few paltry dollars, we are making a very poor investment.

I say that following a personal experience, because last year, I had to appear in certain cases where charitable donations receipts were simply turned down. However, I won something because the investigators had refused to recognize the validity of the receipts without even taking the trouble of going to the priest's house or seeing the taxpayers concerned. They simply turned down the receipts without further ado.

Mr. Chairman, if the government intends to increase travelling expenses, investigation expenses and the number of investigators, briefly, if it is to pay salaries or provide some kind of featherbedding for people who may be friends of some hon. members, I think we are remiss if we vote this item. Today, we are asked to vote another $90,000. If a good part of this amount is meant for the salaries or the expenses of some civil servants who did not discharge their responsibilities, I think we should consider the matter seriously.

I would point out, incidentally, that the government did not include in the new budget it brought down the measures it proposes to take in order to settle this problem which is a sort of nightmare for Canadian taxpayers, when the time comes to prepare their income tax return.

Item agreed to.

Taxation division—

20e. General administration, $70,000.

Mr. Thompson: I have two questions for the minister, one related to the item we have just passed and one related specifically to this item. One of the problems of the revenue department, which we all understand, is this question of making tax levies equitable. The dividing line is sometimes not easy to determine. There are two industries in Canada that I believe are suffering from inequitable decisions by the taxation department.

The first is the soft drinks industry. I found it rather difficult to speak to the late minister on this subject because he was so honest in his own approach to it he found it difficult to take a position other than that which had been common practice, because his own business background related to this industry. We have across this country a number of small industries producing soft drinks. Their product is subject to sales tax. Their chief competition comes from soft drinks that are made in the home, the constituents of which are purchased in food stores. I am thinking of Kool Ade and a number of other products of that type which are not subject to tax.

The increased cost of sugar and the increased cost of operations have put many of these small soft drink companies in a financial position where they are likely to go out of business. There is a limit to which they can raise the price of the product and they find it impossible to carry on in a profitable way because they have to pay sales tax on their product, which is in direct competition with a product which is not subject to tax.

This brings me to the second point which I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. It relates to fresh fruit juices that are imported in concentrated form in bulk packages and then reconstituted and sold mostly through our dairies. In examining this question we find that the canned concentrated fruit juice sold in food stores is not subject to tax, and neither is the powdered concentrate. Of course, fresh fruits are not subject to tax. However, when this same concentrated fruit juice comes into the country in bulk containers and is reconstituted it is subject to excise tax. This seems to be an inequitable situation.

It has been brought to my attention that some United States firms have completed large contracts with some of our large food distributing stores, particularly of the supermarket type, under which these stores are importing tax free reconstituted juice from the United States in 32-ounce containers. When our Canadian dairies import the same constituted juice that these United States companies are using and reconstitute it themselves, it is subject to tax. I think this is something about which we ought to be very careful because unnecessarily it results in a tremendous drain on United States dollars. If we imported the concentrated juice and packaged it here using our own labour, we would not only save foreign exchange but we would also give work to a number of our people. I mention this because I believe the government should look at the matter closely.

I hope the government will try to make the situation more equitable so far as the soft drink industry is concerned and will also give consideration to the question of these imported concentrated fruit juices. I am sure any action would be not only helpful to those who are interested in seeing that a greater amount of fruit is included in our diets, but it would also be more equitable treatment to an important part of the business community of this country.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Starr: I will forgo my question.

The Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Mr. Starr: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, as we are discussing the item concerning informative material, I would like to make a few remarks.

In a personal message from the late minister of national revenue of February 15, 1964, there were some indications as to the manner of preparing an income tax return. Having in mind the claims which are, from time to time, made by the taxpayers in Quebec in the hope that their existence will be recognized, I see that, in the last paragraph of the folder entitled "Do you need further information?", there is a list of district taxation offices. If we study the folder, we find that the province of Quebec has four such offices. Quebec city, Sherbrooke, Montreal and Rouyn.

On the other hand, the province of Ontario, with a population figure which is only one sixth larger than that of Quebec, has 11: Ottawa, Kingston, Belleville, Toronto, Hamilton, St. Catharines, Kitchener, London, Windsor, Sudbury and Fort William.

Those are names and also figures which are given to us directly by the Department of National Revenue, and if the Quebec people do not spend their time insisting and insisting again to get adequate representation, we arrive at conditions such as those described here, in the little bulletin of national revenue.

I believe in particular that the Saguenay-Lake St. John area, for instance, with a population of more than 300,000, might have a district income tax office. There are many other districts in the province of Quebec which might also justify an income tax office.

Mr. Chairman, I close my remarks by quoting the title of an editorial I read in Le Banlieusard of St. Foye, in my riding, and also in the Editorial, a newspaper of Beauport and the Beaupre country, with respect to charity receipts. I will just quote the title which reads as follows:

When governments subsidize lies.

Mr. Chairman, I feel the problem is important. I do not wish to labour the point but I should like to call the attention of all Canadians, and of the government in particular, on the slightly unequal number of taxation offices in Quebec and in Ontario. In fact, I might also speak of the other provinces; for instance, in British Columbia, where the population is much smaller than that of Quebec, there are at least three district taxation offices. In Alberta, where the population is quite small, there are two such offices just as in Saskatchewan.

I feel such an inequality should be set right.

Mr. Rynard: With respect to the question of concentrated orange juice, the acting minister probably does not know that this matter has been under study for some time. The hon. member for Simcoe North and I have had considerable correspondence on the subject, and it is under continuous survey.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The point raised by the hon. member for Red Deer with regard to the soft drinks situation deserves the most serious consideration by the government. He is to be commended for having brought it to the attention of the committee, so that an opportunity would be given to the government to look into this very important matter where each year soft drink manufacturers all across the country find themselves in an impossible situation.

However, I rise to deal with another matter which was raised during the question period yesterday. It concerns the distribution of application cards for social insurance numbers. Yesterday I asked for an unequivocal answer from the government that the information contained in these cards would not be made available to other departments of government, and I mentioned in particular the income tax department. I found it very difficult to get an answer.

I shall not read in full what was said, but as recorded at page 1918 of yesterday's Hansard the Minister of Labour replied:

I am not in a position to indicate at this stage what system of government record keeping will be involved in the future, but that is the present attitude of the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh; income tax, and so on?

Mr. Pearson: Certainly not.

Then after some other words I asked him:

—will he give the undertaking on behalf of the government that this information will not be made available to other departments of government?

This morning on the C.B.C., Mr. Blair Fraser, who speaks from time to time as a supporter of the government, unashamed and unchanging, chose the opportunity to make a personal attack on me. I am not going to answer that, except to say I seem to recall that throughout the years not only he, but also another parliamentary editor of Maclean's magazine, seemed to devote themselves unequivocally to the support of the Liberal party, whether right or wrong.

Indeed I recall back in 1957, at the time Mr. Fraser was connected with Maclean's magazine in a very intimate capacity, four or five days after the election an editorial appeared in that magazine applauding the return to office of the government of Mr. St. Laurent. That was one prophecy in which he and those associated with him were not right; and it was not the last.

I do not intend to go into the record today except to point out that the questions I asked were well founded. I asked whether this information would be made available to any other department, and I was unable to secure an answer. I now wish to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that as far back as August 21, 1963, a memorandum was sent out to all district officers of the administration branch of the Department of National Revenue, which in part read:

Although legislation concerning the proposed Canada pension plan cannot be considered until parliament reconvenes, this division—

—that is, the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue—

—which would perform an important administrative function in the implementation and continuing operation of the plan, is already involved in preliminary planning in the areas of coverage, enforcement and collection. In order that we may be ready to assume our full responsibility when legislation has been considered it is necessary that five positions at head office be filled immediately. These positions are one administrative officer 8 for the administrator (taxation), Canada pension plan and four administrative officer 6 for regional administrators (taxation), Canada pension plan.

I am informed that officials of the Department of National Revenue have sat in on the proceedings in connection with this pension plan, and it is a strange thing that these appointments should have been made before the legislation has even been considered by parliament. The internal competition was set up and appointments were made. I am not going to give the names of the officials who were appointed, but they are now in office working on numbering, payroll collection procedures, carrying out functions not as yet approved by parliament, and drawing salaries for performing that which has not been authorized.

I go no further at the moment than to say that in order to carry out payroll deduction procedures, collection, coverage and enforcement, these officials of the Department of National Revenue, taxation division, will have full access to all the data being compiled under this scheme. That is how serious the situation is, and no amount of trying to brush it aside can circumvent the fact that people are being asked to complete these forms and that the information contained in them will be available to these officials.

We are told Nelson put his telescope to his blind eye, but I am sure the Department of National Revenue, taxation division, having this information will find difficulty in emulating what Nelson achieved. That is why I brought this matter to the attention of the house yesterday.

Why is it necessary, before the pension scheme has received the authorization of parliament, to proceed in this way? Why should these forms be sent out to the province of Quebec, since notice has already been given that Quebec will not participate in the plan?

As the Prime Minister said today, he does not know what the attitude of Ontario will be. But the fact remains that until a decision in this regard is made, what is being done is improper. And everywhere across the country, no matter whether it is said in parliament that it is voluntary on the part of those who are now receiving or who may receive unemployment insurance, what is being done is most improper regimentation and should receive the strongest condemnation on the part of parliament.

I wanted to clear up the record in this regard. I again point out that the gratuitous efforts at personal attack on the part of Mr. Fraser, for which he is paid moneys supplied by parliament, are carrying political partisanship beyond what I think is proper and appropriate. While he is acting as editor of Maclean's magazine no one can take any umbrage, but when he chooses the C.B.C. for the purpose of attacking that which he does not understand, but which he must realize in his heart is a wrong understanding, then the reason for his attack becomes more definite and clear.

When I asked yesterday whether this information was going to be used, I had every reason to do so and Canadians have the right to a definite answer on the part of the government—not one of uncertainty, not one which does not clearly define the position in which the income tax branch will be, and the information which will be available to them.

Mr. McIlraith: The point raised by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency dealt, it seemed to me, with two matters. Part of his observations had to do with the substantive matter of taxation which, of course, is not germane to the estimates of the Department of National Revenue but is something more properly dealt with during the budget debate. The other part of the hon. member's remarks may relate solely to the administration, and in this regard I shall be glad to take particular account of what he had to say.

The Leader of the Opposition discussed at some length the political beliefs of the editor of Maclean's magazine—

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not what I was dealing with.

Mr. McIlraith: —and the action of that magazine during the 1957-58 campaign. I remember one particular edition of that magazine very well and I can only say to the right hon. gentleman that I have some sympathy for his feelings in that respect. However, he should have been very much relieved by the extremely good results he had in the 1958 election—results which should have made him overlook such a bad—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Prophecy?

Mr. McIlraith: —such a bad prophecy on the part of the magazine. I might perhaps refresh the right hon. gentleman's memory by telling him that I had a somewhat similar experience in Ottawa on that occasion, when representatives of all the publicity media went to a certain very large room in a hall which had been rented—a substantial hall, by the way, with a capacity for holding many thousands of persons—and the hall was left vacant all the evening except for an attached room where a certain person was, with a very few personal supporters and a very large number of boxes of luncheon sandwiches which were put to uses other than those for which they were intended when they were ordered the day before.

An hon. Member: Did you take them over?

Mr. McIlraith: No. For some reason or other they did not send the sandwiches over to where they would have been used. The red-faced public media representatives did not ever catch up, as a matter of fact. It is rather interesting. The television recorded some aspects of that location. In any event, I will not digress further into what happened on that occasion. Possibly this is not the occasion on which to do so. But I wish to let the Leader of the Opposition know that these things do happen at certain times in the course of certain elections.

The point the right hon. gentleman made about the forms is, undoubtedly, an important one. As a matter of fact, I was following it yesterday. Of course the Leader of the Opposition asked his question on the orders of the day, without notice, and it is the kind of question which should, perhaps, have been placed on the order paper so that a precise and carefully prepared answer might have been given. That accounts for part of the difficulty he has had.

But perhaps I should enter a caveat with regard to one other portion of the right hon. gentleman's remarks—the part having to do with personnel who prepare legislation for government action. As he well knows, in connection with a measure such as the Canada pension plan—and I do not wish to enter into a discussion of that subject—there are undoubtedly actuaries from various departments, such as the revenue department, lawyers from the Department of Justice, and others, who have spent a great deal of time on activities of this kind. Only minutes ago, dealing with the estimates of another department, the committee approved a fee for special counsel to assist in preparing certain complicated legislation. I am sure the house would be extremely critical of any government which chose to bring forward legislation of the magnitude and importance of the Canada pension plan, without having taken the appropriate preparatory steps so that the measure could reasonably be expected to go into operation if and when it received the approval of parliament. There is a very fine line to be drawn here.

The Leader of the Opposition has indicated that a government cannot spend any money before parliament has given its approval and, as a matter of principle, that is right. However, the government also has the responsibility of carrying out preparatory steps so that the measures submitted to parliament for approval may be properly drawn up, and, second, to place itself in a position where it is able to carry out the decision of parliament when a measure has been approved. It is in drawing the line that the difficulty arises.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister, but of course his answer does not apply to the situation. These people were appointed as a result of notices sent out last August. The legislation has not been passed by parliament. They are carrying out their duties and receiving salaries on the basis of those duties, but the duties have not yet become applicable. They are not in the position of those who are called upon in various departments to give expert advice.

While the minister answered in a nice, general way, the question remains: As Acting Minister of National Revenue, can he tell us whether this information will in any way be used by the Department of National Revenue, taxation division, in the days ahead? I am looking for an answer on that point.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not think I am in a position to give a categorical answer to that question at the moment, but if the right hon. gentleman wants to leave the question with me I shall put it in a form to which a thorough answer can be given. It is an important question and I shall be glad to follow it up.

Mr. Thompson: I count it an honour to be associated with my good friend, colleague and seatmate the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, but for the sake of the record I would remind the minister that I come from another beautiful part of the country. I refer to the foothills and parkland area called Red Deer.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: The Post Office Department.

Mr. Nielsen: Where did the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources escape to?

The Chairman: It was my understanding that it was the desire of the government to go on to the Post Office Department, but do I understand now that they are willing to go on with the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it northern affairs, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Yes, northern affairs; vote No. 1e.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

1e. Departmental administration—To extend the purposes of vote 1 of the main estimates, 1963-64, to authorize payment of a contribution to the Canadian council of resource ministers in an amount equal to one half the aggregate contribution of the provinces but not exceeding $32,000 and to provide a further amount of $53,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, this particular section dealing with departmental administration makes it possible to discuss and summarize in general the arguments that have been advanced on a number of occasions by hon. members on either side of the house with regard to the Eskimos in northern Quebec. I think the house owes a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for Northwest Territories who, knowing the conditions of the Eskimo to a degree that no other white man has ever known finds himself a representative of theirs in parliament, to the hon. member for Yukon with his wide knowledge, as well as the hon. members for Pontiac-Temiscamingue and Peace River. The representations of these hon. members deserve the serious consideration of the minister and of parliament. Indeed, this is a matter so serious in its import that the Prime Minister himself should make clear the views of the government.

I am not entering into any difficulties as between the federal government and the provincial government of Quebec but I am joining with the hon. gentlemen who have spoken to express the strongest condemnation of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, which in what it has done even to date shows a disregard for an aboriginal people that cannot be justified. Eskimos are not serfs; they are not political captives or pawns to be shoved about at the will or the whim of a government or governments. They are Canadians.

I read the other day with a great deal of interest the views expressed by the minister in an address at St. Catharines. That address was filled with the wisdom that comes from years of experience in public life. The heading is, "Laing says Canada is envy of world". The minister said in this speech:

> Canada is the envy of the world, a country everyone outside its boundaries thinks is a superb place and whose future only those inside our boundaries doubt.

He was speaking to the south Ontario Liberal association. Then he made some observations, when he got away from national issues, and said this:

> Our entire safety lies in a government of laws, and not men.

Never were truer words spoken by him. I am going to ask him to carry out the terms of the great principles that he enunciated. I will read what he said again:

> Our entire safety lies in a government of laws, and not men.

What have we here? Have we a government, in so far as the Eskimos are concerned, of laws, not men? Can these people, who are within the sole jurisdiction of the federal parliament, be transferred, bartered away, whatever the terms, to another legislative body? Where is the constitution of this country, if this can be done? Are they to be mandatorily, and without regard to their feelings, transported into another jurisdiction? What would happen if any group of Canadians that was exclusively under the jurisdiction of a province was transferred to another jurisdiction? Can it be done?

Well, Mr. Chairman, I have before me the only recent case dealing with the subject of the transfer of jurisdiction, administrative or otherwise. I shall refer to it after first referring to the case to which various hon. members have alluded. That is the case decided in 1939; it was a reference as to whether the term "Indians" in head 24 of section 91 of the British North America Act—

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, would the right hon. Leader of the Opposition mind giving me the reference to the case again?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am just coming to that. It was a reference as to whether the term "Indians" in head 24 of section 91 of the British North America Act, which gives exclusive jurisdiction to the federal government, includes Eskimo inhabitants of the province of Quebec. It is to be found in the Canada Supreme Court Reports, 1939, at page 104 and following. This is a very interesting situation. In 1939 the province of Quebec contended that it was not right or legal or constitutional for the government of Canada to give the government of Quebec the responsibility to look after the Eskimos in that province. They claimed that this responsibility could not be placed on their shoulders. The government of Canada argued that an Eskimo was not an Indian and that therefore the exclusive jurisdiction over Indians did not apply to Eskimos.

I am not going to read from the case, except to point out that it is a most interesting one. One goes back as far as 1763, and on the 8th day of June of that year a discussion took place concerning the trade carried on by the French on the coast of Labrador. With regard to that discussion it is reported that they carried on "an extensive trade with the Eskimo Indians in oil, furs, etc. (in which they allowed Your Majesty's subjects no share)". Then later on Sir Hugh Palliser referred to the Eskimos as Indians. On April 10, 1772, Governor Shuldham referred to them as the Eskimo Indians. And so on throughout the years.

The Hudson's Bay Company made a full investigation regarding the peoples under their jurisdiction and came to the conclusion that the proper description of the Eskimo was within the classification of "Indian". Finally in 1879 correspondence passed between Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Hector Langevin on the subject of the Eskimo on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, and throughout the correspondence "Eskimo Indians" is employed as a description, as it had been employed for 100 years in official and other documents.

The interesting situation was this. The province of Quebec said, "The Eskimos belong to you". The government of Canada of that day said, "No, the Eskimos do not belong to us and we are not responsible for them". They fought the case, and the Supreme Court of Canada held that Eskimos came within the descriptive word "Indians". So the government, the parliament of Canada, has exclusive jurisdiction; and in these days of constitutional discussion the government of Canada is the first in this regard to brush aside the constitution, to deny their exclusive jurisdiction and, under the guise of pretending that what they are doing is entering into an agreement, they would turn over the administration to a jurisdiction that has no right to exercise any power over these people, beyond the usual powers that a province has over subjects or people within its boundaries.

In order to do this the minister says, "We can enter into an agreement with the province". I am most anxious to hear the opinion of the law officers of the crown in this connection. I say that no reading of the judgment in the case of the attorney general of Nova Scotia and the attorney general of Canada reported in 1951 Canada Supreme Court Reports, page 31, can lead one to believe that the parliament of Canada or the government of Canada can by a simple agreement get rid of, transfer, assign or sublet any of its exclusive jurisdiction. While I do not usually read the headnote alone, I am going to do so on this occasion, Mr. Chairman. Every lawyer knows that it is always most important to read all the case rather than just the headnote, but the headnote does epitomize the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. It reads:

> The parliament of Canada and each provincial legislature is a sovereign body within its sphere, possessed of exclusive jurisdiction to legislate with regard to the subject matters assigned to it under section 91 or section 92, as the case may be.

This is the important thing. The province of Nova Scotia thought it could transfer some jurisdiction to the federal parliament:

> Neither is capable therefore of delegating to the other the powers with which it has been vested nor of receiving from the other the powers with which the other has been vested.

There is just no question about this. All the evasive uncertainty that has been displayed in this matter does not take cognizance of the fact that the parliament of Canada or the government of Canada cannot deal with fellow Canadians in a cavalier, unjust manner without regard to their views. There has been a suggestion here that a referendum might take place on the basis of the 1951 case. No matter what the referendum might declare, this act could not be justified, under the authority to which I have referred. I cannot understand this. These are aboriginal people in a country which has undertaken not only the responsibilities inherent in the bill of rights but is a member of the United Nations, and Canada intends by this action to breach the greatest principle of all.

I have listened to the argument in this connection, and the more I look at the minister of northern affairs the more I am convinced that he is convinced he has a most unsalutary job on his hands, that of trying to explain why this action is justified. As a matter of fact, in light of principles such as he enunciated in that speech, embodying as they do his views throughout his life as I have known it for many years, in his own heart he cannot justify this. I raise it to a level higher than an emotional one; I raise it to the constitutional level. The government cannot do this; they dare not do this. They cannot take people like this and shove them around as pawns in order to meet the needs of the moment.

I go further than that. Even if they agreed to this it would not be within the constitutional limitations defined bv the 1951 case. It would be a case of self-determination. I have heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs speaking of self-determination somewhere else in the world. What about trying it in Canada? In this case, even though the government determine upon this course the constitution will not allow it, if I read the case in 1951 aright, and there has been no challenge that I am reading it wrongly.

Now, Mr. Chairman, why is this the case? I presume it is because the government felt these people would be voiceless serfs. In other words, they would have no one to speak for them. But they have in the person of the hon. member for Northwest Territories and other members. The minister has not denied something he was asked the other day. He was asked whether or not, when he saw the Eskimos, he did not find them opposed to this action. He did not deny that, and the interpretation of his failure to deny it becomes very clear.

I am not resting the case of these people on the basis of any arguments as between the government of Canada and the desires of any province. I am resting it on the constitutional right of these people to have their rights respected by parliament. How are we going to justify this? Today we hear more and more, and in stronger terms than ever before, that the constitution must be maintained. Yet at the very time this is going on these poor people on the shores of the Arctic are being told that the constitution belongs to others but not to them. That is in effect what they are being told, and the government cannot justify this. Strong arguments on the law have been made by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue. He pointed out the circumstances and he pointed out the law.

We cannot get any information. I am going to ask, Mr. Chairman, a few questions and we will want answers to these questions before this item dealing with these poor untutored fellow Canadians passes. Are negotiations now going on between the federal government and the government of Quebec in connection with the financial arrangements? Has the federal government offered to pay 50 per cent of the cost of the administration? Does the government of Quebec ask for 100 per cent of those costs? Do the prospective arrangements call for transferral of federal property, including hospitals, schools and administrative buildings, and on what terms? These are questions to which we have the right to answers. The government are talking of the constitution as though it belonged to us, the white race. This is a constitution which belongs to all Canadians without regard to race. I make this appeal to the government: Do not think that because they are few in number their votes do not count. Do not treat them as chattels to be pushed around, their constitutional rights denied.

That is the appeal we make, far and above the things that separate as between the federal government and any of the provinces. That is what is at stake here in trying to get information from the government. They say that parliament is being held up. Last evening the Prime Minister spoke of obstruction. I could read some of his statements on the subject of obstruction through the years when he was in opposition. It is not obstruction to stand for the rights of the people in the House of Commons. We are not going to be placed in the position of having the government, hiding behind a smokescreen of obstruction, at the same time, while hiding behind it surreptitiously and clandestinely take away the rights of these people. We are not going to have that. We are going to have this matter cleared up and the Minister of Justice is the one who can do it.

I am going to refer to an article in L'Action by Mr. Poliquin on February 21 last. He referred to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the minister of natural resources for Quebec having a five hour meeting the day before. On the question of consultation Mr. Poliquin, who was present, reports Mr. Levesque as having said:

> If our Eskimos are advised previously of any decision and given detailed explanation, we are in accord.

That is the attitude of the minister of natural resources, Mr. Levesque.

> But if you consider their lack of information, their complete dependence on federal civil servants, and if consulting them seems a sort of referendum, then this should not be done, for it would be inapplicable and artificial.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

No matter whether there was such consultation it would still remain a travesty on the constitution. Mr. Levesque went on to say:

> On the other hand, we are quite sure that in accepting the principle of the transfer the federal authorities have no intention of ruining it by such procedures.

That means that those on the government benches have agreed to this and they must place the facts before us no longer wrapped in an enigma of uncertainty. We want to know what the facts are. We want to know whether these aboriginal people are to be treated as persons, as people—

An hon. Member: As Canadians.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —or are they simply to be in the position of inanimate things, of chattels, who are to have their course determined by the will of the master? That is the issue here, the constitution of Canada; and the constitution must be upheld. It is not to be deviated from, it is not to be circumvented by the political exigencies of the moment. What did the Minister of Justice say on this occasion? Mr. Poliquin goes on to say in his report:

> One can hardly call it a love scene. In this atmosphere the...conference opened in the west block. They took turns provoking each other. About 6.30 p.m. Levesque had had enough. He prepared to leave. He was fed up with the stubbornness of Mr. Laing.

Then the Minister of Justice came into the picture.

> Mr. Guy Favreau at this point intervened with: "We agree judicially, administratively and financially. Why burn the bridge between us?"

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what Mr. Poliquin reported and he was there. I was not. The two ministers were. They will be able to give their revised version of this event. Then the article goes on to say:

> Discussion went on for 90 minutes. Nothing was decided.

Then it says that Mr. Levesque was "bombarded" by the press. That is a good expression. Mr. Levesque is reported as having said:

> I abhor a pseudo-democratic consultation, which would give the Eskimos the right of veto on this transfer, and which would be a farce.

I say, and I am not in full agreement with my colleagues in this regard, that I do not think consultation in any way meets the situation, but certainly consultation would have been at least a step forward. But they are not to receive that. They are to be told: You are Eskimos; you have no rights under the constitution.

Sir, we are going to find out about this. I am not entering into a discussion as to the matters that may be in issue between the federal and provincial government. I am putting this to the Minister of Justice directly. I do not know whether he was one of distinguished counsel on that case in 1951. No, he was not on that one, but he was one of the law officers and I am asking him to interpret that case. I know I must not ask the Minister of Justice to give his opinion of the law, but it would be interesting, though, if he should try to say that that case does not deny the very thing that is being done here.

Mr. Starr: He has made a facial expression but you cannot tell whether it is yes or no.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the Minister of Justice will not give an opinion then I ask any of the legal members of the house to read the case. It does not require much interpretation to understand these words, and I repeat them:

> The parliament of Canada and each provincial legislature is a sovereign body...Neither is capable therefore of delegating to the other the powers—

And so on. Of course, in order to explain this away they will say that they are not delegating power over the Eskimos; they are just delegating the right to exercise the power of administration over them. What else is left? No more important matter will come before this parliament than the welfare of 2,500 Eskimos. How can the government deal with them in this way and then go to the United Nations and say that Canada stands against discrimination? To treat these people in this way is the crassest demonstration of discrimination in that it denies that the constitution of Canada, which is my birthright and the birthright of all Canadians, applies to Eskimos. That is my argument.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock and so that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is now my duty to leave the chair.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the house would not agree unanimously to carrying on with the business of the government and waiving the private members' hour for today? The house seems to be in a wonderful mood to proceed with the estimates and this would certainly allow us to do so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We agree.

Mr. Starr: In view of the very important matter now being discussed and in view of the fact that it is imperative that the government should make a clear and concise statement on the matter, we fully agree that we should carry on.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: That is agreeable to us, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Marcoux: That suits us also, Mr. Speaker, on condition that irrelevant speeches will not be made.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house give unanimous consent to suspending the hour and carrying on with the discussion of the estimates?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

1e. Departmental administration—to extend the purposes of vote 1 of the main estimates, 1963-64, to authorize payment of a contribution to the Canadian council of resource ministers in an amount equal to one half the aggregate contribution of the provinces but not exceeding $32,000 and to provide a further amount of, $53,000.

Mr. Francis: As a relative newcomer to this house I have heard some moving and dramatic speeches. Seldom, however, have I heard a more moving and dramatic one than the one made by the Leader of the Opposition. He has gone through the history of this issue and put the constitutional position in very clear terms. He has said that the constitutional position and the decisions of the highest authorities must be respected. He has given us a very dramatic and moving demonstration of the need to respect human rights, pointing out that the Eskimos involved in the administration of northern affairs are not mere pawns.

In the short time I have been in this house, Mr. Chairman, I have observed a few things. I observe that today the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is not here when his leader speaks in this house on this matter. I have heard the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm persistently accuse this government and press this government as to why it was not going to proceed with this measure, which the leader of his party has said would be such a wrong thing to do. The Conservative party in this house speaks with two voices. If parliament comes into disrespect it is because of a lack of sincerity. I have seldom witnessed a greater exercise in sanctimonious hypocrisy than that put on by the Leader of the Opposition.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

An hon. Member: What right have you to talk?

Mr. Monteith: Sit down.

Mr. Francis: It is the purpose, Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I think it would be better if the hon. member for Carleton—

Mr. Starr: You are not contributing anything to this.

The Deputy Chairman: I think it might be better if the hon. member for Carleton were to adhere to the vote before us.

Mr. Francis: I have listened to—

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Chairman, the Leader of the Opposition has been speaking on this very point. He has opened the door to the discussion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have been charged with hypocrisy, and the hon. gentleman can make that statement because I throw it back in his teeth. I spoke about unconstitutionality; that is what I spoke about.

Mr. Francis: I have sat here often and heard the encouragement of the questioning by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm in an effort to embarrass this government when it was taking a very carefully considered position on this matter. I am proud of the position the minister of northern affairs has taken. It is fortunate that he is most reasonable. He is also, Mr. Chairman, as cognizant of human rights as any hon. member of this house.

Surely it ill-behooves the opposition in this house to speak, as I have heard them on other matters, with two voices. One voice attacks the government because it does not follow an aggressive ultranationalist policy which would do a great deal of harm to this country. The other voice is the more sensible voice of conscience, which says there are human rights, that there is a constitutional position. I am glad to hear the constitutional position so well put forward. This kind of thing, in my opinion, does not do credit to this house when two voices come forward on a matter as important as this. The position of the government, a position which I am able to support, is one of careful consideration of all aspects of the problem and full consideration of provincial and federal rights. Certainly, to my knowledge, no action has been taken which is inconsistent with that.

An hon. Member: Bring on another seal.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, this is a very delicate matter which everybody should discuss with the utmost coolness and moderation since human beings are involved.

Thus, I am not blaming the hon. member who has spoken before me for having become a bit irritated because in certain quarters, an attempt was made to make political capital of negotiations between Quebec and Ottawa with respect to the Eskimos.

When I first came to this house, directly from the bar, I never would have believed that this matter would be examined without at least finding out all the facts, the policy of the government and its position from a legal point of view.

I say that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who is perhaps the one who most bitterly criticized the attitude of the government in the house, has always intimated something which is false both in fact and in law. He was scandalized and he took for granted that the government intends to proceed with a jurisdictional transfer of Eskimo affairs. On the basis of this false premise, he accused the government of not being concerned about the rights of the Eskimos and of just simply signing an agreement to rid government of its jurisdiction.

I say that such statements are a hateful betrayal of the truth, of the facts and of the law.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that under section 91 of the B.N.A. Act, the legislative jurisdiction concerning the Indians rests with the federal government. It is also true that in 1939, where the matter was referred to the supreme court, neither the Quebec government nor the Ottawa government wanted to look after the Eskimos. It is also true that the supreme court, at that time, stated that for the purpose of section 91 the Eskimo people were Indians. Therefore, the related jurisdiction, in the legislative view point in particular, rested with the federal government, and more precisely with the parliament of Canada.

What is not true is, first of all, that the present government tried or is trying to make a transfer of jurisdiction. Neither is it true that we are trying to lay down conditions for the administration of Eskimo affairs in the far north and that the government would forget or rather would bypass those human beings, those Canadians, because the Eskimos are Canadians.

There was no treason, no attempt to get rid of that jurisdiction. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) referred to a decision of the supreme court to the effect that delegation of powers between federal and provincial authorities—delegation or exchange of powers, as defined or described in sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act—was illegal.

It is true that it was stated, in that case, that the two governments are sovereign in their respective fields and that, under the constitution, a provincial government cannot delegate its powers to the federal government in a field that is subject to legislative jurisdiction under section 92, just like the federal government cannot delegate its powers to the provincial government in a field which comes under its own jurisdiction according to section 91.

Therefore, this prohibits such agreements, such contracts, under which constitutional powers would be exchanged without being authorized by an amendment of the Canadian constitution.

But what happens in the same case? It has been decided that nothing prevents the federal government, in the exercise of its own jurisdiction, from selecting a body of the provincial government as its representative, its agent to exercise, in accordance with conditions laid down by the federal government, a federal jurisdiction; and the fact that this agent acts on behalf of the federal government is not unlawful, but on the contrary it is completely in accordance with the constitution.

Conversely, it is clear that the provincial government which is entrusted with the administration of certain civic rights may delegate, when necessary, to the federal government or to an agent or a department of the federal government, the power to act as its representative for the purposes of exercising its jurisdiction. It is simply a delegation of powers and a mandate is merely being conferred, on behalf of the provincial government, to the main agent. It is quite clear and simple and there is nothing more to it.

What, then, is the matter involved here? It is merely for the moment a draft agreement under which the Quebec government would agree to look after the administration of Eskimo affairs in the far north, on behalf of the federal government.

The federal government maintains its jurisdiction to such an extent, gives up so little of its authority and is so anxious to carry out its responsibilities, of which it is aware, that this administration by the Quebec government will only be conducted, as specified moreover, in the draft agreement, under conditions laid down by the federal government. Therefore, it is in the exercise of its jurisdiction and in order to discharge responsibilities towards the Eskimos that the federal government imposes conditions on the province of Quebec in that administration, and the federal government will be satisfied only when the provincial government accepts them.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question?

Has the government of the province of Quebec accepted to have conditions thus imposed by the federal government?

Mr. Favreau: That is my understanding under the preliminary agreement which has already been mentioned by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing), myself or our government as well as by the representatives of Quebec.

One only has to read the statement made in this house by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to understand. It laid down the policy to be followed. We will be satisfied only when there has been sufficient consultation with the Eskimos and only at that moment, any agreement will simply be within a definite framework established by the federal government, and the province will take over administration of a sector, that of the Eskimo affairs, in cases limited to northern Quebec.

That is nothing new. That policy is already accepted by this government and was applied in the past in a very useful and efficient way by the government which preceded us under the direction of the leader of today's official opposition.

I have in mind, for instance, an agreement concerning Indians under which the federal government transferred to some provinces the field of education of Indian children—

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: No application at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: —or when the Indian community development was entrusted to provincial governments. Those are useful agreements, but they are agreements under which the provincial governments involved purely and simply become mandatories of the federal government to administer a sector or a part of Indian affairs. They do not do this on their own authority, but rather under the authority of the federal government.

[Text]

Mr. Baldwin: With respect, would the minister permit a question which is very pertinent to this point. Is it not a fact that any agreements that are in effect between the federal government and the provincial governments are only because of legislation, section 113 of the Indian Act, by which parliament gave to the government the right to negotiate agreements in accordance with the Indian Act? The point I make is that the federal government negotiated those agreements only because parliament authorized it to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Such agreements are made within the administrative authority of the federal government and that was dealt with by the supreme court in 1939, when both governments were refusing to look after the Eskimos—

[Text]

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, something obviously happened in the translation booth and we did not get the English translation of the words following the question put by the hon. member for Peace River. Would the minister mind going over them again?

Mr. Favreau: I listen so infrequently to my own words—I hope that will not be considered as a defect or a fault—that I do not always remember the exact words, but only the ideas I try to convey.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I was saying that the agreements which were and continue to be made in regard to Indian affairs are made in the framework of the exercise, by the federal government, of its administrative jurisdiction in the field of Indian affairs.

But to dispel the concern my learned friend showed a while ago, I would add this: If at present the federal government administers Eskimo affairs, it is because the supreme court, by a decision rendered in 1939, allocated this responsibility to the federal government.

And in the same way that no one can question our right to deal with Eskimo affairs through agents, representatives, intermediaries—because of course it is not the government who must go in northern Canada to look after Eskimo affairs, it may be civil servants, agents or representatives—I do not see why, as long as the decision quoted by the Leader of the Opposition is not against that and that there is no transfer of jurisdiction, we could not use, in the same way, a provincial government to manage Eskimo affairs, within the limits of specific territories, and this according to the standards and—I repeat—conditions that will be prescribed by the federal government.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, may I direct a question to the minister? Since the administrative fields which are to be transferred deal with education, health services, and so on, am I to understand that the minister, when he says that those fields—and I refer especially to education—will be managed by the provincial government, but on the terms prescribed by the federal government? In other words, will the federal government, in the education field, dictate to the provincial government how to discharge its responsibilities?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, as regards education, my learned friend may be assured that the fundamental rights of the Eskimos will be respected. That is, indeed, the first condition we laid down.

Mr. Lambert: Answer the question.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, some apprehension was voiced with regard to the religious angle. Now, that has always been the first care, not only of those who represented the federal government, but also of the representatives of Quebec, who agree that the respective faiths of all Eskimos concerned would be respected and that there would be no infringement of their freedom of religion.

Besides, those who know Quebec are aware that in this province educational and religious matters are essentially linked, and there is no question about it, to our mind, because we would not have it any other way.

As to the children's education, the Eskimo parents' wishes will be regarded, and the same principle will apply in respect of their faith. In short, they will be treated in the same way as the Indian parents and children.

And if hon. members still have any doubt or worry concerning the contents of any possible agreement, which would only be signed after consulting the Eskimos, it will be my learned and hon. friend the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who will deal with it.

Should there be any apprehension with regard to the substance of a possible agreement I am authorized to say that it is the wish of the government to give the house the assurance that the text of any such agreement concerning Eskimo administration in the far north of Quebec will not be implemented until it has been tabled in the house, and time and opportunity has been afforded to any hon. member to test the confidence of the house in the government, if any hon. member wishes to do so.

[Text]

Mr. Lambert: There are two or three points I should like to make in connection with the minister's declaration. But first I should like to refer to the intervention made by the hon. member for Carleton who felt he should introduce some colour into the debate this afternoon by drawing attention in some fashion or other to the absence from the chamber of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. I should like to say to the hon. member for Carleton that my hon. friend told me yesterday he had a speaking engagement outside this city today. In accordance with that engagement he left this building much earlier this afternoon. Therefore any conclusion the hon. member may have wished to make, whether of a colourful nature or not, is at once odious and entirely untrue. My hon. friend is as legitimately absent this afternoon as the hon. member for Carleton often is. So let there be an end to that canard.

As to what was said by the minister, we should appreciate clarification of certain points. When the hon. gentleman indicated that the conditions of the administration would be imposed by the federal government —that the provincial government would merely be the agent of the federal government—did he mean the preliminary agreement envisaged that there would be no discretion on the part of the agent as to determination of policy? Is this a general mandate? Who is to furnish the funds, and will there be an accounting of the funds used in the discharge of this administration? Who will determine the norms for education? Will the Eskimo children in this part of Canada receive the same level of facilities, technical or otherwise, as are being provided for instance at Inuvik, or will there be one policy for Eskimo children in the northern part of Quebec and another policy for those who live elsewhere? We want to be given answers to these questions.

The minister, in his eloquence, was skilful in sliding around the questions put to him by my hon. friend from Pontiac-Temiscamingue. He said the rights of the Eskimos will be respected and that the desires of the Eskimo parents will be respected. But he said nothing about the policy and the administrative conditions to be followed and imposed by the federal government. These are questions which demand an answer.

Mr. Favreau: I had proposed to deal today mainly with the matter of the constitutional position of the government in relation to the entente or agreement contemplated. The hon. member may be sure that his questions will be answered and dealt with by my colleague the minister of northern affairs whose estimates we are now discussing—I should have said "supplementary estimates" but such is the length of the discussion that I always think we are really discussing the main estimates. Those questions which the hon. member raised will be dealt with by the minister responsible for the particular department concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the minister can resort to such excuses, since he tried to justify the government's position and he indicated the federal government had an absolute right to send an agent or an administrative officer. It is precisely on this point I am asking what will be the rights and powers of this agent, for an agent cannot have more powers than the principal.

This is why I am asking whether this agreement, or this preliminary agreement, provides administrative or political independence for the agent. Otherwise, there will be no principal and agent basis, but an agreement whereby the federal government will delegate the entire administration to the province. This is why I insist on these particulars; if not, the principle advocated by the minister, who, in his argument, holds—I do not mean that he is trying to deceive the house—that he could elude the judgment quoted by the Leader of the Opposition will go by the board.

[Text]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word or two with respect to what the minister has said and particularly in regard to what he has not said. We have had no explanation from him as yet, nor have we had it from the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, with respect to what the government's intentions are in regard to the Eskimos of new Quebec. We still have not received any answers and the arguments that were presented by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition have not been answered. The minister has thrown up a smokescreen in an endeavour to say that because Indian people have been treated in a certain respect with regard to educational matters and health and welfare, Eskimo people can be treated the same way. The minister nods his head in the affirmative, but I am sure he must realize that the Eskimo people cannot be treated, constitutionally, in the same fashion as the Indian people, because there is a specific exclusion with regard to these people in the Indian Act. If he will read section 113—and I am sure he must have done so when he was minister of citizenship and immigration—he will see that specific exclusion. My colleague from Peace River points out that section 4 also has applicability.

The minister is saying that because the government has been in the habit of dealing with educational, jurisdictional transfers with regard to Indian people, he can do the same thing with regard to Eskimo people. This is false and wrong. While section 113 of the Indian Act, an act passed by this parliament, authorizes this specifically, it specifically excludes Eskimo people. I will read, for the benefit of the minister and the committee, section 4 of the Indian Act, which sets forth the following:

> This act does not apply to the race of aborigines commonly referred to as Eskimos.

How, therefore, can the minister justify his so-called argument in reply to the constitutional points made by the Leader of the Opposition and by the hon. member for Peace River by saying, "Because we have done it with the Indian people, we can do it now with the Eskimos"? Quite the contrary is the case. The parliament of Canada has authorized jurisdiction with regard to educational matters to be delegated to the provinces, if you will, but it has specifically excluded that power with respect to Eskimos. So there is still a good deal to be answered by the minister. The minister, as the person responsible for safeguarding the constitutional rights of these people, is called upon to answer specifically why he considers the government is justified in transferring any jurisdiction whatsoever in regard to the Eskimo people, wherever they are situated in Canada, whether it is the province of Quebec, the province of Manitoba, or indeed in any other location in Canada.

I can tell the minister this, which the hon. member for Northwest Territories has already told him and members of this house on a previous occasion. The Eskimo people do not regard as their home any particular province, neither the province of Quebec, nor Manitoba nor Newfoundland. They regard as their home the north. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, while he was asked the question on occasion after occasion, has yet not risen to confirm the assurances that he gave to those people in Fort Chimo when he visited them, namely the assurance to the Eskimos in that region who did not want any transfer of jurisdiction—

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? Where is the word "assurance" involved in the statement I made? What assurance did I make when I visited them?

Mr. Nielsen: Let me read it to the minister; his memory has obviously failed him for a moment. I have in my hand Hansard for December 16 last year, when he said, as reported on page 5976, when making a statement on his estimates:

> I found that the Eskimos made the following demands upon me, that no change from the federal administration to provincial control be made without further consulting them. I found that their opinions were so definite that I told them we would not make a change without discussing the situation further with them...They did not want a change made.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

I took it from that and from the quotations which have been made of the minister's remarks in the press across this country, that this amounted to an assurance to those people that no change would be made unless they were consulted at every stage as to the government's intentions. They have been bandying this word "consultation" about and we are now in a complete maze, because what the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources means by "consultation" is quite obviously different from what the Minister of Justice means by "consultation", which again is different from what the Prime Minister means by that word; and it certainly is widely different from the views obviously held by the minister of resources for Quebec, Mr. Levesque. He said, as late as yesterday, as reported in the Winnipeg Tribune that jurisdiction over the Eskimos in Quebec had gone to the federal government in 1939 by a court decision, because there was an international scandal over mistreatment of Canadian Eskimos, and Quebec at the time was not interested in doing anything about it. In the same article the press quotes him as giving a flat refusal to the request for a referendum on the takeover, and he also said there had been a rampant campaign by people tied to the federal government against this little provincial government which is supposed to be coming in to deprive the Eskimos of everything else. Then further he said that they would never accept a referendum to help a bunch of hypocrites to get the answer they want, but that he will go into consultation about anything else.

Mr. Favreau: Would the hon. member permit a question. Was the hon. member in the house when the minister of northern affairs reported on the terms of the free understanding between Quebec and Ottawa, in which he recited the definition of consultation, that there could be no other definition than this one?

Mr. Nielsen: I certainly was in the house on that day. If the date has escaped the minister it was March 4, and I was shocked to read what the minister had placed on the record. I am sure that is not what the minister wants, nor is it what his departmental officials want. Because what he read into the record on that day was this, that the extent of the consultation will be that the terms and provisions of a fait accompli, of an agreement which had been executed between the two governments would be explained—explained, mind you—to the Eskimo people. That is what the minister said, and if that is consultation, I fail to appreciate how the rights of these people are being protected. I fail to see how that statement of March 4 can be reconciled with what the minister said on December 16.

Mr. Favreau: For the purpose of the record, will the hon. member agree that when he stated a few minutes ago what the minister of northern affairs is alleged by him to have said, he was not reading from any text but was quoting extemporaneously?

Mr. Nielsen: I have Hansard for March 4 in front of me, and for the purpose of accuracy I would point out the minister said this, as reported on page 506:

> The consultation, that is the communication of the terms of the agreement, excluding however the financial provisions thereof, and the receiving of the views and comments of the Eskimos concerned, will be made through a commission, consisting of one or more members appointed jointly by the federal and provincial governments. The functions of this commission will be to explain the conditions of the agreement, as well as the programs for the future, in terms clear to the Eskimos and to interpret and report to the two governments on the views and comments which will have been expressed to the commission.

Mr. Favreau: Is that not consultation?

Mr. Nielsen: If that is the extent of the consultation, then I am afraid this government is sadly lacking—

Mr. Laing: Read on.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, there is no point in my reading the whole thing because the minister himself put it on the record. However, I will read the last paragraph of the minister's statement, which will not take up too much time of the committee.

> Both governments agree that such consultation is a prior condition to the execution of the agreement. After the commission has reported, the two governments must also agree upon what modifications and recommendations suggested in the report should be accepted and included in the final text of the instrument of transfer.

When the minister put this statement on the record on March 4 he said no agreement had been reached. There was not even an agreement to agree; it was a consensus. Now we find the Minister of Justice referring today to a draft agreement, a draft agreement that I suggest—he can correct me if I am wrong—has already been prepared in the absence of the constitution of the commission to which the minister referred on March 4. So that there already exists a draft agreement—

Mr. Favreau: On a question of privilege, I never referred to a draft agreement. What I said, and I have my words as translated from the French, was that the government wished to give an assurance that any agreement which may be made with the government of Quebec for the administration of the Eskimos will not be implemented until it has been tabled in the house, and time and opportunity has been afforded to any hon. member to test the confidence of the house and the government, if any member should be disposed to do so. That is what I said.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of Justice cannot wriggle out of the words he used before he started reading from the text because as Hansard will show, he definitely referred to a draft agreement before he started reading from any text. If I am not correct, let the Minister of Justice now stand in his place and tell the members of this committee that there is in existence no draft agreement between the two governments. I challenge him to do that.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister of Justice has no reason to have any such knowledge of this matter at all; but I do, and I categorically deny that there is any draft agreement whatsoever existing at the present time.

Mr. Nielsen: This is fine, Mr. Chairman. We have been attempting for weeks and weeks and weeks to get answers similar to that which the minister has just given, and now we are getting them. If anyone wonders why we take time on these supplementary estimates surely the actions of the government are full explanation. The Minister of Justice would not rise in his place and give us that assurance, but the minister of northern affairs had the courage to do so.

I presume the Minister of Justice intends to follow the procedure set forth by the minister of northern affairs so far as the so-called consultation with the Eskimos is concerned. He is so generous as to assure the members of this committee that the government will show us the agreement. He will table it in the house so that we can have a look at it—not so that we can exercise our constitutional right as the parliament of Canada to ratify any such agreement; not so that we can—

Mr. Favreau: Again on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, what was said was that the agreement, if and when it is made, will not be implemented before any member of this house could test the confidence of the government as to its terms and implementation.

Mr. Nielsen: Again, Mr. Chairman, try as the minister might he cannot evade the words already in Hansard and which I copied down myself. He said that the text of the agreement would be, and here I quote him, "tabled to check the confidence of the house in the government".

Mr. Favreau: To test it.

Mr. Nielsen: This will be after the agreement has been executed, after the Eskimo people have been bypassed, after parliament has been bypassed and after the constitution of this country has been completely disregarded by the government. This, sir, is the intention of the government.

The minister speaks of critical remarks which are hateful. I suggest to the members of this committee that it is hateful to see the evasion of the truth to which this house has been submitted by members occupying the treasury benches, not only on this question but on others. Questions are asked and not answered at all. If they are answered they are distorted, just as this one has been.

Mr. Favreau: That is what you are doing now.

Mr. Nielsen: I suggest to the minister that he has been guilty of distorting the facts of this case, otherwise the dozens upon dozens of questions which have been asked for almost eight months now would not have led to this situation, had they been answered instead of evaded, or if the minister of northern affairs had risen in his seat, instead of sitting silently, and answered some of the questions asked by the hon. member for Northwest Territories. Yesterday or the day before the hon. member asked in the house whether or not the minister did not give the assurance to the Eskimo people at Fort Chimo that they would be moved at government expense if they did not wish to remain under Quebec jurisdiction. But he sat silent. That is a question which should be answered.

Mr. Laing: The question was too ridiculous.

Mr. Nielsen: It is not too ridiculous to the 2,500 people involved.

Mr. Laing: And it was not asked.

Mr. Nielsen: The question was asked.

Mr. Laing: Not of me.

Mr. Nielsen: Then why does the minister not answer? Did he give the people of Fort Chimo the assurance that they would be moved at government expense if they did not wish to remain under Quebec jurisdiction?

Mr. Laing: Of course not, and no Eskimo at Fort Chimo asked me that question.

Mr. Rheaume: Then why did you not say so yesterday?

Mr. Nielsen: It seems to me there is a little difference of opinion as to what the council of the Eskimo people at Fort Chimo believe in regard to the assurances given them by the minister, and what the minister believes as being an accurate recollection of the assurances he gave them.

[Mr. Favreau.]

I should like to quote from an article which appeared in the Canada Month for the month of November 1963; I think it will interest the members of the committee and should be on the record.

On page 5 of this publication I find the following:

> Eskimo is now the second language of 20 employees of Quebec's bureau of northern planning, reported bureau chief Eric Gourdeau. Only trouble is, the 2,500 Eskimos in northern Quebec are not keen to return the compliment by taking French as their second tongue, asserted northern affairs minister Arthur Laing: Most of their contact has been with English speaking people. Laing's parliamentary assistant, M.P. John Turner, said the Eskimos thought "French" meant "Catholic": "To them the words are synonymous."
> Quebec wants to assume responsibility for Eskimos in the province, expects to be able to offer them jobs in coming industrial developments. Ottawa presently administers all Eskimos. Northern affairs Laing insists that, "No discussion will take place without...the Eskimo people themselves."

I do not appear to have the article here because I had not planned to take part in this debate—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: I really was not—which quoted the minister, who I am sure must have read similar articles himself, as giving the assurance to the people of Fort Chimo that financial assistance would be forthcoming to those of the Eskimo people who did not wish to have any part in this transfer.

Mr. Laing: I think I might save the hon. member pursuing this matter if I were to tell him that I have a complete tape of every word I uttered there and I would be glad to have him listen to it some time.

Mr. Nielsen: I would be delighted. I only wish that more cabinet ministers might show even that small degree of co-operation to members on this side. I am going to use a term with which I am sure the Minister of Justice is very familiar and which is familiar to a good many people in the country today. It is a basic term in the new dialogue of internal diplomatic expression and I think it is a term which will be understood by the people of Quebec. Within the constitutional framework surely the people of Quebec will understand the right of self-determination.

Recently we have heard a good deal about opting out, such as the opting out that Premier Lesage has done in regard to the Canada pension plan. If he considers this as one of the rights of the province, if he considers this as one of the rights of self-determination within the province of Quebec, then he is one person and his government is one government that will understand the conceding of the right to the Eskimo people to opt out of this arrangement which the government is considering imposing upon them.

I see that it is five minutes to six, Mr. Chairman, and I am going to take my seat to allow the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources the remaining time before supper to answer some of the questions that have been put to him. I will leave him with one last question about which the Eskimo people at Fort Chimo are very much concerned. If they do wish to opt out, and apparently it seems that they do since 90 to 95 per cent of them do not want anything to do with this transfer, is the government prepared to pay their removal expenses to transport them from the area in which they are now living to other parts of the northland?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I anticipate that most of my remarks on this subject will be made after the dinner hour but I do want to make the comment, in light of the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition, the reply by the Minister of Justice and the intervention of the hon. member for Edmonton West, that it would seem to us who are not members of the bar that for some time to come we are going to live under a government of laws instead of men. I rather think that in the main the calibre of the debate thus far has been quite high—

An hon. Member: Except for Carleton.

Mr. Laing: —and while I am quite unable to speak on matters of law I have no intention of degrading the calibre of the debate.

I do want to say that this matter is one that has been before the government of Canada for some time, not only before the present government but before the previous government. My predecessor in this post was approached by officers of the government of Quebec in 1961, I believe, at which time they indicated their interest in taking over the operation of Eskimo affairs in northern Quebec. The tremendous area of Ungava, which was added to the province of Quebec in 1912, is now showing some promise of progress through the development of mines and so on and is thus evoking the interest of more people from southern Canada than it has in the past. According to the count by northern affairs there are about 2,300 Eskimos in the area at the present time located at some 27 posts, with only a very few at some posts, and up to as high as 600 or 700 at the very large posts.

In the couple of minutes left before six o'clock I wish to say that I am extremely proud of the work that northern affairs has done with these people because I would think they are among the most primitive people on the continent, and in many instances the white man has made contact with them for the first time within the last ten years. I am very proud of the work of the officers of the department not only since I have been minister of the department but over the last ten years, during which time contact has been made with these Eskimos.

We are finding that production from their limited resources of fur and fish is increasing greatly. Our officers, particularly in the industrial branch, are bringing along a number of small industries. They are extremely puny in terms of industry in southern Canada, but nevertheless these industries are providing income for the Eskimos. I want to tell the committee at this time that there is one place in nouveau Quebec where relief paid in February 1962, amounted to over $8,000, but as a result of developing the resources there and the production of things that the Eskimos can sell the amount of relief paid in February of this year was less than $700.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Laing: When we adjourned at six o'clock, I had had the opportunity of bringing to the attention of the committee the work which the department of northern affairs has conducted in the northern areas for our Eskimo people over a period of some ten years. I want to say again that I am extremely proud of that work and very happy with the progress that is being made with these people. I want to remind the house that this portion of the responsibility of the department that we are discussing at the present time relates to part of the province of Quebec. There have been indications by the government of Quebec that it would prefer, as the northern sections of that province develop, to take over the administration of the Eskimos in that area.

This proposal has been made not alone to this government but to the previous government as well. We did not decline to discuss the matter with the government of Quebec, and I am quite certain that the previous government did not decline. I am quite certain that my predecessor in this house had discussions with the province of Quebec at that time. They have, on a number of occasions, brought to our attention the fact that they would like to administer the Eskimos in our place. They have asked us if we would enter into discussions with them as to a means by which this could be brought about.

Now, when these meetings started to take place we immediately had a great number of questions asked in the House of Commons concerning the progress of the discussions. I think on 16 or 18 different occasions questions have been asked of myself, of the Minister of Justice, of the Prime Minister and various other people. On March 4 I presented to the house a memorandum dealing with the results of a meeting or two we had with officials of the province of Quebec. I gave the house at that time the contents of the memorandum, and I quote:

—is not an agreement, nor is it an agreement to agree. It does constitute a statement outlining a consensus with respect to certain basic principles and conditions which, in the event of an agreement, are common to the two governments.

I went on to list these various conditions, four in all, as found on page 506 of Hansard for March 4. The questions that have arisen in the house have dealt largely with the matter of consultation. There was a prolonged series of questions on March 10, which ended in an exchange between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. The Prime Minister, as recorded on page 736 of Hansard, said this:

If it will prevent a further waste of time by additional questions, I will say once again that the Eskimos will be consulted before an agreement is signed.

An hon. Member: Full retreat.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I cannot allow the last remark made by the Prime Minister to pass unchallenged. We on this side of the house have at last been able to get an answer indicating that these primitive people—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —are not going to be treated as chattels by this government.

Mr. Pearson: On the point of order, if the right hon. gentleman would read Hansard he will find this question specifically answered by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources days ago. I suggest he read the statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no. We got the answer today.

Well, I would interpret the words of the Leader of the Opposition to mean that at long last he was satisfied he had gotten an answer. A few days later, when I was on government business in the province of British Columbia, a series of questions were asked again by the hon. member for Yukon. They were directed to my parliamentary secretary who provided some answers and then said that any further replies would have to await my return. I returned to the House of Commons a day or two after this, but no questions were asked of me then.

However, later we came to this point just a matter of a few days ago, on April 6, when the hon. member for Peace River dealt with it. He tried to establish in the minds of members of the house that there had been a fait accompli; everything was cut and dried. The hon. member said, as recorded on page 1839 of Hansard for that date:

It has been admitted in the house that this transfer is going to take place.

Some time later I intervened to ask him if he would refer me to the page in Hansard where that quotation was made. The hon. member said he was sure his seatmate would be glad to look this up while he was proceeding with his remarks. The hon. member's seatmate was the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Baldwin: He is going to get it now.

Mr. Laing: He has had since April 6 to find it. I do not think he will find it because it was never made in the House of Commons. This was the general buildup.

Mr. Nielsen: May I draw the minister's attention to page 506 of Hansard, the statement to which he has already referred, where he set forth the consensus. He will find, in the left hand column, about half way down the page where he said:

Canada is prepared to have Quebec administer Eskimo affairs as part of Quebec's general administrative responsibilities in the province.

Surely that constitutes an assurance that the transfer is going to be made?

Mr. Laing: I think I read the preface to my statement which said this is not an agreement or even an agreement to agree. How the hon. member can read that statement, and interpret it to mean that it was admitted in the house that this transfer was going to be made, is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. Nielsen: Surely the minister will agree with me the meaning of his words was quite clear and when he said:

Canada is prepared to have Quebec administer Eskimo affairs as part of Quebec's general administrative responsibilities in the province.

Does the minister not agree that what he is saying there in effect is that the federal government is prepared to transfer the administrative responsibilities over Eskimos in the province of Quebec to the province of Quebec?

Mr. Laing: At the beginning of page 505, as I have already stated. I said the memorandum was not an agreement, nor an agreement to agree, which was a preface to the entire statement. All we were doing was setting out a few basic principles by which we would be guided in any negotiations we had with the province of Quebec.

I am a little bit concerned that the hon. member for Yukon thinks if he can make an assertion in the committee that is not denied, then he clothes it with veracity. I can assure him that is not the case at all. We have been sitting here listening to these repeated questions inferring that an agreement has been completed, and in the absence of a complete denial each time I think now some hon. members opposite are beginning to believe their own words. I think it was an American humorist named Josh Billings who took care of this situation, when he said: "It ain't the things a man don't know that makes him look foolish, but the things he does know that ain't so." I think there are a number of things hon. members on the opposite side have believed are so, but are not so.

Mr. Baldwin: On that basis is the minister prepared to indicate now, with reasonable assurance, that no transfer will take place?

Mr. Laing: The hon. member has asked me a question, and I intend to deal with the matter as I go along. I want to direct this to the attention of members of the committee, that in the arrangement of these affairs dealing with our indigenous people I would think it would be a natural thing for a national government, as time goes on and as conditions warrant it, to work closely with provincial governments in the supply of services to these people.

I want to pay some attention to what I thought was a very fine argument made last week in this regard by the hon. member for Skeena, that it is unthinkable that forever we should have two classes of people. Certain hon. members opposite are laughing. They are people who apparently would believe that it is good to keep people on two levels perpetually, and they are not prepared to agree or admit that a province is capable of rendering services equivalent to those given by a national government. With that I cannot agree.

I want to draw the attention of the committee to a statement made in the house on April 8, 1960, by a former minister of citizenship and immigration, the Hon. Ellen Fairclough. As recorded at page 3037 of Hansard for that date, she said this:

> Second, I wish to announce that the federal government is prepared to negotiate agreements with the governments of the various provinces for the extension of normal provincial welfare services to persons residing on Indian reserves.

Now, as hon. members know, section 113 of the Indian Act provides for these agreements in respect to educational matters only, but here in 1960 the previous government announced as a policy of that government that it was prepared to extend these agreements with the provinces to welfare services.

She continued:

> The purpose is to avoid the development of exclusive welfare services on reserves which would tend to set Indians apart from other Canadians and duplicate provincial programs in adjacent non-Indian communities.
> In negotiating these agreements the federal government is prepared to pay a reasonable share of the costs of the benefits, over and above the federal contribution under existing federal-provincial agreements, such as the Unemployment Assistance Act; and to share with the provinces reasonable costs of additional staff and administration required for the application of such programs. Moreover, my department will be prepared to enter into agreements to enable Indian bands to assume responsibilities for welfare programs normally administered by municipalities under provincial legislation.

Today we had the right hon. Leader of the Opposition attacking us for negotiating with the provinces when, under his own leadership, his government had announced in 1960 that it was prepared specifically to do those things.

Mr. Nielsen: Could the minister deal with the exception made in section 4 of the Indian Act, which specifically excludes Eskimos from the operation of that act?

Mr. Laing: Well, I think I have dealt fairly adequately with the attitude of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition today, as compared with the statement made on behalf of his government on April 8, 1960.

In addition, I want to point out that in my riding of Vancouver South, which is a purely urban riding that contains some of the largest homes in the city, there is an Indian reserve of some 600 or 700 acres, the Musqueam Indian reserve. About four or five years ago, when the right hon. gentleman who sits opposite was prime minister, an agreement was made at that time under the pressure of the then chief, who happened to be an Indian woman named Mrs. Guerin, to have the children from that reserve not attend the little school on the reserve but to go to the Kerrisdale school with white pupils. She had to fight a long battle with the Vancouver school board and with some of the parents of the area. I have kept a watch on developments since, and I wish to say it proved again that in this world there are no indigenously inferior people. Those children are coming along just as well as any white child in the school.

This integration, if you want to call it that, this understanding between whites and indigenous people, is a thing all governments should support so long as it can be adequately done and safeguards provided.

I am now going to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that the hon. member for Skeena has been consistent in this regard, because immediately after that announcement was made by the minister in 1960 he said, as recorded at the same page of Hansard:

We also appreciate the announcements made by the minister with respect to these two matters, which are exceptionally good ones. We hope additional steps will be taken later on in order to deal with other similar problems.

That is, dealing with the problem of bringing welfare matters more closely under the direction of those governments that were on the ground, rather than under the central government. Therefore, I think any claim that exception should be taken to administration of these schemes by the provincial government is not sound, is not historically correct, and probably would have been the policy of the previous government as well.

I want to tell the committee some of the things that occurred on an exceptional trip I took last summer over some 7,000 miles of the northern territory, during which we held a couple of gatherings of the Quebec Eskimo people, first at Fort Chimo and second at Great Whale River. This is language taken from an interpreter. It is not particularly erudite language but I want to give the committee some of the remarks I made to the Eskimo elders when we met them at Fort Chimo on September 10, 1963.

Getting down to the present situation, I can understand it if the Eskimos find it hard to explain that one government should argue with another government that it can do better by him. We are dealing with a moral responsibility. And since it is a moral responsibility, the first primary, predominant consideration is the person that we are trying to help. In other words, the Eskimos. And the government of Canada has accepted this moral responsibility. Accepting this moral responsibility does not mean that we shall exclude other agencies or other governments from giving assistance to Eskimos. This is part of Canada but this is also the province of Quebec. And there are provincial laws which have to do with people over which the federal government has no control and an area which it does not invade. We white people make a statement now and again that we prefer the devil we know to the devil we do not know. I think in the minds of some of the people here there is that feeling. Most of the concern, I think, about the administration of Quebec—because this is Quebec and the Quebec government has to administer this area in respect of a number of things—I think most of the concern has to do with exercising the sanction of the game laws. I cannot believe that they would impose white man's game laws on Indians and Eskimos.

Now then, when we get down to talk of takeover, there have been two discussions in which I was involved with officials of the province of Quebec. They were initiated by the province of Quebec. They asked for the discussions. There have been no negotiations whatsoever in respect of a takeover. In other words, the operation of northern affairs in respect to assisting Eskimos in various ways is in the identical position today as it was two years ago. If there are any further discussions which could lead to negotiations, I am going to propose to the people of Quebec, the representatives of the government of Quebec, that no action be taken without consulting the Eskimo people themselves and I do that because the only interest in our being here and spending a tremendous sum of money here is the good of the Eskimo people themselves.

[Mr. Laing.]

Mr. Rheaume: Would the hon. member permit a question? Did any of the Eskimo leaders say to the minister at any time during his visit to Fort Chimo last September, or did they indicate to him either in English or through interpreters, that they did not want their affairs transferred to the province of Quebec?

Mr. Laing: Of course I have just read my statement. I could read another—

Mr. Rheaume: I want to know what the Eskimos said to the minister, not what he said to them.

Mr. Laing: I could read the entire account. I had heard representations from the Eskimo people and this was my reply.

Mr. Rheaume: I was looking for a simple answer—yes, or no. Did any of the Eskimo people at that time indicate that they did not want their affairs transferred? Surely a simple yes or no could be given; I do not want the transcript of what was said.

Mr. Laing: Of course some Eskimos said they were fearful of any transfer. Most of them said they were extremely happy with the administration of affairs by the department of northern affairs. I have made that statement on a number of occasions. As a matter of fact, I did so when I returned. The hon. member has no need to ask that question in the committee, now.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the minister permit me to intervene for a moment? During the dinner hour I have been able to find the press reports to which I referred earlier in my remarks before the recess. This is an article by Mr. Dafoe which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press.

The Eskimo council met with federal northern affairs minister Arthur Laing to express their concern about the transfer of authority and asked for federal assistance in moving out of the province if Quebec did get control.

I wonder if the minister could tell us whether any such offer of federal financial assistance was made at the time of his visit.

Mr. Laing: This is another case of the hon. member taking up a statement which appeared in the press and trying to establish it as a fact in the house.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, I am asking the minister.

Mr. Laing: No single Eskimo made any suggestion to me with regard to our providing transport or accommodation for him to leave the territory. That has been said before. A number of meetings have been held with the province of Quebec, and the differences which exist between us principally have to do with what is meant by consultation.

I want to tell the committee now that the position I have taken, the position we have taken, in respect to what "consultation" means, this being the outcome of the memorandum I gave to the house on March 4—and nothing has been concluded or undertaken by us or by the Quebec government since, and as a result of that memorandum—our interpretation of the meaning of "consultation", the position we are taking now is that we would not exclude from the consultation with the Eskimos any aspect of the proposed arrangement with Quebec for the provision of those services. This confirms what I said both at Fort Chimo and at Great Whale River and represents the continuing attitude of the government.

The Leader of the Opposition asked three specific questions this afternoon. He asked whether an agreement had been concluded. He asked whether a proposal had been put up that we pay 50 per cent, or 100 per cent of the cost. I want to assure the committee that at this moment no agreement has been reached with Quebec in any respect whatsoever. My officials are dealing with officials of the Quebec government with respect to putting into effect, or working from, that memorandum presented to the house on March 4, and that is where the matter stands.

Mr. Nielsen: Before the minister concludes, I wonder if I might ask him one question bearing on the remarks he made as to his interpretation of what "consultation" means. Frankly, I agree with him that that is what consultation should mean. But from what he has said it would appear there has been no consultation with the Eskimo people themselves with regard to the provisions, the terms of the consensus which he read into the record on March 4.

I should like the hon. gentleman to assure us that there has been consultation with respect to the provisions of the consensus between the two governments. The minister said that since March 4 there have been continuing conversations between officials of his department and those of the government of Quebec. Have the Eskimo people been represented with regard to those conversations?

Mr. Laing: Of course, Mr. Chairman, in the light of the memorandum which I brought to the house, how could they be expected to? The memorandum was a memorandum of a set of principles which, in our view, were prerequisite to our accomplishing anything by way of an agreement with Quebec, and we are still in a state of argument, if you like, on the question of what constitutes consultation with the province of Quebec. Certainly that is the primary step, one which must be taken prior to any discussion with the Eskimos. As far as consultation is concerned, I am having a consultation with my hon. friend from Yukon and I am quite certain that every time I sit down he will make his views known to me. I think that is consultation, and that is the attitude we are taking in this matter.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister will give this committee his assurance that on the commission to be set up between the two governments, if indeed the government insists upon going ahead with this unconstitutional plan after having heard these arguments, he will have representatives of the Eskimo council, or independent counsel obtained by the Eskimo people, who will be sitting on the commission and taking part in the discussions as to the provisions of any eventual agreement?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, this aspect has been discussed by my officials and the officials of the government of Quebec.

Mr. Nielsen: I am very glad to hear that the matter has been discussed by the officials of the two governments, but my question was: Will the minister assure us that the Eskimo people, through a representative of their council or by independent counsel selected by them, will be represented on that commission? Will the minister answer that question for us?

The Chairman: The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister to either rise and give us that assurance or tell us he cannot give us that assurance—one way or the other; because I am sure we are all interested in finding out whether the government intends to have the Eskimo people represented at all on that commission. Surely we are entitled to an answer.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I was trying to establish some more facts for my hon. friend by not giving a denial. We certainly will see to it, because of the construction we put upon "consultation", that the views of the Eskimos are known by whatever means we can obtain them.

Mr. Nielsen: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, I still have to ask the minister whether he will be kind enough to consider the question I have asked him. It is a very simple question: Will he either give the committee his assurance, or not give the committee his assurance, that the Eskimo people will be represented on the commission either by someone of their council or by independent counsel selected by them? This is the assurance that we want.

Mr. Laing: We will consider that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister could deal with those points which I raised with his colleague the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice assured me that the Minister of Northern Affair and National Resources would deal with them. They deal with who shall have the say on the norms for education, and whether there shall be any independence or discretion as to policy on the basis of agency, as it has been indicated that any agreement will be on the basis of principal and agent.

Mr. Baldwin: There has been no consultation between the ministers.

Mr. Laing: Certainly in any discussions we have had with Quebec, and in our own minds, the maintenance of the present standards of service would be prerequisite to any arrangement at all; and not only maintenance but an extension of those services, because not in all districts have we the full grades of education that are going to be soon required in the area; we have school to grades 4 and 5 in some places. In addition to that we have not secured all the children in the area, but about 65 per cent, for the schools. So the standards we would insist upon would have to be as good as those we have now and, in addition, would have to take care of the future requirements of the population.

Mr. Lambert: This is what I am concerned with, in that the level of the educational facilities will be comparable in the ultimate evolution of the educational process in the area with, say, the Eskimos in the western Arctic. Will this be the case?

Mr. Laing: Quite obviously they will have to be. We are somewhat behind, in that area, in the provision of schools, partly because of the discussions that have taken place. I think we are prepared this year, in respect of Chimo, to put a $300,000 school there.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister just how he expects to make the province comply with federal requirements in this matter of education?

The Chairman: The hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, the minister just gave an answer and I think he would want to clarify that answer by answering the question I have asked.

Mr. Laing: Of course, Mr. Chairman, education being one of the prime considerations, it would be included in the agreement. I am quite certain the hon. member would not wish to suggest that either we or a province, having entered into such an agreement, would show bad faith thereafter. The standards would be maintained as under the agreement, of course.

Mr. Martineau: There is no suggestion of that. I just wanted to know how the federal government can exercise its control in the matter of education to see that the school facilities and standards are equivalent to those now in force. The minister has not answered that question to my satisfaction.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member will have an opportunity to make a contribution and ask questions after a while. It seems to me we will make better progress that way.

Mr. Martineau: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think that for intelligent discussion, if the minister is replying to a question he should reply to it fully so that we will not have to come back again on that particular point. My question is absolutely pertinent to the point raised by the hon. member who asked the previous question.

Mr. Laing: Surely, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend does not suggest that the province of Quebec would not wish to maintain the standards.

Mr. Martineau: I am not suggesting anything. I am asking the minister a question, and he persists in not answering it.

An hon. Member: Arrogance.

Mr. Ricard: You are looking at yourself in a mirror.

Mr. Laing: My hon. friend did not deal with the language question at all, though he probably inferred that. He dealt with the quality of education. If Quebec agrees to maintain a certain quality of education, is he suggesting they are going to fall down on that agreement?

Mr. Martineau: That is not the answer to my question, Mr. Chairman; it is another question.

The Chairman: I recognize the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The item under which we are carrying out this interesting discussion is vote 1e, which concerns itself largely with a grant to the Canadian council of resource ministers. I think it is most appropriate that we are having this particular discussion under this vote, because the hon. minister has already intimated that there were some discussions on this subject in which I, as the minister of northern affairs and national resources in the former administration, took part. On both these occasions the discussions were incidental to the subject of the resource ministers council. As a matter of fact, the first time I was approached on the subject was during the course of the very successful resources for tomorrow conference in the city of Montreal in October, 1961.

On that occasion the minister of natural resources for the province of Quebec incidentally referred to his government's interest in the matter of administering the affairs of the Eskimos of new Quebec. The second occasion on which the subject was raised was also a meeting following the resources conference, a meeting at which we were making the final arrangements for bringing into effect on a permanent basis the resource ministers council, and again this subject was raised incidentally.

Realizing the constitutional importance of the supreme court's decision of 1939—I am not getting into the constitutional aspects tonight because I feel this has been quite adequately dealt with by my legal confreres on this side of the house—I suggested to the minister of resources for the province of Quebec that it was of such vital and fundamental importance that it should be discussed at the highest levels, namely by the prime ministers of the two governments concerned. The last contact I recall having had on this subject was on March 16, 1963 when I replied to the minister of resources, who was inquiring when the premier of the province of Quebec might hear from the Prime Minister of Canada. In reply to the remarks of the minister tonight with reference to any negotiations which the former administration might have had, I have to indicate that this is all that transpired. In other words, we stood firm on the constitutional aspects of this problem.

There is another reason for my entering the discussion at this time. This is the first opportunity that I have had to refer to the passing of one of the senior officials of the department of northern affairs. I refer to the late Frank Cunningham, who was the assistant deputy minister for a number of years and one of the men who played a key role in implementing many of the progressive policies which have taken place in northern development during the past five or six years. Mr. Frank Cunningham retired early because of ill health and did not live many months beyond his retirement. I am sure the minister of northern affairs would join me in indicating that he was the type of devoted civil servant in the department of northern affairs to which the minister referred in opening his remarks tonight. Mr. Cunningham was largely concerned with roads to resources and the material aspects of the northern development program.

This brings me to the point that I want to present to the committee tonight. All the policies which were implemented by the former administration with respect to northern development our primary concern was with the development of human resources. The minister agrees with this viewpoint, and has indicated this is so in the remarks he has made to the committee tonight. The only reason I am speaking at this time is because as I listened to him I saw a ray of hope that the door was still open, and that he is not yet firmly convinced that the step being contemplated by the present government, namely the transfer of administration and jurisdiction of the Eskimos of northern Quebec to the provincial government, will be in the best interests of these people. As a matter of fact, I think the case could be proven that this might indeed be a retrograde step.

The minister paid high tribute to the work that has been carried out by the department of northern affairs in all parts of northern Canada. Having said that, he then indicated he is willing to transfer the jurisdiction and administration of this territory to another level of government. I am sure all members of this committee will agree that the record of Canada and the governments of Canada with reference to the original Canadians—the first Canadians as they are sometimes called—is not a good one. I am not going to recite the long sad story of governmental neglect in the area of both Indian affairs and Eskimo affairs. The problem has been confounded by the sort of paternalism which completely ignores the wishes of the people concerned with regard to the administration of their own affairs, as contemplated by this transfer of jurisdiction. I could speak of the neglect in the areas of health, the problems which have been compounded by segregation on reserves, by educational segregation, and so forth and so on. It is only in recent years that both the Indian affairs branch and the department of northern affairs have moved forward with a progressive policy toward our first Canadians.

As a result of the improved health program the Indians and Eskimos are no longer a vanishing people. The infant mortality rate was of shockingly high proportions until the department of northern affairs and the northern health services branch moved into this area of Canadian activity. Educational programs were one of the keystones of northern development under the former administration. It should be pointed out that the first program for sponsored university education in any part of Canada was undertaken on behalf of the citizens of northern Canada by the department of northern affairs. Then the great leap forward with respect to our first Canadians was the granting of the franchise, the unrestricted franchise. This was the first genuine indication that the government of Canada was concerned in moving these people forward from third to second class citizenship to first class citizenship.

A great deal of interest has been generated in the major metropolitan press across the country with regard to this question. Top flight reporters have been sent into the area concerned to examine the problem at the grassroots level. I have been disturbed to find comments of the politicians concerned which seem to suggest that these first Canadians, our original Canadians, are a backward people. This has been the case with some of the public figures in the province of Quebec involved in these discussions. As a matter of fact the minister of resources of the province of Quebec has repeatedly indicated that he is willing to consult in all aspects of this problem except the fundamental area, the matter of the transfer of administration and jurisdiction. One of the most disturbing statements came from the M.L.A. who represents this area of northern Quebec, who demanded that the franchise should be removed from these northern Quebec Eskimos. This is why I feel there is a strong possibility that the step contemplated might be a retrograde one.

The minister has indicated his confidence in the capacity of these northern citizens. I can confirm this on the basis of the many contacts I have made. For example, Fort Chimo is one of the main communities concerned, and the Fort Chimo Eskimo co-operative is one of the most progressive of all northern co-operatives at present in operation. I recall a press conference that was held at the Ottawa press club in August of 1962 when representatives of the Fort Chimo co-operative came to Ottawa to promote the sale of Arctic char. They were exposed to a full battery of questions on the part of members of the parliamentary press gallery, and their answers were so sophisticated and competent that one press interrogator suggested that the Eskimos had been briefed. He said to one of them: "You sit there and you answer these questions with all the sophistication of a business executive". The Eskimo could not speak English, but speaking through an interpreter he said: "If I look like a business executive it is because I am a business executive; I am president of the Fort Chimo Eskimo co-operative".

Very often the uninitiated, those who are unfamiliar with these excellent people, refer to them as backward, not ready for the franchise and not capable of handling their own affairs as other Canadians do. I could refer to the first conference of Eskimo co-operatives held at Frobisher Bay just a year ago, when representatives from right across the Arctic as well as northern Quebec met at Frobisher Bay for a conference which lasted several days. They carried on discussion in an economic conference that would compare favourably with many of the conferences that are conducted in the southern parts of Canada.

I am giving a friendly warning to my successor, the present minister, that every indication in the house up to the present time concerning this move would suggest that the government is moving in a retrograde direction. The new government has repeatedly given lip service to a more humanitarian and enlightened approach to the problems of our first Canadians. This is the first major action that the government has contemplated and it threatens to reverse all the gains that have been made in recent years by their predecessors in governmental responsibility.

I am going to make four recommendations that should be taken into consideration by the government as they contemplate this problem. I think it has been proven beyond any shadow of doubt in the discussion today that before there can be any change of jurisdiction a constitutional amendment is required. This is a national problem. It is one that applies to both Indians and Eskimos and it concerns all the provinces. If we are going to continue as a federal state we cannot deal with this problem only within the jurisdictional area of one province. We must consider the entire national perspective. Yet the minister has already indicated that the government is willing to negotiate notwithstanding the constitutional prerequisite.

My colleague, the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue, stated the constitutional position quite precisely the other day, I thought, when he made his excellent contribution to this discussion. I noticed that when the hon. member for Carleton tried to deal with this matter without any reference to authorities he did not refer to the excellent contribution of the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue who presented the Quebec viewpoint on this matter. Rather he dealt with the questions that had been propounded by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm who has not yet made a speech on this subject. I suggest that the hon. member for Carleton should follow the lead that has been given by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue.

The second recommendation I wish to make to the minister and the government is that the wishes of the Eskimos be respected in these matters. So far as I have been able to determine, the Eskimos have made no requests for this jurisdictional transfer. If there is one fundamental principle that is more important than another it is the fundamental right of self-determination, which Canada has insisted upon in discussions at the United Nations and other international gatherings, with regard to the treatment of other peoples who have not yet assumed the full status and quality of citizenship. This is a basic human right and I think the minister would be well advised to take this into consideration. There has been no agitation by the Eskimos for this transfer. On the other hand, in every case where the Indians have been granted certain concessions requests have come from the Indians themselves in each instance.

Mr. McTaggart, the former principal of the school at Fort Chimo, has got into the public discussion recently. I know Mr. McTaggart. He comes from the province of Manitoba and I am sure that Manitobans are noted for their—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dinsdale: Perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre might help me—tolerance and temperance in these matters. The point Mr. McTaggart was trying to make was that the wishes of the people of Fort Chimo were being ignored. It may be that he trespassed, so far as his responsibilities as a civil servant are concerned, but I do not think it can be denied that he had a legitimate point in trying to present the body of public opinion in this northern community as he understood it.

The next point I should like to make is that the discussions must include both Eskimos and Indians. Otherwise we will have discrimination between these two groups of first Canadians. I simply refer to the situation at Great Whale River where you have Indians and Eskimos living side by side. If the Eskimos are under one jurisdiction and the Indians under another jurisdiction you will have segregation and confusion confounded. The first native Indian to serve in this parliament—I refer to Senator Gladstone—has made the point repeatedly that the problems of these two peoples cannot be considered in isolation. They are one and the same and indivisible. As a matter of fact, he has repeatedly recommended that both these groups should be brought under the jurisdiction of one department and he prefers the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources because of the excellent record they have established in administering the affairs of the Eskimos.

Miss LaMarsh: The Eskimos are no more Indian than is Senator Gladstone.

Mr. Dinsdale: My hon. friend the minister of health and welfare says the Eskimos are no more Indians than is Senator Gladstone.

Miss LaMarsh: Except legally.

Mr. Dinsdale: The minister should read the decision of the supreme court in 1939 in this respect.

The final point I should like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that parliament must decide this issue. This is the reason for the extended discussion on these estimates. This matter must be brought before parliament because it is a fundamental issue of human rights and only parliament, not the government, is qualified and has authority to deal with it.

Before concluding, I should like to make one or two additional points. The Minister of Justice maintains that this whole matter is administrative. I want to ask him how you can turn over administration without affecting the jurisdiction? How can you enter upon such matters as health of the Eskimos, medical care, schools, welfare and justice, without possessing jurisdictional authority to do so? If this is the case, then this government is either being false to Quebec or false to the constitution.

If Quebec has a legitimate claim, and no member on this side of the house has said it has not, then the proper constitutional steps must be taken to turn over jurisdiction. The hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue made this fundamental point. This is not the first time that this government has tried to cut corners. It has done it in so many other basic matters in this house in recent months. The government, for some reason, is trying to approach this matter in an underhanded, devious and uncertain manner. It is for this reason we on this side of the house are objecting. Our objection is to this government's total incapacity to act in accordance with the principle that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points.

The confusion that has resulted has been caused directly by the government's devious methods. There is no need for unseemly haste. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, there is no need for unparliamentary haste in dealing with this fundamental issue.

Mr. Howard: We dealt with this same subject on another occasion, and while it is of vital importance because it affects the rights of people, nevertheless I do not think it warrants the extensive repetition that has taken place, certainly not in so far as I am concerned. However, listening to the minister explain the situation this evening, particularly when he answered questions posed by members of the Conservative party, he left a distinct impression with me that he had something to hide; that he was in a box and that he was trying to explain away an awkward situation. This is regrettable. I think perhaps the minister is in a situation, unfortunately, not entirely of his own making and he is making the best of a bad job.

I do not know who initiated these discussions, but I think it would be the province of Quebec. I think it is quite obvious, after listening to the hon. member from Brandon-Souris, that the discussion of the transfer of jurisdiction really did start at the ministerial level. There was not any concern on the part of the government of Quebec or on the part of this government, in attempting to discover the attitude of the people themselves. I believe this is what the minister is trying to cover up, and it is a regrettable situation. I gather it is not only the Liberal government that is responsible for this sort of high level bungling, or attempts at high levels to deal with the rights of people. I say that because of the admission made by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris just a moment ago. He was attending the resources for tomorrow conference in Quebec and was approached on this question. His answer was that this matter should be discussed at the highest level, and he qualified that by referring to the level of the Prime Minister of Canada and the premier of Quebec.

This is where the error was made in the first instance. What the hon. member for Brandon-Souris should have said on that occasion, if his words now mean anything or reflect the attitude of his party, was that this matter should be discussed at the highest level, namely, the level of the people concerned. This is the only level at which it should be discussed. I have tried to make this point time and time again with the minister: When you are dealing with the rights of people, for heaven's sake consult these people first. If you do not do that, you have no business proceeding further with any discussion, developing memoranda or answering letters. In this instance, the Eskimo people should have been consulted first to ascertain what they wanted. Then the minister, as the one responsible for their affairs, should be their representative, and negotiate for them. You do not consummate an agreement, then come back and try to sell it to the native people. So far as I am concerned you should discontinue these discussions with Quebec until you find out what the Eskimo people themselves want, and you should not do anything else.

Mr. Dinsdale: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howard: Yes.

Mr. Dinsdale: He has indicated that the initial error was the suggestion the matter should be discussed at the highest level, the prime minister's level. Does he not recall that one of the points I made during my observations tonight was that no discussion ever took place at that level, and my stand was that you must consult with the people concerned.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member also said he suggested it should be discussed at the highest level, and he referred to the level of the Prime Minister and the premier of Quebec. He can qualify that by using the phrase he has just used now, but the fact is that he made that statement and did that.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Chairman, several days ago we were discussing this subject and I raised a few points. Until that time I had refrained from entering the debate, even though as a resident of the Northwest Territories and as the member representing the bulk of the Eskimo people in this country, I am quite prepared to stand in this house and tell the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a few things about the Eskimo people that they may not know. However, I participate at this point because I have not had answers to the basic issues I raised.

By way of comment, I was fascinated by a headline in tonight's Ottawa Citizen, which I assume came from the pen of the Prime Minister's nephew, who is editor of that paper, in which he says the Prime Minister is going to the country if there is any more delay in the house. I say to the Prime Minister and to the committee, we would love to go to the country on the issue of whether or not 2,500 Canadian people are going to be pushed around. I will gladly campaign anywhere, from one end of the country to the other, on that very issue.

Until we get some answers I am quite prepared to talk, and talk, and talk. I say to any of the brave gentlemen opposite, with their northern experience, like the hon. member for Carleton, who want to tell us something about the north, let them stand up and I will gladly take my seat while they pose their questions.

I want to say to the minister I have confidence in the stand he has taken within the cabinet on this matter. I have confidence in the kind of things he told the Eskimo people on his visit to the Canadian north last fall. My recollection is that just before he went to Fort Chimo he bumped into me in the Canadian Arctic and I suggested to him, having come from Fort Chimo myself, that he might run into this problem. I know the Eskimo people at Chimo have a reasonable degree of confidence in him, but I am not confident in the things the Minister of Justice said in the committee today, because I am satisfied he is the one who has the power in this play going on between the federal government and the provincial government.

The Minister of Justice said today, "Don't worry, whatever is best for the people shall be done," but I say to him nearly all of the unpleasant, unsavoury, unacceptable and unworthy things that happened to me in my life have happened to me at the hands of people who were doing what was best for me, and I am not prepared to have the Minister of Justice decide what is best for me and what is best for 2,500 Canadian citizens who happen to be Eskimos in northern Quebec.

There are a few issues which I have raised in the house and I intend to raise them again in the committee tonight. One important issue that has been the curse of many previous ministers of northern affairs is whether the people of the Canadian north are going to be consulted about major policy matters or not? This is the issue.

The people of the north are a special kind of people. The minister who represents them in parliament—and I must say I am happy with the way the present minister is representing us who live in the north—must have a special kind of courage. He must have a special understanding of what we, who choose to live in the Canadian north, want. We insist on being consulted before things like this happen. It may have been good enough in previous years for the federal government and the House of Commons to do things to the Canadian north, but it is no longer good enough, and so far as I am concerned, so long as I am its member, I shall take this same position on every issue that is raised. You are going to consult us, Mr. Minister, before you decide what you are going to do with our lives.

I want to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that in Ottawa at the present time we have gathered together a group of our northern officials in conference. They are here to give the minister and his senior officials the benefit of the experience they have had over the past two years. Every two years the department brings these men and women from all parts of Canada in to Ottawa, and I say to the minister if he wants to find out what is going on, let him consult these people. They are all here, brought to Ottawa at considerable expense to the taxpayer, and surely no one begrudges the cost of that. For goodness sake, I say to the minister, talk to them. He has all his officers here from northern Quebec. Let him ask them what are the issues at stake right now. Let him go to these people and find out.

My hon. friend suggests a deal has been made. I am not sure it has. Hopefully, I suggest it has not. The reason I am speaking now is because questions I raised several weeks ago were not answered. Indeed, it was not until this afternoon that the minister got up and, under tremendous pressure from the hon. member for Yukon, finally admitted that several people, several Eskimo people, had told him they were opposed to the transfer of their affairs to the jurisdiction of the Quebec government. Why in the world could he not have said that in the house two days ago? I asked him whether the people of northern Quebec suggested to him that they did not want to be administered by Quebec. I asked him whether any of them had asked him about getting help to move to the Northwest Territories. He sat there and said nothing.

It was only today, when finally a minister of the crown realized his estimates might not get through until he was prepared to level with the committee and the people of Canada, that he got up to speak. There has been a lot of talk about consulting the Eskimo people. How do you consult with the Eskimo people? I will tell you how to do it. I am waiting for a definitive statement to be made on this matter by the hon. member for Saguenay, who represents the Eskimo people. During the dinner recess, out of curiosity, I looked up the last poll results from the northern Eskimo settlements in Quebec. I was not happy with them, but I was interested to learn that they voted almost solidly in favour of the hon. member for Saguenay, who happens to be on the government side of the house.

Apparently we are not afraid to consult those people when we want them to elect a member of parliament from northern Quebec. I know the way the last election was fought. Apparently we did not hesitate to take the issues of nuclear weapons, cabinet solidarity and balance of payments to the Eskimo people in the north when they voted for the hon. member for Saguenay, but all of a sudden they are not competent to say whether or not their affairs should be administered by the provincial government. I suggest it is a glaring omission that the hon. member for Saguenay has yet to make a single statement in the committee.

If he is not prepared to speak for the 2,500 Eskimo people in northern Quebec, then by default I am prepared to speak for them. I am prepared to say to the minister that I am not satisfied with the reasons given for the negotiations and dealings made to date. I am satisfied that this is nothing more than an exercise in political appeasement to the province of Quebec, and I am prepared to continue talking in the committee to see to it that we get to the bottom of the issue.

One of the chief negotiators in this matter has been the minister of resources in the province of Quebec. The Minister of Justice assures us, turn these people over to Quebec and all shall be well. Yet this same minister, Hon. Rene Levesque, says it will be an abuse of democracy to give the Eskimo people the right to vote on it. He says it is hypocrisy; that those who want this vote are hypocrites. I ask, should the Canadian people entrust the affairs of our Eskimo people to this kind of person who is prepared to make this kind of statement?

I want the minister to reassure me on this matter. I want him to reassure the Eskimo people. He can reassure me tonight by clearing up the one or two areas that are still in doubt. Further, I want him to do something else, and I am really prepared to help him.

I want him to write a letter to the Eskimo people of northern Quebec. I have all their names and addresses. I have a typewriter that will type in syllabics. My secretary is an Eskimo and she will help with the translation. I want him to do this while we in southern Canada are tussling over the question of the administration of Eskimo affairs. I want him to write a letter and give to them the same kind of reassurance that hopefully he has given us.

Write them a letter. Tell them that he is their minister. Tell them that they can count on the trust they have in him—and I know they have trust in him. Write them a letter. I will help him print it. He can use my typewriter. Let him say that while we southern Canadians are fighting over this issue they need not worry because he will see to it that their constitutional rights and their right to self-determination will be defended, just as would be the rights of any other Canadians. That is what I am asking him to do tonight.

Mr. Turner: I do not intend to deal with the legal and constitutional aspects of the matter before us. I feel that the Minister of Justice has dealt well and capably with them. I do wish to refer to certain aspects of the speech made by the hon. member for Yukon who tried throughout the course of his address this evening, as, indeed, he did in his earlier interventions on this subject, to put words into the mouth of the minister of northern affairs.

[Mr. Rheaume.]

The hon. member is a lawyer with experience in a tough territory where life is harder than it is in southern Canada. He has had experience before the courts. Versed as he is in the common law, after many years of practice he knows it is an old and respected principle of the common law that silence is never to be equated with acquiescence or acquiescence deemed to follow necessarily from silence. Yet, this evening, having in mind the fact that over the past several weeks questions have been posed by hon. members of his party, some of which have not been answered by the minister, either because—with respect, Mr. Chairman—they were out of order, or inflammatory, or hypothetical, or argumentative, because the minister has not chosen to abuse the rules of the house in the same fashion, his silence is interpreted by the hon. member for Yukon as acquiescence. I put it to the hon. member that he is too accomplished a lawyer to believe in that principle, though from time to time he is too enthusiastic a debater to follow it.

I want to suggest to the committee that what the member for the Yukon has tried to do with the statement made by my minister, the minister of northern affairs to the House of Commons on March 4 is this: misread it, misinterpret it, colour it by omission, and separate the preface from the integral part of the statement, though the preface is an important part of that statement. My minister said, clearly, that this memorandum was not an agreement or even an agreement to agree; it was merely a memorandum of basic conditions and principles in the event that an agreement might eventually be concluded between Quebec and the federal government. This is, as was said by my hon. friend the minister of northern affairs, a set of guidelines and it is obvious that if one is to have guidelines one must express them in the indicative, not in the subjunctive mood; one must indicate them in the terms one would ordinarily find in the agreement itself. But, relying on sophistry, the hon. member for Yukon finds the word "agreement" in the memorandum and says: Aha! A fait accompli; a deal has been signed; the Eskimos have been betrayed. Yet the document is perfectly clear. We are still, as the minister was then, in the course of negotiations, and I would ask the hon. member for Yukon and other hon. members who, I know, are dealing sincerely with the subject, to consider these points as items in a memorandum made during the course of discussions.

I listened while the minister referred to the declaration of a former minister of citizenship and immigration, Mrs. Fairclough, to be found recorded in the April 8, 1960, edition of Hansard. The hon. lady announced government policy of that day to the effect that the federal government was then prepared to enact agreements with the governments of various provinces for the extension of normal provincial welfare services to persons residing on Indian reserves. She said the purpose was to allow the development of the Indians as a self-sufficient people so as to avoid the growth of exclusive welfare services on reserves—something which would tend to set Indians apart from other Canadians. This, as I understand it, is the point taken by the hon. member for Skeena.

The hon. member for Yukon answered this argument by saying that Eskimos are not Indians—that they are deliberately excluded from the Indian Act. This, I suggest to him, is another sophistry. The hon. member for Yukon looks at me benignly and smiles. He knows as well as I do that the governing authority is the supreme court action which he cited and which the hon. member for Peace River also cited—the Indian reference before the Supreme Court of Canada. I know that the hon. member for Yukon, a meticulous lawyer, still refers from time to time to the headnote, and the headnote summarizes the case: "Eskimo inhabitants of the province of Quebec are 'Indians' within the contemplation of head 24, section 91 of the British North America Act".

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is he referring to the 1939 supreme court decision?

Mr. Turner: I anticipate a double-barreled reply.

Mr. Baldwin: Just one question, if that is the case referred to. Is the hon. member aware that the Indian Act was passed in 1951, which was 12 years after the decision to which he refers, with full knowledge that the decision he quoted says that a reference to an Indian does not include any person of the race of aborigines commonly referred to as Eskimos?

Mr. Turner: I will concede, within the limits of the Indian Act and the welfare provisions of that section, the strength of the hon. member's argument. All I am saying is that we must not be legalistic about this. We are talking about the native people, and the principle adduced by the hon. member for Skeena, with which I agree. It is that the native, indigenous people must be allowed to develop and live as ordinary Canadian citizens, and be treated under the ordinary provincial jurisdictions of this country, whether they be Indians or Eskimos.

That is to say, they should eventually fall within the welfare provisions, the educational provisions and the provisions affecting natural resources which fall under provincial jurisdiction. I submit that the principle adduced by Mrs. Fairclough in her statement in 1960 is as valid in affecting the Eskimos as it is valid in affecting the Indians. For the hon. member for Yukon to try to introduce a legalistic distinction as affecting that principle surely is a late evening whimsy on his part.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition said earlier today that we must not treat the Eskimos as voiceless serfs, as pawns, as political captives; and I could not agree more. As I understand it, the policy of the government with respect to the Indians and our native peoples is that they shall no longer remain as second class citizens; they shall no longer remain as wards of the federal government; they shall no longer remain as pawns, but shall be allowed to run the ordinary course of development as citizens, having the same rights and bearing the same responsibilities as any other Canadian. It is because that is envisaged within the negotiations undertaken by the federal government with the province of Quebec with respect to the Eskimos that the purpose of these negotiations, if they are ever to mature, surely is to emancipate the Eskimos as we hope one day to emancipate the Indians from federal trusteeship and allow them to develop as ordinary citizens in this country.

Mr. Howard: Only if they agree.

Mr. Turner: The hon. member raises, probably by way of mental telepathy that is a product of a sensitive spirit, the next point I was going to make. This is our concern. We want the Eskimos to be brought into the 20th century; we want to encourage them to develop themselves as fully-fledged citizens of Canada, which means that eventually they must take the responsibility not only as citizens of this country but of their respective provinces. But we want to insist, and we have insisted, on certain guarantees before any transfer is effected. Those guarantees, which we are in the midst of negotiating, I would submit to the committee were set forth in the memorandum to which I referred earlier, namely the memorandum that my minister gave to this house on March 4; that the cultural and economic ties of the Eskimos throughout the north would not be broken; that the Quebec government would respect the Eskimo language and the religion to which they belong; that the Eskimos, after the transfer, would continue to enjoy at least the same services as they are now receiving. In other words, it was an integral part of any agreement to be negotiated with the province of Quebec that the same rights, the same services would be guaranteed to that northern, minority people.

The principle of self-determination has been raised and echoed in this chamber this evening. My minister made it quite clear that the governments of Canada and Quebec were to undertake to consult jointly with the Eskimos. What did this consultation mean? The statement has been read several times in this chamber. The hon. member for Yukon looks at me knowingly again. He knows exactly what those words mean. They are too clear to be mistaken except by a man who wants to mistake them.

Mr. Nielsen: I am waiting for your interpretation.

Mr. Turner: Consultation in an impartial fashion means that a commission, which would be chosen jointly by both governments—

Mr. Nielsen: Will there be Eskimos on it?

Mr. Turner: This is a matter to be determined, as the minister suggested.

Mr. Nielsen: He has done nothing of the kind.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, it is getting late in the evening and I know the hon. member for Yukon likes to maintain his seat and exercise his voice. But he must opt too; either speak, or sit. I do not say that unkindly.

Mr. Aiken: It might be the same thing.

Mr. Pugh: Why don't you say something while you are on your feet?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, it is strange how good humour increases on the other side as the hour gets later.

The consultation would take the form of a commission chosen jointly by the two governments. Any agreement, before execution, would be submitted to the Eskimos, explained to them and interpreted to them. They would be asked for their views.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Turner: Perhaps the hon. member would allow me to finish. Their views would be sought, and if as a result of those views, as a result of the expression of opinion from the Eskimos in the north, in Ungava and northern Quebec, the federal government deemed that modifications or changes to any draft agreement, if and when it is drafted, were necessary, those changes, to the best of my understanding, would be made. Let me say—

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. member permit a question?

[Mr. Turner.]

Mr. Turner: I would appreciate it, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member would allow me to finish. I know the impatience he has—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary has the floor.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Chairman: If the parliamentary secretary wished to accept a question, he would resume his seat. He has not done so, and therefore I presume he is not prepared to accept a question.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Yukon reminds me a great deal of Pandora and the genie which escaped from her box. Once you open the box, it is very difficult to put the genie back in. Let me say, in all fairness, that I believe those on the government side gave a fair hearing both to the hon. member for Yukon and the hon. member for Northwest Territories and I would appreciate receiving, for a few more minutes, the kind attention that I am wont to receive from the other side.

Those are the principles that this government, as I understand it, are trying to achieve; namely, emancipation of the native indigenous peoples of this country so that eventually they will be governed as ordinary Canadian citizens under provincial jurisdiction right across the country. The same principle, the same services and the same rights would be guaranteed to these minority, native peoples by whichever provincial government assumes responsibility for their administration—not jurisdiction. Third, the views of these people will be obtained in as democratic a fashion as is practically possible.

Let me say a final word, Mr. Chairman. Ever since the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources assumed this portfolio he has given every consideration to this important question. I had the opportunity of being on the trip across the north with him last summer when, as the hon. member for Northwest Territories said, we bumped into him. I might say that not only did we bump into the hon. member for Yukon, but we could not shake him.

Mr. Nielsen: You are not shaking him now, either.

Mr. Turner: When my minister was up there he said on several occasions, and expressed it from his heart—and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition gave him credit for that this afternoon—that we want government, not by laws but by men. That was a sincere statement.

Mr. Nielsen: The other way around.

Mr. Turner: A government of men, not laws.

Mr. Nielsen: No, the other way around.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, I find it a strange thing that a subject that seems to have attracted the sincere discussion, criticism and opposition of men opposite, who are entitled to take that position, should be treated by them, when the government maintains and defends its case, in a sense of joviality and ridicule. It should be one thing or the other; either the committee takes this question of a minority people seriously, or it does not.

Mr. Starr: Your speech has been filled with fun.

Mr. Turner: If it does take it seriously, I would ask the concession of hon. members opposite to let me finish on this personal note. I have every confidence, as I am sure everyone in this house has, that the minister of northern affairs will see that justice is done to the Eskimos of northern Quebec, and that they are consulted within the full principle of democracy, and their views taken into account. I have no doubt of that, nor has any member on this side of the house; and if hon. members on the opposite side were to probe their consciences, neither have they.

In conclusion I should like to quote this evening's editorial in the Ottawa Journal, not necessarily a publication favourable to this government. The editorial is entitled "Nouveau Quebec" and I will read three paragraphs into the record, if I may:

> Outsiders should be careful, however, to note that the federal government is not insisting on maintaining its custodianship of Eskimos in the province of Quebec. The federal government knows well that in the constitutional or legal or geographic sense Quebec has the right to seek to take over this responsibility which some years ago it voluntarily rejected.
> The federal government properly asks, however, that the Eskimos suffer no infringement of their freedom of choice in religion, education and representation.
> It is a matter of basic principle, greatly complicated by ice, isolation, tradition, prejudice, economics and politics—a matter demanding the greatest of care and understanding.

In resuming my seat let me say that my minister and those who are negotiating with him have tried to maintain that care and understanding, and I would ask hon. members on the other side of the house to credit us with that and to devote to the problem the same non-partisan type of care and understanding.

Mr. Nielsen: While the hon. member is still on his feet would he permit a question which I wanted to ask him during his remarks. Would he not agree with me that the democratic thing to do would be to have representation on the commission to be appointed either from the Eskimo council or by their selection of an independent counsel?

Mr. Turner: There are several ways of going about this, and in the negotiations they are being considered. Whatever avenue is chosen in setting up this commission, I can assure the hon. member on behalf of the minister that the democratic principles to which he paid service tonight and to which we both adhere will be fulfilled.

Mr. Nielsen: Now will the hon. member answer the question I asked, if he cares to, namely whether he agrees that the Eskimo people should be represented on that commission.

Mr. Turner: I realize the impatience of the hon. member for Yukon if he does not get an answer which is satisfactory to him. In general this question has already been answered. Every opportunity will be given to the Eskimos to present their views to the commissioners, whoever they may be. Whether or not an Eskimo will become a member of the commission I cannot say, as the hon. member knows full well.

Mr. Howard: May I put a question to the parliamentary secretary. Is the effect of the intent of the memorandum which was put on Hansard on March 4 to consummate an agreement to transfer?

Mr. Turner: Is the hon. member asking me a question?

Mr. Howard: Yes.

Mr. Turner: That memorandum, as I understand it, forms the guidelines—it does not provide the exact language but it does form the guidelines—of any eventual agreement which is made or concluded between the two governments. That is all I can say to him, whether or not it is satisfactory to him.

Mr. Howard: If the hon. member would look at a few of the words contained in the memorandum for a moment I think he will agree that the government of Canada has committed itself to the principle of transferring jurisdiction first and foremost. Naturally I will have to extract sections from the text instead of reading the whole thing, but I do not think I am extracting them out of context. The first part concerns an agreement as to certain things. Then towards the end of the first paragraph, as reported at page 506 of Hansard, it says:

—Canada is prepared to have Quebec administer Eskimo affairs as part of Quebec's general administrative responsibilities in the province—

The memorandum says that it is an understanding reached at the February 29 meeting and that Canada is prepared to have Quebec administer these things. This is an intent which exhibits a desire on the part of Canada.

Then further on we come to point No. 3 of the matters which are understood, which refers to after the transfer has taken place, indicating that there will be a transfer. Then point No. 4 uses this expression—my grammar is not as good as that of the hon. gentleman who talked of indicatives, subjunctives and the like:

4. The governments of Canada and Quebec undertake to consult—

Then it explains the consultation and interprets it as——the communication of the terms of the agreement, excluding however the financial provisions thereof...will be made through a commission—

And so on.

Then further on in the same paragraph it says:

The functions of this commission will be to explain the conditions of the agreement—

So that both governments agree that such consultation is a prior condition of the execution of the agreement. There is nowhere a solitary word about the acceptance of that agreement. I submit that this, coupled with the reluctance, hesitancy and hiding of explanations given by the minister and his parliamentary secretary, indicates that there has been a sell-out of the rights and interests of these people.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, I rise to answer what began as a question and ended as a declaration. I must repeat that those items in the memorandum which the hon. member has just recited have to be read in conjunction with the preamble at the beginning of the statement of the minister, when he said:

The memorandum is not an agreement, nor is it an agreement to agree. It does constitute a statement outlining a consensus with respect to certain basic principles and conditions which, in the event of an agreement, are common to the two governments.

It is surely a common experience in negotiating a treaty, whether it be between two countries or an agreement between two provinces or a contract between two people, that in the midst of the negotiations you set out the terms which will be agreed on one by one; and if you finally get to the end of the agreement then you have the terms. But if you are not able to reach agreement, and in this instance if the federal government is not able to reach a satisfactory result with regard to minority rights, or the standard of services, or the method of consultation, or the financial provisions, then this whole series of items which the hon. member for Skeena read will be wiped out. These are statements of principle in general form which have been agreed on in the event that there is an eventual understanding between the two jurisdictions. If there is not, then it is all wiped out. That is the way I must explain the matter to the hon. member.

Mr. Howard: I have a supplementary question. Is it not a fact that the statement of the minister which appeared at the front of Hansard is merely his interpretation of what the understanding is, and that there is also another party to the agreement, the government of Quebec, which has its interpretation too? I submit that all we can concern ourselves with is, what does the understanding mean, what does the memorandum say, not what the minister thinks it says.

Mr. Laing: If I may reply at this time, I want to say that I regret very much that the hon. member for Skeena seems to be joining in the view taken by the hon. member for Yukon, namely that if you assert anything and it is not denied in the house it becomes a fact.

Mr. Howard: On a question of privilege, the minister should know full well that I have my own opinions and I do not have to join this element over here.

An hon. Member: It is mutual.

Mr. Laing: That statement seems to be agreeable to both sides of the house. I cannot help saying, however, that there is a likeness of attitude and I want to tell him that when he uses that kind of language he is not being fair to me and he is not being fair to himself.

Mr. Howard: You are not being fair to the Eskimo people.

Mr. Laing: There are three or four provisions included and I want to tell the hon. member that up to this time we have made practically no progress on them at all with the officials of the province of Quebec. I want to tell him that so far as the whole matter of financial arangements is concerned, we have not even had one single meeting on finance with any officials of the province of Quebec. So far we have not got to the point where we can agree that this memorandum and its provisions should be the basis for arrangements with the province of Quebec. Yet the hon. member gets up and asserts that in his judgment the Eskimos are already sold out. I want to assure him and the house, which is more important than he is, that there are no arrangements at all, and in respect of the memorandum that we drew up we have made practically no progress at all.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I was delighted at the way the parliamentary secretary started his remarks, by talking about sophistry, because I was sure that before he would finish he would show that he is an expert in that regard. I was really deeply touched by his remarks with regard to getting information from the minister, with regard to questions being asked and the minister trying to supply information, because I am sure that the parliamentary secretary and the minister are aware that the main complaint we on this side of the house have been making, not only about his department but about all departments, is the lack of information; and the reason more progress has not been made on the estimates is that we have not got enough dentists on this side of the house. We cannot yank out the information.

To remind the minister of where he goes wrong, and as an example of his question answering, I would refer him to the 9th of March when I asked him if tenders had been called for 140 Eskimo houses to be delivered at Waterways. I got no answer that day. The next day the Speaker suggested that the question should go on the order paper. I explained the urgency and pointed out that the minister appeared to have the information ready and I thought there was a possibility that he was perhaps making a mistake. The minister then proceeded to answer and began with the words:

I am pleased to reply to the hon. member's argument.

He was pleased to reply to the argument. This is the usual thing. We call for information and we get an argument. To this day there is no answer to my question on record in the house. I will admit that a week or so later when the minister was passing my door he was courteous enough to tell me that the number was 104, not 140, but there is nothing on the record to show it, and until he answered a question asked by an N.D.P. member there was nothing to show they were going to be delivered at Waterways. The urgency is borne out because I have just found out that the minister has put out a tender for another 75 houses to be delivered at Waterways.

Considering that it is one month to the day since I asked my question, and considering the length of time we have been trying to get some straight answers out of the government, I think that the remarks of the parliamentary secretary in making a speech of that kind constitute nothing more than effrontery. Since I am dealing with the matter of these houses, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make the further point that it is not just a matter of getting some information but rather of getting the right information. When the minister said he would answer my argument he did not give the information asked for. He proceeded to give me some freight rates, on which he based his contention that the government was proceeding the right way, but every item of information he supplied was inaccurate.

He gave a truck rate to Hay River of $2.85 per hundredweight. I got a telegram the next day from the main trucker there saying that the truck rate was $1.70. The minister gave rates by barge which did not apply to that class of goods. He gave rates by rail which were out of line. In other words, every figure supplied by the minister was inaccurate. Yet they ask us to take their word that they are trying to give us information. We were given all this gratuitously by way of argument advanced by the minister. What I wanted to know was whether the government was really buying them. I wanted some information so I would know whether they were going to proceed further, but all I got was an argument and incorrect information.

Not only is the information inaccurate but it is silly, because between shipping by way of Yellowknife or Hay River or Waterways the information he gave works out to a difference of $20 per ton, and if the minister knows anything at all about the Northwest Territories he should know that the rates each way are competitive, or else all the goods would go one way. With a difference of $20 per ton it would be silly of anyone to think that he could compete going a different way. Not only was the information gratuitous and inaccurate but it was stupid, and it simply shows that the minister is so careless he does not care what type of information he gives the house.

There is another point which I have mentioned before. The department says it has a rule that it favours neither Yellowknife Transportation nor Northern Transportation and I have thought over the years that the department has tried to carry out fairly a policy of giving freight 50-50 to these two companies. In this instance the houses are to be delivered at Waterways where only Northern Transportation can operate, so they are not trying to be fair at all.

If the minister was at all concerned about the accuracy of his information and what it does to the people in my area he would know that by quoting figures as erroneous as these, which make it seem advantageous to ship by way of rail to Waterways, he is doing the greatest possible damage to all the truckers operating out of Edmonton. The parliamentary secretary to the minister has tried to persuade us that they have some regard for the rights of people, including the Eskimos. I suggest that if they have any regard for the rights of people they should at least check their information and make sure they are not harming the truckers of Edmonton in the way they have by trying to discourage any shipper in Canada from shipping by that route. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: May I ask the house leader whether the program he outlined the day before yesterday still stands for tomorrow or whether he wishes to make some revision, and also what the program may be for Monday?

Mr. Favreau: I am afraid the program for tomorrow will be desperately the same as it has been in the course of the last few days. I hope that the debate on the supplementary estimates will end tomorrow. If there is some time left during the day, then we would take second reading of the pension plan. Then, on the first and second full days that are available we will continue the budget debate.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if I could ask the minister if, in order to get these estimates through, he would explore the possibility of the house being willing to sit on Friday night and then on Saturday?

Mr. Favreau: I could not agree more, Mr. Speaker.

It being two minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply this day]:

Mr. Walker moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may have the unanimous consent of the house I should like to move that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this house will unite with them in the formation of joint committees of both houses with respect to the library of parliament, the printing of parliament and the restaurant of parliament, and that the members to serve on each of the said committees on the part of this house will be as contained in the second report of the special committee presented this day.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EXTENSION OF HOURS OF SITTING THIS DAY

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, standing order 41 provides a procedure by which the house can deal with the hours of sitting. I do not wish to move a formal motion at this point but I should like to propose, and I hope it will be agreeable to hon. members, that in order to make progress with the supplementary estimates the house should sit this evening.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): We are perfectly agreeable to that. I think it is a proper suggestion on the part of the Prime Minister, and it will receive our full support.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The suggestion the right hon. gentleman has just put forward was made from this corner last night. We agree.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): We are quite prepared to go along with this suggestion and do our part in facilitating the passage of the estimates.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): We are prepared also to facilitate the passage of these estimates.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that by unanimous consent the house will sit this evening from 7 to 10 p.m. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR INCREASED NUMBER OF CANADIAN TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of certain questions asked yesterday and the suggestion on his part that Canada was giving consideration to providing additional forces to the United Nations force in Cyprus. Would he let the house know what the situation is in this connection? Also, does he agree with mounting public opinion to the effect that the willing shoulders of Canada are already bearing our share of the United Nations force, a larger share than that of any other nation, with the exception of the United Kingdom; that it has accepted its full and complete share, and that any additional troops should be provided by other members of the United Nations?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the right hon. gentleman's question I can assure him, as I have already indicated elsewhere, that Canada does feel that other members of the United Nations ought to share in the obligations which are imposed on them under the charter of the United Nations.

I can confirm that we have received a request from the secretary general for additional personnel. We hope to be able to deal with this matter very shortly. The request we have received is not in the same category as that which has been addressed by the secretary general to the governments of Sweden, Finland and Ireland. The request to those governments is for additional ground troops and is part of the secretary general's attempts to bring the non-British component of the United Nations force up to the 3,500 level originally envisaged.

The request to Canada is for brigade headquarters staff, a function which up to now has been discharged by United Kingdom forces. Both requests form part of the field reorganization which General Gyani is putting into effect as the international force is gradually phased in to take over some staff and peace keeping functions previously undertaken by British forces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What would be the number of brigade staff that is being asked for; would it be less than 100?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It would be slightly over 100 but less than 150.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say what representations have been made to the secretary general requesting that he endeavour to secure forces from other members of the United Nations? Because it seems, in view of the course being followed now, that it is only the willing that provide and the unwilling stand by.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend will recognize in that generalization he has simply expressed an impulse of human nature.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mandziuk: Don't you share it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Canada, however, as he has properly noted, has not shirked its responsibilities. We have made strong representations to the secretary general of the United Nations that he should solicit, as indeed he is doing, the contributions of other countries. We ourselves only this morning have been engaged in that process with two other countries.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I thank the minister for the impulsive nature that he exercised in doing that.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the minister mentioned a force of 3,500. I rather assume that he meant 7,500.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was referring to the desire, pursuant to the resolution of the security council, to reduce the British force from 7,000 to 3,500 and bring the United Nations force up to 3,500 to reach the total of 7,000, the maximum provided for in the security council resolution.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question.

According to an article in Le Devoir this morning, the secretary general of the United Nations is said to have asked Canada to send another Canadian unit to Cyprus in the near future.

Can the minister tell us what his intentions are in this respect?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I answered the same question at the request of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), a few moments ago.

SOCIAL INSURANCE

MANITOBA—LETTER TO TEACHERS RESPECTING APPLICATION CARDS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Did the minister authorize the national unemployment insurance commission office in Winnipeg to present an ultimatum to the teachers of Manitoba requiring them to fill out applications for social insurance numbers within a week of notification, and declaring it an offence if they failed to comply?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Churchill: A supplementary question. Did the employment insurance office, without any authority, send a letter dated March 28, 1964 to the teachers of Manitoba on this particular subject? Was that without any authority whatever from the minister?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not think any such instruction or ultimatum was sent out. There was a letter sent out by the commission in which, as I understand it, instructions were included covering the social insurance registration program. One part of the instructions was a section dealing with the book renewal aspect, which is mandatory. Beneath that description was a sentence to the effect that failure to comply was an offence. I think that statement applied only to the book renewal aspect of the program and has been misinterpreted to include the whole program.

The situation is as I have stated. Only those in the insured population are obliged to apply; others are free to do so. In this case it will be my wish that the teachers would come forward and register even though they are not compelled to do so.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think this matter requires a further statement on the part of the minister. I have before me the notice of registration which reads as follows:

> The new system includes issuance of a "social insurance" number to all employed persons, whether covered by unemployment insurance or not. It will be broad enough and flexible enough to be adapted to the record keeping required for the proposed pension plan and other social security measures.

Then after all that is set forth, at the foot of the page in large letters appear the words:

> It is an offence to fail to comply with this request.

There can be no misunderstanding that that covers the whole record.

Mr. MacEachen: The sentence in that case is intended to apply only to the preceding sections dealing with the book renewal program, as I indicated. I have not the form in front of me but I examined it yesterday with the commission, and as I recollect it the section the right hon. gentleman read has application only to the preceding section dealing with the book renewal program. In other words it is dealing with the mandatory aspect of the program applying to the insured population.

If there is any misunderstanding arising from the large print that is employed I should like to remove it simply by repeating what I have already stated in the house, that teachers are not obliged to come forward and no instructions have been sent out to that effect. It is my wish that they will come forward and apply for social insurance numbers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You should be a little more careful with the printing.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): A supplementary question. Might I ask the Minister of Labour whether he would be good enough to give instruction to the national unemployment insurance office in Winnipeg to circularize the teachers in the districts to which these directives have gone in order to allay the anxiety of the teachers concerned. They are really disturbed about it, as is shown by the telegram which has been received. I think a directive from the minister would help to allay their fears. If this is on a voluntary basis, that is fine—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Mandziuk: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I must say this matter is urgent, as I think the telegram indicates. I think the minister should make a statement so the teachers of Manitoba would understand.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made his point very clear, and it seems to me the minister gave a long detailed reply which will be published across the country.

Mr. Mandziuk: I made my point, but the minister did not.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether the provinces have been consulted regarding the compulsory registration imposed by Ottawa by means of numbered social security cards?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker; and I would not, on the face of it, think this is a matter that would require such consultation. But I will be glad to look into it.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the general protest, does the government intend to bring this matter before parliament before requiring Canadian citizens to fill out this card?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's question is based, as is so often the case, on false assumptions.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. gentleman poses rather provocative questions, he must expect from time to time to get rather sharp answers. I do not think it is in order to rise on a point of order or question of privilege on every second question.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It is my duty to direct questions to the Prime Minister and to any member of the cabinet. If I am out of order it is your responsibility to deal with the matter, and I shall abide by your ruling, provided it is fair and reasonable. But as a member of parliament I cannot accept the arrogant answer of the Prime Minister of Canada, who should set an example in this house and answer the questions we ask him.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF MR. MCLAUGHLIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour which may seem to be a matter of ancient history, but is relevant to what is happening today in the labour dispute on the great lakes. In the report the government received from Mr. Robinette and another lawyer concerning possible prosecution of Mr. Banks, is there any recommendation regarding Red McLaughlin?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I have not seen any of these reports because they have been given to the Minister of Justice. I think he would have to deal with the question.

Mr. Fisher: Has the minister satisfied himself that the man who has now been placed at the head of the S.I.U. by the trustees is not going to be faced with charges of conspiracy to assist Mr. Banks in the assault of Mr. Greaves or for the conversion of funds of the union within the next month or two?

Mr. MacEachen: Of course the preliminary statements about the gentleman in question are quite incorrect.

Mr. Fisher: Why?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. McLaughlin has not been placed in the presidency by the trustees, and will not be placed there by the trustees. He is not the president.

Mr. Fisher: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did not say he was placed as president.

Some hon. Members: You did.

Mr. Fisher: I said that in effect he is in charge of the union.

Mr. MacEachen: That is incorrect also.

Mr. Fisher: I would like an answer to the question. I should like to know if the minister can tell us whether the government apprehends that this man may be facing criminal charges, as is his predecessor in terms of control of the union.

Mr. MacEachen: The charges that have been placed in connection with the S.I.U. are very well known to all hon. members in the house. A question along the same line was asked a day or two ago by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask a supplementary question. Surely we still have not got an answer from the minister. Has McLaughlin, to the minister's satisfaction, been cleared of any question of wrongdoing in connection with the charges that have been laid against Mr. Banks?

Mr. MacEachen: It ought to be apparent to the hon. gentleman that it is the courts of the country that decide these matters and not the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do think the hon. member is pressing this line of questioning a little too far. This matter has been under quite detailed discussion during the last two or three days, and his question is becoming almost hypothetical. If he has a point of order, let him raise it. I think he should stop this line of questioning.

Mr. Fisher: The reason I am asking this question, and I want an answer if I can possibly get it, is that I have been informed this morning the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have been told to go slow on the investigations they have been making with regard to things in connection with McLaughlin.

Mr. Pearson: Who told you?

Mr. Fisher: I do not have to say who told me.

An hon. Member: Hearsay.

Mr. Fisher: There is a great deal of hearsay in this matter, but I think we need to have the position of the minister clear. What is the government's view of Mr. McLaughlin? All he has given to us has been Mr. Millard's view, and I want to know the government's view.

Mr. MacEachen: It is quite true that I have been giving the view of the trustees with regard to Mr. McLaughlin, because the trustees have been given that authority by the parliament of Canada.

Mr. Fisher: Well, we will try to withdraw it.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): May I ask a supplementary question of the Acting Minister of Justice. Have orders been given to the R.C.M.P. to go slow in their investigation of Mr. McLaughlin?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into that matter, but that is a conclusion made without any supporting evidence at all.

Mr. Martineau: On a question of privilege, the Prime Minister just said he will be glad to look into the matter, and then he went on to say that the allegation was made without substance. If he has not looked into the matter, how can he say the allegation has no substance?

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, I said this was an allegation made without supporting evidence; and if and when statements are made in the house which reflect on the R.C.M.P. in this way and on the government's relationship with the R.C.M.P. there should be supporting evidence.

Mr. Martineau: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the Prime Minister that no reflection whatsoever was made on the R.C.M.P.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martineau: I simply asked a question to get information. I submit that is strictly in accordance with the rules of the house, and the Prime Minister knows it.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister said that McLaughlin should not be judged before his trial. Was Hal Banks not judged and removed from office by reason of the fact that the very same allegations were made by the judge against Banks as were made against McLaughlin, both being hoodlums?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the question at issue involves charges before the courts of Canada, and I was asked whether those charges ought to be prejudged and used in any way to disqualify Mr. McLaughlin—

An hon. Member: What did you do with Banks?

Mr. MacEachen: —or any other person. So far as Mr. Banks is concerned, the trustees removed him from office not on the basis of prejudging charges in the courts in defiance of the bill of rights but on their own assessment of the situation.

An hon. Member: A sell-out to Hall.

Some hon. Members: Sell-out.

An hon. Member: United States domination.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, a further supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. The Minister of Labour has indicated that the trustees were given authority by the parliament of Canada. Would he not agree that this authority given to them—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must object to the form of the question. Perhaps the hon. member may wish to rephrase it. He is asking for a yes or no answer and giving a prejudged decision before asking the question. If he cares to rephrase the question it might be in order.

Mr. MacInnis: Since the trustees are not responsible for the change in administration with regard to the leadership of the S.I.U., in that the constitution of the S.I.U. is being followed; and since the trustees took the responsibility of putting in Mr. Turner as temporary leader of the S.I.U., is it not also their responsibility if Mr. McLaughlin takes over for Mr. Banks?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that is an argumentative question which I am not obliged to deal with.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I wonder whether the Minister of Labour has seen the editorial entitled "The Sell-out" in the Kingston Whig-Standard of April 6, which asks why the trustees have suddenly abandoned the principle of firm opposition to any American interference in this affair? "The deal has been made and it smells", says the editorial.

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, but I have seen editorials in the Globe and Mail, the Montreal Gazette and the Ottawa Citizen expressing the very opposite opinion.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour a question in this same field. It arises out of an answer he gave yesterday to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson). In view of the statement that the three men who signed the telegram in question, Michael Sheehan, John J. Wood and Omer Boudreau, are not currently members of the S.I.U., has he ascertained why they are not members of the S.I.U. at the present time? If they were expelled without the right of appeal, does he not feel that attention should be paid to their complaints about Mr. McLaughlin?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do feel that the complaints of any member or former member of the S.I.U. ought to be considered very carefully. I would agree with my hon. friend in this particular case that the membership of the gentlemen in question may be a matter of argument because it is a fact, for example, that Mr. Sheehan was a member of the S.I.U. and then became a member of the C.M.U., and it was because of this situation that that comment was indicated. This is a matter where reference to the trustees would check the statement made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Is the minister aware they were both expelled and put on the d.n.s. list?

Mr. MacEachen: I appreciate that, and I indicated yesterday that the trustees were very anxious to right any injustice that may have arisen from use of the d.n.s. list, and indicated the procedure by which that might be done.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, the question that I had intended to ask has just been asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but I would like to ask the Minister of Labour this question. In view of the fact that Michael Sheehan and John Wood were actually expelled from the S.I.U. by Hal Banks, does he not think that the answer he gave to the question yesterday covers over what is the whole crux of this matter? This is the problem we face in the S.I.U. at this time.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there was no desire to cover over any aspect of the problem. I made a statement yesterday to the effect that the trustees were desirous of righting any wrong. If either of these gentlemen feel injustice through the application of the d.n.s. list, or through disqualification of membership, they ought to bring their case at once before the trustees, who are anxious to right any injustice. Certainly it was not my intention, by referring to the membership question, to suggest in any way that these persons should be denied any legitimate rights they have within the S.I.U.

Mr. Fairweather: As a further supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: May I caution the hon. member for Royal. If he has a real supplementary of course it is in order, but if it is another statement I think we have had extended discussion already.

Mr. Fairweather: It is not a statement. Is McLaughlin now facing charges in any court in Canada?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows the answer to that question if he listened to the question put the other day by his leader.

Mr. MacInnis: Does the Minister of Labour now recognize d.n.s. lists as being in existence?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I dealt with that question yesterday.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister maintains that he dealt with this question yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis: It appears that we are in need of another St. Patrick. The minister maintains that he dealt with this question yesterday but I say, sir, that his answer of yesterday is not compatible with the answer he just gave to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PIGEON—REMARKS IN DEBATE BY MEMBER FOR CARLETON

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I had to spend part of the day away from the house to preside over a debate organized by the St. Jean Baptiste societies of the Joliette diocese and, during that time, according to page 1963 of Hansard, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Francis) said some false things about me. He took advantage of my absence to do so.

Should he persist in his ways, I shall report him to Miss Charlotte Whitton, the mayor of Ottawa, who will take it upon herself to put him in his place and set him straight.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pigeon: It was a stupid statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is an important detail to point out to the house that the use of the term "false" is not parliamentary.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has any particular point of detail on which erroneous information was supplied by myself or placed before the house, I would be obliged if he gave the particulars.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rose on a question of privilege. If the hon. member for Carleton persists with his false innuendoes, Miss Whitton will take it upon herself to put him in his place and chastise him.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would like to get more and better co-operation from members of the house. The hon. member for Carleton.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I believe the words used by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm are unparliamentary. He said I made a false statement, and I ask him to withdraw it.

Mr. Monteith: Well, you did.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member used the term "false" and I suggested to him that the word "false" is unparliamentary, and I would ask him to reconsider it.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): On a question of order, Mr. Speaker, when a member of parliament makes a statement regarding another member, which that other member regards as false, it is not unparliamentary. It is not hypocrisy, either, to say that.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word on the point of order raised by the Leader of the Opposition. I think if the right hon. gentleman will recall incidents that have happened before in the house, it will come to his memory that when one hon. member undertakes to suggest that another hon. member has said something that is false, it is up to him to prove it was a false statement by real evidence, and not simply to use an unparliamentary word as a form of innuendo.

My hon. friend from Carleton asked politely for the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to state precisely what he had said that was false, and the hon. member replied by another insinuation and made no attempt whatever to substantiate his charge. Therefore I suggest the hon. member for Carleton is perfectly right in saying it was unparliamentary; but I know the hon. member for Carleton is a generous man and he is not going to waste the time of the house by asking for a withdrawal by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I again rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Carleton said that my statements were in contradiction with those of my leader, but he did not quote any of these statements. Consequently, I advise the hon. member for Carleton that I will report him to Miss Whitton who will cure him of this nasty fault.

[Text]

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In my opinion we have spent considerable time on this matter, and it may or may not be an important matter. I propose to examine the English and French texts. There may be a discrepancy between the wording of them, and the meaning of the word as translated into French may not be exactly what was intended. I shall examine the matter over the week end and give a decision on Monday.

MR. NIELSEN—REMARKS IN DEBATE BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege, and

I do so because I must do so at the first opportunity. However, my question of privilege involves certain actions of the Minister of Justice and I shall make certain charges with respect to those actions, and I would prefer to wait until he returns to the house. If I have unanimous consent to raise the question when he does return, then I will not proceed now.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is a real question of order here. The hon. member, like the rest of us, has an obligation under standing orders to be here in the house. The Minister of Justice is not here today; therefore nothing the minister said today could possibly raise a question of privilege. If the Minister of Justice said something yesterday when the hon. member, no doubt for a very good reason, was not in the house, he lost his opportunity to raise a question of privilege under the rules—

Mr. Churchill: Oh, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and it seems to me that the hon. member should deal with the matter in debate, just as many other hon. members do in these matters.

Mr. Nielsen: I was in the house at the time the remarks I intend to question were made by the Minister of Justice. But my question of privilege involves remarks which he did not make but which appear in Hansard. I do not wish to make these charges in the hon. gentleman's absence. I think I do have a valid question of privilege, though I would much prefer to raise it while the minister is in his place.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that he should not pursue this matter further in the absence of the Minister of Justice, which is right and proper, and that on the minister's return he should raise his question of privilege and I will do my best to give an impartial decision.

Mr. Nielsen: I just wanted to make sure I would have unanimous approval for following that course—

Mr. Speaker: My suggestion was made for the purpose of doing what was right, fair and impartial, and I do not think the hon. member should insist any further at the moment.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES AND RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. May I ask if he stated in Saskatoon on April 3 that the Canadian railways had agreed not to ask for a freight rate increase until after July 1? Also, was the hon. gentleman stating government policy when he said "There are going to be very, very few branch line abandonments in a hurry".

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The hon. member's question is perhaps not terribly urgent since it relates to something which happened on April 3, but I should like to answer it, if I may, by saying that I am very grateful to the Canadian railway association for agreeing to continue for another three months the suspension, which has already been in operation for a long time, of a rate increase granted by the board of transport commissioners in the hope that in this three months interval parliament will be permitted to consider the legislation on railways which the government would like to introduce.

With respect to the second matter, may I say it is not, of course, the government which abandons railway lines. It is the railway companies which abandon them after they have been allowed to do so under the law. All I was doing was expressing my own opinion that because of the benevolent policies initiated by the government of hon. gentlemen opposite and continued by this government, the railways had indicated what lines they wished to abandon, but did not proceed with those applications until the new legislation could be dealt with by parliament. It would therefore appear that there would be no abandonments in a hurry. It is also my opinion that even after that time there would be no abandonments in a hurry, particularly when one thinks of the traffic which the railways are carrying in western Canada at the present time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DISCLOSURE OF CONTENTS OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I would refer the Minister of National Defence to the item on page 5 of last night's Votes and Proceedings, which indicates that he intends to present a bill to amend the National Defence Act. Can the minister assure the house that neither he nor anyone in his department has disclosed the contents of this bill? I ask this in the light of widespread reports as to the contents of this measure.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I do not think there is any secret whatsoever as to what the bill contains. It is designed to implement the policy set out in the white paper, to replace the present chiefs of staff committee and the chiefs of the individual staffs by a chief of defence staff and entrust him with the powers presently held by the others.

INQUIRY AS TO RECOVERY OF STOLEN ARMS AND AMMUNITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Has the hon. minister anything to report to the house with regard to arms stolen from various armouries in the province of Quebec, as far as their being located and found is concerned?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I am not in a position to add anything further today, Mr. Speaker. I do not think there is anything I could usefully say that would help the situation.

REDUCTION IN PAY AND ALLOWANCES FOR SEA CADET OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of National Defence in connection with the naval economy drive and the resulting reduction of pay and allowances for sea cadet officers. Will the minister consider the effect of this, which takes away one third of the remuneration for which work has already been performed? Is the minister aware that this is daily affecting morale and efficiency and is bringing about resignations? This question is either for the minister or his associate minister.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR INCREASED HOSPITAL GRANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): May I ask the Prime Minister a question. We have been waiting for some considerable time now for a statement by the Prime Minister on the hospital bed crisis in metropolitan Toronto. The last time he was asked a question about this the right hon. gentleman said he would consider the matter and make a statement later. May I ask if he is prepared to give us this information today?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have the information, and I regret it has taken so long to answer the hon. member's question. This is a lengthy answer but it deals with a most important matter, so with the indulgence of the house I propose to read the reply.

The hon. member asked me to comment on the hospital shortage in Toronto and particularly the federal government's intent respecting federal construction grants to metropolitan Toronto hospitals. Hon. members are aware that the council of metropolitan Toronto and subsequently the council of Scarborough township spoke to ministers of the government—I believe they spoke to the Minister of National Health and Welfare—regarding an increase in bed grants within the last year. At the urging of members on this side of the house from the Toronto area, as well as some hon. members opposite, the government has studied the Agnew report indicating that hospital beds in the metropolitan area presently fall more than 2,000 short of requirements. This has been primarily caused by the population explosion in the Toronto suburbs and accentuated by the fact that the metropolitan government found it impossible to render assistance in this field from 1958 until earlier this year.

The federal government has for some months sought a fair way of assisting in a unique situation. Of course any solution would have to be on an across the country basis and not confined to one locality. The matter has been discussed with the responsible health ministers and in most cases with provincial premiers at the past two dominion-provincial meetings, without arriving at any solution. Indeed, more than one province has indicated strong disapproval of the suggestion of any proposed increase in grants, as providing increased pressure upon provincial treasuries to meet increased federal grants in a field which is considered primarily one of provincial responsibility.

Within the past few months the federal government, through the municipal loan fund, has assisted the municipal government to the extent of $29 million which has been used for projects other than hospital construction. In the opinion of the government, further federal assistance would not be warranted at this time.

Since 1948 more than $19,500,000 has been expended by the federal government for this purpose in metropolitan Toronto. The current commitment, extending for a five year period through to 1968, is augmented by a national health grant to help finance a home care program in metropolitan Toronto, announced on March 26 last, to take pressure off hospital beds for convalescents.

We understand, too, that the government of Ontario, in acknowledgement of its own special responsibility in the field, has developed a new program for low interest loans for construction in Ontario, intended to be of special assistance in the Toronto area.

Mr. Scott: I wonder whether in view of the length of that answer we might be permitted to comment on it, Mr. Speaker. I can only say this is an incredible response. Six months of labour, yet no action at all—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is the question period, not a general debate.

Mr. Scott: May I ask the unanimous consent of the house to revert to motions so that we can discuss this fantastic answer?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister not think, in view of the urgent need in the metropolitan area of Toronto, that more serious consideration ought to have been given to the grave problem he has discussed?

Mr. Pearson: Very serious consideration has been given to this matter which is the primary responsibility, of course, of the provincial government.

Mr. Brewin: Will the Prime Minister tell the house which was the one province which objected to further conditional grants being given for hospital construction?

Mr. Pearson: I said more than one province had objected.

Mr. Brewin: Which ones?

Mr. Pearson: Naturally I cannot give the names of provinces without consulting them and getting their agreement, because these objections were made known in confidential discussions between the federal government and provincial governments. However, I would be very glad to approach the provinces concerned and inquire if they would be willing to have their objections made known as expressed to us.

Mr. Scott: Would the Prime Minister indicate why he feels that this problem, which is an isolated one mainly affecting metropolitan Toronto, must be treated on an across the country basis?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure there will be an opportunity to debate this very important matter before long.

[Mr. Pearson.]

POWER

PEACE RIVER—APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I addressed a question to the Minister of Public Works through his parliamentary secretary regarding a possible licence in regard to the Peace river dam. I wonder whether today he is in the position to answer my question.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have answered this question quite often. As the hon. member knows, the first problem involved here was to determine whether at the point of the dam the Peace river was navigable. This question has been disposed of. We are looking into this matter, because at this time we have not received any application from the province.

PENITENTIARIES

CORRECTION BY MEMBER FOR VANCOUVER EAST OF STATEMENT IN DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of privilege to make a correction and to extend my apologies to hon. members of this house for something I said the other day. I think this is something I should do, sir. The other day in the discussion on the supplementary estimates I was most emphatic in discussing the location of the women's penitentiary. I did so because of what I believed to be factual information that I had received from a very high source in the civil service.

I have since discovered, sir, that the information I was given was not correct. Therefore I wish to apologize to the house for having made certain statements relative to the department of psychology and psychiatry of Queen's University. I offer my apologies to the house for being so emphatic, but I believed what I said because of the source of my information. May I add, Mr. Speaker, that yesterday I sent my apologies to the vice chancellor of Queen's University.

NATIONAL REVENUE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR INCREASED NUMBER OF DISTRICT OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Cote (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Can the minister tell the house whether the government intends to redress the injustice with regard to the number of income tax district offices in Quebec and Ontario, since Ontario has 11 such offices and Quebec only four? four?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question that should be put on the order paper.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—REPORTED ONTARIO INTENTION NOT TO PARTICIPATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has now received any communication from Premier Robarts of Ontario that the government of Ontario intends to set up its own provincial pension plan, or whether the government of Ontario has asked the Canadian government for any amendments to Bill No. C-75 that would meet the objections which Premier Robarts stated in his speech to the Canadian club.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, not as of 11 a.m. today.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR COMMENT ON SPEECH BY PROFESSOR LASKIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Now that the Prime Minister has had an opportunity to read the comments of Professor Bora Laskin as reported in the Montreal Gazette of April 9, does he agree with him that the demands by Premier Lesage that Quebec be master in its own house are not in keeping with the British North America Act?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have now had the opportunity of reading the press report of that statement. I do not think it is very wise to comment on press reports of statements made by private individuals outside this house.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Secretary of State with reference to returns ordered by parliament in the last session. My information is that 45 of these returns have still not been presented to the house. Yesterday the Secretary of State said he would give a reply to the Leader of the Opposition as soon as possible. Can he now reply?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Unfortunately not, Mr. Speaker; I have not yet received a report.

AIR TRANSPORT

REPORTED REDUCTION IN SOUTHERN PRAIRIE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Recently TransAir again reduced its schedules so that service is no longer provided from Winnipeg to Brandon, Yorkton and Regina. I wonder whether the Minister of Transport would care to review the agreement between TransAir and T.C.A. and give a report as to whether TransAir is living up to its obligations.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Of course, Mr. Speaker, this is a contract between Trans-Canada Air Lines and TransAir, and it would not appear to me that I would have any right arbitrarily to review it. But I will be glad to ask Mr. McGregor whether he feels that the other company is living up to the obligations entered into with Trans-Canada Air Lines, and any reply Mr. McGregor can make on that matter I shall be glad to convey to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should just like to point out that this agreement was approved by order in council.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to exercise any power that I have not got, but if the minister has any authority or any jurisdiction in the matter I will do whatever it seems proper for me to do, and will account to parliament for it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR EARLY ORGANIZATION MEETINGS OF COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. member for York Centre in his capacity as chief government whip. Now that the house has appointed the various standing committees, will he arrange for an early meeting of all those committees so they can be organized and some of them, such as the industrial relations committee, can get to work?

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we intend to organize the committees as quickly as possible; and that means quickly.

SUPPLY

The house again in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

1e. Departmental administration—to extend the purposes of vote 1 of the main estimates, 1963-64, to authorize payment of a contribution to the Canadian council of resource ministers in an amount equal to one half the aggregate contribution of the provinces but not exceeding $32,000 and to provide a further amount of $53,000.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) is not in the house this morning, because I wanted, first of all, to congratulate him. I wanted to commend him because yesterday, he achieved a really remarkable feat. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, he succeeded in displeasing everybody, while satisfying nobody. I hope to show how he did this.

For instance, let us take those who believe that jurisdiction over the Eskimos should be transferred from the federal to the provincial government; those people are certainly very dissatisfied with the philosophy expounded yesterday before the committee, by the Minister of Justice. Ottawa has a jurisdiction in this matter but, according to him, that jurisdiction is elusive, inefficient and often illusory—illusory because the federal government does not propose to exercise it.

How could this government sitting opposite give a clearer and more complete indication of its impotency, its weakness and confusion, than by insisting—with the support of a ruling made by the supreme court and of the constitution—on the fact that it has a jurisdiction and, at the same time, attempting, through sophistry—there is no other word for the twisted reasoning put forward by the Minister of Justice—to show that this jurisdiction must not, will not, and cannot be exercised by the federal power invested with it?

Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Justice is trying to justify this transfer by asserting that it is not a constitutional transfer of jurisdiction, but simply the entrusting of a mandate or, if you prefer, of an agency to the provincial government by the federal government.

The minister said: "You know, Mr. Chairman, that the federal government cannot exercise its jurisdiction directly. It exercises it through its officers or other persons . . . "; he seems to put on the same footing ordinary civil servants or an agency of the federal government, and the government of the province of Quebec, a government which, in its own jurisdiction, is in fact and under the constitution, absolutely sovereign.

Thus, if we accept the philosophy of the Minister of Justice, we must conclude that this provincial government simply becomes a mandatary of the federal government. That is the absurdity to which we must necessarily and inevitably come, if we accept and follow the reasoning of the Minister of Justice.

It is absolutely clear that this theory is unacceptable from a constitutional point of view, because, besides the reasons I just stated, it is clear that the federal government, even under an alleged agreement or convention with the provincial government, cannot alter the jurisdictions of each level of government as definitively set out by sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act.

The theory of the Minister of Justice is therefore absolutely groundless from a constitutional point of view. If he cannot justify his theory from a constitutional point of view, surely, he could not justify it under any piece of legislation? In that respect, the minister made a real effort.

He said that such a transfer was not new, that the government had proceeded in the same way for some services to the Indians. Either the minister neglected to consider the question carefully or he abused himself on the meaning of the transfer of services in respect to Indians. For in the latter case, it was a transfer authorized by legislation passed by this parliament, as indeed the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) pointed out to the minister during his remarks.

In this case, there is no legislation before the house providing for this transfer. What is more surprising, neither the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) nor the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) indicate that the government intends to introduce such legislation in the house.

So, their argument is fundamentally unsound, if they want to invoke legislation, for in this case there is no legislation. Nothing in the existing legislation concerning Indians provides for the transfer discussed in this debate.

The argument of the minister with respect to the constitution of this mandate is not justified either by an agreement or consent which would have been given by the people concerned themselves, that is the Eskimo people, for the Minister of Justice was again of an amazing, of an astounding fugacity with respect to this so-called referendum. We have absolutely no assurance on the part of the government in this regard.

In view of the principles I have just put forward, I suggest that everybody, both federalists and provincialists, were disappointed in the speech made by the Minister of Justice.

In addition, I feel that this mandate theory puts the province in an inferior position that it can hardly deem acceptable. I say this, because I am quite familiar with the provisions of the civil code pertaining to mandate. As a matter of fact, a definition of a mandate is given in section 1701 and following sections of the civil code.

Thus, section 1701 defines a mandate as a contract by which a person called the mandator, commits a lawful business to the management of another, called the mandatary. Therefore, in the present case, the federal government would be the mandator and the province, the mandatary, which by accepting the mandate is obliged to execute it.

The next chapter of the civil code sets forth the obligations resulting from the mandate. Section 1709 provides among other things that:

The mandatary is obliged to execute the mandate which he has accepted.

Section 1713 provides that:

The mandatary is bound to render an account of his administration.

It follows therefore that if the province of Quebec is willing to be the mandatary of the federal government in this matter, it accepts a direct and inevitable control by the federal government in this field and agrees to account for its activities.

In other words, if the province of Quebec builds schools and sets up a curriculum, it must submit it to the central government. Can you imagine a more evident intrusion in the absolute jurisdiction of the provinces in the field of education?

This federal control in the field of education, if the argument of the Minister of Justice and that of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources is accepted, was confirmed yesterday by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources himself when he stated, among other things, as reported on page 1976 of Hansard that, for example, the federal government will require:

—the standards...would have to be as good as those we have now and, in addition, would have to take care of the future requirements of the population.

And in reply to a question of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) the minister repeated again that the federal government should not exercise that control in such a field.

It is for these reasons that I say the speech of the Minister of Justice has greatly disappointed all those who were expecting a little logic from him on this matter.

It is a fine thing to say that the provincial government will accept such conditions; that it will accept to be the federal government's mandatary or agent, in other words, to be its servant.

I was dismayed, yesterday, when, in reply to my question:

Has the government of the province of Quebec accepted to have conditions thus imposed by the federal government?

The Minister of Justice said:

That is my understanding under the preliminary agreement which has already been mentioned—

In view of the present state of Canadian politics, in the light of today's realities and the stand taken consistently by the successive governments of the province of Quebec and accepted today, I cannot see the federal government dictating conditions to the provincial government in such a vital field.

Above all, I cannot see the minister of natural resources of the province of Quebec, Mr. Rene Levesque, for instance, accepting such dictatorship—there is no other word, dictate and dictatorship are synonyms—from the federal government.

I cannot see the provincial government making such an about-face, especially since the premier of Quebec stated last week, after the failure of the federal-provincial conference in Quebec city, that his government would take legal proceedings against the federal administration to have the student loans and the family allowances legislation declared ultra vires.

I can see it even less after what we heard on the radio today—and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Dupuis) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) may be able to tell us whether it is true—that behind closed doors, the Quebec Liberal federation is putting the final touch to the final and complete divorce from the federal wing of the party.

Under the circumstances—

Mr. Lamontagne: What about the Union Nationale?

Mr. Martineau: —it would be ridiculous to think—

The Secretary of State who interrupted me may answer later on when I have resumed my seat. For the time being, I should ask him personally, since he has just walked in, and I would also ask the Minister without Portfolio if, as representatives of Quebec within the cabinet, both of them will approve the thesis of their colleague, the Minister of Justice, according to whom, from now on, the province of Quebec will have to accept the guidance or control of the federal government and will have to submit to the conditions laid down by the latter in fields of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. If they can answer, let them do so but, in the meantime, I would much rather rely on the statements made in that connection by the representatives of the Quebec government.

Mr. Lamontagne: Would the hon. member allow a question?
