CANADA

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SECOND SESSION—TWENTY SIXTH PARLIAMENT

13 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME II, 1964

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE SEVENTEENTH DAY OF MARCH, 1964, TO THE SIXTEENTH DAY OF APRIL, 1964, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

ROGER DUHAMEL, F.R.S.C.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1964

20220—73½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 17, 1964

The house met at 3.30 p.m.

WORLD FAIR

USE OF SYMBOL DELETED BY PARLIAMENT FROM BILL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister, as the custodian in the house of the rights of parliament, a matter that I think it will be agreed constitutes a contempt of and an affront to parliament. I refer to the action taken by the directors of the world fair, the Canadian centennial fair, to which this parliament contributes, in deciding they would not follow the direction of parliament and would use the symbol which parliament deleted from the bill.

This to me is an arrogant affront to parliament. They may not think we are judges of art, but we are supplying a large amount of money in this connection. All sides of the house agreed and the Minister of Justice joined in the drafting of the amendment, but the directors decided, without regard to any consideration for parliament, to act as they saw fit.

That is not the kind of co-operation, I suggest to the Prime Minister, to which parliament is entitled. I am not in any way blaming him, but I would like to know—as he is the custodian of the rights of parliament, as I mentioned a moment ago—what he has done to bring to the attention of the directors what must be the feeling of all hon. members in this regard.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be making inquiries at once into this matter, which was brought to my attention by press reports only this morning. I am glad the right hon. gentleman has raised this matter in the house, and I will make inquiries and report to the house at the earliest possible date.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MARITIME UNION TRUSTEES—REMOVAL OF HAL BANKS—ALLEGED WIRETAPPING OF OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him whether it is a fact that an agreement has been reached between the S.I.U. of Canada and the United States whereby Banks is to be fired within the next three weeks.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have no information that would support the suggestion contained in my hon. friend's question.

Mr. Starr: I wonder whether the Minister of Labour would check into this possibility and advise the house if there is any truth in it.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to make inquiries.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may now answer a question asked yesterday by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition with respect to the alleged wiretapping of the board of trustees office in Montreal.

In reply to the question raised yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition, I have learned that evidence has been found of wires attached to one of the telephone lines to the board of trustees office in Montreal. With suitable equipment these wires could have been used for monitoring conversation on the line. The investigation into this matter is proceeding, but I am informed that it may not be possible to establish definitely whether the attempt was successful.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Is the minister in a position to advise when this illegal and unlawful action was first ascertained, and whether there has been anything to indicate who might have participated therein?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am not absolutely sure as to the date when this particular matter was discovered, but I will make inquiries on that point. I do not think any information or evidence exists at present as to the persons responsible for this attempt but I understand that an investigation is currently going forward into the matter.

TRADE

MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH MINISTERS PRECEDING UN CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The morning press carries a report that a commonwealth ministerial meeting is to be held in London on Thursday and Friday of this week as a preliminary to the United Nations trade and development conference which is being held in Geneva next week. May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce two questions. First of all, who will represent Canada at the commonwealth conference on Thursday and Friday of this week? Second, is it true that one of the items on the agenda is a discussion as to the possibility of abandoning the present commonwealth preferential trading system?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Canadian government will be represented by my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the United Nations conference on trade and development. The meetings that are to be held in London are meetings of commonwealth ministers preliminary to the United Nations conference. We will be represented at those meetings by Mr. Dana Wilgress.

As to the second question about the agenda, it is not my understanding that commonwealth preferences as such are on the agenda, but there is on the agenda, of course, a proposal made by Mr. Prebisch, who is secretary of the United Nations conference, for a system of preferences for the trade of less developed countries with the industrialized countries of the world.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister if this is likely to lead to a commonwealth prime ministers' conference on trade and have any representations been made by the Canadian government for the holding of such a conference?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to say at the present time whether anything developing out of the United Nations conference would require a commonwealth prime ministers' meeting, but my hon. friend knows that a meeting of commonwealth prime ministers to be held some time this summer or in the early autumn is currently under consideration.

Mr. Douglas: If the meeting in London on Thursday and Friday of this week is a ministerial meeting, may I ask the Prime Minister why Canada is not being represented by a minister?

Mr. Pearson: I will have to look into that, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think all the commonwealth countries are being represented by ministers at this London meeting.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

DISCUSSION OF REDISTRIBUTION OF TAXING POWERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell us, after the budget that was introduced last night, whether there are still possibilities of discussion for the next federal-provincial conference to be held in Quebec in a few days, concerning fiscal redistributions between the federal and provincial governments?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, the conference will be held as scheduled, and the major item of the agenda is shared programs and their effect on fiscal matters.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Was the Prime Minister invited to meet the several thousands of university students of the province of Quebec who are to hold meetings in Quebec city on the occasion of the next federal-provincial conference?

If he is invited, does the Prime Minister intend to meet those students to hear their views?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I do not think I have had any such invitation.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—REPRESENTATIONS BY UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Margaret Konantz (Winnipeg South): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister any information to give the house about a statement issued by union lodge 714 in Winnipeg concerning employment at the T.C.A. maintenance base?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the alert member for Winnipeg South—

Mr. Churchill: I was up on my feet three times.

Mr. Pickersgill: —having been able to get in ahead of a privy councillor should be congratulated. This matter was brought to my attention yesterday afternoon by a telephone call which I received from Mr. Gurney Evans, minister of trade and industry in the government of Manitoba, who told me that certain reports had appeared in Winnipeg emanating apparently from the union to which the hon. lady referred.

I asked at once if T.C.A. could inform me precisely what had happened. I knew there had been a meeting between the union locals in Montreal and Winnipeg and the management of the air line something over a week ago. I asked T.C.A. if they could give me an account of what had happened. I think, in view of the very widespread interest in this question, it would perhaps be just as well if I put on the record precisely what I was told.

T.C.A. advised that a recent announcement regarding the agreement between the Winnipeg and Montreal lodges of the international association of machinists, and concurred in by the company, does not in any way change the previously announced plans of T.C.A. in relation to the Winnipeg base. The announcement referred to was released by the international association of machinists.

Discussions have been held at the request of the union between T.C.A. management and representatives of the international association of machinists to clarify seniority rights of the air lines' maintenance and overhaul employees, particularly as they involve transfers from one location to another. In the course of these discussions, the question inevitably arose concerning the status of Winnipeg based employees whose seniority rights under existing agreements contained certain regional limitations. It is the wish of both air line management and the union to protect the rights of senior employees under any circumstances that might arise, and it was therefore felt necessary to modify the rules with respect to the application of seniority rights as stated in existing labour agreements between the company and its employees so as to provide wider scope for exercise of these rights.

The fact that this essential exercise in long term planning has been undertaken in no way implies that T.C.A. is contemplating immediate large scale reduction in its Winnipeg maintenance and overhaul staff. Employment at Winnipeg will continue to be related to the required volume of Viscount maintenance and overhaul work, as publicly stated hitherto by both the government and by T.C.A. management. I might say that as soon as I received this statement from T.C.A. this morning I communicated it to Mr. Evans so that if he had any questions in the legislature of Manitoba he would be able to give the information to those concerned.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. I have a short question for the Minister of Transport which would entail a short answer, such as is customary on orders of the day. Will the Minister of Transport give the same assurance that was given by his predecessor in office, that employment at the T.C.A. base in Winnipeg will increase rather than decrease during this year and the coming years?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would say that to the best of my knowledge, sir, no such assurance was ever given by my predecessor, and I am bound by the statements that were made by the Prime Minister and by the company.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question on this matter to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a telegram from the union in Winnipeg with respect to this matter, indicating in particular its concern about the report that the phasing out would start in 1964? If so, what has been his reply to the union in Winnipeg?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it may be that a telegram on this matter came in this morning, but I have not had a chance to deal with it yet.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport a supplementary question.

As the other day the Minister of National Defence made a statement in the house to the effect that the two radar bases of St. Sylvestre, in the county of Lotbiniere, and Parent, in the county of Chapleau, have been closed down in order to save this country $6 million, what does the Minister of Transport propose to do with regard to the established fact that this country would save $40 million carrying out repairs of T.C.A. aircraft in Montreal rather than in Winnipeg?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of seeking in any way to modify the position taken by T.C.A. itself in 1962 and reaffirmed by the Prime Minister on more than one occasion, that so long as the Viscount aircraft was in service with T.C.A., the maintenance would be done in Winnipeg.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): As a supplementary question, could the minister tell us whether he agrees with the statement which has been published in the press that if the move from Winnipeg to Montreal does not take place it is going to cost $40 million more?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I have never posed as an expert in these matters and I am not going to start now. T.C.A. engaged management consultants who made certain statements that have been distributed in this house, and the hon. member for Three Rivers is just as capable of interpreting them and just as competent to interpret them as I am.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, as a further supplementary question, could the minister tell us whether the government has been asked by T.C.A. to take over this $4 million yearly deficit on its own account instead of having it charged to the account of T.C.A.?

Mr. Pickersgill: To the best of my knowledge T.C.A. has never indicated to the government that there would be any such deficit; therefore there has been no request to take it over.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. McIntosh: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There are two more supplementary questions and I think that should terminate the discussion. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister whether he would consider putting the Viscount back on the prairie run, and that would solve the problem for everybody.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to go into the business of running an air line myself.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether political pressure has been put on his department for keeping the maintenance station for T.C.A. aircraft in Winnipeg rather than in Montreal, and, if so, can the minister tell us what sort of political pressure was exerted upon his department?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I think, sir, a question as long as that should be read and meditated about carefully before it is answered.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING RESPECTING HOSPITALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is the minister in a position to report the results of his meeting yesterday with national officers of various veterans associations with respect to the future of veterans hospitals in Canada?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it would take me some considerable time to give an adequate answer to that question. To be as brief as possible I can say that, as the hon. member would expect, it was an excellent meeting, and I found a very general understanding and appreciation of the problems we are faced with in respect to these hospitals.

The real concern shown at the meeting was that if any such transfer should take place the veterans rights would be protected in such a way as to ensure nothing would be taken away. This was the major matter of concern placed before me. As I say, it was an excellent meeting, but I would need 15 or 20 minutes to do justice to a question of this kind.

[Later:]

Mr. F. J. W. Fane (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I should first like to ask the minister whether he would care to make any amendments to the answer given to a question I asked him yesterday, as recorded on page 934 of Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I point out to hon. members that it is now 4.15 and there are at least four more hon. members who wish to ask questions. Perhaps we could proceed with the business of the house.

Mr. Fane: Then, Mr. Speaker, I raise a question of privilege. My question of privilege is that in the answer the minister gave to my question yesterday he definitely misled this house and anybody who receives information as to what occurs in this house. I asked the minister:

> —exactly when, and in what words, the standing committee on veterans affairs recommended that veterans hospitals should be taken over by other authorities?

The answer with which the minister provided me was:

> The recommendation of the committee was that if and when any transfer should take place, veterans organizations be consulted.

I refer now, Mr. Speaker, to the report of the veterans affairs committee. This is to be found in the minutes of proceedings and evidence No. 13, of Tuesday, December 10, 1963. Recommendation No. 12 of that committee was as follows:

> Your committee is aware that a point has been reached where a decision must be made regarding treatment services in both areas of responsibility and administration. Your committee recommends that fullest consultation be carried out with veterans organizations before any changes are made.

I realize perfectly well that the meeting the minister attended yesterday, with regard to which he reported to some extent today, was carrying out that recommendation; but the answer of the minister was not correct according to the report of the standing committee on veterans affairs.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps this is an excellent illustration of attempting to answer questions without notice.

An hon. Member: Without knowledge.

Mr. Teillet: I interpreted, I believed correctly, the recommendation. It was an interpretation; I did not have the text before me. If I have misled my hon. friend I should be glad to apologize. However, I think if he will read the answer again he will realize it is a fairly close interpretation of that recommendation.

[Later:]

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether he can indicate to the house how many beds will be available, and what it is proposed to do with those veterans who are chronically ill. Is there a proposal to put them into nursing homes, or what is going to be done with these veterans? My second question is this. With regard to the outlying areas which are some distance from veterans hospitals, what is the proposal respecting those veterans who become ill and who were previously sent to the bigger centres for treatment? Are they to be put on the ordinary waiting lists of these hospitals, many of which have long waiting lists at the moment?

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest to the minister that he take this question as notice.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF ALLOWANCES FOR CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. F. Kennedy (Colchester-Hants): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the announced extension of family allowances to children of 16 and 17 years, does the minister now intend to announce a similar extension under the veterans charter in respect of children in this age group?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): May I take that question as notice?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—INQUIRIES RESPECTING PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): As one Irishman to another, I should like to address a question to the honourable and learned Secretary of State for External Affairs. Knowing the proper interest taken by the minister and the government in wider United Nations participation in the Cyprus operation, is the hon. gentleman in a position to report on any wider range of United Nations member involvement in this important peace keeping operation or on any other aspect of the role of the United Nations in this very important operation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I cannot report that any country, in addition to those already announced has given any indication of intention to join the force, but efforts along that line are being pursued.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Has Canada been pursuing this matter with some of her friends in an effort to get them to participate, or is it the secretary general who has been doing the pursuing?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is being done both by Canada and by the United Nations.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Can the secretary of state tell us anything about the Finnish contribution which was rumoured last week?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Finland has already decided to join the force.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): May I direct a supplementary question to the minister, and ask him if he would care to comment on a report that the Turkish parliament has authorized the government to land troops on Cyprus if necessary? Could he indicate whether, in his view, the Canadian peace force now being assembled on the island would be able to cope with such a situation?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the government of Turkey, having expressed, as it did, its pleasure and satisfaction at the establishment of the force, would not wish to take any steps that would make impossible or difficult the operations and work of that force.

[Later:]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre with regard to a news report that Canadian troops were being paid in U.S. currency in order, according to the report, to pay any debts before leaving for Cyprus. In actual fact the payment was made to ensure that each man was in possession of a small amount of money easily negotiable to cover any expenses that might be incurred en route to Cyprus or in Cyprus itself. I have been unable to discover anything about using these funds to pay debts. Cash pay in Cyprus will be in local currency in accordance with United Nations foreign policy.

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Can the minister tell us why Canadian currency is not easily negotiable?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I happen to think that Canadian currency should be easily negotiable all over the world, but it so happens that the United States is a little better known than we are and its currency is more easily negotiable in some countries.

Mr. Bell: What is the minister doing about that?

[Later:]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre asked what arrangements had been made for hospital services for Canadian troops serving in Cyprus. I can now give a detailed answer to the hon. member.

The Canadian army has obtained information from the British war office concerning the availability of medical resources in Cyprus, and such information has effected the formulation of the Canadian medical support plan.

The Canadian contingent includes the regimental medical officer and eight medical assistants of the Van Doos, together with normal medical stores. In addition, there are a second medical officer and four medical assistants attached to the Canadian contingent. Hospital facilities made available by the British consist of the British military hospital at Dekhelia and the Royal Air Force hospital at Akrotiri, both full treatment hospitals.

It is not the practice of the British to hold long term patients at these hospitals and, should the necessity arise, a Canadian air evacuation plan has been made using the R.C.A.F. 3 air wing hospital facilities at Zweibrücken in Germany.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING COVERAGE OF FARM LABOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Has the minister been informed by Mr. F. C. Cronkite of Saskatoon, chairman of the prairie regional employment committee, of a resolution recently adopted by the convention in Winnipeg requesting that unemployment insurance coverage be extended to include farm labour? If so, has the minister any comments on this very important and urgent matter?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I do not recall receiving the resolution to which the hon. member refers, but I will make an investigation to see whether I have received these representations with respect to the coverage of farm labour.

PAYMENTS TO PERSONS REFUSING EMPLOYMENT IN STRIKEBOUND PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wonder if the Minister of Labour is in a position to answer the question put to him yesterday with reference to the strikebound plant owned by Canadian Forest Industries Limited, and the complaint that persons refusing to take employment in this plant might forfeit their unemployment insurance benefits. Is that in fact the situation?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no. Section 59(2)(a) of the Unemployment Insurance Act provides that employment arising in consequence of a stoppage of work attributable to a labour dispute is not suitable employment. A claimant may therefore refuse such employment without loss of benefit.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EMPLOYMENT OF OLDER WORKERS IN PUBLIC SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I have a question which I should like to address to the Minister of Labour. Will the minister inform the house what he is doing to ensure that his policy of helping older workers to obtain employment is being implemented within the public service itself?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I shall be glad to look into the activities of the Department of Labour with respect to encouraging other government departments. I know that in all aspects of our employment program an effort is being made to encourage the government as an employer to follow in this direction.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question. Is the Minister of Labour aware that the penitentiaries commission refuses to consider applications for work from individuals over the age of 45 for jobs other than those of a custodial nature? This being the case, will the minister make the strongest possible representations to the penitentiaries commission and to the civil service commission about discrimination of this sort? I ask this question—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Grafftey: —because I have to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member please take his seat. Might I point out to the hon. member that he is making a statement, not asking a question.

Mr. Grafftey: I should like to ask the Minister of Labour, in view of this anomaly, whether he will make the strongest possible representations to the Minister of Justice and the civil service commission. I make this differentiation because, as I understand it, the penitentiaries commission are independent of the civil service commission for hiring purposes.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if the facts as set out by my hon. friend are correct I will be glad to make proper representations to my colleagues.

Mr. Grafftey: On a point of order, the minister says "if the facts are correct". I believe they are correct. This being the situation, could I also address a supplementary question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. A policy which discriminates against people who are 45 years of age and over completely nullifies the effects of veterans—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is repeating the same form of statement. If he cares to ask a question he may do so, but I do not think it is up to the hon. member to make a statement unless he has absolute proof.

TRANSPORT

REPORTED DISCONTINUANCE OF BRIDGE SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. There is some confusion about whether the bridge subsidy payments have ended. Apparently the railways have told certain shippers that the bridge subsidy has ended, and if that is so I should like to ask what is the purpose of the several million dollars in the estimates for this year, and when the action formally ending the subsidy was taken.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it—though I am not sure that this is a proper question for the orders of the day—the bridge subsidy is provided by parliament and can only be changed by parliament. Some day I hope to introduce some legislation on this matter which has not been introduced yet.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question. Would the minister investigate at once and seek an explanation why a rate increase was passed on to the shippers as from March 1, the reason being given that the bridge subsidy was ending?

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman can provide me with some concrete evidence of these things so that I can make an inquiry about them I will be glad to do so.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR INCREASED HOSPITAL GRANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want to address a question to the Prime Minister concerning the national problem of hospital bed shortage in metropolitan Toronto. In view of the meetings being held now in Toronto to try to solve this urgent matter, would the Prime Minister consider making a decision one way or the other as to whether the federal government will increase its grants, so that the people who are trying to solve this problem will know whether they can look to the government for assistance or whether they are going to have to solve the financial problem in other ways? Would the Prime Minister consider making a decision one way or the other, instead of giving the indecisive answers which we have been getting over the last eight months?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate both the importance and the urgency of this matter, and I will be glad to discuss it with my colleagues directly concerned and make a statement at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Scott: A supplementary question. Is the Prime Minister aware that this is just about the answer he gave me six months ago, and would he again consider making a firm decision one way or the other in the very near future?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think this is the first time I have answered my hon. friend on this question.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GLASSCO COMMISSION—APPLICATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS TO CERTAIN DEPARTMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Finance arises out of press reports that the federal Departments of Agriculture, Northern Affairs, Veterans Affairs and Transport are to be made guinea pigs for Glassco commission economies. In view of the absence of any reference to this subject in last night's budget speech, would the minister now advise the house as to the nature of the experiments that are to be performed on or in these departments?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, without agreeing for a minute with the phrases used by my hon. friend in introducing his question, on the recommendation of the organization which has been set up to consider and implement the proposals of the Glassco commission it was decided by the treasury board to employ firms of management consultants to work with officials of the four departments referred to in studying the detailed application of the recommendations of the Glassco commission in respect of those particular departments.

FINANCE

REPORTED INCREASE IN BANKRUPTCY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. A dominion bureau of statistics release shows an 18½ per cent increase in bankruptcy in the last quarter of 1963 as compared with 1962. Can the Minister of Finance explain this alarming increase?

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—INCREASED PAYMENTS TO STUDENTS IN QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask the Minister of Finance. Can the minister tell the house whether the supplementary family allowances to be paid by Ottawa to 16 and 17 year old students will be added to the similar allowances already paid by the Lesage government to Quebec students?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to speak for the Lesage government. The allowances referred to in last night's budget will be paid to all people who qualify for them.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of his excellent relations with the premier of the province of Quebec, can he ask the latter not to act in the way he did at the time of the $10 increase to pensioners?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for underlining the excellent relationships that prevail between this government and the government of the province of Quebec—

[Mr. Rheaume.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: —and I will do everything possible to see that those relationships are maintained.

INQUIRY AS TO BREAKDOWN OF SALES TAX REVENUE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Does the Department of Finance keep figures on the revenue that has accrued to the crown as a result of sales tax introduced in the 1963 budget and, in particular, is there a breakdown—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pugh: A simple yes or no will do. Is there a breakdown showing the amount received from the lumber industry and the building suppliers throughout Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Pugh: With respect, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member certainly cannot expect the minister to answer a detailed question like that without notice.

Mr. Pugh: With respect, Mr. Speaker, it requires a straight answer, yes or no. Does he keep figures?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

USE OF MAILS FOR DISSEMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION LITERATURE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the right hon. Leader of the Opposition asked me two questions. I assured him that I would answer them as soon as possible. He asked if I had any information about a certain postal box, namely box 22, station E, Toronto 4. He inquired whether that particular box had been brought to my attention and whether it had been closed. I told him that I had received information on the subject from a member of the press gallery, but I was not sure whether it was the same box.

I have since confirmed that the box mentioned by my right hon. friend is the same one that had been brought to my attention by the gentleman in the gallery. Our investigations show that box 22 was rented in 1961 to a senior citizen in Toronto, who furnished excellent references to the postal authorities. The only suggestion that the box in question may have been used for other than legitimate purposes has come from the member of the press gallery and from my right hon. friend. No information has been brought to the attention of the postal authorities which would justify closing or interfering with the use of the box in question by the gentleman who rented it and who has been using it for the past three years.

On the same subject, Mr. Speaker, may I say that in the course of their investigations the postal authorities in Toronto learned some days ago that, in addition to postal box 431, which was closed on January 13, and the box in St. Catharines which I mentioned earlier, the 19 year old youth to whom I referred last week in answer to a question put by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition had leased a third postal box in Toronto, and it also has been used for the distribution of this objectionable literature. That box also was closed some days ago.

AIR TRANSPORT

SUBMISSION BY MANITOBA RESPECTING NATIONAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. It arises out of a similar question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg South about a week ago today regarding a submission from the Manitoba government in respect to a national air policy. Will the minister assure the house that the province will be consulted prior to the finalizing of a national air policy for Canada?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is a matter about which one would expect to have a federal-provincial conference, but I would naturally be interested to have the views of any provincial government or those of any other interested person who has any views on the appropriate national air policy for our country. I assure the hon. member that I wrote to Mr. Evans after reading his submission and asked for some more copies, so it would be sure to be studied thoroughly by all those concerned with the devising of any amendments that may be required to the air policy.

AGRICULTURE

DIELDRIN—USE AS GRASSHOPPER SPRAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. O. Cooper (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. It refers to the use of dieldrin as a grasshopper spray on cereal crops. Since I asked the question last session Manitoba has abandoned the use of dieldrin. Has the minister received any report from the people concerned with the Food and Drugs Act as to the effects of this dangerous poison on human beings as well as on cattle?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must intervene here. This type of question demands a detailed answer, which I believe could better be given on the order paper.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF YUKON QUARTZ MINING ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Could the minister inform the house when the amendments to the Yukon Quartz Mining Act, designed to stimulate prospecting and pending now for over a year, will be brought before the house?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have some hope that they will be brought before the house this session.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUGGESTED POSTPONEMENT OF DEBATE ON BUDGET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, and it is based on the hope which he expressed yesterday that the bill respecting the Canada pension plan might receive second reading and be sent to a parliamentary committee before the Easter recess. My question is, will the government consider postponing either all or part of the six day budget debate until after the Easter recess, so we can get some pieces of legislation such as the Canada pension plan and one or two other items through before the Easter recess?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is still possible, I hope, for this house to deal with the resolution and second reading of the bill respecting the Canada pension plan and at the same time have at least half the budget debate and dispose of the amendments before the Easter recess.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister intend to press for the passing of the bill concerning the Canada pension plan before the Quebec legislative assembly has the opportunity to introduce its own pension plan?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to get the bill before a parliamentary committee with the least possible delay.

BRIDGES

THREE RIVERS, QUE.—MEETING WITH QUEBEC MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he has anything to report on the matter of the bridge at Three Rivers following his meeting with the minister of highways of Quebec yesterday.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised that the Lea report will be available in a very few days, probably this week, and I so informed the minister of highways when I saw him yesterday.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUEBEC—REPORTED REMOVAL OF GUNS FROM CITADEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, basing his question on an article appearing in Le Petit Journal, asked if it was true that a group of machine guns had been removed from La Citadelle, Quebec city. I am now in a position to confirm my original answer to the effect that the report is incorrect, and that no weapons have been withdrawn from La Citadelle.

AIRPORTS

CALGARY—DANGER FROM PROPOSED RADIO TOWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Before asking my question, Mr. Speaker, I think it only fair to point out that the question period started at twenty minutes to four and has lasted 45 minutes now. My question is to the Minister of Transport. It is based on proposals of the C.B.C. or the board of broadcast governors to construct radio transmission towers 473 feet high south of the Calgary international airport at Shepard. Has the minister received representations from general aviation associations in the area, and is it his intention to convene an inquiry on the basis of the individual assessment that he discussed with these associations in order to determine the hazard presented to general aviation by these towers?

[Mr. Gregoire.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Nielsen: With respect, Mr. Speaker, this question is urgent.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I fail to see the urgency. The hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I rose to ask the minister a question concerning the safety of general aviation in this country. The construction of towers almost 500 feet high, which might be proceeding any day or at any moment now, is in my opinion an urgent matter, since in the last 18 months 14 lives have been lost in accidents through flyers striking cables and towers. I am sure the minister has an answer prepared for my question, and the aviation industry is very interested in hearing about the safety measures that he proposes to take.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid I do not see any point of order there. The question the hon. member has asked requires a considered reply, and the minister is entitled to take sufficient time to prepare that considered reply.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder whether the minister might be allowed to answer for himself and say whether he is going to hear the representatives of the aviation associations concerned.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lapointe.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is he aware that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Dupuis) has been criticized by the minister of municipal affairs of the province of Quebec? Does he intend to reprimand his colleague accordingly?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am only aware of the fact that my hon. friend has asked another improper question.

PUBLICATIONS

SPONSORSHIP OF MOTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question relating to the business of the house. When the motion regarding Canadian periodicals was tabled it was in the Prime Minister's name, and today it is under the name of the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether there is any significance in the change, or what significance there was in the original intention of having the Prime Minister sponsor the motion?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, there is no significance at all. If this matter is dealt with apart from the budget I will deal with it; if it is decided in the budget the Minister of Finance will deal with it.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister explain more fully his comment about it being decided in the budget?

Mr. Pearson: I do not think I can explain it at this time. I will try to make it quite clear to my hon. friend on an appropriate occasion.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY AS TO LOCATION IN DESIGNATED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production. Could he tell us whether some progress has been made concerning the setting up of industries in designated areas in the near future?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, we had a good deal of success concerning the setting up of new industries in several designated areas. A rather long report would be necessary to describe in detail what has been done, but I can assure the hon. member that our efforts have been successful.

[Text]

PUBLIC SERVICE

EMPLOYMENT OF FRENCH CANADIANS—REPORTED STATEMENT OF JUSTICE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have a question.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to shut off any hon. member, but is the question really urgent?

Mr. Pigeon: It is an urgent question.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that in Toronto on March 5 he stated that French Canadians, because of their situation in the federal administration, were frustrated, as the minister responsible for justice, what steps—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I find it impossible to ask my question with the noise the hon. member without portfolio is making.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I heard the hon. gentleman. The question is for the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I repeat my question. In view of the fact that in Toronto on March 5 the Minister of Justice stated that French Canadians were frustrated because of their situation in the federal administration, as the minister responsible for justice what steps does he intend to recommend in order to remedy that situation he finds unfair?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This question is out of order.

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister is ready to answer my question.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the hon. member that two wrongs do not make a right, and if his question is not in order then the minister is not called upon to reply.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I put a question to the Minister of Justice who is now ready to give me an answer.

I would ask Your Honour to allow the Minister of Justice to answer my question.

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

PENSIONS

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CONTRIBUTORY PROGRAM

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure, to be known as the Canada pension plan, to establish a comprehensive program of old age pensions in Canada payable to contributors, and to provide,

among other things, for the payment of retirement pensions beginning at any age between 65 and 70 years; for the payment of pensions to surviving spouses beginning at any age from 65 years; for the progressive establishment of full pensions over an initial period of ten years; for the co-ordination of pensions payable under the Old Age Security Act with pensions payable under the Canada pension plan and for the payment of adjusted pensions under the Old Age Security Act beginning at any age from 65 years; and to provide further that all expenditures under the Canada pension plan, including costs of administration, shall be financed from contributions by employees, employers and self employed persons.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased today to have the opportunity, even at this late hour, to introduce into this house a resolution proposing the introduction of a comprehensive system of contributory retirement pensions, the Canada pension plan. Hon. members will recall that a resolution very similar to this one was introduced into the house in July of last year. At the time of its introduction I tabled and the house ordered printed in Hansard, a so-called white paper, which was the scheme of the bill to be introduced, couched in non-legal language. This was provided in order to assist members in ready comprehension of this highly technical matter. It served also to provide a basis for discussion with provincial governments.

Those discussions began at the end of July. They were continued at a conference with provincial ministers and their technical advisers early in September last. There were further technical discussions at the official level with Ontario and Quebec. And then, at the full federal-provincial conference last November, there was a long discussion of the government's plans with the premiers of the provinces, under the chairmanship of the Prime Minister.

In addition, during the eight months since the introduction of the 1963 resolution, the Canada pension plan has been exhaustively discussed by interested groups across the country. Much of this discussion has found its way into the public press. There can be very few occasions when the intentions of a government have been so fully discussed prior to the introduction of the actual legislation into parliament. Our proposals have produced wide interest and, I think, increasingly favourable support. Members will have noted the three tabled returns made in response to motion Nos. 84, 88 and 105 which comprise more than 700 folios of correspondence on the subject. Many members will also be aware that important national organizations, such as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the National Farmers Union and the Canadian Labour Congress, have expressed themselves in favour of the pension plan.

The wide discussion of pensions has been welcomed by the government, for our hope is to produce the best possible retirement plan for Canadians generally.

Since the second world war, private pension schemes have burgeoned in Canada. Some of these schemes were designed and paid for entirely by management, but many of the biggest were the product of labour negotiation and are considered a part of the wage package. It is now estimated that approximately 1,800,000 Canadian workers have some type of private pension arrangements.

These schemes are making an important contribution to improved security. But it also soon became apparent that those who are not covered by private schemes, and those who worked through the depression years when they could make at best only meagre provision for their own retirement, were facing an increasingly difficult future. This gave impetus to a study in parliament as to the action which ought to be taken to provide elderly Canadian citizens with some measure to meet their retirement needs. A joint committee of both houses exhaustively explored the available alternatives and concluded by recommending that a pension payment of $40 per month should be made to every person who attained the age of 70. Since this is taxable income, those with substantially greater incomes return part through taxation.

In order to effect this major departure, permission for a constitutional amendment had to be sought from the provinces. It was obtained and pensions thus became a field of concurrent federal-provincial jurisdiction.

The $40, as everyone in the chamber knows, has been increased, most recently by this parliament to $75. It is surely now apparent that we must seek an additional approach if we are to achieve the goal of providing real retirement benefits for Canadian workers. As the amount of the old age security, sometimes called the flat rate pension, has risen, its limitations have become more apparent. In some parts of Canada, the aged parents in a family receive more cash income than is brought to the family financial pot by the family breadwinner. In low-income, low-cost areas, the retirement benefit seems relatively large. At the same time, at the other end of the scale, no matter what reasonable increase may be legislated, by this or successive parliaments, it is never enough to provide an adequate subsistence for the aged, who have no other resources in the high cost urban areas where more and more of them live. There is, therefore, increasing public awareness that our retirement programs are not good enough for the present, much less sufficient to give us pride, and provide comfort for the aged, for the future.

The Canada pension plan was devised for the present and for the future. Very shortly after it comes into operation it will begin to pay pensions, modest at first, but building over a 10-year period of transition. We could not meet social needs by stretching out the period of transition appreciably beyond 10 years, as some have suggested.

The way in which this parliament is asked to provide modestly adequate pensions, available as widely as possible through the aegis of the Canada pension plan, is before the house in the terms of the resolution. Briefly, and avoiding detail as far as possible because it is outside the scope of debate on the resolution, the Canada pension plan provides a modest but adequate retirement pension related to the income earned over the contributor's working life. It is a two-part scheme integrating the new pension with the existing universal flat-rate old age security pension.

In order to ensure a constant dollar value at retirement, the ceiling on pensionable earnings will rise as average wages rise. This of course will mean an increased flow of contributions, at the same percentage rate, and an increased amount payable for benefits.

The Canada pension plan calls for compulsory participation by employees and for voluntary participation by the self employed. It is open to all whom we can administratively cover, within participating provinces. The employee will pay annually 1 per cent of the first $4,500 of his pensionable earnings. That contribution will be matched by his employer. This initial low rate will continue in force for 15 years, followed by a gradual increase over the years. Foreseeably the rate will rise to 2 per cent, but that is 50 years away.

To translate this into understandable terms, John Jones, an employee, making $2,500 per year will pay $25 a year; his employer will pay the same. His brother Tom, who is self employed, will pay $50 annually. No one can pay more than $90 a year and those are only the self employed at the top level of $4,500 per year of pensionable earnings.

What then will the pensioner receive and when? He or she may decide to begin to draw the pension at age 70, or if retired, at any time after age 65. Initially, commencing 1st January, 1966, retired persons of 69 or over may draw pensions if retired. A year later the age will be lowered to 68, and so on until in 1970 any retired person 65 or over may draw his or her pension. The amount of this pension will be made up of two parts, but paid in one cheque. The earnings-related part will be 20 per cent of average pensionable earnings. This will remain constant at whatever age, from 65 on, the pension is drawn.

The other portion of the pension, the flat rate old age security portion, may be drawn at the sum of $51 per month at age 65. It will be somewhat larger for each month that it is postponed, up to the age of 70 when, of course, it will be $75. This is in order to encourage those who wish to, and can, to keep working beyond 65.

While at the resolution stage we are dealing with principle, for greater clarity, I shall cite the example of an employee who has had pensionable earnings of $3,600 per year. He pays $3 a month for his pension. If after the transition stage (of 10 years in which full benefits build up) he retires at age 65, he receives $111 per month or, if he works to age 70, $135 per month for the rest of his life. His wife, although never a contributor, may of course receive her own flat rate pension of between $51 per month at age 65, or $75 per month if she waits until she is 70. It goes without saying that if she herself has been a contributor during her own working years, she will be entitled to her personal income-related pension.

Provision is made for benefits for the widow or widower, age 65 or over, of a deceased pensioner.

These pensions are not intended to be the sole provision for an individual's retirement. There is ample scope, over and above a plan of this scale, for private pension schemes and personal savings and investment. Indeed the effect of such legislation has been in other countries to encourage individuals, who could afford it, to make additional provision for their own future.

This plan is, by its nature, portable throughout participating provinces. Canada-wide portability will also be ensured. The bill does not deal with, nor can this government constitutionally deal with, private existing contractual relationship for pensions between employers and employees. That lies within provincial competence. The spirit of such legislation as that enacted in Ontario and announced in Manitoba is good, we think, providing for portability of private plans.

I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to deal at length with the financial provisions of this bill. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance will deal with this in his turn.

However, I would like to refer briefly to the financial and other ways in which the plan proposed in this resolution differs from that of the resolution I moved last July.

The scale of pensions now proposed is 20 per cent of earnings. What we suggested last July was not one scale but a range of benefits dependent upon when the pension began. The pension would have varied from 20 per cent at age 65 to 30 per cent at age 70.

Since the average age at which people retire is about 67½, the average pension, under that proposal, would have been about 25 per cent of earnings. What is now proposed is smaller by one fifth. On average, people will get one fifth less than we previously proposed and, of course, the long term contribution rate required will be correspondingly less.

In the government's view, a plan providing for a range of benefits between 20 per cent and 30 per cent would have had important merits. However, our consultations with the provinces revealed a widespread fear that the original proposal was on a scale which would substantially lessen the incentive for people to save through private pension plans. We recognize that pensions are a field of common jurisdiction for Canada and the provinces, and we therefore felt it to be our duty, as the fruit of genuine consultation, to seek a middle ground between our views and the various views of the provinces. The proposals we now make are the result of that search. I believe they are proposals which will be shown, on careful scrutiny, to be the most generally acceptable.

The other major change in the plan relates to its financial reserves. Any pension plan, public or private, yields substantial reserves in its early years. Eventually, when it reaches maturity, any plan—again, this is true whether it be public or private—becomes in effect pay as you go. That is to say, the income equals the outgo except to the extent to which the plan is growing because the number of new contributors entering exceeds the number who are retiring.

Even with its low, 1 per cent contribution rate, the Canada pension plan will yield substantial reserves for many years. In our July proposal, however, we suggested that much of these reserves—over and above what was needed as a contingencies fund—should be earmarked for a special purpose. That was to absorb the cost of improving the flat rate old age security benefits, and especially the temporary additional cost of making such benefits available before age 70.

That proposal could only have worked if the plan had come into operation in every province. Once the government of Quebec indicated its intention to exercise the right—which, as our legislation will recognize, is the right of any province—to set up a pension plan of its own, we realized our proposed plan could not operate where there was to be a similar, comprehensive provincial plan.

Clearly, that situation made it undesirable to establish any sort of financial link between the new plan and the flat rate federal pension. Therefore the reserves generated under the plan as now proposed will be available for investment in federal and provincial securities. This means that the improvement of old age security will be financed from the old age security fund as now constituted. The offsetting advantage is that, because of the reserves and the interest they earn, the long term cost of the Canada pension plan itself will be lower.

An hon. member, a week or so ago, requested that an up to date white paper, setting forth the scheme of the bill as revised, might again be provided to all hon. members. I am happy to say that a white paper has been prepared and will now be made available in both official languages. I particularly invite hon. members to compare its provisions with those of the July 1963 white paper. It will be seen that the changes, though important in some respects, do not substantially affect the benefits that the plan will make available to the people of Canada.

It is, I believe, generally known that it is the government's intention at the appropriate stage in the proceedings in this chamber to move to refer the bill to a special committee comprised of members of this house and to couple with it an invitation to hon. members of the other place, in order that a joint committee of both houses may explore in detail the provision of the legislation. Such a committee, it is expected, would be anxious to call before it many witnesses to complete the public scrutiny which this plan has undergone now for nearly a year.

At the federal-provincial conference held in Ottawa in November last, the Prime Minister laid down what the government considers the eight essentials for a federal contributory pension plan.

They are:

1. That it be as near universal as administratively practicable, but with provision for voluntary participation.

2. That it apply up to an average level of earnings.

3. That it should in combination with the flat rate benefit, provide pensions which are modestly adequate for those who cannot make other provision for their retirement.

4. That it leave scope for further provision by those who can make it; to this end, keep the disturbance of private plans to the minimum practicable.

Prime Minister Pearson, having first promised public and expert scrutiny of the Canada pension plan, now promises passage of the plan in the current session.

5. Because many who cannot make further provision are now middle aged, it should have a moderately short maturity period.

6. It should make the adequate minimum pensions available from age 65.

7. That it should provide security in real terms by relating pension levels to earnings levels at the time of retirement.

8. That it should provide safeguards which will help to keep the plan on a moderate scale, so that it will not be expanded in benefits without proper regard to future costs and therefore savings.

Those are the essential principles of the Canada pension plan. I believe it will commend itself to the public and to all hon. members, and represent a great new step forward in providing social security for Canadians in their years of retirement from their active working lives.

Mr. Monteith: It seems to me somewhat strange that the minister should have gone into such detail at this stage, giving full particulars of specific cases, and so on. I cannot hope at this stage to deal in specifics, not having had the opportunity to study the hon. lady's statement.

I am pleased to hear that an up to date white paper has been prepared, and I assume this will be made available to members of the house shortly, probably later today. Again, it will not be possible to study this adequately in the time available, presumably over the dinner hour, and I am afraid I shall not be in a position to comment on the details of the particular scheme set out in the white paper.

I was pleased to hear the hon. lady say there is to be a joint committee set up to consider this question. However, I feel the Prime Minister should have reconsidered his position in this regard as of yesterday when he replied to a question addressed to him by myself. At that time I asked whether he would consider sending the bill to committee before it received second reading. His answer was to the effect that he hoped the bill would receive second reading and then go to the committee. We understand that the committee is now to be a joint committee.

I do not feel this is good enough. In a matter as complex and important as a Canada pension plan we need to have the fullest inquiry possible before second reading when the bill itself would be approved. At that point it becomes a matter of political necessity on the part of the government to put the bill through practically unchanged. I feel the Prime Minister should have reconsidered the stand he was taking, and I would recommend to him an article by Mr. John Meyer which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of February 24 of this year. This article began as follows:

It goes on to indicate that the Prime Minister has given two impressions as to his feelings in this respect. I feel the right hon. gentleman should read this article with great care because there are other suggestions in it which affect this argument; I do not intend to go into detail now.

I want to impress, first of all, upon the House of Commons and upon the country the fact that the Progressive Conservative party is 100 per cent behind a Canada pension plan. There are no "ifs" "ands" or "buts". Let me make it abundantly clear. We wish to see a comprehensive contributory plan brought in at the earliest opportunity. We want to see the bill, and we want to see it as soon as possible. We are most anxious to have it in our hands so as to give it the close study which even the government concedes it will require. This plan has been widely discussed and written about for many months, as the minister stated, and we in this party feel no further purpose can be served by delaying and arguing over the resolution at this time. We certainly do not intend to hold up the introduction of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: We want the bill introduced at once so that we can study the plan in great detail and determine to what extent it does or does not provide a good pension for all Canadians.

I wonder if I might call it five o'clock?

The Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed with private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): May I have leave to revert to motions, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss LaMarsh: Before the house proceeds to the next item of business may I have leave to table the document to which I referred during the proceedings in the committee of the whole and ask leave, as well, to have the said document printed as an appendix to today's Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Churchill: Is that the white paper? Is the white paper not available now, prior to this debate continuing?

Miss LaMarsh: I have just tabled that document, and it will be available to all members of the house.

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow. We shall not see it until tomorrow.

Miss LaMarsh: There are some 500 copies available in the distribution office for any members who seek them.

[Editor's note: For text of document above referred to, see appendix.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): May I ask leave of the house to stay with motions for a moment and announce the business of the house for the rest of this week.

There will be no change in the order of business already announced as far as the beginning of the budget debate is concerned. We shall be proceeding with the budget debate tomorrow, Thursday and Friday. On Thursday I shall be in a position to announce final plans for the business of the house next week.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the house leader a question. When he states that the budget debate will be the order of the day tomorrow, is he aware of a certain notice of motion on the notice paper today which would take priority in tomorrow's business, or have arrangements been made for that?

Mr. Favreau: I am speaking of government business as such. I am aware of that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

ST. JOHN AMBULANCE ASSOCIATION

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds) moved the second reading of Bill S-5, respecting the general council of the Canadian branch of the St. John ambulance association.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to move second reading of Bill S-5, respecting the general council of the Canadian branch of the St. John ambulance association, as passed by the Senate on March 12, 1964. The St. John ambulance association is well known to all hon. members of the house. Honorary presidents include the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). The work of the St. John ambulance is familiar to the members of this house. I would refer hon. members to the answer given to question No. 19, as reported on page 511 of Hansard, which indicates that the number of our military personnel trained in the last 10 years with St. John ambulance qualifications was something of the order of 155,000. This is a fractional part of their work when you consider what has been done for emergency measures organizations and for civilians generally.

The principal purpose of the bill is to provide the corporation with objects and powers appropriate to the only function it has in fact been fulfilling since 1946, namely, that of a bare trustee for the priory holding title to property beneficially owned by the priory, as more particularly set out in the recitals in the preamble of the bill, and in connection therewith to define the trusts upon which the corporation holds such property. Additional purposes of the bill are to provide a location for the head office of the corporation, to define its membership consistent with its control and direction by the priory, and to change its name to one more appropriate to its functions.

I might point out that the bill has received lengthy study by a special committee set up under the chairmanship of Brigadier G. E. Beament, Q.C., of Ottawa, who will be available at the committee stage. I respectfully ask for unanimous consent that this bill receive second reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few brief comments concerning Bill S-5, which came to my knowledge only a few minutes ago and for which unfortunately we do not yet have the French version.

Having been a doctor for the St. John ambulance association, as was my father before me, I believe one can only feel proud to have belonged to an organization which has rendered such great services to Canada.

Since, as I have just said, I did not have the time to examine the bill, I suggest we adopt the motion preceding second reading and ask for additional information, if need be, at the committee stage.

[Text]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING NAME OF COMPANY—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. Jean Chretien (St. Maurice-Lafleche) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. C-2, respecting the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I had suggested that I second the motion. Therefore, I wonder why you did not follow my suggestion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member will agree that he is raising the point rather late, as I had already recognized the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare (Mr. Armstrong).

Mr. Pigeon: But I did say "seconded by Pigeon".

[Text]

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

DIVORCE

MEASURE TO MODERNIZE DISSOLUTION AND ANNULMENT OF MARRIAGE

On the order: Public bills:

Second reading of Bill C-5, an act to provide in Canada for the dissolution and the annulment of marriage—Mr. Peters.

Mr. Knowles: Stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Stand at the request of the government.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I realize that it is a little late perhaps to rise on a point of order, but I wish to call your attention to the fact that although we asked for a French version of Bill S-2 moved by the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche (Mr. Chretien), I have just been informed that there are no French copies of that bill. I wonder what the government means by full bilingualism?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am informed that the French version of the amendments appear on page 96 of the Votes and Proceedings of March 13.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, when a bill comes back to this house after amendments have been moved at the other place, is it not usual to have the bill printed in both languages?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, it is not.

[Text]

PUBLIC SERVICE

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH OFFICE OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-7, to establish the office of parliamentary commissioner.

Office of Parliamentary Commissioner

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill to establish the office of a parliamentary commissioner is basically the same as the bill presented last year under the number of C-19 and which was disallowed by Your Honour because it incurred the expenditure of public funds. It is also similar to a bill presented the year before known as Bill No. C-98. The adjustments which have been made to this bill, Bill No. C-7, are such that there can be no question about its demanding the expenditure of public money.

My reasons for introducing this bill are twofold. First of all, I am personally familiar with the working of the Scandinavian ombudsman which has operated in Sweden for 150 years, and I have likewise had the opportunity of studying the operations of the New Zealand ombudsman. In fact, it is my privilege to know the New Zealand ombudsman personally. I am convinced of the value of such an office and believe that we urgently need such a set-up in Canada.

Second, the tremendous expansion of administrative authority, giving vast power to the executive side of government, has resulted in an ever increasing number of tribunals and agencies carrying with them authority over the person or property of the private citizen. As a result, citizens very often having legitimate complaints regarding administrative injustices too often find themselves unable to speak out about them. The courts in Canada are no longer the bulwark of individual rights, since much of the common law has lost its flexibility. The office of ombudsman is intended to be the protector of such individual rights. He may be called, in English, as we have entitled him in this bill, a parliamentary commissioner, although actually his responsibilities are those of a public defender.

It is evident to me that the existing protection of the average citizen against executive power is rapidly becoming inadequate. In my opinion such an office would keep watch over the way in which government officials apply the laws and regulations to the public, and would investigate the complaints of private citizens against such officials. He would not have power to overrule, but would be in a strong position to suggest that injustices be corrected. He would report directly to parliament annually. When this report is presented to parliament, the session of the parliamentary committee concerned would be open to all persons, private and public. Actually the status of an ombudsman, or parliamentary commissioner, would be that of a high court judge and would have the powers of a commissioner under the Inquiries Act.

Office of Parliamentary Commissioner

The first ombudsman as such originated in Sweden and is found provided for in article 86 of the Swedish constitution of 1809. The decision to include this office in the constitution came immediately following 37 years of absolute monarchy. There had been a coup d'état; the king had been deposed, parliament had taken over and it was parliament which forced through this new provision. The ombudsman was one of the powers of control imposed on the new administration. No one knows exactly who had the original idea when the ombudsman was first provided for in the Swedish constitution. However, the principle was not new in Sweden, for there had been a similar position in existence as early as 1713, when Charles XII, known as the madman of the north, ruled that country. This position was then named the king's chancellor of justice. In Sweden there are two ombudsmen, one for civil and one for military affairs. Their legal position compares with that of a public prosecutor. The civil ombudsman is appointed for four years by a special committee of 45 members. Regulations briefly classify the duty of an ombudsman as concerned with, "error which comes from partiality; dereliction of duty; mistakes by government administration, or other situations created contrary to the rights of a citizen".

Probably one of the best authorities we have in Canada is Professor Donald Rowat of Carleton University. He states, in a paper published by the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science:

> The ombudsman in the Nordic countries is a special parliamentary commissioner whose job is to receive complaints from citizens who are aggrieved by official action, to investigate these complaints and, if he finds they are justified, to seek a remedy. He may also conduct inspections and take up cases on his own initiative. He is appointed by and responsible to parliament, reports annually to a special committee of the house, and is entirely independent of the executive.

New Zealand passed legislation providing for an ombudsman in 1962; Finland has had such an office since 1919; Denmark since 1955, and Norway since 1962. The British society of jurists recently recommended, in its Wyatt report, an ombudsman for the United Kingdom. Likewise there is much talk of such an office being established in the United States, both federally and in some of the states; also in Ireland, Holland and India. It should be of special interest to us in this house that in the speeches from the throne in two of our provinces, namely Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia, it was stated that those provinces were intending to establish a provincial ombudsman.

There are a number of countries with appointments or committees holding similar authority and responsibility. I will just briefly outline these to emphasize the fact that all over the world there is much talk and consideration given to the establishment of a permanent office such as we are suggesting in this bill. There is the procreator of justice in the Soviet union; the presidential complaints committee in the Philippines; in Japan there is the bureau of civil liberties, with commissioners in every district throughout the whole country whose purpose is to do exactly what we are talking about; in western Europe there is the European committee of human rights; there is the inspector general of the United States army, who performs similar duties to those of the military ombudsman in Sweden. In a sense our Auditor General carries parallel responsibilities in Canada, but they relate only to financial matters.

The rapid expansion of the civil service and the extension of administrative authority demands a means of protection for the individual; in fact, such protection of civil liberties has not kept pace with the growth of bureaucracy. In this regard Professor H. W. R. Wade has said:

> The state has seized the initiative, and has put upon itself all kinds of new duties. In order to carry out so many schemes of social service and control, powerful engines of authority have to be set in motion. To prevent them running amok there must be constant control, both political and legal. Ultimately the political control rests with parliament, though in reality much power is in the hands of ministers and officials. The legal control is the task of the courts of law.

Professor Rowat has probably summarized the need for a Canadian ombudsman in a more concise way than anyone who has yet written about it in Canada. He says there are basically six reasons why an ombudsman is required at the present time. First, administration procedure in Canada is not adequately regulated to uniformly guarantee the basic civil liberties of our citizens, neither federally nor provincially. Second, Canada's appeal system is very limited; rarely is there proper provision for appeal, which is in marked contrast with most of the countries of western Europe. There are exceptions, such as the tax appeal board; but this is the exception rather than the rule. Third, the opportunity for the courts to review administrative decisions is inadequate in Canada. The procedure to bring a case before the courts is complicated, slow and costly. Fourth, parliament is limited in the extent to which it can control administration from the citizen's point of view. Parliament is by tradition partisan, and besides this the provision for members of parliament to protect or represent the rights of the citizens is entirely inadequate.

Probably one of the outstanding examples of this relates to a member of this house and one of his constituents by the name of Gordon Knott, who had been discharged without explanation from the navy. All of us here remember this case. Through much work by that member of parliament it was discovered that this man had been dismissed because his uncle was supposed to be a communist, but when a check was made it was found that this communist, so-called, uncle was not even a relative of this young lad and that he had been discharged by reason of an alleged fact which in truth did not exist at all. Had there been an ombudsman at that time it would have been possible for this young man to have had much earlier and effective justice. The reason for such situations arising is simply that in many cases members of parliament are not able to discharge this type of responsibility in the way that is necessary, and as it could be done if we had an ombudsman.

The fifth point that Professor Rowatt makes is that provision for legal aid to those who may need the assistance of the courts is very poor in Canada and that most democratic countries are far ahead of our country in this regard. The sixth point he makes is that psychologically it is most important for our citizens to know that they have protection from bureaucratic injustices and error. In this way a parliamentary commissioner or ombudsman comes to be regarded as the defender of the civil rights of individuals.

In this regard the New Zealand ombudsman, Sir Guy Powles, told me last September that his actual presence had done much to influence and temper the attitude with which bureaucrats dealt with John Doe, citizen. In fact, he thought this was his most important single function. We find that the demand for an ombudsman is general throughout our entire country, and the demand becomes even greater as the effectiveness of such offices already in existence continues to be proved.

In a recent Canadian Press dispatch we find a report on the first year of operations of the ombudsman in New Zealand. The article summarizes the operations as follows:

> After a year of operation, the office of ombudsman in New Zealand is widely held to have proved itself justified—
>
> The government is so satisfied with the first year's experience that it is reviewing the legislation on the subject with a view to extending the ombudsman's powers. The ombudsman himself, Sir Guy Powles, maintains that his inquiries have vindicated the public service against charges often made against it. "There have been mistakes, carelessness, delay, rigidity, and perhaps heartlessness, but nothing really sinful," he says. He had found no evidence of corruption or moral obliquity.
>
> During the year, 776 complaints were submitted to the ombudsman. Many were outside his jurisdiction because he does not operate where normal grounds of appeal remain and he hasn't got powers to inquire into the activities of local bodies or other semi-public organizations.
>
> After investigation, 54 complaints were held to have been justified. About half of these were immediately rectified by the departments or agencies concerned as soon as the matters were brought to their notice.
>
> Anybody can make a complaint to the ombudsman simply by forwarding a fee of £1 and written submissions. There are no formal rules or elaborate forms. Initial investigations are made simply on the case made out by people in their own words.

All the statements made in this Canadian Press report are borne out in the first annual report which the New Zealand ombudsman submitted to parliament there a few months ago. I would say that in Canada the demand for such a position has increased greatly during the last year. In fact, the Glassco royal commission recommended that such an office be established. The Alberta section of the Canadian Bar Association has submitted a very substantial report requesting that such an office be established in Alberta. Only last week in this house, on March 9, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) expressed himself as being in favour of such an office being established. Many newspaper editorials have also expressed support.

The evidence in support of the need of such an office is certainly becoming voluminous. I should like to put on the record another statement by Professor Donald Rowatt which I think sums up the situation rather well. I am again quoting from a reprint from The Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science where we find that Professor Rowatt says:

> Briefly stated, the argument for the ombudsman scheme derives from the fact that all democratic countries in the 20th century have experienced a shift from the laissez-faire to the positive state. The accompanying tremendous growth in the range and complexity of government activities has brought with it the need to grant increasing powers of discretion to the executive side of government; and as Dicey has warned us, "Wherever there is discretion, there is room for arbitrariness." It is quite possible nowadays for a citizen's rights to be accidentally crushed by the vast juggernaut of the government's administrative machine. In this age of the welfare state, thousands of administrative decisions are made each year by governments or their agencies, many of them by lowly officials; and if some of these decisions are arbitrary or unjustified, there is no easy way for the ordinary citizen to gain redress.

Thus as we consider this very important office which the bill proposes to establish I think that we in parliament have a very definite responsibility as the representatives of the people who put us here to make sure that their individual rights are safeguarded in every possible way. With this in mind I submit the bill to the house with the hope that it will receive favourable consideration and at the end of this brief period of debate may be referred to the appropriate committee for further study and consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chretien (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, may I, first of all, congratulate the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) for the excellent legislation he just submitted to the house.

The position of parliamentary commissioner, which in Swedish is called "ombudsman"—defender of the people—seems particularly appropriate at this time in the federal administration.

At present, there are 21 government departments, 40 crown corporations and several boards with which taxpayers often have to deal.

Undeniably, if a person sincerely feels that an administrative decision is unfair to him, he will be confused, will not know what to do and will lose the benefit of a right to which he is entitled. In view of the constant expansion of public powers in Canada over a number of years, laws are often arbitrarily administered at all levels of government. Sometimes, we, the elected representatives of the people, are unable to help our constituents claim their rights because we fail to break through the solidarity of various groups of officials.

The ordinary citizen, therefore, needs extra protection which he can no longer get from ordinary courts.

Furthermore, when the taxpayer does resort to judiciary procedures available to him, these are more likely to be too slow and surely too expensive. Some people feel that it is not necessary to provide the services of an ombudsman to citizens whose rights have been encroached upon by the government. They maintain that members of parliament are already providing this service to the electors, either when they take up complaints personally with the responsible minister or when they ask questions in the house in this connection.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, when the case of this young sailor, Gordon Knott, came up during the last session, I was particularly impressed by the unfair treatment which he had received as a result of administrative decisions which are sometimes too arbitrary.

We find out, time and again when discussing with some of our constituents who often have to deal with officials of important federal departments, that they run into arrogance and indifference, because those officials are often appointed for life and they do not care about the rights of the individual as long as they, the permanent civil servants, are right.

I must say that on several occasions, I was really put out when I met with rebuffs on behalf of my constituents.

I am convinced that a completely independent office should be set up so as to enable any citizen, in any constituency, to assert his claims and to obtain justice when he is wronged and even when he feels that an administrative decision encroaches upon his rights.

I should like once again to congratulate the sponsor of this bill, and I hope that it will be fully looked into in the near future so that we may enable our constituents to assert their claims before a proper organization in our country where government authority is ever expanding and where we have an ever increasing number of agencies. The present situation should also be corrected, because when a member of parliament submits the claims of his constituents, he often has to put up with the arrogance of officials who think we are only trying to protect our own interests.

I am convinced that the office of ombudsman is urgently needed, and I shall be very pleased to vote in favour of this motion when it is considered in committee.

[Text]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity of adding my support for the bill that has been presented by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson). I fully agree with the principle involved, and I think probably the majority of the members of this house do. The hon. member for Red Deer has advanced a number of cogent reasons for the necessity of instituting this office. There are one or two other additional ideas which I should like to present at this time.

I think everyone is familiar with the enormous growth of government, in all its administrative branches, which has spread into virtually every form of our existence during the last 25 years. The need for this office now has been pointed out particularly in another context—

[Translation]

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member who now has the floor but the French interpretation system does not seem to be operating properly. As I am interested in the debate, I would like to be able to follow the arguments of the hon. member on the matter under consideration at present.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will have the trouble seen to immediately. Perhaps the hon.

member might wait just a few seconds. The latest report is that things are now under control.

[Translation]

Mr. Frenette: The French interpreting system is now operating properly, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Nesbitt: I am glad to hear that, Your Honour.

One thing that is particularly important is the fact that at the moment if the ordinary citizen feels aggrieved by some administrative act of government, he or she does not know to whom to go. Reference was made to this fact in another debate by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), and I think his remarks in that regard are worthy of attention. In large metropolitan areas such as Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver, this government has a number of offices to which a person can go, not necessarily with regard to complaints, but to secure information. In the smaller cities and rural areas, the only person to whom a citizen can turn is the member of parliament. The citizen often tries to find out from a member how to do certain things such as fill forms for old age pensions, and the like.

However, when it comes to a complaint, about which we are particularly concerned at this time, even in the metropolitan areas there is no one to whom the ordinary citizens can go except the member of parliament. After the member of parliament gets the complaints, he can go to the government offices in Ottawa and ask for redress. There may or may not be redress depending upon the caprice or whim, in most cases, of a senior civil servant or the minister concerned, if the minister has any discretion at all. Many of our regulations are so rigid that there is no discretion. I know it can be argued that it is not wise to give a minister or deputy minister too much discretion because it might be exercised in a political way. I would agree that there is some merit in that argument. On the other hand, if no discretion at all is granted, citizens of our country are often exposed to all sorts of arbitrary, heartless and even thoughtless penalties which are not necessary.

As has been pointed out, other countries have introduced remedies for this situation. I refer to countries like the Scandinavian countries and New Zealand. I think it would be an excellent thing if this institution were brought into effect in Canada.

Another thing which I feel is important is the fact that since the only avenue for any redress of an administrative wrong is a member of parliament, this certainly interferes with the duties of a member of parliament. As I understand it, a member of parliament was never intended to be a sort of service club, welfare officer and the like. This is what a member of parliament has become because citizens have no other way of bringing their complaints to the foot of the throne, so to speak. Perhaps one of the reasons for a great deal of criticism of the parliamentary system in the last few years is the fact that about 40 per cent of a member's time is taken up in dealing with individual problems and grievances. I have spoken to many of my colleagues and I know they spend a great deal of time doing this work because there is no other person to do it. As a result, a member is severely restricted in using time which should be properly spent on legislative matters, and other matters which are really the proper concern of a member of parliament.

I feel that many members of parliament do not get the proper amount of time to do some of our homework for committees and in many other fields, which is our proper function. This office of ombudsman or commissioner, whatever you might want to call it, would be a great help to the institution of parliament.

I do not want to take up too much time as I know others wish to speak on this subject, but in conclusion I want to give an example of the type of arbitrary behaviour which can take place and which I am sure an ombudsman would remedy. I referred to this example previously, and I think it is a particularly good one.

In my city of Woodstock, Ontario, an elderly lady fell down the post office steps and injured herself. A representative of the department concerned, the Department of Public Works, came to her and admitted the steps were slippery. He told her to sign a paper and that she would receive consideration for her complaint. She signed the paper in good faith, believing she would receive redress of some sort.

When I brought up the matter with the department we were told, in a very cold letter, that since the lady had not properly laid her complaint within seven days with the Attorney General of Canada she was out of luck. This is a good example of where an official at a fairly low level in a department enticed somebody into signing a statement which barred that person from further complaint, and I believe this is one of the things which an ombudsman could help redress. I hope every consideration will be given by the government to instituting a measure of this kind, either now or some time in the immediate future.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party are in agreement with the principle of the bill. At our party convention in Regina last summer we adopted a resolution along these lines, and I would remind the house that the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) has a resolution dealing with the same subject on the order paper, and which will come up for discussion later this session.

It is almost trite to say that the government has become very big, but this is necessary in a complex society. Not only has the government become big, but private companies and corporations have also grown very large. We sometimes hear the words "bureaucracy" and "bureaucrat" used in a derogatory sense, but this is something we cannot get away from, because the complex society in which we live demands this bigness.

A bill similar to this one was introduced by a private member in the British Columbia legislature but was rejected. I noted that when the attorney general of British Columbia spoke on that bill he said no ombudsman was necessary in the province because every elected member of the legislature was an ombudsman. But quite apart from the problem created by the lapse of time, such as was mentioned by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), other problems arise. For example, in the British Columbia legislature they do not have an oral question period on orders of the day. That method of questioning ministers is not open to the members, and further, the ministers quite frequently do not answer the questions which are placed on the order paper. This can happen here also. We do have the opportunity to put questions on the order paper but ministers are not required to answer and many of them die on the order paper at the end of the session. Therefore there are certain obstacles to the effectiveness of members of this house or members of a provincial legislature acting as ombudsmen.

I think we all sympathize with the points of view put forward by the hon. member for Oxford, but I imagine that even if we had two or three ombudsmen we, as private members, should still get letters of complaint and would have to spend a certain amount of time dealing with the complaints in them.

A few cases have come to my attention which I think show the need for an ombudsman, or someone with special powers, to investigate government departments. One constituent of mine has a complaint which goes back over seven years. There is only a matter of some $70 involved, but his feeling of injustice is so great that he refuses to give up his efforts to seek redress.

When this man was on a visit in the United States he called the office of the Canadian consul and made an inquiry regarding the entry of a certain item free of duty into Canada. He was informed it could be brought in free of duty and acted accordingly, but when he arrived at the border crossing point he was told it was not duty free and he had to pay about $70. Since he did what he considered was the right thing in calling the representative of the Canadian government, and in acting on the answer he got, he feels very strongly about the matter.

During the past six or seven years he has written to the successive ministers of national revenue and ministers of justice, but all to no avail. I have tried to help him all I can, and I think it is a very bad thing that this citizen carries this strong feeling of injustice, because he is absolutely certain he did the right thing.

It seems to me that a person who would be a parliamentary commissioner or an ombudsman would have to have some special powers. In the case I have mentioned, the customs official at the border was acting within the law. The item was not free of customs duty and the official was required to collect the duty, but the fact is that the Canadian representative in the United States gave the wrong information. I think that a parliamentary commissioner ought to be able to make an order stipulating that the amount of money involved should be refunded, if he is satisfied that the citizen in question has made a good case.

If this bill is not adopted today, and there is always that danger during this hour, there will be an opportunity later this session to discuss the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Port Arthur. I hope the government will take into account the growing demands throughout the country for the provision of such an office. It has been mentioned by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) that the office of ombudsman is working satisfactorily in Sweden and New Zealand. He also mentioned that Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia are discussing the creation of such an office. I hope all provinces will, and especially the province of British Columbia where, with the government we have there, we would need about six ombudsmen.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr.

Benidickson) that the subject matter of this bill be referred to the special committee on procedure.

Mr. Fisher: Since there is a resolution on the order paper dealing with the same subject, and since he has made this motion, it seems almost superfluous for me to keep that resolution on the order paper. Would he also consider having that resolution sent to the committee, since it covers the very same thing?

Mr. McNaught: I may point out Mr. Speaker, that there is a distinction between the resolution and the bill. It is possible to refer the subject matter of a bill to a special committee, but it is not within the rules to refer the resolution.

Mr. Churchill: I understand the minister has moved that the subject matter of this bill be referred to the committee on procedure. Is this the committee of the house on rules and procedure?

Mr. Walker: The special committee.

Mr. Churchill: Well I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether this is the type of subject matter that that special committee should be considering. What has this particular bill to do with the rules of procedure of the House of Commons? This has to do with the setting up of an official to investigate complaints which may originate from all quarters of Canada. It has no relationship whatever to the conduct of business within this chamber. If the committee diverts its attention to a subject as comprehensive as this, it will not have time to deal with the matters which we, as members of the House of Commons, thought the committee was going to deal with, namely the rules and procedure of this house. Having had experience over a number of years as a member of similar special committees I can say it is a heavy task, indeed, that the special committee has undertaken. If that committee is to revise the rules of the house and present its findings for consideration, it will have no time at all to deal with the subject of an ombudsman; or members of the committee could easily give their attention to that matter rather than to their prime task.

So the minister's proposal amounts, in effect, to one of two things. It is either, in an indirect way, giving a six months hoist to a private member's bill or it is saddling the committee on rules and procedure with a subject with which it has no concern whatsoever. For these reasons I think it would be far better if the minister were to withdraw his motion. Otherwise—I see it is only seven minutes to six—I believe I could think up other things to say about it, and we could postpone consideration of the motion.

Office of Parliamentary Commissioner

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Speaker, perhaps at this point—

Mr. Churchill: Is the hon. member raising a point of order?

Mr. Thompson: I thought the hon. gentleman was sitting down.

Mr. Churchill: Oh no, I have the floor. If I sat down the hon. member would be speaking again, and I do not want to listen to him any more. Besides, you would be closing the debate on this subject.

Mr. Prittie: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I am not sure if it is one or not. I do not intend to hold the floor. If the objection raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) is valid at all, may I ask whether the minister might consider sending this subject to some other committee, possibly the committee on privileges and elections? I do not want to see the motion talked out when there seems to be a good opportunity for an investigation of the bill.

An hon. Member: Privileges and elections.

Mr. MacNaught: I would have really no objection to referring the subject matter of this bill to the committee on privileges and elections if that would meet the objection raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Churchill: We could give unanimous consent to the minister withdrawing his motion and presenting another.

Mr. Lambert: Might I interject merely to say that I doubt whether there is power to refer this matter to Mr. Speaker's committee on procedure, because that is a special committee which is bound by specific terms of reference. On the other hand the standing committee on privileges and elections—and here I am subject to correction—is not bound by any specific terms of reference; it stands already by the rules. I share the opinion of my hon. friend that this question of an ombudsman is one with which the committee on privileges and elections would be better qualified to deal. In any case, I can assure hon. members that the committee on procedure has more on its plate, now, than it can readily handle.

Motion (Mr. MacNaught) withdrawn.

Mr. MacNaught: I move, seconded by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Benidickson):

That the subject matter of Bill No. C-7 be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for private members' business having expired, the house will now resume the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

PENSIONS

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CONTRIBUTORY PROGRAM

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure, to be known as the Canada pension plan, to establish a comprehensive program of old age pensions in Canada payable to contributors, and to provide, among other things, for the payment of retirement pensions beginning at any age between 65 and 70 years; for the payment of pensions to surviving spouses beginning at any age from 65 years; for the progressive establishment of full pensions over an initial period of 10 years; for the co-ordination of pensions payable under the Old Age Security Act with pensions payable under the Canada pension plan and for the payment of adjusted pensions under the Old Age Security Act beginning at any age from 65 years; and to provide further that all expenditures under the Canada pension plan, including costs of administration, shall be financed from contributions by employees, employers and self employed persons.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, at five o'clock I had barely commenced my remarks on this resolution but I had expressed my regret at the Prime Minister's not having acceded to my suggestion that a committee study the bill prior to its having second reading. I had also mentioned that I thought a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons would be an appropriate body to give the bill the necessary examination. I have done a great deal of reading on this matter over the last several days, some of which favoured the plan, some critical of it. I have reread the speech of the minister on July 18 last when she introduced the resolution which was supposed to herald the panacea of all pension legislation. It made very interesting reading. I expect the minister has learned that it is wise to make haste slowly.

We all remember, Mr. Chairman, the budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) last June. No one ever delivered a greater political diatribe than he did that night. Then last night, while all was not sweetness and light, there was some change in attitude. I am not going to get into a budget debate but I cannot help but recall how that previous effort fell completely apart. We shall have to see what happens to his latest effort. I am sure the hon. lady has taken a leaf out of the book of the Minister of Finance but gone one step further. On July 18 last she went out of her way to insinuate all sorts of political motives to the opposition, just as had the Minister of Finance. I suggest that the minister reread her speech of that date. Probably she has done so very recently.

Miss LaMarsh: I read it every morning.

Mr. Monteith: It shows how vulnerable, Mr. Chairman, one can be when he or she undertakes to be the know-all and end-all on any subject, let alone a subject as complex as pensions. Today, Mr. Chairman, the minister has shown complete control and presented her statement in a quiet and sober manner, for which I congratulate her. However, I doubt whether this transformation can be permanent.

The minister, in the short space of less than eight months, has had to take back so much of what she said on that previous occasion that it seems incomprehensible that she stand here today and expect the House of Commons and Canadians to accept her statements as anything approaching the last word on the subject. The minister's experience since undertaking the responsibilities of this portfolio has surely taught her to move less hurriedly and less blindly than in the past. Probably the most glaring example of her reversing of position is that the taxpayer is now paying something like $100 million more in income taxes per year to pay the $10 increase in old age security. This was supposed to be paid out of the Canada pension plan. And by the way, those elder citizens now receiving that extra $10 can thank the Leader of the Opposition for forcing the government to keep their election promises, and not delay as they would otherwise have done.

In her July 18 speech the minister intimated several times that action which we had taken in this field was for votes. I would say to her that the largest share of our social welfare legislation was brought in early in our regime and that we kept our election promises. I would also say to the hon. lady that if anyone has been vote conscious in any piece of legislation which has been brought before this country, she deserves the highest marks. It is strange indeed, Mr. Chairman, how a speech can be made on a resolution such as that of the minister on July 18 last, and then such a different approach takes place so shortly thereafter. If she believed so strongly and was so convinced that she was right at that time, how in the world can she be so convinced that she is right now? We are having, Mr. Chairman, at least two chances at this legislation, which reminds me of the story of the man trying to jump a chasm in two jumps.

I have before me, Mr. Chairman, a speech prepared for delivery by Hon. Judy LaMarsh, Minister of National Health and Welfare, at a meeting of the Canadian pension conference in Toronto on Monday, September 30, 1963. I think this is a rather interesting document. As I recall, that was the day parliament reconvened after the summer recess, and the first item of business for discussion that day was the increase of the old age security by an amount of $10 per month. I believe that as a consequence the minister was detained in the house and was not able to be present herself; but I am assuming this was read to the meeting by the—

Mr. Munro: You are doing it now.

Mr. Monteith: I have not read anything yet. Be patient.

An hon. Member: What do you mean, "yet"?

Mr. Monteith: I think this was read to the meeting by the parliamentary secretary, or at least this is what I understand. This indicates how the government of the day was so confused at that time. This speech, which was read by the parliamentary secretary to that meeting on the evening of September 30, because of the enforced absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare due to her presence being required here in the house in regard to this particular piece of legislation, deals with the situation as it existed on July 18 last. This is not an up to date picture, as we have had presented to us today. On that very day parliament reconvened, and we undertook in this House of Commons to raise old age security by $10 per month and to pay for it by at least $100 million in extra taxes imposed upon the taxpayers of this country. I have said this shows how confused was the government, and I now suggest that they did not know at all where they were going. The present plan has apparently been constructed and devised entirely since this statement, at which time the minister was presumably in a position to give what she thought to be an authoritative statement on the situation which then existed. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this again demonstrates backtracking, backsliding, reversal and just not knowing where one is going in the first place.

I should like to review the actual resolution before us today. I shall read it, and read it slowly so we may analyse the full import of the actual words used:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure, to be known as the Canada pension plan, to establish a comprehensive program of old age pensions in Canada payable to contributors—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: We all agree with this. I think the government may well applaud, Mr. Chairman, because we all agree with it. The resolution continues:

> —and to provide, among other things, for the payment of retirement pensions beginning at any age between 65 and 70 years—

I am sure we all agree with this, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: It is very heartening, I might point out, to be applauded so heartily by those on the government benches. The resolution continues:

> —for the payment of pensions to surviving spouses beginning at any age from 65 years—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: That also, Mr. Chairman, we agree with, except that it does not go far enough and provide real survivor benefits or any disability coverage. I continue reading the resolution:

> —for the progressive establishment of full pensions over an initial period of ten years—

Yes, indeed:

> —for the co-ordination of pensions payable under the Old Age Security Act with pensions payable under the Canada pension plan—

I say yes, again:

> —and for the payment of adjusted pensions under the Old Age Security Act beginning at any age from 65 years—

I am sure we are all for that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: I go on:

> —and to provide further that all expenditures under the Canada pension plan, including costs of administration shall be financed from contributions by employees, employers and self employed persons.

That seems sound, Mr. Chairman, except the Prime Minister has said that all administrative costs would not be financed out of contributions, in the early stages. Who, or what party, could be against those provisions set forth in the resolution? They are all of admirable purpose. They agree, in part at least, with what we in this party have been trying to bring into being since 1962.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: They do not go as far as the Liberal election campaign propaganda claimed they would go. But then that does not seem to worry the government; nor does it mean that we should not support even this abbreviated version of what was promised us. I shall now read one or two sentences from the Liberal propaganda of the election campaign of 1962.

Mr. Balcer: Oh, spare us.

Mr. Monteith: I quote:

> People will be able to start drawing a contributory pension at age 65 if they wish. There will be benefits for disabled people, widows and orphans.

We know that last sentence was a complete fabrication of the imagination. We tried in 1962—as promised in the speech from the throne—to obtain the consent of the provinces for that very purpose, and we failed when Quebec did not give that consent. An amendment to the constitution is required for this purpose. The government knows it now, and knew it then, but held out this promise of action. There are no survivor benefits in this plan, in the real meaning of the term; we know that. Nor are there benefits for disabled people, widows and orphans. I should like to read another section of the Liberal campaign literature, which is as follows:

> The Liberal plan will add a contributory pension to the existing old age pension. The addition will be paid for entirely by contributions, not by taxes.

We know what has happened, as I mentioned earlier. Only by being forced by the opposition to give this extra $10 to old age pensioners did it ever come into force; otherwise it would not yet be in force.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: Despite a promise not to increase taxes, this was done. Mr. Chairman, I have here a full page advertisement which appeared in the Daily Colonist of Victoria, British Columbia, of March 31, 1963. Obviously the Liberals had a great deal of money for election purposes. Here it is. I should like to refer to the section headed "Pensions". How misleading this all is. It is utter misrepresentation. I am not going to read it all, but there is a long paragraph concerning the amounts of pension to be paid. We now know how misleading this paragraph was because the amounts have all been changed. Incidentally, I think it should be pointed out that this government has been waffling all over the place in many respects, and I am just wondering if even now they have made up their minds.

It will be recalled, and it is set out in this advertisement, that the maximum earnings to be covered by pension were to be $6,000 a year. Then last July 18 they said the maximum was to be $4,000 a year and now we understand that the maximum earnings to be covered will be $4,500 a year.

Here again we have it pointed out that this scheme is supposed to provide pensions for the disabled and for widows and orphans. How completely misleading. We were given to understand that assistance was to be available to single women and widows at age 60. It says so here in the advertisement. Certainly there is no mention of that in the press release by the Prime Minister.

I note also that the Liberals promised to increase old age assistance to $75 a month and to increase disabled and blind pensions to $75 a month. You know quite well, Mr. Chairman, that these things were not brought into legislation until the government was forced to do so by all opposition parties last autumn. Then, of course, those particular increases came into effect two months after old age security payments had been increased. The disabled, the blind and the aged were forced to forgo increased pensions for two months because of the dilatory action of the government.

In the 1963 campaign pamphlet we find more of the same thing. I am not going to go into detail, except to say that the Madison avenue approach of hoodwinking the people has been adopted by the government, and the people of Canada have been misled by this kind of misrepresentation.

Particularly due to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare intimated in her speech of July 18 last that the Conservative party when in office had done very little so far as social security is concerned for the people of this country, I want to put a few things on the record. Let us see what the situation was when we came into office in 1957.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Monteith: I know you do not want to hear it.

An hon. Member: Keep reading.

Mr. Monteith: Perhaps the hon. member for Rosedale could sit and listen for a change.

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Chairman, I am waiting for the hon. member to say something, for a change.

Mr. Monteith: I repeat, let us see what the situation was when we came into office in 1957. The previous government had had a succession of surpluses, and only as election bait in the budget of 1957 did they bring in an increase of $6 a month in old age security payments.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Monteith: Let me repeat. In all those years of surpluses they did not care two hoots for the welfare of the common man or the aged, who were forced to get along on $40 a month.

An hon. Member: What has this got to do with contributory pensions?

Mr. Monteith: As I said before, in 1957 they held out as election bait an increase of $6 per month in old age security, effective July 1 or after the date of the election. It was a straight bribe to the old people.

Mr. Winkler: A real Grit trick.

Mr. Monteith: But I should like to point out that in the almost six years we were in office we actually legislated for an increase of $19 per month, and it was only as a result of our insistence that the $10 increase of last October 1 was forthcoming.

An hon. Member: This is the thirtieth time you have said that tonight.

Mr. Monteith: We know that the minister in her speech to the house last July 18 said that the $10 increase, which the Liberals had promised during the last election would go into effect immediately, would not be put into force until early 1964. Again I repeat that we forced this increase, and can take the responsibility or credit for the total amount of the increase in these pensions, ever since they were at the level of $46 a month.

For the information of the present government, who have been promising so much and doing so little, I think that a few of our other accomplishments in the welfare field should be mentioned. I have here a booklet entitled "Social Security for Canada", which is a policy statement adopted at the annual meeting of the Canadian welfare council, June 2, 1958. This is a very comprehensive booklet and while not all the things suggested in it were possible I should like to mention just a few of the matters to which we gave consideration. For instance, recommendation No. 2 reads as follows:

> Consideration should be given to arrangements which would enable certain classes of people in the 65-69 age group to qualify for the old age security pension.

This was considered by us and embodied in our plan for which we failed to secure agreement from all the provinces.

An hon. Member: Is that the reason why you did not bring it in?

Mr. Monteith: When we first came into power we were cognizant of the need for study in regard to old age security and contributory pensions. Consequently, Mr. Chairman, we appointed Dr. Robert Clark of the University of British Columbia to make a study for us of the old age and survivors insurance program in the United States.

The Chairman: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member but his time has expired unless he has unanimous consent to continue. Is it agreed that the hon. member has unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Read on.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I should like to suggest that if the first speaker for each of the parties were allowed extra time we might be able to confine ourselves to one speaker for each party.

Mr. Monteith: I should like to thank the house for its courtesy in allowing me extra time. I had just mentioned that we appointed Dr. Robert Clark of the University of British Columbia to prepare a study for us on the old age and survivors insurance program in the United States. This he did.

After many meetings of the interdepartmental committee of officials, we were prepared to present our contributory plan for all Canadians. It was then we applied to the provinces for an amendment to the British North America Act, which would permit us to provide survivorship and disability pensions. As the house knows, this was refused by the province of Quebec.

There are other departments in the health and welfare field about which our government, when in power, saw fit to do something, so that there would be a semblance of social justice for the people of Canada. The hon. member for Greenwood has been questioning the minister as to whether or not the present government would consider increasing grants for hospital bed construction. We doubled those grants back at the beginning of 1958, realizing that the previous government had refused to face the fact that construction costs had increased so greatly since these grants were first brought into being in 1949. This was only one item.

Another discrepancy in the legislation at that time was the fact that unemployment assistance could only be paid to provinces who signed agreements with Canada, and then only if .45 per cent of the population of the province was unemployed. We rectified this early in 1958 so that the federal government would share 50 per cent of all unemployment assistance benefits paid by the provinces, without any ceiling on the number of unemployed. This actual expenditure by the federal government on behalf of the citizens of Canada has increased from something like $8 million when we came into office to an estimated amount for this current year of $110 million. It should be mentioned that this category of payment includes 50 per cent of any supplementary payment by a province over and above the regular old age security or other welfare payments.

An hon. Member: What about the pension plan?

Mr. Monteith: I think it should be pointed out—

Mr. Starr: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if the hon. member for Perth would excuse me for a moment? My point of order is this: When the Minister of National Health and Welfare read her statement we listened attentively and courteously. Now, the hon. member for Perth is making a statement on behalf of the official opposition and I think the same courtesy should be extended to him by the arrogant members of this arrogant government.

An hon. Member: What about the arrogance displayed by the members of the opposition?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I think it should be pointed out—

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Monteith: I think it should be pointed out that prior to our amendments some five provinces had had agreements with the federal government. After this legislation was amended all provinces signed agreements with the federal government.

I am going to mention hospital insurance, which is certainly one of the most important pieces of legislation ever brought into being in this country. I feel it should be mentioned. During the first year we were in office, that is until March 31, 1958, there were no expenditures for hospital insurance. Last year, according to the white paper issued by the Minister of Finance there was an expenditure of $390 million in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Monteith: We all know, Mr. Chairman, what a boon this has been to the people of Canada. Nobody can dispute this. Let us not hear it said, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare did on July 18 last, that the previous government had done nothing toward benefiting the people of Canada by way of social justice. We admit that the law was put on the statute books by a Liberal government, but under pressure from the premier of Ontario, Mr. Frost. They must, in turn, admit that the law could not be effective until an amendment permitting any province to join in the scheme was passed. Following that, we signed an agreement with all ten provinces and the two territories.

[Mr. Monteith.]

There were, Mr. Chairman, many other things, such as a welfare grants program which I had the honour of presenting to this house. I happen to know how much these grants were appreciated by the people in the field. This move had been recommended by the Canadian Welfare Council. As we all know, the funds available were to start at $500,000 a year and increase by a like amount annually until a total of $2.5 million had been reached. I would point out that the Hall royal commission on health needs was instituted by the previous government, consequent on the realization that there were some inadequacies and we wished to find out what they were. This, again, was a course of action dictated by Conservative principles and philosophy. We did want to know just what the situation was across Canada before action was taken, and as a consequence we asked this royal commission to make a very comprehensive study of the whole field. We are told that the commission is to report soon, and we are looking forward with great anticipation to its findings.

There are so many other fields in which the government of which I had the honour to be a member took positive steps. There was the $5 million annual grant for fitness and amateur sports. Then there were increases and adjustments for war veterans pensions and allowances. There were the steps taken by the minister of labour. There were so many, in fact that I could not enumerate them all here.

Mr. Haidasz: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I believe that when the house granted the hon. member for Perth the courtesy of speaking beyond the 30 minute limit, we extended that courtesy to him subject to his remarks being germane to the resolution and not straying as much as he has.

Mr. Churchill: In so far as the point of order is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I would refer you to rule 31. You will observe that a minister moving a government order and a member speaking in reply immediately after such minister is not limited as to time.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: I would refer the hon. member to standing order 59 (3).

Mr. Knowles: I was just going to say, Mr. Chairman, that I am surprised the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has not read the whole of standing order 31. Had he done so, he would have seen it does not apply to the committee stage.

An hon. Member: Why not sit down and read the whole of the book for a change?

Mr. Monteith: I would only put one question to the house. I am wondering upon what authority the present member for Parkdale speaks on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare? I understood, and I am subject to correction, that there had possibly been a falling out somewhere along the line.

In order to emphasize the general outlook of the Conservative party, I would recommend as excellent reading a book entitled "The Conservative in Canada" written by Mr. George Hogan. In the portion to which I specifically refer, he has been writing about Conservative philosophy on social welfare and what it implies. I quote from page 98 of this book:

> It may be said that the Diefenbaker government's record of expanding social services coupled with recurring budget deficits contradicts everything I have just said.
>
> I would dispute this on two grounds. First of all, this government, as its opponents never tired of pointing out, was faced through most of its first term of office with a condition of economic recession. This recession had already started when the Conservatives came to power, and in line with the concepts we have been discussing, they deliberately budgeted for deficits in order to counteract it.

The author goes on to say:

> The two remaining fields where the contributory principle might be applied are old age pensions and health services.

I am quoting, now, from page 101 of this book which I think it would do hon. members opposite a great deal of good to peruse.

> The Diefenbaker government announced in the speech from the throne of January 1962 its intention to implement a contributory old age pension plan. The introduction of this plan depends upon certain constitutional arrangements with the provinces.

The present government knew all about this when they were advertising their election campaigns of 1962 and 1963. Here is another interesting quotation:

> The objective, as we have said, is simply to meet the need; to make it possible for every Canadian to have a satisfactory pension plan if he wants one. The proposed plan of the Diefenbaker government meets this need. It would be, in the first place, voluntary. No one will be forced to join it. In the second place, to quote from the speech from the throne, it "will take into account private pension arrangements". In other words, as Mr. Diefenbaker said, it "should not require additional contributions by those already contributing under satisfactory private arrangements." This proposal offers us as clear an example as we shall see of the essential difference between socialism and Conservative social justice.

Mr. Chairman, the philosophy of the Progressive Conservative party in this whole field is that we must care for those who cannot look after themselves. The action of Quebec in refusing permission for an amendment of the British North America Act was a body blow to our pension scheme. I am told the same old Liberal propaganda and rumour mongering is going on, now. I am given to understand on very good authority that the whispering of an election campaign is on and that people are being told that the Conservative party is against contributory pensions. Yes, it is the old story. It has been done before by the party opposite. Even some sections of the press, I believe, are falling for this type of information. It is the same old story. I recall being told in 1953 when I was first campaigning in my home constituency of Perth—the Liberals had been in power for 18 years—that they were spreading rumours to this effect: Elect Monteith and you will lose your old age pensions and family allowances. What utter rot.

Mr. Nowlan: The same in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Monteith: I understand it is not permissible to read from previous debates in this house in the same session, but it is obvious that even the Prime Minister is not above trying to mislead the people of Canada. As will be borne out by reading page 55 of Hansard of this year, the right hon. gentleman did his best to leave the impression with the people of Canada that the Conservative party was against this plan. That is an absolute falsehood. Fortunately, the Leader of the Opposition was in his place in the house and was in a position to rise and refute such a statement. I simply repeat that the government to which I had the privilege of belonging did more in less than six years of office by way of bringing social benefits to Canadians than had probably been accomplished in 50 years of Canadian history. That is true. I suggest anyone interested should make a comparison of the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare for the year 1956-57, which was the last year in power for the Liberal government of that day, with the estimates of 1963-64, the last year for which we prepared estimates. The public will see that an increase of at least 100 per cent took place in that period.

I have read in detail the Prime Minister's press release of January 20, 1964, the letter to him from the premier of Ontario on February 13 and, in turn, the Prime Minister's last letter dated February 25. As I said at the beginning of my speech, I do not believe this is the time to go into all the details of the plan. There are so many questions to be answered. I believe we should get the bill before us, and we should like to see this done as soon as possible.

An hon. Member: Well, sit down.

Mr. Monteith: I must say, I am receiving a really courteous reception from across the way. It is typical of the old line Grit government of 1956.

Mr. Pigeon: Same old gang.

An hon. Member: Same old bull.

Mr. Monteith: We are all keenly interested in the subject of pensions and should be as well versed in it as possible. I suggest to all those members opposite who are interrupting that they would be spending their time to much better advantage if they would do a little reading on the subject. I recommend that they secure a copy of "Pensions in Canada". This is a CCH Canadian publication compiled by Laurence E. Coward. There are many worthwhile contributions in this book, including one by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh). Read it. When you read it you will observe—and it is perfectly obvious—that her paper was written prior to the new plans being presented to us, and I am just wondering whether eventually there will not be more deviation with still another version.

To paraphrase what the right hon. Leader of the Opposition said on July 18 last, when he was replying to the minister of health upon the presentation of that previous ill-fated resolution, even this present resolution is only in general terms. It is far from clear, it is window dressing and it demonstrates hopes only for some ten years hence. As I said before, we are in favour of contributory pensions to the most Canadians possible, pensions which carry with them the most benefits possible. If, however, we felt that this was the time to press for definite answers there are so many questions we should like to ask. For instance, how can this plan be considered an all-Canadian pension plan representing one Canada when roughly one third of the population has already opted out? To me a Canada pension plan should be all-comprehensive and cover all of Canada, not just certain segments.

Another question which I fail to see has been properly answered is this. Why has the government chosen to accept with such alacrity the refusal of Quebec to join the pension plan, at the same time putting the onus for any possible failure of the plan on Ontario in case Ontario should decide not to enter? I am not putting forth Ontario's case at this time but I should like to ask the minister whether she or the government really put up a good and persuasive case to the province of Quebec as to why they should join with other provinces and thereby make this a comprehensive scheme for one Canada. Then, Mr. Chairman, what is going to happen to many of the fine pension plans now in force? These are questions on which I could press for an answer at some other date.

[Mr. Monteith.]

Where does the individual get off in this situation? The Prime Minister has said in his press release of January 20 that some of the better existing plans would require fairly early adjustment. Just how are these going to be adjusted? Obviously any adjustment is downward. One of the best pension plans in Canada is that of the federal civil service. Where does this leave the civil service? Are civil servants in all spheres of government going to be unduly affected? What will happen to the Ontario hydro-electric plan, the C.N.R. pension plan, teachers' plans, banks' plans, universities and so on? Many excellent pensions for employees have been developed only after protracted management-labour negotiations. What is going to be the effect on them? Just what actuarial compilations have led the government, first, to come up with their scheme of July 18 last, and now to change to the present one? I ask this because other actuaries apparently differ. Has the minister of health, like the Minister of Finance, now decided not to bring in outside experts to advise with regard to the pension plan, as, I understand she did originally? Mr. Chairman, I repeat that if I were going to press for answers today these are some of the matters about which we would want to know. However, I say again let us see the bill and at that time we will give it the necessary close examination.

There have been newspaper conjectures concerning what is going to happen in Quebec city at the federal-provincial conference starting in Quebec on March 31. The government probably knows by now what its approach to the provinces is going to be. It was obvious after last night's budget that there is going to be a cold shoulder put to the provinces concerning any further financial easement for them. What is going to be the position concerning the Canada pension plan? Is the government going to that conference with its mind made up that if everything does not go according to their wishes they will call an election? This has been intimated more than once. May I suggest, sir, that an attitude of conciliation would be much more beneficial to all the people of Canada. Surely the greatest step toward unity in Canada would be to stress to Quebec the importance of this being a comprehensive one-Canada pension plan, and I plead with the government to do this.

Let me close my remarks, Mr. Chairman, by repeating what I said at the beginning. I want to impress on this house and the country that the Progressive Conservative party is 100 per cent behind a Canada pension plan. There are simply no qualifications. Let me make it abundantly clear that we wish to see a comprehensive contributory pension plan brought in at the earliest opportunity. We want to see the bill and we want to see it at once.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, eight months ago tomorrow we took the first step in connection with the matter we are discussing tonight. It was on July 18 of last year that we debated a resolution similar to the one now before us. I expressed the view on that occasion that when we get upon our statute books legislation of the kind we are now discussing we will have taken one of the most important steps in the history of Canadian social legislation. I will make it clear as I go along that there are some aspects of the plan now before us which are inadequate, but in principle what we have before us is the proposal that we move into a new stage with respect to security in old age. Therefore, we support this measure.

Many years ago the idea was started that the government should do something about old age. Then a number of years ago we moved on and established the principle of universality when we provided for pensions under the Old Age Security Act to be payable to everyone at age 70, without a means test. But we still have to take the all important step of putting pensions for old age on a basis that will make those pensions adequate for retirement with dignity and security. We will not achieve that, Mr. Chairman, until we have, on top of a flat rate benefit, an earnings-related program. In principle that is what the Canada pension plan proposes; that is why we are in support of the Canada pension plan and want to see it enacted at the earliest possible date.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I have referred briefly to the debate of eight months ago tomorrow. Most of us must recall it. Some things have changed; some things have not. I made some notes during the supper hour, Mr. Chairman, as to what I might say when opening my remarks. When a speaker is third in line he should not make notes, because things change as you go along. However, one of the notes I made was to take this opportunity of congratulating the Minister of National Health and Welfare on her speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I do so quite gladly. Last July I had to chide her for the terrible partisan note that she imported into her speech on that occasion. But today it was not there. Today she presented the facts of the case and did it well. I congratulate her on the speech she made this afternoon. I also want to express my warmest congratulations to those in the minister's department who prepared the white paper which the minister tabled this afternoon and which will be an appendix to today's Hansard. I regarded the white paper which was tabled last July as a very useful document. I believe the white paper that has been tabled today is an even more useful one. It gives more details than the white paper gave last time; and I suggest to those who are honestly desirous of knowing what is in the Canada pension plan, as well as to the critics who say they want information about it, that they read and study the white paper. I would even offer this suggestion to the hon. member for Perth, that he include in his reading the white paper that we have had since five o'clock this afternoon. In any case, Mr. Chairman, I welcome the tabling of the white paper. I hope it will receive very wide distribution, for it does answer many of the questions the hon. member for Perth asked tonight and it answers many of the questions that people are putting to us about the Canada pension plan.

There are other questions that we will have to discuss either in committee of the whole house or in the special committee to which the bill will be referred; but I suggest, in all fairness, that we have been given a good deal of information about this proposed piece of legislation. In fact, I suggest that when one realizes that generally we do not get the details that are in a bill until we get the bill itself, on this occasion we have been given a good deal of information in advance.

Another note that I put down on paper during the supper hour was to congratulate the hon. member for Perth. That, of course, was on the basis of what he said during the five minutes in which he spoke between five minutes to five and five o'clock. Most of the members who are here now were here then, and I am sure all will agree with me that we welcomed and were heartened by the tone of his remarks. He made it clear that the members of the Conservative party were 100 per cent behind a Canada pension plan. He said there were no ifs or buts about it. He said there had been enough discussion and that the Conservatives felt there need not be endless debate on the resolution, but we could get the resolution through and thus get the bill introduced without delay. I was greatly encouraged by that. It has been my fear for some time that the way this session has been going we would not get this resolution through, that we would not get the bill before Easter, and that this would jeopardize the future progress of the plan. From what the hon. member for Perth said between five minutes to five and five o'clock I was encouraged to believe that we might get this resolution through tonight, and therefore get the bill, see it, know its details, and all of us in the house and the country would be that much better off.

The hon. member for Perth also said, between five minutes to five and five o'clock, that he regretted not being able at that moment to comment on the white paper which had just been tabled. He said he would have to study it during the supper hour. I wonder, Mr. Chairman, what he did during the supper hour, because he certainly did not come back tonight and discuss the white paper or the Canada pension plan. He changed his tune completely and decided to make the same kind of partisan speech that we have heard before on this issue; he gave us no constructive criticism of the plan itself.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What are you doing now?

Mr. Knowles: I submit that this is not good enough, coming from a former minister of national health and welfare, coming from one who is supposed to know something about this matter, from one who should be able to give us the benefit of his views about the subject that is actually before us, namely the Canada pension plan. I hope that as this debate proceeds, at this stage today, on second reading of the bill or in the special committee to which the bill will be referred, we will get down to the bill itself, to its details, and will give to it the benefit of the consideration we are supposed to give to it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few things about the Canada pension plan on the basis of the information we have been given. It will not come as a surprise if I divide what I want to say under two main headings. On the one hand I want to indicate the things about the plan that we think are good; then I want to indicate the things about the plan that we feel should be improved.

First of all, the aim of the Canada pension plan, despite the fact that the dollars it proposes as rates of pension in the next ten years or so are not really very magnanimous, are not really sufficient for the dignified living in old age that is referred to, is to provide pensions, not just on the basis of subsistence but on the basis of the idea that people on retirement should be able to live in accordance with the standard of living that has been achieved by that time. In the white paper that was tabled by the minister this afternoon there are a couple of sentences along this line that I think are worth underlining. On page 7 of the mimeographed copy of this white paper I find these words. Referring to the plan, it says:

> —it will provide a basic measure of "real security, because people will be assured of pensions that are related to general earnings levels at the time they retire, not to money incomes which have become out of date.

That, I suggest, is extremely important. For far too long pensions have been thought of as a subsistence amount, or as somehow related to what people were earning in their working years or back when they first started to work. But pensions, if they are to be worth while, must be related to the earnings levels at the time people retire. I would go further and say that even after people retire, as the earnings levels of the general community increase, so should pensions increase. But at any rate, the aim of the Canada pension plan is to put pensions on that basis. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, over on the next page of the mimeographed copy of the white paper the same thought appears again when it is said:

> —people...can be assured of pensions which will still provide a secure retirement in line with economic conditions at the time.

That, Mr. Chairman, is what must become our aim in the old age security field—not just a fixed sum of dollars that bears some relation to what was earned in the past, but a pension related to earnings at the time of retirement; a pension related to the economic conditions during the years in which people are retired. Because this Canada pension plan aims at that, because in principle its purpose is to provide pensions looking toward adequacy, looking toward people in retirement being able to enjoy the standard of living that is possible when they are retired, for these reasons the plan is good and deserves the support of all of us.

A slight improvement has been made in the version of the plan we have now, compared with the plan of last July, in that greater emphasis is placed upon possible retirement at age 65. I want to make it clear that the plan has not gone all the way, has not gone as far as we think it should go. We think the plan should make age 65 the normal retirement age and then if there is a desire to increase the rate of benefits for those who retire at a later age, let that be the exception. As I say, we think 65 should be the normal retirement age and that pension benefits should be geared to that age. However, I will give the minister and the government credit for having shifted the emphasis slightly. Last July it was a plan for retirement at age 70. This time it is still a plan for retirement at age 70 but there are increased inducements to people to retire at 65. In so far as the government has gone in pursuit of this goal, the plan is good.

May I emphasize again our acceptance, our welcome, of the fact that the Canada pension plan is a portable plan. It is not necessary to say that in the resolution or in the bill, but once it is a federal plan for Canadians the benefits of which they can draw wherever they live in Canada, that makes it portable, and on that basis it is welcome.

We also welcome the fact that the government has not yielded to the pleading that it lengthen the period before the plan becomes full grown, in other words that it has not extended the 10 year period. If it were to be extended, if it were to amend it so that 15 or 20 years would be required before the pension plan would pay the full benefit, it would not be of any use to a great many of our people at the present time, or in the years immediately ahead.

One other feature about the plan that we think should be recognized as a good one is that it is set up in such a way that the amount of pension under it can be increased. It is quite clear that the maximum earnings ceiling can be raised from time to time, and therefore the maximum benefit can be increased. It is also clear, if one reads the report of the actuaries on the previous plan, that through the years there can be increases in the basic flat rate old age security payment as well. In other words, both stages of the plan are capable of increases so far as amounts are concerned, and therefore once we get this plan under way and we get some of the kinks ironed out we can anticipate that the amount of the pension will increase through the years, and begin to move in the direction of what the white paper says, namely the day when all Canadians will be able to retire in security and with dignity.

I wish to make it clear, Mr. Chairman, that that is not possible under this plan with its present figures, and that it will not be possible even 10 years from now, because in the intervening 10 year period costs will have risen and so on. However, at least it establishes the principle upon which this can be done, and we think that all of the parties in the house, whether or not they like the government, should recognize those things about the plan that are good, and that therefore we should support it and do our best to get it into effect at the earliest possible date.

Those things that are good about the plan, and which have to be said about it after the speech of the hon. member who preceded me, should not blind us to the fact that there are certain shortcomings. In the first place, we in this party deplore as strongly as we can the action of the government in reducing the maximum possible benefit under this plan from $100 a month, as was the case last July, to $75 a month as is the case in the version of the bill that is now before us. We also deplore the fact that this decrease in the maximum possible benefit is accompanied by a slight increase in the maximum contribution that participants will be required to pay, from $40 up to $45 a year.

We feel that this is a case of giving in to the opponents of the plan, the insurance companies, the provinces that have objected to it and so on, and in our view we think the government is not keeping faith with the Canadian people. As has been pointed out several times, the government, and the Liberal party before it became the government, made certain proposals, all of them higher than are now before us. We know from various polls that have been taken how strong is the feeling amongst the Canadian people that we should have a federally operated government pension plan, and we suggest that to have cut this down, to have watered it down from a maximum of $100 a month to a maximum of $75 a month is not keeping faith with the Canadian people. We regret that that change was made and we hope that even yet the plan may be restored to what it was last July.

We also regret that the government has given in to the contention of the insurance companies, and some of the provinces, that the figure of last July was so high that it might incline some people to withdraw from private pension plans. Those words, by the way, are taken from the press release of the Prime Minister in January of this year. Then the Prime Minister went on to say:

> To meet this concern, the federal government is prepared to propose that the earnings-related pension be reduced from 30 to 20 per cent of pensionable earnings.

This concession was confirmed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare when she said that the government had taken into consideration the view that too high a pension might lessen the incentive to people to provide their own private pension plans. We think that this is unworthy of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, unworthy of a government that prides itself on having done something in the field of social legislation. To have yielded at all is bad enough, but to admit having yielded to that kind of argument, and to do it in black and white as the Prime Minister did, to do it as the Minister of National Health and Welfare did this afternoon, we think is reprehensible.

A third comment critical in nature that I should like to make about the plan and the manner in which it is presented is this. I do not think the government should keep on tying together the two amounts, the amount that a person will draw from old age security and the amount that person will draw from the Canada pension plan, and then say that such a person will get so much out of this legislation. The Minister of National Health and Welfare did that this afternoon. She gave an example of a person whose average income was $3,600 a year, and she said that at age 65, after contributing for 10 years, this person would draw a pension of $111, or that at age 70 he would draw a pension of $135.

This is true, Mr. Chairman, as to the total pension that such a person will draw under the provisions of two statutes; but in all honesty, in all fairness, I think the government, every time, should state these figures on a broken-down basis. The person who earns $3,600 a year, if he goes on pension at age 65, will draw $60 a month from the Canada pension plan and $51 a month from the old age security plan. But let it be clear that they are separate. Let it be clear that the $51 of old age security is paid for out of the 4 per cent personal income tax that all of us pay, as well as out of two other taxes, and that the $60 is what he gets from his contribution to the Canada pension plan. Let us keep this clear. Let the government be honest about this all the way.

The fourth comment I should like to make, in pointing out improvements that are needed, relates to the fact that the old age security pension will be available at ages below 70. We welcome this most strongly. We see this as part of the general idea of moving in the direction of 65 being the normal retirement age. We accept the proposition, and I am sure everyone does, that if a person chooses to take the old age security pension at age 65 at the rate of $51 a month, then that is the rate for the rest of his life. After all, it would not be fair to take that and then to try to go off the pension, and to come back later at a higher level. This is covered in the white paper.

However, Mr. Chairman, there is one proviso that I think should be entered, and it is this. After a person has taken old age security at the reduced rate I think it should be clear that if later on the level of old age security is raised from $75 to $85 or to $100—may I remind hon. members increases are envisaged in the report of the actuaries that we had last year—then such a person who has retired early and has taken his pension at a reduced rate should receive the same percentage of the increased pension that he was receiving when he took $51 out of $75.

We will be getting ourselves into many anomalies. We will be getting some situations that seem highly unjust, if we fix that pension for people at that figure, if we increase other people's pensions and then leave those who elected to take lower pension to stay there for the rest of their lives. We know it only takes a few years—five or ten years—for economic conditions, for wages, for costs to change and for the standard of living to change to such an extent that adjustments do have to be made. I urge, therefore, that consideration be given to putting it in the bill that the reduction of old age security will not be just an absolute amount in terms of dollars, or 40 cents per month, as the white paper says, but that it will be on a percentage basis so that those who take the lower pension will get the same percentage of a higher pension rate if later on the old age security pension goes up.

The next point I should like to make has to do with the self-employed, farmers and others. I welcome very strongly the fact that this white paper, the one tabled today, says a little more on this subject than did the white paper that was tabled on July 18 of last year and put in Hansard of July 19. On that occasion, all that was said was that it would be possible for self-employed people to come into the plan on a voluntary basis. However, no details were given. This white paper, the one we received today, not only says that it is possible for people who are self-employed to come in on a voluntary basis, but it gives a few details. It indicates, for example, not only that a self-employed person will pay 2 per cent, in other words the employee's 1 per cent and the employer's 1 per cent, but it also gives a formula showing that self-employed people who go into the plan will have their contribution rate protected up to a certain point over a certain number of years. This is all to the good, Mr. Chairman.

However, we believe that more steps should be taken by the government to see to it that the plan is universal. One gets into semantics here because he hesitates to use the word "compulsory". I was interested to note that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, when it presented its brief to the government a while ago, did not shy away from the word "compulsory", but expressed the view that it should be made compulsory. Let us use a less offensive word. Let us say it should be made universal.

There should be all the inducements that could possibly be put forth. There should be a distribution of all the public relations material possible. Let the people know what it is all about, so that our farmers and self-employed people and others will be in the plan, as well as those who are employed and whose contributions can be deducted from their wages by their employers. We think, Mr. Chairman, that, this is an exceedingly important feature of the plan. As I say, we see a slight improvement in today's white paper over the one we had last July on this question. We think still further improvement is needed in this respect.

I should like to say a word about the plan being funded. This, of course, is the source of a good deal of argument. One can argue both ways as to whether the plan should be funded or whether it should be on a pay as you go basis. I submit this is an area in which there is a great deal of hocus-pocus practised on the people, and that in the end any pension plan is actually a pay as you go proposition. I submit that what you have in connection with this plan is a development fund attached to a pension fund. Well, if that is what we want, let it be clear that is what we are doing. We do not think it is a good enough substitute for the Canada Development Corporation. We think that this is a case in which you are taxing the people, at the same time you are asking them to contribute to their pension, to build up a fund for development purposes, whereas that kind of fund should be built up more honestly, as was provided for by the Canada Development Corporation about which we heard so much last year. However, the Minister of Finance did not even breathe a word about it in his budget speech of last night. We are pleased that this seems to have provided a basis for a better understanding between the federal government and the provinces. But we think that there should be not too much fooling of the people about this. After all, to the extent that we are building up that fund we are taxing people for purposes other than the paying of their pensions.

Mr. Douglas: Taxing the wrong people, too.

Mr. Knowles: We are taxing the people who can least afford to pay the additional amount of taxation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a point about which we feel there should be a good deal of thinking is the whole question of the way in which this plan is integrated with existing plans. The hon. member for Perth may say he made a good deal of this, and he did. I suggest to him that even on this point he should read the white paper. There are some interesting comments in the white paper on the subject of integration with other plans. I still would urge upon the government that this is an area where a great deal of thinking has got to be done, where a great deal of work has yet to be done. The minister said this afternoon that the federal government is not in a position, by law, to compel other pension plans not to be altered as a result of the introduction of the Canada pension plan. This statement is repeated in the white paper. I understand that and I agree with it.

However, I submit there are people who are worried. There are employees who are working for firms that have pension plans where the management is saying, "Well now, just a minute; we are not going to make any changes until we see how this new plan works." There are threats to people that existing pension benefits will be reduced because of the benefits being provided under the Canada pension plan. I agree with all that is said in the white paper about adjustments, and that there is time to make these adjustments in the ten-year period. However, I feel the government has been negligent in not doing enough public relations work in this field. I believe there should have been more consultations with the trade union movement with organizations like the Canadian teachers federation, with provincial governments and with various bodies that have pension plans, to make sure that the adjustments will be made without any loss to the participants in those various other plans. It is still true, I agree, that most Canadian people do not have this kind of protection, and we should call upon those who are in pension plans to recognize that what we are doing here is trying to improve the position for everybody. However, I suggest there is a job to do in the field of integrating the Canada pension plan with the various existing plans.

I welcome the statement in the white paper to the effect that provincial governments will be permitted to bring their civil servants under this plan, if they wish to do so. I also welcome the statement that federal civil servants will be included in the plan, no matter where they live, no matter where they are employed in Canada. These are good announcements. We are moving in the right direction. Let us do all the things we can to see to it that the plan does provide universal coverage and that all these various angles are covered.

The Chairman: Order; it is my understanding that hon. members have agreed that the spokesmen for the various parties would be allowed to go over the 30 minute limit.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: I am grateful, Mr. Chairman, but I will not take advantage of that courtesy for more than just a few minutes.

As I have been trying to point out we think this plan, in essence, is good. We have tried to point out the things about it that we regard as good. We have indicated also those various points we feel need to be gone into. We hope that the bill will get second reading soon and that it will go before a special parliamentary committee when we can go into all of these various angles. I hope that as a result of that discussion we will be able to make improvements in the bill where improvements are called for, and also that we will be able to play our part, as a committee, in doing a public relations job to help the Canadian people understand the full import of this legislation.

The other comments I should like to make include, first of all, a reference to those who are already 70 years of age or over and who are receiving old age security payments of $75 a month. Let us not forget them. Let us not assume, once we get this plan in operation, that those who are now receiving $75 must get only that amount by way of a pension for the rest of their lives. It is good to know that partial pensions under the Canada pension plan will be available in January, 1966. It is good to know that by January, 1975, it will be possible, if the scheme goes through on time, for some people to draw the full benefit. And when that happens, two, or eight, or ten years from now, when some of our people are getting $80 or $90 or over $100 a month as a result of this plan, it will not be good enough to say to the people who were 70 and over in 1964: You got your $75 then and you will have to live on that for the rest of your lives. We say: Keep these people in mind, too. Let us envisage that as we improve the Canada pension plan we shall have to improve the basic federal old age security rate as well.

A few months ago, discussing ways in which we might celebrate Canada's centennial, I suggested that one way of doing so would be to raise old age security payments, getting them up to $100 a month by 1967, the year of our one hundredth birthday. I shall not go into any detail. I merely want to say that in improving the position of those who retire in two, eight, ten or 20 years from now, we should not forget those who have already retired.

The other comment I had in mind to make is this: we must also give active consideration to the position of survivors, dependants and others—greater consideration than seems to have been indicated in today's white paper. May I say that I regard this white paper as more useful in many ways than the one we had last July because it gives more information and shows a fuller appreciation of the subject. However, on the question of survivors and dependants it seems to say less than was said by the minister in her speech, or in the white paper of last year. Maybe this is because of the discussions which have taken place with the provinces in the meantime. But I urge that we should not think that we have done the job in the field of social security when we have adopted in principle a fairly good plan for retirement pensions. There are still these other groups to be considered—survivors, dependants and people who have been obliged to retire early on account of ill health or accident. We have come a long way from the days when we did not have any plan for meeting the social security needs of our people. We have come a long way during the political lifetime of some of us who are still in this house. But there is still a good piece to go.

As far as the Canada pension plan itself is concerned, the principle is good and it is our responsibility to the Canadian people to try to get it into effect at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Patterson: We appreciate the fact that, with the exception of one extensive political diatribe the debate so far has been kept on a most objective level. I feel that when we are facing an issue of the kind we have before us tonight it is as well for us to remember that it will require all the concentration and consideration that we can bring to it, if this measure is to be acceptable and workable.

The resolution which was introduced last year preceding the introduction of the pension bill gave rise to lengthy debate. I do not think it is either necessary or desirable to enter upon an extensive debate on the resolution which is before us this evening. The main consideration should, I believe, be to get this bill before the appropriate committee at the earliest moment so that every aspect may be given careful scrutiny. My remarks will, therefore, be restricted on this occasion.

Objection has been taken to the minister's statement on the ground that it contained too many details. It was also stated that the statement made today by the hon. lady differed in many respects from the one made on a previous occasion. Perhaps I have not been long enough in politics to understand these things, but it seems strange to me that we should prod and urge ministers to make changes in proposed legislation and then, if they do make changes, beat them over the head for doing so.

As I suggested before, I believe that in the situation in which we find ourselves in this house it is well for us to pool our resources and suggestions in order that the best possible legislation may be produced for the benefit of the people of Canada. I would say there is a desire across the country for some means whereby people, when they reach the age of retirement, can be assured of an adequate income upon which to maintain themselves at a decent standard of living. Just how this wish is to be realized and what plan is to be adopted in order to accomplish this objective is perhaps open to question. However, I do not think there is any question about the fundamental proposition that when people reach retirement age they should be able to enjoy their latter years of life without having to worry about where the next meal will come from. I believe, therefore, that the underlying principle of this measure is sound and worth while.

We have in mind the recommendations and propositions which have been received in support of such a proposal from farm organizations, labour unions and other groups which have lent their support to some form of pension plan, and I would venture the suggestion that there is fairly general feeling in favour of some type of pension plan which would bring to the people an assurance of an adequate income in their declining years. The details of such a plan are, however, the subject of extensive discussion and concern. As has been pointed out tonight, the proposal for a Canada pension plan has received a mixed reception. From some circles has come wholehearted support. In others, there has been an element of wariness; people are wondering whether the proposals are sound, or whether there might not be a better plan than has been suggested up to now.

The third position which has been taken has been one of outright opposition. We ought possibly to concede the point that there may have been some personal interests involved, but on the other hand I believe many Canadians are sincerely questioning the measure and the proposals which have been advanced. As we are aware, one province has already opted out of the plan. Quebec has decided to institute a plan of its own, and there is a serious question whether Ontario is going to go ahead. I believe the minister made a statement some time ago to the effect that if Ontario did not come in the plan would not be feasible. I think that was the gist of the statement, although I accept correction if I am wrong.

In a Canadian Press report in today's Ottawa Citizen headed "Renewing pension study", it is said:

> Kenneth Bryden, New Democratic party member of the legislature for Woodbine, said Monday night that Premier Robarts is rumoured prepared to bow out of the Canada pension plan at the Quebec city federal-provincial conference March 31 unless Quebec decides to enter the plan.

So it seems as though there is still a big question whether there will be a Canada pension plan. Because if the premier made the statement to which I referred, and if Ontario did not come in, then the plan would not be feasible. And if this rumour becomes a reality and a fact, then it does not look as though we will have a plan at all. It seems a very serious situation is developing.

I believe the recommendation and the suggestion of the minister that this plan be submitted to a joint committee is very worth while. Before that joint committee, those with worth while suggestions to make and ideas to advance will have the opportunity of doing so. It could be that, with the scrutiny it would receive before a committee, many of the features which are causing some concern in the minds of the people will be resolved, and it will be even more acceptable than it is now.

The major considerations were underlined by the Minister of National Health and Welfare this afternoon, and I believe they are very basic. One of them was that adequate income for retirement years is desirable for the people of Canada, and I think there is no question about that. The problem is that incomes today are themselves inadequate.

A great number of families across the nation have incomes today which are inadequate to meet demands, and people cannot make ends meet. We are faced with the situation that, in an age and an economy of abundance, a great many people are not able to avail themselves of the abundance provided, and instead of enjoying the good things of life during their working years are living on the borderline of destitution. I think this is an indictment of our financial system, and the time is long past due when we should be considering a system which makes it impossible that a situation should arise where our people cannot receive incomes commensurate with the needs of the day.

People are haunted by fear and by the thought of what will happen when they can no longer engage in any kind of employment —when they are put on the shelf, as it were, as far as productive employment is concerned. Many face destitution in the days ahead. Therefore I think it is a sound consideration that some provision must be made whereby our people can have adequate incomes for their retirement years, and this income must be provided for the greatest number of people. The minister also referred, I believe, to this point. It was pointed out that there are about 1,800,000 workers at the present time who are covered by private plans, but this leaves by far the greatest percentage of the people of the country not covered in any way by pension plans. This is a point which should receive the closest study.

The portability of pensions is also very essential. It is very unfair that a worker should lose his pension benefits because for some reason or other he chooses to transfer his services to some other area or place of work. Therefore I believe the principle of portability is an absolute essential if we are to place our people in a position where they are going to be treated fairly and equitably in this regard.

We have before us, Mr. Chairman, the resolution. We also have before us the white paper which was distributed today. We have listened to the statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. But I believe it is essential that we get the bill before us in order that we have the opportunity of properly judging the measure and assessing its value. Therefore we will reserve any comments until the bill is before us.

[Translation]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, obviously at the resolution stage we cannot raise all the objections nor make all the suggestions which are called for in the case of such an extensive pension plan as the one which is proposed to us.

As far as the resolution before us is concerned, there was mention of a universal scheme; in other circumstances, it was suggested that it was a contributory pension plan and, finally, it can be said that, within a year, we shall probably be talking about a pension plan which would include the needy older people, in order to provide them at least with the basic necessities in an affluent country with a progressive economy and a productivity which has been rising constantly for the last 20 years.

Mr. Chairman, before raising some objections, I wish to put the record straight so that tomorrow or the day after or even later it will not be said that we are against security for older people or, if you like, that security which all Canadians are entitled to. As a matter of fact, if there are Canadians who deserve our attention, they are those who during 20, 30 and even 40 years worked here in our country to leave us the inheritance which we enjoy today in the field of productivity and which enables us to meet the needs of each and every Canadian.

Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that ever since the post-war period we have always been strong advocates of a generous pension plan for our older citizens. In fact, 20 or 25 years ago, when pensions amounted to $35 or $40 a month only, and when very few people were entitled to full benefits, we were advocating pensions of at least $60 a month at age 60. As a supporting argument, we used to point out that automation would become a problem in 10, 15 or 20 years.

It was also our contention that our abundant production should be directed primarily towards local consumption.

Mr. Chairman, the fact that we put forth arguments against the resolution now before us and the legislation which will follow does not mean that we are against a social security program for the aged. I rather think that it is simply a policy statement concerning this so-called universal, portable and contributory pension plan, because whatever name it is given, I am convinced that very few persons know what it is all about, even though a white paper concerning the pension plan was tabled this afternoon. I even suggest that nobody realizes fully the scope of the universal or contributory pension program which has been submitted for our consideration this afternoon. The white paper does not even mention the word "contributory".

I now turn to the press release which was sent to the ten provincial premiers by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on January 20, 1964 and which clearly stated the objectives of the pension plan to be considered by the twenty sixth parliament.

Under "coverage", dealing with the persons who can come under the plan, we read this:

> It has been suggested that the plan could make it compulsory for a greater number of persons to be covered. Having examined the matter thoroughly, the federal government still believes that, at least at the beginning, the insurance should be optional for people working on their own account and a few categories of employees—

A little further on, it says:

> In some countries, an almost universal insurance has been achieved by gradually extending the plan. The proposed Canada pension plan does not do away with the possibility of extending the compulsory insurance once the plan has been in force for some time.

A while ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) wondered whether one could describe the plan as universal or contributory, because the word "contributory" is not to be found in today's white paper. But I think the theory of this project necessarily includes the obligation. If there are old people who deserve our attention concerning these pensions, there are also young people who have to contribute to it and who also deserve our attention.

It is already recognized that a great number of people will not be able to participate in this pension plan immediately, because the existence of a private pension plan is recognized, as in the province of Quebec, where more than 30 per cent of the workers in permament employment already participate in that pension plan on a contributory and voluntary basis for the employee and the employer.

If you consider, on the other hand, that 37 per cent of the labour force in Canada do not have a taxable income under the Income Tax Act, this means that 37 per cent of the Canadian workers who would be participating in that contributory and compulsory pension plan are not in a position to face their daily obligations because of the cost of living.

I therefore wonder whether that pension plan can be called universal or compulsory.

There is a second point I should like to make concerning the stand taken by our group on that pension plan. It is that social security should normally come under the provinces according to the B.N.A. Act. We already saw, on the occasion of the first document concerning a universal pension legislation, last July, a public protest in at least two provinces, Ontario and Quebec, which objected and advanced sound arguments. Some of those arguments concerned the fact that reserves could be cumulative or accumulated. Other arguments pointed out that it would come in conflict with other plans already established or proposed.

Quite recently, at the end of last week, the minister of family and social welfare in Quebec made it clear that social security should constantly be reviewed, that it should increasingly be directed to our future needs, but in accordance with our present requirements; he especially declared that the state of Quebec should increasingly consider withdrawing from cost-sharing social security plans.

The contributions of workers and employers will support this universal or contributory security fund. However, the province of Quebec is demanding, in fields which are completely under its jurisdiction, the right to administer, according to the needs of its people and the views of its administrators, certain plans which would meet the wishes of the province. At this point, I am only paraphrasing the statement made by the minister of the family and social welfare of the province of Quebec.

When Quebec, or any other province, refuses to participate in this way, under the rights provided by the B.N.A. Act, it creates a paradox: whether the province refuses or not, it will contribute, though its population will not benefit. This has already happened in other fields where it made a contribution without reaping any benefit which was unacceptable to the province of Quebec.

Some suggestions have been made. The attitude of Quebec representatives now seems less rigid than last July as to the necessity of dealing with the matter of portable pensions between the various provinces, so as to enable our wage earners who, until now, contributed to some retirement on pension scheme, to benefit fully from a pension scheme with other provinces. On this point, there does not seem to be much opposition.

This may be discussed and decided on during the federal-provincial conference which will take place on March 30 next. But, meanwhile, we want our position to be known.

What is the basis of the universal and contributory pension plan?

It aims at enabling those people who are not earning enough to save for their retirement to benefit from a pension when they reach that age.

Mr. Chairman, we know that 37 per cent of Canadian workers do not earn enough to pay any taxes. On the other hand, the plan does not seem to apply to wage earners with an income exceeding $4,500. I wonder whether this is not an indirect way to attack those who already do not earn enough to support their families. In short, it is another form of taxation in disguise, nothing else, in the same way as a 1 per cent tax was imposed on all Canadian workers when a $10 increase was granted to 70 year old pensioners.

If this is the contributory pension plan, our group is entirely against it.

Responsibilities should be assumed towards those who have left the people the heritage we are now enjoying in the field of productivity, and I feel that the government should seek some other formula than that of collecting contributions from those who already do not earn enough.

Various suggestions have been made. It is not that we are in favour of the pension plan advocated by Premier Jean Lesage, under which the accumulated reserves would be used for the development of the province of Quebec, but the federal scheme provides for the building up during the first ten years of a reserve which could exceed $2,500 million. It is stated that:

> From 45 to 55 per cent of the plan's reserves will be invested by the Minister of Finance in the securities of provincial governments, or securities guaranteed by provincial governments—

If the reserves are used to finance the construction of bridges, schools and other projects which do not bring any return, the taxpayers will just have to pay twice. They will have to make their compulsory contributions and 10, 20 or 30 years later they will again be called upon to provide by way of taxes or loans the funds required to pay the pensions. Such is the pension plan provided by the government.

If we are, in principle, against some points of this contributory pension plan, it is not because we want to accept the plan of Mr. Lesage. We suggest that this is a way of draining the savings of the small wage earners to invest them in uneconomic projects on the part of the government.

Besides, this was stated clearly enough by Mr. Gerin-Lajoie, and we could read in La Presse of July 3 last:

—it is reported that the minister of youth, Mr. Gerin-Lajoie, already plans to set up a school credit board which would feed on the pension fund of Mr. Lesage. This board would make loans or would in turn allow school boards to borrow from the fund in order to build schools with repayment conditions in keeping with their means.

If there is no opposition today on the part of the ministers of the province of Quebec, it is perhaps an intimation they may benefit, within the limits of 45 to 55 per cent, from the contributions made by the inhabitants of the province to this pension plan. But, if the question is simply a matter of dollars, for Mr. Lesage as well as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh), who is introducing the resolution, to allow Canadian citizens in the year 2015 to have bread, I wonder why this plan should provide that in 1970 heads of families with an average income of $2,000 to $3,000 deprive themselves of bread to allow Canadian citizens to have some in the year 2015.

Is this a matter of dollars? Unless it is intended to impose on us merely a problem of a plan? If it is simply a problem of a plan, at which some N.D.P. representatives in this house are adept, I may say that we are right on the subject; we shall make plans.

But if it is a need for dollars which prompts the provincial government to participate in or agree to this plan, or to initiate its own plan in order to ensure greater benefits for the taxpayers of the province of Quebec, I believe it is normal we should put forward here, as Creditistes, our own point of view in the field of pensions, particularly as concerns the plan submitted to us today.

If it is a matter of dollars, let us see what our old people need and what they shall want in future, this year and 10 or 20 years from now. Nothing but a bit of comfort, in accordance with what their country's productivity can offer them for their old age, to wit, appropriate medical care and a sound and reasonable well-being, as concerns food, clothing and housing, in keeping with the standards of living of this 20th century.

To sum up, this is what our older people will wish in the year 1970 or in the year 2000, or even in the year 2015, and nothing else.

Today, under the pretext of establishing a plan which would offer all that, the salary of the average worker, of the small industrial wage earner is again to be drained by taxes in order to establish a universal, compulsory and contributory pension scheme.

I think that the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare who gets a considerable percentage of the annual budget—more particularly when we realize that 15 per cent of the budget will be used to pay the dictators of finance instead of helping production—should try to find a formula to improve the security of those older people who built up this country and, after 25, 30 or 40 years of of hard work contributed to the economic development we know today.

How will our young people of today and tomorrow, who will reap the benefits of automation and scientific progress, while productivity is ever increasing, be made to contribute to that plan?

Statistics show that the trend is more and more to free man by the use of machines.

Therefore, if it is only a financial problem, why not seek a solution elsewhere?

In the last several months, we have been making many suggestions in order to review the monetary policy of our country, and permit the establishment of a single social security program.

To date, they seem to have understood nothing, absolutely nothing. And yet, we are not the only ones urging for a revision of our monetary policy in order to make way for the development of a social security plan.

I have here part of a speech made by Mr. Benoit Michaud, an hon. member for Madawaska-Restigouche—a Liberal member, if you please—on June 24, 1947, in which reference was made to the increase from $25 to $30 per month in the old age pension. After pointing out that the government could not make the increase larger because the financial system did not permit it, Mr. Michaud suggested a reform of the monetary system to do away with the national debt charges which, at that time, came to $434 million.

Now, the interest on our national debt, which was less than half a billion dollars in 1947, has now gone beyond a billion dollars, according to the budget just put before us. In short, the interest on the debt has doubled since 1947.

How can you predict 50 years in advance what benefits the worker will receive, when you cannot do it for 30 or 35 years to come?

Mr. Chairman, we are being asked today to accept a principle which is illogical in its application, following which other bills bearing the same inconsistencies will be imposed upon us.

A few years ago, the unemployment insurance fund was set up to ensure the security of workers. At one time, accumulated funds totalled more than $900 million. At the time, actuaries had established the amount of the contributions to be paid by both employees and employers.

Thus was set up the unemployment insurance fund which the government has to replenish constantly, even though a decreasing number of workers are entitled to benefits. Benefit entitlement has been made so complicated, through all kinds of amendments to the act, that many of our workers can no longer draw unemployment insurance benefits, even though they contributed to the fund during 10, 15 or 20 years.

The same situation will probably occur in the case of contributory pensions, because, on the one hand, you will have administrative regulations and an all-powerful and expensive bureaucracy, and on the other, small pensions of $75, $80 or $90 a month for the wage earners.

Some provinces such as British Columbia, already find it possible to pay up to $95 a month to old age pensioners. Why this rush with this pension scheme? It is merely another intrusion in a field of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. By coming into this plan the provinces will only lose their rights.

The pension plan will thus have been reduced from 70 to 65 years in 1970. In the meantime, the provincial governments will have lost their rights progressively while the federal government will administer the payroll of the workers.

The federal government is increasingly centralizing tremendous and discretionary powers, drawing no attention to existing plans or those which are at cross purposes with the plan now in existence.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred a while ago to crown corporation employees who are now contributing to pension plans and who would, in three, four or ten years, enjoy a pension proportionate to their contributions up to $400 a month. He said that those employees are now wondering what purpose will be achieved by the new pension plan.

I repeat that in the province of Quebec 30 per cent of the workers already contribute to pension funds allowing them in many instances to get, when they retire, amounts much higher than those shown in the pension plan now before us. Why is that possible? Because instead of investing in non-profit or government controlled businesses an accrued capital of $2 billion, employers and employees jointly, or private companies managing these pension schemes, invest those funds in profitable private enterprises or they buy bonds which double the capital after 20 years.

The first contributions thus paid into the pension fund enable the pensioner to profit from amounts reaching sometimes up to 60 per cent of his salary earned annually during his years of work, while the pension plan which we have before us today does not exceed 20 per cent of the earned salary during the normal lifetime of the person who will have contributed, worked and contributed again to that pension plan.

This means that the pension plans already in existence are more profitable to the worker contributing thereto.

Why should provincial governments not make as much publicity in order to direct capital investment towards private industries. This would promote expansion of private industries which need capital to develop natural resources, thereby permitting an accumulation of funds which would make it possible to give old age pensioners a better pension than is offered under the plan before us today, even though employees and employers would contribute 1 and 1½ per cent.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman, we know the results produced by previous contributory and compulsory plans. We are turning our employers into fund collectors for the federal government and, furthermore, these collections will come out of the pay envelopes of the small wage earners; in short, beside their own contribution on a compulsory basis at the rate of 1 or 1½ per cent, the employers will see the operating cost of their enterprise go up.

Nowadays, employees, secretaries, are paid to paste stamps on unemployment insurance books, some are paid to comply with income tax requirements; extra staff is hired, in private enterprise, to comply with sales tax requirements and still more people will have to be hired, which will justify, of course, private enterprise for increasing the costs of its services or the products it puts on the market.

That is the bureaucratic burden which will result from the administration of compulsory, universal and contributory pension plans set up by the government.

For all those reasons, as a member of the Ralliement Creditistes, I raise a few objections at this time. We hope to have the opportunity to explain them more fully when the bill is presented to the committee. That is why we will not delay the adoption of the resolution, but we will propose amendments and make suggestions which, I hope, will be seriously considered by the minister.

[Text]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, although the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that I would make a statement on the financial aspects of this resolution, I am quite willing to defer this statement until second reading of the bill, if it is the desire of the committee to proceed with the question, and first reading, in order to see the bill at this time.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Benson: Since it is not the unanimous desire of the committee—

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Monteith: We want to hear your words of wisdom.

Mr. Winkler: We want all the information we can get.

Mr. Macdonald: The Tories object.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak briefly concerning some of the financial and administrative aspects of the Canada pension plan, which is the subject of the resolution now before the house. It is my intention to deal with these matters in broad outline at this stage, but I will be prepared at second reading to go into somewhat more detail when hon. members have had an opportunity to scrutinize the bill in detail.

Generally, I think that the financial aspects of the resolution can be broken down under the following headings:

1. Benefits under the present old age security pension.
2. Benefits under the Canada pension plan.
3. Method of financing the Canada pension plan.
4. The handling of reserves which will accumulate under the Canada pension plan.

First of all, I will deal with the present old age security pension of $75 per month available to everyone at the age of 70. The proposed legislation does not in any way reduce benefits available under this plan. However, it does provide that at the option of the beneficiary he or she may elect to take a pension which will provide, roughly, equivalent benefits at any time between age 65 and 70. The amount received at age 70, if the election is left until that time, will still be $75 per month. However, if one decides to take the pension before age 70, the amount received will be somewhat less because the period of expected payment will be longer. If, for example, a person takes the old age security pension at age 65, he or she will receive $51 per month during his or her remaining life. If the election is made at age 67½, the pension for life will be $63 per month while, of course, if one waits to the age of 70 before election the pension will be $75 per month.

This old age security pension, Mr. Chairman, will continue to be financed by the old age security taxes, consisting of 3 per cent of the sales tax, 3 per cent of corporation income taxes and 4 per cent of personal income taxes, to a maximum of $120 per annum. As I stated when this pension was increased $10 during the last session, this fund is now on a basis where it will be adequate to finance benefits.

Next, Mr. Chairman, I will deal with benefits under the Canada pension plan. The benefits under this plan will be available to all persons who are or become employed in participating provinces after the plan goes into effect, and to all self-employed persons in participating provinces who choose to contribute to the plan. The scale of benefits received will be related to the earnings of contributors over the period during which they contribute to the plan.

The amount of pension received under the Canada pension plan, as distinguished from the present old age security pension, will amount to 20 per cent of average monthly earnings, so that after a 10 year transition period a person whose average monthly earnings were $100 per month will receive a Canada pension plan benefit of $20 per month on retirement. Earnings of $250 per month will produce a pension of $50 per month, and so on, to a maximum Canada pension plan benefit of $75 per month for those with earnings of $375 per month or more. I should point out, Mr. Chairman, that after a five year period the pension will be somewhat higher if the average industrial wage rises above the present level.

Thus, in summary, Mr. Chairman, depending when one elects to take their old age security pension the maximum combined old age security pension and Canada pension plan pension, based on present wage levels, would be $150 per month at age 70 or $126 per month at age 65.

Before leaving the question of benefits, Mr. Chairman, I should also point out that Canada pension plan benefits, as contrasted with old age security benefits, are the same at age 65 or age 70, so in fairness a person must actually retire, in order to be eligible for their Canada pension plan benefits, between age 65 and age 70.

However, there will be an advantage to working between age 65 and 70, in that for each year worked a year of low earnings may be dropped in computing one's average earnings. In addition, retired persons will be able to have modest part-time earnings without affecting their pension. A further point of interest is that in calculating the average earnings on which benefits are based, past earnings will be adjusted based on the ratio of the average industrial wage at retirement as compared to that existing at the time the contributions were made.

The transitional period for the graduated pension will be ten years. People who retire right after the first year of the program, if eligible, will receive one tenth of the benefit they would have received if they had contributed for ten years or more. Those who retire after having made contributions for the first two years of the program will receive one fifth of the benefit they would have received for contributions for ten years or more, and so on. People who retire after making contributions for the first ten years of the program will have their benefits calculated at 20 per cent of their average contributory earnings over that period.

As stated in the resolution before the committee, Mr. Chairman, it is also proposed that some of the contributor's benefits will be available to a surviving spouse. At age 65 a widow or a widower will be entitled to the larger part of, (a) her or his own Canada pension plan pension, or (b) 60 per cent of the combined Canada pension plan pensions of the couple, subject however to the maximum which applies at the time to the total pension which may be paid to any one person.

I should like now to deal briefly with the financing of the Canada pension plan. First of all, I should like to make it abundantly clear that this plan is to be financed out of earnings related to contributions of employees, employers and self-employed persons. The contributions will be an allowable deduction for income tax purposes. The Canada pension plan is not going to involve any charge whatsoever against the general taxation revenue of Canada. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I should go further and state that the costs of administering the plan are to be financed out of contributions and not out of general taxation revenues. In this connection, I should like to point out to the hon. member for Perth that the Prime Minister did not say the administrative costs would not be included under the Canada pension plan.

Mr. Monteith: Pardon me, Mr. Chairman, he said they would at the beginning.

Mr. Benson: If the hon. member would let me conclude my statement—

Mr. Monteith: That is what I said.

Miss LaMarsh: That is not what you said.

Mr. Monteith: This is the first interruption, so you people across there should not harass us at this stage.

Mr. Benson: If I may continue, Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister said the costs of the administrative machinery set up before collections started will require advances from the treasury.

Mr. Monteith: That is what I said.

Mr. Benson: That is what the Prime Minister said. These will be repaid from contributions when the plan is in operation.

Participation in the plan, Mr. Chairman, is to be compulsory for all employed persons, and the rate of contributions will be 1 per cent of wages by employer and employee to a maximum annual contribution of $90 per employee or $7.50 a month at the top earning level of $375 per month. It is proposed, based on carefully prepared actuarial reports, that these rates of contribution will continue for 15 years and that thereafter they will rise slowly to a maximum of 2 per cent per employee and employer in the year 2015.

It is the intention to have actuarial reports on the Canada pension plan prepared every five years. The rates of contributions are to be set out in the legislation, and while there will be authority to postpone an increase in contributions, this can only be done on the basis of the then current actuarial report. The self-employed person will have the right to contribute under the Canada pension plan and to receive benefits thereunder. In this case, the allowable contributions for the first 15 years will be 2 per cent of income up to $4,500 per annum before deducting personal exemptions.

A good many people who are presently participating in pension plans have asked the question, what happens to my present pension under the Canada pension plan? I should like to make it quite clear that in no case should there be a reduction in total benefits received by these people and for many total benefits will be increased.

Much has been said about the problem of integration, Mr. Chairman, but the government is planning integration of the largest pension plan in this country, namely that of federal civil servants, and has encountered no great difficulties. There will be no loss of benefits to civil servants on retirement. While we recognize that problems of integration for some existing industrial plans will be complicated, they certainly cannot be regarded as insoluble. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, many of these plans presently take into consideration the old age security pension which has increased over the years. I believe that integration with the Canada pension plan will be no more difficult in this country than it has been in other countries with contributory social insurance programs. I think that one will see a great increase in private pension plans in Canada, for the Canada pension plan will make employers and employees more pension conscious. They will look for ways of supplementing the basic pension provided from age 65 by the Canada pension plan and the old age security pension.

I should like now to deal very briefly with the handling of the modest reserves which actuarial reports indicate will accumulate under the Canada pension plan. I use the word "modest" intentionally and in all sincerity because although these reserves appear substantial in dollar amount, they are quite modest in terms of benefits payable under the plan. These reserves are to be held in a separate fund. It is the intention of the government to invest approximately 50 per cent of these reserves in provincial or provincially guaranteed securities based on Canada pension plan contributions from the various participating provinces, and the remaining 50 per cent is to be invested in government of Canada securities. It is proposed to require in the legislation periodic consultations between the minister of finance and the provincial treasurers in this regard.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out first, the plan is to be administered by the department of health and welfare who will be responsible for the payment of benefits, and that contributions under the plan are to be administered by the Department of National Revenue, and appropriate safeguards will be written into the legislation to assure that contributions are properly remitted.

The Canada pension plan proposed by this resolution will be of great benefit to all Canadians. I respectfully suggest that we move through the resolution stage as soon as possible so that all hon. members may have the opportunity of seeing the bill and of discussing it fully in an informed manner, both on second reading and when it is referred to the joint committee mentioned by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I hope I will not be very long in making my remarks tonight. I am sure I will hear that hope echoed very quickly from the other side. I think it is important to take a quick look, even at the resolution stage, to make sure that we are starting correctly on this pension plan. I am sure that all members in this house have probably, during the last political campaign or two, stated they were in favour of a pension plan for all Canadians. I have no doubt that every member in the house is anxious to see some pension plan brought forward. It is certainly a political hot potato. I do not think the political future of any member who is against a pension plan would be very secure. It is precisely this aspect of the situation that bothers me. I believe the feeling of political fear over this subject has become so intense that there is danger of our failing to be as critical as we should be, if this plan is to be all we hope it will be. Certainly, on the opposition side of the house it is our duty to take a critical look at this legislation to see that it does not contain the seeds of future trouble, and ensure that we get off on the right foot.

Frankly, I am bothered by several aspects of the resolution. To begin with, there is, I am sure, a desire in the committee to pass this stage without delay and I am wondering why there should be such a rush in connection with so important a measure. The sums of money involved in this scheme are large enough to stagger the imagination. It is a long term scheme affecting a great many people. It is a most complex subject. The sums of money which could be wasted if there is a mistake in the accounting or in the actuarial figures are of sufficient importance that we should be prepared to take a second look, check and recheck, to make sure where we are going. It is true the government has expressed a desire to get this through before Easter, but I am sure all of us who regarded that announcement with pleasure were not expecting to have a budget brought down before the recess. In other words, we had expected there would be a few more days in which to consider this measure at the resolution stage. I would say there are sufficient grounds for taking a further look at it because closer examination shows certain danger signals.

I notice that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka spoke on this subject during the debate on the address. He said he was in favour of a pension plan, but he also pointed out that it was his duty to be critical. He did a good job of analysing those parts of the plan which, he thought, could lead to trouble. He pointed out where it might be strengthened and, where, in his view, danger might exist. As a result there was a great deal of talk in his constituency, a great deal of political propaganda to the effect that he was against the bill. We are all aware that the Prime Minister suggested to this house that because we were questioning some aspects of it we were against a pension plan. I believe all hon. members must be reminded that their first duty is to make sure of the precise nature of the legislation with which they are asked to deal, and not to be unduly conscious of how political opponents may try to paint them. We must make sure we are right, and if someone else misrepresents our position, we have to put up with it.

There is one intimation that the pension plan may not be exactly what Canada wants. It is a fact that the province of Quebec did not consent to participate. If Premier Lesage and his government have decided that this pension plan is not worthy of their participation, this is some indication that either they have holes in their heads or that we had better stop and take a look at what we are doing. Of course, we cannot agree with Premier Lesage all the time, but obviously he has taken a long and serious look at the basic principles of the pension plan proposed to this parliament and has decided that it represents a wrong approach. Having received a warning to this extent, I believe the government should pause, reconsider and make sure we are moving in the right direction. It is not merely the absence of participation by the particular province of Quebec that makes this so noteworthy. It is the fact that this is supposed to be the Canada pension plan, and we are leaving out one province. This is the aspect of the basis on which we are proceeding that gives me most trouble. I cannot convince myself that enough time and effort have been spent by the government, that there have been enough negotiations with the provinces, or sufficient consideration of this plan. I cannot believe it would not have been possible to have arrived at some plan acceptable to all the provinces, a plan which could have been a truly national plan covering all Canada.

All members of this house will recall the distinctly political way in which the minister outlined the pension plan last year. We know there has been a considerable amount of discussion since then and that there have been a number of changes. My caution about the need to go slowly in this regard is borne out by this past performance. There have been many changes. The process of consultation and reconsideration has resulted in considerable changes in the basic approach. I would very much like to see a plan which included participation by Quebec. It is not the fact that one province is left out that is so serious. We are all Canadians and we should be treated equally. It is the fact that as a result of the exclusion of one province the plan is less desirable from the point of view of all the other provinces. People do change their jobs. They are shifted from one province to another. They might even find themselves shifted into Quebec. That they should be worried about this aspect seems to me to be most regrettable.

I should like the committee to consider what is, in my view, an excellent statement appearing in the Financial Post on the front page of the March 14, 1964 issue under the heading "Need Close Look at Pension Perils". It reads in part:

> Every responsible Canadian has to be concerned with the economic health and social welfare of his fellow citizens. This concern must extend far beyond next year and the next. It stretches onward to the decades when it is the children of today's policymakers and voters who will be the beneficiaries or the victims of current decisions.
>
> In the contentious Canada pension plan we have an excellent example of long term policy making problems. Basic decisions made in coming months about government pensions are decisions with which this country and its people will be stuck for generations. Once created and set in motion, a government pension program is a juggernaut that cannot be halted and over which nobody, including the government of the day, will have effective control.
>
> Some kind of pension arrangement is sensible and desirable in our kind of society.
>
> But there is so much election day power and magic in the very word "pension", and so very little general understanding of the mathematical and economic complexities of the subject, that Canadians may soon be swept along into a reckless decision about pensions which will be a curse to this nation for a very long time to come.
>
> To those who make up their minds on a fast, superficial glance at the question, there is undoubted appeal in a pension scheme run by Ottawa. That would look neat and tidy.
>
> An Ottawa plan, of course, has infinite appeal for people at Ottawa. The bestower of apparent blessings can expect enthusiastic gratitude at the polls. It would add a powerful new device to the many devices central government now has for "redistributing" the personal earnings of the individual Canadians.
>
> However, the dream of a completely centralized national pension colossus has been ended by the Quebec decision not to go along.
>
> Premier Robarts of Ontario still refuses to be stampeded. He takes the sensible view that the key issue is not just getting any "pension plan", but what the pension plan adopted will actually do for Canadians and for Canada.

There is more than one province left out. There are hordes of people left out who are not covered by the pension. The ordinary working man who is going to get the benefit of this pension is just as anxious to have a plan to protect his widow and young children, or protect his orphaned children if both should die. This is as much a concern for him as concern about whether he will have something to retire on at 65 or 70. This basic approach to the whole problem, whether we are just taking care of him in his old age or whether we are looking after the equally important part of this problem, should be considered at this time, when we are starting to introduce the plan. The working people in Canada are concerned that the government bring forward a plan where, if after 10 or 15 years with one employer a man is fired or has to change employment, provision is made that the benefits he has built up under his own plan will not be entirely lost.

I said I was going to keep my remarks brief, Mr. Chairman. Many criticisms can be made of the plan, and I agree with my friends that after we see the bill some may disappear and new criticisms may arise. I think the best thing which could happen to this pension plan would be to make one more try to see if the province of Quebec can be persuaded to come in. I should like to see an all-Canada plan, because I am a little mystified about what will happen in two or three years if one of the other provinces decides that the plan is not working too well, and wants to start its own. Does the province of Quebec have any more right than any other province to stay out? I suggest the answer is no, and that the willingness of other provinces to go along with the plan may change if the plan does not work properly. The best way, and the only safe way, is to get the kind of plan which receives the consent of all and is entered into by the Dominion of Canada, and the governments of all the provinces.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Miss LaMarsh thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-75, to establish a comprehensive program of old age pensions in Canada payable to contributors and survivors.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Could we call it eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker? The business has been outlined for us for the next few days.

Mr. Knowles: Before you call it eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might make a suggestion to the appropriate person. I am sure there will be a great deal of interest in today's Hansard, particularly because of the white paper contained therein, let alone the statements which have been made by spokesmen for all parties. I am sure there will be a great deal of interest in the bill, first reading of which has just been given. I wonder whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or somebody else, can advise the printing bureau that it might be a good idea to print extra copies of today's Hansard, and of the bill?

Mr. Favreau: I can advise the house that we will try all we can to bring this about.

Mr. Knowles: In both languages, of course.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being eleven o'clock this house stands adjourned until 2.30 tomorrow afternoon.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put.

APPENDIX

CANADA PENSION PLAN—WHITE PAPER

The purpose of the government's proposed legislation is to ensure that, as soon as is possible in a fair and practical way, all Canadians will be able to retire in security and with dignity.

The advantage of a federal plan is that it is the only type of pension plan that can be made available comprehensively to all Canadians. This was recognized in 1951 when the British North America Act was amended. The Canada pension plan will mean that a contributory program is available to Canadians to provide for their old age. However, as the provision of pensions is a field in which both provincial and federal governments have jurisdiction, the Canada pension plan will not be extended to people covered under a comparable provincial pension plan, providing a similar level of benefits on a universal basis. The province of Quebec has indicated that it intends to introduce such a plan for residents of that province.

Under the federal plan, coverage will be compulsory for, broadly, all employees in participating provinces; such exceptions as are made will be for those types of employment in which the collection of contributions is not administratively feasible. Most other people having earned incomes—broadly, the self employed and the majority of employees not covered compulsorily—will be able to belong to the plan voluntarily. If a provincial government wishes, its employees will be covered. Federal employees in a non-participating province will be covered by the Canada pension plan.

The plan is comprehensive in the sense of covering as many people as is practicable. It is not intended to provide all the retirement income which many Canadians wish to have. This is a matter of individual choice and, in the government's view, should properly be left to personal savings and to private pension plans, subject in the latter case to such degree of supervision as the provinces may think appropriate. The 1963 Ontario legislation is the first example in Canada of an attempt at close supervision of private plans.

The purpose of the Canada pension plan is to make reasonable minimum levels of income available at normal retirement ages. There will be scope for the continuation and extension of private pension plans to provide benefits over these minimum levels.

The present minimum provided in Canada is the old age security benefit of $75 a month from age 70. Unfortunately, many people are unable to go on earning until they reach age 70.

Realistic minimum levels of pensions cannot be achieved, in a country like Canada, simply by increasing the flat rate pension. Living costs vary greatly between town and country, and between different regions of Canada. What people need, in order to make satisfactory provision for retirement, is related in part to the level of earnings to which they have been accustomed. The Canada pension plan will therefore provide new levels of pensions related to previous earnings.

Main Features

The government proposes to make these main changes in the provision of pensions:

1. Contributors to the plan will receive a monthly pension related to the earnings on which they have contributed. The scale of pensions will rise during a ten year transitional period to a level of 20 per cent of average earnings.

2. A flat rate old age security pension will be available at any age between 65 and 70, according to the preference of the pensioner. The amount of the pension will be graduated so that anyone with average life expectancy will receive about the same total payment, from the age he starts his pension to the time he dies, whatever starting age he chooses.

3. The earnings-related Canada pension will also be available to contributors at any age between 65 and 70, provided they have retired from regular employment. There will be no retirement condition at age 70.

4. Both the flat rate pension and the earnings-related pension will be available in 1966 to people who have reached age 69, in 1967 to people from age 68, in 1968 to people from age 67, in 1969 to people from age 66, and in 1970 to people from age 65.

The main features in the financing of the plan are:

5. Since the new benefits will be related to earnings, the Canada pension plan will be financed by contributions of a percentage of earnings. The rate of the employer's contribution during the first 15 years will be 1 per cent of the earnings on which contributions are made. The rate for employees will also be 1 per cent. During this period the rate for self employed contributors will be 2 per cent.

6. For the first five years of the plan, contributions will be made, and benefits will be paid, on the first $4,500 of annual earnings. This level will be adjusted in 1970 and thereafter in line with increases in average earnings.

7. Contributions will be deductible from taxable income. This is the same as for private pension plans.

8. The Canada pension plan will be entirely self financing. The contributions are designed to cover both the cost of benefits and the cost of administration. The costs of the flat rate pension will be met from the old age security fund.

Timing

The legislation will be designed to permit collection of contributions to begin in January 1965, so that payment of benefits can begin in January 1966. At that date also, people will become able to draw pensions, both flat rate and earnings-related, at age 69. By 1970 these pensions will be available at age 65.

Until the plan is ten years old, the rates of the new pension will build up steadily. In 1966, the earnings-related benefit at age 69 or 70 will be 2 per cent of earnings, or $7.50 a month for anyone who retires after contributing on earnings of $4,500 for a year. For anyone retiring at age 68 or older in 1967, the maximum will be $15 a month, and so on until the top rate of 20 per cent of earnings is reached after ten years. The flat rate pension will, of course, be available in addition to the Canada pension. The amounts available in total pensions will therefore rise from $75 to people already retired to $150 for contributors aged 70 with average earnings of $4500 in 1975.

Financing

Contributions under the plan will not be required before the age of 18. They will stop at whatever age, between 65 and 70, a pension benefit is taken.

For the first 15 years of the program the contribution rate will be 1 per cent of contributory earnings payable for the employee and 1 per cent of contributory earnings for the employer. During the following 35 years, these rates will rise in steps of a quarter of one per cent, to a rate of 2 per cent for the year 2015 onward. There will be provision to defer these contribution increases if they prove to be financially unnecessary.

The ratio of benefits to contributions is especially favourable for those who retire during the early years of the plan. It is therefore reasonable during this period to assess the voluntary contributor at the combined employer and employee rate. However, after the program has been in operation for a period of time and adjustments are made in contribution rates, the rate paid by voluntary contributors will remain at the rate for the employee, plus 1 per cent. For example, when the employee's rate is 1½ per cent, with an equal contribution by the employer, the rate for the self employed will be 2½ per cent.

The contribution rates set out above will result in the building up of fairly substantial reserves, estimated at about $2.5 billion (before interest) during the first ten years. Periodic actuarial reports will be published on the anticipated revenues and expenditures of the fund in the future. These will be reviewed by an advisory committee in its report to the government on the operation of the plan.

From 45 per cent to 55 per cent of the plan's reserves will be invested by the Minister of Finance in the securities of provincial governments, or securities guaranteed by provincial governments, in proportion to the amount of contributions paid into the plan by residents of each province. Provincial governments will thus have an important interest in the operations of the plan, and in any proposed amendments which might affect the future size of the reserves.

There will be provisions to require a special actuarial report on the future cost of any proposals to amend the benefits or other features of the plan.

Calculation of Benefits

Pensions are to be 20 per cent of "what a man has been earning".

This obviously cannot mean what the pensioner earned in, say, the last year, or even few years, before beginning the pension. That would be very unfair to the man who suffered sickness or unemployment in the last few years before retirement. On the other hand, the pensioner cannot be allowed to pick the best year or few years of his earnings record; that would excessively favour the man whose earnings have been erratic and it would tempt voluntary contributors to contribute only in good years.

The pension benefit will therefore be based on the man's average earnings from the effective date of the plan to the time when he starts to draw his pension. These earnings cannot, however, be used without adjustment. To do so would mean that, as the general level of earnings rises over the years, there would be a widening span between earnings recorded in the early years and those shortly before retirement. The pension benefits paid would therefore be a declining proportion of "what a man has been earning" shortly before retirement.

Accordingly, for calculating pensions, earnings will be adjusted in line with changes in the general level of salaries and wages. The current average of salaries and wages in Canada is roughly $4,000 a year. The ceiling chosen for earnings under the Canada pension plan has been set somewhat higher than this at $4,500 for the first five years of the plan. This ceiling will afterwards be adjusted with changes in the general level of wages and salaries. The pension program will therefore permanently provide a satisfactory standard of pensions for people with earnings up to the average level.

In the calculation of a man's average contributory earnings, his wages or salary for, say, 1970 will be adjusted by the ratio between the average earnings ceilings in the three years before retirement and the ceiling for 1970. This will be done for each year for which he contributes. In this way his past earnings will be revalued to their current equivalent before his average earnings are calculated.

Under this formula, a man who in some years does not contribute to the plan will get a smaller pension than if he contributed all the time. However, it is important not to penalize people whose earnings in some years are abnormally low because of sickness and unemployment. This will be avoided, to a reasonable degree, by excluding a man's years of lowest earnings from the calculation of his average earnings. Also, for each year beyond 65 that a man continues to work, he will be able to exclude, from the calculation of his average earnings, an additional low year. This will provide an incentive to go on working after 65, for the man who is able to do so without any large reduction in pay.

The earnings-related and flat rate pensions will be paid to beneficiaries in one cheque. At existing wage levels the total pension available to a single person at age 70 will range from $75 to $150 monthly, as indicated in the following table:

Combined Pension available to Single Contributor at age 70, by Average Monthly Pensionable Earnings

Average Monthly Pensionable Earnings	Monthly Pension Payable
	Earnings-related Pension	Flat rate Pension	Combined Pension
$	$	$	$
nil	nil	75	75
100	20	75	95
150	30	75	105
200	40	75	115
250	50	75	125
300	60	75	135
350	70	75	145
375	75	75	150

Adjustment for Age

The size of the earnings-related benefit will not be reduced for people who claim it before age 70, provided they are retired from regular employment. The pension is set at 20 per cent of average earnings, at whatever age it is claimed.

Flat rate pensions drawn before the age of 70, on the other hand, will be reduced by 40 cents for each month between the date when the pension starts and the date of the pensioner's seventieth birthday. For anyone who takes his pension at the earliest opportunity, when he reaches 65, the pension received would be $51. The reduction at ages between 65 and 70 would be proportional to this.

There will be no retirement test for the flat rate pension: a man may start drawing the appropriate rate of pension at any time between his 65th and 70th birthdays, whatever his other earnings. Once he elects to draw his pension he cannot go off pension for a while and then come back on at a higher rate.

At existing wage levels the total pension available to a single person at age 65 will range from $51 to $126 monthly, as indicated in the following table:

Total Pension available to Single Contributor at age 65, by Average Monthly Pensionable Earnings

Average Monthly Pensionable Earnings	Monthly Pension
$	$
nil	51
100	71
150	81
200	91
250	101
300	111
350	121
375	126

Definition of Retirement

Between ages 65 and 70, the earnings-related benefit will be payable only to people who have retired from regular employment. The test of retirement will be a test of earnings from work. Earnings will consist of all wages and salaries received for services rendered in the year, plus any net earnings and minus any net loss from self employment for the same year.

Deductions will be made from the benefit of a contributor under age 70 if his annual earnings after the benefit becomes payable to him exceed $900 a year, or a proportionate amount if he retires part way through the year. When earnings exceed $900 a year, but not $1,500, the total benefits for that year will be reduced by one half the excess, except that no benefit will be reduced for any month for which the earnings do not exceed $75.

When earnings exceed $1,500 a year, the benefits for that year will be reduced by $300 (which is one half the difference between $1,500 and $900) plus the earnings in excess of $1,500, except again that no benefit will be reduced for any month for which earnings do not exceed $75. These $75, $900 and $1,500 limits will apply for the first five years of the program, and then will be adjusted as the earnings ceiling is adjusted, to reflect changes in the general level of earnings.

Widows and Widowers

A widow or widower will be entitled, from age 65, to the larger of (a) her or his own earnings-related pension, or (b) 60 per cent of the combined earnings-related pensions of the couple—subject, however, to the maximum which applies at the time to the total pension which may be paid to any one person.

The survivor will of course be entitled to the old age security pension at $75 a month, or at a lesser rate, depending upon the age at which the pension is claimed.

The pension available to a widow will thus be rather more than half the combined pensions of the couple.

This provision will apply equally to a widow or, if a deceased wife had earned income entitling her to a pension, to a widower.

Administration

The Department of National Health and Welfare will administer the Canada pension plan. The contributions under the plan will be collected by the Department of National Revenue. Employers will be responsible for deductions from their employees' earnings and will then remit these deductions monthly, together with their own contributions, to that department. Voluntary participants will make annual payments to the department.

The Department of National Health and Welfare will be responsible for the payment of benefits. The Department of National Revenue will forward to the Department of National Health and Welfare the record of pensionable earnings so that this information can be credited to each individual contributor's account.

The maintenance of the records and the calculation of benefits will be achieved through the use of modern data processing equipment.

The necessary provisions will be made for appeal procedures to ensure that contributors, beneficiaries and employers may have an impartial review of any disputes which may arise in relation to the program.

Authority will be provided to work out reciprocal agreements with other countries, to provide portability of pensions for people who move between countries.

Relation to Other Pension Plans

A great contribution to old age security has been made, and will continue to be made, by the considerable growth of private pension plans, which now cover more than 1,800,000 people in Canada. Not all of these plans, however, provide sizeable pensions, particularly for workers who do not join the plan early in life. Also, since vesting is rarely complete, private plans have operated as a growing restraint on the mobility of labour.

Several provinces are interested in lessening these and other problems connected with private pension plans, particularly by the establishment of rules for portability and solvency. These are, in the view of the federal government, useful steps forward.

However, such proposals for the compulsory extension of private plans do not make possible retirement at an adequate standard for people in their forties to sixties who have not been covered previously. Moreover, self employed people do not have access to such plans.

The Canada pension plan not only provides early benefits but also automatically provides complete portability of pensions for people with earnings up to an average level. It will be available comprehensively and it will quickly provide fair sized pensions to those who retire in the next decade or two. Moreover, it will provide a basic measure of "real" security, because people will be assured of pensions that are related to general earnings levels at the time they retire, not to money incomes which have become out of date.

The plan is designed to meet these needs of the Canadian people while helping to establish a pension system which, through the combination of private, provincial and federal action, will be sound and satisfactory in the long run.

The Adjustment Period

The adjustment of private pension plans to a public program with graduated benefits cannot be altogether easy. However, this does not appear to have been a deterrent to private plans in the United States. Since the American old age, survivors and disability insurance program was established there has continued to be a substantial growth in private pension plans. The number of employees in the United States covered by private pension plans, expressed as a percentage of the wage and salary workers in private industry, rose from 31 per cent in 1954 to 45 per cent in 1961.

The Canada pension plan has been designed to ease as fully as possible the adjustment of private pension plans to the developing public program. Benefits in the early years of the program are at a modest level; contribution rates for the first 15 years will be only 1 per cent, and are expected to rise gradually to 2 per cent after 50 years.

Some employers and employees will no doubt wish to revise existing pension plans by reducing contribution rates approximately in line with their contributions under the Canada pension plan. The ten year transitional period means that such adjustments can be made carefully and gradually.

Economic Progress

In the government's view, the great merit of the Canada pension plan is that it is a social security program which is realistically geared to the growth of the economy. It can help to provide a foundation for other social programs, notably for those who are disabled, for widows with dependent children, and for orphans. In itself, it quickly makes modest pensions available. These benefits will grow until, in ten years, an adequate scale of pensions is available for people of low and moderate incomes. As such incomes grow, with economic progress, the scale will rise in a way which ensures that people who make contributions now can be assured of pensions which will still provide a secure retirement in line with economic conditions at the time.

In the growth of the economy, importance is rightly placed on the role of private pension plans in providing savings to finance investment. All pension arrangements, of course, require payments out to the beneficiaries as well as savings by those who are now working. In a static economy no mature pension plan would be in itself a source of savings; the net saving through private pension plans arises from the growth of the plans as the population increases and income levels rise.

Such growth is of continued importance. The Canada pension plan will provide, on a permanent basis, the scale of pensions for low and moderate incomes which is an appropriate first charge on a society that values the security and dignity of those whose working life is past. But there will remain full scope for private saving about this minimum. The scope will be enlarged with economic progress. The individual, in association in many cases with his employer, will remain responsible for the saving which a rich and growing country needs for its further economic development, and by which more and more people can afford to provide for themselves a truly comfortable retirement.

International Comparisons

Since their inception, pension programs in many countries have changed greatly. Although a number of older systems date back to the late nineteeth century, the majority of the programs were initiated in the decades immediately preceding or following world war II.

The programs in effect in Great Britain and France were extensively revised in 1946 and 1945, respectively. Revisions occurred in the West German program in 1957 and in the Swedish program in 1959.

It is of significance that the programs in Great Britain and Sweden were both revised in 1959 for the purpose of adding graduated benefits to the existing flat rate benefits. Most pension programs now in operation relate the rates of pensions in some way to the pensioners' prior earnings.

The benefits under the Canada pension plan will inevitably be compared with those available under the old age, survivors and disability insurance program in the United States. Set out below are the rates of benefit payable to workers with no dependents but with various average monthly earnings, up to the maximum under the United States program. The minimum pension under the United States program is $40, compared with the flat rate $75 at age 70, or $51 at age 65, in Canada.

Pensions in 1975 if Earnings Levels in Canada Remain Unchanged and if the U.S. Program is Unchanged

	Canada		United States
Average Monthly Earnings	Benefits at age 70	Benefits at age 65	Benefits at age 65 or 70
$	$	$	$
100	95	71	59
150	105	81	73
200	115	91	84
250	125	101	95
300	135	111	105
375	150	126	121
400	150	126	127

Survivors and Disabled Pensions

A full program of social insurance would provide benefits for survivors and disabled persons who have not reached an age at which benefit would normally be considered an old age pension. Doubts have been expressed whether such benefits are within federal jurisdiction under the existing provisions of the British North America Act. Certainly such programs as now exist for these people are provincially administered. This is, accordingly, a subject which requires further consultation.

The government proposes to establish for the time being its program for retirement pensions with benefits for survivors who are also aged 65 or over. After administrative experience of the operation of the basic plan has been gained, it will be the intention of the federal government to propose the addition of benefits for widows with dependant children, for orphans, and for disabled people.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 18, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

LABOUR RELATIONS

HAL BANKS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF REMOVAL FROM OFFICE

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the Minister of Labour has a communication he wishes to make at this time.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed today by the chairman of the board of trustees, Hon. Mr. Justice V. L. Dryer, that after long consideration of the affairs and interests of the S.I.U. of Canada and of the maritime industry, the trustees have determined that it is not in the interests of that union, of the shipping industry of Canada nor of the public at large that Mr. H. C. Banks remain in office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: Accordingly, and in keeping with the powers given to them by parliament under the Maritime Transportation Unions Trustees Act, the trustees have today removed Mr. Banks from the position he has occupied as president of the S.I.U. of Canada. The trustees have named Mr. Charles Turner, a former officer and still a member of the brotherhood of railway and steamship clerks, freight handlers and express and station employees, who has been on the staff of the board of trustees for two months, to serve as president of the S.I.U. of Canada. He will continue in this position until other arrangements are made. Mr. Charles H. Millard has moved into the offices in the S.I.U. of Canada building in Montreal, and the union will be administered under his direct supervision. The trustees will continue their overall direction of the five unions under trusteeship.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): We have listened with interest, Mr. Speaker, to the statement made by the Minister of Labour. I recall that yesterday I posed a question to the minister as to whether there was any truth in the allegation that Mr. Banks would be relieved of his position as president of the S.I.U. in accordance with an agreement between the S.I.U., the United States government and the Canadian government. The minister said yesterday he was not aware of this situation. It seems to me that there must have been more truth than fiction in the rumour that was prevalent as late as yesterday. I am also led to believe that the minister is not revealing all the facts with regard to this situation and that the Ottawa government must have played some part in connection with the decision in this matter.

I believe that most of us who were in the house when the trustees were appointed felt that they would carry out the recommendations of the Norris report, because it was as a result of those recommendations that the trusteeship was originally established. The purpose was to settle the situation on the great lakes. However, the trustees, until this action today, have not felt it was necessary to follow the Norris recommendations, and this has led to dissatisfaction on the part of many people who have felt that in order to clean up the great lakes situation the trustees should in fact follow the Norris recommendations.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I am sure all members of the house greeted the announcement made by the minister with a good deal of enthusiasm. It is certainly a first step that has been needed for a long time. I wonder if the minister would give consideration to calling the industrial relations committee together at an early date so that members could get further reports from the board of trustees about their future plans for rectifying other matters upon which action is needed.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, the house obviously expected that the time would come when the Minister of Labour would announce the expulsion of Mr. Banks as president of the seafarers' union after all that has been going on for a certain number of years.

On the other hand, the Minister of Labour also announced the appointment of a president who will take over the administration of the union. That president was appointed by the trustees. I would therefore have a reservation to make about that appointment. I should like it to be ratified by a general meeting of all members of the union concerned, because even if it is justified, that action on the part of the trustees is still subject to the approval of the workers concerned.

I think the Minister of Labour would do well to bring that remark to the attention of the trustees so that they may have the appointment approved as soon as possible to protect the democratic rights of S.I.U. members.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, nobody in Canada will take exception to the decision made by the trustees of the S.I.U. with regard to Hal Banks who, I am quite sure, does not deserve anybody's confidence in Canada and more particularly that of the members of the S.I.U.

However, I endorse the remark just made by the hon. member for Lake St. John to the effect that the appointment of the new president, Mr. Turner, goes a little beyond the democratic spirit that should prevail in a labour union and that this appointment should be ratified as soon as possible by the union itself.

At all events, the removal of Hal Banks will benefit every really democratic union in our country.

[Text]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION OF NON-CONFIDENCE IN DEPUTY SPEAKER

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe) moved:

That, in view of the unacceptable actions of the Deputy Speaker, the hon. member for Stormont, during the sitting on Friday, March 13, 1964, from 8 to 10 p.m.

(1) In transgressing a standing order of the house which requires that unanimous consent be given to waive the obligation for two days' notice of the presentation of a resolution prescribed by standing order 41;

(2) In transgressing standing order 42 of the house which requires that the member who presents a motion of urgency, with the unanimous consent of the house, without notice thereof as required in standing order 41, must previously explain the urgency of the same; and

(3) In depriving certain members of the house of a right and privilege recognized by standing orders;

For these reasons, be it resolved that the Deputy Speaker no longer has the confidence of this house.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we have before us today a motion which is serious and also very rare in the House of Commons. It is a non-confidence motion against the Deputy Speaker for his conduct of last Friday, March 13, from 8 to 10 p.m.

Mr. Speaker, I shall try to introduce our arguments and evidence in as realistic a way as possible and without feelings of hatred or hostility, and to state the facts as objectively as possible for the information of members of this house.

[Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John).]

That happened, as we know, when the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) presented a motion recommending the sending of Canadian troops to Cyprus through the United Nations.

Personally, I was in favour of the Prime Minister's motion, but I did not approve the procedure followed that evening. Therefore, my criticism is aimed today not at the motion itself but at the procedure.

Let us go over the facts. In the course of the debate on supplementary estimates, the country's Prime Minister walked into the house in the afternoon and asked for unanimous consent to revert to motions, as reported on page 892, left hand column, of Hansard for March 13, 1964.

The first point on which I call the attention of the house is that immediately after the Prime Minister asked permission to revert to motions, the Acting Speaker, Mr. Batten, rose and asked:

Does the house give unanimous consent to revert to motions?

And hon. members replied:

Agreed.

I should like the hon. members of the house to take good note of what happened. The Acting Speaker took the trouble to rise and ask whether the Prime Minister had the unanimous consent of the house.

The Prime Minister then rose and, on motions, as can be found on page 892 of Hansard, he said:

If this announcement is received from New York before 6 p.m. I shall ask for unanimous consent for the house to consider this afternoon and this evening, if necessary, a resolution approving Canadian participation in the United Nations peace keeping force in the manner described in the resolution.

So the Prime Minister told the house that he would be asking unanimous consent to sit in order to discuss a resolution approving Canadian participation in the United Nations force.

That was the purpose of the Prime Minister's motion. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), as he had a right to, agreed to give unanimous consent on behalf of his party, and so did the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas). It was also the same in the case of the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson).

But the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) rose at that time and said, as can be seen on page 894 of Hansard:

I am entirely against the Canadian parliament being asked to sit this evening or tomorrow, or to hold a special sitting—

Mark these words—

—in order to consider whether troops should be sent to Cyprus or to that continent.

It is quite clear that the hon. member for Villeneuve, speaking on behalf of the other members of this group, was objecting to unanimous consent of the house being given to consider a motion to send Canadian troops to Cyprus, and therefore a 48 hours' notice was required before it could be discussed.

Mr. Speaker, there you have the initial facts, or what happened in the afternoon.

Now, let us see what took place in the evening. It was therefore obvious that unanimous consent had not been given in the afternoon to the presentation of such a motion or such a resolution without 48 hours' notice. Consequently, members left, as many of them usually do, around five o'clock p.m. to catch the last train or the last plane to their respective constituencies. That is why, as far as our group is concerned, there were only three of us in the house in the evening and that was not enough to ask for a vote on the Deputy Speaker's decision. However, I would point out that 150 members were absent from the house on that night, so that members from all parties were absent.

After recess the Prime Minister introduced a resolution without giving the required 48 hours' notice, as required by standing order 41. The Prime Minister introduced his resolution at the very beginning of the sitting. He did not ask for the unanimous consent of the house. To support this statement I shall first of all quote from page 954 of the French text of the debates of Friday last, and I shall thereafter quote the English text because there is a distinction to be made in the translation. He said:

Je demande à proposer, appuyé par mon collègue le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures (M. Martin), la résolution suivante:

He did not request unanimous consent of the house; he gave nobody an opportunity to refuse or accept that consent. He simply said:

Je demande à proposer, appuyé par mon collègue—

The English text is not exactly the same or has not exactly the same meaning. On page 910 of the English debates, in the right hand side column, it says:

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): By leave, I wish to move, seconded by my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

[Translation]

He therefore did not ask for the unanimous consent of the house. He simply said: by leave, I wish to move—

Mr. Speaker, between the moment he said he wished, by leave, to move a motion and the motion itself, there was not even one second. There was not a single indication of approval or disapproval. He just went on. Even after the motion was read, he did not stop a second. He just added his explanations. After four lines in the French text, and five lines in the English text, the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger), interrupted and asked—this is on page 911 of Hansard:

On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Do the rules of the house allow the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to bring forward a motion without having received beforehand the unanimous consent of the house?

Then, the Deputy Speaker answered—this is still in the same column:

The Prime Minister asked for leave to present the motion and he is proceeding on that basis.

And, somebody having risen to say:

On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker added:

The Prime Minister asked for leave, there was no objection, and he proceeded with his remarks.

I point out that no one in this house was given the opportunity to raise an objection and that the Deputy Speaker who was then in the chair did not ask whether anyone had any objection to raise or whether there was unanimous consent, and the Prime Minister himself had not asked whether there was unanimous consent.

At that time again, we raised an objection. Immediately after that statement from the Deputy Speaker the hon. member for Charlevoix rose and said:

Mr. Speaker, we want to place our objection on record. We do not agree to the Prime Minister proceeding with this motion.

Mr. Speaker, before going any further, I should like to call your attention to one thing. When the hon. member for Charlevoix rose to put his objection on record, barely 14 seconds had elapsed between the moment when the Prime Minister finished reading his motion and the time when he started his explanations, only 14 seconds between the moment when he was allowed to read his motion and the moment when the hon. member for Charlevoix stood up. As evidence, Mr. Speaker, I would ask all members of the house to check on their watch the exact time the hon. member for Charlevoix would have taken before objecting after the reading of the motion.

I shall read in English what the Prime Minister took time to say:

[Text]

In speaking to this resolution I should like to begin by telling the house that while the situation on the island of Cyprus has deteriorated to a point at which there is grave danger of conflict—even greater conflict—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, exactly 14 seconds.

An hon. Member: Sixteen seconds.

Another hon. Member: Fifteen seconds.

Mr. Gregoire: Fourteen seconds. Someone said it was 16 seconds and another one 15 seconds. Let us say 15 seconds, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: You read too fast.

Mr. Gregoire: —I would like you to note that if somebody from another corner of the house had risen when I raised the point of order, at least five to six seconds would have elapsed before the Speaker recognized that other member, which means that the margin is reduced to ten seconds. There is another thing I would point out, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger) made use of his earphones to listen to the interpretation of the explanations which the Prime Minister gave immediately after introducing his motion, and when he had grasped the subject matter of the Prime Minister's speech by means of the interpretation and the earphones four or five additional seconds may have elapsed, which would mean that the hon. member for Charlevoix would have let five or six seconds pass between the moment when the Prime Minister finished reading his motion and the instant he rose to object, and the Prime Minister never asked the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. Speaker, those are the facts. An hon. member had hardly five to six seconds to rise and register his disagreement in respect of the unanimous consent. The hon. member for Charlevoix could not rise before the right hon. Prime Minister's motion was read out, because it would have been illogical to do so. If the right hon. Prime Minister had risen to introduce a motion tending to increase family allowances, the hon. member for Charlevoix would not have opposed its being introduced immediately. If there had been a request for unanimous consent to consider a motion concerning unemployment, the hon. member for Charlevoix would not have objected. This is why the Prime Minister had to be granted the necessary time to read his motion, to see if unanimous consent should be granted or not. Once the motion was read, the hon. member for Charlevoix rose and objected; he indicated his disagreement to the unanimous consent scarcely five or six seconds after the reading of the motion had started.

If we consider that the hon. member for Charlevoix should have risen as soon as the Prime Minister had finished saying: "By leave, I move", the hon. member for Charlevoix would only have taken two seconds to object.

Mr. Speaker, after the hon. member had placed his objection on record I rose in my turn to make a few remarks and take exception to the procedure followed. Here is what the Deputy Speaker said, as reported on page 911 of Hansard:

> The Chair already made a ruling in this respect. The Prime Minister preceded his remarks by saying that he had a motion to submit with the consent of the house.
>
> As no objection was raised, the Chair suggested that the Prime Minister be given the opportunity to continue his remarks.

As we have just seen, five or six seconds after the Prime Minister had begun his remarks, the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger) having risen, the Deputy Speaker said this:

> I can only repeat the ruling which I made a moment ago. We have already initiated the procedure—

And mark these words:

> —with the unanimous consent of the house, since no objection has been made.

Is this the unanimous consent of the house when no objection has been made? Hardly five or six seconds had elapsed since the Prime Minister had started to speak.

Mr. Speaker, those are facts which speak for themselves. I maintain that in those circumstances, the position taken by the Deputy Speaker was unaccountable and inconsistent with standing order 41. I shall now sum up the three points of my motion.

Standing order 41 provides that in order to introduce a motion without giving 48 hours' notice, the unanimous consent of the house is required. The right hon. Prime Minister never did ask for unanimous consent. The Chair did not ask whether the Prime Minister had unanimous consent, as is always done. I have been a member for nearly two years now and when a minister, a member or the right hon. Prime Minister rose to present a motion without having given 48 hours' notice, or any motion requiring 48 hours' notice or unanimous consent of the house, the Deputy Speaker or the committee chairman has always stood and asked: "Does the Prime Minister or the hon. member have unanimous consent of the house?" However, that evening, that procedure was not followed.

The hon. member for Charlevoix raised an objection as soon as he could. I have just shown that five or six seconds may have elapsed between the time the Prime Minister got to his feet and the moment he started to explain his motion.

One cannot raise an objection against a motion unless one knows what it is all about. That is precisely what the hon. member for Charlevoix did. He protested as soon as he knew what the motion dealt with, that is five or six seconds after reading of the motion had begun.

I claim that the Deputy Speaker took an unfortunate and inexplicable attitude that evening, a prejudiced and partial position. I proved it by quoting from his own remarks which appear in Hansard.

The Prime Minister asked leave to present the motion and he proceeded on that basis.

The Deputy Speaker stated that no objection had been raised and later on he said this:

> The Prime Minister preceded his remarks by saying that he had a motion to submit—

He said that the Prime Minister preceded his remarks by saying that he had a motion to submit with the consent of the house.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is what the Prime Minister said:

> By leave, I wish to move, seconded by my colleague—

He did not ask the unanimous consent of the house.

Therefore, that evening, in spite of the objections raised in our corner, the members were denied their rights and privileges by the Deputy Speaker, in order to comply with the wishes of the right hon. Prime Minister.

And here the Prime Minister himself, by his statement, admits that he is not sure of having unanimous consent of the house. Here is what he said as reported on page 911, left hand column:

> I began my remarks by asking for leave to present this motion and I had the understanding—

He simply says:

> —I had the understanding—

He does not state that he had the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister himself, by his silence that evening, admitted implicitly that he had not secured the unanimous consent of the house. He began by saying:

> I would not have ventured to ask for the leave of the house to bring forward this motion had I not been convinced by information I have received that there has been a very serious deterioration in the situation on the island of Cyprus.

He had the floor at that time, but he never said or admitted that he had the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. Speaker, I say that the Prime Minister never asked—and we can find evidence of this in Hansard—nor received the unanimous consent of the house, despite the statements of the Deputy Speaker to that effect.

The second paragraph of my resolution concerns standing order 42 which stipulates that when an hon. member wishes to move a motion in case of urgent and pressing necessity—and the issue we considered that evening was a case of urgent and pressing necessity—he can do so by unanimous consent of the house, without notice having been given under standing order 41, provided the mover explained the urgency beforehand.

Now, the Prime Minister did not prove the urgency of the resolution before asking the unanimous consent of the house. The Deputy Speaker, whose responsibility it was to apply the standing orders, did not call him to order and did not ask him to explain the urgency of his motion. And as can be seen on pages 922 and 923 of the official report, I pointed out this fact to the Deputy Speaker who disregarded what I said.

With regard to the third part of our resolution, I submit that hon. members' privileges were ignored and transgressed that evening.

First of all, an hon. member can object to unanimous consent in a case such as the one we were facing that evening. Then, his objection has the same value, regardless of where he sits in the house, whether it is the hon. member for Charlevoix, the hon. member from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), or any other member of the house, or even a minister who makes the objection. In fact, when a member objects to the introduction of a motion, without a previous notice of 48 hours, in short when he refuses to agree to such a procedure, his non-acceptance is just as imperative as that of a member of any party in this house.

Second, we must admit that some members sit quite far from the Speaker so that it takes them a little longer to be seen and recognized. And in this case, that was the situation Friday night; five or six seconds elapsed and the Deputy Speaker should have taken them into consideration.

Third, there is the matter of simultaneous interpretation which we get through our earphones. We have referred to that matter here on many occasions. In fact, as reported on page 916 of Hansard, we pointed out that the interpretation always reached us a few seconds late. But in spite of the fact that we mentioned that point to the Deputy Speaker, he did not take it into account. And yet, we have been saying so on several occasions in the house.

Mr. Speaker, I think that I have sufficiently made my point and in conclusion, I wish to say that last Friday, we witnessed some unacceptable actions of several persons in this house.

In my opinion, the first to be blamed is the Prime Minister of the country who has violated the rights of the hon. members.

In the afternoon, the Prime Minister had asked the unanimous consent of the house to introduce the resolution that evening. He knew at that time that he could not get the unanimous consent of the house. He knew that there were members who would object.

Moreover, the Prime Minister acted in such a way that no member of this house could exercise his rights. He asked for permission to introduce his motion, he put it forward and then continued with his comments without giving anybody a chance to use his privileges.

In order to be polite, we let the Prime Minister put forward his motion, but he did not give anyone the chance to say whether or not he objected. He knew that some members of our group were opposed to it, but despite all that, despite the fact that he knew since early in the afternoon that there was opposition, he came back with his motion and did not give anybody a chance to put forth his objections.

In my opinion, the Prime Minister knew what would happen. He acted in such a way that the rights of hon. members be not recognized and that they could have no opportunity to exercise their privileges in the house. I believe that he should be the first to blame in all this.

Mr. Speaker, others should also be blamed. All the members who were in the house that evening, and especially those who are always particularly aware of the rules, those who protest against the smallest breach of the rules, when that serves their purpose or when such intervention can favour their cause. But, as this did not favour their cause, they did not do it that evening.

If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had intended to raise an objection, he would have raised it, but that evening he did not, he remained in his seat and did not say a word. But he was the first on his feet to give advice to the Prime Minister on procedure and application of standing orders, especially regarding the rule for exemption from obtaining unanimous consent of the house to carry on the debate. But when the rights of members were ignored, the member for Winnipeg North Centre did not rise, nor did the leader of the official opposition, who has always been a great upholder of parliamentary procedure in the house. This also applies to the member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) and the member for Edmonton West or East, I forget now, the former speaker of the house (Mr. Lambert), and to all the others who are so sensitive about standing orders. That evening, however, none of them stood up, they all remained seated, without saying a word. I think they are partly to blame because of the silence they have observed.

[Text]

Mr. Lambert: On a question of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the hon. member and the house to the fact that I was not in the city of Ottawa on Friday and could not be present at that time.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I beg the hon. member for Edmonton West's pardon, but on the other hand, I should thank him because he gave hon. members an opportunity to notice that between the moment he rose to put his question of privilege, and the moment you recognized him, seven or eight seconds elapsed, which gives point to my argument of a while ago.

Mr. Lambert: I do not speak as fast as you.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, last Friday night, the hon. members who were in the house, not only the ones I identified a while ago, but also the others, created for themselves a special atmosphere and in order to achieve their purpose, they preferred to turn a deaf ear and keep silent on the breaking of the rules which happened that evening.

Another offender was the Deputy Speaker whose mission is to be non-partisan and respectful of the rights of hon. members, whether they be members of the opposition, of any group, or of the government. He is the guardian and the defender of the rules of the house. He should have been above the developments of the urgency resolution and see to it that the rights and privileges of hon. members be respected, which was not done.

That omission is all the more serious that in spite of our representations, the Deputy Speaker transgressed his mandate and scorned the nobility of his office.

It is true that we might have another party in power tomorrow, or another one the next day, but if we put up with such a situation, we should be ashamed of ourselves, because we will stand in danger of a degradation of the rights and privileges of hon. members and also of the standing orders of the house.

Mr. Speaker, we all have the responsibility to hold very high the nobility and the dignity of the office of the Speaker. And that omission is even more serious for us, because the two years we were here, was the first time we witnessed such a situation.

I always considered and I still consider the Deputy Speaker, the hon. member for Stormont, to be a gentleman, an amiable and respectable person—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gregoire: —but his error is fatal. Mr. Speaker, I am not afraid to repeat: I always considered the hon. member for Stormont as a gentleman, but, unfortunately such an error cannot be ignored, especially in the circumstances which prevailed that night. And the lesson to be drawn from this instance should serve coming generations, and if not, the illustration we saw may also serve future generations.

Mr. Speaker, I introduced this motion without bitterness and without hatred or enmity against anybody whatsoever. In fact, some hon. members may be more to blame than the Deputy Speaker. On the other hand, perhaps part of the blame rests on ourselves, in which case, we are ready to accept the blame. We also wish the facts to be known and we want the opposition parties, especially the minor ones, to be assured that their rights and privileges will be guaranteed in future, otherwise, we shall not know exactly where we are going.

[Text]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, under ordinary circumstances I would not participate in the debate. However, during the course of his remarks the hon. member for Lapointe chose to bring me within the ambit of his criticism. Indeed, he covered practically every member of the house.

For that reason I think some reference should be made to the motion. After all, as Leader of the Opposition, as the Prime Minister has said on more than one occasion, I am an officer of this house.

All through the years I have been one of those who have strongly stood against the actions of any government which would trample on the rights and privileges of the opposition. I took that view not only when in opposition but also when we enjoyed an overwhelming majority in the house. My desire has been at all times to preserve inviolate the rights and privileges of minorities in this chamber. If we should allow action to be taken that is contrary to the privileges and rules of parliament, then indeed it will not be very long before the rights of private members are lost. I preface what I have to say by these general observations.

I was here on Friday afternoon and evening. I listened to the arguments that were advanced. I think, in retrospect, there is no member of this house who will not frankly admit that an error was made on Friday. It is just like the law. Over and over again we become bound by precedents which have arisen for good objectives. Bad law is often made by judges who are endeavouring to achieve abstract justice, and then the pathway of today becomes the highway of precedent of tomorrow. All of us wanted to do our part to assure that Canada would discharge her responsibilities. This could have been done in the regular way with full regard to the rights of parliament. I would say more than this if the Prime Minister were here today, but he is absent I know for good and sufficient reasons.

Following the argument before lunch time, it had been made clear that unanimous consent was not required for the house to sit at eight o'clock on Friday night. There was no discussion regarding the requirement of unanimity for the presentation of the motion made by the Prime Minister. He knew and the government knew that unanimity was required.

However strong and overwhelming the desire of the members of this house may be, when unanimity is required one, two or three can prevent the operation of the ordinary processes of the house by raising an objection. I recall one occasion many years ago when a Speaker occupying your position, sir, on a motion requiring unanimity said "All those in favour say yea, and against say nay." Then he said, "I think the yeas have the majority, and therefore I apply the rule of unanimity". This was deleted from Hansard.

I think the government was responsible for what happened. Certainly there was haste. Certainly there was a desire on the part of members generally to carry out the responsibility of this nation. I can say though, in the light of what is taking place, it is very apparent that the government chose this occasion for haste so that it might present its view to the world, having done something for the benefit of mankind. There has been a lot of boasting about it. The fact remains that any shortcomings were the shortcomings of the government. We have a co-ordinator today to assist the government at a salary of $25,000 a year, I think. Well, there have been two or three examples of what co-ordination has achieved in exchanging portfolios between the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Forestry. This must be another example. What is needed is a co-ordinator to co-ordinate the co-ordinator, if this action is an example of what happens under this new regime.

Having said that, let us look at the record now. The Prime Minister knew that he required leave because his first words, as recorded on page 910 of Hansard, were:

> By leave, I wish to move, seconded by my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

He had no leave. No leave had been asked for and no leave had been given. When I say that, I in no way mean to imply that a refractory few should be able to hold up the operations of this house. However, these are the rules. When the rules were brought into effect, parliament was not bifurcated or trifurcated or divided into a multiplicity of opposition groups. The rules were never intended to be used to prevent the operation of those things that are desired by the overwhelming membership of the house. However, the rules are there and the Prime Minister knew them. Then the hon. member for Charlevoix raised an objection in the following words:

> Do the rules of the house allow the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to bring forward a motion without having received beforehand the unanimous consent of the house?

The Deputy Speaker said he believed the Prime Minister asked for leave to present his motion and he was proceeding on that basis. This was the understanding of the Deputy Speaker. He thought that leave had been given. I emphasize that, and I shall deal with it later when I refer particularly to the words of the motion. I quote from the same page of Hansard where the Prime Minister is recorded as saying:

> I began my remarks by asking for leave to present this motion and I had the understanding—

He did not begin his remarks by asking for leave. He simply said "By leave of the house—". In other words he implied that leave had been given. This is where the mistake began.

Now, sir, let us read the resolution that is before the house. It is to the effect that the Deputy Speaker, the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lamoureux), transgressed a standing order of the house. I know all of us—I say this with great respect, Mr. Speaker—at some time or other would have made a different decision than the Speaker, had we been in the chair.

Speakers are not infallible. In the courts of law—and of course this is no analogy—a dog is entitled to one bite. Surely a deputy speaker is entitled to one mistake, if a mistake was made; if we were to pass this resolution we would be condemning the Deputy Speaker on the basis that he had done something flagrantly against the rights and privileges of this house.

Because he made a mistake are we to vote in favour of a motion that says "For these reasons, be it resolved that the Deputy Speaker no longer has the confidence of this house"? Are we to condemn him because of a misunderstanding? Are we to condemn the Deputy Speaker because of the fact that it was the government that made the mistake? I will not join in that.

This is too serious a resolution. It will have a tremendous effect if passed. It amounts to censure of the Deputy Speaker for what must have been, on the basis of the discussion, a mistake made by him through the failure of the government to act as it should.

The hon. gentleman argues that there are shortcomings all around, and this is shown from the fact that he made pretty nearly all of us guilty. He pointed out one, or two, or three. Let us be frank about this. Why did we not rise, Mr. Speaker? If there had been anyone taking objection on Friday night, it would have been reported all over the free world that we were divided within this house on a matter affecting the welfare of the world.

There was no intentional infraction or breach of the rules by the Deputy Speaker. That is admitted by the hon. gentleman, because in his own words he has spread the guilt over all members in all parts of the house. In that I do not agree with him. I put it over there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With all the co-ordination they had, how could they have produced such a progeny?

Mr. Grafftey: It is easy for them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: However, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the fear expressed by the hon. gentleman that this will be a precedent for the future was, to say the least, overstated. There will be no precedent in this. I would be the last to fail to rise to defend the right of one member in this house against unfairness. What took place is past. What we are now being asked to do is to place the stigma of responsibility for wrongdoing on the Deputy Speaker. That stand I will not take.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman and I have been in this house a long time together. We have had many occasions for deep controversy, and while I do not agree with all of his argument today, I hope he will permit me to say that I have never seen him uphold his views so effectively as he has done in the last few minutes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He has done that in a way that takes into account his understandable interest to jibe at the administration but, at the same time, preserve the integrity of a very important institution in this house, that of the presiding officer, in this instance the Deputy Speaker.

This motion calls on the house to condemn the hon. member for Stormont, in his capacity as presiding officer, sitting in the chair of His Honour the Speaker when the house was dealing on Friday night with perhaps the most important matter that has come to it in a long time.

The right hon. gentleman said that if there was an error, the error was that of the government. I hope he will permit me to say, as sincerely as he did, that the error, if there was an error—and I am not prepared to admit fully that there was—was an error shared by every hon. member of the house, including the right hon. gentleman himself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martineau: Explain.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will explain, because the Prime Minister said at eight o'clock on Friday night last, as recorded at page 910 of Hansard:

> By leave, I wish to move, seconded by my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

—a motion which would have permitted us to contribute to the international force in Cyprus. Then the Prime Minister went on to say:

> In speaking to this resolution I should like to begin by telling the house that while the situation on the island of Cyprus has deteriorated to a point at which there is grave danger of conflict—even greater conflict—

As I have shown, Mr. Speaker, he had gone on speaking for some time when the hon. member for Charlevoix rose and asked:

> Do the rules of the house allow the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to bring forward a motion without having received beforehand the unanimous consent of the house?

Now, there is no obligation in our rules requiring the use of the phrase "with unanimous consent." There is a requirement in our rules, that, in certain instances, no action can be taken by the house without unanimous consent; but if, as in this particular instance, the words used are "by leave", they can have the same implication as "with unanimous consent".

Who is there to argue that the words "by leave" in this context, in this particular situation, did not have the same meaning as the use of the words "with the unanimous consent"? In any event it is clear that the Prime Minister asked "by leave", and no one objected. I am not complaining about the failure to object on the part of anyone. I am not throwing this out as an argument to knock down what the right hon. gentleman has said. I am simply pointing to the fact that, for very good reasons, the great majority in the house felt that it was necessary to proceed.

No one did object, even though any hon. gentleman could have objected. The right hon. gentleman himself might have objected. He would have had time to object. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) would have had time to object. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), who objected later, might well have taken steps immediately to object, but he did not; and the hon. member for Charlevoix, who was the first to object, under our rules did not object in time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gregoire: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes.

Mr. Gregoire: How many seconds does it take for an hon. member to object within sufficient time?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, I do not think my response to that would help the hon. gentleman any more than his question helps any one of us to elucidate this difficulty.

The right hon. gentleman stated something a few moments ago which I believe is quite correct. An understanding of the mood of the house is relevant to an appreciation of why the house did not register any particular objection. Why was this? It was because we were faced with a very serious situation. Word had just come from the United Nations that the security council had been advised by the secretary general that an international force was being established; and this house, true to its obligations to the United Nations charter, wanted to act with dispatch. And because we wanted to act with dispatch there was no one who was disposed to object to the Prime Minister's statement: "By leave, I wish to move—" and the following words which he used, except that the hon. member for Lapointe spoke later.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the exchanges recorded in Hansard on page 910, and subsequent pages, and on page 892 and subsequent pages at an earlier stage, clearly indicate that what I have said represents the true situation, the correct sequence of events. However, even if it should be assumed that there was an error; or that the rights of minorities were not fully protected, I would ask the house to recall the intervention of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, perhaps as authoritative a student of our procedures as any member of this house.

Mr. Knowles: I will quote that some day.

Mr. Churchill: Let us not re-elect him, now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Let us remember his comments on citation 41 and, later, on citation 42 to which the hon. member for Lapointe made reference. This very point was discussed on Friday night, and the only member to deal with it, other than the hon. member for Lapointe, was the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He never dealt with it.

Mr. Knowles: There will be an opportunity for me to speak later, but I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs should keep the record straight on this point. Any intervention I made on Friday was concerned with standing order 41, and had to do with sitting at night and postponing the hour of adjournment. It had nothing to do with whether or not the motion was in order. But I will speak on that when my turn comes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank the hon. gentleman for that correction. He dealt with standing order 41. The hon. member for Lapointe had argued that there had to be 48 hours notice in respect of the motion for adjournment as well as for other—

Mr. Gregoire: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And, in the event, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre effectively dealt with that, as recorded at page 921.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, I never objected to the absence of 48 hours' notice with respect to altering the time of adjournment. It was just on the question of the motion, the presentation of the resolution. I wish to challenge the Secretary of State for External Affairs on that point. He will look long before finding anything to support his contention there.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All I was saying amounts to this, the other night the hon. gentleman insisted that citation 41, and now, today, citation 42, had an application to this situation. I was simply mentioning that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre effectively dealt on Friday night with any relevance that citation 41, requiring 48 hours' notice, might have with regard to the question before us.

But, surely, the issue has been correctly stated by the Leader of the Opposition. I deny that there was any error on the part of the administration. I do not deny we were all moved at that moment by the need to consider a vital matter affecting a threat to the peace of the world. That situation, which certainly is not a normal one, has to be borne in mind in connection with the exercise of our procedures the other night. The important consideration at this moment is that, as a result of the procedure on Friday night, the hon. gentleman is not condemning the government; he is condemning one of the officers of this house, the Deputy Speaker, who presided over our deliberations on Friday.

Speaking for the Prime Minister, who has a slight cold and is not in his place today, I would say, as the Leader of the Opposition, as an officer of the house has said, whatever may have been the justification for condemning speakers in the course of our parliamentary history, there will not be found any precedent to warrant the present occasion as one for condemnation. Indeed, I would say that on the basis of the words referred to by the Leader of the Opposition as reported on page 911, there is clear indication that the Deputy Speaker is in no way deserving of the proposed vote of censure. For the Deputy Speaker said:

> I believe the Prime Minister asked leave to present the motion and he is proceeding on that basis.

The Prime Minister said:

> I began my remarks by asking for leave to present this motion and I had the understanding—

There was no immediate objection, from hon. gentlemen who sit down in the corner, to this statement by the Deputy Speaker. He said, I repeat: "I believe the Prime Minister asked leave...". No one took exception to that. The Deputy Speaker himself said he understood that the Prime Minister had asked leave and, undoubtedly, he made that statement after recalling what the Prime Minister had in fact, said: "By leave, I wish to move—" and so on.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order. I have already dealt with that aspect. About ten or 12 lines later on, as reported in Hansard, I said—and I bring this particularly to the hon. gentleman's attention:

> If I am told that the Prime Minister only asks leave to make a statement, then we agree, let him do so. On the other hand, if we are told that the Prime Minister asks for the unanimous consent of the house to introduce a motion, and unanimous consent has been given by the house this is quite another matter.

I have spoken already on that point and expressed my view that the Prime Minister never asked unanimous consent or leave.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There were other points which the hon. gentleman raised. I did not deal with them because I do not believe they have any pertinence to the issue before us. What this motion seeks to do at this time is to reprimand, to express dissatisfaction, to say that the house no longer has any confidence in the Deputy Speaker. There is no evidence before us, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, to warrant such a motion. We all know that the Deputy Speaker, one of the younger members of this house, fluent in both languages, has, by his record as a presiding officer, shown not only alertness and capacity but a sense of fairness and impartiality in keeping with the high office which is his. I would ask the hon. gentleman who has made this motion, and who has supported the substance of the motion presented by the Prime Minister, although, as is his right, he has objected to the procedures involved, in the light of the vital circumstances that confronted not only the government, not only every member of this house, but members of the United Nations who are anxious to prevent a threat to peace, to recognize, in the goodness of his heart and judgment, that he does not serve the cause of parliament well when he seeks to condemn the presiding officer of this house. The Deputy Speaker courageously and efficiently dealt with a situation which resulted in parliament having one of its noblest days on Friday last.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) correctly referred to the motion that he has presented as dealing with a very serious matter. In fact, in the institution of parliament nothing could be more serious than a questioning of the integrity of a presiding officer. I am sure the hon. member for Lapointe realizes that if this motion were to carry, the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lamoureux) would have no alternative but to resign his position as Deputy Speaker. I am sure the hon. member for Lapointe realizes that if, in fact, the motion were defeated on a vote but a substantial number of members voted for it, the Deputy Speaker would be in the same position. For reasons I shall give, I hope that at the end of the debate he will consider asking the unanimous consent of the house to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker, it may seem a bit unfair that one person should be in the position where, through making one mistake, he should have to suffer the kind of consequence that would follow from the passing of this motion. That, of course, is simply an indication of the exalted nature of the position held by the Speaker of the House of Commons. It is a position that does require the utmost impartiality, the highest integrity; and those who accept this position recognize that fact. But I think the hon. member for Lapointe, and all of us, have to consider very seriously whether the question that has been put before us is of the kind that should lead the house, should lead even a few members of the house, to call in question the integrity of a presiding officer.

It has been the practice this afternoon—and it is not unique in parliament—for members to stand and place the blame somewhere else. I am going to do something different; I am going to break one of the rules of political life, which is that a politician is never supposed to admit that he made a mistake. I want to say that I share the blame for what happened on Friday night, and I refuse to stand here and put the blame on the hon. member for Stormont; I refuse to put all the blame on the government; I refuse to put all the blame on everybody else. I share in that blame.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: If a mistake was made Friday night—and I believe that a mistake or two was made—we all made it, including the member for Winnipeg North Centre, including the members of my hon. friend's group, ten of whom were not even here—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: —despite standing order 5, which says:

> Every member is bound to attend the service of the house, unless leave of absence has been given him by the house.

We are all in this, and I suggest that the only answer—

Mr. Gregoire: I suppose, Mr. Speaker, in view of what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is saying, at the end of this debate we will be responsible for what happened. I should like to point out what I pointed out in my remarks earlier, that unanimous consent had been asked for in the middle of the afternoon and was refused; so everyone in our party was entitled to think there would be no sitting on Friday night. Also, about 150 members were missing from the house on Friday night.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that under the rules the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) will have the privilege of replying later.

Mr. Knowles: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the point we have just been discussing between the two of us, that one cannot argue with the words of standing order 5, and members who have not been given leave of absence by the house have no right to complain about what happened—

Mr. Gregoire: Where is the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson)?

Mr. Knowles: They cannot complain about what happened in their absence, which is what the members of that group are doing.

Mr. Gregoire: Where is the Prime Minister?

Non-Confidence in Deputy Speaker

Mr. Knowles: Let us again review what happened. It is too bad that this takes time, but the day is shot anyway, so far as the budget debate is concerned.

Mr. Winkler: So is the budget.

Mr. Knowles: It is too bad that this takes time; but let us review what happened and keep some things clear. Procedurally there were two separate issues on Friday. This was why I did not want the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) to confuse the two, so far as I was concerned. The first issue, procedurally, was whether the house could properly sit Friday night. I took part in the procedural argument on that point and it was my contention then, as it is my contention now, that our sitting on Friday night was legal and proper in every sense of the word. Standing order 41 makes it clear that a motion respecting the times of sitting or the time of adjournment of the house does not require notice. The motion could be voted on, could be debated; but at any rate it does not require notice. A motion was made; it passed, and we sat, properly, on Friday night. There is no question about that. I may say to the hon. member for Lapointe that he does not confuse that issue, so far as his motion is concerned, because he is not talking about the fact that we sat. But I say to him that to stand up and tell us that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) complained or objected in the afternoon to our sitting that night has no validity, because he was still here when I pointed that standing order 41 did not require unanimous consent for a motion to sit; that it required only a motion supported by a majority of the house. If he meant it; if he did not want the house to sit on Friday night, it was his duty to stay here until that motion was put and vote against it. But no; he left and did not stay to vote on the matter. Let there be no question about it; there are two separate issues, one being the sitting and the other being something else. But so far as sitting on Friday night is concerned, it was perfectly legal and perfectly proper all the way down the line.

Mr. Gregoire: You are trying to open an open door.

Mr. Knowles: The other point is a different one, namely, was it proper for the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to present a motion in Friday evening's sitting of which notice had not been given? Standing order 42 is quite clear; this can be done only if there is unanimous consent. Let us be honest; let us not play with words; let us not quarrel about 10 seconds, 14 seconds, or 16 seconds. On the part of those who were here Friday night when the motion was put, there was not unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: All the rest of us agreed, but there were objections by two or three hon. members at the foot of this side of the house. Let us also be honest and frank about this. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), I, and other hon. members too, were troubled about this—I was pretty unhappy here Friday night—but we sat still; we did not object even when the Deputy Speaker said to the members of the Creditiste party that they could appeal if they wanted to. We sat still. In other words, what was done by Mr. Deputy Speaker was done in the name of, with the consent of, and on the part of almost the whole house. All of us who consented in it are part of the mistake that was made, and I do not think we should try to make a scapegoat out of the Deputy Speaker and put upon him alone the mistake of all of us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I point out to the hon. member for Lapointe that his group did not appeal. The Deputy Speaker made it quite clear at one point, having said two or three times that he had ruled that the Prime Minister had unanimous consent, that his ruling could be appealed. I do not think the ruling was a correct one; I do not think the Prime Minister had unanimous consent, and I can tell this house that if I had been opposed to what was taking place and had wanted to register my objection, it would not have taken place, that's all; and so would it be for some other members of this house.

The fact of the matter is that after the Deputy Speaker pointed out that this was his ruling he said to the members of the Creditiste party—he said to the whole house, if you please—"You can appeal it if you wish; there is no other alternative". But no one appealed. To say that there were only three Creditiste members present is no argument at all. It takes five members to force a recorded vote, but it takes only one member to register an appeal and to ask the Speaker to put the question to the house. But that was not done. Therefore I suggest that there were quite a few mistakes on all sides of the house.

Now I want to say a word about the part of the government in this matter. It was my intention to do this earlier in my remarks, but I felt that there had been too much blaming of everybody else and that I should put the blame on all of us first. I think a good deal of the blame for what happened does rest on the government. I believe that the government chose the wrong course on Friday night. When the government knew that there was opposition on the part of some hon. members to a resolution being dealt with during a perfectly proper sitting, I think that what they should have done was to ask to revert to motions, and on motions, for the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to have made a statement exactly in the terms of the statement he did make on Friday night. Then there should have been an opportunity for the leaders or spokesmen of each opposition party to make statements. If that had been done the government would have known the view of parliament on the issue of sending troops to the United Nations peace keeping operation in Cyprus. Had that been done the government would have carried out its commitment to consult parliament.

The motion itself was not really necessary. It had no legal effect in any event. It did not say that parliament approved; it merely said that it was expedient for the houses of parliament to do something. Everyone knows that parliament has three branches, the House of Commons, the Senate and the crown. Parliament has done something as a parliament only when a bill goes through both houses and receives the consent of the crown. All that was put through on Friday night was a pious resolution in this house, and a pious resolution was put through the other house, which gave the government the green light to do what it did. The executive has the authority to put troops on active service; the only legal requirement is that it call parliament within ten days after taking such action. The only reason the question was brought before parliament was because the Prime Minister made the commitment that he would bring the matter before parliament, and I honour him for doing that and also for having placed the matter before parliament on Friday night. But the mistake which the government made was in the way it chose to do this, and when opposition was expressed to a motion being made without 48 hours' notice or unanimous consent being given, it should have chosen the other course.

I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that had the government asked for leave to revert to motions and made a statement they would have had the views of the house. The views expressed would have been overwhelmingly of the opinion that the action proposed was what Canada wanted to do, and after such discussion it might even have been the case that there would have been unanimous consent to put through a motion affirming the views expressed by the house. As I say, Mr. Speaker, I think this was a mistake in judgment with regard to the way to handle the matter.

Now, why did I not say this on Friday night? I like to believe that I can think quickly about procedural matters, but I confess I was taken by surprise when the government presented its motion. I thought we would just get a statement, to be followed by other statements. I was aware of the international implications of this and of the misunderstanding which could arise from a procedural argument at that point over our participation in the United Nations peace keeping force. I was also aware of another dilemma. According to a note I made of the words of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), he said that all over the free world concern would be felt if we got into a procedural argument and failed to act—or something like that. But it is also true that if we are to keep freedom we must maintain intact our parliamentary institutions and maintain intact the protection of the rights and privileges of the minorities in such an institution.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that a mistake was made on Friday night. But who made the mistake?—not the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lamoureux) acting as Deputy Speaker; not a few people upon whom the blame has been placed; and not just the government by the way it brought this motion forward. The mistake was made by all of us in not objecting to the course which was taken. That being the case it seems to me that we should not be asked even to vote on this motion. It will require unanimous consent to have it withdrawn, but I hope that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) will ask for that consent and I hope that the house will give it. I urge this course of action because I do not think it is fair for this house to put on the Deputy Speaker the stigma of having two, three or 13 votes cast against him, for the fact is that he has done a good job as Deputy Speaker and as one of the presiding officers of the House of Commons.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I went through a fair amount of torment and unhappiness on Friday night because of the procedural angles in which the house got involved. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) has pointed out, I got into the argument about whether or not we were sitting in accordance with the rules; but I did not get into the other argument, for the reasons I have already given. I have thought about this a lot. Indeed I know of no procedural situation since the pipe line debates of 1956 which has occasioned so much discussion around this building. Every time one goes for coffee or tea or for a meal and meets people he invariably finds the discussion turns to this. There was a budget the other night but that is not discussed; the subject for discussion is what happened last Friday.

Mr. Grafftey: There is nothing to discuss about the budget.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): It is a proper measure of the budget.

Mr. Knowles: One of the members of one of the opposition parties—I need not name him—put it to me the other day very thoughtfully. He said: "What are we going to do to repair the damage we did to procedure on Friday night?" That made me think. I admit that we did some damage to procedure by the mistake which all of us made, so what can we do to repair that damage? We do not repair it by putting the blame on the Deputy Speaker. We do not repair it by putting all the blame on the government, though much of it they should take in view of the course followed. We do not repair the damage by putting the blame on one party or another. We will repair the damage by all of us admitting we made a mistake; by affirming, as did the Leader of the Opposition, that this is not a precedent and that it will not happen again.

Mr. Churchill: It was affirmed by him, but not by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin).

Mr. Knowles: I think the government should make the same affirmation. I think the government should agree that there was a better course which could have been followed on Friday night which would have given them the knowledge that parliament was with the government in this Cyprus operation, a course which would not have done damage to parliament. If we will take this stand and be honest enough to admit that mistakes were made, and make it clear that we will not make these mistakes again, then I think we shall repair the damage.

I regret that the hon. member for Lapointe has brought in this motion, which casts the shadow it does over the hon. member for Stormont, but perhaps in the end this is good. Perhaps it is better to have this matter aired on the floor of parliament rather than just talk about it in the corridors and in the coffee shops in the building. We have had it talked out; but having talked it out I hope that this motion will now be withdrawn and that we will have even more respect for our parliamentary institutions, because as men and women we are honest enough to face up to the situation and to do the right thing.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Knowles: Certainly.

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he will press the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) to state, as did the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), that this will not constitute a precedent. Because the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not so state.

Mr. Deschatelets: Why do you not ask him yourself?

Mr. Churchill: I will.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, as the only one so far who has admitted some personal responsibility for what happened last Friday night —although the only responsibility I have is that I kept quiet—I am prepared to urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to admit that the government made a mistake. I am also prepared to urge the Leader of the Opposition to admit that he, like me, made a mistake by sitting quiet.

An hon. Member: He did.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this party, and particularly for myself, I wish to take some of the responsibility for what happened on Friday night. I am responsible, because I was not here on that night. If you look at Hansard Mr. Speaker, I think an argument can be made with respect to the time lapse factor. Whether it was a few seconds or minutes, it becomes clear that there was some lapse of time between the time when the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) began speaking and when the first objection was raised. I know there have been other occasions when any time lapse at all has been considered sufficient to deprive a member of the opportunity to raise an objection to something requiring unanimous consent.

I do not propose to take a great deal of time to state our position with respect to what happened. I think every member who was in the house that night is prepared to admit that there was a mistake and that the responsibility for that mistake must be spread over most of the members who were here, and certainly those who were not here. In listening to all the arguments that have been made, however, three facts have become crystal clear. First of all, on Friday night the parliament of Canada was asked to consider an extremely serious and deteriorating situation. The second fact that is clear, from what has been said by those members who were in attendance that night, is that an overwhelming majority of the members present were in favour of taking the action they did take. The third fact is that the presiding officer, the Deputy Speaker, was of the opinion that unanimous consent had been given earlier.

I do not want to take a lot of time on this matter. I think we would be making another serious mistake if we attempted to place all the responsibility on the presiding officer at that time. I think it would be good for parliament and perhaps good for the future if the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was accepted by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) and he withdrew this motion, because I can appreciate the difficulty that the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lamoureux) will have if any significant number of members vote for the motion, even though it may be defeated.

I think this points up something else, that perhaps we need to revise the rules to deal expeditiously with matters that require quick action in cases of emergency. I do not want to go into the details of the emergency that was facing the parliament of Canada on Friday night, but I think that in retrospect most of us will agree that the action taken was wise and was needed immediately. We can look back on what happened and not really have any objection to the action that was taken but at the same time I think we must admit that there was a transgression of the rules.

That is all I want to say, Mr. Speaker. We in this party are willing to accept our share of the responsibility and to accept the statement of the Deputy Speaker that he was of the opinion that consent had been given.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, needless to say, in this particular intance I approve the statement made by my leader with regard to the position we will take, and for several reasons, but there are some observations which I think should be made. I could not vote for the motion if for no other reason than that I would consider I am estopped. I was here. I had the same opportunity as did the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and every other member to express my opposition to what I considered were several obvious breaches of the rules. I do not know whether I will go as far as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did and assume guilt. However, if I did I would say that the guilt might well be apportioned according to the degree of knowledge that hon. members have of the rules, in which event I would certainly yield to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who is a great authority on the rules and so must assume the greatest share of the blame.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member is very kind.

Mr. Baldwin: However, I think we should be grateful to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) for bringing up this matter so that we can have a full and useful discussion and so that in parliaments yet to come those who examine the record of Friday the 13th day of March will not feel they are bound by what happened then. As far as I am concerned, I felt embarrassed and futile in the face of several instances of mutilation of the rules, not only those which have been referred to but one or two others as well. True enough, it was in a good cause, but do good ends always justify the means to achieve them?

This parliament is the highest tribunal in the land. We make our own rules; we change them, we alter them. There is nobody to say us nay, save only for our duty to see that the business of parliament is expedited and that the rights of individual members are maintained. This is the golden currency of our procedure, and I do not think anyone who was here on Friday night can deny that that coinage was badly debased.

Let us put this matter in perspective. There was no necessity for the government, in law at least, to secure approval of the house or approval of parliament. I think that the provisions of the National Defence Act relating to our contribution to the United Nations are such that this need not have been done. However, I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was quite correct in the course he followed.

On an earlier occasion when he laid out the five conditions which had to be met before a force would be dispatched to Cyprus he said that parliament would be consulted, depending upon the size and constitution of the force. I think this constitutes an admission on the part of the government that they knew they did not have to come to parliament for legal approval, but in matters of this kind I think it is proper to do so. In my view it would be highly improper if it had not been done.

However, Mr. Speaker, there are at least two ways by which it could have been done without exposing us to what happened on Friday night. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has pointed out one method of procedure, and there was certainly another very simple one. As the course of events in Cyprus proceeded on Monday or Tuesday or even on Wednesday, it surely must have been obvious to the government, who had sources of information not available to other members of the house, of course, that the situation there was developing in such a way that they were going to be committed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this is a vital matter and I know my hon. friend wants to be fair. We could not know at that time because there was no international force in being. We did not know until between six and eight o'clock Friday night. Just until then there was no international force established. We were awaiting information from the secretary general and we acted at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Baldwin: I, of course, accept the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. However, I would attach this annex to his statement. With that perspicacity for which he is famous, I am sure that by Wednesday night he had a pretty sharp suspicion and, in any event, nothing would have estopped the government from placing on the order paper a notice of motion that would become an order of the house, and providing that the business of the house could be interrupted to deal with the motion which was in fact put before us, and that debate on that motion would proceed until completed. I am quite sure, having in mind the spirit which was evident on Friday night, consent would have been given.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I may tell my hon. friend that we had given consideration to that kind of conditional motion. But it was decided we could not ask parliament to approve something that might not happen, although we were very anxious to see that it did happen.

Mr. Baldwin: I was not suggesting that approval should be given, but that a notice of motion should have been put on the order paper to the effect that at any time the routine business could be interrupted by the introduction of this motion, and debate on it would continue until concluded. This procedure would have permitted the government, at any time they saw fit or that the urgency developed, to have proceeded with the motion. However, Mr. Speaker, the government is the sole judge of these circumstances and must accept the responsibility that any government must accept in deciding if the facts, circumstances and conditions require them to proceed in the way they did proceed.

I believe that this is where the mistake was made, and I would hope it may never occur again. However, if these circumstances do recur, I would hope the procedure I have outlined would be followed. Members of parliament should not have to sit idly by in a situation of this kind, of international crisis, because, as has been said by other hon. members, any attempt to assert that the rules should be observed would participate a debate and possibly divide the house on a procedural matter. This would not be a very good thing for the government of this country, for the situation on Cyprus or for the other nations of the free world who were considering making contributions to this force.

For these reasons, I feel that I cannot support the motion. I feel, though, that while we are all taking blame it would not be an inopportune time for a member of the government, perhaps the genial seatmate of the Prime Minister, to stand up and say quite honestly that the government did make a mistake, but that it will not happen again. This would be an excellent thing for the morale of this parliament, particularly if the government could admit it does make mistakes.

These remarks, Mr. Speaker, outline my position. I think they need to be said because if in the future a government, or whoever occupies the position of Speaker or Deputy Speaker, is confronted by a situation in which someone says there is an emergency, and we must act quickly by forgetting about the rules, everyone will be put in a serious situation. Who is going to make the decision? Will it be the government or the Speaker? Is he to be placed in this position? Surely not. I think a tremendous responsibility is placed upon the government in introducing these motions and asking the house to approve of them. I think it would clarify the situation if they would frankly admit the error which they made under these particular circumstances.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I only want to say a few words on this point, because I think everyone is in agreement that there is a certain amount of responsibility in this connection resting in every section of the house. The fact that the rules have not been enforced is, in my opinion, some cause for alarm amongst all members. There is a responsibility, too, upon the officers at the table, because they should bring these things to the attention of the house under the system that we use.

I should like to cite an example of what I mean, and it is to be found in Hansard for January 30, 1963, page 3251. I quote:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, with unanimous consent, I move:

"That the standing committee on marine and fisheries be authorized to examine and consider (1) the recommendations of the international north Pacific fisheries commission that the stock of halibut in the eastern Bering sea and the stock of herring off the west coast of the Queen Charlotte islands each be exempted from the abstention principle contained in the international convention for the high seas fisheries of the north Pacific ocean, (2) the international convention for the high seas fisheries of the north Pacific ocean, and (3) the last annual report of the international north Pacific fisheries commission and, in particular, to examine and consider the possible harmful effects which such recommendations may have upon Canada's fisheries and with authority to report its findings and recommendations from time to time."

This motion is seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather).

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this is a substantive motion and therefore in my opinion it requires notice. Under the circumstances it could not be acceptable at this time without the appropriate notice.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman asked for unanimous consent, and we would be glad to accord it.

Mr. Speaker: If there is unanimous consent, of course, it can be moved. Is there unanimous consent in this regard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that there is a dissenting voice.

Obviously, this is the normal way in which to handle these matters. It was not necessary for a member of the house to be so familiar with the rules that he drew the attention of the house to the fact unanimous consent was needed. The Speaker has a responsibility, and I think it is a responsibility he should exercise. I was shocked at some of the statements I heard today and yesterday to the effect that this is a repetition of something that has happened several times, and that the government had a responsibility in each of those cases. I doubt that this is true, and I certainly hope it is not true. However, I believe that the government should be censured, in fact all members of the house should be censured. I believe the situation resulted from haste, and I believe that if the Speaker has any responsibility it is a responsibility that we give him and that we expect him to exercise.

I believe, too, that the Speaker must be aware of the temper of the house and of any minority opinion in the house, particularly when that minority opinion has been expressed. In a democracy, minorities are almost as important as majorities. Considerations must be given to these minorities and, in my opinion, the Speaker has the responsibility to see that this happens. Since I have been in this house I have found Speakers, in the main, to be fairly unbiased and they have made decisions taking into consideration the will of the minority as well as of the majority. I do not believe the rules should be used, or the lack of familiarity with the rules by hon. members should offer the occasion for doing things in a manner that is not in keeping with the dignity of this house.

I believe this was done. I believe in using the expression "with unanimous consent" in the case which I have quoted, where the hon. member for Skeena used it, he did it with the view of trying to do something he was not able to do in any other way. Of course he may disagree with that, but I think it was done in this way because as a private member he would not have the right to do this without a proper motion. I think the Prime Minister did it in this case with exactly the same view, and did it because there was the necessity to get consent.

I believe the Deputy Speaker was the victim in this case, because of the fact there was an indication that there would be consultation between the parties in the house so that unanimous consent could be given to the introduction of a resolution without the motion. Therefore I am in favour of the resolution we now have before us, except for the fact that it lays all the blame on the Deputy Speaker. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin):

That the last line of the resolution be amended by striking out all the words following the words, "be it resolved that" and substituting the words, "this house regrets that it did not take action to uphold the rules of parliament to preserve the rights of each member."

This will place on the record the fact that this house has seen fit to censure itself, and would give direction to the Chair and the officers at the table that we wish them to enforce the rights we believe we enjoy in being members of the house, under the democratic principles established over the years by the rules and procedures of the house. It will be taken as a censure of each and every member of the house, and particularly of those who were not here to participate at that time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Humber. I may point out that I do not want to slow up the debate, but if the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) would allow me, I wish to consider his amendment while the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) is making his remarks.

Mr. Peters: If Your Honour finds that the amendment is not in order, I would like publicly to make the request that the mover and seconder of the motion implement the amendment, with consent, as part of their original motion.

Mr. Speaker: Again I would like to deal with that in a few minutes.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, as one of those members of the house who was present on Friday evening from before the ringing of the bells at eight o'clock until the adjournment of the house, I feel I should make some comments on the effects of that evening on one private member, namely, myself.

I took a great deal of satisfaction out of having been a participant in the discussion on Friday night, and I believe the house did the proper thing in authorizing the government to dispatch troops to Cyprus. But even if I could take satisfaction from having done the proper thing in the house, I must say that procedural difficulties did rest somewhat heavily on my mind and heart over the week end. We are now discussing this matter on a Wednesday afternoon when the tension of Friday night has entirely disappeared. The atmosphere today is vastly different from that of Friday night, when we were in the middle of an international situation that required immediate attention.

Mr. Ron Collister of the Toronto Telegram had an article in the Telegram last night in which he spoke of the proceedings last Friday as:

> The drama of Friday the 13th, a fantastic day in history, adds up to this—

And then he goes on to give the points dealt with in Friday night's debate. The editor of the Telegram put as a heading on Mr. Collister's dispatch, "only two hours from war."

When you consider that we were debating a matter that was keeping the world only two hours from war you must realize that all present in this chamber were well aware of the import of their every word and action. I know it was the feeling of the great majority in the house that, "If it were done when 'tis done, then 'twere well it were done quickly." That was the attitude of the great majority.

Some speakers this afternoon have endeavoured to state that the error, if any, committed on Friday night, is the responsibility of the government. Might I point out that the Globe and Mail, in its report on Saturday last of the events of Friday evening, had this paragraph on page 10:

> Attending the emergency sitting were 38 Liberals, 34 Conservatives, eight New Democrats, one Social Crediter and three Creditistes.

That adds up to 38 Liberals and 46 in the opposition. If the error of Friday night, if any were committed, is to be ascribed to anyone, certainly it could not be given to a minority of 38 against a combined opposition of 46.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cowan: In speaking further on that question I would like to say that I thought the saddest words spoken in this house on Friday were those of the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) who, during the course of his objections to the procedure in the house said, "I know that my speech is of no avail . . ." These words are to be found at page 924 of Hansard for Friday last, and it made me very sorrowful to think that an hon. member of parliament could stand up and make the impassioned address that the hon. member for Roberval made, and then believe that his speech was of no avail. Surely he must have pride in the parliamentary institutions of Canada today when he realizes the full dress debate that has been given for several hours this Wednesday afternoon to the actions of the three members of the Creditistes on Friday night.

I sincerely hope he will agree with me that his speech was of great avail, and that he will take satisfaction in the workings of the parliamentary institutions of this great country, where each member of parliament knows he can bring forward the desires of his area, set them forth, and know they are going to be considered from all sides by men from one end of Canada to the other.

There are rules of the house. We have standing orders of the house and we have rule 42. Three members of the Creditistes, to their eternal credit, stood up in parliament and fought valiantly for rule 42, but my mother used to teach me that rules are made to be broken. When Nelson went into Copenhagen sound, under King's orders and regulations he knew he was expected to obey the instructions of the admiral of the fleet. Admiral Parker was the admiral of the fleet and he ran up the signal to withdraw. Nelson put the telescope to his blind eye, broke the King's orders and regulations, stayed in Copenhagen sound and won the battle. Are we going to ask now that Nelson's commission as an admiral of the fleet be withdrawn because he broke King's orders and regulations and stayed to win the battle?

If an error were made by the Deputy Speaker, surely to heaven we can put the rule book to our blind eye and congratulate the man on the basis that "well done is better than well said". I would like to ask the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) if he would give serious consideration to asking for the unanimous approval of the house to the withdrawal of his motion. Surely it has been given the fullest attention of this parliament on the points he has raised. He knows how heavily it rests on the hearts of us all, and I would sincerely ask that he give consideration to asking for unanimous consent for the withdrawal of his motion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on the question of the amendment before the house, and to suggest to you with confidence that it is clearly out of order. When we are seeking to correct a situation, as the hon. gentleman seeks to do in his motion in a way that is not acceptable to most of us in the house, it would be regrettable if we committed another error.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment is, perhaps, without precedent. It is an amendment which calls upon the house to condemn itself and I suggest to you, that it is out of order. It is a substantive motion. It is not, in fact, an amendment at all, and its consequence, if adopted, would be to deprive the house of the opportunity of doing what it clearly wishes to do, that is, to express its confidence in the Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am prepared, with the advice of counsel, to give a ruling on the suggested amendment to the motion before the house. If hon. members will examine carefully the motion of the hon. member for Lapointe, it reads:

> That in view of the unacceptable actions of the Deputy Speaker, the hon. member for Stormont, during the sitting on Friday, March 13, 1964 from 8 to 10 p.m....be it resolved that—

This amendment, it seems to me, should be linked with the motion, and if hon. members read the amendment, with the motion as I have summarized it, it becomes inconsistent. The relevant citation is citation 203 of Beauchesne, fourth edition, paragraph 1:

> It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed. Every amendment proposed to be made either to a question or to a proposed amendment should be so framed that if agreed to by the house the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

In the circumstances it seems to me we would not be consistent with ourselves if we were to accept this proposed amendment to the motion and therefore, in my opinion, it should not be accepted.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I wish to add a few remarks to those which have already been contributed by hon. members on the subject of Friday night's proceeding. I should say at the outset that I was among those who were here on Friday night, and one of those who did observe the hon. member on my far left attempting to catch the Speaker's eye in order to raise his point of order. Perhaps some of the difficulty he experienced as indicated by a reading of Hansard, is the fact that the Hansard reporters had their backs to him. But regardless of how the difficulty arose the fact is that it did.

I do not agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he says that all members should share—I think he implied that they should share equally—in responsibility for what was done on Friday night. Some of us, as my hon. friend for Peace River has pointed out, have very little knowledge of the rules, while others have considerable knowledge. I think the degree of responsibility in this regard should be related to the degree of knowledge of the rules of the house possessed by particular members. Certainly, those who have been here for several years and who have acquainted themselves more thoroughly with the rules should be counted upon to rise when occasions occur such as occurred on Friday night, in order that mistakes may be avoided.

When the Secretary of State for External Affairs replied to the Leader of the Opposition he intimated to the house that there was some doubt whether an error had, in fact, been made. He used the expression "if an error has been made". This was done, perhaps, because the Leader of the Opposition had earlier called upon all members of the house to agree with him that an error had been made. I do not think there is any doubt but that an error was, in fact, made, and I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs has now admitted that there was an error, inasmuch as he has just suggested we should not compound that error by accepting a motion which is out of order.

I believe that while responsibility for the error does not lie upon the Deputy Speaker, and that while the error which was committed on Friday night does not call for the grave step of censuring the Deputy Speaker, responsibility for its occurrence should be placed where it belongs. I say this on two counts, the first of which is that an alternative procedure could have been followed, as was pointed out by my hon. friend from Peace River and agreed to by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not agree. I simply pointed out to the hon. member that the course he mentioned had been considered.

Mr. Nielsen: Then I believe that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as I listened to him and as I observed him in his seat, was agreeing with what the hon. member for Peace River said.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said just the opposite.

Mr. Nielsen: The course my hon. friend suggested could have been followed if the Prime Minister had done the right thing.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the hon. member must realize that what I said in answer to the hon. member for Peace River was this, the particular proposal he mentioned had been considered but we had concluded, for the reasons I mentioned, that it would not be the right way in which to proceed. The hon. member for Yukon must not persist in saying that, although I rose to point out that we were against that proposal, I was in favour of it.

Mr. Nielsen: I will certainly accept the explanation given by the minister, but I think he could now rise and state unequivocally whether the suggestion referred to by my hon. friend from Peace River could have been followed by the government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It could have been followed, but I would ask the hon. member to reflect a little. If we had done so, we would have been censured for bringing forward a resolution with regard to something which was not even in existence—with regard to something which was wholly hypothetical. Had we proceeded in this way we would have been condemned, and rightly so.

Mr. Nielsen: I would agree with the Secretary of State for External Affairs if, either by his decision or by the decision of the Prime Minister, that had been done unilaterally. But as one hon. member has indicated—I believe it was the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but I am not sure—consultations could have been carried out among the parties in the light of a serious international situation such as this requiring urgent action within 48 hours. The appropriate course would have been to conduct conversations with the leaders of the other parties so as to determine whether there would have been unanimity. And, no doubt, unanimity would have been obtained had those consultations taken place. In the light of such consultations, the course suggested by the hon. member for Peace River would have been an acceptable one to the house and the government would have incurred no censure, because prior agreement would have been obtained.

The error committed last Friday is not that of the Deputy Speaker, nor is it the error of all the members of this house sharing the responsibility equally. Responsibility for the error lies with the government and, more particularly, with the Prime Minister because it was he who placed the Deputy Speaker in the position in which he found himself. He was in the unenviable position of having to expedite a motion presented by the Prime Minister to meet an urgent international situation and in doing so, because of the pressure put on him by the situation he had to meet, and because of the ill-conceived procedure which had been decided upon by the Prime Minister and the government, he was placed in a position which has made him the object of a motion of censure. The error was generated in the first instance by the Prime Minister and by the government. That is where the fault lies. I say this because there were alternative methods of procedure which could have been followed. The Prime Minister should not have placed the Deputy Speaker in the position in which he found himself on Friday night.

As a result, the rules were abused. In the words of my hon. friend from Peace River, the rules were mutilated. The Deputy Speaker was merely an instrument in the hands of the Prime Minister in this instance. Had it not been for the bungling of the government in this situation, the Deputy Speaker would never be facing this motion today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member would care to accept a suggestion from the Chair. Before very long it will be five o'clock, and I did suggest to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) that he might have the privilege of replying. After all, it is his motion. If we go beyond five o'clock, this matter will come up again tomorrow, unless we have unanimous consent—

Mr. Gregoire: No.

Mr. Speaker: —to go into the private members' hour.

Mr. Gregoire: No.

Mr. Speaker: I was wondering whether the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) would care to bring his interesting remarks to a conclusion in order to give the hon. member for Lapointe an opportunity to reply.

Mr. Howard: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I think you inadvertently referred to me bringing my remarks to a close. I did not have the floor; I was not engaging in the debate; I do not intend to do so.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have not heard that there is any intention of the mover and the seconder of the amendment, nor the hon. member for Lapointe, to withdraw the motion. This is a course which we think should be followed. In the light of the absence of any such withdrawal, I think hon. members should express views, if they have them; and I understand there are further views to be expressed on this matter. But I personally will bring my own remarks to a conclusion very shortly.

One more facet that I want to deal with before I resume my seat, Mr. Speaker, is that I suggest a certain deviousness on the part of government members has injected itself into the debate on this motion. It seems, sitting over here, that the design has been to regard the parties on this side of the chamber as four separate groups, rather than recognizing an official opposition. When the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) comes along now and says that we must all share in what was done on Friday night—as have other members—it seems to me they are using their argument in one fashion when it suits them, and in quite another when they want co-operation in the house. Let me conclude—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: —sir, by making two further points, and they are these. That an error was committed on Friday night there can be no doubt; and that that error lies at the doorstep of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) there can also be no doubt. The other point is that—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) who is not here, had heavy responsibilities at that moment as head of the government of this country, I am sure my hon. friend would want to indicate that the action taken by the Prime Minister was not only in the national interest but an attempt on the part of this country, and of all hon. members of this house, to make a contribution to peace in Cyprus and, indirectly, perhaps to peace in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: There can be no doubt at all about that, sir. I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs will recall that the leader of the official opposition at all times co-operated on behalf of this party in saying that unanimous consent would be given to interrupting the ordinary business of the house at any time the Prime Minister felt it necessary to do so. There was that same co-operation when it came to the conclusion of the debate, when there was no dissenting voice from this party to the sending of troops to Cyprus. The co-operation was there.

The point I make is simply that the Prime Minister was wrong in his choice of method to bring the matter before the house. There were alternate procedures available; they were not taken advantage of. There was no consultation between parties on a matter as important as this. Because of these factors the Deputy Speaker was placed in this unenviable position of facing a motion of censure, a motion that I suggest was brought on by the ill-conceived decisions as to procedure that were made by the Prime Minister and the government.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to close the debate, but I would just like to ask a question of the hon. member. Since he has pointed out the man who he thinks is responsible for this situation, is it the hon. member's intention to bring a motion blaming the person responsible?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I believe that under our rules it is impossible at this time to raise a subamendment to a motion of this nature.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would not have taken part in the debate had I not been challenged. I took part in the debate last Friday evening, until the very end, and it was said that my speech had been a little harsh because I stated to the house that I knew very well that I was speaking for nothing. I meant what I said then because I had witnessed so many violations of the rules of the house.

Mr. Speaker, when you try to follow the rules and to learn them a little more each day and you see old politicians, who always jump up if we go against the rules, do so themselves blatantly, you cannot help but feel that it is enough to demoralize a young member. And sincerely, last Friday evening, I asked myself if the house could really sit today in view of all those violations of the rules.

We are now discussing the motion of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) and everybody seems to be confessing his guilt. Everybody is beating his breast and feels a bit responsible, except the real culprits. That is what I find strange, Mr. Speaker.

I admire those who recognize that they have transgressed our regulations but, as I say, I blame those who refuse to acknowledge their responsibility and who bear in fact the largest part of the guilt.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion and public bills.

[Text]

Order. It being five o'clock p.m., the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS

SUGGESTED ACQUISITION OF RESIDENCE OF SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD AT KINGSTON

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of acquiring the title to the historic residence of this nation's first prime minister, the Right Honourable Sir John A. Macdonald, the same being the property known as 35 Centre street, in the city of Kingston, Ontario.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, according to the order paper, shall we study the public bills or the notices of motions? Looking at the order paper for Wednesday, March 18, I see this: from five to six o'clock p.m., private members' business: first, notices of motions and then public bills.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is what I have called, and we are taking No. 4, standing in the name of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Alkenbrack). If the hon. member will refer to the order paper, I think he will see that this is correct.

Mr. Benson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the motion before the house. In doing so I would first of all say that I personally agree wholeheartedly with the motion before the house; and the government agrees with it, as is exemplified by the rapid action of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) in this regard when this particular residence came up for purchase.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. What is your point of order?

Mr. Benson: My point of order—and I must explain the action taken by the government in order to raise my point of order—is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) announced on December 23 that this particular residence would be purchased. At that time I had met with both with the Prime Minister and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing), and by action of the treasury board on January 16, 1964, reference No. 6619768, it was agreed to purchase this particular residence. Therefore, the intent of this particular motion has already been carried out. I maintain that it is a dangerous precedent—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it seems to me that the reasoning he is following and the words he is uttering could easily be made during the debate itself which is about to take place. I do not see a point of order at this moment.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Herridge: Sheer propaganda.

Mr. Benson: If I might succinctly state my point of order, we are using the time of the house to discuss a motion which asks the government to do something which it has already done. If we carry this to its ridiculous conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we could put motions on the order paper asking that the government enter world war II, and then debate in this house recommendations that the government do things which have already been done.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the hon. member for Kingston is saying that the government has acted in this matter and has purchased the house, but so far as the other hon. members in the house are concerned, there is no definite proof of this except the statement of the hon. member.

Mr. Benson: But I did quote the treasury board reference, and the date the purchase was approved by treasury board.

Mr. Speaker: Then in the circumstances I should like to ask for the views of the hon. member on this matter.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your attention in this matter. I was going to, and I will, commend the government and the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Benson) on their assiduous attention to this resolution. I want to commend the government on their action and on their discernment in the purchase of this property, the matter having been mentioned to them by my leader. I submit that we are not wasting the time of the house. A considerable amount of time has been wasted this afternoon, but I think it is now time that we took a little interval to discuss what has been accomplished in the past by the great leaders which this country has produced.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry I must interrupt the hon. member, but I understand he is speaking to the resolution, not the point of order. Does the hon. member wish to say anything on the point of order under discussion?

Mr. Alkenbrack: No, Your Honour, I have nothing to say on the point of order, but I do have more to say on the resolution.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, may I say a few words on the point of order. Whatever knowledge the government may have in this regard, and despite the hon. member for Kingston having disclosed that there is a treasury board minute authorizing the acquisition of the title to this house, no disclosure has been made as to why the house is being bought which would be at all in conformity with resolution put forward by the hon. member. The purpose of the resolution is recommendation that the property be acquired as a memorial to Sir John A. Macdonald. Nothing has been indicated in this regard in any announcement made, and therefore I submit that the hon. member should be allowed to proceed with his resolution.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, if I may speak in this regard, the Prime Minister made a statement on December 23 which quite clearly indicated the purpose for which this house was acquired. If I may quote on the announcement, the Prime Minister said:

A program for restoring this house will be undertaken, and it is my hope that this work can be completed within two years. This house will be refurnished not only in the style of Sir John A.'s time but with some of the actual furniture used by him. This house will represent a proud historical trust of the Canadian people. As such, it is my sincere hope that it will contribute in real terms to keeping alive the memory of a very great Canadian.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, could I pose this thought on the point of order. From my own point of view I do not subscribe to this suggestion, but it may well be that some hon. members in the house may want to put forward ideas as to what should happen to the property which differ from those mentioned by the hon. member for Kingston, as announced by the Prime Minister. Those ideas and thoughts which hon. members have by way of debate or amendment may possibly be precluded if this motion is ruled out of order. I think it is better to proceed so that views can be expressed, first about the advisability of acquiring this property—because that is what the motion says—and second, as to what should happen to the property once it is acquired. The views expressed might be quite different from those enunciated by the hon. member for Kingston.

Mr. Speaker: I may say at this stage that I have very grave doubts whether we should proceed with the debate of this matter inasmuch as the motion is asking that something be done which has already been done. However, I think the benefit of the doubt should be given to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Alkenbrack).

Mr. Alkenbrack: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must agree with the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) that although this action has been taken, and timely taken, by the government, a review of the matter might be made, and some good ideas put forward by hon. members might also be incorporated into the fulfilment of this historic undertaking. I too have the same notes which were recently read by my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Benson) in connection with the tentative program of the government to preserve what will be a national memorial. In passing I also wish to commend the minister of northern affairs, who is in charge of the national historic sites board, for the administration of this matter.

For those who have been watching from the sides, the citizens of this country who, of course, pay the bills in this regard, some of the younger generation and the new Canadians might ask: "Who is Macdonald?" That is a good question. To you, to me and to the hon. members of this house Macdonald is a legend. To us Macdonald represents Canada itself and his image crosses party lines in this regard, in the same way Laurier represents Canada to many people. Laurier represents a fine period of accomplishment which was achieved under his civic administration. His patriotic desire to serve his country came from the same springs which were the source of Macdonald's.

The question is: Who was Macdonald? I have done a little research and have found a handy little book in our library. As I walked out of there with the book there came to me a realization of the fact that the library was built by men of Macdonald's ilk, men who have gone before and have left something for us that will last forever. The book dates back to 1880 and I have obtained the following information from it which should be interesting to hon. members. The book is the Canadian Parliamentary Companion and Annual Register of 1880. I believe it corresponds to our Parliamentary Guide of today.

Macdonald, the right hon. Sir John Alexander, K.C.B., D.C.L. (Oxon), L.L.D., Q.C. (Victoria, B.C.)—

I take it that is where that honorary title was conferred on him.

—privy councillor. Eldest son of the late Hugh Macdonald, Esq., of Kingston, Ont., and formerly of Sutherlandshire, Scotland.

Our first prime minister was born in Scotland and came to Canada as a very young child.

Born 11th January, 1815. Educated at Royal Grammar school, Kingston, under Dr. Wilson, a fellow of Oxford university. Married first, Isabella, daughter of the late Alexander Clark, Esq., of Dainavert, Invernessshire, Scotland. She died 1856; second, 1867, Susan Agnes, daughter of the late hon. T. J. Bernard, a member of Her Majesty's privy council of the island of Jamaica.

Studied law with the late Mr. George Mackenzie and was called to the bar, Upper Canada, hilary term, 1836. Created a Q.C. 1846.

That was in the illustrious reign of our great sovereign, Victoria.

A bencher, ex officio, of the law society of Ontario; and head of the extensive law firm of Macdonald, Macdonald and Marsh, Toronto. Is the grand representative in Canada of the grand lodge of ancient free and accepted masons of England and holds the rank of a past grand senior warden of the freemasons of Canada.

Remember that he was alive at the time this was written and that is why it is written in the present tense.

Was a member of the executive council of Canada from 11 May, 1847, to 10 March, 1848 in the administration of the late hon. Mr. Morris—

That is approximately about the time he lived in this house in Kingston which is now the property of the people of Canada.

—from 11 September, 1854, to 29 July, 1858, in the McNab-Morin, the Tache-Macdonald, and the Macdonald-Cartier administrations; from 6 August same year to 23 May, 1862, in the Cartier-Macdonald administration; and from 30 March, 1864, until the union in the Tache-Macdonald and the Belleau-Macdonald administrations; and was during these several periods, receiver general from 21 May to 7 December, 1847; commissioner of crown lands from latter date to 10 March, 1848; attorney general for Upper Canada from 11 September, 1854, to 29 July, 1858, when as prime minister he and his cabinet resigned, being defeated on the seat of government question.

Remember that it was about this time, 1858, that the city of Ottawa became the capital of Canada.

Returned to office 6 August same year as postmaster general, a position he resigned the following day on his re-appointment as attorney general, Upper Canada, which he continued to hold until the defeat of the administration on the militia bill, May, 1862, when he and his colleagues again retired from office. The late Sir George E. Cartier and he led the opposition in the assembly until the defeat of the Sandfield-Macdonald-Dorion government, when the Tache-Macdonald government was formed, 30 March, 1864, and he returned to his old office of attorney general and was government leader in the assembly from that time until the union of the British American provinces, 1867. Held the office of minister of militia affairs jointly with that of attorney general from January to May, 1862, and from August, 1865, until the union. Was requested to take the place of Sir E. P. Tache as prime minister on the death of that gentleman in 1865 but waived his claim in favour of Sir N. F. Belleau. Has been a delegate to England and other countries on public business on many occasions and was a delegate to the conference in Charlottetown in 1864, which had been convened for the purpose of effecting a union of the maritime provinces, to that which succeeded it in Quebec, same year, to arrange basis of union of all British American colonies—

As you can see, his career now pyramids to the great task to which he and his colleagues devoted themselves.

—and was chairman of the London colonial conference, 1866-67, when the act of union known as the British North America Act was passed by the imperial parliament. On 1 July, 1867, when the new constitution came into force, was called upon to form the first government for the new dominion, and was sworn of the privy council and was appointed minister of justice and attorney general of Canada, an office he continued to fill until he and his ministry resigned on the Pacific railway charges, 6 November, 1873. In 1871 was appointed one of Her Majesty's joint high commissioners and plenipotentiaries, together with Earl de Grey, now Marquis of Ripon, Sir Stafford Northcote, Sir Edward Thornton and the right hon. Montague Bernard, to act in connection with five commissioners named by the president of the United States for the settlement of the Alabama claims and of matters in dispute between Great Britain and the United States, the labours of which joint high commission resulted in the treaty of Washington signed at Washington on 8 May, 1871.

Received degree of D.C.L. (hon.) from Oxford university, 1865. Is also LL.D. of Queen's university, Kingston, and a D.C.L. of university of Trinity college, Toronto. Created Knight Commander of the Bath, civil, by Her Majesty, July, 1867. Created a Knight Grand Cross of the Royal Order of Isabel la Catolica, of Spain, January, 1872. Nominated a member of Her Majesty's most honourable privy council, July, 1872, and sworn in August, 1879. Unanimously elected leader of the Canadian Liberal Conservative opposition, 6 November, 1873. Sat for Kingston in Canadian assembly from November, 1844, until the union. Returned for same seat in the Commons at general election, 1867, at general election, 1872 and at general election, 1874. Unseated on petition, 21 November, 1874; re-elected 29 December, 1874. Contested the city of Kingston at last general election when he was defeated. Immediately afterwards was elected by acclamation for Marquette, Manitoba, which he vacated by having accepted office as premier and minister of the interior on 17 October, 1878, which position he now holds. Was then elected with Mr. DeCosmos for Victoria, B.C., for which he is now senior member. The following are among the principal measures which have been carried through parliament by the right hon. knight.

This should be very interesting, Mr. Speaker, to hon. members because it gives in capsule form a list of the accomplishments of our first prime minister. They are as follows:

The secularization of the clergy reserves; the improvement of the criminal laws; the promotion of public instruction; the consolidation of the statutes; the extension of the municipal system; the reorganization of the militia; the settlement of the seat of government question; the establishment of direct steam mail communication with Europe; the establishment of additional penitentiaries, criminal lunatic asylums and reformatory prisons, and providing for the inspection thereof; the providing for the internal economy for the House of Commons;

This is one of the features upon which we all depend in this body. I continue reading the list:

—the reorganization of the civil service on a permanent basis; the construction of the Intercolonial Railway; the enlargement of the canals—

This last item seems fairly unimportant today because our internal canals are used mostly for tourist and pleasure purposes, but I remind hon. members that at that time our canal system was our main means of communication because activity in relation to railways had barely started. I continue reading the list:

—the enactment of a stringent election law; the ratification of the Washington treaty; the confederation of British North America and the extension and consolidation of the dominion. In his position as leader of the opposition, Sir John, on several occasions, gave the late government the benefit of his ability and long experience in perfecting several of their most important measures, notably the insolvent act and the act constituting the supreme court of the dominion.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a résumé of the activities of our first prime minister during that period.

Now, what does Macdonald mean to the land he represented? What does he mean to Kingston? What does he mean to Lennox? What does he mean at the present time to my riding of Prince Edward-Lennox? I remind hon. members that at one time he did run for office when the seat of government was in Toronto, and he was one of the earliest representatives of the county of Lennox. Lennox, Mr. Speaker, is the land of Macdonald. It, along with the whole of the bay of Quinte district is included in the sphere of influence of this great man during his lifetime. In the county towns of Picton and Napanee there are still a few people who remember Macdonald. These people probably remember him when he was beginning his career, and they were tiny children.

The influence of this great man is indelibly stamped on the city of Kingston. In passing, I would say that every time I go from Ottawa to my riding and I go by the southern route, especially at night, every time we come within view of that city, and its lights spread below us I call it "Mother Kingston". Kingston has been the social, legal and civic centre for our section of Ontario during the pioneer days. I should like also to remind hon. members that Kingston is not the oldest section of our part of the province. Adolphustown, the place where Macdonald lived as a child, is just as old as Kingston, and Napanee and Picton are just a little younger. Adolphustown is recognized also as one of the landing points of the United Empire Loyalists. No Canadian can visit the old restored cemetery there today without thinking of the origin of his country and its proud heritage. As everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, the loyalists were the original settlers of Prince Edward-Lennox and Macdonald became their great protagonist. The principles that were born here at Adolphustown have been inculcated and maintained in many other places across this country, and they still hold good today. I wish to put a quotation on the record referring to these loyalists, their memorial at Adolphustown on the bay of Quinte, and the civil legacy they have bequeathed to Canada.

> Draw near Canadian, your destiny
> Was nourished in the turf on which you stand.
> This burnished benchmark of a broad new land
> Enfolds the dust of those who made you free.
> Now look beyond this anchorage of rest,
> Their greater living monument command
> The architecture of this patriot band,
> One mould monolith from east to west.
> These exiled poor, the potent leavening
> That blends forever through our nation's sod
> Burst on these regions like the breath of spring
> With faith in flag and love for law and God,
> Their legacy, dominion lithe and strong,
> Their eulogy, a great triumphant song.

These are the words about which I like to think when I think about Macdonald, the land of Lennox where he lived as a boy. This is what every loyal Canadian in the bay of Quinte district likes to think about when they think of the hard, tough role that was played by the loyalists and their contemporaries, by those great leaders who have gone ahead and who have built what we have here today.

I am sure hon. members would like to be reminded of the fact that right in this air space, when discussing the building of this centre block, those men stood debating and solving the difficult problems of their time, probably problems far more difficult to them than ours are to us, problems that faced a young country in the 1860's.

Macdonald had help. No man can do things alone. Hon. members have found that out before they came here, in their municipalities and in the work which led up to their coming here. Macdonald had the faculty of getting things done and of getting men to work with him.

Mr. Winch: Are you referring to the C.P.R.?

Mr. Alkenbrack: I am not referring to that alone, although the same thing applies there too.

Mr. Matheson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Alkenbrack: There will be time for you to make your remarks later. Speaking on March 6, 1865, during the parliamentary debates on confederation, Macdonald said:

> The government will, therefore, at once state that it is our design to press, by all proper and parliamentary modes of procedure within our power, for an early decision of the house—yes or no—whether they approve of this scheme—

—namely, confederation—

> —or do not. One great reason, among others, calling for promptness, is to provide as much as possible against the reaction which will take place in England from the disappointment that will pervade the minds of the people of England, if they get the impression that the project of the union of the provinces is abandoned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. MacNaught: I think it would be the opinion of the house to allow him to continue, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house give unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I wish to thank hon. members for their kind consideration. To continue the quotation, Macdonald said:

> I believe that if one thing more than another has raised British America, or the Province of Canada, its chief component part, in the estimation of the people and government of England, it is that by this scheme there was offered to the Mother Country a means by which these colonies should cease to be a source of embarrassment, and become, in fact, a source of strength.

That illustrates the foresight that he and his colleagues had, looking forward to the day when this great conglomeration of states and provinces would become a source of strength to the motherland. What an underestimation that was, after almost a century in which Canada has played her noble part, and now one nation free and independent from sea to sea.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, Macdonald had help. He had a great colleague and great political ally in Sir Georges Etienne Cartier, the leader of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec. In order to keep properly on this theme I cite the great Gallic attitude toward confederation at that time, as portrayed by Sir Georges Etienne Cartier.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, allow me to quote the words spoken by Macdonald's political partner, Georges-Etienne Cartier, in 1865, as reported in the third edition "L'Histoire du Canada par les Textes":

> Therefore, the confederation of all British provinces must take place, otherwise we shall join the American confederation.

As the audience showed its disagreement to such a consequence, he further stated:

> I knew you would react like this, and I am pleased with your protests. I know that all those present wish to complete this great national task which will unite together all the main interests of the colonies and make of us all a real nation. I am not claiming that this nation will be separate from the mother country. But when I talk about creating a confederation, I mean that the powers given to the various provinces by the imperial government will be combined and entrusted to a single general government. And, if that happens, I will feel that I contributed to a wonderful achievement—

[Text]

I now wish to make a comment regarding another matter but which concerns the preservation of our national historic sites. I quote from the Toronto Star, that great Toronto organ, a free newspaper, thanks to Macdonald and our forefathers, which at the end of a rather long editorial which I am sure all hon. members received, said, "A nation which forgets its past is likely to have a short future." I am sure all hon. members agree with that truth, and that Canada as one nation will never forget her past as she guards her future nationhood.

In conclusion I wish to thank all hon. members for the support which they have given to this motion, and I again wish to commend all those who were connected with it and with the project of preserving the residence of our first prime minister, namely "Bellevue" in the city of Kingston.

Mr. E. J. Benson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak only briefly concerning this particular motion. As I mentioned when I raised a point of order at the opening of this debate, the government—and also speaking for myself personally—certainly are in favour of the resolution as put forward. As a matter of fact the government was so in favour of it that it had carried out the intent of the motion, and not only considered but decided upon the acquisition of this particular property before the motion was put on the order paper.

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Alkenbrack) on his remarks with respect to Sir John A. Macdonald, and I should like to join with him in his eulogy of this great Canadian. I am proud to represent in the House of Commons the riding which was formerly represented by Sir John A. Macdonald. I think Sir John A. Macdonald was certainly one of the greatest, if not the greatest, of the architects of confederation—one of the men who brought this nation together and created the relationship between the French and the English in this country, which made the creation of Canada possible.

I believe that we in Canada do not honour our great Canadians enough. Certainly, I was proud and happy that the government should have made the decision to purchase "Bellevue" house at 35 Centre street in Kingston. This house, built between 1841 and 1843 when Kingston was the legislative capital of the united Canadas, is one of the earliest known examples of the Italian villa style of architecture in Canada. It is located in an attractive residential area of Kingston, among several other homes and estates built during the construction boom that followed the selection of Kingston as the new capital. John A. Macdonald, who was then a member of parliament, moved into "Bellevue" with his wife, infant son and servants in August, 1848. He rented the house from the owner Charles Hale, until late 1849 or early 1850. Although the house was both large and expensive, he chose it in the hope that the semi-rural setting would benefit his ailing wife and because several of his political associates and clients lived in the neighbourhood.

An hon. Member: A rural setting in Kingston?

Mr. Benson: I should like to point out that this particular house which was then in a rural area is now in the heart of the city in a prized residential area.

Before moving into "Bellevue", Sir John successfully contested the election of February, 1848, although the Tory party to which he belonged was defeated.

When this question was first brought to his attention, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) decided immediately that the present government should acquire this property, and I concur in this decision to have the Kingston house preserved. Although it is true that Sir John A. Macdonald did not live there for a long period, it is the last house in Kingston still standing with which Sir John A. Macdonald had a connection, and I believe it is fitting that Kingston, the riding which was represented by him should possess some suitable monument to remind people of his connection with the constituency.

As I mentioned earlier, it was decided on December 23, after negotiations in which I am pleased to have played a part, that the federal government should purchase this property from its owner, Dr. J. M. R. Beveridge, at a cost of $35,000. The Prime Minister stated at the time of the purchase that it would be suitably renovated and kept as an historic monument in the city of Kingston to Sir John A. Macdonald. As a matter of fact, in January, 1964, a team of national parks branch specialists examined the house. A preliminary plan for restoration has since been drawn up. This will cover essential repairs to the house, restoration of interior details to the period of the 1840's, refurnishing of the rooms and appropriate landscaping of the grounds. In this connection I should like to pay tribute to the Kingston historical association and to Mr. Phelps of Kingston who have expressed great interest in this project. The association has gone so far as to indicate it will assist the government of Canada to whatever extent may be necessary so as to ensure that this property is outfitted as a fitting monument to Sir John A. Macdonald.

I believe that in addition to this Kingston property there is another residence in Canada, Earnscliffe, in Ottawa, presently occupied by the United Kingdom high commissioner, which had a long association with Sir John A. Macdonald, and it is my personal feeling that the government of Canada should ultimately acquire this property and establish the former home of Sir John A. Macdonald in the capital of Canada as a fitting memorial to him. I believe it was altogether right that the government should have purchased the property in Kingston, because Sir John A. Macdonald is looked upon as Kingston's most famous son, and the fact that he was the first prime minister of Canada and did so much both for the city of Kingston and for our country as a whole makes him obviously deserving of commemoration. This government, I am proud to say, took action in this connection, although previous governments such as the Conservative government which immediately preceded it, failed to take action to acquire the property, although such a course was urged upon them by many of the citizens of Kingston riding.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): The hon. member who has just spoken has, perhaps indirectly, brought to the attention of the house a question I had in mind, namely the basis upon which the government makes decisions on the subject of historic sites generally—what precisely constitutes a historic site and which of these sites should be bought by the people of Canada.

Everybody honours, or should honour, the name of Sir John A. Macdonald, one of the founders of confederation. Nobody will question the contribution he made to this country, and nobody will question his ability, although I will say that on occasions such as this there can be a little too much sanctimonious talk. I could not help recalling when we were listening to the historical review given by the hon. member who moved this motion that though, undoubtedly, there were times meriting cheers for Sir John A.—and there should be cheers—at the same time there were plenty of times for jeers, too. One has only to remember the history of the C.P.R., and Van Horne, and the politics of that day. However, all that is a long time in the past. We all admit the great contribution made to this country by Sir John A. Macdonald and we all agree that his contribution should be recognized by its commemoration in connection with a historic site. However, I should like to know the basis upon which these historic sites are chosen, whether they affect a man, a city or a province.

The city of Vancouver is the third largest city in Canada. Yet when we want to get the place from which Vancouver started that is New Brighton park, established on the basis of a national historic site, we have to go through a committee. If the committee says no, then the government says no. On what basis are such decisions made? Also, in honouring a great prime minister, on what basis does the government decide that the location should be selected? In recent weeks

I have read a great deal in newspapers and magazines to the effect that this great prime minister Sir John A. Macdonald hated and despised this house in Kingston. He lived there for only seven months, called it a monstrosity and wanted to get out of it.

If all the newspaper reports and history are correct, and that is the true situation, on what basis does the government make a decision to buy this house, and not the one in the city of Ottawa where he lived for years? Is there some basis of priority? I do not know, and I think we should know. In no way do I wish to deprecate the idea of this government honouring Sir John A. Macdonald's memory and acquiring a residence which will be maintained over the years as a reminder of this man's great history, but I strongly believe that when decisions of this nature are made there should be some understanding as to the basis and the principle upon which they are made.

However, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by just saying that as the decision has been made—and all honour to Kingston that it has been made—I sincerely hope that the proposal will be considered, and considered in the near future, of having the home of Sir John A. Macdonald in Ottawa maintained as an historic site and monument, as is today and has been for years the home of Mackenzie King. It is my understanding—only from reports—that the United Kingdom government would give very serious consideration to any request from the government of Canada with regard to the purchase of that home for this specific purpose. I hope this will be kept uppermost in mind by the government.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in this recommendation.

Mr. Fisher: Don't talk it out, killer.

Mr. Matheson: I have been interested in this Centre street property since being elected to this house in the middle of 1961. I have visited it several times and over two years ago discussed the possibility of the purchase of this property with Mr. Ian Imrie, one of our research experts in the historical section of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I think we regret, as the hon. member just mentioned, that Sir John A. did in fact live at "Bellevue" for such a very short period of time. Perhaps one of the things—

Mr. Winch: He also lived in Victoria, on Vancouver island.

Mr. Matheson: Yes, and elsewhere in the Kingston area. One of the things to which we should give consideration in due time is Sir John A.'s grave, which is a rather shabby looking resting place for the first prime minister of this country. I know that one does not disturb graveyards—at least, one effects changes very cautiously—but I am sure the condition of this grave would bring pain to many members of parliament. I have been there at different times with my children and with visitors whom I have brought to the Cataraqui cemetery. I know hon. members would not be satisfied with the appearance of the final resting place of the first prime minister of Canada. One of the difficulties, of course, in doing a really good job on this Centre street residence is to adequately restore two residences, one in Ottawa and one in Kingston.

Mr. Winch: How about Victoria, where he was welcomed after Kingston kicked him out?

Mr. Matheson: It seems clear that to furnish the residences in Kingston and in Ottawa with authentic Macdonald furniture would be quite impossible. However, we have artisans who can very effectively copy the furniture of that period, and we have developed a good deal of experience in this sort of thing in Upper Canada Village on the Crysler farm property. I have no doubt that when the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources have finished with this project, it will have been done creditably and well. The Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources might be interested in looking at an old stone law office of Sir John A., which I think could be acquired and perhaps should be acquired by the country. It is very much as it was, and is still there. This is a property with which Sir John A. was associated, not for a few months but for many years. I am sure there is wide support from all hon. members of this house for this motion, and it is not my purpose to detain the house any longer.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Mr. Alkenbrack, seconded by—

Mr. Benson: The hon. member is not in the house.

Mr. D. G. Hahn (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, can we reasonably and legitimately pass a motion dealing with something that has already been done? The property is about to be acquired, plans are being laid to achieve the objectives of the motion and to restore the property to its condition at the time

Sir John A. lived there, including the furnishings and all the other accessories, so it will be a proper and fitting shrine and memorial to Sir John A. and the town of Kingston. It would seem to me that this is a very desirable and worthy thing. I think we all agree that we should do this, and it seems rather pointless to put a motion through the House of Commons saying that we want to do this when the action necessary to have it done has already been taken.

I think that to pass this motion would serve very little useful purpose. We on this side of the house are sometimes accused of being partisan, and rightly so; but I think we on this side respect this person as much as anybody in any part of the house. We respect him as much as people across the country, and are very anxious to see that this residence is turned into a fitting shrine, paying tribute to this great Canadian leader. Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hahn: I think it is very, very close to six o'clock.

Mr. Fisher: Sir John A. Macdonald is surely worth another minute.

Mr. Hahn: I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I still have the floor. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. Knowles: If you stand there, it will be six o'clock in 30 seconds.

Mr. Fisher: You will never die, Sir John A.

Mr. Knowles: Just stand pat, like the Liberals.

Mr. Hahn: I think, Mr. Speaker, we should all recognize that the action to acquire and renovate this property has been taken by this government. Those on the other side of the house who would like to see a vote taken should bear in mind that it is a Liberal government which has put into motion the plans to acquire a memorial to one of the great Conservative leaders of this country. I think this is something that should be recognized and is a tribute to this government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock, the hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, will the house leader announce the business for tomorrow and perhaps Friday.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I was going to suggest that by consent we extend the time in order that the hon. member might finish his speech.

Mr. Knowles: That would embarrass him.

Mr. Favreau: It is my hope that we can commence the budget debate early tomorrow afternoon. As soon as the motion which was debated this afternoon has been disposed of, the budget debate will commence and will continue throughout the day and throughout Friday. Tomorrow we shall be in a position to announce the business for the whole of next week until the recess.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 19, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds) presented the first report of the standing committee on external affairs, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

THE MINISTRY

RESPONSIBILITY RESPECTING REVENUE DEPARTMENT AND HOUSING ACT

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to inform the house that the President of the Privy Council has assumed temporarily the responsibilities of the Minister of National Revenue, and the Postmaster General has been appointed to be the minister responsible for the direction of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the administration of the National Housing Act.

BROADCASTING

TABLING OF JOINT REPORT RESPECTING COMMUNITY ANTENNAE

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the government received today the report of the board of broadcast governors on community antenna television. I should like to table two French copies and two English copies of that report.

The government immediately undertook a study of the report and, as soon as possible, it will announce its policy on this important matter.

[Text]

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the recommendations of the board of broadcast governors were tabled today, would the hon. gentleman assure the house that no changes in the regulations under the act will be made before the house has had an opportunity to debate this whole question?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): As my colleague the Secretary of State indicated when he tabled the report, the government intends to give urgent consideration to these recommendations, and I can assure the hon. member that no changes in the existing regulations will be made until they have been communicated to the house in advance, so that all hon. members and everyone else interested may know what is intended.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I had a question for the Secretary of State, but since he appears to have been called out of the house I would address it to the Prime Minister. I wonder whether in view of the widespread interest in the subject matter involved, the Prime Minister would agree to asking consent to have the report from the board of broadcast governors which was tabled today by the Secretary of State printed as an appendix to today's Hansard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I would have no objection to doing so if the house would consent to that being done.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the house that this report be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For text of document above referred to, see appendix.]

TRADE

CEREALS—NEW ARRANGEMENTS PROPOSED BY U.K.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the British minister of agriculture, Mr. Christopher Soames, tabled in the British House of Commons yesterday a white paper containing details of Britain's proposed new arrangements for cereals. As the house will recall, I have on previous occasions referred to the close consultations which have been maintained with the British government on this matter.

These arrangements are, of course, of major importance to us. Canada, together with the other principal overseas suppliers, has been working out with the British a co-operative agreement designed to further strengthen and promote the mutually advantageous trade in cereals. Agreement has been reached in principle and it is expected that a formal exchange of letters will be effected shortly.

Details of these arrangements and the exchange of letters will be announced as soon as the agreement has been concluded.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION OF NON-CONFIDENCE IN DEPUTY SPEAKER

The house resumed, from Wednesday, March 18 consideration of the motion of Mr. Gregoire:

That, in view of the unacceptable actions of the Deputy Speaker, the hon. member for Stormont, during the sitting on Friday, March 13, 1964, from 8 to 10 p.m.

(1) In transgressing the standing order of the house which requires that unanimous consent be given to waive the obligation for two days' notice of the presentation of a resolution prescribed by standing order 41;

(2) In transgressing standing order 42 of the house which requires that the member who presents a motion of urgency, with the unanimous consent of the house, without notice thereof as required in standing order 41, must previously explain the urgency of the same; and

(3) In depriving certain members of the house of a right and privilege recognized by standing orders;

For these reasons, be it resolved that the Deputy Speaker no longer has the confidence of this house.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, when I interrupted my remarks on the censure motion presented by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), I was wondering who was really responsible for that violation of the rules of the house.

Is it the Deputy Speaker? Is it the Prime Minister? Is it the party in office or all the parties, except ours? Those are so many questions which fill my mind.

What did the Deputy Speaker do or rather did not do on the evening of Friday, March 13, between 8 and 10?

Contrary to what the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) gave the house to understand, the Deputy Speaker never asked, as is done usually, the unanimous consent of the house.

Yesterday you heard the hon. member for Lapointe give clear evidence that the Deputy Speaker did not ask the unanimous consent of the house, not even once. Some hon. members, whom I congratulate, were even honest enough to say that we were entirely right.

Unless such a procedure be legalized. After I am through with these few remarks, I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to tell me whether an hon. member can seek the assent of the house in such a case without going through the Chair. For instance, could I introduce a motion without first requesting that the Speaker ask whether there is unanimous consent?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Yet, that is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) did.

I cannot understand how the Secretary of State for External Affairs can persist in denying obvious facts. Even with the assistance of all the shrewdest lawyers you will never be able to deny patent facts.

There is only one thing to do, Mr. Secretary of State for External Affairs, and that is for you to repent and resolve not to do it again.

Who could have influenced the Deputy Speaker to follow such an irregular procedure? We find that question puzzling and for obvious reasons, because if the Speaker's decision were dictated by a party or a party caucus, it would be high time for serious members, although they may be small in number, to draw the attention of the house to this matter, and that would be really urgent.

I mention those facts to the house because I noticed that each of the irregular steps taken by the Deputy Speaker was dictated by the urgency of the situation. As evidence of that you have the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs told us yesterday that a world war may have been prevented.

We feel that instead of getting all excited as the major parties did last Friday, it would have been much better to abide by the standing orders and to take a hard look at the situation. Indeed, that is what other members of the United Nations did.

We are still wondering today whether it was necessary to put aside standing orders just to replace 3,500 British soldiers by 1,500 Canadian troops and whether it was worth while to betray the most noble traditions of the house to ensure that our soldiers would be first to reach Cyprus when other United Nations members have not yet finished the formation of their units.

Was it really necessary to jeopardize the very confidence in the rules of this house in order to make expenditures of $3, $4 or perhaps $5 million when England has ventured $1 million only and the United States $2 million for the purpose of settling, maybe, a little family quarrel?

The Secretary of State for External Affairs mentioned also yesterday, as an excuse, the need to keep one's word. This is indeed the Liberals favourite argument. For the sake of keeping one's word, nuclear arms are accepted; for the sake of keeping one's word, the rules are ignored, our small country with a population of 19 million people at the most is thrown into adventures which countries with 140 million dare not embark upon; for the sake of keeping one's word, everything is jeopardized for war, so that there is nothing left for peaceful endeavours.

The Prime Minister seems to have the idiosyncrasy of always committing this country and then forcing the house to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should remind the hon. member that he should only speak on the motion before us today and abstain from discoursing on other subjects.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but it was simply meant as a reply to the arguments which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) put forward yesterday.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the reasons for our objections Friday night, and if standing orders had been observed, we would have been able to submit those facts to hon. members before embarking on expenses which we were unable to meet.

However, the future will tell us who was right. Two days more would certainly not have changed anything as regards the fate of the world, but the principles of this house would have been preserved.

Anyway, according to the latest reports, our soldiers are now over there.

May this be a lesson to the house so that our great statesmen who long for honours, medals and titles may know, once for all, that in peacetime as in wartime, or even in the war for peace: "It is no use running fast, if there is no timely start." Indeed, the surest way is to follow the century old rules of the house.

We hold no grudge against the Deputy Speaker, whom we have in high regard and whom, moreover, we pity for having served as a scapegoat. We are acting in this way to remind the various groups of the house that the rules exist for everybody.

Mr. Speaker, the one who makes the law should submit to the law like everybody else.

When this principle is no longer respected, when this standard is bypassed, when party interests have destroyed this barrier, then there will be anarchy throughout the country.

Once again we do not hold a grudge against anybody, but we shall never allow the law to be scorned to such an extent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I hear some oh, oh's on the other side of the house. I wonder, in similar circumstances, if Liberal members had gone through exactly what we ourselves suffered last Friday they would be prepared to say oh, oh in the house, because the prerogatives and rights of certain members, in this instance the members of our group, were completely disregarded and brushed aside by the Deputy Speaker.

I shall say, at this point—

Mr. Lambert: You were not even here.

An hon. Member: Where were you?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, Friday afternoon, I objected to giving the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) leave to present his resolution with a view to sending troops to Cyprus.

At that time the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) were very well aware of the fact that our group did not accept that haste to bring that resolution before parliament while, 48 hours' before, a regular notice could have been given the house to the effect that such a motion would be introduced.

Now last Friday I had to be absent in the evening to go to Three Rivers. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was aware of that. I wonder what happened during the supper hour, between six and eight o'clock, that the Deputy Speaker, at eight o'clock, decided to let the Prime Minister introduce his resolution, although some members of our group objected to the introduction of that resolution at that time.

That is what the Deputy Speaker said, and I quote from page 911 of Hansard:

> The Prime Minister asked leave to present the motion and he is proceeding on that basis.

He is admitting that the Prime Minister had not obtained the unanimous consent of the house. But later on there was a request to put the Chair's ruling to the house, in view of the fact that the Chair had asked for the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a deplorable violation of the rules of the house.

Of course, the leader of the official opposition admitted during the debate yesterday, that parliamentary procedure had not been quite in order, and he blamed the government and the Prime Minister for introducing this motion with too much haste. I quote here what the Leader of the Opposition said, as recorded on page 1209 of Hansard:

> For that reason I think some reference should be made to the motion. After all, as Leader of the Opposition, as the Prime Minister has said on more than one occasion, I am an officer of this house.
>
> All through the years I have been one of those who have strongly stood against the actions of any government which would trample on the rights and privileges of the opposition.

Why did the Leader of the Opposition not stand up, since he admits that he was in the house Friday afternoon and Friday night?

> I took that view not only when in opposition but also when we enjoyed an overwhelming majority in the house. My desire has been at all times to preserve inviolate the rights and privileges of minorities in this chamber. If we should allow action to be taken that is contrary to the privileges and rules of parliament, then indeed it will not be very long before the rights of private members are lost. I preface what I have to say by these general observations.

But once everything is over the Leader of the Opposition finds that rules have been broken in his presence in the house.

And here he speaks of his love for minorities and for our small number of members; he goes on, as reported on the same page of Hansard:

I think the government was responsible for what happened.

The Leader of the Opposition is just as responsible as the government.

Certainly, there was haste.

It is somewhat late to admit it.

Certainly there was a desire on the part of members generally to carry out the responsibility of this nation.

Who are those to whom this nation has expressed the wish that the government introduce with haste a resolution for the shipping of troops overseas or to Cyprus?

When was the Canadian nation consulted? When did the Canadian nation authorize us, ask us to send troops to Cyprus or submit to the government the resolution which the Prime Minister introduced forcibly in the house last Friday evening?

Then the Leader of the Opposition himself goes on to say, as recorded on page 1209 of Hansard, and I quote:

He—

The Leader of the Opposition was then referring to the Prime Minister.

He had no leave. No leave had been asked for and no leave had been given.

That is what the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday afternoon, but Friday he let the rules be violated and trampled down right here in this house.

When I say that, I in no way mean to imply that a refractory few should be able to hold up the operations of this house.

Just imagine. There are today minorities and small groups, and they would have fought to safeguard the rights of a member of the House of Commons duly elected by the voters. And he continues:

—I in no way mean to imply that a refractory few should be able to hold up the operations of this house. However, these are the rules. When the rules were brought into effect, parliament was not bifurcated or trifurcated or divided into a multiplicity of opposition groups.

I want the Leader of the Opposition to know that if a member of his political party in this house had been involved, I would have objected in exactly the same way. The Leader of the Opposition contradicted himself glaringly concerning disrespect for the rules.

[Mr. Caouette.]

And the Leader of the Opposition goes on:

I would be the last to fail to rise to defend the right of one member in this house against unfairness. What took place is past. What we are now being asked to do is to place the stigma of responsibility for wrongdoing on the Deputy Speaker. That stand I will not take.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to state clearly that it is not through antipathy that we introduced a motion against the Deputy Speaker, for I have a great respect for my friend the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lamoureux), since he has always been up to now completely unprejudiced, but I am inclined to think that last Friday evening, a member of the government, either a minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) himself has used his influence on the Deputy Speaker to ask him to allow the resolution to be introduced so that it would be ready at 8.02 p.m. The government is to blame for this.

Mr. Speaker, if it is fully intended to have the standing orders complied with, whether by members of the Liberal party or of other groups in the house, it is up to the Speaker or Deputy Speaker to see to it. Now, we are told two days later that a mistake has been made.

I disagree with the allegations of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who said we had made a mistake, when he did not have the courage to rise in order to plead urgency. This matter seemed so urgent because our troops had to be sent without delay, and that was the reason for introducing this resolution.

Now, it appears that Sweden and Ireland do not have any troops in Cyprus yet, that Canadians are the only ones there, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs is aware of that situation. Then, why such urgency? Was it for restoring peace in Cyprus or was it for the purpose of climbing another step towards a Nobel prize, in the near or the distant future?

Mr. Speaker, we are the first to wish to abide by the rules of the house and we are asking the other members to do the same.

In closing, I want to reassert that we have nothing against the Deputy Speaker, but let it not happen again.

When the government wants to introduce a motion, it should ask for the unanimous consent of the house, and if a member, whatever the party to which he belongs, is against it, the rules should be respected. The rules should be respected, otherwise we will see new disorder similar to what happened last Friday evening.

We do not have a grudge against the Deputy Speaker, but the Liberal members who try to intervene in the debate would be the first to object if they were sitting in the opposition, they would be the first to condemn that violation of the rules of the house.

Mr. Speaker, we ask that, from now on, the rules be complied with and not only by one group, but by all members of the house.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member permit a question? The hon. member would like other members of the house to admit the mistakes they have made. Some of us did so yesterday, and we stand by the statements we made. Will the hon. member for Villeneuve also admit that he made a mistake by not being here Friday night, in view of his interest in this matter, and that in fact he violated standing order 5 of this house, one of the rules which he says should be kept?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether this is a question or a statement by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I know the rules, and I know standing order 5. I know that the Secretary of State was aware that that night I had to leave Ottawa to go to Three Rivers, and I said so in French a moment ago. Usually we do not sit on Friday night. The motion came just before six o'clock while I was away, so I apologize for not having been here; but at the same time I say that had I been here I would have voiced my opposition to the presentation of the resolution.

Mr. Knowles: But you broke the rules.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must advise the hon. member for Lapointe that if he speaks now he will close the debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, since members from all corners of the house seem to be making implicit or explicit general confessions yesterday and since everybody seems to recognize the truth of our statements concerning the events of last Friday, I would ask for unanimous consent of the house to withdraw our motion and to substitute the following motion therefor:

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That the procedure followed by the house on Friday evening, March 13, 1964, during consideration of the government's resolution, be referred to the house's committee on procedure and that the latter be asked to examine the matter and make a recommendation.

[Text]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the condition which has been imposed, may I submit to Your Honour and the members of this house that since all the rules of the house have already been referred to the committee, and since this matter concerns the application of rules 41 and 42, the condition imposed by the hon. gentleman is redundant.

Mr. Speaker: I must say at the beginning that if the house cared to give unanimous consent I would have no objection to receiving this amendment. However, my duty as Speaker is to consider one motion at a time, and it strikes me that this second proposition, if I may put it that way, is not at all in accordance with the motion before the house. Short of unanimous consent I must make the ruling that this second motion to amend the first is in my opinion out of order and cannot be accepted at this time. In my humble opinion the house must deal with one motion at a time. We have one motion before the house and we are called upon to accept, reject, or withdraw it.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder whether the hon. member for Lapointe would accept a question. In view of the statement made by the hon. member for Edmonton West, with which I think we will all agree, that all our rules and procedures have been referred to the committee on procedure, and in view of the fact that some of us can give the assurance that this matter will be considered in that committee, will he not ask leave to withdraw his original motion without attaching any conditions to it?

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I know perfectly well that the standing orders question has been referred to the committee on procedure, but the motion I have just presented is to the effect that the events which occurred on that evening be referred to that committee on procedure, and not standing orders as a whole.

That is the reason why I shall accept to withdraw the other motion only on condition that this one be agreed to, that is that the procedure followed on that evening be referred to the special committee on procedure—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I must interrupt the hon. member, who must have heard the ruling to the effect that the second motion by way of amendment was out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I suppose all hon. members knew that the second motion would be declared out of order, and that is why I asked the house to pass it unanimously. Since unanimous consent has not been granted, I wish to say that we will abide by our original motion, and I will explain briefly why we have called the attention of the house to what we consider a typical case.

The majority of hon. members or at least many of them have admitted that a mistake or an irregularity was committed. Consequently, we cannot understand why experts on procedure have asked us to withdraw our non-confidence motion. Since mistakes have been made, why should we be blind to them, why should we relinquish our responsibilities and refuse to determine who is responsible for those mistakes and irregularities?

Mr. Speaker, we do not accept to ignore the breaches of the rules which took place last Friday, and that is why we maintain our resolution.

We would have been willing to ask the committee on procedure to consider what happened Friday evening, but since a vote is desired, we are ready to vote on the motion.

Moreover, I wish to say—

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member permit one more question, and this is my last? Does he not realize that the reason some of us would like the hon. member to consider withdrawing his motion is that we do not feel the Deputy Speaker should have votes cast against him for a mistake which was a mistake of the whole house? Does he not feel that it is, therefore, a reasonable request?

Mr. Caouette: It was not our mistake.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I want to be very specific on this subject. There are some who wish to call this a mistake. Personally, I do not call it a mistake.

We had in this chamber people as conversant with the procedure and the rules of the house as the hon. members for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), as well as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). But, when a mistake succeeds in slipping through all these competent men on procedure, I say there was blinking of the facts somewhere, and that is why I will not call it a mistake. On the contrary, it is indeed a flagrant transgression of the rules that was committed on that evening, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre knows it full well. In fact, as the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) pointed out, we witnessed on that evening a general agreement to be blind to the infringement of the standing orders of this house.

Mr. Chretien: Blah, blah, blah.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I hear the argument of the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche (Mr. Chretien) saying blah, blah, blah. It is the most intelligent argument put forward by some members opposite who keep barking all the time.

If you want us to withdraw our motion, give us sound arguments.

Mr. Speaker, I will go further and explain the reason why we are asking for a vote. I am quite astonished to find that English speaking Canadians, and I commend them for it, who are always great upholders of procedure and the standing orders have today become sentimentalists, have, in fact, become French Canadians, and do not take the standing orders too seriously.

Mr. Speaker, we are—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think all hon. members will appreciate that the Chair has been extremely lenient in allowing the hon. member to sum up and conclude his argument. We are now discussing the motion, and if the house is ready I am prepared to put the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I only need a minute to complete my remarks. We conclude that there were irregularities. We think that, following our interventions that evening—we made seven or eight—hon. members and the Deputy Speaker persisted in their blindness. We feel that our conscience does not permit us to call this a simple error, for it is an obvious violation of the standing orders. That is why we ask for a vote on this motion.

[Text]

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Gregoire), which was negatived on the following division:

NAYS

Messrs:

Aiken
Alkenbrack
Armstrong
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Balcer
Baldwin
Barnett
Basford
Batten
Bechard
Beer
Bell
Benidickson
Benson
Berger
Bigg
Blouin
Boulanger
Brown
Byrne
Cadieu (Meadow Lake)
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cantelon
Cantin
Cardiff
Cardin
Caron
Carter
Casselman, Mrs.
Chapdelaine
Chatterton
Chretien
Churchill
Clancy
Coates
Cooper
Cowan
Crossman
Cyr
Davis
Deachman
Deschatelets
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Doucett

Douglas
Drury
Dube
Dupuis
Emard
Eudes
Fane
Favreau
Fisher
Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke)
Flemming (Victoria-Carleton)
Forbes
Forest
Forgie
Foy
Francis
Frenette
Gelber
Gendron
Godin
Gordon
Grafftey
Granger
Gray
Greene
Groos
Guay
Gundlock
Habel
Hahn
Haidasz
Hales
Harkness
Harley
Hellyer
Herridge
Horner (Acadia)
Horner (The Battlefords)
Howard
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Jewett, Miss
Jorgenson
Kennedy
Klein
Knowles
Konantz, Mrs.
Korchinski
LaMarsh, Miss
Lamb
Lambert
Lamontagne
Laverdiere
Leblanc
Leboe
Leduc
Lessard (Lake St. John)
Lessard (St. Henry)
Lloyd
Loiselle
Loney
Macaluso
Macdonald
MacEachen
MacEwan
MacInnis
Mackasey
MacLean (Queens)
MacNaught
Macquarrie
MacRae
McBain
McCutcheon
McIlraith
McIntosh
McLean (Charlotte)
McWilliam
Madill
Mandziuk
Marcoux
Martin (Essex East)
Martineau
Mather
Matheson
Matte
Millar
Mitchell
Monteith
Moore
More
Moreau
Morison
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Mullally
Munro
Nasserden
Nesbitt
Nicholson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Nugent
O'Keefe
Olson
Orlikow
Ormiston
Ouellet
Pascoe
Patterson
Paul
Pearson
Pepin
Pickersgill
Pigeon
Pilon
Prud'homme
Pugh
Rapp
Regan
Rheaume
Ricard
Richard
Rideout
Rinfret
Robichaud
Rock
Rouleau
Roxburgh
Ryan
Rynard
Sauve
Scott
Sharp
Simpson
Skoreyko
Slogan
Smallwood
Smith
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Stenson
Stewart
Tardif
Teillet
Temple
Thomas
Tremblay
Tucker
Turner
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Assiniboia)
Watson (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Webb
Webster
Whelan
Winch
Winkler—206.

YEAS

Messrs:

Beaule
Boutin
Caouette
Gauthier
Gregoire
Laprise
Latulippe
Perron
Plourde
Rondeau—10.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SENATE REPRESENTATION FROM QUEBEC

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-76, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960, with respect to representation of the provinces in the Senate and qualifications of senators.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks primarily to make the Senate more Canadian, especially concerning the province of Quebec which, until now, was not governed by the same regulations as the other Canadian provinces. As you can see in the explanatory notes, it is proposed mainly to replace section 23 which states that a person must:

be over the age of 30, be a British subject, etc.

by the following:

1. Be over 30 years of age;
2. Be a Canadian citizen;
3. Reside in the province which the senator represents.

I fail to see why the province of Quebec should be treated differently from the other provinces as far as the Senate is concerned.

The purpose of this bill is to give Quebec exactly the same rights and prerogatives as the other Canadian provinces.

[Text]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED CHANGE IN NAME OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-77, respecting the department of foreign affairs.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, this bill simply seeks to change the name of the Department of External Affairs by substituting the designation "department of foreign affairs" for that of "external affairs".

[Text]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LABOUR RELATIONS

HAL BANKS—INQUIRIES CONCERNING REMOVAL FROM OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a couple of questions to the Minister of Labour and ask whether he would take the house into his confidence and remove the veil of mystery regarding the suddenness with which Hal Banks was removed from office, having regard to the report dated March 10 in which the trustees stated that his removal was to be dealt with by "persons and processes within the trade union movement itself".

Having waited 22 weeks, what happened during a period of eight days that brought about such a complete change in the attitude of the board of trustees? Was it because wiretapping was brought home to Hal Banks and those connected with him? Was it because of a shortage in the accounts of the union welfare fund? These are questions to which Canadians would like answers. Why would the parliament of Canada secure certain information in a report one day—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and the next day witness a sudden turnabout on the part of the trustees?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not addressed to the board of trustees any of these specific questions that have been raised by the right hon. gentleman, but it is my impression that the decision of the trustees to take this course of action was a result of long consideration—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Twenty two weeks.

Mr. MacEachen: —of the affairs of the seafarers international union and was not based on any particular incident of recent date. As was pointed out by the trustees in their report, they foresaw the removal of Mr. Banks in the absence of union action to remove him or if, in their judgment, his continued presence as the head of the union, or any person as an officer of the union, was prejudicial to the union itself or the welfare of Canada as a whole. I would think that the action taken yesterday by the trustees was fully consistent with the statement of policy contained in their report tabled in the house the previous day.

[Mr. Marcoux.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that consistency is not very apparent, but I am not here to make an argument. I ask the minister also whether Mr. Hall, the head of the union from New York, is in Montreal today along with members of his executive, and are they meeting with the board of trustees?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on this point I will tell the Leader of the Opposition that I received a wire at 1.20 this afternoon from Mr. Paul Hall, president of the seafarers international union of North America, from 95 Lakeshore, Pointe Claire, Montreal, province of Quebec, being a copy of the telegram which he addressed to the trustees protesting their action and asking the trustees to meet with him this afternoon at the headquarters of the S.I.U. I got this telegram just before I came into the house and have had no opportunity to find out from the trustees whether any meeting with Mr. Hall is contemplated or whether any discussions have been arranged.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. gentleman read the complaint portion of the telegram?

Mr. MacEachen: With the leave of the house, Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to read this telegram, which is addressed to the Minister of Labour:

> The following wire sent today to the board of trustees of the maritime transportation unions: the undersigned president of the seafarers international union of North America—A.F.L.-C.I.O. protests:
>
> 1. Arbitrary action in removing Hal C. Banks from the presidency of the seafarers international union of Canada depriving him of the right to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of his rights and obligations.
>
> 2. Unilateral appointment as president of our Canadian affiliate an employee of the government trustees who is not nor has ever been a member of any affiliated organization of the S.I.U.N.A.-A.F.L.-C.I.O
>
> 3. Confiscation of hundreds of thousands of dollars of property and assets of this international union.
>
> 4. Ejection of international union officer from the premises of the international union.
>
> 5. Unnecessary utilization of police force in occupying international union premises including harassment and surveillance of staff by police forces.
>
> 6. Precipitous action notwithstanding pending court action questioning the constitutionality of the maritime transportation unions trustee act.
>
> Please be advised that the undersigned as international president of the seafarers international union of North America A.F.L.-C.I.O. shall present himself at the premises of the international union, 634 St. James st. west, Montreal, P.Q.—

—an odd address—

—on Thursday March 19, 1964 at 2 p.m. and suggest that such time and place would be appropriate to discuss with you the matters outlined above.

This telegram was addressed to the trustees and sent by Mr. Hall.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. What are the minister's views on the contents of this telegram sent by Mr. Paul Hall?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this is an interesting telegram.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—TERMS OF REFERENCE OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder whether he can give the house a report on the role which has been established for the Canadian contingent of the United Nations peace keeping force in Cyprus; whether he can tell the house what guide lines or terms of reference have been agreed to by the United Nations; whether it is true that it has been agreed that Canadian troops will not be allowed to disarm civilians carrying arms; and whether any other stipulations in the terms of reference have yet been agreed to?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the function of the United Nations force in Cyprus, in accordance with the resolution of the security council of March 4, is to use its best efforts to prevent a recurrence of fighting and as necessary to contribute to the restoration and maintenance of law and order and a return to normal conditions. The role of the Canadian contingent, and of the forces contributed by other countries, is to undertake such duties as may be ordered by the commander of the force to carry out this mission.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. The minister has missed part of my question. Is it correct that Canadian troops are not permitted to disarm civilians carrying weapons in Cyprus?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the disarming of civilians carrying weapons in either of the communities will not, according to the guide lines, be a function of the United Nations force.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is too bad.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs has agreed with this stipulation on Canada's behalf?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This does not mean, however, that the forces will not be allowed, as would be the situation in the case of any police force, to defend themselves.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): May I ask a supplementary question. Have any precise directives yet been given to the Canadian forces in Cyprus by the U.N. command?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The acting commander is in charge of the United Nations international force. The instructions which will be given to the forces will go from him and from the commander, General Gyani, who takes up his responsibilities on the 21st of this month.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he does not feel that the denial to the Canadian forces of their right to disarm guerrillas in fact emasculates the Canadian force and places the force in a position of great danger.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the right hon. gentleman. This was one of the questions which were the subject of considerable discussion prior to the decision of the government to answer the call of the secretary general. It was one of the subjects which I discussed with him a week ago tonight in his office at the United Nations. From all the information available to the secretary general and to others, it seemed in the circumstances that one of the best ways to preserve order was to leave to the government and to the communities concerned these responsibilities at this stage. I believe that if the force can establish peace and order, as thus far it seems to have been able to do, this would be a better arrangement. The secretary general has indicated that from time to time the situation will have to be re-examined in the light of events.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated that the United Nations commander General Gyani has not yet taken over, under what precise directives are the Canadian forces there now acting?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They are acting, Mr. Speaker, under the instructions being given to them by the secretary general. He has provided, in the guide lines, which have been made public, the following: First of all, he has stated to the security council that the U.N. force in Cyprus is in being; second, that troops of the Canadian contingent have been taken under command of the acting commander, Major General C.F. Paiva Chaves; and third, that the force will be established operationally when sufficient troops are available to it in Cyprus to make it possible for it to discharge its functions effectively.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, perhaps this would be an opportune moment to give the house a message which was sent to our ambassador by the secretary general of the United Nations, U Thant. He wrote as follows:

My Dear Ambassador,

I would be grateful if you would convey to your government my warm appreciation of its favourable response to my appeal for a contingent for the United Nations peace keeping force in Cyprus. I know that the decision to provide a contingent in the circumstances of the Cyprus problem cannot have been an easy one to take and favourable action is all the more valued for that reason. The fine support of your government at this critical time has been a vital factor in the United Nations ability to meet its responsibility for trying to bring peace to the island of Cyprus. Already the knowledge that your government is making troops available is having a steadying influence on the situation and I am sure that the early arrival of those troops will make a far more positive contribution to the peace effort there. I look forward to close co-operation with you and your government on this question in the coming weeks.

Yours sincerely,
U Thant

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, the minister referred to the force being operational. I wonder how he would reconcile "operational" with the restrictions which are being placed upon it, as we understand the matter; and would he not agree that it would appear to many of us who have had experience in this field that because of these restrictions the situation of our troops there is made absolutely hopeless?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I regret the statement of the hon. gentleman. I am sure that on reflection he will share my regret. This is a very difficult situation involving deep tensions and hostilities between two communities, in which there are a number of armed citizens who have been contributing to the tension and bloodshed in the island. The forces that will go in there under the command of General Gyani will be armed. They are, however, not in there as occupational troops. They are there for the purpose of preserving order, and it seems to us that troops that are sent to the island will want to emphasize that they are there primarily for that purpose and not to act in a way that could add to their very difficult assignment. They will be armed and they will have every right to take those precautions in advance which this house properly expects them to take. The situation in the island continues to be one of calm and this has been contributed to undoubtedly—

Mr. Churchill: There was an outbreak yesterday.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —by the decision of the United Nations to send in a police force. I am not going to say anything at this moment which, in the face of the situation in the island, will make it difficult for the force to carry out its obligation, an experience which Canadians have gained in many other areas where the terms of reference in general principles were the same as in this instance.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, this house has learned from long experience that, the more difficult the position in which the minister finds himself, the longer he takes to reply. We take that for granted. I appreciate the problem he has raised. No one questions the difficulty of the situation but I ask him how he defines "self defence"? Can you only defend yourself after you have been killed?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would say to my hon. friend that you certainly do not define it by using the words my hon. friend used, by saying that the situation confronting the Canadian contingent was a hopeless one. It is not a hopeless one.

Mr. Pearson: Of course not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is not hopeless because the United Nations forces are contributing to a situation that is getting better and better. My hon. friend asked a specific question. He knows the answer. Our forces are armed and they will take all precautions to defend themselves, but they are not going to conduct themselves in advance in a manner that will contribute to the lack of harmony in the island.

Mr. Speaker: I have quite a line-up. I should like to start first with the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): While the Canadian troops have a right to defend themselves against attack, would the minister not think that if they are not empowered to disarm, then the only alternative is to kill all those who would oppose them with arms?

An hon. Member: Or to be killed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am not going to use language that is going to add to the problem of the United Nations peace force.

An hon. Member: You do not know the answer.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I have two supplementaries for the minister. First of all, I ask him again, do the Canadian forces in Cyprus at present have any specific instructions or precise directives as to what they are to do? From what the minister has indicated they must have, and I should like to know what they are. Second, has the minister considered requesting the secretary general to set up an advisory committee, as was done in the case of the problem in the Congo, to advise the secretary general how to carry out the terms of the United Nations resolution and to give directives to the United Nations command?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have already answered the first part of my hon. friend's question. He may not be satisfied with the answer, but it is the answer which I have given. With regard to the question of an advisory committee, undoubtedly my hon. friend has in mind the experience in the Congo. This matter was the subject of considerable discussion between the secretary general and those who spoke for Canada. At this stage the secretary general does not propose to institutionalize the consultative arrangements, but I may assure my hon. friend that there are good reasons for the position he takes. I did not agree with the position he took last week, but after talking to him I appreciate the reasons and I am satisfied that at the present time they are good reasons. I may assure my hon. friend that Canada will be fully consulted.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How can the minister say the situation is getting better and better when a news dispatch today states that heavy fighting has again broken out and that there are casualties?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is true that today we were told by the press that some fighting had broken out in one particular area between the two communities. This situation has been going on for some time; but since the announcement by the secretary general that he had established a police force the situation has become calmer. I was told by the ambassador of Cyprus to the United Nations, who visited Ottawa this morning, that it was correct to say that as a result of the establishment of the force, a period of tranquillity had set in, and he hoped and believed that this would continue to be the situation. No one can guarantee this, but I am sure that the Canadians in the United Nations force and the force itself will do everything they humanly can to do what they have been sent there to do in the name of the United Nations, that is, seek to preserve order.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if the minister can seriously describe as a condition of tranquillity a situation where people are being killed and murdered?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the minister can possibly answer that question.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister if in his talk with the secretary general he made representations to the secretary general toward the securing of a firm undertaking on the part of Archbishop Makarios that all arms smuggling into Cyprus will be stopped immediately and, if not, as to the possibility of the police force being empowered to stop the entry of any more arms into Cyprus?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The secretary general has assured the Canadian government that the government of Cyprus and the two communities have given him every assurance of full co-operation with the mission entrusted to the United Nations peace keeping force.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I have no desire to make the minister's task more difficult in this critical situation. I am sure he also appreciates the fact, however, that members of parliament, having committed troops to Cyprus, have a responsibility to see that they are given an adequate opportunity to protect themselves and to discharge their responsibilities. In view of the fact that it is difficult to see how a police force can act in a civil war unless it has the capacity to disarm guerrillas, I should like to ask the minister what is the basic objection to allowing the international police force to disarm guerrillas? Who takes this objection? Will the minister urge upon the secretary general of the United Nations the need for giving this authority to the international police force, not just the Canadian contingent but the entire international police force, in the event it should become necessary to use it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the hon. gentleman does not propose to ask any question that would add to the problems that face the force.

An hon. Member: He said that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know he did, and I am assuring him that I believe that is the attitude of the hon. gentleman. That is why I am saying it. The course in this regard is not dissimilar to the powers given to the United Nations emergency force now operating in the Gaza strip or the United Nations peace keeping force in the Congo. The secretary general will shortly, we hope, be appointing a mediator whose responsibility it will be to mediate the dispute between the two communities; after the most careful consideration it is thought by all concerned that the responsibility for disarming should be left with the authorities in Cyprus at this stage.

The United Nations force is not in there as the authority. It is not in there, as I said a moment ago, as an occupational force. It is in there to seek to use, in this particular situation, whatever means are open for the best possible preservation of order. One could say that the force would have other powers; some of those powers I do not believe it is in the interest of the assignment to detail completely at this time. I may assure my hon. friend that the problem which he raises, as well as others which were implied in some of the questions today, were considered and will be part of the terms of reference for the forces in the difficult assignment that they have.

[Later:]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I had a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is it correct, as reported, that a 14 point directive was issued by the secretary general covering the operations of the peace keeping force on Cyprus? If so, is the minister able to give the house the details of it, and was Canada consulted before the 14 point directive was issued?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As I have already indicated, there was the fullest discussion with regard to the terms of reference which have been given by the secretary general for the use of the peace keeping force. As to whether or not full details can be given, I will give consideration to that and deal with it tomorrow.

CANADIAN FLAG

PAMPHLET WITH RED ENSIGN PREPARED BY QUEEN'S PRINTER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister. I also make it a question of privilege.

This morning we received in the mail a pamphlet showing the Canadian red ensign, which was undoubtedly published by the printing bureau, since it bears the signature of Mr. Roger Duhamel, the queen's printer. That pamphlet also says:

> At present Canada's distinctive flag is the Red Ensign bearing our country's coat of arms in the fly.

Then the story of that flag is given.

Consequently, here is my question. Do the Prime Minister and his government agree that this is Canada's distinctive flag? Moreover, can the Prime Minister tell the house under what authority the queen's printer sent out the literature which was received this morning?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): So far as the question of privilege is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I leave that in your hands. I have no desire or right to comment on it, if it is a question of privilege.

So far as the first question is concerned, the flag to which my hon. friend referred has official status as established by order in council in 1945. So far as the second question is concerned, I do not know the circumstances surrounding the issuance of this leaflet, but I will be glad to look into it.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF MILK SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Does he intend to re-establish the payment to dairy producers of a subsidy in the amount of 25 cents per 100 pounds of milk as existed previously?

[Text]

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): I wish to thank the hon. member for his question, and I will take it as notice and bring it to the attention of the minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order. The hon. members on this side of the house wish to get information from the Minister of Agriculture and, to our regret, he is not here; in fact, he is always absent. Now, the Minister of Agriculture should be in the house to answer the questions that are directed to him by opposition members.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; I regret that I do not see any point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. I am of the opinion that the continuous absence of the Minister of Agriculture is an insult to opposition members—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The remarks of the hon. member are more or less identical with the remarks he made a moment ago. There is no question of privilege. If the minister is not here at the moment, I presume he must have an adequate reason for not being here.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. When does he intend to announce the resignation of the Hon. Harry W. Hays, who cannot get along with the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauve)?

[Text]

An hon. Member: The same old bird.

Mr. Beer: I am sure it would not be the wish of the Minister of Agriculture to bring about a mass exodus of members opposite. The minister is in western Canada on an important agricultural mission.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I have directed a question to the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada; I have asked him whether he intended to announce shortly the resignation of the Minister of Agriculture, since he is unable to get along with the Minister of Forestry.

[Text]

EDUCATION

LOANS TO STUDENTS—REPORTED REMARKS OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): This habit of parliamentary secretaries answering in the absence of ministers impels me to ask the Prime Minister whether or not his attention has been directed to a statement made by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce as reported in Le Devoir:

[Translation]

I object to the students' loan project.

[Text]

In other words, the parliamentary secretary declares himself against the loans system for students. Is it appropriate that parliamentary secretaries should be declaring their opposition to policies enunciated by the government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be glad to look into the alleged statement made by my hon. friend the parliamentary secretary.

[Translation]

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister, following the answer he gave to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Has the Prime Minister asked the Minister of Justice to consider the legal aspect of the proposed legislation in the light of the provisions of the Canadian constitution, and does he not believe that this legislation, bearing as it does on education, falls under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: We do not take legislative action unless we have satisfied ourselves about the constitutionality of it.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I wonder if the Prime Minister, when he studies the declaration made by his parliamentary secretary, will refer to the book by Herbert Morrison, a noted British parliamentarian, which states that the doctrine of collective responsibility extends to all parliamentary secretaries, and if any were to publicly proclaim disagreement with the government his resignation would almost certainly be required.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I remember reading that book in connection with resignations from the recent government.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO PRESENTATION OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Since he understands English better, I will do it in that language.

[Text]

Since the variations or interpretations of the word "soon" are rather limited, perhaps the minister could advise the house when the white paper on defence will come out.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Soon, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGES

THREE RIVERS, QUE.—ACTION FOLLOWING LEA REPORT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Paul Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Transport a question.

Can the minister tell the house whether there has been any development following the submission of the Lea report concerning the building of a bridge at Three Rivers?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was able to inform the premier of Quebec just before we came into the house, about two hours ago, that Mr. Lea had made a verbal report yesterday in which he indicated that although there were some difficulties which might be encountered as a result of the construction of this bridge, there did not seem to be any adequate reason why it should not be proceeded with or the contract should not be let.

Perhaps, sir, if I might be permitted, I should like to express appreciation to the government of Quebec and the bridge company for holding off the letting of the contract until there was an opportunity to make an investigation into this important matter.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I hope the Minister of Transport is not going to make use of the snide remark he made to the effect that two hours have elapsed since we came into the house, and at a later stage imply that this was all the question period.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think it is necessary to comment.

TRADE

REPORTED CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The minister is reported in this morning's Globe and Mail to have said at a meeting in Hamilton:

> A rigid stand to protect Canadian manufacturers at the forthcoming round of trade negotiations would be unwise and difficult to maintain.

How does the minister reconcile this with the assurance given by the Minister of Finance to secondary manufacturers in his budget speech, and referred to in the Toronto Globe and Mail of Wednesday, March 18?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance and I on these matters see eye to eye.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. My question is based on the fact that a book is now on sale on newsstands in Canada entitled "The Pearson Phenomenon," and more accurately entitled in the United States "Pearson of Canada," written by Mr. John R. Beal, a Time magazine representative in Ottawa, Canada. Would the Prime Minister inform the house whether there is any relationship between the appearance of this book at this time and the appearance on the order paper of legislation dealing with certain periodical publications?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, although of course this question is out of order I can assure my hon. friend that there is no relationship whatever, except in his suspicious mind.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

SUGGESTED REASON FOR FAILURE TO PURCHASE CARAVELLE AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. My question is based on an article published in the Montreal Star of Tuesday, March 17. According to that article Mr. Claude Dessureault, public relations director for Canadian Industries Limited, stated:

[Text]

> Mr. Dessureault claimed that in the recent dispute involving Trans-Canada Air Lines and the choice of a medium range jet aircraft, France's Caravelle lost because—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise—

Mr. Gregoire:

> —all the plans and data submitted were in French.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I realize it is a point of order that perhaps I could have raised a dozen times today. When are we going to apply the rule that in asking questions it is not in order to read material and give information? I feel it is appropriate to raise this now, since we have been asked from the far corner to obey the rules of the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I shall willingly conform to the rules, even though I am not as familiar with them as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). If I sometimes fail to abide by the rules it is because I do not know them very well.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could he confirm whether the submission from Société Sud-Aviation concerning the building of Caravelle aircraft in Canada was turned down because plans had been drawn up in French only?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that the rules were invoked in this particular case, I think perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre might have invoked them in the case of those who more frequently ask questions which are out of order. I propose today to reply that while I have no knowledge on this matter, not having inquired of Trans-Canada Air Lines and not having had anything whatever to do with the transaction myself, I simply do not believe there is the slightest vestige of truth in that story. I am perfectly sure it would make absolutely no difference to the management of T.C.A. whether any submission was made in English or in French, because it would receive the same full, complete and equal attention.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The original question was out of order for at least three reasons.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary question.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; I have given a ruling. There is no urgency in the question—even if it were a question. To me it was a statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, then I make it a question of privilege.

I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. In view of what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) has just stated to us so categorically, I believe that it is our privilege to ask him at least to make an inquiry on that matter before making a flat statement, as he just did.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Notwithstanding the fact that it is against the rules to ask whether statements in the press are true or not, in this particular case I will inquire and send a reply to the hon. gentleman; but I do not think we should take up the time of the house with it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

CONSERVATION MEASURES TO PREVENT KILLING OF SEALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the heavy slaughter of seals taking place in the gulf of St. Lawrence, as reported in the Montreal Gazette, could the minister indicate—

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

An hon. Member: Do learn the standing orders.

Mr. Gregoire: According to the standing orders, one should not take press reports as a basis—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not see how there can be a point of order on a question which has not even been stated. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Dinsdale: Could the minister indicate what steps are being taken to deal with this critical conservation problem?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as I have mentioned before in the house, this is a problem which has international repercussions. The matter has been dealt with as far as our jurisdiction would permit us to go.

We have established regulations, and this matter will be brought up at the ICNAF meeting next summer where we expect to have the co-operation of the different countries involved in the hunting of seals in north Atlantic waters.

Mr. Dinsdale: As a supplementary question, has any action been taken by the international commission on the northwest Atlantic fisheries to deal with this matter, as was recommended by Canada in 1961?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, preliminary discussions took place at their annual meeting held in Halifax last year and all the countries were instructed to prepare to discuss this matter fully at the next meeting to be held at Hamburg next summer. We hope to be able to come up with satisfactory regulations.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question may I ask the Minister of Fisheries, in view of the fact that this alleged butchering of baby seals is going on daily in the gulf of St. Lawrence and off the Magdalen islands, does this not come within the jurisdiction of his department and why are the regulations not being enforced?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, the existing regulations are being enforced. My department has close to 100 officers and men now supervising the operation as much as is possible. As I said before, this comes under international regulations and we have no jurisdiction to go further than we do at the present time.

Mr. Douglas: As a further supplementary question, has the minister seen the film shot by two Montreal cameramen of the slaughter which is going on off the Magdalen islands?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the film, but just about an hour ago I asked my deputy minister to obtain a copy so that we could see it and see what we can do about it.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): As a supplementary question, is the minister in a position to assure the house that after May, 1964, the whole of the gulf of St. Lawrence will be under Canadian jurisdiction entirely and will no longer be an international matter?

Mr. Robichaud: A declaration to this effect has already been made in the house by the right hon. Prime Minister.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROSPECTIVE LAY-OFFS AT POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I desire to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Did he, along with the Minister of National Defence and the Associate Minister of National Defence meet on Tuesday evening with a delegation from the Sydney board of trade who, I understand, made representations against the closing of the Point Edward naval base? Could the hon. gentleman advise the house as to the results of these representations and any others which he has received urging that the base be kept in operation, or can he at this time give us a full report on this meeting?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): We have had a meeting with representatives of the board of trade and we have discussed the situation surrounding the decision to close the Point Edward base. We also discussed the question of possible alternative employment for persons to be affected.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the Minister of Labour indicate to the house just what those plans to provide alternative employment are, especially as they relate to men over 40 and 50 years of age who are working at the base?

While answering that question he might also indicate why the government still insists, when advertising positions, that the age of an applicant be given.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest the minister take that question as notice. It seems to me that it has been asked already, not today but in the last two or three weeks.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order. The question has been asked on a number of occasions but answers have never been provided, though this is a most urgent matter in Cape Breton.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): On a question of privilege; this is an extremely important question, yet the minister continues to ignore it and slough it off. Why do we not get some answers?

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no doubt about the importance of the question. All questions, I assume have a certain importance. But some are more important than others, and some are more urgent than others. This is hardly the type of question to which an answer could be expected on the spur of the moment.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

CONSIDERATION OF STUDENT LOANS AND CANADA PENSION PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): My question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government, at the federal-provincial conference this month, to consider the proposal of the Canadian union of students that the provinces be permitted to make separate agreements with the federal government as to the method of implementation of student loans, in order that the plan might be started in 1964?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As the hon. gentleman knows, this matter is being considered at the forthcoming conference and the representations made by the organization to which he refers, and which I have received, will certainly be borne in mind.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Now that Bill No. C-75 has been introduced, will the question of provincial participation in the Canada pension plan be discussed at the conference which is to begin on March 31?

Mr. Pearson: The pension plan is one of the subjects for discussion and consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Dupuis).

Does the minister intend to request the resignation of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) who dared express ideas in opposition to those of the minister and his government with respect to interest-free loans for students?

[Text]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN—TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS TO PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the government plans to transfer 13 D.V.A. hospitals to the provinces, what progress has been made in negotiations with the government of Saskatchewan to transfer federally-owned and operated hospitals for Indians to provincial jurisdiction?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this question be put on the order paper.

CROWN ASSETS

TRANSFER OF FACILITIES OF R.C.A.F. STATION, EDGAR, ONT.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Madill (Dufferin-Simcoe): My question is directed to the Minister of Industry. Has the government offered to transfer the land, buildings and maintenance equipment at the R.C.A.F. station at Edgar, Ontario, to the county of Simcoe, or to any organization, for $1 or for a nominal consideration of a like amount?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): No plans have yet been formulated for the future use of the radar station, about to be disused, at Edgar. However, the government is fully alive to the importance of making the best possible use of these national defence facilities and is exploring a considerable number of proposals to this end.

INDUSTRY

REPORTED INTENTION TO MOVE PLANTS FROM QUEBEC TO ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production.

Can the minister tell us whether he has made inquiries to know the reason for the possible moving of many industries out of Quebec. What steps does his department intend to take to check this coming exodus to Ontario of many Quebec industries, according to what the acting manager of the association for the development of eastern Ontario indicated at a meeting of the municipal council in Pembroke this week?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this and I will consider the question as notice.

[Text]

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO DEDUCTIONS FOR PART TIME STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the announcement by the hon. gentleman that part time students will be allowed income tax deductions in respect of tuition fees, would the minister say whether such deductions would include tuition fees incurred by professional or technical graduates attending refresher and postgraduate courses? Second, is this exemption restricted to tuition fees or are all costs, such as the cost of books, instruments, travelling and living expenses, to be included?

Mr. Speaker: This surely is a detailed question requiring a careful answer; therefore it should be placed on the order paper.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—REPORTED OBJECTIONS BY QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister?

Can the Prime Minister tell the house whether he has received any official protests from the premier of the province of Quebec concerning the pension plan which is being proposed in this house by the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have received no such protest.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary.

Mr. Pugh: May I defer my question until tomorrow? Too much time has been taken up already today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pugh: It was a question for the Minister of Finance, and I would not expect a reasonable answer anyway at this point.

An hon. Member: You have spoiled it, now.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: I too, Mr. Speaker, will not take up the time of the house.

WORLD FAIR

USE OF SYMBOL DELETED BY PARLIAMENT FROM BILL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Public Works?

Did the minister inquire or does he have a statement to make about the 1967 world fair symbol which was rejected by this house and, according to press reports, was nevertheless accepted by the world exhibition corporation?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member to put that question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is responsible to this house for everything which concerns the 1967 world fair?

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce the same question?

Has the minister made inquiries or does he have a statement to make in connection with the world fair emblem which had not been accepted by the world exhibition corporaaccording to newspapers, has nevertheless been accepted by the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has already addressed an inquiry to the Prime Minister on this question, and I understand the Prime Minister will be replying in due course.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

PRIVILEGE

MR. BELL—INCOMPLETE ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, with regard to a question that was answered on Monday. This is the first opportunity, sir, that I have had to bring it to the attention of the house. I refer to my question No. 337. I asked the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys whether a study into year-round navigation had been conducted by a branch of his department. The answer was that no study had been made. Reference was made to geographical papers. I have them and have looked them over, and the last one I looked at has a complete section in it with respect to winter navigation. The pertinent, last paragraph says:

> In view of the severity of ice conditions in the gulf of St. Lawrence, the icebreaker fleet was eminently successful in the routing and convoying of shipping.

I am not blaming the minister, but some civil servants need smartening up on this matter. I object to two things; I object to the sloppy, non-factual way in which the answer was given, and I also object to the fact that the government is going ahead with investigating and planning to open up the St. Lawrence in the winter, without any authority to do so.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, the answer which I gave on Monday was adequate and clear, and I think the hon. member's question of privilege today is quite out of order. I made it clear that our department was simply investigating oceanography and ice conditions in the St. Lawrence.

COMBINES

MEAT PACKING—OFFER TO PURCHASE BURNS AND COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice whether his attention has been drawn to the fact that an anonymous Canadian bidder has made an offer to purchase Burns and Company Limited, the meat packing company in Calgary, and have any inquiries been made by his department to see whether this will bring about an extension of the combine in the meat packing industry which was discovered by the officers of his department in a previous investigation?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I saw the title on the newspaper clipping just a few minutes ago, so I will take the hon. gentleman's question as notice.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SASKATOON—ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR DISCHARGED CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the question very pressing?

Mr. Nasserden: Yes, it is, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Associate Minister of National Defence. A few days ago he kindly gave me an answer to a question with regard to the civilian employees at the R.C.A.F. station at Saskatoon. The question I would like to ask is this. Is the minister aware that many of the civilian employees at the R.C.A.F. station at Saskatoon are being offered alternative positions which reduce their remuneration by approximately $1 an hour; and if so, does he condone this practice?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is the type of question that should be put on the order paper.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Monday, March 16, consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, in rising to continue the debate which I adjourned the other evening I would say that one has had an opportunity to look over the budget address of my hon. friend in a quieter atmosphere than the rather frenzied aura which always prevails, and properly so, on the occasion of the presentation of the budget. I must say that, having read it over carefully in the past day or two, I sometimes wonder why I did not conclude the debate the other evening instead of going on for any length of time today, because there certainly is not a great deal in the budget presentation of the minister on which one can make any serious, critical comments, or critical commentary, as far as that is concerned.

It is so different from the atmosphere last year. Hon. members will remember the arrival of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) on that occasion, with all the solutions to the nation's problems wrapped up in his brief case, and he presented them to us. There was a whole bookful: they were going to rectify foreign ownership of Canadian industry; they were going to do this, they were going to do that, and they were going to do the other thing. For various reasons that budget, as I said the other night, has been improved upon from time to time because most of the provisions in it have since been dropped. Instead of having, shall I say, a superman arriving to present the budget as we had a year ago, this time we had Mickey Mouse coming in with a very, very small parcel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: This makes the position of an opposition critic, the financial critic or anyone else, rather difficult. I have a quote here which I should like to read to the house. I am not going to quote from newspapers this afternoon to any extent, Mr. Speaker, because I do not intend to speak at any great length; but I have one newspaper quotation which is apropos of what I have said, and which I came across only this afternoon. I am sure it will commend itself to the minister, because it is in keeping with the thought I just expressed. This editorial was in the Quebec Chronicle-Telegraph of March 18 and it says:

> After a year of almost continuous labour, the mountain, apparently, has brought forth a mouse—It is a poor, timorous thing wrapped up in large swaddling clothes.

I do not think any better comment than that can be made on the budget. As I said, Mr. Speaker, I am not going into this matter at great length this afternoon. I do not think I can finish before five o'clock, but I shall not go very much beyond that. There are certain things, of course, in the budget of which we entirely approve. As I said the other night when I was asked about this on the radio, and the question was whether there was anything in the budget of which we approved, "I have not brought my microscope with me and could not answer that question at this time". But having produced my microscope in the meantime, I can say there are some things of which we do approve. We approve, of course, of the provisions with regard to educational advantages. We approve of the deduction of tuition fees for part-time students; the deduction by either a brother or sister for—if I may introduce a new term here—a sibling dependant attending school. We also endorse the proposed extension of family allowances and commend the minister and his associates for their remarkably quick conversion in this regard because, having voted against this most important provision only a few weeks ago, they embraced it to their bosoms and brought it forward in the person of Her Majesty's Minister of Finance. This was really a remarkable conversion and one for which I would commend the Minister of Finance. I have used this simile before, but the conversion of Saul of Tarsus on his way to Damascus was not as rapid as that of the minister and his associates in this connection.

We entirely approve, of course, of the incentives contained in the budget which, as the minister said, are directed toward certain areas in need of economic expansion. As I recall it, the minister referred particularly to certain areas in Quebec and also to the Atlantic provinces. I am glad to see that the minister is extending the period of these incentives so they will be longer in operation. I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, just what the reason may be. It may be that the incentives have proven so useful that the minister feels they should be extended; or perhaps so far they have not been taken advantage of at all, or very, very little, and the minister thought that by extending the period for a year or two more he might be able to get some people to take advantage of them. I realize that these incentives are difficult to administer. I also doubt, frankly, the efficacy of some of the incentives which the minister projected.

It is not his fault that they are not effective, but I doubt very much the efficacy of them. I would suggest to the minister that in the province with which I am more acquainted than any other, namely the province of Nova Scotia, he will find the incentives and leadership given by the government of that province, through Industrial Estates Limited, in the development of industry have been far greater than that which has flowed from any of the incentives which he has put forward thus far. When we hear, as we undoubtedly will, from the Minister of Finance, who is, of course, a very modest individual, or perhaps from the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury), as to the developments which have taken place in the province of Nova Scotia, I hope that they will—and if they do not, some of us on this side of the house will have to—distinguish between what may have flowed, if anything, from the incentives to which the Minister of Finance has referred, and to which he referred again the other night, and the work done in the province of Nova Scotia which has given a tremendous impetus to and leadership in the industrial development of that province.

In that connection I should like to make reference to the only newspaper report to which I will draw the attention of the minister this afternoon dealing with the matter of incentives. It is an editorial which appeared in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald for March 17 last, in which is discussed the question of incentives as particularly applying to the maritime provinces. This editorial says, in part, that the minister could, and should, have done more to encourage economic growth through further tax incentives. It points out what the paper looks upon—and I concur with this paper in this regard, although I do not always—as limiting incentives to specific areas, and suggests that there should be a more all-embracing area covering the province as a whole, rather than picking out one town in one county and another area in another county. That is not the way.

I cannot speak with authority obviously on a large province such as Ontario, with which the minister is thoroughly conversant, but in a smaller province like Nova Scotia you cannot pick out one town in one county, and another town in another county, and have the incentives apply as they should. The Halifax Chronicle-Herald recommends that these incentives be broadened so as to cover larger areas, and I think that is a suggestion which is well worth following. These are some of the matters, Mr. Speaker, of which one can speak with commendation to the minister for having brought them forward.

And may I say, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that we are glad to see you in the chair.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) referred to the budget the other night as small potatoes and few in the hill, a very pastoral expression which I think he must have picked up in the maritime provinces because I heard it used by my grandfather who lived in Digby county many years ago. But I should like to use a more apt description of the budget than the one to which he has referred and say that it is more like a timorous mouse.

I should like to discuss for a few moments, although I will not be able to finish my remarks on this point before five o'clock, one change which the minister has made and which has aroused a great deal of comment by the financial press during the last few days. I am referring to the changes which he has made in the withholding tax. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that the minister proposed last year a withholding tax which we on this side of the house criticized very strongly. We said that it was discriminatory; we said that it could not be applied; we said that it would invite retaliation and that it would be necessary to negotiate a new tax convention between Canada and the United States if it was to be effective; and we said that time would not permit such a negotiation to take place.

The minister questioned these criticisms of ours and then went ahead with his program, although he altered and amended it in various ways during the next two, three or four successive budgets which he brought down. But he still maintained the difference between the 20 per cent and the 10 per cent. If one did not accept a certain amount of Canadian participation one would be required to pay a withholding tax of 20 per cent. On the other hand, if one did one would only pay a withholding tax of 10 per cent. He made a differentiation, as I told the minister last year, as between the good boys and the bad boys, and on that aspect alone we did not think that this proposal of the minister was a sound principle to bring into tax legislation.

This year the minister tells us that he was in Washington a short time ago, that he had found a new element had entered the situation, and consequently that he was going to amend the tax. The new element was that the United States senate had brought in a bill to reduce taxation, and for some reason which I am not going to try to follow for the moment—quite frankly, I cannot follow the minister anyway on this—he said that because of this new factor he was now prepared to amend his proposals; and perhaps I may be permitted to suggest how this should be done after we resume the debate at eight o'clock. However, I should like to point out to the minister at this stage that this new factor of the reduction of the tax—the proposal before the United States senate to reduce taxation—was before the United States senate last year, as I recall it, before the minister amended this provision for the second or the third time. So therefore it could not have been a new factor, because it was already before the United States senate. I think it was recognized by the United States press that this tax reduction bill would go through, so the minister cannot be heard to say today that this was a new factor in the situation.

However, I do suggest that the new factor is this. When the minister was in Washington a few weeks ago secretary Dillon told him that his proposal was bound to invite retaliation; that the increase to 20 per cent, of course, would require a new tax convention; and that it was impossible to renegotiate such a convention before December 31, 1964.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that a student in grade nine political science would know that this year, with the heavy legislative burden which is before the United States senate—without going into the details of it—with the protracted debates which have already taken place and which will, according to every newspaper report I have read, continue for a long while to come, and with an election in the offing and one third of the senate to be re-elected, and with naturally the other two thirds supporting their colleagues taking part in the election either in the senate or the house of representatives, there would be very little hope for any renegotiation of a tax treaty. As we pointed out, if this was not done there would be an automatic 30 per cent withholding tax as at December 31 this year. Therefore this was not a new factor but was a gradual recognition on the part of the minister that the things which we on this side of the house said were true and correct, and he had to reconcile himself to them in his budget.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grafftey: That is what happens when they do not consult their officials.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion (papers), private bills, public bills.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

REMOVAL OF ARMS AND AMMUNITION

The house resumed from Thursday, March 12, consideration of the following motion of Mr. Bell:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters, memoranda or directives made by the minister and/or the Department of National Defence regarding the rounding up of arms and/or ammunition.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, last week in the two or three minutes available to me I had outlined some of the background in relation to the situation in which we found ourselves in connection with the security of national defence property in general, and small arms and ammunition in particular. As I indicated, there had been some concern throughout a number of months with respect to the security of small arms, and steps had been taken to tighten up the security precautions in respect thereto.

Following the raid on the armoury in Montreal on January 30 this process was accelerated in order to remove the temptation to attempt another such incident from anyone who might be inclined to do so. As I indicated, on January 31, the very day following the raid, immediate action was taken. A commission was set up and that commission was asked to study the security regulations in respect of national defence property, and to make recommendations as to any steps which should be taken to improve the security measures.

Simultaneously some of the services issued orders to tighten up the observation of existing regulations in respect of security. Interim measures were taken which required that rifles be stored separately from their working parts, separately from the bolts and from the ammunition. Consequently, as I indicated, from that day forward no useable arms were taken.

When the commission reported, it recommended the immediate withdrawal of small arms until adequate security precautions could be put into effect. This was ordered at once for sensitive areas. As I indicated, it was carried out with zeal and there have been no losses since that time. Simultaneously across the country security measures already in existence were being enforced more rigidly than had been the case, and in a number of cases arms and ammunition were removed temporarily until such time as the regulations could be met. Arms and ammunition removed from various installations were placed in installations where they could be given round the clock security, and even in those installations where arms were no longer in inventory additional watchmen were required to provide more general surveillance of national defence property.

The suggestion has been made that round the clock guards should be put on all national defence installations, including reserve units. I really think that on reflection hon. members will appreciate that this is not a practicable suggestion. In this country we have had no history of providing round the clock armed security for our reserve units, with some exceptions, those exceptions being at times like the Fenian raids and when there was some indication of riot or insurrection. With those exceptions there never has been any attempt to provide uniform, round the clock security for our reserve installations.

The magnitude of the problem is really very great. If anyone felt that such a course should be followed, I think he would have to look very carefully at the manpower required and the cost in dollars which would be involved. To provide really adequate round the clock security for all our reserve units would require the employment of thousands of men and the cost would run into many millions of dollars a year. In my opinion this is not a practicable solution. In this regard another recommendation was made by the commission set up in the Department of National Defence and which, as I have indicated earlier, included a representative of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Their recommendation was that other measures be taken which would provide adequate security, make it very difficult to effect the removal of small arms and ammunition and not require round the clock armed guards. These measures are being studied and will be implemented just as quickly as possible.

Many of the arms that have been withdrawn have already been reinstated in areas where this could be done under adequate security measures. This process will continue just as expeditiously as it is possible to do a proper job of inspection, and just as soon as the requirements can be adequately met.

I think the important point is that the action which was taken, as the result of a situation which we all regretted and deplored, has been effective. It has been commented upon favourably by a number of newspapers in their editorial columns, and we are grateful for their support. There have been one or two misapprehensions. For example, the Montreal Gazette in an editorial on February 25, I believe—I am not sure that was the date it appeared—fully supported the program of withdrawing serviceable firearms and ammunition from armouries and other reserve army establishments where security cannot be provided on a round the clock basis. The editorial went on to say:

> This is the necessary move. It is imperative that it be taken now. It would have been preferable had it been taken earlier.

The editorial goes on to say:

> But there is one aspect of the defence minister's statement that is uncertain. Mr. Hellyer says that orders have gone out that at least one person is to be on duty at reserve establishments at all hours of the day or night. Does this mean that firearms and ammunition will still be left in reserve establishments, provided that they have one armed guard?

The answer is no. I do not think there was any lack of clarity in the statement. The statement was that during this period at least arms and ammunition would only be stored where adequate round the clock protection was available; and the one person on duty at all hours referred to the defence establishments where there were no arms or ammunition but where other national defence properties were in inventory. I might also say that we received co-operation from people across the country, and I should like to pay tribute to them for their co-operation, which is very much appreciated. I have one letter I should like to read, with the indulgence of the house, which I think is indicative of the spirit of co-operation. It is addressed to me and reads as follows:

> Honourable Sir:
>
> It is with disgust that I read almost daily of the sentiment of various M.P.'s as well as editors of newspapers across the country re the picking up of arms from the various cadet corps across the country.
>
> As the chief instructor of one of the largest, if not the largest, cadet corps in eastern Ontario, namely, the No. 2403 St. Lawrence high school cadet corps, I must state that the person concerned at Ashbury College in Ottawa who is continually complaining about the pick-up of arms from that college knew, and I am sure of this, that they would pick up the said arms and he was notified well in advance of same. I know this because I was notified at 7 p.m. and the rifles were picked up here between 12 midnight and 1.30 a.m. on the same day, and I didn't kick as it was my duty to be prepared.

So far all it is worth you can mention my name in the house and I will vouch for same. I am sure that all concerned were notified but there are some who fail to comply with an order even though they are members of Her Majesty's forces and have taken the oaths of office.

I commend, and I wish you would mention this in the house, the eastern Ontario area cadet training officer for the method in which he instructed his men to take out arms.

The majority of papers in eastern Ontario and also in Toronto have published news about matters they knew nothing about whatsoever and I deem it their fault that this has come to such a ridiculous stage.

I would also like mentioned in the house, if you see fit, that St. Lawrence high school has the crack cadet rifle team in Canada, and not Windsor. We have had various trophies come to Canada in the past few years from England, such as the Young Rifleman's trophy which had never been won before by a Canadian and this being won by the cadet who came first in Ontario and third in Canada in the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association at Connaught ranges.

I am pleased with my corps. I am pleased with the wonderful co-operation we have received from army headquarters. I am sure our hon. member L. Lamoureux can vouch for this.

I trust this has enlightened you some in your big job at present and if I can be of any further assistance to you in this important matter be free to call on me.

(Major) C. H. Paulin

Mr. Churchill: Is he an officer in the cadet corps?

Mr. Hellyer: He is the chief instructor. I think this is typical of the general attitude of co-operation which we have had across the country. May I again say how much we appreciate the indulgence of all concerned. Most people have, I think, recognized that the situation was difficult and that some unusual action was required in the face of the circumstances. They have been understanding and sympathetic in their reaction.

I do not believe I will take more time of the house, but may I reiterate that the armed forces have carried out with dispatch their assigned task of tightening up security in respect of small arms and ammunition, because they have them as a trust and it is their responsibility to make sure that they cannot be easily removed from national defence installations and fall into unauthorized hands. These tasks have been carried out very well so far. We have been completely successful in what we have done. I am sure we will have the support and co-operation of all members of the house in respect of this very difficult situation. I can also assure hon. members that just as quickly as the situation can be restored so that normal training can be resumed in all parts of the country, this will be done. It will be done under circumstances which will limit, just as much as we possibly can with reasonable cost, the possibility of arms and ammunition falling into unauthorized hands in the future.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the minister did not say anything about the motion that is before us, which is for an order of the house for a copy of all letters, memoranda or directives made by the minister and/or the Department of National Defence regarding the rounding up of arms and/or ammunition. This is what is before us. The minister has simply put up a defence, in his opinion, of the action that was taken. The course of the debate has not been restricted entirely to the production of these particular documents. Certainly, in the light of the minister's reply, since he did not deal with the motion at all, I presume the debate is wide open.

The reasons for asking for this type of information were set out very clearly by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) on March 12 as recorded at page 841 of Hansard. It is rather unusual to request the production of documents which, you may say, are interdepartmental documents. However, as the hon. member for Saint John-Albert pointed out, the circumstances are unusual. Reference has been made quite often by the minister to the fact that directives were not carried out in the same way in all areas. Naturally one wonders, therefore, if it would not be in the public interest to disclose the directive that he sent out, and then we would be clear. The letter which he has just finished reading to us mentioned the fact that orders were received. Were those the orders that came direct from the minister, or to what orders or directives is the writer referring?

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I thought it was a most unusual and inappropriate action for the minister to read a letter from a cadet instructor, a letter addressed to the Minister of National Defence. In the first instance, I should like to know why a cadet instructor would write directly to the Minister of National Defence. There is a chain of command to be followed in the services. Apparently, the minister permits cadet instructors to write to him, and now encourages them by this public action. Does he get letters directly from other cadet corps instructors and from his navy, army and air force personnel in the junior ranks? It is a very strange thing indeed. I think the minister is seriously at fault in setting up one cadet instructor against another. Here you have one cadet instructor saying, in effect, pay no attention to the complaints from your people at Ashbury College because everything went all right in our area; pay no attention to the complaints of other cadet corps instructors.

The Minister of National Defence, with responsibility for hundreds of cadet corps across this country, should not be publicly playing one off against the other. I think the minister had better re-examine the responsibilities of his position or we will have a rather odd situation in this country in which people ignore the normal means of communication within the services and are communicating directly with the minister. Then, you begin to wonder, for what purpose? If the minister is going to commend in this way one cadet instructor, why not commend them all or tell us the ones of which he does not approve? Why does he raise this particular issue here in the House of Commons? It is an absolutely inappropriate action.

There would be no motion on the order paper if the minister had been more forthcoming in the answers he gave to a whole host of questions that have been asked in the last several weeks. This trouble began with a raid on the armoury in Montreal which occurred almost 80 days ago; we are into the twelfth week now since this occurred and we have had no satisfactory answers from the minister concerning that particular event. There was another robbery at Shawinigan Falls and attempts elsewhere, and then we had this haphazard action in connection with the cadet corps. Had the minister given information to the house clearly and without evasion, we would not have this motion before us at the moment. He has not been clear and he has certainly been evasive.

Even in reply to a simple written question I put on the order paper, asking him to indicate the areas in which arms and ammunition had been taken from the cadet corps, he stated that it was not in the public interest to give this information. Yet we were reading in the press about one cadet corps after another where some incident had taken place, and he did not tell us to what cadet corps the weapons had been returned.

All of this had made the minister look a bit foolish, and we would like to find out whether or not he was clear in the instructions he gave to the people under his command. I think he must have been very confused himself.

I started this whole train of thought on Wednesday, February 19, as recorded at page 9 of Hansard for that date, when I asked him a question about the thefts, and in answer to that he said:

> I also directed that appropriate action be taken to increase security measures at all military establishments at which weapons and ammunition were stored.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Then he went on to say:

> Ammunition was removed and put in storage at protected depots.

That was his appropriate action. He did not give the date, but it followed some time after the theft from the Montreal armoury, and subsequently he apparently appointed a commission. This is what he does whenever a problem comes up; he appoints a commission or sets up a special committee. He has untold numbers of officers in the services who can be assembled at a moment's notice, without necessarily making them into committees or commissions, in order to get advice and immediately give instructions.

Surely this problem could have been handled by the chiefs of staff on the very day it came to their attention that there was some difficulty concerning protection for arms and ammunition in the armouries? But the minister said it was a very large problem and it had to be investigated very carefully. He had to find out how many armouries there were and where they were located, how many cadet corps there were and where they were located, but yet right across the country there were area commands where this information could have been available at a moment's notice. By one call on the telephone he could have had a report from every one of those areas; but no, he appointed a commission to look into it and then waited for its recommendations.

He also told us that after he took immediate action, that is, after January 30, no useable arms were subsequently removed. Is he prepared to say that the arms taken at Shawinigan Falls on February 20 were not useable? Rifles and pistols were removed from that armoury on February 20 and they have not yet been recovered.

Further, the minister talked about the impossibility of providing around the clock protection for reserve units. That is understandable, depending where the reserve units are, but it is not understandable with regard to the armouries which are not so great in number that they could not be protected. In some small towns, and areas where militia units have rented quarters, one could not expect around the clock protection, but surely the armouries, which are not that numerous, could have been provided with around the clock protection, and then there would be nothing for us to worry about?

The minister has done something else which has bothered me very seriously. When questions have been asked in this house he has shifted the responsibility. He did this only last Thursday, as recorded at page 846 of Hansard for that day, when he said:

> Immediately the commission reported, action was taken the very next day to implement the recommendations made for immediate action.

Then he drew attention to the fact that:

—local commanders have been made responsible for the security of the weapons in their command, and for the carrying out of orders. It has been on their responsibility that a number of weapons have been removed and precautionary measures taken.

Surely it is on the responsibility of the minister. I interjected and said:

You are blaming it on the services.

He replied that he was not. I can give other instances where he shifted the responsibility and put the blame on the services. He certainly did not come to the protection of his serving officers when complaints were made in this house about these actions.

Just have a look sir, at page 457 of Hansard for March 3 last, where the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) is recorded as asking the following supplementary question:

I want to ask the minister if these different interpretations are due to lack of clarity in the minister's order, or to incompetence on the part of the commanders, or to a desire on their part to embarrass the minister because he has been taking away some of their toy soldiers?

The minister had nothing to say. He did not answer that question, and I only wish the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam were present in this chamber when I am speaking of him. I did not like that question. I thought the minister should have immediately accepted the full responsibility and said it was due to lack of clarity in his order. He should have denied that there was incompetence on the part of the commanders.

An accusation now stands on the records of this house that the members of the services are incompetent, and the Minister of National Defence had nothing to say in their defence. Surely he might have denied that if they took inappropriate actions it was not, in the words of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, due to "a desire on their part to embarrass the minister"?

Does he agree that these inappropriate actions, as he has indicated they were, were taken to embarrass him, and why did he not say something about the last phrase used by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam—"because he has been taking away some of their toy soldiers"? There was not a word from the minister. That was just another one of those snide remarks against people in the services, against people in the militia, against cadet instructors and cadet corps. Who are these toy soldiers? I do not mind if people who have smelled gunpowder talk about toy soldiers, but why are we subjected to remarks like this by people in public life, without any defence on the part of the minister?

Mr. Hellyer: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I did not think at that time that the question was worthy of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and I do not think it is worthy of the hon. gentleman to repeat it now, or rather the allegations contained in it.

Mr. Pigeon: That is no question of privilege. That is a statement.

Mr. Churchill: I am not repeating it as a question. I am merely indicating that it is the type of question which the minister permitted to go unanswered, and I say the Minister of National Defence should at least stand up for the people in the armed services. They are not privileged to state their position here in the House of Commons. Is there to be acceptance in this country that they are playing at being toy soldiers? Remarks of that type were heard in the 'thirties. Those of us who were in the militia then can remember them, before the outbreak of the second world war. They were made in some areas by people who, perhaps, did not see the service of their country in the way others did.

For the Minister of National Defence to let a remark like that go by without comment was, it seemed to me, indicative of a somewhat discourteous attitude to the people under his command. If they were able to be present here they would reply in no uncertain terms. There is no question about toy soldiering going on now in Cyprus. People in cadet corps, people in the militia, are not playing at being soldiers; they are giving service to their country.

Why does not the minister tell us exactly what directions he gave to the officers under his command, to the militia units in this country and to the cadet corps? Why does he not make the position clear instead of coming to the house and reading some commendatory letter he has received from a friend? Had the minister been seized of the importance of this whole operation he would, surely, have done so. Instead, he has dealt with it flippantly, just as he has dealt with inquiries about the notorious, mysterious, undisclosed and, perhaps, never to be produced white paper.

Why has the hon. gentleman been so flippant about this subject? Why can he not give the House of Commons an indication of the directives he issued with regard to the security of arms and ammunition in this country? He still does not treat the matter with the seriousness it deserves. Sufficient arms and ammunition have been stolen to arm 140 men, and there are 4,000 rounds of ammunition to go with those arms. I am not talking about .22 ammunition which can be bought anywhere; I am talking about this heavier ammunition. This is a serious situation. Adequate protection should be afforded to the storage of arms and ammunition across this country; but this can be done in an effective way, with some coolness, instead of building the operation up into what seems to be a mock display of military efficiency and holding up to ridicule the armed services of this country.

The minister must accept full responsibility for this. It is not part of the hon. gentleman's duty in this house to put the blame on his officials, and those who serve in the armed forces are officials acting under the authority of the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Churchill: Well, I have concluded my remarks. I have intimated that the minister is quite irresponsible in his actions.

Mr. Hellyer: I would just like to say, on a question of privilege, again, that as the responsible head of the department I accept full responsibility for the action taken by the department. That is the way our system works and I have never shirked my responsibility, nor will I, nor will I attempt to back away from it in any way.

Mr. Churchill: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you do not recognize that as a question of privilege. It is just a matter of debate. But if it is a question of privilege I would like the right of reply.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I appreciate the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). There is obviously no question of privilege here.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this order for return, I should like to refer to what has happened in this house during the last two sessions when one member of the opposition after the other introduced such motions, knowing full well that it was unadvisable or impossible to give them the information they sought.

I wonder where we are going and what the intention is, here in this house, if we continue along that line, since we know very well that a minister is not always in a position to table certain papers.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that in this case the Minister of National Defence should protect the general interests of the country, but on the other hand, he keeps as confidential all information liable to benefit his opponents or those now involved. I think he cannot invoke the prerogative, namely not to give all the information, in order not to give any information at all. Some information could have been given to the house and it would have probably satisfied most of us.

Once more, I realize that the opposition, when introducing this motion for the production of papers, was rather aiming at partisan advantage by stirring prejudices, as they have been doing for some time now. But this is an extremely dangerous demagogy, since this concerns the theft of arms and ammunition which may be used to start a revolution or a coup d'état.

On the other hand, if such a situation exists in the province of Quebec and if arm robberies took place, we must remember that we share the responsibility, because we helped to arouse feelings which the present government keeps stirring up. It is precisely by practising demagogy in everything related to defence that we share the responsibilities. Newspapers also have their responsibilities, because they gave too much publicity by their headlines to this problem which now faces Quebec and Canada.

The Minister of National Defence is blamed for neglecting to take appropriate steps. If I refer to the early stages of that issue, I remember very well that the opposition at that time made a big fuss, directed questions to the minister to know what he was doing, what he intended to do and why he had done nothing.

Well, today, the opposition complains that the minister committed himself too quickly and that the army acted too hastily. By inference, we come to the conclusion that we have, in this country, three types of government with decreasing power, that is: the army, which seems to be the strongest government in the country, then the civil service, and then the cabinet elected by the people. I wonder if, in carrying out the orders given by the minister, the military authorities did not take priority over the elected authority, that of the cabinet. We can see how a minister can easily be discredited in the public opinion by his own officials and officers.

I think that, in all those succeeding actions, a certain boycott by the army can be detected of the policy worked out by the minister and on which the militia is not necessarily in agreement. The army would like to have a larger share of public funds while the minister, according to decisions taken since he is a member of the cabinet, must cancel certain projects. That new policy was bound to stir up reactions in the army which carried out the orders received with alacrity and caused certain small difficulties like the one concerning arms stored in armouries.

That being said, I think it is up to the government to act on the problem facing us today.

In my opinion, the minister acted in good faith and knowingly—which is not the case for the opposition. I am quite sure that had the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) been the minister of national defence, he would probably have acted the same way, in such a situation, and not much faster, for the Conservative party has not been known for quick decisions.

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: I deny that.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, if I rise today to take part in this debate, it is to state that I do not share at all the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard), who belongs to a party the members of which are slaves to the government.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that what we ask in entirely logical—

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Pigeon: —and that we are entitled to have these documents produced.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Marcoux: I ask the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to withdraw the words he said, because I am nobody's slave, least of all, the hon. member's.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, to go on with my remarks, I think that the motion submitted by the hon. member—

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate a ruling from Your Honour on my question of privilege. I think that the words used by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm do not apply and that he should withdraw them.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I named nobody in particular. If the hat fits the hon. member, let him claim it.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the reason for which I object to the hon. member's remarks; the hat does not fit me.

Moreover, when he mentioned members of the group of the hon. member for Lake St. John, he attacked me personally. The hat does not fit, and I would ask the hon. member to take it off my head to put it on his own.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps, the remarks of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm exceeded what he had in mind, and he might explain.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, in respect of the question of privilege, I might perhaps modify my remarks and say that the government is the slave of the group of which the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) is a member. I think that would meet your request.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is altogether logical and in the public interest to ask for the production of these documents, of this correspondence as regards the instructions given by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer).

In fact, I do not think that our request would endanger in any way the security of the state. I know that the Minister of National Defence received instructions from the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to take such action, and I challenge the minister to put forward a sound and logical reason for not producing those documents.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the minister is not honest in this. He does not want to accede to the official opposition's request because the production of those documents would condemn him and, hence, the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to co-operate with the government, but it is not through arrogance and in behaving the way they did since the beginning of this session and throughout the last session that they will obtain the collaboration of the loyal opposition. We are doing our duty. We are working in the public interest, and the Minister of National Defence should be the first one to collaborate with all members, in order to clear the situation for the general public on the event that took place.

If the Minister of National Defence and the Prime Minister are responsible for the present disorder and the lack of security in the various armouries, they should take their responsibilities and tell the house the truth, so that the Canadian people may know, once and for all, what to make of all this.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this debate for several reasons.

First, I feel that, from the time those incidents began, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) has given the house just about all the information he was in a position to give and the people had the right to expect. Furthermore, all in all, I think this whole thing is but a tempest in a very cold cup of tea.

For some time members of the opposition have acted as if those incidents were an extremely important matter. And yet, such is not the case.

The circumstances in which the incidents took place may have been unusual, and I realize it must seem strange to many hon. members to find that, for the first time in the history of Canada, our armouries have to be protected.

I think that as soon as it was possible to do so, and immediately after the first theft, the Minister of National Defence and the army authorities took the necessary steps to that end. Since then, the Minister of National Defence has also indicated in the house that there were two kinds of steps that had to be taken.

The first was an emergency measure: weapons scattered throughout the country in armouries and cadet camps had to be stored in safe places; complete security was necessary. People forget that even cadets have not only .22 but also .303 and automatic ones. No risk could be taken and we decided to store them in safe places.

The second step—the minister also pointed it out—was to put these weapons in a place which could be temporarily watched on a round the clock basis. During that period, we had to determine measures which could be carried out in our armouries and our militia establishments in order to assure a greater protection. When that second phase was completed, the arms would then be returned where they came from.

Mention was made of raids. That term was used by members of the opposition, and if the armed forces were held up to ridicule, I think it is due to the opposition.

During all the operations held throughout the country, there were perhaps one or two incidents difficult to explain; but I do not believe anyone is to blame, and certain opinions may not have been entirely well-founded.

It is unfortunate, that attempts were made to play politics with such a small matter.

As for the motion now before us, I believe that if we had to table all the orders and regulations that the Minister of National Defence and myself—and may I say that I accept also the responsibility for what happened—I do not know what would happen. It is possible that the national security may not be in danger, as suggested by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon). But, even then, what purpose would that serve? We would establish a precedent and later on, the minister of defence would be required to table orders and instructions—

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. Pigeon: Would the minister allow me to ask a question? Does he consider the Department of National Defence as as crown corporation under the present administration?

Mr. Cardin: I do not see the gist of the hon. member's question.

The Department of National Defence must necessarily decide what can be dangerous or what can affect the security of our country or the work we are trying to do. In this case, if we had revealed all the places from which weapons were to be removed, I feel we would have played right into the hands of those who seem to want to steal those weapons.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I claim we are right in refusing to table the orders and directives referred to in this motion.

I might add that there has been no dishonesty here, either on the part of the Minister of National Defence or on mine.

I feel that this should not incite any one in this house to make inaccurate reports which, after all, can only discredit the government and the ministers.

There is also another point which I would like to explain to the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard), who seems to believe that efforts were made among members of the armed forces to embarrass the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Speaker, may I say to my hon. friend from Lake St. John that there was no such action. On the contrary, we received full co-operation on the part of all superior officers of the Department of National Defence as well as on the part of those who were in charge of those operations. I must say also that we had no doubt about the sincerity of the people in charge of the arms at those places where we took them to put them in a safe place, but that we were afraid, and rightly so, that the arms they had might not be in a safe place and might be stolen, as it had happened, which would have increased the existing danger.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that the Minister of National Defence is quite justified to turn down the motion for papers proposed by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell).

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I should like to direct only one question to the minister. Would he tell the house whether the orders given by the Department of National Defence concerning armouries and ammunition depots in some parts of the country have been issued in the ten provinces of Canada or only in certain given areas of the country?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, we want to provide a little more security for our armouries, and that has been done throughout the country. All we want is to reach a level of security which will avoid the necessity of having a round the clock watch.

[Text]

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin) has just said that this matter is a tempest in a teapot. He even went so far as to say the teapot was cold. I should like to suggest to him that if he were to come into my part of the country he would soon find that the teapot was not cold, but was quite hot.

In my area of Ontario, and in Wellington South in particular, this is a very important issue. The minister spoke of unusual action being taken. I would say that most unusual action in this regard has been taken in the house in the minister's failure to reveal the directions he issued, and other information asked for by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell). It was also unusual action to issue the instructions he did throughout the country. For instance, in my riding the sea cadet corps were issued with instructions to box up their rifles and ammunition and send them to Quebec, the very province where all this trouble started. You can imagine, Mr. Speaker, what the people in my area thought of that. Why did the minister not order the sea cadet corps to place their guns and ammunition in the armouries in the city of Guelph? Those armouries were built years ago and have walls three feet thick with bars on the windows. There is an iron fence around the building. A three eight-hour shift guard could have been put around the armouries. Lots of soldiers are available, as well as reserves, to do this job of patrolling the armouries, and these guns and ammunition would have been a good deal safer there than in the province of Quebec.

I also think this is unusual action to take in the other provinces throughout Canada, aside from Ontario. Orders have been issued and guns and ammunition have been sent away. In this case we know they went to Quebec, but in many cases we do not know whether they are placed in armouries or somewhere else. We asked the minister to disclose these directives but he has not done so. While these guns and ammunition are away, the reserve forces can no longer train. They are marking time and waiting for their guns and ammunition to be returned.

The minister has talked about unusual action, Mr. Speaker, but I have never seen anything so unusual as this directive which was issued by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) in this particular instance. There are throughout the country armouries which are fortresses, but the minister orders these weapons to be removed from within their walls to some place else.

It is now six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, so I move the adjournment of this debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, before the house began to deal with private members' business at five o'clock I had been discussing the effect of the proposed changes in the withholding tax which the minister brought forward in the budget speech the other night. I was suggesting that the new factor to which he referred was one which was not so new, but was one which we of the opposition had impressed upon him on various occasions during the last year. I do not want to continue to discuss that at this time except to say one further word. The minister, in addition to changing the rate, and bringing it down to 15 per cent, thereby avoiding any break in the ceiling as set forth in the tax convention, also made the spread 15 per cent and 10 per cent. In other words, there is a spread now of only 5 per cent between the good boys and the bad boys. Heretofore it was 20 and 10 and now it is 15 and 10. There will only be that margin of 5 per cent in the withholding tax having regard to whether it is a Canadian corporation, if I may use that term for lack of a better one, or one under foreign control.

Without being unkind, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the minister must have decided that these inducements were not too effective and therefore he has now reduced the spread to only 5 per cent. I know the minister and I know he is an optimist, and obviously those associated with him must be if they think they are going to be here next year, but it was suggested in one of the leading financial columns this morning that the minister has established a spread of 5 per cent so that next year he can close the gap entirely and provide other incentives, rather than in income tax as he proposed one year ago. Far be it from me to comment on this degree of optimism at the moment. I will leave that to the Canadian people to decide. I do not think there is any necessity to say anything further on the withholding tax at this time.

I was somewhat disturbed about a matter which is in the minister's budget speech, and to give the background of it I think I should first read a short extract from the speech he made the other night. These words were uttered with all the modesty of the gentlemen opposite who speak on behalf of the government. As found on page 977 of Hansard he said:

> Businesses in Canada should make a conscious effort to purchase supplies and components from Canadian sources whenever these are competitive—

It sounds to me like good old Tory doctrine, rather than that of a progressive Liberal government. However, the minister no doubt can reconcile that with his conscience.

> —to use Canadian professional firms and other services—

I make no comment on that.

> —and to carry on in Canada all the industrial functions that can be performed efficiently here, including, particularly, basic industrial research and design.

I must say that I could generally subscribe to that statement but I was somewhat disturbed in reading the budget resolutions dealing with income tax. I do not propose to deal with this in detail because others of my colleagues will, but there is one proposal by the minister in his speech which is, as I said, rather disturbing. It is one dealing with research. I have not had a chance to do all the research work which one would like to do, although "research" perhaps is an improper term at this time. Perhaps I should say all the study which I would like to do.

As I recall the situation, since 1948 the provision in the Income Tax Act dealing with deductions for research has specified that the research work should be done in Canada. I believe this has been the policy of the governments of Canada since that time. At one time this was a matter which caused the government of which I was a member a great deal of concern. Formerly capital deductions could only be made to the extent of 5 per cent. In other words, if you had capital expenditures for research work deductions were allowed only up to 5 per cent of taxable income.

We felt that encouragement should be given to research in Canada and therefore we abrogated the 5 per cent provision and allowed any capital expenditure for research to be deducted from taxable income, provided the research was carried on in Canada. Then we had a problem with respect to encouraging research generally in Canada. We were quite well aware of what was going on. More and more of our scientists and technicians were being attracted south of the border to do research work there. The government of which I had the honour to be a member gave the matter very careful consideration and discussed it with various people in industry, including some who were affiliated with some of those corporations of which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) takes a rather dim view; in other words, subsidiaries of American corporations. We were told by them that we could encourage research work to be done in Canada by giving a bonus and that would result in keeping here some of our students, some of our technicians, some of the men who otherwise would be attracted south of the border. After very careful consideration, of course, the government took the responsibility, or I did—I am not putting the responsibility on any of those with whom we consulted—by saying that we would permit a deduction or an allowance, because it is more than a deduction, of 150 per cent for increased research work which was being done in Canada. We felt this was a proper step to take to encourage technicians, scientists and others engaged in research to remain in Canada since they might otherwise be going to the United States or perhaps abroad. We did this after consultation, as I said, with many corporations that had a very broad experience in these matters.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the proposal which we have in the income tax resolution which will be before us shortly is that the deduction for research may be made when the research is conducted outside of Canada. I think this is a matter to which we should pay special attention.

Mr. Cowan: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nowlan: Did I hear a point of order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that the hon. member is seeking permission to ask a question.

Mr. Nowlan: I would prefer to answer any questions afterwards, rather than try to do so now. It is a quarter after eight and I know there are hon. gentlemen representing the various parties here who would like to speak on this matter tonight before the house rises at ten o'clock. I should like to conclude my remarks. I can assure the hon. gentleman I am not going to take very much time. Perhaps if he has a question when I have completed my remarks, I will be glad to deal with it.

Mr. Cowan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We heard this speech on the C.B.C. at seven o'clock tonight. I thought we could save the time of the house, because we all know he is going to continue to criticize the budget deficit and also the failure to remove the sales tax.

An hon. Member: Why don't you issue another writ?

Mr. Nowlan: I would suggest that the hon. member must have been listening to CJBC which has been changed to a French language station and he could not understand what was said. I have not been interviewed; I have not spoken to anybody in connection with anything I am saying tonight. If they had the prevision or foresight to deal with this matter, I congratulate them, and I suggest that perhaps my hon. friend will have a very difficult job trying to control them in the city of Toronto in view of the prevision they have shown.

Have we any more questions at this point, Mr. Speaker?

I could go into this subject at greater length, but I know the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and other hon. members will be dealing with the income tax resolution at greater length. I am simply indicating some of the matters with which we are concerned at the moment. Frankly, this is one of the more fundamental matters. There may be an explanation. I should say that the resolution indicates a retroactive factor going back to 1942. Generally, I know the Minister of Finance would agree with me, retroactive factors should not be included in taxation matters. There may be, and probably is, a very good explanation for it. Possibly there have been some technical flaws in the act heretofore which make it necessary to go back, and I am not quarrelling with that at all. However, I do say one would expect the minister or his parliamentary secretary to give an explanation.

Mr. Gordon: May I suggest to him that I think the hon. member means 1962 and not 1942.

Mr. Nowlan: If I said 1942, I meant 1962. I know the minister would have obtained more wisdom than he has today if he went back to 1942. He would not have made the mistake he has made. I meant to say 1962. I assume that the minister will give the house an explanation on this matter in due course.

The other matter to which I referred was, why are we departing from the principle that the research work had to be done in Canada in order to qualify for income tax deduction? Perhaps the minister can assure me that I am wrong in this connection. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that both of these questions will be explained fully by the minister when he replies, so I will spend no further time on them.

There is one other matter to which I want to refer, and perhaps I should mention it at this time, although I am not referring to these things in chronological order. The budget, of course, deals with various factors, various features of our economy. I appreciate the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) is here tonight, because I intimated to him that I wanted to raise a matter which I knew would be of interest to him. We are all, of course, concerned with the expanding economy of this country, and our expanding economy generally is determined by our export trade. I must say frankly that I was somewhat disappointed by the answer the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave the other day when I asked him about attendance at the commonwealth conference, which I believe was held yesterday prior to the Geneva conference tomorrow or the next day and for a long time thereafter.

I have no illusions as to the possibility of extending commonwealth trade. I know there are many roadblocks in the way. However, I feel we should pay more attention than ever before to the possibility of at least maintaining, if not developing and extending, our commonwealth trade. I think we were all very proud during the past week, in the light of the reports which we have been receiving concerning the attitude of British troops operating in Cyprus and the way in which they have maintained law and order under great difficulties and great provocation. When we look around us and see the various arguments, such as those in NATO which almost erupted the other day, the problems of the United Nations where, as the Prime Minister said the other night, there can be no solution to our problems if we are going to operate as individual nations, when we think of SEATO and some of the other organizations, we can take some pride in the fact that the commonwealth is a very vital factor in the world organization today.

I think we should give most careful consideration to the maintenance of commonwealth trade relationships and, I know it is difficult, to the extension of them. As I say, I informed the minister I was going to raise this matter tonight. I think we are all disturbed when we read in the press of a conflict between the European common market on the one hand, the United States and Canada on the other, with the United Kingdom halfway between the two in so far as the importation of agricultural products is concerned. If you read the New York Times, for instance, last Sunday, you would find there was the threat of a conflict between the European common market and the rest of us because they say, as I understand it, there is not going to be any diminution, no accommodation, of tariffs on agricultural products; that is it. "However" they say, "we of course expect you, Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries to make concessions in negotiations with you in industrial products". On the other hand we read reports in the newspapers in Europe and we see that is not in keeping with the real facts of the case.

Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, I read in the press that there are consultations going on between officials of the Canadian government in Ottawa and officials of the United States government in Washington, and once in a while there are even consultations with the officials of Great Britain. You would think, from reading some newspaper reports, that this was something original, something new, something that had not happened before.

But none of my colleagues in the former government, and I am quite sure also the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, have to be reminded that these conversations and consultations between officials of our two governments are nothing new and nothing original. They have been going on for years, particularly with regard to the possible entry of the United Kingdom into the common market and later with regard to the GATT negotiations, the Kennedy round so-called. As I say they have been going on for two or three years, and the same officials who conducted the negotiations two or three years ago are still conducting them today, and Canada can be very proud of the officials we have representing us.

The only reason I raise this matter at this time and bring it to the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce—although I may have something to say about his estimates in a few moments, to which he might like to listen—is that I would hope during this budget debate he will intervene to bring the House of Commons up to date on a matter which is of vital importance to the economy of the country. I know that he has certain confidences he must maintain and that he cannot disclose all the consultations going on, but within those limitations I hope he will speak in this debate. That is all I intend to say about the matter at this time.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I am taking longer than I intended to take, but that sometimes happens with an Irishman, even after March 17. The Minister of Finance has referred, not in his budget speech but in the bringing down of the estimates, to the fact that a substantial error was made, apparently by me last year, in dealing with debt costs, interest, management and so on. He made reference to that on two occasions and, even though he did not refer to it in the budget speech, I think I should deal with it now.

It is true that I underestimated the costs of the debt charges when we brought forward the estimates for the year just ended; but that, Mr. Speaker, was not an error in the proper sense of the word. I myself raised this matter with the officials of the Department of Finance when our estimates were being prepared, and I was told it had always been the policy of the Department of Finance, rightly or wrongly, not to accurately estimate the debt charges because obviously, if one did, the experts, the ones with the sharp pencils, the ones who know the intricacies of finance would be able to forecast certain things.

I may interpolate here that the estimates usually come down first and then the budget. The minister, being anxious to get his budget through, brought it down very shortly after the estimates had been tabled this year, but usually there is a time lag of some weeks, and anybody who sees the estimates and studies them, if the carrying charges have been estimated accurately, would be able to estimate what the situation would be during the coming year. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, I could not do it. With all due respect, I doubt if you could; but those in the business, those with the sharp pencils and trained minds would be able to do that.

Therefore not only did I make this error but so did my predecesssors, Hon. Walter Harris, Hon. Douglas Abbott, Right Hon. J. L. Ilsley, Hon. Charles Dunning, Hon. E. N. Rhodes, and Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, going back to the 1930's.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about Hon. J. A. Robb?

Mr. Nowlan: I did not check with regard to Hon. James Robb but my hon. friend opposite, having been in the closet of the privy council throughout those years, will undoubtedly be able to tell me exactly what Hon. James Robb did.

I am not suggesting the Minister of Finance deliberately put an emphasis on this, but when he referred to it as being an error—in fact he said it was a colossal error on the part of the former minister of finance—I would point out that there were very good precedents for the error which I made, which was in keeping with the policy of the Department of Finance since at least the 1930's.

Also speaking of the estimates perhaps I could interpolate here that apparently the practice is being changed this year. Apparently the minister, after consultation with his officials, decided that the estimates should be made more accurate in anticipation of charges rather than what was the practice heretofore. I have no quarrel with that. It might be, although I am not saying it is, the right practice to follow, but at any rate it will be a departure from the practice of the Department of Finance for the last 30 odd years.

The minister has made provision for education and, of course, as I have said, this was a very prosaic, pedantic budget, and one could understand why; but I would like to point out that within a year or two the minister will be dealing with tremendous demands for the extension of education in Canada. What he has done in this budget is not enough. Just to keep people in high school is not enough. We are going to have to provide facilities, and whether there will be loans to university students or whether there will be fellowships, or whatever there may be, there will have to be provision made for millions of dollars for the extension of our educational facilities.

In this respect I was rather disappointed that there was nothing in the budget which showed any imagination, any preview, any suggestion that we would be confronted with these problems in the future. As a matter of fact these problems are here now, and I rather deplore the fact that this forward looking minister and this government, which had all the answers, completely overlooked that fact in bringing down the budget.

To come now to what is usually considered the root of the budget, that is, the figures, the budgetary deficits, the expenditures and so on and so forth regarding the financial position of the country at this time, the major criticism which could be levelled against this government from this angle is its absolute failure to control the expenditures of the government. If you look at the estimates, pages 4 and 5, Mr. Speaker, you will find more than 50 items of expenditures and over 40 of them show increases over the preceding year.

The increases are very substantial. There are some, of course, which are inevitable. There is, for example, the world fair which is an expenditure that the parliament of Canada has approved, and naturally the government should include that. Then there is the office of the commissioner for representation under our proposed redistribution bill. Obviously there is a substantial expenditure there, and no one can complain about that.

Since the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) is here, perhaps for a moment I could refer to him. I have the figures of various departments but I do not intend to trouble the house with them. However, I should like to refer to this for a moment. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that last year we created a Department of Industry. Whether there was a divorce or whether some other term might better be used, there was a separation between the old Department of Trade and Commerce and the industrial sector, presumably, so now we have two departments—the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Industry. I think we will all agree, without passing bouquets around at this time, that the Department of Trade and Commerce is one of the more efficiently run departments of the Canadian government. I have no hesitation whatever about saying that. You will remember, too, Mr. Speaker, that we had a Department of Defence Production. This was maintained, as I understand it, in a sort of cold storage but it was to be associated or affiliated with the Department of Industry.

Let us look at the figures for last year. In the main estimates for the year just ending, that is, the year ending on March 31, the Department of Defence Production had $22,700,000—I am dealing, now, with the main estimates, not with the supplementaries. In the coming year, with the creation of the Department of Industry, this figure, the figure for defence production has been reduced to only $17,799,000. But the new Department of Industry has $24,194,000 so that altogether the Department of Defence Production and the Department of Industry have available in the main estimates a total of $41,993,000—perhaps we could call it $42 million—or $19,200,000 more than the Department of Defence Production for last year and the Department of Trade and Commerce which, as I say, is very efficiently run and which has now been divorced of responsibility for industry—it does not have this responsibility at all—and these figures do not include expenditures in connection with the world fair or anything like that, the increase in expenditures for the Department of Trade and Commerce is $9,319,000. That is illustrative of the increase in spending which has taken place in almost every department of the government.

Now let me summarize the main estimates for a moment. The main estimates amount to a total of $6,730 million. The Minister of Finance the other night quite properly estimated that the supplementary estimates might swell the total budgetary expenditure during the coming year to $7,125,000,000—of course, that is an estimate and the hon. gentleman is not committed to it. But this will be the first time our annual budgetary expenditures have gone over the $7 billion mark.

I know there is expansion on all sides. I know that progress demands expansion. I know our population is increasing. I know that old people are living longer, thank heavens, so perhaps I shall live longer, too. I know there are all these expenditures which have to be maintained. But I do think the time has come when the Minister of Finance and the treasury board should pay great attention to the situation which has been reached.

I cannot help wondering what is to happen with regard to the recommendations of the Glassco commission. The minister said in Toronto that various studies were being carried out by industrial research people to consider the recommendations of that commission. A year ago we were told that the recommendations of the commission would be implemented. Now we are told that four industrial research companies are studying the recommendations of the commission and I presume that when they have finished, there will be further industrial research corporations retained to study the findings of these four industrial research corporations. Well, that is not the way to control expenditure in this country.

To understand what is happening, all one needs do is to consider the figures which were given us the other day relative to the advertisements placed by the government in an attempt to secure employment for older men. We were told—and this information was contained in a press release dated March 10 to supplement information given to the house—that 936 people had been placed up to a date early in March, and that we had spent $199,511 on advertisements in connection with their employment. This amounts to the fact that we have spent $213 per man in order to find employment for a few people under this great incentive plan which the Minister of finance indicated as being the answer to our economic problems.

One could go on and on. I have an advertisement here in which I think the Minister of Finance would be tremendously interested. Perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce will be interested in it, too. I have an advertisement here for a civil service position. The advertisement is for a morbidity officer. If there is any government which needed a morbidity officer more urgently than the present one, I have never heard of it. I presume he is to be appointed to the office of Minister of Finance because I cannot imagine anyone who is more morbid than he is.

Mr. Speaker, I promised some of my associates in this house that I would not speak for longer than 20 minutes. I beg their indulgence for having, as an Irishman, so near to March 17, given myself 20 minutes leeway. Having said that, I propose to move, seconded by my hon. friend from Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) the following amendment:

> That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
>
> this house regrets that the government has failed to take any effective action to control increasing expenditures and its failure so to do, despite increased taxation imposed at the last session, has resulted in a substantial deficit.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I can understand the difficulty which the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) had in dealing with this budget, because one of the Toronto newspapers which normally supports this government had a somewhat plaintive little headline in it the other day asking whether this Liberal government really could afford quite such a Tory budget. It seemed to me there was a touch of ingratitude in the tones of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) in his attempts to tear to pieces a budget that should have been right down his alley.

I was interested, too, in the amendment that he proposed. It struck me as a typical example of primitive Tory thinking of which, I may say, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) is not altogether free, either. There seems to be an idea among a great many people—and it is very prevalent in the party to my right—that budgets can be divided into two categories: there are good budgets, and there are bad budgets; and there is a very simple yardstick by which to choose between them—good budgets are those that reduce the deficit; bad budgets are those that increase the deficit. It is a very nice, simple formula; but, of course, it has almost no relevance whatever to a modern, industrial society.

Mr. Fisher: It did not have to them, either.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It did not have to them, either, as my colleague the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) has said. But I think it is as well, perhaps, that we realize this when loud cries are raised against the possibility that we are going to have a deficit, or when our Minister of Finance sticks his chest out and suggests that he is worthy of praise and accolades because he proposes to cut some 33⅓ per cent from the deficit. There may be circumstances in which such a move would be virtuous, would be wise; there may also be circumstances in which it is supreme folly, and I suggest that this particular situation is not quite so clearcut as some would have us believe.

This budget, of course, is in very great contrast to last year's. It makes one a little bit nostalgic, perhaps. It really was great fun, of course, when our new Minister of Finance went skipping across the economic fields with all the rest of us and the business world in full cry after him. Then, of course, he stubbed his toe and came to grief. As I say, Mr. Speaker, it was a lot of fun. And events have proved us right; they have proved us to be perfectly right. It was a contradictory budget; he did adopt the wrong methods to achieve the right ends; and finally, of course, it was rather a failure as the chart to the shining new Liberal world that we were to have. But still, Mr. Speaker, I am a little nostalgic, as I say, for that other budget, because even though it was a silly budget; even though it was contradictory; even though it flew in the face of all economic reason, nevertheless it had some qualities that do not attach to the present limp and uninteresting document that we are discussing tonight—because it was an imaginative budget; it was a budget that was designed to accomplish something. The fact that they were foolish methods of accomplishing things does not alter the fact that this was a budget that, shall we say, could be regarded in the modern context; could be regarded as budgets should be regarded today, not merely as the government's housekeeping list but as the government's approach to the whole direction of our economy.

We may have disagreed with what the minister attempted to do, but I do not think any of us could disagree with the aims expressed in that unfortunate budget of last year. The very fact that it was regarded by the minister in a modern context was, I think, very important; and I think it is quite tragic that something has now happened and that, having gained the experience and learned, one would hope, the lesson of how not to accomplish these things, the minister has either chosen or has been unable to follow through with the same type of budget based on sounder principles. It was, of course, regarded, quite rightly, as part of the complex of economic measures by which the government proposed to deal with our complex economy; it was not to be just a housekeeping business.

I think that for a few minutes it might be well if we were to dwell upon what are the real purposes and functions of a budget in this modern age. All too often people seem to think it is merely a casting of accounts. They seem to forget that the budget is a complex piece of mechanism which can be used to produce almost any result which those in control of it wish to effect. I suppose one might say its first purpose is that it should be designed to promote an equitable distribution of income, as equitable as is feasible in a fallible world. That, of course, would include dealing with the question of unemployment; dealing with the development of our economy to make sure that all our people have the opportunity to attach themselves to a paying job. It will not do for the Minister of Finance to sweep the unemployed under the rug by labelling them with little figures and saying, "We have an anonymous object in Ontario, which we mark 3 per cent; another anonymous object in British Columbia, which we mark 4 per cent; a much larger anonymous object in Quebec, which we mark 6 per cent; and in the maritimes, where we mark it 8 per cent". These are actual men, women and children, and you cannot push them under the rug and say that because there are fewer of them than there were last year, therefore we do not need to worry very much about them. That, I think, is perhaps one of the first functions of a budget.

Another one, of course, which is connected very closely with it, is the expansion of production in order to effect a wider material base on which to live and build a civilized society. Then I would suggest there is an even more important function of the modern budget and one which is going to become more and more important as time goes on; that is, that it should improve the quality of life for the people of the economy for which it is set up. More and more this is going to become of overriding importance; more and more we are going to find that it is not sufficient merely to arrange that no one is going to starve in our midst, or even to arrange that most people will be living at fairly comfortable levels. Very shortly governments are going to have to assume the responsibility for the very quality of life within the confines of the country. That will entail quite drastic economic measures; not the rather gentle, hesitant ones which we have had to date. It may even entail a complete recasting of our concepts of the purposes of human life.

We are emerging right now from the virtuous Victorian era in which hard work was a virtue no matter what the end of that work might be. We are emerging from the era in which all beauty, shall we say, all the more civilized accompaniments of life had to take second place to the grim business of producing material goods that we could touch and feel and see. It is not going to be good enough merely to provide for the material welfare of people. They have to be given the opportunity to live satisfying lives; and they will not live satisfying lives in a barbarous society. Very often when I look on the Canadian scene, it seems to me that we do live in largely a barbarous society in which goals are held before our people that would be appropriate, perhaps, to the savages in Patagonia, perhaps to the native blacks of Australia who have not yet emerged to a higher standard of civilization. But for allegedly civilized people many of the goals that are held before us are trivial, are time wasting and are in fact destructive of the human spirit.

On this question of the equitable distribution of income we have, of course, been moving to some degree in that direction. All our social welfare measures, all our transfer payments, our graduated income tax have been steps toward effecting a more equitable distribution of income. But it has been almost a snail-like pace at which we have been travelling; and just as snail-like, to my mind, before the fine, clean broom of the Liberal party as it was before the tattered, old besom of the Conservative party. We need to go much faster than we have gone, and there is plenty of room in which to make that progress.

Today I received from a concern in Vancouver, British Columbia, a most interesting little leaflet which to me points to some of the areas in which our Minister of Finance might have moved. I have before me a very tempting advertisement which offers me the opportunity to make tax free capital gains from a very modest investment, tax free capital gains which would be most encouraging, I should think. Certain stocks which one could buy had a low of $6.15 and rose to a high of $21.38, showing an increased book value of 247 per cent. As this advertisement says:

> Find the easy way to get that "extra cash" you are looking for...tax-free...What you make —you keep—all of it.

Then follows a list of stocks which one is advised to buy. Of course, you can lose your shirt, but on the other hand if you do not lose your shirt then, according to this gentleman who has distributed this leaflet, you have great hopes of finally reaching millionairedom. Then there is this pleasant little comment about our modern economy:

> Canada is one of the few countries in the world where millions of dollars can be made in the stock market without paying a cent in capital gains taxes. Thousands of traders and speculators from all over have made king-size fortunes here in past years and will continue doing so because of our nation's unlimited wealth in natural resources. We go so far as to suggest that the profit opportunities will be greater this year than in any previous year in history. Read our financial service for investors, which we mail without charge every week.

One presumes that most of the people who, shall we say, play with this particular outfit will, as I say, lose their shirt.

An hon. Member: What about Clarkson, Gordon?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): No, I do not see their names here, and had they been here I might have let the minister know. But presumably there are people who have had more fortunate results from such operations, otherwise these people could not be in business. And they can only be in business because this government, like all its predecessors, Liberal and Conservative, has stubbornly refused to do anything to control capital gains in this country.

We had a striking example of this a few years ago in this chamber when the figures of the capital gains tax-free profits made by those who engaged in the trans-Canada pipe line were revealed. They were almost astronomical sums, and we were informed at that time that not even one five cent piece got into the national treasury. So I suggest that one area in which a more equitable distribution of income could be achieved is by preventing a grossly inequitable distribution of that income, as has taken place so often in the past.

The need for this is plainly evident to anybody who cares to walk through the streets of any of our cities. We do not need any vast tomes of social science analysis; all we need is to walk through some of the streets in the city of Ottawa and then go to some other parts of the city of Ottawa, and we will find a gross disparity of income among Canadians, a disparity that civilized people should be ashamed to maintain. I hope that when the government does come eventually to amend its taxation provisions perhaps it will call on the gentleman whose name I saw mentioned yesterday in the paper, which displayed an extremely attractive photograph and a speculative story that he might be entering the cabinet. I hope he will turn back to the speech he made a year or so ago when he was sitting on the opposition side of the house. I quoted it to him a few months ago and I am not going to quote it again tonight. It is an excellent speech and it will remain an excellent speech; and if, as I hope, and as I am sure all of us hope, this speculation is correct and this gentleman is to be translated to a higher sphere, then he can look forward to having that speech quoted to him quite a number of times, if he does not use the figures he himself placed upon the record of this house to overcome some of the inequities of our taxation system, thereby improving, as I say, the inequitable distribution of income.

All of us agree that one of the aims of our budgetary provisions—I am speaking in larger terms than merely the housekeeping accounts —should be the expansion of wealth production in the country. This government brought forward a number of measures which were designed to achieve that and also to achieve a wider distribution of wealth producing facilities in the country. The latest reports one hears are that, in spite of the carrots dangled before industry, there have not been too many nibbles and not much anxiety to move into the designated areas, as these days we so politely call the areas not quite so prosperous as other parts of Canada.

I am wondering how long it will be before the government realize that the carrot method is not very efficacious and that something much more drastic has to be done: as drastic, for instance, as was done in Great Britain, not by a forward-looking, progressive Liberal government but by a stale, worn-out Tory government to induce industry to go into areas which they wanted to have developed, by investing large sums of public money in the building of plants and the renting of them to industries who would move in. The Conservative party's weakness, of course, was revealed in the fact that the British taxpayer was forced to subsidize any of these industries which went into such areas, because these industries were given plants at nominal rents. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that before long our government will have to realize that if it is going to overcome the centripetal force that is drawing industry into a few areas of the country they will have deliberately to wrench it away by massive public investment in industry in those undeveloped areas.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it would be safe to do this, because in spite of the fears of extravagance expressed tonight by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) any of these industries which moved into a designated area are going to be under the control and direction of perhaps the most gimlet-eyed member of the cabinet, and one can hardly imagine too much extravagance being permitted under those gimlet eyes. But I suggest that now is the time that the government must think in those terms. It is not good enough for the Minister of Finance to tell us that because things are economically so cheerful today there is no need to do anything. He rather reminds me of the man who has a leaky roof, and who points out, quite naturally: "Of course, I cannot mend the roof when it is raining and there is no need to mend it when it is not raining."

It does not happen to be raining now, but we know quite well that clouds will be coming upon the scene before long and now is the time that our Minister of Finance should get out his little hammer and shingles and get after the roof, while he still has a number of shingles to use, instead of taking pride in having thrown a lot of the shingles away or having failed to obtain the shingles available to him to mend that roof.

I should mention another matter which I thought was, or perhaps should be, one of the purposes of a modern budget, and that is the purpose of improving the quality of life. This to me is really the most serious problem any government faces today. Anyone who observes some of the aspects of the affluent society, both south of the line and our more modest version of it north of the line, must realize all too well the need for vast public investment in what I would call intellectual stimulants badly needed by our people, so that we Canadians do not have, as we so often do, to grimace and shiver at the tastes which our compatriots display in comparison with the tastes displayed by people in more sophisticated areas of the world. But this can only be done by vast expenditures of public funds. Last year I was in Europe and visited a number of quite small cities, much smaller than the city of Ottawa. In fact, they would hardly be called cities in our country. In each case they had a first class symphony orchestra paid for from the revenues of the municipality, and encouraged, I suppose, because almost the whole population turned out to hear the high quality performances they put on. I wondered just what was the difference. Why do these people engage so readily in this sort of expenditure while we shudder away from the very thought of spending even a few dollars on a slight subsidy for a theatrical enterprise or an artistic enterprise of any sort?

I would urge on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) that it is part of his job to see that the quality of Canadian life is improved in this manner. It will take a vast investment of funds to do so. We hear a great deal about the necessity of expending funds on education, and no one supports this more enthusiastically than I, who had very little opportunity for an education; but it cannot only be formal education. There must be opportunities for people to see the best in art, to hear the best in music. There must be opportunities for people to develop sophisticated and worth-while tastes in the field of literature. Unless we do we are going to remain barbarians, and in a world that is rapidly moving we are going to find ourselves in a backwater.

Mention has been made of the drain of scientific brains out of the country, and of the expenditure of public funds by the Canadian authorities on scientific research outside of Canada. Very often we hear complaints made that we spend money on educating young Canadians only to have them leave and go across the border and devote their developed talents to the building up of another economy and another society. I was discussing this matter a month or two ago with a young woman in Vancouver who is an eminent scientist, and she told me that this is quite a wrong picture of the situation, that Canadian scientists have no desire to go to the United States, that it takes more than money to take them there. They are driven there by the fact that there are no employment opportunities for them in Canada. They just cannot find places.

She told me that she herself knew of many young scientists who would have been only too glad to obtain employment in Canada at substantially lower rates than they would receive in the United States, but there were just no places for them. There were no places for them because our Minister of Finance, for one, considers it a virtue to cut down the deficit, considers that he must make obeisances to those rather antiquated gods of orthodoxy when our country is crying out for the type of development that would create substantial employment for such people.

These are things that I think budgets and those who make them should have in mind. The great function of a budget is to improve the quality of life, to increase the quantity of wealth available for supporting that life and also, of course, to fit our country to take part in an effective way in the developmental program that must be undertaken by our United Nations organizations if we are going to have a worth-while world in which a developed Canada can live.

Before closing I should like to say a few words about another matter with which the budget is connected to some degree. Like most Canadians, and certainly, I think, like all intelligent Canadians, I have been disturbed and saddened by the growing rift appearing between two sections of our people, by the increasing bitterness of language, the increasing heat of the exchanges that are being made. I am reminded of something that happened long, long ago, something that I can see across the dark chasm and abyss of time of nearly half a century. I can see quite clearly before my eyes a certain sign that one saw plastered on the walls of every building in France and Belgium, in estaminets, in cafes, on trains, everywhere where troops were likely to congregate. It was a very simple little sign. Taisez-vous. Méfiez-vous. Les oreilles ennemies vous écoutent.

[Translation]

Where is the danger? Where are our enemies? Are they in France, in Montreal, in the province of Quebec or elsewhere? No, because we must not look for them without but within ourselves. Our worst enemies are our ears which hear the smallest insults and hurt our pride. They are more dangerous and more insidious than our enemies in France or Montreal.

[Text]

They are the ears of our malice, of our stupidity, of our ignorance, of our sheer ill will, and those ears are hanging out today to catch every ill considered word, every hurting, wounding comment, every derogatory statement made by one side or the other in this conflict. I feel this very strongly, because unlike most of you here my Canadian national identity was not inherited. It is one I had to build myself bit by bit, and perhaps I built it more strongly or more clearly than at any other time when, as a young man in the uniform of Canada's army, I spent four years in northern Europe.

Significantly enough, a great proportion of those with me at that time were like myself, but there was not one of us there in northern France at that time who was not consciously there as a Canadian representing Canada. We knew, if we had never known before, that Canada was our home, and I suggest that at that time for the first time Canada emerged as a really distinct national identity, and some of us paid a very heavy price for that identity. It is about time we presented our bill and it is a bill which must be paid. That bill is this: We will not permit anyone to destroy that national identity upon which our own identities are based.

The other day when we sent Canadian soldiers to Cyprus the thought occurred to me that perhaps there were some people we might send with that contingent to very good advantage. We might, for instance, pick up the young men who use the term "frog" as an insult, pick up the young men who consider it is the part of patriotism to burn union jacks, and ship them to Cyprus. Take them to Limassol. Take them to Nicosia. Show them the bodies of men, women and children who are dead as the end result of this tossing of insults across the language and cultural fence. I can say from personal experience that there is nothing like a few corpses to induce some serious and salutary thinking in even the most irresponsible heads on the brevity of human life and the irrevocability of death.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that even if we do not send these people from both sides of this country to see the end results of their folly, they may themselves be able to draw a lesson from this. I think most of us felt when the troops went to Cyprus that here was one occasion upon which all of us, whether we be pacifists, militarists or whatever we might be, could be united in our pride in the action being taken by Canada and in the service being performed by Canadians.

In order that we may be able to play a much more effective role in this field in the future, there are those of us who think we should be devoting an even larger part of our substance towards this sort of work. In line with that thought, I wish to present now an amendment to the amendment of the official opposition. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That the amendment be amended by deleting therefrom all the words after the words "any effective action", and by substituting therefor the following words:
>
> "reduce defence expenditures so as to provide substantial savings which could be used for economic development in Canada and for increased aid to developing countries through the United Nations and its specialized agencies."

The amendment, as amended, would then read:

> This house regrets that the government has failed to take any effective action to reduce defence expenditures so as to provide substantial savings which could be used for economic development in Canada and for increased aid to developing countries through the United Nations and its specialized agencies.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like again to address a plea to those on both sides of this rift that has developed. My plea would be a repetition of that warning that was held before us in France. Taisez-vous, Méfiez-vous. Les oreilles ennemies vous écoutent.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): In rising to take part in this debate to comment on the contents of the budget, one is faced immediately with the problem of whether he should address his remarks to the contents of the budget or to the omissions from the budget. We in this party acknowledge that there are one or two important proposals in the budget. Having said that, we must hasten to add that there are several matters of even greater importance that received only passing reference. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that paramount amongst these omissions is the enormous increase in the public debt charges. Surely it would be erroneous to assume that members of the government generally, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) particularly, are not concerned about the largest of all of the increases in annual public expenditures. If, however, he is concerned and yet did not even mention it in his budget review, then we must assume he does not know what to do about it. Has the minister resigned himself to the belief that this progressively accelerating cost of debt is tantamount to some kind of malignant disease for which there is no treatment or cure? I want to say more about that a little later.

Usually the members of this house, and of course the press, attempt to give a budget a name, a short title that sums up the contents of the budget in a word or two. This practice has been followed again this year. We have heard it called such things as, "stand-by"; a "hold the line budget"; and we have even heard it called the fifth chapter in last year's edition. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, we see captions in the press referring to this budget as "the students' budget". There is very little substance in it, but the little there is is directed towards giving some assistance to young people. There is the extension of family allowances and the income tax allowance for part-time students. We have no objection to these provisions. I could quote, for example, from our election platform, and also produce a lot of correspondence that has passed between my office and the Department of Finance, to prove that we have advocated the adoption of this measure.

I am wondering whether or not the minister was thinking about the proposal to lower the voting age to 18 years when he prepared the budget. I am sure the minister and the government are very conscious of the fact that by amending the franchise to include the 18-year-olds we would be adding about 750,000 to the voters list. It is obvious this is not a pre-election budget, but perhaps it was a little precultivation which was considered to be prudent. I do not believe the minister had this sole purpose in mind, but when we look at the budget we find everything is the same as last year, except for some of these provisions.

There have been a number of charges levelled since the minister announced he was going to introduce the budget. Some people claimed it was too early; there seemed to be some unnecessary urgency to introduce it. There has even been the suggestion that this may have been done deliberately to harden the attitude of the federal government towards the provincial premiers when they meet in Quebec later this month. I happen to be one of those who believe budgets should come out and be introduced before the fiscal year begins with which they deal. Of course, this means they have to be introduced by the middle of March, and that is exactly when the minister introduced it. I am sure we can look back in history and find that the middle of March is the normal time for the introduction of the budget. Sessions of parliament have been thrown out of what might be called the normal pattern during the last two or three years because of elections. When we had the regular four sessions for each parliament, budgets were introduced in March, and I think there is nothing wrong with the timing.

There are one or two comments I should like to make about the minister's statement. I noticed that this year he only made a passing reference to the municipal development and loan board. Last year it was stated this was going to be one of the great new pieces of legislation introduced by the federal government to help the municipalities in Canada with their long term capital requirements problem. I read some of the speeches the minister gave at an earlier time. One of the things he mentioned over and over again when he was talking about the municipal development and loan fund was that it was primarily designed to create employment. I ask, is he satisfied now when we have 5.5 per cent unemployment? Is he satisfied that this and other measures the government introduced have reached their objective to the point where he does not need to extend the activities of the municipal development and loan board?

In his speech the minister referred to:

> —the work that will be done, and the new jobs that will be created, as a result of funds made available by the municipal development and loan board.

He also referred to the Atlantic development board; but I ask, is the reason that he has not expanded this plan because he is satisfied we have reached the point where there is sufficient employment being created?

At page 971 of his speech, referring to the matter of employment, he said:

> This does not mean we can afford to be complacent. Our international deficit has been cut down, but it still remained more than half a billion dollars in 1963. And a level of unemployment around 5 per cent represents only progress—

If the municipal development and loan fund was so successful as he claims it has been, then on his own argument it should be expanded. He says this only represents progress, and that means only the jobs which have been created by the first $400 million, or whatever portion of that which has been spent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words about regional incentives. The Minister of Finance had quite a lot to say about this subject. I do not disagree that it is necessary and may have some desirable effects in some areas, but in my opinion having a three year tax holiday in these designated areas, and an accelerated write-off for income tax purposes, will have the effect of some industries being mislocated whenever these incentives are taken away. When that happens employees in an industry that has been improperly located will load a social problem on to the municipality concerned as soon as the incentives are withdrawn.

I should like the minister to take this point into consideration. I know there was one area in southern Alberta which was designated for this purpose. One industry which would have been better established about 120 miles away from that area—

An hon. Member: In Medicine Hat?

Mr. Olson: No, not in Medicine Hat but near Medicine Hat—looked into the matter of this tax holiday and accelerated depreciation allowances, and found that as soon as these lapsed it would be in an uneconomic position, being so far away from the source of its raw materials, and would have to move again.

I noticed the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the chamber a few minutes ago and I am sorry he has left, because I wished to bring the matter of sugar policy to his attention. On page 972 of the budget speech the Minister of Finance said:

> The United Nations conference on trade and development which opens in Geneva next week will focus on the special trade and development problems of the economically less developed nations of the world. One of the greatest problems of our age is to find practical ways of raising the standards of living of these nations.

He went on to say:

> It will be our purpose to find effective methods for improving the trade opportunities of the less developed countries, without disruption of established industries in the more advanced countries.

Right now Canada has an opportunity to practice what the minister is advocating. We have seen spiralling increases in the price of sugar during the past 18 to 24 months. I am convinced, and in fact the Minister of Trade and Commerce has admitted, that Canada has been offered her requirements of sugar on a long term forward pricing arrangement substantially below the current high prices. At the same time the forward pricing arrangement would be sufficient to guarantee some kind of stability to the so-called economically less developed countries.

In replying to several questions which I put to him, the Minister of Trade and Commerce said he thought the price was still too high and that it was not prudent to enter into such long term contracts. I point out that the price at which Canada was offered sugar was a price that was just barely in line with the cost of production at home. I also suggest that it was no more than what was fair for some of these emerging countries. Here we have an opportunity for Canada to practice what it preaches if it wants to do something about helping some of these economically less developed countries.

There is a very complicated formula used to find the relationship between the price of raw sugar and the final retail price. At the time this forward pricing arrangement was proposed, the price offered was about £45 to £48 per ton, London daily price. The current cash price on the London market at that time was up to £90 to £95. Therefore these countries had offered their sugar at less than half of what it was selling at on the cash market in London. Yet our government turned it down. How much cheaper does it want it?

If we entered into such a long term agreement the other benefit that would come from it would be some kind of stability for the price of sugar for our own sugar beet producers. Over the past 10 years, excepting the last 18 months, the sugar beet producers of this country have been denied any kind of stability, but the United Kingdom and the United States have entered into such long term sugar pricing arrangements, fair to their own producers at home and to the producers in these economically less developed countries. I think Canada could show the world some good faith by doing likewise.

Sugar is one thing we have to buy. As a matter of fact our home production of sugar has gone down from 20 per cent of our requirements in 1958 to 14.8 per cent in 1962, simply because the price was below the cost of production. In fact on occasion the treasury has had to make subsidies available through the stabilization board in order to give our producers a reasonable price. As I have said, here is an opportunity for us, and I would urge the government to practise what it preaches.

On page 973 of his speech the minister talked about the government's willingness to transfer some of its responsibility for long established shared-cost programs to the provinces. We would like a little amplification of that statement. We would like to know what are the programs which the minister is willing to transfer to the provinces, and what kind of arrangements the provinces could make to ensure they would have the money to operate them.

On page 974, we find the minister using an old Tory phrase. He is reported as speaking about the old age security fund and, speaking about the deficit in that fund, he says:

> This will be made up in the next few years; in the meantime it has been met by a temporary loan to the fund.

Well, temporary loans have been made to that fund on a number of occasions in the past and I do not know that any of them have been paid back, except by adding to the deficit.

As set out on page 981, the minister dealt with family allowances and said they were to be extended to 16 and 17 year olds and that the rate of payment would be $10 a month. However, the hon. gentleman did not announce the effective date of this concession. Is it to be when the legislation is passed by the house, or is it to be on July 1? I have heard some speculation that it is to come into operation on September 1. On which date will this concession become operative? We should also like to know whether this relief is to be granted on a 12 month basis. Something has been said about "the period while attending school". We presume it will be for the whole year, but there are one or two months when students would not be attending school.

One almost amusing thing which happened today took place when the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) accused all those members of the house who voted against an amendment with respect to family allowances during the debate on the address in reply to the throne speech a few days ago of having changed their minds. This underlines a situation about which I have had a good deal to say in the course of the present session, namely the way in which we can make a farce of the proceedings here by the manipulation of the rules. Everyone who understands anything about the operations of this house knows very well that if we had voted to support the subamendment before us at that time, the effect of passing it would not have been to increase family allowances; its result would have been to destroy this parliament. Then there would have been recourse to the country and a new program. But hon. members to my right still seek to perpetuate this farce, through the press and in other ways, so as to give the impression that all those who voted against the subamendment were opposed to increases in family allowances. Nothing could be further from the truth.

As I indicated a few minutes ago, I wish to discuss in a little more detail not only the fantastic burden of debt charges in total for the year, amounting to something like $1,035, million, but the equally fantastic and alarming increase for the present year amounting to $156 million. To be fair to the Minister of Finance, and to put the increase in the 1964-65 fiscal year as compared with the figure for the 1963-64 fiscal year into proper perspective, I want to acknowledge the explanation made to the house by the minister on March 3 when he said that some of this increase was due to inaccurate estimates of the cost for previous years. Surely, one of the most astonishing statements we have heard in this house for years was that made by the former minister of finance this evening, when he told us that ministers of finance for the last 35 years have deliberately deceived parliament and the people of Canada when presenting their estimates in this regard. I want to know whether the present Minister of Finance is following that practice. Is this figure of $1,035 million also intended to mislead the house?

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad to answer the question. The answer is no; it is correct.

Mr. Olson: I am glad we are finally getting some truth. Anyway, regardless of these explanations, the fact remains that the total for the coming year in interest alone stands at $1,005 million. The other $30 million represents amortization of discounts, premiums and commissions and so on. The comparable figure for interest alone for the year ending in 1957 was $508 million. In round figures, this amounts to a $500 million increase in interest charges during the past seven years. I do not think the Minister of Finance will disagree with that figure because it is in the blue books though, once again, I am alarmed to find that these blue books have been deliberately deceiving the house in the past.

This also means there has been an increase of almost 100 per cent during the same seven year period. Let us remember that this is not just a $500 million increase each year, compared with what we paid seven years ago, and every year from now it will go on, unless, of course, we pay off some of it. Projecting the same rate of increase into the future we find that by 1973 the taxpayers of this country will be paying $2 billion in annual debt charges alone.

Moreover, the interest on the debt in the year ending March 31, 1957, amounted to 11.5 per cent of our total expenditure. The interest on debt for the coming fiscal year calls for 15 per cent of the total estimated expenditure. If this pattern continues we shall be devoting 21 per cent of our total estimated expenditure to interest charges by 1973. This increase from 11.5 per cent of the total in 1957 to 15 per cent this year amounts to a 40 per cent rise in the portion of the expenditure incurred by the federal government in debt charges.

[Mr. Olson.]

These enormous increases, both in themselves and as a percentage of total expenditure, are alarming enough, but even these figures do not tell the whole story. In 1957, current revenue was almost equal to expenditure. This year revenue will be $455 million below expenditure. If one calculates the increased cost of debt in relation to revenue, the percentage of increase appears, therefore, as even greater. This is what is happening, Mr. Speaker. We cannot turn our backs on it. We cannot ignore these charges, because we have to pay them. These debt charges represent by far the largest increase in any item for the year under consideration, yet the minister did not even refer to them in his budget speech.

There are, of course, two very obvious reasons for the tremendous increase which has taken place. The average rate of interest has gone up and the need for loans to meet the deficits of the past six years has added substantially to the principal of our national debt.

I do not have time in which to go into some of these other matters. But we thought we had the minister on the right track just after he brought in his last budget. We understood something was to be done to relieve the tremendous burden of municipal financing. But we do not see any extension of assistance in this regard. According to the latest figures available—and I obtained these figures only a few days ago—municipal debt had increased from $106 million in 1957 to $201 million by 1961. Projecting this rate of increase to 1965 it will be seen that there is likely to be substantially more than a 100 per cent increase during the intervening period. I do not know how much longer the minister thinks this kind of financing can go on, with up to 21 per cent for debt charges alone; municipalities, in some cases, paying 30 per cent to 35 per cent of their total budget for debt interest charges alone. We have heard nothing from the minister to suggest what he is going to do about it or how he is even going to slow down or reverse this trend.

We in the Social Credit party have advocated for years that some of this social capital in the beginning, progressively growing larger, could be subscribed by the Bank of Canada. We know there is an increase in the money supply every year. This year we are told debt charges amount to something like $1,035 million. Is there anything wrong with the Bank of Canada supplying some of the finance and paying it over to the federal treasury so it can be used for these social capital projects? This is all that we ask; we do not ask the government to flood the country with more money, to increase the money supply any faster than it is being increased now. We think that with regard to some of these things for which the municipalities incur social capital expenditure it is possible, reasonable and desirable for the Bank of Canada to provide some of the capital. Otherwise we can look into the future—and not too far into the future—to 1973, where the project is that we shall be paying $2 billion in debt charges on the national debt alone. The taxpayers of Canada will also be paying these enormous debt charges through the municipalities. We think the time has come to take the first step, even if it is not a great step, toward reversing this trend.

I think the municipal loan and development fund, if it were changed so that these funds were supplied by the Bank of Canada, would provide that first essential step for us to get back on the rails. I should remind the minister that the New Democratic party are not against deficits. I think if we go back over the years it is rather easy to convince oneself and anyone to whom you are talking that the only time we have had a reasonably high level of prosperity is when somebody has been incurring a deficit. The government, industrial expansion or the expansion of consumer credit, can increase the money supply in the country. But if we are going to have tagging along with it these debts and enormous interest charges that are going to cripple us as the years go by, I think we should be taking a long, hard look at the situation.

We do not ask the government to go all the way and suddenly change things. Perhaps it could be done a little at a time. The money that is required for social capital purposes is called social credit by our party; the New Democratic party call it social capital. This could be taken from the Bank of Canada in stages so we would not have these enormous debt service charges to meet. I see that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker, and I would urge the Minister of Finance to give some consideration to these proposals.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, when he entered triumphantly into the city of Orange, Julius Caesar had every reason to shout:

Veni, vidi, vici.

I came, I saw, I conquered.

About the current budget, one could say: It came, we saw, we gained nothing.

Mr. Speaker, Shakespeare asked:

To be or not to be?

Well, we might ask: "Budget or no budget?"

To turn to a French poet, Mr. Speaker, Francois Villon, in a short poem, may have expressed very well what I think of that budget. He wrote:

Dans un vieux cimetiere
Un fossoyeur creusait
Il fit jaillir de terre
Un crane qui dormait.
En veux-tu du vieux frere?
Me dit-il et je refusais.

That is somewhat the impression this budget gives me.

[Text]

Mr. Fisher: But Villon is the rogue's poet.

Mr. Gregoire: You will have to say it in French, my friend.

[Translation]

A chemist would define the budget as he defines clear water: something tasteless, colourless and odorless.

[Text]

Tasteless, colourless, utterless.

Mr. Fisher: "Utterless"?

Mr. Gregoire: Utterless. Crystal clear.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is surprising that this happens exactly the second year in office of this government and the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon).

Does it mean that the present government and the Minister of Finance after only two years are so devoid of inspiration that we can see the results in the budget?

Does it mean that they could not give us more or that they did not think of giving us more in spite of all their election promises, since when their second budget is brought down, they did not have enough imagination to give us more than what we saw, a few days ago, in their second budget?

Short of breath. No imagination. It was only good for a year. Not even for two years.

Where are all those ideas they had before the election when they were in the opposition?

Mr. Speaker, I listened to the present Minister of Finance when he was sitting in the opposition. He had many ideas at that time. Then, he was able to do everything. Oh. He was really brilliant. He was to revolutionize this country's whole economy. But today, what has he got to say? His favourite word is "but".

He says: there is a great deal of unemployment still, but . . . Always the word "but". Then he says: We improved the balance of national accounts, but—

An hon. Member: But all is well.

Mr. Gregoire: But all is well. And again, he says: I admit that there is still some unemployment, but—

An hon. Member: All is well.

Mr. Gregoire: That has been the main theme of the Minister of Finance: the little word "but", after each admission.

What progress did we make with the first budget? We remained at a standstill, we toed the line instead of going ahead.

I realize that after last year's budget, the Minister of Finance might be somewhat afraid. There is a saying: A burnt child shuns the fire. Perhaps that is what happened this year.

At any rate, the last budget is no progress, and where there is no progress, there is a set-back.

Deficits once more. Borrowings once more. A $750 million deficit is predicted. Taxes once more.

What difference is there between the Conservatives and the Liberals? Not the least.

I am pleased to note that the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) agrees with me. Nothing has changed. At least, the hon. member for Lotbiniere has the courage to admit it and I commend him for it. What difference is there between the budget just introduced and the one submitted by the Conservatives for five or six years? No difference at all. It is always the same. As time goes by, there is more of the same.

There is no use kidding ourselves, nothing has been changed. The Minister of Finance wants us to believe in the economic situation of Canada. Well, Mr. Speaker, I too would like you to believe in the situation which now exists, and I may not see it with the eyes of an accountant or a Minister of Finance, but as we see it in our own offices when we meet electors, workers, farmers, unemployed people of our constituencies who have lost their jobs at the radar station of St. Sylvestre or Parent in the county of Chapleau, or when we talk with unemployed workers from the counties of Lapointe, Villeneuve, or those from the counties of Lake St. John and Lotbiniere.

They know what the situation is in Canada because they have evidence of it in their homes, within their families and all around them. I will try to describe to you the true financial, monetary and economic situation of Canada.

Let us start with the financial situation. The most striking fact about it, Mr. Speaker, is that it is disastrous. The national debt is disastrous, a disaster, that is, for Canada.

To realize that, you just have to refer to the 1963-64 Canada Year Book. Unfortunately, I cannot consult the French edition because I am told it will be published six months after the English edition, because the Minister of Finance is too poor to have the two editions published simultaneously.

Mr. Speaker, our national debt amounted to $17,923 million in 1954. Today, in 1963, it amounts to $24,799 million, that is an increase of $7 billion. In 1954, the interest amounted to $476 million yearly; in 1963, it amounted to $883 million—pardon me, there is an error of $102 million, as the Minister of Finance pointed out the other day—which brings the interest on the debt to $985 million for 1963 and $1,370 million for 1964.

The interest is disastrous and so is the debt. Mr. Speaker, the government keeps on borrowing and the Minister of Finance has announced that he will seek to borrow $750 million this year.

That is the debt of the federal government. There are also the debts of the provincial governments, the school boards, the municipalities. In 1960—the last year for which a complete report is available—the debt of the federal government amounted to $21,369 million, the provincial debts amounted to $3,699 million and the municipal debts to $4,771 million, that is a total of $29,565 million.

A debt of $30 billion for the government, whereas the money in circulation to cover that amount is barely $2,500 million, plus the money in cheques; the money supply totals between $16 and $17 billion, probably even a little less, perhaps $15 or $16 billion this year, which means that there is not enough money in circulation to pay the whole debt.

The federal government debt alone amounts to $8 billion more than all the money Canadians have in hand, in their bank accounts, in companies' chests, in savings of all kinds and everywhere in Canada.

What is to be done when one has more debts than assets?

Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Finance. I am sure that, as an accountant, he will be able to give me an answer. I am told that his parliamentary secretary (Mr. Benson) is also an accountant. Here is my question. How do you call a company or corporation whose debts are greater than its assets? Do not be shy about telling us. It is a bankrupt company. Well, the federal government alone has a debt exceeding by $8 billion its assets in cash, cheques, legal tender, money supply or credit in circulation.

But notice, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government likes to be in debt. It likes to borrow. I wonder if it is still qualified to administer the country.

I was reading today what the functions of the government are with regard to boards and corporations and I found the information appalling.

It likes to borrow, and the best solution it has to offer Canadians is to get deeper into debt. And you will realize it by the examples I shall provide.

First of all, there is the municipal loans board. Let us loan to the municipalities, this will help them.

We shall establish a commission to help students. We shall lend them money; we shall help them to run into debt.

There are also the loans to farmers through the Farm Credit Corporation, and under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act. Let us lend to farmers, let us involve them in debt. This will please my friend, the hon. member for Lotbiniere. Let us involve them in debt.

There is also the industrial development bank. Let us lend to manufacturers.

And the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, on the other hand, lends to Canadian taxpayers, so that they may be able to build houses.

Such is the federal government. It likes to lend. It likes to get everybody into debt.

There are also the loans for farm improvements. Again, let us get our farmers into debt.

And as concerns immigrants to Canada, let us lend them money, let us get them into debt, also and this, according to the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 325, section 69, paragraph (6).

And it was also necessary to lend to Indians. An Indian loans board was established, according to chapter 149, section 69, paragraph (6) of the revised statutes. Let us involve them in debt.

There are also loans to the international development association, 1960 statutes, chapter 32, section 5.

And what about loans to crown corporations? It is not enough to get everybody into debt, loans are also intended for crown corporations. The government sets up crown corporations and lends them money under Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 116, section 82, paragraph 4.

We have the small business loans. We even have loans for fishing operations. Briefly, everybody is being put into debt.

Mr. Speaker, I only quoted a few of the loans acts. And when everybody has been involved into debt, regulations are passed to control credit arrangements for the Canadian people.

Once all the taxpayers are well into debt, regulations are passed to assist the creditors. Reference is made in our statutes to the Bankruptcy Act regulations.

We have regulations on arrangements between creditors and farmers, Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 111, section 41, paragraph 2.

There is also a statute providing for the adjustment of debts contracted for seed grain loans.

Mr. Speaker, it means that the function of government has changed. It is no longer an administrator or a legislator. It does not exist any more to see to the welfare of the citizens, but rather to lend them money, to get them into debt. Loans are made to everybody.

Does the government suggest solutions or logical measures to help the Canadian people? No. It makes loans to them, it gets them into debt.

Mr. Fisher: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Gregoire: And then, after that it is found that the Canadian people can hardly make a living.

Mr. Speaker, since it is ten o'clock I shall continue my remarks tomorrow. Tomorrow will be the day of solutions.

[Text]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I wonder if I might ask the house leader if he will live up to his commitment of last night and tell us what we are going to do next week; or is that pressing him too much?

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, in order to allow the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) to complete his speech and reveal the mysterious solution he can offer us, we shall continue tomorrow the debate on the budget.

Monday and Tuesday will be the third and fourth days devoted to the consideration of the budget.

Wednesday we shall revert to the study of supplementary estimates and interim supply, to continue it Thursday, if it is not over. On the other hand, if this study is completed before Thursday, we shall consider other measures which will be announced later.

[Text]

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

APPENDIX

REPORT BY A JOINT COMMITTEE ON COMMUNITY ANTENNA TELEVISION BY THE BOARD OF BROADCAST GOVERNORS AND THE DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

TO

THE HONOURABLE J. W. PICKERSGILL, MINISTER OF TRANSPORT AND TO THE HONOURABLE MAURICE LAMONTAGNE, SECRETARY OF STATE

On December 31, 1963, the Secretary of State and the Minister of Transport issued a public statement in which they said that the board of broadcast governors—with the technical advice and in consultation with the Department of Transport—had been asked by the government to inquire into and recommend any legislative action that may be required to ensure that, so far as the constitutional jurisdiction of parliament will permit, the use of community antenna television for the dissemination of television programs is subject to similar regulation under parallel conditions to that applied to direct broadcasting.

A committee of the board of broadcast governors and the Department of Transport—and under it a working subcommittee of the same two agencies—has inquired into this subject over the past two months and has held numerous discussions and formal meetings.

Community antenna systems rely both upon radio links and land lines or cable relays. Complete control of all aspects of cable relays and closed circuit T.V. can be achieved only by complete federal control of land lines, a large portion of which are presently under provincial control in the absence of federal declaration or statute. This would involve complicated problems of provincial consultation. However, effective control over the major area of CATV could be achieved by amendments to the Broadcasting Act covering commercial broadcasting receiving stations and land stations where these stations are used to feed a cable relay distribution system with radio or television broadcasting signals or where the land stations are used to feed the distribution systems with closed circuit radio or television signals. These amendments should include:

(1) a requirement that the Minister of Transport refer to the B.B.G. for hearing and recommendation of any applications for licences or for renewal thereof, including renewal of existing licences, and give the board the necessary powers for this purpose;

(2) authority for the board to regulate such stations in regard to program content and other non-technical matters (the Department of Transport would continue to deal with technical aspects);

(3) extension of the objects and purposes of the act to commercial broadcasting receiving stations and to land stations feeding cable relay distribution systems;

(4) a limit on foreign ownership of new commercial broadcasting receiving stations and land stations feeding cable relay systems similar to the limitations now contained in the act for broadcasting stations;

(5) authority for the board to control interconnections (networks) of cable relay distribution systems when they are fed with signals from commercial broadcasting receiving stations or land stations.

(6) authority for the board to enforce of its own action conditions of licences of stations in these categories where the conditions have been included as a result of a recommendation from the board; and to take action in the courts of violations of such conditions or of infractions of the regulations.

When authority is given to the board under the act, it is proposed the board should regulate the commercial broadcasting receiving stations and the land stations as defined in such a manner to ensure that, consistent with the public interest in the reception of a varied and comprehensive broadcasting service, the board should to the greatest extent practicable maintain the Canadian identity and character of service available to the public and further the purposes of broadcasting as set out in section 10 of the act. The board would also regulate the relationship between licencees and provide for the final determination of all matters and questions in relation thereto.

The board may wish to consider regulations prescribing the time periods for programs delivered by commercial broadcasting receiving stations and land stations as defined for feeding a cable relay system, and respecting the alteration or curtailment of programs handled by these two sources for feeding a cable relay system. Changes in the authority for the reception of broadcasting stations by commercial broadcasting receiving stations and the broadcasting signals carried by land stations as defined would need to come to the board for approval, as would a change in the area served through the medium of the cable relay system as specified in the licence.

The committee has examined the act in detail and is prepared to lend its assistance to the Department of Justice in suggesting the necessary changes and wording in the Broadcasting Act to cover cable relay systems.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 20, 1964

The house met at 11 a.m.

VACANCY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely of Henry Frank Jones, member for the electoral district of Saskatoon, by decease.

Accordingly I have addressed my warrant to the chief electoral officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHOQUETTE—REFERENCE TO REMARKS OF MEMBER FOR LAPOINTE

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

At the top of page 1276 of Hansard, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) is reported as saying:

> What difference is there between the Conservatives and the Liberals? Not the least.

Then he went on to say this:

> I am pleased to note that the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) agrees with me. Nothing has changed. At least, the hon. member for Lotbiniere has the courage to admit it—

Mr. Speaker, I wish to protest officially against that statement. I do not for one second approve of the fantastic and farcical theories of the hon. member for Lapointe. He was probably trying to be funny; indeed, his whole speech might be described as a farce. However, nothing he said was true.

[Text]

PROCEDURE

COMPOSITION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre) moved:

> That the special committee on procedures and organization of the House of Commons appointed March 9, 1964 be composed of Mr. Speaker, Miss Jewett, Messrs. Aiken, Balcer, Baldwin, Fairweather, Gregoire, Knowles, Lachance, Lambert, Lamoureux, MacEachen, Olson, Rouleau, and Walker.

Motion agreed to.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENTS PERMITTING REFUSAL OF INCREASED INDEMNITIES

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills, subject to the same caveat as has been given on previous occasion. If I may, I should like to correct Hansard of yesterday; the same caveat was given concerning the introduction of two bills at that time, but was not recorded.

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-78, to amend an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act and the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act.

An hon. Member: Explain.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, this is the same bill as the one I introduced last year. Some members seem to be in an awkward situation following the increase of their allowances last year. It seems they are unable to refuse that raise. Therefore, this bill provides that it will now be possible for those members, instead of resorting to demagogy by pretending that everybody except them is in favour of that raise, to refuse such increase.

[Text]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING REPEATED APPLICATIONS FOR ABANDONMENT

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-79, to amend the Railway Act (refusal of abandonment).

He said: The purpose of this bill is to provide that if the board of transport commissioners has refused an application by a railway company for the abandonment of a line of railway, or has refused leave to remove, close or abandon any station or divisional point which would involve the removal of employees, no subsequent application for such approval or such leave could be entertained during the next five years.

The idea behind my bill is to prevent the railway companies from making annual or even more frequent applications to the board in the hope that those opposing the applications will get tired of doing so and that they,

the companies, will eventually achieve their ends.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROPOSED ONTARIO LEGISLATION—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask leave to move the adjournment of the house, arising out of the report in the morning papers with respect to the incredible piece of legislation introduced yesterday in the Ontario legislature—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Scott: —by the Conservative government. I ask leave, therefore, to move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie), the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance, namely the introduction by the Ontario government of legislation which would destroy the principles of Magna Carta and the bill of rights, and as a result would seriously undermine the long standing principles upon which our democratic system is based.

In doing so, Mr. Speaker, I think it is vitally important that this body today register its views on this piece of legislation, so that the government of Ontario may be well aware of the seriousness with which we view this type of activity. Having served as counsel before the royal commission on crime in Ontario, I am well aware of the problem they are trying to solve; but it seems to me the solution being proposed is far too drastic and far too dangerous to be permitted to take place in a democratic society.

I therefore hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will consider this matter as one of grave urgency. It is important that parliament express its views immediately before any further action is taken by the Ontario government. Never to my knowledge has such a drastic piece of legislation been proposed, and unless this house today immediately registers its views there will be no further opportunity to make our views known before the government of Ontario proceeds to enact this legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other hon. members who wish to say anything at this time? I think it is quite evident that the matter is extremely important and concerns every citizen. Nevertheless it has a provincial overtone, which is one of the matters, I should like to remind the hon. member, that we must consider in this question. In the past, no matter how important the question was considered to be, unless it was something extraordinary previous Speakers have invariably ruled, if my memory serves me correctly, to the effect that while the budget was being debated there was ample time, scope and opportunity to discuss a matter of urgent importance, as this obviously appears to be on its face.

In the circumstances, inasmuch as we are in the budget debate, it seems to me that ample opportunity will be given to the hon. member to raise the subject and discuss it at length. Therefore it seems to me the opportunity is at hand, and in the circumstances I do not think the ordinary procedures of the house should be set aside at this time under standing order 26.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—U.S. CO-OPERATION TO AVOID INTERFERENCE WITH SHIPPING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. It has to do with the potential danger of interference with Canadian shipping on the great lakes by wrongdoers in the United States. Yesterday there was a forecast in that connection by Mr. Paul Hall, the head of the S.I.U. in the United States. I ask the minister whether the Canadian government has the assurance of the administration in Washington, particularly the department of Justice there, that there will be the co-operation of the police forces of the United States so that our shipping can ply the great lakes with freedom and be unimpeded, and Canadian shipping will not be molested by unlawful interference as was the case last year.

In view of Mr. Hall's statement that that interference may be forthcoming, the administration in Washington should be made aware that interference of this kind is viewed by Canada most seriously and is not in keeping with the relations between our countries.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is quite evident that the matter raised by the right hon. gentleman's question is one of great importance. I have not personally been seized thereof in my official capacity as Minister of Justice, but the right hon. gentleman may be assured that this is one question which will continue to be dealt with by all my colleagues in government and also with the appropriate authorities elsewhere.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister whether there has been any communication by his department with Washington in this regard, or have there been any communications on the part of the Department of External Affairs with the United States pointing out that their co-operation is necessary, and that it is indeed demanded by the Canadian people?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the government of Canada, through the Department of External Affairs and the Canadian ambassador in Washington, has made it clear that the co-operation of the United States in this matter is desirable and essential. I myself have pointed this out to the secretary of state in discussions I have had with him, as I know the Minister of Labour has with his counterpart in the United States.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What has been the reaction resulting from this dialogue?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There has been an assurance of co-operation.

[Later:]

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour may I ask his parliamentary secretary if the minister is today attending the reported meeting between Mr. Paul Hall of the S.I.U. and the maritime union trustees in Montreal.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): I think this, Mr. Speaker, would be a quite improper supposition.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—TERMS OF REFERENCE OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of reports of repeated violence and fighting in the island of Cyprus, is the Secretary of State for External Affairs now in a position to tell us whether any precise directives have been given the Canadian forces serving under the United Nations command? If so, what are these directives and by whom were they issued?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): This question was asked me yesterday by the hon. member for Peace River, and there were other questions as well. There have, of course, been terms of reference established. I inquired overnight from the secretary general whether or not it was desirable to give forthwith the details of these terms of reference and directives. The decision of the secretary general, as was the case with the Congo operation is that it is not desirable to make public these directives at this time. This was the course followed, as I say, in the case of the Congo operation. I am satisfied that it is the right course.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question. Could the minister tell us, if he cannot give us the details of the directives, whether precise directives have been delivered to the Canadian forces on the authority of the secretary general?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are precise directives which have been discussed with the Canadian government. They are being made known to the Canadian contributing force in the peace keeping operation by the acting commander, and these will be reaffirmed by General Gyani tomorrow.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of external affairs. In view of the serious Cyprus situation can the minister inform the house as to the length of time it has apparently taken for the appointment of a mediator, without whom we can have little hope of permanent pacification?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the appointment of a mediator pursuant to the resolution of March 4 is the responsibility of the secretary general. He has however been consulting interested governments, including Canada. Canada has made some suggestions. The successful functioning of the activities of the mediator depends on the support and co-operation of the two communities involved, as well as on those having treaty rights in the island. I hope there will not be a protracted delay in the appointment of the mediator. I may say that following discussions yesterday a number of foreign ministers will be in Geneva on Monday. We will have an opportunity to discuss this matter further with the secretary general of the United Nations.

[Later:]

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the name of General Burns been suggested to the secretary general of the United Nations as a possible mediator in Cyprus?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, that name and others have been discussed with the secretary general.

[Later:]

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence what supply line Canadian troops in Cyprus are on, or will they be on, and, more particularly, is it the United Nations supply line through Pisa which has been supplying our troops in the Gaza strip and in the Congo?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): They are presently being supplied from Canada until a more permanent arrangement can be worked out.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence if the daily rations for our Canadian troops in Cyprus are being flown over from Canada.

Mr. Hellyer: They have been so far, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP IN ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Could the minister inform the house about the progress made in the current discussions concerning Canada's admission to the O.A.S.?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I said a few weeks ago, this matter is still under consideration.

[Text]

CUBA—REPORTED USE OF CANADIAN ENGINE FOR SUBVERSIVE PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question arising out of the statement regarding the organization of American states. I should like to ask the minister whether a protest has been received from the organization of American states in connection with the report of an investigation by a committee of the organization to the effect that a motorboat engine, delivered from Montreal to Cuba last October, was used to land a large cache of arms on a beach in Venezuela for subversive purpose. If so, has any investigation been made as to why this motor was not set out in a report of the dominion bureau of statistics for 1963?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think I will have to take this question as notice.

[Mr. Harkness.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF LEGISLATION PROPOSED IN ONTARIO AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he will undertake to have officials of his department check the new act affecting the powers of the Ontario police commission which has been introduced in the legislature of that province in order to see whether there is any conflict between it and the bill of rights.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I understand that no act has been passed by the Ontario legislature. A bill appears to have been introduced, the tenor of which I have not had occasion to become conversant with directly as yet.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding that the bill has only received first reading, in view of its very serious nature I wonder whether the Minister of Justice would consider reviewing the bill and, if he feels that it would be in conflict with the bill of rights, making representations to the government of Ontario before it is passed?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it is within my jurisdiction to do so yet, although as a private individual and a member of the bar I have all due right to be immensely interested in the bill as such.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, based on a bill that is already passed, Bill No. 14, to establish the British Columbia hydro and power authority, which was recently passed by the legislature of that province. In view of the fact that this precedent shattering bill denies the employees the right to strike and imposes compulsory arbitration, and in view of other unprecedented powers granted the authority under this act, will the minister give this legislation his closest scrutiny to determine whether there are violations of human and civil rights and fundamental freedoms that provide grounds for its disallowance, so that we will not be on the pathway to the state of 1934 nazi Germany?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the gist of the question as now put is somewhat different from that which was stated in the notice which I am thankful to the hon. gentleman for having given me. Without passing judgment on the accuracy or otherwise of the premises on which the question is predicated, I might say that I shall surely look into the question of whether or not the bill infringes any principle and is liable to be disallowed.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

TRANSFER TO PROVINCES OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR SHARED PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will the minister indicate wheither he is preparing a specific formula which will pave the way for the transfer to provinces so desiring the full financial responsibility for several established shared cost programs of a continuing nature?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this question is on the agenda for the federal-provincial conference on March 31.

Mr. Martineau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have the minister and the government received from the government of the province of Quebec a specific formula, or notice that a specific formula to that end will be proposed at that conference?

Mr. Gordon: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

BROADCASTING

COMMUNITY ANTENNA SYSTEMS—REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I have a question for the Minister of Transport arising out of the report filed yesterday in connection with community antennae. I should like to ask the minister if he could possibly indicate a date when the government will announce clearly its policy in this connection. I ask this because the reaction has been sharp and there are a number of applications piling up in the minister's department, as I think perhaps he is aware.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): It is the intention of the government to give this matter as urgent consideration as possible for the reasons the hon. gentleman has stated, as well as for many other reasons. But in view of the other preoccupations of the government at the moment I think it would be imprudent for me to try to fix a deadline for the results of such consideration. I can assure the hon. member, and all other hon. members who are interested in this question, that the government does intend to deal with it just as rapidly as possible.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED FARE INCREASE ON BORDEN-TORMENTINE FERRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I have a question also for the Minister of Transport.

It is prompted by a disturbing report to the effect that the Canadian National is contemplating increasing the fares on the Borden-Tormentine ferry. Will the minister look into this matter with a view to forestalling such an undesirable, unnecessary and iniquitous event?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I heard that there were such rumours, but I am assured by the Solicitor General that they are without foundation.

CHARGE FOR MOTOR VEHICLES CROSSING GOVERNMENT WHARVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fred T. Armstrong (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the government given consideration to charges on motor vehicles over government wharves?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the government decided this morning that it would be more satisfactory to continue the system which was in effect before recent regulations were made in so far as motor vehicles crossing government wharves for ferries were concerned, and the necessary action is being taken to that end.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS FROM FEDERAL CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the minister received representations from the army, navy and air force veterans of Canada for the province of Alberta, and also the East Coulee branch 173 of the Royal Canadian Legion in regard to the Colonel Belcher hospital in Calgary; and has he changed his decision in this regard?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in respect to the first part of the question, I would have to check before I reply to see what I have. With regard to the second part of the question, we are still talking with these people and we have reached no decision.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Is it the intention of the government, regardless of the feelings of the veterans, to turn over the veterans hospital in Victoria and Shaughnessy hospital in Vancouver to the local hospital authorities?

Mr. Teillet: With regard to Shaughnessy hospital, we have only had an inquiry in general terms from the provincial government, and that is as far as that has gone. There is no decision and no intention of the government to go farther at the moment. In the case of Victoria, again the province has made the same general representations. Jubilee hospital have asked us to co-operate in establishing certain common facilities there, including the Department of National Defence hospital as well. There are talks concerning that aspect of it at the moment.

Mr. Chatterton: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt very much if the questions asked by hon. members are proper at this time. The reason is obvious. If we go into details on all the hospitals across the country we will never get through our day's business. This is an example of the type of question that opens up a series of answers. I do not believe it is a proper type of question at this time, and should be put on the order paper.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): If I may be allowed, I should like to say a word on this point. I realize the difficulty Your Honour has in this connection, and I would be the last to suggest anything that would cause the question period to be extended unnecessarily.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But, sir, this problem of dealing so cavalierly with the veterans hospitals is one which is important.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister would be more definite in his statements these questions would not need to be asked.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the minister received a complaint from the Cape Breton command of the Canadian Legion that beds are not available for treatment of ex-servicemen at Camp Hill hospital, and that too much bed space is being allotted to former mariners and members of the R.C.M.P.?

Mr. Teillet: I did not catch the full implication of that question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Then I shall repeat it. Has the minister received a complaint from the Cape Breton command of the Canadian Legion that beds are not available for treatment of ex-servicemen at Camp Hill hospital, and that too much bed space is being allotted to former mariners and members of the R.C.M.P.?

[Mr. Teillet.]

Mr. Teillet: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I will be glad to inquire and report to my hon. friend.

AGRICULTURE

EASTERN FEED GRAIN—REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): I should like to ask the Minister of Forestry if he agrees with the Minister of Agriculture, who apparently has usurped his authority under the feed grain assistance program, when he stated in Winnipeg yesterday that he is opposed to an eastern feed grain board, even before the report of the agriculture committee which is studying this problem has been submitted.

Hon. Maurice Sauve (Minister of Forestry): I have not seen this report, and I have no comment to make.

Mr. Jorgenson: I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. I ask him if he will try to stop this range war which is going on between these two ministers, and take steps to prevent the rustling of each other's portfolios.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): It is obvious, of course, that there is no justification whatever for the highly imaginative implication in my hon. friend's question.

REPORTED CHANGES IN FARM CREDIT LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to announce sweeping changes in the farm credit legislation with particular reference to interest rates, as announced by the Minister of Agriculture in Regina the day before yesterday and repeated in Winnipeg yesterday?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the house will well appreciate my satisfaction at being asked a question having to do with agriculture. This is a subject that, as the right hon. Leader of the Opposition knows, has always engaged my very active interest and attention. Of course my hon. friend fully appreciates that any announcement of government policy is always made at a time which the government deems appropriate.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman, always being present in his seat, might well be the acting Minister of Agriculture so he would have that authority as spokesman for the department in this house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman is such that—and I know he will agree with me—we are very fortunate in the person who happens to be the Minister of Agriculture in Canada at the present time.

SHIPPING

GREAT LAKES—INQUIRY AS TO OPENING OF SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the several replies from the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with box car distribution, and in view of recent developments within the S.I.U., can the Minister of Transport indicate when the shipping season—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please rephrase his question? He is giving considerable information and making statements.

Mr. Korchinski: Can the Minister of Transport indicate when the shipping season on the great lakes will commence?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): A public statement was made on this matter yesterday and was in all the newspapers, sir.

TRADE

PULPWOOD—REPORTED PROHIBITION OF EXPORTS FROM QUEBEC TO ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Some time ago I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he was in a position to give the house information on the reported executive order to the minister of trade and commerce of the province of Quebec in connection with the export of unprocessed saw logs from that province to Ontario. Is he now in a position to give us the benefit of his inquiry?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I had some informal conversations with the members of the Quebec administration, and the hon. gentleman may have noticed that the minister, Mr. Cliche, made a statement the other day. That matter is entirely within the jurisdiction of Quebec, and I would refer to the hon. gentleman the answer given by Mr. Cliche.

Mr. Lambert: Do you agree with it?

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce concerning the United Nations conference on trade which is opening in Geneva next week. Will the minister take an early opportunity to make a definitive statement to the house on government policy concerning this conference, and on the relationship of this conference to the GATT conference to be held in a month's time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I had intended to respond to the invitation of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, who invited me to take part in the budget debate. At that time I may have something to say on this matter.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

APPROVAL OF OFFICE BUILDING AS NEW BRUNSWICK PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Now that the minister has modified the requirements for centennial grants to the provinces, evidently at Premier Robichaud's insistence, will the minister state if there will be any cultural or confederation aspect whatsoever in the office building at Fredericton, in the New Brunswick proposal?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in the requirements so far as the federal government is concerned.

INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENTS WITH YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): As a supplementary question, dealing with the national centennial agreements signed with the provinces, I asked a question of the Prime Minister several days ago. I wonder whether the Secretary of State could now inform the house whether agreements have been signed with the governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, there have been no agreements signed yet with the two councils. The centennial commission is currently carrying on a series of discussions with the commissioner of the Yukon territory and the commissioner of the Northwest Territories in order to arrive at acceptable terms for an agreement similar in spirit to those signed with the ten provinces, concerning the federal-provincial centennial grants program. The initiative now rests with the commissioners of both territories, the centennial commission having presented to them a proposed formula for centennial grants.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour but possibly in his absence his parliamentary secretary would take it as notice. It has to do with the proposed campaign to circulate application cards throughout Canada for social insurance numbers. Has the minister authorized the distribution of these cards and, if not, under whose authority are they being distributed?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to bring this matter to the attention of the minister.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. What has happened to the Canada development corporation, which was proposed on the order paper last session but to which the minister made no reference in his budget speech? Will it be brought forward later this session?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it will be brought forward at the appropriate time.

NATIONAL PARKS

INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I would like to ask him whether his department has issued any new policy or new directive respecting development in the national parks, and if so, could the house have a copy of it?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Not yet, Mr. Speaker, but we intend to do so. As a matter of fact, during the last couple of days we have had nine superintendents of the western parks at a conference in Calgary at which a great deal of discussion and time was devoted to the question of the management and direction of the parks. We intend to incorporate this in a written document.

[Mr. Lamontagne.]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MATANE-STE. ANNE DES MONTS— CANCELLATION OF PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the numerous representations made following the decision to abandon the project to build a railway in the Gaspe peninsula, does the Acting Prime Minister intend to use his influence and diplomacy to convince the government of the importance of that project for Gaspe's economy.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is obvious.

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Now that the Acting Prime Minister has given a diplomatic answer, he might come back to the political level and tell us if his reply can be taken to mean that he will use his influence to have that project carried out?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to discuss that matter with the hon. member whenever he has time to do so. But I feel this is not the right time.

[Text]

REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT IN POSITION OF RETIRED EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport and ask him if he is yet in a position to answer the question I put to him three weeks ago yesterday, on February 27, having to do with the position of former employees of the Canadian National Railway who are already retired. The minister said he would discuss the matter with Canadian National and make a report to the house. Is he yet in a position to make that report?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): No, sir.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister whether he will treat this matter with the urgency it merits and make a report at an early date?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will certainly do that.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REDNERSVILLE, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO OPENING OF OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. When does he intend to open a post office in the village of Rednersville, Ontario, in accordance with the agreement to do so made by his predecessor last November?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper?

GRAIN

MANITOBA AND SASKATCHEWAN—REQUEST FOR INCREASED QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, March 12 I directed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and in his absence the Minister of Agriculture took notice of it. I should like to repeat it now. In view of the existing low grain quotas in the western area of Manitoba and the eastern area of Saskatchewan, would the minister ask the Canadian wheat board to pay special attention to those areas immediately upon the opening of spring navigation on the great lakes?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I did so, Mr. Speaker, and the board is giving attention to this problem.

AIRPORTS

CALGARY—DANGER FROM PROPOSED RADIO TOWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Does he intend to consult with national aviation organizations with respect to the hazardous structures intended to be erected by the C.B.C. near Calgary international airport?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no such present intention, but of course I can look into the problem.

LOTTERIES

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question, of which I have given notice, to direct to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that this is Irish sweepstake week end and that thousands of Canadians have used the postal facilities in connection with these illegal tickets, as they have done for 30 years or more, does the minister not think it is time we took a more realistic look at sweepstakes and made the law conform with the public practice rather than trying vainly to make the public conform with the law?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): I appreciate the courtesy of the hon. member in giving me notice of this question, but I am sure that on reflection he will agree that this matter is one of government policy, and if the government has any change of policy to announce it will do so at the appropriate time.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Cote (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Could he tell the house what position the federal government would adopt if a province were to organize a provincial lottery before the amendment to the Criminal Code?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of dodging the question, but it is hypothetical at this time.

[Text]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

"HANSARD" DESIGNATION OF LANGUAGE SPOKEN BY MEMBERS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I may say it has to do with a matter which I have discussed with the editor of Hansard, who shares my concern. I raise it now in the hope that other hon. members may have suggestions to make to meet the problem.

Since the English edition of Hansard was revised so that it appears entirely in English, it has become necessary to indicate whether a member's words are recorded in the language in which he spoke or whether they are a translation. As hon. members know, there appear in Hansard repeatedly the words "translation" and "text". Yesterday, for example, you, sir, intervened at a certain point in our proceedings which were being conducted in French. Since you spoke at that point in English, the word "text" appears just over your words as reported. We know what this means, but it almost looks as though you were handed a text of what to say.

In my own case, I have on occasion made a speech—and I believe hon. members know that I do not use a manuscript; frequently I do not even use any notes—following an hon. member who has spoken in French, and on such an occasion the word "text" appears over the report of what I have said. I suggest that this gives rise to a false impression; it is something we should make an effort to have corrected. I know the editor of Hansard is concerned about it, and I hope somebody may come up with a suggestion as to how the possibility of misunderstanding might be removed.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Thursday, March 19, consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means and the amendment thereto of Mr. Nowlan, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, in the first part of my remarks yesterday, I mentioned the financial position of this country, of its boards, corporations and intermediate bodies, and I stressed their rather disastrous position, because of the huge size of the federal, provincial, municipal, industrial, individual and school board debts.

Mr. Speaker, I also mentioned that the federal government had ceased to be an administrative or legislative body to become a loan institution: loans to municipalities, farmers, students, business, Indians, immigrants, veterans, and so on.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to dwell a little on loans to students, simply to congratulate those most concerned in the matter, that is the students themselves, who have the greatest need of those loans, but having realized that this government bill was a direct impingement on the educational field, which comes under provincial jurisdiction, they had the courage to oppose and refuse those federal loans. I shall quote the words of Mr. Robert Bazinet, vice president of the general student association of the University of Montreal, who, speaking on behalf of that association, said:

> If Ottawa offers loans to students (although this field is reserved to the provinces) it means they are not short of funds.

That is the paradox nowadays; the federal government is prepared to offer money to students, a matter not within its jurisdiction, but is neglectful of its responsibilities in various other matters.

Mr. Speaker, what is the present economic situation in this country?

It is realized that our industries, our manufacturing plants, our natural resources are in the hands of foreign financial interests in a proportion of 70 to 75 per cent while, on the other hand, Canadian citizens are merely employees, in view of foreign control of our industries and natural resources. That is the situation in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, foreign interests control our natural resources and our industries, while Canadians are merely wage earners.

What is the economic situation in this country?

We have an increasing number of bankruptcies. With the spreading of automation, there is little job security. Faced with such a situation, our governments do nothing to provide new jobs.

What is the real situation in this country, Mr. Speaker?

We just found out that our farmers, at least eastern farmers, have an average annual income of $1,800. But for tens of thousands of farmers, that average annual income barely comes to $1,200.

We are talking about unemployment, Mr. Speaker, but figures in this regard have been distorted. Only people not receiving unemployment insurance benefits are now included in the figure, although there are as many if not more Canadian citizens who are not taking advantage of such benefits and have to be satisfied with social assistance benefits. Therefore, figures supplied by the Department of Finance are basically false since the actual data should include those receiving unemployment insurance benefits or social assistance benefits, for the latter too are unemployed.

Such is the true situation in Canada; there are more unemployed than reported, because relevant figures are concealed.

A professor from the University of Montreal, Mr. Andre Patry, stated recently:

> Foreign investments in Canada are now close to $25 billion and 80 per cent of them are American. They represent 60 per cent of the national income in our country;

Sixty per cent of our national income is controlled by foreign interests.

And Professor Patry added:

> In the United States, foreign investments have never exceeded 15 per cent of the national income.

Here is another quotation, Mr. Speaker:

> Professor Hans Selye, directer of the institute of experimental medicine at the University of Montreal has just stated: "Fifty per cent of my students who have obtained their doctor's degree at the University of Montreal are now working abroad".

Fifty per cent of the students who have obtained their doctor's degree in experimental medicine from the University of Montreal are working abroad.

The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Tremblay) told us the other day that unemployment in Canada is due to a shortage of skilled labour.

As a matter of fact, our skilled labour, especially skilled workmen who engaged in research and obtained university degrees, are unable to make a living in Canada; that is why half of them go and seek jobs in other countries.

The latest brief of the Canadian federation of labour unions reads as follows:

Industrial research takes place in the United States. Such a procedure deprives us of our own technology and drains our country of its scientists for the benefit of the United States.

Such is the economic situation in our country. Canada is unable to provide jobs for its scientists who have to seek employment elsewhere and, as a result, our scientists are unemployed in Canada.

Yesterday, I had the opportunity to outline a particular situation in the house, namely the national debt, as well as the fact that Canada is getting everybody into debt.

That outline seemed to rouse somewhat the imagination of members of the house, since they asked us to suggest a solution to those problems.

This solution can be found through an adjustment of our Canadian monetary system. At present in that field the situation is such, that at all levels, the government as well as individuals are still at the mercy of the credit controllers of our country.

Those who control money and credit in our country govern its expansion, as well as the governments, the industries and the people. Such a situation still prevails at this time.

That is why in Canada, government and individuals alike are crawling in the front of credit controllers so that they might carry out their operations.

I mentioned yesterday that the debt in our country is higher than the money resources or money supply in circulation. Why? Because the credit controllers want to keep the government in bondage, and the whole country under their thumb in order to control them better and make them act according to their own sweet will.

I am asking the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) what would happen if tomorrow the federal government creditors were to ask him to pay off his debts? The Minister of Finance would not be able, even by scraping all the money in the country, to find enough to pay them off.

Therefore, he would have to sell the properties of all the citizens of Canada to be able to pay the debt of the federal government. In the circumstances, where is the security of our industries, our businesses and our people?

I see that one of our hon. friends opposite is yapping. I ask him what he would do if the Minister of Finance told him to sell his own property to pay the debts of the country or the government? He would be the first to protest strongly—

An hon. Member: He would stop being a Liberal then.

Mr. Gregoire: And he is only one man. But the situation is the same for each and every Canadian citizen.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gregoire: There is someone who does not seem to know much because he never rises from his seat—

An hon. Member: Some unknown member.

Mr. Gregoire: —I cannot even mention his riding, Mr. Speaker, because I do not know it. He never rises; we have never heard him say a word.

Mr. Fisher: Shame, shame.

Mr. Gregoire: Here is the solution. Let us take away from some individuals the control of our country's credit and give it back to a sovereign state which will have full use of its money through the Bank of Canada. At the present time, the chartered banks control the country and have only one aim, to make profits out of the government and the public accounts by creating money to lend it later to the government and the public bodies. Those people also make profits and become wealthy on our taxes and contributions. That is the first disgraceful thing which it is imperative to denounce and which has to be tackled in the first place.

We are, and always will be, a colony from an economic point of view, as long as we have no sovereign government actually controlling credit in this country.

Once the government controls its own credit, the whole country, industry and every individual will benefit because by exerting such control, the government will not only seek profits, but also develop this country and ensure the well-being of each and every citizen in Canada.

This is the solution to the problem: take over the control of what I would call the most important instrument of development for this country, that is control of money, control of credit, which the government relinquished to a few profiteers who are making money by keeping the people in abject poverty.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words regarding federal-provincial tax relations.

I took note of some figures indicating the chief expenses of the federal and provincial governments, to prove that at this time, the provinces have precedence over the federal government. If anybody asks what are this country's needs at the present, the answer is: education. Now what does the federal government spend for education?

The last relevant figures—for 1963—were published somewhat belatedly as usual, in the Canada Year Book 1963-64. Those statistics show that, in 1960, the federal government appropriated $64,480,000 for education, whereas the provinces and the school boards which come under the municipalities spent $1,513,945,000, that is 26 times as much.

This clearly shows that the provinces did more than their share in that respect. The provinces have larger needs, but they have had more expenditures.

The second main item at this time, among our priority requirements, is national health. What were in 1960, the federal government expenditures for national health? They amounted to $267,222,000 while the provinces and municipalities had total expenditures of $574,128,000, that is twice as much.

And for transportation, the federal government spent $104,964,000, while provinces and municipalities spent $1,070 million, that is ten times as much.

As far as the protection of individuals and properties is concerned, the federal government spent $79,185,000 while the provinces spent $308,429,000, that is five times more.

Well, Mr. Speaker, for those four items, the most important ones in the social life of this country, the provinces and municipalities spent a total of $3,526,877,000, while the federal government spent $515,843,000, that is seven times less than the provinces.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, if the house is willing to give unanimous consent, I need only three or four minutes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gregoire: As nobody is objecting, Mr. Speaker, I shall carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is well aware that he cannot carry on without unanimous consent of the house.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I heard no objection.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Does the house unanimously consent to the hon. member for Lapointe carrying on his remarks?

Mr. Loiselle: No. He only repeats himself.

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Quebec South): Mr. Speaker, a distinguished member of our press gallery qualified the budget with a simple but very proper word when he said:

In short, it is a...reasonable budget.

This budget is no more interesting than the uneventful life of a happy family. The minister puts the emphasis on youth by encouraging studies. The budget will also help boost the economy in designated areas. But with regard to the financial situation in our country, the budget reflects prosperity and there is nothing mysterious about that. Under the direction of an industrious and alert minister, the only thing Canadians have to do is to work and reap the fruits of their labour.

Mr. Speaker, I know that, traditionally, the budget debate gives hon. members the opportunity to express their views on any point of this important document, which relates to the immediate needs of their own riding.

If I somewhat deviate from normal practice today, it is because for nearly a year now I have had the privilege of serving Canada as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill). That appointment entailed a certain amount of work, but it opened my eyes, as a citizen of Quebec, to the major role played by crown corporations in our province.

In many quarters, criticism has been voiced recently against the activity of the federal government and of its corporations as regards the past, the present and the future of Quebec. However, one merely has to examine the facts with an open mind, objectively and without partisanship, to see that there is a great difference between such allegations and reality.

As parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport, I have been in a position to check the facts. Today, I should like to report my findings to my Quebec colleagues on both sides of the house. I shall speak mostly of the Canadian economy and national unity. If, nowadays, one can state publicly without any supporting evidence that separatism is possible socially, politically and economically, it might be appropriate to remind the people that figures also have a meaning. The budget gives the government's sources of income and it indicates that federal funds are used not only for the administration of the country, but also to carry out the program of the government, whose outstanding objective is national unity.

During the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the majority of speakers have referred to the matter of national unity. It is probably because the centennial of confederation is just around the corner and also because there is in Quebec a general awakening of nationalism resulting in vocal extremist movements where sentiments take precedence over reason.

Moderation when making public statements is the advice I gave to all my constituents at the beginning of 1964. I feel that in this way right-minded Canadians will find a solution to the problems facing national unity.

A couple of weeks ago during a debate over television on the issue of Quebec claims inside or outside confederation, one of the English speaking panelists exclaimed in an outburst of impatience:

Remember 1759.

A good answer would be: Remember 1812, remember Chateauguay, when the stand taken by French Canada made possible, through the constitutional acts which followed, the founding of our great country. For French Canadians, it meant reconciliation and hope.

And this leads us to take stock of the centennial of confederation. As far as relations between French and English Canadians are concerned, there is certainly a resolute movement in Quebec to affirm in the face of Canada and of the world its cultural heritage, its will to share in the economy and its new awareness as a social group. If one attempts to find solutions to the problems which jeopardize our relations, one must take those elements into account.

And there must also be understanding from English Canada which, in this North American continent where the majority of people speak the same language, is not faced with the obligation of creating favourable conditions to ensure its own survival. However, this is no reason why we, French Canadians, should refuse to engage in a dialogue and deceive ourselves to the point of failing to recognize the cultural, economic and social advantages that our federal system has meant to our group.

I should like to restrict myself today to a single example of this principle, namely the economic contribution of the C.N.R. to the provinces of Quebec. All federal crown corporations were originally set up to ensure the well-being of all Canadians and of every province.

Although I intend to limit my remarks to the contribution made by the Canadian National Railways to the province of Quebec, needless to say the Canadian National Railways have also contributed to the development of every other section of the country. This is self-evident. But some people tried so hard to minimize that contribution to the province of Quebec that it may be advisable to try to show the true importance of this contribution to our province. I wish more particularly to point out that the government of Canada has nevertheless done something, and often a great deal for each of the provinces, including Quebec. When listening to some extremists who speak out of turn, we get the impression that Quebec was only a victim in confederation, whereas even if everything is not perfect, there are nevertheless assets which an objective mind cannot and must not ignore.

The Canadian National Railways play an important part in the economy of the province of Quebec.

In 1962, the C.N.R. numbered in the province 21,994 employees, whose salaries and wages represented over $120 million.

These salaries and wages alone represent a strong measure of support for Quebec's economy. Nevertheless, they represent only part of the contribution of the system to the general development.

Besides salaries and wages, the C.N.R. paid out in 1962 $1,443,054 in sickness and social security insurance benefits, in addition to $595,079 under the workmen's compensation act, and $5,412,927 to its Quebec retired employees or their dependants.

During 1962 alone, the purchases made by the C.N.R. in the province of Quebec amounted to $89 million.

The Queen Elizabeth hotel alone, which belongs to the C.N.R. and which is operated by Hilton of Canada Ltd., cost $7,125,000 in expenses of all kinds including salaries, new equipment and material.

We must not forget taxes either. In 1962, the C.N.R. paid the province and its municipalities $4,646,680 in sales taxes, land taxes and others.

Since the war, the railway has built more mileage of tracks in Quebec than in all the other provinces combined. That permitted the development of Quebec's natural resources accordingly.

The first project was the 39-mile long branch line which connects Barraute and Beattyville since 1949. Over the last years, the C.N.R. has added 161 miles of tracks between Beattyville and Chibougamau, another 133 miles between Chibougamau and St. Felicien and, more recently, it inaugurated a new line 61 miles long to Mattagami. This is a total of 394 miles costing $46.5 million.

The rolling stock—railway cars and engines— involves, of course, on the part of the railway company, continuous expenditures which have become a heavier burden. Since the end of the war, the C.N.R. initiated a comprehensive program so as to modernize its equipment, including dieselization. Since 1946 the cost involved in this program, as far as the Canadian lines are concerned, amounts to $798,740,103 and almost 44 per cent of this amount, this is $353,083,637 have been paid to Quebec industries.

During that same year, Quebec dockyards built five ships for C.N.R. services. Included in those ships, was the Abegweit ferry operating between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island; it was built in the dockyards of Marine Industries Limited in Sorel. Canadian Vickers Limited built the William Carson operating a shuttle service between Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, and Davie Shipbuilding Limited constructed the Bluenose which now carries passengers and automobiles between Nova Scotia and the state of Maine. Those ships have cost $23.5 million.

The inauguration of the Queen Elizabeth hotel in 1958, the largest in Canada, was one of the greatest achievements of the C.N.R. which has spent $25.7 million to build and equip the hotel, the only one it has built in the past 20 years.

It is the fourth building to be erected on C.N.R. property in the area of Central station, in the heart of Montreal, and the third built by the company in that section.

The first building to be erected was the Central station which is still the most functional of the larger passenger stations in North America and which will become even more important when the C.N.R. has completed the construction of the huge building complex now under way or in the project stage. Built at a cost of $27.5 million, the station was inaugurated in 1943. In 1950, the C.N.R. completed the construction of the international aviation building at a cost of $4 million; it houses the head offices of various aviation companies and international air transport associations. The third was the Terminal Centre building erected by private interests at a cost of $4 million.

The fifth building in that group, the new C.N.R. headquarters which the staff has occupied since May 1961, cost $17.5 million.

The C.N.R. invited private enterprise to share in the development of its remaining real property located south of Lagauchetiere street.

The development of this land has raised such great interest in financial circles that Dorchester street, between Windsor street and Beaver Hall Hill, is destined to become the most dynamic cultural and business section in North America and the most remarkable architectural achievement on this continent.

Knowing perfectly well how important was the site of the Central station and the property around it, the C.N.R. wish to promote its logical development in co-operation with private enterprise. It did so jointly with Webb and Knapp (Canada) Ltd., which drew up a master plan for the whole 23 acres and leased the seven acres located north of Central station, where the said company built the complex called "Place Ville-Marie".

That group includes the largest office building in Canada, multi-level parking, an esplanade, stores, restaurants, theatres. The project cost about $105 million.

The largest electronically-controlled hump yard in the world was inaugurated in Montreal in 1961. It cost the C.N.R. $32 million and helps greatly to speed up and improve the services for shippers and buyers of merchandise in Montreal and elsewhere in Quebec. The C.N.R. spent some $17 million to provide for a detour from Victoria bridge in Montreal, following the building of the St. Lawrence seaway. The main by-pass which at present goes through the town of Lachine cost $5 million. It eliminates a series of level crossings and thus provides an access road on the western side of the hump yard.

The C.N.R.'s industrial development service has played a major role in the establishment of enterprises in Quebec. In 1958, the C.N.R. built a five-mile branch line at Pointe Claire, near Montreal, to add 1,406 acres of land to an industrial district. Sixty nine sites were sold and 35 industries were built up. There are still approximately 923 acres left for the industrial complex which the C.N.R. is putting up, six acres of which will be occupied by a $75 million building that will be known as Place Bonaventure.

In 1959, at Candiac, on the south shore of the St. Lawrence river, opposite Montreal, the company built a spur line so as to permit the development of a 550-acre area suitable for industry. Six large concerns bought 100 acres of land along the railroad and many smaller firms settled there.

The railway company extended an industrial branch line from Leduc boulevard, in Montreal island's eastern section, to serve the B.P. Refinery Canada Limited Company. Later on, the C.N.R. used this branch line to allow the expansion of another industrial area of a thousand acres in Ville d'Anjou. As a result of those projects initiated by the C.N.R., some industries are now provided with private railroad lines.

The C.N.R. advised a great number of Quebec municipalities on the choice of sites suitable for setting up industries and laid out the most suitable railway routes. Petite Riviere, St. Romuald, Sherbrooke, St. Eustache, St. Eustache on the Lake, St. Jerome, Mattagami, Chambly, Valleyfield, Varennes and Vercheres have thus new industrial areas, the size of which varies between 50 and 1,000 acres.

The Varennes-Contrecoeur-Tracy area seems assured of a prosperous industrial future because of the tremendous commercial development initiated by the Canadian National Railways.

The increase in the Canadian National Railways facilities and services is parallel to the Quebec industrial development. For instance, in 1962, the company's industrial development department contributed to the establishment of 55 industries—which became customers—by building 12½ miles of private branch lines and tracks in addition to the new C.N.R. tracks built in Quebec.

The C.N.R. and the C.P.R. have installed and are operating jointly a microwave system which enabled the cities of Sherbrooke, Three Rivers, Quebec, Rimouski, Jonquiere and Carleton to be linked to the C.B.C. French television network. The C.N.R. telecommunications have also set up other facilities to connect through microwaves Saint Arsene and Riviere du Loup, thus enabling the C.B.C. French network (Montreal-Moncton) to extend its services to a new station of the T.V. network established in Riviere du Loup.

The C.N.R. telecommunications have already connected cities such as Montreal, Sherbrooke, Chicoutimi, Granby, Three Rivers, Noranda, Quebec, Thetford Mines and Senneterre to its Telex system. At the end of June 1963, there was in Quebec alone, approximately a thousand subscribers who could obtain instantaneous and printed communication with 9,700 other customers in Canada and in the United States.

The Canadian National Railways have recently set up in Montreal, for the first time in Canada, a new semi-automatic system for rerouting telegrams to speed up their delivery.

In 1962 the C.N.R. telecommunications took a significant step ahead when in co-operation with the C.P.R., the development of a Montreal-Vancouver microwave system was undertaken at a cost of $36 million. The gigantic undertaking provided for the RCA Victor Company of Montreal a $12 million contract for the purchase of electronic material.

In order to provide the national defence department with telecommunication facilities, the C.N.R. invested $5 million for the development of repeater stations in Chibougamau and Miquelon, and for the extension of the C.N.T. building in Senneterre.

I only reviewed the C.N.R.'s major achievements and expenditures. During the same period, hundreds of smaller projects and improvements were carried out in Quebec.

To summarize, these last few years, the C.N.R.'s capital expenditures in the province of Quebec alone came to $568,460,637, while the expenditures of private corporations established on C.N.R. properties came to $677,460,637. As regards the C.N.R.'s operating expenses for the year 1962, and in the province of Quebec alone, the figure is $203,260,740.

As far as the promotion of French Canadians within the C.N.R. is concerned, I refer to the Gordon report already tabled in this house, to add that since that time, the C.N.R. has appointed a new vice president in the person of Mr. Pierre Delagrave, whose leadership and imagination were at the basis of the modernization of the C.N.R. passenger service.

We have there, I believe, somewhat of a reply to those who readily state, without proof, that separatism is possible from an economic point of view. It might be interesting to extend this study to all other federal corporations and government services. Quebec's economy would be tragically affected through the loss of those customers and services, even though the railway service would be maintained, but entirely at the expense of the people of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, figures also speak for themselves and this account of relations between French and English Canadians must be added to the historical, political, social and purely human values given to us by confederation.

[Text]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, as I take advantage of this opportunity to participate in the budget debate and cast my few pearls of wisdom before the crowded treasury benches opposite, I wish I could utter a few words of kindness to the minister. However, try as I might the best I can say of this budget is that it is not one to excite the daring and, despite the fact he waved the ministerial wand lightly over the Scotch whisky, it is hardly a budget to intoxicate the sober.

I am going to deal mainly, Mr. Speaker, with the question of trade and commerce, because it is inextricably bound up with the budget and with fiscal and financial policies. I propose to deal with this question if time permits, and I hope this does not sound like a threat, as it relates to external trade, possibly commonwealth trade and definitely domestic trade and commerce.

I must say that so far as the government's position is concerned it reminds me of something which, if it were genetically possible, would be the result of crossing the proverbial ostrich with the colourful figure from Dickens, Mr. Micawber, and this creature were then to sit on the treasury benches opposite. In so far as this question of trade and commerce is concerned, the government has buried its head deep in the sand, while the winds of change blow over that part of its anatomy exposed to them; and the only words we can hear the government uttering are the immortal words of Mr. Micawber, "I do hope that something is going to turn up."

In so far as the budget relates to trade and commerce, for example, I do realize that the minister has refused to provide for any tax cuts. In doing so he has given what he thinks are proper reasons for this course, and they are recorded on page 976 of Hansard. These may be sufficient in one sense of the word, and I think they probably are. Nevertheless, sir, we cannot escape from the fact that over the next year or so the question of our foreign trade is going to be of the utmost importance. It appears likely, on the eve of this great gathering in Geneva, that there are going to be concessions made. Many nations are committed to this principle, and I do not think there can be any withdrawal from it. However, in so far as the conditions, terms and timing are concerned, these things will depend upon the negotiations, upon the skill of the negotiators and the manner in which the negotiations are conducted.

It seems to me, however, that Canada is singularly unprepared to enter into this negotiating area. If the minister had seen fit to include in his budget selective tax concessions which could have been designated and related to price reductions, this would have strengthened our position tremendously. Eventually during the course of these negotiations, which are going to progress over the next year or so, we are going to receive concessions; we are going to ask for concessions, and I am sure we are going to have to reciprocate. Manufacturers in Canada will, in all likelihood, be unable to reduce prices having in mind the failure to provide these tax cuts. There are certain indications in the budget and in the estimates that the cost of government is rising and is going to continue to rise, and the present administration gives no sign of relief in this field.

The United States has provided for tax cuts, I think in the amount of $11.5 billion for the next short period of time. There is no doubt at all that these concessions will be reflected in lower prices for many of the commodities produced by the United States with which our goods will have to compete. The minister has said that even without tax cuts there is still a comparison between the situation in the United States and the situation here. That is not good enough. We will have to be able to face the competition which we are bound to meet from the lower prices of the American goods which are bound to follow these tax cuts. I think this is a weapon which the minister should have made use of, and I fear we may yet regret and live to rue the day that selective concessions of this kind were not included in the budget.

I now wish to make reference to the position which has been indicated with regard to Japan. On March 11 last, as recorded at page 795 of Hansard for that date, I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

> Is it correct...that the Canadian government has requested Japan to reduce its quotas on a number of commodities exported to Canada as far as 1964 is concerned.

The minister's reply was:

> —negotiations are now proceeding with the Japanese government on the voluntary restraints which have been in effect for some years now. I do not think it would be appropriate for me to add anything to that at the present time.

This is obviously an admission that our government has requested Japan to reduce further the quotas, or voluntary restraints as the minister described them, which now exist. I am sure if this had not been the case the minister would have said so. I have in mind the favourable balance which now exists so far as Canada is concerned. I have just obtained information from the Department of Trade and Commerce that for 1963 total Canadian exports to Japan were in the order of $297 million, while imports from Japan to Canada were only $130 million.

I have heard all the trite arguments as to why we should ask the Japanese to permit us to enlarge our trade with them and at the same time say they must reduce their exports to us. But I think these are all specious arguments and at this particular stage, on the eve of this great international bargaining, we are guilty of a very serious omission if we engage in this dangerous exercise in international trade relations.

Some comment could also be directed to our trade relations with China. In the 1962-63 report of the Canadian wheat board covering that crop year reference is made to our agreement with the People's Republic of China, and on page 13 of the report we find this statement:

> All deferred payments in connection with the above agreement—

That is, the sale of grain.

> —have been honoured on or before the due date. As of July 31, 1963 the balance outstanding was $51,361,329. By September 9, 1963 this entire amount has been prepaid.

In other words our Chinese customers not only made good their payments on due dates but prepaid over $50 million well in advance of the due dates. To me this seems to constitute an irrebuttable argument to those who have said these were not good sales, that we should not proceed with them, and that a mistake had been made. But it is simply not good enough to take this as the status quo. I think those who say our sales to China will be determined only by weather conditions and by the vicissitudes of Chinese agriculture overlook the fact that our proximity to China indicates this will be a continuing trade; but for it to be so, there must be reciprocal steps taken. We must be prepared to encourage a reasonable flow, an increasing flow, of Chinese goods into Canada. This is a suggestion which the Minister of Trade and Commerce should take into consideration, and I would hope when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) returns from his visit to China, that on a non-partisan basis he will not hesitate to make use of the information which has been obtained in that way.

I want to speak very briefly, Mr. Speaker, about the question of commonwealth trade. In doing so I support the position taken by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) who indicated that the government was entitled to be criticized for its failure to do anything about it and for taking a negative attitude. A series of articles has been appearing in the Christian Science Monitor by S. C. Leslie, formerly head of the information service of the British treasury, who has given some study to this subject following the collapse of the British efforts to enter the common market. I am not going to take the time to analyze these, but before I give some of the conclusions Mr. Leslie has arrived at I wish to say that those who either suggest or acquiesce in the view that we should write off the commonwealth of nations forget there are several things in favour of the commonwealth.

First, it is in existence. Second, it has a tradition, an experience and an accumulated knowledge derived from the participation of many nations over a long period of time. Third, it is important in its association which covers countries, peoples, races and religions all over the world, something that we will have to learn to do if we are to get along together. For that reason I think there should be every effort to make the utmost use of the commonwealth of nations now in existence. Having said that, I want to put on the record a few concrete suggestions which Mr. Leslie makes with regard to the economic aspects of the commonwealth. He says:

> On the economic side, the proposals that have been responsibly put forward include (1) an export council with regional subdivisions... (2) a development council to analyse, discuss and coordinate plans for growth; (3) a commonwealth bank... (4) more collaboration in maintaining the central reserves and more co-ordination of balance of payments policies among the members; (5) long term bilateral trading arrangements not involving tariff changes; (6) the adoption and active promulgation of a more ambitious program of financial and technical aid, with specific targets; (7) and finally, and in the long run perhaps the most important of all, the resolute development and extension of the network of educational links, exchanges, and assistance programs, which are part of the very fibre of the partnership: a commonwealth university has been mentioned.

I put those forward as very reasonable, very logical and very attainable objectives.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the time left to me I wish to deal with the question of domestic trade, and I wish to limit my remarks particularly to the problem which has been raised as a result of steps recently taken by the Quebec government in what I think has been improper action, both legally and otherwise, in banning the export of lumber. I shall also refer to the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce today. The question may be asked, why should I bring this subject up? Well, I come from a constituency many thousands of miles away. For that reason I am probably better equipped to do it because it cannot be said I have any interest, either on behalf of myself or my constituents, in this particular aspect of what is a very serious problem.

Then I come from a constituency which has experienced precisely the same problem that I think has motivated the Quebec government to do what it has done. For years, in fact even for generations, in my area we had to sit helplessly by while primary products of agriculture and of the forest, and in addition mineral products, were extracted and taken from our district to other provinces and other countries where the final steps in processing them were completed. As a result we lost much. We lost many of our young people who saw no future in remaining in the north country, and to whom a high school graduation certificate was simply a one way ticket out of the country.

But since 1957—and I hope I am not being overly partisan when I say this—due to the policy instituted by the previous government, this has changed. I think railway history will probably be made in the not too distant future, because I am given to understand that the Great Slave railway is only a short distance from the Northwest Territories, and when it reaches there it will be the first time a railroad has been constructed to connect the Northwest Territories with the rest of Canada.

I have every sympathy for the people who were affected by this order of the Quebec government and with those who hope to benefit by it, but I submit this has to be done in a way which is within the law and within the framework of our constitutional process. There is a great reservoir of understanding and sympathy for the reasonable and legitimate aspirations of the people of Quebec. This exists, I think, all over Canada and I would hate to see it spoiled by what I can only describe as occasional chauvinistic and provocative actions on the part of the government of that province.

With regard to the constitution, I am not one of those who hold that it is sacred and cannot be changed. As one hon. member said earlier, laws are made for people and people are not made to be regulated and adjusted for the convenience of laws. As a matter of fact I have on the order paper a resolution proposing what I believe to be a reasonable way of dealing with and amending the constitution and of putting before the people of this country suggestions along those lines.

But apart from other considerations, the question of trade is vital. Section 121 of the British North America Act provides for the free movement of goods between provinces. This, I submit, is the spinal cord of this confederation. If you sever that you sever everything. When we look across the Atlantic today we see the growth of a great force, economically and ultimately politically, in the common market. Many of us in this country came originally from countries in Europe which were unable to get along together in a commercial, economic or social sense. It would be most ironic if we were to disintegrate at the very time when those countries were beginning to join together. Yet this is what could happen if actions of the kind I have in mind were allowed to go unchecked.

The legislation upon which the action of Quebec is based—I understand this is an act rather than a directive—is to be found in the 1946 statutes of Quebec, chapter 25(8).

> In addition to the other conditions prescribed by this act, the wood cut on the timber limits granted under its authority must be worked in the province and shall not be exported in its rough state without the authorization of the lieutenant governor in council, who may determine the reservations and conditions to which such authorization shall be subject.

Note the words "shall not be exported in its rough state". That is a prohibition of the export of a commodity produced in this particular province. What would happen if other provinces took a similar position? There would be imitation. There would be retaliation. I think of my own province of Alberta. There might be retaliation in the sense that exports from other provinces would be prohibited. Even worse, there might be retaliation in the sense of a prohibition of imports. We have an act known as the trade and industry act under which the provincial government issues licences to manufacturers and retailers in almost all classes of trade. What would happen if as a condition of granting such licences the provincial government were to say "We will grant you a licence to manufacture and sell retail, but only on condition that you do not import from the province of Quebec any lumber, maple syrup or manufactured products of any kind". This would be precisely the same type of regulation, only in reverse.

This particular section, which is section 121 of the British North America Act, has been the subject of some judicial interpretation. The case which arose most lately, and I think the one in which the question was most fully discussed, was the case of Murphy v. C.P.R. in 1958. This, as Your Honour may remember, is the case in which a farmer sought to test the validity of the Canadian Wheat Board Act by attempting to ship some sacks of grain from the province in which he grew it to another province. Mr. Justice Rand, as reported on page 153 of Dominion Law Reports, volume 15 said:

> I take section 121, apart from customs duties, to be aimed against trade regulation which is designed to place fetters upon or raise impediments to or otherwise restrict or limit the free flow of commerce across the dominion—

And again;

> What is forbidden is a trade regulation that in its essence and purpose is related to a provincial boundary.

What clearer demonstration could there be of such a trade regulation than the particular section of the Quebec legislation which I have quoted? It is interesting to note that while this was placed on the statute books of Quebec in 1946, it was not enforced until recently. I think this is probably because the governments of Quebec since 1946 have had grave doubts as to its validity.

I asked the Minister of Justice in this house some time ago a question on this important subject. I asked him if he would consult with his officials and consider the validity of this particular section of the Quebec act. He has not replied. He has not answered my question, and I think that is significant. If I am wrong—and I have been wrong before; I have had many judges tell me I am wrong—I will be glad to hear it. But I think I am entitled to raise this matter. I think there is a strong suggestion in the light of what Mr. Justice Rand has said that this legislation is invalid. What is to prevent other provinces saying "Quebec is able to get away with it, why can't we?" I think the members of the government who have taken the oath as privy councillors have a duty cast upon them to examine this matter with the greatest of care and take the action which they are required to take, despite the fact that it might be a sensitive and delicate task.

May I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I have one more particular reference to make to the subject matter with which I was dealing before one o'clock, namely the problems raised by the Quebec legislation in connection with the export of lumber. This morning my hon. friend the member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for the second time raised this particular question and asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) whether he was now in a position to reply to a question he had asked about it. He obviously is also concerned. The minister, I think rather cavalierly, shrugged it off by saying, "Well, the Quebec minister in question has now issued what is in effect a clarifying statement which says he did not mean what he said the first time". The minister also referred to a news item. I have what I think is the news item to which the Minister of Trade and Commerce referred, and I find in it the following:

The spokesman—

This is the spokesman for the Quebec minister of lands and forests:

—said a statement made by Lucien Cliche, lands and forests minister, means that the department will require a cutter to get an export permit before shipping wood across the boundary to Ontario mills.

This is not any changed position; this is simply a reaffirmation of what I suggest is the offensive, repugnant provision contained in the Quebec legislation. I do not think the Minister of Trade and Commerce directed his attention this morning to this very, very grave issue. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, in dealing with this particular subject matter, I make this suggestion. This is such a serious matter that it should be, if it is not already, on the agenda for the federal-provincial conference. Every effort should be made by this government, in consultation with the Quebec government, to see that this provision is not enforced. I tried to get some figures as to what could possibly be involved, in terms of dollars and cents, in interprovincial freight. I found this was obviously impossible, but I also find that in terms of volume 200 million tons of freight are carried on an interprovincial basis on the railways, on ships and by trucks.

An hon. Member: Per month, or per year?

Mr. Baldwin: This is per year—200 million tons. This is the very lifelood of the existence of this nation. If this small cancer is allowed to continue and to be perpetuated, I suggest that the tentacles of national trade which heretofore have largely persisted in an east and west direction will become disengaged and, seeking some nourishment, will go south of the border. If this should happen, I suggest we would cease to exist as a viable, economic unit.

I suggest therefore to the minister, to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) that they should do everything they can to see that this is not allowed to continue. I am never positive as to my assumptions of the law. As I said before, I have been told by judges often enough that I am not right. But I am sufficiently concerned about this to suggest that at the very least the government should see that this matter is submitted, by terms of reference, to the Supreme Court of Canada and it should not be allowed to continue to the stage where there will be retaliation and imitation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must say that it is with some trepidation that I ventured into this particular area, because I know it is sensitive. Too many people have rushed in where wiser men have feared to tread. But I feel so concerned about it that I thought it my duty to raise the matter in the way I have. Let me possibly make amends by putting on the record a statement made in 1889 by a great Canadian, a former leader of the Liberal party and a former prime minister. These words were uttered by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in Quebec on June 24, 1889. May I apologize for not saying this in French. I can make shift and say words from time to time in French, but in a matter of this kind I do not think the language should be mutilated, as I am sure it would be mutilated if I attempted to say these words in French. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said this:

We are French Canadians, but our country is not confined to the territory overshadowed by the citadel of Quebec; our country is Canada...the fertile lands bordered by the bay of Fundy, the valley of the St. Lawrence, the region of the great lakes, the prairies of the west, the Rocky mountains, the lands washed by the famous ocean where breezes are said to be as sweet as the breezes of the Mediterranean. Our fellow countrymen are not only those in whose veins runs the blood of France. They are all those, whatever their race or whatever their language, whom the fortune of war, the chances of fate, or their own choice have brought among us...As far as I am concerned, I am a Canadian. But I told it elsewhere, and with greater pleasure I repeat here this evening, among all my fellow countrymen, the first place in my heart is for those in whose veins runs the blood of my own veins. Yet I do not hesitate to say that the rights of my fellow countrymen of different origins are as dear to me, as sacred to me, as the rights of my own race, and if it unfortunately happened that they ever were attacked I would defend them with just as much energy and vigour as the rights of my own race.

I say I: should I not say you, we all of us? Yes, we are too much the sons of France, of that generous nation which has so often shed her blood for the defence of the weak, of the oppressed, not to be ever ready to defend the rights of our fellow countrymen of different nationalities to the same extent as our own. What I claim for us is an equal share of the sun, of justice, of liberty; we have that share and have it amply; and what we claim for ourselves we are anxious to grant to others. I do not want French Canadians to domineer over anyone, nor anyone to domineer over them. Equal justice; equal rights...Cannot we believe that in the supreme battle here on the plains of Abraham, when the fate of arms turned against us, cannot we believe that it entered into the designs of Providence that the two races, enemies up to that time, should henceforth live in peace and harmony? Such was the inspiring cause of confederation.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, nothing could show better the lack of real liberalism in this government, this complete lack of concern for the needs of the people of Canada, than this budget which we are discussing at the present time. In less than two years the architect of the new Liberal look, the author of "Troubled Canada", has been reduced to producing one of the dullest, one of the most Tory, one of the most stand pat budgets which any Canadian parliament has had to discuss. Because unemployment is somewhat down, because many Canadians are living well, the minister will have us believe that our problems have been solved. The minister is proud of the fact that he has reduced the budget deficit by one third. By doing so he has ignored the needs of the Canadian people and the promises made by his party during the election campaigns of the last two years.

Let us first look at this affluent Canada. While we have much to be happy about there are still people in Canada who live at a level which is a disgrace. We should all be ashamed of conditions which we have allowed to develop and to continue, and which the minister has ignored completely in his budget speech. In fact the budget speech proposes that we permit the rich to get richer and the poor to get poorer by continuing the present and past tax inequities. He has thrown us the bone that, as soon as the royal commission makes its report, he will get down to looking at the situation; but I want to say that I have not much confidence in this minister or this government doing anything to rectify the inequities we have talked about so often in the past.

In 1961, the last year for which we have figures, 30 per cent of Canada's labour force earned so little money that they paid no income tax. Fifty five per cent of the taxpayers earned less than $4,000 per year; 34 per cent of the taxpayers earned less than $3,000 a year and 14 per cent of those who paid taxes earned less than $2,000 per year. The top 25 per cent of taxpayers received almost 45 per cent of the total after tax income, while the bottom 25 per cent of taxpayers received less than 12 per cent of total after tax income. Despite these glaring and disgraceful discrepancies the minister proposes merely to continue to widen the tax exemptions and loopholes which have contributed to the inequities I have cited.

It is easy to get lost in statistics and figures, and because of this I should like to read a small section from an official report prepared for the Manitoba government, which I think has been received by all the members of this parliament. It shows graphically how badly some of the people in Canada are living. I refer to the original inhabitants of this country, the Indians of Manitoba. In this report, which is entitled "Manitoba, 1962 to 1975", and is a report of the committee on Manitoba's economic future, there is a section entitled "Role of native people in the north in industrial development". In part XI, section 3, pages 1 and 2, the following statements appear:

The native people of Canada in regions ranging from northern British Columbia to northern Quebec have not been integrated effectively into the social and economic fabric of the nation...

The economic position and future status of native people in Manitoba presents three outstanding areas of concern. The level of social and economic integration of the group is very low and shows little improvement after almost 100 years of special administration. The levels of living and per capita earned income are little more than one tenth of those of the rest of the province...

The low level of social and economic integration tends to prevent any increase in per capita earned incomes. Low incomes and levels of living and increasing reliance on welfare tend to retard, or to prevent, improvement in social and economic integration.

I should just like the house and the minister to listen to these specific figures.

In 1961 per capita earned income of the group approximates only $155 per year, and without extensive rehabilitation and development measures, this low level of income can be expected to remain constant or even to decline during the next decade. Earned income is supplemented by family allowances, old age pensions, and various welfare payments from federal and provincial sources, which total slightly more than $100 per capita at present...

In the light of that kind of situation, Mr. Speaker, we have the self-satisfied speeches made by the minister and other members of the government. We talk movingly and feelingly about the plight of the people in underdeveloped countries of Asia, Africa and South America. I believe we could do much more to help them lift up their standards of living, but surely we should be moving quickly and resolutely toward righting conditions here at home; and of this there is nothing at all for this in the budget presented by the minister.

I should like to contrast the minister's approach to the approval of the President of the United States. The United States is the richest, most affluent country in the world but, unlike the Minister of Finance, President Johnson has recognized that there are still large scale pockets of poverty in that country. At least 30 million Americans are poor. They lack the money, the education and the background to enable them to pull themselves up by their bootstraps. The President has declared a national war on poverty. He has called for a program which would cost $1 billion a year—organized and financed by the federal government—but administered through the state and municipal governments.

If this is necessary in the United States, how much more is it required in Canada? The President proposes that 100,000 young people be put to work in a national job corps on conservation and other projects, while also receiving education and training. There will be an organization called "Volunteers for America" which will supply helpers to work among Indians and migratory workers. Could we use such an organization in this country? Of course we could. Is one proposed by this government? Of course it is not. The President proposes to provide money to support families while mothers and fathers are training or retraining for jobs. There will be a work study program to provide part-time jobs for high school and college students.

We have made a beginning on this sort of program, but according to reports I have seen in Toronto newspapers a large percentage of the people who start on this kind of program in Canada stop before they are finished, because they cannot afford to stay away from any kind of job which would give them an income to keep their families while they are taking this job retraining.

The program which the President of the United States has proposed goes far beyond the now accepted idea in the United States or Canada that the needy are entitled to welfare to maintain them at a decent standard, or at least at a standard sufficiently high so that they will not starve. The program proposed in the United States will break the chain of relief and welfare which we have had in the past. It will provide the poor with new skills, new hope and a new environment. With such a program we could hope for an end to the poverty and degradation of so many of our people, but there is no evidence of that kind of approach on the part of the government, certainly not in the budget.

I should like to deal with what I consider to be the most important defect of the budget, its almost complete failure to meet the educational and research needs of this country at a time when it is becoming obvious to the most dense that no country can progess in this age without a tremendously expanded effort in this field. Harold Wilson, leader of the labour party, has estimated that 97 per cent of all the scientists who have ever lived in the world are alive and working today. Yet in the past three years in Canada we have paid so little attention to the needs and desires of our most qualified and best trained people that over 120 professors and instructors in fields such as physics, biology, geology and chemistry left for the United States. In the same three years we permitted over 1,000 engineers to go to the United States, and we permitted over 1,000 physicians to leave for the United States.

I am not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that we should do anything to force these people to stay here but I do suggest that we ask ourselves why they went because the people who left were the youngest, the best, the most aggressive people that this country has produced. In a letter which I had recently from Dr. Hans Selye, world famous medical researcher at the University of Montreal, he told me that half of the people who qualify for their Ph.D. at his institute leave for the United States almost as soon as they finish. Why? Not because of salaries alone, but because of the research facilities, equipment and grants for research. Even the proposed increases in the estimates for this year are pitiful when compared with what is required.

I suggest that we look at what the situation is as set forth very clearly not by wild, idealistic, impractical people, which some in this house consider the members of this group to be, but rather as set forth in concrete proposals by authorized and most highly respected spokesmen for the universities and the research institutes of this country. In a brief to the Minister of Finance in December of 1963 the Canadian universities foundation made the following points:

> —we suggested that the government of Canada establish a fund of $300 million for matching capital grants to universities and colleges. We wish to confirm the need and state that the urgency has now been compounded. We therefore urge that the operation of the fund be made retroactive to include projects undertaken after June 30, 1963.

And further:

> We urge that the payment of university grants in 1964-65 the rate per capita of the population of the provinces be raised to $2.60, not by way of introducing any new principle but simply to keep this program from falling behind—amounting to at least $2 million per annum in order that it may provide sharply increased support for its program in the humanities and social sciences, including research collections in college and university libraries.
>
> We reiterate our proposal that the Canada Council be assured of additional expendable funds

I ask, is there any sign in the budget or in the estimates that these carefully thought out and minimal requests have even been considered by the minister? The United States has almost 4,500,000 people in universities and institutions of higher education. A country like the Philippines, with a population of 23 million, had over 350,000 college students in 1960. A poor country like Puerto Rico, with two million people, had over 30,000 university students in 1960. Canada, with a population of 19 million and one of the highest standards of living, lags so far behind these countries that it is pathetic.

The Canada Council presented a brief to the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) on March 3, 1964. It pointed out that it has to provide support for all of the arts, humanities and social sciences and to finance the management of the university capital grant fund. What did the Canada Council tell the government in its brief? I should like to quote a couple of short sections from the brief:

The council is not now meeting the need, and will be increasingly unable to do so, unless its income can be sharply increased. We are consistently and repeatedly informed by our judges that out of the present number of applicants in most of our categories of scholarships we could justifiably select twice as many for awards as we are now able to do. If we were to undertake to meet the existing demands, an additional income of well over $500,000 a year would be needed. This is quite apart from the expected growth of the next few years.

And they say further:

In the 1962-63 report of the national research council the following figures are given: for scholarships, fellowships and associateships tenable in the universities, $1,980,000; and for grants in aid of research, $8,600,000, a total in round figures of $10,580,000. Over against this figure, the Canada Council can place not more than $1,200,000. We repeat that in the council's view this discrepancy is far greater than is justified by the needs of the country.

The council believes that the most practical way in which the government can give needed help is by making reasonable appropriations over a period of years. We therefore request the government to add during the present year a sum of $10 million to the endowment fund. We also request the government to consider the addition annually of $10 million for a further period of two years. When the endowment fund has been enlarged by $30 million, say in 1966, the developments of the three year period could be assessed, and whatever additional resources then demonstrated to be necessary could be agreed upon.

Was any real consideration given to these suggestions of the Canada Council? If there was you cannot find it in the budget or the estimates. The Ontario council of university faculty associations in a brief recently to Premier Robarts has pointed out that university enrolment in that province will almost triple by 1971, and that the teaching staff will have to be quadrupled by 1971. They point out that Ontario universities have done their least impressive work in the fields of research, scholarships and graduate studies. A recent study of the larger Canadian university libraries showed there is not even one library which can be called first class in all of Ontario. If these are the facts in wealthy Ontario, how much worse is the situation in the rest of Canada?

What about scientific research, Mr. Speaker? Here the picture is little better. On December 5, 1963, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) received a letter from some of the most eminent medical research experts in Canada. I want to quote a couple of paragraphs from their submission. They say:

It has been clearly evident during the last decade that the support which is available for medical and biological research in Canada in the universities falls far short of that necessary to maintain the highest standards of scientific accomplishment.

And further:

—many of the most gifted young investigators, unable to find the means to carry out their research in Canada, have to find their opportunities for work elsewhere, mainly in the United States. This loss is not only felt in the organization of existing research groups but also in the education of future scientists, who are deprived of the contact with many of the best creative minds of Canada. It can be foreseen that the continuous process of depletion of the nation's talented personnel will have an adverse effect on the quality of research training and of teaching provided in the coming years when an expansion of the size of universities will be necessitated by the increased influx of students.

Have these serious questions been met by the government? In a speech made in Toronto, and reported in the Toronto Star of February 2, 1964, Dr. Hans Selye said that unless the Canadian government steps in with financial support, teams of researchers may be broken up and lost to Canada. He said it is possible that he might have to release as many as 40 of his 120 workers at the internationally famous institute of experimental medicine and surgery at Montreal. Dr. Stanley Hartroft, of the Toronto hospital for sick children, in the same story said the proposed increases for medical research are grossly inadequate and represent no actual increase to take up the projects dropped by the United States agencies.

In the new and vitally important field of nuclear medicine, there is also a vacuum. Senator Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota told the United States senate in 1960, that in the field of radiation research in life sciences, Canada was spending $1.25 million while the United States spent $63.5 million; only 71 persons were employed in this field in Canada, while over 6,300 were employed in the United States; there were 82 projects being studied in Canada while over 2,000 were being studied in the United States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you compare the two countries, after adjusting for population you see that Canada is spending five times less money than the United States, is using nine times less the number of persons in this field and is working on two and a half times less projects. Can these scientists believe we really want them or need them in Canada? I am surprised, Mr. Speaker, that more of them have not left Canada than actually have left.

The Canadian association of physicists has for almost ten years been urging on Canadian governments, both Liberal and Conservative, the need for a program in the field of high energy physics to keep Canada abreast of the current work in this field. They prepared a report in July, 1963, which showed the trend in this field in other countries. This is a field which is basic to the development of modern physics. They urged the absolute necessity for the construction of a high energy particle accelerator if Canada is to offer to Canadian physicists the opportunity to do modern, challenging research.

There has been no response at all, at least no favourable response from this government. In their report, they point out that France, Britain and the United States are spending in this field from 30 cents to 60 cents per person per year. Countries such as Belgium, West Germany, Italy, Norway and Sweden are spending from 10 cents to 30 cents per person per year. Austria, Denmark and Holland are spending from 3 cents to 10 cents per person per year. Poor countries like Greece and Spain are spending from 1 cent to 3 cents per person per year. Wealthy, happy, stodgy, careless Canada is spending only one half cent per person per year. Is it any wonder that Canadian physicists leave? The wonder is that they have not gone faster.

If you look at the budget with that microscope which the lead speaker for the official opposition referred to the other night, you will find virtually nothing for these people in this budget or in the estimates which have been tabled. I think I have demonstrated conclusively that the bright, eager and hopeful approach apparently adopted by the Liberal party when in opposition has already been replaced by the stodgy, do-nothing, don't rock the boat approach so typical of the Liberals when they were in office. We would urge the government to remember its pledges to the Canadian people, to forget this budget and to move quickly to meet the real needs of the Canadian people which they have for so long been ignoring, and which would make this a better, finer country for all the people.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I should like to draw your attention to standing order 5 which reads as follows:

> Every member is bound to attend the service of the house, unless leave of absence has been given him by the house.

Since I must visit my riding in order to perform official duties, I am asking the house, under standing order 5, to grant me leave of absence and allow me to leave at 4.15 this afternoon, because the last train or plane—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member that there is no reason for raising a point of order in this case.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I am raising a point of order under standing order 5. As I heard some hon. members say "No"—

Some hon. Members: Never.

Mr. Gregoire: —I wonder whether this requires the unanimous consent of the house or a majority vote. If it calls for a majority vote, I am prepared to ask for it because I would like the house to grant me leave, this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Permission from the house is not granted by making a point of order out of that question.

Mr. Gregoire: I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Halifax.

[Text]

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that I express the sentiments of many hon. members in this house at the moment when I say that they certainly have no objection to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) leaving, particularly in view of the fact that he used much of the time of the house this week and contributed nothing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I ask the hon. member to address himself to the question now before the house?

Mr. Regan: I was greatly surprised to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) because they were a harsh indictment of the budget. He has stated that this budget contained nothing new and that it was a very disappointing budget from his point of view. I could not disagree with him more. After a series of huge deficits in this country since 1956, a budget which chops one third off the deficit and moves us toward a balanced budget, I consider to be a very significant achievement. A budget which provides family allowance increases for those of 16 and 17, about which I will say more in a moment—

An hon. Member: Will you be here next March?

Mr. Regan: We certainly will. A budget which is presented at a time when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) is able to report that unemployment throughout the country has decreased substantially, at a time when prosperity and economic activities throughout the country are increasing significantly, a budget which specifically recognizes the need for education in this nation and provides a system of bank loans to our university students, is certainly a notable achievement. Mr. Speaker, I suggest this is a very significant budget and one that is in line with the responsibility of this government, and its aim to restore fiscal responsibility in the country.

Mr. Fisher: You and Senator McCutcheon.

Mr. Regan: He is richer. With reference to the extension of the family allowances to cover those of ages 16 and 17, I would point out that this is only one of the undertakings given in the Liberal election platform of last year, and that Liberal promises are being met one by one, to use Curzon's description, with the steady tramp of infantry across the field.

In so doing the pattern falls together, and I would point out that the paramount Liberal promise of them all was to restore fiscal responsibility to the nation, rather than continue with the handout, piecemeal policy of the previous government which inevitably led to record breaking deficits.

I listened carefully to the financial critic of the official opposition, and I hastily subscribe to his position as one of the deans of the opposition. I have referred to him without malice on many occasions as jovial George. Again he disclosed to us his fundamental weakness, which may very well be the source of his fundamental charm, and that is that in his criticisms he does not tell us the desirable policies omitted, nor the undesirable policies that were included.

Of course he chastised the Minister of Finance, as we would expect him to do. To do otherwise would be to make him derelict of his duty, and he has never been derelict of his duty. But listening to his remarks I came to the conclusion that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) must consider this a darned good budget, otherwise as a former minister of finance he would have burned some midnight oil to try to tear it apart, which he obviously did not.

One wonders if he, like the majority of the people of Canada, feels once again Canada is on the road to stable government, something which was demonstrated by the accounting given to us last Monday night by the Minister of Finance.

An hon. Member: How about agriculture?

Mr. Regan: I will come to that. Nova Scotians in general will be pleased with the words of the Minister of Finance in his budget address, that the government of Canada must remain strong and dynamic both in its effective jurisdiction and in finance.

Mr. Fisher: I can hear them shouting now.

Mr. Regan: All I can hear shouting is the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). Those of us from the smaller provinces become very concerned at some of the talk emanating from the provincial governments of Canada's two most populous provinces, to the effect that our constitution should be amended to strip the federal government of much of its taxing power, and hand these additional fields of taxation to the provinces.

Statements of this type, which have frequently been made by fuzzy-thinking empire builders of the Rene Levesque ilk, totally ignore the historical facts of Canada, and the existence within this confederation of provinces such as Nova Scotia, which bear the yoke of geographic disadvantage and the burden of a tariff structure that favours only central Canada. Do these powerful provincialists actually believe that Nova Scotians, Newfoundlanders and others would or could remain in confederation if the central government were stripped of its financial ability to carry out national policies that provide some recompense for the disadvantages I have already mentioned?

One of the things which has bothered me about the confederation dialogue that has been going on for the last two years or so is that it has been exclusively a dialogue between Ontario and Quebec. There are other provinces in Canada, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Regan: I am an elected representative of a province which was one of the original partners in confederation.

Mr. Gregoire: Which province?

Mr. Regan: La belle republique de Nova Scotia.

Mr. Fisher: This sounds like the compact theory.

Mr. Regan: No, I reject the compact theory.

Mr. Fisher: Very good.

Mr. Regan: I would hasten to point out that with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick being partners in the original confederation we must remember that it was not at the time of confederation that Ontario and Quebec, that French and English, first joined together. They were committed to union some 26 years before, in 1841; but the leading citizens of those two states or provinces came to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island during the 1860's, at a time when their own financial difficulties had become so urgent, at a time when they could not get along, and at a time, in the words of Sir Georges Etienne Cartier, when it was felt that the addition of new partners would relieve the strain.

We did not come seeking confederation. We were the reluctant brides.

Mr. Knowles: You do not know the facts of life.

Mr. Regan: It was a case of Ontario and Quebec coming to the maritimes to seek us as partners in confederation. We were needed in confederation.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Regan: Well, I think I speak for most Nova Scotians when I say we support the legitimate aspirations of the people of Quebec to improve their economic position in Canada and to preserve their culture and their language.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Regan: But we do become perturbed when some people from that province use this legitimate aim as a guise for obtaining unfair commercial advantage. I think you must remember that it is an integral part of confederation, if provinces at the geographical limits of the nation are to be a part of this nation and bear the tariff burdens that only help the central part of Canada, then if we are to suffer the disadvantages of our geographical position the federal government must be in a financial position to carry out equalization grants and other policies that keep us as an integral part of the country.

Before leaving this particular subject, Mr. Speaker, let me say that a perusal of the pre-confederation debates among the four original partners shows that there were guarantees given to the maritime provinces, for instance, on the question of winter navigation, and there is as much evidence that these guarantees were given to the maritime provinces as there is evidence that the French language had guarantees beyond the use of it in parliament and in the courts.

I am quite happy to say that, though the expressed words in the British North America Act do not go beyond that, it was the intention that the guarantees to the French language would go far beyond those words, and the contemporaneous utterances of a public statesman of the time showed also guarantees on winter navigation to Halifax and Saint John that were just as great as the guarantees to the French language.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I may move on I might say—

Mr. Knowles: With unanimous consent.

Mr. Regan: Unlike the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) I have not asked permission to leave, so I must continue my speech.

I am glad to see that the Minister of Finance recognizes the regional nature of unemployment as it exists today, and I noted from his remarks when presenting the budget that he thought that by far the highest unemployment exists in the Atlantic provinces. It is in the Atlantic region that unemployment continues to be a very severe problem and, unlike the previous administration, I do not think anyone on this side of the house has suggested that unemployment is not yet a problem. It has become a major regional problem and this government is determined that, even if the position has been improved in the Atlantic region during the past year, the improvement must continue until the problem is licked.

I would remark in passing that the Atlantic development board has moved during the past few months to expend usefully some of the $100 million which it has been given by this administration, and I think specific projects undertaken by that board will certainly result in great advantage. But the problem in the maritimes remains, as always, one of transportation. Until we have a realistic railroad policy based on the principle that the outlying areas of Canada should not be at a disadvantage, we cannot have real prosperity in that area.

The subamendment which was moved on behalf of the New Democratic party deplored the failure of the government to reduce defence expenditures. This approach is characteristic of the unrealistic, ivory tower attitude taken by that group toward the problems of defence and disarmament. It is well known that the most energetic and able minister of defence this house has seen in many years has already undertaken an extensive program of pruning the dead wood from defence expenditures with a consequential substantial saving in expenditures. The government has had drastically to revise the allocation of our defence expenditures because of failure to up-date plans in the years when this country was under the prime ministership of "the great procrastinator".

Apparently the subamendment expresses regret that defence expenditures have not been cut to a still greater degree. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron), for whom I have the greatest respect, did not say one word in his remarks to indicate which specific defence expenditures should, in his opinion, be reduced, or precisely what aspect of the security of our nation should be neglected. I noticed also that his colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), speaking a few minutes ago did not even mention the subject of the subamendment. So he could not have been too much impressed by it. If an amendment of the type proposed by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands were to be introduced then, surely, it was the duty of members of his group to specify precisely where the suggested reductions should occur. At this very time, the participation of our nation in the peace keeping force in Cyprus is resulting in considerable unforeseen defence expenditure. But the hon. member who moved the subamendment appeared to praise our participation in the Cyprus affair and we must, therefore conclude that it is not in this area that he would economize.

I suggest we all remember that there are still abroad in this world strong forces which are hostile to the aims and aspirations of freedom loving democracies. What is more, these forces are working and watching for every opportunity to find the free nations with their guard lowered. Every hon. member of this house favours disarmament—but not unilateral disarmament, and not disarmament without safeguards as long as a threat to our security exists. Our nation must not shirk its responsibility to contribute, in accordance with its size and wealth, to the defence of the free world. If savings are to be made, subject to the provisos I have mentioned, then surely the minister, with the help of his advisers, is the person best able to determine where economies can safely be effected. The hon. gentleman's policies in the past few months have surely shown that he wishes to carry out whatever economies are possible, consistent with our obligations. Sometimes such economies are painful, but they are necessary. So, if members of the New Democratic party wish to see economies effected, let them tell us exactly what they would remove from our armed forces. As for me, I am confident that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) will, in his white paper, outline a program for the future which will provide that our men in the armed services have in their hands at all times the best weapons and equipment which can be procured—all the material which is necessary to meet the modern scientific weapons possessed by any potential aggressor.

If I may say a further word on the subject of defence expenditures, I should like to deal with the question of pay for members of the armed forces. Shortly after coming to office last spring, the present government announced a pay increase for members of the armed services. While this increase was adequate to meet the needs of those serving in higher ranks, it provided only a very slim increase for the ordinary soldier, sailor and airman. My own experience in industrial relations has shown that the proper spread between the wages of higher and lower classifications can only be retained by alternating percentage and straight across the board increases, and I would urge the Minister of National Defence that when the remuneration of members of the armed forces is again reviewed particular attention be paid to the needs of the lower ranks, so that a high morale can be retained in our defence forces.

This is of the essence if our voluntary system is to continue to prove a success. I submit that in the post-war years this system has worked out much better than the draft system enforced in the United States. As a matter of fact there is every indication that the Americans are dissatisfied with their system at the present time, and that they are looking with some envy at ours. And the Canadian system will only continue to work as long as service in the armed forces provides an attractive career for our young men.

I should like now to say a word with regard to education, a subject on which I have already touched once or twice in passing. As I have mentioned, the measures to extend family allowances and provide for guaranteed loans for students are obviously part of a move to encourage students to continue their education at a time when the level of education is of great importance. In passing, let me say I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North as to the undesirability of so many people trained in Canada leaving to take up employment in the United States. I think steps should be taken in an effort to change this situation, if possible. However, if the policy of making loans to students is as successful as I think it will be, then it will aggravate another pressing problem, namely the need of various universities in Canada for additional physical facilities to enable them to accommodate all the students who are likely to seek enrolment. This is a need which will arise in an acute form in the future, and I submit that a great deal will have to be done in this field. I might say that the province of Nova Scotia has always received an extremely raw deal in the matter of university capital grants made through the Canada Council. This is because the grants are made on the basis of the population of the various provinces; it has not been recognized that students come to our universities in Nova Scotia from all over the Atlantic provinces, and indeed from much of Upper Canada. The origin of the student population of our provincial universities must be recognized and considered as a factor in future, when direct grants are made.

Speaking of subsidies, we in Nova Scotia are subsidizing the business and professional life of Upper Canada by educating so many of its citizens in various professions and skills. It is true that of those who are educated in Nova Scotia, relatively few remain in the province because of the economic disadvantages we have suffered under confederation. I mention this in passing because I hope that in future attention will be given to the needs of the universities in Nova Scotia in particular.

I should like to say a word, too, on the subject of vocational assistance. The predecessors of this government were active in the field of educational and vocational assistance many years ago. I think that at the present time the change in the character of the skills and education needed in our citizens is such that a great deal of attention should be paid to this question of vocational assistance. I realize that this is largely a provincial field. Nevertheless I think I should be permitted to point out that in many instances the vocational and technical institutions of this nation are preparing our young men and women with training in relatively unimportant skills; they have still, I feel, to produce the skills which are needed in today's world, as is being done through similar programs in other nations.

I would give an example in my area, Mr. Speaker, the Halifax area. There we have a very fine electronics industry at E.M.I.-Cossor Electronics Limited. This plant finds they are unable to obtain in the Halifax area or in Nova Scotia, persons trained in electronics skills and they have to go again and again to England to find employees when they need them, and bring them over to Canada. We are extremely pleased to have these fine, new citizens in our area; but at the same time we think it unfortunate that there is not an expanded vocational training course in the area to cover these types of skills.

Mr. Speaker, all in all I think the word that would best describe the budget presented by the hon. Minister of Finance this week is that it is a sane budget; a budget that recognized the problems which face Canada; a budget which came less than a year after this government came into office but yet enabled the minister to come forth with a program that will result in the deficit of the previous year being decreased by one third, and which presented important, new programs to the people of Canada and got Canada squarely back on the road to stability and prosperity.

[Translation]

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, when, following the election of April 8, 1963, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was called upon to choose his cabinet, nobody was surprised to see the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) given that post because for almost two years his accession had been prepared. It was even said that he was the power behind the throne in economic matters within the Liberal party.

His first budget was awaited with anxiety and suspicion. Everyone recalls the evening of June 13, 1963, when the Minister of Finance, helped by a team of experts, went before the Canadian people to bring down his first budget. That evening, we were given a new economic theory which I shall call "Gordonism".

By putting this economic theory into practice, the Minister of Finance expected to balance his budget. As can be seen on page 999 of Hansard, this is what the minister said that evening.

> But if this is to be justified and maintained it is important that we begin to put our national house in order: that we begin to move toward balancing our federal budget under conditions of high employment. We must take the first step in this direction now.

That is fine in theory, but the minister's statement is indicative of the qualified accountant who used his talents in the interests of his people but who, unfortunately, does not know much about practical administration.

Indeed, he was somewhat proud and arrogant when, on the night of June 13, he explained his theory to the house. However, what was excellent in theory was disastrous in actual practice, and the people of Canada were drugged into accepting new taxes.

However, the new drug proved to be a bit too strong for our country's economy.

Then, just as in the case of a seriously ill patient other experts' services were requested. Thus, we know that the Montreal stock exchange's president, Mr. Kierans, as well as other businessmen and brokers from Montreal met with the Minister of Finance. The minister was finally persuaded that the remedy he had advocated was too strong and that the dose had to be reduced. So we witnessed the reduction of the 11 per cent tax to 4 per cent; the second dose will be administered on the 1st of April next and the third, on January 1, 1965.

Even the minister was affected by that economic germ and for a while, we had fears for his political future. There were all kinds of rumours to the effect that he was falling out of the frying pan into the fire, that he should retire to other places, but the fact is that he remained in office.

This year, we saw the Minister of Finance come before the house without any experts to introduce exactly what? To introduce an empty and worthless budget. The minister is now affected by lazarism, which means he offered the Canadian people the crumbs of Lazarus referred to in the Gospel, and the remarks made by financial interests concerning the minister's budget are quite unanimous.

If I may, I should like to recall the opinion given by Mr. MacDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Labour Congress, who said that the budget introduced last Monday was quite dull because it offered no new proposal to strengthen the Canadian economy. Mr. MacDonald also remarked, no doubt, the self-satisfaction displayed by the minister when he introduced his budget because he firmly believed that his first budget was responsible for spurring on the economy of Canada, so much so that he believes himself responsible for the recovery of our economy which has taken place during the last few years, and which continued during 1963. But Mr. MacDonald did not agree with this opinion when he said:

> The expansion we have known recently is due, for the most part, to fortuitous circumstances that have nothing to do with the measures taken by the government.

In an editorial published in La Presse of Montreal March 17, Mr. Vincent Prince reported that the budget was not a thriller.

In an editorial published in Sherbrooke La Tribune on March 18, reporter Pierre-Paul Blais wrote:

> If a federal budget can help the Canadian economy and accelerate its growth rate, surely this will not be done by Mr. Gordon's new budget. He rather gives the impression that he intends to let the economy coast along on its own momentum in the hope that this will be enough to maintain prosperity at a satisfactory level and provide surplus income large enough to reduce the deficit by some $250 million.

I shall now continue my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by considering the budget from the Quebec point of view.

I listened with great attention to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan) who tried to adjust the budget to the real needs of the province of Nova Scotia. As I am a Quebec member, I think I should look at the budget from the Quebec angle.

First of all, I was disappointed to find that the budget does not say a thing about the claims of the premier of Quebec, the Hon. Jean Lesage, because they were not exclusively Quebec claims, but they expressed the needs of all provinces. Indeed, during the federal-provincial conference in 1963, the premier of Quebec made the following statement.

> But this was not the main point of our requests. We also—and more particularly—wanted the federal government to evacuate to a greater degree the fields of individual income tax and corporation profit tax and to surrender the estates tax. As a matter of fact, we suggested that the field be abandoned by the central government to the extent of 25 per cent in the case of the individual and corporation income taxes. We also asked the government to yield the whole field of estate taxation.

We may recall, the great service rendered by the Quebec premier and the spectacular action he took in the middle of the 1963 election, when he asked the people to support the Liberal party. Would the premier of Quebec make the same statement today, March 20, 1964, in favour of the Liberal team now at the helm in this country.

The federal budget does not say a single thing regarding the concessions which the government proposes to make to the provinces. We might well wonder about the reasons for which the hon. Minister of Finance submitted the budget at such an early date.

Does the government propose to go to the people in June, or did it resort to this trick in view of the conference of March 31, 1964, so as to be able to put forward some reasons and excuses for not following up the claims voiced during the last federal-provincial conference?

The provinces would then be placed before a fait accompli and at that time the Minister of Finance would be justified to say: "I understand the situation. We are willing to give it consideration, but unfortunately we have just tabled the budget". The provinces would still be deprived of their taxation rights which they need nevertheless to ensure a constant economic development.

There is no reason to be surprised because the federal government by itself does not create economic prosperity in the country; indeed, it is the prosperity of each Canadian province which gives economic prosperity to Canada.

The budget of the Minister of Finance does not say a word about the situation of the textile industry in the province of Quebec. Why? The province of Quebec has now the greatest number of unemployed, with the exception of the maritime provinces; 9.2 per cent of our workers are now jobless, and what does the Minister of Finance do to help our textile industry which is peculiar to the province of Quebec? The minister of finance in the former government, Mr. Fleming, always had in every one of his budgets a provision concerning customs tariffs, in order to check the entry in this country of foreign textile products and help to safeguard to a higher degree this production which is peculiar to eastern Canada and especially to the province of Quebec.

Why did the Minister of Finance not make any provision in that respect? There are now 40 towns in the province of Quebec who need the textile industry for their living: Drummondville, Sherbrooke, St. Hyacinthe, Louiseville, Marieville, Montmorency and a number of others.

An hon. Member: The riding of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Paul: I hope I will have time later on to refer to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). Why did the Minister of Finance not say a word about this matter? He could not do otherwise, because the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp), whom I consider as a very efficient man, somewhat committed his government last August, by a statement he made on August 30, 1963, in order to facilitate the sale of wheat to red China. Please note that I am in favour of our wheat sales to red China, so much so that it was the Conservative party, through the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), which made every effort to promote the sale of our farm products to foreign countries.

This proves that the Conservative policy was excellent, from the point of view of international trade, but this trade was never carried on to the disadvantage of a particular class of people in Canada.

Why did the Minister of Trade and Commerce announce that imports of textiles from red China, which amounted to $3 or $4 million a year, would be increased to $7 million? Entries of textiles representing three million. To whose disadvantage? To the disadvantage of the wage earner who works in textile factories. Therefore, we should not be surprised if the Minister of Finance remained completely silent on that point.

I will point out to you that I do not speak about the remarkable silence of the budget as to the agricultural policy of the government, because we have at present a bicephalous department. There is no doubt about it. the minister for western Canada must be unaware of what the minister for eastern Canada is doing and the dealings of the minister for western Canada must be unnoticed by the minister for eastern Canada.

There is only one thing left for us to do and that is to tell farmers of the province of Quebec: "Run away as fast as you can". When I say "run away", I am obviously not referring to the forestry minister, the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve).

No, there is a stubborn silence in regard to the agricultural policy of the country. And yet, heaven knows how farmers recall the wise policies implemented by the Conservative government to assist the dairy industry. It was decided to pay a subsidy on each pound of butter fat instead of paying 25 cents per hundred pounds of milk. The pattern of the subsidy was changed because it was alleged that farmers added too much water to the milk. Well, that is not the real reason. The real reason is that the Liberal government always promoted a farm policy favouring exclusively western Canada to the detriment of eastern agriculture.

As a matter of fact, only a few days prior to the overthrow of the Conservative government in February 1963, the former agriculture minister, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), presented a bill to promote further the farm economy of eastern Canada. Unfortunately, all that was thrown overboard when this government assumed power.

And what about joint programs? It is interesting to note the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) in this connection. This is what he said last March 16 on joint programs:

> We have no desire, however, to go on indefinitely levying taxes simply to pay for programs that are well established and well within provincial jurisdiction.

And now, what about the attitude of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) who, a few days after he took office, decided that the government was not going to build the railroad between St. Anne des Monts and Gaspe? And I am also wondering what the hon. member from Gaspe (Mr. Cyr) is doing about making the necessary representations to the government in order to stimulate the economy in his area, which finds itself in a slump. Absolutely nothing. But the Minister of Transport said the government was going to contribute in a different way, that it was going to take part in joint programs, to develop country roads in that area.

The development of the rural economy, there you have the new policy of the Minister of Finance. But he does not give a hoot for the economy of the country as a whole. As a matter of fact, he relies on the tax cuts decreed by the United States government to activate the financial mechanism in such a way that the effects will be felt even in Canada and that, indirectly, the Canadian economy will benefit from that sound policy of the American administration.

But no tax reductions for this country. And yet, my Liberal friends, you had promised them. Here:

Tax reduction, a seven week tax holiday. Taxes cut by $400 million.

I ask the Minister of Finance to have a look at this, if he can see from that far away:

$400 million reduction.

He cannot have been that far away when the Liberal party prepared its economic and political propaganda in 1958.

A seven week tax holiday.
Taxes cut by 25 per cent for seven additional weeks.
No taxes to pay for three years in the case of newlyweds.

No, there is no tax imposed on newlyweds, but they are prevented from building new houses as a result of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials.

If you, Liberals, had promised us then that the government would be seven weeks without a minister of agriculture, you would have kept your promise.

Mr. Speaker, there is a matter which I cannot ignore, that of the crumbs or remnants which have fallen from the table of the Minister of Finance.

The $10 increase in family allowances—

An hon. Member: That is fine.

Mr. Paul: Yes, that is fine, but finally you have understood that our party was in a position to submit effective solutions to the problems of our young students. But why did you vote against the motion of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) who, in February last, proposed a $10 monthly increase in family allowances? And yet, you made such a promise during the election campaign. But you would rather wait for the budget of the Minister of Finance to increase those allowances.

Other measures have also been taken to help university students. I congratulate the Minister of Finance. Thanks for those crumbs, but please give us more, give us a whole loaf.

Mr. Speaker, I was shocked by the government's attitude yesterday. In fact, when I asked the Prime Minister if he or his government had considered the constitutional aspect of grants to students, the Prime Minister replied overbearingly: We never do anything which would infringe upon the rights of the provinces.

And yet, who introduced legislation designed to help municipalities at the expense of provincial autonomy?

Mr. Lambert: Did he consult the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska?

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the hon. member for Halifax is no longer here, because I would have called his attention to section 93 of the British North America Act which reads as follows:

In and for each province, the legislaure may exclusively make laws in relation to education.

Under this section, therefore, the provinces are given exclusive jurisdiction with regard to education. In addition, the jurisprudence of the supreme court and of the privy council has been consistently along the same lines as to the meaning of the word education.

The scope of section 93 was definite for the province of Quebec during the conferences held prior to the passage of the confederation act. The incorporation of section 93 into the confederation act was demanded and granted, because it was essential to the safeguard of the French language, culture and personality. It was also essential to the survival of French Canadians, because in 1867 Quebec was the only French speaking province among the four provinces of confederation. Today, Quebec is still the only French speaking province. It is therefore more than ever necessary that it should keep complete control in the field of education. It is through its education system that the French personality blossomed out, or at least survived, in Canada, and French Canadians wish to preserve their personality and to develop it in the interests of the whole country. French Canadians hope, wish and want to make their culture available to the Canadian people, and not to the separatists of the province of Quebec.

The government might reply that by passing legislation to grant scholarships to students, it is not interfering with education. One cannot do directly what one is forbidden to do indirectly.

A good Liberal told me lately that it was a moral obligation for the federal government to help the young people to further their studies, to help them, by all possible means, to get an education, so that they would have a first class position tomorrow in our society.

In constitutional law, where do we find that moral obligation? The federal government's moral obligation, I think, is to transfer more to the provinces, to grant them better taxation rights so that they can meet today's needs in the field of education. That is one way the government would be able to assist the provinces, and not by granting scholarships because they have been censured by everybody.

Some might say: If the government grants unconditional loans what have you got to fear?

We have to consider the future and create no precedent which would open the door to abuses. We have no right to mortgage the future of our young people. As long as our country is governed by one of the big parties, there will be no danger that French Canadians lose their identity, their past and their culture. But should one day socialists, such as we have in the left corner of this house, or right-wing extremists, such as we have in the left corner of this house, come to power, then there would be cause for concern.

Then the future and French culture would be in danger in Canada because the jurisdiction is well established: let Quebec look after education, let the provinces look after education. Besides, that is the present policy of the Quebec government—

Mr. Caouette: Separatism.

Mr. Paul: I hear the hon. member for Villeneuve mention separatism. But when you talk of separatism, do so in the English provinces as well as in the province of Quebec, and not only in Quebec, trying to pit the provinces one against the other. When one has principles, one puts them into practice, in English Canada just as well as in French Canada, and vice versa. Not only one way in one province and another way in another province.

You ate pork and beans in St. Angele de Prevost last Saturday night, come and talk about it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask the hon. member to talk to the Chair?

Mr. Paul: I would rather give you food for thought. I leave culinary matters to the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin), parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, seems to agree with the premier of Quebec, for he said last night: I will discuss this matter of loans to students at the next federal-provincial conference because it is another case of federal interference in the field of education.

We remember how strenuously the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska objected to the present policy of the Liberal government. We remember also how various university associations of the province of Quebec protested against this intrusion contemplated by the federal government.

What is co-operative federalism leading to? It will lead to centralization, if we do not check its advance. I wonder what will be the attitude of my Quebec colleagues when this question is discussed. They had taken a definite position with regard to nuclear arms; everyone kept remarkably silent when this question came before us.

Let us hope that there will be fortunate exceptions. For instance, one hon. member had the courage to blame his party leader during an election campaign.

Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to deal with other matters; unfortunately, I have only two minutes left. We shall be called at a quarter to five to vote on a motion introduced by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron).

I would have liked to say something about the C.B.C. But my time is too short. It would have been interesting to know why the president of the C.B.C. received a $20,000 pay boost. No answer was given to a question to that effect put on the order paper by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard).

Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will be possible for the Conservative party to support the subamendment moved by the New Democratic party.

As the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan) said a moment ago, we cannot adopt this proposal for it does not clarify in any way the areas where the federal government will have to reduce the expenses of the Department of National Defence. Personally, I do not believe that the reduction in these expenses represents the necessary reason or incentive that would give an impetus to this country's economy. That is the reason why the Conservative party will vote against this subamendment.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) introduced this year a limp and unspirited budget. I hope he will take into consideration the needs of the provinces and that on March 31 next, he shall, with his usual smile, firmly resolve to think about them and to find economic incentives without relying only upon the American economic development.

We may be right in hoping that the Canadian economy will keep on improving, not on account of the legislative measures taken after the introduction of the budget by the Minister of Finance but chiefly because the Conservative party had provided for certain economic measures that would permit to stimulate and to develop this country's economy.

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere (Mr. Paul) has not used his great oratorical talent to convince the Minister of Finance last year of introducing a budget where we could—

Mr. Lambert: You were not there because a budget was tabled in April 1962.

Mr. Marcoux: The people had been requesting a budget for a long time but no one could present one. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the situation is hardly better this year than last year when no budget was presented since the present budget contains very few new provisions and hardly anything which will satisfy the Canadian people.

The only people who will get certain benefits are the students and those advantages are far from being as great as some would have us believe.

For instance, everybody knows that parents are entitled to a $350 tax deduction for children who get family allowances. If you add to that the $10 a month family allowance, you get an additional amount of $120 for a grand total of $470 for deduction purposes. On the other hand, in the case of children who are not entitled to family allowances, parents are allowed to deduct $550 a year from their income tax.

Obviously, in this case, the amount of $120 for each child will be an additional amount which he can use. But, if we use the accountants' language, with assets and liabilities, we soon realize that, at the end of the year, instead of deducting $550 for each dependant child going to school, the family head will be able to deduct a maximum of $470. Everything taken into account, I would not say that this aspect of the budget is so beneficial to the father of a family who maintains children at school, in spite of the fact that the bill seems very interesting for students of 16 and 17 years of age, if this part of the budget is applied.

With reference to part-time students, I imagine that several may be helped in this way, being able to deduct their total school expenditures from their income.

But, in addition, I feel there is nothing in the budget indicating that the Canadian people will get any relief from taxation.

And now, in spite of heavy pressure on the part of manufacturers in general and associations of contractors, requesting the government to abolish the tax on building materials, or at least not to increase it beyond 4 per cent, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) refused to listen to any of them, although they are, after all, experts in their field, since the construction industry is their means of livelihood and since they are in a position to relieve unemployment.

In that field, the Minister of Finance has not seen fit to follow their advice. He has rather followed the advice of his party, and maybe that of his own officials, so that the tax will gradually reach 11 per cent. That measure will surely have a harmful effect on the building rate in Canada and also on the number of unemployed, because when building is at a low level, unemployment is at a high level.

We would also have liked the government to define its policy with regard to receipts for charitable donations. For several years now, it has been said that this matter is creating enormous problems for the Minister of National Revenue and that a clear policy should be defined in that connection.

In my opinion, it is unfortunate that the Minister of Finance has not seen fit to define the government position concerning receipts for charitable donations. The hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) has already provided a solution which would be fair, in my opinion, to most Canadians, to those of the province of Quebec as well as those of any other province. The minister has not paid any attention to it. I hope that, in the near future, that matter will be settled once and for all, because it embarrasses the clergy as well as those who want such receipts. It embarrasses also the hon. members who try to stand up for them before the officials of the Department of National Revenue who seem to understand nothing at all and believe that everybody is dishonest, except themselves.

I believe it is time for the government to determine a specific policy about this and for the policy of the Department of National Revenue to be, once and for all, well understood.

We would have liked also that a municipal development bank be established in order to allow municipalities to create new jobs, not small jobs such as those offered by the winter works program, or other small jobs that you can get under the Centennial of Canadian Confederation Act. We would have liked that such a bank be established in order to allow municipalities to develop and solve the regional and local unemployment problem, since the Minister of Finance says that the solution to unemployment is rather a regional problem.

I think such a bank would be the only way to assist our municipalities to get out of our present unemployment situations.

Since the Minister of Finance is prepared to permit the establishment of the Western Bank—he also seems prepared to authorize the establishment of the British-Columbia Bank—I think he should also be prepared to allow the establishment of a municipal development bank which would, at long last, enable public bodies to use capital made available to them by the Canadian government.

Reference was also made to deficits. They are discussed all the time, and so is the public debt, the national debt. I do not want to labour the point, but I would remind the minister once more that in 1962-63, according to Canada Public Accounts, volume I, the nation paid in interests only on the public debt the amount of $881,598,898, while the defiicit came to $691,632,927. The deficit was smaller than the amount we paid in debt interests only.

If the solution we offer is not to be accepted another should be worked out because it is absolutely impossible to go on this way.

Once again, I do not wish to discuss the net national debt or the gross national debt, because investments and capitalized assets must be taken into account.

But considering only the amount required to pay interest on the debt and on the deficit, we find that there is a lag, indicating the folly of the system and that we cannot indefinitely keep on with this tempo; despite the fact that we wish to protect private enterprise, it is impossible to carry on this policy as we are doing now.

I am asking all those who deem themselves competent and able to resolve this problem—I can see many accountants and many economists on the other side of the house—to try to find a way that would enable us to get out of an economic position that has become really disadvantageous and which, instead of allowing us to become masters in our own house, in spite of all the fine speeches we constantly hear in this regard, is leading us more and more towards "americanization" instead of directing us towards total independence with respect to the United States.

In this regard, I should like to say a few words concerning the report of the O'Leary commission. The Conservatives will probably try to accuse the Liberals of not having carried out the recommendations of that commission. I will call to their attention that, as early as last year, a similar bill was to be presented.

By the way, I should like to quote a few newspapers, a few editorials which indicate that, for reasons unknown to us—I should say for reasons which we suspect too well, alas—the government did not deem it advisable to take into consideration the recommendations of the O'Leary commission. I should like to quote an editorial published last month in the Toronto daily Star where it is said that, at this time, it is not too late. So I speak now, for before long it will be too late. The article says:

[Text]

Fortunately the die has not yet been cast; the legislation has not yet been brought down. There is still time for the government to revise its bill to incorporate the full recommendations of the O'Leary commission, with no exceptions for Time, Reader's Digest or anyone else. This is a chance for Mr. Pearson and his colleagues to show that they have the strength to resist American pressure.

[Translation]

I should like to quote another editorial of the same newspaper, dated February 24:

[Text]

Far from correcting the situation, the proposed legislation would give Time and Reader's Digest the status of Canadian publications. It would even protect them against competition from any other foreign magazine which might in future try to imitate their methods.

[Translation]

This is very serious, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that this government will begin to take those recommendations into account.

May I quote another article from the Toronto daily Star dated March 17:

[Text]

The Canadian people have a right to insist that Time and Reader's Digest exemptions be wiped out before the legislation is passed.

[Translation]

I have here an article from the Globe and Mail which does not deal with the O'Leary commission, but quotes an actress from Sweden, Miss Greta Thyssen, as saying on her arrival in a Toronto hotel, after looking at the newspaper stand:

[Text]

"You don't have any magazines of your own here?" she asked. "Such a rich country—why is everything American?"

[Translation]

Such is the impression of foreigners when they arrive in our country and look at newspaper stands.

May I quote another article from the Montreal Star dated March 19:

[Text]

If it was china or tinware, if it was boots and shoes, if it was shirtwaists or any other form of textiles, the government would have moved in, horse, foot and artillery, to stop the imports. But these two magazines import into this country their whole editorial content, collected at a cost greatly exceeding the budget available to any Canadian magazine, and use it as the bait to attract advertising which might otherwise be available to a genuine Canadian magazine.

[Translation]

And later on the article goes on:

[Text]

What is of particular interest to Montreal is that these perversions are both "produced" here.

Time operates an editorial office in the constituency of St. Lawrence-St. George, represented in parliament by the Liberal, Mr. John Turner. It is printed in the town of Mount Royal, represented in parliament by Mr. Alan Macnaughton, also a Liberal. Reader's Digest is "produced" in a leased building in the riding of St. Antoine-Westmount, which is represented by the Liberal Minister of Industry, Mr. C. M. Drury.

[Translation]

Here, I do not wish to accuse the Liberal party, because last year, under a Conservative administration, the introduction of a similar bill was contemplated.

I think that this year, we should go hand in hand as we did on the Maritime Union Trustees Act, because we are concerned with the protection of a Canadian industry. All parties should join together to recognize that Time and Reader's Digest are a nuisance for Canadian publications.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere (Mr. Paul) who likes to specify that members he refers to are not in their seat—I shall tell him that he is not in his seat—discussed a while ago the matter of a Gaspe peninsula railway between St. Anne des Monts and Gaspe. I should like to point out on that matter that the railway was to go from Matane to St. Anne des Monts.

I have long been interested in that matter of a railway for the Gaspe peninsula because I am a lover of that region. I have been going there every year for a number of years and last year I was disgusted when I witnessed the type of election patronage carried on by the Conservatives. At the time I asked the then minister of transport, the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), a question. That question, which was put on the order paper on December 3, 1962 under number 1,007, was as follows:

What progress has been made in the construction of the railway line between Matane and St. Anne des Monts, and has section 6 of the enabling act been complied with?

Let us recall that section 6 provided that the minister of transport must bring a report before parliament within the first 30 days of the session before the date of completion set or forecast in section 1. At that time, no report had been made and here is what Mr. McBain, then parliamentary secretary to the minister of transport, replied:

(e) The Canadian National Railways are making a detailed survey but the report on that survey has not been received yet.

That was on December 3, 1962, and the bill had received royal assent on March 23, 1962.

A report for the year 1962 will be submitted to parliament early in the new year.

[Mr. Marcoux.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, we know that an order in council was passed on April 5, 1962, under P.C. No. 1962-481 and that another one was passed on May 2, 1962, under P.C. No. 1962-656.

The latter provided the C.N.R. with an amount of $100,000 to start on the project and to be used during the period between April 16 and June 30, 1962.

We have a report from Mr. Gordon, the president of the C.N.R., dated June 18, 1962, no, that is the elections took place on June 18, and it is very important to insist on that, for before the elections, orders in council were passed, and they tried to buy a good number of votes by suggesting that the people living in the Gaspe peninsula would get a railway.

In May 1962, or June 1962, it is somewhat difficult to tell, the Canadian National Railways handed back to the crown an amount of $30,000, alleging that an amount of $70,000 sufficed to pay the cost of engineering works necessary for the preparation of estimates.

Mr. Speaker, the former prime minister stated at the time, as reported in the Quebec newspaper Le Soleil, and I quote:

You shall have your railway, said the Prime Minister before the crowd attending the meeting last night.

The railway was never built because it was not profitable, but especially because the Conservative party never intended to build it, despite the passing of an act. Strangely enough, previously, very few people, if any member of the Conservative party, even the former prime minister, knew that the line connecting Mont Joli and Matane was the property of the Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway Company and did not belong to the Canadian National Railways. The railway was the property of the abovementioned company, and this company demanded, for the use of its tracks, the sum of $110,000 per annum. However, all those details were learned afterwards, which makes it possible to tell the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere that his party never intended to help this area much more than the Liberal party.

I do not wish to elaborate, since I know the hon. member for Levis has requested that some 20 minutes be left for him.

And speaking of Gaspe, it reminds me of the Trans-Gaspe Television Company which, for the past five years or so, has been trying to obtain a private station to serve the Gaspe area, which, in some districts, has no television service yet. Some people objected to that television station, and an indescribable pressure was brought to bear. I do not want to describe what happened at this time, but perhaps the day will come when I can deal with it more fully.

After having heard the television company's request, the board of broadcast governors gave a negative answer pretexting some technical matter. Yet, when the directors of the company succeeded in settling the technical problem, they approached the B.B.G. once more and their request met with a refusal. Whereas, at the start, the request had been refused on technical grounds, it now was rejected for some financial reason.

Now, the financial problem having also been settled to everybody's satisfaction, the operators again approached the board of broadcast governors and, once again, the governors refused them a permit, while allowing two other television stations to extend their services, suggesting that, at some places, they establish satellite stations, which would not pay their way and are giving no results whatsoever, because those private companies had to limit their service to the areas allotted to them.

It was also pointed out that the C.B.C. should have priority over private stations when extending its network.

Well, let the C.B.C. come to an understanding with the operators of that station in order to be in a position to provide a service to those people who now are not getting any.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere and many others seem to think of the Gaspe peninsula as a neglected area. That is true. But when we say that it is neglected, even as far as television is concerned, I maintain that the government has got to do something. If the members of the board of broadcast governors refuse to co-operate and to change their decisions, well, let the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) be compelled to grant a licence, in spite of the decision of the board of broadcast governors.

There are some who might claim that the project is not economically sound. I have looked into that side of the question. True, I am no expert, but I did study the matter, and even the operators of the company that wanted to build the station are ready to finance the project. That goes to show that the area is recognized as economically sound and that the company would be able to serve its people. The operators have the means to do it. There is absolutely no reason why they should be prevented from building a television station to provide a service that the people in the Gaspe peninsula have a right to expect, for they are human beings just like any other citizens from any other area in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I want to be brief in order to comply with the wishes of the hon. member for Levis. However, there are a few comments I wanted to make about the Beauport shore line. We have there a problem which the Minister of Transport, in co-operation with the national harbours board, should make up his mind to settle once and for all, because it has been under consideration for eight years. Besides, some individuals paid as much as $18,000 for land surveying, but unfortunately, the problem was submitted to the only legal adviser of the national harbours board and that adviser did not have time yet to make a decision. In my opinion, this situation is rather discouraging for the owners of properties on the shore of the Quebec harbour and along the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. Speaker, I will restrict myself to these remarks for the time being, but I shall have the opportunity to deal with this matter later on.

Mr. Raynald Guay (Levis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank especially the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) who was kind enough to give me a few minutes of his time to enable me to deliver my first speech in the house.

I should like to deal briefly today with some objectives of the budget introduced recently, and also with some results which can be expected.

Mr. Speaker, on taking part in this debate after several members on this side of the house, I wish to pay tribute to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and reiterate our entire confidence in him.

In this budget, there is one thing which especially holds my attention; it is that the government has devoted an important part of the budget to students. Indeed, I am especially interested in the problems of students, because it was somewhat my own case about two years ago.

I am very grateful to the government for having increased the tax exemption from $300 to $470, for having allowed the deduction of the part-time students' school fees and especially for the $10 family allowance to students 16 and 17 years of age. In addition, I would be very pleased to see the establishment of an interest free loan system guaranteed by the government without any tax increase.

I am also proud to note that the government did not forget private businesses by extending our tax exemptions till 1967. As the Minister of Finance pointed out, the economy of the country has improved and I will add that it is especially in good hands. Unemployment has not been as low for years. The prospects for 1964 seem, therefore, bright and all Canadians have regained confidence in the future.

Of course, hon. members opposite criticized the budget, as they have the right to do, but if they had analysed as closely their own budgets from 1957 to 1963, if they had really taken the trouble, on the occasion of every one of those budgets, to pass if only one really important piece of legislation to promote the economy and check unemployment, the situation on April 8, 1963, would not have been what it was. Fortunately, our government took the situation in hand. The measures taken in the first budget introduced by the Minister of Finance proved to be the best and that he was right.

That is why he still enjoys my confidence and I endorse his views. Like all previous speakers, I should like to state my personal opinion concerning the current problems of bilingualism and biculturalism.

Governments must act, first of all in order to repatriate our constitution and then to amend it, so that it might be better adapted to our rights and aspirations in this 20th century, and this goes for English Canadians, French Canadians and Canadians of other ethnic origin. I should like very much that French Canadians with equal qualifications might have the right to hope for high positions, executive posts in all departments. That way, in all departments, the French Canadian voice would be better heard, better understood and better respected. In fact, how many departments and crown corporation do not have enough French speaking officials? Therefore, it is my contention that this problem will be settled to everyone's satisfaction at government level. In that respect, it is satisfying to note a significant improvement in the situation through government's efforts and officials' co-operation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pigeon: Except three English speaking deputy ministers in key departments.

Mr. Guay: I hope the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm will let me finish my speech. However, I will not follow his example; should he ask me a question, I will answer it.

Mr. Pigeon: Will the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Guay: Yes, when I have finished my speech.

The present government has done a lot but we will have to do even more otherwise we run the risk of failing, of never finding a solution to the problem. Everybody is ready, English Canadians, French Canadians, in short, Canadians. Let us do something for it is high time we did. We want a true solution, otherwise separatism, which I would call extreme nationalism, and which is rearing its head in the province of Quebec as well as in the other provinces, will gain impetus and disaster might become unavoidable.

It is often said that separatism is unthinkable but the longer we shall wait to settle the problem, the more we will be reminded of it. We cannot indulge in the luxury of ignoring separatism, but we cannot cure the evil by a mere poultice, because we will have to start all over again in 15 or 20 years from now. We must find a proper solution and there is only one. I trust that the present government has in co-operative federalism a formula better than any other formula ever introduced before. Dialogue has started and must be carried on. Thus, our Prime Minister and the premiers of the ten provinces will find this solution and the appropriate medicine will be administered by a specialist who was able to diagnose the disease and to understand the aspirations of both ethnic groups, having in mind this old saying that the most bitter medicine is often the best. We must not be soft spoken, but firm and wise.

Of course, there is no question of accepting only compromises; we must be firm, but we must remember that the other party has problems also. The province of Quebec does not seek only to obtain concessions; it will actively co-operate in the solution of all the problems, not only of its own.

In my opinion, the Prime Minister has found the right formula, that of a dialogue carried on at federal-provincial conferences and which, in a single year, has given more than all the fine speeches made and all the sanctimonious principles voiced by all the parties. Let us put an end to empty speeches. We must now take concrete action. As I say, we must act because the situation is urgent. We have discovered the first symptoms, so let us not wait until the cancer has become generalized. Thus, we will have worked towards a common goal and, in 1967, we will all be happy citizens of a strong and united country which will have a new and dynamic constitution; we will celebrate the centennial of confederation and the first day of our rejuvenation in the best interest of all and of national unity. Because, in unity alone, we will be able to make of our Canada one of the chief powers in the world before the end of the centutry. Quebec's independence will never be profitable in any respect to herself or to the rest of Canada. We French Canadians have rights and we intend to have them respected, but, on the other hand, we know that others have equal rights and we intend to respect them.

It does not mean melting the two races, the two cultures, but rather uniting them in order that they may understand and respect each other better, and to define my thought more clearly, may I quote Mr. Marcel Faribault who said recently:

> Culture may also describe the social characters of a people, of which it is a jealously guarded secret treasure: a treasure, because it belongs to that people alone; a secret, because it always includes slight faults and, at last, a jealously guarded object, because it could not be fully experienced or embraced other than by marriage or by being adopted in the family.

As far as Quebec was concerned, the problem appeared simple enough, and since it is an indubitable fact that there are in Canada two great cultural and linguistic currents, should there not be a degree of reciprocity between them, based on mutual respect, social exchanges and means of communication? Relations should, therefore, constitutionally, socially, politically and economically, stem from the establishment of definite institutions. However, the two extremist factions contest these premises: at one end are those who contend that all this is refinement which will fade away in the face of national unity; at the other, those who say that not only two but several cultures are in conflict. The first objection, from the point of view of unity, is obviously the result of confusing political unity with cultural unity: it ignores the fact that our federal form of government, contrary to its American counterpart, is not primarily based on sectional considerations, but on the two cultures which at that time divided nearly equally the majority of the population. Five and a half million Canadians, or 30 per cent of the population, are a constant reminder, a constant assertion, of this duality, since they relentlessly protested for the past 94 years against all customary amendments to the provisions of the pact of 1867 and, today, they are practically unanimously requesting a revision of the constitution. The dissidents, they are few and far apart, have simply given up hope of obtaining the revision and that is why they favour independence, just like all Irredentists.

Mr. Speaker, as a member from a constituency whose main industry is the shipbuilding, I am naturally most interested in that industry.

There is great concern in the shipbuilding industry at the present time, especially since the program for the building of frigates has been cancelled and Great Britain has been awarded a contract, following previous commitments of the former government, to build three submarines.

In my opinion, it is urgent to solve this problem by establishing a merchant marine. This would create employment not only in shipyards but also for seafarers. Otherwise we might see the closing of our shipyards and an alarming increase of unemployment in all areas where they are located. The shipbuilding industry instead of becoming one of the chief industries of our country would be done away with and this would be disastrous for all of us.

In my constituency and also in nearby ridings it is customary to say that when shipyards are doing well, everything is fine. For us, when the shipyards are running smoothly the whole economy of the area benefits, and vice versa.

I have already made several representations to certain ministers in order to obtain employment for the workers of my constituency; they thought I was stubborn, but I wish to let them know that I will persist and that next time, I will even be more stubborn. I shall renew my efforts, because I am only demanding our fair share of work with no intention of depriving the others of anything.

The people of my riding are hard working, proud and quite determined. And who could blame them? That is why I wish to make it clear that we too are strongly against the vile political haggling of government favours that goes on too often, unfortunately. We are not asking for more in order to get less. As responsible citizens well aware of the huge needs of the whole country, we are only asking for what we are entitled to.

Levis is an important area of Canada, and our great province is an integral part of Canada. Quebec has largely contributed in the past to the development of the country and I have the firm conviction that its contribution will be much greater in the future.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), who is well aware of the situation, is kindly asked to give it a special consideration and to take the necessary steps to ensure the survival of that important industrial centre on the south shore.

Mr. Speaker, we must not forget the protests voiced by several labour unions with regard to the construction, in Japan, of 18 freighters, at the cost of $1 billion, on behalf of Canadian Javelin Company, for transportation of iron ore of our country, outside our boundaries. It becomes obvious that we must protect our shipyards. Time has come for us, now more than ever, to build our own merchant marine.

At this point, I should like to quote from bulletin No. 5 of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association, but time does not permit it.

Division

In an average year, more than 141,000 ships, ocean-going or coasting vessels, load and unload in Canadian harbours, some 102 million tons of goods from all the countries in the world. If Canada wants to get its share of this important industry, there is no doubt that it needs its own merchant marine and modern and active shipyards.

There is reason to believe that Canada intends to devote more attention and efforts to the study of our coastal waters, including the Arctic. On both sides of the Atlantic, governments are beginning to realize the great resources to be derived from the waters covering their country's continental shelf. Should they lag behind in the race towards full development of the wealth of the sea, nations will put the coming generations under a heavy handicap.

That is why, rather than just for strategic or military reasons, the Soviet union and the western countries are studying the matter and taking steps to develop the resources of the sea. Without an ocean-going merchant marine and any harbour facilities, even a country like Canada, with its 20,000 miles of coast line, can actually miss the boat.

A maritime nation without ocean-going ships, without modern harbours and well-equipped shipyards is a paradox we cannot afford. That is why, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of the report made by the royal commission on coastal trade published in 1957, I shall submit to the government a few proposals which I consider urgent.

1. That the jurisdiction over coastal trade be extended up to the strait of Belle Isle, Newfoundland being a Canadian province.

2. That ships be built and repaired in Canada, be registered in Canada and have their home ports in this country.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I should like to explain the position that this party will take in relation to the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron). This subamendment has the effect of removing the essence of our amendment. If we were to support it we would, in effect, be voting against our own amendment. We will therefore vote against the subamendment.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Cameron, Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) which was negatived on the following division.

YEAS

Messrs:

Barnett
Beaule
Boutin
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Caouette
Fisher
Gauthier
Herridge
Knowles
Laprise
Mather
Orlikow
Perron
Peters
Plourde
Prittie
Rondeau
Scott
Webster
Winch—20.

NAYS

Messrs:

Addison
Aiken
Alkenbrack
Armstrong
Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace)
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Baldwin
Basford
Bechard
Beer
Bell
Benidickson
Benson
Berger
Bigg
Blouin
Boulanger
Byrne
Cadieu (Meadow Lake)
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cantelon
Cardiff
Cardin
Caron
Carter
Casselman, Mrs.
Chatterton
Chretien
Churchill
Clancy
Coates
Cooper
Cote (Longueuil)
Cowan
Crossman
Cyr
Deachman
Deschatelets
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Doucett
Drury
Dube
Dupuis
Emard
Enns
Fane
Favreau
Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke)
Flemming (Victoria-Carleton)
Forbes
Forest
Forgie
Foy
Francis
Frenette
Gelber
Gendron
Girouard
Godin
Gordon
Granger
Gray
Groos
Guay
Gundlock
Habel
Hahn
Haidasz
Harkness
Harley
Horner (Acadia)
Horner (The Battlefords)
Howard
Jewett, Miss
Jorgenson
Kelly
Kennedy
Klein
Konantz, Mrs.
Korchinski
Lachance
Laing
Lambert
Lamontagne
Lamoureux
Laniel
Laverdiere
Leduc
Lessard (Lake St. John)
Lessard (St. Henry)
Loiselle
Loney
Macaluso
Macdonald
MacEwan
MacLean (Queens)
MacNaught
Macquarrie
MacRae
McBain
McIlraith
McIntosh
McLean (Charlotte)
McWilliam
Mandziuk
Marcoux
Martin (Essex East)
Martineau
Matheson
Matte
Monteith
Moore
More
Moreau
Morison
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Mullally
Munro
Nasserden
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Nixon
Nowlan
Nugent
O'Keefe
Olson
Ormiston
Otto
Ouellet

Pascoe
Patterson
Paul
Pennell
Pepin
Pickersgill
Pigeon
Pilon
Prud'homme
Pugh
Rapp
Regan
Rheaume
Ricard
Richard
Rideout
Rinfret
Robichaud
Rochon
Rock
Rouleau
Roxburgh
Ryan
Sharp
Simpson
Skoreyko
Slogan
Smallwood
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Stenson
Stewart
Tardif
Teillet
Temple
Thomas
Tucker
Turner
Vincent
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Assiniboia)
Watson (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Webb
Whelan
Winkler
Winkler—180.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

It being after five o'clock, the house will now proceed to a consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

BROADCASTING ACT

NOTICE TO PARLIAMENT OF EXTENSIONS OF SERVICE

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-8, to amend the Broadcasting Act (disclosure of C.B.C. service extension programs, cost, and estimates for five years).

He said: This is a very narrow bill, but before I launch into the reasons for it I think it is always fair, when you are speaking of the C.B.C. to make some general remarks by way of introduction. This is partly because this is a famous Canadian institution, partly because it is notorious and partly because its reputation, to say the least, is equivocal.

I should like to make the point immediately that this bill has the approval of my colleagues and reflects our party's attitude toward this particular segment of the C.B.C. In this party we happen to be, like other parties in the house, great proponents of the C.B.C. but at the same time some of us are very critical of the C.B.C. In essence, this bill represents a criticism of the way the C.B.C. has gone about extending its services in the last decade or so, particularly since television has become important. It is an attempt to put an onus upon the C.B.C. to be much more clear and direct in its policy with regard to the extension of services.

Before I get into that, Mr. Speaker, I think it is well to remember that in the area of broadcasting and a national broadcasting policy, you not only have a number of agencies involved in actual broadcasting, such as public broacasters and private broadcasters, but there are other agencies including the Department of Transport through the Radio Act licensing, organizations such as the community antennae organizations and also the board of broadcast governors. There is also the fact that the cabinet or government at any time has a general responsibility to have a broadcasting policy for the country that enables both the country and parliament, as well as members of parliament, to see just what is intended.

It has been my conviction for a number of years that the whole broadcasting policy of this country has tended to be fudged and blurred. We had a typical example yesterday when the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) brought into this house, at long last three years after the question was first raised, a statement concerning the policy, intentions and beliefs of the board of broadcast governors with relation to community antenna television. This is just an indicator of the confusion. One of the reasons that we have a problem with community antenna television in this country at the moment is that in the past the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation moved so slowly, without making any projections of how it was going to extend services in this country. I know personally of at least six places in this country that have community antenna television systems for which people are paying individually as much as $125 for installation and $5 per month in charges. This would never have been necessary if the C.B.C. had risen to its responsibilities to cover the country.

In its last annual report concerning television the C.B.C. maintains it covers 92 per cent of the country. One of the reasons they can make this statement is that a great many Canadians are paying through the nose for their hook-up with community antenna television service. There is still 8 per cent of the country that requires to be served by this Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

One of the effects of this bill, as anyone can see if he looks at the explanatory note, is a minor change to section 36 of the Broadcasting Act. The corporation would be required to append to its report particulars of each extension to the national broadcasting service within Canada that was undertaken or completed during that financial year, the cost thereof, as well as particulars of each such extension the corporation proposes to undertake or complete during the five financial years next ensuing, and the estimated cost thereof.

To members of the house who may be critical of this bill, I would say you can divide it up into two parts. First of all, if any hon. members look at the annual report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, they will quickly see that the president is not reticent at all about setting forth any extensions of service. However this is always done within the text. There is no clear picture, beyond just the individual extension such as, for example, an extension to Dryden, Sioux Lookout and Kenora or the extension up into Thompson lake area a few years ago. We cannot see this very clearly.

Hon. members are more likely to question requirements projected for five years ahead. I should like to suggest to you that the C.B.C. itself, and many people interested in broadcasting, have been asking for a five year projection. As a matter of fact, in our broadcasting committee in 1961, this was perhaps the main thing that Mr. Ouimet brought before us at that time. At one time during the hearing, he gave an outline of the projections. It can be found at page 803 of the proceedings of the broadcasting committee in 1960-61. I am reading from a Canadian Broadcasting Corporation forecast of operating costs in revenue years 1962-63 to 1966-67. Anyone who will take the trouble to compare this forecast with what has actually transpired in the last two years will find that, in terms of parliamentary grants, the C.B.C. has been fairly accurate. The grants have been maybe $2 or $3 million under the estimates. What happened from 1960 onward is that the C.B.C. did not forecast the increase which took place in its commercial revenues. Nevertheless, this forecast indicated that the C.B.C. could really make a good projection.

If anyone cares to look at page 804 he will find in appendix B a five year projection of proposed expansion from 1961-62 through 1965-66 included in one of the items as improvement in coverage. The figures are as follows: in 1961, $1,907,000; in 1962-63 $2,717,000; in 1963-64, $2,078,000, and so on. It goes right through to the end of 1966, and the total for the five year period is $9,925,000. I want to point out, in other words, that the C.B.C. has made a projection, and all I am asking is that the projection be placed within the annual report so as to indicate the responsibilities.

Some hon. members may say, perhaps: "What about population shifts? If the C.B.C. is adjusting to population shifts the projection might not be reliable". Well, my experience is that the C.B.C. tends to wait for the dominion bureau of statistics; it waits for the census figures which come out at ten year intervals. So that is really not a valid objection.

[Mr. Fisher.]

I submit, too, that the C.B.C. very much needs to give us detailed projections. Do hon. members think we would have this CJBC fuss, with all the controvesy that has gone with it, if the corporation had been obliged to project this particular matter? I say this because it is a matter which involves a change in the service given across the country. This amendment does not deal with programs in any shape or form. It is concerned strictly with service extensions, and as I see service extensions, the term covers radio and television on both the English and the French networks. It means the international service. It has nothing to do with capital structures such as buildings in Ottawa, Montreal or Toronto. But it does include anything to do with the extension of the service to more people, or with giving a variety of programs to more people. This means that in the corporation's tremendous desire to fulfil its mandate, for example to extend the French language and French language programs across the country, it would be required to append to its annual report a five year projection showing how it intended to do this, together with an estimate of the cost.

Obviously most members bring forward private members' bills because the area of interest is one which touches them very closely. Along with the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson), hon. members from areas such as Saguenay, and others in the north, I have been interested in the extension of services. We represent areas which, so far, are not served at all. How do we feel when we hear about an extension to Edmonton where they already have television, or an extension to St. John's, where they already have a service, or about the conversion of CJBC to bring French to southern Ontario? These are all worthy things to do, but the point is that in the Toronto area people already have all manner of excellent radio and television services. There is television already in St. John's, Newfoundland. There is television in Edmonton. But there are parts of this country where it is still impossible to get television reception, and the C.B.C. is not moving very fast in fulfilling this portion of its mandate.

The C.B.C. tells us it has a formula. Yes, it has a formula, and it is a mysterious one; most of us have difficulty in figuring it out. The C.B.C. pleads poverty. Mr. Ouimet pleaded in 1960-61: We are doing our very, very best. But in the very next year the corporation handed $7 or $8 million back to the treasury, presumably as an example of how efficiently it was operating—"We don't really need to take up all the money that is provided in our budget". How can this be explained to the people who still do not enjoy radio or television coverage? Here we see the corporation handing back government funds and, let us say, commercial revenue, at the same time as Mr. Ouimet and his followers are telling us they are doing their best for the people who still do not enjoy coverage.

Look at what is involved in the budget of $100 million or $110 million a year. Every member here knows that this is big money. One hundred million dollars is not to be sneezed at. Yet note the budget for extension of services. It is something over $1 million—up to $2 million. It really is pettiness. This is why I tend to become a little sceptical about this C.B.C. mandate, though some of my colleagues disagree with me here. I wonder how much the directors of the beloved corporation are really thinking about the Canadian population as a whole. Is it possible that they have got a metropolitan syndrome and see everything in terms of these great aggregations of people, these big market areas where it is possible to obtain commercial revenue and get a reception large enough to be able to say: These are your ratings? This is bound to be the suspicion, when one considers the small fraction of the budget which the C.B.C. sets aside to extend its services.

The corporation talks about the cost per head, and says: Oh dear, we have to move very carefully and wait until the next census to see how the population is growing. If the C.B.C. believes its mandate, it will take the necessary steps to provide service to 100 per cent of the Canadian people as soon as possible, before it begins providing secondary or tertiary services or other extensions and diversions to those people in Canada who are already covered. In this whole field of cultural entertainment there is not any question about it that a minority in this country is going short, and their complaint is that they are going short while they are paying for the service as general taxpayers.

The reason we would like this amendment to the bill and we know it would require the co-operation of the government, the treasury board associated with it, the C.B.C. and the board of broadcast governors, if they have any responsibility in supervising and directing the whole broadcasting policy—is to get complete broadcasting to the people.

The reason that we have a community antenna problem is because of the failure of the C.B.C. to move more quickly to extend service. This is one of the reasons why we have so much criticism of the C.B.C., particularly in the rural areas. It has moved too slowly to extend its services, but I am not going to suggest that there has been any favouritism in the extension of the services it has made.

One of the beliefs in my part of the country is that, because they have a member in opposition, services have not been extended quickly; but I would point to the fact that it was when the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) was in opposition that the main extension of services in our part of the country took place.

Mr. Benidickson: The hard working member.

Mr. Fisher: All right, the hard working member for Kenora-Rainy River. But I do feel there is an unevenness, a mystery, a lack of planning or lack of projection, and I think this amendment would correct it. I suggest it will cause no great damage to the C.B.C.

If hon. members or others would care to read more into this bill they will find a lot of useful information in the report of the 1960-61 committee on broadcasting, from pages 800 to about 830, when a number of hon. members quizzed Mr. Ouimet on the subject. All I can say is that in the succeeding three and a half years we have made very little progress in this regard.

I suggest that it is time the corporation, the B.B.G. and the government began to do some serious thinking about the problem implicit in this bill. There is much more I would like to go into, particularly as it relates to my own area, but in terms of A and B contours in television, in my riding with a population of about 90,000, about half of it has an A and B contour and one third really has no television at all. Yet, during the last 11 years they have seen the microwave towers in that area, and they know that crackling through the air in the manner of magical science C.B.C. and other programs are carried. They also know that the ingenuity of our engineers could easily take the programs from the microwave system.

We cannot understand the slowness, and that is why I ask hon. members to support this bill and take an interest in it. It means something to those people of mine, and to the 8, 10 or 12 per cent of the population who are still doing without what today is considered to be an almost inalienable right of Canadians, that is, a national television service and a national radio service.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) has suggested that the bill now before us would really effect only a minor change in national broadcasting. On the face of the matter he is correct, but if we look at it a little more carefully we find that it raises in a most direct way the problem of the relationship between a crown corporation, such as the C.B.C. and parliament.

We want our national broadcasting service to be removed as far as possible from the shifting winds of political opinion. We believe it best that the corporation should not be rocked in its judgment by every favourable breeze or by every blast of denunciation. On the other hand I think we would all agree we do not wish the corporation to be wilful or capricious.

It is only realistic to remind ourselves that there is no such thing as a sure or foolproof arrangement by which we can accomplish both these ends. The result is that we balance them all rather uneasily in a tension one against the other. We have a certain arrangement, and the hon. member for Port Arthur has suggested that in general he values this arrangement. I would agree with him. That arrangement has worked reasonably well.

I do not wish to argue that the hon. member intends to disrupt the prevailing system; nor indeed will I argue that if this bill were to pass it would bring on vast disorders that the hon. member did not foresee, but I do want to explore some of the implications of the bill.

As the hon. member who introduced it suggested, the bill points to both the past and the future. First, it provides that the corporation shall append to its annual report particulars of each extension to the national broadcasting service within Canada that was undertaken or completed during that year, and shall show the cost thereof. Second, it provides that with its annual report the corporation will give particulars of each extension the corporation proposes to undertake, or to complete, during the five financial years next ensuing, together with a statement of the estimated cost thereof.

At first glance the provision concerning each extension during the previous fiscal year seems reasonable enough. It can be contended, and I think many of us would be inclined to contend, that the C.B.C., to a large extent, is spending public moneys, moneys voted by parliament, and that surely it is not too much to expect the corporation to make an accounting of that part of its annual expenses spent on network and transmitting facilities in the case of each new area serviced. But let us remember that by enacting such a requirement we would be exposing the corporation to a spate of invidious criticism. Indeed, we would be inviting invidious criticism of our national broadcasting system.

The corporation already serves most of the Canadian people. Fully 93 per cent of our people are already within range of at least one Canadian television station, and about 65 per cent do have a choice between or among Canadian stations. Those people who are not yet served live, as the hon. member pointed out, in sparsely populated areas, where the cost per capita of providing facilities inevitably is relatively high, and in some cases extremely high.

It is not always realized by all that the C.B.C. is no mere commercial venture, that it has a special role or function in the development of Canada's national culture and aspirations. If it is to perform this function it cannot be tested, especially when services are to be extended to the more sparsely populated areas of the country, by mere, normal, commercial standards. And this, the judging of these extensions by inappropriate commercial standards, is precisely what one might anticipate if this bill were to be enacted.

I had guessed, Mr. Speaker, that this bill was introduced because the hon. member wishes to hasten the extension of C.B.C. coverage in certain areas. He has confirmed the validity of my guess. I did not make this guess simply by ratiocination. I happen to come from a part of the country where we do not enjoy the best of television broadcasting, even though C.B.C. transmission passes directly through the area, so I know whereof he complains. But it would be unfortunate, I think, if the enactment he suggests had precisely the opposite effect to which he desires. I suspect there are people in the country—

Mr. Fisher: You are not suggesting that this bill could possibly force the C.B.C. to limit its expenditures for development extensions?

Mr. Stewart: I suspect there are people in the country who, if they saw some of the actual costs that would be entailed in putting in transmission lines and then of course transmitters—and transmission lines tend to be the more expensive—might very well begin to question the principle of a full national service.

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if the hon. member knows that never in the last ten years has the extension of services exceeded more than 2 per cent of the C.B.C.'s budget?

Mr. Stewart: I am not questioning the desirability of extending services, nor indeed of extending them faster, but I am arguing that by publishing these very costly details in many instances we would simply invite a rash of criticism, and I would think improper criticism.

Mr. Fisher: It is improper now.

Mr. Stewart: Well, if it is improper now it would certainly be worse if the hon. member's bill passes. At page 224 of the report of the royal commission on broadcasting, made in 1957, there is the following sentence:

> We also feel that, while no rigid line can be drawn, the cost of extending coverage beyond the level of 90 per cent of the population would not be justified, unless and until the Canadian population is substantially larger and more concentrated, or new technological developments in television reduce the costs of reaching scattered groups of people.

That the corporation has not been wasting time is shown by the fact previously mentioned, that at present 93 per cent of the people in this country are already within range of at least one Canadian television station.

The disadvantages of the second aspect of the bill—the provision for the publication by the corporation of particulars of each extension of the service proposed during the five financial years next ensuing—are more immediately obvious. As a framework for investigation, the corporation does maintain a moving five-year projection of service extensions either being considered or already in progress. The bill now before the house proposes that this projection be set forth in the annual report of the corporation.

If this projection were a plan, the bill might have some merit; but strictly speaking it is not a plan. Initially a highly tentative priority list of extensions is prepared, with the order of priority determined by the ratio of the population to be served to the money necessary to be expended to serve them. But the order of this tentative list will change, and a list published today I submit might be out of date within six months. First, when the physical characteristics of an area are examined and when quotations have been received, that area may be raised or lowered on the priority list. Moreover the cost factors may vary from year to year.

Second, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's plan, or projection—the latter is the more exact word—may be altered by the planning of private companies who may decide to erect stations or satellites. Third, an effort is made by the corporation to maintain some kind of equitable balance between extensions in the French language and extensions in the English language. It would hardly be appropriate, I submit—

Mr. Fisher: That is a little out of kilter right now.

Mr. Stewart: —if expenditures on extensions in a two or three-year period were concentrated entirely on one language or the other. Fourth, special attention is given to the frontier factor. Some people might say, disagreeing with the hon. member for Port Arthur and myself, that this is wrong; but this factor does indeed alter the priority list. Fifth, there are changes that will take place, particularly in the so-called frontier areas where economic boom, and sometimes, unfortunately, economic bust are faced.

The effect of the publication that would be required by this bill if enacted would be either to harden exploratory projections into fixed, almost invariable plans, or irresponsibly to encourage expectations within the commercial sector of the broadcasting industry and, for more importantly, among the people at large. At present, Mr. Speaker, the C.B.C. is dependant on an annual vote by parliament. It may be that it would be better for parliament to deal with C.B.C. financial matters on a five year, rather than a one year, basis—

Mr. Fisher: That is the policy of your party.

Mr. Stewart: —but that is not the question that is before us this afternoon.

Mr. Fisher: I am just trying to introduce Liberal policy.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will find that any assistance he and his friends wish to give us will be very welcome, despite the subamendment voted on earlier today. There is another point that I wish to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker. This bill would require the corporation to publish information about services to be undertaken at public expense, even though parliament had not yet voted that money. Whether this bill is in order is at least questionable; but I do not propose to raise that question. I merely wish to suggest that it would be highly undesirable for this house to pass a bill that would have the effect of requiring the C.B.C. to anticipate publicly and in detail decisions of parliament concerning public expenditure.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I will speak very briefly on this matter because I would like to see this bill come to a vote. I think that too often our private members' bills are frustrated, and I do not think they should be frustrated just because they are private members' bills. This bill introduced by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) has a great deal of merit. As so often happens, the people who put bills through parliament and set up crown corporations are not doing it, I think—and I will give the best interpretation that I can—in order to abdicate their duty to the Canadian people. Quite the contrary; they are setting up what they feel is efficient machinery for putting our will into operation. At no time—certainly I can speak for myself, and I think I speak for the average member of parliament—have we had any intention of giving up our interest in the matter merely by saying that such-and-such a corporation shall take on the responsibilities of running our transportation system, our mining for uranium, or our cultural media in the form of television.

The argument that 93 per cent of the people are already covered seems to me very specious, because the 7 per cent who are not covered—incidentally, in my own particular case, in Athabasca, perhaps 35 per cent to 40 per cent of the population are not covered—require T.V. a good deal more than do the people in the congested areas. If people in congested areas wish to go to a cultural medium, for instance an operetta, they just jump on the streetcar and go. The people in many parts of my district are hundreds of miles from any entertainment medium except radio, and I would argue that the 7 per cent who are not covered at the moment need television coverage a great deal more than the people in congested areas such as Edmonton, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal. Our armed services boys who are out in far away places, often away from their families, would have a connection with their homes through television. They would know what is going on in the world and this would be the best medium possible. Therefore I do not think the percentage covered is much of an argument, either.

The fact that the C.B.C. might be forced to publish, or whatever you wish to call it, their plans or their policy is, I think, a very sound point, and certainly this is necessary so that parliament itself would know what our servants are doing. I think, in spite of the fact that they are crown corporations, they are still subject to the will of parliament as far as money is concerned, because we vote them very large sums of money and I think we cannot do our duty to the taxpayers, quite apart from those people who need coverage, unless we know just exactly what the corporation intends to do. Certainly we do not want to be patronized in any way by any crown corporation which is set up by us.

I should like to say a few words with regard to the cost involved. Over my desk every day come enormous amounts of literature, beautifully embossed. I do not know what is the cost of this literature, but a great many of the papers, and so on, that I receive contain nothing whatsoever that will assist me in bringing to the attention of this house very important items such as broadcasting and television programs for our people. I think I have made my point, Mr. Speaker, that I thoroughly endorse the spirit of this bill. Perhaps it could be drafted in a little better fashion to please the feelings of those members of the corporation who may think we are overseeing them; but I think the spirit of the bill is that we will know what is intended and will be able to do more to assist this corporation in giving the people of Canada the T.V. coverage they desire. I must commend the hon. member for Port Arthur on what I think is one of the better private members' bills to be introduced this session.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have every sympathy for the case that the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) made respecting the availability of television coverage to some of the outlying areas, because I happen to represent one of those constituencies where some people who are far back from the television broadcasting stations and satellites simply cannot receive this service. I am also convinced that for these people even one channel of television is more important than an extra channel being provided for the cities.

As the previous speaker has just pointed out, there are other, alternative forms of entertainment available to people in the cities, apart from television. I have every sympathy with the argument of the hon. member for Port Arthur, but I fail to see how he is going to correct that situation with this bill. It calls upon the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to give a five year projection of costs of extending programming. I believe that members of parliament have a right to know what are the financial prospects of the C.B.C., because after all we do vote public funds for that purpose. The hon. member for Port Arthur made it very clear that he was not talking about buildings and that sort of thing. I think we have the right to know about these things too. For example, we know that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation are undertaking large, complex building structures in both Montreal and Toronto, and in the estimates for this year is an amount of something like $14 million for loans, and I suppose most of it will be used for this purpose. But when you vote $14 million on a $40 million or $50 million project, you are hooked—if I may put it that way—for the rest of it in future years.

I would remind the parliamentary secretary to the minister about this. He said it may be improper for the C.B.C. to make this kind of projection. It is equally improper for them to start on a building which they know very well they cannot finish with the amount of money that has been voted, because we are not going to leave a building half erected, with the steel up, and then not allow it to be completed. Therefore that argument applies equally to the fact that the parliamentary secretary said it was improper for them to project their extension of programming.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would like to answer the question that was put forward; that is, the question as to how I expected this to work. If he would look at the projection the C.B.C. itself has made he would see that for 1962-63 through to 1966-67 they project an increase in total expenditure from $100 million to $132 million. Then if he would look at the breakdown with respect to extensions of service, they are only going to creep up to $1,900,000 and then they are going to drop to $1,500,000. I think the publishing of this information would make everyone realize how picayune are the expenditures in this area compared with the programming area—and that is the area to which the impetus would be given.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member who introduced the bill has now indicated that all it would do would be perhaps to provide some more influence. But technically, and in keeping with the additional responsibilities the C.B.C. would have if this bill were passed, I cannot see that it would require them to extend services into these areas which do not have service at the moment. There may be involved a factor of pressure or influence on them if members of parliament could see these projections.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, an hon. member wishes to ask me a question.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) suggested that my final argument may have been somewhat specious because parliament is invited annually to make a vote toward the completion of some project which may have been begun three or four years earlier. I should think that the project as such had been approved by parliament in making the initial vote. In this case we are dealing with matters costing smaller amounts of money, and I do not think—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member asking a question?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Does the hon. member really think this is parallel?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do think it is parallel. The parliamentary secretary raised the point that this bill may be improper and may be out of order because it would require the projection of public funds, and so on. I cannot see any difference between that and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation taking a contract, if you like, say for $40 million, when parliament has only voted $14 million. This would commit future parliaments to paying a large amount in addition.

In any event, I do have great sympathy for the argument made by the hon. member for Port Arthur. I think it is the responsibility of the C.B.C., under the act which set the corporation up, to provide service to all Canada, and while they may have reached 90 per cent or slightly over 90 per cent of the people, the fact is that the remaining 7 or 8 per cent have a greater need both for radio and for general C.B.C. coverage than most of those who already have it. But I repeat that I cannot see where the passage of this bill will in fact speed up this end result.

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, the bill which is before us tonight is of the utmost interest to me. I regret that the time allowed to me is so short for I would have many things to say on this matter. Nevertheless, since I should not like to be charged with killing this bill, I will limit myself to a few comments.

First, I should like to congratulate the mover of this bill. Even though I do not agree altogether with the entire contents of the bill, I agree nevertheless with the first part, which concerns the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's development.

As for the next point, that is for the C.B.C. to project its program of expansion for a five-year period, that might conflict with private enterprise and would in no way improve the situation even if projects were known in advance.

The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) spoke conservatively a while ago when he said that television services have cost a lot of money in certain districts. I should like to point out to him and to the house that in my own riding, one of the largest in Canada, Chibougamau and Chapais, two neighbouring mining towns which have a population of 13,000 to 14,000 are covered by television services.

The population is made up of miners, therefore of people whose average earnings are the highest in this country and who, consequently, are paying rather high taxes. To get T.V. services, these people have to pay $200 to get cable relay distribution, which is almost twice the amount referred to by the hon. member for Port Arthur; moreover, they have to pay a subscription fee of $6 per month, which has to be paid in advance.

I also wish to point out that these people are not given any guarantee upon signing their contract because, the person who is serving them at present does not guarantee that he will provide that service for one year, two years, five years or any other period of time.

You can well understand in what position these people find themselves just now. It is, therefore, important that they be served just as well as we are in the southern part of the county of Chapleau where private enterprise also serves the area.

I must also say that the area I represent is very well served and the service there is excellent. Considering that television is a recognized fact by everyone, that it has become a necessity, and especially that it is a medium of information and education, since we now have televised school programs, the people of these districts should benefit from it just as those from other regions.

So, I support the previous speakers who mentioned that those who are not served now by television services are precisely those who should be the first ones to enjoy them, because they live in more or less isolated areas and they have no other means of recreation, education, and information as far as television programs are concerned. According to my information, the C.B.C. is, I think ready to serve those areas, but there is always a financial problem. Then, it would be appropriate to recommend to the government to provide the C.B.C. with the necessary funds to serve all the areas they possibly can. I was assured that it was possible for the C.B.C. to serve every part of Canada. Consequently, the government only has to make financially possible what is physically feasible and everybody will be satisfied.

Mr. Leo Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, obviously many things have already been said about the bill now before us. I would not want to repeat all the arguments put forward, but, for all that, I would not like you to forget their validity.

For instance, they spoke about geographical problems as well as the difficulties for the C.B.C. to balance the distribution of French and English broadcasting facilities. I do not think that this problem can be thrust aside even if it is as acute as that which exists at the present time in the Toronto area.

Therefore, I do not want to deal again with all the arguments that have been put forward. But I think that the bill now before us contains a few provisions which are incompatible with the present position of the C.B.C.

I am more particularly thinking of the second part and speaking from an accountant's point of view. The C.B.C. operates on an annual budget, and if the corporation, which has to keep within the narrow limits of an annual budget were to be asked to establish a five-year projection of what it intends or will have to do, I think it would be impractical. Indeed, I doubt that the corporation would have any basis at all to do so, because it cannot foresee the possibilities or the generosity of parliament. Consequently, the corporation cannot suppose that it will be able to embark on such and such a project three or four years hence.

Moreover, having in mind all the arguments which have been put forward by the previous speakers, we all know that the situation may change, that a priority list which was, for instance, established this year, may be changed next year, on account of new factors, and that the corporation may have to prepare new projects.

Under the circumstances, I do not see how the C.B.C., given its yearly budget, could make a five-year projection in regard to the works it intends to undertake. The hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) evidently raised a very good argument, that of the areas which are not yet accessible to private radio or television. I think that if the C.B.C. divulged its program for the next five years, this would perhaps discourage private enterprise which might be interested, being alone to serve areas which up to now have not been covered, and to supply radio and television service to the population of these areas.

I think we should maintain a balance between public and private enterprise and we should not, ahead of time, close all avenues to private enterprise, discourage it systematically under the terms of an act. I think we should not publish in advance projections which might be inaccurate and never come true.

Personally, and with reservations—it is a personal opinion—I might accept the first part of this amendment, because parliament has to vote money to meet the expenditures of the C.B.C., and it is therefore only legitimate to examine and check them.

As for the second part, unless the hon. member for Port Arthur wishes to move an amendment, I do not see how I could commit, for the next five years—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour for consideration of private members' business has expired.

[Text]

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 23, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITION OF POLITICAL PARTY

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-80, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (allowance to leaders).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-71 which was introduced last year, was the first Canadian piece of legislation to mention the political parties by name. My bill will simply include a definition of a political party and state the conditions a group must meet to be recognized as such.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Text]

SOCIAL SECURITY

PERMISSION TO RETURN PAYMENTS TO GOVERNMENT FOR SPECIFIC PURPOSES

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-81, to amend the Family Allowances Act and the Old Age Security Act (charitable gifts).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Harley: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to allow the recipient of family allowance or old age security payments to donate this money back to the federal government for a specific purpose, such as an aid program or medical research, as outlined in detail in the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SOCIAL INSURANCE CARD—ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Question No. 2—Mr. MacEwan:

Has an advertising agency been hired or will one be hired to direct a campaign regarding the introduction of a social insurance card and, if so (a) what is the name of the agency (b) what amount has been or will be paid to this agency?

Mr. MacEachen: (a) and (b). Yes. The MacLaren Advertising Limited, Toronto, Ontario. The cost of this advertising campaign is estimated to be approximately $332,000, and whatever advertising may be required will be placed through that agency.

PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

Question No. 12—Mr. Knowles:

1. How many retired civil servants are receiving pensions of amounts within each of the following brackets: (a) less than $20 per month (b) $20 to $29.99 per month (c) $30 to $39.99 per month (d) $40 to $49.99 per month (e) $50 to $59.99 per month (f) $60 to $69.99 per month (g) $70 to $79.99 per month (h) $80 to $89.99 per month (i) $90 to $99.99 per month (j) $100 to $149.99 per month (k) $150 to $199.99 per month (l) $200 to $249.99 per month (m) $250 to $299.99 per month (n) $300 per month and over?

2. How many widows of retired civil servants are receiving pensions of amounts within each of the brackets indicated in the above question?

3. What is the number of retired federal civil servants and also the number of widows of retired federal civil servants presently residing in each province?

Mr. Benson: 1. (a) 455; (b) 1,211; (c) 1,672; (d) 1,591; (e) 1,543; (f) 1,413; (g) 1,299; (h) 1,245; (i) 1,162; (j) 5,246; (k) 3,649; (l) 2,432; (m) 1,229; (n) 1,547.

2. (a) 1,544; (b) 1,634; (c) 1,573; (d) 1,362; (e) 1,252; (f) 1,090; (g) 1,029; (h) 689; (i) 524; (j) 1,383; (k) 293; (l) 88; (m) 28; (n) 22.

3.

	Retired civil servants	Widows
Newfoundland	255	106
Prince Edward Island	144	81
Nova Scotia	1,117	599
New Brunswick	739	375
Quebec	4,502	2,292
Ontario	11,179	5,500
Manitoba	1,304	529
Saskatchewan	829	337
Alberta	1,320	580
British Columbia	3,701	1,796
Territories	28	6
Outside Canada	576	310

OPERATIONS OF CANADIAN NATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATIONS IN YUKON

Question No. 16—Mr. Nielsen:

1. What have been the total revenues gross and net of the operations of Canadian National Telecommunications in the Yukon for each of the years 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961 and 1962?

2. What have been the total revenues gross and net of C.N.T. from the operation of Yukon Telephone Company Limited for each of the years 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961 and 1962?

Questions

3. How many personnel are employed by C.N.T. in the Yukon, and what is the gross pay roll of such personnel?

4. What is the total capital cost of plant and equipment in use by Canadian National Telecommunications in the Yukon?

5. From which persons, firms or corporations have purchases of goods and services been made by C.N.T. in the Yukon since April 8, 1963?

6. What is the nature and extent of such purchases, and the gross cost thereof, from each of such persons, firms or corporations in the Yukon?

7. Were public tenders called for the purchase of such goods and services?

8. If public tenders were called for such goods and services, what was the name of each of the successful bidders, and the amount of the successful bid?

9. If public tenders were not called for such goods and services, for what reasons were they not called?

10. In those cases where goods and services were supplied by persons, firms, or corporations in the Yukon without public tender call, what was the gross cost of such goods and/or services paid by C.N.T. to each such person, firm or corporation?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Prior to 1962, the information requested was not maintained or required for purposes of the operation of the railway and would entail considerable time and clerical expense to produce. The figures for 1962, which were prepared for inclusion in the annual summary filed by the company pursuant to the Yukon Territory ordinances, are as follows: gross revenues, $3,486,025; net revenues, $1,920,994.

2. As the Yukon Telephone Company was amalgamated with Canadian National Railway Company in December 1961, it did not exist as a separate corporate entity in 1962 and no separate accounting records were maintained. Accordingly, the requested information for that year is not readily available and would entail time and expense to produce. The revenues for the years 1958 to 1961, as recorded in annual summaries filed by the telephone company pursuant to the Yukon Territory ordinances, are as follows:

Year	Gross Revenues	Net Revenues
1958	$ 146,960	$ 93,744
1959	126,888	65,334
1960	130,052	54,846
1961	146,167	73,655

3. One hundred and sixty four employees with a gross payroll of $76,341.99.

4. Approximately $24,115,560.

5 to 10 incl. It is company policy to invite competitive tenders and award the contract to the lowest bidder who is able to meet all the specifications, and to buy wherever possible in the locality where the materials are to be used. It has not been the practice to divulge individual prices of contracts or materials purchased.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING DRUG PATENTS

Question No. 38—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the government reached any decision as to the desirability of implementing the recommendation of the report of the restrictive trade practices commission on the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs that "patents with respect to drugs be abolished" since "in the opinion of the commission this is the only effective remedy to reduce the price of drugs in Canada"?

Mr. Favreau: Careful consideration is being given to the recommendations of the restrictive trade practices commission and, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare informed the house last session, steps have already been taken to implement some of them. The recommendation concerning drug patents is still under study and I have been informed that further representations are to be made. If it is decided to amend the legislation, this decision will be made known in the proper way.

PRISON POPULATION, MARITIME PROVINCES

Question No. 46—Mr. Coates:

1. What was the estimated inmate population in federal penal institutions for the years 1960, 1961, 1962, and 1963, in the maritime provinces?

2. How many paroles were granted from these institutions in the years 1960, 1961, 1962, and 1963?

Mr. Favreau: There is only one federal penal institution in the maritime provinces. It is at Dorchester, New Brunswick.

1. 1960, 662; 1961, 713; 1962, 750; 1963, 720.

2. 1960, 146; 1961, 143; 1962, 97; 1963, 87.

*RECOGNITION OF NATIONALIST CHINA, MONGOLIA AND RED CHINA

Question No. 58—Mr. Pigeon:

1. On what date did the Canadian government recognize the government of nationalist China (Formosa)?

2. On what date did the Canadian government recognize the communist regime of Mongolia?

3. Does the government intend to recognize the communist regime of China and, if so, when does it propose to do this and, if not, for what reasons?

4. When will the government appoint an ambassador to Formosa?

[Translation]

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is as follows:

1. Canada recognized the government of nationalist China on December 20, 1928.

2. We informed Mongolia of our diplomatic recognition on January 27, 1964, through a normal exchange of communications with the representative of that country in a capital where he is accredited. A similar procedure had been adopted by the previous government in the case of Albania in 1959.

3. The government does not intend, at this time, to make any change in Canada's policy toward China. The question of recognizing the government of Peking involves various factors which must be weighed carefully: Canada's role within international control commissions in Indochina and the stability of the situation in southeast Asia; then, the future of the inhabitants of Formosa; finally, the possible repercussions at the United Nations. Forecasting the future is now precluded by the rapid evolution of the situation.

Nevertheless, the government maintains that a country as important as continental China cannot and should not be isolated from the flows of international exchanges. That is why it shall continue the policy that has been followed these past few years, that is to increase as much as possible our trade and cultural exchanges with communist China.

4. The government is not contemplating the appointment of an ambassador to Taipeh.

[Text]

*EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—FRENCH CANADIANS LEAVING DEPARTMENT

Question No. 60—Mr. Pigeon:

How many French Canadian officials of the Department of External Affairs have left that department since April 23, 1963?

[Translation]

Mr. Haidasz: Since April 23, 1963, five French Canadian diplomatic agents left the Department of External Affairs. One was named general commissioner for the Montreal world exhibition, another one was appointed assistant deputy minister in the Department of Transport. Four other French Canadian diplomatic agents obtained leave without pay, one having been appointed director of the national economic council, and two others having assumed duties in the World Exhibition Corporation. These transfers from the Department of External Affairs to the World Exhibition Corporation show the direct relations existing between these two bodies.

At the administrative level, 29 employees (archivists, stenographers, messengers, etc.) left the department during that period; 10 of them were transferred to other services of the federal government.

Altogether, of the 110 persons who left the department during that period, 38 were French Canadians, which represents a proportion higher than that of the previous year, but equal to that of 1961-62.

[Text]

ADVERTISING REVENUE, STATION CJBC, TORONTO

Question No. 61—Mr. Cowan:

1. What has been the advertising revenue, month by month, secured by radio station CJBC, Toronto, since it became an independent station, separate from a network?

2. What was the division of the advertising revenue in the month of January, 1964, between advertising in the French language and advertising in the English language?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. It has not been customary to require the corporation to give information which could adversely affect it in the competitive business in which it is engaged.

2. All revenue was from advertising in the English language.

CRIMINAL CODE PROVISION RESPECTING ALCOHOLIC IMPAIRMENT

Question No. 90—Mr. Matheson:

Has consideration been given by the Department of Justice to (a) repealing section 224(4) of the Criminal Code (b) defining impairment under section 223 by specific blood alcohol level?

Mr. Favreau: Representations for such repeal and definition have been received from the Canadian federation on alcohol problems and are being considered in the usual way in connection with the continuing Criminal Code amendment program but no conclusions have been reached in regard to proposing any amendments.

WAGES OF THIRD CLASS ENGINEERS, CAMP BORDEN AND EDENVALE

Question No. 110—Mr. Addison:

1. How is the rate of pay of civilian third class engineers determined at Camp Borden and Edenvale?
2. How does this rate of pay compare with private industry in that area?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am advised by the civil service commission:

1. The rates of pay for stationary engineers in the classified civil service, which includes the stationary engineers at Camp Borden and Edenvale, are established by the treasury board after consideration of recommendations made by the civil service commission, which recommendations are based on extensive information on rates paid by outside employers in the various regions of Canada. Such information is gathered by the pay research bureau once every two years under the current cyclical salary review program.

2. The current rates were established with effect from October 1, 1962 as national rates applicable to classified stationary engineers in all locations in Canada. The normal grade for a stationary engineer holding a third class certificate would be stationary engineer grade 2. The current salary range for this grade expressed in annual rates of pay is: $4,470, $4,650, $4,830, $5,010. The maximum rate is reached by way of regular annual increases. These rates compare favourably with those for comparable employment in the area. The next review of salary rates for this class will be in October of this year.

C.N.R. DEBT FROM PRIVATE COMPANIES

Question No. 111—Mr. Mather:

What is the amount in dollars of that portion of the Canadian National Railways debt due to obligations incurred by defunct private railways which became part of the Canadian National system?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Canadian National Railways advise that the subject matter of the question involves capital revision proposals which have been submitted to the government in relation to the financial structure of the system. As it involves complex technical calculations, the proposal, in order to be understood, must be reviewed in the whole and, therefore, it is not possible to give a brief answer.

BADDECK, N.S.—TENDERS FOR R.C.M.P. BUILDING

Question No. 131—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

When will tenders be called for a new R.C.M.P. detachment quarters at Baddeck, Nova Scotia?

Mr. Favreau: Tenders will not be called for a new R.C.M.P. detachment quarters at Baddeck, Nova Scotia, for the next few years.

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S.—NEW R.C.M.P. QUARTERS

Question No. 132—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

What consideration is being given to the construction of new R.C.M.P. detachment quarters at North Sydney, Nova Scotia?

Mr. Favreau: No consideration is being given to construction of new R.C.M.P. detachment quarters at North Sydney, Nova Scotia at the present time. Present quarters are police owned and are suitable for our present needs.

APPLICATIONS UNDER OLDER WORKER TRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 148—Mr. Korchinski:

1. How many applications have been received to date from each of the provinces for assistance under the older worker employment and training incentive program?

2. How many have been granted assistance under this program?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. Up to February 29, 1964, the following number of applications had been received from employers:

Newfoundland	19
Prince Edward Island	9
Nova Scotia	59
New Brunswick	30
Quebec	542
Ontario	603
Manitoba	130
Saskatchewan	112
Alberta	204
British Columbia (including Yukon Territory)	278
Total	1,986

2. Nine hundred and thirty six workers had been hired up to February 29, 1964.

FISHERIES LOANS TO INLAND FISHERMEN

Question No. 149—Mr. Danforth:

1. How many loans under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act have been made to inland water fishermen during the years 1958-63 and what was their total value?

2. How many loans under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act have been made to fishermen in the county of Kent, Ontario during the years 1958-63 and what was their total value?

Mr. Benson: 1. Separate statistics on loans to inland fishermen are not available. However, during the fiscal years 1957-58 to 1962-63, 19 loans having a total value of $40,404 were made in the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

2. Statistics relating to the geographical distribution of these loans are broken down only by provinces. Accordingly, no figures are available to answer this part of the question.

TEULON, MAN.—TENDERS FOR R.C.M.P. QUARTERS

Question No. 153—Mr. Stefanson:

When will tenders be called for new R.C.M.P. detachment quarters at Teulon, Manitoba?

Mr. Favreau: Tenders will be called for new R.C.M.P. detachment quarters at Teulon, Manitoba, within the next two months.

ARBORG, MAN.—R.C.M.P. DETACHMENT QUARTERS

Question No. 154—Mr. Stefanson:

1. Has land been purchased for R.C.M.P. detachment quarters at Arborg, Manitoba and, if so, from whom was land purchased and what was the cost?

2. What type of detachment quarters do the plans call for and when will tenders be called?

Mr. Favreau: 1. Land has been purchased for R.C.M.P. detachment quarters at Arborg, Manitoba from Mr. L. L. Cosford, Arborg, Manitoba at a price of $1,000.

2. A standard R.C.M. Police detachment building will be constructed. Tenders will not be called until the fiscal year 1965-66 at the earliest.

FILLMORE, SASK.—R.C.M.P. DETACHMENT QUARTERS

Question No. 162—Mr. Southam:

1. What consideration has been given to the construction of new R.C.M.P. detachment quarters at Fillmore, Saskatchewan?

2. If new R.C.M.P. barracks are to be built, when does the government contemplate commencing this work?

Mr. Favreau: 1. Consideration has been given in the long range construction program of the R.C.M. Police to the construction of new R.C.M.P. detachment quarters at Fillmore, Saskatchewan.

2. Construction is not contemplated for at least five or six years.

OLDER WORKER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Question No. 166—Mr. Ricard:

1. How many employers have taken advantage of the older worker employment incentive program?

2. How many older workers have been hired as a result of this program?

3. How much money in the form of compensation payments has the government paid to employers?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. 1,986 applications submitted, of which 1,333 had been approved up to February 29, 1964.

2. 936 up to February 29, 1964.

3. $7,107.96 up to February 29, 1964.

*OLDER WORKERS EMPLOYED UNDER INCENTIVE PROGRAM, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 171—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

How many workers over the age of 45 years have been placed in employment (a) on the island of Cape Breton (b) in the rest of the province of Nova Scotia, as a result of the program by which their salaries are supplemented to a maximum of $75 monthly out of public funds?

Mr. Byrne: (a) and (b). Figures are available by provinces only. Thirty one workers were hired under the program in the province of Nova Scotia up to February 29, 1964.

OLDER WORKERS EMPLOYED UNDER INCENTIVE PROGRAM, PICTOU CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 176—Mr. MacEwan:

How many workers over the age of 45 have been placed in employment in the constituency of Pictou as a result of the program by which these salaries are supplemented to a maximum of $75 monthly out of public funds?

Mr. MacEachen: No breakdown by constituencies available. Thirty one workers were hired under the program as at February 29, 1964, in the province of Nova Scotia.

NELSON RIVER, MAN.—NAVIGATION POSSIBILITIES

Question No. 178—Mr. Stefanson:

Did the federal government conduct a survey of navigation possibilities on the Nelson river and, if so, what are the findings?

Mr. Deschatelets: Yes, in connection with the power development studies being carried out jointly by the federal government and the provincial government of Manitoba. It was found that the provision of navigation facilities is not economically feasible at the present time.

MANITOBA—ASSISTANCE FOR UNIVERSITY EXTENSION DEPARTMENTS

Question No. 179—Mr. Stefanson:

Has the government received a request from the University of Manitoba for financial assistance for its extension departments to carry out education among fishermen in fisheries techniques and co-operatives producing and selling and, if so, what action has been taken or is planned?

Answer: This government has not received such a request.

PUBLIC WORKS CONSTRUCTION, CHICOUTIMI COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 183—Mr. Cote (Chicoutimi):

1. At what locations will post offices be built in the county of Chicoutimi during the year 1964?

2. What other works will be undertaken or are planned for this year in that county?

3. Has provision been made for the rebuilding of wharves at Chicoutimi and the construction or the completion of a retaining wall at Chicoutimi north?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. Revenue post offices will be built at St. Fulgence and St. Leon de Chicoutimi in 1964.

2. During the next fiscal year, the Department of Public Works proposes to carry out the following supplementary projects in the county of Chicoutimi: Bagotville, wharf repairs; L'Anse Saint Jean, wharf repairs; Saguenayville (Moulin river), protection wall; Ste. Rose du Nord, wharf repairs; Arvida federal building, repairs to windows and foundations; Kenogami federal building, interior painting.

3. No item is charged to the national harbours board in the current budget concerning the reconstruction of wharves in the harbour of Chicoutimi. Completion of the retaining wall at Chicoutimi north in 1964 is not provided for.

[Text]

FISHERMEN'S LOANS, MANITOBA

Question No. 193—Mr. Stefanson:

How many loans were made to fishermen in the province of Manitoba during the past five years under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, giving the number of loans for each year and total amount of loans?

Mr. Benson: Two loans for a total of $4,320 were made under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act to fishermen in the province of Manitoba during the fiscal year of 1959-60.

Questions

No loans under this act were made in the province of Manitoba during the fiscal years 1958-59, and 1960-61 to 1962-63.

MUNICIPAL LOAN APPLICATIONS, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 197—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

How many applications have been received and approved under the municipal loan fund to date in (a) the constituency of Cape Breton North and Victoria (b) the constituency of Inverness-Richmond (c) all of Cape Breton island, and (d) all of the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Benson: No applications have been received and approved under the Municipal Development and Loan Act from the province of Nova Scotia, as of the date this question was asked.

ABOLITION OF DRUG PATENTS

Question No. 202—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to implementing the recommendation of the restrictive trade practices commission to abolish drug patents when necessary to reduce the prices of drugs in Canada?

Mr. Favreau: Careful consideration is being given to the recommendations of the restrictive trade practices commission and, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare informed the house last session, steps have already been taken to implement some of them. The recommendation concerning drug patents is still under study and I have been informed that further representations are to be made. If it is decided to amend the legislation, this decision will be made known in the proper way.

BONDING OF LAWYERS

Question No. 227—Mr. Millar:

Has the federal government considered taking steps to compel members of the legal profession to be properly bonded to ensure that clients' funds in their hands shall be protected against embezzlement?

Mr. Favreau: No, because this is a provincial matter.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOAN APPLICATIONS, MEGANTIC CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 230—Mr. Langlois:

1. With reference to the erection of farm buildings under the terms of the Farm Improvement Loans Act (a) how many applications were received from persons in the constituency of Megantic during 1962 (b) how many were rejected (c) how many were granted (d) what were the amounts in each case?

2. With reference to the purchase of cattle under the terms of the same act (a) how many applications were received from persons in the constituency of Megantic during 1962 (b) how many were rejected (c) how many were granted (d) what were the amounts in each case?

3. With reference to the purchase of farm implements under the terms of the same act (a) how many applications were received from persons in the constituency of Megantic during 1962 (b) how many were rejected (c) how many were granted (d) what were the amounts in each case?

4. How many requests for loans for the purchase of farms were received from persons in the constituency of Megantic during the past two years and of these (a) how many were rejected (b) how many were granted (c) what was the total amount?

5. What are the corresponding answers for the years 1955-60?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1, 2 and 3. Statistics available and tabled annually in the house, provide information of loans made by provinces but not by constituencies.

4. In so far as the question relates to the Farm Credit Corporation, each loan made by the Farm Credit Corporation may encompass several purposes, including the purchase of farms. The Farm Credit Corporation advises that they do not maintain statistical records on a constituency basis, however, the constituency of Megantic is made up of the municipal county of Megantic and part of the municipal county of Frontenac, for which municipal counties the answer is as follows:

Fiscal Year 1962-63	Megantic	Frontenac
Applications	25	19
Rejected	10	2
Approvals	11	14
Total amount of loans	$133,000	$149,200
Note:	4 loans under review at end of fiscal year	3 loans under review at end of fiscal year

Fiscal Year 1963-64	Megantic	Frontenac
Applications	28	12
Rejected	6	7
Approvals	22	8
Total amount of loans	$266,800	$82,100
Note:	4 loans still under review as of March 5, 1964	3 loans under review in 1962-63 were approved in fiscal year 1963-64

Statistics available for the period preceding October 5, 1959 include only applications which resulted in a loan, consequently the figures do not take into consideration all applications received.

Questions

	Megantic			Frontenac
	Applications	Number Loans	Amount	Applications	Number Loans	Amount
1955-56	1	1	$1,000	2	2	$4,800
1956-57	1	1	$2,000	2	2	$5,000
1957-58	2	2	$8,400	2	2	$7,900
1958-59	2	2	$13,000	3	3	$10,000
1959-60	*2	1	$4,000	3	3	$14,350

*1 rejected.

MCGILL UNIVERSITY—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR HARP PROJECT

Question No. 232—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Has the government received a request for financial assistance for the McGill University project high altitude research program, better known as HARP and, if so (a) how much money was requested (b) is the government giving favourable consideration to this project?

2. Is this project getting financial assistance from United States government agencies and, if so, how much assistance is this project getting from the U.S.?

Mr. Drury: 1. Yes.

(a) and (b) The Department of Defence Production has not been asked for a definite amount. However, an application for $43,000 has been received for the fiscal year 1964-65 by the national research council but this has not yet been considered by the honourable advisory council.

2. Yes, $500,000 in the form of contracts for experimental work.

*WATER FLUORIDATION

Question No. 249—Mr. Slogan:

1. What federal moneys have been expended by the Department of National Health and Welfare on research into the effects of water fluoridation, and the effects of topical application of fluorides to the teeth and what projects were supported?

2. What general health benefits have been found from water fluoridation?

3. What is the position of the federal government in regard to the fluoridation of communal water supplies?

4. When is it expected that a clear statement of policy will emanate from the government regarding the favourable results of water fluoridation on the teeth?

Mr. Munro: 1. Expenditures on projects submitted by the provinces and supported under the national health grants relating to research into the effects of water fluoridation and the effects of topical application of fluorides to the teeth total approximately $51,400.

So far as intramural research is concerned, in view of the fact that personnel of the Department of National Health and Welfare from three divisions and one directorate have been engaged intermittently over a period of 16 years on research into the effects of fluoridation, including topical fluorides, while at the same time working on other programs, it is not possible to segregate expenditures on this project.

2. It is an established fact, from very extensive research, that the adjustment of the fluoride content of a water supply, whereby there is a concentration of one part fluoride to one million parts of water, brings about an average reduction of 60 per cent in the prevalence of tooth decay to children consuming fluoridated water since birth. No ill effects have been noted.

This improvement in dental health of children, who will later be adults, ensures an improvement in general health, dental health being an integral part of total health.

3 and 4. The activities of the Department of National Health and Welfare in relation to fluoridation have from the beginning been limited to research, the publication of research findings and the provision of technical advice and information. No advice has been given for the specific purpose of influencing policy decisions.

However fluoridation of communal water supplies is of broad public interest and is considered to be of great importance in the total health picture of the population of Canada. As of November 1963 more than 3,800,000 people, or 20 per cent of the population, in 188 communities were consuming mechanically fluoridated water.

In addition to the 20 per cent of the Canadian population who are consuming water with fluoride content adjusted to one part per million, many thousands of people have been consuming for a lifetime, and even for generations, water which has been fluoridated from underground deposits of fluoride. No ill-effects have been observed.

BANKRUPTCY PETITIONS, ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Question No. 251—Mr. Lambert:

1. How many members of the armed services have filed petitions for bankruptcy in any province of Canada from January 1, 1962 to February 28, 1964?

2. What is the distribution of such numbers by provinces and by calendar years?

3. Does the filing of a petition for bankruptcy by a serviceman lead to his release as a matter of course, or are efforts made to assist such a person to rehabilitate himself financially?

Questions

4. What counselling services are provided to armed service personnel with respect to personal financial matters?

Answer: 1 and 2. Although according to service regulations, an officer or man who files a petition for bankruptcy is required to report the fact, complete statistical records are not readily available.

3. The filing of bankruptcy by an officer or man does not necessarily lead to release from his service as a matter of course. Each case is considered on its merits. Financial counselling is available to the individual concerned, including loans or grants from non-public funds depending on an assessment of all the circumstances involved.

4. Extensive financial counselling services are provided to servicemen through the unit commander, welfare officers, officials of service benevolent funds, and lectures and articles in service publications relating to the management of personal financial affairs.

PENSIONS OF RETIRED MILITARY PERSONNEL

Question No. 253—Mr. Mather:

1. What is the range of monthly pensions drawn by retired military officers?
2. What amounts are contributed by military officers toward such pensions?
3. What is the monthly amount which retired military officers are allowed to earn in non-government positions?

Answer: 1. The maximum amount being drawn is $1,166.67 per month and the minimum is nil.

2. Six per cent of pay as defined in section a(1)(h) of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, up to a maximum of 35 years.

3. There is no restriction.

APPOINTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT OFFICER, LISTOWEL, ONT.

Question No. 259—Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron):

1. Who has been appointed to fill the vacancy of employment officer in the national employment service at Listowel, competition No. 64-T-540?
2. Who were the other candidates for this appointment?
3. What marks were obtained by each candidate who wrote the examination?
4. Was the statutory preference for veterans taken into consideration?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. Mr. Bertram Courtney Paige, a veteran, and the first ranking candidate as a result of competition 64-T-540 to fill the vacancy of employment officer in the national employment service at Listowel, has been offered this position, and he has accepted. It is understood he is to report for duty on March 16.

2 and 3. Twenty one persons made application in competition 64-T-540. The names of the successful candidates, namely, Messrs. Bertram Courtney Paige, Charles Kenneth Lochead, and Ronald Stewart Higgins, will be published in the Canada Gazette in a week or two.

The commission holds in confidence the names and marks of unsuccessful candidates in civil service competitions, having regard for the right to privacy of the candidates and the possibility that publication of this information could prove to be not only embarrassing but also prejudicial to them.

4. Yes.

*BANK OF CANADA—NEW CURRENCY ISSUED

Question No. 267—Mr. Cote (Chicoutimi):

1. Has the Bank of Canada actually issued new currency or new credits in addition to banking currency or new credits issued or created by chartered or commercial banks from the end of June, 1954 to July 3, 1963 and, if so (a) was this new currency issued on behalf of the federal government, of the provinces or of other bodies, and (b) what was the rate of interest?
2. Has the Bank of Canada issued new capital or new credits since it began operations in 1935 and, if so, in what amounts?

Mr. Benson: 1(a) As shown in its weekly published statements, the Bank of Canada's note circulation and its deposit liabilities at the dates in question were as follows:

	June 30/54	July 3/63
	(millions of dollars)
Bank of Canada notes in circulation	1,553.5	2,200.1
Deposits at the Bank of Canada
Government of Canada	99.0	24.8
Provincial governments	—	—
Chartered banks	624.4	768.0
Other	41.4	40.6

(b) Nil.

2. The original capital of the Bank of Canada was $5,000,000 and was sold to the public. On September 11, 1936, an additional $5,100,000 was issued and sold to the government of Canada. On August 15, 1938, the $5,000,000 held by the public and $100,000 of the amount held by the government was redeemed, and since then the bank's capital has remained unchanged at $5,000,000.

DUTY ON IMPORTED AIRCRAFT

Question No. 268—Mr. Barnett:

1. Has a 15 per cent duty, effective April 1, 1964, been imposed on single engine aircraft above 2,500 pounds, gross weight, imported into Canada?
2. If not, has any announcement been made by the government in respect of a proposed change on the import duty on aircraft?
3. If so, what was the nature of this announcement, and by whom was the announcement made?

Mr. Benson: 1. No.

2. No.

3. Aircraft of types or sizes not made in Canada are free of duty under item 440m 1. Aircraft of types and sizes made in Canada are dutiable at a most favoured nation rate of 15 per cent under item 440m 2. I understand that an application has been submitted to the Department of National Revenue for a ruling that certain sizes of single engine aircraft are of a type or size made in Canada. If and when any changes are made in present rulings relating to types and sizes of aircraft made in Canada, they will be issued in the usual way by the Department of National Revenue.

C.M.H.C. LOANS, KITIMAT, B.C.

Question No. 286—Mr. Howard:

1. Has Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation established, since January 1, 1958 any restrictions regarding loans under the National Housing Act to people who live in Kitimat, B.C. and, if so, what is the extent of these restrictions, when were they implemented, to whom do they apply and what is the reason therefor?

2. Can employees of the Aluminum Company of Canada at Kitimat, B.C. borrow money from or through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or pursuant to the National Housing Act and, if so, at what rates and upon what terms?

3. Can people at Kitimat, B.C., other than employees of the Aluminum Company of Canada, borrow money from or through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or pursuant to the National Housing Act and, if so, at what rates and upon what terms?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. The policy followed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in insuring loans made by approved lenders and in making direct loans in Kitimat has been the policy applicable to one-industry towns. In towns such as Kitimat, whose existence is dependent primarily on one industry, the corporation will insure loans or make direct loans only if the industry will provide some form of direct or indirect guarantee arrangement that will provide the corporation with some additional protection against the increased risk in such communities. This policy applies to employees of the industry and also to persons who are not employees of the industry. If a guarantee of some kind is not provided by the industry in the case of non-employees, then the loan to the individual is reduced. In Kitimat the appropriate minimum reduction was considered to be 10 per cent. Except for the foregoing, the terms and conditions are those of general application under the National Housing Act.

2. Yes, as in 1 above.

3. Yes, as in 1 above.

BANK OF CANADA SURPLUS

Question No. 290—Mr. Ormiston:

1. Does the Bank of Canada surrender its surplus annually to the Receiver General of Canada and, if so, to what use is such surplus put?

2. In each of the years since its incorporaton, what surplus has the Bank of Canada surrendered to the Receiver General of Canada?

Mr. Benson: 1. Yes, pursuant to the Bank of Canada Act, section 24(c). Section 24 reads as follows:

"24. The bank shall establish a rest fund and after making such provision as the board thinks proper for bad and doubtful debts, depreciation in assets, pension funds and all such matters as are properly provided for by banks, the ascertained surplus available from the operations of the bank during each financial year shall be applied by the board as follows: (a) if the rest fund of the bank is less than the paid-up capital, one third of such surplus shall be allocated to the rest fund and the residue shall be paid to the Receiver General and placed to the credit of the consolidated revenue fund; (b) if the rest fund is not less than the paid-up capital, one fifth of such surplus shall be allocated to the rest fund until the rest fund reaches an amount five times the paid-up capital and the residue shall be paid to the Receiver General and placed to the credit of the consolidated revenue fund; and (c) if the rest fund is not less than five times the paid-up capital the whole of such surplus shall be paid to the Receiver General and placed to the credit of the consolidated revenue fund."

The surplus is used for the general purposes of the Government of Canada.

2. Bank of Canada's surplus paid to Receiver General of Canada: (in dollars)

1935*	346,184.33
1936	1,141,247.03
1937	1,209,397.57
1938	1,110,200.65
1939	1,092,483.47
1940	2,546,306.73
1941	3,725,590.53
1942	7,985,230.43
1943	14,117,830.91
1944	18,078,893.71
1945	22,541,920.92
1946	21,011,194.96
1947	18,828,325.43
1948	19,107,147.20
1949	20,442,378.11
1950	19,662,548.41
1951	24,018,017.44
1952	28,791,710.42
1953	43,867,807.22
1954	41,411,919.15
1955	38,341,041.14

	Questions
1956	89,865,102.97
1957	68,711,435.27
1958	88,631,680.16
1959	74,011,728.12
1960	90,175,488.81
1961	107,692,994.18
1962	96,680,127.56
1963	116,386,458.94

* Bank of Canada opened for business on March 11, 1935.

TRAIN SPEEDS IN NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Question No. 293—Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron):

Has the board of transport commissioners issued any orders governing the speed of trains within the national capital region and, if so, what is the date and the operative nature of each such order and to what lines or areas does each apply?

Mr. Pickersgill: The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advise as follows

---

Canadian Pacific Railway

Carleton Place Subdivision: Area, Ottawa West (Mile 0.0) to mile 27.0 near Carleton Place, Ont.

Board Order	Date	Mileage	Restriction	Operative Nature
81070	Mar. 25/53	0.32	10 m.p.h.	Over Hinchey ave., Ottawa.
77595	Oct. 22/51	1.78	25 m.p.h.	Over Prescott highway, Ottawa.

Prescott Subdivision: Area, Ottawa West (Mile 0.0) to Mile 22.5 south of Osgoode, Ont.

Board Order	Date	Mileage	Restriction	Operative Nature
91785	June 12/57	1.34	25 m.p.h.	Over Prescott highway, Ottawa.

Sussex Street Subdivision: Area, Ellwood (Mile 0.0) to Ottawa (Sussex st. Mile 6.7)

Board Order	Date	Mileage	Restriction	Operative Nature
81704	July 2/53	3.55	10 m.p.h.	Over Russell road, Ottawa.
96261	Nov. 17/58	1.29	40 m.p.h.	Over Metcalfe rd. (Bank st.) Ottawa.

Ottawa Terminals Subdivision: Area, Hurdman (Mile 85.9) via Ottawa Union Station and Hull, Que. to Ottawa West (Mile 91.6).

Board Order	Date	Mileage	Restriction	Operative Nature
80682	Jan. 23/53	89.11	10 m.p.h.	Over St. Florence st., Hull, Que.
82352	Oct. 14/53	89.16	10 m.p.h.	Over Henri st., Hull, Que.
67101	Mar. 5/46	89.30	10 m.p.h.	Over St. Hyacinthe st., Hull, Que.
Statutory	June 6/25	89.27	10 m.p.h.	Over St. Redempteur st., Hull, Que.

Lachute Subdivision: Area, Hull East (Mile 117.9) to Mile 99.0 east of Thurso, Que.

Board Order	Date	Mileage	Restriction	Operative Nature
76759	June 11/59	100.1	20 m.p.h.	Applies to westward movements over public crossing at grade.
81166	Nov. 29/52	111.91	10 m.p.h.	Amended to 30 m.p.h. by B.O. 99490
99490	Oct. 19/59	111.91	30 m.p.h.	Over Main st. crossing Gatineau, Que.

Maniwaki Subdivision: Area, Hull (Mile 0.0) to Mile 25.0 south of Farrellton, Que.

Board Order	Date	Mileage	Restriction	Operative Nature
76067	Feb. 10/51	22.9	10 m.p.h.	Over highway in village of Alcove.

Waltham Subdivision: Area, Wamo (Mile 0.0) to Wyman (Mile 33.7)

Board Order	Date	Mileage	Restriction	Operative Nature
Statutory	Aug. 8/24	7.7	10 m.p.h.	Over Lake st., Aylmer, Que.

Note: Railway subdivision mileage at boundaries of national capital region are approximate only and were scaled from map of Ottawa and national capital region, 1963 edition, published by the information and historical division of the national capital commission.

"Statutory" shown under board order designates speed restrictions imposed under the Railway Act.

IMMIGRATION AND EMIGRATION, 1963

Question No. 295—Mr. Webb:

1. What was the total immigration to Canada in 1963?
2. What was the total emigration from Canada in 1963?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. 93,151.

2. Canada does not exercise any form of exit control over persons departing from this country and, consequently, there is no way of determining precisely how many people leave Canada to take up permanent residence in other countries.

Emigration from Canada for 1963 is estimated at 76,000 persons.

ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM, ALBERTA

Question No. 297—Mr. Lambert:

1. What has been the participation of the province of Alberta in the road to resources program, since its inception?
2. What has been the amount of the federal contribution to the program with respect to the province of Alberta?
3. What is the location of the roads built under this program in Alberta and the cost of each in total and to the federal government?
4. Has there ever been a submission by the province of Alberta under this program for a road from High Level, Alberta, to Fort Smith, N.W.T., via Wood Buffalo national park and, if so, when?

Mr. Laing: 1. Information forwarded by the province indicates a total of $13,447,717.

2. $6,596,382 (to February 29, 1964).

3.

Location	Estimated total cost	Total expenditure reported to date	Federal share to date
	$	$	$
High level, west boundary of Wood Buffalo national park	3,380,000	943,038	471,519
Grimshaw, N.W.T. boundary (reconstruction)	17,000,000	12,504,679	6,124,763

Surveys: (a) 1957: Preliminary survey—Peace Point to west boundary $72,000; (b) 1958-1960: Location survey, Pine Lake,—Peace Point, west boundary $170,000.

Construction: (a) 1958: Right of way clearing, Peace Point to west boundary $462,000; (b) 1958-1959: Completion right of way clearing Peace Point—west boundary $139,000; (c) 1961: Right of way clearing and clean-up, Pine Lake to Peace Point, $25,000 (completed); (d) 1961: Grading and gravelling, Pine Lake to Peace Point, $315,000 (completed).

2. Yes. Under the roads to resources agreement with the province, December 23, 1959, the federal government agreed to share, on a 50-50 basis, the cost of constructing the 115-mile road from the Mackenzie highway at High Level to the west boundary of the park, if this could be done within the total expenditures envisaged in the agreement. To date the province has constructed 34 miles of road, starting at High Level, and cleared an additional 39 miles of right of way.

4. No, although the road from High Level to the park boundary is designed to connect with a partly constructed park road to achieve this ultimate result.

WOOD BUFFALO PARK ACCESS ROAD

Question No. 298—Mr. Lambert:

1. Have any survey work and road allowance clearing been done with respect to either a forest access road or a road to resources in Wood Buffalo national park and, if so, when was this work done and at what cost?
2. Were there discussions and/or correspondence with the government of the province of Alberta with respect to connecting links or extensions to such a road or roads beyond the limits of the park to existing provincial highway connections and, if so, when and what were the results thereof?

Mr. Laing: 1. No. All roads in the park have been constructed as development roads or park administrative roads. A development road from Fort Smith to the west boundary of the park has been under construction and is in use as a winter road. Expenditures to date are:

Questions

R.C.M.P. SPACE IN MUNICIPAL BUILDING, TERRACE, B.C.

Question No. 300—Mr. Howard:

Has the R.C.M. Police, any of its officers or personnel, or anyone on behalf of the R.C.M. Police raised any objections or complaints or made any observations or reports concerning space or the location thereof in the presently being built municipal building at Terrace, B.C.?

Mr. Favreau: No objections or complaints have been raised, however, a number of observations and reports have been made concerning space or the location thereof.

REFUSAL OF REMISSIONS, B.C. PENITENTIARY

Question No. 301—Mr. Howard:

1. For the month of September 1963 was any inmate in the B.C. penitentiary notified that, after a review of the conduct, industry and attitude of the said inmate, he had failed to earn the possible three days remission for that month and, if so, how many said inmates were so notified?

2. Without disclosing the names of the said inmates, what were the reasons in each case for the failure to earn the said remission?

Mr. Favreau: 1. Sixty two inmates of the British Columbia penitentiary failed to earn the possible three days remission for the month of September, 1963. All inmates were so notified.

2. (a) Twenty eight inmates failed to earn three days remission because of their lack of industry at work or because of their poor conduct. This decision was taken by the institutional grading board. (b) Thirty two inmates failed to earn three days remission by reason of dissociation or because of disciplinary offences having been committed by them. (c) Two inmates failed to earn three days remission because they escaped from the William Head institution.

REDUCTION OF AIR FARES

Question No. 314—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What stand did Trans-Canada Air Lines adopt during the negotiations of I.A.T.A. for the reduction of air fares?

2. What decisions were reached by Trans-Canada Air Lines in this regard?

3. Did the government make representations to other Canadian air carriers, or did it suggest to those companies a policy with respect to the I.A.T.A. negotiations?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. T.C.A. advocated a substantial lowering of basic fares.

2. Traffic conferences of the International Air Transport Association operate under a procedure whereby fares adopted must have the unanimous approval of all member carriers operating in the area affected. The fare proposals of T.C.A. were not acceptable, and in the final analysis T.C.A. agreed to fares involving a lesser reduction. These fares will become effective April 1.

[Mr. Laing.]

3. The air transport board, consulted with Canadian Pacific Airlines and Trans-Canada Air Lines prior to and during the course of fare negotiations, and told the carriers the board would not approve new rates unless they represented a downward revision of the existing ones.

[Text]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—FRENCH TEACHER IN OTTAWA

Question No. 320—Mr. Fisher:

1. Does the department of northern affairs employ a full time teacher of French in Ottawa and, if so (a) when was this arrangement introduced (b) what is the statute or regulation and the vote to which this expense is charged?

2. What person in northern affairs hired the teacher and what were the arrangements made with the civil service commission?

Mr. Laing: 1. Yes; (a) July 1, 1963. (b) Employed under the teaching staff regulations (P.C. 1960-25/1282 of 22/9/60); expenses charged to vote 1, Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

2. Employed by authority of the minister following the approval of treasury board. Teaching positions have been excluded from the Civil Service Act on recommendation of the civil service commission under section 74 of the act.

*C.B.C. PROGRAM "VIEWPOINT"—COMMENTATORS

Question No. 323—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Who is responsible for the choice of commentators on the C.B.C. television program "Viewpoint"?

2. Are commentators chosen by appointment, or do they request the opportunity to speak on a subject?

3. Is the choice of the subject matter used on the program suggested to the commentator?

4. What are the bases which determine a commentator's qualifications to express his or her point of view on a particular subject?

5. Is the script of any commentary edited by anyone prior to its presentation on television?

Mr. Stewart: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. The selection of commentators, as of participants in all other programs, is the responsibility of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as a whole. However, the series referred to is in the program area of public affairs, and speakers are invited by members of the public affairs department, under the general direction of the management and program direction of the network.

2. Commentators are chosen and invited to speak by the C.B.C. Commentators sometimes make suggestions to the C.B.C., and the C.B.C. sometimes accepts these suggestions.

3. In general, yes. The choice of subject matter is the responsibility of the corporation. It is usually suggested to the commentator in broad terms, and may be modified through discussion with him. It is also common for unsolicited commentaries to be received by recording from abroad under circumstances where no prior discussion is possible with the commentator. In such cases the corporation decides whether or not to make use of the commentaries as they stand, having regard both to the subject and to the quality of the material.

4. The commentator's knowledge of the subject and his general reputation and ability as a broadcaster.

5. Yes, all scripts are subject to editing by the C.B.C. for style, timing, and to ensure that the scripts meet the corporation's standard of fair comment and that no breach of the law is involved. No attempt is made to influence the point of view expressed by the commentator.

*"VIEWPOINT" COMMENTATORS YVON TURCOT AND RON COLLISTER

Question No. 324—Mr. Korchinski:

1. For what reason was Yvon Turcot chosen for the telecast "Viewpoint", as carried by the C.B.C. on March 3, 1964?

2. What were his qualifications and where was he employed, or in what capacity did he act in the last 10 years?

3. Was the subject matter of his talk known to any officials of the C.B.C. prior to delivery?

4. Was Ron Collister, who appeared on "Viewpoint" on March 4, requested to appear, and was the subject matter of his talk suggested to him by the C.B.C. or any government official or minister of the crown?

Mr. Stewart: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Because the C.B.C. judged him able to give expression to a point of view which was relevant to a matter which was being publicly debated at the time.

2. Employed for the last ten years in newspaper, radio and other related fields.

3. Yes.

4. Yes. The subject matter was suggested by the C.B.C.; not by any government official or minister of the crown.

OWNER OF MACDONALD BUILDING, OTTAWA

Question No. 326—Mr. Marcoux:

1. Who is the owner of the Macdonald building located on Slater street between Metcalfe and O'Connor streets?

2. If the said building is owned by a company, what are the names and addresses of its directors?

3. What is the duration of the lease entered into by the federal government?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. Metcalfe Realty Company Limited.

2. Thomas G. Fuller, 313 Acadia rd., Rockcliffe, Ont.; W. O. Varette, 444 Mansfield ave., Ottawa, Ont.; W. S. Burnside, Honeygables, R.R. No. 5, Ottawa, Ont.

3. Eight years starting January 1, 1964.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE—EMPLOYMENT OF UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

Question No. 332—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. For what reasons are university students who are residents of the provinces of Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, and Manitoba ineligible for employment under the civil service of Canada as customs excise officers—casual under competition 64-2001?

2. Are there any summer positions as customs excise officers for which residents of the three provinces may apply?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am advised by the civil service commission.

1. Competitions to recruit university students for casual employment as customs excise officers are advertised only in provinces where the Department of National Revenue anticipates and reports that summer casual help will be required. The advertising pattern is in accordance with the provisions of section 35 of the Civil Service Act. A locality preference (within each province concerned) is also indicated on the competition poster.

2. The Department of National Revenue has not reported any need for casual help in this category in the provinces of Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland or Manitoba.

C.N.R. RUN THROUGH PROGRAM

Question No. 333—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the management of the C.N.R. making plans to implement the run through program proposed some time ago and then suspended and, if so, when will this program begin?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Canadian National Railways advise that this is a matter of internal operation of the railway, and that whenever such implementation is contemplated discussions will be held with the union representatives at the appropriate time.

LIVERPOOL HARBOUR, N.S.—DREDGING

Question No. 338—Mr. Crouse:

Will the Minister of Public Works give immediate consideration to dredging Liverpool harbour in Queens county, Nova Scotia in order to provide adequate channels for the large fishing draggers and commercial ships presently using this port?

Mr. Deschatelets: The necessity for dredging Liverpool harbour is reviewed periodically and maintenance dredging is carried out whenever required. Arrangements are being made for an up to date survey.

Questions

*DAUPHIN, MAN.—DESIGNATION AS DEPRESSED AREA

Question No. 339—Mr. Forbes:

Has Dauphin, Manitoba been designated a depressed area and, if so, what steps are being taken to alleviate the unemployment situation there?

Mr. Byrne: No. The Dauphin local office area of the national employment service is not among the 35 areas that have been designated as development areas.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING FUND

Question No. 349—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What have been the various increases or decreases in the C.M.H.C. fund since its inception showing (a) amount (b) date?
2. What was the amount of the original fund?
3. What is the present amount in the fund?

Answer:

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

MORTGAGE INSURANCE FUND

CONSOLIDATED STATEMENT OF THE RESERVES FOR EACH YEAR FROM 1954 TO 1963*

	1954	1955	1956	1957	1958	1959	1960	1961	1962	1963	Total
	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$
Fees and premiums received	2,389,850	9,237,250	9,839,746	7,278,911	13,816,071	13,146,403	8,456,279	10,970,952	11,576,518	9,868,191	96,580,171
Net income from securities and other assets	5,474	151,935	521,573	940,144	1,499,812	2,254,484	3,058,039	3,201,651	3,687,228	3,966,334	19,286,674
Real estate acquired on claims	—	—	—	38,185	62,130	275,336	1,496,596	9,840,791	9,714,641	12,807,854	34,235,533
	2,395,324	9,389,185	10,361,319	8,257,240	15,378,013	15,676,223	13,010,914	24,013,394	24,978,387	26,642,379	150,102,378
Deduct: Claims paid and legal expenses	—	—	—	38,185	62,130	275,336	1,496,596	9,840,791	9,714,641	12,807,854	34,235,533
	2,395,324	9,389,185	10,361,319	8,219,055	15,315,883	15,400,887	11,514,318	14,172,603	15,263,746	13,834,525	115,866,845

* The Mortgage Insurance Fund was established when the National Housing Act, 1954, was assented to on March 18, 1954.

 As at December 31, 1963, the contingent liability of the Mortgage Insurance Fund was $4,499,000,000.

Questions

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, P.E.I.

Question No. 352—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. Have suitable sites been obtained for new post offices in Crapaud, North Rustico, and Mount Stewart, Prince Edward Island and, if so (a) what was the cost of the site in each case, and (b) from whom was it purchased?
2. What is the target date for completion of construction in each case?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. A suitable site has been acquired at Crapaud, Prince Edward Island. (a) $1,000. (b) Mr. A. P. Simmons. Sites have not been acquired at North Rustico or Mount Stewart.

2. Crapaud—late in April, 1964.

TRENTON, N.S., AIRPORT IMPROVEMENTS

Question No. 357—Mr. MacEwan:

Are improvements to be made to the airport at Trenton, Pictou county, Nova Scotia, during the year 1964-65 and, if so (a) what amount is to be expended, and (b) what do the improvements include?

Mr. Pickersgill: The department has no plans for improvements to the airport at Trenton, Pictou county, Nova Scotia, during the year 1964-65.

MILITIA TRAINING TIME

Question No. 358—Mr. MacEwan:

1. What was the yearly allotment for each individual militia soldier in each army command in Canada for the past training season?
2. What is the present allotment of training time for each individual militia soldier in each army command in Canada?

Answer: 1 and 2. The number of days for which militia soldiers may receive pay for training time is at the discretion of general officers commanding within the limits of funds alloted to each command. The maximum number of days training for which pay may be granted is as follows: (a) militia group commanders, unit commanders and quartermasters, 50 days; (b) seconds in command, adjutants, training officers and grade 1 staff, officers at militia group headquarters, 45 days; (c) all other officers and men, 40 days; (d) student militia, 55 days.

Where circumstances warrant an individual may be granted up to 70 days pay as a special case on authority of the general officer commanding.

The above restrictions do not apply in the event of special training programs. In all cases pay in excess of 70 days will be approved by general officers commanding and must be within the limits of funds allotted.

Seven days summer training plus travelling time is authorized for the average militiaman and is within the maximum number of days training allowed. Members of the Canadian women's army corps are granted 14 days.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, PICTOU COUNTY, N.S.

Question No. 359—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Have sites been secured for all, or any of the post offices to be constructed at Scotsburn, Merigomish, Thorburn, Hopewell and Eureka, in Pictou county, Nova Scotia?
2. If properties have been secured for any, or all of the sites, what was the amount paid for each, and were alternative bids secured?
3. When will construction commence on these post offices and what is the expected completion date?
4. If the site has not been secured in any of these locations, is it the intention of the government to continue its efforts to secure same, or to postpone the project?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. A site for a post office has been secured at Merigomish. Sites have not been acquired at Scotsburn, Thorburn, Hopewell or Eureka.

2. Part of the site at Merigomish is now being expropriated from Mrs. F. Smith for an agreed consideration of $350. The remainder is being acquired from the department of highways of the province of Nova Scotia for an agreed consideration of $35. The selected site was considered along with others but no alternate bids were secured.

3. The contract for the post office at Merigomish has been awarded. It is scheduled for completion in May, 1964.

4. Where sites have not been secured the projects have been deferred.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, COMPTON-FRONTENAC CONSTITUENCY, QUE.

Question No. 361—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Did the Department of Public Works commence construction of any post offices in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac during 1962-63, and, if so, how many post offices were involved?
2. Of this total, how many post offices were completed, where were they built, how much did each cost, who was the contractor, and how many men worked on each project?
3. How many post offices have not yet been completed, where are they situated, what is their estimated cost, and who are the contractors?
4. What were the names of all the tenderers for each project in 1962-63, what was the amount of each tender, and what were the reasons for choosing the successful tenderer in each case?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. No.

2, 3 and 4. Not applicable.

[Text]

WHARF REPAIRS, ARICHAT, N.S.

Question No. 363—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Have tenders been called for a wharf repair job at Arichat, Nova Scotia, and, if so, what were the names and amounts of all those who tendered?
2. Has a contract been awarded and, if so, to whom?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Yes; G. J. Forgeron, West Arichat, Richmond county, Nova Scotia, $10,600.

2. Contract has not yet been awarded.

C.N.R. DELIVERY SERVICE, SOUTHAMPTON, ONT.

Question No. 367—Mr. Loney:

1. What is the name of the appointee to the C.N.R. delivery service in Southampton, Ontario?
2. What is the remuneration paid the appointee?
3. How many applications for the appointment were received by the C.N.R.?
4. What are the names of the applicants and what was the remuneration requested by each applicant?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Canadian National Railways advise that it has not been the practice of the management to disclose information from personal files of officers and employees, and the sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping has supported this position in the past. Management advises that appointments of officials are made upon a judgment evaluation of the qualifications and experience of the individuals concerned.

WINTER WORKS, COMPTON-FRONTENAC CONSTITUENCY, QUE.

Question No. 368—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What municipalities in the constituency of Compton-Frontenac participated in the winter works program?
2. What amount has the government granted to each municipality and what was the nature of the works undertaken in each case?
3. What was the approximate number of workers involved in each case and what salaries were they paid?
4. How many unemployed persons were able to find work on each of these projects?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. See statement following.

2. See statement following.

3. This information will not be available until detailed claims have been received.

4. This information will not be available until detailed claims have been received.

Province of Quebec				Electoral District of Compton-Frontenac
Number of project	Municipality	Description		Estimated number of men employed	Estimated payroll cost during period	Estimated Fed. Govt. payroll costs
					$	$
Que. 88	Audet	Road improvements		90	7,500	4,500
Que. 135	Bury (Rural)	Road and sidewalk construction		35	10,000	5,000
Que. 386	Cookshire (Town)	Installation of sewers, improvements to garage		20	12,000	6,000
Que. 2404	Cookshire (Town)	Construction of vault in town hall and clearing road		10	5,000	2,500
Que. 1718	Compton (Township)	Branch cutting on road sides		12	5,000	2,500
Que. 1716	Compton (Village)	Installation of water main		10	25,000	12,500
Que. 1209	Compton Station	Brushing along roads		10	3,000	1,500
Que. 1454	Ditton (Township)	Gravelling roads and digging ditches		50	14,300	7,150
Que. 1149	East Angus (Town)	Improvements to garage and municipal buildings		240	140,915	70,457
Que. 2069	Eaton (Township)	Road improvements		15	2,000	1,000
Que. 854	Emberton (Township)	Digging ditches		30	1,200	600
Que. 517	Frontenac (Parish)	Installation of sewers		40	12,000	7,200
Que. 516	Gayhurst (Parish)	Brush cutting and digging ditches along roads		40	7,000	4,200
Que. 842	Hampden (Township)	Brush cutting along roads, construction of culverts		25	8,000	4,000
Que. 2000	Hereford (Canton)	Brushing along roads		20	2,000	1,000
Que. 538	La Guadeloupe (Village)	Road improvements, fence construction		35	21,250	12,750
Que. 1836	La Guadeloupe (Village)	Construction of a fire station		40	25,625	15,375
Que. 1351	Lac Megantic (Town)	Improvements to dam, construction of retaining wall		75	68,000	40,800
Que. 1434	Lac Megantic (Town)	Installation of water mains and sewers		25	13,000	7,800
Que. 2412	Lac Megantic (Town)	Construction of retaining wall		80	30,000	18,000
Que. 1390	La Patrie (Village)	Street construction		10	1,000	500
Que. 754	Lingwick (Township)	Moving telephone lines		60	9,000	4,500
Que. 458	Marston (Township)	Road improvements		20	6,000	3,600
Que. 1428	Martinville	Road construction		8	1,600	800
Que. 431	Milan (Parish)	Road improvements		40	10,000	6,000
Que. 453	Nantes	Installation of sewers, construction of reservoirs		100	25,000	15,000
Que. 454	Nantes	Digging ditches, construction of sidewalks		10	2,400	1,440
Que. 710	Notre-Dame-des-Bois	Improvements to fire station and skating rink		35	15,000	9,000
Que. 839	Piopolis (Parish)	Construction of sidewalks, digging ditches		25	6,500	3,900
Que. 2183	Sawyerville (Village)	Improvements to reservoirs		10	4,400	2,200
Que. 66	Scotstown (Town)	Digging ditches, improvements to swimming pool		25	7,000	3,500
Que. 67	Scotstown (Town)	Installation of water main		12	2,600	1,300
Que. 546	Val Racine (Parish)	Road improvements, completion of municipal garage		50	10,000	6,000
Que. 790	Westbury (Township)	Construction of fence and culverts		20	2,000	1,000
Que. 1265	Winslow South (Parish)	Construction of sidewalks, digging ditches		30	3,500	2,100
Que. 783	Woburn (Parish)	Development of playground, improvements to municipal building		20	3,950	1,975
Que. 440	Ste. Cecile-de-Whitton (Parish)	Road improvements		60	7,000	4,200
Que. 939	St Edwidge-de-Clifton (Township)	Installation of sewers		30	8,000	4,000
Que. 1494	St. Hermenegilde	Brushing along roads		25	4,500	2,250
Que. 1306	St. Robert Bellarmin (Parish)	Digging ditches, installation of culverts		160	38,000	22,800
Que. 2167	St. Robert Bellarmin (Parish)	Road construction		85	25,000	15,000
Que. 437	St. Romain (Village)	Digging ditches		15	4,000	2,400
Que. 751	St. Sebastien (Parish)	Brushing along roads		15	3,500	2,100

FISHERIES BIOLOGICAL STATION, GRAND RAPIDS, MAN.

Question No. 370—Mr. Stefanson:

Has the federal government received a request from the province of Manitoba to establish a biological station at Grand Rapids, Manitoba to deal with freshwater fisheries in western Canada and, if so, what action has been taken or what action is planned?

Answer: No.

CLOSING OF U.S. REFUELING BASE, R.C.A.F. STATION NAMAO

Question No. 371—Mr. Lambert:

1. What is the proposed date of closing of the S.A.C. refueling base at R.C.A.F. station Namao, the intention of closing having recently been announced by the Minister of National Defence?

2. What consideration has been given to the redeployment of civilian personnel employed at the said refueling base?

3. Has any decision been reached as yet as to an alternative use for the building and facilities used for the refueling base and, if so, what is this decision?

4. If not, when is such a decision anticipated?

Answer: 1. July 1, 1964.

2. All employees will be interviewed by personnel officers of the Department of National Defence to determine their availability for transfer beyond the immediate locality, in the event that they cannot be placed in employment locally. All employees will be interviewed and registered by the national employment service. The civil service commission and government departments in the area will be provided with particulars affecting all employees scheduled for lay-off. Every effort will be made to find other employment for those persons and these efforts will continue after the closing of the strategic air command refueling operations at R.C.A.F. station Namao. The employees for whom other employment cannot be found will be placed on an official lay-off list and will be given preference in appointment to future vacancies with the government service.

3. Title to the buildings and fixed facilities which will be vacated by the S.A.C. detachment will remain with the Department of National Defence. The subsequent use to be made of these facilities will be determined in the light of over-all defence requirements taking into consideration recent organizational changes which have taken place in the Edmonton area.

4. It is anticipated that a decision on reallocation of the buildings and facilities will be reached either before or shortly after the close out date of July 1.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE AND ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

Question No. 372—Mr. Boulanger:

1. How many persons in Canada received unemployment insurance benefits during October 1962?

Questions

2. How many persons in Canada received unemployment assistance payments during October 1963?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. There is no figure available of the number of persons receiving unemployment insurance benefit in any month. The number of active claimants, i.e. the number of persons claiming benefits in Canada at October 31, 1962, was 244,140.

2. The Unemployment Assistance Act permits the provinces six months in which to submit claims, and thus the figures for October 1963 are incomplete; however, up to March 3, 1964, payments for 478,535 persons, including dependents, had been included in reimbursement claims submitted under the unemployment assistance agreements for October. The last month for which complete returns are available is July 1963, when the number included in claims was 650,557.

CONSTRUCTION OF PENAL INSTITUTION, NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 375—Mr. Rheaume:

1. Does the government intend to proceed with the construction of a minimum security penal institution in the Northwest Territories and, if so, where is the intended location of such institution?

2. Have the plans and specifications of the project been completed and, if so, when is it intended to call for public tenders on the job?

3. What are the proposed dates of commencement of construction and completion of the project?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Yes; at Yellowknife.

2. The plans and specifications for this project have not yet been started but it is expected they will be completed in time to call tenders this fall.

3. It is anticipated that construction will start in late 1964 with completion scheduled for late 1965.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS—RENOVATION OF EAST BLOCK

Question No. 376—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to renovating the east block of the parliament buildings and, if so, to what extent?

Mr. Deschatelets: Consideration is being given to making necessary alterations at the appropriate time.

WINTER CONSTRUCTION BONUS APPLICATIONS, LAKE ST. JOHN COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 379—Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John):

How many applications for $500 winter house construction bonus have been received from the county of Lake St. John?

Mr. MacEachen: Twenty three applications for the $500 winter house construction bonus have been received from the county of Lake St. John. Of these one application was found ineligible for the incentive payment at the time first inspection was carried out by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

AIR TRANSPORT LICENCE TO QUEBECAIR

Question No. 382—Mr. Marcoux:

1. Does the Minister of Transport or the board of transport commissioners intend to award Quebecair exclusive rights of air transportation between Sept Iles, Baie Comeau, Saguenay, Quebec city and Montreal?

2. Do they intend to enable that company to operate exclusively between the Magdalen islands and Montreal, via Chandler?

[Translation]

Mr. Pickersgill: 1 and 2. Quebecair has made no applications to the air transport board for exclusive rights between the points indicated, and in consequence no consideration has been given to the matter.

[Text]

GOLDEN HAWKS ACROBATIC TEAM

Question No. 384—Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke):

With reference to the decision of the government to discontinue the operations of the Golden Hawks aerobatic flying team (a) what were the reasons for the team's disbandment (b) where and how many times did the Golden Hawks perform after their formation (c) what was the original cost of each of the Golden Hawk's Sabre jet aircraft and the Red Knight T-33 trainer (d) what was the annual maintenance and performance cost of the above aircraft for (i) fuel (ii) parts (iii) other specified costs (e) what is the anticipated saving by their disbandment both in direct detail and indirect detail (f) who were the pilots last year and what was their rank and pay (g) who was responsible for their maintenance and, if the R.C.A.F., what were the names, rank and pay of personnel employed (h) in what other countries are Sabre jet aircraft currently operational?

Answer: (a) The reasons for the disbandment of the Golden Hawks were given in detail in a statement by the Minister of National Defence on February 7, 1964. The principal reasons were the necessity to use the expenditures required to operate the team for more vital defence needs, and the fact that the F-86 Sabre aircraft flown by the Hawks is no longer in operational service in the R.C.A.F. and will soon be difficult and costly to maintain.

(b) Since the formation of the Golden Hawks aerobatic team in May 1959 they have performed 317 times in Canada and the United States.

(c) The original cost of each of the F-86 Sabre jet aircraft was $289,000 and the Red Knight T-33 trainer was $165,000.

(d) (i) Fuel and oil, $146,000; (ii) spares, repair and overhaul, $259,000; (iii) base support, $84,000.

(e) (i) military personnel cost, $289,000; (ii) fuel and oil, $122,000; (iii) spares, repair and overhaul, $230,000; (iv) base support costs, $71,000; total, $712,000.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

(f) Wing Commander R. J. Hatton, commanding officer; Squadron Leader J. L. Hubbard, team leader; Flight Lieutenant L. W. Grip; Flight Lieutenant D. J. Barker; Flight Lieutenant C. B. Lang; Flight Lieutenant A. Young; Flight Lieutenant E. J. L. McKeogh; Flight Lieutenant N. J. Garriock.

The annual pay cost of these eight pilots was $72,608; the pilots for the Red Knight aircraft were provided from within training command resources on an as required basis.

(g) The R.C.A.F. was responsible for the maintenance of the Golden Hawks. The maintenance force consisted of Flight Lieutenant C. G. Peterson, 1 flight sergeant, 4 sergeants, 14 corporals and 29 aircraftmen with a combined annual pay cost of $216,199. The Red Knight aircraft was maintained by the addition of 1 sergeant, 2 corporals and 9 aircraftmen positions to the training command establishment at an annual pay cost of $50,724.

(h) Effective December 1963.

Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Colombia, Denmark, Ethiopia, Formosa, Italy, Iran, Greece, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Philippines, Peru, Pakistan, Spain, South Korea, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Thailand, United States of America, Venezuela, West Germany, Yugoslavia.

CLOSING OF RADAR STATIONS, QUEBEC

Question No. 385—Mr. Laprise:

1. To what extent does the government intend to help the civilian employees who will be affected by the closing of the radar station in (a) Parent (b) St. Sylvestre?

2. What departments will be called upon to cooperate in order to permit the government to achieve the desired results with regard to the assistance it wishes to give to the civilian employees affected by the closing of the radar station in (a) Parent (b) St. Sylvestre?

[Translation]

Answer: 1 and 2. All employees will be interviewed by personnel officers of the Department of National Defence to determine their availability for transfer beyond the immediate locality, in the event that they cannot be placed in employment locally. All employees will be interviewed and registered by the national employment service. The civil service commission and government departments in the area will be provided with particulars affecting all employees scheduled for lay-off. Every effort will be made to find other employment for these persons and these efforts will continue after the stations at Parent and St. Sylvestre are closed down. The employees for whom other employment cannot be found will be placed on an official lay-off list and will be given preference in appointment to future vacancies with the government service.

[Text]

APPLICATION FOR AIRPORT, CHIBOUGAMAU, QUE.

Question No. 386—Mr. Laprise:

Has the municipal corporation of Chibougamau, Chapleau county, applied for a permit to operate an airport in the vicinity of that town and, if so, what position has the government taken with regard to the application and what assistance will it give the town in this matter?

[Translation]

Answer: Yes, an application for an airport licence for an airfield on Hamel island was received on August 22, 1963. At the time of application the airfield was not sufficiently developed to meet the standard required for public use. The town indicated that the necessary improvements were to be undertaken and the the department would be advised when the work had been completed. Prior to receipt of the application for an airport licence, officers of the department visited municipal authorities and explained the safety and technical requirements which must be met before the airfield could be licensed. In this connection written guidance material was also presented to the town of Chibougamau for their assistance. To date no notification has been received from the municipality advising that the necessary improvements have been completed.

[Text]

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION ACT—
AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC

Question No. 387—Mr. Laprise:

Has the federal government come to an agreement with the province of Quebec in respect of the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Act and in respect of the co-ordination of rehabilitation services and, if so (a) when was the agreement reached (b) for how long is it to remain in effect (c) what are the terms of the agreement?

Mr. MacEachen: No. (a), (b) and (c) not applicable.

EXPROPRIATION OF POST OFFICE SITES, N.S.

Question No. 391—Mr. Coates:

1. What legal steps were taken by the government to institute expropriation proceedings in connection with the securing of sites for the Westchester and Joggins post offices?

2. What legal firm was employed to institute the proceedings in question?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Sites for post offices at Westchester station and Joggins, Nova Scotia, were expropriated on February 13, 1964. In both cases there was mutual agreement and the owners consented to expropriation to assure immediate quick clear title.

2. At Westchester station the agent employed for the Minister of Justice was Mr. R. F. McCunn, barrister and solicitor, River Philip, Nova Scotia. At Joggins the agent for the Minister of Justice was Mr. A. R. Lusby, barrister and solicitor, 39 Victoria street, Amherst, Nova Scotia.

WHARF REPAIRS, WALLACE, N.S.

Question No. 392—Mr. Coates:

When will tenders be called for wharf repairs at Wallace, Nova Scotia and what will be the nature of such repairs?

Mr. Deschatelets: Tenders have been advertised and are due April 15; the work will involve construction of an ell on the outer end of the existing wharf; renewal of the decking over the outer portion of the existing structure; and the paving of the approach section of the wharf.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION BIDS,
WESTCHESTER, N.S.

Question No. 395—Mr. Coates:

1. Who was the low bidder for construction of the post office at Westchester and what was the amount of the tender submitted?

2. Were alternative bids received and, if so, from whom and in what amounts?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. MacBurnie Bros. Limited, Tatamagouche, N.S.—$10,996.87.

2. Yes. D. H. Ryan, Springhill, N.S.—$12,500; A. N. Bayers Contracting Ltd., Halifax, N.S. —$12,686.

EMPLOYMENT ON POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION,
WESTCHESTER, N.S.

Question No. 396—Mr. Coates:

How many residents of the Westchester area have been employed in the construction of the new post office for the area?

Mr. Deschatelets: Three.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION EMPLOYMENT,
JOGGINS, N.S.

Question No. 397—Mr. Coates:

How many residents of the Joggins area have been employed in the construction of the new post office for the area?

Mr. Deschatelets: Three.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION BIDS, JOGGINS, N.S.

Question No. 398—Mr. Coates:

1. Who was the low bidder for construction of the post office at Joggins and what was the amount of the tender submitted?

2. Were alternative bids received and, if so, from whom and in what amounts?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. K. P. Allen Limited, Amherst, N.S., $11,135.

2. Yes. Sherman MacKay, Amherst, N.S., $15,978.75.

*C.B.C. PRODUCTION "THE OPEN GRAVE"

Question No. 403—Mr. Rapp:

1. Has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation taped for screening on Easter Sunday, March 29, a show, titled "The Open Grave"?

Questions

2. How large is the cast for this show?
3. What was the cost of production?
4. Is this show a satire or caricature of the resurrection of our Lord?
5. Was any part of it produced by night in Mount Pleasant cemetery in Toronto?
6. For what purpose is this play being placed before the Canadian people?

Mr. Stewart: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has recorded on film and videotape a production entiled "The Open Grave" for showing on March 25, not March 29.

2. The cast numbers 167, of whom 137 are extras.

3. It has not been customary to require the corporation to give such information as it could affect the corporation in the competitive business in which it is engaged.

4. No. The program is neither a satire, nor a caricature of the resurrection of our Lord.

5. Yes.

6. The program is an allegorical account of the execution of a leader and the disappearance of his body. It is produced as an actuality broadcast as though the events were happening here and now. The theme is considered by the corporation to be a suitable one for the Easter season.

[Later]

Mr. Rapp: On a point of order Mr. Speaker, it was stated in the answer given to question No. 403 that the C.B.C. does not disclose the cost of production in such cases, but I should like to point out that the cost of production was announced this morning on the radio.

GOLD SUBSIDIES TO MANITOU-BARVUE MINE, VAL D'OR, QUE.

Question No. 408—Mr. Caouette:

Does the Manitou-Barvue mine, of Val d'Or, receive subsidies from the federal government for the production of gold and, if so, what was the amount of these subsidies for each of the last five years?

Mr. Benidickson: Manitou-Barvue Mines Limited has not been eligible at any time for assistance payments under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

WHARF IMPROVEMENTS, NEW CAMPBELLTON, N.S.

Question No. 412—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

What are the plans of the department concerned for wharf improvements at New Campbellton and how soon will this work commence?

Mr. Deschatelets: Minor improvements consisting of the placing of sheathing will be carried out. This work is scheduled to follow the lobster fishing season in July.

[Mr. Rapp.]

TENDERS FOR C-8 TRUCKS

Question No. 414—Mr. Danforth:

1. How many tenders were received by the Post Office Department under file 54A-5/8 (64/65) for 150 C-8 trucks?
2. What was the amount of each of the tenders?
3. To which company was this contract awarded?

Mr. Nicholson: 1. Seventeen.

2. (1) $11,970; (2) $12,367.50; (3) $12,750; (4) $13,153.50; (5) $13,942.50; (6) $14,164.50; (7) $14,700; (8) $15,314.67; (9) $15,714; (10) $16,983; (11) $17,250; (12) $17,325; (13) $17,325; (14) $19,200; (15) $19,928; (16) $22,644; (17) $37,329.

3. La compagnie Normand Ltee., St. Pascal (Kamouraska Co.) P.Q. ($11,970).

SALE OF LAND AND BUILDINGS, R.C.A.F. STATION, AYLMER, ONT.

Question No. 416—Mr. Smith:

1. What was the purchase price of the land and buildings of the former R.C.A.F. station at Aylmer, Ontario, purchased by the province of Ontario from the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, and now used as a police college?
2. What was the purchase price of the land and buildings of the former R.C.A.F. station at Aylmer, Ontario, purchased by the province of Ontario from the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, and used for other purposes?

Answer: 1 and 2. Crown Assets Disposal Corporation sold 555 acres of land and 14 buildings at the former R.C.A.F. station at Aylmer, Ontario to the government of province of Ontario for $58,000 and later, at the same site, also sold to that government, five plane hangars for the sum of $18,690. The corporation does not have information on record indicating what parts of the lands and buildings are actually being utilized for a police college.

RURAL MAIL TENDERS, RIVER JOHN, N.S.

Question No. 418—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Were revised tenders called for by the Post Office Department for R.R. No. 1, River John, N.S., mail route?
2. Who was asked to submit a revised tender, and for what reason was the invitation restricted to these persons?
3. For what reason was the request for revised tenders withdrawn by the Post Office Department?

Mr. Nicholson: 1. Due to a clerical error, the two lowest tenderers were inadvertently asked to submit reduced offers. When this error was discovered, the request was withdrawn and appropriate letters of explanation were sent to the persons involved.

2. Mr. Alex E. Innis, R.R. No. 1, River John; Mrs. Verna Mae Baillie, R.R. No. 2, River John. See also No. 1 above.

3. See No. 1 above.

USE OF JP-4 JET FUEL

Question No. 419—Mr. Churchill:

1. What type of fuel is being used by T.C.A. aircraft?
2. Was JP-4 fuel used in the jet aircraft that crashed at St. Therese?
3. Are the major American air lines using JP-4 fuel?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Trans-Canada Air Lines advise as follows:

1. T.C.A. uses two types of turbine fuel in accordance with the specifications drawn up by the international air transport association and the American society for testing materials. These fuels are kerosene with a low freeze point, and a wide cut fuel known as JP-4.

2. Yes.

3. Many major air lines use both JP-4 and kerosene, as do the military services. Pan American World Airways and Trans World Airlines are the larger users.

EFFECT OF WHEAT SALES ON BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Question No. 425—Mr. Latulippe:

To what extent has the sale of Canadian wheat contributed to reduction of the national debt and the balance of international payments during the last year and, specifically, in what manner has this been achieved?

[Translation]

Answer: Wheat sales in the current accounts of the Canadian balance of payments in 1963 had an approximate value of $820 million, an increase of more than $200 million over the corresponding 1962 total. They helped reduce Canada's current account deficit from $848 million in 1962 to $521 million in 1963, together with related capital inflows (net figures).

[Text]

WHARF REPAIRS, WINNIPEG BEACH, MAN.

Question No. 434—Mr. Stefanson:

Are repairs planned for the wharf at Winnipeg Beach, Manitoba, during the fiscal year 1964-65 and, if so, what is the nature of the repairs and the estimated cost of same?

Mr. Deschatelets: Yes; extension and improvements to the breakwater wharf at an estimated cost of $14,500.

REFLECTIVE MARKINGS ON BOX CARS

Question No. 437—Mr. Mather:

1. What is the approximate number of railway box cars equipped with safety reflective markings, such as scotchlite?
2. What is the approximate number of railway box cars still to be so equipped?
3. What is the approximate annual number of railway box cars being so equipped?

Mr. Pickersgill: The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advise as follows:

Questions

1. As of December 31, 1963, a total of 31,020 cars were so equipped including approximately 1,400 tank cars.

2. Approximately 71,631.

3. Approximately 6,200 annually.

FARM MACHINERY EXPORTS TO RED CHINA

Question No. 438—Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke):

1. Are there any restrictions on the export sale of Canadian manufactured farm machinery to mainland China?
2. Are there any restrictions on Canadian manufactured farm machinery including American components?
3. If restrictions do apply to new farm machinery of Canadian manufacture with or without American components, do these restrictions apply to use farm machinery and what is the basis of any such restriction?

Answer: 1. An export permit is required to export goods to any country included in the area control list, which includes mainland China.

2. Answered by 1.

3. Whether the goods are new or used is immaterial to the permit requirement.

NATIONAL FLAG—SIGNATURES SUPPORTING RED ENSIGN

Question No. 458—Mr. Coates:

With reference to the answer given to starred question No. 54, was there an over-all total of 93,312 signatures received between April 8, 1963 and March 4, 1964 in support of the retention of the red ensign as Canada's national flag?

Mr. Lamontagne: The over-all total of 93,312 signatures was received between April 8, 1963, and February 19, 1964, the date on which question No. 54 was asked and the answer prepared.

C.B.C. TELEVISION STATION, FREDERICTON, N.B.

Question No. 460—Mr. MacRae:

Have any studies been conducted or is any consideration being given at this time to the construction of a C.B.C. television station in Fredericton, New Brunswick?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the answer is in the affirmative.

CONSTRUCTION OF NUCLEAR DETECTION AND REPORTING UNITS

Question No. 470—Mr. MacRae:

Have any discussions been held with the Pentagon relative to the construction in Canada of units of the nuclear detection and reporting system and, if so, what conclusion was reached as a result of these discussions?

Answer: Discussions have been held between Canadian and United States officials on matters of mutual concern relating to civil defence on a confidential basis. In consequence, the publication of any results of such discussion would require the consent of both the Canadian and United States governments.

CANAL REPAIRS, CHESTER, N.S.

Question No. 484—Mr. Crouse:

1. When will tenders be called for repairs to the canal at Chester, Lunenburg county, Nova Scotia?
2. What is the amount allocated by the Department of Public Works covering repairs to the canal and bridge?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. The department of highways, province of Nova Scotia, has agreed to construct the bridge and canal approaches starting in the early summer at federal expense. They have also agreed to take over the bridge and approaches as part of the provincial highway system upon completion of the work.

2. It is expected the cost will be about $25,000.

*CALGARY AIRPORT—DANGER FROM TOWERS

Question No. 500—Mr. Deachman:

Has the Minister of Transport received representations regarding the possible hazard to aircraft from high transmission towers proposed to be erected near Calgary international airport and, if so, what steps are being taken to safeguard aviation in the area?

Mr. Pickersgill: Representations have been received regarding the possible hazard to aircraft from high transmission towers proposed to be erected 12 miles south of Calgary international airport. While these do not constitute an unusual hazard, as a safeguard to aviation in the general area, the towers will be painted in alternating sections of international orange and white and lighted with red obstruction lights. As a further safety measure the location and height of these towers will be shown on appropriate aeronautical charts and a notice to airmen will be issued when construction work commences. These are the normal precautions taken in cases such as this. As this is a technical answer, sir, I may say I give it on the responsibility of my advisers.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

EFFECTS OF INSECTICIDES

Question No. 172—Mr. Matheson:

What studies have been or are being conducted by the government with respect to the effects of insecticides upon human, animal and vegetable life?

Return tabled.

[Mr. MacRae.]

PRIVILEGE

MR. RICARD—REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise before orders of the day—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is a question of privilege from the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot.

[Translation]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. On February 20 last I put on the order paper the following question:

What standards were used to determine and justify the amount of the increase granted December last to the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Mr. Alphonse Ouimet, when his salary was raised from $20,000 to $40,000 per year?

Mr. Speaker, this question has been on the order paper for more than a month and no answer has been given as yet. I am therefore asking the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) when he intends to give an answer.

[Text]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROGRAM "THE OPEN GRAVE"—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of moving the adjournment of the house, pursuant to standing order 26, to discuss a matter of public urgent concern and importance, namely the outraged religious feelings of Christians of all persuasions and faiths across Canada concerning the television show "The Open Grave", to which reference was made a moment ago in the answer given to question No. 403.

I may say that to my recollection this is the first time I have moved such a motion. According to the answer given, it is to be shown by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation later this week, during holy week, the most sacred and solemn of the Christian year. Irrespective of the answer given to the question, advance information indicates that the showing will be a flagrant, scandalous and sacrilegious insult to a majority of Canadians. I say this because clergymen and outstanding religious leaders in both the Protestant and Roman Catholic churches have so commented.

As one who believes in freedom of speech, freedom of religion and the need for the C.B.C. to be an independent body, I cannot refrain from saying that we as Christians may question whether we include in freedom a licence to malign or hold religious faith up to contempt. I say this because the C.B.C. is a public institution maintained by the people of Canada. While I have no personal knowledge of the facts connected with it, press reports indicate the show will cost Canada $50,000. That was on the radio this morning, so it must be correct.

I again emphasize this fact, that many leading clergymen of our country are deeply concerned over this particular matter. Therefore I say no more, except that this deserves to be considered by the House of Commons. Believing in freedom, it is our responsibility to ensure freedom as the portion of all our people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to determine whether there is sound and sufficient ground to adjourn the business of the house under standing order 26. As to the importance of the matter discussed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, there can be little doubt as to the general interest either for or against, but the criterion on which I have to decide this question is one that has been mentioned several times by previous speakers, namely, is there opportunity to debate this matter in an effective way?

The matter is urgent, important, and certainly of general public interest, but it does seem to me, when we are in a budget debate and when interim supply will be reached on Wednesday, that this whole matter takes on more the appearance of a grievance than of being of sufficient national urgency and importance to adjourn all the proceedings of the house at this time to carry on debate on the proposed motion. Therefore, in view of the fact that opportunity will be given this afternoon in the budget debate and in view of the fact that interim supply, I assume, will be considered by the house on Wednesday next, it seems to me there is opportunity to discuss this important matter.

In the circumstances I regret I do not think that the house should be adjourned under standing order 26.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): May I just ask one question, Mr. Speaker. Was it not said by the parliamentary secretary that this film would be shown on the 25th, which is Wednesday? It is rather late to be debating it on Wednesday when it is to be shown on that very day. Consequently I think there is urgency to consider the matter today, which is the 23rd.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, and I certainly do not wish to get into an argument or discussion with the hon. member. It is my duty to decide the matter one way or the other, and it does seem to me this is more in the nature of a grievance than a matter of sufficiently urgent public importance to adjourn the regular proceedings of the house. Therefore I must reiterate the conclusion previously stated, that I do not see sufficient urgency or importance to adjourn the house under standing order 26.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Could he inform the house if the usual consultation took place between the C.B.C. and the advisory council on religious broadcasting with respect to "The Open Grave" program? If not, why not?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that such consultations have taken place, but I will seek the information and reply to the hon. member.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could the Secretary of State tell us whether he contacted the C.B.C. authorities recently to have that program cancelled or revised in view of the protests it stirred up all across the country?

Mr. Lamontagne: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martineau: Does the Secretary of State intend to contact C.B.C. authorities on that matter before Wednesday night?

Mr. Lamontagne: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, would the minister give the house an assurance that he will make immediate inquiries of the president of the C.B.C. into the suitability of the program "The Open Grave"?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I have already said that I intend to speak to the president of the C.B.C. about this matter.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—U.S. CO-OPERATION TO AVOID INTERFERENCE WITH SHIPPING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether he has any observation to make regarding a statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on Friday, to the effect that consultations have taken place with representatives of the United States administration. I understood from the statement that there was indeed an undertaking that the United States would do its part to assure that Canadian ships on the great lakes would be protected from harassment.

Would the Prime Minister say how the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs is to be considered alongside a reported statement of the under secretary in Washington to the effect that there has been no consultation between the Canadian government and the United States administration, nor has any such undertaking been given?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, the reply of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to which my right hon. friend has referred, did state that it had been made clear that the co-operation of the United States in this matter was desirable and essential, and that he had pointed this out to the United States secretary of state in discussions which he had with him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the reply of my colleague does not seem to me to go as far as the right hon. gentleman indicated it went in his question, but it certainly would not justify the kind of statement just made in Washington, to which my right hon. friend has referred.

I can tell him, as indeed I have told the house previously, that in the difficulties of last summer in regard to the harassment of Canadian ships in United States ports on the great lakes, the United States administration did promise to co-operate in doing what it could do to bring the harassment to an end, and it did in fact co-operate in that way. I feel sure we shall get that kind of co-operation from the United States authorities again in respect to similar circumstances if those circumstances should, unhappily, occur.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): A supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister give an assurance to the house that the trustees will resist all efforts of Mr. Paul Hall to get hold of Canadian S.I.U. funds in order to take care of Hal Banks' $20,000 salary as vice president of the United States union, as guaranteed by Mr. Hall in a statement to the press?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I will be glad to draw the hon. gentleman's observations to the attention of the trustees, whom I shall be seeing later today.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Is the minister not aware that the trustees have, necessarily, to sign the cheques in the event of any moneys being expended from union funds, and does he not think the trustees have complete control over any salary that Hal Banks might receive from this union?

Mr. MacEachen: Under the terms of the trusteeship act passed by this parliament the trustees have control over the financial activities of the seafarers international union of Canada.

Mr. MacInnis: This being the situation, will the minister not draw to the attention of the trustees the view that in no circumstances should Mr. Banks receive any Canadian funds in the form of salary?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is a statement, not a question.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, that was definitely a question, and the Minister of Labour nodded agreement. I did not make any statement; I asked a question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—INQUIRIES RESPECTING PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister in a position to say when the Canadian troops in Cyprus will begin to carry out their duties as designated by the secretary general?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As the hon. member knows, the Canadian contingent of the United Nations peace force is in Cyprus at the present time and is carrying out certain duties. My colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in Geneva at the moment, where he has been discussing with the secretary general of the United Nations questions in connection with the authority which is required by that force so that it may carry out its peace keeping duties effectively. In these discussions the Secretary of State for External Affairs has gone over the whole matter with the secretary general. He is meeting U Thant again today and will be back in the house very shortly, at which time he will be in a position to make a full report to the house on this very difficult and very delicate matter.

In the meantime I should like to remind the house that all United Nations peace keeping operations have developed largely as a result of the interpretation of a mandate to meet actual requirements. The United Nations had the same temporary difficulties that are being encountered in connection with this matter when it set up a peace force in the Suez area, and again when it set up the peace force for the Congo. Ultimately, in the case of the Congo operation—and it took longer in the Congo than I think it will take in connection with the Cyprus effort—the secretary general issued a detailed set of operational procedures which dealt in particular with the right of self defence, and the right to shoot in self defence.

With its experience of peace keeping operations the United Nations is, I believe, well placed to judge what peace keeping methods should be applied in Cyprus, and it goes without saying that these methods will be the subject of consultation between the UN and the governments participating in the military operation. Those consultations are going on at the moment. They are going on, as far as Canada is concerned, between the secretary general and our Secretary of State for External Affairs. I understand that the secretary general will be in a position within a very few days to make a report to the security council in which some of these difficulties will be outlined and the solutions made known. We are in consultation with him at the moment with regard to this particular statement as well.

Mr. Nesbitt: I take it, then, from the Prime Minister's statement that in the event of any hostilities breaking out in Cyprus, it would probably be United Kingdom troops which would actually be engaged rather than Canadian troops at the present time.

Mr. Pearson: Well, the Canadian contingent of the United Nations force is engaged already in the sense that it has begun patrolling activities. In the event of hostilities breaking out the function, if any, which the Canadian contingent would perform would depend entirely on the nature of the hostilities.

I am sorry I cannot go into this matter in greater detail today. I wish I could. I am not trying to hold anything back from the house in connection with this important matter. However, I shall be in a much better position to make a fuller statement when I have had another opportunity of consulting with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, if indeed he is not back in the house to make a statement himself.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Is the Prime Minister in a position to make any statement on a reported incident involving a Canadian member of the peace force in Cyprus who wandered out of bounds and is said to have been shot at by guerrillas?

Mr. Pearson: Again, I am not in a position to deal with that matter because I am not aware of the details. I know it has been customary for a long time for soldiers, Canadian and others, to wander out of bounds, but I am not familiar with this particular incident though I would be very glad to look into it.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the Prime Minister whether any of the 7,000 British troops in Cyprus have been committed to the United Nations peace force, or whether they are still operating entirely under the terms of the Cyprus treaty. May I also ask the right hon. gentleman if the operational orders to which he referred will allow the United Nations peace keeping force to remove road blocks since it appears perfectly obvious that mechanized international patrols cannot very well travel over an island unless they have power to remove road blocks.

Mr. Pearson: As to the first question, it is my present knowledge that no United Kingdom forces as such have been allocated to the United Nations peace keeping force but that this will be taking place very shortly, that is, in the matter of a day or two.

As far as the second question is concerned, in the absence of knowledge of the detailed instructions which are now being worked out and which will be reported to the house as soon as I am in a position to do so, I cannot, of course, reply specifically. I think, however, it would be pretty obvious that if any force is to do this job it would require authority to remove road blocks or anything of that kind which would prevent it carrying out its functions.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the house whether the troops promised by Sweden and Ireland are on their way to Cyprus or about to proceed there to lend their support to the Canadian troops which have joined the United Nations force.

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I believe I am correct in saying that an advance contingent of the Swedish force is now in Cyprus, or will be in Cyprus in a matter of hours; and that this force will be followed in a day or two if not by the whole Swedish contingent, then by part of that contingent. It is also expected that both the Finnish and the Irish troops will be there shortly.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence.

In view of the present situation in Cyprus, what steps have been taken for the prompt withdrawal of our troops from the island in the event of an invasion by continental Turkish and Greek forces?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we hope and expect that this contingency will not arise. As a matter of fact, the reason Canadian troops are in Cyprus is to do their best to make sure it does not arise.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): But should that happen, Mr. Speaker, will the government be disposed to withdraw our forces? It may happen.

Mr. Hellyer: May I say again that I hope and expect that it will not, but I am sure our armed forces have demonstrated their ability to be prepared for an emergency and to carry out assignments with noteworthy efficiency and praiseworthy effectiveness.

CUBA—REPORTED USE OF CANADIAN ENGINE FOR SUBVERSIVE PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): May I answer a question which was directed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition to my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs on March 20, when he said:

I should like to ask the minister whether a protest has been received from the organization of American states in connection with the report of an investigation by a committee of the organization to the effect that a motorboat engine, delivered from Montreal to Cuba last October, was used to land a large cache of arms on a beach in Venezuela for subversive purposes. If so, has any investigation been made as to why this motor was not set out in a report of the dominion bureau of statistics for 1963?

My colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is at the United Nations conference on trade and development, has informed me the answer to the first part of the question is no.

As to the second part of the question, from the description of the goods in the customs form submitted by the shipper, the coding clerk in the dominion bureau of statistics coded the shipment as "engines, turbines and parts, general purpose, not elsewhere specified". If the hon. gentleman would like to look at the classification, it is class 50029. This statistical information appears under this item in the dominion bureau of statistics publication of export statistics.

AGRICULTURE

EASTERN FEED GRAIN—REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister in order to find out whether he shares the views expressed by the Minister of Agriculture? According to the Globe and Mail, the minister is alleged to have said in Winnipeg:

[Text]

Mr. Hays said he opposes a Progressive Conservative suggestion of an eastern grain agency for buying feed grain for eastern farmers from the Canadian wheat board.

I ask the Prime Minister if he shares this view.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman should know something about cabinet solidarity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, after some of the devious examples of this recently I wish the Prime Minister would tell us whether the Minister of Agriculture spoke for the government when he used the words referred to by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have only my hon. friend's statement of a press report. The Minister of Agriculture—and I am sure all hon. members will be sorry to hear this—is not in the house—

Mr. Diefenbaker: When will he be back?

Mr. Pearson: —because he is ill; he is confined to his bed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I hope my hon. friends will not jeer at that, Mr. Speaker, because it happens to be accurate. I have already been in touch with him by telephone, and I will be glad to check on the authenticity of these observations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I extend to the minister our best wishes for a speedy recovery.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would tell us, in view of widespread concern over a division in the cabinet on matters relating to agriculture, if he would be prepared to make the statement that was promised to the house by the Minister of Agriculture when I asked the question last Monday, so the country will know that the interests of the farmer are not entirely ignored by this government.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the country knows that the interests of the farmer will be protected by this government and the Minister of Agriculture, and that no such reassurance is required.

Mr. Jorgenson: May I ask the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Jorgenson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I listened to the hon. member's supplementary question, and it seemed to me he received a complete answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I may ask a further question. The Canadian Press reports from Winnipeg as follows:

Mr. Hays, speaking in a press conference, said most of the pressure was coming from Quebec members and this pressure had forced Prime Minister Pearson to appoint a minister from Quebec to look after the question of feed grains.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I continue:

Mr. Hays said half the feed grains from western Canada go to Quebec and the appointment was caused by "a political problem".

Is that correct?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, as my right hon. friend used to remind us so often when we sat on that side of the house, it is against the rules of the house to be asked to comment on the accuracy of press reports. But if he breaks the rules, I do not mind cooperating in a desire to set his curiosity at rest. I shall be very glad to look into that particular press report.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Since an important delegation of farmers from Joliette wants to organize a march on Ottawa to support the catholic farmers union's meeting with the Minister of Agriculture on dairy problems, does the Prime Minister intend to enter into communication with his Minister of Agriculture through the Telstar, to advise him to be in attendance in Ottawa to receive this delegation?

[Text]

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of statements made as to who is running agriculture, I should like to know who, in this troika, has the veto.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear who is running agriculture in this cabinet—

An hon. Member: Nobody.

Mr. Pearson: —and it is also quite clear that it is not the former minister of agriculture, who is now in Peking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

LEGALITY OF ACTIONS DURING TRANSFER OF DUTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Some time ago the Prime Minister indicated that he would be dealing with the question of the cabinet changes and the point I raised about the legality of the action of the government from the 3rd to the 20th of February in the Department of Agriculture. In view of the pending recess, would the Prime Minister assure the house now that the statement he has prepared in that regard will be made early enough to give all members a chance to join in the discussion which will certainly take place on the illegality of the action taken?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have been glad to be able to make that statement last Monday, but this item was not reached in the consideration of the supplementary estimates. As soon as it is reached I will be glad to make a statement. It was not reached because hon. gentlemen opposite spent the afternoon discussing the item in the estimates which had been under discussion when the house adjourned on the Friday before, but as soon as it is reached I will be glad to make a statement, and I hope there will be ample opportunity for my hon. friend and others to comment on it.

Mr. Nugent: A supplementary question. Do I take it that the Prime Minister is not going to go out of his way to make any special arrangements to make sure there will be a chance to discuss this important question before Easter, having in mind that the whole country is worrying about what is going on in the cabinet?

Mr. Pearson: If my hon. friend wants me to interrupt the business of the house to bring forward this particular item, that can be considered; but I see no necessity for doing so when after the budget debate is adjourned we will proceed with supplementary estimates and interim supply. There will be ample opportunity then. If we do not get interim supply through we will have to reconvene next week instead of having a holiday.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in that connection may I make the suggestion that the next item of business after the budget debate is adjourned should be interim supply rather than going ahead with the supplementary estimates. Interim supply certainly requires attention, but I would point out that we intend to discuss the supplementary estimates, and any threat that we may be called back earlier will not divert us one bit.

Mr. Pearson: I think the proper order of business would be that following the adjournment of the budget debate we go on with the supplementary estimates, and as soon as they are passed then take interim supply. I hope we will then be able to adjourn for Easter week.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, since we are discussing the order of business for this week may I ask the Prime Minister a question. It is based on the hope he expressed last Monday and again last Tuesday that second reading of the Canada pension plan bill would be proceeded with before Easter. May I ask him what has happened to that hope?

Mr. Pearson: I expressed that hope and I still have hope, Mr. Speaker, but the realization of that hope depends on how we deal with the other business before the house which is now under consideration.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS FROM FEDERAL CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether he has agreed to the very urgent request of the Royal Canadian Legion that he discontinue immediately all action on the proposed handover of D.V.A. treatment facilities to other levels of government.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet replied to the request that was made and the letter I received, but I do not accept the hon. gentleman's interpretation of it.

Mr. Churchill: I used their exact words; I was not interpreting anything.

Mr. Teillet: I would simply like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the points raised by the Royal Canadian Legion will be taken into account, as I have stated before, when any case is taken into consideration, and it will be handled on its merits in the light of these representations.

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I should like to direct to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the minister received telegrams from the Canadian Legion in Alberta; and if so, what action has he taken?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, I think this is the question that was asked on Friday, and I answered the second part of the question—

Mr. Smallwood: No, it was not; I have not asked the question before.

Mr. Teillet: —and said I had received such telegrams and they are being taken into consideration. I answered the second part of that question then and said that as no decision had been taken with regard to any specific hospital, there was no question of change. I should apologize to the hon. member for New Westminster, I believe it was, in connection with my reply to a question last Friday with regard to the Victoria and Shaughnessy hospitals. I should have mentioned that he had sent me notice of that same question, and the reply I then gave applies.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, because of the concern of veterans organizations with regard to the policy announced by the minister, and the need for and importance of consultation with the dominion commands of these veterans organizations, would the minister defer any action in connection with this policy until the matter has been referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Teillet: I have already answered that question in the house, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLICATIONS

REQUEST FOR FREE DEBATE AND VOTE ON LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question relating to the proposed legislation to assist Canadian periodicals. Is the Prime Minister at the present time considering what is called a free vote and a free debate on this issue in so far as his own members are concerned, or that part of it dealing with Time and Reader's Digest?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, that matter has not been considered.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO PRESENTATION OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister going to issue his white paper on defence before the Easter recess; and if so, when?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I hope so, Mr. Speaker; and if it is possible, it will be getting fairly close to the recess, I am afraid.

[Later:]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the oft repeated hope of the Minister of National Defence that he will soon publish a white paper, can he assure the house that substantial portions of that paper have not already been leaked, having in mind press reports which are so detailed that they are more than speculative?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that as far as I am concerned the paper has not been leaked. There have been a number of speculative stories that have attempted to guess in advance some of the things that may be contained in the paper. I am afraid I cannot give my friend any information as to their accuracy or otherwise until the paper is produced, which I hope will be very shortly.

Mr. Lambert: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in a position to say that senior officials of his department have not discussed the contents of this white paper, in the light of reports of discussions with senior officials of his department about the proposed contents of the paper?

Mr. Hellyer: I am sure that the senior officials of my department have not been discussing the contents of the white paper in detail. I am sure, on the other hand, that there are many people in the Department of National Defence discussing what they think is in the white paper, because it has been a topic of quite lively conversation there for some time.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY RESPECTING NORWEGIAN EXPEDITION TO NORTH POLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether he has any further statement to make concerning the Norwegian polar expedition, about which there were some news reports recently.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, this concerns the Staib expedition to the north pole. I want to say that the government of Canada, and especially my own department, have co-operated in every possible manner with this expedition, first because it involved the citizens of a friendly power, and second because we are interested in any information that can be obtained in respect of the north.

The latest news we have is that the expedition staged out of Alert, where of course we have some security considerations, went only some 12 miles and had returned to Alert. They had intended to use Ward Hunt island as a base, which is about 100 miles west of Alert, but found the going too rough and decided to sally forth from Alert. They have now returned to Alert and intend, I think, to use Eskimo sledges in their next attempt. But I have further, very much more serious news, in that their chief radio operator, a man by the name of Thorstein Raaby —who I believed was one of the heroes of the Kon-Tiki expedition—died yesterday of a presumed heart attack, and an inquest will be held at Alert as soon as possible.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure the house that Canada has established her claim to sovereign rights over all the Arctic islands, and that this is unquestioned by any other nation?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is at all related to the question asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. I think it is an entirely different matter and could be asked on a different occasion.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

QUEBEC—ALLEGED PATRONAGE IN AWARDING CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. The urgency of the matter is clear since the statement was made over the week end. It is also a matter of national character, since it refers to works to be undertaken in connection with the celebration of the centenary of confederation.

Will the Secretary of State see to it that the Quebec government does not resort to patronage in awarding contracts for works in connection with the centenary of confederation?

In fact, it is provided in one of the clauses of the agreement that:

> The minister can however allow tenders to be asked privately to a limited number of efficient and solvent contractors. The number must not be less than three if the tender is below $500,000 and not less than five when it reaches or is over that amount.

Since clause 16 is inconsistent with clause 15 which provides that public tenders will be called, I would like to ask the minister whether he will prevent the Liberal government of Quebec from resorting to patronage with funds allotted for the works of the centennial of confederation, a third of which comes from the federal government?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, the provincial government has no intention of using the centennial project for patronage purposes. Anyhow, the provincial government is entirely responsible for the regulations it sets up as regards this project.

[Text]

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER CONSTRUCTION BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Pierre Cote (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. May I ask the minister whether the period for the winter house building program will be extended after March 31 on account of the shortage of materials and the lack of workers which delayed the completion of a large percentage of houses?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the national house builders met with me today and put forward the view that completion of certain houses under this program has been held up owing to shortage of certain classes of tradesmen at various stages of the program. This whole question is now under consideration to ascertain the full facts and with the possible view of extending some relief in this situation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EMPLOYMENT OF HOUSE STAFF DURING EASTER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put a question to the leader of the house, but in his absence, I shall direct it to the Prime Minister.

Could the Prime Minister publish a notice showing the holidays of secretaries and other employees of parliament during the Easter recess?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought it had already been indicated to the house that it is our hope and intention to adjourn Thursday evening and resume our session on April 6. There is one reservation to that, of course, and that is on the understanding that interim supply is passed by the house.

Mr. Churchill: No, you did not say that the other day.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I think that the Prime Minister misunderstood my question. I am not referring to members of the house, but to secretaries and other employees of parliament.

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: Well, I think this is a matter for Your Honour, and I am sure you will be glad to look into it.

WORLD FAIR

PROPOSED ALTERNATIVE FOR SYMBOL REMOVED FROM BILL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Could he tell me whether he is aware of the fact that a sketch for an emblem representing the theme "Man's World", copy of which was included with my notice, was submitted for approval to the 1967 World Fair Corporation? That sketch was made by Mr. Philippe E. Maltais, La Malbaie artist.

If the minister is aware of that, could he tell the house (a) whether that sketch was taken into consideration; (b) why was it not adopted instead of the one rejected by this house?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question for the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. I understood the Prime Minister to undertake last week to look into the matter of the world fair directors adopting a controversial symbol for the fair in defiance of parliament. I wonder whether he has any statement to make.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. When I got to my office this morning I inquired whether the report which I had requested had arrived. It has not, but I am told it will probably arrive today, in which case I will be able to make a statement tomorrow.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

D.E.W. LINE—ENFORCEMENT OF DECISION RESPECTING BARGAINING AGENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour and stems from some 70 telegrams which have come to me today from all parts of the Arctic, sent by Canadian workingmen employed on the distant early warning line. Will the minister take immediate action to insist that the United States Federal Electric Corporation respect the decision of the Canada labour relations board and the court of Queen's bench of Manitoba that these men be allowed to have as their bargaining agent the I.B.E.W.?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have also received telegrams, or at least one telegram, this morning and the officers of the Department of Labour are conducting an investigation into the matter.

Mr. Rheaume: A supplementary question. Will the minister, at the same time he is investigating this matter, look into whether or not an agreement was signed between Washington and Ottawa whereby the rights of these men to bargain collectively were suspended?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

CROWN ASSETS

CRANBERRY PORTAGE, MAN.—HEATING OF UNUSED BUILDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production in relation to the closing of a section of the mid-Canada line on March 31, and in view of the fact that the heating of the buildings at Cranberry Portage, Manitoba, was discontinued last week. Will the minister look into this matter immediately in order to preserve these buildings for some useful purpose?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Churchill is already aware that a representative of the area development agency is now in Manitoba examining into this particular question.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question. I understand that the representative was there, but nothing was decided upon with regard to the heating of these buildings.

TRANSPORT

NEW FREIGHT FERRY, NORTH SYDNEY-PORT AUX BASQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the minister's announcement at a meeting at North Sydney during his visit there that a new freight ferry would be put into service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques, and in view of his announcement to the press after the meeting that it would carry loaded railway freight cars, does this mean that the railway in Newfoundland is to be standardized?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that that would be a correct inference to draw.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I ask the minister what effect the operation of this railway freight car ferry between the points I mentioned will have on the employment of stevedores at the port of North Sydney?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, since the tenders have not yet been called for this ferry, and since it will take some time for it to be built, I think there will be plenty of opportunity to inquire into all the aspects of its effects long before it goes into service; and I am sorry to say that this is, as the hon. member knows, a matter of years.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Is the minister aware that it has been suggested that employment will be reduced by 75 per cent? So it is not too early to start investigating the problem now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Experience has been that traffic has grown so much since confederation that employment is always going up, and this is likely to continue if we improve the communications between Newfoundland and the rest of the country.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—POSSIBLE PARTICIPATION BY QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct to the Prime Minister a question of which I gave him notice.

Has he received recently indications to the effect that the government of Mr. Lesage intended to withdraw its pension plan proposal in order to join the program introduced by the federal government, following the last changes made to it?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

URANIUM

INQUIRY AS TO RENEWAL OF CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Since the contracts for uranium are nearing completion, what steps is the government taking for renewal of those contracts, which would ease the anxiety of thousands of citizens in the Bancroft area?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Representations have been received by me and by several members of the government for renewal of these contracts. These representations are being studied.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—PAYMENT FOR DOWNSTREAM BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Will the Minister of Finance explain the $54 million difference between the $220 million to be borrowed for payment to British Columbia for downstream benefits, as stated in his budget speech, and the $274 million provided for in the Columbia river treaty protocol?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I should like to reserve the right to add to this explanation, but I think the difference will be used by the British Columbia government to repay certain debts in the United States.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Does this mean that this lump sum payment will not be invested in a reserve fund to be used exclusively for Columbia river construction purposes?

Mr. Gordon: It or its equivalent will be, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): May I ask a supplementary question. What measures is this government taking to safeguard the rest of the fund?

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): From raiding.

[Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John).]

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN CIVIL SERVICE APPLICATION FORM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State who, I believe, answers in the house for the civil service commission. In view of the government's recent proposed amendment to the citizenship act, will the Secretary of State request the civil service commission to remove or modify certain questions in its application for employment form which, by implication, discriminate against naturalized Canadians? I refer to questions 19 and 20 on page 1 of the application form and the series of questions in this regard on page 3 of the form.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will refer this matter to the civil service commission and give an answer to the hon. member later.

TRADE

AUTOMOBILE PARTS—REPORTED REFUSAL OF U.S. SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES TO SHIP TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he has received any complaints from Canadian exporters with regard to the refusal of automobile companies in Canada which are subsidiaries of United States automobile manufacturers to supply automotive parts for export to China. I should like to ask the minister if this refusal is based upon the declared policy of the United States government, and if so does the minister consider this action to be a violation of Canada's right to exercise control over its own economy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. gentleman was good enough to send me notice of this question. Personally I have not received any complaints, but before answering the question I have sent out some inquiries to my colleagues, and I shall answer the whole of his question tomorrow.

Mr. Douglas: I may tell the minister that I have seen a copy of a reply from his office, and may I ask him if he will look again and make sure whether he has received a letter?

Mr. Sharp: This was one of the reasons I was a little hesitant about answering at all. It may be that there is a complaint that has escaped the attention of my officials. However, I shall answer this question tomorrow.

UNITED NATIONS

RUSSIA—REFUSAL TO SHARE COST OF PEACE KEEPING OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the declaration made by a representative of the U.S.S.R. on Saturday that the Soviet union will never pay its assessment to the United Nations for the Congo and Middle East forces, and that any challenge to its right to vote in the general assembly on that account may break up the United Nations. In view of this statement of defiance of the United Nations, and the responsibilities assumed by the U.S.S.R., and the declaration of the international court of justice that these peace keeping costs should be borne by the membership, what is the attitude of Canada in this regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I read this report, and I share my right hon. friend's concern over it. Perhaps I could make a very short statement on the matter.

As the house is aware from previous reports that have been made to it, effective January 1, 1964, the Soviet union and a number of other member states of the United Nations became vulnerable to the application of article 19 of the charter, mainly through their failure to pay their assessed share of peace keeping costs of the United Nations. The application of this article, which provides for the loss of voting in the general assembly for members whose payments are in such arrears, will take effect when the general assembly next meets unless steps have been taken to liquidate the arrears.

The Soviet statement to which my hon. friend has referred is a further indication of the Soviet union's refusal to contribute to the financing of peace keeping operations. This manoeuvring for position, and that is what it is, in relation to a most important issue in the United Nations is being studied very closely by the government because of its implications for future effectiveness of the United Nations and the discussion of proposals for the financing of peace keeping operations, and also because of the position that will arise at the United Nations assembly when it may be necessary to apply—and it is a very serious step to take—this particular article to the Soviet union and other members of the United Nations who are in arrears.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I share with the Prime Minister his feelings in this regard. I should like to know from him what is the attitude of the Canadian government in connection with this matter. Can any member of the United Nations, by unilateral action, refuse to be bound by its pledged agreement? If so, this would place the United Nations in a position of division as between those who will assume their responsibilities and those who will not, which would result in a complete negation of the charter and the agreements that have been entered into. What representations has the government of Canada, as a middle power within the United Nations, made to the U.S.S.R. in this connection? Because unless there is action taken the United Nations will be a caricature of what otherwise it would have been.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, for some time now we have been exchanging views with some of our friends in the United Nations as to what action should be taken in the circumstances which may arise and to which my right hon. friend has made reference. It seems to me that no member of the United Nations, particularly a member which enjoys permanent representation on the security council, with a veto, should be exempted from the obligations of the charter in this particular matter, and that there should be no discrimination in favour of any member of the United Nations.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the Prime Minister if the Canadian delegation to the United Nations assembly when it meets will be instructed by the government to urge that all delinquent nations including the Soviet union and France, both of whom I understand are delinquent, or any other nation that is delinquent, be required to live up to the terms of article 19?

Mr. Pearson: We will be very glad indeed to do that. Not only the Soviet union but other members of the United Nations are in default in this particular case, and all members should live up to their obligations in this respect.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATION OF YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister in relation to the forthcoming federal-provincial conference later this month. Has he yet received replies to the letters he sent to the provincial premiers? If so, is there a likelihood that the governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories will be represented at this conference?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the majority of the provinces which dealt with this particular matter in their replies felt that there should be no interruption of the procedure followed in the past, under which the territories are represented by the federal delegation.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Friday, March 20, consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Nowlan.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the budget debate one naturally thinks of last year's budget, which the minister termed a face the facts budget. He had no name at all for this budget, and I think that was very appropriate. However, if one looked for a name one might call it a do nothing budget. Many people have hung different phrases on it, but I rather like the description put on it by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), "a thin sandwich with very little meat in it". I wonder how his party will vote when their turn comes to declare whether or not they support the budget. I suppose they will think that a thin sandwich is better than none.

When one thinks of last year's budget and this year's budget from the point of view of their effect on the economy of Canada, one finds many surprising things. I immediately think of the increase in our total debt. No one minds going in debt if they are accomplishing something by doing so. Last year's budget caused an increase in the per capita national debt of 4.2 per cent. Yet my hon. friends of the Social Credit party, who so often tell us about the dangers of going into debt, voted for it. This year's budget will bring about an increase in the total amount of Canada's debt larger than in any other year going back nearly as far as the war years. There will be an increase of over $1 billion in the total national debt in 1963-64 brought about by this budget. Yet the Social Crediters will probably vote for this highest increase in the per capita debt in Canada going back as far as 1954.

In 1954 per capita debt in Canada was something like $727. In 1955 it was cut to $717, and we reduced it to a little over $600 in 1960. In 1963 it was $736, but this coming year it will rise to $789, an increase of $50 for each Canadian. Yet my friends, the Social Crediters from Alberta, who hate debt and talk against debt, will in all likelihood vote for this huge increase.

One can only take from this that they talk one thing and vote another. They have become so degenerate with this procedure of talking one way and voting another that they are very two-faced, to say the least. Two weeks ago in this house they voted against an amendment which we introduced during the debate on the throne speech, to provide family allowances up until the age of 18 years, but when the final vote is taken on the budget they will probably vote in favour of extending the age limit.

This perhaps points out that an erosion of democracy is setting in, particularly in that party. When people vote one way and then the opposite way, all within a two week period, one must realize there is great danger when they value their vote so lightly. This is an erosion of the very democracy in which we participate.

We on this side of the house are not afraid to borrow money and have budget deficits, so long as those deficits go to the building of the country and to improving its economy. During our term in office we built dams, vocational schools, the Pine Point railroad, power projects, helped shipbuilding and provided roads to resources in the north. We also paid more to the provinces on a very equitable basis. If anyone doubts that, let him look at the report of the recent federal-provincial conference where the tables show that between 1956 and 1963 amounts paid by the federal government to the provinces increased threefold. In 1956 the provinces received something like $600 million and in 1962-63 they received nearly $2 billion from the federal government.

Anyone can talk about deficits, but if he examines how the money was spent he would not mind borrowing money used to develop the country and to give the provinces a greater share in participating in its development. In the present budget we see an increase in taxes with another huge deficit, and we wonder what the government is doing with the money. For one thing it has been increasing salaries all around. The top echelons in the C.B.C., civil service and the armed forces have all received tremendous pay increases but the lower echelons have received very little.

One may well ask where the present buoyancy of the economy came from, but if we look at the Bank of Canada's report for 1963 we find this statement on page 7:

> The over-all performance of the Canadian economy in 1963 was encouraging. Substantial increases in output and employment were achieved for a third consecutive year—

I emphasize those words "third consecutive year." It goes on to say:

> Further gains were made by Canadian manufactured goods in 1963 both in export markets and in competition with imports in the Canadian market—

Why was this the third consecutive year of improvement? The report goes on to give the reason as directly because of the devaluation of the dollar.

> One development that has contributed a great deal to the Canadian economy's performance in recent years has been the improvement in Canada's international competitive position. This was greatly strengthened by the decline in the foreign exchange value of the Canadian dollar in 1960-62, and as Canadian prices and costs have risen only modestly since, this advantage has been largely retained.

Certainly here is an unbiased, unpolitical, factual report on the economy of Canada which shows why our economy has remained strong for the last three years. But we must remember that all is not clear and that dangers do arise. We must maintain this position. In other words we cannot have the cost of living increasing to the point where it will eventually erode the advantages we have obtained by the devaluation of the dollar.

At page 8 the Bank of Canada report goes on to say:

> At the same time the competitive position of a number of important trading countries, notably the countries of western Europe, has been weakened by the strong upward pressure on costs and prices that they have been experiencing.

In other words, we can only retain the advantages we have received from the devaluation of the dollar if we safeguard and are ever watchful of our cost of living and see to it that costs of production do not rise too far.

Further on in the report, dealing with economic developments in Canada, it says:

> Average output per person employed in the non-farm sector of the economy increased by approximately 1 per cent, somewhat less than in 1962.

In other words there already is some slight eroding of the situation which followed devaluation of the dollar, and we must look to the budget for some efforts to stop this erosion. We have had a strong economy for three years because of the devaluation of the dollar, and particularly in 1963 because of the huge wheat sales. The Bank of Canada report makes reference to those wheat sales, saying they helped our foreign exchange position immensely and without them we would be in dire trouble.

As a matter of fact the Minister of Finance made some reference to this in his budget speech, but I can think back to the time when we initiated huge wheat sales to communist China. We were condemned from various sides of the house. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), and his colleague the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson)—though I am not sure if he is still his colleague because that party has broken up so much—said we should not be selling to the communists. The present Prime Minister said it looked terrible, cash to our friends and credit to our enemies. That is what he said when we initiated the policy of selling wheat to communist countries.

He sneered at it, but he and his colleagues are not sneering now. It was their life saver in 1963, and they admit it. It was their life saver in foreign exchange. It was their life saver in trade. It was their life saver for the whole economy of the country. I looked for something in the budget which would indicate that they intended to add to the continuity of their own life saver. I looked for measures intended to help the western economy. There was nothing. While the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) was reading his budget speech, I interjected: "Nothing for the farmers", and he replied, "Yes, they have children, too". No doubt the concessions with regard to education will benefit many people. But we were looking for something which would bring solid benefit to the economy as a whole.

I have here an article which appeared in the Financial Post of March 14 under the heading: "Behind the Big West Coast Grain Back-up". What is behind it? We know that because of a shortage of facilities on the west coast Canada lost the sale of 118 million bushels of wheat. I looked for something in the budget to show that the federal government was aware of this problem and that it planned to spend so many millions of dollars to improve harbour facilities out there. Again, I saw nothing to this effect. The article in the Financial Post of March 14 says the reason for the grain back-up on the west coast is the fact that facilities are inadequate and outmoded; they need improvement and extension and it is suggested that $20 million would do the job. Nevertheless, this government failed to recognize the ever increasing need for improved port facilities to handle the requirements of a trading nation such as ours. Hon. members opposite talk of foreign exchange; they talk about the need for trade. But they do very little about these things and the budget itself did absolutely nothing in this regard.

We heard the Liberals in western Canada spout off for years advocating the theory of free trade in this country. They said free trade was the answer to all our problems. When the former prime minister, my hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) told Great Britain she must honour Canada's rights to trade with her before she entered the European common market, he was criticized and told this was not the proper attitude to take. But what about the attitude now being taken by those who sit on the treasury benches? I have here an article from the Ottawa Journal of March 17, 1964, which says:

> Tariff board recommendations on oilfield equipment have been worked into the customs tariff and there is an upward trend in protection for Canadian producers of machinery and parts.

Note the words "an upward trend in protection". I am not against this, but here you have a party which for years has advocated free trade. The world has grown smaller, they said, and free trade is inevitable. It would be rough on certain industries in this country, but we had to face up to competition the world over. That was what they said for so many years. However, a different tune is being played today by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and by his colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp).

The former minister of agriculture the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) was criticized with regard to the wheat sales. He was criticized for telling farmers in western Canada a year ago to grow all the wheat they could because he had found markets for that wheat. The present Minister of Trade and Commerce has yet to advise the farmers as to the size of the market he can foresee for the future. The seeding season is not far away. I am sure many farmers wonder what they should be planting. But no advice comes from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) probably because he does not know whether this matter comes within his jurisdiction; he is in a quandary and we in western Canada cannot blame him. The Minister of Trade and Commerce could at least come out and make his statement and let us judge how close he comes in his prediction.

We see very little in this budget. The minister told us, in his speech, about the importance of tourism and the beneficial effect of receipts from tourism on our balance of payments figures. Why has there been this improvement? It is the consequence of the devaluation of the dollar. This is the same dollar that was derided by hon. members opposite when it was introduced. They derided it and called it a Diefendollar, and so on. Today they are forced to recognize that it has been their life saver, along with huge sales of wheat. We looked in this budget for something for agriculture. We even looked at the last budget again to see whether there was something in it that we had missed. In this connection let me read a paragraph from the Globe and Mail of June 15 which said, about that performance:

> There are no worth-while tax cuts, no incentives to stimulate growth and employment. The budget confesses its dismal failure in this direction by forecasting a gain of only 5 per cent in the gross national product this year, compared to the 8 per cent achieved last year by the much despised Conservatives.

We wondered what the minister would predict for this year. He said it was 5 per cent last year because of the heavy grain crops in western Canada. He said there would turn out to be an increase in the gross national product of nearly 6 per cent in 1963 because of fortunate growing conditions in western Canada. Well, in 1962 there was an increase of 8 per cent. In 1963 it was close to 6 per cent. And in 1964, the hon. gentleman says, it should be 5 per cent. Are we not moving in the wrong direction? Eight, six, five—where are we going? Is it to be four, three, two, and one by 1970? I maintain we must look forward to the future with greater optimism than this. We must bring about conditions which will create a greater growth in our gross national product than appears likely from the sliding scale which is set before us today.

We had been curious about the present budget. Well, it came, and the newspapers wrote it up. I have some comments here from one of them, the Ottawa Journal, under the headings "Little to Cheer (or Jeer) About", "Students Take the Plums", and so on. It is true there were noteworthy measures for the benefit of students and I was pleased to see them. I was glad to see that eligibility for family allowances is to be extended. But these are small matters compared with the over-all economy of the country. There was very little, if anything, in the budget for labour. There was nothing in the budget for the average businessman, nothing for the farmer. This was a dismal budget, to say the least.

We had heard a great deal about defence costs. We had heard that the minister of defence was slashing this and slashing that in an effort to pare down defence spending. Yet there turned out to be an increase in this department. Then we were told that the paring down of defence costs had yet to come. I notice, however, that it is planned to buy 16 Hercules transport planes made in the United States. We are also buying personnel carriers all of which have been manufactured in the United States. How will measures such as these strengthen our economy? We are told, of course, that defence sharing arrangements will be worked out later. But how can they be worked out when we are paring costs all round? It is the intention to build a highly mobile force, and I am in agreement with that proposition. But I am also here to watch over the development of our country as a whole, and the field of defence production has been one of the vital areas in which a government can act. It is true the previous government bought planes from the United States, but we had aircraft manufactured in Canada, too. Certainly this will add nothing to the economy of this country.

We looked for tax cuts in building, and we saw none. The minister said these cuts were not needed, that building had gone on anyway. Well, if we had not had the large grain sales, and if there had not been such large grain crops, our gross national product would have probably increased by less than 5 per cent.

An hon. Member: Much less than 5 per cent.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Yes, much less than 5 per cent. So when you look at it in its true light, without the bountiful crops that western Canada enjoyed last year our increase in gross national product would have been quite a bit less than 5 per cent. Therefore can one truthfully say that the building tax is here to stay and should be here to stay? I do not think so; it should not be here. Yet my Liberal friends over there say, "Oh, this is a tremendous budget; we are cutting the deficit by one third". It is easy to cut a deficit by one third if you increase taxes by the same amount, and this is what they have done, with the building tax. They will receive nearly $200 million more each year, and this is what they are predicting will be the cut in the deficit. I use the word "predicting" because we are well aware of the fact that supplementary estimates are presented to parliament and budget predictions are often somewhat out. The minister—

Mr. Winkler: Tricky bookkeeping.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): —has no record of performance that enables him to boast about budget predictions. He was certainly out a great deal a year ago, and I see no reason to believe that he will not be out this year. Last year's budget tried to bring in many changes. Most of them were retreated from throughout the month following the bringing down of the budget. In this budget we see further retreat with regard to the withholding tax; the minister is not going to implement the increase in this tax. Certainly one can only take from this that American pressures have been brought to bear and the minister has now seen the light in the American way and has decided not to bring about the further increase in the withholding tax.

Certainly if we are to continue to compete with the United States, we must bring our taxes into line with theirs. We see that the United States are lowering income tax, but we see an increase in this country. I would have liked to see some incentives to industry in the budget, something to maintain the cost of living, instead of causing an increase in the cost of living as the building tax has done. There should have been included in the budget something to ensure that we will continue to receive value for our dollar.

Some time ago there was a great deal of talk about federal co-operativism. What does it mean? We have seen an early budget brought down to place clearly on record what the federal government wants to do before the federal-provincial conference meets. Is this a new style of federal co-operativism? Certainly the provinces will not agree with it, and we can hardly blame them. We see the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) today saying, "Oh, just give us time. We will do this before Easter; we will do that before Easter". No one asked for the budget to be brought down before Easter. The pension plan could have been brought in; we could have had a six-day debate on it and passed it before Easter, if the Prime Minister had withheld the budget until after Easter. There was nothing in the budget which made it necessary to bring it down before Easter. We could have had the question of agriculture debated fully before Easter in these six days. We could have debated who is responsible, who is not responsible and who should be responsible for the various sections of that very important department. We heard some talk about two ministers being appointed. Instead of appointing two ministers, they have decided to take all the authority away from the one they did appoint.

Mr. Macaluso: You had better read the papers before you talk like that.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I hear some quips from over there, Mr. Speaker. Apparently the backbenchers of the Liberal party are not aware of the fact that for 17 days we did not have a Minister of Agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This is a great shame, in a country that was founded on agriculture, which is still the basic industry of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It certainly showed very little consideration on the part of the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) for the very basic industry that bailed them out this year with regard to foreign exchange. They took away the minister of this department, and certainly showed very little regard and respect for that prominent department. We on this side of the house wonder who is responsible today for the various sections of the department; who is responsible for ARDA, which certainly can play such a prominent part in my constituency in the years ahead.

An hon. Member: It might be the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh).

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It might well be. Who is responsible for farm credit? We brought in the Farm Credit Corporation. We transferred the old farm loan board, which used to be under the minister of finance, and to make it workable put it under the Department of Agriculture. Now where is it going; or should I say, where has it gone? No one knows for sure. We wonder about the stabilization board. We wonder about the eastern feed grain board.

An hon. Member: Auctioned off.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Are they being auctioned off, and is Harry the highest bidder? That is the question. I would like to see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) back in the house at the earliest possible date, because I know that if he needs any help in his bidding there are many members here from western Canada who are prepared to bid briskly on many of these branches of the department.

Mr. Speaker, one could speak on many subjects in this budget debate. One could go on for some time about agriculture. However, I do not think there is really anything to be gained until we know who is responsible for this department or whether the Liberals have thrown it out altogether. I have outlined some of my fears with regard to the budget. While it may not have been ill-conceived by experts, it was certainly conceived by no one and was brought in in haste for no good cause.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, before going any further, I should like to introduce the following amendment to the amendment:

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe):

That all the words in the amendment after "any effective action to" be deleted and replaced by: "reduce the national defence budget, so that family allowances could be adjusted to the cost of living index."

You will note that we have been insisting strongly, since the beginning of this session, on such an adjustment of family allowances to the cost of living index. Indeed if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) is able to require of the Canadian people that they pay $1 billion 35 million interest on the national debt alone for the service of the debt, we consider that the same amount, without the creation of any more money in Canada, would enable him to raise family allowances to $22 for each Canadian child.

I have no intention of repeating the remarks made by the spokesmen of other political parties during this debate. As did the Minister of Finance, they all remained true to the most orthodox principles. No one dared to get away from the beaten track of a system poisonous to all Canadians and which deprives them of a sounder economic life.

Personally, I intend to stray off the beaten path and refrain from repeating those hollow formulas handed to us each year with the white paper on the economic health of this country and the budget set down by the government.

We, of the Ralliement Creditistes, for instance, disagree completely with the Minister of Finance. As a matter of fact, we do not accept one of the first comments he made in his budget speech when he defined what he called the first goal of the Canadian government:

[Text]

Our first goal is high level employment, the highest we can expect to reach and maintain;

[Translation]

We, of the Ralliement Creditistes, feel that that should not be the first objective of the federal government.

We believe that the chief aim of economic activity should not be to provide jobs but to meet consumer needs.

This is what Jean Daujat, a great French sociologist wrote in his book "Reponses chretiennes a des problemes d'aujourd'hui":

The purpose of economic activity is not to provide jobs but to ensure the welfare of the family and of its members, that is the welfare of consumers.

After the economist manner, we would say with Rev. Father Georges-Henri Levesque, former director of the social science faculty at Laval University, in Quebec city:

Economic activities are intended for the benefit of all consumers. Consumers first and foremost. Such should be the principle of any social and truly human policy.

In 1960, the assembly of the United churches of Scotland asked a group of economists, theologians and sociologists to make a survey of the present financial structure in relation to Christian doctrine.

The committee report was made public in 1962 after being presented to the general assembly of the United churches in Dundee, Scotland, on May 10, 1962. Later on, it was published under the title "Money, a Christian View", with a foreword by Right Rev. George F. MacLeod, former moderator of the general assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Unanimously, the authors of the report stated on page 11:

[Text]

There has grown the idea that any employment is better than none and that the primary object of an economic system is to provide employment. We believe that the object of production is consumption and that while human employment is generally a necessary part of the process directed to this end it must not take precedence over it. From a Christian point of view it is wrong that a man must be employed on work that can be done by a machine—

—as we see today right across Canada.

[Translation]

Is the government the least concerned about the consumers' interests? Is the government taking steps to assure the distribution of goods produced to all consumers so as to give them a fair subsistence and decent living conditions? Is the government taking the means to remove financial obstacles that prevent the goods and services produced by Canadians from fully meeting the needs of Canadian consumers?

We must answer in the negative to all these questions.

But why? Why are Canadian consumers, Canadian families deprived of goods and services made available by our natural resources, our industries and workers and displayed in our stores, groceries and warehouses? Why are hundreds of industries and factories operating at reduced capacity or closed? Why are there in Canada at the present time—March 1, 1964—487,000 unemployed, 487,000 minds, 974,000 unemployed arms when thousands and thousands of families are undernourished, ill-clothed and ill-housed?

The answer is simply that the Canadian consumers do not have enough money to buy, at current prices, the goods and services which are offered them.

In a sensational book published in the middle of the depression, that is in 1934, by the Brookings Institute of the United States, Mr. Harold G. Moulton, who was one of President Roosevelt's economic advisers, wrote after an analysis of the economic situation:

—unsatisfied desires of American consumers are at the present time great enough to absorb a production higher than that of 1929. Taking into consideration the necessaries of life of the great mass of the people, innumerable needs remain unsatisfied. The problem is not one of lack of desire, but of lack of buying power.

[Text]

The trouble is clearly not a lack of desire but a lack of purchasing power.

[Translation]

Moulton wrote in his book "America's Capacity to Consume" can be found in the library of parliament, for those who would like to refer to it.

A few years later, that is in 1939, an outstanding British industrialist, director of Vickers for 22 years, director of the London Insurance Company and governor of the Bank of England for nine years, wrote the following on page 50 of a book entitled "Economic Tribulation" which can also be found in the library of parliament.

[Text]

If the producers are waiting to produce more, if ships are waiting to carry the goods, if there are railway and transport services wheresoever there is a demand for them, then the fault must lie with the consumer. Why does he hold back the trade and commerce and progress of the world and prevent the consummation of a lasting peace by deliberately refusing to avail himself of the good things the world can offer him?

The answer is obvious. The consumer cannot afford to buy more; he has not enough money. Let us discard all biased opinions and we shall find it possible only to arrive at one decision—that the health and welfare of the individual, the happiness of the community, the contentment of the nation and the peace of the world are mainly, if not entirely, a monetary problem.

[Translation]

After those findings by the group of economists of the Brookings institute, by Vincent Cartwright Vickers who was governor of the Bank of England, let us see now what the economists, theologians and sociologists of the churches of Scotland, which I quoted a moment ago, think of this situation. On page 40 of their report, they come to the same conclusions as the Social Crediters—the same conclusions as the Social Crediters, Mr. Speaker—namely, that there is a deficit in purchasing power. Here is how they say it:

[Text]

The present system does not provide any mechanism by which the supply of purchasing power is automatically geared to the volume of real wealth produced. The classical theory that when goods outrun purchasing power prices will automatically fall to the proper level is bound to break down under present conditions, since the lower level of prices is determined by costs and total costs are determined by the volume of credit issued for production, which must be repaid out of prices.

The principal argument between the orthodox and the unorthodox economists appears to revolve around this point. In the view of the first, the monetary system is merely a reflection of the physical economic system, and there is no question in normal circumstances of purchasing power being in short supply. Such discrepancies as arise are the result of temporary fluctuations that are, or can be, quickly corrected. The monetary reformers for the most part maintain that there is a "built-in" flaw in the present system of bank credit accounting that results in a permanent shortage of purchasing power in relation to the total prices of goods offered for sale.

[Translation]

Not only does the report acknowledge the lack of purchasing power, it gives the reasons therefor.

I should like to quote what the authors had to say on page 29 of the same book, after the study they made of the operation of the banking system and of the creation of credit by the banks:

[Text]

We cannot see any moral justification for the levying of interest on a bank loan which is, as all the experts now agree, "created out of nothing". When a bank "creates" credit in this way, neither it nor any of its customers surrenders title or claim to goods and services, nor do they abstain from "present consumption". Moreover, the addition of interest to the original bank loans, when these loans are the sole source of purchasing power, is a clear cause of purchasing power shortage. Whether or not then the function of "creating credit", that is, of issuing money, reverts in its entirety to the state, as recommended in the preceding paragraph, there cannot be any justification for the levying of a charge for this service beyond a sum sufficient to cover clerical and other costs.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, is it simply a question of theories based on Christian requirements or do these findings also take into account economic and banking data?

If you are in doubt, Mr. Speaker, may I quote the testimony of a French Canadian economist, Dr. Rosario Cousineau, director of the commerce department at the University of Sherbrooke, who stated in 1959 before the convention of the chamber of commerce of the province of Quebec, concerning the power entrusted with the chartered banks to create credit, the following, and I quote:

Without intending to take part in the controversy as to whether or not the banks create money, we can state that they create credit, that they multiply their deposits—and their equity—by 10 or 15. Provided they find creditworthy borrowers, they multiply their loans and create credit to the full extent that their loans exceed the total of their deposits and equity.

The title of this study by Dr. Cousineau was "Inflation", the very thing the monetary system itself implies, inflation, about which Grits and Tories, as well as my good friend from St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis), are so much afraid when they speak of Social Credit.

Do you want other proofs of what Social Crediters have been claiming and shouting throughout Canada for a number of years? I could give you hundreds of statements concerning the theory of the creation of credit in the banks. Let me mention, as a reminder to the hon. members of the house, just this book by Harold G. Moulton, economic adviser to President Roosevelt, who explains from pages 77 to 90 of his book entitled "The Formation of Capital", which is found in the library of parliament, how commercial banks make credit.

He shows, in clearly written pages I would not hesitate to claim as my own, how chartered banks, with an authorized capital of $1 million, are able to loan, even if they do not net any deposit, $100 million.

With a mere stroke of the pen, banks create the credit that they lend afterwards at interest, requiring repayment of capital which they never issue plus interest, so that there is a constant and ever increasing deficit in the purchasing power. That is the cause of our national debt of $1.37 billion, in addition to the loans that have to be made in order to hide the coming deficit.

Mr. Speaker, the consequences of such a financial system under which credit is first created by banks and then lent at interest, are obvious and have been proved. One has only to consider the gradual indebtedness of all governments, the indebtedness of corporations and of individuals, and the great number of commercial bankruptcies.

Such a system leads to the degradation of the individual, to the absolute control of the country and its economy by a small group of financiers and to personal wealth at the expense of the majority of Canadians.

It was not without reason that Pius XI stated:

Those who control the economic life blood of the country have become the masters of our lives and without their permission no one has the right to breathe.

Without the permission of those who control the economic life blood of the country, the Minister of Finance is unable to breathe and the federal government cannot breathe either because those people control the economic and political life of the country, indeed all forms of activity in Canada.

At the present time—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I interrupt the hon. member, as he has indicated a moment ago that he intended to move an amendment.

I suppose he relies upon paragraph 7 of standing order 58 of the house, which grants 40 minutes, that is 10 additional minutes to the mover of a subamendment. Unfortunately, under the terms of standing order 45, the hon. member cannot move a subamendment.

Perhaps I could read standing order 45:

Only one amendment and one subamendment may be made to a motion for Mr. Speaker to leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply or ways and means.

As we already have an amendment and a subamendment before us, he cannot submit another subamendment. I might have waited for the hon. member to finish his remarks after 30 minutes, to remind him of the fact, but I thought he would prefer me to point it out immediately, so he might pursue his comments while keeping the provisions of standing order 45 in mind.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I would, nevertheless appeal to your generosity for granting me the three minutes you just took away in order to inform me of the procedure to be followed. I shall naturally comply with the standing orders.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would, if I had the time, prove to you, on the basis of statistics, that each Canadian citizen's debt in regard to the federal debt, to the provincial debt, and to the liabilities of schools and individuals, amounts to more than $3,000, and that this debt goes on increasing from year to year because of a banking system which wants all money in circulation to represent a liability for Canadian citizens.

In table 11, which is on page 27 of the white paper tabled by the Minister of Finance, we see that, for the last four years, the service of the public debt cost Canadians $5,849 million, which is more than five times the total budget of the state of Quebec.

Under the present system, everybody gets into debt. These are among others, the headlines we read practically every day in the press, in the Toronto as well as the Montreal and Winnipeg papers:

> Bankruptcy here, and another bankruptcy there ...The schoolboards are on the verge of disaster if their finances are not put on a sounder basis... Some municipalities are depressed, economically and financially...They can no longer balance their budgets.

They can no longer make both ends meet, even in Ottawa and in the provinces.

Why is there so much discontent, so much dissatisfaction? Because, due to expenses that must be incurred, the budget cannot be balanced not because physical possibilities are lacking, but because credit is totally wanting. Mr. Speaker, who profits from the present financial system? Who gets rich when governments, municipalities, school boards and individuals constantly get into debt?

Those who get rich are the bankers. The proof is to be found in the March 11, 1964 edition of the newspaper La Presse, in an article signed Laurent Lauzier, under the title:

> The financiers put down their stakes.

This was written not long ago, to wit, on March 11.

The article closes with these words:

> When the financial community thus gets into action, it is because it feels the imperative need to fashion the new frameworks which are in the offing in order to safeguard or to extend its field of action.

And yet, when those financiers want the passage of bills, we agree. Or perhaps the government will ask us to grant bank charters to new organizations, in order to allow even a greater number of financiers to exploit the Canadian people.

For instance, at present, bank charters are being asked and pressure is being exerted on parliament for the passage of legislation to allow the establishment of new chartered banks in the country.

[Text]

> The most significant seems to be the possibility of a revision of the Bank Act which would enhance the profitability of banking.

[Translation]

They do not make enough profit; they want more.

Mr. Speaker, where is this financial system leading us? Where is the remedy to this situation?

For almost 35 years we have been preaching Social Credit which has been pointing to the solution for a long time. Today other people come to the same conclusions as Social Crediters. I should like to quote once again the excellent report of economist-theologians who say that without a monetary reform, it is impossible to believe in the economic, political and financial liberation of a country or a province.

That leads me to discuss what is happening nowadays in the province of Quebec. Last Friday afternoon, I heard the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere (Mr. Paul) speak about separatists and insinuate that I did not speak the same language in the English speaking provinces as in the French speaking province.

For the information of the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere, I get more invitations from English speaking provinces that he ever received in his whole life. I meet students in English speaking universities and what I tell them, I shall repeat it here, in this parliament, this afternoon. I say the same thing in Quebec, in Ontario and in western Canada. If we are complaining in Quebec that the province is 25, 20 or 15 years behind the other provinces, as regards economic development, it is not the fault of the English speaking people in Toronto or Winnipeg.

It is because of French Canadians from the province of Quebec the Napoleonic code, while people with no guts instead of sending aggressive people to defend their interests.

I say the same thing in the riding of the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere when I go there, and I went a week ago.

Nobody will have me believe that if the province of Quebec did not develop, it is because of other Canadian people of different origins. I never asserted that.

But I know that in the province of Quebec it is possible to proceed by ourselves to our development.

At this time, we hear more and more of the reformation of the constitution, and we are asked by English Canadians from Ontario as well as from western Canada: But what do you want in the province of Quebec to leave us alone so that we will no longer hear about separatism, independence, etc.?

Mr. Speaker, in 1867, when the constitution was written, both elements in Canada were represented; for instance, education was separated, leaving to the province of Quebec its own education system, the civil code was also separated—and we will keep in the province of Quebec the Napoleonic code, while there is something else in Ontario—lines of separation were established at that time and differences were made between the two major ethnic groups in Canada.

What do we want in 1967? The assimilation of other provinces to Quebec? No, Mr. Speaker, I would be the first one to object to the assimilation of any province to the province of Quebec.

We want, when the new Canadian constitution is amended, that some other factors should be considered which will enable the province of Quebec, as well as the other provinces, to expand in a normal way. It is for that reason that we believe and urge that the new constitution should allow the provinces, and the province of Quebec as far as we are concerned:

1. Credit control. Once we control our credit, it will not rest with the federal Minister of Finance to tax us as he is compelled to do at present to pay tribute to a financial system and to those who control the economic blood of the nation. We, therefore, want control over our credit in the province of Quebec. If the province of Ontario wants the same thing, she should have it. Credit must be decentralized and enable us to develop our province according to its physical possibilities.

2. Immigration control. We want to know who is going to come and live with us; Ontario should have the same control and so should the other provinces.

3. Control of our exports, that is of the goods that are exported to the United States and elsewhere in the world, and also control of our imports.

[Text]

An hon. Member: Each province.

Mr. Caouette: Each province, naturally.

[Translation]

Fourth, to return to provinces the fiscal and direct taxation powers granted us under the constitution in 1867. What is the government waiting for to return taxation and fiscal powers to the provinces?

Mr. Speaker, those are the four points we are submitting. We suggest that hon. members look them over, study and discuss them. We are not trying to relieve Ontario, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Alberta or the maritime provinces of their responsibilities. On the other hand, let Quebec administer its own affairs as it sees fit. And we feel the same way about the other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I notice that it is five o'clock.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF SECRETARIAT

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi) moved:

That in the opinion of this house the government should consider the advisability of the immediate establishment of a secretariat for federal-provincial relations or a similar institution.

[Translation]

He said: Mr. Speaker, if I recommend today the immediate establishment of a secretariat or of a body of that kind, to improve federal-provincial relations, it is not to revive the classical debate on centralization as opposed, for instance, to provincial autonomy. Everyone recognizes, I think that under our constitution we must have strong governments at the federal, provincial and municipal levels, and that each of them must discharge its own responsibilities.

We recognize today that the spirit of cooperative federalism requires a high degree of consultation with the provinces. It is thus nowadays, as far as the techniques of modern governments are concerned, which imply a notion of planning. In a federal state, without close and continuous consultation, there is bound to be chaos. For the federal government to have the courtesy to resort to consultation in matters directly or indirectly affecting provincial jurisdiction does not imply any idea of retreat or abdication of responsibilities on its part.

I recognize the fact that the Prime Minister has set up some sort of mechanism within the privy council to deal with such matters and that he himself is now personally responsible to parliament for those questions.

I am absolutely convinced that the preparation of federal-provincial conferences, especially in the taxation field, is marked by a lack of co-operation and consultation.

The government should immediately study the ARDA procedure and the findings made in the field of resources. It remains to be seen whether such an organization or secretariat should be general in its nature and should include all questions directly or indirectly involving both levels of government or whether, at the outset, secretariats should be established on a departmental basis.

It is urgently necessary to emphasize consultation on a continuous and co-ordinated basis. The establishment of such an organization or secretariat will not be conducive to the breaking up of our country. But it will contribute to strengthen the ties of confederation.

Obviously, I do not want to exaggerate, it will not solve all problems in this field, but I firmly believe that it will be a practical and fruitful initiative of such a nature as to strengthen unity in diversity.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker, before closing my remarks this afternoon may I say I recognize it would be inappropriate at this stage to go into too much detail relating to the establishment of a secretariat or other body for federal-provincial relations, but at the same time I would like to offer a few suggestions, which I hope will be practical, relating to the establishment of such a body.

Many of us know after confederation came into being in 1867, Sir John A. Macdonald actually appointed a secretary of state for federal-provincial affairs. He, at that time, recognized the real necessity to strengthen the bonds of national unity and the bonds, so to speak, of confederation. I believe that necessity exists once more today.

Far too many people are making what I term negative declarations concerning the state of our national unity and the state of our confederation. For a number of years I have discussed, both inside and outside this house, the matter of the establishment of this secretariat or a similar body. I know there is a need today for this approach, and I hope it will constitute a practical step forward in unifying our country. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I hope my resolution and the subject matter contained therein will meet with the general approval of all members of the house.

I note with a great deal of pleasure that when meeting in Ottawa with the premiers of the provinces a few weeks ago, the Prime Minister expressed general agreement on the subject matter of the resolution I have introduced. I note too with equal pleasure that many of the provincial premiers also expressed general agreement with the terms of this resolution.

As I have already stated, we have had great and useful experience in the secretariat having to do with federal-provincial relations in the resources field. Most members of the house and most of the people of Canada were very interested recently when the Prime Minister established a body of personnel in the privy council offices for federal-provincial affairs. The Prime Minister recognizes the basic, great importance of this subject in that he answers to this house on questions put to him regarding problems existing between Ottawa and the provinces.

Even though I shall now be going into a certain amount of detail, I should like to mention that there was general agreement at the last federal-provincial conference, between the Prime Minister and the provincial premiers, that the time has come to establish a secretariat on the prime minister and premiers level. The Prime Minister and the provincial premiers could form a prime minister and premiers council for federal-provincial relations, and a secretariat could then be formed, similar to the one in the resources field, which would report its findings to the council composed of the Prime Minister and premiers.

The council and secretariat would, of course, be keynoted by a high degree of co-operation and continuous consultation. At the same time, even if such a secretariat were established, we would still have to encourage an increased degree of continuous consultation on a departmental or, if you will, ministerial level. The council of the Prime Minister and premiers, and the secretariat, would cover the general field of federal-provincial relations, and they would have an important co-ordinating function based on continuous consultation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) with his experience in international affairs recognizes that if one enters upon international conferences without adequate preparation, the results are often likely to be disappointing. We have seen this happen often when disarmament has been the subject of such conferences. If such discussions are to have the best chance of success, a great deal of work must be done beforehand in connection with the details of the subject matter; there must be consultation beforehand with those concerned. In other words, there is a good deal of homework to be done. The same notion should be the keynote of federal-provincial relations—this idea of continuous and co-ordinated consultation.

In carrying out the recommendations and suggestions that I have put before the house today, a minimum of personnel would be desirable and a minimum of personnel would be required. No empire building is contemplated. No superbody would be established which might possibly lead to an invasion of federal or provincial authority either at the legislative or at the administrative level.

I do hope, Mr. Speaker, that these suggestions will commend themselves to all hon. members and that they will prove useful. Alluding to what I have already said, may I express the hope that they will have a practical and positive unifying effect in our country today, at a time when too many people are making what I consider to be negative, destructive declarations. For this reason I hope that the resolution and the subject matter contained therein will meet with the approval of all hon. members in each and every party, and that the motion will be adopted this afternoon.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Quebec South): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) on the very interesting remarks he just made. I think that the setting up of such an organization is an accomplished fact, even though it does not appear in the statutes, because the hon. member must recognize, in all fairness, that the present government has perhaps held more consultations with the provinces than was ever the case in the past.

As a matter of fact, there has been consultation at the level of various departments, including the departments of labour, fisheries, agriculture, natural resources, public works, highways, industry and secretary of state.

In addition, there were numerous conferences—more than usual—at the premiers' provincial level. I believe that in this field, this government has set an example. And as we know that in our parliamentary system, such a procedure is a prerequisite to the setting up of organizations, I believe that we are proceeding at present in the right direction.

But, in due time, we have to give a definite framework to an institution which becomes necessary, from both sides, not as a means of centralization but, mainly I think, as a means of decentralization and of better understanding among the provinces. That is the reason why I felt I could today mention how important such a body would be as far as decentralization is concerned, taking as an example one of the crown corporations.

I refer to the national film board which, under the direction of its present chairman, Mr. Guy Roberge, who is an intelligent and well-informed man, performs an outstanding job in the field of interprovincial relations and that of relations between Canadians.

Knowing the influence of cinema on education, it is very important that we should consider creating such agencies for the benefit of all provinces.

It is a well-known fact that there is a close relationship between cinema and culture and that film societies attract many students because they give them the opportunity to see significant international as well as national productions.

The role of the national film board is primarily to give a true reflection of Canada. For the board to play that role in accordance with the constitutional rights granted to each province, it would be appropriate in my opinion to set up an agency such as the one proposed by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi since the national film board reflects the bicultural character of Canada in two respects, that is in the films it produces and in their distribution.

At the production level, the board has organized itself in such a way that its teams give an account of all forms of activity in Canada, and of the progress realized by our country concerning all aspects of the culture and particular problems of each major ethnical group, without forgetting the more recent contributions made to the Canadian mosaic. Production is divided into two branches. The French language division is under Mr. Pierre Juneau and the English language division comes under Mr. Grant McLean.

As far as the national film board's French production is concerned, one has but to glance at the films produced during the last year or two to find out that such a production endeavours to give a picture of all aspects of life in French Canada. The following is a list of some recent examples:

The film entitled "Les petits arpents", which is a half hour short on the need for farm redevelopment—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must tell the hon. member that I have been listening with great interest for the last minutes to the comments he has been making. Nevertheless, he should perhaps try to link his observations concerning the national film board to the motion that is now before us.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Cantin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the house are prepared to let the hon. member speak on the national film board on the condition that, in the near future, he will suggest, following the establishment of a federal-provincial relations secretariat, and on the first meeting, that the national film board produce a film on the members of the house during a regular sitting.

Mr. Cantin: Mr. Speaker, I humbly submit that it was suitable that I should take the national film board as an example. It is indirectly concerned with education which is primarily a matter under the jurisdiction of the provinces, and it is well known that there are some organizations today that put pressure on governments at all levels.

As a matter of fact, this morning's Le Devoir reported that film producers are requesting the Quebec government to help in the production of full length features by using revenue from the amusement tax.

We also know that such needs exist at the federal level, and I think that through an organization like that one, it would be possible to reach some agreement, and to promote better understanding. And it was to set out the relationship between the national film board, in particular, and a body like the one suggested, that I pointed out the work accomplished by the national film board.

Mr. Speaker, I may have described its activities too fully, but it was only the better to prove my argument, which is that the creation of such an organization will become more and more necessary.

This is why I mentioned the titles of a few films, among others "Paul-Emile Borduas", concerning the life and work of that famous painter; the "Lumberjacks of Manouane"—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We, on this side of the house, are prepared to allow any necessary latitude to the hon. member, but if we are going to talk about culture and discuss films and lumbermen—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I agree with the hon. member for Joliette, for I myself interrupted the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Cantin) a few minutes ago. Therefore, I would again ask the hon. member to connect his remarks to the motion under consideration.

Mr. Cantin: Mr. Speaker, I was simply outlining the important work being accomplished by the national film board, from the point of view of relations among the various provinces as well as among the various cultures in this country.

As suggested by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, this body should not be operated for centralization, and that is why I believe the government should have a little time before creating this body or defining its duties. In my opinion, we should establish a very flexible body, the role of which would be, not to centralize, but to decentralize and to ensure, between the various provinces and the central government, better co-operation and better understanding.

[Text]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, the topic of this motion is one that has been of much interest and concern to those in this party and to me personally. On two occasions in previous sessions I have introduced a motion to set up a permanent, full scale ministerial department of government to deal with the matter of federal-provincial affairs. I appreciate the resolution that is now before us, introduced by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey). I appreciate, also, the non-partisan way in which the hon. member spoke. It is with a good deal of pleasure that we give our support to this motion. I do believe it would be more constructive if members of the government would be just a little more positive in their remarks regarding the motion and would say whether they are for or against it.

I have just been checking over some of the remarks made last year with regard to this subject, and I think it might be well if we were to refresh our memories on certain aspects of it which the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi did not really bring out in his remarks. Confederation was a coming together of the provinces. We have heard a great deal about co-operative federalism. I think one of the reasons we have as many problems as we do today in Canada is simply that we have not lived up to the spirit of the original confederation. What is needed today —while we do give credit for as much co-operative federalism as has been indicated by the government—is a greater degree of co-operative federalism based upon the concept of confederation of 100 years ago. Basically this original concept of confederation was an agreement among the provinces to form a nation, Canada. There was to be a federal form of government. Canada was to be a nation that not only maintained its independence as far as its relationships with the United States were concerned, but also with the mother country, and other colonial countries across the sea. I think that if our federal administration could establish a greater degree of co-operation in those various fields which overlap between provincial and federal responsibility, and if there could be a greater amount of co-ordination, we would really have a greater sense of unity and national spirit in Canada.

It is true that provincial governments lead the way in this particular field. A number of provincial governments have actually set up departments to deal with federal-provincial affairs. I believe, as the record will show, they have found these departments to be very useful. This does not only apply in the field of resources but it applies in regard to one of the most critical problems that we face today as far as federal-provincial relations are concerned. I refer to the field of taxation. Certainly many of the fiscal problems that we have today would not be there if we had a greater degree of understanding relating to the shared cost programs which have developed in recent years.

Another aspect of our national development that is very important at the present time is a national highways program. We will never have the national highways program that this country needs unless it is done on the basis of co-ordinated understanding and co-operation with the provinces. The same problem exists with regard to education and health. We maintain that education and health are basic responsibilities of the provinces; yet there are fields within education and health which just cannot be divided into as many compartments as we have provinces. The basic problem which faces all educational departments in the different provinces relates to the question of money and the co-ordination of programs which affect the entire nation. Therefore it is my opinion, as I have thought over the establishment of such an organization on the federal scene, that probably the first step toward a full scale ministerial department of government would be the setting up of a secretariat such as is now being suggested.

It is on this basis that we give our full support to the motion before us. We trust that the government members who are yet to speak will consider this matter in the light of the tremendous importance of the topic with which we are now dealing. It seems to me that such a secretariat would not only eliminate many of the problems which face the government at this time, but it would also prepare and pave the way for a better understanding with regard to some of the problems which are not yet at the critical stage. Still other problems can be anticipated, and certainly there would be a greater sense of national spirit and unity than we have at the present time if the subject matter of this motion were put into effect.

[Mr. Thompson.]

I do not wish to deal with this subject at any great length, Mr. Speaker, but I believe that we as members of this house, being representative of all the provinces and a cross section of political thought in this country, have as one of our most urgent responsibilities to think of and be concerned with the problem of national unity. I do not think there is any other single way through which we can develop the national unity which I believe all of us would like to see in our country, as far as government is concerned, than by the setting up of such a secretariat as is proposed. Therefore we give our support to this measure. I would urge that all hon. members take a positive attitude, not just to the motion before the house but to the whole related question of national unity in our country, thus facilitating in a tremendous way the growth of our country by working together in a more efficient and effective manner.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I just want to put on record the support of our party for the intent of this motion, and we would be glad to have the opportunity of voting for it if a vote were called. The subject opens up a great many areas into which one can go. It has always been my observation that as a preliminary to a secretariat we require a much stronger prime minister's office than we have at the present time. I am not talking about the incumbent but about the office as such, although one could make some comments about the incumbent too. But as I see it, the previous prime minister had, and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has, an inadequate staff to deal with many of its relationships. It also seems to me that the prime minister's office is not only the power centre of our form of government at the present time, but it is particularly so where provincial relationships are concerned.

I do not think one could really consider a secretariat in detail without considering how it would be centred in the prime minister's office. I am also of the opinion that the privy council and its present staff should fight for its tie-in with the cabinet in ministerial meetings; but again the staff is inadequate to support the office of the prime minister. On this point, I think that anyone who wanted to find someone who could speak in French on policy in the prime minister's office at the present time would go very short. That is just one indication of how stripped is the office of the prime minister, or how barren it is at the present time; there is not one press officer who can speak in the French language and would be the opposite number of Mr. O'Hagan. I mention that as an example of the fact that the staff of the main power centre of the administration at the present time, certainly as regards relationships with the provinces, is hopelessly inadequate; and it seems to me that any development of a secretariat at the federal level to deal with federal-provincial relations should be centred around and in the prime minister's office.

Another factor here, one which we would welcome, is that it would enable us to come much more to grips with the way that a prime minister is able to handle his responsibility to the House of Commons in respect of relationships with the provinces, where his authority at the present time seems to me to be blurred by the role of cabinet ministers and the fact that we have cabinet solidarity and secrecy. I think the reality of power at the present time is that we should see it focused more strongly in the prime minister's office and should have an opportunity to see it displayed in front of us so that we could analyse it, comment upon it and make demands upon it. I do not think we have that at the present time, and this proposal of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) would go some way toward opening up this kind of development.

Therefore we should like to go on record as approving the motion, and we should like to see whether the government could follow up in working out, in concert with other parties in the house through some kind of committee, the kind of secretariat which would be useful so as to fulfil the general intention of the hon. member's proposal.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on that motion. First of all, I want to congratulate the sponsor, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) for introducing it.

In my opinion, if we were to achieve the object of that motion I am sure that it would help improve the situation which exists between the provinces and the federal government with regard to certain bills. At the present time, relations with the provinces are strained, more especially between the province of Quebec and the federal government, because, instead of co-operative federalism we have rather centralizing federalism. I believe that such a permanent secretariat for federal-provincial relations would tend to prevent the federal government from interfering in all sorts of fields which are none of its concern. Besides, the federal government would certainly have to consult with the provinces before introducing its budget.

In the past, we had several examples of tensions between the provinces and the federal government. For instance, when the federal government passed municipal loans legislation, some provinces criticized that action, and rightly so.

At this time we have before us—and it was mentioned in the speech from the throne debate—a bill concerning loans to students. We all know that the province of Quebec and various organizations, even at the national level, protested against that intrusion of the central government in the field of education which belongs to the provinces.

Furthermore, with that permanent secretariat sitting all year round, some problems of joint federal and provincial responsibility could be referred to it, as, for instance, the matter of lotteries, or water pollution control which is a problem concerning the federal as well as the provincial governments.

For this reason, I think that the suggestion made in this motion is constructive. Its implementation would provide a greater respect for the provinces and assist substantially in reaching a better understanding, which in the end would promote the cause of national unity.

Those are all the remarks I had to make. I take this opportunity to add that I think the government should accept this motion and introduce a measure to set up that secretariat which would be very useful for all the provinces and for the federal government.

[Text]

Mr. Marvin Gelber (York South): Mr. Speaker, after the remarks of the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Cantin) I suppose hon. members expect me to speak about the national gallery. I might even venture to speak about the C.B.C., but I would imagine that some hon. member would rise and under rule 26 move the adjournment of the house. We have had the suggestion here that consultation has moved in the direction of centralizing power in this country, and that somehow or other this government has shared in that. I should like to point out with regard to the shared cost programs that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) has indicated that the federal government would co-operate in transferring some of these programs to the provincial governments. In the last few days we have witnessed a bill being introduced in the legislature of the province of Ontario in a matter relating to the Criminal Code which is a scandal and a disgrace, and if there had been consultation with the federal government by the province in that case, Mr. Speaker, the humiliation which most Canadians feel might have been avoided.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question of consultation was well set out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on the occasion of the dominion-provincial conference last November. The chief area of consultation is that of joint responsibility. There is a fruitful field which might well be explored and developed. A very important factor is not the setting up of machinery which would be approved; the most important factor is that there be regularity of consultation. If there is regularity of consultation, it can be planned and anticipated, and there could be a meeting together and a sharing of minds. I believe one of the important things which we must develop in our provincial-federal relationship is this regularity of consultation.

A number of members have spoken about having a minister in the federal government responsible for federal-provincial matters. The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) pointed out that this should be the special domain of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), and thus an advantage might be gained by extending his staff so that they would be trained to deal with this problem. The Prime Minister could answer questions concerning federal-provincial problems. If we were to set up a special minister we might, in fact, encumber consultations; we might not facilitate them. We know, for instance in the international sphere there are consultations between various branches of this government and branches of government in other countries. These consultations are quite often so intimate that the normal channels of diplomacy are not the prime avenue for them. I think it is very important that we should develop easy, quick and efficient means of consultation. If this were to be accomplished through the establishment of a special minister, it might well be that this would encumber the consultations.

Each authority must set up its own machinery. It is not for us, in this house, to say what the province of Ontario, the province of Quebec or the province of Prince Edward Island should do. We must think of our own facilities. The area of consultation does not necessarily apply to the same ministry in each province. We know that the federal Department of Labour has responsibility for co-ordinating the vocational training programs and the apprenticeship programs. In point of fact, different ministries in different provinces have responsibility for both of these programs, and in some provinces responsibility is split between two ministries. You cannot always consult with one ministry in a province in dealing with any one of these particular areas of responsibility.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) upon his presentation and to commend the remarks made by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) concerning national unity in this country. We have to free ourselves from the easy going attitude we have had towards our problems, towards our responsibilities. We must respond to meet the economic challenges and to meet the other challenges which confront us as a people at all levels. The resolution of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi draws attention to the important problem of federal-provincial relations and, in my opinion, focuses attention on this important area of Canadian life which requires examination, which requires planning and which requires consultation.

We have set up an economic council which has taken over responsibility in terms of planning, and which will consult with the provinces on various areas of life in this country. This council will have channels of consultation and channels for planning. I do not believe we can crystallize all these problems in terms of one suggestion, in terms of one idea. I believe we are going to develop channels of consultation. We are going to delineate areas in which consultation can be more effectively conducted. I believe that in this manner, in a pragmatic way, by developing areas of consultation, by recognizing areas of joint responsibility, by ensuring regularity of consultation, we can facilitate the solution of problems in these important areas of our national life.

I think the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi is to be complimented for his statement, for his resolution, and I am certain that in every way we must keep continually before us the important problem of dominion-provincial relations which cuts across many areas of our national life.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we, in this corner of the house, would also like to give our opinion on the motion submitted by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey).

I feel that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi deserves to be congratulated for suggesting that a secretariat for federal-provincial relations be set up.

In the past, the setting up of such an organization would have had an impact, for instance with regard to municipal loans, because without it, at one time, the federal government had to back down in order to study the circumstances surrounding the loans to the municipalities and to give at least some measure of satisfaction to all interested parties.

In the case of the national pension scheme, for instance, the federal members were asked to consider such a plan when Quebeckers knew all the time that the Quebec government intended to introduce its own plan without the federal members for Quebec knowing anything about it. If there had been a secretariat for federal-provincial relations, then we would have known what was going to take place in Quebec, and this secretariat would have been able to co-ordinate the views of all concerned. In this way we would have been able to choose between the provincial and the federal pension plans.

The same thing goes for student loans. At present the authorities and those who are most directly concerned, the students of the province of Quebec, are against the proposed federal legislation because education comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces.

If there had been a secretariat for federal-provincial relations, perhaps the central government would have been more cautious and would have given serious consideration to the representations made and the arguments invoked by the provinces before taking the kind of action which the present government has been initiating during the past year especially.

There is one point on which I should like to insist.

Minor details as a whole do not reveal the federal government's present policies, which are far from being consistent with understanding and agreement between the federal and the provincial governments, but there is still something more important, I think, and it is that we have been witnessing for some time federal-provincial conferences, where the federal government is endeavouring to solve the problems facing the ten provinces and we believe that on such occasions, the things at stake in the discussions are not seen in their true perspective.

Each province has problems to discuss, each province has rights to defend, especially the province of Quebec.

I believe that the discussions should no longer take place between the federal government and the ten provinces; if we mean to reach an agreement the discussions should be conducted between the federal government and the province of Quebec alone, one facing the other, as equal partners. There should not be on one side, the federal government, and on the other, the province of Quebec with the other nine provinces, because, in this case, the discussion is distorted, each province brings in her arguments and leads the discussion according to her own wishes, and nothing is solved.

Such a secretariat for federal-provincial relations might promote discussion, not only between the ten provinces and the federal government on the one hand, but also between the federal government and the government of one province particularly concerned. If a province was faced with some problem, or wished to suggest some solutions or present some arguments, it might deal directly with the federal government and would not have to sit around a table with ten other governments, when the object of those conversations would quite often concern only that particular province and the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, this would be the only way of settling the disputes between the provinces and the federal government.

During the last federal-provincial conference, in November 1963—and the same thing will happen again at the beginning of April—we saw that when ten provinces, all with different interests, were each discussing some point of particular interest, the government was unable to settle any problem and to find any solution.

When discussions take place between the federal government and the government of each individual province, some issues will probably be settled.

I think that this federal-provincial secretariat might be charged with looking after the problems of each province. Everyone knows that the province of Quebec—and I am speaking of that province because it is my own, just as other hon. members for Saskatchewan or Manitoba will speak about wheat, because they come from the wheat growing provinces—has some particular problems to settle. If they cannot be settled at this time, it is due to the lack of a body to promote frank and sincere discussions between the Ottawa and the Quebec governments.

Mr. Speaker, I say this because I do not see how Quebec can be interested in the problems of Newfoundland, British Columbia or Manitoba. I do not see how the representatives of these various provinces, by meeting with the federal government, can discuss advisedly a given problem.

It is why I contend that such a secretariat should have as its aim to analyse the problems according to circumstances in regard to situation or location. Then, valid solutions could be arrived at which would satisfy everybody, since everyone would have the opportunity of outlining his problems and discussing them as he wished.

Mr. Speaker, I shall refrain from speaking any longer, so that the motion of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) may be put to a vote.

[Text]

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, I had thought there was considerable agreement on this motion until I heard the debate. Evidently each person who has spoken in support of the motion supports it for quite different reasons. The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) indicated that his party is in agreement with the motion. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) indicated that he personally is in favour of the motion. I suspect that the reasons are diametrically opposed. I am rather surprised, I must say, that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm should take the stand that he did because as the veritable leader of his party in the province of Quebec one would have thought that as a member of this house he would have been more concerned about the jurisdiction of the federal government.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that integration of our economy and society grows apace and that co-operation of a kind never dreamed of a hundred years ago between the several branches of our governments is now necessary. This is especially true in the area of economic development. I am sure that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) wishes to propose programs for the development of Atlantic Canada he feels embarrassed by the fact that the federal government can do only certain things and must rely on the provinces to complement what he proposes in this house by their own provincial programs.

My hope would be that a federal-provincial secretariat of the kind proposed by the hon. member would strengthen the bonds of our national unity. I hope that in such a secretariat we would have the opportunity to exchange information, to become aware of the problems of the various parts of the country, and to co-ordinate our diverse plans. It seems to me that there is an error abroad in the land, and I thought I could detect it rather clearly in the remarks of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). The implication there was that Canada is a country produced by two founding races. I think this label is a useful one when we are talking about one of the problems confronting our parliament and our people at this time. But this label conceals much of the reality. Let us remember that Canada is a confederation of provinces, originally three or four with others added later. I would hope that a secretariat of this kind, being a meeting place for the federal government and representatives of the several provinces, would emphasize the fact that this country is a federation of provinces, and that any problems of other kinds there are will be dealt with as superimposed upon this fact.

A good deal of preliminary co-operation would be necessary if such a secretariat is to be established. I do not think we in this house can presume to advise the provinces that they should set up a sector representing them in a federal-provincial secretariat. It seems to me that the hon. member for Port Arthur made a very shrewd observation concerning the Prime Minister's office. Perhaps it was only speculation, but if so it would probably be borne out by an examination of the real facts.

There will have to be a good deal of exploration with regard to what such a secretariat will accomplish before we can push ahead to devise the precise machinery of the secretariat. I think this is important to remember because such a secretariat is not without its dangers. The people of Canada are represented here now by a parliament. It would be hazardous to create another entity of government, a kind of national congress, a kind of congress of ambassadors supplanting this parliament and thereby supplanting the direct, democratic procedures on which this House of Commons is based. Nevertheless, despite these dangers I think we should explore this idea, not so that the secretariat would become a congress in effect making the law for the land, but so that it might become a place for the exchange of information and for consultation among and between the several governments in this country. I will not attempt to explore, as did the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), some of the more fundamental questions that would be—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Nowlan.

Mr. D. G. Hahn (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, it is enjoyable to play to a packed house.

Mr. Winkler: Where are your colleagues.

Mr. Hahn: I was going to open my remarks tonight with a few kind comments to some of my colleagues on the other side, but the particular colleagues I wish to address myself to are not here, so I shall stop the pleasantries and move on to the main purpose of my speech dealing with the budget.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) indicated that a budget should and must be more than just a government housekeeping list. He indicated that it must primarily be a document that indicates the social purpose of the government. To me this is very, very true. A budget is a document through which a political party expresses its social purpose in practical terms. It is the instrument through which the theory of its social ideals is translated into practice, and it is with this aspect of the budget I should like to deal tonight.

I realize that a budget is also so many other things, and deals with problems of trade, investment and so on. However these are things that were covered in the budget speech, and undoubtedly will be covered by other hon. members on both sides of the house, so I shall not deal with them. A budget does many things, and in the social field it has a distinct purpose. I think you can see what purpose a budget has, you can recognize the social policy when you look at a budget's approach to the way in which revenue is raised and, obviously on the other side of the coin, to the way in which moneys are spent, the level of the expenditures and the direction in which they go.

I should like to look at these particular factors in the present budget. First of all, let us look at how we raise the revenue we need. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands criticized the budget, and criticized quite severely the fact that there was no tax on capital gains. He suggested large sums were being made, large profits were being earned, and that not one nickel of this was finding its way into the public treasury. He would tax these profits thereby, in his own words, "preventing a grossly inequitable distribution of that income."

The effect of this would be to put a ceiling on the business opportunities that are available in this country. He would seek to redistribute the income in the country through taxes, in such a way that you would lift the bottom up, helping those people who need help but at the same time putting the lid on the top, or limiting the opportunities available. He would seek then to add to the maxim, that all men are born equal, the words, and shall so remain.

I reject this; I think it is wrong.

It seems to me that over the years the structure of our taxation, the means we use to reap our revenue, have grown a bit lopsided. The original purposes are probably becoming a bit obscure as more needs are added year by year and more funds are needed to meet them, but we still do have an underlying philosophy within our taxation system of redistribution by progressive income and other taxes. We have remaining some incentive for private investment for capital gains, for the entrepreneur to invest money in the country, because these capital gains are not yet taxed; but the system has become blurred and confused over the years.

This year, for reasons outlined by the Minister of Finance, we are not making a change in the fundamental basis of collecting our revenue, but by the end of this year the report of the royal commission on taxation should be presented and in our next budget we should see the start of changes in our method of collecting revenue which should reflect the social purpose of the government. When we do I hope that in making these changes we recognize what we ought to do to meet our basic needs.

First of all, I think it is imperative that we always recognize the needs of those people who are not able by themselves to maintain a minimal, reasonably decent standard of living. I hope that we always continue to distribute from those that have to those that have not. We must provide means to alleviate the hard core of suffering that still exists in our country. As a Liberal these things are inherent in my philosophy. In doing this we must be very careful that we do not remove strong incentives for those who would like to invest, strong incentives for advancement and opportunity within our country.

I do not think we can attempt to follow a social pattern of trying to produce an artificial equality. We must allow room for free competitive opportunities in a free society so that people can find their own levels. I expect taxation to effect a redistribution of income, to put a floor under hardship and misery within the country. I am sure Conservative members of the Conservative party would want the same thing, although I am sure we could not agree on the level at which this floor should be. The important thing is that we must try and put this floor under misery without at the same time putting a ceiling on top of opportunity.

All men may be born equal, but I think it is folly to say they are going to die that way. So, when we revise out taxes I hope we allow, maintain, continue and probably increase the opportunities for advancement, the opportunities for competitive operations within the country and that we shall not attempt to create an artificial equality that we cannot maintain.

Now let us turn to the other side of the coin. Let us look at the spending. The Conservative amendment suggests in true Conservative fashion that we are spending too much and that our deficits are too high.

Mr. Winkler: That is after what you said; do not forget that.

Mr. Hahn: I welcome this return to Conservative principles on the part of hon. members opposite. I do not agree with this view but I think it is time it was expressed.

Mr. Winkler: You said we were spending too much.

Mr. Hahn: Hearing these Conservative views expressed, I think there is something about the acoustics of this hall which makes those views much more palatable when they come from Mr. Speaker's left. I hope it remains that way.

What should we be trying to achieve in our levels of spending? Is it realistic to expect the absolute levels of expenditure in this country to decline? Can we really chop great chunks out of our spending? I, for one, would like to see reduced levels of expenditure, as I am sure most people would, because if we spent less it might be possible to cut taxes. But is it realistic to expect such cuts? There are only two ways, as far as I am aware, in which to cut spending. The first is by increasing the efficiency with which money is spent so as to make maximum use of every dollar. The other way in which to save money is to cut out items which are not needed.

It is unfortunate but true, I think, that governments are inherently inefficient in their spending operations. It seems to me that waste goes hand in hand with the size of the operation, which is an inescapable part of all government operations. The Glassco commission pointed this out in most definite terms. The present government is now implementing the recommendations of that royal commission and its action in so doing will increase the efficiency with which the government spends its money. We are likely to realize some attractive savings in consequence, but I do not believe that the total savings to be realized in this way will be significant or substantial enough to lead to a significant fall in government expenditure.

I think steps taken toward making the machinery of government more efficient will be both beneficial and productive but I do not think they can be maintained to the extent of producing fundamental changes. It seems to me we must also be realistic enough to realize that, no matter which party is in power over the years, new examples of inefficiency will creep into the administration while some of the old ones we thought had been got rid of will return, despite all the efforts which were made to get rid of them. So it seems that at some stage in the future we shall be obliged to go through the whole procedure again and review once more the efficiency of our spending. It is unfortunate, but I think these problems are inherent in any government operation and I do not believe any government could count on long term substantial reductions in expenditure as a result of increasing its efficiency.

This means that the only way in which we could successfully cut expenditure, should we decide to do so, would be by reducing the number of items on which we are spending money or by reducing the amount spent on each. Last session, as a new member, I sat in this chamber during the presentation of the estimates. In my naïve ignorance I thought I was witnessing the process by which parliament exercised control over the public purse strings. I expected to hear members querying various items of expenditure to find out whether they were really necessary, whether the amount spent could be reduced, and so on. As we all know, that is not what happens. There are, obviously, exceptions. But the impression I received was of a number of speeches aimed at urging the government to spend money on things which might be popular with constituents back home.

Members sitting opposite who, in their criticism, complained by and large that we were spending too much money, failed to produce many concrete or constructive ideas as to where our spending might be cut. There were notably few suggestions from the other side of the house in this regard. Parliamentary perusal of expenditure seemed to resolve itself into general requests for more spending. The idea that parliament controls the purse strings during the examination of the estimates is not a realistic one, in my opinion, and I hope that the committee which is now studying procedures of the house will consider this particular matter and, possibly, recommend that the estimates be studied in some other way, for instance in a committee where some effective work could be carried out. If this were done we might be able to bring about some savings, though I do not think that any major savings could be effected. Thus, neither by increasing our efficiency nor by improved methods of parliamentary scrutiny are we likely to achieve substantial cuts in our spending levels.

I know that Conservatives are opposed to increases in government spending. It is a natural conservative tendency—I mean to begin that word with a small "c"—to resist such increases. However, there are still a number of fields in which there is a need for continued and even increased public expenditure. For example, I do not believe that we have by any means done all we ought to do in the field of welfare in this country. There are still far too many Canadians who are existing in living conditions which most of us would consider deplorable. There are some who say we ought drastically to slash our expenditures in this area. I should like to take them to certain parts of my own riding where they would see people living in substandard housing, ill clothed, ill fed and worried about medical bills. I am sure they would then feel, as I do, that this is not worthy of Canada in 1964. In the field of welfare therefore, if we are to satisfy my conscience at least we should be spending more, not less.

There are, in fact, a number of directions in which there is still a continuing need for public expenditures. For example, we need to direct more funds to investment in this country. We need to spend more money training people in the new technology so that they can obtain and retain employment in a technological society. We need to develop those areas of our country where unemployment remains high; we need to establish and develop industries which are capable of competing in a world where tariff changes are likely to take place. We must continue the process of investing in the human and material resources of our country—any program of this kind will mean continuing certain expenditures in the future. If we do not make these expenditures we shall, in the long term, be confronted with the need to make welfare payments on an ever increasing scale, the consequence of not having prepared ourselves for the changes which lay ahead.

The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) criticized the increases in expenditure associated with the new Department of Industry. This department has two main functions. One of them is area development, aimed substantially at fulfilling a definite need in this country by concentrating on those regions where unemployment is higher than it should be. These are the problem areas about which we must do something if we are to achieve a reasonable balance across the country. The department has another purpose, namely, to work with industry and assist it in reaching a position where it is competitive in the export markets which we must seek. Surely these aims are worthwhile aims and if we do not achieve them we shall suffer for it later on, since the consequence will undoubtedly be increased unemployment. It does not seem valid to me therefore, to criticize the expenditure of money for these purposes. The Atlantic development board has a somewhat similar function but I notice the hon. member was not too critical of expenditures made in this particular area.

I think it is perfectly valid to criticize the way in which the department is carrying out its responsibilities. It is obviously too early yet to say whether it has done a good or a poor job. The basis on which it started indicates that it is doing a good job, but a few years from now there may be a very valid criticism that the department is not doing the job it should be doing. However, this is no reason to criticize the basic need of establishing a department to carry out these functions that I think had to be carried out. So that this, again, is an area where I say that spending must continue, must expand; we must continue to make expenditures in areas that are going to help the economy of the country develop for the future.

On the basis of this, then, there are many, many areas where we are not now doing the job we should be doing. There are many areas where we could be and perhaps should be, spending more, not less, than we are. So that to me the balance, the distinguishing factor, the thing that is important is that we have all these needs that we are not now meeting because we only have certain resources with which to meet them. On the basis of this I cannot see expenditure going down, in absolute terms. It is a question of at what rate will our expenditures rise.

It seems to me we have to concern ourselves with the rate of rise of our expenditures and not think in terms of absolute cuts. We have to concern ourselves with what is the right rate of rise of expenditure, in what priority, and to what things do we put the increased money which we are spending. I think in this budget we see a good example of what, to my mind, is a proper balance of these factors.

We are increasing our spending by some 3½ per cent or so; the gross national product is forecast to rise to about 5 per cent, so we are not plowing all our gains into increased expenditures. We are doing what I also feel we must do; we are using some of our gains in order to reduce the deficit. We are reducing the deficit by one third this year; we are starting to get that under control. I hope that in the future we will get the deficit wiped out. I would like to see surpluses so that we can reduce our debt load, because this is one place where we can save money in absolute terms.

Also, I should like to see tax cuts so there is greater incentive to Canadians. But as of now, I think the amount of spending increase that is forecast for this year relates to two things; the fact that there is always a need, and a legitimate need, for greater expenditures and the size of our deficit. In view of the gross national product increase, I think the increased expenditures forecast for this year are reasonable. Look at what we are expending these funds on. It seems to me that the type of expenditures we are making balance against the social factors that I think have to be balanced. One is providing opportunities for Canadians in terms of job retraining and educational grants in terms of employment opportunities, and through such things as the bonus on housing, the municipal loan and development fund, and all these other projects. It seems to me that by spending money in this area we are meeting the economic needs of the country.

Also, through our educational grants, through the relief of taxes to students, we are trying to provide, as I think we must, the equality of opportunity for Canadians that I think is so important and desirable. What we are not doing to the full extent that we must—and we will be doing this over the years and will always have to continue it as we get in better financial shape—is this; we must still go after the problem of substandard living conditions. But I think for this year we are moving in the right direction; we are putting our increased expenditures into those things that are needed to build up the country in the future.

So I think this budget is sound. I do not believe we should be criticized for an absolute increase in our expenditure, bearing in mind the rate of growth of the economy in relative terms and the increased percentage of gross national product. Our total expenditures are moving down and our budget deficit is coming into balance. I think the area in which we are spending is also in line with the sort of things to which I like to see increased expenditures go. So if I may quote from the well known commercial, to me the spending side of this budget is right for our times.

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, last Monday evening, like other members of parliament and like people all across the country, I listened very attentively to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) as he brought down the budget. To say the least, it was a disappointment. Last year the minister could be called the great surgeon. He came into this great operating room of parliament and brought forth his patient, the ailing economy, and began to operate to remove the ulcers. Before he had finished, he had amputated all the patient's limbs.

[Mr. Hahn.]

Mr. Knowles: And left the clamps inside.

Mr. Slogan: The pundits of the Liberal party are certainly not following that course this year. The great surgeon is treating the ills of the economy with aspirins and with the occasional sugar-coated pill. Surely this is not that bold, aggressive approach that was promised to the people of Canada in the last election campaign. In fact, it seems that the front bench of this government, although so young in power, is peopled by old and tired men who lack initiative, imagination and the aggressiveness that is needed to set this economy on the right road again. Again, I must say that in listening to some of the backbenchers I thought they exhibited better insight and more common sense than the men on the front bench.

How are we supposed to judge this budget? The only criteria we can use in judging the budget are the criteria which the Liberal party themselves set in the election promises of the last campaign, and also in the criticisms of the economy as it existed under the former government. So let us look at the economy in the last year of the Conservative government. Our gross national product showed an increase of 8 per cent; one third more than in this fiscal year. Certainly, if they said that 8 per cent was not enough to get the economy moving, they should be doing something to surpass 8 per cent.

Another yardstick, of course, is the cost of living index. In 1962 the late President Kennedy said that Canada had attained the greatest price stability among all the nations of the free world. In fact, in the last three years of the Conservative administration the cost of living index was kept well below what it is this year. Therefore we not only had greater stability of price and a higher gross national product, but we had greater national production. It is the true index of growth in the economy. National production in the last year of the Conservative government was 6.4 per cent, as against 4.3 per cent last year. That, again, was almost one third higher. In the last election campaign the Liberal party said the country was standing still; they said the economy had to be put on the tracks again, it had to be set in motion. By their own standards, by their own criteria, they have failed. They have failed most miserably the people of Canada and their own party.

An hon. Member: Hypocrites.

Mr. Slogan: I would like to come back to this topic a little later, Mr. Speaker. I would now like to look at some of the sugar-coated pills. One is the extension in family allowances to children of 16 and 17 years of age who remain in school. This, of course, was part of the Conservative platform in the last election campaign. We in this party brought forth a resolution a few weeks ago, and the people on the other side of the chamber decided to vote against it. Now they bring it in. It is welcomed; it is good; we support it. Then there is the loan provision to students, which is also very much welcomed and which we support.

But we wonder what has happened to all those scholarships which the Liberal party promised the young people of Canada. There has been the exemption of tuition fees of part-time students, and I understand that this is being extended to graduates in the technical and professional fields who undertake postgraduate and refresher courses. I welcome this. I was one who over the years tried to achieve this. I also think that as well as tuition fees the cost of instruments, books, and travelling and living expenses should be included. After all, the professional man contributes a large portion of the income in the coffers of the federal treasury, and he is being penalized twice. He has not been encouraged to take refresher courses and keep abreast of advances in technology, which are in essence a capital investment for him because through his added knowledge he earns more money, which means added income to the federal treasury.

I hope the Minister of Finance will give consideration to greater exemption for postgraduate courses. It is anomalous that at the present time the professional man can go to an international or domestic convention once a year and write off all his expenses, whereas if he undertakes a refresher course, that is not possible. Inasmuch as most of these courses are undertaken in different countries or different parts of Canada, this is a real necessity.

I should now like to make a few remarks on the current account deficit in our international balance of payments. As the report of the Bank of Canada shows, in the last few years there has been a substantial decline in this deficit and there has been a welcome decline this year. As the Bank of Canada report shows, if it had not been for two factors, the devaluation of the dollar and large sales of grain to communist countries, that deficit would have been larger this year than last. Certainly here are two stories which deserve retelling. The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) mentioned these factors this afternoon, and I should also like to say a little on the story of wheat.

It can truly be said that this year the farmers of the country did a great deal to attain what growth there has been in the economy and contributed to the improvement in our international balance of payments. When the Conservative party came to power in 1957 we inherited large surpluses of wheat, owing to the fact that the policy of the Liberal party was this: If people want our wheat, let them come and get it, because we grow the best wheat in the world. Part of the national agricultural policy of the former Conservative government was that of accelerated sales. We went out and sold wheat. Then came the Chinese wheat deal. Mr. Hazen Argue, who was the leader of the C.C.F. party and then latterly the agriculture spokesman of the Liberal party, stated that this was not a wheat deal at all because there was no fixed price, and therefore it was bad for Canada.

But was it bad for Canada? How short can memories be? We in western Canada remember how the Liberal party sold the western farmers down the river in the British wheat deal when, because of a fixed price, hundreds of millions of dollars were lost to the farmers in the west when the world market price of wheat soared. Then after that, feeling sorry for the farmers, the Liberal government of that day took $60 million from the taxpayers' pockets and distributed it amongst the western farmers, giving them a return of 10 cents on the dollar as compared with the money which could have been earned when world prices increased. When the Chinese wheat deal was negotiated the price was $1.67 a bushel. Then the price went up to over $2. You remember, Mr. Speaker, the great march on Ottawa by the western farmers who were asking for deficiency payments on grain of 30 cents a bushel. They got their deficiency payments through the increase in world prices and it did not cost the taxpayers a cent. This has been the policy of the Conservative party, and it is little wonder that the agricultural people of Canada support us.

I have been talking about agriculture and I do not want to get into a detailed discussion on it, but our whole approach to the problems of agriculture, which hitherto have been tackled piecemeal, was to bring in a national policy to provide for the basic needs of the farmers. First of all we required stability of prices, so we brought in the stabilization act. Then there had to be an attack on the problems of the weather, and we brought in enabling legislation for crop insurance and extended the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. Then we had to find new markets, so we started a program of accelerated sales. I could go on and on. This afternoon the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was extolling how the Liberal party is the friend of the farmer, and yet when I go to the Bank of Canada report I see on page 33 that farm cash income and accrued net farm income has levelled off considerably in growth this year. Surely the farmers of Canada, who this year have done so much for the economy, deserve a better deal from the government.

In our part of the country we have had a severe crop failure this year. I have had a question on the order paper asking what the government intends to do to assist, but it has not been answered, probably because the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) is not around. A lot of farmers in our area cannot afford to buy their seed grain this year, and there again the federal government has refused to be of assistance. This is only typical of the Liberal party in its approach to the problems of the nation.

Now a word about devaluation of the dollar. As the former minister of agriculture said, the campaign of the Liberal party on the devaluation of the dollar was the greatest fraud ever perpetrated on the people of Canada because, while the Liberals did not believe that devaluation was not a good thing for Canada, they led the people of Canada to believe it was not. I say that, because if they had believed it was not good they would certainly have done something to restore the premium on the dollar.

But what has devaluation done? Even for the farmer it has meant a 15 cents a bushel increase in price of wheat on world markets. It has increased our competitive position and the position of our exports. I have mentioned what was done with our international balance of payments. For the first time in our history we have a positive balance in our tourist trade, and for this again devaluation of the dollar is largely responsible. It also has meant a decrease of imports into the country, because devaluation has made our domestic products more competitive with the products from low wage countries. To be honest, I think the Minister of Finance and the politicians of the Liberal party should welcome devaluation and should say it was a good thing for Canada; that they have misled the people of Canada and that the policy of the Conservative government at that time was a proper one. I also say that in order to attain the goals we need in our economy, if it is necessary to devaluate the dollar further, then I am in favour of it. Many countries in the world have devaluated their currency. For example, the British pound was $5, and see what it is today. A devaluation of 7½ per cent is nothing drastic; it has done a lot of good for the economy, and if further devaluation would do more good, I would be in favour of it.

Now I want to deal with a more non-controversial subject about which I wish to express some views which perhaps do not reflect the opinions of other members of the house on either side. As a young man I am not so preoccupied with the past as with the conditions of the present and the prospects for the future. If we are to progress in this country there is room for improvement everywhere. Perhaps we could start right here in this chamber. As members of parliament, we have basic shortcomings. I think we are very pragmatic in our approach to the problems of the country, have an insatiable fear of the electorate and are also very reticent to take a stand on anything but the most non-controversial problems.

I think we are followers rather than leaders in this country. In this day and age, people expect their members of parliament to be leaders. I believe that, as a central government in this country, we must resolve to make the federal government a more effective instrument not only on the home front but amongst the nations of the world. We must inspire amongst Canadians a respect for the government and patriotism in this country, which I think is disintegrating at this time. I believe that, as trustees of Canada, it is our duty to establish unity and opportunity for all Canadians from whatever section of Canada, from whatever racial background or from whatever economic conditions they may come.

It is the duty of the federal government to assist the weak, to restrain the strong, to instil in the average Canadian a greater sense of duty and a greater destiny for Canada. I think we must become partners, too, with all the other levels of government, with all the segments of our economy. This makes for progress and for a modern, enthusiastic society. To a large measure, this philosophy is embodied in the philosophies of the political parties and in the philosophy of the Conservative party which can be described very simply as the vision to create and the courage to retain, and in the words of the motto of our party, which is "opportunity, security and freedom".

If we are going to do something about the problem, it is not enough to just define it. I think we must study the methods which will correct what we lack in our economy today. It is necessary to give vitality to this country, which seems to be lacking, just as we did in 1957 with that vision of the north, the new frontier and the great national development policy we brought into effect. Hon. members should recall that we started the roads to resources program. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) said we were building roads from igloo to igloo. I think all members on the other side will regret that phrase. This was reminiscent of the defeatist Grit opposition in the early days when we were building railways, as they said, from wigwam to wigwam. This is not the type of vision or outlook we want in Canada. We want a vision that is going to bring greater progress to Canada than we have at the moment.

As I said, we could start in the House of Commons itself because I believe that in approaching problems in this house we are often archaic. We are often ineffective. We spend a lot of money and time uselessly. I welcome, therefore, the reconvening of the committee on rules. I only hope that they will have some amendments to bring forth which will make the government more effective without in any way restraining the opposition in their rights to criticize the government.

I feel, too, we need to reconvene a federal-provincial conference with a view to redefining the areas of responsibility under the constitution. We have had the British North America Act for almost 100 years, and it has served us well. But, more and more, we see that there is duplication in government which I believe leads to a waste of money. This duplication has built a government too large to be effective. I think that by redefining the areas of responsibility of the various governments we will be doing a service to Canada. If we can also encourage amongst the provinces something that has been started already, we will be doing a service. I refer to horizontal association, and by that I mean the provinces themselves getting together in those areas of activity which are distinctly the responsibilities of the provinces. The provinces should not have to come to the federal government in connection with responsibilities which are strictly those of the provinces.

These days we hear a lot of talk about co-operative federalism. In those areas where responsibility is shared, I think it is going to be necessary to have closer links with the provinces. Certainly, the record of the former Conservative government in this regard was an admirable one. The principle we have to follow is that the government that is going to spend the money must take the responsibility of levying the taxes. I do not believe demands can be made on the federal treasury all the time unless those who are going to spend the money take the responsibility for levying the taxes. This federal government, during the short time it has been in power, has failed in a lot of respects in relation to its responsibilities with the provinces. I think it has failed and, at the same time, it has weakened the strength of the central government. I do not believe any province should hope to establish itself as an equal of the federal government. In the interests of a strong, united Canada, the central government must remain strong and must remain dominant. This has been the policy of the Conservative party since confederation and I think it is still the policy of the Conservative party.

I hope that the Liberal party will not be doing the things it has been doing to create disunity in the country. I want to refer for a moment to the royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism. Since the establishment of this commission I have noticed that in many parts of Canada people who normally had the greatest good will toward the province of Quebec are becoming irritated. A lot of this good will is being lost. I believe these people resent the manner in which the extremists of that province are presenting their problems. In this regard, I feel communications media have a great responsibility. This is one area in which I think they have failed. They have failed the people of Canada, and they have failed their own profession by giving undue attention to that small portion of the population which holds these extreme views and playing them up in the newspapers, on television and radio. I feel the communications media, too, has a responsibility in connection with uniting this country and in connection with building a greater Canada. Statements have been made by people like Rene Levesque and even our present Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Tremblay). I think when the minister refers to members of this house and the traditions in this house in a way which would exclude some members—and I would be one of them—from positions in the house, he is making the type of statement that does not make for unity and harmony in this country.

I believe a study needs to be made in this area, but certainly a more positive approach could be used than by coining artificial words such as "biculturalism" and "bilingualism" which, by their connotation, spread abroad the idea of the lack of an integral whole. Through the intervening time since confederation, Canadians as a whole have been taught to be tolerant and to respect the views of all. Regardless of their background, they have been taught to be proud of their distinctive contribution to our culture. Terms such as mosaic, flower garden, rainbow and other such apt phrases have been applied to the distinctive blending and fine harmony that has been reached in the Canadian culture. We in the Conservative party are distinctly proud of our promotion of the idea of unhyphenated Canadianism. Canadians today, individually, should be proud enough to assert their status as Canadians, without being relegated to first, second or third class Canadians, as much of the publicity surrounding the commission on biculturalism and bilingualism has done inadvertently.

In the few minutes I have left, I want to come back to what I believe the Liberal party can do in order to attain some of these objectives which they have set for themselves and which they have failed to attain. I believe that what we need in Canada is what I would call "A Canada charter—a partnership for progress". This would be a partnership between the federal government and the other levels of government, a partnership between government and the other segments of the economy. First of all, I think it is up to the federal government to be the leader in this respect. It is up to the federal government, if we are to prosper, to relate the segments of economy. It is up to the federal government to define the goals specifically and then plan for their attainment. I believe every effort must be put forward toward recruiting other aspects of our economy in the attainment of these goals.

The minister did mention some of these goals in passing. He referred to increased employment, increased growth, expanded trade and stable prices. There are others such as a sound immigration policy and the guarantee of a minimum standard of living for those of our people who through no fault of their own, are unable to participate as fully as other Canadians do in our prosperity.

Perhaps it would be good for us to look at these goals a little more closely. Basically we are a free enterprise economy and it is our goal to maintain that free enterprise economy because at least in the field of agriculture we can say today that democracy with its freedom is a far superior way of life to that behind the iron curtain. When we consider that the very small proportion of our population in Canada which is engaged in agriculture is producing great surpluses compared with the very large percentage of the population in the Soviet union engaged in agriculture, and failing to produce enough to feed the population of that country, then certainly this is one area where the free enterprise system is more efficient.

I think one of the partnerships we must look to, as well as partnership of the various levels of government, is the partnership of labour, management and government. It is obvious that labour, management and government each has a role to play in attaining these goals. The leader in the attaining of prosperity must be the government, and it is up to us to establish a partnership for progress with each sector of the economy.

[Mr. Slogan.]

In my view we must co-operate with labour to guarantee to the worker a decent minimum wage. I think we must encourage a sound wage structure that will give the worker a decent standard of living. I think we must see that labour is free and responsible in collective bargaining. I think labour must be a partner in increasing efficiency and productivity. In return I think that management too can do something for labour by instituting profit sharing schemes and by making available to their workers equity shares in industry. I think that workers should be proud enough of the company for which they work to invest in it by buying equity shares. In this way they would be investing in the future of their own industry and in Canada as a whole.

At the same time there are responsibilities that labour must accept. Labour must accept the responsibility of not crippling essential industries by irresponsible strikes. There must be freedom for the individual within the labour movement. There must be the largest scope of autonomy for Canadian unions. Unrealistic wage demands that create unstable prices must be avoided. I think that, more than in the past, management and labour must work together, assess their common goals and work harmoniously to achieve them, because only in this way can we achieve a larger share of the world market where our prosperity really lies.

In my view management and industry should be able to look to the government for the proper climate and opportunity for expansion. Management must avoid unsound price advances. Technological advances must be coupled with concern for human displacement. Most of all, industry must be concerned with increasing trade abroad. As one of our ministers said, they had better get off their fannies and sell.

With regard to management and industry, governments must be vigilant to protect displaced workers and to discourage unsound price advances that affect those on fixed incomes and hurt our competitive position abroad. We must be vigilant in our protection and encouragement of small businesses against combines and cartels which eliminate competition.

The government must realize also that following the devastation by war a large portion of European industries has set up new plants, which have become more competitive. Therefore there must be tax incentives for our industries in order that they may improve their plants and place themselves in a competitive position. At a time when European costs are rising, I think that such incentives would do a great deal for Canadian industry.

We in the Conservative party initiated loans to small businesses, a departure from previous years. We expanded export-import insurance. We convened the greatest trade promotion conference in Canadian history. These are some of the things which the Liberal party could emulate.

I want to refer for a moment to the national debt because actually what we are doing by the vast increase in the national debt is mortgaging future generations of Canadians. I think the national debt should be of real concern to every Canadian. In an article in the Ottawa Journal I noticed it was estimated that the federal debt went up by $50 for each Canadian in the past year, which is twice the rise of recent years on a per capita basis. The total national debt stands at something like $15,136 million or $789.10 per capita. Perhaps a better way of assessing the impact of the debt on the economy is to realize that in every family with two children the breadwinner is saddled with a mortgage of $3,156.40 and that it is costing the breadwinner of every family with two children $216.44 to pay the carrying charges on the national debt, which this year will amount to $1,038 million. If the government would make the people aware of this fact I think there would certainly be more co-operation with regard to the demand for a balanced budget and a reduction in the national debt to free money that could be invested in the national economy.

In my opinion, continuing deficits will only aggravate the situation. Balancing the budget and reducing the national debt at this time of relative prosperity would do a great deal to free money and make it available for capital investment in the country. I am not saying that deficits are not indicated in certain instances. For example, in a time of recession such as we inherited from the Liberal government, although personal savings in the banks were at an all time high—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the hon. member's interesting remarks on the national debt had to be interrupted. If the 1963 budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) could be described as a time bomb which blew up in his face with a loud bang, I think one can only say that the sound that came forth from the present budget was the equivalent of the small plop when a cork is withdrawn from a bottle. While the minister may attempt to describe the contents of the bottle to us as vintage champagne, I am afraid that to many of us it tastes more like stale soda water.

However, I really do not wish to concern myself for any length of time with what I would term the superficialities of the budget, but rather I should like to suggest that when a Liberal minister of finance brings down a budget we see Liberal government revealed in its true colours. We see that when it comes to the pinch the Liberal party and the Liberal government always seem to come down firmly on the side of the exploiters and not the exploited. While it may be true that they try to cover up this situation with a few small sops thrown to the people at large, such as the minor extension in family allowances, nevertheless as far as I am concerned this is the basic situation which the budget presented by the amiable Minister of Finance has revealed to us.

I know it is quite true that we who sit here in the House of Commons as members of the New Democratic party often find ourselves giving at least partial approval to many of the proposals which the Liberal government brings forward, proposals, for example, such as the rather fragmentary Canada pension plan or the proposal to send a peace keeping force to Cyprus. However, we in this party are committed to a very different basic point of view so far as the purpose and function of a budget in our government and society are concerned.

I note too from time to time we find ourselves agreeing and quite rightly saying that some of the ministers are doing a good job in administering their departments. I think many of the ministers would agree that we in the N.D.P. are quite prepared to co-operate with them in the proper sense of the term, as members of parliament, in assisting them to do an efficient job of administering the normal affairs of government. But the house, the Minister of Finance and the government should not be misled, by that seeming pleasantry on occasion on our part, into any idea that we find ourselves agreeing in any fundamental way with the government in power.

The occasion of the presentation of the budget is one when we should certainly try to stand up in the house and make ourselves clear on this point. We also find among hon. members opposite, who officially support the government, many nice, well-meaning, idealistic people. They are some of the best examples of do-gooders in our society, and the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Hahn) who spoke a little earlier, is an excellent example of that sort of person. They are the people who, from time to time, bring modest pressure on the government to introduce measures designed to improve public health, to improve the situation of the aged, and to help keep the ill from starving.

They have strong humanitarian impulses, and I freely admit this. We in the New Democratic party share those humanitarian impulses with them; but when budget time comes, and with the customary pomp and ceremony the Minister of Finance stands up to deliver his speech, time after time we find we still have a government that is wedded to the philosophy of the jungle law, where the strong are allowed to eat the weak, and that all the humanitarian impulses of the do-gooders have not got us very far.

To illustrate that point I would like to read a portion of a letter which I received from one of my constituents. It says:

Dear Mr. Barnett:

I may sound very bitter to you but I've reason to be so. Dr. Peterson sees me every two weeks, and he told me he was doing all he could for me, the only thing was new lungs, an operation that can't be done, lungs are gone with bronchitis, some days I can hardly walk with one leg having chronic trouble.

The board in Vancouver turned me down because I can feed myself with a spoon and go to toilet myself.

They are being bribed by someone—

I am not suggesting that I agree with her reasoning, but I can understand her feelings.

—to not give it to me in hopes that by next year I won't need it and will be dead.

There is an example of the kind of situation that I feel very well illustrates the basic position taken by the government of Canada over the years. This woman is partly blind but she is not blind enough to qualify for a blind pension. I know this because I tried my best to get it for her. She is physically disabled but is not disabled enough to qualify for a disabled person's allowance. So she must go along, eking out the barest and most miserable of existences, and I cannot blame her when she comes to the conclusion that boards and governments are just sitting down hoping that before next year she will be dead.

Another example of the fact that in a country as wealthy as Canada we still have a government wedded to the philosophy of the jungle law is the Canada pension plan, which was introduced with such a flourish in this house. As I say, it is something which we in this party will be supporting, but we should not let it go unnoted that as it is proposed it leaves completely unanswered the problems of all the people who will retire during the next ten years in the period the plan is coming into operation. The government will be quite content to let the law of the jungle apply and allow those people to die off in misery and semi-starvation.

[Mr. Barnett.]

Every time the Liberal government unveils a new budget we find the situation remains where the rich will continue to get richer and the poor will continue to get poorer in terms of the productive capacity of the country's economy. I shall not belabour statistics, but anyone who sits down and analyses the figures which are put out in reams by the dominion bureau of statistics can easily see that this is borne out by the facts. Each time a new budget is introduced we find that the ever encroaching monopoly of corporate interests is being encouraged to expand its near dictatorial control over the lives of its wage slaves.

Some hon. members may say that "wage slaves" is a pretty old-hat sort of term which went out with the nineteenth century. Well, Mr. Speaker, any hon. members who really try to understand the problems faced from day to day by the working people, who carry the burden of the sweat and toil, must understand the encircling influences put around them by so many of the employing interests in this country, and will have to agree that the term "wage slaves", far from being old-hat, is becoming more and more true and in a much more insidious fashion than it was in the nineteenth century.

When I use this term I am not referring only to the so-called blue collar workers. I am referring even more to the brains that are hired by these modern corporate dictatorships. I can give one example which happened in my own constituency within the last year.

It concerns a capable office worker for a certain company. He had one son who was a student at the University of British Columbia. This man and his wife displayed some interest in the public affairs of the country, which took the form of general support for my candidacy, and when this happened the powers that be in the company went to the man's wife and told her that if she and her husband did not cease and desist there would be no summer employment for her son, employment which had been promised him. If that sort of thing does not constitute a form of wage slavery, then I really do not know what does. I am sure many high-minded members on the opposite side of the house would agree with me that this is not the sort of thing which should be tolerated; but the question is, what are they prepared to do about it?

Just what does the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) do when he enunciates the basic financial and economic policies of the government? These infringements upon civil liberties, these infringements upon the freedom of the mind, these enslavements of Canadian citizens are allowed to go on virtually unchallenged in the name of free enterprise. This is one of the matters on which members of the New Democratic party find themselves in fundamental disagreement with the government, and with policies and proposals of the kind which are brought forward by the Minister of Finance when he stands up and delivers his budget speech.

Everyone agrees that in a complex industrial society discipline in the productive process is necessary. But we in this party maintain that those who do the controlling and the directing must be responsible for their actions to those who are controlled, if human freedom is to have any meaning, if slavery of the mind and exploitation of the human body and brain are to be brought to an end. This is the state of affairs, however, against which the budgetary policies of the government do not lift even a little finger. Indeed, this particular budget makes it clear that such autocracy is to be continued and even extended.

The budget itself provides one of those occasions when the real difference between those satisfied, well-meaning, do-gooding Liberals and those who subscribe to the social democratic philosophy becomes apparent. The New Democratic party is the only party in Canada which has as a conscious aim the bringing to an end of the exploitation of man by man. We who sit in this house now, and those who will succeed us in the years ahead, will not rest until exploitation has been eliminated from our society. The government and its followers and all the exponents of so-called free enterprise in this country assume that the mainspring of progress must forever be the law of the jungle, with the redness of tooth and claw kept decently out of sight as far as possible. They are content, for the most part, to introduce measures which merely make the fur over the claws a little thicker and a little glossier. Sometimes they even attempt to train the tigers to keep their claws drawn behind the fur. On other occasions they make an attempt to file off the ends of the claws a little so as to blunt them if they do protrude. Then, of course, on occasions, Liberal governments and those who think very much like them, do attempt to add a strand or two to the feeble leashes which are designed to hold the tiger in check; in other words, they bring in such legislation as the combines legislation, the labour laws and the marketing legislation designed to help the farmers. By and large we support these actions because we are humanitarians, too. But let the government know, and let the people of Canada know that we are not satisfied with this sort of thing alone. Specifically, and in direct reference to the budget we are discussing, we disagree completely with the comfortable, complacent "all's well with the world" attitude expressed by the minister in his budget speech. Our want of confidence in this government's budget is complete.

Let me make it clear, however, that our want of confidence is not simply a matter of demanding an election this year or next year. We in this party are quite prepared to accept the verdict of the electorate as it is rendered from time to time in general elections. But we do reserve our right to continue to expose the realities of the situation. This budget is really no different from last year's or from that of the year before. It is no different from any budget delivered by a minister of finance in this house in the last 10, 20, 30 or 50 years. All of them have been weighted in favour of the privileged. All of them have encouraged more people in this country to become bloodsucking leeches in our society.

One of the anomalies, I think, of our history is the fact that the only Canadian prime ministers who have shown any signs of radicalism since the first world war have been Conservatives. Mr. R. B. Bennett was going to blast his way into the markets of the world during the depression. The hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was going to blast unemployment off the map. Neither of them got very far, and this was because neither of them subscribed to a philosophy which could provide them with a reasoned follow through in policy. And, for that matter, neither of them had a parliamentary army which would have followed them had they tried to do that sort of thing.

Mr. Grafftey: How do you know?

Mr. Barnett: I suppose the truth of the matter is that when I stand up and make this speech I have very little hope of convincing the amiable Minister of Finance over there of the error of his ways.

Mr. Fisher: Just a big tiger.

Mr. Barnett: I hope I have not sounded too wrathful in my denunciation of the hon. gentleman's budget. I must say that if I do feel some wrath it was heightened this year by the failure of the minister to make even the feeblest effort to resolve some of the income tax problems which were discussed last year affecting those who make the greatest effort to provide themselves with income—those who live on salaries and wages. I did have some small hope after the discussion which took place last year that proposals would be made in this year's budget to deal with the grievances which were raised; that there might, indeed, be some proposal to amend section 5 in an appropriate way so as to provide for expenses incurred by those in receipt of wages and salaries. I have been arguing this matter in the house since I first came here in 1953, and I suppose if I am here in 1973 and the Minister of Finance is still over there I shall probably still be arguing it. Just for the record I will read one of many letters that I have received on this subject from constituents in recent weeks. This letter is addressed to me, and it says:

> I am writing to you, as my elected member of parliament for Comox-Alberni, regarding desired amendments to the Income Tax Act.
>
> Because I am a logger I had to pay out a total of $204.40 in fares last year in getting back and forth to my place of employment. These fares were not paid for holidays but because the operation is closed seasonally. While I was in camp I had to pay board and lodging costs of $536.50. This is a huge sum when you consider that I am at the same time paying $65.00 per month house rent plus additional costs for my own family dwelling elsewhere. Special logging clothes; work boots; hard hat and a rubber rain suit cost me $100 last year.
>
> Please note I have not included cost of regular working clothes which in logging are subject to rapid wear and tear.
>
> As a logging truck driver employed in a logging camp, I not only have the above costs to contend with, but also find that I have an annual cost of $90 replacing broken or worn out tools. I am also finding that every month I am buying some tool to do required maintenance on the new machinery that is coming into my camp. In accepting a job as a truck driver I am required to supply my own tools, so that my fare to camp is increased by $25 every time that my place of employment is changed.
>
> I would like to point out that with recent increases in salaries to M.P.'s, $6,000 was made to be tax free. This money alone is more than I am able to gross each year.
>
> Would you please tell me what steps you have taken or will take during the current session to grant me some relief from this unfair burden.

Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the question I would like to direct to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), who is in a much better position—

Mr. Fisher: He doesn't care.

Mr. Barnett: —to answer than I am as to what can effectively be done or will effectively be done in this connection. Even if there had been only one little gesture to the people who incur these expenses regularly in the course of earning a fairly modest livelihood, I would have felt a little happier with the budget which the minister has introduced. The only income tax gesture which people such as the man who has written to me are apt to hear much about is that nice little gesture in the minister's proposals to increase to 50 per cent from 30 per cent the annual depreciation allowance on mobile earthmoving equipment. Some of these men will be carting the tools that will be used to repair that equipment from time to time.

So in closing all I can say, in despair of convincing the minister, to those humanitarian members who sit along the back benches across the way and like to talk so loudly about how they want to see greater justice and how they want to see poverty removed is, "Shame on you. How can you go on supporting a government which brings in the kind of budget introduced by the present Minister of Finance?"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Pilon).

Mr. Knowles: Now one of them stands up to confess his shame.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Pilon (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the Minister of Finance for presenting a budget which is as realistic as it is practical. This year, the emphasis was put on our young people, those who will be called up to play an important role in the economic structure of our country, that generation which will have to face new obstacles and a more advanced civilization, a more complex economic system and more strained relations within confederation.

Mr. Speaker, the figures and statistics given in the budget reflect a sound and growing economy and also show a new vitality, injected by a Liberal policy conceived by clear-sighted and practical businessmen, with the means at our disposal.

The evil of unemployment, in spite of a marked improvement is still an important problem in some eastern sections of the country. It is obvious that in the near future, the steps taken last year and this year will have some beneficial effects. Afterwards, we may enjoy considerably improved conditions and this will greatly contribute to improve our standard of living.

Mr. Speaker, the budget is based on carefully thought out objectives, as mentioned by the minister. Creation of new jobs, steps taken to make sure that the jobs will be filled by well-qualified persons, development and improved economic levels, based on the foresight and ability of our business men, our federal, provincial and municipal authorities.

Our foreign trade has fallen off from 1958 to 1962 and it is essential to regain the share of international markets to which we are entitled. It must be acknowledged that we had been pushed back to the fifth place in that field, whereas in 1957, we were in second place. Every section of our country benefited from this economic recovery. As I said earlier, several factors must be taken into account, more especially our domestic and external markets, our wheat exports, which helped our highway and railway systems, as well as our air transport system. We broke our own records, even in the western provinces where the recovery was more pronounced thanks to the sustained contribution of our railway systems.

At the outset of my remarks, I said that young people in every part of Canada, those who will eventually replace us later on, will reap the benefits of our legislation. In connection with what I have just said, I should like to emphasize what the late John F. Kennedy said to a group of young people:

> What is important, it is not what our country is doing for us, but what we are doing for our country.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, I should not like to bore the house by quoting figures and statistics already published and that my honourable colleagues are likely to have seen. I should like now to bring out a point with regard to our constructive legislation.

1. Assistance will be given to our students by way of income tax relief and family allowances;

2. The granting of scholarships. The Liberal party platform mentioned the fact that no Canadian would be deprived of an education for financial reasons. I should like also to emphasize the fact that a new department will give leadership to agricultural classes.

Mr. Speaker, may I mention a few facts which will influence the economic outlook of my riding of Chambly-Rouville: the changes with regard to the St. Hubert air station which will be transferred from the Department of National Defence to the Department of Transport.

One of the important industries in my riding had a record year in 1963. The 3 million bushels of apples harvested in the St. Hilaire and Rougemont area were sold quickly and profitably, thanks to new markets, and there was an increase of 30 per cent over the preceding year.

In another field, that of construction, some 800 new home owners, I did say 800, were added to the already long list of those who benefited from C.M.H.C. loans. A piece of legislation passed last year greatly helped the home owners and the building contractors, which reduced unemployment and gave a new impetus to our building materials industry and the sale of lots generally.

I would like to urge both the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) and the minister responsible for C.M.H.C. to extend the period during which this grant of $500 is allowed, in order that those eligible for it may take advantage of it. The period from November to March is rather short, considering the demand. Our suppliers of materials and C.M.H.C., in spite of every effort, have not been able to cope with the general demand. Statistics show that the building industry has become vitally important during the past few years. New building contractors have undertaken colossal projects and have acquired the necessary experience to carry them out. They have put the accent on quality of industrial designs and have helped to revive the building materials trade. They have contributed to improve the standard of our skilled workers and have given Canadians houses worthy of them.

I hope that all right thinking Canadians throughout this country will unite so that Canada will not be broken up. On the other hand, claims from the province of Quebec must not be ignored; that province is ready to co-operate provided its constitutional rights are restored and its identity is preserved.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that we shall reach this goal during the year and that we shall give the lie to the extremists' expectations. I believe in a country made up of confederative states, the economy of which is one. We shall find our strength in our differences, having our eyes fixed upon one goal: Canadian unity based upon equal rights.

[Text]

The Liberal party, Mr. Speaker, has made a pledge, and I want this house to rest assured that we believe in unity and that with the understanding of this great nation this goal will be reached, to the benefit of all Canadians.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, it is a bit late. You will no doubt allow me then to show some kindness. I will start by congratulating the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. He deserves some credit for his speech, but mostly for its brevity.

I also wish to be kind to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon); I know that he deserves it. He must be tired by this debate which has not gone too well for him because I think that very few nice things have been said about his masterpiece, last week's budget.

However, Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the minister is concerned about several groups of citizens. For instance, he worried about the free entry of sacramental bread; that is something in his favour. On the other hand, he recommended the repeal of the provisions concerning the size of whisky bottles. Finally, in order that nobody would be neglected, he amended the tariff on disinfectants, fungicides and insecticides. Consequently, everyone should be satisfied.

One might think that the minister wants to be considered as a humourist. He had already displayed his talent of humourist and actor last year when he was busy pursuing the skeletons which he said were hidden away in the taxation closet. But a year has passed and he does not seem to have found any; he took care not to use these terms which he has stricken from his vocabulary since the notorious events which occurred after June 13, 1963.

If I will be permitted to use a well-worn turn of phrase, I would say that the minister turned himself into a mouse this year. So as not to offend him I hasten to say that I am merely making a metaphor; not for a single minute would I think of comparing his physical appearance to that of a mouse. That is not at all what I mean. Considering the apologetic attitude he took when he introduced this production of his, we, on this side of the house, cannot help make such a comparison. Indeed, he pretended to table a budget but he did not quite make it. One would need Diogenes' lantern to find in that document anything that vaguely resembles a budget.

An hon. Member: You mean Theogene.

Mr. Martineau: Diogenes; not Theogene.

I wonder why he was so shy of showing us his masterpiece. Would it be for fear of offending some of his colleagues, those, for instance—we find some on the front benches who want to keep things as they are. Among the most prominent cabinet members, there are some who almost faint every time changes are suggested. However, if there is someone who may be informed about those matters, surely it is the minister, because we know how his most fervent supporters last year made him the target of their criticisms. Maybe he did not want to offend them. Or then again his shyness might have been due to the fact that, this year, he missed the experts who had come from Detroit and Toronto?

This year, the minister has become a supporter of orthodoxy.

He makes a high-sounding statement of policy. Since the budget is a top secret document, according to tradition, he did not deem advisable to call upon outsiders to take part in its preparation. Hurray for the minister. He is beginning to understand. His timidity might be explained by the fact that, even though he looks grave, he is not fully recovered from the shock he suffered last year when he served us that hotchpotch; maybe he tasted it and found it indigestible. Even though he succeeded in swallowing certain items in that budget, certain ingredients of this hotchpotch, it is possible that they are not completely digested.

And while saying this, I am thinking of the tax on building materials and we are still stuck with it. The same applies to his budget especially as he was under the influence of the ides of March, a period of the year which can be full of unexpected phenomenoms and effects. The minister, scared to death, apologetic and moreover superstitious, even if he says that he is not, presented that masterpiece which I could qualify as a masterpiece of the status quo. And to the house full of anticipation and somewhat apprehensive on account of a past experience, he introduced his freak, this abortive budget. After being an innovator, the minister has become the most eager partisan of the status quo which could be found.

No wonder, therefore, that most hon. members remained dumbfounded at such a display.

On the other hand, I think that the initial surprise and the first moment of amazement having worn off, the inscrutible minister should be asked some questions. Several come to my mind. We could ask the minister why he did not think it appropriate, this year, to abolish his tax on building materials, and production machinery? If he could not abolish it or cancel it altogether, he should at least have prevented it from rising to 8 per cent. Why did he not seize his courage with both hands as he did last year, when as if he had just awakened from a deep slumber, he announced that the full tax would not become effective for some time?

Last year, the minister found as an excuse for this retreat the fact that this tax was "administratively difficult to apply". Therefore, I ask the minister whether this year it became a "administratively easy to apply"? I also ask whether the confusion this tax created in the building field and that of business in general has now completely vanished?

Judging from the briefs from all sections of the country that the minister is still receiving and of which humble hon. members get copies, this confusion still exists, and the builders are still in a state of acute uncertainty because after stocking huge quantities of building materials, etc., in order to avoid the payment of this tax, those people are asking the minister for explanations, but he maintains the same stubborn silence as he did these last few months on that matter.

The minister refuses to see the light and bring the required relief to one of the basic industries of our country, on which depend full employment and the general prosperity of our nation.

At the end of the budget debate, the minister might give us a few answers in this respect.

Now, along other lines, I might ask the minister why he looked after certain special classes of people and why he could not find means to help farmers?

It is true that in reply to a question put to him by some one from this side of the house, he asked: do they not have any children? Yes, Mr. Speaker, farmers do have children, but they also have particular problems. They are part of one of our country's basic industries. The minister showed a complete lack of interest in the situation of that large segment of our population, whose wheat production especially is now making a substantial contribution towards the solution of one of the problems facing our hon. friends opposite and which he recognizes as the most important, that is the balance of our international payments.

There is nothing in the budget for the farmers; nothing for the worker; nothing for the businessman; and finally no provisions to facilitate property ownership by the people generally. The right of ownership is a basic principle of the Conservative party and it is by favouring ownership that we will be able to preserve our system of free enterprise. The minister did not say one word in this connection. He showed complete indifference, even a hostile attitude towards all those classes of society. I ask him to tell us why?

Why has the budget no provisions to alleviate unemployment? Nevertheless, he is the one who was in favour of full employment in the talks he gave throughout the country, in his programs on television and radio, in his publications and pamphlets, as well as in his famous book. He was supposed to be the one to accomplish this feat of strength.

Today, you can notice his timorous attitude concerning the problem which is at present the most serious one facing the Canadian economy, according to the Prime Minister himself.

At present, there are 400,000 or 500,000 unemployed in Canada. Why is the minister not doing something about it, instead of merely pointing out that the situation is improving? There has been, he said, an improvement.

This improvement is really something fantastic, when one considers the average rate of unemployment, which had risen to 5.9 per cent last year and has now fallen to 5.5 per cent, and this, thanks, as they say—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martineau: —Yes, Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen may well applaud and even smile and make fun of the 400,000 or 500,000 unemployed in this country at this time. But, as I said, if there has been such a microscopic, such a tiny improvement, it is due mainly, as it has been very well recognized, to the dollar devaluation which was, in itself, an initiative that saved Canada. It is also due to the sale of wheat to communist countries, a policy—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martineau: Those gentlemen's cheers are quite in order, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, a policy launched by those on this side of the house and especially the former minister of agriculture. The Canadian people know what to think about that.

And again, what does the minister intend to do about our balance of payments? Oh, he talks, he makes commendable and pious statements. La Palice himself declared:

We must restore the balance of our payments. We must definitely do it, but what the minister does not say is how we are going to do it. As a matter of fact, he does not give us any indication on this point. He probably thinks that his lucky star, which has for some time shined on high, but which is not as bright at the moment will help him. I have closely examined his budget, but have not found a single solid proposal in it.

What does the minister intend to do, for example, to free this country from public debt charges? In fact, public debt services, for last year and this year, exceed $1 billion. You have there, Mr. Speaker, an astronomical amount, twice as large as the total budget for 1939 and for the sole purpose of paying the interest on the public debt. Nowadays, the federal administration costs twice as much as in 1939.

That is a serious situation which deserves consideration and I am sure the minister is thinking about it. However, he seems to have adopted a do-nothing attitude which is not customary with him and which must surely discourage his best friends.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to know also what the minister intends to do concerning the control of our industry and our business by foreigners. Has he abandoned his aim which was to increase Canadian participation in our industry? Of course, we must not forget that he launched his policy rather clumsily last year when he hastily introduced half-baked measures that he withdrew just as fast. He is quite clear when he defines the objectives we must strive to reach, but when it comes to suggest means of doing so, his statements are most obscure.

He speaks of fiscal measures to achieve these objectives, but then he withdraws the withholding tax on dividends paid to non-residents. Concerning the withdrawal of this tax, however difficult this action was for the minister, we must congratulate him for it, and we fully agree with him, because last year, one member after the other called for the withdrawal of this discriminatory tax which did not meet the purpose it was meant to. On the contrary.

But we cannot follow the argument of the minister when he gives his excuse for the withdrawal of this tax. He mentions vaguely the fact that taxes have been lowered in the United States. He speaks also of the American parent corporations which will pay only 48 per cent tax on their income in 1965, which is the equivalent of a 15 per cent withholding tax.

Mr. Speaker, if you have lost the thread of my argument, I do not blame you. It is precisely the point that I would like to make. You cannot understand me because I am using the very same words used by the Minister of Finance. That is why you do not follow my argument, and I wonder what he is talking about when he gives the reason or rather the excuse that this is a new factor, which is not true, since this concerns the corporate tax cut in the United States. As a matter of fact, it is not new because last year, or more precisely last June 13, when the minister brought down his budget, the U.S. senate had been asked to approve tax cuts. And I would like the minister to give us suitable explanations in that connection.

Mr. Speaker, there are several other questions which remained unanswered. And, in order to be objective, I must also direct other questions to the minister.

Why did he fail to take necessary steps in order to cut government expenditures? Why did he not see fit to cut taxes? And finally, why does he announce, for the fiscal year 1964-65, a deficit of nearly half a billion dollars?

Let us start by considering the matter of deficits. At the outset of his budget speech, the minister said that the economic climate had never been better. He saw everything through pink glasses and said that business was doing better and better.

In the past, the minister used to say that deficits could not be used except when the economy was slowing down. As a matter of fact, it is the theory of the pump primer. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) knows what is meant by the theory of the pump primer.

The minister said that we were entering upon an unprecedented era of prosperity. And yet, he predicted a deficit of half a billion dollars. If the minister is unable to balance the budget when, according to him, we are living in an unprecedented era of prosperity, I wonder how he will ever manage to balance it. If the minister is the least consistent and logical—I know he is, but then he must have the courage to show it in his actions—in short, if his premises are sound, he should have introduced a balanced budget this year. Otherwise, his basic argument crumbles and the Canadian people can have no faith in his theories, because one cannot look at the dark and the bright side of everything at the same time. And yet, what the minister does not say is that he sees mostly red on account of a $500 million deficit.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make concerning tax cuts. We emphatically demand tax cuts. We, on this side of the house, are supporters of fiscal responsibility, and that is why we are asking for a relief in taxation. We know that taxation relief means renewed activity and an incentive for the whole economy, a stimulus for private enterprise, from which results a larger basis for taxation.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

[Text]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the house leader if there is any change forecast for tomorrow?

Mr. Favreau: There are no changes forecast for tomorrow. We will be proceeding with the supplementary estimates, after which—

Mr. Gordon: The budget debate.

Mr. Favreau: Oh, yes, that is what I meant, the budget debate tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles: Status quo ante.

Mr. Favreau: I was thinking in terms of Wednesday. I am living too fast, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: For a Liberal to be a day ahead is pretty fast.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 24, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

VACANCY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely of Hon. John Richard Garland, member for the electoral district of Nipissing, by decease.

Accordingly I have addressed my warrant to the chief electoral officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

CONSUMER CREDIT

APPOINTMENT OF COMMONS MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre) moved:

That the members of the House of Commons on the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons to inquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit, approved March 9, 1964, be composed of: Messrs. Bell, Cashin, Chretien, Clancy, Coates, Cote (Longueuil), Crossman, Deachman, Drouin, Greene, Gregoire, Hales, Miss Jewett, Macdonald, Mandziuk, Marcoux, Matte, McCutcheon, Nasserden, Orlikow, Pennell, Ryan, Scott and Vincent.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT PROVIDING PENALTIES FOR CONTRAVENTION OF BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-82, to amend the Criminal Code (human rights and fundamental freedoms preserved).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to create an offence under the Criminal Code whereby, should any persons do any acts which contravene the provisions of the bill of rights, they would be subject to prosecution under the Criminal Code and liable to a sentence of up to 14 years. It is my hope that if we enact this bill the disgraceful events of last week in my own province of Ontario will never be repeated.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROGRAM "THE OPEN GRAVE"—STATEMENT AS TO PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a question to the Secretary of State in connection with the matter I raised yesterday in endeavouring to have the house adjourned, namely the showing of a film, a preparation of the C.B.C. entitled "The Open Grave". My understanding is that consideration was given to whether or not it should in fact be shown, regard being had to the tremendous revulsion of feeling across the country. Is the minister in a position to advise what is the state of affairs?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to try to answer this question and some others asked yesterday about this matter. As I undertook yesterday in the house, I communicated to the president of the C.B.C. the various views expressed to me by hon. members inside or outside the house. I also told Mr. Ouimet that in so far as I was concerned the decision whether or not the program should be shown was to be made exclusively by the C.B.C., and that I would not exercise any pressure to affect the independent judgment of the management of the corporation.

After consultation with his advisers, Mr. Ouimet communicated with me again a few moments ago to inform me that the management of the C.B.C. had decided to go on with the program as scheduled.

I should like at this stage to recall what the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings had to say in 1962 on this general matter—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: It was not about the same case.

Mr. Lamontagne: —when he was the minister responsible for the C.B.C. This is what he said, as reported on page 857 of Hansard:

—it has been the policy of this government from the beginning, as it was the policy of the previous government and as I hope it will always be the policy of federal governments, not to interfere with the programming of the C.B.C.

The hon. gentleman went on to say:

—if we were to start interfering with the programming of the C.B.C. we would be laying the foundation for either a fascist state or a communist state.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, did the hon. gentleman communicate that information to the Minister without Portfolio in his own cabinet, who gave his views on this subject the other day?

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to take the lead in setting up a special parliamentary committee so that matters relating to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the over-all related welfare of the nation can be properly discussed instead of having them brought up on orders of the day in a piecemeal fashion, as has been the case in connection with the program "The Open Grave"?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question of setting up a committee in some form or other to examine such aspects of the work of the C.B.C. is now under active consideration, and I hope an announcement will be possible very shortly.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—U.S. CO-OPERATION TO AVOID INTERFERENCE WITH SHIPPING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Will the minister advise what specific action the United States government and/or the United States department of labour promised the Canadian government they would take to end harassment of Canadian ships in the United States ports when the shipping season commences?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not been in touch with the United States secretary of labour or the United States labour department in recent days or weeks on this particular subject.

Mr. Starr: As a supplementary question, will the minister contact these people in order to get some specific promise, in view of the fact that the shipping season will be starting in another two or three weeks?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the views of the government have frequently been discussed with the secretary of labour and the labour department of the United States. They realize how necessary co-operation is in controlling the situation on the American docks, and I am sure that within United States law that co-operation will be forthcoming.

[Mr. Lamontagne.]

Mr. Starr: As a further supplementary question, did the United States government at any time make any specific promise on its part to end the harassment of Canadian ships in United States ports on the great lakes?

Mr. MacEachen: I do not understand what is meant by a specific promise. I do know that the United States authorities have assured us of co-operation, and during the last shipping season they indicated their willingness to carry out that co-operation by certain actions taken by the national labour relations board and the department of justice in the courts in Chicago.

Mr. Starr: Does the minister feel that whatever action has been taken and this co-operative effort are things that are worth while and that will end the situation?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, this harassment has been of long standing character, and prevailed during his term as minister of labour. It is a problem that is related to interunion activities of the two countries and interunion activities in the United States. Within the limits of United States law I am quite convinced that co-operation will be forthcoming.

[Translation]

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Has the minister received or not a formal assurance from representatives of the U.S. government that the United States will take action to prevent the boycotting of Canadian ships on the great lakes and in American ports following the dismissal of Hal Banks?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that this question was asked yesterday; or if not then, the day before.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he has any report to make regarding the appointment of a mediator in Cyprus, and can he say under what terms of reference the mediator has been appointed? May I also ask the Prime Minister whether he has seen the press report which was carried on the C.B.C. news last night, to the effect that a group of 120 Canadians on a familiarization tour of Cyprus was prevented from entering the town of Limassol by a British major, who advised the Canadians that the townspeople might think they had arrived in an operational role and would then be disappointed when they left, thus destroying the United Nations peace force image?

I would also like to ask the Prime Minister if this is a breakdown in communications and liaison; and since when has a major in the British army been given the authority to interpret the role of the United Nations force in Cyprus?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): On the last point, Mr. Speaker, I would not interpret the reported incident in that way, but when I saw the report of the incident I made inquiries and I am awaiting a report from our people on the spot.

So far as the appointment of a mediator is concerned, it is expected that that appointment will be confirmed within a few hours, if it has not already been formally confirmed. The mediator is a very distinguished representative of Finland who has been minister of trade and commerce, minister of finance and prime minister of that country. In addition he has been the ambassador of Finland in London and has already done important service to the United Nations in Laos. He seems to be eminently qualified for this very difficult and important function, and I understand he will be taking up that function very shortly.

Last evening the Secretary of State for External Affairs discussed the problems regarding the formal authority for the force with the commander of the force, General Gyani, who is in Geneva and who is on his way to Cyprus, if he has not already reached there. It is expected that an announcement will be made regarding this matter very, very shortly.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Prime Minister's statement about the excellent qualifications of the mediator who is likely to be appointed, but can the Prime Minister tell us whether we will be able to secure the terms of reference within which he will operate in seeking to bring the parties together?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I hope to be in a position to make those terms known to the house before we adjourn.

RUSSIA—REFUSAL TO PERMIT ENTRY OF PASSOVER BREAD

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of some urgency to the Jewish communities across our country, and I therefore direct the question to the right hon. Prime Minister. These people are justly aroused over the denial by the U.S.S.R. of the importation of sacramental Passover bread; I think the proper name for it is matzoth. Has the government communicated with the ambassador to the U.S.S.R. to point out the feeling of Canadians that this is most unfair and is in contravention of the charter of the United Nations, which assures freedom of religion?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was as disturbed as is the right hon. gentleman to hear that it may be difficult again this year for the Jews of the Soviet union to receive unleavened bread for the feast of the Passover. I know how important it is for members of the Jewish faith to have especially prepared bread for this religious festival.

I do not have at my disposal all the facts, nor do I know the situation inside the Soviet union regarding this particular matter, but we are making inquiries. It is not entirely clear whether the Soviet authorities intend to stop gifts of matzoth from abroad. However, we have cabled our ambassador in Moscow asking him to make inquiries, as I have indicated, and to let the Soviet authorities know that this is a matter of great concern to the Jews of Canada and to broad sections of the Canadian public. I appreciate that the holiday season starts at the end of this week and it is therefore a matter of urgency whether anything can be done to improve what appears to be an unhappy situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the information I have—and I am sure the Prime Minister has this too—is that the Soviet authorities are refusing to allow such gifts this year. I believe in one case they refused a shipment from the chief rabbi in London, England. They refused to allow it to land, or announced in advance that it would not be allowed to land. As soon as the Prime Minister has some information on this matter, will he let the house know?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is what the ambassador has been instructed to look into.

TRADE

PULPWOOD—REPORTED PROHIBITION OF EXPORTS FROM QUEBEC TO ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice?

Has the minister received representations from individuals, industrial corporations or any province about Quebec's decision to control lumber exports to any Canadian province and, if so, what action does he intend to take?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I may tell the hon. member that I am having that matter investigated and that I hope to be able to give him an answer before the adjournment of this session.

[Text]

AUTOMOBILE PARTS—REPORTED REFUSAL OF U.S. SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES TO SHIP TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked me three questions relating to the export of automobile parts to China, and I should like to answer them seriatim.

First, he asked if I had received any complaints from Canadian exporters with regard to the refusal of automobile companies in Canada which are subsidiaries of United States automobile manufacturers to supply automotive parts for export to China. As I said yesterday, I was unaware of any complaints but I found that last summer I had received a complaint from one Canadian exporter, whose name I believe was Mr. Grinkus of Gain Import Company Limited, who was unable to obtain a supply of certain types of automotive parts for export to mainland China, stating that the difficulties experienced were attributable to a refusal of subsidiaries in Canada of United States automobile manufacturers to supply parts for export to China.

The second question asked whether this refusal is based upon the declared policy of the United States government. In reply to that I would only say that no information is available on this matter other than that provided at the time by that exporter. Accordingly I have some difficulty in answering the question whether there has been such a refusal on the part of the automobile manufacturers in question and, if so, what their reason may have been.

His third question asked if so, does the minister consider this action to be a violation of Canada's right to exercise control over its own economy? If the parts concerned had been of United States origin, of course no Canadian export permit would have been given for their re-export to mainland China. This is the policy of the Canadian government, and I do not think in any sense it is a violation of Canada's right to control its own economy. This is the exercise of its own right. If the parts were of Canadian origin it is possible, although I have no information other than that provided by the exporter himself, that they might have been available from sources in the market other than the manufacturers which are subsidiaries of United States companies. However, one of the difficulties in answering this question is that we have no information on this other than the word of the exporter himself.

May I add this, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member may be aware, arrangements were agreed to some years ago between the United States and Canadian governments for consideration to be given by the United States government to an application for a foreign assets control licence by a United States parent company arising out of a transaction which might have been consummated in Canada. In recent years there has been no request from a Canadian automobile manufacturer for our intercession in support of a parent company's application for an F.A.C. licence, and accordingly it may be that the companies have other reasons if they have refused to supply the exporter in question.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he would have his department get in touch with the Canadian automobile manufacturers, particularly Ford, General Motors and Chrysler, to see if it is their stated policy to refuse to sell parts to exporters who are exporting outside the commonwealth. Is this part of their stated policy and, if so, what is the reason for such a policy?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I might make inquiries about that, but I would rather have, in order to make a proper inquiry, an order which is to be filled. Because if I contact them and ask them what their policy is they will say, what is the order for? I do not believe it would be in the public interest to give such general answers. I think they only confuse the issue, but if the hon. member has an order that has been refused I shall be happy to investigate.

Mr. Douglas: But the minister received a letter from Mr. Grinkus to which he referred, dated June 27, 1963, stating he had an order for crankshafts and other parts of trucks and cars for export, but it was refused by the United States parent companies of Canadian subsidiaries.

Mr. Sharp: My understanding, although I hesitate to speak from memory now, is that the automobile companies did not have actual orders to fill. They were inquiries.

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): As a supplementary question, are there any Canadian government restrictions on the export sale to mainland China of farm machinery manufactured in Canada but which may include some United States components?

Mr. Sharp: I think this question, Mr. Speaker, should be put on the order paper, perhaps with the specific indication of the article in question, because it does depend on the degree of United States participation in the manufacture.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. This question was on the order paper. It was purported to have been answered yesterday, but the answer was so narrow in its interpretation and so restrictive that it contains no information of use. I would now like what I might call a supplementary answer.

Mr. Sharp: I answered this question very carefully. The question put on the order paper was in most general terms, and it was answered in the terms in which it was asked.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, in order to defend the question which the minister contends was asked in most general terms—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but important as the question is, perhaps he could rephrase it and put a new question on the order paper, as time is moving on and this is developing into a debate.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): The only thing I can suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, is that if this is the answer to the second portion of my question, which refers to farm machinery including United States components, the answer I got—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This illustrates the difficulty. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Are you afraid of it over there?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have to rise now on a question of privilege. I have just read the question and I draw Your Honour's attention to it. The second part of the question was:

> Are there any restrictions on Canadian manufactured farm machinery including American components?

And the answer given was:

> Answered by 1.

—which simply says—

> An export permit is required to export goods to any country included in the area control list, which includes mainland China.

This afternoon the minister gave a different answer to a question which was similar to the second part of the question previously put on the order paper. If we cannot rely on the answers given by the ministers, then where are we? We have to have clear, precise and accurate answers; otherwise there is no use in asking oral questions or putting questions on the order paper.

REPORTED U.K. PROPOSALS RESPECTING PREFERENTIAL TARIFFS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Can the minister tell the house what stand the members of the Canadian delegation are taking with regard to the British proposals to abolish preferential tariffs? For instance, is Canada ready to grant developing countries the same privileges as Great Britain with regard to the preferential tariff?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. gentleman is referring to the United Nations conference which is just under way and at which my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs is the Canadian delegate. There is a proposal before the conference for a new system of preferences in favour of the underdeveloped countries by the industrialized world. This proposal is under discussion, and I think we should wait for a report from the Canadian delegate before replying to that question.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

COMPLETION OF TRANSLATION OF BEAUCHESNE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister?

Is the Prime Minister aware that the French translation of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms is finished and, if so, is it true that he intends to offer it as an Easter gift to French speaking members who are up against parliamentary procedure?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware, and I am grateful to my hon. friend for informing me of the fact, that the translation has been completed. If it is completed I hope we can make the French version available to members at once. I will look into the matter immediately.

DIVISION BELLS IN WEST BLOCK—INACCURATE CLOCKS IN CHAMBER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles J. M. Willoughby (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works if he would please undertake to see that the division bells in the west block are corrected, because they are absolutely silent all the time. We do not hear those bells in any case.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I shall do this with pleasure, Mr. Speaker, because a few days ago I nearly missed a vote myself.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I would like to direct to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as the house leader.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Surely the question of the bells is not that urgent.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice, in his capacity as house leader, whether the fact that the chamber clock overlooking the cabinet benches is running one hour fast today is symbolic of the government's realization that it is later than they think?

ROYAL VISIT

REPORTED DANGER TO QUEEN IN QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I do so as a socialist but also one not ashamed upon occasion and under certain circumstances to be a monarchist. I desire to ask the Prime Minister if his attention has been drawn to the following statement which appeared in the March 23 issue of the Montreal newspaper Le Devoir:

> The army of liberation of Quebec has "ordered" yesterday the Queen not to present herself on Quebec territory..."unless she is aspiring at being the first British sovereign to die on the Quebec earth".

Although similar questions have been asked before, I ask this question because in spite of all the security measures taken in the United States, a fanatic killed the president. In Canada we do not want a fanatic of any kind killing the Queen of Canada and the commonwealth. In view of these continued threats I ask the Prime Minister what special attention is being given to the matter of whether or not the Queen should come to Canada, particularly to Quebec, and what protection will be afforded her in view of all these threats.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my attention has not been drawn to this statement, which I consider to be a very vicious one representing only a very small minority of the people of Quebec.

Mr. Churchill: It does not take many.

An hon. Member: Only one.

[Mr. Willoughby.]

Mr. Pearson: I am quite aware that a very small minority, indeed a minority of one, can do a lot of damage. There have been tragic examples of this fact. But I can assure my hon. friend and the house that when Her Majesty comes to Canada she will receive every security protection that is possible, and I am sure her visit will be both a happy and a safe one.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): In view of the fact that more harm than good may come from the Queen's visit, does the government not think it might be advisable to postpone the visit this year?

Mr. Pearson: I think it would be shameful to surrender to this kind of minority and vicious propaganda.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): While I agree with the Prime Minister's statement, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice what steps are being taken by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to apprehend the people who are making such statements as well as the persons responsible for the recent theft of arms from a number of armouries.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in regard to statements pertaining to the Queen's forthcoming visit which were made a short while ago and which, in my opinion, reflect on all hon. members from Quebec. I should like to say to the house that the people of Quebec are just as civilized as anybody else and that the Queen will be as welcome in our province as anywhere else in Canada. She will be greeted cordially.

If there are fanatics in Quebec, the other provinces have their share of them also. Why must some people constantly attack our province with regard to the forthcoming visit of the Queen of Canada.

[Text]

PENSIONS

COMPARISON OF CANADA PLAN AND REPORTED QUEBEC PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Will the Prime Minister inform the house whether Premier Lesage has presented a pension plan for adoption in the province of Quebec which is deemed by the government to be equal to the Canada pension plan?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I cannot very well answer that question on orders of the day and make a comparison of the two pension plans, one provincial and one national. We will be discussing these matters next week.

Mr. Winkler: Is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that this is the criterion which is outlined in the present bill? I think the house has a right to know.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, I am quite aware of that important fact, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister advise the house if the government has approved a proposed Quebec bill as being equivalent to the pension bill which is now before this house?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, we have not approved a bill. Indeed, it would be quite improper for us to approve it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has one been submitted to the government, or are they just proceeding on a nebulous uncertainty?

Mr. Pearson: No, we are not proceeding on a nebulous and uncertain hypothesis. The text of the bill has not yet been submitted to the federal authorities.

Mr. Mandziuk: Would the Prime Minister care to comment on the point of allowing or disallowing such a Quebec pension scheme?

Mr. Pearson: I am surprised that any hon. member of this house would suggest that the government should disallow a Quebec pension bill.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice a supplementary question?

Could the minister tell the house whether, according to the Canadian constitution, the provinces, including Quebec, have the right, the same as the federal government, to establish a pension fund?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion just reading the bill will clearly indicate the government's view on that point.

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I asked the Minister of Justice a very specific question, namely whether the provinces have the same right as the federal government to set up a universal pension plan?

[Later:]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell us whether he is supporting the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) when he makes the following statement:

> A health insurance plan is more important than a retirement fund plan for the province of Quebec.

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: I do not think I am called upon to answer that question, endorsing a statement made by a private member in his private capacity.

UNITED NATIONS

RUSSIA—REFUSAL TO SHARE COST OF PEACE KEEPING OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister's statement of yesterday concerning the refusal of certain nations to share the costs of peace keeping operations take into consideration the compromise plan brought forth by Britain and the United States to avoid an otherwise serious struggle within the United Nations?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker; if some arrangements can be made by which those members in default will pay up at least part of their deficit before the date in question, the action that was suggested by me yesterday as being required under article 19 of the charter would not be necessary.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF SECRETARIAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will the federal government make any specific, and I underline the word "specific", suggestions or proposals at the forthcoming federal-provincial conference for the establishment of a secretariat or similar body for federal-provincial affairs?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We had a most useful discussion on this subject at last November's meeting and that discussion will be continued at the forthcoming meeting. Perhaps out of it will come agreement on how best to maintain liaison between conferences.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MATANE-STE. ANNE DES MONTS LINE—POSSIBLE REPLACEMENT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could he tell the house whether he has a definite compensating program, in view of the cancellation of plans to go ahead with the construction of a railway line between Ste. Anne des Monts and Matane?

Mr. Vincent: A change of government.

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): While there is not yet a definite and final program to replace the railway which parliament provided for and which the government decided would not serve the transportation needs and other economic interests of the northern part of the Gaspe as well as other means of transport, the government has entered into discussion concerning arrangements to make a substantial contribution to the provincial highway in order to speed up the completion of a modern heavy duty highway. My colleague the Minister of Public Works, my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and I met the minister of roads of Quebec the other day in this connection.

The government is also giving consideration to harbour improvements and to improvements in air facilities which we believe will serve this region better than the proposed railway.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would ask the hon. minister this. Is it within the authority of the government, without having an act passed by parliament to repeal an existing statute, to refuse to carry out the terms of a statute which has been passed by parliament? I should like to know the hon. gentleman's views on this, because he is quite a constitutional expert.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would certainly not be nearly as competent to answer that question as would the right hon. gentleman. However, he is asking me for a legal opinion, and it is contrary to the rules for any minister to give a legal opinion in the house. I would be interested to hear any views which the right hon. gentleman has on the subject.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not giving the hon. gentleman my views, but may I say this. I think it constitutes an affront to parliament for a minister of the government to say "We do not intend to follow a statute which was passed by parliament for the simple reason that we have another plan".

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question with respect to the minister's remarks concerning air policy and the implication that it is being tackled on a piecemeal basis. Will the hon. gentleman assure the house that he will consult with national aviation organizations before establishing a national air policy in this country?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not see that this is much of a supplementary question. However, I can tell the hon. member that I have already discussed this matter with a great many of the national organizations concerned with air transport in this country.

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we have pursued that subject far enough. This is developing into an argument between two hon. members, and surely we have better things to do.

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege, the minister has smuggled into his reply a reference to the legitimacy of my question. My supplementary question was perfectly proper, because it was the minister himself who raised the question of air policy, not me.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the hon. member has chosen to make this a question of privilege, let me say I did not mention air policy at all in my answer to my hon. friend from Gaspe. I said that consideration was being given to providing certain air facilities in one particular region, and that obviously is not air policy.

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the minister's remarks today, regarding assistance for highway construction, do his remarks indicate it is government policy to provide additional assistance to highway construction anywhere in Canada?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that would be a correct inference to draw from my statement.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

EXTENSION OF HOSPITAL INSURANCE TO COVER MENTAL ILLNESS AND TUBERCULOSIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the right hon. gentleman care to confirm in this house the view which he is reported to have expressed yesterday when he addressed a conference on mental health. In particular, is the government considering including treatment for mental illness within the terms of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act? Could the Prime Minister say, at the same time, whether a similar course might be followed with respect to treatment for tuberculosis?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Perhaps I should send the hon. gentleman a text of what I said. As will be seen from the text, I said that this aspect of the matter was under consideration and would be under consideration next week, in connection with certain shared cost programs, at the federal-provincial conference.

COMPOSITION OF COMMITTEE TO STUDY HARMFUL EFFECTS OF DRUGS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on March 12 the hon. member for Simcoe East asked me a question regarding the establishment and composition of a committee my department was setting up to investigate the drugs parnate, parstelin and parstelin S_2.

I am happy to report that I am now able to give the house a further reply. A committee has been set up consisting of the following: Dr. K. I. Melville, professor of pharmacology, McGill University; Dr. K. J. R. Wightman, professor of medicine, University of Toronto; Dr. T. L. Sourkes, associate professor of biochemistry, Allan memorial institute, McGill University; Dr. D. R. Gunn, director of chemical research, Ontario hospital, New Toronto, and Dr. H. B. Durost, director of medical services, Verdun Protestant hospital.

The first meeting of this committee is scheduled for April 6 and another for April 27. We expect that they will submit a report of their findings very shortly thereafter.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUEBEC—EMPLOYMENT FOR WORKERS LAID OFF FOLLOWING MERGER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour. What steps does the minister intend to take in order to ensure an equitable income to the 600 employees of the Asbestos Corporation and the Johnson's Company Limited of Thetford Mines and Black Lake that have just been merged, a fact which will involve the dismissal of 600 employees in the very near future?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I will ask the national employment service to assist the displaced employees in any way in which its services can be useful.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production.

In view of the fact that 600 men have been laid off by mining companies at Thetford Mines and Black Lake, is it the intention of the minister to create secondary industries in that district so as to provide employment for the largest possible number of people and to boost the local economy since the district is already considered as a designated area?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: That question should be put on the order paper.

[Later:]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I was rising to answer the question which is to be put on the order paper.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister is referring to the answer to my question, and since he is ready to answer it perhaps you would allow him to do so.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I share your view that it would be more proper to put it on the order paper.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Is the Minister of Labour aware of the fact that certain municipalities hiring workers under the winter works legislation are paying them with vouchers good only for groceries?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour?

Since several cities in Canada, including Joliette, will not be able, for lack of time, to complete all their winter work projects, does the minister propose to extend the winter work period beyond April 30.

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Does he intend to extend the winter work period in areas handicapped by climatic conditions which, in view of that fact, are discriminated against compared to areas enjoying a more temperate climate which can carry out their winter work programs within the prescribed period?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have grave doubt that the question of the hon. member for Lapointe was in order. It seems to me this question has been asked several times during the present session.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: In that case, I shall ask a supplementary question which will be in order.

Does the Minister of Labour intend to investigate that matter and seek an appropriate solution to promote or, at least, in order to balance out the winter work program benefits in the regions of Canada with a more severe climate which, as a result, have the highest level of unemployment?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will ask the officers of the department to investigate the operation of the program to ascertain whether in any area it has placed any municipality in a disadvantageous position. After that investigation we shall be glad to consider this question.

D.E.W. LINE—ENFORCEMENT OF DECISION RESPECTING BARGAINING AGENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, may I answer a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Northwest Territories with respect to the status of the international brotherhood of electrical workers as bargaining agent for the Federal Electric Company.

The facts are that last November this union was certified for a group of employees. Later the following month the Federal Electric Company moved to quash the certification of the Canada labour relations board. However, I understand that yesterday the judgment of the court of Queen's bench of Manitoba on this matter was handed down and that the status of the bargaining agent has not been affected in any way. In the absence of any unforeseen development, the way would now appear open for collective bargaining between the company and the certified bargaining agent.

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister promised to inquire whether or not an agreement had been signed between the governments of Canada and the United States suspending the rights of these men. I wonder whether the minister was able to look into that point.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have asked for information. There has been no evidence to support that particular point, but the investigation is continuing and if there is any evidence I will bring it to the attention of the house.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

ESTABLISHMENT OF ASTRONOMICAL RESEARCH INSTITUTE IN B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): My question is for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Is the government at present considering the establishment of an astronomical research institute to include the construction of a 150-inch optical telescope for location in south central British Columbia?

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): The government is considering the matter of a telescope of this quality, but as to the location an announcement will be made in due course, if and when an expenditure is approved for it.

SOCIAL INSURANCE

AUTHORITY FOR DISTRIBUTION OF APPLICATION CARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): My question is directed to the Minister of Labour. It has to do with the question I asked him on Friday last concerning the distribution of application cards for social insurance numbers. At that time I asked under whose authority these cards were being distributed.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yes, I have an answer for the hon. member. The application cards for social insurance numbers are being distributed by the unemployment insurance commission under the authority contained in the Unemployment Insurance Act and its regulations.

Mr. Hales: Could the minister advise the house why these cards do not carry the words "Issued under the instructions of the Minister of Labour"? There is nothing on them to that effect.

Mr. MacEachen: The authority of the Unemployment Insurance Act is the basis of this action. In view of the relationship between the Minister of Labour and the commission under the law, I think it would be improper to have the minister's name applied in that way when the authority of the commission can be used.

Mr. Hales: Is the unemployment insurance commission not responsible to the Minister of Labour?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this is another legal question in a sense, but it is a fact that the unemployment insurance commission is a commission and occupies an entirely different status than the officials of the Department of Labour.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In connection with these social insurance applications, is the minister aware that the form of application in requiring men to disclose the maiden names of their mothers, requires them to indicate whether they were born out of wedlock, which seems to be visiting the sins of the parents upon the children. I wonder whether the minister would look into this aspect of the questionnaire.

SHIPPING

EFFECT OF LOW WATER LEVEL IN GEORGIAN BAY AND LAKE HURON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to the fact that the official opposition seems to be running an hour ahead of the government. I would like to ask a question based on the following report:

> Rapidly declining water levels in Georgian bay and lake Huron can put a serious crimp on the economic lives of—
>
> —towns in that area:
>
> —unless remedial measures are undertaken in the not too distant future.
>
> The three foot drop that has taken place in the level of the bay during the last three and a half years is a source of no little concern to shipping interests which employ a goodly number of men in each of the three communities.

My question, addressed to the Minister of Public Works, is what has the federal government done in the investigation of this matter, and what does it propose to do to offset these falling water levels which seriously threaten the incomes of hundreds of people who are in tourist and commercial businesses in that area.

Mr. Speaker: That is a very interesting, important and pressing question. Nevertheless I do not think it is reasonable to expect the minister to give a short, concise answer at this time. Perhaps the hon. member would put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I just want to draw your attention to the fact that this question was asked some time ago.

Mr. Churchill: And not answered.

[Later:]

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. If low water levels create a hazardous situation in any harbour on the great lakes, will the minister give the house his assurance that he will give the problem his immediate remedial attention?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not follow very well the point the hon. member has in mind, but I am going to look into this matter.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON SOUTHERN PRAIRIE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether the report and the recommendations of the air transport board, arising out of their hearings in Regina respecting the southern prairie air run, have been filed; and if so, when can we expect a decision in this respect? I draw to the attention of the minister that this service was discontinued on January 11 and there has been no air service since then.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge, unless the report has been received very recently, it has not yet been made. But I will make inquiries of the air transport board as to when it is likely to be available.

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): A supplementary question Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of Transport inform the house when he is likely to announce a regional air carrier policy for Canada?

Mr. Pickersgill: When the government has made a decision as to what the policy is to be.

Inquiries of the Ministry

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INTRODUCTION THIS SESSION OF AMENDMENTS TO CHARTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is the government giving consideration to introducing any time this session amendments to veterans legislation that comprises the veterans charter?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I think I indicated a while ago, while the studies are going on it is extremely unlikely that we will be ready to do this before the end of this session; depending, again, upon when this comes about. I am speaking here of before midsummer.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

QUEBEC—LETTING OF CONTRACTS WITHOUT TENDERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Has the minister inquired into clauses 15 and 16 of the regulations established under the federal-provincial agreement concerning the implementation in the province of Quebec of projects to commemorate the centennial of confederation in Canada, and, if so, could he tell us if his government is in favour of contracts being awarded by the provinces without tenders being called, since the grants are of $500,000 or thereabouts?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this is a question for the order paper, as it requires a detailed answer.

Mr. Vincent: No, Mr. Speaker, not a detailed answer; just yes or no.

Mr. Speaker: In that case it is asking for a legal interpretation, which I do not think arises at this time. Will you put the question on the order paper?

Mr. Vincent: It is a policy question.

Mr. Pigeon: It is a very important matter.

Mr. Vincent: It is a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: It is certainly a political question at least, but I think after three interruptions by now the minister has the point.

Mr. Vincent: May I ask another question, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

[Translation]

Could the minister tell us what is the difference between public tenders and a call for tenders which goes to three contractors?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Beauce—

Mr. Perron: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the minister. Is the government in favour of the regulations established following the agreement concluded between Ottawa and the province of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Beauce.

[Text]

FINANCE

SALE OF SHARES IN PROPOSED NEW BANK

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Is he or is anyone of his department aware of the fact that the group of financiers who intend to set up a bank in western Canada have already started selling shares to the general public although the incorporation of the company has not been secured, a fact which could involve losses should this incorporation be refused by the government?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is surely a question for the order paper.

TRANSPORT

FUND TO SUBSIDIZE UNPROFITABLE BRANCH LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Transport and ask him whether Mr. Ross Thatcher, the provincial Liberal leader in Saskatchewan, quoted him correctly when he said that the government plans to set up a railway rationalization fund to take care of and subsidize rail lines or branches of rail lines which are not profitable. If he has been quoted correctly, will this then apply to all lines or just to some particular lines?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen any purported quotation of me by Mr. Ross Thatcher. If the hon. gentleman wants to send me something I will look at it, but it seems to me we should recall that it is contrary to the rules of the house to ask questions on orders of the day about newspaper reports and their truth.

Mr. Mandziuk: Then may I ask the minister whether it is the plan of the government to set up a rationalization fund to subsidize non-paying branch lines?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is the plan of the government to introduce legislation similar to that of which notice was given by my hon. friend the President of the Privy Council last December, and the hon. gentleman is as well able to read that notice as I am.

Mr. Mandziuk: A further supplementary question. Has the minister made that promise by telephone to Mr. Ross Thatcher, as quoted in the Manitoba Co-Operator of March 19?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is based on a statement made today by the Minister of Forestry to the British Columbia lumber manufacturers association. In his statement the minister stated that the ARDA program is going to operate independently of agricultural control. My question is, is this further evidence of the attempt by this government to isolate the Minister of Agriculture out in the left field and precipitate—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is not a proper question.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—RETURN TO WRITERS OF LETTERS CRITICIZING POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt the Prime Minister but I promised three ladies that I would ask this question. It relates to a most unusual practice that seems to have developed since the present government got into office. Would the Prime Minister inform the house why officials of his office and of the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when replying to letters written to the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs from persons criticizing them on their Columbia river treaty policy, return those letters to the persons concerned?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall certainly have to look into that rather original question, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS, QUEBEC—CONSULTATIVE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources which will be as devoid of political connotations as have been the answers given by the treasury benches this afternoon. Has the consultative commission, which on March 4 the minister said would be set up by the governments of Canada and Quebec with regard to the take-over of the Eskimos in Quebec by that province, yet been set up? If it has, what is the membership of that commission?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, my non-political answer to the first part is no, and I think the second part is answered by the answer to the first.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

[Text]

Mr. Willoughby: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members must realize it is twenty minutes to four o'clock. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Could he tell the house whether, according to a statement made by Father Steinmann, an Ungava missionary, and a report published in this morning's issue of Le Devoir, Ottawa is trying to impose on the Eskimos in new Quebec a quick assimilation which, in the opinion of Father Steinmann, would be a true genicide?

[Text]

Mr. Laing: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I understood the hon. member's question correctly, and I think I did, there are a number of assumptions in the question, and I believe the article is purely speculative. I shall have an opportunity to read it and if a statement is warranted I shall make it to the house.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JOHN WASYLENCHUK—STEPS TO ENSURE FAIR TRIAL IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that John Wasylenchuk, who was extradited under his predecessor, goes on trial for his life today in Seattle, may I ask the minister if he is satisfied that everything possible has been done to make sure that he gets a fair trial?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in answer to this question I must say that as far as the Department of Justice and the government are concerned, everything has been done to satisfy us in this respect.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Monday, March 23, consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance), that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Nowlan.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes still at my disposal before I conclude my remarks, I should like to make some observations concerning federal-provincial relations.

The vague allegations by the minister on that matter leave us puzzled. As a matter of fact, it is enough to wonder whether the government is not preparing a new centralizing offensive which will certainly come to light at the opening of the conference on March 31 next.

The doings of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) in rushing through the budget, only a few weeks before that conference, are bound to give rise to most serious doubts. We wonder why such haste to introduce a budget which is much more noteworthy by its omissions than by its contents.

It seems that even the date chosen for the introduction of the budget speech is an affront to the provinces. Yet, at last November's conference, the attitude of the provinces was clearly set out and could be resumed as follows:

1. Systematic objection to any federal action which in fact curtails the field of provincial jurisdiction.

2. Absolute opposition to any unilateral federal action which is bound to upset provincial priorities, particularly in the case of area development.

3. Since economic problems seldom come under exclusive federal jurisdiction, the provinces should be consulted every time decisions are taken which might affect their economy.

4. Participation in one way or another, through permanent federal-provincial agencies set up for that purpose, in the determination of any federal policy likely to affect the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, such is the very clear position which was proposed not only by the government of the province of Quebec, but by the governments of several other provinces. As a matter of fact, if we refer to the press release which was issued after that conference, it seems indeed that the federal government had agreed on those view points, because it states that a thorough consultation must take place about the measures it is deemed advisable to pass and, for that purpose, it suggests the setting up of a system which will make possible such close and permanent consultation and will make sure that all governments will have all the required authority to assume their respective responsibilities.

So that the words co-operative federalism will not be mere window dressing to cover a fool's agreement, I direct the following questions to the Minister of Finance:

Why have not the necessary provisions been passed yet to implement those objectives?

Why were not steps taken to make it easier for the provinces who so desire to withdraw from joint programs, and why are new joint programs being developed?

In view of the provisions of the budget itself, will it be possible to make new fiscal arrangements that will meet the demands of the provinces?

Why did not the Minister of Finance consult his provincial colleagues before preparing his budget?

And, finally, what positive provisions have been taken, or are going to be taken by the government to carry out the various suggestions and recommendations not only from this side of the house, but from all its corners, tending to establish a sound federalism, and more particularly the following suggestions:

The immediate establishment of an adequate permanent federal-provincial secretariat, which might group in its set-up all the various agencies for federal-provincial consultation.

The setting up of a constitutional Senate committee, as was suggested the other day by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer).

The repatriation of our constitution and its adjustment to modern needs, which would, again, answer the exigencies of a sound federalism.

The setting up of a constitutional court, which as a last resort would decide any possible disputes between the provinces and the federal government, as well as all constitutional differences.

And, lastly, which is perhaps a new suggestion, the establishment by the House of Commons of a standing committee responsible for matters which, perhaps, more particularly affect the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, until we get satisfactory answers from the Minister of Finance, I respectfully submit that it is useless to speak of co-operation, of co-operative federalism, and that our confederation system will never run smoothly.

In closing, I must say that budget does not look like a real budget to me, but just a provisional one, drawn up hastily and which brings no real solution to current problems. Mr. Speaker, finally, I suggest that the minister, now that he has had a little time to think about those questions and the opportunity to hear the views of the members of this house, get down to work earnestly and come up with a real budget—let him call it supplementary or whatever he likes—in order to fill once and for all the painful gaps left by his first abortive attempt.

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) for the Easter tints he has given his budget. The sentence which impressed me the most in the budget, the one he read most enthusiastically and most emphatically is the following:

> All hon. members can take satisfaction from the improvement that has been occurring in economic conditions in Canada and from the optimism with which we can view the immediate future.

Mr. Speaker, we could piously add Alleluia, and all the Easter spirit would be there.

On the other hand, there are other parts of his speech that are a little more in accordance with Passiontide. In certain parts of his speech, the Minister of Finance reminded us of a son who, having pitifully failed an exam, is telling his father about his results. The father is quite sad, but suddenly in a cheerful tone he says to his son: "I congratulate you because at least I am sure that you did not cheat."

Evidently the Minister of Finance did not cheat when he prepared this budget. He admitted it himself, he did not ask the advice of any expert, he did not annoy anyone, and what he presented was pure traditionalism.

However, I wish to say to the Minister of Finance that I was in a somewhat nostalgic mood when I heard him read his budget this year. Last year he came like an eager zealot who had undertaken the conquest of the powerful capitalists. I must admit that he had succeeded in stirring up their wrath and that he must have been sorry.

The 1963 budget was perhaps a political disaster for the Liberal party, but for the Minister of Finance himself, it was a sign of greatness. I had a higher opinion of the Minister of Finance in difficulty than I do now when I see him entirely satisfied with the insignificant budget he has just introduced.

Mr. Speaker, the 1963 budget had made few people happy, but it had at least called for sympathy and friendliness. It was good to see a minister reveal himself as an idealist, since he was not young maybe, but new to public office. I know that at the time, he won the admiration of many young members of his party. The minister now introduces a budget which shows that he no longer wants to break new ground. But there is still in him a strain of candour that borders on naïveté. "Let us rejoice", he says, but he goes on: "Unemployment is still too high, and in the Atlantic provinces and eastern Quebec it is much too high". He admits it and I recognize that he is frank, but he goes on to say, and this is terrific:

> At the beginning of this year the seasonally adjusted figure for unemployment in Canada was just below 5 per cent. However, according to our best current estimates, the figure for British Columbia, again on a seasonally adjusted basis, was just above 4 per cent. For the prairies it was around 2 per cent. In Ontario it had fallen to about 3 per cent, but in Quebec, where the increase in the labour force had been quite exceptional, it was probably about 6 per cent. For the Atlantic region, the figure while falling, was probably still as high as 8 per cent.

I should like to call the attention of the house to the various degrees of assurance used by the Minister of Finance when introducing his statistics. In British Columbia the Minister of Finance is certain, he gives the assurance that—> according to our best current estimates, again on a seasonally adjusted basis—unemployment was just above 4 per cent. For the prairies, he is also sure that unemployment is around 2 per cent. In Ontario, he also says flatly that unemployment has fallen to about 3 per cent. But in Quebec the minister is no longer quite sure—neither in the maritime provinces. First he says that—> the increase in the labour force has been quite exceptional.

He does not say how this is done, but it is very unusual. However, it seems that the unemployment rate is 6 to 8 per cent. The minister certainly knows that the percentage has decreased in the maritime provinces, and that it is now 8 per cent. That is about it.

Nevertheless, I would like to ask the minister to explain why these statistics are unreliable. Is it not the same experts who compile statistics throughout the country? I would like especially to point out to him and to the government that even though experts are not the same, provinces are, areas are, as are also the workers who have been unemployed for six years.

That is not all, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance went on:

> The wide diversity of these figures and the prospect for the current year suggest that broad, general attacks on unemployment will be less useful now—

That beats everything, Mr. Speaker. Reference is made to broad general attacks on unemployment, while I am given to understand that in Quebec province there is 6 per cent unemployment, and 8 per cent in the maritimes.

The minister continued:

> Accordingly, our plans and policies are increasingly designed to meet the special needs of areas of the country or groups of the population confronted with special difficulties and problems.

There you are. The Minister of Finance has settled the problem. Unemployment is decreasing in western Canada and they say it is because of the far reaching operation by the government. But if unemployment is decreasing in western Canada, it is because of a far reaching operation, but not an operation by the government. It is because of a far reaching operation by Russia, China and other European countries who simply launched the operation "we want bread".

One might think that the government deserves to be commended for having lent a friendly ear to that request? Not at all, Mr. Speaker, because the sale of wheat to communist countries and to European countries was an initiative of the Conservative party.

Indeed, when such action was taken last year, it was among the cries and objections of those who want to take all the credit for it today.

Therefore, I wonder what has become of the "large scale operation of the Liberal party." The Liberal party was to launch a far reaching operation, and what was done actually about it? During the last election it faced a Conservative party which offered wheat sales, vast trade outlets, a winter works scheme, and public works to help the municipalities, new and easier facilities from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and ARDA. In spite of all these measures, things did not work out the way the Canadian public wanted, people wished to change their government.

Now, let us see what the Liberal party has given Canada since it took over. We had the winter works program, and the first action the government took in this field was to cut the winter works period. Yet, how many promises had been made with regard to this matter. Each hon. member rose, at one time or another, to ask whether there was no possibility of extending the winter works period. I also rose in the house to ask the minister whether there was any possibility of extending the winter works period in some districts, but I was told that nothing could be done. It is certainly not in the field of winter works that I can note far reaching policies.

Now, what has been the government's policy concerning grants to underdeveloped areas? Much publicity has been made on this subject of underdeveloped areas. Grants were increased by 10 per cent to help them. This did not work either. Why? Because when the municipalities do not even have enough money to buy materials, what use have they for the money offered by Ottawa to pay wages?

There was also this situation—in my own constituency more particularly—on which I want again to call the attention of the house. Four parishes had considerable public works to be done, and they wanted at least to take advantage of this assistance granted by the federal government to underdeveloped areas. Again I wrote to the minister, saying: there are only four parishes in my constituency which do not benefit from the assistance the government grants to underdeveloped areas; would it not be possible to allow these four parishes to benefit from that governmental assistance? Do you know what reply I got? It makes me laugh. I was told: "These four parishes are indeed in your constituency, but they do not come under the same unemployment insurance office. To grant them the same advantages would occasion administrative problems." This is exactly what the Minister of Finance was saying last year.

So, even when I examine the government's assistance program to underdeveloped areas, I see nothing of that famous far reaching operation. But I am going to give the government more chances. I shall take a close look at some other of its objectives.

Is it in the building industry that we had a far reaching operation by the government? Well, the government surely did something in the building field. It levied a tax on materials and today they boast that construction was very high this winter. But I hope they will not have the effrontery to pretend that if construction improved, it was because of the new tax on building materials.

If construction was active this winter, it is because people decided to take advantage of the 4 per cent tax before it is raised to 8 or 11 per cent. Mr. Speaker, when this tax on building materials reaches its maximum level, the government will no longer believe it was a far reaching operation.

Where was it felt that far reaching operation was supposed to provide full employment? Again, the Liberal party was duty bound to promote full employment because specific pledges had been made in this respect, and that is why the Conservative party was defeated at the last federal election. The Liberal party had made all kinds of pledges in this connection but today what have we got: complete failure. Well, I know that the Liberal party had great undertakings in some fields. But I want to tell them that in this day and age, Canadians are very much interested in our foreign affairs, but they are also very much interested in the problems related to defence, especially the citizens in my riding, where a base has been built in La Macaza which is the finest monument to our subjection to the United States. Canadians are also interested in bilingualism and biculturalism, especially in the province of Quebec where, for once, fire defeated ashes. But if Canadians are that interested in all those accomplishments of the Liberal party, it is as long as they can sit at night, with a full stomach, before their television sets to read their newspapers.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance tells us there are 6 per cent of unemployed in the province of Quebec. This figure can represent as much as 100,000 heads of families which have inadequate housing, clothing and food. However, as I have said, the minister in this atmosphere of well-being continues to talk about "the optimism with which we can view the immediate future".

Now, if one considers the unemployment problem, one realizes that the large scale operations in this field by the government since the Liberal party came into office, are highly questionable.

Let us consider the farming situation. I would not like the Minister of Finance to forget that farmers are also in the Easter season. I would not like to do like the former member for Bellechasse who, every time he rose, said he spoke on the part of the 92,000 farmers in eastern Canada whose income is below $1200 a year. I would not like to repeat that to no avail, but the situation is serious. I certainly should like to know what the government has achieved in the way of large-scale operations to assist eastern farmers.

In my constituency, as well as in the province as a whole, only one farm out of three can keep on operating at the present time and, if it can manage to do so, it is because the head of the family goes off by himself to find a job somewhere else. And if at any time he should be unlucky enough to lose that job, well, on top of that, he is not even entitled to unemployment insurance benefits, because then he is told: "You are a farmer". Where then is that wonderful large scale operation the Liberal party was supposed to carry out to promote eastern agriculture?

I could quote statistics and give examples, but that would not change the situation a bit, for I am convinced that each and every one of us is familiar with the problems of our eastern farmers. They are so well acquainted with them that they should have found a solution during the last election campaign.

It had been said that the member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) would be the next minister of agriculture for eastern Canada. It seemed serious enough, because the hon. member had announced it himself. But later, when a member of the opposition—I think it was the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon)—pressed the government to say when the minister of agriculture would be appointed, the member for Lotbiniere rose to his feet and cockily said: "One minister of agriculture will not be sufficient, we want two departments". And now, the member for Matapedia-Matane has become a specialist in railroads which remain unbuilt. But we have no department nor minister of agriculture for eastern Canada.

I see no mention of large scale projects put forward by the government for the benefit of eastern farmers. Who will take the matter in hand then, I ask you?

The other day, the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) gave me dreadful examples showing why the Department of Agriculture in Ottawa is completely unaware of the problems of Quebec farmers. Since the government likes so much to set up commissions and to advertise widely its accomplishments, I think it would be time to launch an investigation on farm problems in eastern Canada.

A great number of my constituents, including many farmers, ask me what I might possibly do for them in Ottawa. I was able to do little if anything for them. The case of one of my electors has been of particular interest to me. His name is Mr. St. Pierre, he lives in my riding and he came to see me one day to talk about a farm loan application he had made. The agronomists had looked over his land and they had advised him to apply for a loan, telling him that he had a very good chance to get it as he met all the requirements. But Mr. St. Pierre did not get his farm loan.

This may be of interest to the house, although I do not want to establish any relation between the two things but the inspector who looked over Mr. St. Pierre's land was the brother-in-law of the Liberal candidate I defeated. And Mr. St. Pierre was one of my supporters. I do not want necessarily to establish any relations between these two facts. However, I submit that if the government wanted to set up a royal commission on that matter it would get very interesting information.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I ask the government who will act for the eastern farmers in future, and in what way?

But, Mr. Speaker, it might be that unemployment and agriculture are not such important problems for the government. We note how successful it has been in other fields.

And the minister continues:

> The deficit in our current account balance of payments with other countries is still too large but it is smaller than it has been since 1954.

Mr. Speaker, should we then congratulate the Liberal party which laughed at the Conservative party, saying that the dollar was worth only 92.5 cents. Today, the government seems to say: It is thanks to us if the trade balance righted itself.

Come now. It is a well known fact that the improvement in the trade balance is due to the action taken by the former minister of trade and commerce, Mr. George Hees.

On what does the Liberal party deserve to be commended? Perhaps in connection with federal-provincial relations, according to the statement made by the minister when he said:

> But now the public expects so much from both levels of government that they often appear to be in competition with one another.

I often wonder whether it is the public who expects everything from both levels of government or if it is not rather the federal politicians who find it very profitable to take advantage of the public during an election campaign.

I appreciate that the provinces have needs in the fields of education, assistance to the municipalities and social legislation, but when the people have requests to make along those lines, they address themselves to the proper authorities.

However, during election campaigns, politicians profess their willingness to help the people. It looks good to promise scholarships and municipal loans because it brings votes. Yet, it is the public which must bear the burden of the uneven distribution of revenues between the two levels of government.

The burden is so unevenly distributed today that we are now in the midst of a constitutional chaos.

To get out of it, two alternatives seem possible: either we break resolutely through the constitutional walls, or go under them.

The latter alternative is what the Secretary of State calls co-operative federalism. But if the government is able to pay out $10 to every student across the country, if it is able to set up a municipal loans fund, if the government goes into provincial fields, where is he going to get all the money? From the provinces, it is as simple as that.

I am wondering if it would not be much simpler for the Minister of Finance to abide by the constitution and allow the provinces themselves to collect these $10 and to distribute them.

If the federal parties have not enough promises left, may I suggest a few to them. In the field of external affairs, the federal politicians could travel about and promise peace, they might even promise the appointment of an ambassador to the Vatican. As far as defence is concerned, they could travel about and promise disarmament, and to do so, I give them my permission to demolish the Bomarcs stored in my riding; this would create jobs for the unemployed. In the postal field, they could promise a well-organized rural service and in the municipalities, a more efficient home delivery service.

There you have the best promises a federal party could make and that would be much better than tampering with the constitution.

I would not care to swim against the current all the time, but there is one idea I should like to put forth concerning what is constitutionally legal in all those federal-provincial agreements. We have reached the point where provincial premiers meet and decide to amend the constitution. Now, that is something which belongs to the people and which only the people can amend.

All members of the house should ponder over the fact that it is not up to a province to amend the constitution, but to a whole people, and that the normal way to proceed in such a case is to hold a referendum.

Since the constitution must be amended, let us do it as soon as possible. Let us repatriate it and amend it. Many suggestions will be made and some minorities will fear that, in so doing, the majority will gain the upper hand. There are several possible solutions in that respect, but even if the latter is adopted, it must be remembered that to carry out such a project, the provinces must get together and give their unanimous consent, otherwise each province could appeal to the supreme court. However, it would be possible to protect the rights of individuals.

Mr. Speaker, I shall summarize my remarks by calling four or five points to the attention of the government.

Things have not started rolling as far as unemployment is concerned; must we have confidence in the government? The condition of agriculture is still unsatisfactory but, there again, must we trust the government? The national defence situation is not as it should be; must we have confidence in the government in that respect and also as concerns biculturalism?

That is the only thing we do, trust the government. We have been placing our trust in the government for a year now and we are expected to go on doing so.

I can assure you of one thing. The more we trust the government and the longer it takes to act, all the harsher will Canadians be towards the Liberals when they go to the polls. It will not be able to say that it has gone through a difficult period. But if the Liberal party cannot accomplish miracles, let it stop pretending that it can work miracles.

I hope that during the few years it has left it will mend its ways and do more than it has done since we have been sitting here.

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, before speaking about the amendment that is before the house I should like to say something about the economic measures that were taken by the government last spring and summer and the economic policies that have been followed since that time; about the economic objectives enunciated in the budget speech, and about the present economic outlook in Canada. First of all let me review the economic policies and the economic measures that have been introduced by the government, and their effects so far.

The first one to which I should like to refer —and they are not in any particular order— is the $500 winter house building bonus program. The purpose of this measure was to even out to some extent the seasonal peaks and valleys in employment in the house building industry; to provide more jobs, in other words, during the winter months. Mr. Speaker, hon. members of the house may remember that this program was ridiculed last spring as a gimmick, but the measure has proved to be eminently successful. As an example, housing starts in the months of December, 1962 and January, 1963 were 12,009; for December, 1963 and January, 1964 housing starts were 24,191, or more than double the number of the year before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: One of this country's prominent home builders, Mr. Noel Zeldin, the president of Consolidated Building Corporation, has gone on record as approving of the $500 bonus program. He is also on record as saying that the sales tax, about which some hon. members have become so exercised, is not nearly as onerous as might be suggested. He is quoted in the Montreal Star of March 7 as saying:

> If the government feels that the revenue is needed, then the building industry must accept it and learn to live with it. We must be prepared to provide this contribution which, in the final analysis, rebounds and benefits all Canadians.

He went on to say:

> —the truth of the tax matter, I feel, is that it will not affect the sale of private homes to any appreciable extent.

This man, Mr. Zeldin, is the president of a company that at the moment is building an apartment project in Victoria, a housing development in Vancouver, six housing developments and two apartment projects in Toronto, and three more housing developments in Montreal. He said, in regard to the $500 bonus for winter home building that this has all but taken the cycle or seasonal aspect out of this phase of the construction business. In other words—and I quote Mr. Zeldin—"it has been a roaring success".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: Some people in the building business have complained that there may be some falling off in the spring, and this is quite true. It was the object of the exercise to transfer work to the winter months. I can assure all hon. members of the house that this program will be continued next winter.

The second measure, Mr. Speaker, to which I wish to refer is the accelerated rates of capital cost allowances for Canadian owned companies and companies with a degree of Canadian ownership. Unquestionably this policy has proved to be a powerful incentive and is responsible in part for the substantial increase forecast recently for private capital investment in 1964. Hon. members will recall that the forecasts made for 1964, excluding housing, show an increase of 7.7 per cent over last year, and if housing is included the figure is 8.6 per cent. This stimulus through these increased capital costs allowances will continue through 1964 and the first half of 1965.

The third program I should like to mention is the automobile incentive program. This is also proving to be a success. We have all read in the press of the plans of the various automobile companies to expand their facilities in Canada, plans which will provide more jobs a year or two from now and more jobs in the meantime on the construction phase of the expansion.

Fourth, I refer to the extended provisions for technical and vocational training. As my colleague the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) indicated to the house on February 24, the new measures taken to strengthen our technical and vocational training program have had excellent results. There has been an increased enrolment in schools and in training programs, a decline in the number of school drop-outs and a downward swing in unemployment. The government believes that it is of vital importance to upgrade the skills and training of the Canadian labour force so as to equip our young people especially for the kind of jobs which will be available in the future.

To digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention the measures proposed in the budget this year to help people improve their skills and training. The first one is the extension of family allowances to students of 16 and 17 who remain in school. I suspect that other hon. members have received enthusiastic comments about this particular program as I have in the last 10 days, and that they will agree with me that it has been very well received across the country.

Mr. Winkler: It is the best thing in the budget.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You voted against it on February 27.

Mr. Gordon: And I expect you are going to vote against it tonight, if you will give me a chance to finish my remarks.

Mr. Starr: Do not get all riled up; you are doing very well so far.

Mr. Gordon: The second point in this general connection which helps people to improve their skills and which is provided for in the budget is the provision that tuition fees of part-time students may be deducted from taxable income; and the third is the proposal that loans on an interest-free basis should be made to university students. I think that we on this side of the house feel very pleased and satisfied that we were in a position to bring in these three measures which will do something for the younger people of this country.

The fifth measure I wish to mention is the incentives provided last year to stimulate activity in areas of slower growth. This is another policy that was ridiculed by the opposition when it was first announced, perhaps because it was new and untried in Canada. About 150 inquiries respecting possible projects for designated areas have so far been handled by the area development agency. Of these, 34 companies have formally indicated that they will go ahead with projects to be located in 14 of the 35 designated areas. They involve a capital investment of over $73.5 million and are expected to provide some 5,000 new jobs. The indications are that the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) will shortly be asked to certify new projects representing another $100 million or so in capital investment.

The extension of the tax concession in designated areas to April 1, 1967 has been greeted with enthusiasm. If I may, I should like to quote a letter which I received from Mr. W. N. Hall, president of Dominion Tar and Chemical Company Limited whose head office is in Montreal. He says:

> I should like to express my thanks and congratulations to you on the inclusion in the budget of an extension of the tax concessions in designated areas to April 1, 1967.
>
> My thanks are on account of the fact that I believe the concessions will be most helpful in allowing this company to do some things which otherwise would not be possible, and my congratulations are because I am sure this extension will bring needed industry to a number of areas which would not get industry on a normal taxation basis.

The sixth measure to which I wish to refer is the creation of the municipal development and loan board. There are 107 loans to date under this program amounting to $42.5 million, the largest of which so far is a loan of $29 million to metropolitan Toronto. I expect most applications under this act will be made this year, 1964, although the effects of increased employment resulting from them will continue until March 1966. As hon. members will recall, when the bill leading to the Municipal Development and Loan Act was being debated it was made clear that it was an intermediate program, or that its effects would be for the intermediate period. Most municipalities had already established their capital budgets for the calendar year 1963 and it was thought unlikely that many of them would be able to take advantage of these additional credit facilities during the 1963 year. We are now finding that municipalities are beginning to take advantage of the credit made available under the act for 1964.

The seventh measure to which I would like to refer is the Atlantic development board. Projects approved to date include, first, a power development at Mactaquac, New Brunswick, amounting to some $20 million. Another $20 million is being spent on the power development at bay d'Espoir in Newfoundland—I believe that is the correct way to pronounce the word in Newfoundland, if not in some other parts of Canada. Third, assistance is being provided for basic facilities for the fishing industry at Georgetown, Prince Edward Island; and the fourth project so far is assistance for basic facilities, again for the fisheries, at Canso, Nova Scotia. I personally am delighted that this measure to improve the basic economic structure of the Atlantic area is taking hold. The Atlantic development fund is the outcome of a recommendation made in the fall of 1956 by a royal commission of which I had the honour to be chairman. It has taken a long time, some people might think too long, to act on the recommendations of that commission, but we are now beginning to get somewhere. If it results in an improvement in economic conditions in the Atlantic area I am sure all members of the house and all people in the country will be more than pleased.

The eighth point I would like to make is in connection with the monetary policy that has been pursued and the spread between interest rates in Canada and the United States. During 1963 the operations of the Bank of Canada were directed towards encouraging credit conditions in a way which would help to strengthen and sustain the expansion of the Canadian economy.

Interest rates in the United States rose moderately during the course of 1963, and I think that the real phenomenon is that the spread between United States and Canadian rates narrowed appreciably. There seems to be general agreement with the monetary policy that has been followed, and it is one of the reasons why the Canadian economy has been expanding.

These various policies and measures are paying off. They are working well and they will continue to work well. All of them have contributed directly to the improvement in our economic picture.

Before leaving this subject I should like to say a word, more or less in parenthesis, about the older workers program. This program was not expected to be the final answer to the employment problem of older workers, and for that reason it was introduced on an experimental basis. The program was designed to assist employers during the period an eligible older worker was given the training and work experience necessary for his continued employment.

In some cases difficulty was experienced in finding workers to fill approved job vacancies, because the types of work offered were not attractive to many of the workers who were suitable for referral to the particular employers concerned. In other cases there was some shortage of eligible older workers who could meet the specifications of the job openings. But up to the end of February 1964 there were 1,986 applications from employers submitted to the national employment service offices. Of this number 1,333 had been approved, and by the end of February 936 eligible older workers had been placed in jobs.

There was a considerable increase in both applications and placements under the program during the month of February. Inquiries also increased in volume, indicating that further increases might be expected in March, the last month of the hiring period.

The other day the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) referred to the number of older workers placed in jobs up to the end of January, and he compared this figure with the cost of an advertising program to inform people of the older workers scheme that had just been started about that time.

He rather ridiculed the cost of the advertising in relation to the number of people who had been placed in jobs prior to the insertion of the advertisements, in other words, prior to the time most people knew the older workers program was in existence. In reply I would just like to say that the advertising program seems to have been effective. To the extent that this program has been and is being successful, it means the re-establishment as useful members of society of men who had been forgotten, men who had been made to feel they were not needed in our modern age. To the extent we are able to do something about this in one way or another it seems to me we are moving in the right direction. I have said something about the various economic policies and measures which have had considerable to do with the improvement in conditions in Canada in the last eight or ten months. I should now like to say a few words about the economic objectives of the government as set out in the budget speech. The first of these is the maintenance of high levels of employment.

Employment in February, 1964, was 272,000 higher than it was a year ago, the biggest increase in many, many years. Unemployment in February, 1964, was 78,000 lower than it was in the same month in the previous year.

Unemployment, as a percentage of the working force, reached its peak in 1961, and has been falling since that time.

The averages by the calendar years over the last decade have been as follows, and I think the trend is of interest: In 1954 the average was 4.6 per cent; in 1955 it was 4.4 per cent; in 1956 it was 3.4 per cent; in 1957 it was 4.6 per cent; in 1958 it was 7.1 per cent; in 1959 it was 6.0 per cent; in 1960 it was 7.0 per cent; in 1961 it was 7.2 per cent; in 1962 it was 5.9 per cent, and in 1963 it was 5.5 per cent.

The more recent improvement is greater than the yearly averages indicate. The following monthly figures show this on a seasonally adjusted basis. In July, 1963, unemployment was 5.9 per cent of the working force on a seasonally adjusted basis. In August it was 5.4 per cent. In September and October it was 5.3 per cent. In November it was 5.1 per cent, and in December, 1963, and to January, 1964, it was 4.9 per cent. In February of this year it was 4.7 per cent.

I am perfectly prepared to agree with the hon. member who spoke a few minutes ago that these rates are still far too high. I am not satisfied with the situation where unemployment in Canada is at a seasonally adjusted rate of 4.7 per cent. I am sure all other hon. members of the house are not satisfied either, but at least the curve is moving downwards and we can take some satisfaction from that. We must make sure in our policies and programs that we keep the curve moving downward in the months and years ahead.

Mr. Ricard: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Gordon: Certainly.

Mr. Ricard: Could the minister tell us how many thousands are unemployed now?

Mr. Gordon: I may be out a few, but my recollection is that there were 467,000 in February, 78,000 less than in February, 1963.

Mr. Ricard: Still over 400,000.

Mr. Gordon: The second objective is to encourage and maintain a high level of economic growth. The rate of growth in 1963 excluding farm production, which we all know was abnormally high in that year, was about 6 per cent. The estimated growth for the coming year, again leaving out farm production because nobody can tell what kind of crop we are going to have, is about 6½ per cent. We are expecting an increase.

An hon. Member: Juggling.

Mr. Gordon: No juggling; just planning. The third objective is an expansion of international trade and a reduction in the deficit on current account. The deficit on our current account with other countries was $521 million in 1963, again too high but the lowest since 1954. This country must do everything possible to push our exports so that the deficit in our current account transactions will be brought down to a reasonable balance.

In this connection and because it is vitally necessary to push our exports, perhaps I may be permitted to refer to a policy change that was announced last summer to permit the export of hydroelectric power, provided there are proper safeguards for domestic consumers in the future. As a result of this new policy approach it was possible to move on the Columbia river development which unquestionably will be of tremendous value and benefit not only to the people of British Columbia but to the people of Canada as a whole. Second, the government is working with the government of Manitoba in examining the power potential of the Nelson river to see if it can be developed at a cost which will permit very large and substantial exports either to the United States or possibly, depending on the circumstances, to Ontario. If the Ontario hydro commission should become really interested in this development on the Nelson it might take some of its future power requirements from that source and as a result reduce the need for imported coal for thermal plants. This would have the same effect as increased exports in so far as the current account deficit is concerned. Finally, there is the great potential development on the Hamilton river about which I should like to say a word or two in a minute.

The fourth objective of economic policy is to maintain reasonable stability in prices and the value of our currency. There has been a lot of comment, quite exaggerated comment if I may say so, about price stability in recent months. I might perhaps give a few comparisons of the changes in the consumer price indices in Canada and other countries between December, 1962, and December, 1963. In the United States consumer prices increased by 1.7 per cent during that 12 month period and in Canada the increase was exactly the same, 1.7 per cent. In the United Kingdom it was 1.8 per cent, in Sweden it was 2.7 per cent, in Germany 3.7 per cent and the same in Switzerland, in France it was 5.7 per cent, in Japan 5.8 per cent, in Italy it was 7.1 per cent. So on the basis of that kind of comparison we have not been doing badly in Canada.

On the matter of economic objectives there was one other point mentioned in the budget speech which is partly economic and partly political. I refer to the fact that Canada probably has the most open economy of any country in the world. This is to our best advantage. It is in our best interests, and as far as the government is concerned this will be continued. But as I said in the budget speech, there should be "full participation by Canadians in the management and direction of all aspects of our own affairs". I suspect it will not have gone unnoticed that in the budget speech this year I repeated what I said last June about the government's views and objectives concerning foreign owned Canadian subsidiary companies.

A word now, Mr. Speaker, about the economic outlook in Canada. I have already referred to the forecast of growth for 1964, to the fact that unemployment is down and employment up, to the fact that unemployment is now a regional rather than a national problem and is concentrated mainly—I referred to this in the budget speech—in eastern Quebec and the Atlantic provinces.

Apart from the incentives offered to industry to establish new manufacturing and processing plants in areas of slow growth, a policy which I am very hopeful will bear a great deal of fruit in the next few months, the best thing that could happen from the standpoint of more jobs in eastern Canada would be an early decision to go ahead with the $600 million to $700 million development of the Hamilton falls power project. I would urge all parties concerned with this great enterprise as seriously as I can to work out their differences, if any, and to get ahead with this vitally important project.

The other day the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) suggested that some people had referred to my latest effort as a Tory budget. I must say I winced when I heard that epithet. I have been called a lot of things in my day, not a few of them since I became Minister of Finance, but I cannot remember ever before being called a Tory. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the powerful stimulants to expansion introduced last year, the effects of which are now beginning to be felt, will continue to be felt, as I have said. Apart from this, and in the kind of economic conditions I have outlined, what other fiscal and economic policies are called for at this time?

It is quite true that there are those who advocate massive tax cuts in order to keep up with the Americans. I cannot accept this as the right prescription in present circumstances, and when I say that I mean the circumstances of mid-March, 1964. If at some later date the forward surge in the economy should show signs of faltering, that would be another matter. But there are no such signs on the horizon now.

Many hon. members have made useful contributions to the debate, although for the most part they seem to have more or less cancelled one another out. I should like to mention two things that were said, the first by the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Slogan). He suggested that in order to give vitality to this country we need the vision of 1957. My recollection of the vision, or nightmare, depending on how you like to refer to it, is that it was followed by high average unemployment—in 1958 of 7.1 per cent; in 1959 of 6 percent; in 1960 of 7 per cent and in 1961 of 7.2 per cent. It was followed also by two exchange crises. During that period the whole Canadian economy was in the doldrums.

We now have falling unemployment—

Mr. MacInnis: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Gordon: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: The minister has given us the figures up to 1962; would he now tell us what he said about the devaluation of the Canadian dollar in 1962?

Mr. Gordon: I think I was probably the first person to raise publicly the question of devaluation of the Canadian dollar in January, 1960 or it might have been February, 1960, at a meeting of the Ontario labour congress in Niagara Falls.

Mr. MacInnis: Will the minister permit one more question?

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps the hon. member would make his own speech or ask me questions at the end of mine. I should like to continue.

Mr. MacInnis: There is one question which I should like to ask the minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please; if the minister will allow a question, it is his privilege. On the other hand, he has the floor and it is up to him.

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to answer one more.

Mr. MacInnis: Did not the minister take credit for being the first to call to the attention of the Canadian people the fact that devaluation of the Canadian dollar would bring chaos to the economy of this country? I have that in writing, and it has been recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis: You are on record as saying so.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): This is a good time to change the subject.

Mr. Gordon: I am grateful for all advice that I get from unexpected places. I am short of consultants these days, and I am glad to find substitutes right here in the house.

We now have falling unemployment, the lowest levels since 1957, and an expanding economy. The people in my riding who now have jobs find the change to their liking, vision or no vision. They say they like this situation better than having nightmares.

The second point to which I wanted to refer was made by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) who yesterday criticized the government for not cutting taxes. I wonder how he reconciles these remarks with the amendment put forward by his party criticizing the government for not balancing the budget? I am curious also to know how he reconciles his views on tax cuts with those of his colleague the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) and the former minister of trade and commerce, Mr. McCutcheon, who sits in another place. These two gentlemen expressed their views at the recent Tory convention. I would be curious to know who speaks for the Conservatives on fiscal policy, whether it is the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue or the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings.

Mr. Martineau: We both do.

Mr. Gordon: They both do, Mr. Speaker. This may make it clear to some, but I find it a little confusing when they take opposite positions on this subject within a short time of each other.

The amendment we will be voting on tonight reads as follows:

> This house regrets that the government has failed to take any effective action to control increasing expenditures and its failure so to do, despite increased taxation imposed at the last session, has resulted in a substantial deficit.

I suggest to hon. gentlemen opposite that those who live in glass houses should not throw stones. It seems to me that they have had—

Mr. Ricard: Stop right now.

Mr. Gordon: —some experience with deficits. I cannot accept all the advice I get from the opposite side.

I may point out also that the deficit for the next year has been reduced by 33⅓ per cent. I might point out that some items of expenditures will be increased next year, as they are in all years. Perhaps when hon. members think about this, they might like to know what items will account for most of the increases. There will be about $34 million extra spent on family allowances; about $58 million increase in payments to the provinces; $50 million more in debt charges; $35 million increase in the amount payable for hospital insurance; $25 million more for external aid. The cost of the trans-Canada highway program next year is expected to be increased by $10 million, and $18 million will be spent in connection with the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition.

I might point out also that in the current year which ends March 31, almost 60 per cent of the federal government's total expenditures is for such things as old age security, hospital insurance, family allowances and other social security benefits, as well as vocational training and grants to the provinces and municipalities.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, namely private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READING—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. S-9, respecting Scottish Canadian Assurance Corporation—Mr. Wahn.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Bill No. S-8, respecting the General Accident Assurance Company of Canada—Mr. Wahn.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING WAGE EARNERS' ASSIGNMENTS

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. C-3, an act to amend the Bankruptcy Act (wage earners' assignments)—Mr. Orlikow.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before I request that this order stand, I wonder if I could ask the Solicitor General if arrangements might be made some time soon to refer the subject matter of the various bills that are to go to the consumer credit committee to that committee? I am not asking that it be done today, because we have to pick out which ones are to be dealt with in that way. This is the reason we keep asking that some of these bills stand.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): In reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I wish to state that in a day or two we shall go over these bills and the subject matter of any having anything to do with consumer credit will be referred to that committee for further study.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH CAPITAL PUNISHMENT EXCEPT FOR TREASON

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-12, to amend the Criminal Code (capital punishment).

He said: The purpose of this bill, second reading of which I am now moving, is to amend the Criminal Code so as to abolish hanging as a penalty for the crime of murder.

Hon. members will notice that I have deliberately not touched upon the subject of treason because for the purpose of discussion this afternoon I wanted to try to limit the debate to the question of hanging as a penalty for the crime of murder. This is a subject upon which debate has raged back and forth for many years. People on either side of the controversy have, I think, held their views with sincerity and conviction and I suppose that no matter what happens to this bill the subject will always be one of which there will be deep differences of opinion among the population.

Those who read Hansard will have observed that the last great debate on this subject took place in 1961 when several days were devoted to a discussion of the matter. I think anyone reading the report is bound to be impressed by the fact that these debates are probably among the finest to be found in the pages of Hansard. The question we really have to decide this afternoon is, it seems to me, a fairly simple one, namely is hanging an effective deterrent to murder or is there another deterrent which is just as effective and not so drastic? In my few remarks I hope to be able to demonstrate to the house that the penalty of capital punishment cannot be justified upon logical grounds and certainly not on moral grounds, and that there are other deterrents which are just as effective, though less drastic. I should like to divide my argument into two parts. First, I should like to examine briefly the case in favour of retaining capital punishment and, second, to discuss the arguments put forward in favour of its abolition.

The only real argument of substance which is advanced in favour of retaining capital punishment is based upon what is called the theory of deterrence. This is the theory that potential murderers will stop to consider the consequence of their action; that they realize that if apprehended and convicted they will be hanged, and that this will deter them from committing murder. An examination of the evidence in jurisdictions where capital punishment has been abolished in no way supports this theory.

Hon. members will be interested to hear of some of the countries which have abolished capital punishment and the years in which they decided to do so: Holland, 1860; Denmark, 1892; Norway, 1876; Sweden, 1919; and West Germany. There are a host of European and Scandinavian countries which abolished the death penalty before 1900. But in these five particular cases where the penalty has been out of use for about a hundred years it is interesting to compare the murder rate with that of Canada. The latest statistics indicate that the murder rate in Canada is about 1.2 per 100,000. In Holland, the rate is .04; in Norway, it is .05; in Sweden, .08; in Denmark, 1.00 and in West Germany, 1.2. These are, for the most part, jurisdictions where the death penalty has been abolished for about 100 years and in every case except one the murder rate is lower than it is in Canada, while in the remaining case it is no worse.

The figures in the United States are of some assistance. In six states of the United States which have abolished the death penalty, the figures for 1958 indicate that the murder rate was 1.83 per 100,000. In the 42 states which retained it, the murder rate was 7.04. Again, the available statistics indicate that capital punishment has no deterrent value at all. In New Zealand, between 1946 and 1950 when the death penalty was not in existence, the murder rate was 6.7 per 100,000. In 1956, when it was reintroduced, the murder rate rose to 8.7. Hon. members can examine any jurisdiction they please. They can take any group of 40 or 50 countries representing both industrial and rural societies, both developed and underdeveloped nations, or having different levels of education, and still any evidence which is available will indicate that the incidence of murder bears no relationship at all to the existence or non-existence of the penalty of capital punishment.

In any event, the death penalty is very rarely invoked. In the United States, where there are 7,000 murders every year, only some 50 murderers are executed. What is the deterrent value of a penalty which is so rarely invoked? Again, the death penalty is highly discriminatory in its nature. Those most likely to die are the poor, members of minority groups, the unintelligent and the friendless. The warden at Sing Sing who accompanied 149 men to the death chamber reported that in every case they were men who had no money. More than half of all those executed in the United States are Negroes.

The death penalty does not even begin to deal with the vast majority of murders classified as family murders—cases where a wife murders her husband, or the husband murders his wife, or one of them murders the children. The amendment to the Criminal Code introduced in 1961 tried to deal with the subject and it seems to me it is time for us to go all the way and abolish the death penalty completely.

The only real advocates of capital punishment are the police, who claim it is a deterrent to planned murders. In this regard, the death penalty certainly did not prevent the most infamous planned murder of our generation—the murder of President Kennedy. This was a murder carefully planned in advance and there is no evidence that there was any deterrent value at all in the fact that the state of Texas retains the death penalty.

In 1962, Ronald Turpin and Arthur Lucas were hanged in my own city of Toronto. The next night, in the shadow of the jail, a man was stabbed to death. As I have said, all the evidence indicates that the death penalty as a deterrent to murder is completely ineffective. Some have argued that it provides protection for the police. If this were so, there might be some reason for retaining it. The only comprehensive study made in this regard was conducted by the University of Pennsylvania. The chiefs of police of some 10,000 towns reported on cases of murder in which the victims were police officers, and an analysis showed no difference whatever between the positions of states which had retained the death penalty and states which had abolished it. Some police officers here claim that the existence of the death penalty for murder keeps criminals from moving into their jurisdictions. It seems to me that this contention cannot stand up, because if criminals in the United States wish to move into jurisdictions where there is no death penalty, they have six states of their own from which to choose. Others contend that the loved ones and relatives of a murdered person suffer and that the dependants of the murderer, the people left by him, should therefore suffer, too.

But surely, Mr. Speaker, the care and attention to be devoted to the families of those who are murdered can be better handled through compensation funds and other measures which could easily be devised. The final argument—and it may have some merit—is that public opinion is not prepared to support the abolition of capital punishment. In this regard it is significant that over the years the number of people in Canada who are in favour of retaining the death penalty is steadily declining. I believe the latest figures, taken in 1962, showed that only 47 per cent were still in favour of retaining it. Also it seems to me that in the area of social reforms it is highly necessary that our governments not just follow public opinion but lead it; that our governments should give leadership in areas of reform, rather than wait until a majority of the population want something and then turn around and agree with them.

I think the most important statement in this regard was made by Sir Ernest Gowers who served as chairman of the royal commission in the United Kingdom in 1949. He said as follows:

> Before serving on the royal commission I, like most other people, had given no great thought to this problem. If I had been asked for my opinion, I should probably have said that I was in favour of the death penalty, and disposed to regard abolitionists as people whose hearts were bigger than their heads. Four years of close study on the subject gradually dispelled that feeling. In the end I became convinced that the abolitionists were right in their conclusions—and that so far from the sentimental approach leading into their camp and the rational one into that of the supporters, it was the other way about.

So I suggest that when one examines any of the arguments in favour of the retaining of capital punishment, they cannot stand up on any logical grounds.

My time is limited, Mr. Speaker, and I want to pass very quickly to the arguments in favour of abolition. The first argument, of course, in favour of abolishing the death penalty is that all arguments in favour of retaining it do not stand up unless we are prepared to admit that the real motive is revenge; and if that is the case, we have not really progressed very far from the day when our ancestors dressed in leopard skins and chased each other around with clubs. The other argument against retaining capital punishment, of course, is the impossibility of rectifying a mistake, because the dead cannot come back to life. I know there are safeguards in our jurisprudence—we are all aware of them—but our jurisprudence is administered by human beings, not by calculating machines, and mistakes do occur and there are cases of innocent people being convicted. I have in my hands a book by Judge Jerome Frank in which he outlines some 36 cases of innocent people who were convicted. In the case of those who were executed, the interest in their case dies when they are executed because there is nobody to be released in any event. I spoke last session of the Coffin case. I do not intend to repeat here the arguments I advanced at that time, except to say that if ever there was a case that called for the abolition of capital punishment, it was the case of Wilbur Coffin. We shall await with great interest the deliberations of and the result and report of the royal commission.

Also, Mr. Speaker, capital punishment rules out any hope of rehabilitation of the criminal. Recent studies that have been conducted in forensic psychiatry have indicated that in many cases rehabilitation can take place. There is an interesting study of a young convict in Chicago who was convicted of murder and sentenced to death and whose execution was postponed for eight years. At the end of the eight years the governor of the state commuted his sentence to life imprisonment because this man had been completely rehabilitated. It was stated that to take his life would not be punishment but would only be retribution. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, capital punishment rules out any hope of rehabilitation. Life imprisonment, where it has been tried and where statistical evidence is available, has proven to be just as effective a deterrent as hanging in cases of murder.

It has been said by some that this has not been a particularly distinguished parliament. We have been subject to a great deal of criticism, some justified and some unjustified; but it seems to me that in this bill we have a chance to take a great step forward; to take action that would be heard around the world should we decide to take a forward and progressive step and abolish capital punishment.

Mr. Speaker, my time is running out and I do not really have an opportunity to go into the final problem of capital punishment, which is the whole question of morals and ethics; to what extent the state has the right to take a human life, under any circumstances. Every time we have a hanging in Canada, this country undergoes a sort of crisis of conscience, where a man waits to die and the whole nation debates whether or not he shall die; and it usually resolves into a tug-of-war between the primitive passion of revenge and the civilized idea of compassion. We kill, I think, largely from revenge. I think we kill because we fear, not because we think these people are beyond rehabilitation. I think we kill in the blind and futile hope that others will not repeat the crime. I think we do it because we do not yet understand that murder has its roots in the ills of our society, poverty and ignorance, lack of opportunity and all the other ills with which we try to deal in this parliament. I think we do it because as yet we do not really respect human life.

The ministry of justice in Belgium—where their last execution was 100 years ago—put it this way:

> The lesson has been learned that the best means of inculcating respect for human life is to refrain from taking it even in the name of the law.

I wonder to what extent a society that takes human life can invest its citizens with respect for human life. These, as I say, are arguments that would take a great deal of time to develop; they are matters of conscience. However, I hope that some day we shall have a chance to deal with them in this chamber. In summation, Mr. Speaker, I merely want to reaffirm that the arguments of the deterrent effect, protection of the police, etc., are not borne out by any available statistics that I can find; that the case in favour of the abolition of capital punishment has never been refuted on anything but opinion evidence; that as far as I can see, and on all the evidence, life imprisonment, where it has been tried, has exercised the necessary degree of effective deterrence.

Therefore in conclusion I merely wish again to reaffirm my position. It seems to me that the abolition of capital punishment is in many ways a plea that we put our backs to the past and try to turn our faces to the future. I think we are trying to establish a regard for human life that does not exist at the present time. I think we are trying, essentially, to argue for a time when reasons of revenge and hatred do not dictate our decisions, and for a time when we can learn somehow through reason, judgment and understanding that all life is worth saving and that compassion is the highest attribute of our society.

Mr. Robert Temple (Hastings South): Mr. Speaker, since the earliest days of civilization men have been concerned with capital punishment and its effects on the aggrieved person or persons, the criminal and the community as a whole. Today I become one of those who have given some thought to capital punishment and its social effects. Crime or criminology has only recently become a science of which we know much, or rather have studied as such.

In the days when Babylon was at the height of its prominence the generally recognized and accepted law was that in all criminal matters the maxim of "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" should prevail. Today such a rudimentary concept fills us, or should fill us, with alarm and yet as history, and supposedly civilization, advanced we find that this old maxim "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" has not only remained but has become worse. The Romans punished parricide by sewing the condemned in a sack with a dog, a cock, a viper and an ape and casting all into the sea or river. In eighth century England all laws made distinction between different classes of men, not only between slaves and free men but between different classes of free men, and all laws assumed that the family bore a share of responsibility for the wrongs done by its members and was entitled to some compensation for wrongs suffered by kinsmen.

In plain English the effect of the eighth century Anglo-Saxon procedure is this. A man accused of assaulting a fellow citizen needed the good opinion of the village to get off. If he had it, he would not be convicted; but if he committed his crime against the lord of the manor, then he only got off if he had sufficient testimony from the other local land owners. If the accused person persisted in his protestations of innocence and did not have the good opinion of his fellows, he had to submit to ordeal. The ordinary ordeals were by water or fire—a hot iron weighing one pound had to be carried, or the arm plunged up to the wrist in boiling water. For a threefold ordeal the weight of the iron was three pounds, or the arm had to be put in up to the elbow. The hand was then bound and sealed up and kept bound for three days. If, after three days, the hand showed raw flesh the man was guilty. If the hand healed he was innocent.

These ordeals were accepted by eighth century England. It is reported a great number of convictions were obtained, almost as many convictions perhaps as would have been the case under the proposed bill no. 99 in the Ontario legislature, whereby accused people would be denied legal counsel, habeas corpus would be removed, Magna Carta done away with, and people put in jail for days on end and kept there if they failed to answer questions. It has been said that this bill no. 99 would apply only to selected persons, but I hate to think who the selected persons might be. I do not know whether they would have been Liberals first of all or who they might have been, but being a little bit selective is a dangerous thing, like a little bit of something else which I am sure the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is thinking about now.

Mr. Lambert: What about west coast Japanese?

Mr. Temple: Fortunately bill no. 99 was K.O'd. in the second round. Cassius Clay, the world heavyweight champion, took seven rounds to win the championship, but it just goes to show that many a Cassius has feet of clay—and here I am referring to the proposed bill no. 99.

Then 900 years later in the 17th century in England we might logically suppose that men were much more enlightened than their forebears of the eighth century. Yet we find that in 1650 an act was passed in England punishing adultery with death, and this savage penalty was actually inflicted in two or three cases. After that even puritan juries refused to convict and the law was set aside as unworkable. This was rather remarkable, in that history shows us that it usually take a long time for legislatures to change a criminal law which is not supported, nay is even despised, by the majority of the people.

People in the seventeenth century or in the eighth century were no less intelligent than people of the twentieth century. Rather, the power of traditional thought was very effective in keeping men's minds closed to the facts which were not in accordance with traditions. Previous to the time of William Harvey, whose work was done early in the seventeenth century, the ablest and most intelligent persons had no proper concept of the circulation of the blood. They believed the arteries were filled with air. Harvey's findings gained very little headway during his lifetime and were contradicted most strenuously by scientific men. This was due again in a large part to that tradition of thought of which I have spoken.

It is not my intention to be maudlin in describing the various tortures and punishments inflicted in England, but I feel that we must look at these punishments in order to grasp the change in men's thinking. Of course, when I say men I mean both sexes, and it may be that a large credit for the reforms that have been made are due to the influence and innate gentleness of the female sex.

In 1530 an act was passed in England which prescribed boiling alive for certain convicted persons. Burning alive was another penalty for a certain number of crimes and lasted until 1790, only 174 years ago. From 1525 until 1550 it is said 72,000 executions were performed in England. Nevertheless crime increased and during the eighteenth century the criminal code of England contained 240 different capital offences. At the dawn of the last century death was a penalty for such misdemeanours as unlawfully killing, hunting or stealing deer, unlawfully killing or netting fish out of any pond, cutting down or destroying someone else's trees, sending threatening letters; and, of course, thefts of over five shillings from a shop or over 40 shillings from a private house were also punishable by death.

From time to time men have protested against these outrages. One such person was Cesare di Beccaria, a Milanese nobleman whose book "Crimes and Punishment" published in 1764 denounced torture and established a basis for a scientific treatment of criminology. This book was a tremendous sensation among enlightened people all over Europe. However, Beccaria was denounced by his critics—and they were many—as a fanatic, an impostor, a fool, a madman, and was charged with having sought to endanger governments and seduce the public; while torture was upheld by these critics as a benefit and a mercy to a criminal by purging him in his death of falsehood.

Due to the efforts of such men as Beccaria, we have in Canada at the present time but three offences punishable by death. They are treason, murder and piracy with violence. However, let us look at and study carefully the death penalty. It can be attacked on several grounds. I propose to deal with it on the grounds that it fulfils no useful function and that it will be remembered by future generations with a sense of loathing and incredulity. The argument is put forth that fear of the death penalty is a major deterring influence on the crime of murder. Yet in those countries and states which have abolished the death penalty for murder there has been no increase in the crime. My hon. friend from Danforth (Mr. Scott) gave a very learned discourse a few moments ago in this house on this very matter. Neither has there been a lessening of this particular crime. The only logical conclusion at which we can arrive is that fear of the death penalty is no effective deterrent.

It is also argued that it prevents the repetition of the same crime by the same person. I shall quote the late Warden Lewis E. Lawes of Sing Sing prison. These extracts from his book "Life and Death in Sing Sing".

The argument that capital punishment is necessary for elimination of murder is faulty: It must not be forgotten that the death penalty has been tried before on a colossal scale, judged and found wanting.

The further assumption that the murderer is a dangerous criminal from whom society must be protected by hanging or capital punishment is flatly disproved by the figures which show that 90 per cent of the men and women convicted for murder had no previous felony record whatsoever.

Finally Warden Lawes asks this question:

Is it necessary to kill a murderer? It is surely not a deterrent example to perform an act furtively. If the state really believes that execution is necessary to deter others, it should execute openly and unashamed. Does not this furtiveness carry the suggestive thought that the spectacle of legalized killing by the state breeds on the part of the unthinking mass a hardened outlook towards murder which is harmful rather than effective as a deterrent?

It may very well be that my thoughts and feelings toward capital punishment are not shared by the majority of Canadians who approve of capital punishment and believe it is right. That a thing is widely believed is no guarantee of its truth. For a much longer time than the present view has prevailed, it was universally believed that the sun moved around the earth; the whole world believed in the existence of witches, and up until the time of Columbus the prevalent belief was that the world was flat. Therefore the fact that belief in the desirability of capital punishment is both widespread and of long standing is not by itself a guarantee that it is the true solution. We have seen that savage punishments have neither reformed the criminal class nor acted as a deterrent for the future.

There was something which was brought to my attention yesterday that might be of interest to this house. It was a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada which voted on a split decision, if I may put it that way, that an accused person from Quebec, who had been condemned to death at his original trial and who subsequently had his execution sentence set aside by the court of appeal of the province of Quebec which ordered a new trial, be now executed, and that the decision of the Quebec appeal court be set aside. This was by a majority decision of six to three in the Supreme Court of Canada.

I submit that when there is, for whatever reason, anything less than a unanimous vote in a court of appeal or in the Supreme Court of Canada on a matter affecting a man's life, that man should not be executed and instead should at least be sentenced to life imprisonment. I ask the government to take note of this in any amendments that may be proposed to the Criminal Code.

I believe that the legislation enacted some three years ago was a step in the right direction, providing for two classes of murder, capital and non-capital. We have had three years experience of that legislation and, so far as it goes, it has worked very well. However, I would ask that the government study this very carefully over the next year or two in the hope that it will then say there will not be two classes of murder, that there will be only non-capital murder, and that the penalty will be life imprisonment, as suggested in this very excellent bill presented by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott).

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, although I am not a lawyer or a legislator, I am nevertheless interested in this matter and I should like to say, to begin on a humourous note, that capital punishment should be abolished, at least in the case of bills presented during the hour for the consideration of private members' business, thus permitting us to adopt some of them once in a while.

I suggest we proceed most cautiously regarding abolishment of capital punishment and that we consider seriously every reason invoked in favour of it.

I agree that capital punishment may not be the deterrent we think it is, that it does not constitute a protection for police officers and that it cannot become an instrument of revenge against an individual. I admit that we must provide some social reforms, one of which would be the abolition of capital punishment.

Besides when it has become an accomplished fact, there will still be cases where, for the public safety—and not necessarily that of the policemen since it is their job just as it is the firemen's job to put our fires, even at the risk of getting burned—we will have to find more adequate means of protecting the people.

I still recall that famous case to which I have often referred here—and you could even say that I am obsessed by the idea—that of Dion who was sentenced to several years in the penitentiary and while the judge recommended that he should not be allowed to leave it for reasons which are still unknown, in spite of the numerous questions directed to the Minister of Justice, Dion managed to be released legally through the parole board. Once free, he lost no time in committing murders.

That is what I have in mind when I say that the law must still be made to protect the people. If someone is sentenced to jail for life, there is nothing to prevent him, after ten, 20 or 25 years of perfectly good behaviour, from being paroled, returning to live in society and committing another murder.

It is claimed that we have no right to deprive somebody of his life. But, before a murderer is sentenced to death, would it not be more logical to give an accurate definition of a real murderer, a killer capable of committing a premeditated murder, and a sick person suffering from mental illness. In my opinion, mentally unbalanced people should not be given a death sentence. They should be treated, or at least some kind of treatment should be tried in their case. On the other hand, life sentences are not given those who are capable of deliberately committing a premeditated murder, in order to enable our laws, not to satisfy any desire for revenge, but to ensure the protection of our people who can always expect to see that individual come out again.

As a deterrent, it has been alleged that a life sentence is similar to a death sentence, except that, in the latter case, the individual will never have any chance of returning to society.

Mistrials have also been mentioned, but they are certainly not a result of death sentences, but rather of loop-holes in our laws. Now, I think that legal means should be taken in order to avoid any possible mistakes. But there is definitely no relationship between capital punishment and mistrials.

In those very few cases, those convicted as a result of a mistrial, as the hon. member for Hastings South (Mr. Temple) pointed out, should be convicted only on complete unanimity. I maintain that when both lawyers and psychiatrists are unanimous in finding someone guilty of premeditated murder, with full knowledge of the facts, capital punishment should be maintained in order to protect the people.

Earlier, the hon. member for Hastings South said that many things have changed since the early days when it was said: "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth". In that respect we know—and I recall it especially since it is Holy Week—that when our Saviour came among us, He said: from now on, it will not be "an eye for an eye or a tooth for a tooth" but "whosoever smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also" which means that we have to forgive one another and live by charity and love only. He said that we must forgive often, that we must forgive seventy times seven, meaning that we must always forgive one another. But, just the same—He even let himself be sentenced to death following a charge, a political trial, in short for various reasons which, in our opinion, did not warrant the death penalty. But he accepted that fate to show that, in future, capital punishment could be contemplated in some cases; otherwise, I feel He would have refused it himself.

[Mr. Marcoux.]

Before ending my remarks, I would like to add that the hon. member for Hastings South says that something is not necessarily true because most people accept it. We have been saying that for a long time too, we have been saying that the present economic system is not good but, in spite of that, everyone still thinks that it cannot be changed. It is still a good argument.

We favour the abolishment of the death penalty, but until it can be established without any possible doubt that an accused was not entirely sound of mind or that he had not fully premeditated his murder, I feel we must leave in the criminal code a provision to protect the public against true criminals.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the question raised in Bill C-12 with respect to capital punishment is certainly a much debated one throughout Canada.

Some people claim that capital punishment must be maintained and others state that it should be abolished.

Moreover, if we consider section 75, paragraph 1 of this bill, we see that there is not much change as compared to what existed previously.

I quote:

(1) Everyone commits piracy who does any act that, by the law of nations, is piracy.

Now, what is suggested in Bill C-12 is exactly the same thing as in this paragraph 1.

But it is paragraph (2) that this bill would change, and paragraph (2) read previously as follows:

(2) Everyone who commits piracy while in or out of Canada is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for life, but if while committing or attempting to commit piracy he murders or attempts to murder another person or does any act that is likely to endanger the life of another person he shall be sentenced to death.

Now, the new section, paragraph (2) says:

Everyone who commits piracy while in or out of Canada is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for life.

In the explanatory notes, this is specified:

The purpose of this bill is to provide that hereafter a person shall not, except in certain cases of treason, be sentenced in Canada to suffer death for murder but that such a person shall hereafter be liable to imprisonment for life.

Now, what does Bill C-12 mean by:

"except in certain cases of treason"?

For instance, is it not treason for an individual to disguise as Santa Claus and kill two policemen in the very centre of the city of Montreal at noontime? Is it not treason to deprive children of their father and a wife of her husband? In the case of sure premeditation—because the bandit is then ready for any eventuality—is it treason of the Canadian community where this individual may live?

The first part of the explanatory notes reads as follows:

> The 1960-61 act to be repealed has the effect of dividing murder into two kinds, capital and non-capital; and of providing death as punishment for capital murder and imprisonment for life in the case of non-capital murder.

Mr. Speaker, when it is clearly established that the murderer knew full well the seriousness of his act, I feel that he should pay with his own life for the one he has taken.

On the other hand, miscarriages of justice have been known to happen. For instance, an investigation is going on at present in the province of Quebec concerning a well-publicized case, that of Wilbert Coffin who was executed in 1956, after two or three trials and after three years of detention in jail.

And today they are trying to find reasons to exonerate or rather rehabilitate the memory of Wilbert Coffin.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Coffin case was not clear in 1956, and many jurists readily admit it. There was no conclusive evidence that he was the murderer of the three American tourists in the Gaspe peninsula. This was not, in my opinion, a capital murder, and I feel the criminal code should be amended so as to prevent such a miscarriage of justice.

It may be that Coffin was guilty, but then maybe he was not. In such cases, the accused should be given the benefit of the doubt and not be sentenced to death. I feel that the majority of Canadians would welcome such an amendment to the Criminal Code.

But, Mr. Speaker, throughout the country, there are criminals who do not hesitate to fire on policemen, on fathers and mothers of families, on taxi drivers to steal money from them.

These days we hear more and more about hold ups. As a matter of fact, it was even said that there had been a hold up every minute in the city of Montreal recently during almost a whole night. Those are the hold ups that are reported. What about those which are not?

I feel that there must be a way to improve the situation, and it is not by reducing sentences that we will prevent people from stealing or engaging in hold ups or having the nerve, the audacity to kill anyone they find in their way.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Hastings South (Mr. Temple) pointed out to the house a short while ago that we no longer live in the middle ages or in ancient or primitive times.

But, even if we are living in modern times, we must be cautious and know where we are going before proposing the abolishment of a punishment which in certain cases certainly proves to be the best.

When we see people die in such a way, even friends in certain cases, I can assure you this makes one think twice about the advisability of abolishing capital punishment.

Mr. Speaker, this bill and other similar ones have been introduced here for a number of sessions. Life sentence has been suggested rather than capital punishment. To deprive someone of freedom for a lifetime, I wonder whether it is more Christian and more modern than to punish him according to what he deserves, according to the seriousness of the act he committed.

We consider only whether a murder is capital or non-capital to determine exactly if capital punishment should be maintained or not. I feel that capital punishment should be maintained for capital murders. In addition, as suggested earlier by the hon. member for Hastings South, legal proceedings should be more thorough so as to establish exactly the seriousness of the offence committed.

[Text]

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) is to be commended for bringing this important matter to the attention of parliament again. The reason I have risen to speak in this debate is that I have taken part in previous discussions of this subject, notably on the several successive bills which were presented and moved in the house between 1958 and 1962 by the former member for York-Scarborough, Mr. Frank McGee. I spoke on those occasions and I propose to speak now in support of the principle of abolition of capital punishment. After each occasion in the past when I expressed my views against capital punishment I received letters from my constituents and others both for and against the retention of the death sentence, with the number favouring abolition on the increase over previous years.

Undoubtedly, the general feeling swaying toward abolition had the effect of influencing the previous government in the introduction of Bill No. C-92 in May of 1961, the passing of which had the effect of dividing murder into capital and non-capital categories. I think this was a step in the right direction.

The Globe and Mail devoted an editorial to commenting on the passage of Bill No. C-92 in 1961, and concluded with these words:

> The new amendment will reduce the number of cases in which the government is required to exact the extreme penalty or to interfere with the law, but they do not answer the moral question: Should society kill any man, whatever his or her crime?

This issue, however, is still between two schools of thought, one thirsting after justice in a mood of vengeance and the other urging the practice of Christian charity and the rehabilitation of criminals. Mr. Kirkpatrick, an executive director of the John Howard Society for Ontario, speaking on deterrence, had this to say:

> The belief behind deterrent punishment is that behaviour can be controlled by fear; therefore, the argument goes, severe treatment of a criminal is effective in two directions at once: It deters the criminal himself from committing another crime and, by the example of his punishment, it deters others from wrongdoing.

Notable figures in the religious life of this country have gone on record as being in favour of abolition. Still others have expressed opinions to the contrary, holding to the belief that fear of the death sentence is a restraining force against murder. Personally, I share the views of those who believe that there is no valid guarantee that the fear of punishment by death is a definite deterrent.

Consider the proportion of murders committed in circumstances of sudden passion which are not deterred by threat of consequences and consider also crime such as robberies, from which murder might result, which are deliberately planned to avoid detection. Consider also the risk of executing an innocent person.

May I cite as an example the case of a man by the name of Evans, who was hanged in London for the murder of his wife and child in 1949. Five years later a man by the name of Christie, who lived in an apartment in the same house as Evans, was arrested and convicted of having murdered several women including Mrs. Evans, for whose murder her husband was hanged five years before. Consider the case now under investigation known as the Coffin case in the province of Quebec. There are others that could be cited.

The debates on capital punishment during 1959, 1960 and 1961 revealed the tremendous interest in this subject which the whole country shared. It was a practical demonstration of the feelings of the people on the matter which were, for the most part, still divided. Those who still favour the retention of the death penalty for crimes involving murder believe that death is the only effective deterrent against murder. While I respect the views of those who hold the opinion that the death sentence is a restraining force against murder, the experience of nations, including the United States to the south of us, is such that it does not bear out this contention.

The hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) mentioned some of the nations that have abolished capital punishment. I could add Belgium to that list, which abolished capital punishment in 1863; Luxembourg in 1822; Portugal in 1867; the Netherlands in 1870 and Italy in 1890. The death penalty was restored in Italy during the fascist regime but was abolished again in 1948. The northern states south of the border might also be included, and this is not a complete list by any means.

I should like now, Mr. Speaker, to read an extract from the report of the royal commission on capital punishment in Great Britain in 1949. At page 53 of the report the commission said:

> Capital punishment has obviously failed as a deterrent when murder is committed. We can number its failures. But we cannot number its successes. No one can ever know how many people have refrained from murder because of the fear of being hanged. For that we have to rely on indirect and inconclusive evidence. We have been told that the first thing a murderer says when he is arrested is often, "shall I be hanged" or, "I did it and I am ready to swing for it" or something of that kind. What is the inference to be drawn from this? Clearly not that the death penalty is an effective deterrent, for he has not been deterred; nor that he consciously considered the risk of the death penalty and accepted it; still less that the death penalty was not so effective a deterrent as some other punishment might have been. The true inference seems to us to be that there is a strong association between murder and the death penalty in the popular imagination.

I see that the time is getting short, but I should like to say that I do not propose that the government should bring in a bill to a divided parliament, on a subject about which there is divided opinion in the country. I am in favour of letting this question come to a free vote eventually, and letting every member vote according to the dictates of his or her conscience.

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Badanai: The retention or the abolition of capital punishment is not a subject of government policy or party line. This is an emotional subject, Mr. Speaker, and one of religious conviction, overriding any and all political considerations.

I believe it is six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being six o'clock, the hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance), that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Nowlan.

Mr. Gordon: I am sure I speak for all hon. members when I express our grateful thanks to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Watson) for supplying us with this souvenir, as he puts it, or symbol, of Saskatchewan. I think we are all pleased, too, that it is no longer necessary to dispose of the great product of the farms of Saskatchewan in this somewhat retail maner, and to think that nowadays this sort of stuff is being shipped in large quantities to people all over the world who need it very badly.

An hon. Member: This sort of stuff?

Mr. Knowles: What grade is it?

Mr. Gordon: With great respect to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who is an expert in many things, I made some inquiries as to the grade of this product a minute ago from someone who really knows, and he said is was either grade two or grade one. It could be grade one, but he thought it was grade two.

Just before five o'clock I said that almost 60 per cent of the total expenditures of the federal government for the current year, that is the year ending March 31, 1964, is on such things as old age security, hospital insurance, family alowances and other social security benefits, debt charges and such items as vocational training and grants to the municipalities and to the provinces. I should like to remind hon. members in a little more detail of the breakdown of federal government expenditure for the year ending March 31, 1964. Old age security payments will amount to $809 million or 11 per cent of all estimated government expenditure for the current year. Hospital insurance, family allowances and other social security benefits amount to $1,152 million or 15 per cent of the total. Veterans benefits come to $266 million, or 3 per cent of the total, and public debt charges for the current year to $991 million, or 13 per cent; vocational training and grants to universities account for $165 million, or 2 per cent; grants to provinces and municipalities, including payments in connection with the trans-Canada highway, to $332 million, or 4 per cent of the total, and other grants, contributions and subsidies account for $770 million or 10 per cent, making a total in this particular category of items of $4,485 millions which accounts for 58 per cent of the total expenditure.

Expenditure on defence amounts to $1,699 million, or 22 per cent, accounting together with the items just mentioned for 80 per cent of the total. Capital expenditure stands at $225 million, or 3 per cent of the total and the cost of administration, operation and maintenance, including transportation, research and other government services, amounts to $1,292 million or 17 per cent of the total, the total being $7,701 million.

It will be noted that 58 per cent of the total expenditure this year is devoted to social security benefits and the other items I have mentioned. If defence expenditures are added, we get a total of almost exactly 80 per cent of all government expenditure for 1963-64. This leaves a balance of about $1,500 million, or 20 per cent of the total, to cover capital expenditure and the administration, operation and maintenance of government services including, as I have said, transportation, research and all other government services.

I suggest that those who advocate a reduction in expenditure should say what they have in mind. We hear a lot from certain editorial writers about the desirability of balanced budgets. At the same time, the same people—and I might include the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) among them—usually advocate tax cuts. Should one ask them how the federal budget can be balanced if taxation revenues are reduced, they usually say, somewhat airily, that the proper thing to do is to reduce expenditure. Then they stop. Very few of these people are prepared to state which expenditures they would like to see reduced.

The New Democratic party did this in its subamendment. Members in that group said they would cut defence expenditure. I ask: Is this what the Conservative party has in mind? Or would hon. gentlemen opposite have us cut down social security or veterans benefits? One hon. member opposite said something about "wasting all this money". Let them state clearly just what they would do, or what they would have us do.

Mr. Grafftey: You said you were going to do it.

Mr. Gordon: The other day, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives moved an amendment to the throne speech criticizing the government for not extending family allowances. As the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) pointed out on March 19, if enough hon. members had voted for that amendment, the government would have been defeated, and this would have made certain that there would have been no extension of family allowances at least until after another general election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: This is a powerful speech.

Mr. Gordon: You really cannot have it both ways. I might say, Mr. Speaker, another general election which, we are led to believe, the great majority of Canadians do not want.

Mr. Grafftey: Did they want the last one?

Mr. Winkler: Who forced the last one?

Mr. Gordon: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if enough hon. members vote for the amendment now before us, it will have the same effect; the government will be defeated, if enough hon. members vote for this amendment—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: —and the government's proposal to extend family allowances for 16 and 17 year olds who remain in school will also be defeated.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: Let us make no mistake about this.

Mr. Churchill: Social Credit are getting nervous.

Mr. Gordon: The Conservative amendment is a vote against the budget; therefore it is a vote against extending family allowances.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crouse: Same old bunch.

An hon. Member: Who wrote that for you?

Mr. Gordon: I hope that all hon. members will consider this very carefully before the vote tonight.

Mr. Starr: What a childish speech.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have ever known the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) to be in more humorous vein than he has been this evening and this afternoon. Under normal circumstances the hon. member for Queens would have spoken. That was the arrangement. It was only when the Minister of Finance chose to make some references to the Leader of the Opposition that I felt constrained to say a few things that otherwise might have been left unsaid.

What I intend to do, as far as I can, is cover the various matters that the minister dealt with in his second budget speech. We are getting used to this, Mr. Speaker. Last year we had the budget; then we had the revised version; then we had the revision of the revision. I felt sure, when he rose today, while I could see nothing in the budget he presented that would require him again to retreat, he must have found something that would enable the government to maintain that record of fiscal irresponsibility they have shown since taking office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As I listened to the delivery of the budget only a few days ago I was reminded of those immortal words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) delivered on April 23 last, when he pledged Canadians in the following words:

> A time to excite the daring, to test the strong and to give new promise to the timid.

An hon. Member: He was talking about the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays).

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was almost ten months ago. During the supper hour I naturally gathered together a few notes, and I found that the Minister of Finance on February 14 gave the country as a whole an insight into the budget that he was going to produce. I find this report in the Windsor daily Star, in an article by Mr. Maurice Jefferies:

> As he was entering the cabinet meeting Thursday the finance minister was asked to comment on this week's Ontario budget. All he would say was that he was working on his own budget.

Then this appears in quotations:

> "And it will please everybody".

That was a couple of months ago. What of this budget? Well, Mr. Speaker, it indicates a government that has run out of ideas and programs.

An hon. Member: They never had any.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They have not been the same since the 60 days of decision. Then they ran so fast and in so many directions that they have been out of steam ever since. It has been one of the most unusual revelations these last few months to watch a government that was so full of promise during the election campaign. The first budget produced by the minister was a failure, and that was explained on the ground that it was the work of amateurs and self-constituted experimenters. The second budget is a failure, although it now is the product of the hon. gentleman himself. I think of "As You Like It" and a line from that play:

> An ill-favoured thing, sir, but mine own.

It has been an amazing performance. The Globe and Mail of Toronto said last week the first budget produced by the hon. gentleman was a farce verging on tragedy. The second has been tragedy verging on farce. I intend to deal with this budget in some detail along the lines indicated by the hon. gentleman. Last June he rushed in and produced a document of which he has heard much, and which for the first time today he defended. He defended that budget as having produced results in the economy; and if the results were produced as a result of the action of the government, then I would understand that he would naturally be boasting. But I have the record here—not the record of partisanship exhibited again today by the hon. gentleman, but the record of the report of the Bank of Canada, as well as the white paper that was issued prior to the budget being produced. It is with that I intend to deal particularly. Where are the promises of yesteryear?

An hon. Member: Gone with the wind.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Where are the 10,000 university scholarships? They are on the way, says the parliamentary secretary. Well, they have been on the way for a long while. In default thereof loans have been made available to the student body of Canada, provided those loans are acceptable to the provinces when they meet in the dominion-provincial conference. Indeed, the ministers themselves are uncertain in that regard. I need only refer to the fact that a few days ago the minister of whatever-it-is—

Mr. Nowlan: Forestry.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, the Minister of Forestry. Mr. Speaker, I just cannot keep up with their peregrinations. He made a statement on this subject, and I would be very interested in having the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) indicate whether the uncertainty prevailing between ministers is an example of cabinet solidarity. This is what the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauve) said, as reported in Le Devoir:

> During a discussion on biculturalism he clearly made it understood that the federal loan fund for students encountered strong opposition because the provinces had nothing to do in the determination of that priority.
>
> "How can you do something for somebody when you don't even know if he wishes that you do it for him?"

There is some solid philosophy which could only have come out of the woods. The report continues:

> Someone having suggested that it is only due to sentimentality that loans to students are objected to, Mr. Sauve answered back "But where was the consultation in all this?"

That is one of the things they boast of, Mr. Speaker. The other thing which the minister boasted of today was that the government was going to bring into effect family allowances for those between 16 and 18 years of age. On February 25 last the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) moved a motion in that connection, and what happened? Every one of them on the government side voted against it. They said it was wrong, that they were not going to support it. And what has happened in the intervening two or three weeks? That indicates what an opposition can do to convince a government of the error of their ways.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what does this budget mean? What items are there in it other than the ones to which I have referred? As a matter of fact the situation is this, that we have a minister who a few months ago said that what we require in ministers of finance is flexibility. Flexibility may be a great thing. There was certainly a wide degree of flexibility between the first and second budgets. Tremendous and vast changes have taken place during the intervening period. The defiant minister of last June has become the suppliant minister of the last few minutes when, as he turned to his friends in Social Credit, he said: "Don't vote against us", knowing in advance their answer—"with you, aye, ready", regardless of what the government does. He called upon them for assistance.

Last year he started out against the currents of orthodox financing and produced a mixture of confusion and frustration. He tried to jump over a chasm in two jumps, and he is now trying to jump back again to solid ground. You cannot say, however, that this is a government which imitates the United States, because he made very clear this afternoon that though they might cut taxes down there that would not be done here. He asked how we could cut taxes. They can be cut if expenditures are cut, but this government has increased expenditures far and above previous years.

What about their policies, Mr. Speaker? I simply want to clear up a few matters this evening. What is there in this budget for the average taxpayer? Simply $390 million more in taxation because of the budget last year. What is there for business? He quoted this afternoon from one man, but I should like him to quote the letters that condemned him. For every one which he quoted this afternoon there would have been multitudes to the contrary, and I can imagine the search which he made in order to find one in his favour. There is nothing in the budget for the wage earner, nothing for labour and nothing for the economy. What kind of a budget is this? This is a phenomenon budget. This is a budget which cannot be explained in logic. This is a budget that simply produces the kind of speech made this afternoon —a defensive speech—because the minister was well aware that what had been produced would in no way benefit the economy.

I intend to refer to the various measures which we brought in, to show—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this simply underlines what has been said before, that hon. members over there have not read the Bank of Canada report and the white paper, otherwise they would not be indulging in interruptions at this time. This is a budget full of weird uncertainties. Its diversity cannot be explained by human reason or logic. As I say, it is a phenomenon budget, and I should like to deal with it in some detail. As he pictured its wonders this afternoon, with all his arguments and wealth of statistics, I could only think what a medicine man he would have made as he placed before the house and the country the benefits of those measures which we placed on the statute books, adopting them as his own. I can only think of "Old Doc Gordon's miraculous economic elixir," which he has endeavoured to make palatable to the Canadian people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us find out where these things of yesteryear are. He did not speak of the Canada development board. Where has that gone?

An hon. Member: Under the rug.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Under the rug? Far deeper than that. This was going to be the salvation of the nation. I remember last year when he came to the house and said—I will not say with arrogance; I would call it naïveté —that he was going to bring in a Canada development plan involving hundreds of millions of dollars to buy back Canada. Now he is doing everything he can to sell Canada, trying once more to sell the shares of this nation. That is why he has backtracked on taxes and given notice of the reduction from 20 per cent to 15 per cent. Where is the grandeur of that policy of last year? In respect of the 30 per cent tax which he imposed, he said that starting from that day this was going to be a tax imposed on foreigners who purchased assets of Canadian corporations in Canada. When he brought it in he said that this was going to be the greatest thing which had ever been produced. I have it in my copy of "Troubled Canada" that this was the policy of the Liberal party; that this was the policy which he sold to the leader of the Liberal party and to others.

Three days later he suspended it, and the following day he completely removed it and we have not heard of it since. Where are the promises of "Troubled Canada"? I would imagine that that book would enjoy quite a large sale because all one has to do is read it to find out how far its author has wised up since he became a member of parliament.

He has turned away from the views he expressed in that book. He has pitched out his pet theories and espoused those things which, when the Liberal party was in opposition, it attacked as economic heresy. The Liberals attacked devaluation. They said it was wrong. They pictured Canada as bankrupt. They said never before had there been anything like it, but what do they do today? After having condemned, ridiculed—yes, libelled—now they say, "I thought of it first." That was the explanation today.

I say to the Minister of Finance that he deliberately deceived the Canadian people in 1962 and 1963. He knew what he was saying, and every one of those members opposite knew what they were saying was false, but they placed before the Canadian people the idea that Canada was bankrupt.

We said devaluation would expand the exports of the country, and it did. We said devaluation would bring about the greatest tourist traffic in Canada's history, and it has. We said devaluation would assure the reduction of imports into Canada and thereby assure our Canadian manufacturers of greater opportunities, with more jobs for those who worked for them, and it has.

These are the things we stood for. What did the Minister of Finance say? I quote from him exactly what he said. I hear this was one of his statements:

> There is going to be a nosedive in the dollar.

At another time he contended that the dollar was not worth 92½ cents. In January, 1963, this miracle worker, this man who speaks today with the authority of experience in what he produced last year, forecast an economic slump. That was in January 1963 after Canada's gross national product had increased by 8 per cent in 1962. This person, for political purposes, falsified the facts.

The other day he pointed out—and he repeated it this afternoon—that Canada's economy had started to rise in 1961 and had continued to rise ever since. But what did he say in January 1963? I quote:

> Most analysts agree that the slowdown has already started.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I say to the minister, you falsified the facts and you know it.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I accuse the Leader of the Opposition of falsifying the facts now, and ask him to withdraw that statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When this miracle man is faced with the facts and quotations from his own speeches all he can say with that childish attitude is, "You too."

Mr. Gordon: On a point of order—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have got the floor.

Mr. Gordon: On a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I say to the minister—

Mr. Gordon: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Finance on a point of privilege.

Mr. Gordon: I have asked the Leader of the Opposition to withdraw a false statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I quoted from what the minister said. Is the report false? I am quoting from the kind of thing that we faced in two campaigns.

Mr. Speaker: I can say with deliberate modesty that the speeches this evening are very interesting. However, the use of the word "falsify" is pretty strong language. Sometimes it could be considered descriptive. Sometimes it could impute motives, and I take it—in fact I understand that the Leader of the Opposition is not imputing a personal motive.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It could not be more correct. I am simply saying that the statements made in the campaign were falsified.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I have asked that the Leader of the Opposition should be instructed to withdraw these remarks.

Mr. Speaker: It has been brought to my attention, although I was quite able to hear myself, that both the Leader of the Opposition and the Minister of Finance have been using these words "false" and "falsifying", and once more I say that although the word "falsify" is rough and strong, provided there is no imputation of motive that the Minister of Finance deliberately and personally falsified and misled either persons or the country, yet I would caution the right hon. Leader of the Opposition to change the word.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, Winston Churchill was once asked to withdraw a statement when he spoke of what had taken place in the house, which I am not doing—I am telling what took place on the outside—and he said, "if terminological inexactitude is parliamentary I certainly substitute it with the greatest of pleasure."

Now, sir, I shall deal particularly with some of the remarks made by the hon. gentleman today. It was an interesting speech he delivered. He spoke with pride of the degree of prosperity in the economy. Then with that modesty which characterizes him at all times he said: Here I am; I brought this about. I intend to quote from documents that he himself produced, not from the three tinkerers of last year. I intend to quote from the white paper for the things that they criticized us about, which were heresy when we were in office and which today have become orthodoxy.

What have they done? What have they produced? I listened today with interest to ascertain what had been brought about. What policies have they inaugurated? What brought about the rising economy in this country such as we predicted would happen? I am going to quote from these two documents which are entirely free of any suggestion of partisanship. I mentioned devaluation a moment ago; I also referred to the import surcharges and to wheat sales, each and every one of them our policies. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Watson) produced a package of wheat and I can only say when I think of some of the statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite that it is too bad he was not here earlier so that they would have been able to see what wheat was like. They said there was nothing more dangerous than selling wheat to communist countries. They said: This is a terrible thing; this is something we would never countenance. Devaluation? Never under any circumstances. Let me point out that as far as devaluation is concerned the following appears on page 8 of the Bank of Canada report:

> One development that has contributed a great deal to the Canadian economy's performance in recent years has been the improvement in Canada's international competitive position. This was greatly strengthened by the decline in the foreign exchange value of the Canadian dollar in 1960-62—

I refer now to page 47 of the white paper, and I quote this as an answer to the so-called arguments advanced today by the minister as he delivered what seemed to me to be his swan song. On page 47 the white paper says:

> The trend of imports in the current upswing has been affected by a number of factors, including the devaluation of the Canadian dollar, the temporary import surcharges, the pattern of demand, and changes in the structure of the Canadian economy. Following the imposition of the temporary import surcharges in June, 1962, substantial reductions occur in the value and volume of imports.

What does the governor of the Bank of Canada say in this regard? As found on page 39 of his report he says:

The measures taken in the middle of 1962 to deal with the foreign exchange emergency resulted in a sharp reduction in the current account deficit—

I am simply putting these quotations on the record without observation. They need no interpretation. Again, the minister boasted today of the improvement in the payments position. What brought about the improvement in the payments position? At page 8 of the Bank of Canada report the facts are revealed in these words:

More than half of this improvement can be attributed to the unusual wheat and flour sales to the Soviet union.

I say that if it had not been for the former government selling wheat to communist nations, wheat would never have been sold to the U.S.S.R. With that naïveté characteristic of the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I hope "naïveté" is not going to jar the sensibilities of the people opposite who interrupt. The minister said we had a crisis in foreign exchange. Does he forget that the Liberal government had a crisis in foreign exchange in 1947? Does he forget that? Has he forgotten that he had one last July which he concealed from the Canadian people until it was revealed in the Bank of Canada report? He did not talk about these things today. How was the last potential crisis, the one that the government concealed from parliament, met? The Bank of Canada report says on page 6:

The announcement in mid-September of exceptionally large export sales of wheat and flour to the Soviet union dispelled immediate concern about the possibility of renewed foreign exchange difficulties for Canada—

I emphasize the word "immediate". In other words, we are not out of the woods yet. The concern is dispelled, provided there is an inflow of investment capital into Canada, and I intend to deal with that. I have already referred to devaluation and I do not want to put any more quotations on the record. I simply say that the Liberals went across Canada and they deceived the people, and I emphasize the word "deceived". Just read the record. I am not talking about them deceiving now; they have become paragons of all perfection and I would be the last to say anything in this house to indicate that they would have that characteristic today. But they told the Canadian people that devaluation was dangerous. What does the Bank of Canada report say on page 51?

—the devaluation of the Canadian dollar improved the competitive position of Canadian industry.

Sir, it is difficult to understand why a political party would have endeavoured to undermine the Canadian economy by statements which have subsequently been proven to be untrue by the very fact that what they condemned they now adhere to.

What about the next step? What about American investment? There the tinkerers really worked. Do you recall how they said we were anti-American? They said we brought about a dialogue. Oh, it has been a wonderful change that has taken place. We go to Washington and we find out what the situation is there. We have the solution now for these problems. Then after having the Hyannis Port meeting the very first thing that happens is that the Minister of Finance proceeds to place before parliament a 30 per cent tax in order to interfere with the movement of capital between our country and the United States. He had to withdraw it. Then he added 5 per cent to the withholding tax, and what happened? The serious financial position in Canada today is only controlled to a reasonable degree by the fact that sales of wheat to communist countries have taken place. In the present budget there is a watered down version. What happened when the policies of the amateur economists who write books were carried into effect? What happened? The Bank of Canada report says that the rate of inflows, that is of United States capital, fell sharply after mid-year.

Page 52 of this report reads in part as follows:

These inflows which exceeded $1,300 million in 1956 and 1957, were reduced to $584 million in 1963.

What do we find? The inflow for the first three months was some $140 million; for the next three months, $390 million and for the third three months, that is the period from July to September, it fell to $98 million. We have not had a report as yet for the last three months, although computations show that the amount coming into Canada instead of being $390 million is down to about $65 million. Why did the minister not tell us something about that this afternoon? What is he going to do about it? There is no answer at all. I had to refer to these matters, sir, because of the fact the hon. gentleman attributed the advance in our economy to the actions of this government and refused to admit that these policies which today receive a eulogy in the Bank of Canada report, and also in the white paper, were policies introduced by us.

Then, the minister mentioned the tremendous benefits that had flowed from action taken to provide jobs. Let me say this: In 1961 and 1962 we predicted that, as a result of our actions in connection with unemployment, there would be a continuing reduction in the number of unemployed, and that statement was correct. Today he paid tribute to himself and to the government for making possible the technological training of our people in Canada by means of the vocational training scheme. This scheme was introduced by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) when he was minister of labour. Today, they say that it was their policy that brought this change about. The total expenditure to date, according to the latest figures I have, for vocational schools is $330 million of which the former administration expended $315 million and the present administration $15 million.

I could go on and set out in detail the promises that were made by the present government and the reliance that they place upon legislation that we put on the statute books and which they ridiculed and loaded with contumely. Let me read now from a dominion bureau of statistics report of March 10 in connection with the balance of payments situation. This answers the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) completely, and the arguments he made this afternoon. I quote:

> Among leading factors in the economic background influencing the balance of payments were rising economic activity in North America and in major markets abroad such as the United Kingdom, Japan and some countries of western Europe. Along with this combination of strong influences was an apparent improvement in the competitive position of Canadian industry.

There are a couple of lines there, but I do not mind reading it all.

> The devaluation of the Canadian dollar in 1962 together with tendencies to rising relative prices and costs in manufacturing countries abroad, has contributed to these changes.

Who extended export credits? The government of which I had the honour to be the head did this. Who made available—

Mr. Nowlan: Doubled, trebled and quadrupled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, doubled, trebled and quadrupled as the hon. member says. I admire the conservative attitude of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan). They said we were selling for credit to our enemies and taking cash from our friends for wheat. Well, we provided credits.

The next thing is industrial policies. We introduced policies to encourage in Canada, by incentive but not by domination, the extension of industry within our country.

What about defence sharing? Under our government defence sharing mounted greatly in Canada for the first time since 1953 and, for the first time, we had a reasonable share of defence expenditures from the United States. Then, the report says that the temporary import surcharges which were still in effect in the early months of 1963 have also contributed to the change.

Now, sir, I have had to point these things out. I do not like to go over the record like this, but the hon. gentleman insisted that it should be done. What about the present situation? What is going to be done in order to ensure that Canada shall receive her reasonable share of United States investment? I can only point out what the white paper says, and that is that uncertainty continued to prevail in Canadian financial markets. There was virtually no Canadian borrowing in the United States from mid-July until the present time. Why was this? It resulted from the fact these people over there undermined confidence in Canada, and showed foreign investors that they could no longer rely on the integrity of Canadian promises.

I should like also to point out a reference I made earlier, and I would not do this if I had not been dragged into the debate. The Minister of Finance made a statement that we had a financial crisis. I ask him why he has not explained the situation in Canada. Why did he not explain what took place last July and August when they had a similarly threatening situation which was met temporarily by the fact that wheat sales to Russia provided foreign exchange? As I listened today to the hon. gentleman reveal what the present government has done, I noted one of the things he particularly underlined was what had been done to employ men and women over 45 years of age. All I can say in that connection is that the total number is 1,000. There are more than 12,000 over 65, and we do not know how many there are between 45 and 65. The cost was fabulous—that is, the cost of advertising. This is another example of the wasteful attitude of this government in spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on advertising in politically friendly advertising companies.

I am going to turn to the next phase. What about dominion-provincial relations? I see the genial Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) here. If I had time I should like to analyse the speech he made last evening. There is one thing you can say about him, and that is he is consistent. It was a great speech, according to the reports, but it did not get down to any particular. He predicted that a divorce was possible between the provincial Liberal party and the federal Liberal party in the province of Quebec. At least, there would be a parliamentary separation, but there was nothing to indicate what the attitude of the government was going to be on dominion-provincial relations.

This budget offers no hope to the provinces. Where are the items in this budget which will place flesh and blood on the bones of promise? They have set up the skeleton. They said they were going to help out the provinces. What do they intend to do? What is the plan? As a matter of fact I think the present budget, together with the fact that the minister went no further today than he did, indicates that this government, contrary to its pledged word, intends to do nothing other than play around with the question of joint programs. It does not intend to carry out its promise that the provinces will be enabled to have the necessary moneys with which to discharge their responsibilities. In the terms of the present budget I see a calculated and callous affront to the provinces.

I turn, now, to another subject—the attitude taken in connection with the Eskimos. I want to refer to that. The Eskimos are our responsibility under the law and under the constitution. I believe the minister of northern affairs (Mr. Laing) feels very keenly on this subject. But some of the other ministers in the cabinet seem to regard the Eskimo as tradable, as expendable. To carry out the present policy of disposing of them in the absence of a constitutional amendment would not only be unjust and unfair but would make a travesty of the constitution of this country. We do not intend to have the Eskimos, these people who are our responsibility, bartered as chattels or sublet for the sake of political expediency. I do not enter into provincial matters, but I say this: These Eskimos will not be placed in Mr. Levesque's hands just because Mr. Levesque wants them there. More will be said of this, because we in this country have a responsibility towards these people and, again, I emphasize that they cannot be removed from the jurisdiction under whose authority they are constitutionally placed merely by a simple agreement made between the federal government and a provincial government.

I heard nothing in the speech today about that banner with the device "Canadianization of Industry". Canadianization; we heard so much about that. It was in the book. It was also in the report. I will say this to the minister—that the report was one which showed a great deal of work applied to a very large problem. But nothing was said about this Canadianization today. Nothing. Just uncertainty. I ask the minister in connection with Canadianization: Why did he evacuate the Canada development plan? Why did he desert that great principle? Who interfered? Who made it impossible for the hon. gentleman to carry it out? He had the vim. He had the vision of which he spoke. It turned out to be a nightmare. What happened to the Canada development corporation?

He pictured today what was going to happen—the development of the Columbia; the development of the Nelson river. All I can tell the hon. gentleman in this connection is that he was a little wrong in his history this afternoon when he said it was only under the present government that arrangements had been made to ship outside Canada power surplus to our needs. We brought that into effect in 1962. Yet, this afternoon, in a characteristic manner, an attempt was made to appropriate to the party opposite a policy which hon. members sitting over there criticized in the years from 1957 to 1961.

What about the Nelson river? We set up a full investigation into the potentialities of that development and, having arrived at an alteration in our policy with regard to the export of power, there are hopes that it will be proceeded with. Mention was made of the great potential in Labrador and I join with the hon. minister in expressing the hope that this development will be proceeded with at the earliest possible moment to the end that we shall be producing this power in Canada which, a few years hence, may not be as important as it is today if the cost of atomic energy becomes reasonably close to that of power produced by water.

What about the magazine situation? Canadianization? The resolutions are on the order paper; I may not refer to them now. But I must say there are many people in Canada today whose opinion is changing in this regard. They are asking themselves this question—whether or not Time and Reader's Digest should be absolved from the general legislative enactment respecting United States magazines and other foreign magazines which are brought into Canada particularly for advertising purposes.

Within the last few days an editorial has appeared in the Montreal Star which is of interest in this connection. It points out this:

> These two magazines now dump their product into Canada after a manner and in a fashion which would not be tolerated by any government which seeks to prevent unfair competition from foreign producers. If it was china or tinware, if it was boots and shoes, if it was shirtwaists or any other form of textiles, the government would have moved in, horse, foot and artillery, to stop the imports. But these two magazines import into this country their whole editorial content, collected at a cost greatly exceeding the budget available to any Canadian magazine, and use it as the bait to attract advertising which might otherwise be available to a genuine Canadian magazine.

The article goes on to ask what the hon. members who represent Montreal constituencies are doing about this. What of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner)? What about the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury)? Why has none of these men made any move to help the Canadian magazines? It goes on:

Mr. Drury, it may be noted, is very pleased with a scheme which he presented to the House of Commons to increase the Canadian content of the motorcar produced in Canada. He appears to be wholly uninterested in the Canadian magazine, a somewhat curious performance—

I say, Mr. Speaker, that more and more people are asking today, as they look at these magazines, why they should be placed in an exempted position. Views in this regard are not frozen. They could be changed with changing conditions. I simply point out that nothing has been done by this government which in any way indicates that the great policy of Canadianization will go far enough to ensure that Canadians will have the opportunity within their own land to have their own magazines, unchallenged by unjust competition from outside this country.

I simply throw that out, Mr. Speaker, and add that those views more and more are being expressed as Canadians realize the import of some things that are taking place within this nation.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking support for our amendment. The minister has asked, "How could you bring about a reduction in taxes, with a large deficit?" President Johnson of the United States has given lead in this regard; he has given the lead by reducing unnecessary expenditures. We, in 1962, cut off some $200 million.

Mr. Nowlan: More than $200 million.

Mr. Diefenbaker: More than $200 million. I was always conservative in that regard. I know how difficult it is. I do not like to point out the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) or anyone else, but the Minister of Public Works might be all for it in some other department; even the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp), or the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), with the tremendous expansion in the expenditures for foreign affairs—

An hon. Member: And telephone bills.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and all these other things. In the United States, instead of raising members' salaries, congress turned it down; they said, "We are not going to increase our salaries so long as we have taxation at its present level". What about Canada? Under this government everybody is getting an increase; fabulous increases are being granted. I think of the co-ordinator; I think that is the title of Mr. Kent. He brings together all these jarring elements; he brings about order out of chaos, and agreement in a cabinet that cannot agree. That is his job; he is worth $25,000 a year. But he has not done very well at it. They have been raising salaries all along the line, and the minister said that taxation in Canada is lower than that in the United States. I just want to say to him that he is the only one who has that view. Every responsible financial person in Canada has said, "What kind of blinkers was the minister wearing when he made that statement?" Our taxation today is higher than in the United States; it has increased, since this government came into power, by $390 million a year.

This afternoon the minister said, "Oh, the sales tax did not have any influence. We have the largest expenditures for investment in the first three months of this year". All I have to point out in that connection is that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture says the 11 per cent sales tax should be removed from production machinery used in agriculture. Every business across Canada has said that it should be removed, and that one of the major reasons for the increase in the last three months is the fact that they have been stockpiling against the increase from 4 per cent to 8 per cent and ultimately to 11 per cent. The minister produces the testimony of one man who said, in effect, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians".

Mr. Speaker, they said they would cut expenditures. What they have done is increase expenditures to a point far and beyond those ever before in effect in peacetime, except possibly during the Korean war. These are the people who were saying last year and the year before, "Just give us the opportunity and we will show you what we will do". They have, and the Canadian people today have no confidence in the government sitting opposite.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks, I should like to say that we disapprove the Conservative amendment because it is negative in every respect.

During their term of office, the Conservatives themselves did nothing but increase taxes and accumulate budget deficits.

The two old parties are in the same old boat. The more things change, the more they remain the same. Neither party had the courage to go to the very root of the present trouble by changing the old system for a new one adapted to the year 1964.

In the process of adjusting themselves to modernization, progress, science and reforms, the two old parties prefer submissiveness to freedom from the financial dictatorship which smothers and strangles the people. That is why we refuse to support the amendment.

Neither party has found a solution to the present problems of debts, taxes, budget deficits and rises in the cost of living index which cause even more serious stagnation in Canada.

Our democratic system and our financial system are no longer compatible. Instead of living in a democracy, we have a genuine dictatorship which prevents the young, the aged, women and men from leading a life of their own choice. As I say, we are truly living under a dictatorship which exercises its control through hunger.

The present system indebted Canada to the tune of $75 million at the time of confederation. Today, after 96 years of labour and development, the national debt totals $25 billion.

The public debt is made up of money which is non-existent, which has never been issued and which the government has pledged itself to reimburse; the financier creates the money and lends it, but on the promise that all that money, which he has never earned, will be reimbursed to him with interest.

The banker alone creates modern money; he does not make capital, but he asks to be paid, besides the capital, interest which he does not make and which nobody makes. As money does not grow by itself, the swelling claimed ends up in the public debt. That is why the public debt is rising.

Our economy is infected. This method of creating money and lending it with interest right away is the most effective invention which was ever inspired by Satan in a human brain so as to bring havoc to the economy, scuttle the Ten Commandments, sow dissension and hate, change man into wolf towards his brothers and make him the slave of money.

It is the opening of the race for money, for the dollar, to avoid being the one who falls, even if it involves causing the fall of others. Money has become the motivation, the end of everything; instead of producing wheat to feed, clothes to clothe, shoes to shod, houses to house, we do all that to raise more money than was invested. It is a must. The financier is there watching, claiming the dollar he brought into the world and demanding a return, this thing that we must take from our neighbour since it has not been put beside the dollar lent. And so, the economic life which has become horrible, hard, implacable and cruel, according to the words used by the Pope himself. How can we talk of charity, of unselfishness, of compassion when an unrelenting rule is hung over our heads which compels us, unless we want to starve with our family, to play the game to extract from our country more dollars than have been issued?

To claim interest on the new dollar, to issue in this way taxing money every time the development of the country requires an increase in money, that is equivalent to accepting a thief in the economy of the country, thanks to the progress and the development of the country; that is why progress hardens the life it should relieve. It is a mortgaged and, often, a foreclosed progress.

Everybody's life revolves around the dollar. The fertility imposed on money by the manufacturer of dollars kills the fertility of talent, of genius, of development itself. As for the government, it is known that all its activities are determined by the presence or the absence of dollars.

There is a technique to create money in this way and put it into circulation for the benefit of all, without doing any wrong to anybody: it is the Social Credit technique. It is money to the service of man instead of man to the service of money. No inflation and no deflation, but a balance between services. It is a philosophy quite different from the present scarce money banking philosophy.

Through an autonomous procedure, balance would be established and maintained, because it is the responsible power itself which would control the means to increase the active money supply, as it would also control the means to put in on a sounder basis as required.

How many unnecessary hardships were forced upon the world for the past 25 years because the last war was not financed with other interest-free money or money issued without interest.

The situation in Canada is a striking one. Our federal debt was $2,574,531,033 in 1919, while today, the gross debt is $24,799,139,867 and the net debt $13,919,769,972. On the other hand, since 1914, we paid $14,869,164,125 in interests only, which is more than the whole net debt at this time. This means that, if all interest charges had been eliminated, Canada would practically be without debts.

We are told time and again that it is impossible for the government to borrow money without having to pay interest. Now, who is above the government to lay down what it should do?

There are 265 members sitting in Ottawa, but, except among the members of the Social Credit party, not a single voice was raised to mention these things and to conclude that, work demands money, and money requires borrowing, and if you want to borrow, you have to incur debts, which means that in order to develop this country, the public debt must increase in proportion. That is what the federal, provincial and municipal governments, the school boards and individuals are doing now.

Hon. members of the government, like your predecessors, you are gallantly fighting and struggling but you do not dare change the rules. You prefer to fold your hands and piously ask Canadians to make sacrifices by increasing direct and indirect taxes, by raising general taxation and therefore the cost of living. Rather than show disrespect to the bookkeepers, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) prefers to follow that course. To balance two columns in a book is much more important than the life of 2,900,000 heads of families, who have to support 12,400,000 persons, on small single people's salaries. To tighten the consumer's belt throughout the country in the presence of goods which accumulate, go bad or are destroyed, that is one of the administrative virtues of the present government.

Science and progress teach people to set their eyes on realities. Now, this diabolic system does not satisfy young people, their aspirations or their ideals; they do not want to live in unemployment, to rob Peter to allow Paul to exist, even if this alleged liberty confers the right to cast a vote into the electoral urn.

If men are equal before God, they must be equal before the law and have an equal opportunity to earn their living. Brotherhood is a splendid ideal, but only in natural groups such as the family or the native land.

Our Canadian ancestors did not fight in order that their sons loaf about the streets in the cities, living the life of stowaways, not knowing, when they are 20 years old or 30 years old, what to do with their arms and their heads. Did they want us to be servants for foreigners coming here, on a call from us, with the pound sterling or the United States dollar, to enrol Canadians and harness them to their service, exploiting Canadian natural resources to the advantage of London or New York money makers?

The logic of the present system, we find it in mortgages on land won from the forest, in man-made legislation which guarantees that money will draw its salary even if towns and school boards have to be put in trusteeship, private individuals in bankruptcy and farmers out on the road.

When ratepayers pay taxes, they are handing over to the government some well-earned money. Why could they not get in return, the same as the banker, an interest bearing bond?

Where is the logic in all that? With taxes being parallel, loans being possible for the rich, taxes being compulsory for everyone and people being taxed so that interest may be paid to lenders, what happens is that taxes, instead of contributing to a better distribution of wealth, contribute to a higher concentration of wealth.

The purpose of taxation, factor of privation, is to reduce the purchasing power of the public by giving the taxpayer, in exchange for his taxes, a corresponding liability which will have to be paid, since that liability bears interests. If the banker's stroke of the pen deserves interests, the sweat of the worker also deserves interests.

It would be less expensive for the government than the army of employees assigned to the collection of those taxes and the control of that collection. In that way, taxes would operate as interest bearing bonds, and the government would be relieved of a heavy and expensive bureaucracy. But considerations relating to a plan will throw more light on the flagrant injustice of our present financial system by which our governments breathe, act and swear.

Before this dying monster of hypocrisy, covered with debts like purulent and incurable sores, reeking of squalid selfishness, which cannot even be honestly protected by its guardians, what is there to take its place? Collapse into chaos and anarchy while being engulfed in an exasperated destitution?

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I am asking the Minister of Finance to tell us, if he can, where we are going, if we are going nowhere, what is wrong and what solution, if any, he has to offer.

I do not hesitate to tell him, supported by most Canadians, that the financial machinery in Canada is out of order and obsolete. The Canadian forests do not refuse to provide Canadians with lumber. The great rivers with their torrential waters are not dried up. It is not the manufacturers, nor the men who refuse to work; it is not the farmers who refuse to produce goods; it is not the land that refuses to yield crops; but all that will go to ruin if everything continues to be dependant on the old heartless financial machinery.

We need a financial machinery beneficial instead of detrimental to the Canadian people, a machinery making money in keeping with progress instead of making debts, a machinery likely to increase the purchasing power instead of decreasing it through heavier taxes which are a burden for everybody. We need a new economy, not an economy of hardship, but an economy distributing wealth. We must find as many new sources of money as are needed to distribute wealth among everybody.

Canadian finance at the service of Canadians; the wealth of Canada for Canadian families, all families; that is the true meaning of an economy at the service of the human being.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) said in his speech, at the beginning of the session, that the number of unemployed has decreased and that, on the other hand, labour income was much higher in 1963 than in 1962; that the number of jobs had increased tremendously and that the unemployment level in December, taking into account seasonal adjustments, was 5 per cent lower than it had been for many years. He also said that Canadians had made tremendous economic progress in 1963.

I will say to the Prime Minister, in reply, that Canada has never known an increase in social welfare comparable to that of 1963.

In fact, that department's estimates for 1962-63 amounted to $1,099,742,250 whereas in 1963-64 they were only $1,204,910,550, that is an increase of $105,168,300 for the last year. And for 1964-65, the estimates show an even larger increase.

The Prime Minister was careful not to say that the drop in unemployment had not kept pace with the increase in economic activity. In general, the unemployed totalled 7.2 per cent of the active population in 1961, 6 per cent in 1962 and an average of 5 per cent in 1963; and in mid-January this year, there were 466,000 unemployed, that is 7 per cent of the labour force.

However, unemployment is not the same throughout the country. In Quebec, for instance, 9 per cent of the workers are unemployed and, in the maritimes, 12.6 per cent of the labour force are out of work.

It is truly alarming to live under an economic system where at the national level one person out of 15 is unemployed and where one tenth of all Quebec workers and one eighth of the labour population of the maritimes are out of work.

It is our contention that the government has never really tackled the cause of unemployment and of the slow rate of economic growth in Canada. It has just skimmed the problem without ever finding its true causes.

I am convinced that the problem is mainly one of production. We have unemployed workers, idle industries and undeveloped resources. Our first problem is that a large number of Canadians are unable to buy the goods which our economy has produced or could produce.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

I will say to the government's face that it is a crime to allow human beings to live under such conditions, when there is an abundance of goods to meet the needs of all classes of society.

Each man, each woman who does not eat enough and, who suffers from cold, each family which is poorly housed, is a living accusation against you, who belong to the old parties, and against the dishonest system that you try to protect with all your might. The day may be not too far off when you will be compelled to take your responsibilities.

The Creditistes are aware of their responsibilities and they fight to provide each individual with his share of progress and knowledge that has been passed on and accumulated from generation to generation, while the old parties have sold our national heritage and the fruit of the labours of generations to strangers. They have even relinquished the control of money and credit in favour of private interests. That is the reason why the people are dispossessed; it is the result of the economic disorder which we experience at the present time.

This is also the exact reason why we do not have a flag yet, since we are economically deprived of the fruits of passed generations. Our government parted with its sovereignty; when one is not master in one's own home, it is rather embarrassing to adopt a flag. That is probably why Liberals have been talking of a flag for 22 years and never adopted one. But we are playing upon people's feelings at each election with St. Jean Baptiste speeches, just like the master speech which the Prime Minister delivered last February 20.

I am quite pleased to say to my hon. friends of the old parties that people are now sufficiently informed not to believe in those speeches any longer but to believe in facts and in results.

The citizens of Canada realize that the old-line parties have seen to it that the people remained unaware of public affairs, of political and economic affairs and of financial affairs. People have been led to believe that democracy is the right to vote accompanied by the right to speak, the right to listen, the right to cheer, even when they are given a raw deal, the sacred right, for the people, to select once every four or five years those whose duty it will be to search through their pockets and put them to sleep.

People are on the verge of having enough of war policies, credit restrictions, austerity programs, excess taxes, money interests which annoy them and take everything away from them, surveys, forms, dictatorship, slavery.

Mr. Speaker, people want us to try and establish in this world a social order in which man will be able to live decently so that he may reach his full development.

Mr. Speaker: Order; it being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section 5 of standing order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the amendment to the house.

[Text]

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Nowlan) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Alkenbrack
Balcer
Baldwin
Bell
Bigg
Cantelon
Cardiff
Casselman, Mrs.
Chatterton
Churchill
Clancy
Coates
Cooper
Crouse
Danforth
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Doucett
Enns
Fairweather
Fane
Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke)
Flemming (Victoria-Carleton)
Forbes
Grafftey
Gundlock
Hales
Harkness
Horner (The Battlefords)
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Irvine
Kennedy
Korchinski
Lamb
Lambert
Loney
MacEwan
MacInnis
MacLean (Queens)
Macquarrie
MacRae
McBain
Madill
Mandziuk
Martineau
Millar
Moore
More
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Nasserden
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Noble
Nowlan
Nugent
Ormiston
Pascoe
Pigeon
Pugh
Rapp
Rheaume
Ricard
Rynard
Simpson
Skoreyko
Slogan
Smallwood
Smith
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Stenson
Thomas
Valade
Vincent
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Willoughby
Winkler—80.

NAYS

Messrs:

Addison
Armstrong
Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace)
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Barnett
Basford
Batten
Beaule
Bechard
Beer
Belanger
Benidickson
Benson
Berger
Blouin
Boutin
Brewin
Brown
Byrne
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cantin
Caouette
Caron
Carter
Chapdelaine
Cote (Longueuil)
Cowan
Crossman
Cyr
Davis
Deachman
Deschatelets
Dionne
Douglas
Drury
Dube
Dupuis
Emard
Favreau
Fisher
Forest
Francis
Frenette
Gauthier
Gelber
Gendron
Godin
Gordon
Granger
Gray
Greene
Gregoire
Groos
Guay
Habel
Hahn
Haidasz
Harley
Hays
Hellyer
Herridge
Howard
Howe (Hamilton South)
Jewett, Miss
Klein
Knowles
Konantz, Mrs.
Lachance
Laing
LaMarsh, Miss
Lamontagne
Lamoureux
Langlois
Laniel
Laprise
Latulippe
Laverdiere
Leblanc
Leboe
Leduc
Lessard (Lake St. John)
Lessard (St. Henry)
Lloyd
Loiselle
Macaluso
Macdonald
MacEachen
Mackasey
MacNaught
McIlraith
McLean (Charlotte)
McNulty
McWilliam
Marcoux
Martin (Timmins)
Mather
Matheson
Matte
Mitchell
Moreau
Morison
Mullally
Munro
Nicholson
Nixon
O'Keefe
Olson
Orlikow
Otto
Ouellet
Patterson
Pennell
Pepin
Perron
Peters
Pickersgill
Pilon
Plourde
Prittie
Prud'homme
Regan
Richard
Rideout
Rinfret
Robichaud
Rochon
Rock
Rondeau
Rouleau
Roxburgh
Ryan
Scott
Sharp
Stewart
Tardif
Teillet
Temple
Thompson
Tremblay
Tucker
Turner
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Webster
Whelan
Winch—150.

Division

[Translation]

Mr. Chretien: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

[Text]

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 25, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PROCEDURE

FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

Mr. Speaker: Before calling "Presenting reports by standing and special committees" I have the honour to present in English and in French the first report of the special committee on procedure and organization. The report will be printed in today's Votes and Proceedings.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGE IN SITTING HOURS FOR THURSDAY MARCH 26

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice) moved:

That this house does resume its sitting tomorrow at 11 a.m. instead of 2.30 p.m. and adjourn at 6 p.m. instead of 10 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as house leader. I do so for the purpose of clarifying a decision we took earlier. Perhaps I should have asked the question then, but I did not want to start a debate. I believe it was a five party understanding earlier today that the hours of sitting tomorrow would be 11 to 1 and 2.30 to 6. Was that the understanding when the motion put by the minister was carried?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Like so many members of this house, including the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I have been deprived of luncheon so many times in the last two months I had forgotten about the luncheon adjournment. The understanding of the house, I think, is that tomorrow the hours should be the same as they would normally be on Friday.

PROCEDURE THIS DAY IN COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): May I, on motions, make a statement about the business of the house.

The government intends to proceed with final supplementary estimates after the question period until 4.30 p.m., and at 4.30 p.m. to take interim supply. The reason, which I wish to explain to the house, is that the Prime Minister, who is presently detained at home for reasons which were obvious yesterday, is expected to speak on the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture. We shall try to take up that item as early as possible tomorrow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL P.C. 1964/389

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I wish to table two copies of order in council P.C. 1964/389 dated March 14, 1964, relating to the Canadian military contribution to the United Nations peace keeping force in Cyprus.

CANADIAN FLAG

PROVISION FOR ADOPTION OF RED ENSIGN

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-83, to adopt a national flag (Canadian red ensign).

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Ormiston: The purpose of this bill is to adopt by act of parliament the Canadian red ensign as Canada's national flag.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We object to the introduction of this bill under standing order 71 under which the title of any bill must be specified. We feel that the title is not specified, at least in the French version which merely makes mention of "Pavillon rouge du Canada". We also object under standing order 72 which reads as follows:

No bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I have to point out to the hon. member for Lapointe that this is the introduction of a bill. The only copy I have, the one in front of me, is in English.

Mr. Fisher: Shame.

Notices of Motions

Mr. Speaker: The title, according to the statement made by the sponsor, is "an act to adopt a national flag (Canadian red ensign)". At the time of printing I presume the proper translation will be made into French. At this stage of the proceedings I do not see that any point of order arises nor am I able to accept the point of order advanced by the hon. member for Lapointe. In the circumstances I have to ask if it is the pleasure of the house that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: On division.

Mr. Ormiston moved the first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Some hon. Members: Never.

Mr. Speaker: Next sitting of the house.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notices of motions:

March 23—The Minister of National Health and Welfare: That a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to consider Bill C-75 to establish a comprehensive program of old age pensions in Canada payable to contributors and survivors (the Canada pension plan);

That 24 members of the House of Commons, to be designated by the house at a later date, be members of the joint committee, and that standing order 67 (1) of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; and to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee and that standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed joint committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion is tranferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

[Mr. Fisher.]

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CONSTRUCTION OF HOUSES FOR INDIANS, YUKON

Question No. 175—Mr. Nielsen:

1. (a) How many houses were constructed for the Indian people in the Yukon from June, 1957 to April 8, 1963 (b) in what locations in the Yukon Territory were such houses constructed, and how many such houses were constructed in each location (c) what was the cost of each unit so constructed in each location, and what was the total cost of construction?

2. (a) How many houses have been constructed for the Indian people in the Yukon Territory since April 8, 1963 (b) where were such units constructed, and how many of such units were constructed in each location (c) what was the cost of each unit so constructed in each location, and what was the total cost of construction (d) how many such units are now under construction, and in what locations within the Yukon Territory (e) how many such units are to be constructed within the next year, and at what locations and at what cost?

Mr. Badanai: 1. (a) 106. (b) and (c):

Location	No. of Units	Cost
Old Crow	1	$ 1,100
	1	1,518
	1	3,305
	1	3,032
	1	2,570
	1	5,234
	1	5,277
Total	7	$22,036
Dawson	1	$ 1,754
	1	1,754
	1	1,754
	1	817
	1	817
	1	1,700
	1	1,700
	1	3,200
	1	3,200
	1	3,200
	1	3,200
	1	3,200
Total	12	$26,296
Carmacks	1	$ 2,536
	1	2,553
	1	2,734
	1	2,291
	1	1,928
	1	2,700
	1	2,700
	1	1,700
	1	500
Total	9	$19,642

Location	No. of Units	Cost
Pelly Crossing	1	$ 250
	1	250
	1	250
	1	250
	1	672
Total	5	$ 1,672
Mayo	1	$ 2,452
	1	2,597
	1	2,428
	1	2,471
	1	2,427
	1	4,200
	1	4,200
	1	4,200
	1	1,700
	1	2,800
Total	10	$29,475
Haines Junction	1	$ 3,325
	1	3,063
	1	3,349
	1	2,939
	1	3,500
	1	4,000
	1	4,000
Total	7	$24,176
Whitehorse	1	$ 3,333
	1	3,172
	1	2,457
	1	3,866
	1	3,866
	1	3,866
	1	3,866
	1	3,866
	1	3,866
	1	1,700
	1	3,200
Total	11	$37,058
Carcross	1	$ 1,700
Total	1	$ 1,700
Ross River	1	$ 1,700
	1	1,050
	1	1,050
	1	1,050
	1	1,700
Total	5	$ 6,550

Location	No. of Units	Cost
Liard River	1	$ 2,500
	1	2,500
	1	2,500
	1	2,500
	1	2,500
	1	2,800
	1	3,596
	1	2,695
	1	3,134
	1	1,700
	1	2,700
	1	1,700
	1	1,700
	1	2,800
Total	14	$35,325
Teslin	1	$ 1,170
	1	1,170
	1	2,811
	1	1,050
	1	3,127
Total	5	$ 9,328
Champagne	1	$ 720
	1	720
	1	1,200
	1	1,130
Total	4	$ 3,770
Telegraph Creek	1	$ 830
	1	830
	1	1,671
	1	1,671
	1	1,671
	1	1,331
Total	6	$ 8,004
Takhini Crossing	1	$ 301
Total	1	$ 301
Atlin	1	$ 1,700
	1	3,200
	1	3,200
Total	3	$ 8,100
Selkirk	1	$ 600
	1	600
	1	600
	1	600
Total	4	$ 2,400

Questions

Location	No. of Units	Cost
Whitehorse	1	$ 3,200
Total	1	$ 3,200
Burwash	1	$ 3,200
Total	1	$ 3,200

Totals—106 units as a total cost of $242,-233.00.

2. (a) 14. (b) and (c):

Location	No. of Units	Cost
Whitehorse	2	$ 2,400 each
Mile 1202	1	2,400
Old Crow	2	5,000 each
Carmacks	1	2,000
Pelly Crossing	1	2,000
Liard River	2	1,400 each
Ross River	4	1,400 each
Kluane Band	1	2,400

2. (d) Nil.

(e) Ten units are planned for the Yukon agency at an estimated cost of $40,000. The locations in which the units will be constructed will depend on the application for housing by individual Indians to be considered by band councils and the superintendent of the Yukon agency.

APPLICATIONS FOR RESEARCH GRANTS

Question No. 231—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many applications for grants to finance research projects did the Department of National Health and Welfare get in each of the past three years?

2. What was the total dollar value of the projects requested from the Department of National Health and Welfare?

3. How many of the applications made to the Department of National Health and Welfare were approved in full?

4. How many of the applications were approved in part only?

5. How many applications for research grants were turned down in each of the last three years?

6. What were the reasons for the refusals?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. Under the national health grants, the following applications for grants to finance research projects were received in the fiscal years 1961-64: 1961-62, 329; 1962-63, 364; 1963-64, 370.

2. 1961-62, $4,055,119; 1962-63, $4,489,102; 1963-64, $4,665,989.

3. 1961-62, 191; 1962-63, 191; 1963-64, 176.

4. 1961-62, 103; 1962-63, 101; 1963-64, 85.

5. 1961-62, 32; 1962-63, 70; 1963-64, 106.

[Mr. Badanai.]

A few projects were cancelled or altered at the request of the researchers or their sponsoring provinces.

6. Research projects do not receive approval as submitted under the national health grants when they exceed the funds allocated for this purpose and when they are considered by appraisers, consultants and advisory committees to be poorly designed or unsound research.

ADDRESS BY JOHN HALSTEAD, PARIS

Question No. 279—Mr. Marcoux:

1. Is a Mr. John Halstead employed by the Canadian embassy in Paris and, if so, in what capacity?

2. Did he, as reported in the Montreal Star of November 19, 1963, address a meeting organized by the C.I.I.Q. in Paris and, if so, what was the substance of his remarks?

3. By whom was he invited?

4. What are the objectives of the organization known as C.I.I.Q.?

5. Does the government of Canada consider itself to be in sympathy with these objectives?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. Yes, Mr. Halstead is minister at the embassy in Paris.

2. No.

3. Nobody.

4. According to our information, the address of that organization is 14 Houdon street, Paris 18. The objectives of the organization could probably be obtained by writing to that address.

5. This is a private organization. Unless it is proven that the purposes of the organization or the manner in which it goes about achieving those purposes are contrary to Canadian laws or to the laws in force in the countries where it carries on its activities, there would apparently be no call for official comments.

[Text]

HEALTH AND WELFARE DENTAL HEALTH GRANTS

Question No. 315—Mr. Slogan:

1. How much money has been spent by the Department of National Health and Welfare for dentistry and dental health programs and research in each of the last ten years?

2. What is the breakdown of the money spent in each year?

3. What percentage of the public health research grant was earmarked for dental research as compared to medical research in each year?

4. How does this compare with the amount of money spent by the general public on general health as compared to the amount spent for dental health?

5. Has the minister received a request from the Canadian Dental Association for an increase in dental research grants?

6. Is it the intention of the government to increase the amount of money contributed to dental research?

Questions

Miss LaMarsh: 1.

	Expenditures within the department		Expenditures under the national health grants
	Dental health division	Medical services directorate
	$	$	$
1953-54	40,320	345,000 (average)
1954-55	36,461	345,000 (average)	301,582
1955-56	44,927	345,000 (average)	364,584
1956-57	51,709	345,000 (average)	410,825
1957-58	46,473	345,000 (average)	471,937
1958-59	62,034	345,000 (average)	507,582
1959-60	62,736	345,000 (average)	698,889
1960-61	66,816	345,000 (average)	905,311
1961-62	67,035	345,000 (average)	594,334
1962-63	69,360	345,000 (average)	610,466
1963-64 (est.)	70,000	345,000 (average)	647,578

2. No breakdown has been made of expenditures within the department. Under the national health grants the breakdown is as follows:

	Dentistry and dental health programs	Research
	$	$
1954-55	279,790	21,792
1955-56	338,435	26,149
1956-57	385,199	25,626
1957-58	446,513	25,424
1958-59	478,702	28,880
1959-60	534,625	164,264
1960-61	865,451	39,860
1961-62	527,273	67,061
1962-63	560,154	50,312
1963-64 (est.)	599,569	48,009

3. Expenditures under the health grants for dental health research have been related to expenditures on all health research (dental and medical) in the following percentages:

	Percentage expended for dental research
1954-55	1.40%
1955-56	1.75
1956-57	1.48
1957-58	1.31
1958-59	1.38
1959-60	6.22
1960-61	1.22
1961-62	1.79
1962-63	1.42
1963-64 (est.)	1.14

4. The following is an excerpt from health care series, memorandum No. 16 prepared by the research and statistics division of the Department of National Health and Welfare and dated March 1963.

"Table I. Expenditures on Personal Care

	Physicians' services ($'000,000)	Dentists' services ($'000,000)
1953	176.6	60.5
1954	188.6	66.4
1955	206.5	68.6
1956	240.1	81.5
1957	269.2	87.3
1958	295.5	98.1
1959	326.8	100.1
1960	354.5(f)	112.4
1961(f)	383.2	118.8
1962(f)	395.2	132.4

(f) Estimated

It is estimated that in 1961, of an aggregate gross income of $383,200,000 received by physicians for providing personal medical care services, $335,784,000 was received under private auspices, in either direct payments from patients or benefit payments by voluntary non-profit and commercial insurance agencies.

In 1961 it is estimated that a total of $118.8 million was received by dentists for providing personal dental care services."

5. No.

6. As far as the national health grants are concerned, dental research is considered within the broad framework of the public health research grant. There are no specific allocations for particular fields in this grant. The amounts of funds in this grant are subject to periodic review with regard to the need for research assistance.

INCREASED ALLOWANCES UNDER VETERANS ALLOWANCE

Question No. 331—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

Is it the intention of the government during this session of parliament to raise (a) the ceiling of $1,250 in personal property allowance to a single recipient of war veterans allowance (b) the ceiling of $2,500 in personal property allowance to a married recipient of war veterans allowance (c) the ceiling of $9,000 of allowable real estate including his home which a recipient of war veterans allowance may own?

Mr. Teillet: The War Veterans Allowance Act is under continuous study and considerable research is given those areas where financial matters, such as rates and ceilings and property limits are involved.

At the present time, it is not possible to state when amendments to this legislation may be brought forward for consideration.

P.O. DEPARTMENT LOSSES ON SECOND CLASS MAIL

Question No. 334—Mr. Mather:

1. What was the deficit incurred by the Post Office Department during 1963 on second class mail from the United States?
2. What was the aggregate loss to the Post Office Department on United States second class mail handled in the past 10 years?

Mr. Nicholson: 1. Information on which to estimate the deficit for 1963 is not yet available.

2. Information for the last ten years is not available. The department has recognized for some time, particularly since the release of the Glassco report, that the statistical data being maintained was insufficient to give the necessary information relative to second class mail posted in the United States for delivery in Canada. During the past year the department has engaged in an extensive study as to required statistics covering the entire postal field, and recently the services of management consultants were engaged to assist in these studies.

For the year 1961-62 information has been obtained from the United States administration as to the volume of second class mail posted in that administration for delivery in Canada. By using this information, together with statistics compiled in this department, it is estimated that the deficit for handling second class mail from the United States for delivery in Canada during 1961-62 is $3,900,000 divided as follows: (a) on second class mail posted in the United States for delivery in Canada, $2,800,000; (b) on United States second class mail posted in Canada for delivery in Canada, $1,100,000.

INDIAN SCHOOL STUDENTS

Question No. 354—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Of the 50,549 Indian children attending elementary and secondary schools (a) how many are attending elementary schools (b) how many are attending secondary schools?
2. How does the percentage of Indian students attending secondary schools compare with the percentage of the whole population attending secondary schools?
3. How many Indian students are attending universities or other advanced educational institutions?

Mr. Badanai: 1. (a) 43,679; (b) 4,371.

In addition to above, there are 2,499 Indian children attending either elementary or secondary schools, but no information is available as to grade.

2. Percentage of Indian pupils attending secondary schools, 8.9; percentage of non-Indian pupils attending secondary schools, 21.5.

3. Ninety seven.

NEW STERILIZATION METHOD FOR HOSPITALS

Question No. 390—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. Has the Department of National Health and Welfare investigated the claims made by Dr. Fritz Hahn for the efficiency of a new method of sterilizing hospital operating rooms and other hospital rooms by the influence of an electric field?
2. Has this new method been tested to determine whether or not it might have any worth-while application in Canadian hospitals?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. and 2. The Department of National Health and Welfare has taken steps to obtain full information from Germany regarding the work of Dr. Fritz Hahn in the development of an electromagnetic field as a means of killing viruses and bacteria. When complete information is available it will be carefully studied to determine whether the process has worth-while application in Canadian hospitals.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, N.S.

Question No. 394—Mr. Coates:

1. Will post offices be constructed at Wallace, Advocate Harbour, Collingwood and Southampton as previously announced?
2. When will tenders be called for the construction of all or any of these post offices?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. No; it was not possible to acquire suitable sites at reasonable cost.

2. Answered by No. 1.

CIVIL SERVICE COMPETITION 63-T-1003

Question No. 402—Mr. Loney:

1. What is the name of the successful applicant to civil service of Canada competition No. 63-T-1003?
2. What is the basic salary of the appointee?
3. What are the qualifications of the appointee?
4. At what date did the appointee commence his or her duties?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. The successful candidates as a result of competition 63-T-1003, postal clerk 1, Post Office Department, Kincardine, Ontario, are as follows, in order of merit: Clifford Manley Robinson, David Maxwell Henderson, Mrs. Janet Victoria Gazel, Edbert T. Bushell, William Albert Inkster.

Messrs. Robinson and Henderson are entitled to the veterans' preference for overseas service.

All appointments are subject to satisfactory medical examination.

2. $3,330 per annum. ($3,330-4,380); semi-annual increases to $3,630; then annual increases to $4,380.

3 and 4. This competition was advertised to establish an eligible list from which future vacancies will be filled.

To date, there have been no vacancies and, consequently, no appointment has been made from the eligible list.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN OCEANOGRAPHIC STUDIES

Question No. 405—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Has Canada been invited to take part in the meeting of the intergovernmental oceanographic commission, which is to be held at UNESCO House, Paris, in June?
2. Has Canada been invited to take part in a joint study of the Kuroshio current, in the Pacific ocean (a current similar to the Atlantic gulf stream)?
3. Did Canada send a representative or an observer to the meeting of experts of eight nations, in Tokyo, which meeting was sponsored by the Japanese government, UNESCO, and the international oceanographic commission?
4. Has Canada decided to join with the six or seven other nations which plan to send out research ships annually, starting in 1965, to carry out simultaneous research projects over periods of 30 to 45 days?
5. Have any representations on this subject been made to the federal government by any Canadian organizations, British Columbia fishermen, or by the government of British Columbia?
6. Since the variations in the Kuroshio affect the fisheries, is the government considering an early study of this question, and when may the house expect a decision?

Mr. Benidickson: 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. No.

4. No.

5. No.

6. Canadian fisheries scientists will have access to the results of the Kuroshio investigations.

ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM, QUEBEC

Question No. 409—Mr. Latulippe:

1. To what degree has Quebec participated in the roads to resources program since its inception?
2. What has been Quebec's share of federal contributions to the program?
3. What share of federal contributions to the program has been received by the nine other provinces, together with the Yukon and Northwest Territories?
4. Where are the roads built in Quebec under this program, what was the total cost of each, and how much did the federal government contribute toward the cost of each?
5. What requests were received from Quebec, with respect to this program, in 1962-63?

Questions

6. What amounts for this program does the federal government intend to place at Quebec's disposal for the next fiscal year?
7. What amounts will be allocated for the other provinces, together with the Yukon and Northwest Territories for the next fiscal year?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. The information obtained from the provinces shows total of $6,296,623.

2. The amount of the federal contribution to the province of Quebec to date is $3,032,787.

3. Out of a total amount of $7,500,000 made available to each of the ten provinces under the roads to resources program, the federal contribution to the nine other provinces to date is as follows: Newfoundland, $3,403,824; Prince Edward Island, $4,913,503; Nova Scotia, $6,553,326; New Brunswick, $4,499,999; Ontario, $4,902,219; Manitoba, $5,432,560; Saskatchewan, $5,369,806; Alberta, $6,596,382; British Columbia, $6,021,780.

The agreements were only concluded with the ten provinces. The roads to resources program provides no arrangement with the two territories.

4. Name of road: Amos-Matagami road.

Location: About 123 miles of new road, of which a certain part is either in a very advanced stage or finished. From the town of Amos, the road goes north to lake Matagami and New Hasco mines.

Estimated cost (in October 1960): $4,535,000.

Contracts awarded to date: $4,893,444.

According to information given by the province, a total amount of $4,738,223 has been spent until now. The share paid by the federal government to date amounts to $2,253,587.

Name of road: Lake Albanel-Lake Waconichi.

Location: Construction of 95 miles of new road from the southern end of lake Waconichi to a point situated a few miles to the north of the 51st parallel and the eastern bank of lake Albanel.

Estimated cost (October 1960): $5,900,000.

Contracts awarded to date: $3,765,906.

According to information sent by the province, a total amount of $250,092 has been spent up to now. Up to date, the contribution of the federal government amounts to $125,046.

Name of road: Chapais-Desmaraisville road.

Location: Construction of a section of 30 miles from a point located 14.6 miles east of Desmaraisville up to a point located approximately 27 miles west of Chapais.

Estimated cost (in October 1960): $3,000,000.

Contracts awarded to date: $3,094,475.

Questions

According to information sent by the province, a total amount of $1,308,308 has been spent up to now. The contribution of the federal government to date amounts to $654,154.

5. In 1962 the province requested authority to add five works to the authorized section of the Chapais-Desmaraisville road, at an estimated cost of $318,000 (Chapais being mile point "0" and Desmarais, mile point "71").

(1) At mile 22, a bridge over Ruisseau-Lamarck river, at an estimated cost of $85,000; (2) between mile 22 and 27, gravel coating and related works, $45,000; (3) at mile 59.3, a culvert on a tributary of Petite Riviere Waswanipi, $8,000; (4) at mile 61.3, a bridge over Petite Riviere Waswanipi, $100,000; (5) at mile 71, a bridge over Bachelor river, $80,000. Total, $318,000.

*Those works, which are in addition to the program, are presently under study.

6. Subject to certain conditions, the agreement provides that the credit the federal government will make available to Quebec during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965 shall equal the lesser of the two following amounts, $1,500,000 or half the construction costs incurred during the fiscal year.

7. Newfoundland, $750,000; Prince Edward Island, $1,000,000; Nova Scotia, $900,000; New Brunswick, $750,000; Ontario, $750,000; Manitoba, $750,000; Saskatchewan, $687,500; Alberta, on March 31, 1965, an amount equal to the lesser of the two following amounts:

(i) $7,500,000, less the total of all the amount previously paid; (ii) half the construction costs incurred as of March 31, 1965, less the total of all the amounts previously paid.

Agreements were concluded only with the ten provinces. The roads to resources program provides no agreement with the territories.

[Text]

FEDERAL BUILDING, INGONISH, N.S.

Question No. 411—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Is consideration being given by the department concerned to the construction of a building in the Ingonish area of Victoria county that would provide accommodation for the post office and Department of Fisheries?

Mr. Deschatelets: No.

IMPROVEMENTS AND MAINTENANCE, FEDERAL BUILDING, NORTH SYDNEY, N.S.

Question No. 413—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

What general improvements and maintenance work is to be carried out at the North Sydney federal building this year and what is the starting date for such work?

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Mr. Deschatelets: Alterations and additions to lock boxes postal accommodation, $2,000. It is proposed to call tenders for this work in August, 1964.

Interior painting, $2,400. Proposed for the winter of 1964-65.

COCKTAIL RECEPTIONS, TAXATION DIVISION, REVENUE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 415—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Do officials of the national revenue department, taxation division, hold cocktail receptions in key communities across Canada?

2. If so, when and where have these receptions been held?

3. What is the cost of these receptions and who is invited.

Mr. McIlraith: 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

RAILWAY BOARD OF ADJUSTMENT NO. 1

Question No. 421—Mr. Rideout:

1. Did the railway association of Canada or any of its member companies, such as the C.N.R. and C.P.R. request the board to prescribe a procedure before scrapping the 46 year old Canadian railway board of adjustment No. 17?

2. Where the terms of section 19 of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act complied with?

3. Will the Canadian railway board of adjustment No. 1, as presently constituted, be continued until such time as the provisions of the act are complied with?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. No, as far as the Canada labour relations board is concerned.

2. This matter is at present under review.

3. Information is not available at the present time.

INTERNATIONAL CANCER RESEARCH AGENCY

Question No. 422—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Was an invitation received from the minister of public health of France, Mr. Raymond Marcellin, since November 6, 1963, asking Canada to participate in the creation of an international research agency on cancer and, if so, what was the answer of the government?

2. Did the Canadian government consult cancerologists and public health experts concerning the participation of Canada in such an agency?

3. Did Canada have one or more representatives or observers at the first and second meetings of such organization?

4. Did any Canadian physician or medical association submit representations concerning assistance to the said organization to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and, if so, was assistance granted and in what form?

5. What role does Canada play in the World Health Organization?

Miss LaMarsh: 1, 2 and 3. No formal request for Canadian participation has been received.

4. No.

5. In concert with all the members of the World Health Organization, Canada's aims are to further enthusiastically the objectives of the organization, as expressed in its basic principles. In terms of health personnel, more than 60 Canadian specialists in various health and related disciplines are members of 24 of the 36 WHO expert advisory panels. In the area of specialized training, Canadian medical establishments—medical schools and schools of hygiene and nursing, clinics and teaching hospitals have provided and continue to make increasingly available training opportunities for WHO fellows and those under international auspices. On the professional staff of WHO, at headquarters or in the six regions, the number of Canadians total more than 4 per cent of the total professional staff.

Canada is now serving its third three year term on the executive board since WHO came into existence in 1948.

In current year estimates over $1,000,000 is provided to meet Canada's assessment for the annual budget of WHO, Canada being the sixth largest contributor of funds to the organization.

STRONTIUM 90 LEVELS

Question No. 423—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Is the level of strontium 90 higher in Canada than in any other country of the world and, if so, what are the reasons for this?
2. Does the government carry out tests to measure strontium 90 concentration in human bones or are tests carried out to measure only air and ground contamination?
3. What are the latest available statistics on this matter?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. It is not known if the levels of strontium 90 in Canada are higher than in any other country of the world but there is no reason why they should be. Evidence suggests that the highest level of deposition of strontium 90 occurs in a latitude band from about 30 to 60° N. Any country lying within this band and having about the same amount of rainfall would be expected to receive as much fall-out as Canada.

2. The nation-wide study includes measurements of strontium 90 in precipitation, soil, milk, wheat and human bone samples.

3. The latest statistics are contained in the monthly report "Data from Radiation Protection Programs", vol. 2, No. 2, February, 1964, copies of which were tabled on March 24.

PUBLIC BUILDING, KEARNEY, ONT.

Question No. 432—Mr. Aiken:

1. Who is the contractor for the public building at Kearney, Ontario?
2. What are the contract provisions concerning employment of local labour?
3. Is any local labour from Kearney or the immediate area being employed on this job?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Young's (Huntsville) Limited, Huntsville, Ontario.

2. The following clause is included in Department of Public Works construction contracts: "The contractor will use Canadian labour in carrying out the work to the full extent to which it is available, consistent with proper economy and the expeditious carrying out of the work. The contractor will employ labour from the locality where the work is being executed to the extent it is available and shall use the offices of the national employment service in the recruitment of workers wherever practicable."

3. Yes.

TRANSFER OF DUTIES RESPECTING WORLD FAIR

Question No. 436—Mr. Latulippe:

Have any duties in connection with the administration of the Canadian world exhibition been transferred to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and, if so, what is the nature of such duties and on what date were the duties assumed?

[Translation]

Mr. Sharp: I have stated publicly that I will expect my parliamentary secretary to assist me in the discharge of my responsibilities in relation to the Canadian world exhibition.

This responsibility was assigned to the Minister of Trade and Commerce on February 13, 1964 and Mr. Pepin's interest in this function became effective as of that date.

[Text]

TENDERS FOR POST OFFICE, MERIGOMISH, N.S.

Question No. 440—Mr. MacEwan:

1. What are the names of the tenderers and the amounts of their tenders on the proposed post office construction at Merigomish, Nova Scotia?
2. To whom will the contract be awarded?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Fraser, Mason and Fraser, New Glasgow, N.S., $10,993; McDougall Construction, New Glasgow, N.S., $11,839; Robert Higgins Co. Ltd., Trenton, N.S., $12,736.55; Eastern Contracting Ltd., New Glasgow, N.S., $13,200.

2. Fraser, Mason and Fraser, New Glasgow, N.S. have been awarded the contract.

CONTRACT FOR HOUSE CONSTRUCTION, FORT CHIMO, QUE.

Question No. 446—Mr. Howard:

1. During the fiscal year 1963 was any contract awarded for the construction of bungalows or houses at Fort Chimo, Quebec to Ron Engineering and Construction (Quebec) Limited and, if so, what was (a) the amount of the contract (b) the number of bungalows or houses (c) the cost of each bungalow or house, and (d) the use to which the bungalows will be put?
2. Since the contract was awarded has any revision been made to the said contract or any request made for such a revision and, if so, what are the details thereof?

Questions

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Yes. (a) $185,368 (six dwellings, $155,508; power line, $6,000; roadwork, $23,860); (b) six (one-storey 3-bedroom bungalows); (c) $25,918; (d) to provide living accommodation for employees of the Department of Transport.

2. No revision has been made to the contract but a request has been received for an increase of $7,984.62 relating to shipping cost. This matter is presently under review by the department.

[Later:]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works based upon an answer given earlier today to written question No. 446. I should like to ask the minister if he would look at the answer he gave us to ascertain whether a glaring mistake might have entered into the answer, because it indicates that more than $25,000 was spent for each one of six three-bedroom bungalows at Fort Chimo. In addition, he might ascertain whether $6,000 for a power line, $23,000 for road work and a potential additional amount of $8,000 for shipping costs are in line, in view of the government's desire to keep down expenditures.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I will look into this question.

POST OFFICE SITE, PORT LAMBTON, ONT.

Question No. 457—Mr. McCutcheon:

Is the Post Office Department currently negotiating to purchase property for the erection of a post office in Port Lambton, Ontario and, if so (a) at what stage are the negotiations, and (b) with whom are they being carried on?

Mr. Deschatelets: No.

(a) and (b)—not applicable.

MAIL CONTRACT, STONY RAPIDS-BLACK LAKE, SASK.

Question No. 459—Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake):

1. When were tenders called for the mail contract between Stony Rapids and Black Lake in the province of Saskatchewan?
2. How many companies entered bids on this contract?
3. What were the names of the competitors for this contract?
4. What was the figure in each case, and what were the determining factors in selecting the bidders?

Mr. Nicholson: 1. Public tenders for proposed air mail services are not called in view of the fact that only those air transportation companies licensed by the air transport board may operate in a particular area. We were advised that Calm Air and Saskair were the only air transportation companies licensed to provide a charter air service between Stony Rapids and Black Lake, Sask. Both companies were asked to submit offers in accordance with the department's practice of inviting bids from all companies licensed by the board.

2. Two.

3. Calm Air and Saskair.

4. Identical offers of $18 per round trip were received from both companies. This is in accordance with the tariffs each has filed with the A.T.B. for charter air service and the A.T.B. regulations.

In addition, Calm Air offered to provide the ground service between the post offices and airports at $2 per mail day. Saskair which has been conveying mail to other points in northern Saskatchewan including Stony Rapids, has a separate arrangement for ground handling at Stony Rapids and no additional charge at this point was involved. An offer to perform the required ground service at Black Lake for $2 per day was received from the Roman Catholic mission. Thus, in both cases, the over-all cost was $20 per day.

Because Saskair provides the connecting mail service at Stony Rapids, it was decided that it was in the interest of the postal service to accept their offer.

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE OFFICE, NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 464—Mr. Rheaume:

1. Has the government any plans to set up a national employment service office in the Northwest Territories and, if so, when and where will this office be established?
2. If not, will the government investigate the need and desirability for such an office?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. No.

2. Since the office at Yellowknife was closed, the unemployment insurance commission has kept the area under constant review to ensure that adequate service is provided.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE OFFICE, NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 465—Mr. Rheaume:

1. Has the government any plans to set up an unemployment insurance office in the Northwest Territories and, if so, when and where will this office be established?
2. If not, will the government look into the need and desirability for such an office?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. No.

2. Since the office at Yellowknife was closed, the unemployment insurance commission has kept the area under constant review to ensure that adequate service is provided.

EXPERIMENTS TO HELP DRUG ADDICTS

Question No. 467—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government considering conducting an experiment such as is now being conducted in

New York city whereby drug addicts are each receiving daily doses of opium derivatives, with the aim of finding out whether addicts can be kept at level dosages and therefore lead otherwise normal, constructive lives?

Miss LaMarsh: Under Canadian legislation the provision of drugs in the treatment of addiction is entirely within medical judgment and responsibility in accordance with the concepts of good medical practice.

Meanwhile, the government is watching with close interest the experiment which is being conducted in New York city. The government is also watching with interest the results of experience in the United Kingdom whereby treatment procedures utilizing narcotic drugs are being conducted and in the light of any success to be derived from the New York and other experiments, will give further consideration to present narcotic policies.

UNCOLLECTED CORPORATION INCOME TAX

Question No. 480—Mr. Bigg:

What is the total amount of uncollected corporation income tax now due and unpaid for (a) 1961 (b) 1962 (c) 1963?

Mr. McIlraith: This information is not available in the form requested.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION EXPENDITURES ABROAD

Question No. 482—Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John):

What amounts were spent by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, during the last three years, in (a) Great Britain (b) France (c) Belgium, and (d) Italy?

Mr. Badanai:

	1960-61	1961-62	1962-63	Totals
(a) Great Britain	$579,381	$563,172	$631,674	$1,774,227
(b) France	236,843	172,118	182,079	591,040
(c) Belgium	69,600	83,433	78,015	231,048
(d) Italy	161,257	170,912	173,996	506,165

REPAIRS TO TUG "CANSO"

Question No. 492—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. What were the names and amounts of tenders that were submitted for repairs to tug Canso?
2. Has a contract been awarded and, if so, to whom and at what amount?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Lunenburg Foundry & Engineering Ltd., Lunenburg, N.S., $3,758; Saint John Shipbuilding and Drydock Co. Ltd., Saint John, N.B., $4,374; Ferguson Industries Limited, Pictou, N.S., $4,918; Dominion Steel & Coal Corporation Ltd., Halifax Shipyards, Halifax, N.S., $5,700.

2. No. Tenders presently under study.

WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL, LONDON—TREATMENT OF HARRY PRUDER

Question No.494—Mr. Loney:

1. Was Harry Pruder, of R.R. No. 5, Wiarton, Ontario, notified to report to Westminster hospital, London, Ontario, during the month of March, 1964 and, if so, what was the duration of Mr. Pruder's stay in hospital?
2. What arrangements were made by the veterans hospital to accommodate Mr. Pruder while being examined?
3. Was return transportation available the day of discharge from hospital?
4. Does a war veteran instructed by the Department of Veterans Affairs to report to hospital have to pay out of pocket expenses for meals and hotel accommodation in such circumstances?

Mr. Teillet: 1. Mr. Pruder was notified to report to Westminster hospital during March 1964 and was examined on an outpatient basis.

2. He was offered rations and quarters in Westminster hospital, which he declined.

3. Return transportation by public conveyance was not available on that day.

4. When a veteran refuses accommodation in a departmental institution, he must himself arrange for his accommodation.

DISPATCH OF TROOPS TO CYPRUS

Question No. 495—Mr. Gauthier:

1. What reasons prompted the Canadian government to dispatch French speaking troops to Cyprus in advance of units to be despatched by other UN members?
2. Have any British or American contingents been sent to Cyprus and, if so (a) in what numbers (b) on what dates?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. A battalion of the Canadian Army Regular is designated on a rotational basis to be the United Nations stand by battalion, to be available on short notice. At the time a decision was made to send Canadian troops as part of a United Nations force to Cyprus, the R22eR was the UN stand-by battalion, having been so designated since 5 April, 1961, and was therefore able to be dispatched without delay. Since then, another battalion of the Canadian Army Regular, 1st Battalion, The Canadian Guards, has been designated as the UN stand-by battalion.

2. British troops were already in Cyprus before the UN force came into being and it is understood approximately 3,500 will be included as part of the UN force. No United States contingents have been sent to Cyprus.

Questions

[Text]

SUPERVISION OVER SEAL HUNTING

Question No. 496—Mr. Lambert:

1. What control has the government of Canada over the commercial hunting of seals in both the coastal waters and in the open seas?
2. What department of government is responsible for such supervision?
3. What actual supervision has been made of seal hunting in the gulf of St. Lawrence and waters adjacent to Newfoundland and Labrador in 1964?
4. Are any changes contemplated in the regulations with a view to better conservation measures of the various types of commercially hunted seals?

Answer: 1. Regulations for the protection of seals are enacted under authority of the Fisheries Act. However, these can apply only to Canada's nationals.

2. The Department of Fisheries.

3. Close to 100 officers and men are supervising operations to the extent they can by land and water patrol. This effort is supplemented by aerial patrols.

4. The regulations have recently been revised to require the licensing of all boats of over 40 feet in length that take part in the seal fishery. These regulations will enable closer control.

From an international standpoint conservation of seal herds is one of the matters which receives attention by the northwest Atlantic fisheries commission. Preliminary discussion took place at the commission's annual meeting at Halifax last year and all countries party to the convention, which establishes the commission, were instructed to be prepared to discuss the matter fully at the next annual meeting to be held this year at Hamburg.

LANCASTER, N.B., MILITARY HOSPITAL—TRANSFER OF CONTROL

Question No. 504—Mr. MacRae:

Have discussions taken place between the Department of Veterans Affairs, on the one hand, and the cities of Saint John and Lancaster in New Brunswick and the government of New Brunswick, on the other, concerning the transfer of Lancaster military hospital from the Department of Veterans Affairs to either local or provincial authority?

Mr. Teillet: No such discussions have taken place.

CIVIL SERVICE COMPETITION 63-PO-30-18

Question No. 505—Mr. Francis:

1. Who was the successful applicant in promotional competition 63-PO-30-18 postal officer 1 for the Ottawa post office which closed on November 8, 1963?
2. How many candidates entered this competition?
3. Who were the ten candidates judged, in the opinion of the board, most satisfactory for the position and in what order were they ranked?
4. How many years of postal experience did the successful candidate have?

[Mr. Gauthier.]

5. Did the applicant have any previous experience in this branch or in this work?
6. Did any other candidate in the competition have experience in this branch?

Mr. Nicholson: 1. Mr. J. A. P. Ladouceur.

2. Seventeen.

3. Three other candidates were considered qualified for the position. Having regard for the right to privacy of the candidates and the possibility that publication of information could prove to be not only embarrassing but prejudicial to them, it is felt that the names of the other candidates in this competition and details concerning their qualifications should not be published. This is in conformity with the general practice laid down by the civil service commission.

4. Eleven years.

5. Yes.

6. Yes.

WHEAT SHIPMENTS BY PORTS

Question No. 508—Mr. Dinsdale:

What was the number of bushels of wheat shipped from the following ports for each year 1956-63 (a) Eastern (b) Vancouver (c) Churchill?

Answer: Shipment of wheat from Canada, special ports, crop years 1956-57—1962-63:

Crop Year	Eastern[1]	Vancouver New Westminster (bushels)	Churchill
1956-57	102,016,102	102,882,125	16,250,320
1957-58	120,463,858	127,497,256	18,395,046
1958-59	123,836,279	105,162,912	18,409,322
1959-60	115,861,229	92,246,198	21,700,045
1960-61	164,151,331	118,720,154	20,094,890
1961-62	152,072,853	145,520,324	19,244,868
1962-63	137,641,309	129,747,805	21,761,757

[1]Includes Fort William-Port Arthur direct, Canadian St. Lawrence ports, Canadian Atlantic seaboard ports and U.S.A. Atlantic ports.

REVENUE FROM 4 PER CENT EXCISE TAX

Question No. 517—Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John):

What revenue did the government collect from the application of the first 4 per cent of the tax on construction materials and production machinery during the period from June 13, 1963, to March 31, 1964?

Mr. McIlraith: This information is not available as sales tax accounting is not maintained on a commodity basis.

P.O. DEPARTMENT PAYMENTS TO ONTARIO NORTHLAND RAILWAY

Question No. 531—Mr. Peters:

What was the amount of revenue paid by the Post Office Department to the Ontario Northland

Railways (a) for the years 1960, 1961, 1962, and 1963 (b) for each month of 1963 (i) for service on trains 46 and 47 (ii) for service on trains 49 and 50 (c) what was the amount in each case paid for each service for 1963 (i) mail sorting service (RPO) (ii) regular mail (iii) drop mail (iv) overflow mails (v) other postal revenue?

Mr. Nicholson: (a) 1960, $170,069.74; 1961, $167,815.02; 1962, $170,172.65; 1963, $171,208.72.

(b)	(i) Trains 46 and 47	(ii) Trains 49 and 50
January	$ 9,618.81	$2,582.13
February	8,751.89	2,415.35
March	9,942.75	2,566.79
April	9,431.35	2,634.25
May	9,889.39	2,900.80
June	9,423.21	2,580.43
July	9,594.29	2,636.09
August	9,672.12	2,766.08
September	9,648.83	2,867.44
October	10,188.50	3,161.56
November	10,054.02	3,322.96
December	11,999.86	6,277.56

(c)	Trains 46 and 47	Trains 49 and 50
(i)	$82,869.60	nil
(ii)	nil	$36,711.44
(iii)	nil	nil
(iv)	35,345.42	nil
(v)	3,000.00	nil

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

GOVERNMENT CONTRACT REGULATIONS

Motion No. 6—Mr. Nielsen:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of government contract regulations together with any other documents relating to the awarding of contracts by the government for the supply of goods and/or services to the government.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this notice of motion with the hon. member and have pointed out that the words "together with any other documents" as they appear in the notice of motion would involve the production of all the contracts as well. Subject to the deletion of those words, there is no objection to the motion carrying.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation as stated by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS FOR RETURNING LOGGERS

Motion No. 9—Mr. Latulippe:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of all letters, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Minister of Labour or officers of his department and officials of the national employment office, unemployment insurance commission, the competent authorities in Maine and Vermont, officials of the United States department of the interior and labor secretariat, and between the unions and the Canadian and American companies concerned with the problem of Canadian loggers permanently or seasonally employed in the United States forest industry who cannot obtain unemployment insurance benefits on their return to Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we would ask that notices of motions Nos. 9 and 10, as well as those numbered 29 to 52 inclusive be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly those motions stand.

[Text]

CONVERSION TO FRENCH OF STATION CJBC, TORONTO

Motion No. 13—Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all telegrams and other correspondence exchanged between the C.B.C., individuals and organizations, in connection with the conversion of the Toronto radio station CJBC from English speaking to French speaking.

Mr. Lamontagne: May I speak briefly on this motion at this time. This motion is for the production of copies of telegrams and other correspondence exchanged between the C.B.C. and individuals or organizations in connection with the conversion of Toronto radio station CJBC from an English station to a French station. I am informed by the C.B.C. that a total of 1,904 letters have been received in this connection. I am further informed that the comments expressed in these letters are almost evenly divided between those favourable and those unfavourable to the conversion.

If the C.B.C. were to comply with the motion as it now reads it would require the duplication of over 3,800 communications representing a total of approximately 5,000 pages. The cost involved for this reproduction would be approximately $2,000. On the basis of this information, perhaps the hon. member would wish to withdraw his motion as he is now provided with what might be considered as the necessary, pertinent details. If the hon. member is not agreeable to this course, I have no objection to the motion.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Speaker, in view of the tremendous interest that has been shown in this question, particularly in my area and the area surrounding the city of Toronto, I do not think $2,000 is too much when we consider how much it takes to keep the C.B.C. organization going. I wish, therefore, to proceed with the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Did I understand the minister to say that, subject to the reservation expressed by the minister—

Some hon. Members: There was no reservation.

Motion agreed to.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Motion No. 21—Mr. Stefanson (for Mr. Smallwood):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters, memoranda or other documents forwarded since April 22, 1963, by any member of parliament representing an electoral district in the national capital region, to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the Secretary of State or any official of these departments or to the civil service commission on the subject of collective bargaining for public servants.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the hon. gentleman in whose name the motion stands is not here, and I had hoped to speak to the hon. gentleman about this motion and the next one, I wonder if they could both stand?

Motion stands.

OTTAWA—LEASE OF SPACE IN BOURQUE BUILDING

Motion No. 25—Mr. Hales (for Mr. Chaplin):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all leases, agreements to lease, letters of intent to lease or other similar documents, dated since the 22nd day of April, 1963, relating to the occupancy by the government of Canada of space in the proposed Bourque memorial building in the city of Ottawa, together with a copy of all correspondence, briefs or other documents exchanged since the said date between the Minister of Public Works or any of the officers of that department and the owners of the said building or anyone acting or purporting to act on their behalf.

Mr. McWilliam: There is no objection to this motion, and the documents are tabled herewith.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Motion No. 27—Mr. Hales (for Mr. Weichel):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all telegrams, letters, representations and briefs made to any member of the government between April 12, 1963, and the date hereof regarding the setting up or constitution of the Canada development corporation.

Motion agreed to.

MAILING LIST FOR BILL RESPECTING INDIAN CLAIMS

Motion No. 58—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a list of the names and addresses to whom Bill C-130 of the first session of the twenty sixth parliament entitled an act to provide for the disposition of Indian claims was sent, not including those distributed by the queens printer, and for a copy of any accompanying letter or other communication.

[Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron).]

Mr. Badanai: There is no objection to this motion, and the hon. member has already been given copies of this list. There is no objection to the motion.

Motion agreed to.

DISPOSITION OF INDIAN RESERVE LANDS, BURNS LAKE, B.C.

Motion No. 61—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all applications for, and inquiries relating to the purchase, lease or rental of Indian reserve lands which are now situated in the Burns Lake Indian agency between the period January 1, 1954 and December 31, 1962.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I present another request and ask that this one be withdrawn?

Mr. Speaker: Withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

INDIAN RESERVE LANDS, BURNS LAKE, B.C.

Motion No. 62—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government or any agency or branch thereof and any other person, group or organization relating to Indian reserve lands in the Burns Lake Indian agency since January 1, 1963.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the hon. member be good enough to withdraw this motion, inasmuch as there is no correspondence.

Mr. Speaker: There is a request to the hon. member that he withdraw the motion, as there is no correspondence.

Mr. Howard: If that is the case I would be quite happy to withdraw it.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

STEWART-CASSIAR ROAD, B.C.

Motion No. 64—Mr. Howard:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government or any agency or branch thereof and the government of the province of British Columbia since January 1, 1963 relating to the Stewart-Cassiar road.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, this is entirely acceptable to the government, subject only to the assent of the government of the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the minister is it the pleasure of the house to adopt this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DOGFISH CONTROL MEASURES

Motion No. 65—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the government, or any agency or branch thereof and any other person, organization, or group since January 1, 1963 relating to dogfish (Squalus suckleyi) control measures.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, the government has no objection to releasing correspondence relating to Squalus suckleyi.

Motion agreed to.

H.M.C.S. "CHATHAM", PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.

Motion No. 67—Mr. Howard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government or any agency or branch thereof and any other person, group, or organization since July 1, 1963 relating to the H.M.C.S. Chatham at Prince Rupert, B.C.

Mr. Hellyer: There is no objection to this, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

AUTOMATION IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Motion No. 73—Mr. Nielsen:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters, briefs or memoranda written or presented by any staff association of the public service of Canada since the 22nd day of April, 1963, to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance or the Secretary of State or any official of these departments or the civil service commission on the subject of automation in the public service of Canada, together with any replies thereto.

Mr. Lamontagne: No objection, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

LOCATION OF WOMEN'S PRISON, ONTARIO

Motion No. 74—Mr. Fairweather:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and other messages between the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, the Department of Justice and the John Howard society, the Elizabeth Fry society about the location of the new women's prison in Cornwall, Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

TERRITORIAL PARTICIPATION IN DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCES

Motion No. 77—Mr. Nielsen:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the letter written by the Prime Minister to the provincial premiers with respect to the participation by the governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories in future federal-provincial conferences.

Mr. Davis: There is no objection to this motion, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

REPRESENTATIVE LISTS OF SUPPLIERS

Motion No. 78—Mr. Nielsen:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the representative list and/or representative lists of suppliers (now in use) as defined by paragraph 2 (e) (ii) of the government contracts regulations being P.C. 1954-1971 dated December 16, 1954 from each department of the government.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this motion and motions Nos. 79, 80 and 81 with the hon. member, and I would ask to have them stand in order to get clarification.

Mr. Nielsen: I believe the minister intends to include No. 78 as well, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Then motions Nos. 78, 79, 80 and 81 stand.

Motions stand.

ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS, QUEBEC

Motion No. 82—Mr. Rheaume:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the federal government or any branch or agency thereof and (a) the government of the province of Quebec (b) the Eskimo people of northern Quebec or any of their representatives (c) any other person, agency or association, relating to the proposed transfer of administration of Eskimo affairs in northern Quebec from the federal government to the government of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, the government will be glad to table all this information, subject only to the assent of the government of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: Before leaving this order, Mr. Speaker, with respect to motion No. 82, I would just like to point out to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources that the consent of the government of Quebec will not be necessary with regard to the correspondence passing between the government and the Eskimo people, referred to in part (b) of the motion.

Mr. Laing: It is part of the motion, Mr. Speaker, and I think the motion would have to be dealt with in its entirety rather than by way of separation.

Motions for Papers

POST OFFICE SITE, MARGAREE VALLEY, N.S.

Motion No. 83—Mr. Bell (for Mr. MacEwan):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the government and any agency or branch thereof, and any other person, group or organization, regarding the proposed site, or sites for a post office at Margaree Valley, Nova Scotia,

Mr. Lamontagne: No objection, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

SERVICE CONTRACTS LET WITHOUT TREASURY BOARD APPROVAL

Motion No. 84—Mr. Nielsen:

That an order of the house do issue for a return showing:

1. What service contracts have been entered into by or on behalf of the government by any contracting authority as defined by paragraph 2 (c) of the government contracts regulations being P.C. 1954-1971 dated December 16, 1954, since April 8, 1963, without the approval of treasury board for engineering, architectural or related or similar services?

2. Where the amount payable under such contract did not or does not exceed $15,000 (a) by whom was the contract awarded (b) to whom was the contract awarded (c) what method was used to select the contractor (d) what factors determined the selection of the contractor (e) what was the amount payable under the contract (f) where tenders were invited, were such tenders invited by public advertisement or from a representative list or lists (g) where tenders were invited, how many were invited and from whom and how many received and from whom in each case (h) where tenders were invited from a representative list or lists, what method was used to select the name or names of those invited to tender (i) where tenders were invited from a representative list or lists, what factors determined the selection of those invited to tender (j) in each case, where was the service to be performed (k) in each case was an opinion, suggestion or recommendation sought by the contracting authority or any person on behalf thereof from any defeated Liberal candidate or any person in any way associated with any Liberal organization in Canada; and, if so, by whom was such opinion, suggestion or recommendation sought and from whom was such opinion, suggestion or recommendation given and in each case was the same verbal or written?

3. (a) What is the answer to (1) above in the case of service contracts for the hire of equipment to be used in or incidental to the execution of a work (b) what is the answer to each of the questions in (2) above in the case of each such service contract described in the answer to 3(a)?

4. (a) What is the answer to (1) above in the case of service contracts for advertising or related or similar services (b) what is the answer to each of the questions in (2) above in the case of each such service contract described in the answer to 4(a) where the amount payable under the contract did not or does not exceed $5,000?

5. (a) What is the answer to (1) above in the case of service contracts for transportation services, or the hire or charter of vehicles, vessels or aircraft; (b) what is the answer to each of the questions in (2) above in the case of each such service contract described in 5 (a), (i) where the service was or is to be furnished or performed by a common carrier at a rate not in excess of standard rates (ii) where the amount payable under the contract did not exceed $15,000 and the service was or is to be furnished or performed by persons other than common carriers at a rate in excess of standard rates (iii) where the service was or is to be furnished or performed under a charter of hire contract and the amount payable thereunder did not or does not exceed $15,000?

6. (a) What is the answer to (1) above in the case of service contracts for the supply of electricity, gas, water or heat (b) what is the answer to each of the questions in (2) above in the case of each such service contract described in 6 (a)?

7. (a) What is the answer to (1) above in the case of service contracts for stenographic, reporting or related or similar services (b) what is the answer to each of the questions in (2) above in the case of each such service contract described in 7 (a) where the amount payable under the contract did not or does not exceed $1,000?

8. (a) What is the answer to (1) above in the case of service contracts for maintenance services, including cleaning, road clearing and snow, garbage and waste removal or disposal (b) what is the answer to each of the questions in (2) above in the case of each such service contract described in 8 (a) where the amount payable under the contract did not or does not exceed $5,000?

9. (a) What is the answer to (1) above in the case of service contracts for maintenance and inspection of elevators (b) what is the answer to each of the questions in (2) above in the case of each such service contract described in 9 (a)?

10. (a) What is the answer to (1) above in the case of service contracts for the repair, overhaul, and refitting of vehicles, aircraft, and equipment, other than office equipment (b) what is the answer to each of the questions in (2) above in the case of each such service contract described in 10 (a)?

11. (a) What is the answer to (1) above in the case of (i) telecommunication services (ii) radio telephone services (iii) the rental of telecommunication equipment (iv) the rental of short or local lines (v) the rental of long lines; (b) what is the answer to each of the questions in (2) above in the case of each such service contract described in 11(a)?

12. Were any service contracts specified in paragraphs 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11, entered into where the amount, rate or other sum payable under the contract exceeded the amount, rate or sum prescribed by part III of the government contracts regulations; and, if so, in each case, where such a contract was entered into, what is the answer to each of the questions in (2) above?

13. What service contracts, the term of which exceeds 5 years, have been entered into with or without the approval of treasury board and in each case what is the answer to each of the questions in (2) above?

14. What service contracts have been entered into where the amount, rate or sum payable thereunder has been increased with the approval of treasury board and, what was the amount of such increase, by whom was it authorized and why was it made?

15. What service contracts have been entered into where the amount, rate or sum payable thereunder has been increased without the approval of treasury board and, what was the amount of the increase, by whom was the increase authorized and why was it made?

16. In the case of service contracts entered into where the amount payable thereunder was increased, in what cases were increases made in excess of the limitations prescribed by part III of the government contracts regulations and by what authority were such increases made?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, with regard to this notice of motion, it will be seen by hon. members that it would be quite impossible to meet the requirements of the notice without several months' work in many departments of the government. I have not been able to obtain from all the departments concerned a precise estimate of the time and expense that would be involved in meeting the requirements of this motion. I have it from some departments, and it is obvious that it will require several months and several tens of thousands of dollars. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw this notice of motion, and I will be very glad to meet with him to see if one can be drafted that can be met without making such an unreasonable demand on the treasury.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I spoke with the minister before entering the house, and I would be very happy to have the motion stand until he can assess a different method of approach, perhaps over the Easter recess, and I will do likewise. Then perhaps we can consult again after we come back on the 6th.

Motion stands.

CONSTRUCTION OF CATV TRANSMISSION TOWERS

Motion No. 85—Mr. Southam:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, orders in council and messages between the Minister of Transport, the Secretary of State, and any of their officials and officials of the board of broadcast governors in connection with the order of December 31, 1963 and subsequent orders prohibiting until further notice the issuance of licences to applicants for the construction of CATV transmission towers and other appurtenances.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if before you put this motion I could just say a word which might make that unnecessary. There is no correspondence other than two letters, one dated December 31, 1963 from the Secretary of State to the chairman of the board of broadcast governors enclosing a copy of the statement of December 31, 1963 and asking the board of broadcast governors to consider the problem and make a report to the government, and the other dated March 9 accompanying the B.B.G.-D.O.T. recommendations, which was addressed jointly to myself as Minister of Transport and to the Secretary of State.

As hon. members know, correspondence between a minister of the crown and a body such as the board of broadcast governors has been considered privileged by successive governments, and therefore not subject to production. While we in the government would not like the motion to pass, which might be regarded as a precedent, the government in this particular case has no objection whatever to tabling these particular letters on its own responsibility. I would be glad to do that if the hon. gentleman would agree not to press his motion.

Mr. Southam: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

SOCIAL INSURANCE

AUTHORITY FOR DISTRIBUTION OF APPLICATION CARDS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we are approaching the end of this portion of the session and answers have been given to certain questions connected with applications that are being sent out for social insurance numbers, I would ask the minister this question. Were these forms sent out not only to persons listed as being eligible for unemployment insurance but to others as well? If so, under what authority were they sent to the others? Second, what is the obligation to fill out this application form for those who are not listed as being eligible for unemployment insurance?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will have to make inquiries in respect to the factual aspect of the question asked by the right hon. gentleman. The obligation to register, or to apply for a social insurance number, applies to persons in insurable occupations normally covered under the Unemployment Insurance Act. There is no obligation to register on the part of any other citizen. We are asking other citizens to register voluntarily and to acquire a social insurance number for further purposes, especially the proposed Canada pension plan.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In so far as sending out these forms to those who are not subject to unemployment insurance is concerned, it is simply anticipating the passage of the bill establishing the Canada pension plan; is that the position? How many were sent out—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —to other than those actually contemplated as in prospective receipt of unemployment insurance?

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to check on the number of applications that have been sent out. My information at this stage is that applications have been forwarded to employers, but I will be glad to make a further check. I will simply reiterate what I have stated, that the obligation derives from the authority of the Unemployment Insurance Act for the insurable population. Others are invited to register voluntarily so that this numbering system will be available for a proposed Canada pension plan, and in accord with one of the recommendations of the Glassco commission.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, a moment ago there was an interruption that I cannot allow to pass unchallenged. It was "Sit down". I wish the hon. gentleman would identify himself, because apparently he is not housebroken yet.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. If there are persons who may wish to apply voluntarily for these social insurance numbers but to whom forms have not been sent, can they get them from somewhere or make application for them?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker; these persons, as I understand it, will be invited to come to the national employment service offices and fill out these forms. I will be glad, however, to make further inquiries and possibly give more detailed answers to all these questions tomorrow.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could the Minister of Labour advise the house, to clear up this situation, whether the government is going to give everybody in Canada a registration number, or only those eligible for unemployment insurance?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, our desire is to include all the employed population especially, at this stage; all persons who might be eligible for social insurance programs, including unemployment insurance and the proposed Canada pension plan. That is our objective, in order to have an appropriate system for social benefit purposes.

Mr. Fisher: Social credit.

Mr. MacEachen: But at present we have no authority to register persons other than the insurable population, unless these persons whom we are inviting come forward voluntarily to secure these application forms.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO AVAILABILITY OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he can assure the house that no copies of the white paper have been made available to other persons outside his department before being tabled in this house.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, none has been made available to anyone who is not a member of the ministry of the government of Canada, or those officials in the department who are entitled to have access to it.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): A supplementary question. Is the minister going to issue his white paper tomorrow, and will it contain any items not already reported in the press?

Mr. Hellyer: The answer is yes to both questions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert: A supplementary question. In this connection is the minister able to advise the house whether a certain story in this afternoon's Ottawa Citizen is speculative or founded on information obtained by direct access to the report?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen this paper.

Mr. Lambert: The story identifies the document as being 30 pages in length. It speaks of integration of the services; it speaks of five years' financial budgeting, and many other items which have appeared in previous stories. I am now asking the minister whether he is advising the house that no one outside of those persons he has now mentioned has had access, either verbally or visually, to the contents of this report.

Mr. Hellyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly to my knowledge no one has had access to it who was not entitled to such access, and I think this is all I have responsibility for. As far as people talking is concerned, it is very difficult to control this.

Mr. Lambert: A supplementary question. May we obtain an assurance from the minister that he will inquire into the security coverage of this white paper to see that there have been no unauthorized leaks?

Mr. Hellyer: I will certainly check that, Mr. Speaker, but the press have come to recognize that the policy of the Department of National Defence is now rational, and on that basis they are able to make some speculative guesses which may or may not prove accurate.

APPREHENSION OF PERSONS RESPONSIBLE FOR ARMOURIES THEFTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): My question is for the Minister of Justice. Is the minister now in a position to make a statement to the house on the progress, or lack of it, in connection with the apprehension of those responsible for the thefts from armouries in Quebec?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I should like to report on progress, and I could, if my duties allowed me to do so. I would not be in a position to report on any lack of progress. But I think my answer must be the same as before. It would not be in the public interest for me to report to the house at this time.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, further to the answer that has just been given by the Minister of Justice, can he tell us now whether there have been any arrests in this connection?

Mr. Favreau: Up to date, not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

LUCKNOW, ONT.—REQUEST FOR RETURN OF ARMS TO HIGH SCHOOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister inform the house when the small arms and ammunition removed from the Lucknow district high school will be returned to the cadet corps so that they may resume their training for the defence of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that is a question for the order paper.

BROADCASTING

COMMUNITY ANTENNA SYSTEMS—REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): May I ask the Minister of Transport whether he intends to leave the community antenna question up in the air during the recess, or does he intend to bring it down to the ground?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, as well as the rest of the house, will recognize that this is not a question which I could settle by myself. As the Secretary of State pointed out the other day, the report was presented to the government last week and considered by the government briefly at that time, being made public the same day. Through me the government has received a verbal request, and may already have received a written request, from the president of the national community antenna television association of Canada that that association should be permitted to make representations to the government before the government makes any final decision on policy. Therefore I see no prospect of any decision being reached until after the Easter recess, and I should like to emphasize that that is the request of the organization of the people engaged in this activity.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): A supplementary question. Is the minister going to grant the request of the CATV?

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand that the formal request is being made to the Prime Minister, and knowing how this government behaves I am quite sure it will be granted.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—CONSIDERATION OF DISPOSAL PROBLEM IN NEW BRUNSWICK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister received a request from the New Brunswick government, the potato producers association of Carleton-Victoria and zone L, or any other reliable producer or dealer, to send a representative from the agricultural stabilization board to meet with the potato producers association directors to look into the present potato disposal problem in New Brunswick?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hays: I am very pleased to be back in the house, Mr. Speaker, and I want my good friend from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to know that I also missed him. In answering the question asked, representations along the lines outlined by the hon. member have not been received. However, I can assure him that should such representations be made I would be pleased to give them every consideration. The agricultural stabilization board has the matter of potato prices under close study, and I am pleased to be able to inform the house that potato prices have shown a marked upward trend in the last few days, with yesterday's unofficial New Brunswick quotations ranging between $1.75 to $1.85 per barrel, with some points reporting as high as $2 per barrel.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): May I ask a supplementary of the minister. Does he see any particular reason why a request of this nature would not be complied with?

Mr. Hays: I would be very pleased to meet them and discuss their problems.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR LARGER SHARE OF REVENUE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I intended to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister, but in his absence, I will ask the Minister of Justice or the Secretary of State to answer. Has the government received a communication from the Quebec premier repeating the demands he made last year, when he asked the federal government for a larger share of the tax revenue in Canada?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to bring this question to the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister.

[Text]

NEWFOUNDLAND—WITHDRAWAL OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister received a protest from the premier of Newfoundland on the grounds that the hon. gentleman's announcement of the withdrawal of the R.C.A.F. and R.C.N. establishments at Torbay and Fort Pepperrell constitutes a violation of term 44 of the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada whereby Canada guaranteed to provide defence forces in the province?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Did the hon. gentleman say "from the premier of Newfoundland"? No, not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC—POSSIBLE CRIMINAL CHARGES AGAINST JUDGE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Guay: That ought to be something.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice, not to the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Guay).

Since Judge Wagner, in his report concerning an alleged fraudulent bankruptcy, has recommended that charges of perjury and other charges be laid against Judge Adrien Meunier, of the Quebec superior court, can the minister tell the house if he intends to take immediate action to suspend Judge Meunier until the case is settled?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as regards the last part of the question, I must tell the hon. member that my jurisdiction, for the time being, does not extend that far.

As for the first part of the question, I must say that until now I have been kept informed of Judge Wagner's decision. I also know that the matter has been referred to the attorney general of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it is my duty to bring to the attention of the hon. member citation 152 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, paragraph 4, and with the permission of the house I will read it:

> (4) All references to judges and courts of justice and to personages of high official station, of the nature of personal attack and censure, have always been considered unparliamentary, and the Speakers of the British and Canadian houses have always treated them as breaches of order. Members have even been interrupted in committees of the whole by the chairman when they have cast an imputation upon a judicial proceeding. The proper course for persons who feel called upon to attack the conduct of a judge is to proceed by way of a petition in which all the allegations are specifically stated so that the person accused may have full opportunity to answer the charges presented against him.

In the circumstances may I suggest to the hon. member that he desist.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, when I put a question to the Minister of Justice a moment ago you rightly ruled that a member of the house could not attack a judge. But I did not lodge any accusation against Judge Meunier; I only made a reference to an official report published and issued by Judge Wagner of Montreal. And that is why I asked the Minister of Justice whether he intended to suspend Judge Meunier in the light of that official report issued by another judge of Montreal.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I did not refer to this citation before but it is a further citation in Beauchesne. Citation 149 reads in part as follows:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in standing order 35 it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada that a member, while speaking, must not:
>
> (c) refer to any matter on which a judicial decision is pending;—

(j) cast reflections upon the conduct of judges of superior courts, unless such conduct is based upon a substantive motion.

There may be other references but on short notice I have not been able to go further than that. In the circumstances I still maintain, and I am of the opinion, that the matter should not be discussed at this time.

GRAIN

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—INCREASE IN ELEVATOR CAPACITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture and ask him whether, during those quiet and ruminative moments which occur when one is on the road, he has come to a favourable conclusion about the grain elevator at Prince Rupert?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I still have this under consideration.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND WELLAND CANAL—TOLL INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, arising out of press references in this connection I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether the government or the Canadian seaway authority have made the extraordinary suggestion that the tolls on the St. Lawrence waterway should be increased? Has this been brought to the attention of the United States, and what has been the reaction thereto?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): As I am sure the right hon. gentleman knows, since he was in parliament when the St. Lawrence seaway legislation was passed, there is provision for a review of the tolls at stated intervals in order to comply with the agreement with the United States and the legislation passed by this parliament. At the present moment discussions are going on with the United States authorities in connection with this matter and I hope tomorrow to be in a position to make a brief statement in the house regarding them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the hon. gentleman and I would ask him, at the same time, whether the government is now giving consideration to withdrawing the Welland canal tolls which it imposed shortly after it took office.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the right hon. gentleman has forgotten that on a certain somewhat notorious occasion the tolls were suddenly taken off the Welland canal and, up to now, they have not been put back.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No. I ask the hon. gentleman whether it is not a fact that the government is determined to restore them and is just waiting for the opening of the season in that regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, sir. That is not quite an accurate statement. I think it will be better if I were to make a statement tomorrow, with all its implications carefully considered, because I do not wish to enter into any contempt of parliament, about which the right hon. gentleman is so sensitive.

CONSTRUCTION OF ADDITIONAL FERRY FOR P.E.I. SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport and ask him whether construction has yet begun of the additional ferry planned for the C.N.R.-operated service to Prince Edward Island.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Without checking with the officials of my department, since I did not have notice of the hon. gentleman's question, I cannot answer it, but I will be glad to make an inquiry.

REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT ON UNECONOMIC BRANCH LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister be prepared to inform the house whether it is the intention of the government to implement the recommendation of the MacPherson royal commission report to abandon uneconomic railway lines or is it the intention of the government instead to set up a railway rationalization fund to subsidize these uneconomic lines?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman with his usual courtesy gave me notice of his question. I may say, as I indicated yesterday in reply to an intervention by the hon. member for Marquette, that it is the intention of the government later in the session to put a notice on the order paper similar to that which was put on the order paper by the President of the Privy Council on December 6 when he occupied the position I now occupy. That notice will be found in Votes and Proceedings and on the order paper after that date. I do not think I should take the time of the house to read it now but it does refer to the establishment of a branch line rationalization authority and a branch line rationalization fund.

The implication is very clear, I think, that there is no thought of any sudden or precipitate rail abandonment, and that what was contemplated by the notice which was given in the house and what is still the proposal of the government is to introduce legislation at this session which we unfortunately did not have the time to deal with at the last session.

Perhaps I might be permitted to say that I have now looked at the clipping which the hon. member for Marquette was kind enough to mention yesterday and which quoted Mr. Ross Thatcher. I read this motion to Mr. Ross Thatcher over the telephone and it seems to me, considering that it was read to him over the telephone, that he gave a very accurate account of it in Saskatchewan.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Mr. Thatcher was quoted as having a conversation with the minister over the telephone perhaps the minister might tell us what Mr. Thatcher's reaction was when the hon. gentleman pointed out this clipping and its contents to him, so that the Saskatchewan people will have the full story.

Mr. Pickersgill: When I drew to Mr. Thatcher's attention the motion that my hon. friend, the President of the Privy Council, had put on the order paper at the last session of parliament he was very grateful for the clarification of the policy of the government, and I believe that will be the view of all those who feel that the first purpose of the railways is to serve the communities they serve, and that their balance sheets must be put in second place.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I congratulate the minister on that declaration of policy.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

In view of the fact that section 94(a) of the B.N.A. Act provides that—

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

—the parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to old age pensions in Canada, but no law made by the parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to old age pensions.

Could the minister say whether he took into consideration the constitutional aspects of Bill C-75 concerning a general old age pension plan, and more particularly section 3, paragraph 1 of the said bill?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my answer is yes.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. He said yes, so I understand he has considered the bill. Now, could he tell us whether the project meets the constitutional requirements under the B.N.A. Act?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, the fact that the bill is introduced by the government, after evidently consulting the Minister of Justice, allows me to answer yes also, to the second question of the hon. member.

[Text]

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF QUEBEC PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): My question was for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but since she has just left perhaps the Minister of Transport could deal with the question. I should like to ask him if the government has approached the premier of Quebec with a view to having him withdraw the provincial pension plan in order to make the Canada pension plan truly national?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I wonder if this kind of question, dealing with high policy, is the type of question envisaged under the rules set out for questions at this time?

AIRPORTS

MALTON—SUGGESTED IMPROVEMENT IN SEATING ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I have a question which I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister look into the possibility of having seating made available at Malton airport in the room where people coming home from abroad and others entering the country are often required to wait long periods for baggage and customs formalities? Such provision would be especially appreciated by older people.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I will be glad to draw that matter to the attention of the department.

PARLIAMENT HILL

CHANGING OF THE GUARD—INQUIRY AS TO RESUMPTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): My question will be addressed to the Minister of National Defence or to the associate minister, according to their jurisdiction. It is based on a radio announcement to the effect that Colonel Grey of Camp Petawawa has not yet been informed that the changing of the guard ceremony will be performed on parliament hill this summer. Will visitors to the national capital again have the opportunity to view this outstanding ceremony during the summer months?

Mr. Speaker: May I respectfully suggest that the order paper is the proper place for that question.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPLACEMENT OF EASTER PLAY BY HOCKEY BROADCAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I should like to ask the Secretary of State a question about the controversial television program scheduled for this evening—the one at 9.30, not 8.30. Does the hon. gentleman know whether any Canadian churchmen have complained of the fact that the hockey broadcast pre-empted the time originally scheduled on Sunday night for the performance of this Easter play?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOLLOWING STORM LOSSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister recently received any request or representations concerning possible assistance to fishermen in eastern Nova Scotia who sustained severe storm damages last December? If so, what has been the response?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

REPORTED U.K. PROPOSALS RESPECTING PREFERENTIAL TARIFFS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister; I believe he is the Minister of Transport. Will the Acting Prime Minister state whether Canada is now considering abandonning certain commonwealth tariff preferences—

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Martineau: This is an important question and I think I should be heard out.

—whether Canada is now considering abandoning certain commonwealth tariff preferences which she now enjoys in relation to certain commonwealth developing countries in particular in order to stimulate trade in certain non-commonwealth developing countries, as implied by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his address yesterday at the United Nations conference on trade and development?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I have some doubt whether I have any title to answer this question, because the Prime Minister is in Ottawa and I am not the acting prime minister. However, I do happen to be the senior minister in the house.

Though, of course, a very important question, this does not appear to me to be the kind of question which is urgent within the rules that apply to questions asked on the orders of the day, because it obviously deals with a most complicated subject on which the government is certainly not going to do anything between today and tomorrow.

I think, moreover, that the Prime Minister's answer to almost exactly the same question yesterday, to the effect that we should await the return of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and allow him to report, was very good advice to the house and I repeat it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING 12 MILE FISHING ZONE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. I should like to ask the minister whether the United States and the other countries with which he has been discussing the implementation of a 12 mile fisheries limit have indicated that they will accept with good grace such a declaration by Canada. If that is not the case will he indicate to us what progress he has been making in the discussions he has been carrying on?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as I have stated previously in the house, it is not proper procedure to follow to give details of negotiations while negotiations are taking place. As the house has already been informed, the initial phase involving negotiations with the United States was completed on February 5. Last week preliminary discussions took place with representatives of the Norwegian government. Next Thursday, April 2—a week from tomorrow—we expect to meet with a delegation from Portugal. On April 7 and 8 negotiations will take place with representatives from the government of France. Arrangements are being made with other countries interested to proceed with negotiations at the earliest possible date.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER CONSTRUCTION BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the report from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that out of 35,000 applications for the $500 bonus for winter construction only 6,000 have qualified so far, and since the date for expiry of the bonus is Tuesday, March 31, is the minister prepared to make an announcement extending the date for a further period of 30 days?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this question is at present under consideration and I hope to be able to say something about it one way or another tomorrow.

UNITED NATIONS

NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT—CANADIAN REACTION TO UMBRELLA PROPOSAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the acting prime minister or the junior-senior minister, or whatever he may be.

Mr. Pickersgill: The member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Winkler: It has to do with the situation existing in the United Nations. In view of India's support in principle of the nuclear umbrella disarmament proposal by which nuclear weapons would be limited to the United States and Russia, would the minister give an indication of Canada's stand on this very important matter?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I feel I am far too junior a minister to express an opinion on so important a subject without at least prior consultation with the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I will draw the matter to the Prime Minister's attention.

SHIPPING

CONSIDERATION OF BRIEF RESPECTING MERCHANT MARINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I was going to direct my question to the Minister of Labour but I have been so long getting the floor that he has left. However, I will direct it to the Minister of Transport, and I hope it will not further inflame his seniority feelings. With respect to the brief presented by the shipyard and marine workers this morning to the cabinet concerning a merchant marine, will the minister give every assurance that the brief will be given immediate attention? When can we expect legislation in regard thereto and will the minister also make a general statement about this important matter?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to say that a most excellently prepared brief was presented to about one third of the members of the cabinet by the representatives of the shipyard workers and they were given the assurance by me, by the Minister of Labour who was chairman of the meeting, and by the Associate Minister of National Defence, who has a great interest in the subject of shipbuilding, and by the minister of northern affairs that this matter would receive the most careful and the most urgent consideration. Until that consideration has been given it would be premature for me to indicate what its result would be.

Mr. Bell: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the statement that the minister has made on this matter of a merchant marine and its long term implications. Will the minister give every assurance that the immediate situation will be dealt with, that is that the lay-offs taking place in the various shipyards will be alleviated by the acceleration of the program in his department and in the Department of National Defence?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, all hon. members know that layoffs anywhere in the country for any reason are of great concern to the government, and the Minister of Labour is working night and day to see that other work is available in all these cases.

Mr. Bell: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister step up the construction program in his own department as promised a short time ago in the house?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will do everything I can.

LOTTERIES

CONSIDERATION AT DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice a question?

As his predecessor favoured the establishment of provincial lotteries, would the minister tell us if the matter has been put on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference which will take place next week, as Mr. Lesage did express the wish to discuss the point?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this question should normally be directed to the right hon. Prime Minister, and I shall be happy to communicate it to him.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. My question was directed to the Minister of Justice, as he is responsible for administrating the Criminal Code. My question was this:

Does the Minister of Justice intend to discuss the project with the provincial authorities of Quebec during the next federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, until the federal-provincial conference starts, every question which might, or might not, be put on the agenda is obviously a matter of government policy.

Mr. Valade: Will it be put on the agenda?

[Later:]

[Text]

Mr. Valade: I rise on a point of order. I should like to refer Your Honour to citation 178, page 152 of Beauchesne's fourth edition:

Questions addressed to ministers should relate to the public affairs with which they are officially connected, to proceedings pending in parliament, or to any matter of administration for which the minister is responsible. Within these lines an explanation can be sought regarding the intentions of the government, but not an expression of opinion upon matters of policy.

It is my duty, sir, to ask this question of the minister because the federal-provincial conference will be held next week and the people of Quebec are interested in this question. Is it the intention of the Minister of Justice to introduce at that conference the question of provincial lotteries, which has been dominant for many years and which was promised by the Liberal party at the last election?

Mr. Favreau: I must answer again that it is not within the ambit of responsibility of the Minister of Justice to put questions to the federal-provincial conference. I would not think it in order therefore for me to answer that question.

Mr. Valade: I do not accept this answer.

SPORTS

REQUEST FOR GRANT TO BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles J. M. Willoughy (Kamloops): I had a question also for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and I am sorry she has left the chamber. Perhaps the Minister of Transport will see that this question is passed on to her. It is an urgent question, sir.

Has the very urgent and respectful request of the Canadian basketball association for $15,000 in financial aid, addressed to the minister some months ago and which I understand has gone without any acknowledgement, been passed on to the national fitness council? This is an urgent matter because the money is needed for financing the four national basketball championships.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will pass the ball on to the minister.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

WHITE PAPER—REFERENCE TO NATO REQUIREMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): In view of the answer given by the Minister of Transport a few minutes ago I want to assert my right as a member of this house to ask a question on high policy. Did the Minister of National Defence, before he published the white paper and distributed it to the press, receive from NATO the summary review of its policy in respect of the demands of NATO for conventional and nuclear arms?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I am not just sure, Mr. Speaker, because of the vagueness of the question, what my hon. friend has in mind. Does he mean the summary which was asked for last May at the ministerial meeting? It has not been received as yet. Is that the purport of the question?

Mr. Churchill: That is exactly it. The minister, I thought, was going to incorporate in his white paper his views with regard to NATO's review of its policies.

Mr. Hellyer: I was certainly hopeful that would be the case, but that report is not yet available and we have had to go ahead with our white paper. We have tried to the maximum extent practicable to accommodate the policies set out in the white paper to the future requirements of NATO.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. According to a newscast today at noon, as of the end of January there were over 500,000 Canadians drawing unemployment insurance benefits. I should like to ask the minister what he has in mind or what he plans to do to correct this situation.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I appreciate the hon. gentleman bringing this matter to my attention, and in returning the favour I would remind him that the number of claimants this year, in comparison with last year, has dropped by approximately 115,000.

Mr. Bell: How about the maritimes?

Mr. Ricard: I asked the minister what he had in mind to procure some work for these 500,000 Canadians who want to work but who cannot work because the minister is not doing his job?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour.

Can the minister tell us whether his department compiles also statistics on the number of unemployed not receiving unemployment insurance benefits? If so, can he tell us what the number is?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the minister will take this as notice.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If this was the first time the question was put to the Minister of Labour, it would be quite proper to give him notice. But since I personally asked the question one month ago, 15 days ago and at least three times since the beginning of the session, I think the minister has had notice of the question and should perhaps answer it.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rosthern.

Mr. Gregoire: No answer?

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that there still remain half a million people unemployed has the minister, the department or the government any new policy over and above what has already been announced to take care of the situation that faces these unemployed people?

Mr. MacEachen: The first point to be made in reply to that question is that the estimated number of unemployed is considerably below the figure mentioned by my hon. friend. The second point is that this February will have the best employment situation that we have had since the last Liberal year in 1957. We intend to continue the policies which have had such a substantial impact on the employment prospects in this country.

Mr. Grafftey: As a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is developing into a debate, and I do not think the matter is pressing.

URANIUM

PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING SALE TO FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce but in his absence I would like to direct it to the Minister of Industry. What progress is being made in the talks with the government of France in regard to their purchase of Canadian uranium?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, this question was asked some time ago and it was pointed out, I think by the Prime Minister, that the sale of uranium to France would be subject to safeguards. To the present moment there has been no agreement with France on the application of safeguards.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Immigration branch—

20e. Administration of the Immigration Act, $133,800.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall this item carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Tremblay) on a matter which really deserves his attention.

We know that a steel complex is slated to be built in the Nicolet region, that is in the parish of Becancour, where an Indian reserve is located. A newspaperman of Three Rivers mentioned in the local paper Le Nouvelliste that it was one of the oldest Indian reserves in Canada.

During the next few minutes, I would like to read for the benefit of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration a few lines from that article written by Benoit Roy, a newspaperman of Three Rivers. It says:

> What will the federal authorities do concerning the development Becancour will experience once the steel mill is established? There was some talk for a while of selling the reserve and moving the families elsewhere. Will that project come up again or will other Indians be brought back on the Becancour reserve?

That is a question the Indians of that reserve are now asking themselves.

The article goes on:

> The site of the present reserve is said to be quite rich from an archeological standpoint. According to one of its occupants, arrow-heads, hatchet blades, lead bullets, etc., can be found quite near the surface.
>
> We have even been assured that, very close to the cross and buried some six feet deep, there are three cannons dating back to the French regime, one made of cast iron and two of copper, mounted on wheels. Those cannons would have been used during the wars between the Indian tribes, and especially by the French settlers who had to protect many times to destroy that French settlement in themselves against raids by the Iroquois who tried those heroic times of French civilization.

I am asking the minister to have his department make an investigation and, if need be, recommend to the historic sites and monuments board of Canada to study the particular aspect of that Indian reserve.

Should that future steel complex ever need that land, all those factors should be taken in consideration to prevent the disappearance of an historic site, as called by that newspaperman of Three Rivers, which is one of the most ancient Indian reserves in Canada and which should be allowed to preserve its historic character.

[Text]

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, I have just two questions for the minister. I think everybody is pleased the minister is going to Hong Kong in the near future, and I would like to ask when he is going? Further, during his stay there will he try to speed up the almost hopeless delay in procedure that applicants have to go through in order to get to this country? I understand some applications are not processed until 12 or 14 months after they have been received. This is an unconscionable thing and I hope the minister will try to deal with this problem when he is in Hong Kong.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I am leaving for Hong Kong tomorrow morning, and the purpose of my trip is to check on the administrative problems of immigration services. When I come back, I will be glad to report on my mission.

[Text]

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, at this stage of our discussion I would like to touch very briefly on a few matters I raised during the debate on the speech from the throne. I should also like to underline some personal opinions. I note with a great deal of pleasure, after reading a recent speech made by the minister, that he agrees with me that one of the basic problems today in this nation of ours is that we really need more people. I know that some countries—not necessarily in the western world—have a real overpopulation problem. I personally think that at this stage of our national development in Canada one of the problems we are faced with, relating to what I call a viable economy, is the fact that we are underpopulated.

This being the situation—and I feel that the minister alluded, very sensibly, to this fact in a recent speech—I then ask some basic questions. What is the government's immigration policy? Are they simply going to depend on what I call the natural increase of population from the birth rate to solve this problem that I have mentioned; or are they actually going to carry out a positive immigration policy? I ask another question. Why, in the last few months, has a country like Australia outstripped Canada in relation to new citizens landing on her soil? What are we doing in terms of an assisted passage program to encourage people to come to Canada? I ask the minister another basic question. Does he feel that at this stage of our economic development a real, positive immigration policy would conflict with the employment position of Canadians? I ask another basic question: Has the minister's department fixed a target for the number of immigrants they want to come to Canada within the next 12 months, or any period? Is there a target established, so to speak?

I know these are very basic questions that I am asking, compared with some of the detailed questions that are often asked in relation to the minister's portfolio; but it is a subject that interests me very, very much. As I said before, I think a basic problem today in Canada relates to the fact that we are an underpopulated country, and I think the minister has an extremely interesting challenge before him in this regard. I hope he can answer, in general outline, some of the questions that I have put to him.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, while the regular estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration come before the house for discussion, I shall have an opportunity to make an over-all statement on the immigration policy to be carried out by the department.

However, to reply more specifically to the question asked by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey), I may say that in accordance with the announcement I made, the immigration policy of the department will be changed.

Nevertheless, I might state briefly what happened in that field. In the past, we had a considerable number of applications from European immigrants wishing to come to Canada, and that raised many problems. I would call that the post-war period which was one of passivity, where we only had to make a selection among the immigrants asking us to come here. As a matter of fact, our problems, at that time, were different from the ones facing us now. We have reached the point where the needs of the country, as regards immigration, are so acute that our immigration policy must be revised and made more positive. We must also endeavour to bring here better qualified immigrants. We must also improve our facilities abroad, because it would be no use hiding the fact that these last few years, they have been in very poor shape. I feel that if we want qualified immigrants, we must have not only a well representative personnel but also well located facilities.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi said a while ago that Australia had been very successful in its immigration policy, because of the fact that it insisted very much on facilities set up in various countries, especially in Europe.

So I think, within a few months, we will have developed a new policy that we will announce to the house and to the whole country. I do not believe that this can come into conflict, as previously stated, with the other objectives of the government, especially full employment in this country. As I have said many times, it is not a large number of immigrants that we need but rather people with initiative, who are likely to create new jobs, so that this may increase employment instead of decreasing it.

This means that if an expert comes here to Canada and fills a vacant position, three or four persons will be employed who, otherwise, would be jobless, because of the shortage of these experts on the labour market.

We have no specific objective as to the number of immigrants that we want to bring to this country, but we want beforehand to improve services and conditions to receive them. As for mentioning a number, whether there are 150,000, 200,000 or 250,000, I believe that our country is waiting for a large number of them to make progress.

[Text]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether, following upon what the minister has just said, I might pose a question or two to him. I refer to what I understand are two, or perhaps three, agreements between Canada and other countries to restrict the number of people who may emigrate to Canada from those countries; or, in effect, to place a quota or numerical ceiling upon the number of people who may come to Canada from those other countries. I have been given to understand that there is such an agreement between Canada and the government of India. In fact, I posed a written question without, while so doing, realizing that today we might have an opportunity to debate it in the house. I understand that as a part of this agreement between Canada and India there is a limit of 300 people in any one calendar year who may come to Canada and this number is divided into 150 being relatives of people already here and 150 being non-sponsored.

I wonder whether the minister could tell us if this is so, and whether there are agreements of that sort which restrict, or place a ceiling or quota, on the number of emigrants that may also come from Pakistan or Ceylon, because I understand these two countries are also involved. In addition, will the minister tell us what steps will be taken, if any, to approach the governments of these other countries to see whether we can agree to cancel such agreements containing these restrictive covenants. I ask this because I am sure, especially in view of what the minister said in reply to the comments of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi and in view of the fact that it is desirous, as the minister said, to attract as many people as possible to Canada in order to put us in a strong and virile position economically, that these agreements which are restrictive in nature are contrary to that sort of policy. I would certainly like to hear the government's views with respect to these agreements and what steps will be taken to eliminate them.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, the suggestion made by the hon. member for Skeena

(Mr. Howard) to revise the agreements is an excellent one, because it so happens that there is, in the case of India, an agreement between our government and that of India.

As for the possibility of bringing in immigrants from a country such as India, over an annual period, I am of the opinion that existing agreements with other countries ought to be revised, for it is part of our over-all policy to examine the possibility of allowing immigration from those countries to be increased. That applies not only to European countries, but also to those of the Middle East, Asia and India.

[Text]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the minister first of all for his kind remarks on this suggestion. Second, I should like to ask him whether to date formal representations have been made to these other countries, or whether this is something this minister anticipates will occur in the future?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is the policy of the government to try and increase the number of agreements which we have with these countries, although we may revise some of the agreements which we do have. In cases where we do have agreements we may try to increase the number of immigrants we receive from those countries in addition to the quota which has been established; but it is not the regular policy of the government to reach agreements with each country and to fix a quota. We prefer to have an open policy in those countries where this is possible.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps I did not phrase the question correctly because the answer the minister has given bears no relationship to what I asked. I did not ask the minister whether it was his policy to approach other countries to establish quotas or anything of that sort. I asked the minister whether his government has already been in touch with, for argument's sake, the government of India, to deal specifically with that country, in order to have the present agreement which restricts the number of immigrants from that country to Canada rescinded. Has that already happened?

Mr. Tremblay: No, Mr. Chairman, I am not aware of such contact with that government.

Mr. Howard: Then may I ask whether this will be done.

Mr. Tremblay: My first answer was that I will be very glad to revise any agreement we have with foreign countries.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, since in the past, I have put a few questions to the minister but without ever getting an answer, I hope to have more luck today.

If I remember rightly, I think that the authorities in my province stated at one time that even a provincial government could deal with immigration problems, that is to go abroad and bring immigrants to Quebec. Could the minister tell us whether agreements on that matter have been concluded between provincial and federal authorities? Could the minister explain what is the degree of authority or jurisdiction of the two governments involved in this matter?

If a provincial government promotes a certain type of immigration, will it be in co-operation with the federal government, or will both governments compete with each other?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I think that the rights of the federal government in the field of immigration are very well defined. The co-operation we seek in this matter concerns the classification of immigrants.

I do not believe the provinces have the right, the authority nor the administrative machinery required to compete with federal immigration offices in the various countries of the world. On the other hand, we would be most pleased if the provinces would advertise abroad in that connection, and set up employment offices as soon as possible, in order to help us in getting those people settled here, in every province of the country.

If all the Canadian provinces were ready to do this twofold effort and to advertise more abroad in order to attract immigrants, and if they would help us in getting immigrants settled in this country, I feel that our immigration policy would be much more interesting.

[Text]

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question regarding immigrants from behind the iron curtain. Are the policies of his department the same for immigrants from other countries I should also like to know what is the government's policy towards people from behind the iron curtain who emigrate without the permission of their country or origin—in other words, people who escape. I understand escapes have been going on for many years. Are there different policies or regulations which apply to these people, or are the regulations the same, even though they may not have a passport or any recommendation from their church? I have received many letters from people in my constituency who have been confronted with such a problem; they have friends or relatives who cannot come to Canada but must remain in Europe. I just want to know whether different rules and regulations apply to this class of person.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, in many countries behind the iron curtain, we do not have the required facilities to have the would-be immigrants undergo the necessary examinations.

I hope to be able to get in touch, in the near future, with the authorities in countries behind the iron curtain so as to find out to what extent such examinations could be made easy for those relatives of Canadians who live in Poland, in Czechoslovakia, etc. and who wish to immigrate to this country.

As regards the second point, that is people born in countries behind the iron curtain and living now in other European countries, and who wish to settle in Canada, regulations specify, as hon. members know, that these people must live two years in the same country to be entitled to undergo examinations that would permit them to come to Canada.

So far, latitude was allowed the minister to permit the admission of certain immigrants who were undergoing an examination in a Canadian office here. I can assure you that up to now, I have been very very broad-minded in carrying out the rules, in view of the discretion that I was allowed, and chiefly on account of the fact that in some instances it was impossible for the immigrants to go back to their country and therefore, I had to have them undergo the examination in this country.

[Text]

Mr. Bigg: There are a few points I want to bring up under these estimates concerning our own native people of Canada. It has been suggested by some that perhaps these native people require their own member of parliament, something like they had in England for the universities, but because they have been neglected for many years the Indians have lost faith in the ability of our parliamentary system to look after their rights. As I say, they have suggested at times that they do require direct representation here in Ottawa. I am sure that the appointment of Mr. Gladstone to the Senate did a great deal for the morale of the Indian people across Canada, who now feel they have some voice in their own affairs.

They are looking ahead, now. They have some hope. But it is certainly not enough, and I do not think this is the real answer. I do think it is the duty of members having Indian reserves in their constituencies—and I have some seven Indian reserves in my district—to bring these matters to the attention of parliament. First, and most important, we must make it clear, once and for all, that we are playing ball with these people, that they are not being neglected. One of the most vital steps in this connection is the setting up as soon as possible of the Indian claims commission, and giving the Indians a direct connection with it and with the courts and other legal machinery in Canada, so that not only present claims but breaches of the treaty in the past may be looked into. I do not intend to discuss this matter at any length because it has already been brought to the attention of the committee. Anyway, it is a field in which the Indians are looking for some action.

I think the Indian people are essentially no different from any other people. They feel they are being treated as second-class citizens of some kind. Speaking from my own experience I can say they have been treated by the government as if they were children. They are not, in fact, children. Where the Indians have kept their self-respect, and been allowed to keep it, they have shown that in their own way they are very effective Canadian citizens indeed. I would point to the Caughnawaga Indians along the St. Lawrence river. These men are recognized in the United States as being the finest steel workers in America. In fact, they get better wages than the white men employed in this work, because of their greater skill.

In the western reserves, the Bloods and the Peigans in southern Alberta are well off financially. They have never been taken from their original habitat; they live on roughly the same ground as did their ancestors and they have turned successfully to the way of life nearest to that of their ancestors in the days of the buffalo. They are trying to go into ranching. Only recently a delegation came to Ottawa and offered to capitalize their ranches by purchasing breeding stock on a 50-50 basis. They came to the federal government with an offer to put up 50 per cent of the capital cost. Let us not turn this down. Here is a progressive tribe whose members are trying to do something for themselves. They are showing that they have not lost their old grit. Before the white men came they were a fine, upstanding race of people with a keen sense of democracy and a well thought out and stable religious life, all of which has been upset by our well-meaning interference. I suggest we should consult the Indian people and find out how they want to live; and when they come forward with such a manly proposition as supplying 50 per cent of the capital they require, I think we should almost write a blank cheque. For every dollar they put up we have got to meet them.

If they succeed, as they are succeeding in southern Alberta, I should like to ask your co-operation, Mr. Chairman, and the co-operation of this committee in seeing that the less favoured tribes in my district who may want to do something along these lines should receive every encouragement. I do not expect the department to do all the work. I do not expect the Indians to do all the work. I intend to make up a party of Indians from my district and take them this summer to visit their cousins on the Blood and Peigan reserves to see how this is working out—to see whether they cannot devote as much energy and courage to building up a venture of this sort. I know it will work. I know these people. I have worked with them, and they are no different, when given a chance, from any other Canadians. It is a question of morale. It is also a question of common sense. We must try to give these people jobs in this country which are as close to their instincts and to their culture as we can. We hear a great deal about biculturalism. Both the English and the French in Canada are proud of their cultures, and there is no doubt at all that the red man is proud of his. He will fit into the Canadian pattern of culture as far as he himself wants to fit in. At one time the white people of this country hoped that the natives would die out. They are not dying out; they are multiplying quite rapidly. This will present an increasing challenge if we do not take steps to meet it and give these people the opportunities which I think they should have.

As a lesser suggestion I think we should improve their morale by paying them their treaty money in cash, as they have requested on many occasions. I suggest we pay them in special money. I suggest we should provide every year special silver dollars honouring the various tribes in the order in which they signed the treaty, and that we pay these senior citizens of ours in Canada in silver money struck especially to honour their people. The details could easily be worked out and I shall not take up the time of the committee in pursuing this matter further, now. But the feeling of the Indians, when they signed this treaty originally, was that they were to be paid in cash in the Queen's money and I believe we could combine the keeping of this part of the treaty with a gesture in honour of those fine Indian tribes who signed it and who have kept their side of the bargain.

Now I wish to turn for a few moments to the subject of old people's homes. In Alberta, we have old folks homes, but there are none for Indians and I suggest we might work out some scheme, in co-operation with the provinces, in order that our aged Indians might also have the benefit of old folks homes. Perhaps they would not require exactly the same type of architecture as we ourselves find suitable. Perhaps provision should be made for a different type of communal living. But aged Indians who are in receipt of old age pensions might well make the same deal for living in these old folks homes as do our own senior citizens, and they could be looked after in these homes in the same way as we look after the white people. The Indian people have always looked after the aged of their own race. They honour their fathers and their mothers in the same way as we do. If hon. members of this committee came to my district and saw the slums in which the senior citizens of our senior people are living, they would be horrified. I could take them around to mud floored shacks and primitive log dwellings in which these older people are obliged to spend the declining years of their lives in poverty, living under conditions which it is hard to imagine until they have actually been witnessed.

I think we need to do more, too, to train the younger people to take advantage of the mechanical age in which we live. These Indian people are clever mechanics. I understand that if an Eskimo is given an outboard motor he scarcely requires any instruction in its working; he will pull it apart, see how it works and put it together again; he learns the mechanics of an outboard motor much faster indeed than does a white man, because it is essential to his way of life—he has to keep his canoe running so as to carry on his trapping. I am told by my former mates in the police that an Eskimo can beat our boys every time when it comes to mechanical things. So let us see they get the training they require. It is not good enough simply to set up schools where ordinary subjects are taught. We have to provide for the development of this natural mechanical aptitude and teach subjects which have practical application to the kind of life the students want to lead. They are still pioneers. They have the right to live in a pioneer country. I am sure that the undertaking to educate the Indians did not mean teaching them only reading, writing and arithmetic. We must enable them to receive the same training as we give to our own young people, to prepare them for the mechanical age in which we live.

Now I wish to change the subject radically and speak for a few moments about immigration.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I believe there is an understanding that the committee should proceed at this time to the consideration of interim supply. Is it agreed that vote 20e stand at this time and that we proceed to the discussion of interim supply?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item 20e stands.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Gordon moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $684,120,-260.18, being the aggregate of:

(a) Two-twelfths of the total of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965 laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $658,598,418.50;

(b) an additional five-twelfths of the amount of external affairs item 20 of the said main estimates, $402,291.67;

(c) an additional four-twelfths of the amount of atomic energy item 5 of the said main estimates, $416,666.67;

(d) an additional three-twelfths of the amount of national research council item 10 of the said main estimates, $5,838,000.00;

(e) an additional two-twelfths of the amount of fisheries item 15, legislation item 20, mines and technical surveys item 25 and transport item 95, of the said main estimates, $6,661,116.67;

(f) an additional one-twelfth of the amount of finance item 25, labour item 30, legislation item 5, mines and technical surveys items 10, 15, 45, 50 and 60, national revenue item 5, northern affairs and national resources item 1, trade and commerce item 15, of the said main estimates, $12,-203,766.67, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

Mr. Nowlan: I presume the minister is going to make the usual statement first.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the bill to be founded on the resolution is to finance the operations of the government for the periods noted and the usual authority will be asked to borrow up to $1 billion to provide for authorized payments out of the consolidated revenue fund through the issue of treasury bills, Canada savings bonds, marketable securities, etc. The proportions requested in the bill when it is presented are intended to provide for all necessary requirements of the public service up to May 31, 1964.

In no instance is the total amount of an item being released by this bill. The form of the bill is the usual one for interim supply bills and the passing of the bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize any item in the estimates when it comes up for consideration in committee of supply. The usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Chairman, I believe it is a matter of great importance that this opportunity be taken to discuss fully in the house a serious question that has been simmering for many months and is now threatening to explode as the result of certain happenings in the last month or so. I am speaking now of the proposed transfer of the jurisdiction over and administration of the affairs of the Eskimo people of northern Quebec from the federal government to the government of the province of Quebec. I rise to make some comments and to offer some suggestions and I do so in an objective, sincere and non-partisan manner because this issue is at present very badly confused.

There is growing alarm among southern Canadians and I can assure the house that the Eskimo people of the north are becoming frightened and confused. I think it is important that someone who knows the Eskimo people clarify the record at this stage before the issue becomes clouded by religious and political emotionalism.

This matter has far reaching implications, containing as it does problems of federal-provincial relationships, constitutional questions and the rights of parliament itself but, most important, the fundamental right of a large group of Eskimo Canadian citizens to be, if you will, masters in their own igloos. I suggest that the way in which we approach this problem and ultimately resolve it, as we will, will be under close scrutiny in all parts of Canada and in many other nations of the world because Canada at last will have had to come face to face with a matter that has all the elements of the struggle of emerging people and groups for self-determination.

I regret very much that the Prime Minister is ill and absent from the house today and also that the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources are not here this afternoon because they are the ones who have been carrying on the negotiations respecting this matter with the government of the province of Quebec.

I do not intend to rehash the rather ragged events of some of the question periods on this very issue, except to say that at this point the House of Commons has been told certain things. We know for certain, and we have the Prime Minister's word for it, that the Eskimos are to be consulted before an agreement is signed. Ostensibly that consultation will be carried out through a federal-provincial commission. We know that for sure.

We have also been assured by the Prime Minister that any agreement the federal government signs will safeguard the language and the religion of the Eskimo people of new Quebec. But there are some things we do not know. We have not been told about them in the house and the people of Canada must know before we can proceed any further. We do not know yet whether parliament will have an opportunity to approve or reject any plan that is arrived at. We do not know whether the Eskimo people of new Quebec will have the opportunity to be consulted about the terms of the agreement and to be represented at any such negotiations by independent counsel. We do not know for sure whether the Eskimo people of northern Quebec will be allowed to have a referendum. We do not know for sure whether similar negotiations will be conducted with regard to Eskimo people who live in other provinces of Canada.

Let me advise the house, in case hon. members do not know, that there are other provinces of Canada that have Eskimo people living in them. The obvious example is the province of Manitoba. There is a substantial Eskimo settlement at Churchill. We do not know what the implications of this move are for the administration of Indian affairs throughout Canada, not only in terms of every province of Canada but in those very communities in the north where Eskimo, Indian and white people have been, until now at least, living in harmony. I give as examples the communities of Great Whale River in new Quebec, Fort Churchill in Manitoba and Inuvik in the Northwest Territories.

I have said there is growing alarm in southern Canada. One need only read the various newspaper editorials that have appeared on this very matter in recent weeks. I have in my hand a press report of a speech given by the Right Rev. E. S. Reed, Bishop of Ottawa. This is from the Ottawa Citizen for March 12, and I quote from part of the article because Bishop Reed is very concerned over what is happening to the Eskimo people:

> Bishop Reed deprecated the fact that, apparently, the Quebec Eskimos jurisdictional problem has become "a highly charged political issue."
>
> Bishop Reed posed these questions in his speech:
>
> Will the good work begun, however, belatedly, by the northern affairs department, be continued and improved if jurisdiction is given to the Quebec government?
>
> Will the missionaries, the trusted friends of the Eskimos, with no political axe to grind, be permitted to assist the Eskimos when their wishes are being consulted on the jurisdictional problem?

I have said, Mr. Chairman, that the Eskimo people are confused. I say this because in recent weeks I have had an opportunity of meeting and talking with the Eskimo people from northern Quebec. I can assure you, as a result of these person to person talks, that the Eskimo people are extremely alarmed about what is occurring between the federal and provincial governments. One of the Eskimo people from Fort Chimo, a man who is completely reliable, assured me that these frightened people will probably pack up and move away from Quebec mainland if this thing proceeds any further without their being allowed to participate in the discussion.

I say that there has been alarm in southern Canada as a result of some of the statements we have seen in the press, statements Mr. Chairman that are unbelievable in their colonial attitude toward the Eskimo people. I have in my hand a news report from the Montreal Gazette dated March 12. I should like to quote from the lead article entitled "Angry debate over Eskimos". I quote:

> Resources minister Rene Levesque, who has pressed Ottawa hard to transfer administrative authority for the Eskimos to Quebec has flatly rejected any idea of a referendum on the grounds that the Eskimos have not reached the cultural stage where they are capable of rendering an opinion, and that a referendum would be accordingly "an abuse of the democratic process".

This statement was made by the resources minister of the province of Quebec. I want categorically to reject that statement; and that type of statement is not limited by any means to Mr. Levesque. I want to reject it for its unfathomable ignorance of the capacity and potentials of the Eskimo people in the Canadian north as I know them. I reject this kind of statement, further, for what it is. It is the worst type of hypocrisy. The Eskimos of northern Quebec have the provincial and federal franchise and have had for some time now. The hon. member for Saguenay receives a substantial vote from these Eskimo people of new Quebec in federal elections, and yet we have a Quebec minister saying that it would be an abuse of the democratic process to allow these Eskimo people from the Canadian north to have a say in their own affairs. This kind of statement, Mr. Chairman, is dangerously irresponsible. Furthermore, it is dangerous in the implication it has for other minority and racial groups in Quebec. I, for one, am not prepared to accept the Levesque—

Mr. Gregoire: Why don't you give them the right to vote, then?

Mr. Dinsdale: They have; we gave it to them.

Mr. Rheaume: I would suggest to the hon. member for Lapointe that he refer to the Nielsen bill of 1962, and he can find the same old arguments about people not being allowed to vote. I would suggest to Mr. Levesque, and all others who tend to think like him, that if they want to find people who are not ready to vote they do not have to go that far north in the province of Quebec.

At any rate, this is my attitude. This is the kind of statement we get from one of the negotiating ministers and it calls into question the whole matter of whether or not people with ideas such as these should be entrusted with the affairs of the Eskimo people. I will refer to this briefly in a moment, but for the time being I want to discuss the matter of provincial responsibility for Eskimo and Indian affairs. Let this be understood clearly. The objective that was clearly enunciated by the minister of northern affairs is one which we, as a party, support. Let that be understood. There has never been any doubt about where the Conservative party stood on this matter. The objective of having provincial governments assume responsibility for Eskimo and Indian affairs is one that we support. In fact, it is the only way, we believe, you can build a nation. However, the method by which this is achieved is something that causes us alarm.

I suggest to the Minister of Justice, who I see has resumed his seat, that whatever methods are followed in this transfer they must guarantee that the rights of parliament will be respected and that the rights of the Eskimo people to be consulted will be safeguarded. A few days ago in this house the Prime Minister said that no one needed to tell him about his responsibilties. With due respect and deference to our Prime Minister, I suggest there are many things he does need to be told about the Eskimo people. Furthermore, I suggest to him that I am quite competent in this field to tell him a few things that he might not know about the Eskimo people.

I have said that there are constitutional difficulties involved here because a number of these matters are assigned by the British North America Act to federal and provincial jurisdictions. I do not intend to refer to these in any detail. There is a constitution problem involved as a result of the Quebec Boundaries Extension Act of 1912 which says in the pertinent section, section 2 paragraph (e):

> That the trusteeship of the Indians in the said territory, and the management of any lands now or hereafter reserved for their use, shall remain in the government of Canada subject to the control of parliament.

Certainly the supreme court decision of 1939, which is the basis upon which these negotiations are being conducted between the Minister of Justice and the Quebec government, was to the effect that for the purposes of the British North America Act Eskimos are considered to be Indians. This is surely the most serious part of the current negotiations. The minister, as he indicated in the house, proposes to transfer Eskimo affairs in Quebec from the federal government, and is he going to transfer Indian affairs as well? If he does not, he will have been guilty of building a wall between two racial groups in northern Quebec, particularly those communities where Indians and Eskimos are living at the present moment side by side in harmony.

The Prime Minister has built an image of himself. I believe this image to be an honest one of understanding the need to unite the various racial groups in Canada. He has said he wishes to bind the wounds between the races. I believe in this, but I suggest that the present agreement which has been reached will do precisely the opposite.

I also suggest that the problem of the jurisdiction over these Eskimo people is essentially the problem of confederation. Heaven knows, the Prime Minister took the time in his fireside talk to the nation to tell us confederation itself was at a crossroads.

I have listened at great length during the question period when this matter was discussed. To date I have not participated in the debate nor have I asked questions about the Eskimo people in northern Quebec. However I do feel the time has come for me to put on the record some of what I know about the Eskimo people and their feelings. The Eskimo people in the Canadian north know me, and know me well. They trust me because I have travelled among them, I have worked among them and I have lived with them. My family has been in the Northwest Territories since the early 1900's. My own children were born in the Northwest Territories, and I know the Eskimo people for all of their qualities. For this reason I want to put on the record some arguments to contradict those things that have been said to date about them.

I recall very well being a resident of the north when the Nielsen bill to extend the federal franchise came before the house. I know the results of that bill were felt locally. They were felt nationally and indeed internationally. At this stage I want to put on the record a quotation that should be of interest to all hon. members, a quotation from a man who conducted the enumeration along the distant early warning line. It is interesting, because it tells about the effect of the vote among American people serving in the Canadian north. I quote:

> It was surprising the amount of interest shown on the D.E.W. line in respect of the election. Prior to this they used to do a lot of moaning and criticizing of the government, with the usual remark of "taxation without representation." You never hear the remarks or criticism any more, as just the fact that they can vote in a federal election has resulted in building up the prestige of this wonderful Canada of ours, tremendously in their eyes...Believe that the steps taken to bring the vote to the D.E.W. line stations and adjacent villages brought home to our American friends up here the fact that not only is Canada a democracy but that the government is prepared to go to all kinds of trouble and expense to see that Canadian citizens of high and low status, are given an opportunity to vote and elect whatever government representatives that they so desire.

That was a quotation from a letter sent to Mr. Castonguay, and I feel it should be on the record because it shows this measure did have international repercussions.

Some people may ask, do the Eskimo people exercise the franchise they won after so many years? One need only look at the statistics. The average turn-out at the polls among Eskimo people has been around 79 per cent to 80 per cent of the eligible voters. I personally know of instances where Eskimo families travelled three days and three nights in weather down to 45 degrees below zero, in order to get to the nearest polling station to cast their ballots. If this is not a group of people prepared to assume the responsibility to vote and who are willing and able to be consulted, then I know of no other group like them in Canada.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, to the Minister of Justice and to the minister of northern affairs that these people would be hurt and insulted if we allowed this agreement to take place without their participation.

In conclusion I want to quote a paragraph from some testimony which was given before the standing committee on mines, forests and waters last December by Mr. Robert Williamson. Mr. Williamson is the foremost Eskimo linguist in Canada, and is known to all the Eskimo people throughout the Canadian north as Bob. He speaks all their dialects. He too knows and understands their problems and this is what he said, referring to the Eskimo people:

> This is a people who in a very short historical period conquered and successfully lived in the most difficult and merciless part of the world. They covered an area 4,000 miles wide from Alaska to eastern Greenland and extending from as far south as 600 miles north of Ottawa to 500 miles from the pole. All this was done with no resources other than the skins and bones of the country's hard-won game, and the great powers of endurance and resourcefulness of this exceptionally intelligent race. To survive in the north, one had to be intelligent. The less intelligent were simply eliminated by nature. This process, over 4,000 years, has bred a race of people who have a higher degree of intelligence among them than any other identifiable human group. I know that their capability, their resourcefulness, and their drive are enormous. They are a people of great sophistication.

In conclusion I ask the Minister of Justice and the minister of northern affairs, both of whom I know are concerned over the way this is being handled, to give the committee a clear statement. They should assure us that the Eskimo people will in fact be consulted and will have an opportunity through a referendum to state their wishes. They must assure us also that the Eskimo people will have access to independent counsel during the negotiations. Further, I want them to give an assurance that the rights of parliament to inspect any agreement will be respected. The issue is the issue of self-determination. It is the issue which is at stake all over the world. It is the issue at stake in Angola, in the Congo, in Cyprus and Birmingham, Alabama; and if we do not change our ways, and fail to solve it in the Canadian north, then the tragedy will be that Canadian men and women may be called upon to fight and die for the same failure in other parts of the world.

Progress reported.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, in order to allow as much time as possible for interim supply and, if I may put it frankly, to bring us if possible closer to an Easter recess, I would suggest that the house give unanimous consent to proceed with government business until six p.m. this afternoon. Of course, as usual, the private members' hour would not be lost but retained as the fortieth usual hour during the session.

Mr. Churchill: So far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to forgo the private members' hour from five to six o'clock but I thought we were assured the Easter recess would start tomorrow at 6 p.m.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, this is undoubtedly an expression of the desire of hon. members to rush through the government's, or the public's business in order to have a recess. But I think, inasmuch as that is the desire, and this house and the country was promised on more than one occasion that the government would be able to organize its business in such a way that they would not be continually in these rushed periods, the better course to follow would be to take the private members' hour today.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, as far as we in the Social Credit party are concerned, we would be quite happy to proceed as the government house leader has suggested.

Mr. Nielsen: Naturally.

An hon. Member: Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Howard: No, there is not. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we proceed to the normal business that arises at five o'clock today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills.

BOUNDARIES

QUEBEC AND NEWFOUNDLAND—SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO STUDY LABRADOR LINE

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe) moved:

> That in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of appointing a committee to study the matter of the Labrador boundaries between the province of Quebec and the province of Newfoundland.

[Translation]

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion I am introducing is quite simple and contains few specifications, precisely in order to be well received by all and to meet the wish of all members of the house. Its purpose is to ask the government to consider the advisability of setting up a committee to study the determination of Labrador boundaries between Quebec and Newfoundland.

At this time, borders between these two provinces are vague and indefinite. As a matter of fact, in many places, they are not defined clearly enough. On the other hand, elsewhere, I feel that they are against all logic, against all the principles of geography and anthropography, that is, against all the laws of hydrography, mapping and demography. They also run counter to the laws of industrial development.

Mr. Speaker, that is the source, the cause of internal and external problems.

We merely request the setting up of a committee, leaving to the government the choice of the type of investigation committee or commission. We do not wish to start a debate on the type of committee or commission in question. That is left to the government. We would simply like the government to study the matter, because there is a point of conflict, problems are being raised and we merely ask the government to take the matter into consideration.

We believe that is an extremely important problem for Newfoundland and Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not labour the point, because I think no member of this house should object to a request to set up a committee in such general terms as those we suggested. Furthermore, we are convinced that no hon. member can object to a study of the matter, especially in view of the fact that it is a point of argument.

Therefore, I ask the house to accept our suggestion to set up a committee, leaving it to the government to decide what kind of committee or commission would be appropriate.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). It is time a committee was set up so that a final agreement might be reached to mark the boundaries of Labrador, and more particularly the territory belonging to Quebec and the one belonging to Newfoundland.

It is acknowledged that this problem has been outstanding for many years, and if the province of Quebec lost part of Labrador, it is probably because the government of the time, the Taschereau government, failed to send competent lawyers to London to plead Quebec's cause. It is found now that this part of Canada is very rich, that it constitutes a mining empire, with a tremendous power potential, perhaps the greatest in the world. Some time ago, the Newfoundland and Quebec premiers initiated negotiations. I note that the Quebec premier seems ready to yield to the requirements and demands of the Newfoundland government.

I know that Mr. Smallwood has his own interests to defend, that he is trying to keep this territory and take as much as possible for himself. But I think that the Quebec premier should be adamant and not yield, so that Quebec might regain as much as possible of that valuable territory.

If a committee was established, experts, geographers, technicians from the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys as well as the two premiers involved could be summoned in order to reach an agreement of sorts.

Mr. Chairman, before I resume my seat I should like to express the hope that the motion of the hon. member for Lapointe will be carried because I am convinced that it is logical.

I further hope that the Quebec premier will adopt a firm attitude since all his people stand behind him just like Mr. Smallwood has the full support of his province.

In my opinion, it is important that the Quebec premier should not accept a compromise which would be unfavourable to his province. That is what we fear in the province of Quebec, and I would be most happy if our premier were to take immediate and firm action so that our province could recuperate as much as possible of that territory which, morally speaking, belongs to us.

[Text]

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, when I first looked at this motion my immediate impulse was to raise a point of order. But upon observing that it only asks this house to express an opinion, and since in a free country free people should be able to express opinions on any matter, I felt that perhaps it would not be worth while to take up the time of the house with points of order. But even if the rules permit a debate of this kind, there is still the question of the propriety of considering certain courses of action. This question of propriety is tied in with responsible behaviour in this house, which in turn determines the image of parliament which we create in the public mind.

A few days ago parliament used up private members' hour debating a motion which was directed to the consideration of the advisability of buying a house which had already been bought. While that may have been permissible under our rules, I doubt very much whether it was a proper use of the time of this parliament and that we enhanced the image of parliament by using this time for that purpose. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the particular motion before us now is of the same order of futility, because it seeks to debate the advisability of setting up a committee to study something which has already been studied, and not only studied but brought to a final conclusion, which is binding on all parties concerned. Certainly we will not enhance the image of parliament in the mind of the public if we spend another hour today discussing a matter which has already been settled and finalized when there is so much other business to be done and 50 or more private members' motions are on the order paper awaiting debate.

If this debate is not helpful to parliament, the question then arises: What purpose does it serve? Does it serve the cause of the constituents of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire)? Does it serve the cause of the province of Quebec or the province of Newfoundland? Does it serve the cause of Canada? Does it serve the cause of democracy? I propose to show that it serves none of these purposes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Byrne: It is political.

Mr. Carter: Well, I do not want to impute motives because I think that is against the rules of the house. I was interested to note that the hon. member for Lapointe advanced no reason at all as to why this motion should be discussed. However the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) was a little more specific about his motivation. I think we should be very clear as to what this motion asks us to do. In the first place it asks us to consider the advisability of a course of action, namely to set up a committee to study the boundary line between two provinces. The key word here is "advisability". In other words, we are to consider the advisability of the federal government poking its nose into provincial affairs.

The hon. member for Lapointe has prided himself on being the champion of provincial autonomy. On many occasions he has been very vociferous when he felt that provincial rights and autonomy were being violated. What a surprising somersault he has performed today in taking the very opposite course and asking us to consider the advisability of directing the government to interfere in provincial matters.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, my intentions have already been dealt with.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. Will the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) state his point of privilege.

Mr. Gregoire: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My intentions or my actions have been dealt with, and I have been charged with making a somersault in this house with this motion. I think this is a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I cannot construe the hon. member's argument as a point of privilege. I think there are two possibilities open to him. He could when he speaks refute the arguments presented by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter), but as he has already spoken he can ask unanimous consent of the house to do so after the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo has finished, or he can make any explanation he wishes to make at that time. The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo.

Mr. Carter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was pointing out the paramount inconsistency of the hon. member for Lapointe in bringing a motion of this kind before parliament for debate. What would he say if some member proposed a motion to set up a committee to investigate education in the provinces, or to study health matters in the provinces? Would he be in agreement with that?

Mr. Gregoire: No.

Mr. Carter: Then how can he be in agreement with respect to other matters which are primarily of provincial concern and of no concern whatever of this house? What would this committee do, Mr. Speaker? Would it just study the matter and then have their studies evaporate into thin air?

Mr. Gregoire: That is for you and the Liberal party to do.

Mr. Carter: Is this committee supposed to make reports and recommendations? What good would there be in just carrying out a study if the study was not to result in further action? What kind of study would this committee carry out?

Mr. Gregoire: A serious one.

Mr. Carter: Would it just review the old legal arguments all over again, which have been debated a number of times?

Mr. Gregoire: Where?

Mr. Carter: I will tell you in time; just wait and listen.

Mr. Gregoire: When?

Mr. Carter: I would remind my hon. friend that this question was studied by the judicial committee of the privy council in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gregoire: That is in England.

An hon. Member: Get up on your feet.

Mr. Carter: Yes, that is true, it is in England. It is also the final court of appeal for disputes between member countries of the commonwealth. I would also point out to my hon. friend that this particular body is so highly regarded in all the provinces of Canada, and particularly in Quebec, that even to this day they have preferred to have it handle disputes between provinces rather than repatriate the constitution and have such disputes settled by this parliament.

We must ask ourselves what effect the adoption of this motion would have on our judicial procedure. Would there ever be any finality to judicial decisions if every time someone disagreed with them parliament could pass a motion asking for further studies? What about the situation which arises when we set up arbitration procedures and appoint mediators to act in industrial disputes? It is the same principle, exactly. The hon. member said, in introducing his remarks, that the decision handed down by the judicial council was vague.

Mr. Gregoire: I never said that.

Mr. Carter: Oh, yes. I wrote the words down. He said the decision was vague and the boundary line was vague.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, I never said that. I said the boundaries referred to in the decision were vague.

Mr. Carter: All right. I will accept the hon. member's correction. But if he will sit down I will show him that the boundary line is not vague. I am reading from a book entitled "Newfoundland" by R. H. Tait which is available in the library. Under the heading "The Final Award" appears this paragraph:

> The boundary between Canada and Newfoundland in the Labrador peninsula is a line drawn due north from the eastern boundary of the bay or harbour of Blanc Sablon as far as the 52nd degree of north latitude thence westward along that parallel until it reaches the Romaine river, and then northward along the left or east bank of that river and its headwaters to their source—

Is that vague? The paragraph goes on:

> —and thence due north to the crest of the watershed of the rivers flowing into the Atlantic ocean until it reaches cape Chidley.

I ask the hon. member what is vague about that?

Mr. Gregoire: Everything.

Mr. Carter: It is vague only to people who cannot understand.

Both parties to that dispute agreed to accept the decision, and not only to accept it but to accept it as final and binding. Canada was one of those parties. To open this question for revision would imply bad faith on Canada's part. What would Canada's word be worth, then? What kind of image of Canada would we be creating in the minds of people abroad?

I wish to point out something else for the benefit of the hon. member. The boundary line between Newfoundland and mainland Canada is embodied in the terms of union which I hold in my hand. For the benefit of the hon. member and of others I should like to read the first two terms of this agreement.

An hon. Member: Read term 29.

Mr. Carter: I will come to term 29, but not today. Here is term 1 which appears under the subheading "Union".

> On, from, and after the coming into force of these terms (hereinafter referred to as the date of union), Newfoundland shall form part of Canada and shall be a province thereof to be called and known as the province of Newfoundland.

Term 2—and this is the important one—reads:

> The province of Newfoundland shall comprise the same territory as at the date of union, that is to say the island of Newfoundland and the islands adjacent thereto, the coast of Labrador as delimited in the report delivered by the judicial committee of His Majesty's Privy Council on the first day of March, 1927, and approved by His Majesty in His Privy Council on the twenty second day of March, 1927, and the islands adjacent to the said coast of Labrador.

The hon. member may not realize that these terms of union constitute an agreement between two sovereign states. This document is not something that can be changed by unilateral action. It is in the nature of a treaty between sovereign states. It is also a part of the British North America Act, which is the Canadian constitution. What kind of a picture would we be creating if the attitude implied by the hon. member were to be taken toward agreements and treaties of such a nature? What would be the picture of Canada abroad if we treated such a document as a scrap of paper?

Here I would point out another inconsistency on the part of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). He has always been complaining most vociferously, indeed, vehemently at times, that English speaking Canada has not lived up to the terms of the British North America Act. This, he says, has been the cause of part of the trouble between French speaking and English speaking Canada. Now the hon. member himself wishes to scrap part of the British North America Act. Is this consistent? This is also part of Canada's constitution, every portion of which has the same value as any other. Perhaps the hon. member takes the position that the parts of it which are disagreeable to him and to those he represents in Quebec should be scrapped, while those other parts with which he does happen to agree should be regarded as sacred and nothing should be done to change them. The hon. member cannot have it both ways. Either the constitution is binding on all, or it is not, and if it is binding on all it is binding on Quebec as well as on the other provinces.

I think the hon. member is doing a disservice to his constituents, to the people of Quebec and to Canada when he brings forward a motion of this kind.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must interrupt the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo to advise him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the hon. member have unanimous consent of the house to continue?

Mr. Gregoire: On condition that I would have the right to answer the charges made by him.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gregoire: Then no unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hon. member for Lapointe will have the right to make any rebuttal he wishes to make when he winds up the debate on second reading.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it looked like we were having a bit of a family squabble for a while, and I am sure that is primarily what it is. I cannot help but agree with the last remarks of the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) when he pointed out what is becoming more obvious every day, namely that when someone from Quebec becomes involved in anything in the house or proposes anything in the house they want to have it both ways. They do not want anybody else to say anything at all about what happens in Quebec, but they want the federal government to intervene on their behalf whenever they have a problem with some other part of the nation. As far as I am concerned this desire to have it both ways should cease and desist.

I am not so much concerned at this stage about this family squabble with regard to where the boundary should go, if it should go anywhere. I only rise to say that if the motion passes and if the government is going to consider the advisability of establishing a committee to deal, as the motion says, with the particular boundaries to which it refers, then I do not think the terms of reference of that committee should be so narrow as those contained in the motion proposed by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). We have other boundary problems in this country in addition to this one and they too deserve extensive investigation.

Mr. Gregoire: Order.

Mr. Howard: I think particularly of my own home community and that area encompassing northwestern British Columbia and the Panhandle of Alaska.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think that the terms of this motion are confined to one part of the country. If my hon. friend wants to raise another matter I submit he will have to present his own motion. I think he is completely out of order in bringing other subjects into the discussion.

Mr. Nielsen: It concerns boundaries.

Mr. Howard: Again we have an indication of this narrowmindedness.

Mr. Gregoire: You bring your own motion.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member says I should bring my problem forward by way of another motion. I intend to do it by tacking on an amendment to the motion now before us. If that will satisfy my friend, perhaps he will cease interrupting me and let me continue.

Mr. Gregoire: You are out of order.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you would protect me from these chatterings that are going on behind me.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask for your ruling on that point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I would hope the hon. member for Skeena would stay as closely as possible with the motion before the house, but I should point out to the hon. member for Lapointe that, with reference to interruptions during a debate, Beauchesne has this to say in citation 126, paragraph 2, found on page 114:

> The rule is well known that interruptions should not be tolerated.

I am sure the hon. member for Lapointe will want to observe the rules of the house.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have asked for your ruling on the question, can the hon. member discuss a subject other than the one set forth in the motion? Can he discuss anything under the motion as presented? I ask for your ruling on that point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I have already asked the hon. member for Skeena to adhere as closely as possible to the motion before the house and I am sure he will do that.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, before I was interrupted this last time I was about to say that I would be very happy to comply with your ruling and that I should stick as closely as possible to the motion now before us. This is what I intend to do, by pointing out that the motion is far too narrow in its concept and I intend to move an amendment to it. I want to lead up to the amendment by making some preliminary remarks about the content of the amendment I intend to move. I referred earlier to the boundary along the Alaskan Panhandle between the state of Alaska and the province of British Columbia. If one wants to see a definition of a boundary that is vague and meaningless then all he has to do is read the agreement made between the United Kingdom and Russia in 1825, I believe, defining the line of demarcation between Russian territory and what was then British territory. If anything is vague and meaningless, that agreement is.

Finally however an international commission was established which arrived at a decision in 1903 dictated primarily by the foreign policy of the United States. This decision resulted in Canada's coming out second best and having its interests sold completely down the river by the chairman of that commission, which met in London. I do not intend to go into the background detail of that matter. I merely wish to point out that because of that decision, based upon an extremely vague definition of where the boundary should be, a decision written incidentally by people who had never been there and did not know the region at all, it is high time for this particular boundary problem to be studied carefully so that British Columbia can get a fair and square deal with regard to the boundaries involved.

There is also an unresolved boundary problem between the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario. It concerns the boundary between those two provinces in relation to the international boundary along the St. Lawrence river, and it adversely affects the native Indian people who live in that area. Founded upon this brief explanation I should like to move an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). I must apologize, Mr. Speaker, for having only one copy. I prepared it here in the house and was not able to make more. The amendment is as follows:

That the motion be amended by adding thereto the following:

"and the matter of the boundary between the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario at the international boundary, and the matter of the international boundary along the Alaska Panhandle between the state of Alaska and the province of British Columbia.

In essence the amendment embraces the two additional problems to which I referred earlier. If it was in order, as it apparently was, for the hon. member for Lapointe and the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo to argue that the parliament of Canada should consider the establishment of a committee to deal with the boundary between two of the provinces, then I simply say that surely it is even more in order to extend the terms of that committee to deal with international boundaries which are solely the concern of the parliament of Canada. Let us do that so that the northern part of British Columbia can be put on a more equitable footing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The motion before us asks that the government give consideration to the advisability of appointing a committee to study the matter of the Labrador boundaries between the province of Quebec and the province of Newfoundland. In my view the motion is not one to appoint a committee, but rather to appoint a committee for the consideration of one specific thing. I believe that the amendment presented by the hon. member for Skeena enlarges the intent of the motion before us and I would therefore rule it out of order.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. At the beginning of his remarks the hon. member for Skeena made a remark, I think, which I as a member of the Progressive Conservative party cannot let pass without putting the record straight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): If the hon. member wishes to refute anything said by another hon. member in debate, then he will have to wait until his turn comes to speak. I do not believe an attempt to refute an argument constitutes a question of privilege.

Mr. Ricard: With all due deference to Your Honour, I think I have the right to rise on a question of privilege because the hon. member for Skeena implied a number of things about members from the province of Quebec. I think it is my duty to stand up here and refute what he has said.

Mr. Howard: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The right hon. gentleman who is the Leader of the Opposition once used a phrase, in reference to someone else, "eggshell sensibilities". I am sure that is what the hon. member is now exhibiting when he attempts to rise on a question of privilege concerning my remarks. This exemplifies what has been said about the people coming from Quebec, "You cannot have it both ways; you have to have it one way, and that is that."

Mr. Ricard: This is my point of privilege. I say that we have to have respect for those who do not share our point of view. We have been sent here by the people of Quebec, and we are sick and tired of being pointed out as some sort of bird of which there is only one species. As one from the province of Quebec, I am sick and tired of this, and I want to say so in the House of Commons. It is about time we were respected as we are supposed to be, because we represent the opinions and aspirations of the province of Quebec. We are tired of being accused by members like the one who just took his seat of trying to have everything our own way. This is not what we want. We want to place our views in front of this house, and nothing more. We recognize that others have a right to their opinion, just as we have a right to ours.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of privilege, I should like to endorse most heartily the remarks made by the hon. member.

An hon. Member: That is not a point of privilege.

Mr. Mackasey: If he is in order, then I am in order too. I come from the same province and I want to endorse his remarks.

Mr. Winch: When the Speaker is standing up, you should sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. An attempt to refute an argument does not constitute a question of privilege. Neither refuting an argument made by an hon. member of the house nor taking the opportunity to agree with an hon. member constitutes a question of privilege. When the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot arose, I pointed out to him that he had no question of privilege in refuting the hon. member's statement, and I point out to the hon. member now that he has no question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my brief remarks on such a ticklish question as that of the boundaries between the province of Quebec and the province of Newfoundland, I say right now to the house that I do not pretend to be an expert.

However, as representative of the Saguenay county, which has the largest surface area in Canada, except the Northwest Territories, because it comprises 375,000 square miles and contains a wealth of natural resources, specially iron ore, it is imperative that I say a few words. This county borders on several points of the province of Newfoundland, as varied as they are difficult.

I should also add that the railway line which stretches out from Seven Islands to Schefferville crosses the border into Newfoundland at several points. I often did it on foot and even with snowshoes.

Again last fall, when I was in Blanc-Sablon, the terminal point of the Quebec Labrador coast, I was quite astonished to see an ordinary rock, bearing no inscription, thrown there haphazardly, as it were, indicating the frontier between the two provinces.

Mr. Speaker, there is no official dividing line between the two provinces. This is not a new problem. It has been the subject of many an article, but to no avail unfortunately.

I think that instead of setting up a committee to consider the matter of frontiers in this vast territory, as suggested by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), it would be better to appoint a commission such as the international frontier commission, for instance.

That commission comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. It has one representative from Canada and one from the United States.

Mr. Gregoire: What will the United States be doing there?

Mr. Blouin: I would ask the hon. member to wait a moment.

That commission is concerned especially with the boundary between Canada and the United States. It does not deal with the boundaries between the provinces of the federal territories.

However, there are other commissions. For instance, the general surveyor of Canada is often called upon to determine, on the spot, the boundary lines between various provinces or the common boundary between the federal territories and the provinces. That is how ad hoc commissions are set up in each case.

The general surveyor of Canada has been asked to help mark the boundaries between British Columbia and Alberta, between Alberta and Saskatchewan, between Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and between Ontario and Manitoba. In each of these cases, a tripartite commission was set up, with a representative of each of the provinces involved and one of the federal government, which in such cases is always the general surveyor of Canada.

In other cases, where boundaries between a province and a federal territory are involved, it is a bipartite commission. That was the case of British Columbia and Yukon, of Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories, as well as of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories.

The cost of marking those boundaries is generally divided in two equal shares in the case of a bipartite commission.

When tripartite commissions were established, that is, when two provinces wanted to settle their boundary problems by asking the federal government to participate, in some instances, the federal government paid a certain amount; in some cases also, many years ago, the federal government did not contribute anything, but acted as arbitrator.

In the case of the frontier between Manitoba and Saskatchewan, the federal government recently took part in the work involved and paid one third of the total cost, the two provinces concerned paying one third each.

This participation by the federal government has never been imposed by the general surveyor of Canada; in other words, the federal government waits for a formal invitation before undertaking any such work.

As far as Quebec is concerned, the problem of the Labrador frontier is not the only one creating a conflict. The question of the islands in lake St. François is still to be settled definitely between Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that some federal ministers of mines and technical surveys have in the past offered to help the provinces of Ontario and Quebec to solve this problem and I do not believe that either the federal government, Quebec or Ontario have received any answer in that respect.

As far as the Quebec-Labrador boundary is concerned, the federal government has never been invited to participate in any way in that delimitation. On the maps issued by the federal government, the boundary line indicated is that of the level of the lands, according to a judgment rendered in 1927 by the London privy council. On the maps issued by the province of Quebec, that boundary is never shown—at least on those issued during the last 20 or 30 years—and in the corner of the map, we usually find that reference:

The boundary line between Quebec and Newfoundland is not shown on that map, with good reason.

I believe that footnote was added on the maps published by the province of Quebec at the special request of the former premier, Hon. Maurice Duplessis.

If you keep to the decision rendered by the privy council in London in 1927, you would, of course, have to determine on the spot the exact position of that boundary line between what is commonly called Labrador and Quebec. You could then proceed according to one of the following methods:

First, the governments of Quebec and Newfoundland could each appoint a commissioner and agree beforehand to be bound by their findings. In the event of conflict concerning certain points of the boundary, they could refer the question to a consultant or an arbitrator who would be neither from Quebec nor from Newfoundland. This consultant could be a recognized firm of engineers and surveyors, or the surveyor general of Canada.

Second, an independent organization in Quebec or Newfoundland could simply be asked to do the work.

Third, a three-member commission could be created which would include a representative of the province of Quebec, one of Newfoundland and a third one from the federal government. As I say, that is how most provinces proceeded.

Even though I have no idea how much it would cost, I should like to say that modern land-surveying techniques would make it easy to draw a line in the territory concerned. Satisfactory results could be achieved by means of aerial photography and photographic surveying.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must assure the house that we have no intention of taking something away from Newfoundland to give it to Quebec or vice-versa. We just want a commission constituted as I have just indicated, to determine once and for all the boundaries of those two provinces which contribute so much to the economy of the whole country.

The boundary line between those two provinces has, as I said, often been mentioned. I have travelled along those frontiers on many occasions, and I have never seen any official boundary line.

If we refer to the revised statutes of 1952, chapter 11—

[Text]

The British North America Act, 1871, 34-35 Victoria chapter 28, an act respecting the establishment of provinces in the Dominion of Canada, section 3:

The parliament of Canada may from time to time, with the consent of the legislature of any province of the said dominion, increase, diminish or otherwise alter the limits of such province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed by the said legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby.

[Translation]

As it is getting late, I again suggest that a commission similar to the one I mentioned a moment ago be set up to determine once and for all the boundary line between those two very important provinces.

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock I must advise the house that the hour for consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I would like to ask the acting house leader if it is the intention of the government to proceed with interim supply first thing tomorrow and, on the conclusion of that, to deal with supplementary estimates?

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, the suggestions made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) are substantially correct. If any changes in the proposals for tomorrow are made they will be communicated to the leaders of the respective taken at Elliot Lake?

Mr. Gregoire: May I ask the acting house leader, if we do not finish these two items by six o'clock tomorrow when will the house have the opportunity to complete its work?

Mr. MacNaught: I am afraid I could not give an answer to that question without further consultation with my colleagues.

Mr. Monteith: You certainly live from hand to mouth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock, and pursuant to special order made this day, this house stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

It being two minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 26, 1964

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHURCHILL—REPORTED ADDRESS BY MINISTER ON DEFENCE WHITE PAPER

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege which affects parliament. I will state it immediately. My question of privilege refers to a report in the newspaper, confirmed by outside sources this morning, that the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Drury) appeared at the united services institute meeting in Montreal last night and delivered an address called "Some aspects of the white paper on defence". Unless the minister is prepared immediately to deny that he was present at that meeting and did not talk on the white paper, I will have to proceed with my question of privilege. As the minister does not deny his presence there and the subject of his address, may I draw to the attention—

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I assume I am supposed to interrupt the hon. gentleman to make a denial. I was present last night at the institute meeting, as the hon. member has suggested. I did make an address, the text of which I have upstairs and would be glad to furnish to the hon. member if he wishes to see it. I pointed out that some time ago I had agreed to speak to the institute in Montreal, in the hope that by that time the white paper would have been published. The chairman of the institute meeting made it quite clear—of course the hon. member was not there—that I could not and would not talk on what had been advertised as the subject of the address because the white paper had not yet been tabled in the house, and consequently I would not talk to the white paper and the advertised subject of the address unfortunately could not be adhered to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand the statement that—

Mr. Roxburgh: You would never understand.

Mr. Monteith: Well, who are you to talk?

Mr. Churchill: Grit arrogance shows itself here every day with interruptions and the prevention of freedom of speech. I fail to understand the minister's statement that he would not "talk to the white paper." He has not said that he did not refer to the white paper or its contents, and for him to do so is an infringement of the rights of parliament. The minister appeared at a meeting of the united services institute in Montreal, with an armed guard standing outside the door—

An hon. Member: With a tommy gun.

Mr. Churchill: With a tommy gun, I am informed—and at this meeting within closed doors, according to this report not categorically denied by the minister, there was a discussion on the part of the minister of matters referred to in the white paper.

The white paper, Mr. Speaker, as with any other announcement of government policy, should be presented to the House of Commons first before being disclosed to the general public.

An hon. Member: Or any part of it.

Mr. Churchill: There is no excuse for a minister of the crown using special information that he has with regard to a major matter of policy and disclosing it to any group in the country, the united services organization or any group whatsoever. This is an infringement of the rights of parliament. It is typical of the approach of the Liberal party to the rights of parliament—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: —and it is on that ground that I rise on this question of privilege. This is an instance where a minister of the crown should make a complete and full statement to the house immediately—

An hon. Member: He already has.

Mr. Churchill: —which he has not yet done; and if he has disclosed the contents of the white paper and has thereby violated his oath of cabinet secrecy he should resign.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I have not seen the newspaper account to which the hon. member has made reference. I do not know, therefore, what I am alleged to have said. Clearly the hon. member who has raised the question of privilege does not know what I did say. He was not there.

Mr. Churchill: Would I have been permitted entrance, with an armed guard?

Mr. Drury: I can say that I made it abundantly clear that the House of Commons has the right and privilege of being the first to receive announcements of government policy, and that I respect this and adhere to it. Consequently, in spite of the invitation issued to me some time previously to speak on the white paper, I made it clear that I would be unable to do so last night. I could not, would not and did not. As has been done by the Minister of National Defence on a number of previous occasions, I was able to deal with some of the historical background leading up to our present defence situation, but I can say quite categorically to the house and to the hon. member that I did not disclose or make any statements with regard to new policy or about to be new policy which will be apparent in the white paper.

Mr. Bell: How about the armed guard?

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Defence Production. Can the minister tell the house whether it is true that an armed member of Canada's armed forces was placed on guard at the united services institute in Montreal, where the minister gave an innocuous address last night? If so, what was the purpose of that guard?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the united services institute in Montreal has no premises of its own. Through the facilities of the Quebec command of the army it was able to make use in the evening of the Quebec command headquarters on Atwater avenue. The normal patrolling arrangements for Quebec command headquarters at Atwater avenue were observed last night as they would be on any other day or at any other time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table two copies in English and in French of the white paper on defence. Additional copies are being made available immediately to all members of the house through the distribution office.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence and ask him whether it is the intention of the government to reappoint the committee on defence at an early date and, if so, whether it is also his intention to refer to that committee for study and report the white paper which was tabled today.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government to move to set up that committee soon after the Easter recess, and I am sure the committee will wish to examine the white paper and the policy matters referred to in it.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AND WELLAND CANAL—STATEMENT ON TOLL INCREASES

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): As I indicated to the right hon. gentleman opposite yesterday, I am in a position now to give a very brief statement about tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway. I am making the statement now because parliament, we rather hope, may be in adjournment for a little while and certain things may have to happen during the adjournment. I should like the house to know what may take place.

The St. Lawrence seaway authority has advised me that the authority and the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation of the United States expect shortly to reach tentative agreement on a notice to be published for the purpose of public hearings on the subject of the review of seaway tolls. This notice will be issued as soon as it is available.

On December 23, 1963, the government of Canada and the government of the United States exchanged notes agreeing to repeal the suspension of tolls on the Welland canal effective April 1, 1964. The result of this action would have been to restore the level of tolls as they were established in 1959 by the previous administration.

The government has now decided not to reimpose the tolls on the Welland canal at the present time. Accordingly, Canada and the United States have agreed to exchange further notes to withhold the reimposition of Welland canal tolls, and in doing so the government reserved its freedom of action to meet future developments.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this action on the part of the government is most commendable. This is another example of retreat by this government. In December, with precipitate haste, they rushed in to announce that Welland canal tolls, which we had removed, were going to be reimposed on April 1. They have had to retreat from that position. I know everyone will be very happy that the government has once more followed the policy of the administration of which I had the honour to be the leader.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): We are pleased, Mr. Speaker, that a decision has been made not to reimpose tolls at this time. However, the minister gave no indication of something that has been linked with the whole question of tolls, and that is the idea of the twinning of the canal and the financing of both the seaway and the proposed twinning. It seems to me that he might have gone so far in his statement as to give us something of this background material. I think he would have to agree that since there has been no ruling, and since he reserved the right of the government to reimpose tolls on some future occasion, we still have what you might call a lobbying or pressure situation upon all parties. I know the minister will regret this as much as anyone else, and that is the reason I think we should expect, either today or in the near future, an enlarged statement taking into account the financial position of the St. Lawrence seaway authority and the expenditures for twinning the canal.

EFFECT OF NEW WHARFAGE RATES ON FERRY SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question based on an answer he gave to the house on March 16 regarding the regulations relating to wharfage rates. As reported at page 951 of Hansard the minister said:

> But, at the same time, I asked to have all the others looked into to see if there were any anomalies of any sort and, if there are, they will be corrected.

I wonder whether the minister has completed his examination of these regulations with respect to wharfage rates and discovered any anomalies and, if so, will they be corrected?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated some days afterward that as far as the proposed new rates with respect to motor cars and trucks going on to ferries were concerned, it was thought better to revert to the regulations which had existed prior to this, and that action was being taken to that effect. Just before coming into the house I signed a recommendation to that effect, which I am sure will receive the approval of the governor in council because the decision in principle had already been taken to approve them, and it was a mere matter of getting them properly drafted.

I think what the hon. gentleman probably has in mind are the regulations respecting wharfage so far as fishery products are concerned. An administrative problem was drawn to my attention, partly perhaps by the hon. gentleman drawing it to the attention of my department, and I do not think there is need for any change in the regulations. But there is certainly need for some clarification about the administration, and that is being proceeded with.

CONSTRUCTION OF ADDITIONAL FERRY FOR P.E.I. SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he is now in a position to answer the question I asked yesterday.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am a little disappointed to have to tell the hon. gentleman that it appears that some months will elapse before the government will be in a position to call for tenders, but I have asked that the utmost speed be exercised in this matter.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the minister's predecessor said in May of last year that he hoped tenders would be let before the end of the fiscal year, and in view of the fact that the Solicitor General made the statement later in July that he expected tenders to be let last fall, does the minister's statement mean that this program has been decelerated rather than accelerated?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, sir, it does not mean that; but, as the hon. gentleman knows very well, it is frightfully important in these matters to design these vessels properly. I can assure the house that I am nearly as anxious as the hon. member, and I may say I am being prodded constantly by the Solicitor General in this matter. Everything I can do to speed up the project will be done.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of prods, I should like to ask the minister if he has received a copy of a resolution passed unanimously by the Prince Edward Island legislature urging the immediate construction of this vessel and immediate construction of the causeway, and would he indicate the tenor of his reply?

Mr. Pickersgill: Both matters are receiving immediate attention.

PUBLICATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In the regrettable and unavoidable absence of the Prime Minister I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. On behalf of the whole house, may I express the hope the Prime Minister is getting along all right. I do not know who the Acting Prime Minister is at the moment.

What is the present position with regard to prospective legislation to implement certain provisions of the O'Leary commission report; and will that legislation be brought in shortly after we come back from the Easter recess?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I should like to thank the right hon. gentleman for the solicitude he has expressed on behalf of the whole house for the Prime Minister. I will be happy to convey it to the Prime Minister.

In so far as the question is concerned as to when we will reach the resolutions, of which notices were given by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, I have not had a chance to consult the house leader, the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance about the precise order of business that is contemplated when we resume our sessions after whatever recess we may have at Easter. But I would think the government would be very anxious to complete all the business connected or associated with the budget as quickly as it could.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know whether the hon. gentleman will be able to answer my next question, but I would like to ask him whether he would ascertain—if he does not know—whether the co-ordinator, if I use the right title, had any authority from the government to advise any of the magazine owners and publishers that there was no possibility now of legislation to implement the O'Leary commission report being brought in before the latter part of June or July?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not know the answer to that question. I am not quite sure who the right hon. gentleman means by the co-ordinator, but if he would like to become a little more personal in these references then perhaps I could make suitable inquiries.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I understood we are paying $25,000 a year to Mr. Kent to occupy that position, and he was so described in the press, and that it came from the government that he is the co-ordinator.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the right hon. gentleman, with that respect for public servants he has shown throughout his public life, has now said what he wanted to say.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And with the same respect to ministers of the crown sitting opposite, may I ask the minister whether he will ascertain whether the government is in the position today of being about to retreat from its declared intention regarding foreign publications?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure about the grammatical structure of that question, if it was a question. I will examine it in Hansard and if it is capable of being answered I will try to answer it.

TRADE

AUTOMOBILE PARTS—REPORTED REFUSAL OF U.S. SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES TO SHIP TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question arising out of the comment that has appeared on the very long answer he gave on Tuesday in connection with the refusal of United States subsidiary companies to ship automotive parts to China. Is the minister prepared to make a statement, in effect to answer the charges that he was probably or could have been lying in his remarks?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am most grateful to the hon. member for Port Arthur for relieving me of the necessity of raising a question of privilege. As I understood the front page story in the Toronto Globe and Mail this morning, Mr. Grinkus of the Gain Import Company is charging me with misleading the house, and he has charged me with telling a lie.

May I read what I said as recorded at page 1398 of Hansard for March 24. The particular charge Mr. Grinkus has made, according to the newspaper article, is that I had denied I had received complaints from his company, and I should like to read what I said on Tuesday. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked me a question; first, if I had received any complaints from Canadian exporters with regard to the refusal of automobile companies in Canada which are subsidiaries of United States automobile manufacturers to supply automotive parts to China. This was my reply:

As I said yesterday, I was unaware of any complaints but I found that last summer I had received a complaint from one exporter, whose name I believe was Mr. Ginkus—

Perhaps he was annoyed because Hansard misspelled his name, which should have been "Grinkus".

—of Gain Import Company Limited, who was unable to obtain a supply of certain types of automotive parts for export to mainland China.

It is clear from Hansard that I did refer specifically to the complaint he registered.

WHEAT AND FLOUR—CONTINUATION OF SHIPMENTS THROUGH EASTERN PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Since the date of the seaway opening has just been announced and activity in the St. Lawrence is beginning, will the minister guarantee that the grain shipments through Halifax and Saint John, which have been of tremendous help to these ports this winter, will continue? Will he further guarantee that the flour shipments to Cuba, which were promised to the ports of Halifax and Saint John, will take place this summer through those ports?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall be glad to inquire into this matter and perhaps, after the recess, give a report. During the recess I shall be meeting with the chairman of the wheat board.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask a supplementary question into which the Minister of Trade and Commerce might also look. Will he endeavour to assure a larger share of the flour shipments through these two ports which the hon. gentleman mentioned because, I am advised, this would mean the hiring of 125 men per ship instead of the 10 or 12 men hired to load grain?

Mr. Sharp: I will look into this, too.

Mr. Bell: Will the minister now give us the assurance that there will not be any redirection of the flour shipments, as promised by the former minister of transport, from Halifax and Saint John through Montreal or some other port?

Mr. Sharp: I do not know whether the hon. gentleman expects any more information than I have given. Lacking information I cannot give this assurance, but I shall certainly inquire and see that, so far as possible, there is fair treatment to all ports in Canada.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROGRAM "THE OPEN GRAVE"—EXPRESSION OF VIEWS FOLLOWING PRESENTATION

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I rise on a question of privilege affecting all hon. members of the house. On Monday last the Leader of the Opposition focused the attention of this house and, indeed, of the whole nation on a program which was shown on television last night, namely "The Open Grave." Had it not been for this service provided by the right hon. gentleman I know that I for one and, I have no doubt, many others would have missed what turned out to be a most excellent program; and I feel all hon. members and indeed the nation as a whole owe a debt of gratitude to the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I should like to ask the Secretary of State if he does not feel that this C.B.C. production was a mark of denigration reflecting on the devout followers of the Christian faith.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): It is quite clear now that the program was not "a flagrant, scandalous and sacrilegious insult to the majority of Canadians" and that those who criticized the program without even having seen it acted, in my view, in a most irresponsible way; and that the government was very wise indeed not to interfere with the decision of the C.B.C.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): What I said the other day was that I had not seen the program, and no one else had; but I had the fullest information as to the nature of the program, and I am unchanged in the expression of the view that I made the other day, despite the self righteous words of the hon. gentleman.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State?

Is it true that, after having seen the videotape of the program "The Open Grave", the C.B.C. decided at the last moment to cut certain scenes from the play and to add others, with the result that there was a lack of continuity at certain times?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything concerning the allegations of the hon. member. I shall inquire of the authorities of the C.B.C. and reply in due course.

[Text]

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Could the Secretary of State inform the house whether the national religious advisory council to the C.B.C. saw a preview of the film "The Open Grave" before the decision was made to put the program on the air?

Mr. Lamontagne: This question was asked the other day. I have not yet received an answer from the C.B.C. with regard to it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Secretary of State is reporting to the C.B.C. the views expressed in parliament on this matter, will he include in that report the fact that many of us in this house would like to commend the corporation on the presentation of an allegory which some of us think will help people today to understand certain age-old forces.

Mr. Lamontagne: I will be glad indeed to do so.

Mr. Caron: Before we go ahead, I want to say that the public address system does not appear to be working.

An hon. Member: It is working now.

SHIPPING

HOWE SOUND, B.C.—OIL LEAKAGE FROM SUNKEN BARGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise what steps his department is taking to investigate and deal with oil leakage from a barge which has sunk in the entrance to Howe sound, on the west coast, which may endanger—

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, normally I would quite agree with what was said opposite about the order paper, but I am told that this barge is sunk in Howe sound and affects the whole—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, did you not say that this question should be on the order paper, and are you not the Speaker?

Mr. Starr: Whose barge is it?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite right; the Chair did say that this question should be put on the order paper, but I understand the minister rose on a question of urgency. If this question has to do with the blockage of shipping and navigation I think it is urgent.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to indicate to any hon. member that I was not perfectly willing to abide by the ruling of the Chair, and unless I have unanimous consent to give an answer to this question I shall take my seat.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, may I just say that the Minister of Transport does much better in the portfolio of prime minister than he does in his present one.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then I have unanimous consent—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: All right.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If I understood the house correctly I think it did give unanimous consent to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Then I call on the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Deachman: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of extreme urgency and deals with an oil leak which may immediately destroy wild life on the west coast, and tends to threaten tourist and recreational areas of considerable value. If immediate action is taken and the matter is dealt with it will prevent suffering to wildlife in the area and preserve a very valuable locality. I plead that the matter be dealt with now, and I submit it is urgent.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for his statement, and I am quite sure the minister thoroughly understands the problem by now.

QUEBEC—BRIEF RESPECTING WINTER NAVIGATION ON ST. LAWRENCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. Could he tell the house whether he has received the brief of the office of metropolitan Quebec concerning winter navigation?

I did not send the minister notice of this question, but could he tell us whether he will be in a position after the Easter recess to report to the house on the suggestions made by that office concerning winter navigation, which would be beneficial not only for the St. Lawrence river, but for the whole country and would have very few prejudicial effects on Atlantic ports.

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The hon. gentleman has opened up a very big question upon which I would not attempt to embark on orders of the day, and upon which he did not ask me to embark. I shall be glad to take the matter under consideration.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—TERMS OF REFERENCE OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister make any statement to this house, either now or before the prospective adjournment, in regard to the reported statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that satisfactory conditions have been worked out in respect of the operations of the United Nations force in Cyprus?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot do that, but I believe the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs might be able to clarify this point.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question I might read a short statement on the current situation in Cyprus.

General Gyani, who has been designated by the secretary general as commander of the United Nations peace keeping force, has now arrived in Cyprus from Geneva. As has been reported in the press, the Secretary of State for External Affairs had an opportunity to hold detailed discussions with General Gyani in Geneva concerning the operational role which the peace keeping force will undertake on the island. We understand that the advance party of the Swedish contingent will arrive in Cyprus today, to be followed shortly by elements of the Finnish and Irish contingents. Consequently it is expected that the secretary general will inform the security council, possibly tomorrow, that the United Nations force has become operational.

Yesterday it was announced that the Finnish ambassador to Sweden, Sakari Tuomioja, has been named by the secretary general as United Nations mediator on Cyprus. The governments of Cyprus, Greece, Turkey and Great Britain have agreed to the nomination of Mr. Tuomioja, and after consultations with the United Nations secretariat in New York this week end he is expected to arrive in Cyprus the middle of next week.

Inquiries of the Ministry

With respect to the terms of reference under which Mr. Tuomioja will carry out his functions on Cyprus, these were broadly defined in the security council resolution adopted on March 4. The relevant portion of the resolution calling for the appointment of a mediator reads as follows:

> The security council recommends further that the secretary general designate, in agreement with the government of Cyprus and the governments of Greece, Turkey and the United Kingdom, a mediator, who shall use his best endeavours with representatives of the communities and also with the aforesaid four governments, for the purpose of promoting a peaceful solution and an agreed settlement of the problem confronting Cyprus, in accordance with the charter of the United Nations, having in mind the well-being of the people of Cyprus as a whole and the preservation of international peace and security. The mediator shall report periodically to the secretary general on his efforts.

Thus it is apparent that the mediator is to be directly responsible to the secretary general. As in the case of the United Nations force, any directives from the secretary general to the force commander and additional information concerning the terms of reference for the mediator may be expected to be made known to the countries contributing to the United Nations force. However, the secretary general has made it clear that he does not feel it is in the best interests of law and order on the island for promoting a peaceful solution to make public details of the terms of reference.

It is apparent that the presence of the Canadian contingent as part of the United Nations peace keeping force on Cyprus has had a calming effect on the island. It is hoped that this influence will continue after the United Nations force becomes operational and elements of this force replace certain British forces who have been keeping the peace throughout the island. With the presence of the United Nations force commander on Cyprus and the anticipated arrival of the mediator within a few days, the task of maintaining and restoring law and order will commence, which it is hoped will make it possible for discussions to begin on seeking ways and means of bringing about reconciliation between the two communities.

SOCIAL INSURANCE

INQUIRIES RESPECTING DISTRIBUTION OF APPLICATION CARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Yesterday in the course of an answer to a question the minister said:

Inquiries of the Ministry

The obligation to register, or to apply for a social insurance number, applies to persons in insurable occupations normally covered under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Does the application of this obligation apply also to the citizens of the province of Quebec?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. While I am on my feet may I answer a number of questions asked on this subject yesterday by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

There has been no mailing of application forms directly to individuals, since the registration for social insurance numbers is being handled mainly through employers. Up to the present time I think almost two million social insurance number application forms have been sent to employers. These are being sent on a progressive basis to all employers who have employees who are either covered by unemployment insurance or who may become contributors to the proposed Canada pension plan.

Unemployment insurance legislation contains the only requirement for persons to register, but the government is soliciting the co-operation of employers in obtaining registration from the group not covered by unemployment insurance in order to facilitate the introduction of a proposed Canada pension plan. It is expected that employers and employees in the non-insured group will co-operate fully. This will obviously reduce the total cost of the operation and will eliminate in the future the necessity of approaching the many employers to twice register their working force.

In reply to the question by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, persons who are now employed or are about to enter employment and wish to obtain a social insurance number can make the necessary arrangements by applying directly in person or by mail to their national employment office.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would it not be possible for some of these forms to be made available in post offices, to which many people find their way a little more readily than to the national employment offices?

Mr. MacEachen: I will be glad to have that suggestion considered by the commission, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour with further reference to the matter of social insurance numbers, about which there were questions and answers a few minutes ago. In view of the fact that the Canadian Teachers Federation is urging its members not to fill out these forms because of what I think is a misunderstanding, because of the belief that this will enrol them in unemployment insurance, will the minister consider doing whatever public relations work is necessary so that this group of people, and there are many thousands of them across Canada, will understand what is being sought in this project?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall undertake to have officers of the commission get in touch with the officials of this federation. It ought to be made clear that the seeking of social insurance numbers is quite a separate matter, and is not related in any way to the question of the extension of coverage of the unemployment insurance system, which I think is at the root of the concern expressed by the teachers.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER CONSTRUCTION BONUS

On the orders of day:

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of recent representations from many people in the house building industry regarding the extension of the $500 winter building bonus, I wonder whether the minister has anything to report to the house or whether he has reached any decision on this matter.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, questions along this line have been asked by the hon. member for Ontario and the hon. member for Longueuil. I wish to advise the house that I have directed that final inspections under the winter house building program will take place on April 15 rather than March 31 as previously planned. While most housing units under the program will be substantially completed by March 31, the success of the program itself makes necessary this delay in inspections. Almost 35,000 housing units have qualified under the program, which has led to an unusual pressure on labour and materials as this substantial volume of housing reached the final stages.

It would not be the wish of the government to deny the incentive payment on the grounds of shortages arising from the success of the program itself. We think this change in the final inspection date will afford substantial relief, but I would like to emphasize in this connection that the government does not intend to postpone the final inspection date beyond April 15, and for that reason builders and others ought to make haste in completing these dwellings.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am assuming that the minister, in arriving at the decision to extend the final inspection date from March 31 to April 15, has had some estimate of the additional cost to the government. I wonder whether he could give us that estimate.

Mr. MacEachen: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, there will be an additional cost caused by the extension of the deadline, but in my judgment it will not exceed the estimate that was given to cover this program, which is in the amount of $20 million. I think the ultimate cost will be less than that estimate.

Mr. Monteith: Could the minister not give the difference in cost as between a March 31 inspection date and one on April 15? Could he not tell us the actual difference, and not whether it comes within the estimate?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will appreciate the difficulty of giving a precise figure or even an estimate of the change in cost, because it would require an examination at the end of March, on an individual basis, of all the dwelling units that had not reached the completion stage; and that has not been undertaken, for the reasons I mentioned.

Mr. Monteith: I only asked the minister the question, Mr. Speaker, because I assumed the government would have some idea of what would be the additional cost.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister's statement mean that any work carried out between March 31 and April 15 will count toward eligibility for this bonus? The minister merely said that the inspection date will be deferred. Does this mean that work completed during those 15 days will count toward the bonus?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the extension of the inspection date will have the effect of allowing builders to continue working and to complete their houses to further stages.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. Can the minister inform the house whether the 8 per cent tax on building materials and production equipment will also be delayed until April 15?

Mr. Grafftey: In one pocket, out of the other.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WORLD FAIR

STATEMENT ON USE OF SYMBOL DELETED BY PARLIAMENT FROM BILL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister promised last Tuesday that he would make inquiries and reply to questions that had been raised about the emblem for the world exhibition. The Prime Minister has made these inquiries and has asked me to say that the corporation has made the following explanation.

First, the question of the emblem has been on the agenda of the board of directors since March 19, 1963. The emblem which was confirmed on March 13, 1964 had first been adopted by the board at a meeting held on August 12, 1963, under the chairmanship of the previous commissioner general, Mr. Bienvenu. The corporation registered its copyright in the emblem with the copyright office in Ottawa as early as August 28, 1963.

Second, the choice of the emblem is the responsibility of the board of directors. When the emblem was originally adopted, the board instructed the management to seek maximum legal protection for it in respect of both copyright and trade mark. As existing legislation in these fields could not provide the corporation with the full protection it needed, an amendment to this effect to the incorporating act was requested. Obviously the purpose of the amendment was not to seek the approval of parliament for the emblem itself, but rather to obtain the additional legal protection for it that was considered necessary. I might add that the government, for its part, has never assumed that it had any responsibility for the choice of the emblem itself.

Third, the amendment finally adopted by the house states that "any symbol adopted by the corporation not later than December 31, 1964, is hereby declared to be the official symbol of the exhibition, as of the date of its publication in the Canada Gazette". The board of directors has interpreted this provision as allowing it, after giving due consideration to the views which were expressed in the house on December 20, 1963, to confirm the emblem if, in its best judgment, the board continued to regard it as the most suitable one.

Fourth, the board has made every effort to secure the best artistic advice available, both before the original adoption of the emblem on August 12, 1963 and before its confirmation on March 13, 1964. As a result of the criticisms made in the house early in January, the corporation established a subcommittee of its fine arts committee to re-examine the whole problem of the emblem. The subcommittee was under the chairmanship of Mr. Evan H. Turner and consisted of Mrs. Baillargeon of Montreal, Mr. Paul Arthur of Ottawa and Mr. J. C. Parkin of Toronto. The subcommittee held a number of meetings and reviewed all the symbols previously submitted to the corporation. It came to the unanimous conclusion that the design created by Mr. Julien Hebert was the most successful.

Fifth, the board, on the suggestion of the subcommittee, gave consideration to the advisability of holding a national competition to be conducted on a professional basis to select a new symbol. Since 184 different symbols had already been considered by the corporation, the board came to the view that a national competition was not likely to produce a symbol that would receive a greater measure of general support or would be less exposed to criticism than the present one.

Finally, the corporation has already received well over 100 requests from individuals or firms to be licensed for the immediate use of the symbol of the exhibition for commercial purposes, with offers of royalties in favour of the corporation. These offers have had to be withheld pending a definitive decision on the emblem, with a consequent loss of appreciable revenues to the corporation.

These are the reasons which have led the corporation to confirm the symbol. It is very understandable that members who dislike the symbol should feel impelled to express their disappointment in the corporation's decision. It seems to me, however, and to the Prime Minister that the assertion that the corporation's action constitutes an affront to the rights of parliament is, in the circumstances, a matter of subjective judgment.

In view of the decision taken by the house last December, which protected any symbol rather than a particular one, and notwithstanding the condemnation of a particular symbol by many members at that time, the directors acted within the powers conferred on them in confirming their earlier decision.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the length of this statement I am sure there should be a right to comment on it. All I can say is that the House of Commons acted unanimously—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Unanimously.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker. Some of you who are saying "no" were not even here. Unanimously.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and the amendment passed was drafted by the Minister of Justice after discussion in large part with me and other members of the house. I am going to say no more than that these corporations which secure their funds from parliament, as this corporation does on such a tremendous scale, will require review by parliament; because certain crown corporations that use parliament's money indiscriminately and act as they choose should receive the fullest scrutiny by a committee of the House of Commons.

[Mr. Sharp.]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO MEMBERSHIP OF FEDERAL DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he inform the house which members of the government, in addition to the Prime Minister, will compose the federal delegation to the forthcoming federal-provincial conference in Quebec?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not have that information under my hand at the moment. If, as is expected, we complete our business today I will endeavour to get the information and make it available before the end of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister without Portfolio a supplementary question?

Can the minister tell us whether he will take part in that federal-provincial conference with the Hon. Rene Levesque?

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question?

May I ask him whether federal ministers who are going to Quebec will be accompanied by the R.C.M.P.?

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think we in the government of Canada have the view that the government of Quebec is perfectly able to administer justice in that province, just as other governments are, though there might be some doubt expressed about that in some particular instances.

POWER

PEACE RIVER—APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. I gave him notice yesterday, but I think the question is still current today.

Has any application been made by or on behalf of the British Columbia government under the Navigable Waters Protection Act for approval of construction of the Peace river dam?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is true that notice of this question was given to me yesterday. Unfortunately I did not have time to check the information, but as far as I can recall there has been no application.

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the minister's assumption is correct, and I understand it is, as the minister responsible under the act will he advise the house if the government acquiesces in the continuing breach of a federal statute by a provincial government?

Mr. Deschatelets: I will look into this matter, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

REPORTED SKINNING OF YOUNG SEALS WHILE ALIVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries with regard to seal hunting in the gulf of St. Lawrence. Can he now enlighten the house in respect of the continuing disturbing reports, especially from the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, to the effect that young seals are being skinned alive?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I have already made a statement in the house on this particular problem. As I said before, the matter is under very serious consideration by my department, and it is expected that before the opening of the hunting season next year we will have regulations to take care of the situation.

COMBINES

OTTAWA—ALLEGED CONSPIRACY TO FIX PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder if I may direct a question to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker, and ask him whether he has seen news reports—I saw one in the Ottawa Citizen—to the effect that an allegation has been made concerning a price fixing conspiracy in connection with certain commercial activities in the market area of Ottawa? Will his department investigate these allegations?

Mr. Speaker: This is surely a question for the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF COMPLETION

[Translation]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Public Works a question of which I sent him notice. Can he tell the house whether the final layout of the trans-Canada highway on Montreal island is ready and whether the highway will be completed for 1967?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it was reported in the press yesterday that as far as the western part of the layout is concerned, plans had been submitted and the site had been approved.

I think that east of Frontenac street the layout has not yet been set and I do not think that this last section will be ready for 1967.

The essential section for the world fair will be ready for 1967.

[Text]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING AMENDMENTS TO PENSION PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I am advised that numerous representations have been received from non-operating employees of the Canadian National Railways in respect of certain amendments to the Canadian National pension plan. Will the minister convey to the Canadian National management the substance of such representations?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I shall be glad to do that, sir.

CROWN ASSETS

VANCOUVER—DISPOSAL OF SITE OF R.C.A.F. STATION KITSILANO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I ask what may be called a double-barrelled question of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. It is a matter of urgency. It is my understanding that the Department of National Defence, within three days, is officially turning over to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation the Kitsilano R.C.A.F. area land. It is also my understanding that the minister, one other minister and the Liberal member for Vancouver-Burrard, are meeting with the mayor and city council and parks board at three o'clock this afternoon, Vancouver time. Is the minister in a position to inform us as to the government's stand with regard to this most important area of Vancouver?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I will reply to this question only because I am the minister resident in the city of Vancouver. It had been our intention that the Postmaster General and I and the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard would meet city council this afternoon. However, we have been grounded. I think this afternoon the Postmaster General will be meeting the city council and listen to their representations in respect of the allocation of that property, which has been the selection of the C.B.C. and various other departments. I think he will hear representations from the city of Vancouver and convey them to the government, and a policy decision will be taken in respect of the disposition of the property.

[Later:]

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a short question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that in three days the R.C.A.F. Kitsilano plant is being transferred to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation may I ask the minister what disposition he has made of the letter which I understand he and the Prime Minister received a week ago from the Kitsilano Indian band, to the effect that during the last war they were misled and defrauded, and therefore claim ownership of this area?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): I think I should advise the hon. member that the Kitsilano property has already been transferred to the Crown Assets Corporation as, I think, of March 16.

Mr. Winch: What has happened to the letter which the hon. gentleman received from the chief of the band claiming ownership? I refer to the letter which was sent to the hon. gentleman's department.

Mr. Cardin: That letter was looked into. According to our records there is no claim that can be justified.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DELIVERY OF HOUSING MATERIAL FOR ESKIMOS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I should like to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs, and ask him if he is aware of the allegation that he gave the house false information which is made in a column in the Ottawa Journal of March 25, written by Gordon Dewar. The allegation carries the name of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona and is concerned with shipping charges on 140 prefabricated houses, about which it is alleged the minister gave false information to the house. I did not think we should recess before the minister had an opportunity of replying to this charge.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I am delighted to have this opportunity of replying to the accusation that I gave false information to the house. The hon. gentleman knew that the Easter recess was at hand and he would have no other opportunity of gaining publicity, so he went down to the press rather than make his charges in the house. He may have an opportunity of making two exposures.

I gave this information, which had been supplied to me by my officers, in respect of freight by truck from Grimshaw to Hay River. I could only give the information on the basis of the information given to me by my officers, who used the only published tariff available. Now, all of us have had the experience that you can go to private truckers at times and get special rates. I contend I was fully justified in giving the published tariff rate. I want to assure hon. members that we have now asked for a requotation on the laid down basis in Hay River, and we will see if we have an opportunity to use the splendid rate which the hon. member says is available to us. If it is, we will certainly use it. I may remind him, and he will agree with me, that at the end of this year the whole problem will become completely academic, because the railway will be completed at that time and of course shipments to the mouth of the Mackenzie will be handled via Hay River.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, since my name was brought into this. I assure the minister that the only reason I have not made a speech in this house long before this is that I have not had the opportunity. If the supplementary estimates had been brought forward earlier, I would have had a chance to make this speech if we had reached his department. I have been waiting since March 10, when he gave this most evasive and incorrect answer. I did not think I should bring it up as a question of privilege, and I have been waiting eagerly to make a speech in this house.

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister of northern affairs. Will he inform the house whether the government has now abandoned the idea of turning jurisdiction over the Eskimos in Quebec over to the province of Quebec?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is no change in the situation whatsoever.

Mr. Nielsen: As a supplementary question, in view of the minister's answer and since the agreement was made between the province and the federal government on February 29 to set up a consultative commission, could he inform the house whether there have been any subsequent meetings regarding the setting up of that commission and, if not, when does he expect the commission to be set up?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I think that question was asked yesterday and I said no. The answer would be the same today. The commission has not been set up. The first matter that will have to be discussed is the implication of the financial arrangements. That is a matter between the two governments, and that has not been discussed as yet.

Mr. Nielsen: I asked the minister in my supplementary question whether there have been any meetings subsequent to February 29 with respect to the setting up of the commission.

Mr. Laing: No, there have been conversations but no meetings.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS FROM FEDERAL CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs if he has now given an answer to the Royal Canadian Legion, who requested that he discontinue immediately all action on the proposed handover of D.V.A. treatment facilities to other levels of government. What is that answer?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I have not yet replied to the letter.

Mr. Churchill: Will the minister give an assurance to this house that no hospital under the control of the veterans affairs department will be transferred to other authorities until the matter has been discussed and approved by parliament?

Mr. Teillet: This is quite an involved question. I do not know that I can reply to that directly. My impression is that I answered that question the other day. I said that the government would have to take a decision on it.

Mr. Churchill: My question was simply this. Will the minister give an assurance to the house that he will not transfer any hospital under the control of the Department of Veterans Affairs without the approval of this house?

Mr. Teillet: I believe I have answered that question.

Mr. Monteith: Nothing of the sort.

Mr. Churchill: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, this is a shameful affront to parliament when ministers—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Churchill: My question of privilege is the failure of ministers of the crown to answer questions, and answer them distinctly, clearly and honestly. This is false for the minister to say he answered the question the other day. He has not answered the question because it has not been asked before, and I request an honest answer from the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Teillet: I was asked this question the other day as to whether I would submit this to the house, and I simply answered that the government would have to take its decision. Parliament, of course, passes upon government decisions, and in that sense of course it will come before parliament. Parliament is always free to decide on a government decision; but as to submitting the matter and debating it before parliament in each instance, I think the hon. gentleman will realize this is an impossible thing to do because it would require or may require 11 or 12 different submissions to cover each instance.

Mr. Churchill: I take it we now have the assurance of the minister that he intends to transfer the veterans hospitals to other authorities. Is that correct?

Mr. Teillet: The statement I made in the house the other day was, I think, quite clear and I do not intend to pursue this matter further. I do not think I can supply an answer to my hon. friend because he won't accept it.

Mr. Peters: That is a fine attitude to take.

Mr. Churchill: The divine right to rule.

Mr. Pigeon: The same old bunch.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ELLIOT LAKE, ONT.—STEPS TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I have a not very contentious question for the Minister of Labour. A month ago a large delegation from Elliot Lake was here and received undertakings from the minister and the Prime Minister regarding certain steps which the minister's department would take. I would like to ask why these undertakings have been delayed and why officials, whether they be provincial or federal, have not taken action with regard to the retraining proposals and the examination of the unemployed or those about to become unemployed in Elliot Lake.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we did discuss with the representatives from Elliot Lake possible training courses and other measures that might be taken to meet future problems in the area, but the difficulty under which we are labouring is that the companies involved have not yet, according to my information, made any clear statement as to their intentions.

In a situation of that kind, action taken at this stage by the department or the national employment service might prove to be more disruptive than helpful. That is the only consideration that has delayed any follow-up to the representations made.

Mr. Fisher: As a supplementary question, what explanation is there for the companies' delay, in view of the fact that so far as we know they are on public record indicating when they are going to close up shop or reduce their operations?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, I understand it is not that clear that the employment prospects of the men affected have been so indicated by the company. Until that is done, a venture into the area by the national employment service might create more difficulty than provide assistance. We want to help, but we want to do it in circumstances that will be truly helpful.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister concerning the workers in the asbestos mines at Thetford Mines and Black Lake. Will the minister consider taking the same steps for that region as the steps to be taken at Elliot Lake?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, in connection with those mines we would be glad to consider any proposals in the way of training or replacement, in co-operation with the local authorities, the employers, and the unions in question.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR NORTHUMBERLAND

On the orders of the day:

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General and ask him if the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) was expressing government policy when she made the statement that rural routes and post offices were now the prerogatives of the presidents of the Liberal associations in the constituencies; or has there been any change?

Miss Pauline Jewett (Northumberland): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I did not make that statement.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BURNS LAKE, B.C. RESERVE—CORRECTION OF STATEMENT RESPECTING PRODUCTION OF PAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to correct an answer I gave yesterday to the hon. member for Skeena on motion No. 62 for the production of papers. I said I would ask the hon. member to be good enough to withdraw the motion inasmuch as there was no correspondence. I should have said that there was correspondence but in view of the extent of the file, which is an extensive one, dating from 1954 to December 1962, that I would ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion for the time being.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question of privilege may I thank the parliamentary secretary for the qualification and say that his statement today is precisely what we discussed about a week and a half ago. I had assumed when I withdrew the motion yesterday that there was in fact no correspondence, but in any event I had agreed beforehand to withdraw it on the basis that it covered an extended period of time.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Gordon moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $684,120,260.18, being the aggregate of:

(a) Two-twelfths of the total of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965 laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $658,598,418.50;

(b) an additional five-twelfths of the amount of external affairs item 20 of the said main estimates, $402,291.67;

(c) an additional four-twelfths of the amount of atomic energy item 5 of the said main estimates, $416,666.67;

(d) an additional three-twelfths of the amount of national research council item 10 of the said main estimates, $5,838,000.00;

(e) an additional two-twelfths of the amount of fisheries item 15, legislation item 20, mines and technical surveys item 25 and transport item 95, of the said main estimates, $6,661,116.67;

(f) an additional one-twelfth of the amount of finance item 25, labour item 30, legislation item 5, mines and technical surveys items 10, 15, 45, 50 and 60, national revenue item 5, northern affairs and national resources item 1, trade and commerce item 15, of the said main estimates, $12,203,766.67, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer briefly to the problem raised yesterday by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Rheaume).

In the second report it submitted in 1961, the joint committee on Indian affairs recommended that negotiations be undertaken between the federal government and the provinces for the eventual transfer of certain Eskimo affairs to the provinces. The committee also set out the standards which should be adopted in the future if such a transfer ever became a reality. It further stated that this action should be agreeable to the Indian population and, in the case with which we are concerned, to the Eskimo population, the provinces and the central government.

The matters in question come fundamentally, in my opinion, under the provincial jurisdiction, for instance, education and the development of human resources, under which falls the question of schools and education for the Eskimos. As a matter of fact, schools coming under the provincial jurisdiction were mentioned, as well as health and social welfare.

Mr. Chairman, one must realize that the present talks deal exclusively with an administrative transfer. It is not, and it is good to remember that, a legal or constitutional transfer because, in my opinion, such a transfer, as stated the other day by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), could not be made legally or constitutionally except through an amendment to the British North America Act.

It will be remembered that in 1912, by virtue of chapter 45 of the statutes of Canada, the federal government yielded to the province of Quebec its jurisdiction over the vast area known as New Quebec, Ungava and Rupert's Land, including the area of the Great Whale river. On the other hand, jurisdiction over the Indians living in these areas remained with Ottawa. This situation was confirmed in 1939 by the Supreme Court of Canada, when it was asked by the federal government to determine which of the federal or the provincial governments should have jurisdiction in the matter.

In that judgment the supreme court held that, for jurisdiction purposes, Eskimos were on the same footing as Indians, and came under federal jurisdiction by virtue of section 91, paragraph 24, of the British North America Act, which gives the federal government authority on Indian affairs and the land reserved for them.

However, in order to satisfy the desire expressed in the report of the joint committee on Indian affairs, discussions had been instituted between the federal and provincial authorities, and I submit that those conversations—if they have any meaning, at all—have been instituted in order to give the province of Quebec the right to exercise a legitimate jurisdiction in a field for which it is responsible, over people living in a part of its territory.

Now, this being said, the committee must ask itself what standards any possible agreement will have to follow. First of all, such an agreement must take place, but up to now, and this has been somewhat confirmed by what the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) said this morning, it seems that the discussions with regard to the agreement have dragged on.

There is no doubt about that, for the minister said that since February 29, not a single meeting was held between the federal and provincial authorities to discuss the matter.

That is why we must respect the wishes of those people and first think of their interest when a solution is adopted.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that Quebec will want to preserve in its entirety the culture, the language and all the human values which the Eskimos represent for Quebec and Canada.

I must tell you that the Eskimos themselves are aware of their contribution to Canadian culture and, on other hand, of the fact that they are members of the great human race. That is why they like to call themselves "Inutuinaq" which, in their language, means "man".

It is at this higher level that we must consider the problem.

The minister said vaguely that there had been discussions, but this boils down to very little and, in any case, would have no bearing on the final solution of that problem.

Another rule, which was said to be essential, must be followed. And it meets the views of the committee. It is that the Eskimos should be consulted on their own destiny. I completely agree that those people, citizens of our country, who were among the very first inhabitants of our continent, have the right to be consulted and that, in a very effective manner, as to the steps to be taken concerning them.

I say this because, on the one hand, the Eskimos already have the right to vote in a federal election and they exercise that right in a proportion of 80 per cent of their eligibility. Besides, it is an admitted right of any nation or of any group of individuals to determine their own system or way of life.

We all know that this right to self-determination is recognized by the United Nations charter and must apply to any nation. That right is recognized by the Canadian Bill of Rights which was passed by this parliament, and also by the United Nations universal declaration on human rights.

In short, I am convinced that for those who live in the province of Quebec, the right of self-determination cannot be questioned. If there is a group in this country which should keep that right for itself and all the others, it is the people of the province of Quebec.

I therefore think that any federal-provincial agreement should consider the wishes of the Eskimos themselves.

Finally, I submit that the sovereignty of this parliament should be taken into account. To my mind, the final decision in this transfer of jurisdiction should be ratified by the federal parliament, in the same way, I suppose, as the agreement will be submitted to the Quebec legislature.

Finally, the problem and its solution should be integrated into the larger issue of an eventual transfer of jurisdiction over all Indians—a much wider problem of a constitutional nature, which concerns not only the federal authorities and the province of Quebec, but also most, if not all, other provinces in this country.

Therefore, we, on this side of the house, would like to have from the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) as well as from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) a clear and straightforward statement with regard to that agreement as well as to the demands of the federal government in its talks and negotiations with the province of Quebec.

So far, no clearcut statements have been made either by the minister of northern affairs or the Minister of Justice, not to mention the Prime Minister himself, on this matter. It would appear, judging by the replies given to the many questions raised about that on this side of the house, that there is a rather wide difference of opinion between the two ministers chiefly concerned, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources on one side and the Minister of Justice on the other.

[Mr. Martineau.]

That would naturally indicate the existence of more serious difficulties which could raise doubts as to the solidarity or the unity of views that the cabinet ought to show concerning any question, but especially the one now before us.

This is why I ask either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, provided that the latter makes it clear that he is speaking on behalf of the cabinet as he should normally do, to set forth the guiding principles under which the transfer will take place.

As for myself, Mr. Chairman, while I am not personally acquainted with the Eskimo, as the member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Rheaume) who spoke yesterday, since I did not have the opportunity of travelling in those areas or living with Eskimos, I feel that the advantages of an administrative transfer to the province of Quebec are unquestionable; they are completely evident and obvious to everyone, and for the following reasons.

First, the matters to be transferred come essentially under provincial jurisdiction, such as education, health; those are matters of local interest in an area entirely located within the territory of the province of Quebec.

On the other hand, I am inclined to believe that once the transfer is effected, it would not be impossible that the province of Quebec would set up constituencies for those people, thus giving them full franchise. I would even consider the possibility that they could elect to the legislature a representative of Eskimo extraction. It is not impossible either that such a representative should also be elected to the federal parliament.

Mr. Chairman, we are faced with what is primarily a human problem, namely the disposal of human beings which are part of an alert people gifted with a sharp mind and artistic talents, who have, in fact, created an art of their own which is recognized throughout the world. These people have shown and continue to show that they are the depositaries of a native culture which is theirs alone and which substantially adds to our Canadian culture.

Mr. Chairman, let us respect the wish of the Eskimos. Let us respect their deep desire to remain themselves and let there be, before any final decision is taken, consultation absolutely free of pressure.

I think that in this perspective it would be normal that the Eskimos chose to be administered by the authorities of the province in which they live, that is the province of Quebec. Personally, I am sure that that government will preserve intact the value which the Eskimo people represent to the whole of Canada.

[Text]

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I should like to commend the hon. member for a moderate and very sensible speech on this subject. Did I understand the hon. member to say that he saw the eventual transfer of all Indian peoples to the provinces as natural and inevitable?

Mr. Martineau: No, Mr. Chairman, I did not say that. I simply stated that the solution of the Eskimo problem should also take into consideration the fact that there will be at some future date—as was recommended by the joint committee on Indian affairs of 1961—a meeting of a federal-provincial nature to discuss the eventual transfer of Indians within the provinces to the jurisdiction of the respective provinces.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I recognize the importance of the subject discussed by the hon. member for Northwest Territories and the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue who has just spoken. However, I wish to raise another matter, as briefly as I can, which—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, may I raise a point of order, with the hon. member's permission. I believe it is the practice of the house that when dealing with a supply motion subsequent speakers must speak on subjects relevant to the matter raised by the initial speaker. My point of order, if I may be allowed to put it before you rule on it, Mr. Chairman, is that I believe subsequent speakers on this interim supply motion must be relevant in their remarks to the subject matter raised by the initial speaker in the debate. I believe that the rules make provision for this.

Mr. Howard: If I may comment on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, particularly in view of the fact that I sat here and listened attentively to the hon. member for Northwest Territories, the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue and the minister and wanted myself to participate in the debate on precisely the same subject matter, namely our native and Eskimo peoples, in my submission the point of order raised by the hon. member for Yukon would be applicable on a Tuesday evening, with Mr. Speaker in the chair, when we had concluded a vote on a supply motion and were then in the field loosely referred to as discussing a grievance. In that case anyone who wants to speak on the grievance must follow that subject, and one cannot bring in a new subject until the particular grievance under discussion has been exhausted. But that rule does not apply in committee of the whole on interim supply. I submit that the hon. member for Greenwood—even though I want to take part in the debate on the Eskimo people—has a perfect liberty and right to debate what he wants to debate on this interim supply motion.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, may I comment on the point of order raised, because academically and practically it is a very interesting problem and a very material one. I think the hon. member for Skeena is quite right, and that when Mr. Speaker is in the chair, after we have concluded the vote on the last amendment and some period of time has elapsed, a grievance, by long tradition, may be raised. It has been the custom in the house, so far as I can recall, that such a grievance should be debated to its conclusion and that all subsequent speakers should discuss matters which are relevant to the grievance. I do not think this is to be found in our standing orders. I think that, like many of our customs and practices, it has been built up and accepted over a very long period of time.

My submission, in support of the hon. member for Yukon—and I think it is very advisable to have a ruling on this matter—is that we must relate the rules which are applied in the house to committee of the whole. I think it is a general practice that where a rule has been established and is applicable in the house when Mr. Speaker is in the chair, it naturally follows that the same rule applies, and the same practice, when we are in committee of the whole. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, in an academic way I wish to support the views put forward by the hon. member for Yukon.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think it is the usual custom, after debate on a supply motion, to raise grievances, and in order to facilitate some order of business it has been generally accepted by the house that the grievance raised by the first speaker shall be continued as long as there are members in the house who wish to speak on that particular topic. But that is not the position in which we now find ourselves. We now find ourselves in committee of the whole in the course of a general debate on a motion for interim supply. The different parties in the house will have their turn to speak, but I know nothing in the rules which says that the chairman must indicate to any member of any party that he must make his remarks relevant to the subject of a previous speech. While I say that to the hon. member for Yukon, I must also say that to my mind this is a new interpretation of the rules; and while I would say at the moment that the rule does not apply in this case, as it does after a supply motion, I will consider this particular matter. However, I doubt that it applies at the moment. The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the committee that before I decided to speak on this matter I did consider the question of the rules, and I would have hesitated to interrupt a discussion of such an important matter as we have been discussing did I not think that the matter which I proposed to raise was one of considerable urgency and that the opportunities to raise it were relatively limited. For this reason I propose to raise it now.

The subject I want to discuss at this moment and call to the attention of the government is, as I have said, in my view a matter of grave urgency, not only to my own constituents and to all constituents of the metropolitan area of Toronto but to very many people outside that area. I refer to the acute crisis caused by the lack of hospital beds in that area and the degree of responsibility which I believe falls upon this government to assist in remedying that situation. The existence and gravity of this crisis has been fully documented in the press. A report of a special committee of the Ontario hospital services commission estimated the need for hospital beds in that area at 2,360. Two of the hospitals in Toronto, out of three, have no emergency beds even for those who are in danger of dying. It takes from three weeks to two months at least to find accomodation for painful illnesses such as hernia and gallstones.

I have in front of me a news story which appeared in the Toronto daily Star of yesterday under the following heading, "Babies' lives at stake in hospital bed crisis—M.D." I read a brief extract from this report:

> Metro's critical hospital bed shortage is risking children's lives.
>
> This is the warning of Dr. Harvey Agnew, director of a study sponsored by the Ontario hospital services commission.

Dr. Agnew, in case hon. members of this house do not know this, is no person to speak lightly. He retired in 1961 as head of hospital administration of the University of Toronto. This is what the report says:

> He said—

This is referring to Dr. Agnew:

> —the acute shortage of suburban hospital beds for children endangers the lives of emergency and some newborn cases.
>
> Hospital officials and doctors agreed the "situation is serious and additional beds in fairly substantial numbers must be provided shortly", he said.

I do not intend to go on and recount to the committee the numerous illustrations of this urgent need. I could do that at length but, as I have said, they have been fully brought out in the press. This is a problem which is particularly serious for older people in that many of them who are suffering from serious illness and should be in hospital are kept waiting two or three months before they can get a hospital bed.

The matter has reached the stage that the provincial government—in this particular field I would say that the federal government is the junior partner—has been accused of fraud in accepting money for hospital services which they are not in a position to provide after receiving the money for them. This matter has been under consideration by the federal government since October or November of last year. At that time the executive of the metropolitan council made representations to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and other ministers, including the Minister of Finance whom I am glad to see in the house at this moment. In these representations it was urged that the federal government should, in line with the increased grants already made by the provincial government and those made by the metropolitan area government, increase its present grant of $2,000 per bed. In fact, if I recall aright, I think it was suggested that the federal government should double its grant. The grant of $2,000 for hospital bed construction has not been increased in over a decade with the result that the level of federal grants has not kept pace with rising costs.

On the 3rd of December last year, I believe, I questioned the Minister of National Health and Welfare as to what reply she was going to give to the request of the executive of the metropolitan council in this matter. She said then that the matter was under active consideration. My colleague, the hon. member for Danforth, and myself have continued to question the minister and latterly the Prime Minister with regard to what decision the government has reached on this matter. So far we have had no definite answer. We are still told that the matter is under active consideration.

In my respectful view, Mr. Chairman, this is not merely a local matter. People from all over the province of Ontario and, indeed, from outside the province of Ontario avail themselves of the services of these hospitals. Nor is it merely an economic matter. There is a moral obligation of leadership upon the federal government. It is perfectly true that under our constitution the provision of hospitals is essentially a provincial responsibility, but the federal government in the past has recognized its share of responsibility and the necessity for giving leadership in this field.

I want to touch on a political note in this regard. In the last federal election the Liberal party, as is well known, swept the metropolitan area of Toronto and succeeded in electing members from all but the two constituencies represented by your humble member now speaking and the hon. member for Danforth. There are in fact in the metropolitan area of Toronto more members of parliament and electors than in seven out of the ten provinces of this country. I am aware that in the rest of Canada Toronto is not the most popular section of our country—

Mr. Gordon: I think it is.

Mr. Starr: You made it that way after your last budget.

Mr. Brewin: —but I suggest to the government that is no reason why these urgent needs should be disregarded.

As one who comes from Toronto I think I made a very apt understatement but I do not want to invite comment on it. I urge the distinguished members of the cabinet from the Toronto area—I am looking now at the Minister of Finance and this would apply equally to the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Trade and Commerce—to urge upon their colleagues immediate and practical action in regard to this urgent need. There may well be other metropolitan areas, and no doubt there are, in which the same urgent need exists. I have referred to the Toronto area because I am thoroughly familiar with it.

I do not think this is really a laughing matter and I do not think the Minister of Finance was laughing at what I was saying, but I suggest that when the lives, welfare and health of people in a large area are at stake and where the federal government has a degree of responsibility the federal government should give leadership. I warn the members of the government from this area that if they do not show a real regard for this situation, if they will not make up their minds in this respect, this will become widely known to their constituents, and we shall make sure that it is widely known to their constituents. It may be that the tide that swept Toronto last time will not be quite as efficacious next time unless they decide to do something about this matter and do it soon.

I am not talking now about some newspaper theory; I am talking about what doctors and medical men generally have repeated is an urgent problem at the present time. I see it is about one o'clock, Mr. Chairman, and I will conclude by appealing to the members of the government, particularly the Minister of National Health and Welfare and those members of the government who represent the area of metropolitan Toronto and, indeed, to all elected representatives from that area and all members of the house, to urge upon the government that this situation requires immediate and decisive action.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I think we are all impressed by the speech to which we have just listened. There is a very serious situation in Toronto in the hospital field. I think it is a question of where the main responsibility lies. I do not think the hon. member for Greenwood would expect me to go into the matter specifically on interim supply. Certainly I am not in a position to do so now. I am not sure, Mr. Chairman, whether there are other members of the committee who wish to speak.

Mr. Gregoire: Yes.

Mr. Gordon: It had been hoped that we could get through interim supply before the luncheon break because there are a number of hon. members who are anxious to participate in the discussion of the supplementary estimates which it had been hoped would come forward at 2.30. I do not know how hon. members feel. If they were willing to let us proceed with interim supply and get it through we could then do what had been hoped would be done, proceed with the supplementary estimates at 2.30 which some hon. members are looking forward to.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, we will agree to the passage of interim supply now.

Mr. Gregoire: No, Mr. Chairman, we still have some speakers on interim supply.

Mr. Starr: May I interject? I wonder whether the hon. member for Lapointe would be agreeable, if it is agreeable to the committee, to making the speech he wants to make on the supplementary estimates? He would not lose the opportunity to say what he wants to say.

Mr. Winkler: I think we might assure the hon. member for Lapointe the floor if he would so agree.

Mr. Gordon: I would certainly be prepared to give the same undertaking on behalf of the government.

Mr. Gregoire: We still have some points to raise on interim supply. There must also be an interim supply bill, and we have an amendment on interim supply.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

Interim Supply

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, in the discussion on interim supply, we are authorized to draw the members' attention to various matters which are of interest to us all. I therefore would like to start by mentioning a program which was televised yesterday on the English network of the C.B.C., under the title: "The Open Grave".

Mr. Chairman, the comments which this program gave rise to illustrate a point which we have been trying to bring to the attention of the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) for some time, to the effect that it might be appropriate, and even necessary, to set up a committee of the house to consider certain programs presented by the C.B.C. which is a crown corporation.

To my mind, it might be important to have such a committee to study those matters, for several reasons.

First of all, the C.B.C. might benefit by knowing the point of view of hon. members. As a matter of fact, we are constantly in contact with the people and we might convey the people's opinion to that crown corporation.

Yesterday, I listened to the telecast entitled: "The Open Grave". I wonder why there was so much fuss and noise made about that show. Personally, I saw nothing sacrilegious or scandalous.

There might have been a somewhat indirect reference in the scene where disciples of Mr. Corbett were shown, one of them betraying him. There was the allegory of the open grave. But possibly nothing scandalous or sacrilegious.

However, I must say, our attention having been called to such a play, that I expected worse than that. In my opinion the literary style was very poor, there were leitmotivs which by the end became boring. The vocabulary was very poor, and this play was certainly not a first class drama, far from it.

In my opinion, what saved the play some value was the excellence of the artists interpreting this drama, or at least what has been called a drama, as well as the excellence of the producers.

Now, as concerns the substance of this so-called dramatic play, I think the C.B.C. may be somewhat criticized, for it meant to convey a certain idea.

I consider this corporation as an agency not to be influenced or subjugated by politics. Therefore, that agency should not endeavour to convey some ideologies or political messages.

The substance of that play—at the beginning, I mostly discussed its form—carried a unilateral message resting on erroneous premises and, because of the style of the play, was beside the point.

There was an attempt to impress on the public a widely fashionable tendency in this country recently, and that was done with pressure when, for instance, interviews were carried out on the street where a consonant image or character was given of those approving the leader, while a clearly unlikable character was given to those against the leader of the "Peace in Action" movement, like the character who would not go on strike with the other demonstrators around a war plant. On the evening of Mr. Corbett's hanging, we could see motorcyclists waiting at the jail door and those characters were clearly antipathetic, once again to try to influence the public.

An attempt was made to ridicule the efficiency of the R.C.M.P., as it is done sometimes in this house. An attempt was made to ridicule the efficiency of our judicial institutions.

When such an argument is presented, people should at least have the decency to mention that it is a theory and not a theatrical work. I think it was done with such naïveté that for a long time, the people fell for that sort of program. The author of that play gave me the impression of being a commercial publicist rather than a theatrical author who is trying to push through a philosophy, rather than attempting to present a theatrical work.

When we consider the amount of money the C.B.C. had to pay for such poor work—in French, we usely call that a turnip and it means something neither bad nor good, but something insipid—as the one shown on T.V. last night, I begin to wonder whether it would not be better for the corporation to appear before a committee of the house in order to receive suggestions.

As far as I am concerned, I do not object to appropriations, even large appropriations, for an agency like the C.B.C. which has work to do and can be a most important institution for the broadcasting of ideas and thoughts aimed at the development of art in Canada as well as understanding between the two main groups of this country. I have no objection to even larger appropriations.

If the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation finds insufficient the $85 million voted by the parliament of Canada, let us give it more, but its work should be at least well done and the money spent in a sensible way.

I am convinced that over the French network, between 80 and 85 per cent of expenses are sensible ones. The majority of plays produced by the C.B.C. during the last five or six years have been successful. But in other cases, perhaps there is a lack of money or inefficient people in some positions. In any event, there is certainly need for an investigation in that regard.

Far be it from me to blame the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. On the contrary, I believe that the corporation, in the field of the theatre, for instance, as well as in the sport and language fields, is doing work of a high social order which helps the advancement and progress of the arts, culture and sport in this country.

However, there comes a time when it may need some advice or information. Then again, we could be the ones to require information on what is going on inside that crown corporation. That is why we believe it would be important and essential now to set up a committee of the house to study those problems. The fact that we are now in full evolution makes it all the more necessary.

I am less familiar with the English network, and I hope you will excuse me for that, because I do not have as many opportunities to watch it. True, I did watch it yesterday, but that was because I wanted to speak about a certain program.

I wish to congratulate the actors of the English network for their splendid performances, and I must not forget the producers who gave us a most beautiful play, even if its theme was more or less insignificant.

On the French network, we have very good performers and excellent producers, and if they need a bigger budget—

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question? He has given us the benefit of his assessment of one of the performances he saw on English television last night. Would he tell us what he thought about the one just ahead of it?

Mr. Gregoire: I will say this, the actor was no good.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I must admit that I have not seen it, but the actor was no good.

I must say that I have not seen the play, but some comments I heard about it indicate how much we need a parliamentary committee to inquire into the C.B.C. activities and more particularly when that crown corporation pretends, nowadays, that it is authorized to bear judgment on the present historical facts, while no worthy historian who wants to be absolutely impartial would dare to do it.

I still feel that the C.B.C. is biased in certain respects, especially as far as politics are concerned. At least, from what I learned during yesterday's program, the corporation tried to be and perhaps it is not the proper organization to produce such a program.

All that to say, Mr. Chairman, that hon. members would like to see a committee set up to examine the operation of the C.B.C.

Another point which is very important, in my opinion, is the question of federal-provincial relations which will be discussed next week in the historic city of Quebec. We hope that those talks will be followed by action and achievements and that changes will be made to keep pace with the present evolution.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring home another point. In view of the tendencies now existing in this country, in view of present conditions, the government must go to Quebec, to this federal-provincial conference, with the clear idea that it will hand back to the provinces as much as possible of certain sources of income, so that the provinces may look after themselves and solve their own problems themselves.

And here I would like to use an argument which was put forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) himself, in his budget speech, when he said that generally in the country as a whole, we have succeeded to settle the unemployment problem, since, by and large, it has declined. But, he admitted that the unemployment situation remained to be settled in some particular areas. In brief, while general measures have been beneficial in a general way, unemployment still remains a serious problem, since it has not been solved at the regional level. In other words, legislative centralization could succeed to check unemployment on the whole, but not to eradicate it in underdeveloped areas of the country, scattered all over the country, since there are 35 of those designated areas.

Centralized solutions have not helped settle the problem. On the contrary, and unemployment is a typical example. Now, it is intended to solve the problem of unemployment, and the Minister of Finance wants to solve it on a regional basis; but even in so doing, by legislating on a national basis, on a Canadian basis, for the country as a whole, in a standardized fashion, strictly general, without taking into account various regional characteristics, he cannot arrive at a solution to the problem of regional unemployment. The problem has not been solved because the measures were applied as a whole, and specific cases, in specific areas, were not considered. The problem has not been solved, because the solution was sought in a centralizing way, when it should be sought at the regional level.

It is to be noted that the winter works, in some areas, have not solved the problem, because some of those areas have weather conditions which do not make for an easy implementation of the general legislation, as it has been voted by Ottawa for the country as a whole. This means that the solution consists in favouring the decentralization of implementation methods, various solutions for various situations.

This is the proof that the remedies should differ according to different areas. This also underlines the necessity of decentralizing and turning over to the provinces the necessary sources of income so that they might bring about the required solutions.

Therefore, let us turn over the sources of income to the provinces, especially those faced with the greatest number of problems, such as the province of Quebec. Those factors should be kept in mind during the next federal-provincial conference to be held next week in Quebec city.

The province of Quebec is exceedingly rich at present and has a tremendous capacity for development, as well as all the manpower, engineers, scientists and technicians required to achieve this development. But the province is at a standstill; Quebec has 40 per cent of the unemployed of the country, because it is the victim of a way of thinking which is not its own, of an atmosphere which is not its own and because the given solutions do not satisfy the aspirations and characteristics of its people. Although Quebec has a tremendous potential development which would contribute to enrich the entire country, it remains underdeveloped, because it is not given the opportunity to apply its own methods of development, its own solutions according to its character, its way of thinking and its procedures.

These regional factors should be taken into account in the over-all economic solutions for the development of the country, exactly as the Minister of Finance must take them into consideration when a specific unemployment problem must be dealt with.

In such a case, I can assure the people of other areas that Quebec will do more than its share to co-operate with enthusiasm and with a deep sense of equality to the development of the whole country. But this means that Quebec must get back its sources of revenue, its rights so as to ensure its own development.

On the other hand, I entertain certain fears, and I mention them here because to give utterance to one's fears beforehand is sometimes the wise thing to do. I fear that the Prime Minister will arrive at the federal-provincial conference surrounded by advisers who do not want to grasp the real meaning of the solutions to be found, who are blind to the real problems and their solutions.

I also fear that, on the other hand, the Quebec premier will take a sit-on-the-fence attitude at the federal-provincial conference, and take no real stand, as he did on April 5, 1963, three days before the last general election when he said: "We insist on a better distribution of revenue sources from the federal government, Quebec wants 100 per cent of the succession duties, 25 per cent of the corporation income tax and 25 per cent of the individual income tax."

By using that approach, he obtained the support of everybody. That was a year ago, or will be, in 15 days. Afterwards, the Quebec premier gave an ultimatum and we all got behind him.

He stated exactly the needs of the province of Quebec, what Quebec wants. He described clearly the requirements of the province of Quebec, so that it might really develop in this modern age.

Quebec was unanimous at that time and we must say to the premier of Quebec that we expect from him a very strong stand on those points, because any softening would result in a wave of disapproval on the part of the citizens of the province of Quebec.

Such a stand would discourage them, because they would understand that the premier of Quebec is not ready to do what he has been preaching for so long, namely give to the province of Quebec the means and the opportunity to become master in its own house, by developing itself to the advantage of all its citizens.

However, we do not want this to be done at the expense of the other provinces. We wish all regions of Canada, all Canadian citizens, to get the same opportunities, but we also wish the province of Quebec to get its own, and we feel that the country as a whole will profit by it, will make progress. The whole country will then take a step forward since when a part of the country is being developed, the other parts also profit by it.

Mr. Chairman, on the eve of this provincial conference, which will be extremely important, indeed strategic, we believe that the governments which will meet around the same table, the federal government and that of the nine other provinces, must look to the future, not in seeking to centralize everything in Ottawa, but in granting every province, every region, means and opportunities to develop themselves according to their own conditions.

[Text]

Mr. Nielsen: I do not intend to take up too much time in this debate but I do have one or two things to say with respect to the proposed transfer of jurisdiction over the Eskimos living in northern Quebec from the federal government to the government of the province of Quebec.

In order that the situation may be put into proper perspective, I think I should refer to one or two things which have been said in this house by the Minister of Justice, by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. There seems to me to be as much difference between the minister of northern affairs and his cabinet colleagues, the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister, with respect to this question as there is between the Minister of Agriculture, if indeed he can still be called that, and the Minister of Forestry. The minister of northern affairs said on March 4 that there would be consultation with the Eskimos of northern Quebec before a transfer was effective—I think the words he used were "before an agreement is signed". As reported in Hansard of that date, the minister of northern affairs set forth the agreement, or rather the consensus of understanding, as he called it, between the representatives of the government of Quebec and the representatives of the government of Canada. In one of the conditions which was attached to this consensus of agreement, number four to be precise, which is recorded on page 506 of Hansard, it was stated that the government of Canada and Quebec undertake to consult jointly the Eskimos of New Quebec, or nouveau Quebec. The paragraph went on:

> The consultation, that is the communication of the terms of the agreement, excluding the financial provisions thereof, and the receiving of the views and comments of the Eskimos concerned, would be made through a commission—

From what cabinet ministers have been telling us, it appears that agreement to set up this commission was reached between the two governments on February 29 last. This agreement was announced in the house by the minister of northern affairs on March 4. But as yet, according to the answer which the minister of northern affairs gave me this afternoon, there have been no further meetings between the representatives of the government of Quebec and the government of Canada in connection with this matter, nor has any progress been made toward the setting up of this commission.

It seems to me there can hardly be the kind of consultation which we have been led to believe will take place between the Eskimo people and the government of Canada if, as the minister says in the agreement which he put on record on March 4, the terms of reference of the commission provide merely—and I quote again from page 506 of Hansard—that consultation is to be only "the communication of the terms of the agreement", excluding the financial provisions. If this is what the hon. gentleman and the Prime Minister mean by consultation, it seems to me that the Eskimo people, 2,500 of them, will be presented with a fait accompli in the form of an agreement reached between the province of Quebec and the government of Canada. They will simply be informed that this is how things are to be. We have been urging that the Eskimo people should be consulted in the fullest sense of the term. It would appear that the fairest means of achieving this degree of consultation would be to invite representatives of the Eskimo people involved to serve as members of the commission which the two governments intend to set up and, in addition, to invite representatives of the Eskimos to express their views at any interim meetings held between the governments.

Here we have a situation where the minister of northern affairs, who is constitutionally and legally directly responsible for the welfare of these people, is entering into consultation with a provincial government, on behalf of the government of Canada, without having any regard whatsoever for the opinions and views of the Eskimos who are the subject of those consultations. The minister read into the record on March 4 the provisions of a consensus reached by the two governments, but there was no indication that the Eskimo people had been consulted as to the contents of even that concensus. It seems to me that the 2,500 Canadian citizens who are most directly involved should have been asked to express their views on the subject. They should have been asked to express their views as to the setting up of the commission. They should have been asked whether or not they wished to be represented on this commission. It seems to me it would have been fair to have done all these things rather than to have proceeded unilaterally, because of political pressure applied by the minister's cabinet colleagues the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, arbitrarily to transfer jurisdiction to the provincial government for purely political reasons.

I am not the only one who holds these views. One of the leading newspapers in this country, a paper to whose editorial policy I am sure those who sit on the government benches will not take exception, the Winnipeg Free Press, has called this whole matter an exercise in political appeasement, and that is precisely what it is. Here we have the province of Quebec demanding, and indeed threatening, that the federal government turn over to it administrative responsibility for these people.

It is a responsibility which has been residing in the federal government, if not by the treaty of Paris of 1763, certainly from 1939 onwards. A decision was reached by the Supreme Court of Canada in 1939, at the insistence of the province of Quebec, that the responsibility for the welfare of the Eskimo people should reside in the federal government. In other words, the supreme court decided they would come within the classification of original people as contemplated by the Indian Act. From that time on the federal government has assumed the responsibility and I might say that during the years 1957 to 1963 the responsibility was discharged as never before in Canadian history.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the consultation which the minister of northern affairs and the Prime Minister have assured the house will be carried out is a very shallow device to hide the fact that it is the intention of the federal government to come to an agreement with the province of Quebec, and then hand that agreement as a fait accompli to the Eskimo people. Why has the government not considered Eskimo representation on the commission, and why does the government not ensure that independent counsel be provided both prior to the consideration of the terms of this so-called agreement and at the time the completed agreement is considered by the commission?

The minister of resources in Quebec said that it would be utterly undemocratic to hold a referendum on this question. The minister of resources in Quebec has been very outspoken on this subject. In some of the earlier meetings he said that unless the federal government follows the wishes of his province in this matter, they will not give the Eskimo people in northern Quebec jobs on provincial projects but rather will take residents from the central portion of the province and substitute their labour for the labour which is more readily available. Some newspaper commentators have called this blackmail. I hope that since the time when Mr. Levesque made this statement the federal officials involved, including the minister of northern affairs, have made some progress in bringing some modicum of rational thought to the minister of resources for Quebec.

The Eskimo people in this area are Canadian citizens and cannot be treated as human pawns, as appears to be the case. As the Leader of the Opposition stated the other day in this house, the Eskimo people are being treated as chattels in this transaction. They are being shunted from pillar to post without regard to their feelings in the matter. The hon. member for Northwest Territories pointed out that he knew these people and how they feel, that they are fearful and confused. He further said that if the federal government insists on enforcing their views and on giving in to Quebec on the question these people will move out of New Quebec and on to the islands.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

I have a suggestion to make if the federal and provincial governments insist on going through with their plan without consulting the Eskimo people. I suggest to the minister that the government consider payment in full of the expenses for removal of all their community property as well as their individual persons from their location in Quebec to any other place in the Northwest Territories—all of which is their home—to which they desire to move. That is regardless of whether one or 2,500 express the view to go. It seems that the fair and democratic thing to do is to hold a referendum among these people and find out their desires in the matter, rather than superimposing on their own personal feelings an arbitrary decision of the federal and provincial governments which has been dreamed up in concert—as the Winnipeg Free Press puts it, as an exercise in political appeasement.

The national unrest which this arbitrary action on the part of the government has caused—this typically Liberal arbitrary action of a Liberal government—is by no means confined to the province of Quebec or the province of Manitoba. In every centre of this country editorials have been written. One can pick editorials from any provincial newspaper condemning the action of the government in treating these people as human pawns. I should like to read an editorial in the Calgary Herald of March 3, the heading of which is precisely the phrase I have used—"Human pawns". The editorial commences in this way:

> There is little justification for transferring jurisdiction over Quebec's 2,500 Eskimos from federal to provincial hands...
>
> A meeting last week—

This editorial is dated March 3, 1964—

> —between federal and Quebec authorities indicates that Ottawa is, after all, prepared to surrender to the demands of the Quebec resources minister, Rene Levesque, for the transfer of that province's Eskimo population to provincial authority.

Two sound arguments are advanced against this policy. The first is that—> —the Supreme Court of Canada ruled in 1939 that Eskimos were Indians and subject to federal jurisdiction. To turn them over to provincial jurisdiction is to be guilty of flagrant disregard of a judgment handed down by this country's highest court.

That is precisely what such a decision would mean; the government of Canada would be flying directly in the face of a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Second, has sufficient consideration been given to the views of the Eskimos themselves? Last month, Quebec officials reacted in a somewhat petulant manner—

—a manner in which, I might add, the Minister of Transport ofttimes acts in this house when answering questions—

—when a federal spokesman suggested that a referendum be held to determine the Eskimo point of view.

Where is that referendum? Last August, for example, the Minister of Justice said, although not in so many words, that it would be held. He, like the disciple of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that he is, is becoming extremely proficient in skirting around direct answers to questions which are asked in this house. Both he and the Prime Minister have said, and not only on one occasion, that the Eskimo people will be fully consulted. That consultation, to be achieved in its fullest possible measure, should be consultation by referendum, not by merely explaining to the Eskimo people, as the minister of northern affairs put it on March 4, the terms and provisions of an agreement which has already been reached and decided upon and presented to the Eskimo people as a fait accompli. It is the fate of 2,500 Canadian citizens who have the federal franchise of which we are speaking here. They are people who are the direct responsibility of the federal government, not simply as a matter of constitutional law but because of the confirmation of their position handed down by the Supreme Court of Canada in 1939.

On March 10 the Minister of Justice was asked in this house a question by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm as reported at page 735 of Hansard:

When does the minister contemplate holding a sort of referendum, once the agreements are signed, in which the Eskimos would be asked whether they are in favour of that transfer?

The answer of the Minister of Justice was this:

Mr. Speaker, it is a question I would not like to answer without previous consultation with the other party involved in the discussions—

—namely, the province of Quebec: Not the Eskimo people; their feelings do not seem to concern the minister at all.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm asked this question a little later on, as reported on that same page:

Will the Minister of Justice meet the Hon. Mr. Levesque in this connection?

The Minister of Justice, in sloughing this off, said:

That matter is of minor importance, Mr. Speaker.

I suggest to the Minister of Justice that the matter of prime importance here is the feeling of the 2,500 Eskimo people. These people apparently do not want any change in the federal relationship which they now enjoy. These people do not want to be treated as political pawns. These people do not want to be the subject of an exercise in political appeasement that seems to be the whole reason for the federal government dealing with the matter at all. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources is a very conscientious individual and takes his responsibilities seriously. He is given certain responsibilities under the act which set up his department, and one of those responsibilities constitutionally followed is that of caring for the welfare of the Eskimo people of Canada—not just those of any one particular province. I do not believe that he wants to see any transfer of jurisdiction. I think pressures are being applied from within his own cabinet by the Minister of Justice and by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to comply, for political purposes, with the demands being made by the province of Quebec. It is a shameful exhibition of complete surrender for political expediency and for the purpose of obtaining votes in the province of Quebec.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the democratic process dictates that the Eskimo people themselves are the people who should be making this decision. The federal government is bound to care for the welfare and the administration of the affairs of these people by our own laws, as confirmed by a supreme court decision. They cannot all of a sudden slough off this responsibility simply because another province wants them to do so. The Prime Minister in the house, in answer to one of these questions the other day, said that all the provinces will be treated equally in this regard. This is another indication of co-operative federalism, where they want to come to one arrangement with one province and do nothing with regard to other provinces. This knife cuts both ways, Mr. Chairman. If there is to be a transfer of the jurisdiction of the federal government and administrative responsibility for the Eskimo people in this country, surely it should apply to all provinces; and this applies equally to administrative jurisdiction in matters concerning the affairs of the Indian peoples.

I suggest, sir, that there is a division in the cabinet over this question. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources deserves every assistance to see that the constitutional question here goes the way that it should; to see that the rights of the Eskimo people are protected. It is the duty, I would suggest, of members on all sides of this house to support the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in insisting that the responsibilities which he is given under the act creating his department, and by the other laws of Canada, are carried out with regard to the Eskimo people and the protection of their rights. These responsibilities should be carried out to the fullest extent and should not be made the subject of an exercise in political expediency by his colleagues in the cabinet.

I would suggest also that apart from the question of a referendum the minister should very seriously consider the provision now, not after the provisions of the agreement have been drawn up and reached between the two governments, of independent counsel, untainted by the officialdom in his department or the federal government and untainted by that in the province of Quebec, so that the Eskimo people can be advised independently of their rights and so they can be advised on any questions which they may care to put as to whether they must accept the decision which is arbitrarily reached by the two governments concerned. If the federal government is to insist on the transfer of the administration of Eskimo affairs, then I feel this house should insist that a referendum be held among the Eskimo people concerned so that their wishes are paramount here, and not the wishes of the federal government or the wishes of the government of the province of Quebec.

If the federal government arrives at the decision that it is a good thing, a desirable thing that the administration of the affairs of these people should be transferred, then they must, in keeping with the Prime Minister's undertaking in the house the other day, apply the same principle to the province of Manitoba, because there are Eskimos living in the northern portion of that province, as the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources knows. It seems to me that one province cannot be treated in any different fashion than another; the principle upon which the transfer is being made must be uniform. I might just say, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Royal, I think it was, first raised the point as to whether this parliament would have the opportunity to consider any agreement that might be reached between the federal government and the provincial governments. There may not be time for another of our members to cover this point, but I would say that the hon. member for Peace River has raised this matter on a number of occasions, as well as the hon. member for Royal. I believe that if the matter is examined very carefully, it will be found that there is a constitutional obligation on the part of the federal government to place any such agreement before parliament before it is given effect. I see the parliamentary secretary shaking his head in negation, but I believe that if he will look into this matter carefully he will find that the responsibility for the caring of the affairs of the Eskimo people is placed on the parliament of Canada and that responsibilility cannot be delegated until the parliament of Canada gives its approval—not the minister's department, because the minister certainly is not given that authority under the act which constitutes his department. I know that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources does not want to do that. He knows very well that the fair thing to do is to retain the responsibility for the care of these peoples in his own department. He is a conscientious individual and I know that he wants to discharge his responsibilities.

Mr. Laing: Flattery will get you nowhere.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, I hope it gets the Eskimo people somewhere. I know that he wants to do the right thing because of his conscientiousness. He wants to ensure that the rights of these people are protected. Initially when he approached this problem, from reading the press reports I gather he was one of those who believed in a referendum, and I think deep down in his heart of hearts he still believes that a referendum is a proper way to approach this question, so that the views of the Eskimo people will be the governing views in this matter.

I can quite realize the pressure he must be under from his colleagues, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration; but I say to him, "Disregard this pressure. They are not the important people, nor are the people in Quebec who are threatening and who are trying to insist on the transfer being made. The important people here are the Eskimo people themselves". This is one principle, judging from what I have been reading and hearing in this house, that the people of Quebec understand; that is, the principle of self-determination. They will be the first to stand up and insist on that right being enjoyed by all Canadians, from whichever part of the country they come. So I think that in order to clarify the matter once and for all, either the minister or someone in authority in the government should stand up and say that the government does not propose to proceed further with this matter; or indeed, if they do, the alternative is to hold a referendum in the democratic way so that the people most affected, namely the Eskimo people of New Quebec, will have the right of determining their own future without having changes superimposed on their future lives and those of their children by government officials.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, primarily I should like to say a few words on the same subject on which debate was started yesterday by the hon. member for Northwest Territories and has been continued today by others. Before I do so perhaps I might be permitted to say how much I enjoyed listening to the remarks of the co-leader of the Ralliement Creditistes, the hon. member for Lapointe, especially his reference to certain television programs. I can only say to the co-leader of the Ralliement Creditistes that he convinced me for one thing, that if one wants to look for something sinister in anything he will be able to find it.

While we are on the subject of television programs may I say I was one of those who were enticed by the advertising by the Leader of the Opposition to watch the program "The Open Grave". I also took advantage of the occasion to watch the hour long program preceding it entitled "The Chief". I hope that someone on the government benches, presumably the Secretary of State who reports to the house for the C.B.C., will communicate my own thanks and I am sure the thanks of many other hon. members to the C.B.C., especially to the producer of the program, Doug Leiterman, and will commend that organization and Mr. Leiterman for producing such an excellent television program. They portrayed the Leader of the Opposition in a wonderful light, I think, and they did the job even better than Allister Grosart could possibly have done in his wildest moments. I am serious. I think it was an excellent program. I commend the C.B.C. for it and I hope that if they undertake incisive studies of other political leaders they will approach them in the same way.

With respect to the Eskimo and Indian problem in Canada I am sure it is well known that the New Democratic party and those of us who were formerly in the C.C.F. developed some time ago a program and concept relating to native Indian and Eskimo affairs that coincides precisely with the arguments we have heard today. We certainly welcome this late support and endorsation of the idea we have had for many years, namely that so far as government jurisdiction is concerned in relation to the Indian and Eskimo people the primary factor that should never be lost sight of is that they must be officially consulted and their desires must be heeded. This is of prime and paramount importance and we must never retreat from that position.

Some ten years ago the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and I sat in the legislature of British Columbia. He was then leader of the Liberal party in that province. I am sure he does not need to be reminded and no doubt remembers precisely that in those years one of his clarion calls throughout the province of British Columbia with respect to the Indian people was that anything done in Indian affairs must be done with the consent initially of the Indian people themselves. That was his position ten years ago and I heard him expound on that idea in the legislature. I have read newspaper accounts of him saying the same thing throughout British Columbia and I hope he has not backed off from that position. Our guidepost in dealing with Indian and Eskimo affairs must always be that these people themselves should be the ones to decide initially, and not somebody else.

With regard to the particular matter under discussion, from what I have read about it and have gathered from listening to others it is evident that no group of Eskimos or no individual Eskimo made any approach to have jurisdiction over their affairs transferred into the hands of the government of the province of Quebec. The idea originated in the minds of people like Jean Lesage, Rene Levesque and others of their sort in order to satisfy some sort of inner craving for expression of their parochial ideals, and unfortunately they have dragged the federal government along with them. As a result the federal government has lost sight of the initial goal of consultation with the Eskimo people themselves. When I speak of the Eskimos I am also referring to the other group of original inhabitants of Canada, our native Indians, because the same thing holds true with respect to them. We must never lose sight of the fact that they are the ones concerned, that they should make the initial decisions and that the government should only be the agency to carry out what they decide should be done in the first instance.

Unless that is the case, then as far as I am concerned there should be no further negotiations with the province of Quebec or anybody else on the particular matter of transferring jurisdiction over the affairs of these people to the various provincial governments. I subscribe to the idea that as long as we maintain a constitutional structure that sets people apart on the basis of their racial background we are going to have two classes of people, one of whom is going to be considered second class or inferior. This has been the case with our native Indian people for many years. As long as we maintain one group of people under the jurisdiction of the federal government in respect of their civil rights, education and so on and the remainder of the people under the jurisdiction of the various provinces we are going to maintain and develop discrimination in favour of one group and against the other.

Our goal must be the transfer of jurisdiction but it must be done only with consent and after the people involved fully understand what is happening to them. The matter should never be negotiated at the top, as I gather is likely to be the case now, and a plan developed and presented to the Eskimo and native Indian people with the statement: This is the plan, here is our public relations explanation of it; do you want it or not? To do so places these people in the unfortunate position of having to make up their minds at a moment's notice on a matter that is most important to them when they have had very little opportunity to discuss it or to understand what is involved.

It is all right, I suppose, for the federal government to succumb to the pressures of a province, as has happened with this government, and to capitulate to threats or blackmail, if you want to call it that, on such matters as pension plans, taxation rights, the world's fair and a variety of other things, but in this instance we are dealing with the lives, the human rights and fundamental freedoms of people and we cannot possibly think of tossing these rights and freedoms away.

All sorts of suggestions have been made as to the approach that should be taken, but in essence I think this is what we would like to have the minister tell us. We would like to have the minister say to parliament that he is going to consult with the Eskimo people involved in this particular transfer to find out their views, their ideas and their opinions. On that basis he could then proceed to enter into discussions with the officials of the province of Quebec, but first of all he should find out what the attitude of the people concerned is. If their attitude is that they are not interested in being transferred into the hands of Rene Levesque and others like him, then the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the government should stand up for the rights of these people, represent them properly and tell Rene Levesque to go to blazes. First of all let the government base its position on the desire of the people concerned.

Second, I think that in any event nothing should be done in this whole field of transferring jurisdiction over the original inhabitants of Canada until such time as we have had this dominion-provincial conference on Indian affairs, which I think will take place some time in May. This is the sort of place, with all the provinces there and with all the representatives of the federal government there, where we might be able to thresh out a general understanding as to what course should be followed. Once there is some general agreement as to whether or not it is desirable to approach the native people on the question of transferring their jurisdiction, then we should go to the people concerned and say, "Do you want us to proceed or don't you want us to proceed?" We should outline the pros and cons, the benefits and drawbacks of such a transfer. Once the opinion of these people is ascertained, you can proceed with negotiations. If you do not consult with the people themselves first, what you will be doing will be selling their rights down the proverbial river. You will be disregarding the human dignity that everyone has and, unfortunately, you will be setting a pattern, whether or not that pattern is good or bad for all future discussions which may take place concerning the original inhabitants in Canada.

I just want to leave this one simple thought with the government. For heaven's sake do not do anything to jeopardize the rights of the people themselves. For heaven's sake go and consult with them and ask them first for their views, their ideas and, if necessary, submit a referendum to them. The situation should be explained thoroughly to these people, and you should submit yourself to the most incisive criticism and questioning by them. Tell them the truth about what is likely to happen and what is not likely to happen if jurisdiction is transferred. Let these people decide first what the government of Canada should do with regard to these negotiations, and then act like true, honest negotiators in representing them when you are dealing with the province of Quebec. If you do that first, you will have no complaints levelled against you. The people themselves will have no complaints because they will be the ones, initially, who started the whole process. Do not do it above, as has been the case so often in the past when governments have been dealing with the original inhabitants of this country; because if you make an agreement above, then you superimpose it on the individuals concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I only wish to make a few comments, before the resolution of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) is passed and consideration is given to the interim supply bill which will probably be submitted to the house this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) spoke a moment ago of the program presented last night over the English network of the C.B.C. and said that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) could find something sinister in anything or anywhere, but, as I have not seen the program myself, the only comments I heard were to the effect that the whole thing seemed to be a lot of publicity to promote socialist ideas which are overrunning the world. It is hardly surprising then that the hon. member for Skeena should be so interested in that play which was shown on the English network of the C.B.C. last evening.

Mr. Chairman, this afternoon we are again threatened with the sword of Damocles which was held over our heads on several occasions last year. Indeed, since yesterday, we have been told time and again that if interim supplies are not voted today, civil servants will not be paid, government bills will remain outstanding and the financial administration of the country will be paralysed. We wish to inform the Minister of Finance that we strongly object to this method used by the government to impose its decision on the house under the pretext that civil servants will not be paid and that the financial administration of the country will be paralysed if we do not adopt a certain piece of legislation at once.

The Minister of Finance does not even have to be here this afternoon to provide for civil servants' salaries and pay government bills. He just has to telephone the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Louis Rasminsky, and ask him to issue the necessary cheques. Then, everybody will be paid, since no Canadian bank will refuse such cheques unless the present Minister of Finance has completely lost our confidence.

Interim supply will probably include an important item, that is a short term loan, which means 91 days, bearing interest at 7 per cent. That loan to meet government obligations will amount to about $1.5 billion. At 7 per cent, that means an interest of $26,222,222.22 for three months. Twenty six million dollars in interest only on a temporary loan of $1.5 billion. And the government complains that it is short of credit, short of money and that the people do not want to invest in their country's development, whereas it is the government itself which tolerates a monetary system that is falling to pieces, a fact which is becoming more and more obvious.

Not so long ago, on March 24, the newspaper Le Droit published—not on the front page, because when news of that kind is made public, you find it most of the time near the obituary column, which goes almost unnoticed unless you happen to be interested—that news item which you find in the most hidden corners, the least interesting corners of any newspaper.

Here are, according to a report from Washington, the dangers of automation:

> A group of American professors, trade unionists and economists submitted to President Johnson a report in which they point out the dangers of automation.
>
> Automation threatens to bring about in the United States unprecedented economic and social disorders, say the 32 signatories to the report—

Please note, Mr. Chairman, that I am not one of those signatories. Those are the views of economists, trade unionists and professors in the United States.

To go on with the quotation:

> —among whom may be noted the Swedish-born economist Gunnar Myrdal and Nobel prize winner Dr. Linus Pauling.
>
> The report states the United States and the remainder of the world—

—this includes ourselves, here, in Canada. This also includes the Minister of Finance.

> —will before long fall prey to a revolution which will bring unlimited production, thanks to machines, without the necessity of the co-operation of human beings.
>
> So, means should be taken to ensure an income to all, the signatories to the report add.

Mr. Chairman, steps must be taken to guarantee income to all, not only in the United States but also in Canada.

We read in La Presse for Wednesday, March 25, 1964, an article entitled:

> Means to be taken to relieve the poverty of 30 million Americans.

Thirty million people in the most wretched poverty out of a population of 200 million, while in Canada we have 500,000 unemployed, and if we consider an average of five individuals in each family, that would mean 2,500,000 people living in dire poverty. Besides, I would dare say that if we add to this figure all those who are not registered with the unemployment insurance commission, we could easily get the astonishing total of 5 or 6 million people, while the total population of Canada is 19 million. Six million Canadians are actually living in poverty in this country. Mr. Chairman, this is an intolerable situation.

On the other hand, the Minister of Finance tells us that the situation is improving. He tells us that only 5.5 per cent of the available labour force is unemployed. Five and a half per cent, in the public mind, does not mean such a large number of people. But if we take the trouble to consider the meaning of 5.5 per cent, we find that it represents more than 500,000 Canadian unemployed. That is the danger now existing in our country and the problem facing us at present.

How could an income be provided for everybody without accepting the theory advocated for many years by the Social Credit, namely the payment of a monthly dividend to each and everyone, so as to create the purchasing power called for by automation and to acknowledge that automation, instead of being detrimental to man, should serve his interests? That is what we want, what we are demanding and requiring of the present government.

Instead of racking our brains to find extravagant schemes like the winter works program —while machinery or power shovels are put aside to use men and give them some work why not use this program to make the equipment available to men, in order to help them rather than to enslave them? Instead of racking our brains, we should help organizations which are trying to look after people's leisure time. It would be so much more Christain and humane than to consider man like a beast of burden who must sweat and toil in spite of progress and actually be punished.

Mr. Chairman, it is this interim supply that is put before us at the very last minute, on Easter eve, and we are requested to accept it quickly. We are told: Accept, if you want to leave today for your Easter recess, accept it if you want to catch your train at 4.30 p.m. or your plane at five or six, or at eight o'clock tonight.

Mr. Chairman, we in this corner of the house are fed up with this sudden rush at the last minute. We no longer want that sort of thing for any consideration and for any minister. We no longer want the government itself to push us around or drive us into a corner, saying: accept that, or else we will sit tomorrow, holy Saturday, even on Easter day. We will sit as long as necessary.

We will no longer be pushed around like that in an endeavour to have us pass measures which should have been put before us perhaps two or three weeks before, so that all members of the house could discuss the subject matter, the advisability and the merits, in the minutest details, of everything that is not in the interest of the Canadian people.

Mr. Chairman, this interim supply will indeed provide for expenses. It will also provide for loans. As I said a while ago, when I called the attention of the Minister of Finance to that fact, all he has to do is what we suggest. The Bank of Canada should be used, without interest, when the bill is introduced, for the short term loan of 91 days and the $1 billion or $1.5 billion loan, so that we will not have to pay two or three times the amount of the capital. Let us pay the amount of the capital only. I do not mind that administrative expenses be charged to us but when, for example, we have to pay every three months $26 million in interest on those loans, it is a shame, it is like taking money from the pocket of the taxpayer.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Chairman, I have here newspaper articles saying exactly what we said during the last two sessions and during this one. I have here an article published in the Western Producer, on March 26, that is in this week's issue. It reads as follows:

[Text]

For a long time purchasing power in the pockets of consumers has not been sufficient to buy the goods they need and which are available for consumption. Those who listen to "commercials" on radio and television need not be reminded of the savage competition among sellers for the buyer's dollar. They hear every day tempting offers with no cash down and ever lengthening periods to pay which competing firms dangle before the public in frantic effort to steal customers from one another.

[Translation]

We can read the following:

[Text]

Time and again it has been asserted in these columns that a radical recasting of the monetary system is long overdue.

[Translation]

And that article by Mr. Waldrum was certainly not invented by the Social Credit organization, because the author is a man entirely outside the political scene; he just relates the facts as they are.

Here, in La Presse of Wednesday, March 25, we see that the United States have to deal with 30 million paupers.

The world is progressing; there is no better proof than the war waged against pauperism, as President Kennedy saw it, and which President Johnson is carrying on. A quarter of a century ago, it would have been taken for granted that this struggle meant taking the money from the "haves" to give it to the "have-nots". For until lately, indeed, it was presumed that the social cake was just so big and that the social problem consisted in sharing it.

Today, people here are preaching solutions as in the United States. They advocate certain remedies. These are the principal reasons for pauperism and distress. There are four categories of have-nots; for instance those whose proverty is due to lack of education.

Here, in this country, our young people have been urged for the last five or six years to go to technical schools, and become technicians, professionals. And, when they come out of those technical schools, when these young people of 20 or 22 years try to obtain a job, they are told that they lack experience.

When they have experience they lack education, and when they have education they lack experience.

That is the dilemma facing us.

Mr. Chairman, we do not go along with those pointless solutions which lead us nowhere. There is only one way to set up a practical economic order taking into account the needs of the human person and that is to put the monetary sign directly in relation with the production the Canadian people are capable of. Then, we shall certainly have the liberation of the individual and the monetary sign will no longer be the master of the human person, but rather a servant, as we have been advocating for so many years.

Mr. Chairman, Social Credit would not do miracles and we do not need a Social Credit government to apply its plans. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), being an accountant, can understand Social Credit, but some circles around him probably prevent him from taking action. If he knew to what extent he would get the support of the Canadian people who are now in a dire situation, the Minister of Finance would not hesitate one minute more this afternoon and he would make an Easter present to each and every Canadian by calling the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Louis Rasminsky, instructing him to make available the billions of dollars needed for the good administration of Canada and the economic recovery in all Canadian provinces.

[Text]

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Gordon moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, the sum of $684,120,260.18, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

Mr. Clancy: I am afraid I perhaps did not hear as well as other members of this committee and I would like the figures to be repeated.

The Deputy Chairman: The figure in this resolution is $684,120,260.18.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Gordon thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-84, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The Deputy Chairman: When shall the bill be read a second time? Now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Ways and Means

Mr. Gordon moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Clauses one to four inclusive agreed to.

On clause 5—Power to raise loan of $1,000,000,000 for public works and general purposes.

[Translation]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to deliver a speech on this matter. I only ask you a minute or a minute and a half in order to prepare an amendment to section 5. Through this amendment, we propose that the short term loans be obtained from the Bank of Canada at the ordinary administrative rate. That is the amendment that we want to move.

Since we have received the bill at the very last minute, we were ignorant of its terms and we did not know at what stage we could move our amendment. We, therefore, request that a minute be allowed to us in order to prepare this amendment that we want to submit to the members of the house.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, in clause 5, the government is asking from us the authorization to borrow $1 billion for public works and general purposes.

That clause reads as follows:

(1) The governor in council may, in addition to the sums now remaining unborrowed and negotiable of the loans authorized by parliament, by any act heretofore passed, raise by way of loan, under the Financial Administration Act, by the issue and sale or pledge of securities of Canada, in such form, for such separate sums, at such rates of interest and upon such other terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve, such sum or sums of money not exceeding in the whole, the sum of $1 billion, as may be required for public works and general purposes.

(2) All borrowing powers that are authorized by section 7 of chapter 1 and by section 4 of chapter 15 of the statutes of 1963 and are outstanding and unused shall expire on the date of the coming into force of this act.

Mr. Chairman, we now wish to move an amendment to suggest to the Minister of Finance and to the government to use the Bank of Canada instead of ordinary channels in which the Canadian people are practically overwhelmed.

It is stupid to pay excessive sums of interest on capital which will be used to pay for public works general projects as well as for the development of our country.

As I said earlier, if our Canadian workers have the power, the ability, the intelligence to accomplish things in Canada, to build the country, the Canadian parliament should at least be intelligent enough to order the Bank of Canada to give credit according to the accomplishments of the Canadian people. That is all we are asking. It is useless, and even senseless, to ask the United States or other foreign countries for the money required to develop our country or to carry out public works here.

If we are in a position to carry out the works, we should at least be able to provide the corresponding credit.

Mr. Chairman, in that connection, we should like to move an amendment and we feel that every member is anxious to free the people overburdened with taxes and interests. I think that all members without exception will readily endorse the amendment we propose to move.

Mr. Robichaud: Do you not charge interest when you sell cars?

Mr. Caouette: That is not the same thing.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That section 5 be amended and that the following words be added after the word "Canada", in the 34th line: "from the Bank of Canada, at an interest rate not exceeding the administrative cost".

And that all the words following the word "Canada", in the 34th line, up to the word "approve" in the 36th line, be deleted.

[Text]

Amendment (Mr. Gregoire) negatived: Yeas, 8; nays, 75.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 5 carry?

Mr. Nowlan: I presume the minister will give the assurance that clause 5, which deals with borrowing, is in the usual form which has been used in interim supply bills in the past?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to.

Schedules agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles: Now, by leave.

Mr. Caouette: On division.

Mr. Gordon moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

[Mr. Caouette.]

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply. Supplementary estimates (E) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1e. Departmental administration—to extend the purposes of vote 1 of the main estimates for 1963-64 to include the gift detailed in these estimates and to provide a further amount of $60,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before I begin to make the statement that I wish to make on behalf of the Prime Minister, though perhaps the proceeding is a little irregular I am sure all hon. members will permit me to do what if my memory had been a little better I would have done at eleven o'clock this morning, and that is to congratulate the right hon. gentleman opposite on the 24th anniversary of his election to this parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I well remember the day the right hon. gentleman was elected to parliament. It was on a Tuesday, and the fact that most of us are elected on Mondays makes this unusual event one of the things which have been unusual about his career throughout. I think we can all say without partisanship that neither parliament nor Canada would have been the same had he not been elected.

For fear of lapsing into politics, unlike my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is absent, perhaps I had better get on with the chore entrusted to me by the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has asked me to make a statement which he regrets, owing to an indisposition, he is not able to be here himself to make regarding the transfer of duties between the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Forestry, a matter which was under discussion in the committee some days ago. I hope I will not be called to order if I follow pretty closely the notes I have, as I should like to carry out as faithfully as I can the mission entrusted to me.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested that the government had not complied with the provisions of the Regulations Act which require the publication of the order in council of February 3 made under the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act. The hon. member knows, and I am sure all members know, that the Regulations Act does not apply to all orders in council. It deals with orders made—I quote from the definition of the act—"in the exercise of a legislative power". That act was passed in 1950, when I believe the hon. gentleman was in the house, to ensure that the public would be informed of so-called delegated legislation. The aim was to make sure that parliament and the public knew what the law was as a result of the exercise of regulatory powers of a legislative character delegated to the government or to individual ministers. Orders in council under the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act were then, and always have been since then, regarded as administrative orders since they affect the internal operation of government, not the rights and duties of the public; and therefore they have not been included among orders "of a legislative character" which have been published pursuant to the Regulations Act.

At the time the Regulations Act was passed the government prepared a consolidation of all the orders of a legislative character then in effect; that is, all the orders of the type which in future would be published. That consolidation did not include any orders passed under the transfer of duties act, although a number of such orders were in effect at the time. A further consolidation in 1955 also omitted any such orders. This same position was taken by the administration headed by the Leader of the Opposition when he was prime minister. In that period from 1957 to 1963, according to the information furnished to me there were 21 orders made under the transfer of duties act. Not one was published in the way which would be required if the Regulations Act was applicable; that is, by publication in the Canada Gazette. So far as the Regulations Act is concerned, the same practice has been followed by the present administration. While the present administration did not publish the order of February 3 and the subsequent orders because orders of the kind never have been published under the Regulations Act, the privy council office has readily made such orders available on request, as I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre acknowledged when he was speaking.

As to the content of the three orders in question, the Leader of the Opposition suggested that the order made on February 3 would have left the Minister of Agriculture largely bereft of his powers. I think that is a paraphrase of what the right hon. gentleman said. Such a statement ignores the fact that the Minister of Agriculture is responsible for the administration of over 30 statutes, not just for the three or four affected by the orders of February 3 and March 5.

Hon. members will no doubt recall that at the time the cabinet was reorganized the Prime Minister announced that it was proposed to give the Minister of Agriculture the ministerial responsibility for the proposed branch lines rationalization authority which, if and when parliament has acted, will add substantially to his powers and responsibilities. It is true, of course, that certain responsibilities previously entrusted to the Minister of Agriculture were entrusted by each of these orders of February 3 and March 5 to the newly appointed Minister of Forestry. It is well known, Mr. Chairman, that the present government from the day it took office was committed to having two ministers associated with agricultural matters, one from western Canada and one from eastern Canada.

While the policy of this government has always clearly been that a minister from eastern Canada should be associated with some aspects of agricultural policy, it is not an easy matter to make a delineation of responsibilities which achieves that purpose —and I think that purpose has not been challenged anywhere in the house—and at the same time provides a good administrative structure.

The government decided some time ago that the core of the responsibilities to be transferred to the minister from eastern Canada should be those for rural development. But we also realized that this distinction could not be entirely clearcut. For example, it seemed to make sense that administration of the feed grain subsidy should be a responsibility of a minister from the eastern part of the country; but that is not strictly, if indeed it is at all, part of development policy. On the other hand, P.F.R.A. is essentially a matter of development and yet it is peculiarly a western concern. Farm credit is another marginal area; it has a lot to do with development, but it also has a lot to do with established agricultural undertakings.

The order in council of February 3 transferred five activities of the Department of Agriculture to the Minister of Forestry, but it did so on the assumption that the two departments would become organically a single department, with the Minister of Agriculture as the senior minister with final responsibility, and the minister of forestry and rural development with certain defined duties and functions in the field of agriculture. After the Minister of Forestry was appointed on February 3 it became possible to have more detailed discussions among all the ministers directly concerned and the Prime Minister. Both the Minister of Agriculture and the new Minister of Forestry quickly came to the view that they would like to take a few weeks to work out the best arrangement of their functions.

Accordingly, it was decided not to implement the order of February 3 which had been prepared in advance of the new cabinet appointments. The order was at once withdrawn. The copies were called back. At that stage there should really have been a formal revocation of the order of February 3, which did not take place until February 20. That delay was occasioned by the pressure of other business, though the Prime Minister has asked me to say that he does not regard this as a sufficient excuse.

One of the problems which was being worked on by the ministers concerned was the question of the best administrative structure in the long run. They came to the view, and jointly proposed, that it would be best to have a division of functions and responsibility between two separate departments. That decision altered the earlier view of the appropriate division of functions. The number of transferred functions was reduced from five to three, P.F.R.A. and farm credit being retained by the Minister of Agriculture. Coordination of the work of the two departments was to be provided for, not by the organic linking of the two departments, as had earlier been contemplated, but by the establishment of an executive committee on agricultural policy consisting of three ministers—the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Forestry or, as the government hopes he will become when its legislative proposals are accepted by parliament, if they are, the minister of forestry and rural development —under the chairmanship of the Minister of Agriculture. These conclusions were put forward jointly by the two ministers, and as a consequence a new order was passed accordingly on March 5.

This decision was made with the full agreement of the ministers concerned. There was, of course, the technical error—and the government does not pretend for a moment that it was not a technical error—of failing to revoke the first order until February 20. It has been suggested that the government acted illegally in not following the transfer of duties prescribed in the order between February 3 and February 20. The government has been advised that, as a matter of law, no member of the public would be or would have been adversely affected as a result of the Minister of Agriculture doing anything which, under the order, the Minister of Forestry could have done. The Minister of Agriculture did in fact sign eight ARDA agreements with the provinces. I understand they were with two provinces, Ontario and Nova Scotia. The validity of those agreements, like any other external act of the government, is covered by the protection that the law and jurisprudence afford in cases where there may be a technical defect in the authorization of anyone holding a public office. For greater certainty the government would be quite prepared to have the Minister of Forestry also sign the ARDA agreements to which I have referred.

Of course, public money was spent during those 17 days. It was spent under the authority of parliament. It was subject to all the normal checks of any public expenditure. There has been a suggestion that funds may have been spent illegally. Funds have been appropriated by parliament from year to year for ARDA, maritime marshland rehabilitation and other purposes involved in the recent transfer of functions. When funds are appropriated by parliament for a purpose, their release is subject to a great many rules. These rules are made under the Financial Administration Act and they prescribe the precise kind of authority that there must be before an expenditure can be made. They are not, for the most part, provisions of law; they are provisions of administration. They are internal requirements adopted so that administration can proceed, but with full safeguards.

What undoubtedly happened and what probably has happened in every case of a transfer of duties, and I emphasize "in every case", is that an expenditure may have been made under authority granted by the minister formerly responsible after the authority had technically been vested in a colleague.

I am glad to be able to assure hon. members that a check has been made and that there was no expenditure authorized by the Minister of Agriculture personally in the period from February 3 to February 20 in any of the areas transferred by the order of February 3 to the Minister of Forestry.

There is one other possibility. An official in the Department of Agriculture might, in those 17 days, have authorized an expenditure of the kind he could deal with under the authority he had received from the Minister of Agriculture after he should have had a new authority from the Minister of Forestry.

The government is advised that this frequently happens for a week or two after transfers of duty are made. The business of government goes on while the necessary consequential changes are being made. I could give an example in another case.

According to the best advice the government could get, it would appear that the suggestion that any law had been disregarded is not well founded. Orders in council under the transfer of duties act have never been published before under the Regulations Act, and the 17 day delay, while a technical error, is one that does not involve illegalities any more than it may have done in similar situations, and there have been many of them, in the past.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to speak at length after the kindly reference to me at the beginning of the hon. gentleman's remarks. I am not at all suspicious and it may well be that these well intended and sincere good wishes may have been in the contemplation of the hon. gentleman. However, I do thank him and the members of the house. Twenty four years is a long time and it was after many endeavours to get into this house that I finally succeeded. All I can say is that the spirit shown today in the words of the hon. gentleman is entirely consonant with that which I have found in the house at all times. Sometimes I have been known to disagree with those sitting opposite, but at all times recognizing, I hope, the fact that the House of Commons is a great club in which friendships are built up irrespective of disagreements that take place from time to time. The Minister of Agriculture has not been here very long, but after he has been he will find that this is a place in which the amenities are practised despite the asperities that sometimes pass between us.

Having said that, I now come to the subject matter of the exculpatory epistle by the minister in respect of a series of errors that cannot be brushed off as merely technical mistakes. These are serious errors. These are things that indicate the government is new to its responsibilities and to the need of carrying out the statutes and laws that are in effect. In this regard there has been a serious departure. Indeed, the Montreal Star, which I have never regarded as one of the major supporters of the Conservative party, had this to say in an editorial:

> What is one to make of a government which gets as tangled up in its administrative traces as the Pearson government in Ottawa? Who is doing its planning and how is it being run? The confusion surrounding the functions to be allotted to forestry minister Sauve is to be cleared up shortly by the Prime Minister himself but the memory of a month at cross purposes will remain.

Sir, we used to hear of bumbling and bungling. The postgraduates in these arts who sit opposite. I doubt that there has ever been a series of errors and mistakes so consistent in so short a time as we have seen since the present government took over.

On February 3 the Minister of Agriculture was, to use the words that the minister quoted, bereft of many of his responsibilities. No doubt he will say that what happened was entirely satisfactory to him. After all, if you are not discharging your responsibilities losing them does not cause you much concern. It has been an interesting division. The Minister of Agriculture, with wide experience in that field has for some reason or other had his powers and authority trifurcated. On February 3 he lost ARDA, P.F.R.A., which has always been in the Department of Agriculture and should be nowhere else, farm credit, the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act Administration and the administration of freight assistance for western feed grains. He lost all of them under one order in council. A few months before he had the wheat board removed from him.

An hon. Member: Stripped to the bone.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One after the other these very important adjuncts of the Department of Agriculture were removed from him, and there he stood almost naked of responsibility except for a number of statutes that were referred to a moment ago.

Mr. Knowles: That is the bare truth.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But the important things were removed, transferred to the Department of Trade and Commerce, transferred to the Department of Forestry. A kind of troika was set up. I know that three heads are better than one but as one coming from western Canada, it does strike one that with his capacity he could very well have discharged these responsibilities. Yet they were removed from him. Why? Was it a matter of his effectiveness? Was it because he felt that someone else should look after these matters? We do not know. All we know is that the press has stated that there has been a power struggle going on. If there has been a power struggle, all I have to say is that the Minister of Agriculture did not have any of the power.

What has happened? On the 3rd of February these things went from the Minister of Agriculture. An order in council was passed. The Minister of Transport is an expert on the privy council. He occupied the clerkship of the privy council. Yet today, in all seriousness, he advances the argument that, after all, nothing took place but a technicality. He said the government decided that the order in council of February 3 should not be proceeded with and they withdrew it. How can they withdraw anything that has received the approval and consent of His Excellency the Governor General? He says they merely wished to change their minds, but he knows better than that.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did say it was an error, did I not?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, an error; it is more than an error. It is a colossal example of the negligence that characterizes too frequently the actions of the present government.

Well, from the third to the seventeenth, we—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to make an error; it was the twentieth.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, the hon. gentleman had more than three days of grace. For 17 days, the hon. member for Calgary South went about this country as Minister of Agriculture, denuded of his major powers. I doubt whether he knew anything about it. It is said, however, on responsible authority that a power struggle is taking place. I want to be fair. The minister gave an interview on March 20 in Calgary and he said this:

> We have had no arguments about this. We could not afford to have arguments. We are only a minority government. If we were to fight, we would not be there.

Well, that is sound reasoning. All I can say about that is that for 17 days he acted as a minister, carrying out responsibilities that had been removed from him. I need not add any more in that regard. It shows the slip-shod methods, the short cuts through parliamentary requirements and responsibilities, the denial of the rule of law that, while regarded as casual by the Minister of Transport, seriously challenge the responsibility of a government that would permit such things to happen.

On the twentieth, the order in council of the third was cancelled. The minister has said, as I understand it, that there was no expenditure of money made during those 17 days under the direction of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think perhaps the right hon. gentleman would want to have it technically accurate. I said one authorized personally by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I can see the distinction the minister has in mind. We want to find out what orders were made during the period from the third to the twentieth that were signed by the Minister of Agriculture in respect of this department, authority over which he no longer had.

Mr. Pickersgill: I gave that in my statement. I think I said there were eight ARDA agreements signed, four with Ontario and four with Nova Scotia.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister say nothing else took place?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is all of which there seems to be any record.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the first thing the government will have to do will be to have the Minister of Forestry sign those agreements, otherwise they will not be effective. I think that there should be an explanation of what took place on the twentieth, for from February 20 until March 3, was it, another order in council was then passed. What happened during that period of time? Once the Minister of Agriculture was denuded of powers and they were transferred to the Department of Forestry, unless there was an explicit order in council retransferring those powers to the Minister of Agriculture, the mere abrogation on the twentieth of the earlier order in council would not be effective. I think they will have to pass an order in council to ratify what was done. Indeed, when they have done that they will have to come before the house and ask, and they will receive—ask and ye shall receive—forgiveness for what they did and legalization for what they ought not to have done.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the government perhaps deserves to be congratulated upon the honesty of the statement that has been made on its behalf today by the Minister of Transport. I think that, particularly in the last few sentences used by the Leader of the Opposition, the proper treatment has been given to the government for what it has done. Even so, Mr. Chairman, I believe that one or two things might be added, and that I might be permitted to add them because of the points that I raised on orders of the day when we first learned of these errors, to quote the Minister of Transport, that were made by the government.

Some of us on this side of the house made a number of statements that might have been called charges or allegations, and some of them the Minister of Transport admitted today to be correct. We contended that once the order in council of February 3 had been passed, the government had no legal right not to put its terms into effect. The Minister of Transport has now admitted that but says it was only a technical error. He says the order in council should have been revoked right away instead of leaving it there for 17 days. At least, he has now admitted the correctness of the charge that was made from this side of the house.

I remind him of an occasion when the previous government was in power when it, too, forgot to pass an order in council amending a decision that had been made. The then member for Bonavista-Twillingate thought this was a case of fumbling, or whatever term it was he applied to the government of that day. This was the occasion when the previous government, by order in council, appointed Hon. Earl Rowe as lieutenant governor of Ontario. Hon. members will recall that the first order in council not only appointed Hon. Earl Rowe to that position but fixed the date on which he would begin his new duties. Later, the then government decided to change the date, I think it was by exactly one month, but for some days or weeks the then government forgot to pass an amending order in council to change that date. As the Minister of Transport will recall, this was drawn to that government's attention in an interesting way, and it corrected its mistake by quickly passing an order in council amending the previous one.

No harm was done by this error or oversight in the intervening period, and all that happened was that a news report was not substantiated by an order in council. At any rate, the present government realizes it can make the same kind of mistake that the former government made. It too can delay by forgetting, if you will, to pass an order in council it ought to pass.

But the main point about what I am saying in this portion of my remarks is that the government has now admitted what we contended when we raised this matter on orders of the day, that the government had no legal right—just because the ministers decided it between themselves—not to put into effect the provisions of order in council P.C. 1964-157 of February 3.

Another point we made when we complained about this was that there was a 17 day period during which there was a possibility some of the acts of one or other of the ministers might be illegal. At the time it was contended that we were making wild charges, but in his statement today the minister has admitted that this was a possibility, to the extent of saying some of the acts, orders and expenditures have been checked or are being checked. The minister has also admitted that the government is prepared, if necessary, to get another signature on some of the agreements that were signed or to take any validating action that may be necessary.

As I say, this simply adds up to a confirmation of the point that we made, that there was some question about the legality of actions between February 3 and February 20, 1964. Even though we are treating this matter today in the friendly mood one would expect, after a confession on the part of the government, and after the kind of words the Leader of the Opposition has used on this, the 24th anniversary of his first election to the House of Commons, a day some of us remember very well, we must not overlook the seriousness of what is before us. If the rule of law means anything, then surely the people who should be most zealous in carrying it out are those who make up the government of the day. We hope, as a result of this experience, this kind of thing will not happen again. However, the trouble is that it is too often we have to stand up in the house and say we hope this sort of thing will not happen again, yet it goes on happening.

The other contention that was made by me—I do not know if others made it—was that the government should have published the orders in council of February 3 and February 20 in the Canada Gazette, part II. The Minister of Transport gives two reasons by way of defence for this not having been done. On the one hand he says it never has been done in the past, that orders in council under the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act have not been published in the Canada Gazette, part II. The other defence he uses is that the language of the Regulations Act refers to orders in council having legislative effect.

I would like to deal with that second point for just a moment. It is quite true—in fact I read this portion of the Regulations Act—

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the hon. gentleman a question. The hon. gentleman, who is very assiduous in all these matters, was here in 1950 when the Regulations Act was passed. He was here when the original consolidation of the statutory orders and regulations was made. He was also here when the revision of the statutory orders was made in 1955, and during all that time a great number of orders were passed under the transfer of duties act. They were never put in the original revision; they were never put in the revised document and were never published at any time and, since there were 21 in a six year period, there were probably at least twice that many in the whole period since then. In view of that, does the hon. gentleman think that now suddenly a change should have been made from the practice that was followed, going right back to the passing of the Regulations Act?

Mr. Knowles: I shall deal with that, but first may I confirm what the Minister of Transport has said, that I was here on all those occasions to which he referred. In fact I have a volume of the 1950 Hansard in my hand and I shall be quoting from it. I shall not be quoting from myself, but there are things in it to indicate that I took part in that debate, and I remember it very well. But may I interject at this point to say that the fact it has always been done a certain way does not necessarily mean that is the right way and that it is in conformity with the law.

It may be that this incident is the kind that tests the practice, and brings out the fact that perchance the practice has not been in conformity with the law or with what was the spirit and intent of the law.

It is clear, as I was about to point out, that the Regulations Act defines a regulation for the purposes of the Regulations Act as:

—a rule, order, regulation, bylaw or proclamation (i) made, in the exercise of a legislative power conferred by or under an act of parliament, by the governor in council—

—and so on. Section 6 of the act says:

(1) every regulation shall be published in English and in French in the Canada Gazette within 30 days after it is made.

I should like to take a minute to dwell on the word "legislative." The act says:

—a rule, order, regulation, bylaw or proclamation (i) made, in the exercise of a legislative power—

The minister seeks to draw a line between legislative and administrative functions, and I suggest that may be a line which the government has been drawing without the right to draw it in the way it has done.

I have checked each of the four statutes to which reference was made in the order in council of February 3, the Agricultural Farm Credit Act, the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation and Development Act, the Rehabilitation Act and the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. In each of those statutes, in words enacted by parliament, it is prescribed by legislation that the minister means the Minister of Agriculture. Parliament in its legislative capacity so ordered.

The effect of order in council P.C. 1964-157, as is the same with subsequent orders in council in this field, is to change a fact that was determined by parliament, to change a situation ordered by legislation. By virtue of this order in council these four acts were changed and the minister, instead of being the Minister of Agriculture, became the Minister of Forestry. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that in effect that is the exercise of a legislative authority, that it is actually a case of legislating, and that the government does not get around this by calling it administrative.

I recognize that there were 21 of these orders in council during a six year period referred to that were not published, and it may be there were many more during the years the Liberals were in power. But I should like to read to the Minister of Transport a portion of what the then prime minister, Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent, said on June 12, 1950, as reported in Hansard at page 3497. This was on the occasion when we were passing the Regulations Act, under which we still operate. We were dealing with the definition, a portion of which I have just read, and Mr. St. Laurent said this:

[Mr. Knowles.]

With respect to this definition, I want to state again that we found it would not be possible or prudent to make statutory exemptions with respect to the application of this statute. We wanted it to include everything, to make it necessary for us to call attention to anything that was not going to be governed by it. So we said we would make it as sweeping as possible so it would apply to every kind of order that has legislative effect, made under authority given by parliament; and if we wanted to take anything out of that general, sweeping declaration we would have to call attention to what we were taking out so if there should be any controversy as to whether it should be in or out the matter would be brought to the attention of hon. members and the public.

In other words, Mr. St. Laurent was dealing with three things—the definition, section 6, which calls for publication, and section 9 which permits a special order in council to exempt certain other orders and regulations from publication. The whole spirit of the legislation as presented to us on that occasion was that the inclusions were to be of a sweeping nature comprising everything that had legislative effect or was done in the exercise of legislative authority unless the government felt something should be omitted, in which case there had to be a special order in council exempting that class of order from publication.

I have not been able to find any indication of any order in council which exempts from publication orders in council made under the provisions of the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act. It may well be that a mistake has been made during the years in not publishing orders in council made under this act, but the statutes of Canada are quite clear. Members opposite say, in the case of the four statutes we are talking about, that the changes made in the status of the Minister of Agriculture were only administrative, that they did not have to publish the orders in the Canada Gazette. I grant that there was no deliberate concealment. The matter got into the newspapers and, once we learned about them, the orders in council could be obtained by asking for them at the privy council office. But, for my part, I did not know of their existence until I read about it in a newspaper.

Let us say that there is no case against the government of deliberate concealment, but the failure to publish this kind of order in council means that for a period of time the law of Canada has been changed by the cabinet. I suggest the argument that this has not been done over the years since the new method of procedure came into being does not justify the government's failure to comply with the appropriate statute. It certainly does not justify this particular example. I think what we have gone though now makes it clear that the pattern ought to be changed and that orders in council passed under the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act ought to be published in the Canada Gazette so that there may be no question but that these things will be found out.

This is an embarrassing situation. The government felt happy that it was not obliged to publish this, so that it would have time to sort things out. But parliament depends upon the operation of the rule of law in a matter such as this. I join with the Leader of the Opposition in saying that if the government finds, on further consideration, that it needs some legislative enactment to cover the errors, then because of the spirit of contrition in which the Minister of Transport has come before the house we shall be forgiving, and pass any such enactment. But I hope that as a result of this experience a little more attention will be paid to the niceties of keeping the law, because not just niceties are involved in this question, but the whole question of the rule of law itself.

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask the hon. member a question, to fill in the time between now and five o'clock? When the hon. member referred to section 9 of the Regulations Act he used an argument which I had in mind. He said he was not able to find an order in council which did, in fact, exempt any regulation or class of regulations. Do I understand him to say that no such order in council was passed, or that notice of such an order was not published?

Mr. Knowles: I said I know of no order in council under section 9 exempting from publication orders in council passed under the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act. Oh, there are a number of orders in council under section 9 passed to exempt certain classes of order in council from publication. The best example of this type of thing was given by Mr. St. Laurent, as reported on the same page of Hansard from which I was quoting earlier, when he talked about orders given from time to time from the control towers at our airfields. These would be multitudinous. There are orders in council under the section excepting that class of order in council or regulation from publication.

Again, I think the government acted as it did simply because it believed this was an administrative matter. I think it was both a mistake and a contravention of the clear terms of section 6 of the Regulations Act.

Mr. Bell: Can we be assured there were no penalties of a quasi-judicial nature imposed by these regulations? If there were, I think they could be seriously challenged.

Mr. Pickersgill: To the best of my knowledge—and I can assure the hon. gentleman that a very careful search has been made by people much more competent than I am to do so—there was nothing in that category at all.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST TO PROCEED WITH GOVERNMENT BUSINESS DURING PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR

Mr. Favreau: By unanimous consent of the house I move that this house proceed with government business until six o'clock.

Mr. Howard: Before agreement is reached, I should like to point out that it was on the understanding that the business which the government wishes to see concluded before Easter would be completed before six o'clock that we agreed to proceed and dispense with the private members' hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, just one technical point. I readily agree to this but I think it should be by agreement, rather than by motion. We do this all the time by agreement, and if we get too many precedents through doing things of this nature by motion we may find ourselves in some awkward situations.

Mr. Favreau: Let me make it clear that it is by agreement and on the assumption that everybody tries to get the business of the house through by six.

Mr. Churchill: What happens if we do not? Let us be clear about this. What happens if by six o'clock we have not finished the program which the government have in mind?

Mr. Favreau: May I suggest to the house leader for the opposition that we reserve decision on that point till then, if we get to that point.

Mr. Churchill: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, before we start at all, what are the items which have to be passed? Because we are not going to be placed in the position of the government simply choosing the items which ought to be passed. We are certainly not going to pass the supplementary estimates before the house at this time, regardless of the circumstances.

Mr. Favreau: I hope I have not been misunderstood, Mr. Speaker. I propose to ask unanimous consent of the house, when we reach that point, to sit later this day to see how far we can go with these supplementaries.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, let us settle this matter. The minister says "to see how far we can go". What happens if we do not get very far? Do we complete the business and have an Easter recess or do we not?

Mr. Favreau: I think it would be proper if I were allowed to confer with hon. gentlemen while the next hour proceeds.

Mr. Howard: If the views of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition prevail, then we may as well come back on Monday and proceed from there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of my view or anybody else's. Hundreds of millions of dollars of supplementary estimates have to be looked into, and this house cannot permit itself to be made the puppet of the government and to pass these things without full consideration being given to them. I want to make that clear. It is not an attitude of endeavouring to obstruct; it is an attitude of ensuring that we discharge our responsibilities. The organization of the house and the business of the house rests with the government. If the government wanted to get these estimates through they should have introduced them earlier or made time available to discuss them fully.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that in what I said was clearly implied the conclusion that I agree with the right hon. gentleman's proposition that estimates are not to be passed without all due consideration. That is precisely why I said that if we were not through with the estimates by six o'clock I would propose, and I think this is the right thing to do, to ask this house to sit later this day. Of course, if we have to come back on Monday we will, but it may well be it will not be necessary.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I believe the remarks made by the house leader on the other side are altogether unexpected at this time. He has suggested we should come back here on Monday. After the instructions given the house during the last few days, hon. members have made reservations. In view of the Easter holiday and all that is implied therein this is, I submit, a very unexpected suggestion from the house leader, and one which we did not expect of him.

Motion (Mr. Favreau) agreed to.

[Mr. Favreau.]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

DELEGATION TO REPRESENT FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I wonder if I can give the house, with unanimous consent, the information asked for earlier today concerning the federal delegation to the federal-provincial conference; and perhaps I might be permitted to table an outline of the proposed agenda, and if it met with the wishes of the house even have it made an appendix to Hansard so that it will be available for information purposes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we revert to government motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: The ministerial members of the federal delegation—that is all I will take the time of the house to give—are the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne), the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauve).

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder if I might ask the Acting Prime Minister, since I did not hear the name of the minister of northern affairs mentioned, who will be representing the governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories at the conference?

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, was it agreed, as I hope it was, that this document and the material connected with it will be made an appendix to Hansard for today?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it so agreed and ordered by the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For abovementioned document see appendix.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The Clerk Assistant having called the order of business: Government orders; house again in committee of supply.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I do not see how we can go into committee of supply when this is private members' hour and we have not agreed to waive it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It was the understanding of the Chair that there was agreement to the proposal made by the house leader that private members' hour would be postponed.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I understood there was agreement, and the agreement was that this was not a device to force estimates to be voted hastily or while hon. members still wanted to talk. But I did understand there was agreement that private members' hour was being waived to allow us to go on with government business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should like to know what is the wish of the house. If the desire of the house is that we postpone private members' hour then we will, of course, revert to government orders.

Mr. Nugent: The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) said he would agree to the postponement only on the condition that government business would be finished. If that agreement has been withdrawn, then that is all right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understood the matter had been settled by subsequent discussion.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, there were no conditions attached at all. I said we would agree to postpone private members' hour on the general assumption that there would be a desire to try and finish by that time; but if we do not finish the consideration of the estimates by that time, then at six o'clock we should look very seriously at whether or not we should come back on Monday and do so. I am prepared to come back on Monday and all next week if necessary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it now agreed that the house will return to government orders?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, Department of Agriculture, vote 1e.

Mr. Churchill: No, we are on citizenship and immigration.

The Chairman: The chairman of the committee called the Department of Agriculture earlier this afternoon. We were apparently on that before five o'clock. If it is the desire of the committee that we now call citizenship and immigration then the Chair is in the hands of the committee.

Mr. Gordon: I would suggest that, having reverted to agriculture, we should proceed with it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bigg: I believe I had the floor when we were talking on immigration. I am willing to yield it, provided I have the opportunity to continue at a later date.

The Chairman: I am sure the committee would have no objection to that.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1e.—Departmental administration—to extend the purposes of vote 1 of the main estimates for 1963-64 to include the gift detailed in these estimates and to provide a further amount of $60,000.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, earlier we were discussing the activities of the government under the transfer of duties act in transferring certain responsibilities from the Minister of Agriculture. I would suggest that they would do Canada a much greater service if they were to transfer some more duties from the Minister of Agriculture, namely his function under the Cold Storage Act as that act applies to fisheries products.

Mr. Knowles: We could put the Minister of Agriculture in cold storage.

Mr. Howard: My colleague says that we could put the Minister of Agriculture in cold storage, if desired. That is something the government will have to consider, not me. But I would earnestly appeal to the government to consider my request and would point out that we used to put forward this point of view years ago when the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was merely the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and not a member of the cabinet. I would ask him to take up the cudgels while he is in cabinet as he used to when he sat on this side of the house, in order to get some decent and fair consideration for fishermen under the Cold Storage Act. Right now they are being completely swamped with the situation that exists in agriculture, and no fair or reasonable consideration is being given to the requests and desires of these people for subsidies and subventions under the Cold Storage Act for purely fisheries products. If the government would take that course and make another transfer of duties and exclude the Minister of Agriculture from dealing with this matter, I am sure we would be much better off.

Mr. Hays: I would just like to comment on this matter, Mr. Chairman. In so far as cold storage is concerned, we have taken a very close look at every application we have received and most of them have been approved. Hon. members will remember that the previous government had an austerity program and cold storage grants were frozen; but I suggest that we have approved more applications in the last few weeks than were approved in the preceding 18 months.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, there is one thing I should like to mention in connection with what has been said this afternoon. I think hon. members of the house will be interested to know that so far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned, we are interested first in farmers across Canada and the job we can do for farmers. ARDA has been mentioned many times in this house, and I would like hon. members to know that although perhaps we have not talked about it very much, since May 1, 1963 until the present time the government has spent a little over $11 million on ARDA projects. The previous government, from the inception of the act on June 22, 1961 until the time I was appointed Minister of Agriculture, had carried out $2,185,000 worth of projects. I might say that since May 1 we have completed over five times as many ARDA projects, in dollars as the previous government.

I think I should possibly say something about feed grain because this is a very important matter to eastern farmers. Hon. members will recall that on August 27 we changed our feed grain policy whereby we would pay the storage on feed grain at eastern spots, and we would also pre-price the grain and provide the same price as applied to China or anywhere else. As a result of this policy we found that on March 12 we had 47 per cent more feed grain on spot in eastern locations than we had a year ago; that we will not have to bring one bushel by rail, and the prices have been stabilized. I do not have the most recent figures, but from the middle of October until the middle of February there was no substantial change in price. I should also perhaps mention something about farm credit.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, could I ask a question at this point?

Mr. Hays: Yes.

Mr. Vincent: Has the minister the figures right now of the price of, let us say last October, 1963 and the price of January, 1964 or February, 1964, on oats and barley? Does the minister have those figures?

Mr. Hays: I could obtain them in a moment for the hon. member. I had that information at noon. There have been some changes up and down, but for the most part there has been no change in price. The fact that we have had the grain on spot is responsible for some stabilization in so far as price is concerned. On March 14 we had 21 million bushels of oats, wheat, barley and corn in eastern locations, and this will be ample to take care of the feed requirements of eastern Canada. As I pointed out before, this is 47 per cent more than was in eastern locations just a year ago.

With regard to farm credit, Mr. Chairman, some people think we have not done anything in this connection. I would like hon. members to know that from April 1, 1962 to March 31, 1963 the number of loans serviced was 7,438, for a total of $90,924,000 lent by the Farm Credit Corporation; and from April 1, 1963 to February 29, 1964 we serviced 8,613 loans for an amount of $106,708,000. It is perhaps well for hon. members to know at this time that I was in complete agreement with the changes so far as my department was concerned. Personalities were not involved at all. We asked ourselves, "What is good for agriculture? How can we better serve the farmers"? That was the only thing we had in mind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hays: My department has over 30 acts to administer and employs something over 10,000 people. Taking ARDA away from the department will reduce that number by eight or ten employees, and as far as the administration of feed grain is concerned, not more than one employee will be affected in this transfer. So I will lose possibly eight or ten people from my staff of 10,000. I know that ARDA is very important as far as farmers are concerned. I think this is exemplified by the fact that our government believes in it; we believe it is a good act—the early planning of it goes back to 1955—and since May 1, 1963 we have done five times more than was done by the previous government.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could pose one question to the minister about cold storage activities. I think the minister said that in the last few weeks they have approved more applications under the Cold Storage Act than were approved in the previous 18 months. Did I hear the minister correctly?

Mr. Hays: This figure may not be too accurate; I do not have the exact figures here and I would not want to mislead the committee as far as this matter is concerned. We feel that more thought should be given to the question of cold storage, because I personally do not believe that the grants are doing the big job that is required today with regard to cold storage, We have apples to think of, fish, vegetables and all these things, and it seems to us that there should be some change in policy. Nevertheless we are giving careful consideration to the applications that come to us. We are considering them on their merit so we can do something in this regard where co-ops and people are going to be affected, until such time as we have an opportunity to present new legislation which will include a change of policy which we think will do a better job for all those in need of assistance across Canada.

Mr. Howard: Has the austerity program been rescinded or is it still in effect?

Mr. Ricard: They wouldn't know what it is anyway.

Mr. Hays: This program is partially in effect. As I said, we are considering each application on its merits.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to say a few words first about the statement made by the Minister of Transport on behalf of the Prime Minister on the point that I raised originally in this house with regard to the possibility of the illegality of any action taken by the government between February 3 and February 20. My first reaction to the rather lengthy statement of the minister was rather one of great disappointment. Hon. members will recall, I am sure, that we made quite a to-do about this and many questions were asked in the house. We asked for a strong opinion as to the legality. We felt it was necessary for this house to be reassured that any actions taken by the government during that period were legal, and I suggested that remedial, retroactive legislation would have to be introduced.

The statement read by the minister certainly contained no strong legal opinion. In fact, there were one or two suggestions in it that led me to believe that the legal advisers could go no further than to suggest that the government might get away by bringing in the word "technicality" and by making statements such as no member of the public was affected by anything done in this period. If this is the sort of statement that the government is going to make in order to try to whitewash this matter, if the government is going to give us a nebulous statement of this sort instead of the candid opinion we have asked for, then I am sure the house has to inquire a little further.

I noticed yesterday that the government asked to stand two motions by the hon. member for Provencher, under notices of motions for the production of papers. These items dealt directly with action that could have been taken during the period in question and if that information was before us we would be able to determine for ourselves just how far the government has to go to patch up the series of blunders that occurred during this period. I found also that I was more than a little shaken by the effrontery of the government with regard to the manner in which they deal with their duties, and the way in which they regard orders in council. An order in council is passed which has the force of law. It affects departments that are very important and the attitude of the cabinet seems to be that it does not matter what the law is, that it does not matter whether the action is legal, that they will do what they like, fix it up somehow and push it through.

I should have liked to hear further assurance from the minister than just that he would have the Minister of Forestry sign these eight ARDA agreements. I may not be the best lawyer in the house but in my opinion this may not take care of the legality of the situation at all. I do not believe the Minister of Agriculture had the authority to sign those agreements. In other words, they are not in effect now, and that is not a mere technicality. Complete absence of authority cannot by any stretch of the imagination be called a technicality. The Minister of Agriculture had no authority. These agreements are not in force in law and I do not think the signing of them now by the Minister of Forestry will give them legal effect.

We would like to hear from the minister that he is going to bring in retroactive, remedial legislation at the earliest opportunity. I know it is a little difficult to conceive of the government bringing it in this evening. Right after Easter would do. I was also somewhat shocked by the suggestion of the house leader that these estimates have to be passed tonight. I remember asking the Prime Minister on Monday to discontinue the budget debate. Once the budget was presented to the house there was no need to carry on with the very general budget debate.

The government knew quite well that it had to have interim supply. The government now says that these estimates have to be passed, but if that is so they also knew that before. Despite requests from this side the government persisted in continuing with the budget debate on the first two days of this week. In my opinion it again shows the government's contempt for parliament that they will unnecessarily spend two days on the budget debate and at the last minute come on their knees and say that these estimates have got to be passed.

This attitude makes me somewhat fed up because there was a speech I very much wanted to make this afternoon on interim supply. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources referred to me this morning rather gratuitously and rather unfairly, I thought, and the speech I have had ready for two weeks waiting for an opportunity to deliver it is still resting here. I want to make that speech on northern affairs because I think it is very necessary that the minister take a little instruction. But in order to assist the government and because I thought it was necessary to pass interim supply I sat and said nothing. I am prepared not to have the opportunity to make the speech before Easter, if that is necessary, but if the government thinks it is going to get these estimates passed before the house adjourns for Easter, then all I say is I am sure we will be back here next week, not because some members are stubborn, not because they refuse to co-operate, but simply because the government has taken the high-handed attitude that it is going to handle things the way it wants to and members are going to do as they are told by the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The steamroller.

Mr. Nugent: It has never been my opinion that the government is mightier than parliament and this is one time that we had better show the government it is not. I trust the government will content itself with the knowledge that these estimates are not going to be passed before Easter. If they had any honest belief that they should be passed before Easter, then they should have brought them in at a time when essential and necessary measures should have been discussed instead of insisting on proceeding with the budget debate.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of speaking this afternoon but I see that the Minister of Agriculture is in the saddle. I also speak as one who represents a constituency which is very much interested in agriculture, and I do not feel I should let this opportunity go by without saying anything. We have been accustomed to listen to the Minister of Agriculture tell us that everything has been bright and rosy since he has been the minister, but I should like the minister to come with me and consult the agriculturists and farmers of my riding and also the agriculturists of the whole of Canada. If he did so he would indeed find that their story is different from the one he tries to put across. I have before me a clipping from the Manitoba Co-Operator of February, 1964, and contrary to what the minister would like us to believe prices are going down rather than up under his efficient and able direction. I should like to refer to the average price for good slaughter steers for 1962 compared with 1963 on the Toronto market. For 1962 good steers averaged $25.65 whereas in 1963 under the minister's able leadership they only averaged $23.65 per hundred pounds. What about hogs, grade A, Mr. Chairman? In 1962 the average price for grade A hogs was $29.60 whereas under his great leadership they only averaged $27.80. And so on.

It was music to us a while ago to hear the Minister of Agriculture say that ARDA was a great law and that it was the hope of the agriculturists and farmers of Canada. But he went on to say that the credit for it should go to the Liberal party. You and I know, Mr. Chairman, that the ARDA program was instituted under the leadership of the Leader of the Opposition and also with the co-operation of the then minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who is now, although he is in the opposition, on a trip abroad selling Canada and the products of Canada. Let it be known to the whole country that faith in agricultural policies was never greater than when the Conservatives were in power from 1957 until 1963.

The Conservatives were the ones who gave the farmers hope. We were the ones who instituted the stabilization act which was a general charter for farmers and permitted our farmers to know in advance from year to year the prices they would receive for their products. This measure gave our farmers some hope, and it was instituted long before the hon. member for Calgary South became the Minister of Agriculture.

I should like, Mr. Chairman, to refer to what the occupants of the treasury benches promised during the campaigns in 1962 and 1963 in order to deceive the farmers and in order to capture power. I have in front of me a pamphlet issued in 1962 in which they promised the farmers a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada. Where is that minister of agriculture? They have retreated on this matter just as they have on many others. They have been going backwards rather than going forward as our farmers would like them to do. One of the first things they did when they assumed office was to take away the 25-cent subsidy which was given to the producers of milk all across Canada. What was the effect of this action in my riding, as well as in the province of Quebec? During the time we were in office the total amount paid to farmers in Quebec under this subsidy program was about $21,800,000. In my own riding, the total subsidy payment was $1,576,000.

I should like the Minister of Agriculture to come to my riding and try to sell the farmers the idea that they are more prosperous under the leadership of the Liberals than they were under the leadership of the Conservatives. I should like him to come to my riding and go from farm to farm asking whether they prefer the leadership of the Conservative party or of the Liberal party. I am sure the answer he would receive would be that the Liberals were trying to take away what our farmers deserve. I could not let this opportunity go by without asking the Minister of Agriculture to re-establish this subsidy. It would not be a big chore for the government to back up because it has been backing up ever since it came into office. The government is always putting forth legislation and then taking it away. Once more I would ask the minister finally to accept the fact that the farmers want this 25 cents per hundred subsidy on milk re-established.

I am speaking here on behalf of my fellow farmers in the riding of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. I want nothing more or nothing less than the best that can be obtained for the farmers of my riding and the farmers of Quebec. I am imploring the minister to re-establish this 25-cent subsidy because I am telling him he is the cause of the farmers in my riding losing thousands of dollars. I think it is my duty to bring this matter to the attention of the government. Even if I have to get down on my knees to ask for the re-establishment of this 25-cent subsidy for the benefit of my farmers, I would do so.

Mr. Fisher: I am always trying to catch up on things that have happened here in the past, and in his remarks the minister referred to the fact—I was not completely clear on this—that in the year 1955 the government of that day, I presume a Liberal government, had done something or created something or was involved in something like ARDA. This is a complete mystery to me and I think the minister having raised it should satisfy our curiosity and interest.

Mr. Hays: In answer to the hon. member I may say that I was referring to the Senate committee on land use. It was as a result of the findings of that committee in so far as rural rehabilitation was concerned that this program was developed.

Mr. Fisher: This is delightful. I know the minister is relatively new to federal politics, but this is the first time I have heard that the Senate committee on land use had anything to do with the development of ARDA. I think I am one of the few members who has read the proceedings of that committee carefully.

I do not come from an agricultural or farming riding. All one has to do is to look at the Laurentian shield and you know why. We have a tremendous area of cut-over forest land or what might be called settlers' areas. This is a problem that runs all the way from northern Ontario through Manitoba and Saskatchewan and, certainly, it is very prevalent in Quebec. One of the reasons those of us from these areas were so enthusiastic about the ARDA concept was that at last we had a program that offered a marriage betwen forestry and agriculture, and a program that could go into those regions where far too much of the forest had been eliminated, in so far as agriculture was concerned, to suit the wishes and needs of bygone generations.

I may tell the minister that we were involved in a committee on lands, forests and waters a few years ago and also in a committee on agriculture, and both of these committees came forward with suggestions which I might refer the minister to, and which predated the introduction of ARDA. In so far as the Senate committee on land use is concerned, I recall that they brought in experts from all across the country to express opinions but they did not take the trouble of crystallizing all the evidence and offering recommendations. Perhaps the minister is suggesting that all the time the officials of the Department of Agriculture were moving toward the ARDA concept, as a result of what the Senate committee on land use was uncovering. This would be sensational if it is factual. Again I cannot believe it because I know how difficult a time the previous government had selling the ARDA concept to the officials of the Department of Agriculture. One of the reasons the minister can stand up and take credit for $11 million under his regime, in contrast with only $2 million under the previous regime, is just because of that lack of enthusiasm on the part of the permanent officials of the Department of Agriculture.

The minister made the point that he did not lose many people in the way of employees by the slough off of ARDA to the Minister of Forestry. This proves the point. The Department of Agriculture and its senior officials never had any great enthusiasm for ARDA. That is one of the reasons why the program has crept and limped along. At the time he lost his portfolio due to the last general election, the previous minister of agriculture was working up a pretty heavy head of steam and temper about the response from the department, and for the minister to come in here and give the impression he is bulling ARDA through to greater success is much more than I can take.

This is neither the time nor the occasion for the rebuttal of the partisan hyperbole which the minister engaged in, but I do not believe any minister of the crown should be allowed to get away with that kind of stuff in this chamber. I suggest that due to the different things which have happened in the last month or so, despite the way they happened, we have at last got an imaginative program like ARDA not only out of the hands of the officials of the Department of Agriculture but out of the minister's hands, and that that is good.

Mr. Hays: Almost any day, Mr. Chairman, I can pick up a paper and see where a lot of wind has come from some corners. I am hearing a little more of that wind today. I would like to assure the hon. member that it is something to talk, but it is something else to do things. All I am saying is that we are doing something with ARDA. We are not just talking about it, like it has been talked about this afternoon.

Mr. Bigg: I have been waiting for some months to reach the Department of Agriculture estimates and I am very pleased to see the minister here today, apparently quite ready to take on all comers and answer a few questions. Dealing first with the Farm Credit Act, I would like to know how many loans would have been made to farmers if those loans had not been arranged at 5 per cent by the previous administration?

Further, it takes a great deal of time to process all loan proposals. It took our administration time to process them, and I would suggest 50 per cent of the loans for which the minister has taken credit were already well processed by the time he took office.

I am glad to see that the minister supports the farm credit program. It loosens up credit all across the nation, and has made it possible for the family farmer to get on his feet. I can only compliment the minister on supporting this program.

In his public utterances the minister, time and time again, has suggested that all the problems of agriculture are well in hand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bigg: You may well cheer, but see if you cheer when I finish. It is fine for people who have had good crops and who had grain to sell under the imaginative sales program which we launched. They have sold their grain at good prices, but what about the people who did not have crops? They are the people who need crop insurance, and I want some action taken in my province through co-operation between the federal government and the Alberta government to see to it that the small farmer who does not get a crop has some security.

In my district of Athabasca we were not fortunate last year. We did not have a great crop and the people there do not think all the problems of agriculture are solved. They are looking for something like the acreage payments they used to get. They got them three times in three bad crop years and it saved them. It may be that some of my colleagues have sympathy with rich farmers. I know the Minister of Agriculture has, but the people I am talking about think that $200 to buy underwear for their children is important. If they do not get acreage payments they will want to know why. They need this kind of help.

I am pleased to see that the price of hogs has not fallen to disaster levels. It is always possible that it may reach the danger point. I am not going to blame the Minister of Agriculture for this, but I suggest he should not wait to do something until it reaches disaster levels.

I am personally in favour of the hog quota. I have never believed in supporting hog prices across the board, but I do believe in a reasonable family farm quota, and if prices continue to slip I suggest that the minister lower the hog quota to 75 and increase the support price to 25 cents a pound. If he looks at the statistics over the past five years he will see that, from the time our administration introduced this scheme, it has not cost the people of Canada one cent in deficiency payments. Before that it used to cost them from $23 million to $24 million a year to support hog prices. I suggest that the minister should not forget the lessons of the past. He should lower the quota when there is a danger of overproduction and lower prices, and raise the price which the small farmer gets.

I can say the same thing about the grade A hog bonus, and I suggest the minister look at the statistics showing how many grade A hogs were raised due to the sensible program of supporting the price of grade A hogs with the $3 bonus. With the price per pound that the farmer gets, and with the addition of the grade A bonus, it makes all the difference to him.

If the Liberal government has no program for agriculture, and I have reason to believe it has none, I suggest it take the advice of the farm unions. We took the suggestions made by the farm unions and they were put into effect by our minister of agriculture. The problems of agriculture have only been scratched, but to come to the question of the ARDA program—

Mr. Hays: Are you speaking of the Hon. Douglas Harkness or the Hon. Alvin Hamilton?

Mr. Bigg: I am speaking of our whole agricultural program. The stabilization prices act was introduced by Hon. Douglas Harkness.

Mr. Hays: Then give him credit.

Mr. Bigg: I have no quarrel whatsoever with our program from the time we took office. It was imaginative and the people of Canada know it was effective. The present minister is very proud of our wheat sales, but I ask who made the breakthrough? Who promised the $2 wheat? We promised the $2 wheat and we produced it for the western farmer by selling the wheat we had. Look at the record. I have been consistent. I have always pressed for the sale of wheat to China, or to anybody else who wanted to buy it.

Now I want to speak about ARDA. It is a program I back, and I do so for this reason. I am a federal member of parliament. I am not only the member for Athabasca in Alberta but I represent every farmer in Canada, and the ARDA program will give the same kind of hope to the eastern farmer that the western farmer has now. I repeat that the western farmer's problems are not over by any means, but the ARDA program will give to the small eastern farmer the same kind of hope we have established west of Winnipeg. Let us give the credit for ARDA to whom it is due. Maybe the Liberals dreamed about this program quietly, but it was our administration which put it on the statute books.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I would have many things to say on the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), but I find the situation we witnessed last year is still the same this year. Before the Christmas recess, we studied the estimates of the Department of Agriculture on the last day, and this year we study them at the last moment.

It seems the government intends to submit the estimates of the Department of Agriculture only when we have very little time to discuss them.

We would have much to say on the Department of Agriculture, and more particularly on the needs of the farmers.

At the present time, in eastern Canada, and especially in my province, farming papers contain editorials to which I would like today to call the attention of the house. I would mention in particular the editorial published in the newspaper Terre de Chez Nous on March 19, 1964, which was entitled:

Look out for fancy skating, Mr. Pearson.

And then we read:

Agriculture up for auction in Ottawa.

This well indicates the way our eastern Canada farmers and those of the province of Quebec understand the agricultural policy of the present government.

Some time ago, I put to the minister a question concerning ox and calf hides.

Nowadays packers and farmers sell such products at 6 cents a pound, that is $2.50 or $3 for an ox hide and about 75 cents for a calf hide.

I asked the Minister of Agriculture a question on that point, and he answered in these terms:

The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that we are eating in the neighbourhood of 6,000 head more cattle, so we have 6,000 more hides, and the population has not increased enough to absorb them in the use of leather goods.

That was the reply by the Minister of Agriculture.

Later on I received information from the Department of Trade and Commerce to the effect that in 1962, there were 2,452,320 ox-hides in the market in Canada, as against 2,462,996 in 1963.

Besides, if we refer to page 942 of Hansard, we find out that the price for cowhide, on the Canadian market, was 14.4 cents in 1963, compared with 13.8 cents on March 1, 1964.

Since I raised that matter on February 24 last and again on March 16, I would ask the minister if he can explain immediately why farmers and packers in my area must accept a price of 6 cents a pound when the market price, according to the Department of Trade and Commerce, is 13.8 cents a pound.

Also, I should like the minister to tell us, in view of the fact that the question was put to him on February 24, why farmers and packers in my area and in my province have to accept a price of 6 or 7 cents a pound for calf hide, when the Department of Trade and Commerce tells us that the market price, on March 1 last, was 20 cents a pound.

The minister can see that there is a big difference and he will understand that the farmers want to know why that price is much below the price I got from the Department of Trade and Commerce. Moreover, the minister maintains that our production is too high, and that there is no market for all those skins in Canada. He says that our exports to the United States and other countries are higher than our consumption.

Before going further, I am asking the Minister of Agriculture to tell me whether he has considered the problem and why the farmer does not receive the actual market price for his ox and calf skins.

Mr. Chairman, I am asking that question to the Minister of Agriculture, I asked the same question on February 24 last and I would like to know now whether he is in a position to answer today.

[Text]

Mr. Hays: I do not know. I cannot answer this question, and I am sure no one else can answer it. The law of supply and demand enters into these things and the hon. member's particular problem may be a regional problem. But I will be glad to look into it. This is the first time I have heard of it.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: I asked that question on February 24; that was almost two months ago.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Favreau: May I have permission to draw to the attention of the house the fact that unless, somehow, we have unanimous consent to proceed, then otherwise, under the rules this house will have to sit tomorrow, Good Friday, a course with which I personally would not agree. I therefore suggest that we give unanimous consent to carrying on with government business—that we should not adjourn at six o'clock tonight but that we carry on with government business as long as possible in order to see what advance can be made.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I point out immediately that the understanding was that there would be an adjournment, provided interim supply were passed. We passed interim supply. There never was any question that before the adjournment for Easter recess the supplementary estimates were to be passed. At no time was there such an understanding.

Here we have before us $240 million of supplementary estimates. Every session parliament is criticized for the precipitate pace with which it approves the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars without examination. Our responsibility is to carefully examine them. That responsibility is not discharged when a government proceeds as it has during the past few days. On Monday and Tuesday it proceeded with the budget debate. There was no reason in the world for that course unless the position of the government was that these supplementary estimates did not have to be passed.

Let me point out, Mr. Speaker, what took place in this house on March 23, as reported in the translation of the remarks of the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) at page 1358 of Hansard. The hon. member asked:

> Could the Prime Minister publish a notice showing the holidays of secretaries—

And so on. Then there is text by the Prime Minister underneath as follows:

> I thought it had already been indicated to the house that it is our hope and intention to adjourn Thursday evening and resume our session on April 6. There is one reservation to that, of course, and that is on the understanding that interim supply is passed by the house.

Now, that was the understanding, but it went further than had been the case on an earlier day; and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) commented:

> No, you did not say that the other day.

Then the house proceeded to give the government interim supply, as it should, because we have the fullest opportunity to examine expenditures. But to suggest that the house is to be browbeaten by the proposition that unless we concur and vote hundreds of millions of dollars we are going to sit on Good Friday is one which I say will not be acceptable to the people of Canada—let that be clear. This cannot be justified. As a matter of fact, I doubt whether the house could sit on that date without unanimous consent, although I will not say—

Mr. Pickersgill: Might I ask the right hon. gentleman a question. I do not know whether the right hon. gentleman caught the statement made by the house leader, which was that under the rules of the house we are bound to sit tomorrow at 11 a.m. unless there is unanimous consent to change the rules. The house leader said that he did not want to sit tomorrow, and I do not think any of us want to sit, but we will require unanimous consent to prevent us from sitting because there has not been 48 hours' notice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this sort of—

An hon. Member: Blackmail.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will not use the word I have in mind. This is an endeavour to bamboozle the house and force us into a position where we vote hundreds of millions of dollars without examination. I say that there is no necessity for the passage of these supplementary estimates at this time; they can be passed after we return. It is not a question of holding up salaries because we have passed interim supply. I am beginning to realize now what the plan was—to waste the time by having the budget discussed. I am using the phrase "waste the time" in the sense that the time should have been used for discussion of the supplementary estimates.

The government now come along and say that we are going to sit tomorrow. The very suggestion that we sit this evening for a couple of hours and pass $200 million worth of supplementary estimates is a travesty of parliament, let me make that clear. We are not going to be placed in the position of being the puppets of those people over there who have not properly organized the business of the house.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, with part of what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said we are in agreement. We are in this jam, and it has to be called that, because the program announced by the government on February 28 for the period up to Easter was later changed. On February 28 the program of business was outlined. It did not include the budget. It was putting into that program not only the presentation of the budget but several days of budget debate which upset the schedule and put us in the position in which we find ourselves at this time. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I think we should act as mature people and face the fact that this kind of thing frequently happens and that we do get to a place where certain necessities have to be met.

The Leader of the Opposition has read the answer of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to a question about another matter to support his contention that we were never told that the supplementaries have to be passed before the end of March. It was my understanding all the time that both interim supply and supplementary estimates had to be passed before the end of the fiscal year, but even if that understanding is not clear it seems to me it is the tidy thing to do. It seems to me that we have been bedevilled for a couple of years with estimates which have been dragging on which we have had to pass after the event, and it would be a good idea, if parliament wants to do things in a business-like way, to get all the estimates for the fiscal year 1963-64 out of the way before the end of that fiscal year. In other words, I think we should put the blame, as it should be put, on the government for changing the program and putting us in this jam; but as a parliament I think we should face the fact that something must be done and that we should decide without passion or a lot of emotion what we are going to do. If the Leader of the Opposition feels it is useless to sit tonight and that we cannot do all this in two or three hours, then that is a statement of fact and let it be put that way. I submit we should face the facts of our job and that we had better come back on Monday and Tuesday and try and finish it then.

[Translation]

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, we are against any attempt by the government to use force and threats in order to hasten the passage of supplementary estimates. However, we do not think it is logical to delay their passage, since we shall have the opportunity, when the budget debate is resumed, to criticize the government about certain pieces of legislation we do not approve, along with other parties. If the official opposition is unwilling to allow those estimates to be considered more rapidly, it is merely to put grit in the bearings and not for some serious reasons, because they are well aware that they will have every opportunity to consider those supplementary estimates on resumption of the budget debate.

The members of our group do not want to prevent passage of those estimates and will readily agree to any compromise proposed so that they may be passed as soon as possible.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, we do not agree, as I said earlier, to pass the supplementary estimates speedily and accept anything as if it were a mere pittance.

We are ready to sit tonight. As for sitting tomorrow, we object for several reasons. If we had to come back Monday or Tuesday, we are quite ready, but not without knowing exactly what the government requests. I find it hard to understand that we should always be placed in that situation. It was the same when the Conservative party was in power and now when they blame the Liberal party for acting this way, it is an indication of their lack of responsibility.

Anyway, we are prepared to co-operate, but not to pass in a lump sum all the estimates without previous scrutiny and consideration.

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the attention of the house that we now have under question the word of the Prime Minister of this country. This is not something that has come upon us suddenly. On March 11, as is reported at page 778 of Hansard, you find the heading "Business of the house" and then, "Announcement of Easter recess". Then there are the words of the Prime Minister as follows:

> I informed the house the other day that today I would announce the plans for the Easter recess. It is proposed, Mr. Speaker, that the house should adjourn at the end of business on Thursday, March 26 and reassemble on Monday, April 6.

An hon. Member: The business is not completed.

Mr. Churchill: Then, as has already been drawn to our attention, the Prime Minister of this country reaffirmed that position on March 23, and although the question that brought forth his answer was on another subject, nevertheless his answer referred to the adjournment of the house, and I repeat it. These are the words of the Prime Minister:

> Mr. Speaker, I thought it had already been indicated to the house that it is our hope and intention to adjourn Thursday evening and resume our session on April 6. There is one reservation to that, of course, and that is on the understanding that interim supply is passed by the house.

That is the word of the Prime Minister of this country. Everybody has made plans and arrangements based on that. With regard to the business of the house, we have gone through this time and time again, session after session, but we are not pressed at this particular moment to effect what the hon.

member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) calls a "tidy operation", passing $240 million in just a few hours.

Mr. Knowles: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I made no such suggestion. The hon. member knows that I suggested we pass these items in this fiscal year, and I suggested that in view of what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said, we come back and do it decently and properly on Monday and Tuesday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Hansard will indicate what was said. The organization of the business of the house failed because of the obstinacy of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) insisting on having his budget discussed rather than dealing with these other matters, which are also his responsibility, namely the supplementary estimates. There are no salaries involved here. These are debts owed by the crown and can be settled in due course. But to ask us to continue and to sit on Good Friday or on Easter Monday is contrary to the given word of the Prime Minister.

May I also draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that two years ago the Liberal party of this country, in the person of their then house leader, Hon. Mr. Chevrier, requested that the house should not sit on the Thursday before Good Friday because he said it is a holy day. I drew this to the attention of the present Prime Minister and asked him to look back at Hansard for April 12, 1962, page 2894, when Mr. Chevrier put forward that proposal. The Prime Minister said he would look at it, but he did not report on it. At that time the prime minister of the day, Right Hon. Mr. Diefenbaker said that under no circumstances would the house sit on the holy day, and consequently we did not sit on the Thursday before Good Friday, at the request of Mr. Chevrier. Now the present group are asking us to sit on Good Friday.

Mr. Favreau: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, this just cannot be done.

Mr. Favreau: —I shall not allow anybody to distort my words—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Favreau: —and try to suggest that I even implied that this house ought to sit on Good Friday. I said clearly that I disagreed with that proposition, and this was why, to circumvent the rule or to modify the rule, for that particular purpose I said we would need unanimous consent. I said exactly the contrary of what the hon. gentleman has contended.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Nielsen: What about holy Thursday?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, did the minister imply that in order to avoid that we would have to sit tonight and pass the supplementary estimates that are before us?

Mr. Favreau: I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend's speech, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to continue with my question of privilege. If the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg South Centre has finished, I would ask your permission to answer the allegation that there was, or would have been, an agreement to adjourn to April 6 as soon as interim supply was passed. Nobody should allow the words of the Prime Minister of this country to be put in doubt. When the Prime Minister referred to that reservation first, he was expressing a hope; and second, he stated so after I had at least once, if not twice, announced in the house that the house would be proceeding with supplementary estimates first, and then with interim supply. It is clear that when the Prime Minister said that, that he implied—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Favreau: —that these matters would both be dealt with first.

An hon. Member: What a weak argument.

Mr. Favreau: I now suggest, Mr. Speaker, that under the reserve of having to sit on Monday, if we must, but to avoid sitting on Good Friday, this house do not adjourn and that it sit tonight until the house decides on an adjournment.

Mr. Churchill: You break the Prime Minister's word.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, if it is necessary to have unanimous consent to avoiding sitting tomorrow, feeling as I do about the way the government has mismanaged the business of the house, I am giving notice now that the only way I will give consent to avoid sitting tomorrow is that this house adjourns now until April 6, and on no other condition will I give my consent. If the government does not want to sit tomorrow, that is too bad. I want the Prime Minister's word kept, and the only condition upon which I will give consent, in order to avoid sitting tomorrow, is on that basis.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I would like to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In the absence of any order of the house, if we adjourn at this point, then of course according to the rules of the house we will resume tomorrow at eleven o'clock.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid—

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Favreau: —having to sit on Good Friday, I suggest that the house give unanimous consent to adjourning until Monday, March 30, at 2.30 p.m.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nugent: Refused.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Since there is obviously not unanimous consent, this house stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock.

It being twenty one minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put.

APPENDIX

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—DELEGATION TO REPRESENT FEDERAL GOVERNMENT, AND RELATED INFORMATION

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE
(March 31, 1964)

Proposed Agenda and Procedures

A. Proposed Agenda

1. Relations between shared-cost programs and fiscal arrangements, including the implications of contracting out.
2. Canada pension plan.
3. Reciprocal arrangements regarding taxation of government departments and agencies.
4. Other aspects of fiscal relations.
5. Federal proposals regarding loans to university students.
6. Liaison arrangements, with particular reference to calendar of meetings for 1964.
7. Report on Canadian 1967 world exhibition.
8. Other matters.

B. Proposed Procedures

All provinces agree that the procedures adopted at the November conference were generally satisfactory and should be followed again at this conference. There will be an opportunity at the opening of the conference to discuss such possible changes and improvements in these procedures as might be considered desirable.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE QUEBEC CITY—MARCH 31, 1964

Federal Delegation

Federal Government

Rt. Hon. L. B. Pearson, Prime Minister, head of delegation; Mr. G. Rouleau, Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister; Hon. W. L. Gordon, Minister of Finance and Receiver General; Hon. M. Lamontagne, Secretary of State for Canada; Hon. A. J. MacEachen, Minister of Labour; Hon. J. LaMarsh, Minister of National Health and Welfare; Hon. G. Favreau, Minister of Justice and Attorney General; Hon. H. Hays, Minister of Agriculture; Hon. M. Sauve, Minister of Forestry.

Advisers

Mr. R. G. Robertson, Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary to the Cabinet; Mr. J. E. G. Hardy, Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet; Mr. R. B. Bryce, Deputy Minister of Finance; Mr. A. S. Abell, Director of Federal-Provincial Relations Division; Mr. H. D. Clark, Director of Pension and Social Insurance Section; Mr. T. Kent, Policy Secretary, Prime Minister's Office; Mr. E. A. Driedger, Deputy Minister of Justice; Mr. D. S. Thorson, Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice; Dr. G. D. W. Cameron, Deputy Minister of National Health; Dr. K. C. Charron, Director of Health Services; Dr. J. J. Horowicz, Principal Executive Officer, Health Services Directorate; Dr. J. W. Willard, Deputy Minister of Welfare; Mr. J. A. Blais, National Director of Family Allowances and Old Age Security; Dr. L. Z. Rousseau, Deputy Minister of Forestry.

Federal Secretariat

Mr. J. E. G. Hardy, secretary; Mr. J. Garner, assistant secretary; Mr. E. C. Aquilina, executive secretary; Mr. R. O'Hagan, press liaison officer; Mr. J. Regan, special services; Mr. P. Groulx, administrative officer; Mr. J. Villeneuve, administrative officer; Mr. G. Brady, press liaison officer.

Reporting Staff

Mr. J. Garner, Department of Finance; Mr. E. C. Aquilina, Privy Council office; Mr. C. D. Allen, Department of National Health and Welfare; Mr. D. B. Clark, Department of Finance; Mr. A. R. Roy, Department of Finance.

Interpretation and Translation Staff

Interpreters: Miss P. Cyr, Miss M. Ouimet; and Messrs. R. Robichaud, E. Plante and D. Fleury.

Translator: Mr. J. M. Begin.

Secretarial Staff: Miss A. L. Walls; Mrs. G. Ouellette; Miss G. Hebert; Miss J. Morin; Mrs. A. Biard.

INFORMATION RE FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—QUEBEC CITY

March 31, 1964

The opening meeting of the conference will be held in the legislative assembly at 10:00 a.m. on Tuesday, March 31, 1964. Termination date of the meetings will be established by the conference.

Places will be available at the main conference table for the Prime Minister of Canada, four of his ministers, for the premiers of the provinces and one minister of each province. A section will be set aside for other delegates.

Delegations

A list of the members of the federal delegation is attached hereto. The list of the provincial delegations is being compiled and will be issued in a supplementary release.

Proposed agenda and procedures

The proposed agenda and procedures will be issued in a following release.

Opening statements

Since this conference is a continuation of the federal-provincial conference held in Ottawa last November, it is anticipated that most delegations will not be issuing an opening statement.

Interpretation

As in the case of recent federal-provincial conferences, simultaneous interpretation, in English and in French, will be provided in the main conference room.

Official functions

1. On Tuesday, March 31, the prime minister of Quebec and members of the cabinet will receive the Prime Minister of Canada, provincial premiers, ministers, delegates and news representatives at a reception in the Chateau Frontenac at 6:30 p.m. Dress: "Lounge Dress".

2. On Tuesday, March 31, His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, will receive the Prime Minister of Canada, the federal cabinet ministers, provincial premiers and ministers at a dinner at Bois-de-Coulonge at 7:30 for 8:00 p.m. Dress: "Black Tie".

3. On April 1, a reception for delegates will be held in the legislative council chamber at 12:30 p.m., followed by a luncheon in the parliamentary restaurant at 1:00 p.m.

Coverage Arrangements—Press, radio, t.v. etc.

Still, television and newsreel photographers will be admitted to the main conference room at 9:30 a.m., March 31, to prepare for general photographic coverage of the formal opening of the conference. Picture taking will end at 10:15 a.m. sharp.

Official photograph

An official photograph of the heads of delegations and delegates to the conference will be taken in the legislative council chamber at 12:15 p.m., Tuesday, March 31.

Accreditation

Special press passes will be required for admission to the conference area. These passes will be issued on arrival in Quebec city.

Facilities—Press, radio, t.v.

The conference press room—rooms A-81 and A-85—(the legislative assembly private bills' committee room) will be equipped with telephones, typewriters and cloakroom facilities. This room is for the use of all news representatives, accredited to the conference, except those from Quebec who will use their regular facilities in the legislative assembly press gallery. t.v. production room, room A-198; press conference and briefing room, room A-199; press office, room A-80; press enquiries during the conference sessions should be directed to the press office in the legislative assembly building (as listed above). Tel.: 693-5268 or 693-5269.

A press working room will be available in the Chateau Frontenac hotel for the benefit of out-of-town news representatives.

Canadian National and Canadian Pacific telegraph facilities are permanently located in the legislative assembly building. Arrangements for filing will also be available in the press room at the Chateau Frontenac hotel.

Travelling arrangements

In co-operation with the executive of the parliamentary press gallery, a chartered Trans-Canada Air Lines aircraft will carry members of the press from Ottawa to Quebec city, on Monday March 30.

In order to provide sufficient time for research and filing, the aircraft will depart from the T.C.A. Uplands terminal at 11.45 a.m., arriving in Quebec city at approximately 1.00 p.m. Lunch will be served on the aircraft. Ground transportation will be provided from Quebec airport to the hotel.

Because of airline regulations, T.C.A. advises all passengers must obtain tickets prior to the aircraft's departure. The charter fare (including ground transportation in Quebec city) is $20 return.

Tickets may be obtained, upon payment, from James B. Regan in the Prime Minister's office. Cheques should be made payable to T.C.A. Hotel accommodation has been arranged for all members of the press at the Chateau Frontenac, where members of all delegations will be staying. Rooms will be assigned on arrival.

Conference secretariat

Mr. J. E. G. Hardy, secretary; Mr. J. Garner, assistant secretary; Mr. E. C. Aquilina, executive secretary; Mr. P. Groulx, administrative officer; Mr. J. Villeneuve, administrative officer.

Conference press liaison

Mr. R. O'Hagan, press officer; Mr. Gerard Brady, associate press officer; Mr. J. B. Regan, special services; Mr. Guy Hogue, special services.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE
QUEBEC CITY—MARCH 31, 1964

Federal Delegation

Federal Government

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, Prime Minister, head of delegation; Mr. G. Rouleau, Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister; Hon. W. L. Gordon, Minister of Finance and Receiver General; Hon. M. Lamontagne, Secretary of State of Canada; Hon. A. J. MacEachen, Minister of Labour; Hon. J. LaMarsh, Minister of National Health and Welfare; Hon. G. Favreau, Minister of Justice and Attorney General; Hon. H. Hays, Minister of Agriculture; Hon. M. Sauve, Minister of Forestry.

Advisers

Mr. R. G. Robertson, Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary to the Cabinet; Mr. J. E. G. Hardy, Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet; Mr. R. B. Bryce, Deputy Minister of Finance; Mr. A. S. Abell, Director of Federal-Provincial Relations Division; Mr. H. D. Clark, Director of Pension and Social Insurance Section; Mr. T. Kent, Policy Secretary, Prime Minister's Office; Mr. E. A. Driedger, Deputy Minister of Justice; Dr. G. D. W. Cameron, Deputy Minister of National Health; Dr. K. C. Charron, Director of Health Services, Dr. J. H. Horowicz, Principal Executive Officer, Health Services Directorate; Dr. J. W. Willard, Deputy Minister of Welfare; Mr. J. E. E. Osborne, Director of Research and Statistics; Mr. J. A. Blais, National Director of Family Allowances and Old Age Security; Dr. L. Z. Rousseau, Deputy Minister of Forestry.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 27, 1964

The house met at 11 a.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am rising in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to move, seconded by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau), that this house do now adjourn.

Mr. Nugent: Till April 6?

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree to the motion?

Mr. Howard: On division.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division, and the house adjourned until 2.30 p.m., Monday, March 30.

20220—98

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 30, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NUGENT—REFERENCE TO EDITORIAL IN TORONTO "GLOBE AND MAIL"

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, arising out of an editorial in the Toronto Globe and Mail in which the editorial writer has made a personal attack on me in connection with the discharge of my duties in this house last week. I should make it plain at the outset that I have no objection to the cartoon above the editorial. I recognize the figure, if not the face.

The editorial itself is the type of attack that I think any member should take objection to because, first, it is highly prejudicial; and second, it makes allegations which are unsupported by the facts and indeed insulting to me.

Mr. Winch: You ought to hear what I think about you.

Mr. Nugent: I have many opportunities of hearing the hon. member, and I am not always so sure that they are welcome.

Mr. Winch: I am changing my mind about capital punishment.

Mr. Nugent: The particular line to which I take objection is the one that says my action was taken in defence of no principles. I feel that the story on the front page of the same paper, if the editorial writer had bothered to familiarize himself with that even without bothering to read Hansard, would have informed the writer that the charges were not supported. The principles involved, as any member of this house would recognize, were very clearly stated. They were that the government is not mightier than parliament. There are others; that no government can get away with trying to use a club on parliament; that individual members in this house have a responsibility which they must discharge as their conscience dictates, no matter how unpopular that might make them; that co-operation of parliament and government is not a one way street.

I think the editorial writer, if he will bother to read Hansard the next time, will realize that if he is incapable of being fair he should at least try to be accurate.

EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

INQUIRIES AS TO ASSISTANCE TO B.C. AND ALASKA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, arising out of the terrible catastrophe that struck Alaska just before the week end and also brought serious damage to Vancouver island and other parts of the Pacific coast, I would ask the Prime Minister whether any request has been received from the province of British Columbia for the country as a whole to assist in the serious losses suffered by the people in the areas in B.C. that were affected.

At the same time I want to say to the Prime Minister that we join with him in the message of sympathy that was extended to the United States on the terrible catastrophe that took place.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has been appointed by the government to co-ordinate the activities of the federal government with a view to assisting the province of British Columbia and the area concerned in the tragic damage that area has suffered. Perhaps, if the right hon. gentleman agrees, I might ask my colleague to make a report on what has been done.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I was in Vancouver on Friday night, and early Saturday morning I had a communication from the Prime Minister's office asking me to contact Premier Bennett with an offer of federal assistance if the extent of the damage was beyond the capacity of the municipalities and the province to carry.

I endeavoured to contact Premier Bennett, without avail; then Attorney General Bonner; then Hon. Mr. Kiernan, and finally I spoke to Hon. Leslie Peterson, the provincial minister of labour. I informed him of this offer and he told me that quite probably investigations were already under way but, if not, he would see they would be undertaken at once and he would reply. We have not heard anything yet, and to this moment the government of Canada has not had an application for assistance from the government of the province of British Columbia.

I might add that we have had requests for assistance from the mayors of the two cities of Port Alberni and Alberni, and latterly a second request for the use of army engineers stationed at Chilliwack. Our reply to them has been that we would be glad to give such aid and assistance, and indeed lend personnel, if the request comes from the government of the province of British Columbia. I want to assure the right hon. gentleman that the Department of National Defence has been working very closely with us on this, and is quite prepared to act upon a moment's notice. Also the emergency measures organization, the Red Cross and other agencies in the province of British Columbia are either working effectively now or are prepared to act on a moment's notice if they are required.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the hon. gentleman. As I see it the matter now rests with the government of the province of British Columbia to request assistance in the event that the damage was such as to constitute a national disaster. I would also like to ask the Prime Minister whether, with a view to showing Canada's general attitude, a contribution will be made to the Red Cross for use in the devastated areas of Alaska.

Mr. Pearson: In our message to the President, to which the right hon. gentleman referred a moment ago, we have indicated not only our sympathy for the victims of the disaster but our desire to assist if assistance is called for, and we have intimated to the President that we are making preparatory arrangements in the event that such a request should be made. May I say that I would be very glad to take up with the Red Cross, apart from this message to the President of the United States, the possibility of assisting the Canadian Red Cross if their help is required by the agencies concerned.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to ask a related question on the subject, but first, perhaps, as the member representing the constituency which has suffered the damage, might I be permitted to express my appreciation of the offer which has been made by the Prime Minister and the government to provide assistance should the province request it.

I should like to direct my related question to the Minister of Public Works and ask whether he or his department has yet received any report as to the damage which may have been sustained by federal harbour installations along the west coast of Vancouver island; and, if damage has occurred, whether measures are being proceeded with to effect a speedy repair of the installations in question which are, of course, of great concern to the fishing fleet and other users along the west coast.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): We are looking into this matter at the moment. I have no special information to give the hon. member at the present time, but officials of my department are looking into the matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

Is the Prime Minister aware of the report to the effect that an atomic explosion in the Pacific caused the disaster last Friday in Alaska and in British Columbia, and that an investigation is being held in that connection?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: No, I am not aware of those rumours, but I am aware of the scientific information which has already appeared and which indicates that it was an earthquake.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister recognize that an earthquake can be caused by an atomic explosion.

[Text]

Mr. Bert Leboe (Caribou): May I ask the Prime Minister if his attention has been called to an article in today's Gazette which states that Mr. Dan Campbell intends to ask the department of municipal affairs that Port Alberni and Alberni be called a disaster area, and that a committee of some kind is being set up to investigate the matter?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, I saw that report. It indicates that the provincial government is looking into the matter and, as already stated, if the provincial government, having declared this a disaster area, require federal assistance they will receive federal assistance.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—TERMS OF REFERENCE OF PEACE KEEPING FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and may I take this opportunity to welcome him back to the house after his attendance at this very important international conference relating to trade with underdeveloped countries.

In view of the report this morning of shooting incidents in Cyprus, does the hon. gentleman have any information to give to the house in relation to the Cyprus situation as it affects Canadian troops and the authority they have for carrying out their responsibilities as peace keepers?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I thank the hon. member for his preliminary observation. I had thought that when we get to the items in my supplementary estimates it might be possible to deal with this and with other matters which engaged my attention last week when I was in Geneva. I may say, however, that the directive and terms of reference to the force, which have been discussed with the secretary general and with the commander of the force, General Gyani, are such, in my judgment, as to make possible the successful functioning of the United Nations peace force and participation in that force by the Canadian contingent. When we get to the items in the estimates I shall be very glad to go into the matter further.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED SUPERVISION OF FILMS BY RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL AUTHORITY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, as the minister responsible to this house for the affairs of the C.B.C.

Since religious authorities and parents are greatly concerned by the fact that the C.B.C.'s network is showing both immoral films and films which put the accent on crime at a time of day when children are watching television, does the minister intend to compel the C.B.C. to submit those films, before they are presented, to a body composed of parents, religious authorities and educators?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest this is a question for the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe that question to be most urgent. Moreover, I know the minister is willing to answer it.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I must say that the question is important, but not so pressing or so urgent that it should take up our time at the moment.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Can he tell the house whether the censorship of movies broadcast by C.B.C. comes under provincial jurisdiction?

[Text]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be against the rules of this house for me to give a legal opinion to the house.

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is not against the rules of this house, and I ask the minister to answer my question. It is an urgent one, and I think it is my duty to ask this kind of question.

Mr. Dupuis: Go to bed early.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I think it is my duty to ask this question—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: —and I think we face the same old bunch.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has in effect put his question three times but my decision is still the same, that there is not that sense of urgency in his question that we should take the time of the house on this particular occasion to get a reply. Would he put it on the order paper? The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS TO PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I ask the hon. lady what is to be the fate of the hospitals operated under the Indian and northern health services branch of her department. Are they to be treated in the same way as the veterans hospitals?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in the policy that has been followed in recent years. If there were to be such a change it would be announced as part of government policy.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR INCREASED HOSPITAL GRANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the critical hospital bed shortage in metropolitan Toronto, could the minister inform the house—

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Moreau: —whether a formal request has been received from the government of Ontario for an increase in federal government hospital construction grants?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I interrupt. This is a question for the order paper. The hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott).

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I had a supplementary to the question you suggested should be placed on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to rise on a point of order with regard to the question of urgent importance which was raised by the hon. member for York-Scarborough. In view of the fact that in the past you have permitted us to raise this matter on orders of the day, and in view of the fact that we have evidence that a citizen died in Toronto on the week end because he could not get into a hospital, I am wondering why the matter was urgent last week but is not urgent today.

Mr. Speaker: If I may put it in this way, I am in the happy position of not being obliged to answer that question.

[Later:]

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It relates to an answer the Prime Minister gave me about a week and a half ago on orders of the day concerning the hospital shortage in metro Toronto, at which time the Prime Minister indicated that he would make a decision one way or another whether the federal government would give any assistance to metropolitan Toronto in the construction of hospitals. Has the Prime Minister made a decision and, if so, is he in a position to indicate it to the house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to my hon. friend, and I am grateful to him for his patience in this matter because I know how important it is and how interested he and other members are in it. The answer I might have given him last week would have been perhaps more negative than he would have liked. Since that time I have become aware of the fact that this whole matter will be discussed, I hope, in Quebec with the provincial premiers including the premier of Ontario, and perhaps I will be able to give the hon. member a different answer after that conference.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF HOSPITALS FROM FEDERAL CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether radio reports are correct that the government is now in full retreat from its announced intention to transfer the veterans affairs hospitals to other levels of government.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just partially.

[Later:]

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister supplementary to that of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Can the Prime Minister assure the house that if arrangements are made to let other interests use some of the hospital beds now under the control of the Department of Veterans Affairs, the actual control of these hospitals will be left with the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Pearson: I think it would be the intention, Mr. Speaker, that the hospitals be left in the control of the department. I can also assure my hon. friend that if any change of this kind were made the interests of the veterans would not in any way be prejudiced.

[Later:]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister to clarify two conflicting answers he has given this afternoon. He indicated to me that the veterans hospitals would be transferred to other authorities, and he indicated to the hon. member for Middlesex West that it was not the intention of the government to do so. What is the situation?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has misinterpreted my answer to him, as I think he will find out when he reads Hansard.

Mr. Churchill: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My question to the Prime Minister was whether the government was now retreating from its announced intention to transfer the veterans affairs hospitals to other levels of government and his answer was no. He gave a different answer to the hon. member for Middlesex West. I would hope that we could rely on the Prime Minister's statement.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has now misquoted his own question. His question was whether the government was in full retreat, and I said no.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a related question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs in the hope that it may help to clear up the matter. Are week end reports correct to the effect that in the case of the tri-service hospital here in Ottawa the intention is to keep the hospital within the Department of Veterans Affairs but possibly to make some of its empty beds available for civilian patients? If so, may I ask the minister whether this is a pattern that might be followed in the case of some other veterans hospitals?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the first instance the tri-service hospital in Ottawa is not under the control of the Department of Veterans Affairs. It is administered by the Department of National Defence. I heard the report that came out over the week end and I have a transcript of the report as it came over the wires. I see nothing in the report which is incompatible with the statement I made in the house the other day.

I have tried to indicate as clearly as I could that there would be different applications in different circumstances. It is a matter of reaching the objective of maintaining the quality of medical services. This is our objective, and it may mean that we will seek to attain this end in a different manner in different localities. So far as the tri-service hospital is concerned, the Department of Veterans Affairs uses these facilities for our veterans. We have our own staff there. I have heard no comments to the effect of the report. I have attempted to check on the report in the department, and as far as I know the report comes from no one within the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister on the question of veterans hospitals. Are we to interpret his answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre as meaning that there is a partial retreat from the announced policy, and will the government make a complete statement on this subject shortly?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the statements already made by the minister in the house are, I think, perfectly clear.

Mr. Churchill: They are far from clear.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs if he will investigate the situation at Camp Hill hospital, Halifax, where veterans are kept waiting while the facilities of this hospital are made available to civilians.

Mr. Teillet: I have asked for a report on that matter as a result of the hon. member's question about a week ago. It has not yet come to hand.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The minister replied to the question in a rather off hand manner. I have not asked this question before, so how can he say he made an investigation on the basis of a question I had asked?

Mr. Speaker: Order; I do not think it is necessary to make a reply. I had grave doubts whether the original question was in order, but in view of its humane aspects it was allowed.

Mr. Teillet: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should apologize. Someone did ask that question and I did ask for a report, but I may have been mistaken; it may have been another hon. member who asked the question.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CONFERENCE OF PRIME MINISTERS THIS YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister in connection with the prospective prime ministers' conference. There has not been one now for a year and a half, and there are very important matters connected with the commonwealth that require attention.

Is it a fact, as reported in the press, that there has been tentative agreement among the prime ministers to the holding of the conference in July; and would the Prime Minister at the same time say whether he has given consideration to inviting the prime ministers to hold the conference here in Ottawa, with a view to bringing about closer relations within the commonwealth and assuring that the various capitals in the commonwealth will have the opportunity of having this important conference?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, so far as the latter part of the question is concerned I indicated to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom when he was last in Ottawa that if and when a prime ministers' conference was to be held, that conference would be very welcome indeed in Ottawa. Since his visit to Ottawa the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom has made certain informal soundings of members of the commonwealth as to the desirability or otherwise of a prime ministers' meeting in London, and I understand that as a result of these informal soundings Sir Alexander Douglas Home is now about to send formal invitations to all prime ministers of the commonwealth for a meeting to be held in London this summer.

FINANCE

PREVENTION OF PROFITEERING FOLLOWING EXCISE TAX INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Seeing that on Wednesday next the tax on building materials will be hiked to 8 per cent, can the government say whether it is taking any measures to prevent profiteering by firms or individuals who may have accumulated building materials before the imposition of the hike and who may now be passing on this increase to consumers although they have not paid the tax?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I fancy that most consumers have heard quite a good deal about this tax. I would not think there were many who did not know that the increase would become effective on April 1, and I would think they would make their own arrangements.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Has the minister considered postponing for a fortnight the application of the 4 per cent additional tax on construction materials, in view of the great demand for such materials during the last few days?

[Text]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, that does not come within my authority. The law is clear.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO CHIEF OF STAFF OF ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Does he intend to appoint General Jean-Victor Allard to the supreme command of Canadian troops?

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: No, Mr. Speaker; it is a proper question, and I would appreciate an answer.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated I propose to recommend to the governor in council, if and when parliament passes the necessary legislation, that Air Chief Marshal Frank Miller be the first chief of staff of the Canadian armed forces. When further appointments are recommended they will be made public in the normal course.

ARMOURY GUARDS—REQUEST FOR VETERANS PREFERENCE IN APPOINTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has some official status been given to the people who have been hired as guards for armouries? Why does the veterans preference not apply to those people who have been chosen for guard duty?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): I will take that question as notice.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO HOLDING OF BY-ELECTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I understand that tomorrow there will be quite an egress of ministers from the house and the Prime Minister will not be here for several days. Therefore I should like to ask him whether the government has yet given consideration to the calling of by-elections in Nipissing and Saskatoon. With regard to both of these constituencies, we rely strongly on the view expressed by the Prime Minister that no delay should take place and on the very salutary example given in the Montreal by-elections, and we hope the Prime Minister will give consideration to the holding of these by-elections at the earliest possible date.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, so far as the preliminary part of the right hon. gentleman's question is concerned, I hope to be back in the house Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, good.

Mr. Pearson: So far as the date of the holding of the by-elections is concerned, I can assure my right hon. friend there will not be the delay we have become accustomed to in the last six or seven years.

Mr. Knowles: Now we are back to normal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am certainly glad we are not going to be without the Prime Minister throughout the balance of the week, and that we will have him back on Thursday.

Mr. Pearson: Or Friday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I assure him that his absence last week was deeply felt by us and we are glad to see him back in his place. With regard to the suggestion at the end of his statement I ask him this question. Does he intend to proceed with the same celerity and determination in providing an early opportunity for these two constituencies to elect members as he did in the case of the vacancies in Montreal?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we expect to proceed with all possible celerity, and we expect to have the same kind of result as we had in the by-elections in Montreal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is another example of false optimism.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

CONSIDERATION OF INCREASED CONSTRUCTION GRANTS TO UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister relating to an urgent matter and having to do with a statement he made over a year ago during his visit to Brandon College. Will he be discussing with the provincial authorities during the conference which gets under way tomorrow the subject of increased grants for construction purposes on our overcrowded university campuses?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will be discussing in Quebec, I think, all shared cost programs, and the very important program to which my hon. friend has referred will come within those discussions.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Inasmuch as the Prime Minister has spoken about retreats, will he be making a retreat in regard to some of the shared cost programs?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. gentleman would make a retreat from this kind of question, which he continues to ask in the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

SHARING OF DEPARTMENTAL RESPONSIBILITIES BETWEEN MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have a direct question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister agreed to share the responsibilities of his department with another minister? Yes or no?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have asked a direct question of the minister and I expect to receive an answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Directly out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no doubt about the importance of the question in the mind of the hon. member, but under our rules the minister is not obliged to answer unless he wishes to do so.

Mr. Pigeon: The same old gang.

TRADE

BUTTER—REPORTED U.K. INTENTION TO INCREASE IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the government of Britain is reported to have increased the quota on butter imports into that country, can the Minister of Agriculture state whether any immediate steps are being taken by his department to increase the export of Canadian butter to that market?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Once more, this should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Hays: —this matter is under consideration, and I hope we will have an announcement to make in the not too distant future.

FISHERIES

REGULATIONS RESPECTING KILLING OF SEALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Has he anything to report on the situation in the gulf of St. Lawrence with regard to the conditions under which seal hunting is being carried on, and the slaughter of young seals? What requests has he had from the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals and other organizations to take action to prevent the type of slaughter that is being carried on?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last I answered a similar question asked by the other hon. member for Queens, and I may add that I expect to issue a full statement on the matter later this week.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask a supplementary question. Yesterday the New York Times had only one item about Canada so far as I could see, and it had to do with the cruelties perpetrated in the killing of seals. The article said that the season opened a week ago. Is there not some action that can be taken to prevent the cruelties that are being perpetrated under the law as it now stands?

Mr. Robichaud: As I have stated on many occasions in this house, every means that could be utilized under our jurisdiction has been utilized during the present season. It is our hope that this matter will be discussed fully at the next meeting of the international commission on north Atlantic fisheries which will take place in Hamburg this year. As the right hon. member knows, there are many countries interested in this type of fishery, and there are international complications. The matter will be discussed at the meeting which will be held next summer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I agree with the minister that beyond the three mile limit an international situation is created. However, reference was made to cruelties perpetrated within the three mile limit. Is there not provision in the Criminal Code today to cover just this situation?

Mr. Robichaud: I wish to repeat that some of the statements that have been made with regard to cruelties or methods used have been somewhat exaggerated, and I expect to have a full statement later this week which I hope will cover the situation.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO EASTER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister in view of the fact that the word "retreat" seems to be very popular this afternoon. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he can give any indication to the house that there has been a retreat by the government in connection with the thought that there will be a parliamentary recess this week.

[Mr. MacLean (Queens).]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend will find out if he looks at the order paper.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): I had a similar question for the Prime Minister. In view of his statement that he intends to be back on Thursday afternoon, has he gone back completely on his word that there will be an Easter recess until April 6?

Mr. Pearson: No one regrets more than I do the fact that I was not here last Thursday afternoon. I hope the hon. member will accept my word that it was not my fault I was not here.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to ask the house leader if consideration will be given to payment for members of the house staff who worked on the statutory holidays of Good Friday and Easter Monday?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): This will surely be taken into consideration.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1e. Departmental administration—To extend the purposes of vote 1 of the main estimates for 1963-64 to include the gift detailed in these estimates and to provide a further amount of $60,000.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, last Thursday I spoke to the house about the reduction of cowhide and calf hide prices.

This reduction represents a decrease of about $10 or $12 million in revenue to the Canadian farmer, or, if you like, it increases the commodity prices to the consumer.

According to figures issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce, as shown on page 942 of Hansard, cowhide prices were 20.6 cents in 1961 and 19.9 cents in 1962, while in 1963 they dropped sharply to 14.4 cents.

As regards the price of calves' hides, it was, in 1961, 45 cents a pound; in 1962, 42.7 cents a pound; in 1963, we find that it was considerably reduced and sank to 19.7 cents a pound.

When the Canadian market prices were given to me, as of March 1, last, I was told that cows' hides were sold at 13.8 cents a pound, while calves' hides fetched 20 cents a pound.

I have on hand invoices indicating the price paid to slaughter-houses. For instance, on the 19th of March last: 52 cows' hides of 50 pounds at .06 cents a pound; then 8 cow hides again at 6 cents a pound and finally 18 calf skins at 7 cents a pound.

I have here four bills I should like to table, with the unanimous consent of the house, so that the authorities of the Department of Agriculture may check if those prices are in accordance with those which should now prevail on the market; if not, I feel the department ought to examine the situation to prevent all Canadian farmers from losing thereby an income of $10 up to $12 million.

May I table these bills, Mr. Chairman?

[Text]

The Chairman: There is, of course, no provision for the tabling of that kind of document. The hon. member can leave that on the table for all members who may want to look at it, but that is as far as he can go.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: When I raised the question Thursday last, the minister replied that he was not aware of such a situation.

Well, we have in the house representatives of every Canadian party and every time a member raises a question the government turns a deaf ear. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture to instruct his officials to listen or consider carefully what the members say in the house, because when we raise a question, it is not only because we like to speak, but because our constituents are asking us to intervene.

With regard to the point I am raising now, the farmers say that they have not seen such prices since the 1929 depression; the minister tells us that this is a regional problem. Well, Mr. Chairman, it is not a regional problem and, to prove it, I have here a letter from a farmer, Mr. Josephat Jolin, from Amos, in Abitibi. It was published in La Terre de Chez Nous on February 12, 1964, and reads as follows:

> I am writing you to ask on behalf of all farmers if it would not be possible to add market prices for cow hides.
>
> Last February 14, I went to Amos, in Abitibi, with a cow's hide in perfect condition, without any knife cut, well salted, weighing 60 lbs. and I get $1.50 for it. For a calf's skin weighing 12 lbs., also in perfect condition, 50 cents.

I see that Liberal members are making fun of my remarks. As a matter of fact, the province of Quebec is represented by 46 Liberal members in the house and not one of them saw fit to raise that question and to make suggestions to the Department of Agriculture. They have failed in their duty and instead of laughing at the remarks we make in this house, they should help the farmers. They should rise and point out to the Minister of Agriculture the problems prevailing not only in our province but throughout Canada.

I shall proceed with the reading of this letter for the information of the Minister of Agriculture.

> We feel this is unreasonable and that is why I think we would be in a better position to defend ourselves if we received market prices.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the problem is not only regional; it is nation-wide. If the price for calf hides, which was 42.7 cents per pound last year, is down to 7 cents a pound this year, it means that the price of meat to the consumer increases and the consumer has to pay 10, 15 and even 20 cents more per pound for the meat purchased from the butcher.

I raise this question once again and I ask the Minister of Agriculture to give it careful consideration because, believe me, Mr. Chairman, this constitutes a loss of $10 to $12 million a year for Canadian farmers.

I now want briefly to come back to the matter of feed grain. Last Thursday, for instance, the minister told us:

> I do not have the latest figures at hand, but between mid-October and mid-March, there has been no significant change in prices.

Well, as far as feed grain is concerned, the Liberal party since the last election, did not keep the formal promises it made to every Canadian, and more particularly to the province of Quebec. Those promises had been made by an official spokesman of the party on the national television network, and anybody can still read them in an editorial published in La Terre de Chez Nous, under the headings:

> Beware of Mr. Pearson's figure skating. Our farming industry is on the auction block in Ottawa.

The price of feed grain has increased by 30 cents a hundredweight between October and February, which means $6 a ton. This is hardly what we would call a stable price.

We want the government to take a decision at last. It is true that when the government decided to pay for storage at a cost of $1 million per year, there was some improvement; but, even if credit is given to the Minister of Agriculture for that improvement, it is still inadequate, and an efficient policy should be set up at the earliest possible date, so that we might say to the eastern farmers in Canada: "We are looking after your problems and we did find a solution to the feed grain problem".

The minister also discussed farm credit. On that matter, he said: "Some people claim we have not done much in that field." And here I quoted the minister.

If it had not been for the improved farm credit legislation introduced by the previous government, without the wonderful efficiency of the Farm Credit Corporation officials, how could the minister tell us there were loans made in 1963?

Surely, he cannot take the credit for that legislation, since no amendment was made. What we are asking for is an improvement of the act, instead of being told: "We have done something in that field." We want the minister to give us immediately his program and his views on the improvements to be made to the federal Farm Credit Act.

Since the hon. gentlemen opposite took office, that is since April 8, 1963, what have they done for farming in Canada? What have those same people done who, during the election campaign, said they were going to improve the farmer's lot? Where are the promises they made all across the country during weeks and weeks?

Where do our hon. friends stand with the crop insurance legislation, which was passed by a Conservative government and which they, the Liberals, were to improve in order to bring it more in line with the agreements concluded with the provinces? What progress has been made in the negotiation concerning crop insurance, a measure to be promulgated by the provinces of Canada?

Mr. Chairman, we could also ask the government what progress has been made in the negotiations with the provinces concerning the adoption of a school milk program which we heard so much about, for such a long time, when the hon. gentlemen were sitting on this side of the house? However, not a single word was said about that matter up to the present.

Mr. Chairman, where are the improvements promised by this government to Canadian farmers, and especially to those of eastern Canada as far as dairy products are concerned? I have said time and time again in this house that while the price of milk in the province of Quebec last year was lower than in 1962, it should have been from 20 to 25 cents higher per 100 pounds, because the price of dairy products, including cheese, was higher on the market, thanks to the policies advocated by the Conservative government when it was in office. What progress has been made in the talks between the provinces and the dairy farmers with respect to the setting up of a dairy industry board?

Mr. Chairman, those are questions to which we should like to get answers, and it is certainly not by standing up and using phrases like "a lot of junk" or something like that, that answers can be given to sensible questions emanating not from us but from the farmers who submit them to us, so that we may find a solution to the agricultural problem.

Mr. Chairman, before closing my remarks, I urge the Minister of Agriculture to welcome with open arms as soon as possible his colleague from Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve), who will perhaps prove to be a terrific discovery for farmers in eastern Canada, although the speeches delivered by the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine during the year did not contain anything with respect to the agricultural issue.

We are looking forward eagerly for the Minister of Forestry to let us know exactly what are his responsibilities, the work he will have to do and what are his duties as Minister of Forestry as well as as minister responsible for the eastern farmers' problems.

Mr. Chairman, prior to the passing of the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture, we should like to hear from the minister a clear and accurate statement on agriculture's future in general and especially on agriculture in eastern Canada.

[Text]

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, we are sitting here on Monday, March 30, a day when most of us would much prefer to be home, and I am sure that if the government had wanted to manage the affairs of this country in a reasonable manner we should have been home.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nugent: I am speaking on agriculture and on the first item of the supplementary estimates, and I am about to inform the arrogant hon. gentlemen opposite that we still have not received the information for which we asked.

When this time first came up we asked that it stand because there were several matters which we, as responsible members of parliament, felt were important and had been left unexplained. There were grave doubts as to the legality of actions taken by the government between February 3 and February 20. We said that as members of parliament we could hardly be content to put our stamp of approval on what had been done when those actions might have been taken illegally. Money might have been spent illegally, and we as members of the committee might have been placed in the position of approving those improper expenditures.

It was not until last Thursday that we were finally given any statement on this matter. The Minister of Transport then read a statement by the Prime Minister touching lightly on the question. I use those words advisedly because the statement read by the Minister of Transport was circuitous, evasive, vague. The committee had asked that these items be allowed to stand because we were disturbed by the possibility of illegalities, and when we asked for a firm statement on the government's position the attitude we took was reasonable. We had stressed that the committee should not be asked to pass lightly over such questions as the legality or illegality of government action.

We did not go too deeply into certain other questions, though I am sure these aspects must have disturbed the public as much as they disturbed members of this house; namely, why there was such dissension within the cabinet to lead to such confusion; whether there was a battle going on within the cabinet; what was the effect of these orders in council, and how lightly must the government itself regard these orders if it could pass them, give them the effect of law, and then ignore them completely.

All the government has given us is this one vague statement, and I do not think the committee should be expected to content itself with an answer which takes refuge in technicalities despite the fact that a minister of the crown has signed agreements when he had no authority whatsoever to do so. For an opposition to condone such action would constitute a complete abandonment of its responsibilities.

I know that as late as the middle of March people in charge of the farm credit organization, the ARDA program, the P.F.R.A. program and so on were not sure who was the responsible minister. Perhaps it was unfair to ask them who was the responsible minister. Perhaps they felt that no matter who was the minister in charge, he was not responsible. I know that many telephone calls were made in an attempt to get a straight answer, in an effort to be sure which minister was responsible for those sections. But the people concerned did not know, and this was later than March 5.

To review briefly the actions of the government, an order in council passed on February 3 was revoked on February 20 and another order in council dealing with only some of those sections was made on March 15. Perhaps it was unfair to telephone as late as March 15 and ask who was the responsible minister because, judging from past experience, the government might have intended to revoke the order of March 5 or, in its own words, decide not to proceed with it. Certainly the answers given by the people working in those sections indicated that they were not sure whether the government knew what it was going to do.

I suggest it is part of the duty of members of this committee to seek from the government some information as to the morale of those engaged in the sections of the department affected by this classic example of administrative bungling. For a long time, I suggest, those sections had been operating, and operating very well, under a strong and competent minister during the life of the previous government. They knew what they were doing. They had a minister who took responsibility, who gave them guidance and made sure that those programs operated and operated well. They have now been subject to what appear to have been weeks of wrangling. We have not even been given any firm statement by the government to reassure us that those weeks of wrangling are past. I suggest that if it is necessary to have a minister, if it is helpful to have a minister, then the department should be able to rely on getting some guidance from him. It is a pretty tough situation when they do not even know whether or not they have a minister.

I think we would like to see answered those two notices of motion for production of papers brought forward by the hon. member for Provencher. The statement read the other day by the Minister of Transport treats the whole question too lightly as to what went on. We are aware, at least, of the eight ARDA agreements which, according to the information given us in this house, are not now in effect at all. My leader gave a very strong hint to the government that we would co-operate; that the least we should see is remedial, retroactive legislation to make sure that these items are covered; that we on this side of the house will co-operate and see that is done, and we had not one word from the government on that matter.

I am sure that some hon. members feel we are perhaps taking a rather long time on this item. If we are, it is because we do not get any answers. I suggest that this is anything but lack of co-operation on our part. We do regard these matters as serious. We think there is a serious legal problem. The suggestion made by the Minister of Transport that he will have the Minister of Forestry sign these agreements indicates some realization on the government benches that there is a legal problem; and what we have suggested is that we will co-operate to help the government get over it. We just want a little frankness from the government. We want to know exactly what was done. We want them to initiate some step to make sure that this matter is corrected.

If this is being very stubborn, Mr. Chairman, then I submit I am being very stubborn. I may be old fashioned, but I would like to see government business properly and legally done. I would like to see the government come to parliament, not with a club in their hands saying "You will do this or else", but come to parliament and say "All right; we made a mistake. We want it fixed. This is what we would like done. Will you co-operate?" When we see this sort of action, we will co-operate. So long as the government is going to sit on its hands and say "Take it as is, and we couldn't care less how it is", then they are liable to find us being a little stubborn.

I do hope that before it is attempted to pass this item some member of the government will rise and give us a responsible answer to these questions; that they will give some reasonable satisfaction to this house, so that the business of this country can be straightened out, these questions can be answered, and we can properly pass this item.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we hear many declarations of love and speeches on the Canadian farmer's lot. A few moments ago, the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) dealt with the needs of our eastern farmers of which we are all aware. Those urgent problems, he said, are yet unsolved, and the government seems unwilling to provide a solution.

When my good friend was a member of the government, the same conditions prevailed. And they still prevail today. The statements made in this house are not so much meant to help the farmer as to draw the attention of Hansard readers. That is the main object of all those fond declarations and speeches. Farming is not considered an essential or basic Canadian industry. No, the farmer is just a football; for instance, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) just stated that this government does nothing for the farmers, though he knows very well that this government sold more wheat to the communists all over the world than even the Conservatives did. He must be aware of the fact. When the Conservatives were selling wheat to the Chinese and Russian communists, they were condemned by the Liberals. Today, the Conservatives are blaming the Liberals for selling more wheat than they ever did to those countries.

Mr. Chairman, all those statements and declarations meant for the farmer, in no way take into account that agriculture is, after all, Canada's basic industry. If that basic industry is not organized, if neither prosperous nor stable, it will be impossible to stop this nation from disintegrating entirely, and its economy from collapsing.

Quite recently, there were reports from Soviet Russia regarding the handing over of some land to private enterprise, because the government made a mess of the whole business when it meddled with farming in that country.

Now, we do not want the state to administer our farming industry, but we want our farmers to get some help from the government so that they would prosper and attain a higher standard of living than at present, because they are certainly struggling with a system that has become intolerable.

[Mr. Nugent.]

Mr. Chairman, we have reached a point where farmers have to emigrate to cities, abandon their land and seek outside work to support their families. In the face of such a situation we ask ourselves where agriculture is going, where the farmer himself is going?

Mr. Chairman, reforms have to be made. There is above all assistance to be granted farmers in eastern Canada. For instance, if we consider that farmers in western Canada earn more than $6,500 per year, whereas, in the province of Quebec, most farmers do not earn more than $2,000 a year, we may wonder what will be the fate of farmers, of those people who rise at four or five o'clock in the morning to milk their cows and who go to bed at ten or eleven o'clock at night. For what do these people work? For 5 or 6 cents per hour, whereas there are people who spend their time speaking in favour of farmers and who rise at ten o'clock in the morning to milk the farmers instead of the cows.

Mr. Chairman, the farmers in eastern Canada need assistance.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Caouette: Why, for instance, when the Conservatives were in power—

I see my hon. friend from Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau), in the corner of the house, over there, trying to interrupt me. What was done for farmers in his own constituency when the Conservatives were in power? What was done in Temiscamingue, a constituency with which I am very familiar?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The hon. member for Villeneuve just said I interrupted him. I did not interrupt him, on the contrary, I listened religiously to what he said.

Mr. Caouette: I apologize to the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue. It is probably the member for Nicolet-Yamaska—

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I did not interrupt the hon. member for Villeneuve. However, I could have done so, for, at the beginning of his remarks, although he often speaks about things he does not know about, he told us I had been a member of the government. In this respect, Mr. Chairman, I must say I never had the honour of being a member of the Canadian government.

Mr. Caouette: Does my hon. friend acknowledge that he nevertheless was a member of the Canadian parliament, at that time?

Mr. Vincent: I beg your pardon?

[Text]

Mr. Nugent: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, since the hon. member has been interrupted anyway I think I might as well correct a statement of his. He referred to me incorrectly as the member for Edmonton West—I am the member for Edmonton-Strathcona—and said I had accused this government of having done nothing for agriculture. I did not say anything like that in my speech.

The Chairman: Order. There was no question of privilege raised.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the hon. member to read again what he said, as recorded in Hansard, and he will see that he charged the present government with failure to face its obligations in the case of Canadian farmers.

Having said this, I was asserting that our farmers have to take outside work to be in a position to keep their farms, that there is an exodus of farmers towards the cities, that the Canadian agricultural policy no longer meets the needs of the farmers.

In view of the large sales of wheat to some communist countries, no doubt western farmers have earned an interesting income. In this respect, the farmers, regardless of the party in power, directly benefited from these important sales of wheat to other countries.

On various occasions, I called the attention of the house to this point: why should not the government set up or prepare a policy to enable eastern farmers, for instance, to buy feed grain or wheat produced in western Canada at the same price we sell those products to foreign countries?

Surely, if we can be generous to foreign countries, we ought to do the same for our own farmers. When we travel through farming communities, in the south of the province of Quebec, where in some cases, seven, eight, nine and even ten generations succeeded each other on the same farm, we readily realize that it is not because our farmers lacked courage or good will that after seven, eight or nine generations of hard labour, today's farmer is involved with provincial or federal farm credit.

Why are our farmers faced with such a situation?

Let us take a look at the settlement areas where an attempt was made to place settlers and favour farming. In those regions, 20 or 25 years ago, there were settlements of 200 or 250 families, but today, after 20 or 25 years of existence, there are only 80 or 85 families left, the others having gone back to the city looking for means to make a living and get a decent salary. And eventually, when there is not enough work, people become unemployed and have to depend on the government, the Department of Labour or the unemployment insurance commission.

To avoid that disaster for agriculture, why is not agriculture organized on a solid basis through assistance, for instance, to the establishment of farmers' sons who today, are not interested in staying on the family farm? Why not assist in the consolidation of old farms? Why not assist rural planning all across the province and the country, but especially in eastern Canada, where the problem is most acute and most urgent?

We must be assured that a farm policy is being developed, and that no advantages are taken away from an area to be given to another one, when both need help.

It is certainly possible to create a market in the province of Quebec. The government could guarantee the sale of food products and so on, help the construction of cold storages, in short help agriculture in eastern Canada as it does in western Canada.

The products of eastern Canada are as much in demand throughout the world as wheat. We should organize the agricultural production of eastern Canada and its exportation to southern countries. There are tremendous possibilities along those lines.

A short time ago, I met a man dealing in imports and exports, he gave me the inside story of what is happening today in the field of butter production and marketing. He suggested it might be interesting by using the means we have in this country, to put butter in small three ounce cans and sell it to southern countries which are interested in buying butter packed that way. The Minister of Agriculture was made aware of that. And do you know what the answer was? It was said that we could not do it, since we are not allowed to pack our butter in a different way; it was added however that industry is organizing such a marketing of Canadian butter, which would be exported to Germany where it would be packed in boxes and resold on the world markets. The Minister of Agriculture is well aware of that.

We might have created instead a new industry in the Granby area for instance, an industry that would have employed 2,000 or 3,000 men, while these 2,000 or 3,000 people will be Germans working in Germany to pack butter coming from Canada. Why? Because there are financial interests to be protected in the field of exportation and importation. The Minister of Agriculture is also aware of that.

We cannot make decisions by ourselves in Canada. We are afraid of assuming responsibilities, but we dare proclaim in this house our love for the Canadian farmer, butter manufacturer or dairy producer, and so on.

Mr. Chairman, agriculture is an important item in a country. I said at the beginning that this industry is the very basis of a stable economy. If we are to have a stable economy—because without it all other social classes could not exist—we all depend on agriculture, because there we take the source of life, there we maintain the way of life that we have at the present time in this country.

We cannot be satisfied with making speeches, paying lip service to agriculture and doing nothing to help the farmers.

I do not come from a specifically agricultural area myself. True, we do have a bit of farming in our settlements, but I am from a mining region. On the other hand, the riding next to mine, which I represented in the House of Commons from 1946 to 1949, that is the constituency of Pontiac-Temiscamingue, is essentially agricultural. It is one of the most beautiful agricultural ridings in the whole province of Quebec. Now, that constituency has a problem concerning the settlement of farmers' sons and also one of consolidation to allow farmers to sell their products normally. There is an abundance of products, but nobody knows what to do with them.

And, with all that abundance, millions of dollars are giving rise to heated discussions; commissions are being set up to hold inquiries designed to set up more commissions; money is being provided to replenish the funds of the agricultural products board; salvage operations are being conducted right and left, with the result that the only one not being rescued is the farmer, who keeps on paying taxes and being overtaxed but does not manage to sell his products. And all the while we are keeping afloat a whole bunch of bureaucrats throughout Canada at the farmers' expense.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take more of the committee's time. Only, let us stop making speeches and referring constantly to the magnificent role played by the farmers of the province and of Canada as a whole, when we do not even have the courage to put forward legislation to assist Canadian farmers, while we provide millions of dollars for all sorts of other things but cannot even find the time, for instance, to think of organizing a stable agriculture which would give Canada a look completely different from the one it has now.

Mr. Chairman, the farmers need our help, they certainly do. They need our attention. Of all the classes in our society, they get the least recognition and the worst treatment all across Canada wherever you go. They may be better treated in western Canada—which is essentially a farming area—than in eastern Canada; all you have to do is to visit the agricultural parishes and the farmers themselves to see that this is true. You cannot get a true picture by driving 60 or 90 miles an hour past well painted farm buildings; indeed not.

Let us go right into the farmer's home to inquire on the spot about the conditions prevailing in our province. Then, I trust that the Minister of Agriculture will assume his responsibilities with regard to the Canadian public, and introduce some legislation meeting with the approval not only of a single group, or of all hon. members, but of the whole Canadian people, because no social class, I am certain, has yet been treated as unfairly as the farmers.

Let us stop being facetious and let us try to serve them better in future.

[Text]

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I think there is more interest across Canada at this time in the estimates of the Department of Agriculture than at any other time when agricultural estimates have been brought before the house. Although the unfortunate circumstance of the transfer of duties between ministers directed special attention to this department, in my view farmers across Canada are more interested in the discussion of these estimates because they are waiting for the government to make a definite statement of their policy for the first time with regard to this important industry.

When the minister took office last May the farmers did not expect him to be able to come forth with a new policy at once. They understood that he was new in politics and new to the administration of the Department of Agriculture, one of the larger departments of the government. But after the passing of almost 12 months the farmers feel that they are entitled to a definite statement of policy. They were not aware, of course, of the idea of transferring responsibilities. They did not know that the minister was held up in the development of a policy first of all by the fact that, as we were given to understand last May, there might be a second minister of agriculture for eastern Canada and a certain hon. member was earmarked for that very important post.

We in the opposition waited very patiently to see what would develop. No legislation was introduced to create this most important post and it was during the recess between sessions that we learned that the Minister of Forestry was going to take on the additional duties of minister of agriculture for eastern Canada. Once again the entire farm population of Canada was left in confusion because the farmers saw that once again there could be delay in the formation of a policy.

The minister has had very few opportunities in the house to put forward a definite policy on behalf of the government. Such policy as we have had has been announced in bits and pieces. It is the hope of the opposition that the minister will avail himself of this opportunity to state the policy of the government on the various aspects of agriculture for the very first time.

In the few remarks that the minister made last Thursday he spoke of ARDA, which is considered by many in Canada to be one of the most important pieces of legislation so far as the future of agriculture is concerned. The minister spoke of eight employees in his department who would be transferred, in the event of ARDA being removed from his jurisdiction. We are beginning to suspect that the government does not appreciate the magnitude of the agricultural problems that can be solved by means of the administration of this most important act. Instead of the government having only eight employees engaged in the administration of ARDA, and in investigations under that act, there could profitably be 80 employees.

One field in which this act could be of the greatest benefit to the Canadian people is that of conservation. There are many areas in Canada today where the farmers lack water, that most important and necessary of all assets in producing grain and feed for the future. Surely at a time when other countries are talking about diverting the waters of some of the largest rivers in the world in order that there may be enough water for their people the government should be able to see that right in southwestern Ontario lack of water is one of the greatest worries facing agriculture. As a matter of fact, there is talk now of a water grid for southwestern Ontario in order that the municipalities and farmers may have enough water, and under ARDA the government has a splendid vehicle to develop and promote this very necessary asset for agriculture.

I was much impressed indeed to hear the hon. member for Port Arthur state that in his opinion ARDA was being neglected. Surely that is the opinion of the entire opposition. We have the legislation, we have the vehicle, and we have a government in power that has promised to help the farmers. Here is an area where they can move effectively and with real benefit to all of Canada. Yet we have not even had a statement of policy from the government. The minister says there is no clash of personalities and that if ARDA and its eight employees are taken from his department there will be no ill feeling. Perhaps there will be no ill feeling on the part of the minister, but there is certainly a great deal of confusion and ill feeling on the part of those in this country who are experienced in agriculture.

One thing the minister dealt with was the grain policy in the east. He referred to the number of tons or bushels of grain in the east this year, thanks to the policy of the government. It is true that there is 47 per cent more grain in the east, I believe, than there was a year ago. It is true that this will probably take care of the needs of the feeders in agriculture in the east. I give the government credit for this, they showed foresight. But once again this is not a policy: It is a stopgap promotion. They were faced with a problem which they met by an emergency measure, but this does not solve anything. They gave assistance in the transportation of grain, and this is fine. They built up the storage of grain, and this is fine. But, sir, we in the opposition feel that under this program there is a possibility that many of the grain merchants will derive far more benefit than the farmers it was designed to aid.

I should like to deal with farm credit for a moment. One of the speakers who preceded me stated that there is confusion in the department with regard to this important part of the responsibilities of the Minister of Agriculture and that because of the transfer of responsibilities the department in effect did not even know to which minister it was responsible. How can responsible officials of a department carry out their duties when not only has no policy been laid down for them but they are not even sure under which department they come? It seems to me this is a most ridiculous position for agriculture to find itself in, in this day and age.

Under the present government the farmers of the country were led to believe there would be immediate changes in farm credit policy. It was stated that the amount of money available to a young farmer to keep him on the farm was not enough, that the ceiling should be raised and that legislation would be introduced to take care of this very important segment of the population. But here we are almost 12 months later, and there has not even been an announcement by the minister that such legislation is contemplated.

The price of land has gone up drastically in certain sections of Canada and we agree that the limit of $20,000 on the amount which a young farmer can borrow to buy land is not enough. We agree that something has to be done to take care of the situation and keep these young men on the land. The opposition cannot bring this about. We can only urge the government to introduce legislation, we cannot force them to do so. This is why we criticize the lack of policy today. Put the legislation before us. We say to the government: Carry out your promises to the farmers, and with both sides of the house working together let us give the farmers of Canada the necessary legislation and assistance they need.

Reference has been made to crop stabilization. We have not had an announcement of policy in connection with stabilization since the minister took office, although we heard promises during the election campaign. I do not wish to go through all the promises that were made with regard to agriculture, but I should like to deal with a few of them.

I should like to speak about sugar beets for just a moment. During the last election campaign Liberal candidates said the previous administration had no policy with regard to sugar beets. One of the first things they were going to do was to formulate for the first time in Canada a definite sugar beet policy. It is now 12 months later and, goodness knows, we have had a crisis in connection with sugar during that time, but we have no policy announcement as yet from the Department of Agriculture. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has said this problem is being considered. I am sure the new minister will take this problem under consideration. However the farmers of Canada want more than consideration; they want some action.

Then, what about soybeans? In my area, where soybeans are grown in large quantities, when hon. members opposite were on the hustings they said the support price for soybeans was far from adequate. They said the farmers were entitled to a support price of no less than $2.40 per bushel. Well, this government has got the price up to $2.17 per bushel, 1 cent more than it was under the previous administration. Is this the policy of the government? Is this all they intend to do? Is this the way they live up to their promises?

Today I asked the minister a question about butter, and he was courteous in his answer to me. He said they were looking into this question and it was being taken into consideration. This is not policy. We have heard today an announcement by the British government that they are going to increase the quota on butter coming into Great Britain this year by 2½ per cent. This does not sound like very much, but when you realize the vast quantities of butter imported into Great Britain, 2½ per cent really means thousands of tons of butter. If there is anything we have in surplus quantities in this country, it is butter. If there is anything this country can produce, it is butter. We would like the minister to say what the policy of this government is with regard to taking over a larger share of that market. We need this market, and we need this policy.

[Mr. Danforth.]

During the session last year we heard a lot about Bill No. C-5 introduced by the hon. member for Essex South. The purpose of the bill was to help farmers by guaranteeing their rights when they took their produce to canning plants. This bill was shelved. During the last days of that session the Prime Minister stood in his place and said the subject matter of the bill would be given consideration and when the Bankruptcy Act was amended provision would be made to take care of the farmers. The farmers need this protection, sir. As yet however we have had no announcement of policy; nothing has been done.

We are in the midst of the greatest evolution in the history of agriculture. Policies for agriculture that are introduced today are obsolete by tomorrow. It has been admitted that automation is creeping into agriculture. We hear about marketing schemes and about co-operatives. We hear about vertical integration, and these are new terms in connection with agriculture. As I have said, agriculture is going through a process of evolution.

The minister has mentioned what was done under the previous administration, and then he has said, "We have done this much more." This is not policy. This is nothing new. When the previous government introduced a policy for agriculture, that was not the end, Mr. Chairman, it was the beginning. The policy of this government seems to have been, whatever you were getting we are going to give you more. We have to have new ideas. We have to have new goals. We have to know what is wrong with agriculture and act upon that knowledge. This government has received briefs from the farmers' union, from the federation of agriculture and from the different commodity groups in agriculture. These men are learned men; they are technicians in connection with agriculture. They know what the questions are and what the answers are. But, Mr. Chairman, although these men have produced this information, they have produced the studies and done the groundwork for the government, we have no policy announcements from the government as yet. The farmers are confused. We can understand why. The time is coming when the minister will have to stand in this house and say that this government has the following policy in connection with agriculture.

I am, myself, very disappointed that the administration of agriculture is to be divided. We are told that the Minister of Forestry will assume responsibility for some branches of agriculture, and that the Minister of Agriculture will retain some branches. There will be a committee of three taking responsibility for agriculture, a troika. The committee of three will be the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Forestry acting under the chairmanship of the Minister of Agriculture. The government says this is a policy, to divide the responsibility for agriculture amongst three people, and agriculture will go forward as it never has before. This policy is inconsistent with the policy of the government in connection with the Department of National Defence because they are doing exactly the reverse in connection with that department. You cannot have it both ways. You cannot consolidate in one department and spread out in another department and call this consistent policy. I think the farmers of Canada have been very patient. They have waited for 12 months for a policy announcement to which they are entitled. These policies were promised to them. Hon. members opposite said that when they came into office they had the answers, and the farmers believed them. Now the farmers know for certain that hon. members opposite not only do not have the answers, they do not even know the questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) in his seat, because it is not often that he is seen in the house.

We on this side of the house would be very pleased to hear him define this government's policy with regard to agriculture.

On the orders of the day, I asked the minister whether he was in favour of sharing his responsibilities with another cabinet minister? The minister refused to answer, and we want to give him an opportunity of replying to a most important question while announcing this government's policy.

Mr. Chairman, the farmers are going bankrupt under this government, because it has no definite farm policy.

We do not know where we are going. In fact, last week, I asked several questions on agriculture but did not receive any answer.

We want to know why the Minister of Agriculture makes statements in the west and the Prime Minister, in answer to a question put to him, said that the Minister of Agriculture was ill. We would like to know whether the Minister of Agriculture was actually in Winnipeg a few days ago or whether he was confined at home or in the hospital as a result of illness.

Mr. Chairman, the production of cigarette tobacco in Canada is an important sector of the agricultural economy of our country. And the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) made unfortunate statements against smoking.

The consumption of cigarette tobacco in Canada has been decreasing alarmingly for some time, and I suggest that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is largely responsible for this situation because she contributed to worsen it.

For the fiscal year ending March 31 last, taxes on tobacco yielded $171 million to the federal government. When the consumption of cigarette tobacco decreases, this not only directly affects a large part of the farmers, such as tobacco growers of Quebec and Ontario, but reduces also the revenue of the federal government.

I am asking the Minister of Agriculture what policy he intends to set forth to repair the considerable damage suffered by the cigarette tobacco growers as a result of the unfortunate statements of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I read lately in a magazine that there is no evidence that tobacco is a cause of cancer, and I wonder why the Minister of National Health and Welfare ventured in such a field since she was entirely unqualified to do so.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, if consumption of cigarette tobacco decreases, the working class will be affected. I have here an article according to which the cigarette factories in Quebec are reducing their staff. That is the result of the statements made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

We, on this side of the house, would be pleased to learn from the minister what he intends to do in order to help farmers whose income is ever decreasing. All farm publications are giving the alarm to the government and asking it to take a definite stand. Mr. Chairman, how can the present government have a farm policy when the Minister of Agriculture is always absent from the house and when members of the opposition are unable to put questions to him and to ask him what he intends to do to help farmers?

Mr. Chairman, once again I am calling on the minister to answer this question: What does he intend to do to encourage agronomists and agricultural technicians from the province of Quebec to come to Ottawa to take their place in the federal Department of Agriculture?

I am also asking the Minister of Agriculture to give special attention to federal experimental stations in Canada to increase research, but not to forget experimental farms in the province of Quebec. In the last ten months, agronomists and agricultural technicians in Quebec have been leaving the experimental farms belonging to the federal government to work for the provincial government and in industry. There is, in the riding of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, an experimental farm which has been going downhill for some time, that is since the government came to power. I ask the minister to take the necessary steps in order to rectify this situation and urge the agronomists and farm technicians to take their place in the experimental farms.

I also ask the Minister of Agriculture to increase the estimates for research in our experimental farms, and particularly in the province of Quebec.

In closing, I shall repeat in English the question I asked the minister on the orders of the day, so as to give him the opportunity to answer me:

[Text]

I ask the minister if he agrees to share the responsibilities of his department with another minister? I ask him a direct question and give him an opportunity to answer right now.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue.

Mr. Pigeon: No, Mr. Chairman. I directed a specific question to the minister and I think it is my privilege to receive an answer.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps the hon. member will have an opportunity later on, but it would be more orderly if hon. members made their speeches on this item and then the minister would have an opportunity to reply later.

Mr. Pigeon: I am waiting for an answer.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, in order to allow the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) to consider what answer he should give the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), I shall take a few minutes to put a few questions concerning the agricultural policy of the government.

To begin with, could the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) explain satisfactorily his complete silence during his budget speech with regard to farmers' needs. I consider this failure on the part of the Minister of Finance a real disgrace. I should like to know why, to a question asking him for an explanation, the minister merely said in his usual offhand manner: "Well, farmers have children—" That was a reference to the fact that from now on, family allowances would be extended to students of 16 and 17 years of age.

But the Minister of Finance has refused to understand the needs of a basic industry in our country. Neither he nor the Minister of Agriculture have been able to give us satisfactory answers on that matter.

Mr. Chairman, I was dismayed, on Thursday, to hear the Minister of Agriculture take the credit for the enactment of the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act. We have noted this completely unfounded assertion on the part of the minister. If he wants to take the responsibility and the credit for this legislation, he should give it the necessary understanding to make it efficient. I say, it has been one of the finest gestures on the part of the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), to plan this legislation and later have it passed and, in doing so, to have prepared the ground for a renewal of the rural and agricultural development in this country. But it was not enough to have a grandiose plan and to understand the actual needs of the farmers; it was necessary, once that legislation was passed, to implement it, to reach the necessary agreements with the various provinces and to really make it one of the mainstays of the whole agricultural policy.

Well, the Minister of Agriculture, by his ill-founded assertions on that subject, saying that only eight people looked after the implementation of that act, proved that he did not have the slightest idea of the possibilities of the said act, that he could not care less and, what is even more serious, that he did not understand the needs of the farmers and the rural population.

Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago, I heard the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), with whom I seldom agree. I agree with him when he says that the farmers' needs are tremendous. He has singled out my own riding which is essentially a rural one. He expressed high hopes concerning the application of the ARDA program because, in his opinion, this legislation is one of the ways by which the now extremely urgent transformation of the agricultural and rural areas will come through.

Mr. Chairman, this does not only concern farm land as such, it has to do with a greater problem, namely the adaptation of the rural areas, including not only tillable and farm land, but also villages and the vast spaces surrounding the farm areas of our country, particularly in the province of Quebec.

With ARDA, we see the possibility, first of all, of transforming into profitable units farms which are no longer an economic proposition; second, the possibility of creating new rural industries; third, the possibility of employing advantageously farm labour and farmers' children.

The needs of the agricultural class in Canada's rural districts are immeasurable. The farmer is at the crossroads. He has to face an increasing cost of living, scarce manpower, difficulties in supplying himself, at reasonable prices, with feed grains and in securing the machinery required for his farm.

All these problems are essential parts of the rural and agricultural problem. This government does not seeem to understand these basic problems, and that is the reason why the rural districts are still depressed.

Whether it is the present Minister of Agriculture who carries out the responsibility of rural rehabilitation, or whether it is handled by the Minister of Forestry—who is now sitting in his seat—it matters very little. Personally, I think that may be the Minister of Forestry is more capable of handling this problem and also to understand it by putting it in its proper perspective. But whoever is handling it, the government must face up to its responsibilities and must avoid deceiving the sanguine hopes that have been given the agricultural and the rural people by the former parliament when they passed the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act called ARDA.

That is why I join with all those who spoke before me and I urge the government to act resolutely and intelligently in carrying out this program and helping the many farmers scattered throughout the country, many of them in the province of Quebec and in my own riding, who were extremely disappointed by carelessness of the present government toward the agricultural class.

I feel that the government is confirming its indifference towards these problems by allowing the Minister of Finance to present a budget which ignores completely the rightful needs of the agricultural class.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: I should like to ask a question or two about the item under discussion. I do not wish to cut off the general discussion and I would certainly like, as well as other hon. members, to hear the answers to some of the questions asked during this discussion; in particular I should like to hear a little more about that period between February 3 and February 20. I should also like to hear more about ARDA and the other branches concerned.

However, I think that at some point either the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Finance might say a word about the item before us. We are being asked to vote a supplementary estimate of $60,000 which breaks down into two parts, $59,604 for professional and special services and $396 for a commemorative plaque to the Food and Agriculture Organization. If I may take those two items in reverse order, we should like to be told about this plaque—its purpose and what the significance of it is. With regard to the other item, can we be told what these services are? Is this a salary or a payroll item and, if so, does it represent payments made to people in the public service, or are these payments to consultants or outsiders? Are they payments which have to be made before the end of the fiscal year and, if so, have they already been made despite the fact that the vote has not been passed? In other words, I should like some details as to the item actually before us, even though I do not wish to cut off the interesting general discussion we are having.

Mr. Hays: In answer to the hon. member's inquiry may I say that the amount of $396 is in respect of a gift to the Food and Agriculture Organization of a bronze plaque commemorating the inception of the FAO in 1945. It was presented at the recent FAO conference. The amount of $59,604 represents the cost of conducting a financial management survey of the department undertaken at the request of treasury board. The total cost of this survey is $79,000.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the Minister of Finance if the item has yet been paid?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Chairman, it has not been paid.

Mr. Churchill: What is the name of the firm?

Mr. Gordon: Price, Waterhouse and Company.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad the minister has started to answer some questions. The questions he answered were comparatively trivial. He has been asked for a statement on agricultural policy—

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, I do not think that questions asked about items in the estimates, while the committee is scrutinizing the estimates, should be called trivial. That is what we are here for.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad the hon. gentleman has come back to the view that these are matters of importance, and that is the reason for the stand we took the other day—not over a matter of $30,000 or $40,000 or $70,000 but over a matter of $140 million which the government endeavoured to have passed without opportunity for proper debate.

Mr. Knowles: It is $240 million.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, $240 million and I am glad the hon. gentleman joins with us now because, after all, these things are important.

I ask in what circumstances we were brought back here. Why should we have been brought back here? Because we decide to take a stand and demand that full opportunity be given to parliament to examine this expenditure of $240 million? We were told, after gross delay on the part of the Minister of Finance: We shall sit tonight for a couple of hours and if you do not pass these estimates then in effect you will have to deny yourselves the holiday which is customarily allowed at Easter time. Indeed the carrot is still before us in the motion which rests on the order paper, reading:

> That immediately after royal assent has been given to the bill providing for the appropriation based on supplementary estimates (E), this house adjourn until Monday, April 6, 1964.

The only reason for that motion being there is to dangle it in front of us as a carrot to bring about the passage of this vast amount of money.

Mr. Nowlan: Is it a carrot, or a club?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will come to that. It is dangled in front of us as a carrot to bring about the passage of this vast amount of money without the fullest examination, and we have had no information on these matters. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings said, "Is it a club?" They tried the club the other day, and it did not work. Now they have added the carrot to the club in the motion in question.

I intend to refer to the fact that here we are asked to pass these items, the indication being that we are to pass them before March 31. It is of interest to see sitting opposite the genial Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Transport. I like to look back and take the views that they expressed only two years ago—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Just before an election.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —for after all, by their past you can judge them. They claim, by inference, that these supplementary accounts have to be passed by March 31. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether he would assist my memory. Was not that just before the election?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, Mr. Chairman. See, the rules are different when the opposition indulges in this kind of action just before an election. We do not believe in that; we believe that the rules are the same before or after an election.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I want to be helpful. I just wanted to get some information.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I beg your pardon?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was just asking for some historical information. Was it just before the election?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will come to that in a moment. That indicates the philosophy the hon. gentleman has always had; that if it is before an election, whether it is right or wrong, wrong as it is it is always right if it suits his purpose. He has apparently forgotten the situation. But I am here to say why, under this general item, parliament is not going to allow itself to be browbeaten by those people sitting opposite. Let that be clear. Let me point out also that there was no reason for the recalling of the house today by the pleaded necessity that these estimates have to be passed by March 31.

I shall refer to what happened in 1962. We brought in the final supplementaries in the middle of March. We started to debate them. Some $138 million was involved. We said they could be passed in a matter of three days, and they were debated on March 28, 29 and 30. The Liberal party that today is in office was then in opposition, and I may identify personally these distinguished representatives, if they feel it desirable that they should receive that attention. I point out that we did not take the stand they had to be passed. We said it was a fine objective that they should pass; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre said, "That is our objective", but in no way pressed the necessity of passage. They were not concluded in any way. The debate went ahead for three days. The then opposition, the government of today, debated these estimates at length. They did not have the views that the Minister of Justice has today, that parliament has to pass these items before the end of the fiscal year. That was not their view then. The debate continued on April 6, 12, 13 and 16. I think this has to be very definitely underlined and emphasized. As a matter of fact, the appropriation bill was not passed until after consideration on April 17 and 18. I mention this because there are some people endeavouring to leave the impression that because the end of the fiscal year is approaching, we have to pass these items; that they have to be passed before March 31. Nothing of the kind. I want to make that clear.

The only reason we were brought back here is that the government, and particularly the Minister of Justice, found themselves in an impossible position in moving that the house should sit on Good Friday and then again had to beat one of those retreats to which the government has become so addicted. It is a very interesting position. On Thursday, he did not know where to go, and said, "We will come back tomorrow". Then within an hour the Prime Minister, realizing the nature of the step that was being taken, announced, "Of course we will not sit on Good Friday". Now we are back here, and we intend to examine these items fully and completely; let that be clear. We do not intend to accept the carrot now being held out with regard to the Easter recess. We intend to examine these items, and if we do not get any more information than we have got so far, it is going to take quite a while.

I can realize the position of the Minister of Finance. He has tried very hard; he has no doubt endeavoured to bring about reductions, and yet the harder he tries, the greater the increase in the expenditures. I can well understand the position of the Prime Minister. When speaking in Toronto on March 14 to a gathering of his party he said, "Poor Walter Gordon is going to bring his budget in on Monday. Surely we can spare him just a moment of silent prayer".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I just want to thank all hon. members.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I thought he would be indulging in what the Prime Minister suggested would be a good exercise for the rest of us. Anyway that is the position; expenditures are multiplying. These people opposite said all that had to be done was to bring about a change of government and expenditures would go down. We are going to deal with these various items, but I am not going to deal with them now. I say to the Minister of Agriculture that I feel for him; he is in a desperate position. Everybody is taking away from him. As a matter of fact we do not know whether he was a usurper between February 3 and 20. Certainly I am using the word "usurper" in its finest connotation, as being a person who exercises authority which he has not got, and does it regardless of the rules. We want to know about this. We have not yet had the story from him. I feel very badly for him when I see the triumvirate—no, the diarchy set up for the purpose of controlling the Minister of Agriculture. They do not trust him; they have the Minister of Trade and Commerce taking over part of his duties, and then there is the Minister of Forestry, who made a speech in Winnipeg to which I shall refer later on, saying what he would do as minister of agriculture. I simply refer to that. It hurts me as much as it hurts him to say this, but I have to say it. I want to know, parliament wants to know and Canada wants to know what has happened to the minister. They should not subtract from him. Why, he does not know today what his powers are; he does not know what business he has. We do not know where these things are. Where is ARDA? Is it under the Minister of Forestry? Before we get through, the Minister of Fisheries will have something to do with that. The way they shuffle these things around, they do not even know their own orders in council. We want to find out about these things. What we do know is that while all this monkey business is going on and this—what do they call this game of shuffling chairs?

Some hon. Members: Musical chairs.

Mr. Diefenbaker: While this game of musical chairs, without the music, is going on the expenditures are mounting up—they are mounting up ever and anon. As a matter of fact I should point out that the Globe and Mail in its business editorial said that business deplores the spending rise at Ottawa, and the vice president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association said:

> There seems to be no end to the jumps in spending.

The economic adviser to one leading manufacturing and resources company said this:

> Either the government has lost control of spending or it has become completely irresponsible.

I think he is wrong, because he provided an alternative. It is both. I could quote from others. The president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce said, "It is disturbing". Certainly it is disturbing. Yet these people sitting opposite held a club over us and said: "Either you pass these estimates or sit on Good Friday". But they had to beat retreat on that one, because public opinion forced them to do so.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman when, where and how I even intimated that we should sit on Good Friday. On the contrary, I had to make three motions on the Thursday just to avoid that very thing, and in two of them I said expressly that it was to avoid sitting on Good Friday. The only reason we were called back on Good Friday was because one of the hon. members on the other side refused consent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I was hoping for that propaganda alibi. What they are trying to do is to place the responsibility on one hon. member. The responsibility rests on the government. That was a smooth one, but almost anyone can see through its transparency. The Minister of Justice moved that we sit on Good Friday and then that we resume on Monday at the hour of 2.30 p.m.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a point of order. I should like to ask whether the debate which is now taking place is not both redundant and very much out of order.

The Chairman: Perhaps I can read the item which is now before the committee:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $60,000 be granted to Her Majesty for agriculture, administrative branch—

This is the item before the committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is the item before the committee, and as always on the general item the widest discussion is permitted. With regard to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, it is always those people in the N.D.P.-C.C.F. who adopt an unctuous attitude in parliament.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, instead of this self-righteous position taken by the Leader of the Opposition I suggest we follow the rules of the house, that you draw attention to the fact that we are now on the agriculture item, and that we should stay on it until we have completed that order of business.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I never knew that being unctuous was unparliamentary. I do not think that the hon. gentleman knows what the word means; but I would point out this fact, that he himself contributed to this state of affairs. I refer to page 1534 of Hansard where, after the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona had spoken, the following appears:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I would like to call it six o'clock.

I simply point that out. I should like to read the rest of the record so that the Minister of Justice will not be able to befog the issue and place before the people a story inconsistent with the facts.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, again I rise on a point of order. Is it the intention of the Chair to direct the attention of the committee to the particular item which is before us?

Mr. Churchill: So you can't take it.

The Chairman: The hon. member knows that the Chair has already done that. The suggestion was made that the Chair should bring to the attention of all hon. members the item presently before the committee. We certainly agreed before we started the study of these supplementary estimates that the widest possible discussion would be allowed on the first item, although I do feel we should perhaps limit ourselves to matters connected with agriculture, and to my mind we may be straying away a little from the item under consideration when we discuss the matters of procedure that preceded the debate which is taking place today.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, could I ask whether corn has anything to do with agriculture?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman always has the capacity to analyse things in a way that all of us understand. I always follow the course of co-operating with the Chair, but the Minister of Justice has tried to place responsibility on this side of the house and I will just read the balance of the record as part of the general discussion; I ask for that right.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Surely we are not to be denied the right to explain what happened, and why we are here, when the responsibility rests on the government for endeavouring to bring about a situation unworthy of the House of Commons.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, surely the rules apply equally to the Leader of the Opposition. He is no longer the Messiah he was when he was in government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know how the hon. gentleman knows anything about the Messiah because in the 1958 year book and parliamentary guide he described himself as an atheist.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege and point out to the Leader of the Opposition that he is just as inaccurate in that reference he has made as he is in most other things. I would ask that he read the record and also that he stick to the rules.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Any more Messiah suggestions?

Mr. Howard: How about King John; do you like that better?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was just coming to the conclusion of this reference before I was subjected to these interruptions.

Mr. Howard: Complete disregard of the rules.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Hansard continues:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In the absence of any order of the house, if we adjourn at this point, then of course according to the rules of the house we will resume tomorrow at eleven o'clock.

Mr. Howard: Complete disobedience of the Chair.

Mr. Diefenbaker:

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid—

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Favreau: —having to sit on Good Friday, I suggest that the house give unanimous consent to adjourning until Monday, March 30, at 2.30 p.m.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nugent: Refused.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Since there is obviously not unanimous consent, this house stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock.

I wanted to cover the whole thing entirely and completely so that there would be no misunderstandings. Mr. Chairman, it is now five o'clock.

The Chairman: Order. So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to leave the chair.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE EMERGENCY AMBULANCE SERVICES

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of amending the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act to provide for payment, in agreement with the provinces, for emergency ambulance services.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this private members' notice of motion I should like to review ambulance services as they now exist across Canada. In the city of St. John's, Newfoundland, ambulance services are operated by the government with the aid of a federal grant. In the province of Nova Scotia ambulance services are generally provided by the funeral directors in the province. This is also true in the province of Prince Edward Island. In the province of New Brunswick the major hospitals in the larger cities run ambulance services, but in the smaller towns these services are again run by the funeral directors. In the province of Quebec most of the ambulance services are provided by the funeral directors, and in the city of Montreal they are covered by police ambulances.

In the province of Ontario the provision of ambulance service is quite varied. In the city of Toronto the city itself owns and operates a municipally controlled ambulance service. In Oakville, the town in which I live, the ambulance service is subsidized by the town at a cost to the town of $12,000 a year. In addition of course the ambulance operator charges the normal ambulance fees, but the operation is still a losing proposition. In the town of Georgetown, also in my riding, the ambulance and ambulance quarters are provided by the municipality itself and the ambulance service staff is made up of volunteers from the town. They are unpaid and provide a 24 hour, efficient, trained ambulance service.

In the province of Manitoba, Winnipeg has a combination of public and private ambulances. In the rest of the province ambulance service is provided, generally speaking, by funeral directors. In Saskatchewan there is some provincial legislation requiring that drivers of ambulances must be trained in first aid. In the cities of Saskatchewan the ambulance services are subsidized while in the rest of the province services are again provided by funeral directors. In the province of Alberta there is provincial legislation covering drivers and equipment but not the ambulance vehicles themselves. In that part of the province outside of the cities service is provided by funeral directors. In the province of British Columbia the situation is well taken care of in the city of Vancouver, but in the rest of the province there is a varied amount of coverage. In some areas coverage is provided by the municipalities and in other areas by the fire departments.

In reviewing the provincial situation I would point out that eight out of the ten provinces have no legislation on their statute books covering ambulance services, vehicles or the training necessary for the people who operate ambulances. The basic problem is a financial one and it is to cover the financial problem that I have proposed this notice of motion today. If the financial problems were solved, ambulance operators could provide good vehicles, adequate equipment and adequately trained personnel.

As I have mentioned, there are basically three types of ambulance service provided in Canada. The first is that provided by funeral directors as an extension of their funeral services, but funeral directors are gradually leaving the ambulance business because it is not profitable. For years dead people have actually been subsidizing injured people. The funeral directors have been providing ambulance service out of their other income and they are gradually drifting out of the business. The second group comprises those who provide privately operated ambulance services. These operations are so unprofitable that in many areas the operators have been subsidized by the municipalities. The third group is composed of the publicly operated ambulance services which are directly operated and controlled by municipalities.

As I have mentioned, the private enterprise ambulance operators cannot make a living, or if they do they find it impossible to provide proper vehicles and the proper training for their drivers in order to make the service adequate. What is needed first of all is legislation regarding minimum standards of vehicles, equipment and trained personnel. This is a provincial responsibility and I am not going to discuss it further. However, I should like to say in passing that in Ontario a committee has been set up by the provincial government after representations from the ambulance operators, the medical association of Ontario and the chamber of commerce.

The second thing that is needed, and which I would hope to cover by this motion, is financing. I am convinced that if we can solve the financial problem the other problems will straighten themselves out. The resolution reads in part as follows:

—to provide for payment, in agreement with the provinces, for emergency ambulance services.

The resolution would bring emergency ambulance services under the terms of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. The words "for emergency ambulance services" are included to prevent ambulances being used as a glorified taxi service. This wording is used to ensure that those who suffer an accident or sudden illness will be transported quickly to where they can obtain medical aid and so that ambulance fees will not be covered in the case of people who may have to go to a hospital for a blood test or who are being admitted for something that is not of an urgent nature.

As I mentioned, generally speaking ambulance services in the past have been provided by funeral directors who are gradually getting out of the business. People who are involved in accidents are often not very eager to pay for ambulance service and their reason for not wanting to pay is a justifiable one. When people are injured in an automobile accident they do not call the ambulance and therefore they do not feel that they should be required to pay for the ambulance service. Statistics show that in some areas as high as 90 per cent of ambulance service fees, which would normally be collected as the result of the use of ambulances after accidents, are actually never collected.

While one does not like to speak of money with regard to such an important, humanitarian operation as the provision of ambulance services for the people of Canada, without fees dedicated ambulance drivers and operators cannot stay in the business. My answer to the problem, which is not the only solution but is one that would serve the purpose very well, is to include bona fide emergency ambulance services under the terms of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. This measure would also provide for better ambulance service in that proper vehicles would be used. I am not sure how many members are aware of the situation but in some remote rural areas ambulance services are actually provided by jeeps or trucks or station wagons with a blanket and stretcher in them.

Some ambulance operators carry no emergency equipment at all. I believe most medical people feel that all ambulances should carry emergency equipment such as oxygen, first aid equipment and what is called suction equipment. It is also generally agreed that the people who operate ambulances should be trained in rudimentary first aid. Not very long ago in a riding close to mine a person was brought to a hospital who almost died on the trip there as a result of her injury. The fact is that her injury only amounted to a cut on her head from which she almost bled to death. The bleeding could have been stopped very easily and simply by the application of the most rudimentary first aid.

It is often said, Mr. Speaker, that "accident" is only a word until you have one. When and if you do have one, Mr. Speaker, this motion would see to it that you would be well looked after and it would help to provide the best of care for the people of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make some remarks on the motion proposed by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Harley). The motion before the house is one relating to emergency ambulance services, and I think it should be distinguished from ambulance services merely for the transportation of a non-emergency patient from his home to the hospital or from one hospital to another. I think the definition of the word "emergency" given by the hon. member for Halton is rather imprecise. We have to be more precise in defining these words "emergency ambulance services".

After reading some material available on this subject, Mr. Speaker, the general view is that provincial legislation is required to set minimum standards for the training of the attendants of these ambulances and for the type of equipment necessary to handle traffic casualty cases and medical emergencies. There also has to be control, especially, of communications because many problems have arisen as a result of lack of communication between police centres and ambulance centres and the emergency departments of our hospitals. Many times we have seen ambulances bring traffic casualty cases or sick persons to a hospital and the hospital has had to deny the patient admission because of lack of space or lack of the necessary equipment to deal with the particular case. We have found the ambulance had already left and we had to phone for another ambulance to take this patient to another hospital.

In Alberta legislation covering ambulance services has been provided through the department of highways. In Saskatchewan legislation covering ambulance services is provided under the public health act. In several municipalities civic legislation has been passed to deal with this problem. Some critics say that a firm, clear provincial policy regarding the financing of ambulance service is long overdue, and that this is really the main problem. The previous speaker stated that today many ambulance services are provided by funeral directors and so they are provided at the expense of the dead.

I am sure however that the members of this house are in agreement there should be a very profound study conducted of this whole field of ambulance services. These services provide not only transportation for the patient but also, in many cases, treatment. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Harley) stated I believe that many people could die of haemorrhage or other medical complications while being transported from the scene of an accident or from a home to a hospital.

In discussing the financial implications of providing emergency ambulance service, we should review the principles of hospital insurance based on the traditional patterns in force at that time and which are still in force, when the present hospital insurance program was first being planned. Subsequent discussion with interested bodies involved in the provision of hospital services revealed that it was accepted as a basic principle of the Canadian scheme that the new legislation entitled the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act would have regard to the traditional patterns of providing hospital services, and the traditional patterns in relation to each of those services across this country. Thus the present plan, while financed from premiums of the public which have been supplemented by the federal-provincial governments, has respected the autonomy of the hospital.

This perhaps is not unrelated to the question of ambulance services. However, the traditional Canadian pattern of providing these services has been based primarily on private or public ownership, but not by hospitals. In a survey carried out in Ontario a few years ago, it was ascertained that 90 per cent of the ambulance services provided in that province were privately owned, and to some extent were carried out as sidelines to a principal business. The number of ambulance services owned and operated by hospitals in Canada is minimal.

Suggested Provision for Ambulance Services

Our federal-provincial hospital insurance program was designed to cover those services which by custom and by tradition comprised services normally associated with hospitals. Those do not include ambulance services. The pattern of separating ambulance services from hospital services is not an exclusive feature of the federal hospital plan. This non-ambulance feature was also followed by its predecessor in the provincial hospital programs of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. The separation of the two services is due to the fact that while part of the duties of ambulance service have some relationship to hospital services, those are only a very small part of the over-all services. It has been regarded that ambulance services are closely related to other public services in a community, for example firefighting services and their ambulances, and police services, especially regarding highway traffic cases.

It has been suggested that ambulance services should be the subject of special legislation at the municipal or provincial level, containing provisions covering the licensing of the ambulance firm, the staff of the ambulance, the equipping of the ambulance, and communication facilities. None of these provisions would be in any way related to hospitals, but these services should operate under the direction or the supervision of the medical association. Under hospital insurance, costs which are included as shareable operating costs are those which form the normal part of the operating budgets of hospitals. Since ambulance services were usually not within the normal budgets of hospitals, those costs were excluded from those considered shareable.

In addition to the problem of costs, there are other problems associated with ambulance services and these mitigate against their inclusion in a hospital insurance program. These problems relate to the necessary controls which are essential in administering a program supported by public funds. I would suggest that these controls relate both to the utilization and also the quality of the ambulance service. With regard to the utilization of ambulance service, if associated with hospital insurance it would be necessary to define what distances and in what circumstances and under whose endorsement public funds could be used. In the absence of precise and enforceable regulations, the costs of hospital insurance for services not necessarily related to hospital care, which is the criterion for the receipt of insured services, would impose on hospital costs an element very difficult, if not impossible for the hospitals to control.

Second, the control of quality or the basic standards for ambulances is also a problem which has been recognized but which I think comes within the purview, of municipal and provincial governments. In Ontario, the provincial attorney general has recognized this need of raising standards and has recently given consideration to the demands of the Ontario ambulance operators association and the Ontario medical association. He stated that a profound study should be carried out to improve ambulance services in Ontario, and that this study is entirely separate from anything related to hospital insurance.

There is no doubt that ambulance services are urgently in need of improvement, including a satisfactory solution of the problem of paying for the ambulance services rendered, but this need should not be confused with the availability of funds for the program of hospital insurance. The royal commission on health services has been studying Canada's health service needs on a broad basis, and I expect its report will deal with the question of ambulance services. Meanwhile this problem should be reviewed on the local level as an essential need in the public service area.

There have been a few regional and two national studies of the ambulance services conducted in Canada. In 1955 there was the Montreal conference which studied the medical aspects of traffic accidents. In 1960 there was the Cornwall area traffic casualty study. In 1963 there was the brief of the Ontario ambulance operators association, and also in that year the communication services study in initial care and transportation in medical emergencies, conducted by the National Academy of Sciences. However, these studies have been rather limited in scope and did not result in significant action.

It is essential that more information be published on ambulance services, and these should be investigated in detail by the medical profession of Canada prior to recommending the courses open to governmental authorities in providing both improved and financially feasible ambulance services for Canadians. Among the things that should be studied are the ambulance services provided by the federal government.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, there are many federal departments which provide ambulance services. They include the Department of National Defence, the Department of Veterans Affairs which transports its patients from their homes to the veterans hospitals, the Department of National Health and Welfare which provides ambulance services in remote areas, and the Department of Transport. As I stated previously, municipal governments in many cases provide ambulance services through their fire, police and public health departments.

Very few of the hospitals in Canada provide ambulance services. These ambulance services for emergency cases are very popular in many city hospitals in large United States metropolitan centres like New York city and Los Angeles. Such ambulances are provided by the emergency department of a hospital and are staffed by junior interns on duty in the hospital's emergency department.

With regard to the financial arrangements of paying for ambulance services, I must say that the fees are rather high. In the city of Toronto where I practised medicine for several years, the fee was $15 for a one-way trip from the home to the hospital or from the hospital to another hospital, no matter what the distance was within the city limits. At present in Toronto there are nine municipal public health ambulances and 29 ambulances provided by private concerns. Although the availability of ambulances is satisfactory, following the study and recommendations made by the Toronto city council's department of health, it has been shown that there is however a crying need for provincial legislation to provide better equipment for ambulances.

It is said that these days $12,000 is required for a properly equipped ambulance. As stated by the hon. member for Halton, only 8 per cent of the ambulances in Ontario are equipped with oxygen service. So far as I am concerned every ambulance should be equipped with oxygen service and personnel who know how to use oxygen equipment. It may be necessary for people who are severely breathless or who are in shock from acute coronary thrombosis.

Although as I have said, the ambulance services in Toronto are adequate, they are too expensive. A fee of $15 is a lot of money for a person to pay to be transported from his home to a hospital. I sympathize with the view expressed by the hon. member for Halton that some provision should be made to make it financially easy on patients to get ambulance services. However, in view of the fact that his motion states that this should be paid for through the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act I must say, apart from the point which I stressed before, that it was not the traditional pattern for hospitals to provide ambulance services. This whole area of hospital insurance will, we hear, be studied at the forthcoming federal-provincial conference in Quebec city.

Apparently many provinces wish to opt out of the shared programs, and the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act is one of these shared programs. Therefore it is expected that this problem of emergency ambulance services will come solely under the jurisdiction of the provinces, and they will have to deal both with legislation controlling the quality of ambulances as well as paying for the costs.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I feel that this notice of motion, to the effect that the government should consider the advisability of amending the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, in order to provide, with the provinces, for the payment of emergency ambulance services, represents a new invasion in fields reserved exclusively to the provinces.

Such a legislative measure would impose new taxes on us, at both levels, federal and provincial.

It would create a double bureaucracy, an administration in Ottawa and an administration in Quebec or in any other province.

If the government, through this joint program, wants to give financial help to the provinces for the setting up of such a system, which is the responsibility of the municipalities and provinces concerned, and not of the federal government, it need not invent a new plan, or devise a new tax; all it has to do is to give financial help to the provinces to enable them to manage themselves as far as hospital insurance and all such details including emergency ambulance service, are concerned.

I do not believe at all that such a notice of motion is likely to facilitate the decentralization which everybody agrees should be implemented more and more in this country. Instead, we should introduce notices of motion which would definitely help the provinces.

Then, we could talk of respect for provincial autonomy, of federal decentralization, which becomes more and more urgent. We see in all these notices of motion a new invasion in fields coming under provincial jurisdiction.

As far as we are concerned, we object to the adoption of such a motion because we think it would be a duplication of jurisdiction which would impose new taxes.

Clearly, the Canadian people cannot pay any more than it does at the present time.

If, as I said a while ago, the federal government wants to be useful, I suggest it should supply the funds required by the provinces, while giving them full discretion to administer themselves with their own structures.

The federal government does not know where to get the necessary funds or credits to assist the provinces in the administration of such a deal. There is only one way out, the government must turn to the Bank of Canada, where it will find the credits required for the expansion and the administration of the provinces, municipalities and well organized public bodies, including the federal government.

Then, there would be no intrusion by the federal government into fields reserved to provinces, or in the administration of municipalities. Rather, there would be understanding, and I think the federal government would be giving assistance to the provinces. That way, the federal government would be carrying out the function for which it exists.

The federal government does not exist to penalize the provinces or take decisions for them, but to encourage their development in their own and respective fields.

The passing of such a motion, as such a piece of legislation would be neither more nor less than an additional infringement on that freedom which definitely belongs to the provinces.

I shall not labour that point any longer, because some other hon. members have indicated their desire to make themselves heard. I see that even Liberals are anxious to reach six o'clock so that the motion will not be passed. I leave it to them to talk out that motion.

[Text]

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Two of the three previous speakers are members of the medical profession and you, Mr. Speaker, may have noticed the divergency of opinion which exists even in the medical profession on the question raised by this notice of motion.

I am not a member of the medical profession but I claim some knowledge of the ambulance situation as it exists in Canada today, and I wish to rise in protest against the implications of the motion before us. I note that the previous speaker, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) commented on the fact that even members of the Liberal party appear anxious to have this particular motion talked out. I would not use that phrase myself, but I would advise the hon. member for Villeneuve that I am against the motion for reasons which I shall advance and which I hold to be good ones.

I do not like to talk about myself. On the other hand, one does get first hand knowledge from personal experience, and I must say that there is one word in this motion which causes me a great deal of difficulty, and that is the word "emergency". The motion reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of amending the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic

Suggested Provision for Ambulance Services

Services Act to provide for payment, in agreement with the provinces, for emergency ambulance services.

I have to ask: What is an emergency? I happen in private life to be connected with a hospital which maintains more than 240 beds, that is to say it is a fair sized institution. I only wish that we received 100 per cent co-operation from each and every member of the medical staff of that institution. There are more than 100 doctors on the staff and it is interesting to see what a few of them will resort to in order to put patients of their own into hospital. I know that the experiences I shall recite are not isolated cases but that they can be duplicated throughout Canada from coast to coast, day after day. We operate an emergency department—a division which not all hospitals possess—and doctors will call up with a paying patient who is really anxious to get to hospital. After all, the patient is paying his premiums under the Ontario hospital services act and feels he is entitled to a bed when he requires it. But there is no bed available in the hospital with which the doctor is connected. However, the doctor knows that emergency cases are admitted to hospital for immediate treatment, and if there is no bed available an emergency case will be taken in and put on a wheeled apparatus known as an emergency bed; it is not a full width bed but people connected with hospitals know what I mean when I talk about these emergency beds in which emergency cases are placed.

So a doctor calls up to see if he can get a patient admitted to hospital and he is advised that there are no beds available; the patient will have to wait for two days, or two weeks, or a month, perhaps. The patient is still screaming that he requires attention. The doctor tells the patient: If you have a relative who will call an ambulance and get you taken to the hospital in an ambulance and ask that you be treated in the emergency division, you are in. So, if a doctor has an elective case on his hands, medical or surgical, all he has to do is to advise the relatives to engage an ambulance and send it to the emergency division of the hospital he designates, and the patient is admitted. Is that an emergency case or not? It may be that there has been premeditation, possibly for hours, maybe for a day or two.

What is an emergency? I witnessed one case in the last 12 weeks which may interest hon. members. A man collapsed in a church I was attending. He was at the back of the building and the thud with which he fell attracted the attention of a doctor in the congregation. The doctor immediately went to the man's assistance. The patient was lying prone on the floor, and was carried upon a stretcher into the vestry. He was in poor condition and the doctor himself telephoned for an ambulance to take him to hospital. The ambulance arrived in about 15 minutes and took this chap to the hospital where he was placed in the emergency ward, because there were no other beds available. I personally visited this man who had collapsed in church. I asked the doctors who were attending him about his condition and they told me the patient was in a highly nervous state; the man was in a state of shock rather than anything else. Nevertheless the doctor who had attended the man in the church had called for an ambulance when this man was lying prone on the floor. The doctors at the hospital said it was a case of high nervous tension. Was that an emergency case? I asked the ambulance operator whether or not he was being paid for this service and he advised me that when he spoke to the man in this case he was told he had no money, and since he had not called for the ambulance he did not intend to pay. This was quite all right with the hospital. When I spoke to the doctor who had called for the ambulance, he pointed out that many ambulance calls are never paid for and he regretted that he had been the one who had called the ambulance. The house might be interested to know that the only cheque I ever received from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—and that was for $25, less income tax of $1.25—reached me a week after this ambulance case, and I paid for the ambulance call myself because the ambulance operator stated he would not be paid for it; he could tell from the shape of things as they were.

There are two questions that arise here. Was the man an emergency case? I say he was not. The doctor who called him in the first instance thought he was. The doctors who treated the patient at the hospital said he was not, and no one was going to pay for the service until a volunteer came along. You cannot make a proper distinction of what is an emergency service compared with one that is non-emergency or elective.

I have the honour and pleasure to represent the riding of York-Humber, and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Gelber) and I share a municipality with a population of 130,000. The township of York is about equally divided between York South and York-Humber. Some years ago when a hospital was first constructed in the township of York, the York Lions club, who met at the Oakwood hotel, conceived the very, very charitable idea of providing an ambulance for the conveyance of injured and sick persons to the hospital. They took the idea of providing an ambulance from the East York Lions club, which is in the riding of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto), and they raised the money, about $7,000, and gave a brand new ambulance to the police department of York township. This was before the metropolitan Toronto amalgamation came into effect. The police department of York township—which co-operates in every way with the Northwestern hospital—agreed to operate this small ambulance as a police cruiser. It had an extension inside, on which an injured person could be laid as on a bed; the rear opened up, as ambulance doors do, and many cases were transported to hospital in this combined police cruiser and ambulance donated by the York Lions club. But when metropolitan Toronto amalgamation came into effect the police departments were amalgamated early and the new police commissioners for metropolitan Toronto stated that ambulance service was not one of the functions of a police department. They said, "We cannot have these policemen running around and going off to hospital with sick and injured people. There might be a bank robbery and, heaven knows it is better to protect money than take an injured man to hospital, so they will have to stop operating an ambulance service in the police department".

Faced with the position of having a fully paid for ambulance that the police commissioners said could not be operated by the police department, the good people of York township decided to approach the fire department. We now have in the township of York a small ambulance which looks somewhat like a district fire chief's car, but it is a combination ambulance and district fire chief's car and it gives very, very fine service to the people of York who are transferred to the hospital. The point I would like to emphasize in this connection is that of manpower. In trying to keep this ambulance, which had been donated in the first place by the York Lions club, available 24 hours a day it was necessary to contact men who would be able to answer emergency calls at any hour of the day or night. That is why the police were first contacted, and then we went to the fire department. It is now operated by the fire department of York. The mover of this motion wants the act amended so that ambulance services will be paid for by the province and the dominion; but one of the great costs here is that of providing service 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

I am quite surprised that the member for Halton has brought this motion forward at this time, just when the dominion-provincial conference is going to be renewed at Quebec city. We are told that there are two items of great interest on the agenda. The first has to do with the Canada pension plan and the second has to do with shared costs of services rendered by the federal government and the provinces. To carry a motion such as this at this time would simply be adding extra expense to these shared costs, and anyone who is in touch with current thinking in this country of ours knows that there are at least ten provinces out of ten seeking to get more control of the shared costs which they now enjoy with federal participation.

I do not think the federal government should approach the provinces at all with regard to increasing the expense under the hospital insurance acts of the provinces or under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Insurance Act. Many of the hospitals in the Dominion of Canada do not conduct emergency departments of their own, and if there is an accident on the street, to what hospital are you going to send the case even if you have an ambulance at your beck and call? It is quite possible to send an emergency case to a hospital that refuses to take it in. I know hospitals in the city of Toronto that will not accept an emergency case because they are not staffed to handle emergencies 24 hours a day. If ambulance service were paid for under the insurance plans of the provinces and the Dominion of Canada, we would be receiving calls for emergency ambulance service at all hours of the day and night, with the patient directing the ambulance as to what hospital he was to be taken, whether or not that hospital had emergency service.

The problems that arise in connection with conducting an ambulance service are insoluble when you consider that not every doctor is allowed to practise in every hospital. If a doctor has privileges in one hospital, it is seldom that he has privileges in another. A man who considered himself an emergency case, called for an ambulance and demanded to be taken to a certain hospital, might be designating a hospital in which his own doctor did not have privileges, and he would be separated from the service of his doctor, whom he has possibly been visiting for 20 or 30 years.

I cannot see how the people of Canada can be expected to pay for emergency ambulance service without everyone demanding an ambulance ride to the hospital. Then how long would it be before they would be demanding an ambulance ride home from the hospital? I have enough contacts with the relatives of patients to be able to tell the house that if there was available free ambulance service under any insurance scheme, the relatives of patients would point out that we should send their father, their husband, their wife, their daughter, their nephew or their niece home in an ambulance because the taxi ride would be far too rough; and if they were taken home in their own, broken down car they would not know whether the car would make it home. These people would say that the mother should be sent home in the ambulance. Therefore this service would not only be to the hospital but would also be from the hospital.

One of the main reasons for the shortage of hospital beds throughout the Dominion of Canada today is the fact that we have prepaid hospital insurance. People who never went to hospital before, in the voluntary pay days, are now covered by hospital insurance through the province or the dominion and are demanding hospital service when they have the slightest cold, the slightest itch or the slightest ache. Not only do they find doctors who will put them into hospitals, but they stay there for days and days unnecessarily. We have found that people who have prepaid hospital coverage squeeze it to the last possible drop, which creates a bed shortage in hospitals throughout the Dominion of Canada.

I can assure hon. members that if we had free ambulance service to hospitals, because every patient would be demanding ambulance service to hospital we would not have enough room on the highways for the ambulances that would be required to transport these patients to hospital and, in short order, to transport them home again.

I think this resolution would be incapable of fulfilment if it were passed. I agree with the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and also the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), who pointed out that this was an intrusion on provincial rights. I think the federal government should stay well out of this scheme as it has been advanced to us. We are told that funeral directors who operate ambulance services are going bankrupt, as well as people who operate private ambulance services. There are times when I think that that is the only reason that could be advanced for asking the federal government to step into the field; and I make the statement that if people will not pay for ambulance service when it is conducted by funeral directors or by ambulance service people when it is conducted by private entrepreneurs, there is no reason under the sun why they will be willing to pay for ambulance service through taxation under a federal-provincial scheme.

We have heard doctors point out that every ambulance should be equipped with oxygen and suction pumps. As a hospital trustee I have been quite interested in the number of times a hospital is criticized because it does not supply an intern to ride with every hospital ambulance which goes out on a call. Some people maintain that no ambulance should answer a call unless it carries a doctor to look after the patient on the way to the hospital. Pretty soon ambulances will be running on as costly a basis hour by hour as the hospitals, and heaven knows the cost of that is breaking the back of the average Canadian taxpayer.

I am entirely opposed to this notice of motion and I sincerely ask the house to give it short shrift.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we have heard many reasons advanced in support of the motion, although my colleague the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) is apparently opposed to it. I feel that the hon. member who introduced the motion has done a great service in calling attention to a serious national problem. In addition to its being a national problem it is also a problem which has to be developed very carefully in light of our present day constitutional arrangements. However, I feel that the argument of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), who suggested that this was a provincial responsibility and that the federal government should stay out of it, but that the federal government should go to the Bank of Canada and get enough money to pay for an ambulance service, is as unique as anything I have heard for some time.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good motion. I think the intent of the mover of the motion to bring attention to the problem is an entirely worthy one. But as the hon. member for York-Humber pointed out, there will shortly be, in a matter of days, an important federal-provincial conference, and one of the items on the agenda of that conference is the future of the shared-cost programs. The principle of shared-cost programs is inherent in the motion itself, because it calls upon this house to——give consideration to the advisability of amending the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act to provide for payment, in agreement with the provinces, for emergency ambulance services.

Not very long ago in this house during private members' hour I personally opposed the extension of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act to the field of tuberculosis hospitalization. The reason I opposed it is exactly the reason why I think this motion is a good one. It is because the whole role of federally granted aid funds should be in terms of encouragement of the development of services, to cover the gaps which currently exist and to encourage the development of standards in a co-operative arrangement, which means the signing of an agreement between the federal and provincial authorities which pays regard to variations from one province to another, from one circumstance to another, and from one coast to another in this great and diversified country which is Canada.

The principle of grants in aid was a device by which better standards were developed, by which we overcame deficiencies in our welfare and health services. When we talk about grants in aid of tuberculosis today we would not require another dollar for care. It would simply be a measure of fiscal relief to the provincial authorities, because there are now adequate beds to take care of those afflicted with this illness. Standards have been developed to attack this problem which have shown encouraging results.

I feel it is wrong for the federal authorities to move purely in the direction of fiscal relief. Fiscal relief is a matter for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) to discuss within the framework of federal grants to the provinces. But when we talk of development and extension of services—in this instance I think this principle is fundamental—it is surely an area for the use of the grant in aid device.

We have heard various hon. members describe the great gaps existing in the provision of ambulance service today. In some instances they are provided by funeral directors. I submit that the skill required for the normal exercise of the function of a funeral director is rather different in nature and quality from the skill one would expect from the operator of an emergency ambulance service. In other instances this service is provided by private firms, in some other cases by municipal sponsorships, and in other cases on an irregular basis by fire and police departments.

I was formerly, Mr. Speaker, a member of the council of the city of Ottawa and I was surprised at the degree to which some private operators, who really believed in the work they were doing, put up with inconvenience and serious personal financial loss to provide the standard of service which they felt was very much needed in their community. I had the opportunity of reviewing at one stage the financial statement of a private operator, and I was astonished at the cases in which it was simply impossible for this private operator to collect bills which he had rendered, for reasons such as those so eloquently described by previous speakers in the house.

I think it is quite clear that we cannot expect such a service to be provided, logically and completely, by private enterprise, which would meet the standards we require. When the United Kingdom, in a logical pattern following the second world war, set about providing a health plan with broad coverage, they did not decide that ambulance services should be part of hospital services. This became a local authority service and it was given a very different type of structure and made subject to controls. I do not share the concern of my colleague for York-Humber, much as I admire him in other respects, about the abuse of such a service. The British experience and the experience of many other parts of the world shows that it is possible to develop this kind of service in a logical pattern.

Mr. Peters: Question.

Mr. Francis: I think the use of the grant in aid device in Canada is an orderly and proper way to tackle this problem, and I hope that in the future when the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act is considered, this whole question will be reviewed. We have had some indication of the extent to which mental illness can be considered.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Francis: I also hope consideration will be given to the provision of ambulance service. I think the mover of this motion is to be congratulated for bringing it before the house. Should no action be taken in a field in which there is an important provincial responsibility and nothing further is done, I think the matter should again be brought forward to the house. I would also congratulate the mover of the motion for bringing the matter to national attention. May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Caouette: Well disposed of.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock the time allotted to private members' hour has expired. As the business at eight o'clock will be the consideration of supplementary estimates, will the house agree to go into committee of supply now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, supplementary estimates (E) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, vote 1e, Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I was dealing with the general item and now I come down to the particulars asked for with regard to the Department of Agriculture. I am dealing now with the bifurcation that took place in respect of which we have so far had little or no information. I should like to know what arrangements have been made in connection with this division of power. Who today administers the various sections that were removed from the Minister of Agriculture? Subsequently the order in council of the 3rd of February was repealed on the 20th of February, but as yet we have had no information as to what actually took place during those 17 days. In particular, we want to be furnished with a record of all the directives and orders made by the Minister of Agriculture between those two dates in connection with the branches which were transferred to the Minister of Forestry.

The law in this connection is set forth in the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act, section 2 of which reads in part as follows:

> The governor in council may
>
> (a) transfer any powers, duties or functions or supervision of any part of the public service from one minister of the crown to any other minister of the crown, or from one department or portion of the public service to any other department or portion of the public service.

This transfer of powers is one of the most peculiar and unusual things that have taken place since I have been a member of the house. There have been transfers made before but never has there been such an element of mystery. One really does not know what went on. Never before was so much power bandied between so few to the detriment of the public service in general.

What we are trying to find out is who had the power. What happened? What were the circumstances under which this irresponsible game of transfer and retransfer took place? The committee will understand that there is a bit of mystery about this matter because the Minister of Forestry went to Vancouver and there he explained what had happened. We have not had that explanation here. He said, as reported in Le Devoir on March 25:

> The department of forestry and rural development which the federal government is going to set up will be independent of the Department of Agriculture, Hon. Maurice Sauve, Minister of Forestry in the Pearson government said yesterday. The minister stated, "a brand new, autonomous department, with one or two deputy ministers, one for forests, the other for rural development" will be established.

I would ask this question. Is it a fact that as a result of the uncertainty in these two departments employees did not receive their pay in the regular way as they should have? I refer to the employees of the animal diseases research institute of the animal pathology division located on Gamelin boulevard in Hull. Did they have to wait five weeks for their pay cheques and, if so, why? Was it because no one knew whether this matter came under the department of forestry and rural development, the latter part as yet unconstituted, or under the Department of Agriculture?

It is this information for which we ask, and naturally as soon as the information is received we will be able to go on to another department. There are some very important questions to be answered by the minister but the general questions that have been asked are still up in the air. So far all we have seen is fumbling attempts to field the questions on this problem. We have seen the shifting of powers over a period of days of indecision during which one minister or the other must have been in doubt as to which was in fact to discharge certain functions. It was a case of off again, on again. Taking the most charitable view that one can of this series of episodes, that view is that this is just another case of crossed wires in the cabinet, of faltering leadership, of disregard for proper, effective and decisive procedure.

It is these things we are anxious to find out about. This group of supplementary estimates involves a tremendous amount of money, a quarter of a billion dollars, and in addition we have this clumsy, ineffective and doubtful transfer of powers which after three weeks ended up leaving everybody where they were and with no one knowing who exercised the authority that had to be exercised during the period of uncertainty.

There are other matters I shall deal with later. The other day the minister made some references to the way things were going in agriculture. He also referred to the cattle situation. I feel he should give us information as to the prices of cattle in 1961, 1962, 1963 and during the first months of 1964 up to the present. It would also be very helpful if we had—he has all this information at his fingertips—information as to the number of cattle exported to the United States in 1961, 1962, 1963 and 1964 to date.

I am sure the minister is desirous of cooperating in every way and wishes to give the committee the benefit of his knowledge. If he will just answer these questions rather than rising and bumbling away on something we have not asked him about we will make progress. We have a great many important items to deal with which will require examination. There is one particularly large item about which I know he will want to give us the fullest information. Therefore, without further delay I leave the matter with him, knowing he will bring together in his own inimitable manner these threads of uncertainty, these threads of authority, some of which have disappeared, others of which have been broken and some of which have been reassembled, so that order will be brought out of the chaos of two departments.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, with some of the things the Leader of the Opposition said both prior to five o'clock and since eight o'clock, we agree. We have already made it clear that we feel we are in the squeeze, to quote one of the Ottawa newspapers today, that we are now in because of the introduction of four days of the budget debate into a schedule that was already crowded. We think there are other examples of the mismanagement of the business of the house by the government, but they can be dealt with at some other time. We agree also that when supplementary estimates are before us they should be examined carefully. They should be scrutinized. We think this job should be done decently and properly. We should take whatever time is necessary, although we should not waste time.

However, Mr. Chairman, the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition in this house indulged in a display this afternoon that I cannot let pass without putting the record straight. I wondered for a time during the supper hour whether or not I would let it pass, but an editorial which I read during the supper hour in the Ottawa Journal made it clear this was something concerning which the record must be put straight. When he was speaking prior to five o'clock, the Leader of the Opposition stated categorically that the Minister of Justice tried to force this house to sit on Good Friday. Later, the Leader of the Opposition put on the record most of what was said at six o'clock on Thursday. If anyone reads carefully what was said at that time, it will be very clear that the Minister of Justice, far from trying to force this house to sit on Good Friday, was doing his best to help the house avoid sitting on Good Friday. I think the Minister of Justice still has a few things to learn as house leader. I think he has made a few mistakes, and he probably would admit that himself. But, Mr. Chairman, as a member of this house, and as one who is in a position to know what went on, I refuse to let the Minister of Justice be blamed falsely, as he was this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition.

Everyone in this house knows that there is a group of people known as house leaders. They consist of the Minister of Justice for the Liberals; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre for the Progressive Conservatives; the member for Winnipeg North Centre for the New Democratic party; the hon. member for Fraser Valley for the Social Credit party, and the hon. member for Lapointe for the Rallie-ment Creditistes. We meet from time to time to try and arrange the business of the house. Sometimes we succeed, and sometimes we do not. Last Tuesday, March 24, at six o'clock, a meeting of these five house leaders was held in the office of the Minister of Justice, which is on this floor just out in front of this chamber. At that meeting which took place shortly after six o'clock the Minister of Justice, as house leader for the government, informed us he had filed a notice of motion with the proper authorities so that it would appear on the order paper. He told us that the wording of the notice of motion was to the effect that when the house adjourned last Thursday it would stand adjourned until this Monday. I wish to make it quite clear that we were told that notice of motion had been filed. The member for Winnipeg South Centre objected. I am putting it mildly, but I am sure he will not quarrel with that statement. He objected to that motion.

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles: Certainly.

Mr. Churchill: Now that the hon. member is disclosing what happened in what have always been considered to be confidential meetings, I suppose he will not object if I subsequently disclose some of the troubles he has at these meetings?

Mr. Knowles: Not at all; I might even disclose some of them myself.

Mr. MacInnis: May I raise a point of order?

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. MacInnis: My point of order is this, Mr. Chairman: This afternoon hon. members belonging to the party of the hon. member who is now speaking made a great hue and cry about the rules of order. They continually raised the points of order because no one was adhering to the item with which we were dealing.

Now, we have an example of hon. members, when they think things are going their own way, members of the Liberal party and the other group, being quite satisfied to sit quietly while the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre breaks the rule about which the members of the Liberal party and the New Democratic party squawked so much this afternoon.

Mr. Lloyd: May I speak on the point of order? May I observe that the buttons were taken off the foils by the Leader of the Opposition I think just before five o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: I suggest this matter was raised this afternoon and it is appropriate for me to clear it up. If it were necessary, I could raise it as a point of privilege because I, personally, am involved in the charges that were made this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition.

I was pointing out we were informed at six o'clock last Tuesday that the motion to which I have already referred had been filed for the order paper. This was objected to by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. I did not share the reasons for his objections, but I joined with him in objecting. I suggested that it might be better if this motion were withdrawn rather than let it appear to be giving the house a threat. The Minister of Justice said, "What do we do about Good Friday; I want to be sure we do not sit on Good Friday." We all said, the representatives of all parties, "We can handle that by making sure that you will have unanimous consent not to sit on Good Friday. It is not necessary," we said to the Minister of Justice, "to have that kind of motion since it is going to seem to be a threat to some of the members of the house. If you withdraw the motion, we will undertake that you will have the unanimous consent that will be necessary so that the house will not have to sit on Good Friday."

The Minister of Justice, at that meeting at supper time last Tuesday, told us he would give consideration to our request and that he would carry on any consultations with his colleagues which might be necessary. We were invited to meet in his office at ten o'clock that same night. We went to his office at ten o'clock that night. To keep the record perfectly straight, I was a minute or two late getting there. As I got there, the meeting was breaking up. I had thought it might last an hour, but I was told the minister had informed us he had withdrawn the motion, so any need for a further meeting that night was avoided.

There is the story, Mr. Chairman; the motion to adjourn the house from Thursday night to Monday was withdrawn. The motion the Ottawa Journal said the government should have introduced was filed, but it was withdrawn at the request of representatives of the opposition, led in fact by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre; and I suggest in the light of that it is crystal clear—certainly it is clear beyond peradventure of doubt to me—that the Minister of Justice is the last man in the house to be accused of trying to force the house to sit on Good Friday.

We met several times after those meetings of last Tuesday, and on almost every occasion the question came up, what about Good Friday? I admit the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre said I might have some difficulty. In fact I admitted at the meeting that I might have difficulty with one or two of my members who might not want to give unanimous consent but I stated I would do my best, that I would take the matter up in our party caucus, and I later reported we had unanimous agreement in our caucus not to object to any motion necessary to avoid sitting on Good Friday. As late as the last meeting we had on Thursday I was able to say there would be no difficulty so far as we of the New Democratic party were concerned.

Certainly at those meetings of house leaders we had a number of disagreements about house business, but on this point there was no disagreement whatever. A sitting on Good Friday was to be avoided, and it was to be avoided by all parties undertaking that there would be unanimous consent to any motion necessary not to sit on Good Friday. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, last Thursday evening when I heard the Leader of the Opposition twisting the words of the Minister of Justice into a suggestion that we sit on Good Friday I could hardly believe my ears. I wondered if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre had not been reporting to his leader what had taken place. Then a little later, as if my ears were not already hearing enough that I could not believe, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre himself said, "Now the present group are asking us to sit on Good Friday." I repeat that this came from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre who was at the meeting of house leaders, who protested against this motion and at whose request the motion was withdrawn. So, in the light of that, to upbraid and criticize the Minister of Justice, as the Leader of the Opposition did this afternoon, is to accuse him of something which is the very opposite of what he tried to do for three or four days on end, and is a performance not worthy of the right hon. gentleman who was formerly prime minister of this country and who is now leader of the official opposition.

Now, I repeat, we have our difficulties. We had our difficulties about what we were to do before we adjourned, but there was no doubt in my mind about what the government was asking for—that the government was asking for both interim supply and supplementary estimates. The hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre would not accept this; he would not agree, but there was no doubt what the government wanted.

We had various other disagreements, and I still hold to the view that the government made a serious mistake when in the first place it brought down the budget. I think it has made a number of mistakes. In fact I am keeping a list of them and some time when I have 40 minutes to speak I am going to read out its mistakes; but on this one issue of who was responsible for the house sitting on Good Friday the record itself is clear, and certainly the one person to whom no blame attaches for that sitting is the Minister of Justice. Nobody did more than he to try to avoid it, and I think the Leader of the Opposition, the Ottawa Journal and any others accusing him of this, owe him an apology.

Mr. Churchill: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, you will give me an opportunity to reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to correct some of his erroneous statements. I first take objection to the disclosure publicly—

Mr. Knowles: Of the truth.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member has objected to the disclosure of the truth. I will show the falsity of his statements, but I object to the disclosure publicly of confidential meetings, and the meetings of the house leaders are confidential. Here we have an hon. member who purports to be familiar with the procedure and the routine of this House of Commons, who has been a member of house leaders' committees on more than one occasion, now disclosing a meeting which was confidential, a meeting at which no minutes were taken.

He gives his recollection of a meeting of last Thursday, and his recollection is faulty. This is one way to destroy forever the work which normally goes on in a house of commons behind the curtains, behind the Speaker's chair, as it is called, where people representing the various parties try to come to agreement, and 90 per cent of the time a great deal of the work is put forward and moved along because of confidential meetings and various arrangements that leaders of the various groups make behind the Speaker's chair. But now the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has destroyed the value of those meetings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Well, I just ask you what happens at the next meeting if a person's opinion is asked and he gives it frankly, though it may not correspond to the opinion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He will disclose this to the public and he will say, "Well the person who caused all this trouble was the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre". And in my turn, what happens when I come here publicly and say the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would not agree because he could not get agreement from two members in his party, the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Timmins?

If this is not well known let it be well known now. This is what he has said on many occasions in these confidential meetings.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has his members straight?

Mr. Churchill: Oh, I beg your pardon. I apologize to the hon. member for Timmins. It is the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Timiskaming; those are the two who prevented the passage of business through this house on so many occasions, as one of them did on Thursday night, calling it six o'clock when the house was consulting openly trying to get a solution to the problem. He called it six o'clock and the Speaker had no option but to adjourn the house.

