When two religions come face to face each must condemn the other; for teaching contrary doctrines, the truth of afterwards cellected and published in a pamphlet several thousand copies being distributed gratis among Positions and divinely associated and divinely associated to be the true and divinely associated to be the tr pretensions of all adverse claimants. He said: If the library contains more than the Koran it contains too much, if less it is not enough, if the same it is not necessary let it, therefore, be destroyed. If the Caliph's premises be granted there is no avoiding his conclusion. Christianity, in relation to Spiritism as a religion, is in precisely the same situation the logical Caliph. It cannot doubt its premises; that is, its claim to a divine institution and mission; to do so would be to annihilate itself or confess itself a fraud from the beginning, a usurper. It must therefore say of Spiritist religion: "If it teaches more than Christianity teaches it teaches too much, if less it teaches not enough, if the contrary it is false; if the same it is not necessary." Christianity teaches that itself is the perfect and ultimate dispensation; that its mission to teach extends from Christ's first coming as a mediator to His second coming as the Judge, and that a religion teaching

He should avoid such a danger. The history of modern Spiritism affords unquestionable evidence that there are lying, evil-disposed, malignant spirits, ready to assume any name or guise. Besides this their is so much fraud and trickery by mediums, such transparent cheating and deception that those who practice the cult are by common consent considered as somewhat "off."

Third-The practices of Spiritists, their seances, their mediums, their masculine, short-haired women and their feminine, long-haired meu, their preference for the dark - all these have a demoralizing tendency, both physically, intellectually and morally. Their mediums are nothing more nor the wave of sympathy which his stupendous movement has aroused, drew better audiences than we did, and of the Hereafter, bear witness to often we had as many Protestants as Catholics.

IS ONE RELIGION AS GOOD AS was not essential to salvation. If it ANOTHER ?

How Indifferentism Leads to Paganism.-Sermon by Rev. Father Coupe,

Preaching at St. Francis Xavier's, Liverpool, on Sunday evening, Rev. Father Coupe, S. J., delivered an eloquent discourse on the evil of indifferentism. Taking for his text the words from St. John's Gospel, "There shall be one fold and one shepherd," he said that at the outset Protestantism in England, although deeply in error was also deeply in earnest; the error remained, but the earnestness where This earnestness had dewas it? parted, that fiery fanaticism had now burned out, and from the dead embers there had sprung up a new spirit, a spirit of indifferentism, a spirit of tolerance, a spirit that was tolerant pre-cisely because it was indifferent. From those dead embers of departed Puritanism there had sprung up a spirit of philosophism that was filling men's hearts not with a deeper respect

Because both those orders. She holds that as it held that one religion was just as the individual has no reliable test by good as another. Modern enlightenment was even willing to allow that Almighty God ought to be adored, but whether that adoration was to take this form or that form was a matter which it was wholly for the worshipper himself to decide, and Almighty God ought to be and indeed must be very well satisfied to be adored at all without imposing on man the particular form n which that adoration ought to be clothed. The modern spirit looked upon definite dogmatic belief as a fossil, ancient history, a relic of the dead past. An Englishman claimed the right to choose his own creed as he chose his clothes, and he claimed the privilege to change his faith just as freely as he changed his fashions. He claims the right for a man to form his opinions in religion as he would form them in æsthetics. The spirit of

Would anyone tell him that a man might reject any part of Our Lord's teaching provided he does not reject written, "there shall be one fold and teaching provided he does not reject written, "there shall be one fold and the whole, or that he could apply his private judgment to pick and choose being many, are

That asseveration is a demon-believe in Our Lord as God, or only as man, for if he meant belief in the Modern Spiritualism has about it the divinity of Christ, then all Christian religions could not possibly be equal, and so indifferentism was proved at once to be a false theory. For example, Unitarians denied the divinity of Jesus Christ, and yet he supposed they were a Christian sect. Was then, Unitarianism as good as any other religion? If it were, then belief in Christ as God were not, then it was untrue to say that any one Christian religion was as good as any other Christian religion. The indifferentist under stress of argument was driven to admit that be lief in God as man was enough for salvation, and he must then widen his theory and make it include those non-Christian religions that believed in include Mahommedans, who believed in Christ as man Was then Mahom medanism as good as any other religion? If it were, then he should withdraw the limitation with which he started, and should confess that according to his theory, if one religion is as good as another, then it was as good, for example, to be a Mo-hammedan as a Methodist; and if this be true he was driven again to ask the question why were the British people so generous in subscribing and sending missionaries for the conversion of the Mohammedan? Not only did this new fangled theory degrade Christianity and lead to paganism, but it also de graded the idea of the Almighty God, and led to atheism. For if there were one fact in connection with Almighty God that plain reasoning made more evident than another, it was that God was truthfullness and loved the truth. They had Our Lord's own words for it: "Ego sum veritas,"—I am the Truth and to say that one religion was as pleasing to Almighty God as another, was tantamount to this, to say that God was equally pleased with truth and with error. The proof was very and with error. The proof was very easy. Those different religions con tradicted one another; now of all con both be true ; to demonstrate truth of one was by the very fact to demonstrate falsehood of the other. Consequently if two religions contradicted one an other, one of the two must of necessity from the very nature of the case be TEACHING AND PROPAGATING ERROR. For example, one religion asserted the existence of hell fire, in which the sinner who died in mortal sin was punished eternally; another religion denied the existence of hell fire; one religion believed that faith alone without good works was enough for salvation, another religion denied that faith

In conclusion he asked them to pray for that England of theirs, which indifferentism was turning into a Pagan land, which Liberalism in religion was filling with hopelessness and deep unrest. They should pray that England might come once again to recog-nize that love giving Mother, that royal Mother in whose crown England was once the fairest jewel. The Catholic Church alone was the city of the Great King; the Catholic Church alone was the House of the living God; the Catholic Church alone was the one infallible guide, whose voice faltered not, whose hand trembled not, whose foot stumbled not; the Catholic Church alone was the one fold and the one shepherd; the Catholic Church alone was the house against which nineteen centuries of opposition had spent themselves, and it had fallen not, because it was built upon a rock; the Christ as man. The Late Hon, T. D. McGee.

In connection with a recent reference to some of Mr. McGee's speeches and lectures, I think I mentioned some months ago that it was purposed to bring out a new edition of his public utterances. As there have been enquiries on the subject, it may be well to repeat what I know of the matter.

Of the friends and admirers of McGee there is not one who has cherished his memory with greater devotion than Mr. Justice MacMahon, of Toronto. Every scrap of the great orator's speeches and addresses that he has preserved or that he falls in with is regarded by Judge MacMahon with a veneration due to what genius and patriotism have hallowed. Some time ago by himself and a few other Irish Canadian gentlemen of kindred sympathies a committee was formed for the purpose of publishing a selection from the speeches and lectures. The only volume of McGee's speeches before the public is the now tradicted one another; now of all contradictory propositions one was true and the other was false—they could not Morgan, of Ottawa, and entitled Speeches and Addresses Chiefly on the Subject of British American Union." I believe that Mr. Morgan has been asked to edit this new volume also. I know that for some years he has been collecting Mr. McGee's addresses and has amussed a large quantity of material not elsewhere found together. The appearance of such a work will be awaited with very real interest.-John Reade in the Montreal Gazette.

The "Pellets" are purely vegetable and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system. No care is required while using them; they do not interfere with the diet, habits or occupation, and produce no pain, griping or shock to the system. They act in a mild, easy and natural way and there is no reaction afterward. Their help lasts.

The Pellets cure biliousness, sick and bilious headache, dizziness, costiveness, or constipation, sour stomach, loss of appetite, coated tongue, indigestion, or dyspepsia, windy belchings, "heartburn," pain and distress after eating, and kindred derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels. In proof of their superior excellence, it can be truthfully said, that they are always adopted as a household remedy after the first trial. Put up in sealed, glass vials, therefore always fresh and reliable. One little "Pellet" is a laxative, two are mildy cathartic. As a "dinner pill," to promote digestion, or to relieve distress from overeating, take one after dinner. They are tiny, sugar-coated granules; any child will readily take them.

WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY

The Catholic Record for One Year FOR $4.00.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are able to obtain a number of the above books, and propose to furnish a copy to each of our subscribers.

The dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy, and turnishes knowledge which at one hundred other volumes of the choicest books could supply. Young and Old, Educated and Ignorant, Rich and Poor, should have it within reach, and refer to its contents every day in the year.

As some have asked if this is really the Original Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, we are able to state that we have learned direct from the publishers the fact that this is the very work complete, on which about 4 of the best years of the author's life were sewell employed in writing. It contains the entire vocabulary of about 100,000 words, including the correct spelling, derivation and definition of same, and is the regular standard size, containing about 300,000 square inches of printed surface, and is bound in cloth.

A whole library in itself. The regular sell to refer of Webster's Dictionary has here.

CHAPTER XL.

"Well," said Miss Dorrance when she next met her friend, mamma that you and Mr. Egerton went amicably together to Notre Dame after all. I hope that you enjoyed vourselves. "That depends upon your definition of enjoyment," answered Miss Bertram. We heard a good sermon-which was what we went for.'

"A good sermon!" Miss Dorrance
"What an lifted her eyes to heaven. "What an idea—to spend a beautiful, bright Sunday afternoon in hearing a sermon!"
"It was certainly more appropriate to spend it in the Bois," said Sibyl, with a laugh.

"Where you found the usual 'feast of reason and flow of soul, of course. That is a very hackneyed quota tion," said Miss Bertram, "but it describes exactly what we found—what is usually to be found in the D'Antignac salon. I date an era in my life from the day I first entered that wards to M. d'Antignac's."

"An era of what kind?" asked her friend curiously "Of enlarged ideas, for one thing,

Miss Dorrance made a slight but very expressive grimace. "I think your ideas were quite large enough large for convenience, in fact. One should consult convenience in one's ideas, as in everything else, in my opinion. One might as well wear clothes too large for one as to have ideas ridiculously unsuited to one's circumstances and surroundings."

"If some of us fitted our ideas to our circumstances and surroundings they would certainly be small enough," said "I cannot flatter you that metaphor is your forte, my dear Laura. The narrowest circumstances need not prevent our entering on that heritage of great ideas which is-thank God !

"They are not very wide in the material sense - which is probably what you mean," answered Sibylbut in the spiritual and mental sense en narrow indeed."

You are flattering to your friends. "To my friends?" said the other, with a slight smile. "Oh! no. I was not speaking of my friends, who are few-as one's friends must always be -but of the large number of indifferent people who form one's acquaintance and make one's social atmosphere. And what has my atmosphere been Simply that of a society bent on frivolous pleasure, measuring everything by a material standard, and not even edeemed from inanity by intellectual activity. Is it any wonder that when entered another atmosphere, where people are not weighed by the amount of money or the number of fashionable acquaintances they possess, where all that is best in one is quickened and all that is noblest brought forth, that I felt as if I had passed into another

In her energy - speaking, as she was, from her heart—the speaker probably forgot who was her listener. Laura Dorrance's eves opened wider and wider, until it was evident that only lady-like decorum prevented her from expressing her feelings by a whistle; and at Miss Bertram's last words she shrugged her shoulders with a gesture of one who gives up a hope less matter.

"Exaltee is no word for you, m lear," she said. "You have soared far beyond any region where I can Poor Cousin Duke! will he do? The clouds are not a con genial region to him either.

Miss Bertram looked haughty, as she usually did at allusions of this kind but she made no reply, and Laura went on:

He was disconsolate on Sunday At least he was very disagreeable, and I believe that is usually a sign of disconsolateness. He had hardly a word for any of us. I never saw him in such a bad temper before."

"It is a good thing, then, that I did not accompany you," observed Sibyl

"What shameful affectation!" turned the other. "As if you did not snow that that was the matter! must confess it was provoking, after arranging an afternoon's pleasuring with the lady of one's love, to be cooly thrown over for a sermon at Notre

"I wish that you would be kind enough to spare me such remarks," said Miss Bertram coldly. "They are exceedingly disagreeable and in very

"How can the truth be in bad taste?" asked Miss Dorrance, nowise abashed. "And a truth that you must now as well as I; for how help knowing that Cousin Duke is in ove with you?-though I have told him that he might as well go to the Louvre and adore the Venus de Milo. But nobody ever listens to warning in a case of the kind." She ended with a She ended with a

To which Miss Bertram replied To which Miss Bertain, walked "Nonsense!" and, rising, walked room, saying: "If you want me to go shopping with you I will go, on condition that you do not allude to this subject again. It was a condition Miss Dorrance was willing enough to accept for the sake of having the benefit of her friend's taste in the shopping which is the apparently inexhaustible occupation of American women in Paris. But Sibyl soon found that it is not possible to thrust a subject aside because one person's lips have been sealed upon it. When she returned home after several hours spent among magasins and modes, who should she find in the drawing - room, quietly talking to her mother and evidently awaiting her arrival, but Mr. Talford.

She was too much a woman of the world to make any change in her usual manner of greeting him; but, this greeting over, she did not bestow much attention on him. "I am tired to death!" she said, sitting down with an air of exhaustion. "I do not know that shopping has ever been reckoned among the most fatiguing things of life; but in my experience there is nothing to compare with it for tiresomeness. After two or three hours tions and in deciding between numerable varieties of styles, I feel absolutely overcome with mental as well as physical fatigue.'

"One may perhaps be permitted to say that you do not look so," observed Mr. Talford, with a smile.

"It is only a proof, then, of how far looks may belie feelings," she replied, not very well pleased—"for surely when I say that I am tired he ought to take leave!" she thought.

On this, as on may other subjects. however, Mr. Talford differed from her. When a young lady with the most charming color imaginable and every appearance of vigor declares herself tired to death from that which is generally held to be the most fascin ating amusement of her sex, few men would feel bound to very strict credulity, and credulity was not this gentleman's failing. He only answered, with a smile: "Then I should recommend you to refresh yourself at once with a cup of tea-which may be an interested suggestion on my part, since Mrs. Bertram has promised me one." ' And I have only been waiting for Sibyl's arrival to order it," said Mrs. Bertram, ringing the bell. Tea was brought in, and Sibyl re signed herself to make the best of Mr. Talford, since it was very plain that he had no intention of departure. And, as a means to this end, she dis missed Laura's assertion with regard to him from her mind, saying to her self that a man of so little sentiment and so much sense had no doubt long since understood her manner and ac cepted the conclusion rising from it. Moreover, her mother's presence was shield; so, with an agreeable consciousness of safety, she forgot her fatigue and was talking easily and pleasantly when a ring of the door bell was followed by the appearance of a the room.

Sibyl longed to telegraph with her eyes, "Come back immediately;" but the fear of betraying any sense of danger deterred her. And, after all, she said to herself, what was there to fear? She had been alone with Mr Talford often before without his indi cating the least intention of falling at her feet or committing any equivalen absurdity. Why should she suspect him of any such intention now Laura's nonsense had infected her, she thought, and so, leaning back carelessly in her chair, a lovely picture in becoming out-door costume, with her tea cup in her hand, she went or talking lightly of the many topics which, like motes in the sunshine, fly about Paris. But presently she began to observe that Mr. Talford was somewhat absentminded and replied a little at random -which was not remarkable, since he was in fact saying to himself, "Shall I? or shall I not? Is it worth while? or is it not?" Perceiving his failing attention, Sibyl's power failed, and, finishing rather disconnectedly a story that she was telling she began to cast about in her mine for an excuse to end the tete a-tete.

But it was too late. "I wonder," said Mr. Talford, look up as she paused, "if you will forgive he answered, after another short pause my wandering attention when I tell of astonishment; "but that is no you that it was because I was thinking of you that I did not listen to you."

'The wandering attention does not matter in the least," she replied, with heightened color. "Raconteurs are Gambetta so good, when I heard it the other day at M. d'Antignac's, that I was led to attempt to repeat it. bien, let us talk of something else. Who is the favorite for the Grand Prix?"

there is a favorite for the Grand Prix," you could afford, or the jewels you replied Mr. Talford. "My thoughts could give?" she asked. "There are

The thing was inevitable. Sibyl recognized it and resigned herself.
"If he will force the matter I can only get over it as soon as possible! she thought. Aloud she answered with sufficient self-possession:

"Why should you think so? Does one often know with any certainty what others feel or think regarding And, indeed (hastily), it is much better not to know, but simply to take it for granted that one is moderately liked and appreciated."
"Moderately liked and appreciated

Mr. Talford grew a little pale-his first sign of emotion

"This," he said quietly, "is mere fencing. You know what I wish to say to you. You know that I love

The words were uttered. But it is safe to say that their effect astonished Sibyl as much as himself. She had in form it might be couched, courteously though decidedly; and she was not prepared for the sudden impulse which made her answer, with something akin to scorn

"No, Mr. Talford, I neither know nor believe anything of the kind. You may wish to marry me, but I am quite sure that you do not love me.

The unexpected nature of the reply and the quick flash in her eyes so much astonished Mr. Talford that he had at he moment no thought for resentment "And may I ask," he said after an in-stant's pause, "how you can possibly be sure of such a thing?"

How can I be sure of it?" she repeated, with the same ringing tone of faintly-veiled scorn. "Because, Mr Talford, I know you; because throughout our whole acquaintance you have been revealing yourself to me-you have been revealing your absolute want of faith in all that elevates human nature and makes love possible. You have been declaring, even with a sort of pride, that you have no belief in honor, or nobleness, or virtue. Neither heroism nor holiness exists for you-neither the soul of man nor the majesty of God. You hold yourself to be simply an animal, and you hold all men and women to be like you. Am I not right, then, in saying that it is impossible love should exist for you? For love means all that you deride—it means honor, and faith, and respect and a share in the immortality of the soul in which it is born. These things Well, so is are empty names to you? your love to me. She had not known how far th force of suddenly-aroused feeling point, and, with the last words, paused -her eyes glowing, and her whole face full of eloquent expression. If Mr. Talford had not been a man who kept himself well in hand and was not easily thrown off his guard by sudden surprise, this most unexpected arraignment would certainly have moment of absolute astonishment he answered with sufficient quietness:

"If I understand rightly, you mean to assert that you do not believe in my certain fancies that have captivated your imagination. But does it not strike you that the one fact has no connection with the other fact? If I have no faith, for example, in the existence of the soul-which no man has ever been able to prove-what has that to do with the positive fact that I love you, whom I see and know? Let us put such questions aside. They are only of importance to fanatics, and I am sure that you are not one of "I am certainly not a fanatic," she answered, "but one need not be a fan atic to perceive that to deny the exist ence of the soul is to deprive love of al its dignity. I know," she went on, "that many men are inconsistent enough to combine with such denial a belief in the spiritual side of our nature. But you. Mr. Talford, do not. You glory in your materialism, and in our own mind you have dragged all creation down to the level on which you live-that dreary level of univer sal scepticism which refuses to acknowledge the existence of anything noble or elevated. Do you compre-hend, then, what I mean when I say that the word love on your lips has n meaning to me, or else a meaning which I disdain?" "I fear that I do not comprehend,

The scorn came again into her eves as she looked at him, and into her voice when she spoke.

"I have been very far from imagining but in what I did it." he answered; imagine I find that I have made even a greater mistake. I thought you a oman of the world, whereas it seems that you are-'

"A visionary?" she said, as he stopped. "Yes to you no doubt I am " I have always been aware of the visionary element in your character, he went on, "but I thought your practical sense was strong enough to keep it under control. And I still keep it under control. think it would do so but for associations which have unfortunately surrounded you of late. Those associations have saved me from much," she said-"from hopeless dreams or despairing scepticism but they have not saved me from accepting you, Mr. Talford, for that I could never have done. You may believe this; and I should be glad if you would believe also that I am sorry to cause you even a transient disappointment. She rose as she spoke, with an air of ending the interview, and he rose also; but he did not go. Despite her last words he could not believe that he had indeed offered himself in vain. And it was human nature-or at least should have roused him to keener interest than he had thought possible before. So, standing face to face with

"It is not a transient disappointment which you inflict. Whatever else you refuse to credit, believe that. And if you would give me leave to little faith. I think I might convince you that it is worth as much as the love of any dreamer might be '

His evident earnestness touched her a little. She had not given him credit for any genuine feeling; but it seemed that it was genuine feeling which spoke now in his tone and glance.

"If it is not a transient disappointment I am sorry," she said : "but you must carry away no mistaken impression. I can never think of marrying But it may console you to know that, if I were capable of such a thing, I should no more please you than you could satisfy me. You have been at tracted by me because you think that would make a brilliant woman of the world and be a credit to your taste. You have judged me, as you judge all things else, on the surface; and con-sequently your judgment is mistaken. Unless I killed the better half of my nature I could never make what you desire-and indeed, it is doubtful if I could make it then. I might forget spiritual things, but I could never be content with material ones. I should eat out my heart with impatience and scorn if I were condemned to such a life as you would wish your wife to lead. Life to me is worth nothing if i has not some noble purpose. sounds to you like idle folly, and I only speak of it in order that you may understand how far apart our nature and our lives lie.

Her voice had lost all its accent of disdain, and was only grave and gentle voice and manner expressed a remotefine enough perception to realize She spoke to him as to one on another plane of existence altogether; and, eeling this, he also felt that farther effort was vain. His suit was hopeless there only remained for him to escape with what dignity he might. "If this be your final decision I can only bow to it," he said. "It is useless to speak of my regret—regret for you as well as for myself, since I am quite sure that you will obtain nothing of value from the visionaries to whom you have surrendered yourself. their only remains for me to bid you

He bowed with all his usual com posure, and left the room without giving Sibyl time to utter a word had she been inclined to do so. But she only stood quite still where he left her until the sound of the outer door closing told her that he was gone.

May go to Oxford

The Congregation of Propaganda has unanimously agreed to withdraw the prohibition which this same Congregation had formerly put upon the going of Catholics to the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, England. This was done at the solicitation of Cardinal Vaughan and the leading English laity. It was the Bishop of Salford, now Cardinal Vaughan, acting by the counsel of Cardinal Manning, that had this prohibition put on such young Catholics. But times have changed since then; and the Protestantism of the English universities is not now by any means so dangerous as it was before. Besides, special precau-tions will be taken now to keep young Catholic students together, and to form them, by-and-by, into a college affiliated five hundred distinguished Catholics in England, sent to the Pope, has, in

It's our Confederate Decoration Day, and I have all the arrangements to make. but think so."
"No, no, there is no one but you, Father; good-by, if you must go," said the colonel, and the priest shook down the broad gallery steps toward the lawn.

He was a magnificent specimen of youth and health, very tall with the figure of an athlete. His eyes were very dark and almost piercing, and there was about him something which reminded one of an eagle, poised for flight; but it was an imprisoned eagle, for, though his eyes could flash with anger at injustice or sin, it was a controlled wrath, and in his manner there was always a peculiar gentleness He was doing a great work in the

was a small Southern town, with only handful of Catholics in it, and the surrounding country was full of negroes and "po' white trash." They all loved Father Desmond passionately, and his friend, the old priest, said to him at times :-You have a special talent for this mission work, my son. You always collect a crowd of negroes in five minutes with your singing. "Instantaneous choir-master. Negro choirs made while you wait," said

Father Desmond, laughing.

As he walked down the broad road leading to Clairefontaine, the deep shadows of the soft May twilight lay in long lines upon the grass.

Fireflies flitted here and there, and in the far distance was heard the croaking note of a frog. Overhead. in the dreamy mistiness of the sky, a few stars flickered, and the moon, a slender bow, rose slowly over the cypress trees. Long festoons of gray moss hung from the branches, and a gentle breeze waved the tendrils like ghostly fingers.

Father Desmond walked slowly onward. His was a busy, hurried life, full of petty, almost sordid details, and a little solitude was to him a pleasant variety. The old cemetery favorite spot with him, and thither he turned his steps. He seated himself upon the stone wall, overgrown with moss and vines, and sat thoughtfully ooking at the city of the dead.

It was a rambling place, with no neatly bordered paths or well trimmed trees; but the gracious nature of the South had treated it with loving care, and shed abroad in God's acre a wealth of flowers which cast fragrance on the summer air.

Father Desmond sat lost in thought. His was a strange nature, with a depth of emotion which few under stood, since a natural reticence made him hide his real self : but those who really knew him, felt that his heart was filled with a burning love of souls, and an endless longing to help the sorrowful and influence for good those about him. As he was thinking of his work and wishing for more power among the people where his lot was cast, a stifled sound met his ear, and quickly look-ing through the gloom, he saw the figure of a woman, kneeling by a grave, and weeping bitterly. In a moment she rose, and kissing the cross at the head of the grave, moved swiftly toward the priest. As she passed, seized by a pitiful impulse, he spoke:

'Can I help you, Madam?"

"No one can help me, thank you," she answered almost mechanically, as she glanced at him with a face in which despair was written, and passed out of sight. She was a woman of about forty years of age, with black hair heavily streaked with gray. Even in the uncertain light, her face was beautiful although lined with sorrow. A great trial always leaves indelible traces, and whether suffering has sweetened or embittered a nature shows plainly in the face. Father Desmond sighed heavily and turned to leave the cemetery, when a little shadow sprang toward him, and a voice said :-"Please, Sah! de baby am dyin' an' mammy says won't you please come an' 'tise it?"

"Yes, my boy," he replied, and turning his steps toward the negro-quarter, he disappeared into the gathering darkness.

30th of May, and a motley crowd was gathered around the hall, for the Confederate Decoration Day is the great event of the year in Clairefontaine. From far and near the people throng the town, for this, more than Christmas or any other holiday, is the day for family reunions. The quick blood of the South warms the hearts, and the feeling of kinship is strong within them. The loyalty Northerners feel for a principle, Southerners pay to their own people, and this is shown their own people, and this is shown not only by love for the living but fealty to the dead. Early in the morning the old soldiers, many of them in their torn and stained butter-nut suits, filed out to the cemetery, fired a salute, filed out to the cemetery, fired a salute, decorated the graves, and marched solemnly back again, leaving their dead comrades resting peacefully under the shadows of the great trees which had watched above them for many years.

In the afternoon was the celebration in the town hall, and here gathered men, women and children, for the spirit of the South has descended upon her children, and the young people are s patriotic as their ancestors.

The programme for the exercises consisted of speeches, recitations and music, and there was a breathless silence in the crowded hall when Father Desmond rose to sing. Over his head hung the Old Confederate flag, torn and blood stained, its glory dimmed. With an upward glance at the tattered emblem, the young priest sang, and his glorious voice rang out in the words of Father Ryan's "Conquered Furl that banner, for 'tis weary, Round its staff, 'tis droping dreary; Furl it, fold it, it is best."

The nearer we approach the divine love, so much the more readily can we comprehend the human, and as he sang, Father Desmond seemed almost lifted out of himself. Sympathy is more a matter of imagination than of experience, and his kindly nature went out to these warm hearted, loyal people, and he felt as if their feelings were his own.

As he neared the close of the song, his eyes fell upon a figure at the foot of the platform, and he saw again the face of the woman he had seen in the graveyard. Her expression was one of such hopeless suffering that his eyes filled with tears, and the longing to help her rose strong within him Then the last words of the poem fell from his lips, -"Furl that banner, softly, slowly, Trant it gantly—it is holy— For it drops above the dead. Touch it not, unfold it never, Let it droop there, furled forever, For its people's hopes are dead!"

and from the great crowd came a shout loud and long. Men wept, women waved their handkerchiefs, and all cried, "Sing it again! Again!" Father Desmond, flushed and elated -for who does not feel happy at touching the hearts of men-bowed to them ing the hearts of their solution in his dignified and gentle way, and said: "No, my friends. > "There is, my child," he said, gently. Young though he was, the fatherly words seemed fitting from the calm heights of peace where his soul rested, and his tones fell like a benediction upon her troubled spirit. "The peace of God may be yours, if you will but take it, and earthly love can never be so sweet as the divine. Rest comes at length, although the

"Oh, give it to me, Father!" she on, give it to me, factor? such cried again, a whole world of longing in her tones. "Show me this peace!" "I will," he said quietly, but earnestly, and as she buried her tearstained face in her hands, the young priest's lips moved in prayer.

"I am glad, dear Father Desmond, wrote Colonel Delatte some months later, "that you have not encouraged Virginia's wish to go into a convent.
I suppose it is the first wish of a convert, but I need her very much, and is doing in Clairefontaine, especially the work you have begun, and that she is quite content. Thank you for all Three o'clock! Less space now between me and my doom. I almost wished my senses would go; the sensa-tion was terrible! I lay down and covered my face, for in a very short time it would reach me even on the floor and crush me to death. In a 1 agony I prayed to God to deliver me from so appalling a fate. A smothering feeling came over me, and almost unconscious from the agony of suspense, I closed my eyes and awaited the end. But it did not come. And after waiting I opened my eyes and saw, not only that it had stopped its descent but that it was actually moving upwards. Then a whizzing sound as of some winding or hauling of chains reached me. I strained my ears to listen, and-yesfar and high above I could catch the sound of a human voice. Higher and higher rose the roof until it was further above me than when I had first beheld it! Hope revived and I gathered up my strength and shouted as loudly as I

My voice was drowned by the whizz, More light soon streamed in, and as the sound I have mentioned died away could distinctly hear men speaking, though I could not distinguish what Then I shouted again and they said. again, and after some time I felt I had attracted their attention, as I heard a shout in return, but they could neither see me, nor I them. The voices ceased, and sick and faint with suspense I sank on the ground, yet with a tremor of hope in my breast.

After what seemed hours I caught the welcome sound of foot steps outside my prison. Seizing my stick I struck some blows upon the door; in a minute or two it was pushed open and two men appeared. My strength had utterly given way now the strain was over, and I was unable to stand. The men supported me to a seat and one went for a restorative. After this had been administered I revived some what, and in reply to their questions told them what had happened. In reof my prison chamber.

The carving which had attracted me so fatally was put to hide a square pillar, and was directly under the clock-tower—a fact I had not noticed. Into this cell the great weights of the clock decended as it ran down, so that I had indeed run a fearful risk. The men further explained their appearance at the cathedral at such an early hour in the following manner:

The night before the clock was to have been wound up by them, but they had been on an excursion and had not returned in time to perform this duty, Knowing, however, that the whole town depended on the cathedral clock, and that it was as much as their place was worth to let it stop, they rose early, and, procuring the keys from the sexton, a friend of theirs, had come at dawn to supply the omission just before the weights quite ran down They had heard my shouts and guessed my whereabouts, but how I could be there they could not imagine, as they kept the key and it was a spring lock. Some repairs had been made inside the week before, and they could only conjecture that the workmen had not quite closed the door. However it was, I gave hearty thanks to God and to them for my delivery from so horrible a death, and as I emerged, still supported by one of my preservers, into the bright sunshine, I felt how blessed a thing life was, and resolved by God's help to make a better use than heretofore of the precious gift I had been so nearly losing.

My companion accompanied me back to my hotel and knocked up the landlord, who expressed great pleasure at my reappearance, and said he had not known what to do and had decided to world before you, with a capacity to realize every ambition. CATHOLIC thy ways!"

Many years have passed since that eventful night, yet I can never recall it without a shudder, or without again renewing my heartfelt gratitude to the God "who heard me when I called upon Him in my trouble."

THE MONTH OF MAY.

Many of the picturesque allegories of early Anglo-Saxon literature are cast in the form of poets' dreams on a May morning. May is associated from all time with the awakening of the earth from its winter trance to the new life of spring, rich with the glorious promise of summer. And as anticipa-tion surpasses more often reality, so is the springtime more beautiful by reason of its promise than the season of fulfilment.

Do Catholics remember how this most beautiful month is set apart and consecrated to our Blessed Lady, the Mother of God? In the days of childhood the month of May was one of the flowers and hymns. There were altars to our Lady to be decorated with you have no idea how much good she lilies and hyacinths and the early flowers of spring; there were hymns to be sung to her, that came more directly among the negroes. She wants me to sung to her, that came more directly tell you that she is trying to carry on from the heart perhaps than at other times of the year : there were promises to be made, and graces to be asked:—it was a time when we were nearer to the Mother of God than at other times. This is a memory in the heart of every man who ever had a Cath-olic mother, no matter how forgetful and indifferent he may have become in the years of manhood and the struggle of life. Is it to be only a Even if it is, it is a grace, and one that comes from God by special intercession of His Mother, for memory? she never forgets one who once knelt at her feet and called her "Mother" from his heart. But surely we can make something more than a memory from it? There are thousands of special devotions to Our Lady approved by the Church, from the simple Ave Maria to the Little Office. Everyone has time for an Ave Maria additional to the daily prayer. It is enough if it comes from the heart. But there are other ways of honoring Our Lady this May; there are ways that take up no man's time and interfere with nothing necessary. Let some one be the happier for a kind word every day in honor of Our Lady. Let each day of the month be signalized by some sin refrained from, some occasion of sin shunned. It matters not how trifling the sin or how small the occasion, if it be done in honor of our Lady. She is content with easy service from the children.

Everyone can do this at least. It is a pity if any Catholic does not mark this most beautiful month in some way or another, as our Lady's Month.

THE MAY DEVOTION.

Once more begins the beautiful be votion of the month of May during which time the faithful are called to honor our Blessed Lady in a particular manner. And what time of the year could be more fitting for such tender devotion than the gentle May days when the earth is newly clothed in a coat of green and the flowers, no longer shy, have ventured out to give forth turn they cleared up for me the mystery and all the gifts of spring, from their of my prison chamber. lied from the fiercer heat and ruder winds of later summer? Ought not our hearts to be awakened by this loving call to pay due tribute to the Mother of God and to gratefully acknowledge the many benefits we have received with her aid?

This sweet month is dedicated to Mary the Immortal Queen of Heaven. We would honor her with nature's loveliest season who is our tainted nature's solitary boast, the purest, the loveliest, the most exalted of God's creatures, bound to Him by the closest of ties, that of dear mother. perfume and the flowers of spring incline and bedeck her altar, in the month of May, and Mary's children, month of May, and Mary's children, day after day, vie with each other to honor by prayer, and song and high anthem of praises the ever Blessed One whom God Himself has invested with the royal vesture of the divine materand honored with an honor in His kingdom second only to His own. She stands before Him 'clothed with the sun" - and starcrowned: heaven's highest honors and most resplendent glory wait upon her. Her power of intercession is cor-respondingly great. To be the spiritual subject of her intercessory prayer, love and protection is to insure salvation, begun of human efforts, amid the temptations and trials of mortal life. Every Catholic is expected to honor Mary in the month of May, to renew his fealty to her and to strengthen his spirit of devotion towards the Mother of God. He thus lays down a condition her company in heaven.

night. My dear mother and sisters THE DOGMAS OF CHRISTIANITY VS. THE DOGMAS OF SCIENCE.

Doubt and scepticism in religion seem to be the order of the day. In fact, one would suppose that even many who profess and call themselves Christians, claim it as a privilege to doubt. They are opposed to certainty -to dogma-in religion. Dogma to them is a sign of servitude-slavery of the intellect. They have no objection to dogma in science. In fact, some of those who are most opposed to dogma in religion are most positive and dogmatical in their assertion of the favorite postulates of science. Yet, experience proves that many of those postulates are mere assumptions with-out adequate proof. If you dare to deny them you are ridiculed as opposed to the teachings of science.

But in religion they claim the privilege of doubting dogmas which have been recognized and believed by en-lightened Christendom for nineteen hundred years. They ridicule those dogmas as unscientific, as grounded in superstition and unworthy the crednce of reasonable beings.
Yet, theology is the queen of sciences and has engaged the attention and profound investigation of the greatest minds that have ever live. The Christian system as embodied in the authorized teaching of the Catholic Church is the most logical system in the world. In the whole range of intellectual progress and development there is nothing equal to it. The reason why our unco-scientific men and even some of our speculative liberal Christians are so opposed to Catholic dogma is that they do not understand the Catholic system. It is a grand system, unique, harmonious, thoroughly logical and founded in the highest reason. It has satisfied the greatest minds, the most profound thinkers in all ages and it continues to attract and fascinate the most intelligent and profound thinkers of modern times. It is a wonder ful system. The more it is studied in its completeness, its harmonious development, the more wonderful and eautiful does it appear.

But the minds of our unbelieving, scientific friends are so occupied with mere material investigations that they have no time, and, in fact, if the truth must be told, no inclination, to occupy themselves with the profound and vastly more important questions which relate to our spiritual well-being. Yet those questions press upon the minds of thinking people for a solution. What are we here for? How did we originate? What is to be our future destiny? These are questions which physical science can never answer. We can scarcely conceive of a more unhappy condition than that of the agnostic who is in doubt in regard to

This is, indeed a sad and weary world to the man without faith. All is dark and dreary. He knows not what lies before him. He has longings and aspirations which this world can never satisfy even in the most prosperous condition, while the mysteries of Prov idence which surround us and press upon us for solution are enough to puzzle the acutest intellect and fill the stoutest heart with misery and despair. We do not overlook the fact, now, that a certain class of intellectual men

men sometimes even of high culture and of excellent characters do form beautiful and attractive theories of natural virtue and cesthetic, or as they style it, ethical culture—for which they are really more indebted to Christianity than they are willing to allow—and recommend them as a substitute for Christianity. They, too, claim to be scientific and it is surprising how confident they are in putting forth their dogmas. While affecting to despise and ridicule the dogmas of Christianity they ask you to accept theirs as undoubted deductions of reason and entitled to implicit belief.

Time Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. will take all precautions to safeguard Ms. entrusted all precautions to safeguard Ms. entrus -men sometimes even of high culture theirs as undoubted deductions of reason and entitled to implicit belief. And the curious thing about it is that they find followers who take them at their word and follow them with the most implicit confidence. It is curious because while they are willing to take this single individual, who is at but a fallible mortal, for an infallible guide they refuse to accept the tradi tional teaching of the Church which is not an expression of individual opin-ion but is the combined and condensed wisdom of the ages. Even leaving out of view the claim to infallibility it would seem that this traditional teaching-this development of the though of the past, this expression of the accumulated wisdom of the ages would be vastly more worthy of belief than the reasoning and speculations of individual, pretended sages and selfconstituted prophets however wise and plausible they may appear.

Agnosticism is doubt, uncertainty, scepticism. It is cold and heartless speculation. It will not do for the masses. It may for a time please and interest the intellectual and cultivated man proud of his attainments, and anxious for notoriety; but the masses must have faith, and they must have good ground for faith. must present a rational explanation of the object of their existence and their of predestination to the enjoyment of her company in heaven.

future destiny. It must have a supernatural element, for human nature believes in and craves the supernatural. It must unite us to God our Creator. our Benefactor and our Redeemer, and it must hold out a sure hope of a happy eternity hereafter as a reward for virtue, for suffering and trial patiently endured in this world. This can only be found in the Gospel of Jesus Christ as embodied in the teachings of the Catholic Church. - N. Y. Catholic Re-

Ont., on or before the first day of July, 1895, and should be marked "For Literary Competition."

Decision will be made as follows:—
All stories submitted will be reterred to a competent committee who will decide which are the best five stories. These stories will then be published in pamphlet form, which pamphlets will be distributed throughout the Dominion, and each will contain a voting paper upon which readers will be invited to express their preference. The story obtaining the highest number of votes will be awarded the first prize. The one obtaining the second highest number will be awarded second prize, and so on until the five prizes are awarded.

The voting will close on the first day of December, 1895, and the committee will then publish the names of the successful competitors and the order of merit.

Unsuccessful manuscripts will be returned when stamps are sent for postage.

The five stories selected are to become the absolute property of the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., with their copyright in perpetuity. The decision of the committee and the counting of votes to be absolute and final, and all persons entering the competition agree, by doing so, to accept the decisions of the committee and the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. as final on all points whatsoever.

Correspondence in regard to unsuccessful MSS, declined, even when stamped envelopes are sent: any stamps so sent (for any other purpose than the return of the MS. at the time of first sending) will be put in the poor box.

The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. will take all persons to setson of the source.

London, Saturday, May 18, 1895. INGERSOLL AND HIS PRIN CIPLES.

Bob Ingersoll recently lectured in Detroit on his usual theme. The lecture was directed against the truth of the Bible, the inspired exponent of Christian truth. A synopsis thereof was published in the Detroit Evening News and was ably refuted in the next issue by a correspondent over the signature "Naylor." It was currently reported that the defender of the truth was a Protestant minister, but the Michigan Catholic has made it known that the viudicator of truth in this instance was one of the priests of Detroit.

The real refutation of Col. Ingersoll's blasphemies has been from the beginning the work of Catholic priests. It is true that several Protestant ministers have written replies to the Infidel, but not one of these has been satisfactory to any degree. The truth is that Protestantism is too vague in its estimate of inspiration to afford any sure ground on which to base a reply to the attacks of infidelity upon religion, and so the task of replying to Ingersoll and other blasphemers of his ilk must fall upon Catholic priests well acquainted with the nature of the work to be done, or the Infidels will remain unanswered. The Catholic Church is the only bulwark against Infidelity.

The Colonel is well aware of this. and in his Detroit lecture he practically requested priests to pay no attention to his vagaries. He said :

"I ask ministers, not priests, how they can be wicked enough to defend the book which has made the world a practical slaughter house."

Naylor answers this very caustically: "You exclude 'priests,' perhaps because you remember the logical skinning you received from priest Lambert. Dost remember how you dared not meet him before the Nineteenth Century Club? The practical slaughter house evidently didn't catch all the calves. One at least has es caped, for he does not know that the Bible records that God's people put an end to the human sacrifices which in groves and mountain fastnesses were daily offered in thousands to Satan by infidels - enemies of Jeho-

Ingersoll has not been able to answer Father Lambert's scathing reply to his carefully composed attacks on the Christian religion which appeared in the North American Review, nor the more full work of Father Northgraves of this dioceses, entitled "Mistakes of Modern Infidels," in which every argument of the godless author of "Mistakes of Moses" has been answered squarely without any beating about the bush.

The quondam bellicose colonel has been remarkably silent for some years, and we had entertained hopes that he was reconsidering his position; but within the past year he has resumed the labors he laid out for himself years ago, to overthrow Christianity, and to substitute for it Islamism Buddhism. or Confucianism.

We have not far to seek to find the motives which induce the godless colonel to follow the course he has taken. Five hundred dollars for a lecture pay him well; but do the public receive benefit from him to that amount?

He claims in his "Mistakes of Moses" that he is a destroyer of weeds rect, even "in round numbers."

We pointed out that there are only 1,156 whose specific religion is not given in the census.

Mennonites are asking for schools of their own.

It was cruel of Mr. Sifton thus to explode his ally's most powerful argument; but his figures are certainly nearer the truth than Mr. McCarthy's, by at least 25,000, though we are of opinion that they are still exaggerated, and our reason for this opinion is to be found in the census returns as quoted above. It is be able to give a pretty accurate estimate on the subject, wished to let Mr. McCarthy down without hurting him badly.

The case of the Mennonites is quite different from that of the Catholics in other respects than on account of their comparative numbers; for it was at a time when the Province was nearly equally divided between Catholics and Protestants that provision was made as a condition of its entry into the Domin ion, that the system of Separate schools should be a fundamental institution; and for this purpose the Protestants certainly regarded themselves as one body, not desiring among themselves any further distinction than that they ould be classed as Protestant educational purposes. The Catholics, therefore, had Separate schools guar anteed to them in the basis of union, but the Mennonites, who were strangers from a foreign country, had no such guarantee. Making their homes in Canada, it was to be supposed that they should accept the situation existing in the country on their arrival into it; but the Catholics are children of the soil, entitled to all the privileges of British subjects, and especially to those which were made a constitutional basis for their entering into the Canadian Confederation. It is proper also to remark here that Mr. Sifton announced to the people of Toronto that the real Bill of Rights, which was the basis on which Manitoba entered Confederation, did not contain any clause guaranteeing the permanency of Separate schools. He asserted that this clause was an interpolationa forgery in fact - by the late vener-

It is only because the minority has proved probable that Mr. Sifton, who ought to to be Catholic that the Manitoba Government is bold enough to set aside those rights; but it is evident that it

Some may wonder why we do not leave such topics to the pulpit, where they could be treated more convincingly and earnestly. But a Catholic paper is but the echo of a Catholic pulpit, and we make no apology.

Our young and old men gamble; and if there are any who doubt this statement they may enquire at the Customs houses and discover from the number of packs of cards that find their way weekly into Canada that it is an indis putable fact. There are many who spend their Sundays in the fascinating work of card-shuffling. You will see them in hotels, in club-rooms, etc., anxious and careworn, bending every energy to the task of endeavoring to make a little money. Gold is their god, and gambling is the short way to his temple. And who can estimate the irreparable damage done to characated Archbishop of St. Boniface and ter by such uncanny recreation! This is no palliative, and better far there should be no clubs, no societies, than that our young men should be ruined.

THE PROSPECT FOR HOME

The question whether the Liberal party of England will shelve the question of Home Rule for Ireland is being constantly discussed by the Tory papers, and the opinion is freely expressed by them that Irish Home Rule is a dead issue. In this conclusion Mr. Smalley also concurs; but there is no is the duty of the Government and doubt that in every case the wish is father to the thought.

The fight against Home Rule has been carried on with great bitterness, and Mr. Arthur Balfour persists in asserting that the advocates of Home Rule are aiming at the dismemberment of the Empire. This is a cunning presentation of the case, as the people of Great Britain, and especially of England, are jealous of any movement which might result in the weakening them to be a delusion and a snare. tachment to the Empire of the Liberal in consequence of the partial recognipoliticians, who have pledged themselves without reserve to the granting of Home Rule.

> No one can doubt the sincerity of Mr. Gladstone, Lord Rosebery, Mr. Morley, and Sir William Harcourt, in their professions of attachment to the Empire, and their desire to see its prestige remain undiminished. Yet these all have assured us over and over again that. instead of weakening the power of the Empire, a Home Rule measure satisfactory to the people of Ireland will consolidate its strength, by making a contented people, who will feel that their interests are irrevocably bound up with those of the people generally. The strength of a State is necessarily dependent on the good-will and loyalty of the people, all of which cannot be assured if they feel that they are governed, not for the purpose of making them prosperous, but for that of enriching a few landlords at the expense of their hard toil. Home Rule is the only means of securing that Ireland will be properly governed; for experience has shown that Ireland's grievances cannot command, in the House of Parliament at Westminster, that attention which is necessary that the measures needed for the prosperity of the country may be passed. The great Liberal party has become thoroughly convinced of all selves most solemnly to pass a good

The unfortunate division of the Irish Nationalist party into two camps this breach, though there is still a considerable amount of bitterness existing between the two Nationalist parties. The bulk of the Irish people, however, are determined on carrying out the true Irish policy. They are not tied to factions, and they will rally around the National party more and more resolutely till it become once more a unit.

That the Liberals have not abandoned Home Rule has been made evident by very recent pronouncements of Lord Rosebery, Lord Spencer, Sir William Harcourt, Mr. Morley, Mr. Shaw Lefevre and others. Mr. Morley said, only a few weeks ago, that the Liberals are still determined to give a Home Rue measure " which shall not fall short of Mr. Gladstone's bill of 1893."

In the meantime the people of Ireland are more content than ever to wait peacefully till the natural course of events shall bring about the final result on which they have set their hearts. Legislation has been secured which has greatly ameliorated their condition, though it has not assured to them all they desire. This will only be when Home Rule will be established, but they have the firm conviction that this will certainly come.

A recent letter from Mr. William O'Brien to the Chicago New World expresses this conviction, or at least that even if the next general election should result in a not very decisive victory for the Tories, the victory will be ultimately with] the Liberals, and Home Rule will become the law of the land. "The extent of the defeat or victory of Home Rule will depend," he says, "upon the suppression of personal revolts in the ranks of the Liberals, and the gradual approximation of all sections of Nationalists toward the common platform contemplated by the Archbishop of Dublin."

The Ulster Unionists are, on the other hand, making every effort to carry on the war against the Nationalist proposition. The various Unionist Leagues have issued a joint appeal to the public to contribute £10,000 to enable them to fight against Home Rule, and to propagate their principles in preparation for the coming election.

On the occasion of their last similar appeal, not a tithe of the money they demanded was forthcoming; and it can scarcely be expected that the present begging circular will be a whit more successful. The Irish landlord party know by this time that their star is no longer in the ascendant, and they have grown discouraged at the prospect, and hampered as they are by the diminished incomes they are receiving of tenants' rights which has already become law, they are not disposed to throw away good money as bait for fishes that will not bite.

There has been recently some dissatisfaction in the ranks of the Tories, owing to the want of success which has followed the union of their party with the dissentient Liberals, or Liberal-Unionists, under lead of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain. They feel that the alliance has not given that strength to their cause which they hoped in the beginning to derive from it, and they are freely expressing their dissatisfac-

Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour have both spoken lately on this subject, the tenor of their remarks being the same. Lord Salisbury's desire is expressed as follows:

"The mass of the Conservative voters, and certainly the leaders of the party, are desirous that the alliance etween the Conservative and Liberal Unionist parties shall be confirmed and strengthened. Mr. Balfour said :

"The Unionist Alliance aims at the greatness of the Empire alone, has the ight to subscribe itself the Imperial party to promote social reform, maintain industrial liberty, and to resist socialistic schemes.

That it should be now deemed necessary to argue thus in favor of continuing the Alliance, indicates that feeling must be very strong among the Conservatives toward breaking it up; and Home Rule measure. The question, it may be broken up at any moment, in

A reunion of Irish Nationalists would be sufficient to turn the scale in favor of the Liberals, and we may still hope that such a union will be effected before the general election.

A ONE SIDED EQUAL RIGHTER.

Mr. Robert Sellar, the editor and proprietor of the Huntingdon Gleaner, in the issue of that paper of May 2, addresses an open letter to Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Premier of the Dominion, in reference to the Manitoba school question. The Protestants of the Province of Quebec, for the most part, are imbued with the spirit of good-will toward their Catholic neighbors. The Hon. Mr. Joly de Lotbiniere, Mr. Pope, and other prominent Protestants, have frequently told the public that the Catholic people of Quebec are anxious to live in friendship and peace with their Protestant neighbors, and that they are tolerant and friendly toward them. This is manifested in an especial manner by the system of Protestant Separate schools which has been willingly granted by the Catholic majority, giving Protestants full control over their own system of education.

This system of Protestant schools was not forced on Quebec by any Protestant majority from other Provinces, but was granted solely by the Catholic Legislature of Quebec, and the Protestants generally appreciate this proof of Catholic toleration, and endeavor to reciprocate it by being tolerant themselves.

This is not the case, however, with Mr. Sellar, who has been always ready, through the columns of the Gleaner, to take a prominent part in every anti-Catholic agitation which has originated among the fanatical factions of Ontario. On the Manitoba question, as might be expected, Mr. Sellar pronounces himself opposed to the granting of justice to the Catholic minority -though he is most decided in favor of the continuance of the Protestant schools of Quebec.

He argues that "There is only one ground upon which the interference of the State with education can be justified, and that is for the protection of society. Were it not for that, the State would have no more right to provide schools for the youth of the country, than it would to arrange for_ giving them food and clothing.'

This is his reasoning when he maintains that the Protestants of Quebec have the right to their own schools. But when the question is to deal with the Catholic minority of Manitoba, his wish is that they should be treated as a conquered race, and his reason is: 'Quebec is British, not foreign soil: it is under British law and custom,

This is language similar to that which has been used by Mr. Dalton Mc-Carthy before now, but these gentlemen must learn, what they do not seem to know, that the rights of citizens of Canada are equal, no matter to which race they may belong. Even though the Quebec majority are of French origin, they are full British subjects, and the fact that their ancestors of many generations ago were natives of France, and subjects of France, the present generation are British subjects, not only by treaty, but also by birth, and their title to this position has been sealed by their loyalty to the British flag in times when they shed their blood in fighting to maintain Canada as a British dependency.

Mr. Sellar thinks that the Catholic minerity in Manitoba must educate their children according to the views of the Protestant majority, while the Protestant minority in Quebec must continue to have all the rights they enjoy at present. He is very much mistaken if he really imagines that Canada is to be governed on any such one-sided principles. The Catholics of Canada are not here on toleration, but by a right which dates further back than do the rights of Protestants; for they were the first settlers of the country.

Mr. Sellar complains that where Protestants in Quebec are not numerous they are obliged to attend Catholic schools. It is true that the Catholics are taught their religion in the schools of Quebec; but in these cases, the law provides every safeguard that no child education to which its parents object.

would be strengthened: however, the ous error into which Mr. Sellar falls. authenticity by the Canadian Supreme cash box. And so it runs on, and his will win, and that the question of thing like a dissension turn up in the over-ridden on the question of education. This is not the way Great Bri tain deals with its people. The British people are allowed to give a religious education to their children, and those who do so are not compelled to pay for the education of for those of other people. This is the justice we demand for the Catholics of Manitoba-the same justice which the Catholic people of Quebec willingly concede to the Protestant minority in that Province.

THE REV. D. S. PHELAN AND THE CHRISTIAN ENDEA-VORERS.

The astounding charges of immoral. ity brought by the Rev. D. S. Phelan, editor of the St. Louis Western Watch man, against the young men and women of the Epworth League and the Christian Endeavorers, have excited much indignation among the Protestant press; and it is gratifying to observe that the Catholic papers of the United States, as well as the Archbishop of St. Louis, are equally decided in condemnation of the sweeping charges made. Father Phelan has been very properly condemned for his violent language. We oppose Protestantism as a system, because it substitutes a man-made organization for the divinely instituted Church of Christ, and sets the private opinions of individuals to pass judgment upon the laws and teachings of Almighty God. But this is no reason why we should represent all Protestant organizations as hot-beds of iniquity.

We are quite of opinion that the Christian Endeavorers and the members of the Epworth Leaque are honest in their convictions that their efforts to bring Christians of every denomination to practice the duties prescribed by their various methods of discipline, will be productive of great good. We believe that these methods will fail, because they are on a purely human basis, and can never fill the place for which Christ instituted the sacraments, and the great Sacrifice of the Mass. But even a morality founded on natural motives, and appealing to natural sentiment, is better than no morality at all. We therefore approve of the efforts of the members of these organizations and of the Salvation Army to become better Christians, and to induce others to become better, even though the methods they adopt fall far short of what should be done by practical Christians. Yet it is not fair to represent the participators in these methods as the bond men and women of every

The Christian Endeavorers have, since Father Phelan's attack upon them, petitioned Monsignor Satolli to suspend Father Phelan. Though we disapprove of the language which he has used in reference to the Endeavorers, we believe they have overstepped the bounds of discretion in making such an appeal to the Pope's representative on this continent.

The Church has its laws and discipine, and Mgr. Satolli may be relied on to follow those laws in his dealing with the case. It cannot be expected that he will accept the dictation of a society which does not recognize his authority, but which, on the contrary, constantly repudiates and endeavors

The ecclesiastical authorities are the judges of what reparation should be made for Father Phelan's unwarranted attack upon the harmless societies against which he has launched his wholesale denunciations. These associations have no such wicked objects in view as the A. P. A. and P. P. A., and though we do not believe that their general conventions which bring thousands of young men and women together, sometimes in one city, and sometimes in another, will bring about any moral reform, we cannot approve of any general attack upon the morality of these young people, who are endeavoring to do good, even though the methods they adopt are ineffectual in accomplishing the purpose they have in view.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN once said: "You can fool all the people sometimes; you can fool some of the people all the time, but you cannot fool all the people all the time." This idea, forcibly if not elegantly expressed, should be treasured up by the politicians who are endeavoring to fan the smouldering embers of prejudice and bigotry to a white heat. It is a right so definite and well defined that Manitoba Catholics would be paltry cowards to relinquish one iota of it. To surrender now would be an indelible disgrace.

THE preachers who are busily engaged in furbishing the antique weapon of "priestly power," etc., will not meet the old-time enthusiastic welcome. The day has passed for that sort of thing. Wright was one of the leaders of Apaism in Missouri, and it was his declared intention to save American institutions from the blighting influence of Romanism. His was the task to purify the atmosphere of American political life, and the way he took to purify it was this: He sold jewelry on the "consignment plan," and the jewelry he had in his safe belonged mostly to two firms to which he was indebted in the amounts of $150 and $350, respectively. But just the day before his establishment broke up he took care to increase his indebtedness by running up a couple of bills for $100 and $19 respectively. This was on Friday, and on Saturday he wheeled his thus acquired property to the railway station in a baby carriage, and disappeared. The police are now trying to find him. It is just of such material as Wright is made of that A. P. A. and P. P. A. leaders are built. We have had specimens of them in Ontario.

THE Manitoba Legislature met, as announced, on the 9th inst., but as it appears that the Government of the Province have not as yet made up their minds how to act regarding the school question, the Legislature was again adjourned to June 13. The purpose of this second adjournment is not very clear, as the members of the Government still declare that they will not obey the remedial order. If they have made up their minds to this, it is difficult to see why they should not officially announce their decision. > MR. BALFOUR'S book on the Foundations of Belief has come in for much criticism, both favorable and adverse. It paints a moral, however, in showing how disquieted may become an individual on religious questions when bereft of the guidance that alone can give security to his intelligence.

A RECENT writer has declared that if the end of the century had a leader such as Thomas Carlyle we might be spared much sham and nonsense. Possibly, however, we might have an increase, for Carlyle was himself a monumental sham. He was not so at the beginning of his career, but he talked himself out, and toward the eventide of his life said an infinite deal about nothing.

THE A.P. A. of Stockton, California, were lately much disappointed in a lecture delivered by a member of the order, the Rev. Dr. Rashin, who was engaged to deliver a series of lectures. The reverend doctor told his audience "that Catholic priests would compare well in morality with the Protestant preachers. He had been in the ministry for thirty years, knew how it was from an inside view, and, man for man, he believed the priests might challenge comparison with the ministers. As for the Sisters, no body of women of like numbers could be found more pure, and he didn't believe a like number so brave and selfsacrificing could be found. As to toleration, if Rome were dead and Protestants had their way they would burn the free-thinkers or banish them.' The whole lecture was in similar strain, and the lodge resolved that Dr. Rashin's engagnment should be cancelled. His talk was not of the kind they wished to hear. It was not truth they wanted, but something that would nourish their hatred of Catholics. Surely Dr. Rashin will deem it his duty to come out from the Babylon of falsehood lovers.

THE Rev. A. Andrews, pastor of the Minnedosa Methodist Church, Manitoba, sees and admits the propriety of doing justice to Catholics on the school question, and he writes a long letter to the Winnipeg Free Press on the subject, pointing out that if justice be not granted, the tables may be turned on the Protestant minority of Quebec in a manner that may not please them. He savs:

"If here in the Province of Manitoba where the Catholics have had Separate schools for about eighteen years, just because we were in majority, our Government, without any man date from the electorate, swept them away with surprising haste in legisla te in Oughoo he likely hands of their Catholic fellow-citizens? We have always boasted of Protestant fair play, yet in this case, the might downs the right, and justifies itself by saying: 'There is no wrong done to anyone.' But who says there is no grievance? The majority. Are we in a position to decide for them? How deeply they feel the wrong is plain from the fact that for the past four years they have been supporting their own schools, while being at the same time called upon to pay taxes to sup port schools which very few of their people utilize. . . . It is amusing to hear gentlemen posing as the champions of fair play, talking about the Roman Catholic hierarchy of Que ec attempting to rule this province. Had they taken away any rights of ours, and we were endeavoring now to regain them, we might have taken this position. The real contention is that we Protestants have taken what the highest court of this great empire has decided was their right, according to the declaration of the constitution, and they are seeking its restoration in a legal and regular manner. But we 'Hands off, we have stand, saying, 'Hands off, we have done you no damage, and no re-lief, therefore, can be allowed, 'and with uplifted hands cry out, 'No priesthood can be allowed to check Manitoba.'"

Mr. Loyson, formerly known as Father Hyacinthe, but now a schismatic, has suddenly discovered many excellencies in Mahometanism, and he is at present advocating a religious alliance of the Gospel and the Koran in Algeria. Perhaps we may next find Mr. Loyson exhibiting himself in the dime museums as a howling dervish, in which capacity he may prove ish, in which capacity he may prove lisped in childhood at mother's knee, more of a success than as one of the and happily offered with the same depropagandists of the Old Catholic votion as a child, lifted in a sister's arms, placing a flower at Mary's feet. Church, as he failed so egregiously in this field. In his new role he says:

we shall create a military power with which the world will have to count, and by the religious alliance of the Gospel and the Koran we shall make a light shine upon souls such as they have not yet seen.

AT a public meeting held in Dublin under the presidency of the Protestant Archbishop of that city, for the purpose of promoting the establishment of an intermediate commercial school for Protestants, Lord Chief Justice Fitzgibbon paid a tribute to the efficiency of the work done by the Christian Brothers. The traducers of the teaching Catholic religious orders might learn something from His Lordship's remarks, which were to the following effect:

"This was the system that the Christian Brothers had brought such extreme perfection, because in all their schools every class was weeded out at the end of term, promotion by merittook place, and at the head of every large Christian Brothers' school there was what was called an intermediate school. The result was that last year the Brothers carried off very nearly 50 per cent. of the entire intermediate endowment, by means of boys selected for the most part from the lower classes, and promoted from school to school. These boys were turned out to compete with Protestant boys at an enormous advantage, and were, as he could say from a knowledge of government competitive ex aminations, beating them all along the line by nothing but good teaching.

MAY MEMORIES.

A Canticle of the Springtide.

All along the valley the tender light of the chaste moon and of a countless number of starry worlds was shed in softest radiance. The smile of God had rested on the green hillside, and the heavenly rains had turned the clear voices of the twin streams in a sublime canticle of spring. It was May, sweet, smiling May.

Lute and harp and viol were charm ing the early night with music in praise of the Immaculate Virgin; voices were stilled to appreciative silence as the strings, under the hands of masters, swept the sweet tones with rare freshness-almost a fragrance-

The prelude was an inspiration. The bright, sparkling tones revived many a forgotten impression—a way side shrine; a garland of wild flowers the old familiar chimes that became again a living voice with their sweet, heart-thrilling melody calling the flower of blooming childhood to the Madonna's sheltering arms; the children's hymn, full, strong, vigorous Norris, in the Rosary.

We lately took occasion to remark on the missionary spirit, and the obliga-tion of Catholics especially in reference to the heathen at our own doors-theIndian and the Negroes. But the efforts of Father Elliot, of the Paulist community in this city, remind us that there is another class-perhaps it is hardly fair to call them heathen, though in a large number of instances they are scarcely less ignorant, at least to the Catholic religion than the veriest pagans in foreign lands.

In the April number of the Catholic World Father Elliot has a stirring article entitled "Musings of a Mission ary," in which with characteristic zeal and fervor he pleads earnestly for missions to the whites.

His heart is all aglow with the love of these souls deprived of the inestimable blessings of Holy Church and he seems burdened with the weight of responsibility for their conversion and the different literary centres. M. Brunetiere has clearly given expres North-West, first in Michigan and then in Ohio, has deeply impressed him with the vast importance of the He is convinced that the people, upon the whole, are in a re-ceptive state of mind. He says the ears of our separated brethren are open to the truth.

"Let us realize," he writes, "as an actual fact that we caught a hearing. Accept our evidence, accept the evi dence of many other priests from all sections of the country; we are wit-nessess who have tried the experiment and who have succeeded. The condi-tion of things, therefore, is this: the Catholic Church in America is among a non-Catholic people who are willing to listen to Catholic truth. Stop at that fact and square your conscience with As laymen, priest or prelate, reckon with God thus: I am a member of the one true Church and I can get a hearing for its claims from non-Catholics; what should I do about it?

Father Elliot insists that : "The non Catholic people of America, good and bad and taken as body, are religious in their tendencies. They believe in God as their maker and ruler, in Jesus Christ as their teacher and Saviour, in the Scriptures as God's book. And, taken again as a body, their aversion to Catholicity is not passionate. On religious subjects of every kind, not excepting Catholic doctrine and practice, they will converse much, read some and will listen to competent lecturers. May it not be affirmed that this condition of our countrymen places us in the position of the Apostle?-Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel!" He says there is a common impression among our countrymen that if a man lives up to the requirements of the Catholic religion he will be a good man and a good citizen. This imposes upon all the obligation of making snown as far as in their power, both by precept and example, the real truths and claims of the Catholic religion.

This suggestion about adapting our services as much as possible to the comprehension and appreciation of non-Catholics strikes us as timely. especially in view of the success which has attended such services in the Paulist church. The Sunday evening services conducted by Father Elliot in that church are attended by crowds of outsiders and all are invited to join in singing the devotional hymns which are found printed on cards in all the The invitation seems to be generally accepted, as a great volume of through the spacious church, Father Elliot's stentorian and musical voice rising above, controlling and directing all.

But the zealous Father is not content with parish missionary effort, he is ambitious that an organized system of missionary operations should be established in every diocese.

"But let us hope," he writes "that a band of Bishop's missionaries may soon be introduced into every diocese, as we already have one in the diocess of Cleveland-a limited number of the diocesan clergy set apart each for a term of years, for missions to non-Catholics. Let such missions once be come part of the routine of a diocese and even routine men will rise to a missionary level.

And he is confident not only that great good will be done, but that if the work is zealously undertaken and vigorously prosecuted the whole country may be made Catholic in a much shorter time than mere routine men are apt to suppose.

Authority he says is necessary, but missionary effort does not originate by law-making. "Fruitful missionary activity originates in the voices heard in the inner chamber of men's souls. Apostolic zeal flows from the springs opened in our hearts by the touch of the Holy Spirit. When he smites the rock abundant waters flow forth, when he lifts the rod the Red Sea of obstacles is parted asunder." We think the importance of this subject will justify our recurring to it in a future article with the design of showing Father Elliot's idea of the best mode of approaching outsiders in missionary vork .- Catholic Review.

The Catholic Reaction in Europe.

That there is at present not only an absolute recoil all over Europe from the scepticism, impure literary tone, and maudlin sentiment of a few years ago but also a distinct advance towards deeper religious feeling, can be easily gathered from the mode in which the reflections of the distinguished critic Ferdinand Brunetiere on the religious aspects of life, have been received in sion to views that, in an obscure sort of way, have been leavening in every country the minds of thoughtful men not ordinarily affected by religious influences.

Dealing with the subject from a purely earthly point of view, he makes a strong plea for Christian unity, proves the transcendent superiority Catholicism to other forms of belief, and demonstrates the absolute impossibility of controlling the revolutionary forces at work in society without its aid.

The London Spectator, in a long and weighty editorial, declares that M. Brunetiere's opinions demand the serious consideration of England quite as much as of France.

But it is naturally in France that the views of the eminent academician been most discussed. they have excited the furious ran cor of a few inveterate materialists, but have aroused admiration in quarters where one would least expect them to make an impression. M. Berthelot's attempts to prove in the Rue de Paris that science is still God, and scientists are His prophets, have been met with a chorus of sarcasm in the comic journals of France's capital. M. Berthelot must have been so astounded at finding the mockers on the side of religion this time, that he will be hardly tempted to renew his assaults on M. Am Interesting Article, Written for the North American Review, by His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons.

After the Bible, the study of mankind is the most important and mos instructive pursuit for the ambassador The aim of his ministry is to enlighten and convince, to persuade and convert his fellow-being, to elevate him to a higher plane of mora

The first step toward the accomplish ment of this noble aim is to obtain a thorough knowledge of man, his springs of action, his yearnings and desires, his passions and continue sires, his passions and emotions, his vices and temptations, as also the arguments, the motives, and the means best calculated to promote his spiritual progress.

Now, the knowledge of the mysteri ous kingdom of the heart is more accurately acquired by studying the original than by seeing it described in a book. An artist makes a better portrait from a living subject than from his photograph. We view objects in the abstract in books, but in the crete in living men.

Books describe human beings as ex isting in times and countries, or under circumstances different from our own. But in studying the race that surrounds us, we contemplat man just as he is to-day.

We see him not reflected through the mind of another, but as viewed by ourselves. Human nature, it is true is everywhere radically the same, bu it receives a coloring and an impression from its environments. Man is influenced and modified in tempera ment and habits of thought by his social and domestic surroundings, and by the political institutions under

A SUITABLE SERMON.

An exhortation that would be admirably suited to a French or Spanish congregation might not be adopted to an American audience. A discours against the evils of divorce, which is so vital a subject with us, would scarcely find an application in Ireland, or the Tyrol, where divorces are almost unknown. A sermon that would be most appropriate to a fourth or fifth century congregation, might be out of place in our time and country, as the prevailing errors and vices of those times are not the prevailing errors and vices of to-day. St. John Chrysostom's arraignment of the voluptuous court of Constantinople in the beginning of the fifth century would be a libel if applied to day to the White House at Washington. His denunciations of the theatre in that city could not be justly repeated from an American pulpit

They who have long experience in the ministry, cannot fail to observe the faults into which young clergymen, whose knowledge is chiefly confined to books, and who have had, as yet, little opportunity to commune with his fel low-men, are sometimes liable to fall. They are apt to attach undue weight to matters of minor importance, and to treat lightly subjects ment; they may be strained, fanciful and unreal and talk over the heads of the people : or they may denounce in unmeasured, exaggerated terms, a social plague scarcely known by the

Some of our separated clerical brethren are not unfrequently betraved into similar errors by ascribing to their Catholic fellow-citizens religious doctrines and practices which the latter repudiate. A caricature instead of a true picture, is held up to the public gaze, because the information is drawn from books, hearsay, or tradition, and not from contact with living men.

MODERATION IN JUDGMENT.

Another advantage which we derive from the discreet study of men, is the habit of moderation in our judgment of them. We will find that few mer are altogether perfect, and few also totally depraved. Blemishes will be discovered in the most exemplary character, and traits of goodness in the most abandoned and perverse. This two-fold experience will teach us to use sobriety of speech in praising virtuous men and women, including even canonized saints, and to avoid excessive harshness in reproving sinners. For if we paint righteous men without a single fault, we tempt the objects of our eulogy to vanity, and we discourage those who are earnestly aspiring to virtue ; but if we paint the vicious as absolutely bad, we drive them to despair.

This subject is forcibly illustrated by the different methods pursued in writing the lives of men conspicuous for Christian or civic virtues. Some authors portrayed the saint, leaving out the man. They gave us the light without the shadow. There was no background to their picture. exhibited an ideal character entirely free from foibles. Many readers regard these biographies as one-sided or unreal, and take no pleasure in study-couragement from their perusal, since the model is beyond their reach.

Of late years, I am happy to say, w are treated to memoirs that aim at being true to life, that represent to us men of flesh and blood as well as of spirit, -men of strong faith, virility of soul, genuine charity, magnanimity of character, and self-denial, but not xempt from some of the imperfections incident to humanity. The merit of these biographies is that the author has either studied his subjects from life, or he represents them to us in their true light, as portrayed in their own actions and writings. The public man, whether churchman or layman, who never committed an error of judgment, or who was never betrayed into any moral delinquency, will hardly ever be credited with any great words or with deeds worthy to be transmitted to posterity. FEAR NOT THE LIGHT.

The best models of biography are the inspired penmen. They give us a faithful and accurate portrait of their most sacred subjects without any effort to hide their moral deformities or de David's sin, Peter's denial fects. Paul's persecutions of the early Church the worldly ambition of the sons of Ze bedee, the incredulity of Thomas, are fearlessly recorded without any at-tempt at extenuation or palliation. The transgressions of these men arouse our compassion without diminishing our reverence for them, and serve by contrast to lend additional lustre to the halo of their subsequent lives.

Who thinks less of Augustine and Jerome because he sees them engaged in earnest theological controversy which almost snapped asunder the bonds of charity? Who finds his venbonds of charity? Who finds his veneration and love for Basil and Gregory cooled because of the melanchol estrangement that followed a long and ender friendship? Whoever would omit these episodes on the plea of mutilation would mutilate these glori " Hath God any need of ous lives? your life," says the Prophet, ou should speak deceitfully for Him?

Neither have God's saints any need of having their faults suppressed. They are not whited sepulchres, and they fear not the light.

The alienation between Burke and Fox at the close of their career, though much to be deplored, does not diminish our admiration for those two states men. It brings out in stronger relie the inflexible character of which sacrificed friendship on the alta of truth. It shows us that upright men may sometimes differ in conclus ions without violating conscience o incurring the unfavorable judgmen

Modern biographers, while dwelling with pride on the civic and military virtues of Washington, avoid the language of hyperbole in which some o his contemporary eulogists indulged toward the Father of His Country They seemed to be so dazzled by the lustre of that great luminary before he descended below the horizon, that they could detect no shadow in the object of their adulation.

STUDY YOUR OWN HEART.

The first living book that a student should read is his own heart, which is a little world in itself, a miniature of he great heart of humanity. thyself," is a primary maxim of Chris tian, as well as of pagan, philosophy. Massillon was once asked how he could delineate so faithfully the emotions and the rebellions of the human heart, and especially the intrigues, the ambi tion and the jealousies of the Court, which he so rarely frequented. He re plied that he drew his knowledge from the study of his own heart. He will also find an open and instructive book full of object lessons in the mass of human beings that he may encounter in the daily walks of life. He can pick up useful bits of informaion from his companions during his college course, and afterwards from the persons he may meet on the street, on the farm, in the workshop, in the ounting-room, in the social circle, on the steamboat and on the railway.

Sir Walter Scott says that a man of active mind cannot talk to the boy who holds his horse without obtaining some new thought.

NOWLEDGE OBTAINED FROM PARO CHIAL VISITATIONS.

But it is especially while making his daily rounds through the parish that the clergyman obtains profitable instruction and subject matter for his sermons. He is made acquainted with their virtues and vices, and with the sources of their temptations. He observes their patience and fortitude in poverty and sickness and their Christian resignation in the presence of death. He will often contemplate, in the cottages of the lowly, domestic peace and content which compensate them for their temporal privations. I have found evidences of genuine piety and gratitude even among the inmates of our penitentiary. All this personal experience will enable the minister of God to speak in a manner intelligible and attractive to his audience, and to embellish his dis-

The more the man of God studies the inner life of the people, their hopes and fears, their joys and sorrows, the more persuasive and moving will be his exhortations. without neglecting the classes.

But, if the preacher has not the sympathy that is born of a knowledge of the people; if he cannot say with his Master, "I know mine, and mine know Me," he may enlighten without warning them. His words may be like oil poured on water; they will not mingle with their heart's blood.

INFLUENCE OVER MEN. These remarks apply to statesmen and lawyers, as well as to ministers of the Gospel. O'Connell's influence over the people of Ireland was such as no other man in his generation ever exerted on any nation. He could sway the multitude, move them to tears or laughter, playing on every chord of their heart. The secret of his empire over his countrymen was that he had sprung from the peasantry, and had lived among them. He knew their grievances and aspirations and sympathized with them in their wrongs and sufferings.

Gladstone would never have attained his acknowledged eminence as a public speaker without his vast experience in the House of Commons. It was in that great university of politics that he earned the art of a consummate

Daniel Webster was not more indebted to his book-learning for his success at the bar, than to his keen discernment of human character, and to his power to conciliate and control it. The following anecdote of him as related in my presence:

He and Rufus Choate were once pitted against each other as opposing counsel in a lawsuit concerning an alleged infringement of a patent right on locomotive wheels. The wheels were before the jury. Rufus Choate, counsel for the defendant, expended his legal acumen in a learned and labored mathematical essay, going to prove that there was an essential difference between the wheels in evi dence, and, therefore, no infringement on the patent right. Then Webster spoke for the plaintiff: "Gentlemen spoke for the plaintiff: of the jury," said he, "you have heard an elaborate scientific disquisi tion upon those wheels. I have noth ing of the kind to give you. There are the wheels. Look at them." The jury looked at them and gave him the verdict. A judge, who attended the dinner, confirmed the truth of the anecdote, remarking that he happened to be engaged in that suit as junior counsel.

The difference between these tw great lawyers was that Choate bewil jury by the the intricacies o a vocabulary beyond their comprehen-sion, while Webster gained his cause by appealing to their common sense.

Napoleon, though a poor shot, wa the greatest general of his age. He said with truth to himself: "I know man," he owed his success to his in sight into human character, which en abled him to make a judicious selection of his military officers and State offic ials.

I have heard of distinguished lawyers, when they have had an im portant case in hand, studying the habits, dispositions, and mental calibra of every member of the jury, and ad lressing to each in succession a few pertinent remarks calculated to con rince his judgment, conciliate his good will and gain his confidence.

Clergymen at the time of their ordination, are, I think, as a rule nore thoroughly grounded in sacred science than graduating lawyers are in the abstract knowledge of their pro fession, because the curriculum of the former covers a longer period of time than that of the latter. But what the jurist may lack in book-lore is com pensated by his greater readiness speech and felicity of expression. The learned men of ancient Greece and Rome did not consider their education complete till they had traveled abroad, and acquainted themselves with the habits and manners of other people and climes; and I am informed hat in our own day, a few of the leading universities of England and America have already a limited number of traveling scholarships.

Heronotus, the Father of History, derived most of the information embodied in his work from travel and converse with men. Plato after being eight years a disciple of Socrates, spent twelve years in the persuit of knowledge in foreign parts before he returned to his native Anthens. Edmund Burke says of Homer and Shakespeare: "Their practical super-iority over all other men, arose from their practical knowledge of other men" — a knowledge which Homer acquired by frequent journeys abroad and Shakespeare, by studying human nature at home.

Cicero improved his sojourn in Greece and Asia by studying oratory under the best masters in those countries.

brew scholar of his age, visited various cities of Gaul and Greece, Antioch and other places in Asia Minor, Pales tine, Constantinople, Rome, Alexan dria and other centres of learning in Egypt, where he consulted the men ost conspicous in those times for eru dition and piety. When his own fame for learning spread abroad scholar from all parts of the civilized world flocked to him as an oracle.

Sir Walter Scott's novels are re markable for their accuracy in the portraiture of Scotch character, and he scenes he describes. He obtained his information by traversing Scotland, living and conversing with the people, treasuring up their bits of local traditions, and afterward interweaving them with his historic romances. "I have read books romances. "I have read romances, anough," he says, "and conversed men in my with splendidly-educated men in my time; but, I assure you, I have heard higher sentiments expressed from the lips of poor, uneducated men and I ever met out of the pages of the Bible.

It is well known that, while Milton is read by the few, Dickens is read by the millions. He made personal visits to the prisons, insane asylums, reformatories and boarding schools of England. He frequented the haunts of poverty, suffering and wretched ness in London. His sense of indig nation is aroused against official in solence, cruelty and injustice; and his warmest sympathy is quickened in behalf of the victims of legalized oppression and tyranny. He draws his sion and tyranny. He draws his scenes from actual life, he deals with the men and women of his own time, and he gains the popular heart.

I was never more impressed with the impulse given to knowledge by contact with learned men than during the Vatican Council, when Prelates of world-wide experience and close observation were assembled in Rome. Each Bishop brought with him an intimate acquaintance with the history of his country, and with the religious. social and political condition of the people among whom he lived. One could learn more from a few hours' interview with those living encyclo pædias than from a week's study of hooks An earnest conversation with those keen-sighted Churchmen on the social and moral progress of their respective countries, yielded as much more instruction and delight as compared with a printed account, as a personal inspection of an international exposition would, in comparison with a description of it in the pages of an illustrated periodical. The living words left an indelible impress on the heart and memory.

It is scarcely necessary to say that the student who aspires to improve his knowledge by travel, should already possess maturity of years and judg ment, and should have laid the founda tion of the science which he desires to cultivate and develop. Above all, he nust be a man who has acquired the habit of close observation. You wil find two companions returning from journey made together; the mind o the one is stored with useful facts gleaned on the way, while the other has scarcely a single practical inciden to relate.

It may be objected to literary tour ists that the knowledge they gather is sometimes purchased at the expense of piety; for Kempis says: "Those who travel much abroad, are rarely sancti fied. The axiom is true, indeed, o those that make excursions solely for pleasure's sake, but not of the diligen-pilgrim who starts on his journey, benon plucking fruits of wisdom by the roadside. David gave proofs of self-denial during his warlike ex-peditions, but he sinned in his own Jerome's pilgrimages were home. blessed with an increase of sanctity and knowledge.

As the minister of Christ is pre eminently the friend and father of the them they would learn to acquire ease people, he cannot be indifferent to any and fluency of expression, and to of the social, political and economic happiness of the nation. The relations of Church and State, the duties and prerogatives of the citizen, the evils ing them. Others, accepting them as his audience, and to embellish his dispoliteness and etiquette and yet be relative privileges and obligations of true, derive little consolation or encourse by allusions to the incidents of awkward and embarrassed in company, and Indian races, female suffrage, divorce, socialism and anarchy-such are vital, and often burning, questions on which hinge the peace and security of the Commonwealth.

Politics has a moral as well as a civil aspect. The clergyman is a social as well as a religious reformer, a patriot as well as a preacher, and he knows that the permanence of our civic institutions rests on the intelli gence and virtue of the people. He has at heart the temporal as well as the spiritual prosperity of those committed to his care. They naturally look up to him as to a guide and teacher. His education, experience and sacred works give weight to his words and example.

There is scarcely a social or economic movement of reform on foot, no matter how extravagant or Utopian, that has not some element of justice to recommend it to popular favor. If the scheme is abandoned to the control of fanatics, demagogues, or extremists, it will deceive the masses and involve them in greater misery. Such living topics need discriminating judges to separate the wheat from the chaff.

And who is more fitted to handle these questions than God's ambassador, whose conservative spirit frowns upon all intemperate innovations, and whose Christian sympathies prompt him to advocate for his suffering brethren every just measure for the redress of grievances and the mitigation of needless injury?

The timely interposition of the minister of peace might have helped to check many a disastrous popular inundation by watching its course, and diverting it into a safe channel before it overspread the country.

Nor can it be affirmed that the temperate and seasonable discussion of these problems, or at least of those phases of them that present a moral or religious aspect, involves any departure from evangelical and apostolic precedent. There is hardly a subject f public interest that has not been alluded to, if not discussed, by Christ or His Apostles. I may cite a few ex amples.

Our Saviour speaks of the relations of Church and State in His memorable declaration: "Render therefore, to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's and to God the things that are God's.

When the ancients asked our Lord to confer a favor on the centurion, they appealed to His patriotism, as well as to His zeal for religion. The centurion, they said, merits Thy bounty. "for He loveth our nation: and He hath built us a synagogue.

John the Baptist gave this excellent advice to certain officers of the law who had consulted him:

"Do violence to no man: neithe calumniate any man: and be content with your pay"—a counsel that all public officials would do well to take t heart.

St. Paul eloquently treats of th duties and privileges of citizens "Let every soul," he says, "be subject to higher power: for there is no powe but from God. . . Render there fore, to all their dues: tribute, to whon tribute is due; custom to whom custom fear to whom fear; honor, to whon honor.

When the commander ordered him to be scourged. Paul protested against the outrage, and asserted his dignity as a Roman citizen, saying: lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman and uncondemned?" The same Apostle treats with admirable tact and apostolic charity the delicate race question, both from a religious and ocial standpoint.

St. James devotes a portion of his Epistle to Labor and Capital. He denounces the injustice and oppression of the employer in language which, if uttered in our time from a Christian pulpit, might be censured as a direct

The reigning Pontiff, Leo. XIII., in a series of Encyclicals, has enlarged, in his usual masterly manner and luminous style, on the great social and economic questions of the day.

In his Encyclical of January, 1895, addressed to the Hierarchy of the United States, His Holiness says: "As regards civil affairs, experience has shown how important it is that the citizens should be upright and virtuous. In a free State, unless justice be generally cultivated, unless the people be repeatedly and diligently urged to accept the laws and precepts of the Gospel, liberty itself may be pernicious. Let those of the clergy, therefore, who are occupied with the instruction of the people, treat plainly this topic of the duties of citizens, so that all may understand and feel the necessity in political life, of conscientiousness, self-restraint and integrity; for that cannot be lawful in public which is unlawful in private affairs.' Of course, the kingdom of God and the salvation of souls, form the habitual theme of the minister of religion, and the burden of his life-long solicitude. The subjects to which I have referred are, in the nature of things, exceptional and incidental. They should be handled, moreover, with great prudence and discretion, with a mind free from prejudice and partisan spirit, and in the sole interests of Christian charity, social order, and public tranquil-

Some Day. BY JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

Some day—so many tearful eyes

Are watching for the dawning light So many faces toward the skies Are weary of the night!

So many falling prayers that reel And stagger upward through the storm : And yearning hands that reach and feel No pressure true and warm.

So many hearts whose crimson wine Is wasted to a purple stain And blurred and streaked with drops of brine Upon the lips of pain!

O come to them—those weary ones!
Or, if thou still must hide a while,
Make stronger still the hope that runs
Before thy coming smile.

And haste and find them where they wait; Let summer's winds blow down that way And all they long for, soon or late, Bring round to them some day.

FIVE-MINUTE SERMONS.

Fifth Sunday after Easter.

FREQUENT COMMUNION.

" With desire I have desired to eat this pasch with you before I suffer." (St. Luke xxii, 15.

To desire a thing, dear brethren, is a positive sign that we have an affection for it; we do not desire things that are indifferent to us, but thos which we hold dearest. Our Lord says that He burned with the desire to eat this pasch, because He was extremely anxious to unite Himself to us by be coming our food.

But the prodigies He performed in Himself and outside of Himself, in order that He may come and be united to us, make His desire of this union clearer than the noon-day sun. puts Himself at the same time in heaven and on earth; He remains in an in numerable number of places, since He in every consecrated Host in the whole Church; He abases, if I may so speak, His majesty; He covers His glory with a humble exterior; He disguises Himself and in such a manner that neither the most ingenious poets nor the most impassioned hearts have ever invented any artifice, any trans formation that can resemble it. In addition, He exposes Himself to a thousand insults, and He resolves to endure them for the gratification of His desire; for the same purpose He subjects Himself to the word of a priest.

Behold how our Lord comes and what He does in order to unite Himself to us! See how He puts Himself in the Host, and in what manner He remains in the tabernacle for whole days and nights quite alone, waiting with invincible patience for persons to come and visit Him, and to prepare them-selves so that He may unite Himself with them; for it is His supreme desire. Oh, ye children of men, behold how God hath loved you! how He still lov eth you!

If Jesus so earnestly desires to come to us, if He says to us, "I have desired to eat this pasch with Thee," it is certainly most just that we should long to go to Him. For what advantage does He gain by it? What can light receive from communicating itself to darkness? wealth from giving itself to poverty? beauty from uniting itself to deformity? wisdom to folly Are not all the gain and glory ours?

Resolve, then, to frequently receive Jesus in the sacrament of His love. If you have thus far neglected your Easter Communion, let the strong love of the Crucified urge you to do your duty. As our Lord works prodigies in Himself and in nature in order to come to us, overturning the obstacles that oppose His coming and His union, so should we likewise do great things, conquering our vicious nature and overcoming all difficulties in order to be fit to go and unite ourselves to Him. Our desire should lead us to prepare carefully for Communion, and to approach with firm and simple faith, with humility and reverence, with sorrow for our sins, with a strong confidence in our Lord, whose burning desire to come to us is a powerful motive of this confidence. You will, perhaps, say:
"A person should be very pure to communicate." I reply: It is true; but if we regard the infinite purity of God we receive, our purity, though we should take an eternity to purify our selves, will never be sufficiently great. But we should learn to what one is absolutely obliged in order to communicate worthily. It is to be pure from all mortal sin, and not, as some think, from oll venial sin; otherwise who could communicate, since even the jus sometimes fall into minor faults? Hear the words of St. John: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us."

Blessed shall we be if the desire of being united to Jesus animates our whole lives-if we often feast at the heavenly banquet in which Christ is received. In vain will the devil, the world and the flesh try to effect our The God of armies will protect us and guide us safely through the battle of life into the mansions of bliss eternal.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

Only One Mother.

BY H. C. DODGE

You have only one mother, my boy, Whose heart you can gladden with joy, Or cause it to ache Till ready to break— So cherish that mother, my boy.

You have only one mother who will Stick to you through good and through ill And love you although The world is your foe — So care for that love never still.

You have only one mother to pray That in the good path you may stay; Who for you wont spare Self-sacrifice rare— So worship that mother alway.

You have only one mother to make A home ever sweet for your sake, Who toils day and night For you with delight— To helpher all pains ever take.

You have only one mother to miss When she has departed from this. So love and revere That mother while here— Sometime you won't know her dear kiss.

You have only one mother—just one. Remember that always, my son; None can or will do What she has for you, What have you for her ever done? -Detroit Free Press.

The Drummer Boy.

Many of our readers are probably familiar with a touching little poem of the late war, called the "Drummer Boy"—a story of a brave little lad who as the poet tells us, served under General Lyon, and was rescued by him after the battle.

The facts of the boy's history, as related by a trustworthy comrade, are even more pathetic and significant than they are made in the

When General Lyon was on his march to Wilson's Creek, a Tennessee woman dressed in deep mourning, brought her son, a lad of twelve, into camp. She was starving, she said, her husband was dead, and the boy wished to enlist as a drummer.

The lad watched the officer's doubt ing face eagerly.

"Don't be afraid, captain! I can drum!" he cried.

"Give him a trial," the captain or dered.

The fifer, a gigantic fellow, looked on the puny boy contemptuously, and broke into an air exceedingly difficult to accompany with the drum; but so well did the child succeed, that even the captain applauded. "Eddy" enrolled as a drummer, and became the pet of the camp. He was the especial favorite of the fifer, who, when the march led them over creeks or larger streams difficult to ford, would hoist the boy on his shoulders, and, fifing and drumming merrily, they would lead the way for the line. At the battle of Wilson's Creek, General Lyon was killed and his force routed. Toword morning one of his soldiers, lying wounded by the stream, heard a feeble rat-tat in the woods.

"That is Eddy beating the reveille," he thought. He crept to him, and found the lad, with both feet shot off, thumping on his drum.

"Don't say I won't live!" he said. 'This gentleman said he'd fix me until the doctors would bring me all right again." He nodded to the body of a Confederate soldier, who, although dying had dragged himself the grass to the child, and had tied up his legs with his suspenders to check the flow of blood from the arteries.

Later in the morning, while the comrades lay helpless together a body of Southern cavalry rode up.

"Look to the child," said the Yankee soldier. Two of the men-grizzled old soldiers, who were probably themselves fathers-sprung to the ground and lifted the boy tenderly. As they carried him. With a he tried to tap his drum. triumphant smile, and still smiling, he died before they could reach the camp

Eddy's drum tap still echoes with meaning from those dark and terrible days : for it tells us of the bravery and tenderness which filled alike the hearts beating under blue coats and gray.

A Little Missionary.

Some years ago a missionary visited the islands of Fernando-Po and Amban On his arrival he was greatly surprised to discover at a short distance inland s rudely constructed cross surrounded by a crowd of negro children, among whom was a white boy about ten years of age. The children were reciting the Rosary in Spanish. On perceiving the priest the little white boy joyfully exclaimed: "A priest, a priest!" The missionary, having drawn near, asked him to bring him to the dwelling of his parents. "My parents! My parents are not here," said the boy; "I have been shipwrecked, and the negroes here have kindly received me. Mindful of my mother's teaching, I have not failed to recite the Rosary every day. As I have no statue of the Blessed Virgin, and did not know how to make one, I have made this cross, and I daily come here te recite my prayers. My playmates come with me, and I have tried to teach them the Hail Mary. that we may say the beads together." The missionary, having asked him how long he had been on that island, received this reply: "I can't tell, but it must be a long time : for when I am away from my parents the time seems so long to me." The boy then led the Father to the hut of the negroes with whom he dwelt. These good people received the priest with great respect. The following day missionary, in the presence of several families, presided at the recitation of the Rosary, and began his tation of the Rosary, and began his log I stepped up to look at it more labors by preaching to them. An Excellent Lesson.

Once when travelling in a stage coach, I met a young lady who seemed to be on the constant lookout for some thing laughable, and not content with laughing herself, took great pains to make others do the same.

After a while an old woman came running across the fields, swinging her bag at the coachman, and in a shrill voice begging him to stop.

The good-natured coachman drew up his horse, and the old lady coming to the fence by the roadside, squeezed herself through two bars which were not only in a horizontal position, but very near together. The young lady mede some ludicrous remarks and the passengers laughed. It seemed excusable, for in getting through the fence the poor woman had made sad work with her old black honnet. This was a new piece of fun, and the girl made the most of it. She caricatured the old lady upon a card; pretended, when she was not looking, to take patrons of her bonnet, and in various other ways tried to raise a laugh.

length the poor woman turned a pale face toward her.

"My dear," said she, "you are young and happy: I have been so, too, but am now decrepit and forlorn. This coach is taking me to the deathped of my child. And then, my dear I shall be all alone in the world. The coach stopped before a poor-look ing house, and the old lady feebly descended the steps.
"How is she?" was the first trembling inquiry of the poor mother.

"Just alive," said a man who was leading her into the house.

Putting up the steps the driver mounted his box, and we were on the road again. Our merry young friend had placed her card in her pocket. She was leaning her head upon her hand: and I was not sorry to see a tear upon her fair young cheek. It was a lesson.

The long vacation had come at last. had worked hard all the term, and felt the imperative need of change of air and scene.

My friendEdward make a continental tour with me, part of which we meant to perform as pedestrians. Four days, however, before the time arranged for our deporture, I received a letter from him saying that family circumstances compelled him to change his plans, and so, much to my disappointment, I had to set out alone.

The passage across the channel was performed without adventure, and under the cheering influences of a sunny sky and the many charms of foreign travel my spirits rose, and though regretting my pleasant com-panion, and feeling very solitary, still kept to the pre arranged programme and performed many a long stretch on

At last the route which I selected brought me to the city of X its splendid cathedral, and many other interesting objects.

Arriving late, I drove to the hotel, dined, and retired early to rest, havdetermined to devote the morning to answering my letters, which had accumulated during my tour, deferring my visit to the cathedral till the after

The days were bright and long, so I knew I should have time to see it thor oughly, and if not I could return the morning, for being a lover of architecture and somewhat of a con noisseur, in carving, I knew a short visit would not content me.

As I entered the venerable building there were no forebodings in my mind. nor could I foresee the eager longing 1 should experience to escape from it, and be unable to do so. But to proceed, I found on my en trance a party being formed to go the round, and paying the customary fee I joined it, and with a good, though rather long-winded cicerone, we began our inspection. I do not intend to give a description of the building or of its many and rare art treasures suffice it to say, we spent several hours over them, mounting the lofty tower, descending into the ancient crypt, and as the phrase is, thoroughly "doing it." As we were returning through a side aisle to the great west As we were returning door, I lingered behind the rest to examine an altar which I had been much taken with before. Then feeling it a relief to be rid of the loquaci ous guide, I wandered off amongst the great pillars where the evening sun was sending its many colored beams as they streamed through the richly painted windows. I could still hear the voices of our party in the distance. How little did I think how long a time would elapse ere I again heard a human voice

Having taken a few steps further I noticed to my right hand what appeared to be a carved doorway, and being, as I said before, a lover of carving I stepped up to look at it more closely. It was a piece of rare merit.

I ran my hands over the opened. various projections and pressed against crease daily, especially after the it, but with no result. Finally, I arrival of other missionaries. One of leaned against it with my shoulder, when it yielded to the pressure, and this so suddenly that I staggered and almost fell into some opening, for I could distinguish nothing at the moment. The door had been kept-open by my body, but directly I moved it swung to and closed with a sharp snap. At first I was bewildered. Where was I? A faint, very faint light came from above, and after a time when my eyes became accustomed to the gloom I saw that I was in a small, square chamber with a very high flat No window or grating were visible, and how the light came in at all I could not imagine. It seemed to run all round the chamber where the walls joined the ceiling. I did not at all like my position, and felt about,

> Then I remembered the snap I heard when the door closed and realized that I was a prisoner secured in this trap by a spring lock. In hopes of attracting attention I seized my stick and thundering against the wall though with little hope, for I knew by this time the exploring party would be far away, and not seeing me as they left the cathedral would imagine I had gone on before. Then I shouted till I was hoarse, but only a dull hollow echo was returned from the walls of my prison-house, and the full horror of my position overcame me.

vain. The walls were quite smooth on this side, yet nothing could be seen.

After a time I roused myself, and again narrowly examined the walls, striking them in various parts, especially the doorway, but to no pur ose, and despairing and exhausted I at down on the ground. There was nothing, absolutely nothing, to give me any clue as to the use of this cell. Could it be used for anything? Would anyone ever come to it, or should I die here of slow starvation, and my bleached bones attest in after times to the horrible fate I had suffered? Air there was, and it, too, emed to come from above, as did the light, which was, however, fast decreasing. I could just see my watch by straining my eyes, and found it was half past 6. I carefully wound it, and then again began to think. The cathedral would soon be closed for the night, and I must wait for my chance of delivery till the next morning. Should I be alive even if they did look for me? Could I make myself heard by those outside? Would the hotel-keeper be uneasy at my nonappearance and institute a search? All this I could only leave to conjecture. I knelt down and prayed more fervently than I ever did before, and felt calmer.

To pass away the time I determined to try and sleep. No food had I partaken of since my luncheon, and I already feeling much exhausted; so I made a sort of pillow of my coat and lay down on the floor. After a time I slept, but only to be haunted by ter rible dreams, and awoke from one of these with a start and a cold shiver. It was dark. Fortunately I had with me a box of matches and now struck one to look at my watch. It was nearly 9. I also saw by the light that the floor was of lead or zinc which, as I had before noticed, formed the lining of the walls; no wonder I felt cramped and chilled through. I put on my coat and, as far as the limited space allowed me, moved about to warm myself. Then I leant against the wall and thought over my fate. Thoughts of home came rushing into my mind-that home I perhaps should never again behold—of the beloved ones there, and I pictured to myself their grief when, ing performed a long day's march on as time went on, no news of me would foot. I slept well, and after breakfast arrive. To this town they would trace me by the letters sent this morning. and then nothing to indicate my where abouts would be forthcoming. my father would grieve over the unknown fate of me, his eldest son! How my mother and sisters would sorrow for me, and how one and all would over and over again say: "If we only knew what had happened, what had become of him! It is this terrible uncertainty that is so hard to bear ! How at last hope would die out of their hearts and they would mourn for me as dead, as I should be! These dismal thoughts coursed through my brain and oppressed my heart. I was grow ing faint and weak, both from want of food and from the strain upon my nerves I sat down in despair, and a sort of lethargy came over me to which I yielded. No sound could be heard but the far off boom of the great clock which struck on my ear like a death knell. The darkness had become in tense, and the stillness terribly oppres sive, yet I sat on: for what could I do? Nothing, absolutely nothing, till daylight should again return—bringing with it hope. The next time I struck a light I again examined doors and walls, but made no new discovery. Happening to glance up, I was greatly surprised to perceive that the ceiling was nearer to me than it was before Just then the match died out, and l said to myself-it cannot be, it is only the imagination of my disordered brain; yet I struck a second match, and after a second inspection I felt convinced it was lower, considerably lower! What did this portend? Again in total darkness all the horrible stories I had ever read or heard of, dungeons and torture rooms whose ceilings and walls were made to close in arose before my mind, and added fresh horror to my position.

strength and resignation to my fate. Again a calmer feeling was infused I again kindled a match, and with my knife made a mark upon the wall as high as I could stretch to verify the fact of the descent. But, alas! there was no need; the tiny light flashed for an instant upon the roof, and I could see it was of the same material as the walls and floor. After a long interval I struck an other match, only to note its descent slowly but surely being accomplished. Soon a faint ray of light was visible as before; it came from round the ceiling, but not so low down. The next time the clock struck its boom seemed much nearer, but my brain was so excited I could not trust my own senses. lower and lower descended the terrible ceiling! Sarsfield Branch, No. 28, Ottawa.

The first annual supper and reunion in connection with Sarsfield Branch of the E. B. A. was held at the Queen's Restaurant, Eigin street, on Thursday night. Like all affairs with which Irishmen are connected, it was a grand success. Irish good cheer was in evidence, both in the discussion of the excellent dinner prepared by mine host Pierce and the patriotism, cloquence and fun that bubbled from the many bright speches made in reply to the toasts. Mr. J. J. Foran was chairman, and among the prominent Irishmen present were: Hon. John Costigan, Hon. Senator Sallvan, P. Baskerville, ex-M. P. P., Rev, Canon McCarthy, Dr. Freeland and P. H. Cassidy, reeve of Gloucester. Mr. R. Tobin was vice-chairman. After the customary loyal toasts, the toast, 'OurChurch,' was eloquently responded to by Rev, Canon McCarthy, "Canada our Home," was the next toast. Evolupled with the names of Hon. John Costigan, and Hon. Senator Sullivan, each of whom delivered eloquent and patriotic speeches. "Sister Societies" was responded to by or. Freeland, P. Baskerville, and Mr. Harris. The "E. B. A. was acknowledged by P. Branken, E. A. Connell, and P. H. Cassidy. "The Ladies" were gracefully championed by J. J. O'Connor, T. H. Cleary, and J. D. Grace. Senator Sullivan in glowing terms proposed a toast to the vettrans of the Imperial army, and coupled the names of three gentlemen present. Messrs. Ryan, McCauley and Clarke, who have served in the regular army, Hon John Costigan proposed the health of the chairman, which was accompanist on the plano. A letter of regret at inability to attend was read from Rev. Father Howe of the University. The follow for the plane of the mental portion was of the higest order and was directed by Bros. St. Joseph Court No. 370 meets in Dingman's Hall, 2nd and 4th Thursdays.

A very successful and interesting meeting took place on Thursday last. Business was commenced half an hour earlier, the Chief Ranger being, as usual, punctually on time. Five more candidates were initiated, after which everything was put in shape for the open meeting. The guests in the antercoms were admitted, the installation of officers occupying their close attention. Refreshments were then served by the Good of the Order Committee, and the following interesting pregramme presented: Song by Brother M. J. Mogan which received a hearty encore, solo by Brother R. Howorth, recitation by Brother John Mogan, comic song by Brother Wright and a paper on Forestry by Brother Pape. This pre pared the way for the speaker of the evening, Bro W. P. J. Lee. After an elequent address on the aims and objects of Forestry, the lecturer concluded with an appeal to those present who were non-members to avail themselves at the earliest possible moment of the privileges afforded by the C. O. F. The programme was finished with a recitation by the same gentleman which brought down the house. The usual toasts were drank and responded to, after which the meeting broke up with the singing of God Save the Queen, "everybody expressing themselves as thoroughly satisfied with the evening's entertainment.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

Traversion, May 6, 1895.

A very pleasant event took place at the residence of Mr. Andrew Fogarty, sr. Glenelg, on the evening of the 3rd inst., the occasion being the presentation of a handsome gold watch and chain, accompanied by an address, to Miss H. M. Fogarty, by the Catholic congregations of Glenelg and Markdale, in appreciation of her services as organist, and leader of the choir. After the guests were all assembled, Miss Maggie McCassey read the following address:

To Miss H. M. Fogarty—We, who have assembled here this evening, on behalf of the members of St. John's Church, Glenelg, and St. Joseph's Church, Markdale, wish to say that it is with feelings of kindness and gratifude that we have met, to show you our appreciation of your services to us during the last five years.

It is especially as organist and leader of the choir that we wish to tender you our most sincere thanks. You have labored faithfully and often at a disadvantage, and we have always found you an earnest and painstaking young lady, and one who is thoroughly devoted to the position which you hold.

As a slight token of gratitude for the same, we now present you with this gold watch and chain. Hoping you may live long to enjoy it, and that Heaven may send its choicest blessings on you, is the earnest wish of us all.

Signed on behalf of the abve comparer ations, Miss M. McCassey, Miss A. Nell, Miss M. allaghan.

A very successful and interseting meeting. stitutions Christ placed upon her certain indelible marks—marks that she has faithfully preserved in every age and in every land.
Her perfect unity is something grand and her most prominent characteristic. One in doctrine and one in government—Peter, the chief, the supreme ruler, the infallible authority, is the visible head on earth—one shepherd one fold, one faith, one body of many members under one head, she is one and united in all things. Her teachings are pure and she is free from even the shadow of error and cannot be mistaken in matters of faith and morals, for Christ her Divine Founder promised to remain with her until the end of time, and He assured Peter and his successors that their faith would always remain firm and unshaken, "for I have prayed for thee," says Christ, "that thy faith fail thee not." The Church is perfectly free to make changes in discipline and religious customs, but in her dogmas of faith, never. This unity of faith, this one doctrine, one language and one authority, the world cannot dispute, and it has been a real source of salutary admiration for almost two world cannot dispute, and it has been a real source of salutary admiration for almost two thousand years.

CHRIST BEING HER POUNDER, she must be holy of necessity, and live only for the sanctification of souls. She is the sacred vessel that must safely carry the vichly-laden treasures of God's eternal kingdom. She is the sole possessor of the seven sacraments that have been instituted by Christ for the spiritual welfare of mankind. And has she not been ever faithful in the administration of them? Has she not suffered the loss of rich kingdoms, and allowed kings and queens to become her most bitter enemies, rather than yield to their lustful desires and destroy God's hely institution by changing one word of His divine commands? The Church must necessarily be a pure and sanctified mother, for is it not to her that God's children must come for spiritual food, strength, counsel and consolation? "Feed My lambs and feed My sheep," says Christ. How, then, could she feed His lambs and sheep and procure for them life everlasting if there existed even a dread of her food being impure or burtful? Has she not at all times guarded most carefully her children against all immoral undertakings and scandalous enterprises? If Judas proved himself faithless to his Master and was condemned, did his wicked conduct in any way reflect on Christ and the remaining apostles? If we have unfortunately some bad Catholics amongst us, it only goes to prove that if they followed the laws of our holy Mother the Church they would not be bad but good, and would certainly be a source of edification to their neighbor rather than a real cause of scandal. But our Lord tells us plainly that "Scandals must come, but woe to them by whom they come." The Church is therefore holy, and the thousands whose names are found on her calendars today, and who are shining lights adorning God's throne in Heaven, are a strong proof of her true sanctity, for have they not received through the merits of Jesus Christ their eternal happi-

"no new commandment unto his breth but an old commandment which they

from the beginning."
Indeed no man has a right to add one word or efface one line from the sacred writings of the Apostles. That holy book of the New Law should be left just as St. Matthew began it and St. John finished it. The Church of Christ has been most faithful and honest in all has been most faithful and honest in all her dealings with the sacred Scriptures. She teaches nothing new and she teaches what Christ taught His Apostles. She is the same faithful, docide child to-day as when she first emerged from the cradle of Christianity and nestled at the feet of her Divine Master; and if she pronounces a final judgment on matters of faith and places an irremovable wall around the territory treasased morn it is to faith and places an irremovable wall around the territory trespassed upon, it is to strengthen the faith of her children and guard them against the enemies of their soul: and to give to the world the fall and flual expression of her infallible judgment. This official duty and legitimate act of Christ's vicar on earth no fair-minded man can dispute, and it is far from giving even the shadow of reason to suppose or conclude that a new light has been discovered in the Church or that religion has given birth to a new dogma of faith.

The Church, therefore, is one, holy, Catholic and apostolical. Built by Christ, she is indestructible and must last until the end of time.

olic and apostolical. Built by Christ, she is indestructible and must last until the end of time.

This "city above cities, this mountain on top of mountains, this living mountent of God's eternal power," must firmly remain where God has placed her, on Peter the rock, and witness with pity the vain attacks of her enemies. But she can easily survive the most violent attacks of human hostility when even the gates of hell, Christ assures her, can never prevail against her. She has SEEN KINGDOMS RISE AND FALL, nations exchange places, emperors fade into oblivion, kings and queens rule on a throne of tyranny and then die in prison, in vain lamenting their woeful carer. She has seen children placed on the rack and totured to death rather than yield to the unjust demands of a godless power. But all her dark days of trial and pain, long and weary vears of persecution and bloodshed, have served only to add more lustre to the righty and increased zeal in her faith and love for God. And as the rainbow in the heavens marks the solemn promise of God to Nash, so the assurance of Christ to His Church. Behold I am with you at all times. has ever been a real source of courage and comfort in her darkest and most trying moments. Human institutions are built as on sand, for time and thought to move about and change, but God's Church is built on a rock, and three shall it stand throught on move about and change, but God's Church is built on a rock, and there shall it stand through to move about and change, but God's Church is built on a rock, and there shall it stand through as god away at the idea of Him giving His own flesh to the world was Christ put to the Apostles, when the Jews turned away at the idea of Him giving His own flesh to the world, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the world, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the wind that spirit and foods part and the first when shall we go in the true means of salvation, if not to our foot, the true means of when shall we find that spirit that foods part and the wind that spirit and fo

Of all the months of the year, none is so suggestive of poetic grace, love, joy and hope as is the month of May. The name itself is a magic. July owes its origin to a great Roman emperor, yet does it awake a single chord not of a material nature? There is a reasy no for this difference. May is not only the month of flowers, buds and birds; it is the month of Mary, the young daughter of Israel, whom generations to the end shall continue to proclaim blessed. Bards and minstrels and trouveurs have long sung to that sweet name, and children of the faith have gathered around her shrines and in the language of the divine messenger have exclaimed "Hail, full of grace." Devotion to the august Mother of God, we have read somewhere, is a sign of predestination. No wonder societies in her honor are everywhere formed that special homage be rendered to her; whom the Church invokes as the Gate of Heaven! Religion brings us to God. Devotion keeps us in His service. The more apparent the path of sanctity is made, the more readily it will be trod. And no better opportunity could be given for practices of piety than to be called into one of those societies blessed by the Church and favored of on High. Here in Belleville, not only are the clergy especially earnest in their endeavors, but the Sodality having the good fortune of the assistance of the Ladies of Loretto, the success which has crowned their joint efforts can better be appreciated by the fact that from the smallest beginning the society now counts over sixty members, the last reception alone adding eighteen to the number. The ceremony on this occasion was fall of religious inspiration. In the morning, communion by members wearing the insignia of the association. In the evening admission of asnirants by the Right Rev. Mor. religious inspiration. In the morning, communion by members wearing the insignia of the association. In the evening admission of aspirants by the Right Rev. Mgr. Farrelly, who, in well-chosen terms spoke of the aims of this society, its rise and progress. Seizing the opportunity thus afforded, the venerable pastor paid a merited tribute to two of its former Presidents, who, also, are no more. Let us name them after him—not that we can add to their glory but that the prompting of our heart be obeyed and noble examples recalled—they were the Misses Holden and Butler.

The present efficient President is Miss N. O'lleron, who is loud in praise of Rev. Sister Evangelist, to whom they owe much for direction and encouragement.

As to cull flowers, you must leave the dry, beaten track of heated toil and turmoil and repair to some fresher spot, so also to gather the more delicate blossoms of Christian virtues must one look to these retired, modest fields where the weeds of imperfection are extirpated and hearts rejoice.

A SENSATION.

A Statement From a Well-known Berlin Merchant. — How His Daughter was Re-stored From the Terrors of St. Vitus Dance—Her Case One of the Worst Ever Known — Has Fully Recovered Her Health.

From the Berlin News

From the Berlin News.

The readers of the News have been made familiar with the virtue of Dr. Williams' Pink Fills for Pale People through the articles appearing fron time to time in these columns, and while the druggists say that many in this vicinity have received undoubted benefit from their timely use, it is only recently that we have heard of a cure in Berlin of such importance as to take rank among the most remarkable yet published. There is hardly a man or woman in the town of Berlin, or the county of Waterloo, who does not know Mr. Martin Simpson, issuer of marriage licenses and general merchant, King street. Anything said by Mr. Simpson will be implicitly relied upon. A day or two ago we had a talk with him in reference to his fourteen-year-old daughter Helen, who had for two years been a sufferer from St Vitus dance. He tells us that it was the worst case he ever saw. She did not sleep for whole nights and was an intense sufferer. She was totally helpless and could neither each or She did not sleen for whole nights and was an intense sufferer. She was totally helpless and could neither eat nor drink unless administered to her by her parents. The best medical attendance was had, but all to no avail. She kept getting worse and worse, and finally, when in the paroxysms, commenced to froth at the mouth, and her parents believed she was going out of her mind. Though unable to walk for about eight months she was total er eat nor to her by would in her spells have fits, making her jump high above her couch. While in this condition, the worst case ever seen in this place, Mr. Simpson, as a last resort, purchased some Piok Pills and gave them to his suffering and afflicted daughter. He assures us that in thirty hours she found some relief. In a week the "dance" was entirely stopped and she was able to sleep, and was rapidly regaining her former strength. Some mouths after the use of the PintoPills was discontinued she again had tonches of disease, but a few doses of the pills stopped it, and for the last eight months has been entirely free from the terrible malady from which no one who knew the circumstances, expected she would recover, and her parents, as may be expected, are warm in their praises of the wonderful remedy which worked such great results. These facts are known to all who are acquainted with the family, and further comments are wholly unnecessary.

When such strong tributes as these can be had to the wonderful merits of Pink Pills, it is little wonder that they are the favorite remedy with all classes. They are an unfailing specific for locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heat, nervous prostration, all diseases depending upon vitiated humors of the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erystipelas, etc. etc. They also effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of any nature.

It is intended to present a petition to the Board of Aldermen of this city asking that the "Curtew Bell" be rung at a certain time each evening, when children will be obliged to retire to their homes. This, it seems to us, is a step in the right direction, as untold harm has resulted from youths being allowed to be abroad at unseasonable hours. Especially is this noticeable on occasions of band cencerts or other public gatherings. We hope that the request of the petition will be granted and that the law will be strictly enforced.

There are those who are so thoughtless, so blind, so grovelling as to think that we can make Mary our friend and advocate, though we go to her without contrition at heart, without even the wish for true repentance and resolution to amend. As if Mary could hate sin less, and love sinners more, than our Lord does! No: she feels a sympathy for those only who wish to leave their sins; else how should she be without sin herself?—Cardinal Newman.
