HEALTH AND WELFARE

NATIONAL ORGAN DONOR AWARENESS WEEK

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to remind Members of the House that this week, the week of April 26 to May 2, is National Organ Donor Awareness Week.

The purpose of having a week so designated is to heighten public and health professional awareness of the benefits of organ and tissue donation and transplantation, to encourage families to discuss and make a decision on organ donation before a tragedy occurs, and to urge health professionals to examine how they may participate in the organ donation process, thus making organs and tissues available to improve and, in many cases, save a life.

There is no question that today organ transplantation is an effective treatment, in many cases, of end-stage organ disease. A kidney transplant can free a patient with kidney failure from dialysis, a procedure which ties the patient to a machine for up to 40 hours a week, disrupting his or her social, family, and work life.

Heart and liver transplants offer the only hope for survival for those with terminal heart and liver disease. Also, thousands of people have had their sight restored through corneal transplantation.

Bone transplants have spared some from the amputation of limbs, and skin transplants have helped save the lives of victims of severe burns.

The statistics indicate that Canadians support organ donation. Yet, today, one of the most significant factors limiting the number of transplants performed is the supply of donated organs and tissues.

Last year, over 1,000 Canadians were waiting for a kidney transplant. More than 1,000 waited for corneal transplants, and that despite a doubling of the number of corneal transplants done in 1986 over 1985.

Sadly, a number of Canadians in need of a heart or liver transplant died because an organ did not become available in time.

My Department, in co-operation with a number of voluntary and health professional associations, has undertaken a number of activities to address this shortage of donor organs. To mention but a few examples, guidelines for establishing organ and tissue donation services in hospitals, as well as for vital organ transplant programs, have been developed and will be distributed to hospitals soon; we have assisted the Canadian Federation of Medical Students in conducting awareness campaigns on university campuses, and we have produced an inventory of educational resources on organ donation and transplantation, to assist professional and voluntary groups in planning information sessions; and we are participating in the development of a national computerized system to facilitate the distribution of organs, as well the establishment of a transplant database.

I commend the voluntary and health professional associations for the steps they have taken to increase awareness in this area. The Canadian Nurses Association and the Canadian Medical Association have both passed resolutions in support of organ donation and transplantation.

The Canadian Medical Association, with the support of my Department, launched an awareness campaign for physicians earlier this month, and the Canadian Council on Hospital Accreditation has included a statement on organ donation in its accreditation standards.

The Kidney Foundation of Canada, the Liver Foundation, the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and Transplant International (Canada) are continuing their efforts toward encouraging Canadians to consider organ donation; and, of course, the provincial organ and eye donor programs are carrying on with their efforts to increase and co-ordinate organ and tissue donations. Many of these organizations are staffed by volunteers, and I commend those volunteers today.

To commemorate Organ Donor Awareness Week, my Department is distributing a cheque insert, with a detachable donor card, to Members of Parliament and employees of the federal Government, the House of Commons, and some 18 corporations, numbering approximately 304,000.

We hope that the radio and television stations will air the public service announcements on organ donation that we have distributed.

I am pleased that several of the federal employee union newsletters, popular magazines and health professional journals are featuring articles on organ and tissue donation in their April issues. Also, a number of provincial Ministers of Health have organized activities in support of Organ Donor Awareness Week.

It is my hope that all of these efforts will help to increase organ donation. But, there is something that each of you in the House can do to help—and may I take this opportunity to thank those Members of the House who have already taken personal action in this regard—and that is to consider organ donation and to sign a donor card or the consent portion of your driver's licence to that end. Also, I encourage you to discuss your decision with your family and friends, and ask them to follow your example. And take the message further, to your constituents and professional colleagues. By doing so, you will personally be encouraging others to give the most generous gift of all, the gift of life.

To use the slogan for the Week, "Make Something Good Happen—Be an Organ Donor."

• (1110)

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, of course it gives our Party great pleasure in joining with the Minister in saluting Organ Donor Week.

It is clear from the most recent Gallup Poll which came out on March 16 that more Canadians than ever are willing to donate their organs. The problem is that they do not know exactly how to go about doing it.

Those who say that they are willing to donate their organs include 26 per cent of the population who have already signed donor cards, compared with 21 per cent in 1983 and just 12 per cent in 1978. Over the last decade we have seen a dramatic increase in the number of people who have donated organs. However, 26 per cent is just too little.

We would suggest to the Minister, as well as the very positive initiatives he has taken in trying to sensitize the Public Service and the professional community, that it might be a good idea in next month's family allowance cheque to send that message out to families across Canada.

Mr. Lewis: Did you just discover family allowance?

Ms. Copps: No, I have not got mine yet.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It is in the mail.

Ms. Copps: We see heart-rending cases highlighted from time to time on television, for example, when young children are seeking liver transplants. Canadians want to reach out and touch someone. They want to save a life, but in many cases they do not know how to do it.

For example, the Director of the National Capital Organ Retrieval and Exchange Organization said that one of the main problems with obtaining organ donations is that many doctors and hospitals do not have a specific policy on organ donation. Naturally, when a family is in crisis—it may be facing a death or a decision to take one of their loved ones off a respirator—possibly the last thing it wants to be faced with at that critical moment is a question about organ donor transplants.

If we want to get more people donating, we should reach out and get their approval at a time when they are in a better position to make those kinds of decisions rather than when they are in crisis.

[Translation]

I was also pleased to hear the Minister mention volunteerism in his speech, although I may point out that in the Estimates just tabled in Parliament, funding for national volunteer agencies has not increased at all over last year. It is all very well to talk about the contribution being made by volunteers, but I think it is also important to follow through with some kind of financial support.

[English]

In closing, of course we are giving our full support. We would suggest that the Minister get the message out, not only to professionals but also to many thousands of other Canadians. He suggested that in our own way, through our newsletters and our contacts, we should also encourage our fellow Canadians to sign their licences, which provide them with this opportunity, or to sign donor forms. We should encourage those provinces which may not already have donation options on their drivers licences to do so.

There is much to be done, but I think there is goodwill on the part of Parliament and on the part of all Canadians. It is in that regard that we hope this week indeed spurs many more thousands of Canadians to give the gift of life through a donor transplant.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, there could be no contest in the statements being made now of the commitment of all Parties in Parliament to making this week an important one in communicating awareness of organ transplants. It is important to many who are in need of such transplants. However, there can be no more compelling inducement to support what has been said on behalf of the Government and on the part of the Official Opposition than to have, as I have, a very dear friend who lies waiting in a hospital bed, hoping along with his family and his many friends that he will have a heart in time to survive. It is clear that the longer he waits the chances of his survival diminish, and of course the length of his wait is a reflection of the availability of hearts for transplantation.

Without elaborating in support of the statement made by the Minister, or the details by which we could enhance the awareness of organ transplants, I say that those of us who have not given it thought heretofore should consider the situation faced by me in this particular instance and by others as they await the end because there are no organs available. Then they would understand the importance to so many that everything possible be done to enhance the availability or organs for transplantation.

LABOUR

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak of a Canadian tragedy, a tragedy which is daily affecting thousands of workers injured, killed or made ill in the workplace.

In Canada every year one out of every nine workers, in all industries and occupations, suffers a work-related injury. During 1985, the latest year for which full statistics are available, 768 of our fellow Canadians were killed on the job, and 16.2 million work days were lost due to injury. The cost of this loss, in direct and indirect terms, is estimated at some $14 billion, a tremendous human and financial price for our nation to bear.

[English]

However, today is not a day for statistics. It is a day for people to recognize the pain, hardship, and loss suffered by our fellow Canadians because of workplace illnesses and injuries. Today is a day to remember the loss of life and the human price which has been paid in building this great country.

This day was conceived by the Canadian Labour Congress as a day of mourning to draw greater attention to the serious and continuing problem of workplace health and safety. In this we applaud the CLC and its leadership.

On this day I think it is important that we all renew our commitment to addressing this Canadian tragedy as a national priority. We must commit ourselves to raising the awareness of Canadians to this serious problem, for this is not just a responsibility of Government. It is a responsibility we all share—labour, business, industry, the provinces; indeed, all Canadians.

It is true that progress has been made in the field of occupational safety and health over the past number of years. And we have come a long way since the first Workmen's Compensation Act was passed in Ontario 73 years ago today. We still have a long way to go, however. Much remains to be done by us all if we are to meet our goal: ensuring a safe and healthy workplace for all Canadians.

I want to stress the Government's commitment on this matter and my firm determination to improve the situation. Indeed a number of initiatives attest to this commitment.

We have amended the Canada Labour Code in order to improve its provisions with regard to occupational safety and health. We have strengthened three fundamental rights set forth in the Code: The right to refuse dangerous work, the right to know, and the right to participate in safety and health committees.

We have extended the safety and health provisions of the Code to the air, marine, and rail industries and to the oil and gas industry. We have developed the new workplace hazardous materials information system. These are a few of the things we have done in hopes of protecting Canadian workers. Let me add that all these actions have been undertaken in close co-operation with representatives of all the parties involved. We strongly believe that this is the only approach than can be successful.

I wish to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to bring this important matter to the attention of Members of this House.

• (1120)

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the Minister's statement. We of the Liberal Party certainly wish to join the government in helping Canadians appreciate the sacrifices being made every day by Canada's workers.

[English]

The Minister deplored the situation that workers face in the area of occupational health and safety. In his statement he suggested there is $14 billion in human and financial terms lost as a result of work accidents. We cannot let it escape public attention that this same Minister and Government cut the budget of the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety by 10 per cent over the last year. In fact, there has been a reduction in staff in the centre that was created by the very people he suggests are going to solve the problem. It was a tripartite centre. It was a dream launched in Hamilton which included input by Government, management and workers, both union and non-union, who would have an opportunity to get information to prevent occupational hazards on the job.

As a result of this Government's cut-backs, a 10 per cent cut-back which occurred this year alone, the number of small companies, the number of small unions and workers who can be served from coast to coast is being affected. The Minister will know that in the Estimates for the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety it is said that it was not able to deal with the same number of inquiries, that the Centre was affected by the Government's budgetary restraint and the cut-back is pointed out.

If the Minister has had a chance to visit the Centre, as I have, he will know that it gets information directly to the people who need it. In the last fiscal year the Centre dealt with 20,000 inquiries from coast to coast. They were not all from big companies that have access to their own information concerning occupational health and safety. A worker in a small plant wanted to know what a chemical reaction would be if the chemical came in contact with the skin and what a particular hazard on the workplace meant.

It is fine to change the Canada Labour Code and give workers the right to refuse unsafe work, which is a notion we support, but at the same time if workers do not have access to information about unsafe chemicals, if they do not have access to information about hazards on the job, then they are not in a position to make a valued judgment about their own right to refuse work.

Of course we would stand and join with the Government in mourning the loss of thousands of lives. We saw recently in Sudbury a very tragic mine accident. More recently in the Province of Quebec a near tragic mine accident, certainly tragic for one family. In my own community of Hamilton, Mr. Speaker, in the steel mills, a month or a couple of months do not go by when we do not hear of some tragedy which results in a near fatal or in some cases a fatal situation. It is something that we all want to work toward eliminating, but in order to do that we must have information.

I think the responsibility lies with the Government to support and enhance the facilities and resources of the Canada Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, not to cut them or reduce them in a way which really makes a mockery of the words that "we are all working together". We are all working together, but the one centre that was launched in order to get information out to workers to prevent the billions of dollars of occupational losses to which the Minister referred has been cut back. He will note in the Estimates that the cost per inquiry in 1986-87 is predicted to be $71 per inquiry. That seems a very small price to pay to eliminate some of the billions of dollars that we lose in terms of productivity, not to mention the human costs in lives and injury.

I would encourage the Minister as a real tribute to this day of mourning, which was evoked by the Canadian Labour Congress, as a result of the Supplementary Estimates, to go back and to find the extra money not only to restore the Canada Centre for Occupational Health and Safety to its previous budget but also to enhance it. If he is really serious about trying to prevent or to cut down on these occupational accidents which cost workers' lives, money and productivity, then I would ask the Minister to go back to the Estimates, to rethink this very serious cut and to reconsider what has been a dream of tripartite participation among Government, management and labour to help make the workplace a safer place for every worker. I think then the very flowery, erudite and eloquent statements he makes today would have some meaning.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, at the start let me congratulate the Minister and thank him for having sent a copy of the statement to me well in advance. I received it last evening. I have been able to study it and am able to respond appropriately. I commend him for that practice and I trust it will infect his colleagues in the Cabinet, those who intend to make statements in the future.

We in the New Democratic Party caucus applaud the action of the Canadian Labour Congress in establishing April 28 as a commemorative day, in a formal sense to remember those brothers and sisters who were killed, injured or disabled on the job over the last year.

I think it is fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that we are today far more conscious of safety and health in the workplace than we ever were before. Yet in 1985, 768 Canadians were killed on the job and thousands have been injured or disabled. I am constantly exposed to the rhetoric from the Government in this House with respect to the great contribution that capital has made in developing Canada. We constantly bow down and worship at the altar of Bay Street about investments and money. To listen to what is sometimes emanating from the other side, we hear that that is God, that that is what has created a vibrant Canadian economy. In fact, too often we forget that labour has contributed more in building this great country of ours, oftentimes at the cost of lives and health.

Today we pause to remember them. In remembering, we recommit ourselves to being ever conscious of a safe and healthy work environment.

The Minister says that Part IV of the Canada Labour Code is important. He talked about the great things he has implemented, but since this Government came into office in 1984 there have been no amendments to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code. No Bill has been put before this Parliament in the name of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) with respect to strengthening and improving the occupational health and safety sections of the Canada Labour Code.

As a matter of fact, in the federal Public Service and Crown corporations, for example, there were 13 fatalities in 1986-87 and 25,371 injuries, of which 16,536 were disabling. The federal Government has a long way to go indeed in cleaning up its act in the workplace. It seems to me that the Government has a responsibility to show leadership when it comes to the question of occupational health and safety.

One of the most dangerous occupations in this country, even more so than mining is fishing. We know that the Minister has had in his possession since January the Gray report, which is an interim report on health and safety in the fishing industry on the West Coast. We are still waiting for the studies to be undertaken on the East Coast with respect to the fisheries there. The Government would be well advised to move with a bit more alacrity. Rather than the speed of a snail, we would expect the speed of Superman when dealing with what obviously has been recognized as a serious problem, according to the Minister's statement today.

In closing, it is our sincerest hope that on April 28, 1988, we can stand in this place and say at this hour that the workplaces of Canada are safer and healthier than they were in 1987.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PRESENTATION OF REVISED REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Marcel Danis (Verchères): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-15, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act, it is my duty to table a revised report.

[English]

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Chairman, I have the honour to present the Third Report of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development in both official languages.

On March 24, 1987, your committee met in camera to consider a draft report with the intention of adopting and tabling it before the First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Rights which was scheduled for March 26 and 27 of 1987. During the course of the meeting, certain members voiced the opinion that the committee might in some way jeopardize certain negotiations at the conference by tabling a report at this time.

After the ensuing debate on the matter, a member proposed a motion which had the effect of negating the possibility of tabling the report before the conference. The motion was adopted on a recorded vote.

On March 25, 1987, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) rose in the House under Standing Order 21 to protest the actions of the members who voted to reject the draft report and in the process named the members who so voted. See Hansard of March 27, 1987, page 4540.

This action was brought to our attention on April 1, 1987 by a member who felt that his privilege was breached in some way and that the entire in camera process was in jeopardy because of the decision of the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River to divulge certain events that transpired behind closed doors. A motion was adopted to report these actions to the House.

Your committee feels that it is its duty to place these matters before you at this time since privilege may be involved and to give the House an opportunity to reflect on these matters.

A copy of the relevant Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, Issues Nos. 24 and 25, which includes this report, is tabled and respectfully submitted by me on behalf of the Chairman, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre).

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could point out to other Hon. Members who are rising on this matter that when they report, they should give just a very short summary.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—SECOND REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, as Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Official Languages—

[English]

I have the honour to present in both official languages, of course, the Second Report of the Standing Joint Committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that all Committee members are anxious to start reviewing this country's fundamental legislation on official languages as soon as possible, with a view to enhancing the status and recognition of Canada's official languages.

FISHERIES AND OCEANS—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gérald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the First Report of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans.

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE—FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. The Committee's review and recommendations follow the order of reference dated January 29, 1987. The Committee requests the Government to table a response to this report, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2).

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition, pursuant to Standing Order 106, from residents of Pickering, Scarborough, Toronto, Guelph, Mississauga and North Bay in the Province of Ontario, and residents of Vancouver, Burnaby, Coquitlam, Surrey, Westbank and a whole variety of places in the Province of British Columbia.

The petitioners are concerned that the proposals of the Government to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

Therefore, they are asking the Government to reconsider its decision to proceed with this legislation.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by several dozen residents of Duncan, British Columbia, calling upon the Government to revoke the proposed changes to the Patent Act because, if it goes ahead, it will of course directly affect all Canadians who are not protected by private or government medicare programs.

The petitioners also suggest that the federal Government's proposals will raise the cost of already high provincial health care programs.

I have a similar petition from Waterford, Ontario, that great tomato-growing area, and the petition is also signed by people from Simcoe, Vanessa, Windham Centre, Nanticoke and Port Dover where there are the world's greatest perch.

This particular petition calls on the Government to back off from the patent legislation because the petitioners believe that the monopoly granted to pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition and will result in an increase in drug costs and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

I have a similar petition from several dozen residents of Digby, Nova Scotia, and from residents of Vilna and Redwater in Alberta who have called upon the Government to back off from the patent changes because the petitioners believe that the proposed changes are another example of the Canadian Government's concession in the free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of every-day Canadians.

These are some of the people who have signed petitions and there will no doubt be more petitions coming in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have five petitions that were examined by the Clerk in accordance with Standing Order 106 and which meet the requirements of the Standing Orders.

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance common to your petitioners humbly sheweth that the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from cheaper generic drugs and will result in an increase in the price of drugs for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of many Canadians to purchase the drugs they need; that the proposed changes in the Patent Act will directly affect all Canadians who are not protected by Government or private medicare programs; that the Govenrment's proposals will raise the already high cost of provincial health care programs; and that the proposed changes in the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the free trade negotiations with the United States, at the expense of the average consumer.

Wherefore, the undersigned your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present eight petitions signed by hundreds of residents of the City of Winnipeg who say that the proposed Bill C-22 will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They say the federal government proposals will result in higher costs for provincial government drug plans.

Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

I have another petition on the same subject signed by residents of a number of towns in Manitoba, including Inwood, Teulon, Balmoral and Poplarfield. They say the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs.

The proposed changes are another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the U.S. at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotiations. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by residents of British Columbia.

Whereas the most recent figures indicate almost all fishermen in Canada depend upon unemployment insurance to survive the long winter months, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) rejects any recommendation that will deprive fishermen of their right to collect unemployment insurance; and to enter into consultations with representatives of fishermen in Canada in order to improve the program offered to fishermen.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions on behalf of the New Brunswick Right to Life Association, Miramichi Branch, calling upon Parliament to support Motion M-37 which calls for the protection of unborn babies under the Charter of Rights.

OPPOSITION TO LOCAL MEASURED TELEPHONE CHARGES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions signed by hundreds of residents of my constituency of Burnaby who note that the telephone is essential for communication and that rental costs must always be affordable. They further note that the telephone pricing system known as local measured service, or charging for each local call, means having a telephone will cost much more for most people, and will particularly hit those who rely on their phones, including seniors, the disabled, those confined to their homes, and volunteer organizations. Therefore, they call upon Parliament to direct the CRTC to deny to telephone companies such as B.C. Tel the right to charge for each individual call and order the retention of the monthly rental for telephones.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour of presenting a petition, again signed by a large number of residents of Burnaby, as well as of Vernon, Kamloops, Chetwynd and a variety of other towns and municipalities in the Province of British Columbia, who note that the federal Government's proposals to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadians and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They point out this is in effect a concession to the U.S. in the free trade negotiations and therefore call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians in Prince George and many other areas.

REQUEST FOR FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES— RESTORATION OF CHILD BENEFITS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Finally, I have a large number of petitions again signed by residents of Burnaby, British Columbia, who note that deindexation of universal family allowances and the massive cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits are an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single-parent mothers. They note this is particularly unfair in the face of budget hand-outs such as the $500,000 tax-free capital gain exemption, greater RRSP deductions for high income earners, the bail-out of banks, and, of course, they note that this particularly hits farmers who are already struggling.

Therefore, they call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

CESSATION OF LOGGING ON SOUTH MORESBY ISLAND

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition duly certified and signed by some 35 residents of Niagara who, far from the source of their concern, nevertheless express a real concern for the future of the island of South Moresby and the flora and fauna found there. The island is also the ancestral home of the Haida nation. The petitioners humbly pray that this Parliament halt the logging operation on that island.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have nine petitions I wish to table with the Clerk today. To summarize them very briefly, they are signed by residents of Ontario, particularly Mississauga, as well as Nova Scotia, particularly from the constituency of Cape Breton—The Sydneys.

I also have another petition signed by residents of Lindsay, Ontario.

I have another petition signed by residents of Nova Scotia, particularly the constituency of Annapolis in the Middleton and Kingston area of Nova Scotia.

I also have another petition signed by residents of the constituency of Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso, particularly in the St. Peters area of Nova Scotia. the federal Government's proposals will raise the already high cost of drugs to provincial health care programs, and whereas the monopoly granted to integrated pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and result in an increase in drug prices, and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, as well as being another example of the Canadian Government's concessions in the free trade negotiations with the U.S. at the expense of everyday Canadians, the petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to withdraw the amendments to Bill C-22.

Finally I have petitions signed by individuals from Brantford, Ontario, people from the great Province of Alberta, as well as Quebec, and finally from Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, including the MLA who represents that constituency in the Nova Scotia House of Assembly, the Hon. Jim Smith. They call upon the Government of Canada to withdraw the amendments to Bill C-22 which they believe will negatively affect senior citizens, the elderly, the poor and the sick of this country in a very harmful way.

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURES

AUTHORIZATION TO STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find there is consent to put this motion and pass it. Therefore, I move:

> That the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure be authorized to travel to Vancouver, B.C. to hold hearings on May 4, 1987 on the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of British Columbia, and that the necessary staff accompany the Committee.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, there have indeed been discussions among the Parties and I want to say that we appreciate the initiative taken by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis) on this issue. I can say on behalf of all Members in this House of Commons from British Columbia that we appreciate the rather extraordinary gesture at this time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

AGRICULTURE—CANADIAN GRAIN CRISIS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 29 I rise to seek leave to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of considering a question of urgent and pressing necessity, that being the current crisis facing the Canadian grain farmer.

Last week the Canadian Wheat Board announced a reduction of the initial price of grain by 18 per cent. This is added to a 20 per cent reduction from last year and was exacerbated yesterday by the withdrawal of the moratorium on the Farm Credit Corporation. Many farmers now feel they need some assurance that the Government is willing to support them. I believe this is an urgent enough issue to be brought before the House for debate this day.

Mr. Speaker: I have, of course, received notice of the application of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) and I find that it meets the requirements of the Standing Order. Does the Hon. Member have leave to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 29 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter?

Mr. Lewis: Prior to granting leave, if I may—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair may be in some difficulty here. The Chair has granted leave, the House has not. This is not a debatable matter, but I will hear the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are naturally prepared to grant leave and I want to indicate that right off the bat. However, I want to make a couple of points.

First, all Members of the House look to decisions of the Chair with regard to deciding what truly constitutes an emergency and to preparing requests for emergency debates in the future. The Government naturally governs itself accordingly.

Second, notice, either to the Minister involved or public notice, is helpful in enabling Ministers to organize their travel plans. As a result of public notice the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) was here last evening. I will indicate now that it may not be possible for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to be here this evening because he has made travel plans.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I respect the decision of the Chair, although I must say that I personally disagree with it in view of the situation. I invite a comparison of my conduct and that of other government Members of Parliament with the conduct of opposition MPs on other occasions with respect to decisions by the Chair—leave granted.

Mr. Gauthier: We don't need sermons.

Mr. Lewis: Maybe you do.

Mr. Gauthier: Not from you.

Mr. Speaker: Under the Standing Orders this is not a debatable matter. Hon. Members will remember that when this Order was changed there was considerable thought put into it, resulting in the Order as it now stands. It is not debatable because the Hon. Members of this place who worked this Order out felt that that was not appropriate. Also the intention was expressed at the time that the Chair not give reasons for why it decided to accept an Order. The reason for that was that it was believed by Hon. Members that a body of jurisprudence, which would undoubtedly build up on these matters, would lead to a tendency for debate. As a consequence, the Order is as it is.

Having considered the matter and accepted the application the Chair is in the hands of the House. That is why, under the Orders, the Chair, having accepted it, then puts the question to the House.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary raises another matter, which is not a matter of slight importance at all, that is whether or not the appropriate Minister may be able to be in the House. However, with the greatest of respect, I believe that is a matter which Members will have to work out for themselves.

I think I am bound, as Speaker, to put the question. Does the Hon. Member have leave to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 29 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The proposed motion shall stand over until 8 p.m. this day.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 87 could be made an Order for Return, this Return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 87 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

STARRED QUESTIONS

PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. *89—Mr. Daubney:

Point of Order—Mr. Gauthier

1. For the period January 1, 1985, to December 31, 1986, did the Government eliminate positions in the Public Service and, if so, how many?

2. Of those individuals whose positions were eliminated, were any subsequently placed in other positions in the Public Service and (a) if so, what are the numbers and the proportion who were (i) men (ii) women (iii) members of visible minorities (b) if not, what are the numbers and the proportion who were (i) men (ii) women (iii) members of visible minorities?

3. What is the total number of positions now existing in the Public Service and what proportion is held by (a) women (b) members of visible minorities?

Mr. Chuck Cook (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the response of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is: 1. Treasury Board does not control the size of the federal Public Service on the basis of positions or individuals. Rather, Treasury Board controls are based on person-year authorities measured on a fiscal year over fiscal year basis, i.e. employment of one person for 12 months, two persons for six months, et cetera.

The Treasury Board controlled federal Public Service had decreased in size by 8,900 person-years or 3.7 per cent between April 1, 1985, and April 1, 1987. The total number of person-year authorities approved for Main Estimates 1987-88 is 233,454 person-years. Further detail is available in Supplementary Table 2.2S p. 16, Part I of the 1987-88 Main Estimates.

2. As mentioned when tabling the Main Estimates, the President of the Treasury Board will be reporting more fully to Parliament with respect to the impact of the person-year reductions on human resources when the final results are available later this month (April). 3. As at December 31, 1986, there were 90,741 women (41.8 per cent) in the Public Service. In a survey conducted in 1985, 3,791 employees (1.7 per cent) identified themselves as belonging to visible minority groups. These data include indeterminate employees and term employees over six months service hired under the Public Service Employment Act. An update of the visible minorities data is planned for 1988.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BILLS AND MOTIONS—PROCEDURE AND TIMING OF DRAW FOR PRECEDENCE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I gave notice in writing today that I wanted to raise a point of order which arises from procedures before we adjourned for the Easter break. You will recall that I had discussed this with you on April 15, 1987, and we agreed that it would be raised at the earliest possible occasion upon returning to the House.

It is not a question that requires much time, but I want to make sure that members of my caucus and others in the House understand the procedures under which we operate in regard to Private Members' Bills and Motions.

As you know, according to our Standing Orders—Standing Order 31, I believe—Private Members' Bills and Motions are the object of a draw to decide who gets priority for discussion in the House.

Under your authority, Mr. Speaker, the Clerk of the House convenes these meetings for the draw and they select 20 Private Members' Business items for debate in the House. As these items are debated, they are replaced occasionally by others which are also drawn on occasion.

I want to draw Standing Order 31 and Standing Order 32 to the attention of the House. Standing Order 31(1) states:

> At the beginning of a Session, the Clerk of the House, acting on behalf of the Speaker, shall, within two sitting days of the placing on the Order Paper of separate items of Private Members' Business from at least twenty Members, notify the Members involved, of the time, date and place of a random draw to establish the order of precedence for twenty separate items of which at least twenty separate Members have given notice.

My point is that Standing Order 32 goes on to state:

> Notwithstanding Standing Order 31, the order of precedence shall not contain, at any time, more than twenty nor fewer than ten items, when there are sufficient items contained in the list which have not been given a position on the order of precedence.

The last draw on Wednesday, April 15, was scheduled at 1.30 p.m. in Room 238S. This was unusual because most of the draws are held at 3.30 p.m. We did not understand why it was being held at 1.30, and also asked why it was done before Routine Proceedings, therefore preventing many Members from presenting their Bills and having them put in the draw that day since Routine Proceedings on Wednesday are called shortly after three o'clock. The draw being held at 1.30 p.m. would eliminate a Member's chance of getting into the draw that day. That is my main point. In my view, the hour being set before Routine Proceedings, therefore before Introduction of Bills, was difficult and unusual.

I repeat that Standing Order 32 indicates that the order of precedence shall not contain at any time more than 20 nor fewer than 10 items when there are sufficient items contained on the list which have not been given a position on the order of precedence.

The Order Paper on Wednesday, April 15, showed 11 items in the order of precedence, so it was not essential to hold the draw, in my opinion.

Notice of the draw by the Acting Clerk stated that: "All motions printed on the Order Paper or Bills having received first reading at any time prior to the draw will be eligible".

The April 15 Order Paper listed 12 Private Members' Bills whose sponsors may have wanted those items included in the draw. However, since it was held at 1.30, they were indeed unable to do so, or would not have been able to have their Bills or Motions in the draw.

Through no fault of the Members sponsoring the Bills, for some days the House did not reach the place in Routine Proceedings where Bills could be introduced.

My point is that Members have a right to table with the House initiatives, Bills and Motions and they are subject to a draw which normally is held at 3.30 in the afternoon. In this case, it was held earlier, at 1.30. If this is repeated, or becomes a precedent, it could cause difficulties with Members.

I want to ensure that the House understands my point, that I would like to see the draws held at the normal time, after Routine Proceedings, at 3.30 or later that day so that Members would not be shortchanged of their right to table those Bills.

Mr. Speaker: Are other Members rising on this point?

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has raised a point of which the Chair was aware. I think he put it very succinctly and I want to assure the Hon. Member and other Members that the Chair will be diligent to ensure that this does not happen. However, I will consider the matter carefully and come back with a reasoned decision on this, because I believe the points made by the Hon. Member are clear to all Hon. Members and concern a situation which I think calls for correction. I thank the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that because of the Minister's statement, Government Orders will be extended by 26 minutes today, starting at 1 p.m.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON REINSTATEMENT

The House resumed from Monday, April 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

> That this House supports, in principle, the reinstatement of capital punishment and directs that a special committee on reinstatement, composed of 15 members, be established, hold hearings and make its final report to the House no later than three (3) months following the adoption of this motion, such report to provide recommendations on:
> (a) which offence or offences should carry the death penalty, and in what circumstances;
> (b) which method or methods should be used to carry out the penalty of death, and in what circumstances;
> That, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), this special committee be hereby appointed as a committee to prepare and bring in a bill no later than three months following the adoption of this motion, founded on the committee's recommendations on (a) and (b) above; such a bill shall be the object of a separate and distinct report of the special committee, and such a report shall be its final report;

That such bill, when reported from such special committee to the House, be deemed pursuant to Standing Order 107(1) to have been introduced and stand on the Order Paper, in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business"; and that, when the said bill has been read a second time, it shall stand referred to a Legislative Committee;

That the Striking Committee be empowered to name the Members of the special committee, provided that once the Striking Committee report is laid upon the Table, it shall be deemed concurred in;

That the special committee have the power to sit while the House is sitting and during periods when the House stands adjourned;

That the special committee be empowered to report from time to time and send for persons and papers, and to print such papers and evidence from time to time as may be ordered by the committee and to retain the services of expert, technical, professional and clerical staff;

That the special committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place inside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the appropriate staff accompany the committee;

That a quorum of the special committee be eight (8) members for any vote, resolution or other decision; and that the chairman be authorized to hold meetings to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof whenever six (6) members are present;

That any substitution of membership on the special committee be made pursuant to Standing Order 94(4); and

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when the special committee is ready to issue its final report and the said bill, the special committee shall present its report and the bill to the House by filing them with the Clerk of the House provided that the report shall then be deemed to have been laid upon the Table, and the bill shall then be deemed, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), to have been introduced at the first sitting of the House thereafter and to stand on the Order Paper in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business".

Hon. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to speak against the motion to reinstate capital punishment. I do so for three reasons which I will briefly describe now and elaborate on in some detail later.

First, I do not believe that a return to capital punishment is a deterrent to murder. The facts and figures do not substantiate such a belief and I hope to be able to demonstrate that in a few minutes.

The second reason I do not support capital punishment is on moral and religious grounds. From a personal point of view, I could not support a return to capital punishment in Canada.

The third reason is that the possibility always exists that a mistake will be made. As long as human beings are in the courts and judges are making decisions, there is always the possibility of a mistake being made.

Before I explain my reasons in greater detail, I want to preface my remarks by saying that in 1976 when we voted on capital punishment in this Chamber I was in favour of capital punishment. The main reason for my support at that time was that I believed capital punishment would be a deterrent to premeditated murder. I feel that I was wrong and I think the statistics show unequivocally that it is not a deterrent. Furthermore, I have a deeper conviction from a moral and religious point of view which, of course, is my own, that capital punishment is not the way to proceed.

There are too many variables to allow the state the right to take a human life. I believe that allowing the state to take lives, even under certain circumstances which some Members have suggested, sends the wrong signals to society in general. I believe it is wrong from a moral point of view.

First, I want to explain the reasons why I believe capital punishment is not a deterrent. When one talks to the experts, the sociologists and so on, and reads what they have written, one sees three main classes of criminals. The first class is described as the professional criminal. That person never intends to kill, but when he or she does kill it is usually because of being surprised at various events, in other words, a policeman drives by, gets out of his car and goes to see what has happened. The person is surprised and reacts in a violent manner. Obviously, capital punishment was not in the mind of that particular individual at that time, so in my opinion it would not act as a deterrent.

The second class of criminal is the amateur, the person who is more fearful and unpredictable. They are considered dangerous in the extreme. In many cases life has no meaning for them and, as a sociologist would say, they could kill at the slightest provocation. That type of individual commits the kinds of crimes which get the headlines. These crimes are committed without thought, and, of course, without thought there is no premeditation, so once again capital punishment would not necessarily be a deterrent in that case.

The third class of criminal, into which fit most of the so-called killers or people who kill, is called the "domestic" killer. It could be anyone, a neighbour, a friend, someone working in a grocery store, a doctor, anyone at all. He or she kills out of passion spontaneously and without thought or care. By far the greatest number of criminal deaths are of this particular class, and when that kind of situation arises there is no thought of deterrence. Therefore, I do not believe the thought of execution will hold back any of these particular individuals.

The truth is that there is no evidence to show that violent criminals are deterred by the death penalty. In fact, the lowest murder rates are found in countries where the death penalty has been abolished for a long time, such as the United Kingdom, Sweden, Austria, Italy, and in the States of Wisconsin and Main in the United States.

In the State of Florida there have been 16 executions since the ruling of the Supreme Court in 1976 that the death penalty was not cruel and unusual punishment. These executions are exceeded in number only by the State of Texas which has a total of 20 executions.

Florida's death row houses approximately 260 convicts, which is more than any other state at the present time, yet Amnesty International has noted that Florida's murder rate is higher now than it was during the period between 1964 and 1979 when the electric chair was not used. The only logical conclusion which can be drawn from such studies is that there is no demonstrable evidence that capital punishment has ever actually had a significant deterrent effect on the rate of homicides, including murder.

These results dovetail with what we found in Canada. Statistics Canada reports that most victims continue to be single males who are usually killed in their own homes by someone they know, most likely a relative. Alcohol and drugs often contribute to the murder. In other words, it is a domestic type of killing. In such instances deterrence is highly unlikely to play a factor because the murder in such circumstances results from thoughtless explosions of violence, usually associated with highly agitated, passionate scenarios.

Statistics Canada also reiterated just how rare homicides are in Canada. Between 1975 and 1984 there was an average of 2.78 homicides for every 100,000 Canadians compared with 14 suicides and 20 motor vehicle deaths for every 100,000 people. If our interests truly lie in saving lives, then our best efforts should clearly be directed in pursuit of other than the re-introduction of the death penalty or capital punishment.

The argument is made that the death penalty can be used to ensure that the person or persons do not murder again. Despite the overwhelming statistical evidence that capital punishment will not lead to the reduction of the rate of murder, death penalty advocates continue to claim that it is necessary to ensure that the specific convicted murderer is permanently deterred from killing again. In other words, they do not get back into society to repeat that kind of offence.

Statistics show that this claim is absolutely false. Of 384 paroled murderers between 1970 and 1984 not one murdered again. The most recent study by the National Parole Board shows that between 1975 and 1986, 473 convicted persons were released on parole. Two murderers murdered a second time. Both of these murderers had originally been convicted of non-capital murder. Therefore, the reintroduction of the death penalty would not have had any affect whatsoever according to the National Parole Board.

No paroled murderers have been convicted of manslaughter, attempted murder or even wounding. Once again these are statistics which come from the parole board.

The simple truth is that the death penalty retentionists have no statistical evidence to support their contention that capital punishment is a deterrent to murder. Even the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, a long time advocate of capital punishment, has recently conceded that it is useless to argue for capital punishment on the basis of deterrence.

If an iron tight convincing argument cannot be made for the use of capital punishment as a deterrence, what then? I suppose it can be argued that in some cases it can be used in terms of vengeance, although I would hope that as a civilized society we have come further than the biblical adage, "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth".

This leads me to my second reason for not supporting capital punishment. I think it is morally wrong. I also do not support it on religious grounds. Proponents of the death penalty believe it is morally correct to kill murderers. One usually finds that such a position is derived from either a perceived moral imperative giving the state the right to kill in order to fulfil its obligations to protect its citizens, or from the oft quoted biblical precept I mentioned earlier, "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth".

Besides confirming a mixed-up argument that it is morally right to kill someone in order to demonstrate that killing someone is wrong, there is the question of whether or not the death penalty actually does what its proponents tell us it does. New executions help to convince society that violence and murder are morally wrong. However, I believe that executions lead society to the completely opposite conclusion, and in a completely wrong direction. In effect, I believe it leads society to more violence and murder.

Some experts think that some people see an execution as a prescription and not a threat. In other words, he or she would think that if the state can do this why can't I do the same thing? There is a saying that the state affects the conduct and actions of its citizens more by the standards of its own behaviour than by the penalty it inflicts on others, and I believe that to be true. There is a danger in forgetting this point and charging on with the destructive course of action vindicated only by the declaration that it is morally correct.

Indeed, to reinstate the death penalty in Canada would be to place this country in the same dubious league as such regimes as Iran, South Africa, the Soviet Union and Saudi Arabia. It is important to note that apart from the United States, Ireland and Liechtenstein, all western industrialized countries have abolished the death penalty.

I do not believe that governments can use capital punishment as a means of protecting society. By using capital punishment to protect society, we degrade the very values that make society worth protecting. The execution of an individual is an act of violence, and as such it can never be moral in a society which supposedly abhors violence. It has been demonstrated repeatedly that violence tends to provoke further violence.

I believe it is the moral duty of the state to protect the lives of all persons within the jurisdiction of the state, without exception.

I am also opposed to capital punishment on religious grounds. It is perhaps more difficult to express one's feelings on capital punishment on religious grounds than on any other, the reason being that religious beliefs are so highly personal in nature. In making these remarks, I want it to be clear that I do not put down the points of view of others. I have Christian friends here in the House of Commons on both sides of this particular issue. The views I am about to express represent my personal feelings, and in making them I shall try not to be judgmental of others.

In considering this issue on religious grounds, one has to make certain assumptions, the first being that one believes in the Bible and in the significance of the life of Jesus Christ. If one believes in the Bible and in Jesus Christ, one should consider the issue of capital punishment in the light of the message of Jesus Christ, namely, the message of love.

Normally if one looks up to someone, one tries to imitate the life of that individual. In the case of Jesus Christ, of course, that is an impossibility. One could not even come close to imitating the life of Jesus Christ. However, one should do one's best to try to imitate the life of the individual to whom one looks up to. To do that, one needs to learn as much as one can about the life of that particular person. In the case of Jesus Christ, we read the Bible. An individual then, in one's own life, tries to show as much love, compassion and understanding in caring for one's fellow human beings as possible.

Of course, as I have already mentioned, in the case of trying to imitate the life of Jesus Christ, we will never succeed, nor do I think we were ever meant to succeed; but perhaps through studying His life, and our reflecting on His life and His character, we may be able to stretch ourselves toward His aims. By striving to imitate Him, we will become better human beings.

A good example of what can be achieved by imitating the life of Jesus Christ is the work and life of Mother Theresa.

In any event, if the life and message of Jesus Christ is the basis upon which one bases one's thoughts, then one has to ask how Jesus Christ would have dealt with this particular issue, or any other issue, and specifically how He would have voted were He here in Parliament casting a vote on capital punishment.

I believe that Jesus saw some good in every human being. It was His belief that every person had the potential to be rehabilitated, and had the right to be loved and to be cared for. No matter what a person had done, He would not wish to give up on them and simply turn them over to the state to be executed.

While there are passages in the Bible that seem to support the use of the death penalty, they are, in my opinion, at odds with the over-all emphasis on the sanctity of life that is expressed in the Bible. The message in the Bible is one of redemption, one of forgiveness. It is not one of vengeance.

The issue of capital punishment is, for me, a deeply moral and religious one. I could not vote in favour of capital punishment. Were I to do so, I could not live with myself and my beliefs.

The third argument against capital punishment is the ever-present possibility of a mistake being made. In our legal system, human error is inevitable. We all know that. While we may not want to admit it, we know that mistakes are inevitable. Usually a mistake made as part of the judicial process can be revoked completely or in part. That is not so when an innocent person has been executed.

We can all name names and quote the well-known stories that serve to illustrate that particular point.

Capital punishment, being ultimate, being final, being irrevocable, is different from all other penalties. The death penalty has been set aside in nearly all of the forward-thinking countries of the world. Canada would be taking a step backwards if it were to reinstate capital punishment.

For all of the reasons I have enunciated, Mr. Speaker, I shall be voting against the resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), on a question or comment.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the contribution of the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), for whom I have the utmost respect. On this issue, however, we do part company.

I wish to first make a comment, and then pose a couple of questions to the Hon. Member.

While attending a meeting of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General this morning on behalf of another Member, I heard a statement made by the Commissioner of the Correctional Services of Canada to the effect that the protection of society is our primary objective. I wish to draw that statement to the Hon. Member's attention this morning; that is, that the protection of society is our primary objective in considering the correctional services of Canada.

If I recall correctly, the Hon. Member made the assertion in his remarks that capital punishment constitutes an act of violence, and he went on to question whether governments, in imposing capital punishment, are acting morally right or morally correct.

With that background, I should like to pose two questions to the Hon. Member.

First of all, does the Hon. Member believe that peace officers have a responsibility to protect our citizens, to protect society; and if so, I would ask him to outline for me why it is our peace officers carry firearms and the circumstances under which a peace officer would discharge a firearm in the line of duty?

And secondly, does he believe that governments have the right to protect their citizens with the use of armed forces, and do the members of our Armed Forces, acting for us, have the moral imperative to use weapons; and if so, under what circumstances?

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) has asked whether governments have a duty to use weapons to protect society, and by that I take him to mean the armed forces of a country—and of course, I agree that they do.

I do not really draw the parallel between that and the issue of the death penalty. I do not see how the protection of society in that context is brought into this debate. Certainly society can be protected in many ways other than the use of the death penalty.

My argument in this case is that I do not think society is protected through the use of the death penalty, nor has it ever been. That is the way in which I would approach it.

Our police officers and prison guards have a very difficult job. We are all in agreement in that respect. I do not know of any other group of people who get more respect from Canadians generally than do our police officers and prison guards. However, I do not think—and this is where my friend and I do part company—that the imposition of the death penalty will make the jobs of our police officers and prison guards any safer whatsoever.

Perhaps I could return to my opening remarks in terms of the various classes of criminals, why people murder, and whether or not they think of the consequences of murder. I do not think it makes any difference whatsoever. I suggest that the Hon. Member ask the policemen in the State of Florida whether or not it makes any difference. They would say that it does not make any difference, and capital punishment is in place in the State of Florida.

I do not think anything I have seen would lead me to the conclusion that reinstating the death penalty, bringing back capital punishment, would make anybody's life easier. I think it takes a little away from each and every one of us.

I remember listening to John Diefenbaker when he was Prime Minister and had to deal with the particular question. In my opinion we must realize that each one of us is responsible for pulling the rope which opens the trapdoor or pushing the button which starts electricity flowing in the electric chair. That is the kind of vote in which we are involved. I frankly could not do it for the reasons I have outlined.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I commend the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta). I think we have seen something in the House today which is very rare—a Member having gone through a thinking process and changed his mind on the issue. That takes tremendous courage, and I think he ought to be complimented from all sides of the House for doing what he has done today.

The Hon. Member for Lisgar decided to have the courage of his convictions and to follow his convictions on this very sensitive and difficult issue. I want to go on record as publicly complimenting him. I have known him since the 1971 by-election. I know he is a very sincere person.

He would agree with me when I say that in the ultimate, in addition to listening to our constituents, what we owe our constituents most is our judgment and to have the courage of our convictions in terms of making judgments on important issues of the day. That is the most important thing we can do as Members of Parliament.

I am one of those Members of Parliament who really looks askance at some colleagues—and I will not mention them—who conduct surveys in their ridings and respond as a result of those questionnaires. I know, Mr. Speaker, that you are one of the better political scientists in the House. You are a long-time organizer. You know the volatility of surveys and public opinions. You know that how the question is asked can often determine the results of the survey. I think we are doing a great disservice to Canada, to society, and to our constituents if we use that kind of shallow device in terms of making a decision on the issue.

The Hon. Member for Lisgar is a shining example of what should be done. He made the decision that he owes his constituents his judgment and his conscience. He has put a lot of thought and a lot of meditation into the issue. I just want to say in this question and comment period that he ought to be complimented, because we in one Party or another often do not do enough of that in the House. Being a democratic socialist, and he being a Conservative, there are times when we disagree. However, we know where the Hon. Member for Lisgar stands. He is a straight shooter and a very sincere person.

Perhaps I could ask a little question at this point. Since the Hon. Member referred to the church, the teachings of Jesus Christ, and other references to religion, could he inform the House on what role the major churches in Manitoba are playing in this debate? One very positive thing which I saw in my constituency is that the Catholic Church and others are now starting to play a very major role in terms of providing information to the public about the immorality of a society intentionally taking the life of human beings, as is done in the Soviet Union, in Turkey, or in many dictatorial states in the world. I am very proud of the position of the churches in Saskatchewan, and I want to ask the Hon. Member if he could give us information about the campaign of the churches in Manitoba.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). He and I have been long-time colleagues in the House of Commons. Regardless of Party lines, we have been very good friends for the last 17 or so years.

The churches in the Province of Manitoba are taking a far more active interest in this debate than they were two or three weeks ago. Obviously the churches are not all together on this particular issue, as I suppose they should be. They certainly reflect their congregations and from where, in effect, their members come.

The national church organizations in the Province of Manitoba are solidly against the reintroduction of capital punishment. That goes right through the gambit, from the United Church, to the Catholic, to the Mennonite Central Committee, et cetera. Of course individually the positions of churches are somewhat different because their members have the freedom to view the issue as they see it. I guess that is what I tried to outline in my speech. I view the issue from a religious point of view, my own personal point of view. I did not try to put my religious point of view on to anyone else. A sad commentary about religion in the world is that we have had too many wars because of it, and I do not think we need another one on the whole question of capital punishment.

I hope the churches become more vocal. They have a major role to play. Certainly before the debate is over I suspect that they will all make their voices heard loud and clear.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I commend the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) for the way in which he presented his opinions to us during this debate. It is a very personal issue. This is a debate on an issue of conscience. Of course, we will be carrying out a free vote. Each of us will be free to follow the dictates of our conscience as we see fit.

I also appreciate the way in which the Hon. Member was very sensitive to the fact that the Christian church is divided on the issue. There are Christians who are good friends and work together on other issues, as do we, but who are divided on the issue of capital punishment. I appreciate the Hon. Member's sensitivity to that and the fact that we are not trying to say necessarily that one person is better or worse than another because of it. We simply differ.

Also the Hon. Member mentioned that one of the responsibilities or obligations of a Christian is to mirror the mercy, compassion, and message of reconciliation of Jesus Christ. I agree with him. However, how do we take the other role which we have as Members of Parliament, that is, to write laws which protect society from the criminal element to the degree we can?

As Christians we could look, for example to Romans Chapter 13, with which I know the Hon. Member is familiar, and the fourth verse which indicates—and I am not quoting it exactly—that the civil authority is the minister or servant of God to act as God's agent, to execute his wrath upon the evildoer.

We also have that role as Members of Parliament. We have chosen to be here. We have chosen that role. However, how do we bring together those two roles—the role to mirror the message of mercy, compassion, and reconciliation and the role to be His servants or agents to control evil within our society? How does the Hon. Member reconcile those two roles?

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer). He is a very sensitive individual. I know his questions come from a very deep understanding and searching soul in terms of trying to do good for the country.

Of course I have no pat solutions, but I can only comment on the way in which I try to deal with the question. I try to take the issues as they come up and deal with them vis-à-vis my own particular belief in how I interpret the Bible, my Christian belief and thoughts which I share and express with a small group of people as I move throughout the days and weeks around this particular institution.

We write laws to protect society. That is part of our job. It is the soul searching that goes into those particular laws with which we must grapple. I know the Hon. Member will agree with me when I say that in trying to be more Christ-like makes decision-making in this place much more difficult than I would have thought say five to eight years ago. It is a difficult process. You take every issue as an individual issue and you try to grapple with it. You fight with it, and you try to come out on the side of what you think is right from your own valued perspective. If you do not, that is when the rubber hits the road. You either stand up and be counted as an individual, or you go along with the group and live to fight another day, as they say. That, once again, is a decision for each of us to make.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on perhaps one of the most fundamental questions to be studied by this House since I became a Member of Parliament in 1979. In answering the question before the House we will in many ways be explaining and shaping the kind of society we as a nation want to become; what kind of civilization we are in Canada. I believe we would be taking a giant step backward as a nation if we were to reinstate the death penalty in Canada.

I would like to quote the words of Winston Churchill who, in speaking in the British House of Commons many years ago, in 1910, said this:

> The mood and temper of the public with regard to the treatment of crime and criminals is one of the most unfailing tests of the civilization of any country. These are the symbols which make and measure the stored up strength of a nation and are sign and proof of the living virtue in it.

A few years ago we in this Parliament adopted a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That Charter provided for the fundamental right to life and the right to be protected against cruel and unusual treatment and punishment. As the former Member for St. John's East, Mr. McGrath, said in speaking on this question:

> —does Canada, with its new and enlightened Constitution, want to turn back the clock on progress and be one of the very few democracies to restore capital punishment?

The presence of the former Member for St. John's East is sorely missed in this House, particularly on this fundamental question of what kind of nation we in Canada want to be.

I want to join with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), in congratulating the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), who in 1976 voted in favour of capital punishment as a Conservative Member of Parliament and today had the courage to stand in this House and say that he has examined the issue and is now opposed to capital punishment.

When looking around the House during the very eloquent remarks of the Member for Lisgar I regretfully noted an almost empty Chamber. I know there are still Members of this House whose minds are not made up on the issue, and I can only hope that those Members will take heed of the words of the Member for Lisgar who spoke with such conviction about why he has changed his mind since 1976.

I believe it would be profoundly wrong for Canada to join the company of such countries as Iraq, Iran, the Soviet Union, South Africa and Chile, nations which retain capital punishment as the ultimate punishment. Canada would indeed be the only nation in the western world to legislatively reinstate capital punishment after having abolished it.

In 1983 the Parliament of the United Kingdom, dominated overwhelmingly by Conservatives with a Prime Minister who strongly supports capital punishment, voted solidly to reject the reinstatement of capital punishment in that country. Just a few weeks ago that same Parliament voted once again, even more strongly, by a margin of 342 to 230, to reject the reinstatement of capital punishment in Britain.

We have to ask ourselves again that basic question, the question that goes right to the core of this issue, the question that is asked by the church leaders in Canada; "Why kill people who kill people to show that killing people is wrong?" It is as stark and as fundamental as that, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

I must point out that all major religious groups in Canada, including the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Anglican Church, the United Church of Canada, the Presbyterian Church, the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec, the Canadian Unitarian Council, the Evangelical Lutheran Church, the Mennonite Central Committee and the Religious Society of Friends, all officially support the abolition of capital punishment. Pope John Paul II himself has said he is firmly opposed to capital punishment.

[English]

Recently this House was honoured by the presence of the widow of Martin Luther King, Coretta Scott King. Speaking as a Christian she said:

> I believe in the power of transformation and that we as Christians have an obligation to try to work for a reconciliation where it is at all possible.—
> I regret very much that our country is moving backwards instead of continuing to move forward on the capital punishment issue. I will continue to speak out against the death penalty, because I think it is barbaric for a civilized nation such as the United States . . . I certainly hope Canada will not fall into that.

As was said previously, we must surely recognize the sanctity and the value of all human life in our society. In doing so we must ask ourselves why it is that we as a society, as a Parliament, should single out, in particular, murder in terms of the cause of death in our society. In fact, it is quite appropriate that I should be speaking today, April 28, which is the annual day of mourning for workers who are killed and injured on the job. There are more workers killed in Canada on the job each year than Canadians who are murdered.

In 1985, for example, 768 Canadians lost their lives on the job. The fatality rate in Canada for high-risk occupations is staggering. Fishing, the most dangerous occupation in Canada, takes 207 people per 100,000. Forestry takes 129 per 100,000, mining takes 122 per 100,000 and construction takes 48 per 100,000. I am from the Province of British Columbia and already this year 11 men have been killed on the job in the forests of British Columbia. In 1986, despite a lengthy industrial strike, 37 men were killed, six of them chewed up by machines in mill accidents. In 1985, 35 were killed. Similarly in the mining industry, recently four lives were lost in a mine in Sudbury. As said by NDP, MPP Elie Martel, who has fought for years for better occupational health and safety laws, "Miners' deaths go unreported. We kill them like they are black flies".

Let us place a value on all human life in our society and recognize that we must take effective steps to stop death and to prevent violent death however it may occur. An average of 12 people die every year in house fires on Indian reserves in British Columbia alone. Those are preventable deaths. Many more people die at their own hand, suicide, than die as a result of murder. In British Columbia last year, 28 boys and nine girls, teenagers, took their own lives. We must recognize this situation and take steps as a society to deal with that cause of violent death. We must deal with death in traffic accidents and death at the hands of drunk drivers, all far more common.

Of course we value and must protect the lives of prison guards and police officers, but all life is sacred. The state has no right to terminate any human life.

As was said last year by Normand Bergeron, Quebec City Chief of Police, if a community deplores an act as barbaric as the murder of two police officers, how can we, as representatives of our society, recommend another equally barbaric act? This would make no sense at all. Mr. Speaker, the Chief of Police of the Montreal Urban Community, Rolland Bourget, spoke out against reinstating the death penalty. He said: Personally, I am against the death penalty.

[English]

It has been 25 years since the last execution in Canada. It has been 11 years since this Parliament voted to abolish capital punishment. The onus lies squarely on those who would reinstate the death penalty to demonstrate that conditions have changed in such a way as to call into question that decision. There is no evidence whatsoever to support that argument. Fundamentally, there is no evidence to suggest that capital punishment would deter violent death or murder in Canada. Indeed, the Conservative Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said the following recently:

> Where you have a penalty it should be demonstrated to be a deterrent with respect to the activity for which it is a penalty. There has been no increase in the incidence of homicide or murder since the abolition of capital punishment has taken place.

Similar statements have been made by Canadian chiefs of police who recognize that deterrence is not a viable argument.

Indeed, there was a significant drop of 20 per cent in the murder rate in Canada last year. There was an even more dramatic drop in the rate of first-degree murder. In 1985, there were 338 first-degree murders, and in 1986 that figure went to 260. There is no evidence to support the argument that reinstating capital punishment will save lives or prevent murder.

In the United States, a far more violent society than ours, capital punishment is retained in 37 of the 50 states. We recognize that Canadians' perception of violence is distorted as well and much of that emanates from the media. Violence can only beget more violence. As Gandhi said, "The trouble with an eye for an eye is that it leaves the whole world blind".

If deterrence must be discarded as an argument in favour of capital punishment, clearly the only possible argument in favour of it is vengeance. Vengeance as the foundation for punishment must be rejected in any civilized society.

Recently in my constituency I met with three women whose lives had been personally touched by murder, Alice Shook, Lilian Gamblen and Doreen Helm. I knew Doreen Helm's daughter personally. She was brutally murdered. Alice Shook lost a young daughter and Lilian Gamblen's husband was murdered. These women support capital punishment, not because they are killers, not because they are blood-thirsty or seeking revenge but because they believe that the persons who inflicted pain and suffering on their loved ones must forfeit the right to live. They recognize that this will not save any lives and we must all be sensitive to and feel the pain that they feel. However, we must not allow that pain and suffering to ultimately guide us in redrafting the law.

Other victims have taken a different position. The Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) has quoted the parents of Alison Parrott who was abducted and murdered. He quoted Esther Aucoin who lost her husband, a member of the New Brunswick Highway Patrol. She read out a statement at his funeral saying that he did not believe in capital punishment and that if he were there that day, he would say that it is the system that needs to be changed so that officers do not have to be alone on duty, and a full radio system should be in place both in cars and in portables.

Let us look at prevention. Let us look at strengthening Canada's gun-control legislation. Let us put more resources and attention toward the problem of domestic violence, including the physical and sexual abuse of children. Let us find more resources for alcohol and drug treatment and education. Let us break the vicious cycle of poverty, unemployment, homelessness and crime. Let us deal with the problems of those who are mentally ill and tackle the tragedy of teenage suicide. We should do what we can about violence in the media as well.

Having looked at all these methods of prevention, we must also recognize that there are other powerful arguments against capital punishment. I will not elaborate at length on those arguments because they have been made well by others. There is a risk that an innocent life may be taken. I have a newspaper here with the headline "Innocent man to go free". After nine years in jail, an innocent man convicted of murder was freed. A young Micmac Indian, Donald Marshall, was in the same situation.

We know as well that it is not the rich and powerful who hang; it is the poor, the illiterate, the uneducated, native people and blacks. As the late United States Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas stated, "One searches our chronicles in vain for the execution of any member of the affluent strata of this society".

Juries are more likely to convict when capital punishment has been reinstated in a society. Statistics show that clearly. As well, it is possible that some individuals may in fact murder because they themselves are suicidal and wish to have their lives taken. In fact, one individual who was convicted of murder said this to police, "I wish you'd blow my head off. If they had the death penalty, I might think of killing one of those kids. I want to die". That is a suicide murder.

Finally, for those who believe that we should actually place a price tag on human life, capital punishment costs more. It costs more because the appeals are lengthy, dragged out and expensive.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote Robert Badinter, who was responsible for the abolition of the guillotine in France. He said:

> We know it will be a long and difficult struggle and that the primitive avenger hidden in everyone of us will be reluctant to lay down his arms. Nevertheless, I am confident that in the end we will win this battle, and so, I say, let us start now and never give up until we succeed.

[English]

In conclusion, I would like to move an amendment to this resolution, an amendment which would broaden the scope of the committee proceedings. Having said that, of course my colleagues and I intend to unanimously vote against this resolution for the reasons enunciated by my Leader and I, and for the reasons that will certainly be enunciated by other Hon. Members. However, this amendment would at least improve a process which is already very flawed, a process which denies Canadians input into the fundamental question of whether or not we should reinstate capital punishment. I therefore move:

> The deletion of all the words after "That" in line 1 up to and including the word "that" in line 2 and the words "on reinstatement" in line 3.

The effect of this amendment would be to ensure that the committee, which may be struck but hopefully will not be struck, would have the opportunity to hear from those Canadians who are profoundly and fundamentally opposed to capital punishment as well as hearing from those Canadians who merely wish to have input into the nature of crimes for which execution may be an option and the type of execution to be used. I fervently hope that this Parliament will reject any suggestion of the establishment of a committee, and that we will vote down capital punishment. If not, at least this would broaden the scope of the committee's hearings. It is for that reason that I propose the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair finds the amendment in order. Questions and comments?

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to hear the Hon. Member outline in very eloquent terms his defence of life and that life is sacred. He invoked the support of the Catholic Church for his position. He also spoke about his desire to put an end to violence against people and his rejection of capital punishment as an act of violence. While listening to him I could not help but be struck by the reality that as we speak hundreds of unborn children in this country are being killed. Those lives, which are also sacred, are being arbitrarily and very violently ended. Unborn children across this country are being suctioned from the womb by women who want to put an end to their pregnancy. Those children are being dismembered. Does the Hon. Member support that destruction of the lives of unborn children? If so, how does he reconcile his support of abortion on demand and the violent execution of 60,000 unborn children in this country every year with his support of the case against the reinstatement of capital punishment?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, before responding directly to the question of the Hon. Member, might I just say that I am very pleased to note that he has publicly stated his opposition to the reinstatement of the death penalty in Canada. I am very pleased that he has taken that position.

The Hon. Member asked me a question, which I recognize is serious and important, with respect to the value and sanctity of life in our society. He suggests that in some way there may be a contradiction between the position of those of us who support freedom of choice on the question of therapeutic abortion and our position with respect to the abolition of capital punishment. I recognize the point made by the Hon. Member but, with respect, I must say that I do not believe there is any inherent contradiction between the two positions.

I share with the Hon. Member the concern that the number of abortions in Canada must be reduced to the greatest possible extent. We as a society must do everything in our power to reduce the number of abortions in Canada. That means we must take effective measures towards educating our young people on sexuality. We must do what we can towards making birth control available, not just to young people but generally in our society. However, at the end of the day we have to ask ourselves whether it is not the case that the woman bearing the child should not herself have the right to make that very fundamental choice—

Mr. O'Neil: To kill.

Mr. Robinson: —of whether or not her pregnancy should continue. There are many, many reasons why women have abortions. In some cases the continued pregnancy represents a threat to the health or life of the mother. In other cases, tragically, the mother simply feels she cannot bear the child because she is in a situation where it is impossible to provide the kind of care, attention and love, and economic support in some cases, that is necessary for the child. Ultimately I believe we as a society should recognize that, having taken all possible steps to reduce the number of abortions in Canada, we must leave the decision to the woman herself.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I realize the importance attached to this issue and the emotions that surround it. However, the Hon. Member referred to economic reasons as justification for what in the eyes of many of us is virtually murder. Am I correct in what I heard? Is the Hon. Member basing his decision to eliminate the life of a child in these circumstances on economic reasons?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, what I am saying is that the tragic reality in Canada today is that there are single parents in our society who are in such a desperate, economic or financial situation that they simply cannot feed their children. That is a tragedy. We know that in British Columbia there are children who go to school without breakfast and who have no lunch. Yes, there are women who, as a result of desperate grinding poverty, say they do not have the resources to bring a child into the world. That is sad. That is a tragedy. We should deal with that by doing whatever we can as a society to improve the situation of those desperate mothers. The reality is that children should be wanted. They should be provided for. By putting women in and tolerating a situation of desperate poverty, we have to recognize that fundamental decision is often and unfortunately made on the basis of the fact that the woman will not be able to provide a secure environment for the child. That is indeed most unfortunate and most tragic.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Burnaby pointed out, as other speakers have and will, that capital punishment does not act in any effective way as a deterrent to further murders. Yet I think there is a perception among the general public that it does act as a deterrent. In fact, I think a lot of the support that some people have for capital punishment is based on the fact that they think capital punishment is going to deter future murderers. Could the Member address that fact? How can we give more leadership and get the message across that this is not a deterrent? Is there something more the Government should be doing in this regard?

I noted that the Member read from the speech of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and I appreciated that. However, perhaps the Government could be more high profile on this issue, particularly Members like the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who is, himself, an opponent of capital punishment. Is there something that he could and should be doing to illustrate to the Canadian people that capital punishment is not an effective deterrent to further murders?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of my colleague, the Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands

(Mr. Manly) because I think it goes to another very important issue, that the vast majority of Canadians who support capital punishment genuinely and deeply believe that it is a deterrent, that it will save lives.

If we can show that the reality is very different, if we can demonstrate to those Canadians who support capital punishment because they believe it will save lives that they are mistaken, I suspect that the proportion of Canadians who would be prepared to sanction killing by the state would drop quite dramatically.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I say that it is incumbent upon those who are in leadership positions in the Government not to abdicate that leadership, not to opt out of the debate, but to speak up, as has the Minister of Justice, to point out that in fact the sole basis for the return of capital punishment in our society is vengeance, that there is no deterrent effect.

I hope that those in the Cabinet in particular who feel strongly on this question and know that even the chiefs of police have abandoned the argument of deterrence will use their positions to demonstrate to Canadians that the restoration of the death penalty will save no lives at all and, indeed, may even result in the taking of more lives because there are those who will use it as a desperate kind of suicide attempt.

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to be able to finish my dissertation before the House adjourns for lunch.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) to complete his speech which, of course, would be a maximum of 20 minutes?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House today to take part in what I consider to be a very emotional issue which will go to the heart of each and every Member of this House. At the onset of my delivery I would like to enunciate clearly to all of my hon. colleagues in this House, and all the Canadian people whom we represent, that I know this issue has been debated at length all over the world and that unanimity has never been reached on the subject. However, I do believe that a majority consensus has been arrived at in Canada, and that is that certain selected crimes should be subject to a form of capital punishment.

For a brief moment I would like to address my remarks to my constituents in Mission—Port Moody. In the by-election of 1983, and in the general election of 1984, I clearly stated that should the opportunity present itself I would vote for the reinstatement of capital punishment for specific and selected crimes. Today, through you, Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise my constituents that I have not changed my position on this issue.

In the past four years I have prepared and presented Private Members' Bills on capital punishment for this House and Members to consider. I will continue to pursue a direction which I believe will better protect the citizens of this country. As a humble servant of all Canadians, and after having served Canadians as a law enforcement officer, I will attempt today to express my views on this very important topic. My views are not only those of a citizen of our country but, as well, of one who has served in the trenches of law enforcement waging what I believe is an incessant war against crime.

My entire presentation today will be based on what I perceive as logic, not—and I emphasize "not"—on fanaticism, hate or revenge. This issue is merely a question of law and order upheld by a system of justice with the ultimate goal of protecting our citizens from those who would diabolically and deliberately plan the death of another human being. As I have enunciated, the object of this debate is to put all the aspects of this issue before the Canadian people in this forum. I will do my utmost in the next few minutes to point out the rationale of my argument.

I also want to point out that whatever decision this House arrives at I will support unequivocally because, as important as I believe this issue is to Canadians, the fundamental principles of this institution far exceed any one piece of legislation brought before you, Sir, or this House.

On August 26, 1986, the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police prepared a position paper on capital punishment and I would like to read a portion of it into the record today. It reads as follows:

> The Canadian police community has repeatedly urged the Government of Canada to give consideration to reinstate capital punishment in one form or other, without success. Since the time of de facto abolition in 1962 there has in fact been a doubling in the homicide rate in Canada. At the same time there has been no reduction in the level of public concern about child killers, serial murders and the murder of public servants, and there is increasing concern over the growing population of convicts serving life sentences, leading to more and more acts of violence including murder in our correctional institutions.
> At the 1984 conference of the CACP the following resolution was adopted:
> Be it resolved that the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police strongly recommends to the Government of Canada to immediately undertake a complete review of this matter; recognizing public opinion and addressing the need to reinstate capital punishment as an option within our criminal justice system.

I do not promote that we listen to only one sector of our society. I repeat, we must not listen to only one sector, but certainly we must heed the opinions of those who deal with the criminal element on a day-to-day basis and who, I believe, know the situation very well. I also know that there are abolitionists among police chiefs and policemen but, as I said, we are not discussing one particular group but rather an issue of conscience, an issue for each individual to deal with.

In my opening remarks I made mention of a war against crime. Let me assure you and this House, Mr. Speaker, that it is truly as stated, a war against crime and criminals. For those of us, like the Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), who have worked the streets of our major cities and have dealt with the illicit drug trade, terrorism, child killers and serial murders, it goes without saying that a war does exist. This war is exemplified by the fact that certain cities now use vehicles similar to military tanks to carry out their day-to-day duty of law enforcement.

No, Mr. Speaker, I have not come here today to glamorize the situation, but I must tell you as one who has worked as an undercover police officer in the midst of the illicit drug trade that the value placed on human life by this group of people is negligible or none. The lack of respect for human life is borne out by the statistics of those murdered annually in North America's illicit drug trade.

This is just one area of criminal activity that has no respect at all for human life. Others include loan sharking, prostitution, gambling, extortion, kidnapping and, the worst, terrorism.

When I refer to war, I am certain that if a foreign power were to jeopardize the lives of our citizens we would not hesitate to implement capital punishment against the invaders as we protect our citizens. What is the difference between a foreign invader or a criminal invader within our own society?

I believe that we, as legislators and leaders, have a responsibility to protect our citizens from those who would seek to destroy life. Capital punishment is a necessary part of this protection, based on the ultimate action taken by the enemy. In this case, the enemy is obviously those who deliberately plan and kill innocent members of our society, including our friends and sometimes our families.

It is with the utmost respect that I say to the legal profession and the judiciary of this land that until one has been exposed to the arena of war on crime in the streets of the cities of this nation, one cannot truly evaluate the severity of the situation. One cannot truly understand the criminal mind from reading a police report, or hearing witnesses, regardless of how articulately they may be presented not until one is on the front lines and sees these individuals in action. No written words or statements after the fact can truly describe what is being dealt with.

Some say that in the minds of the law enforcement agencies capital punishment is a question of revenge as they seek to get even. I can say unequivocally that this is the furthest from the minds of police officers and correctional officers. Like other members in society, they only seek to improve their profession and work toward a society that is free of crime and violence. I believe, as the majority of Canadians believe, that we are bound to protect the essence of law and order in our Canadian cities if they are to remain safe 24 hours a day.

No person or group seeks revenge during a time of war. The only true objective is peace and safety. War criminals are not extradited for the sake of revenge but to remove those from society who deliberately plan the removal of human life and refuse to live within the normal bounds that society has established. In most instances, we do not hear the abolitionists question the handling of war criminals. Consistency must prevail.

The aspect of capital punishment as a deterrent has been much discussed. Is capital punishment a deterrent to premeditated murder? I believe that we are dealing with a question of justice, not utility. I also believe that the deterrent factor is very selective and marginal at best.

As a learned judge once wrote, "The death penalty is a warning just like a lighthouse throwing its beam out to sea. We hear about ship wrecks but we do not hear about the ships that the lighthouse guides safely on their way. We do not have proof of the number of ships it saves but we do not tear the lighthouse down".

I believe that deterrence is a factor. But the position we must take when dealing with certain crimes is that they are so terrible, so abominable, so outrageous to the public that only the ultimate penalty indicates clearly to those perpetrators that society will stand up and defend itself against these types of acts.

We must be very careful in the selection of which crimes are to be punishable by death. Even then, we should only turn to capital punishment as a court of last resort. On behalf of those who are retentionists, I am certain I can safely say that if an alternative method of dealing with these heinous crimes was to present itself and provide the protection sought by us, we would accept an option without question.

I want to briefly address the question of public opinion. We know that polls and other methods of measuring public opinion clearly indicate that in excess of 70 per cent of Canadians seek the reinstatement of capital punishment for selected acts of criminal murder.

I know that there are the psuedo-intellectuals of our Canadian society, as in all societies, who feel that the Canadian population is uninformed, basically in the stone age in their thinking. With all due respect to this so-called elitist group, they have lost sight of what is basic to our Christian Judean philosophy of life. They have become, in most cases, sectarian humanists who feel that all rules, regulations and laws, regardless of how permissive they are, must not infringe on the rights of the individual even when it comes to upholding civil obedience in our society. The fact that everyone is doing something does not make it right. They, like the previous Government from 1968 to 1984, would allow minorities to impose their will on the majority. This is not what Canadians want. They want traditional values based on the sound Christian Judean philosophy to run this country.

Canadians want both leadership and laws from the House of Commons that will not force them to form vigilante groups, or to arm themselves in their homes and businesses in order to fight off the wave of violence and crime that is gripping our society. I can refer to the incidents in Calgary, Montreal and Ontario where people have felt the necessity to arm and defend themselves as a result of the actions taken by the criminal element. We must deal with this question definitively and immediately.

We hear many statistics regarding homicides, murder rates, and infanticide rates. I say to all Canadians that statistics are general numbers. In many cases they are developed to uphold specific arguments on issues and are normally developed to the advantage of the side presenting the argument. I believe that the only statistic that is valid is the one that the homicide rate has doubled from 1962 to 1983. Certainly, populations have increased, but this is no reason to accept an increase in the rate of crime and violence as an integral part of our society. We are an advanced society and are supposed to be making progress and improving in this area.

However, I must point out to the House that if one looks at major U.S. cities there is a very thin line where cities lose their level of safety, and where the people can safely walk the streets after dark. It is incumbent upon us as legislators to be as stringent as we prudently can be, as populations increase, because the ability to supervise and police effectively decreases in direct proportion to population increases.

There are many reasons for this situation, but the main one is that law enforcement agencies and their agents have reduced personal contact and, therefore, cannot maintain the same level of control over the criminal element.

I could read into the record a multitude of statistics, but the real issue here is law and order with a well administered justice system that does not categorize or place special emphasis on the life of a police officer or prison guard, but recognizes that all lives have the same level of importance and value. If we look at the heinous serial murders and mass murders, we will see that these deliberate and vicious acts are mostly against young children, women and the poor in our society. These are the people whom we seek to protect.

In recent debates we, as a Government, have been chastised for the timing of this issue. Statements have been made that we are using it for political expedience. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated in 1984 that a free vote would take place on the issue of capital punishment. Here we are dealing with this issue, as promised. It was a promise made and another promise kept.

I would like to make reference to the motion put forward by the Government, and speak to the role of the special committee that will be struck should the initial vote in this House carry in favour of the reinstatement of capital punishment.

Some of the abolitionists have tried to portray all of us who favour the return of capital punishment as terrorists, vengeful, vindictive, sadistic, medieval types who would burn at the stake or boil in oil all persons for virtually any crime against people. Well, sir, here again they paint a false picture because I am a retentionist and I believe, as most Canadians, that we would sooner let hundreds or thousands go free than make one error in charging, prosecuting and penalizing an individual falsely.

I also feel that we must be very selective in determining which offences warrant capital punishment. The committee, I hope, will recommend check systems in the process which will make it impossible for us to commit an error in this very crucial and final process.

In closing, I would like to take this opportunity to once again emphasize that we are dealing here with a vote of conscience. During the opening day's debate, however, I could not help noticing that many people fail to recognize that this is the only route to take. When dealing with issues such as this, it is important that they not be dealt with on the basis of who is on the right and who is on the left. Rather we must deal with what is right and what is wrong.

As legislators I believe we have a responsibility to protect members of our society. In light of this, I must vote for the reinstatement of capital punishment. None the less, this is a very emotional issue. I understand that other people in this House have different opinions. It is my hope that this debate will allow Members of the House to present their views in a civil manner without bringing disgrace to this institution. It is important that all sides of this issue be presented to the Canadian people fairly, openly and honestly. I believe that when all the facts have been presented, it will be obvious that the reinstatement of capital punishment is necessary for the maintenance of law, order and safety within our Canadian society. I thank all Hon. Members for listening so attentively to my presentation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I see an Hon. Member rising. Is it the wish of the House to proceed to the period for questions and comments immediately?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to proceed to questions and comments after Question Period if this could be possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1.33 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.33 p.m. the House took recess.

TRIBUTE TO CLAUDE JUTRA

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, last week, news of the death of our great film maker, Claude Jutra, saddened all those who were familiar with his work.

Born in 1930, Claude Jutra belonged to a new generation of Canadian film makers which conquered the hearts and minds of film enthusiasts and the general public in Quebec, Canada and throughout the world.

With his singularly acute vision of society, Claude Jutra, while exploring a complex, sometimes comical, sometimes tragic world, was able to preserve something of the innocence of childhood. Influenced by his medical training, a great film technician, scenario writer, actor, and above all director, Claude Jutra made a major contribution to the burgeoning Quebec and Canadian film industry. His work sprang from a fertile social and artistic environment and reflects the Quebec of his youth and his mature years.

His many short and full-length films bear witness to his great talent. They also reflect the inspiration provided by his origins and the French Canadian and Quebec environment. I am thinking of works as varied in substance and form as Il était une chaise, an experimental film produced with Norman McLaren; A tout prendre, a very "nouvelle vague" film; Kamouraska and Mon oncle Antoine, firmly rooted in Quebec, and one of his latest films, La dame en couleurs, which takes us back to the world of childhood.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to join all Canadians in paying a last tribute to Claude Jutra, whose death has meant a great loss to Quebec cinema.

FISHERIES

REPORT ON OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA INDUSTRY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, today we recognize the pain, suffering and loss of life and health on the part of Canadian men and women in the workplace.

Nowhere is this greater than in the fishing industry. It becomes almost routine to read news items, as we did this last weekend, about fishing boats that have been lost at sea, with all hands lost.

The Gray Report on Occupational Health and Safety in the B.C. Fishing Industry points to three basic requirements for an occupational safety and health program: (1) a trained and knowledgeable workforce; (2) safe plant and equipment; and (3) understandable regulations, with a means of enforcement.

The Gray report notes problems in all three areas and recommends mandatory training and certification of fishermen, mandatory inspection of all fishing vessels, and the development of appropriate safety regulations.

I call upon the Government to act now, before more lives are lost, to implement the recommendations of the Gray report, so as to ensure the best possible fishing vessel safety program is implemented.

TRADE

DISCUSSIONS ON TRADE BETWEEN CANADA AND JAPAN

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government's concentrated efforts to expand our foreign trade markets continue to bear fruit.

This past Sunday an important three-day meeting in Japan concluded, a meeting which achieved positive results for Canada.

The Minister of International Trade (Miss Carney) met with a number of key individuals in Kashikojima on the important issues of lumber and coal sales to Japan, as well as the serious matter of foreign agricultural subsidies, something which currently bedevils our own agricultural industry.

Japan is giving serious consideration to amending its building codes to permit and promote the use of Canadian lumber in multi-storey housing construction. Such a code change would greatly enhance the potential for our lumber sales to Japan.

The Department of International Trade, under the energetic and able leadership of the Minister, continues to make great progress in promoting the diversification of our foreign trade, a trade which is essential to our national economic well-being.

While some in this House like to criticize foreign visits, they do so through ignorance and/or perceived partisan gain.

Our trade representatives, rather than staying home for the Easter vacation, were abroad on the nation's business, highly important business, and deserve our commendation for the results of their labours.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ATLANTIC ENTERPRISE PROGRAM

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—REJECTION OF CALAGRO CORPORATION PROJECT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the citizens of Prince Edward Island, and especially those of Prince County, are outraged by the federal Government's refusal to assist the greenhouse proposal made by Calagro Corporation.

Calagro Corporation had applied for interest rate buy-downs and loan guarantees under the Atlantic Enterprise Program.

When the Government unveiled this program in February of 1986, it spoke of job creation. The Calagro project would have employed about 300 people during the construction period, and the plant would have required an operational staff of 150. In addition, the spin-off benefits for the local economy would have created more jobs.

The unemployment rate in Prince Edward Island is higher now than during the recession years. These jobs are badly needed, especially in the western part of Prince Edward Island.

We all remember the slogan: "Jobs, jobs, jobs"; but that has become another empty promise for Atlantic Canadians.

The federal Government's rejection of this proposal is a slap in the face, and it is one which will not be forgotten. The lack of support of both the provincial and federal Progressive Conservatives will be remembered.

This, Mr. Speaker, is not an empty promise.

THE LATE MASUMI MITSUI

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, recently we celebrated the seventieth anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. This past weekend a veteran of that battle passed away. His name was Masumi Mitsui, and he was a Japanese Canadian.

Masumi Mitsui was born in Japan, coming to Canada in 1908. He enlisted in the Canadian Army and was promoted to sergeant. He was wounded in action and awarded the Military Medal for Bravery.

He was one of 184 Japanese Canadians who served with our forces during World War I; 53 were killed and 91 were wounded.

In 1942, although he was a past-president of a branch of the Royal Canadian Legion, and although he had offered to serve again in the Canadian Forces after we declared war on Japan, Masumi Mitsui was forcibly taken from his farm and interned along with 22,000 other Japanese Canadians.

Since the end of World War II Masumi Mitsui had been working for the cause of Japanese Canadian redress. Now he is gone. How much longer will it take?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EARLY RETIREES—REQUEST THAT BILL BE SEVERED INTO TWO PARTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, last week, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) said on one of our radio stations it was the Opposition's fault that passage of legislation to provide refunds for early retirees was being delayed. Mr. Speaker, I have to say that this statement is as false as the image projected by the Conservatives. I suggest that the Conservative Government split the Bill and call second reading of the Bill as far as the refund for 35,000 early retirees is concerned. The Liberal Party promises to facilitate same-day passage of second reading, report stage, third reading and royal assent, and we will even help the Government deliver unemployment insurance benefit cheques to the 35,000 early retirees, 13,000 of whom live in Quebec.

EFFECT OF TAX DEDUCTIONS ON LOW-INCOME EARNERS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada are very concerned about where the Government is going on tax reform, particularly those living on low and modest incomes.

A letter from one Canadian in British Columbia said it well, and I quote:

> I know we're all responsible for helping to reduce Canada's debt but it seems a low wage earner is more responsible than a high wage earner.

To illustrate, he pointed out that his bi-weekly paycheque of some $250 had tax deductions which almost doubled from $4.90 in 1985 to $8.90 in 1986. In contrast, someone making a bi-weekly wage of $1,700 saw deductions for taxes increase by only $11.90 to $497.45.

I might remind the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that on December 19, 1984, he said the following:

> We've made it quite clear we want to shift some resources from the upper income brackets, from the wealthier people in this country to the needy in this country, using the tax system.

My question to the Finance Minister is: When?

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

OPPORTUNITY TO PROVIDE MORE ASSISTANCE

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, recognition for the importance of voluntary organizations is increasing in our society. It is estimated that Canadian men and women spend about 395 million hours annually on volunteer work in hospitals, with young people and the elderly, and on recreational organizations, to name just a few.

What would our society be without the contributions of these volunteers? Just think of all the expertise and competence that daily supports the work of hundreds of employees in the public, para-public and private sector. Mr. Speaker, in the past two years I have made several proposals for creating a special committee that would consider ways of providing more adequate support for volunteer work in Canada. Recognition is not just setting aside one week a year. It also means providing material, physical and financial support, 12 months out of 12, to maintain our voluntary organizations.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I want to salute all volunteer workers during this special week, and I would urge all Canadians to show their appreciation.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN RATE OF GROWTH

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, thanks to the progressive market oriented and financially sound policies of the Conservative Government, Canada's economy continues to forge ahead toward new record levels.

Latest Statistics Canada figures indicate a solid growth rate of 4 per cent for the first quarter. Leading the rebound have been the housing and auto industries. First quarter results show annualized housing starts at 237,000, up 11 per cent from the last quarter of 1986.

Employment grew at an annual rate of 3.2 per cent between January and March, and between September and March alone nearly 200,000 full-time jobs have been created.

These impressive figures demonstrate what can happen when Canadians roll up their sleeves and start working in concert with a Government which is truly deserving of their well placed confidence.

WINTER OLYMPICS

OLYMPIC TORCH RELAY—OMISSION OF LABRADOR FROM ROUTE

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the people of Labrador are not being allowed to participate in the Olympic Torch Relay which is to begin the trek to Calgary this fall starting in St. John's. This is a disgraceful situation.

• (1410)

The torch will be carried all across the country and to other distant and northerly points including Whitehorse, Inuvik, and Yellowknife. Yet the Olympic torch relay will not even come close to Labrador, a very important and large part of the Province of Newfoundland, a land mass of 259,000 square kilometres and occupied by over 30,000 people. It is my belief that the people of Labrador should have a part in this and that the torch should begin its journey in Labrador. How otherwise can it be called a national event?

The Government of Canada must step in and ensure that plans for the Olympic Torch Relay are revised to include Labrador and that Labradorians must be allowed to "Share the Flame".

WORKERS' DAY OF MOURNING

RECOGNITION OF VICTIMS OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, April 28 has been declared an annual day of mourning in recognition of the many Canadian workers who have been killed or disabled in industrial related accidents.

I had the privilege two years ago to be present in Sudbury with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Layton), at an early workers' memorial service in memory of miners who lost their lives as a result of a rockburst underground at the Falconbridge mine.

April 28 is a significant date because on that date in 1914 the first worker safety legislation in Canada was enacted by the Province of Ontario.

Earlier today a monument to commemorate workers was unveiled at Vincent Massey Park in Ottawa near the site of one of Canada's worst industrial accidents, the collapse of the Heron Road Bridge in 1966.

Our industrial and construction workers have and will continue to play an essential role in the growth and development of Canada. I ask all my colleagues and all Canadians to join today in recognizing their contribution.

TAX REFORM

HANDICAPPED TAXPAYER'S NON-DEDUCTIBLE EXPENSES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to quote from another letter about our tax system. This time it is from a concerned citizen in Ottawa:

> Thanks to our equitable tax system, out of a salary of $14,946.61, $2,358.40 is taken for tax, while those persons making far in excess of this amount pay no, or very little tax due to their fortunate position of having numerous tax write-offs.
> Due to a physical handicap (cerebral palsy) shoes alone cost me in excess of $700 per year which cannot be claimed.
> I found living in a five foot by 8 foot room detrimental to my mental health and so have moved to a one bedroom apartment, cost $550 per month.
> ParaTranspo costs in excess of $500 per year (Thank God there is such a thing).
> As can be seen, there is not much chance of me being able to save for a time which in future may possibly see me in total physical handicapped situation . . .

I do feel our tax system is unfairly balanced to those in upper income levels. So much for tax reform!

PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS

TESTIMONY SUPPORTING PASSAGE OF BILL C-22

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, it has become imperative that Bill C-22, the drug patent legislation, be passed without further delay.

Spokesmen for Quebec's Fédération de l'âge d'or have stated: "We are convinced that this amendment to the Patent Act is essential to promote research and discover new drugs to treat such diseases as cancer, Alzheimer's, AIDS and other cardiovascular conditions".

Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa said—listen to this, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the Opposition in particular should pay attention: "Montreal Mayor Doré and I have expressed our agreement to allow and encourage the federal Government to have its patent legislation passed because we know that this measure will pave the way for much larger research investments in Canada, particularly in Quebec".

The Montreal Board of Trade put it this way: "The greater Montreal region alone is expected to benefit from new investments exceeding $500 million, and this would create 750 jobs". New jobs, I might add.

We have the strong support of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce.

Quebec Industry and Commerce Minister Daniel Johnson wrote: "As we wait for this strategic and important decision for the industrial future of Quebec and Canada, you can count on my full co-operation".

Mr. Speaker, such testimony speaks much louder than the twisted positions taken by the NDP and Opposition Leader Turner.

Bill C-22 will free hundreds of millions of private investment dollars in Canada and create the kind of jobs our young graduates are anxious to have.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATION OF UNITED STATES DRUG INDUSTRY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform the House and particularly government Members that American legislators have started a Congressional investigation into the American drug industry, and Canada's current system is being held up as a model for the United States to follow.

In testimony before a Congressional hearing, the American Association of Retired Persons praised the Canadian system as: "an appropriate market-oriented model for moderating the trend in escalating prescription-drug prices".

This is just one more opinion in the growing list of people and organizations heaping praise on the current drug-pricing system in Canada, a system that was put in place by a Liberal Government under the leadership of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

It is about time that the Government and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) acknowledged that the vast majority of Canadians do not support Bill C-22 and the changes to the Patent Act. Come election time, Canadians will remember who used closure to force this Bill through Parliament. They will remember who prevented witnesses from appearing before the committee. Most important, they will remember who raised prices for drugs by millions of dollars each and every year.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

OPENING OF SHIPPING SEASON

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catherines): Mr. Speaker, the St. Lawrence Seaway is now open for its 29th season. The great inland transportation system has had its share of troubles in past years but 1986 saw a trouble-free season with total tonnage up slightly over that of 1985. For our part, the federal Government has committed $175 million over the next seven years to prevent any further surprise mishaps.

The United States-Canada trade mission to Europe promoting the expanded use of the Seaway was described as being a big success. If the shippers, the carriers, and the seamen who man the ships will do their part by keeping the traffic moving through the season, the tonnage of movement through the Seaway should increase by some 3 to 5 per cent, and why not? The Seaway is already the most reliable, cost-efficient means of transporting bulk cargo goods of the world to the very heart of the North American continent, and vice versa.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CHAIRMAN'S LETTER TO CANADA LUTHERAN PUBLICATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, recently the editor of the Canada Lutheran, a religious publication, received the following letter from the Chairman of Canada Post concerning its second-class mailing privileges:

> Upon a careful reading of the publication you have submitted in your application, I am unable to conclude that the content of Canada Lutheran is "devoted primarily" to one or more of the subjects enumerated in paragraph (b). Therefore I must conclude that your publication is best described by paragraph (a). As such, the exception provided by paragraph (i) is unavailable to you and your application is subject to the provisions of paragraph (h).
> Your application fails because paragraph (h) takes away second class entitlement from any publication described in paragraph (a), if it is published by someone whose principal business is other than publishing and it is published for the purpose of advancing the publisher's principal business. When interpreting paragraph (h), it is important to note that the term "business" does not have a strictly commercial connotation. In the context of the Regulations, it is to be interpreted as the principal activity or purpose of the entity in question.

That clears it all up.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION—ENDING OF MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian grain economy is collapsing. Farm families are breaking up under the stress and strain of that pressure. Farm groups tell us that the situation is as bad as it was during the Great Depression. Yet this is the time chosen by the Government of Canada to start foreclosing on farms, kicking farmers off the land and kicking farmers when they are down.

Will the Prime Minister immediately reverse yesterday's mean-spirited decision by the Minister of Agriculture to start foreclosing on Canadian farms?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt, and we on this side realize it, that it is a serious matter for Canadian agriculture. The federal Government has taken many initiatives to address that problem but let me try to put into perspective, if I can, the situation with the Farm Credit Corporation.

There are approximately 225,000 commercial farms in Canada. The announcement of the lifting of the foreclosure moratorium will affect approximately 50 farmers per month. By the way, those farmers have the option of having their cases referred to farm debt review boards or other programs this Government has initiated. So that a year from now, if the process goes ahead as planned, it will affect at the maximum about one-quarter of 1 per cent of all commercial farms in Canada.

In the meantime the federal Government is providing substantial financial assistance to farmers to see them through this very, very difficult time in the international grain markets.

GOVERNMENT ASKED TO GUARANTEE FARMERS DECENT STANDARD OF LIFE AND JUST PRICES FOR GRAIN CROPS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last week the Government reduced the preliminary price for grain by 18 per cent. This week, it has started turning farmers off their farms. These measures are stupid and unfair and are destroying a whole way of life on the family farm. When will the Prime Minister guarantee our farmers a decent standard of living and a fair price for their produce, especially for grain?

[English]

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, as I said, I hope the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will put it in perspective and consider the facts. I say again that one year from now the lifting of the moratorium will affect at a maximum one-quarter of 1 per cent of all commercial farms.

The Hon. Member talks about stupid and unfair. One of the reasons we are in this situation is because of the stupid, ignorant and unfair policies of the previous Government—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: —in bringing in a high interest rate policy which put farmers in the position they're in today.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, after all those Tory promises why do it now? Why kick the farmer when he is down? Why reduce grain prices? Why start foreclosing on farms? Why now, and why all at the same time?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we recognize this is a serious matter. The Minister of Agriculture has put in place several options farmers can consider. One of them is the farm debt review boards. Another one is the Canadian Rural Transition Program. The FCC has initiated two other interest rate programs which reduce interest rates for farmers. All of this is an attempt to deal with this very difficult situation. All of those programs are up and operating. They will be of use to farmers in this very difficult time.

Might I say that we are taking an entirely different approach under the leadership of the Prime Minister by trying to solve the problem internationally? That is in great contrast to a previous Prime Minister who came to western Canada and told us to sell our own wheat.

FARM FORECLOSURES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He started his own form of capital punishment for farmers yesterday when he announced he will start foreclosing on tens of thousands of farmers this Friday.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Foster: Can the Minister tell us why he is starting these foreclosures now? This is being done just one week after he reduced grain prices by 18 per cent. It is being done after he and the Minister of Agriculture refused a deficiency payment for the coming crop year. Farmers are going to the bank to get money to put in a crop. Why is he starting the foreclosure action this Friday? Is it going to be known as Black Friday from now on?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member, who has been a distinguished Member of this House for a long time, would at least get his facts correct. We are not starting foreclosure on tens of thousands of farmers. The process will involve at the most approximately 50 per month. If he does the arithmetic, that amounts to about 600 per year. We are not involved in any way in the kind of thing the Hon. Member suggests.

Let me say again that anyone affected will have the option of having their case reviewed by the farm debt review boards which have been in operation since last August. They will be of great use to many of the farmers who are going to be affected.

NUMBER OF LOANS IN ARREARS—REQUEST FOR RESCHEDULING

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I would just remind the Hon. Minister that when he talks about 600 farmers he knows he is just kidding everybody. There are 6,000 FCC loans which are more than two years in arrears. When they are more than two years in arrears the history has been that they never recover. Altogether there are 16,000 FCC loans which are in arrears.

• (1425)

Before the Minister puts this program into effect this Friday to start thousands of foreclosures, will he put in place a major new system to reschedule debt? Does the Minister not have any compassion? Does he not have any heart? Does he not know what is going on out there?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member distorts things wildly out of proportion. He knows very well that the total number of Farm Credit Corporation clients is approximately 76,000. Therefore, for him to suggest that there are 60,000 in arrears is absolutely—

Mr. Foster: Six thousand.

Mr. Mayer: I am sorry, the figure I heard him use was 60,000.

However, he should know that the approximate number of farmers who will be affected, regardless of all the numbers he wants to throw around the House, will be in the neighbourhood of 50 per month.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): How would you like to be one of the 50?

Mr. Mayer: That means that a year from now the action which was announced by the Minister of Agriculture will affect approximately one quarter of 1 per cent of all the commercial farms in Canada.

In the meantime we are providing a substantial amount of financial support. For instance, to repeat, there will be approximately $1.3 billion of federal tax money going into the western grain economy in the next five weeks. In my opinion that does not indicate a Government which is unconcerned and shows lack of compassion for the farm community. It indicates exactly the opposite and most farmers realize that.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT DECISION BE CHANGED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He knows that the figure to which the Minister has just alluded is to pay farmers for last year's crop. He knows that his Government has made no commitment to bringing in special assistance for farmers who are now putting this year's crop in the ground.

His decision to go ahead with foreclosures on Friday will mean that some 600 farms are immediately in danger. Since 25 per cent of Canadian farmers are on the verge of bankruptcy, will the Prime Minister intervene directly, change the Government's decision, and put an end to this policy which the Government wants to inflict upon Canadian farmers on Friday?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party says farmers need cash for seeding now. That is exactly what we are doing. We are providing cash for them now.

Mr. Broadbent: That's not what I said.

Mr. Mayer: Well, the Hon. Member now wants to take it back. I wish he would know what he wants to ask when he phrases his question.

However, I will repeat that there is a substantial amount of money going into the pockets of western Canadian farmers right now at a critical time of the year, which is exactly the point he makes in his question. There is $1.3 billion of cash going into the pockets of western Canadian farmers right now at seeding time which is a critical time of the year. Farmers need cash for seeding right now and that is what we are supplying.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEED RETURN FOR GRAIN FARMERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat carefully and slowly what I said so that the Minister can hear it. The Minister tends to answer questions in a straightforward way. He knows that the money which has been committed is for last year's crop, not for the crop which is now being put in the ground.

Will the Minister now guarantee grain producers who are planting this year's crop that their final return on this year's crop will not be one cent lower than the return they received last year which has already dropped by some 18 per cent?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I farm and speak from first-hand experience. When farmers seed their crops in the spring they usually do it out of revenues derived from last year's sales. That is exactly what is happening. Farmers are selling record quantities to the Canadian Wheat Board which is doing a very good job of marketing. The federal Government is providing a record amount of cash. With those two factors combined farmers are equalling and probably surpassing the income they received from the previous crop.

We are performing in exactly the way farmers would expect, based on the kind of marketing they are undergoing and the normal amounts of cash they would receive from such marketing. Therefore, I do not understand what the Hon. Member is talking about. If he knew something about farming, as I do, he would not phrase his question in that fashion.

• (1430)

REQUEST FOR INCOME GUARANTEE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to turn to the other well known farmer in the House of Commons, the Prime Minister, who did not hesitate to answer questions on this important matter when the Saskatchewan election was taking place. Will he guarantee to Canadian farmers who are putting the crop in the ground now that the money they get from that crop will not be one penny lower in terms of their final income than they got from last year's crop? Will he give that guarantee now when an election is not taking place in Saskatchewan but when there is a real crisis in western Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will acknowledge that I am not an expert in farming. I just sound like one when compared with the Leader of the NDP. The Leader of the NDP was doing well until he had Shirley Temple sitting next to him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The very serious question by my hon. friend was given a very serious answer by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board who is not only an experienced public official but an experienced farmer, with vast amounts of knowledge. He has been working very closely with farm organizations and individual farmers to maintain the record of this Government's commitment to agriculture nationally and western agriculture in a special way because of commodity difficulties it is undergoing.

May I say to my hon. friend that an important part of the resolution to the problem is on the international level where, in Tokyo last year, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I raised agriculture and the implications of commodity prices for the first time at the summit—

Mr. Broadbent: It really did a lot of good, didn't it?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They are joking about this.

Mr. Mulroney: It is now at the GATT for the first time. I will acknowledge that there have been no overnight miracles, but there has been solid progress on a number of fronts and farmers recognize that.

CANCELLATION OF FORECLOSURE MORATORIUM—ROLE OF CHARTERED BANKS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, perhaps we can get back to the serious issue facing the House today, which is the Government's announcement that it was cancelling its moratorium.

My question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. He is fully aware that one of the most dangerous aspects of that announcement is the signal it will send to the chartered banks which hold over $8 billion of farm debt at the present time, that it is now open season on farmers to foreclose their mortgages.

Does the Minister or do his colleagues intend to call a meeting of the chartered banks of Canada to make it very clear that this disgraceful act by his Government should not be taken as a signal that they can start their own foreclosure actions and therefore precipitate an even broader and deeper crisis than now exists?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, let me try again to put it into some perspective. That is not what will happen. No one wants to see that happen because it is not in the best interests of farmers, banks, Governments or anyone else.

The Farm Credit Corporation will be looking at approximately 50 clients per month, which, on an annualized basis, is approximately one-quarter of 1 per cent of all commercial farms in the country. If it was believed for one minute that what the Hon. member suggested could possibly happen, that action would certainly not have been taken.

We have been in contact with the banks to have an understanding with them of how they intend to proceed. Let me assure the Hon. Member that what he suggests will not happen.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows from the testimony of the FCC itself before the Agriculture Committee that over 16,000 farmers are now in arrears on the credit lines of the corporation itself. Six thousand of them have been in that situation for over two years. The conclusion is that they have a dangerous potential for bankruptcy.

The fall in farm prices and the lack of a deficiency payment precipitate even a further pressure on those farmers. Why will the Government not include the banks, which share the responsibility along with the Government and farm organizations, to work out a debt restructuring system to ensure that there will be no further attempts by the banks to foreclose, and to ensure that farmers can go ahead in the expectation that they can get loans and credit this year in order to put seed in the ground? Why does the Government not show some leadership in this issue?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member has been for the last two and one-half years of the Government. If he had been paying attention to what has been happening in the House he would have been here when we passed the Farm Debt Review Board legislation. Those boards have been in operation since last August and have gained some experience in how to deal with some of these situations. That which he suggests in his question is exactly what is happening through the Farm Debt Review Board appeal process. Those boards will be looking at every case, as the farmer so chooses, that the Farm Credit Corporation processes so that people have the option of dealing with the Farm Debt Review Board that has been in operation for some eight or nine months and gained some experience in how to deal with these situations.

The process that is under way is exactly as he suggests in his question. We have been doing our job in showing some leadership. If the Hon. Member had only paid attention he would know what was happening.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSURANCE ON FARMERS' INCOME

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. The Minister knows that the billion dollars promised last year and is still coming was for last year's crop. He also knows that $705 million that is coming in for western grain stabilization is a deficit on last year's crop. Most of that money is not going to the pockets of the farmers but directly to the banks. The Minister knows that businessmen depend on the farm. The farmers need some assurance for the fall that they will get money back. Can the Minister give us that assurance? Will the Government give us that assurance now?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member assurance on two matters. We will fully support the Canadian Wheat Board in selling the record crop that we produced during the 1986 growing season.

I can also assure the Hon. Member that the federal Government will, in all likelihood, see that there will be a record payout under the Western Grain Stabilization Act this fall. That money will come entirely from taxpayers' money because the Hon. Member knows that the fund is in deficit.

The Wheat Board will continue to sell and farmers will be able to market a record amount of grain. Second, there will be a record final payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act this fall.

Mr. Hovdebo: The record amount of grain does not help us very much with the price at which the Wheat Board is selling it. That is the real problem.

SITUATION OF FARMERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion that the Farm Credit Corporation will begin to foreclose adds to that situation because it not only affects the farmers but all the rural businessmen who depend on the farmers. Will the Government give us the assurance that it will allow for that kind of money?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, since this Government came to power we increased agricultural spending substantially, over 60 per cent in the first two years of this Government as compared to the previous two years of the last Government.

Second, we estimate that we will increase the amount of spending on agriculture in western Canada by 50 per cent in the present year. We have supported agriculture in the past, we are supporting it now, and we will be there to support agriculture in the future.

ENERGY

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA—CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday, Mr. Bruce Smart, the American Undersecretary of Commerce, said that if Investment Canada turned down Amoco's bid to purchase Dome Petroleum then Investment Canada would have to be negotiated away in the free trade negotiations. Is the Government losing control of our energy industry because the Prime Minister does not want to risk offending the American Government?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I grew up in and represent the Province of Alberta. I know that when the Government of Canada and this country began to lose control of and hope in our energy industry was when the Liberal Party, of which the Hon. Member was a supporter, brought in the National Energy Program which devastated western Canada and which set in place the circumstances that brought Dome to its present situation.

I also know that there is no relation between the question of Dome and its possible acquisition and the trade negotiations.

Mr. MacLellan: With this Government, the Canadian people have given up practically all hope at all.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): What I want to know is why the Government remains quiet while the Americans tell us not to use our laws while the free trade negotiations are undertaken? They did not hesitate to use their laws and impose tariffs on softwood lumber.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if one wants to get into an argument about which Government has used which powers, let me say that there has also been the use by Canada of Canadian legislation with respect to the corn countervail. There has been action by the United States on a wide range of Canadian commodities. Surely the point is to arrange a situation where, instead of having conflicts over corn, over softwood and over these matters which are costing Canadians jobs, we should instead put in place—

Some Hon. Members: Sell them out.

Mr. Axworthy: "Sell them out Joe", we call him.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —a new trading arrangement.

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP OF OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on the same subject but a different line.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You just pulled your line in, John.

Mr. Crosbie: The line is in the streets.

Mr. Waddell: We know from the Government's own records—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I think I mentioned yesterday to Hon. Members that, when we have these delays, the Question Period is a little longer than it would be otherwise.

Mr. Waddell: We know from the Government's own records that foreign oil companies have not served Canada's energy interests as well as Canadian oil companies. For example, in the first six months of 1986, Canadian companies with 48 per cent of the upstream oil and gas revenues made 58 per cent of the capital expenditures, whereas foreign controlled companies with 52 per cent of the revenues—

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

Mr. Waddell: —made only 42 per cent of the expenditures. Does the Minister agree that there are clear benefits to Canadian ownership in the oil and gas industry? And if he does, why the hands off attitude to the Dome-Amoco deal? Is it really because Mr. Bruce Smart is calling the shots for Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we can always find statistics that say what we want them to say. Yesterday, I showed the Leader of the New Democratic Party figures on investment in research and development—I did not really want to release them, but you are forcing my hand—that show that the two largest Canadian companies, Petro-Canada and Nova, have a percentage far lower than Esso, Shell and several other multinationals, so that depending on the point of comparison we want to establish in a given sector, we can always prove what we want to prove, while the important thing is not proof but reality. The reality is that, as far as Dome is concerned, we have a corporation from outside Canada which Dome regards favourably, and that the Canadian Government has all the instruments it needs to ensure that the interests of Canada will be protected, and that is what we are going to do.

REQUEST THAT TWO OFFERS FOR DOME PETROLEUM BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The other day, Mr. Maier, President of TransCanada Pipeline, said there was no difference between the offer made by Amoco and the offer made by Trans-Canada Pipeline. Why doesn't the Government disclose the two offers so that the Canadian public can see whether or not there is a difference?

[English]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): For a very simple reason, Mr. Speaker. We are not the ones who put Dome on sale. Dome is owned by Dome. It is as simple as that. The Government has not received any offer and it should not receive any offer. It is up to Dome to receive the offers and it is up to Dome to decide whether it wants to make them public.

TAX REMISSION ORDER'S EFFECT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who in February, 1985, made a tax remission order enabling Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas to deduct over 10 years the costs incurred by Dome to acquire it. Since the order failed to restrict the benefit to the then owner, Dome, will the Minister tell the House if his omission will result in a foreign buyer having a tax holiday until 1995?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member might put the question to her own side of the House because it was the Liberal Government which initiated that remission order in 1984. I am not precisely sure of the facts concerning the question the Hon. Member just put at this point because we are still in the early stages of the discussions on this.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have to take the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition through a few simple facts about tax matters.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He was a Minister of Finance. There is a difference between a tax ruling, which is provided by the Minister of National Revenue, and a tax concession, which is something that the Minister of Finance gives, and a remission order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: John, remember this now.

Mr. Gauthier: That is what she is talking about.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): A remission order about which his colleague talks could be provided by the Minister of Finance, by the Minister of National Revenue or by another Minister.

Mr. Gauthier: Who sets the conditions?

Mr. Axworthy: That is how you define "sell-out" isn't it?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If I could go back to the question, my answer to the question is that I do not think that it will have the effect of passing through an acquisition, but we are not entirely sure at this point until we get more detail.

REQUEST THAT CONDITIONS BE ATTACHED TO TAX BREAK

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the previous Government may have made the commitment to Dome but the Minister decided the terms of the order and signed it.

Mr. Gauthier: That is right.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): The Auditor General has estimated that the Dome remission order would cost Canadian taxpayers $1 billion. In view of the sale of Dome, does the Minister plan to put some conditions around this tax break?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member wrote that question before she heard my answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I said that we think that the effects of the remission order will not pass through to any new buyer. However, I want to be sure of that and we will find that out from detailed discussions with the new buyer, be it Amoco or some other company, at the time we have those details.

TAX REFORM

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE ANNOUNCEMENT BEFORE END OF JUNE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance and relates to the proposed comprehensive tax reform concerning personal and corporate taxation as well as the sales tax, a reform which the Minister promised to unveil in the spring of 1987. Recently we have had all kinds of indications that Cabinet is split about the Minister's tax reform project. Is the Government still committed to propose a comprehensive tax reform, and will the project be made public before the end of June?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION ON TAX REFORM

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister be rather more specific?

• (1450)

Mr. Cassidy: Are the Minister and the Government still holding to their promise to bring forth comprehensive tax reform in the area of personal taxation, corporate taxation, and the proposed business transfer tax? Or is the Minister now abandoning that particular proposal because of opposition within the Cabinet; and will he, therefore, be perpetuating the unfair tax system that we have in Canada today?

An Hon. Member: Yes, no, and maybe.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where to start.

An Hon. Member: How typical!

An Hon. Member: That is why you are at 24 per cent.

An Hon. Member: Do you know when to finish?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We will be putting out a White Paper on Tax Reform. That discussion paper will be out before the end of spring, and it will be comprehensive.

An Hon. Member: It is getting awfully grey now.

An Hon. Member: It will be a long spring.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

KURT WALDHEIM—INQUIRY CONCERNING ADMISSIBILITY TO CANADA

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Yesterday the United States announced that Kurt Waldheim, President of Austria, has been placed on their "watch list" and that he is no longer welcome in that country because of the war crime allegations that have been levelled against him, and he will not be allowed into that country until the issue is satisfactorily resolved.

My question for the Minister is: Will Canada be taking a similar position should Mr. Waldheim ask to visit our country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no plan to have Mr. Waldheim visit this country, nor is there any intention on his part to visit Canada.

A question similar to the one raised by the Hon. Member was put to the Prime Minister earlier today, and the Prime Minister made it very clear, in response, that Mr. Waldheim would not be welcome in Canada.

TAX REFORM

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PROPOSAL MINISTER INTENDS TO INTRODUCE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and has to do with the tax reform as well. The Minister has just stated in the House that he intends to table a proposal before the end of spring, that is June 21 or 22. May I ask him whether the proposal he intends to introduce will be a White Paper setting forth the Government position, because I heard him say a few moments ago that it would be a discussion paper, which is usually referred to as a Green Paper?

[English]

The reason I ask the question is that there is a big difference between a White Paper and a Green Paper. In one of today's newspapers the Chairman of the Finance Committee of the House of Commons, the Member for Mississauga South, said that instead of a White Paper it would be a Green Paper.

Was the Chairman of the Finance Committee, in making that remark, speaking on behalf of the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has never been able to control the Chairman of the Finance Committee.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In response to the previous question on the subject I said that it would be a White Paper.

INQUIRY WHEN MINISTER WILL ANNOUNCE NEW TAX RULES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): I thank the Minister for clearing up this point but he knows as well and probably better than I that the Canadian public and particularly business circles are anxious to have an inkling about the nature of the tax rules. Could the Minister tell the House, and businessmen in particular, whether he intends to table a Budget this fall or wait until the 1988 Budget presentation to implement his White Paper?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, once the White Paper is tabled later this spring, all of that information will become quite clear to the Hon. Member and to interested Canadians.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN GOVERNMENT'S POLICY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

On April 15 last, the Minister said that the Government would take no additional action against South Africa until after the elections. In the meantime, the Government of South Africa has used those very elections as an excuse for increased oppression and violence, and most recently for an attack against Zambia.

Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs not agree that this effective granting of immunity to South Africa is in fact an encouragement to South Africa to increase the level of violence in southern Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, I wouldn't agree with that; but, I think that the latest acts of murder undertaken on behalf of the state and the Government of South Africa, with their incursions into Zambia to kill innocent civilians, should cause any Canadians who have any continuing belief that words alone will cause the South African Government to change its policies to reconsider that view.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): If these actions are supposed to cause Canadians to believe that mere words are not going to change things, what about the words of the Prime Minister a year and a half ago when he said that there would be a complete severing of economic and diplomatic relations with South Africa if there was not an improvement in the situation in that country?

Isn't it about time for this Government to put an end to the words and impose some actions on South Africa?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Hon. Member has been among those who have acknowledged the role of leadership of this Government, and in particular this Prime Minister, in respect of bringing about a peaceful and profound change in southern Africa. We intend to continue to play that role of leadership.

The exercise of that role will involve the continued application of economic pressure, but it will also involve the seeking of ways in which lines can be kept open with the regime in South Africa so that if there is in fact some peaceful response to the pressures that are brought by Canada and by others, there will be some opportunity for the world to take advantage of it and to try to seek that peaceful way, thus avoiding the chaos that would otherwise come to that subcontinent.

TRANSPORT

SAFETY ON JACQUES CARTIER BRIDGE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns safety on the Jacques Cartier bridge. Mr. Speaker, on the weekend there were seven accidents on the bridge, resulting in one death. Since January 1987, the Minister of Transport has had on his desk a report containing specific recommendations for dealing with the safety problem on the Jacques Cartier bridge. Unfortunately, this morning the Minister told reporters that the problem was not urgent. My question is the same one being asked by the police at the Jacques Cartier and Champlain Bridges, and it is this: Will the Minister inform the House how many deaths and serious accidents it will take for him to deal with this problem?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I learned through the Quebec press of Monday that the Hon. Member was going to ask me a question, and I haven't been able to sleep since.

The position on the Jacques Cartier Bridge is as follows. The bridge has been there for many years. It was constructed many years ago. There is no emergency arising out of the bridge having been constructed in any way that was wrong, or whatever.

As a matter of fact, we hired Trafix Inc., a consulting company, to investigate the cause of these accidents and to make recommendations.

That company submitted a report in February to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, the authority responsible for the operation of the bridge. As a matter of fact, there was a meeting yesterday between representatives of my office and representatives of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and the Department of Transport.

I am concerned about safety matters on the Jacques Cartier Bridge. If the drivers who use it would drive more slowly, it would certainly be a help.

We intend to take steps to see that these matters are looked into. But, Mr. Speaker, I have had a full report on this matter from the Members of Parliament for La Prairie, Longueuil and Chambly, long before the hon. gentleman ever decided to get some publicity in connection with it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Now we are going to get some action.

PROPOSED MEASURES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is not only disappointing, it is absolutely shameful, and the family of the victim who died on the weekend is unlikely to see anything funny about the Minister's comments. The Minister is right when he says, and in fact he knows, that according to the report, speeding is the reason why there have been so many fatal accidents on the Jacques Cartier bridge. Since we know the cause and the consequences, and since the report recommends a number of solutions, is the Minister prepared, first of all, to authorize the Jacques Cartier Bridge Corporation this afternoon to invest one million dollars in two extra patrol cars to improve police surveillance; and second, to install permanent traffic signals and third, to install anti-skid equipment in order to save lives, and finally, is the Minister going to stop fooling around?

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's hypocrisy is really quite odious. He has been a Member here for a number of years. This bridge has been there for a number of years—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Minister would want to put his remarks in another way.

Mr. de Corneille: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Minister will.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I want to put my question whatever way you feel—

Mr. Gauthier: It is an answer.

Mr. Crosbie: I want to put my answer whatever way you feel is best, and I will withdraw anything which might arouse the Hon. Member.

The position is that that bridge has been there for many years. For the first time some action has been taken to look into the conditions on the bridge. A report has been done. We have the report. They recommend certain changes which will cost at least $5.3 million over three years for the two bridges. That has been looked at with the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority.

Action will be taken. The hon. gentleman can relax secure in the knowledge that we are well aware of this problem and are acting to do something about it, where he failed to do anything in his years in the House while he was in government.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST FRANCOPHONES WHO FAIL ENGLISH COURSES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for official languages. According to a report by the CBC, francophones are being discriminated against at the Department of National Defence.

Could the President of the Treasury Board confirm that such discrimination is taking place? I am referring to a situation where francophones who fail English courses have a note to that effect in their file, while anglophones who fail French courses do not get the same treatment.

Is this true? And what is the Minister going to do to eliminate this kind of discrimination?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed of the troubling report broadcast last night by the CBC. Early this morning I called in the Minister of National Defence to discuss the matter. It is now being investigated, and I intend to report to the House in greater detail, at the appropriate time.

If it is true, it is entirely unacceptable and goes against the most fundamental policies of this House and this country.

REQUEST FOR EXAMINATION OF DEPARTMENT'S MANUALS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the remarks of the Prime Minister on this important matter. Could he confirm that there will be an examination of the manuals, which according to the report have in effect required this discrimination, so that there will be no remaining discrimination in them?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had that assurance from the Minister of National Defence who will be conducting a comprehensive inquiry to make sure that the criteria raised by my hon. friend are indeed respected, that the spirit and the letter of that law which governs our national conduct are fully respected at all times.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that I will recognize the Hon. Member for Mount Royal and the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek, and that will end Question Period.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

KURT WALDHEIM—UNITED NATIONS' RETIREMENT ALLOWANCE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the timing of the resurfacing of the Kurt Waldheim issue is quite ironic. This last Sunday thousands of people around the world joined in non-denominational memorial services to mark the remembrance of the most heinous of genocidal crimes, the Holocaust.

My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since Mr. Waldheim's activities are contrary to the very heart and purpose of the United Nations, and since his $81,650 retirement allowance is an optional appropriation of the General Assembly, will the Minister act on my previous request to raise the issue at the United Nations and vote against the payment of this allowance?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are raising the matter at the United Nations, and I will advise the Hon. Member of the consequences of that action.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

Mrs. Finestone: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I thought you had said I had only one question.

The Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs answered in the same way on June 9 and subsequently in a letter on December 29, so I remind him that I have been waiting for almost one year for his response.

INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGATIONS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister what has happened with the allegations in respect of Kurt Waldheim and the study which was to be initiated with other countries in respect of that dossier. Could he give us an update on that now?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in light of the Hon. Member's preface to her second question, I am tempted to say that I have only one answer.

The answer is as I gave it. We are conducting inquiries. We have been in touch with officials of the United Nations. We are in touch with officials of other countries. As she would know, because she has shown a steady interest in this question, her question would require a more detailed reply which I do not have at hand at the moment. However, I will get it into my hands and then into hers.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT TO PERMIT EASIER ACCESS BY FARMERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board who earlier in Question Period noted that the Western Grain Stabilization Fund is in deficit. The Minister knows that some 17 per cent or 18 per cent of producers are still outside the Western Grain Stabilization Plan.

In view of the fact that future payments will have to come out of future government and producer levies, will the Minister consider at this time opening up the Act to provide for easier and more facilitated access for those farmers who are presently outside the purview of the plan but would like to get in at this time?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a matter of pretty significant consequences to those producers who are not part of the program, especially in view of the record pay-outs.

We have had representations similar to the ones raised by the Hon. Member. I will certainly look at that representation. I also tell the Hon. Member that we have done some work on how we might open up the plan to bring everybody into it, in line with the import of the question which he raised.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DIVULGING OF IN CAMERA COMMITTEE INFORMATION

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I should like to begin by referring to the Nineteenth Edition of Erskine May at page 146 of Chapter X—Breaches of Privileges and Contempts. In part it reads:

> That the evidence taken by any select committee of this House, and the documents presented to such committee, and which have not been reported to the House, ought not to be published by any member of such committee or by any other person.

It goes on to say:

> Where the public are admitted this rule is usually not enforced. The publication or disclosure of proceedings of committees conducted with closed doors or of draft reports of committees before they have been reported to the House will, however, constitute a breach of privilege or a contempt.

It is on the basis of the third report of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, which was presented to the House today, indicating the actions of a member of the committee, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry), that I believe my privileges have been breached.

This morning the report indicated that the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River in fact divulged a good deal of information arising from an in camera session in which I participated. He did it without considering the ramifications of such an action.

I should like to refer to exactly what he said on March 25, 1987, the day following the in camera session, as reported at page 4540 of Hansard:

> —when Canadians elect representatives to speak for their concerns in Ottawa, they do so in the hope that, when appropriate, all Parties will work toward constructive ends. As the spokesman on aboriginal issues for the New Democratic Party, I have and continue to hold the view that partisan concerns and parochial attitudes do nothing to further the cause of Canada's first people.

Those were his words. When speaking of the in camera session he said:

> Yesterday the Indian, Inuit and Métis people of Canada were reminded again of that truism. In an anonymous office tower, behind closed doors and safely tucked away from probing microphones, four Members of Parliament abrogated their responsibilities to aboriginal people—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt my hon. friend but I simply want to say that the point he is raising involves one of the members of the caucus that I represent. The Member is on his way back to the Chamber. Would the Hon. Member consider holding off for a moment until the Member has a chance to arrive?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, has suggested that the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) pause at least for a moment or two until the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) could be in the Chamber. Could I ask the Hon. House Leader to see where the Hon. Member is. I think that is a perfectly reasonable request. I would just ask all Members to wait for a minute or two.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the co-operation of Members of the House. I have been informed that notice was not given. I appreciate there is no requirement to give notice that a question of privilege should be raised at this moment, however, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) at the moment is not available. He will be later on. I must say that he is not here and is unable to be here to witness and hear the comments of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party is absolutely right. There is no requirement to give notice. Notice is sometimes given. Under the rules on an application like this it can be withdrawn right up to the last minute. Even if the Speaker has notice of it, not only do I have no obligation, I am not permitted to give notice to the other side. Under the circumstances, perhaps I could ask the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake whether it would be possible, and perhaps the Hon. House Leader could help, that this whole matter be adjourned to the same time tomorrow. If that suits all parties, it might be the answer.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Member cannot be reached, I would be prepared to present this with your permission tomorrow at the same time.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the House Leader for the New Democratic Party could convey that generous accommodation to the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River. I will arrange to hear both Members, and other Members if it is necessary, tomorrow at three o'clock, if that is satisfactory to everybody.

Mr. Riis: I want to say that it is certainly acceptable, Mr. Speaker. I want to express to my friend from Selkirk—Interlake how much we appreciate his willingness to co-operate on this very important matter. I want to express that gratitude and say that we will be here ready to debate the issue tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should say as Speaker that I appreciate the patience of all Hon. Members. While perhaps a few minutes were taken, sometimes a few minutes taken this way actually saves a lot of time in the long run.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

That this House supports, in principle, the reinstatement of capital punishment and directs that a special committee on reinstatement, composed of 15 members, be established, hold hearings and make its final report to the House no later than three (3) months following the adoption of this motion, such report to provide recommendations on:

(a) which offence or offences should carry the death penalty, and in what circumstances;

(b) which method or methods should be used to carry out the penalty of death, and in what circumstances;

That, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), this special committee be hereby appointed as a committee to prepare and bring in a bill no later than three months following the adoption of this motion, founded on the committee's recommendations on (a) and (b) above; such a bill shall be the object of a separate and distinct report of the special committee, and such a report shall be its final report;

That such bill, when reported from such special committee to the House, be deemed pursuant to Standing Order 107(1) to have been introduced and stand on the Order Paper, in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business"; and that, when the said bill has been read a second time, it shall stand referred to a Legislative Committee;

That the Striking Committee be empowered to name the Members of the special committee, provided that once the Striking Committee report is laid upon the Table, it shall be deemed concurred in;

That the special committee have the power to sit while the House is sitting and during periods when the House stands adjourned;

That the special committee be empowered to report from time to time and send for persons and papers, and to print such papers and evidence from time to time as may be ordered by the committee and to retain the services of expert, technical, professional and clerical staff;

That the special committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place inside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the appropriate staff accompany the committee;

That a quorum of the special committee be eight (8) members for any vote, resolution or other decision; and that the chairman be authorized to hold meetings to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof whenever six (6) members are present;

That any substitution of membership on the special committee be made pursuant to Standing Order 94(4); and

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when the special committee is ready to issue its final report and the said bill, the special committee shall present its report and the bill to the House by filing them with the Clerk of the House provided that the report shall then be deemed to have been laid upon the Table, and the bill shall then be deemed, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), to have been introduced at the first sitting of the House thereafter and to stand on the Order Paper in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business".

and on the amendment (Mr. Robinson) (p. 5311).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is the question and comment period on the speech of the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain). For the first question I recognize the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the speech of the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain). His desire to see the return of capital punishment seemed to turn on the whole question of law and order and what he called the protection of society. When it was brought up, as it has been many times and will be again, that capital punishment does not provide any real deterrence to murder, the Member said that justice, not utility, should be the basis on which we operate. I would be interested in hearing from the Hon. Member what standard of justice he uses. How does one determine what is just in a measure such as that? Is it the basis of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth? How does the Member determine justice?

The other question I would like him to address relates to protection of society. Opponents of the death penalty are very concerned that if the death penalty is reinstated it will mean that innocent people will be put to death. The Member said every precaution will be taken to ensure that this will not happen, but the Member knows that in some circumstances an innocent person will be put to death. People are very concerned about that, and Members of juries will be very concerned when accused murderers are facing trial. They will have very skilful lawyers working with juries, to play on the fears of jurors that they might condemn an innocent person. We have seen statistics which indicate that where there is capital punishment there is a higher rate of acquittal than in situations where there is not. It seems to me a very real possibility—a probability—that guilty people will be acquitted much more frequently under a capital punishment provision than otherwise. I would appreciate it if the Member would tell the House how he feels the acquittal of guilty murderers—juries do not want even the possibility of having condemned an innocent person to death—will lead to further protection of society?

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, let me first comment that it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) will not in this particular instance be able to exercise a vote of conscience. My understanding is that his Party is voting in a block—

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regard that as an imputation of motives. Members in this Party will vote according to their conscience. That comment is not a worthy part of this debate which so far has been on a fairly high plane.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not want to be confrontational on this issue. It is a very important issue, and if the Member feels he should rise on a point of order, then so be it, and I will be guided by your wisdom.

Let me come to the question of deterrence. As I pointed out at about one o'clock today, I do feel that deterrence is marginal, and it is very hard to determine exactly what deterrent effect this will have. We are speaking of a protection of society. I would gather it is a perspective that we see as individuals. It comes down to this conscience aspect of how we evaluate things morally within our own lives and how we see certain things evolving in society. I feel it is something that people should be free to express within themselves. It is something that should not be bound by Party lines or by dogma or doctrine. It is something that evolves from an individual's viewpoints, his upbringing, his spiritual views and his moral views.

In answer to the question of the Hon. Member, I would say that logically I am concerned about the innocent being prosecuted. Though I do not like to deal with statistics, members of the NDP have dealt with them considerably in this debate so I would say that statistics in Canada have shown that there is no proof that anyone in Canada has ever been put to death in error. I do not believe that anything we would institute would allow this kind of thing to happen. We would take the utmost of precautions. In the protection of society, there is always a risk, but it is so minuscule that I feel the protection of society far outweighs any risk we may take in this instance, given the heinous crimes and abominable situations we are facing at the hands of murderers.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, when one analyses the arguments put forward by proponents of the death penalty, one realizes that the bottom line is that those who support the death penalty do so on the basis of vengeance and retribution. It has been proven that capital punishment is not a deterrent. Given the fact that the status quo is such that the death penalty is not on the books, the onus rests on those who want to bring back the death penalty to prove that it is justifiable in today's society. Study after study has concluded that it is not a deterrent.

Does the Hon. Member believe it is appropriate that vengeance or retribution be the basis of our criminal justice system? Does he believe it is right that our criminal justice system should be based on the theory of an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth? If he thinks that that is morally right, perhaps he could indicate to me what other western nations have retribution as the basis of their criminal justice systems. Would the Hon. Member not agree that retribution has no place in the Canadian criminal justice system, that in fact there should be other principles that underlie our justice system, namely, the protection of society and the rehabilitation of those who would pursue a life of deviant behaviour?

I would admit that we all at times feel the need or desire to get even with someone who has committed a wrong, either toward us personally or toward the state collectively. However, this is a human failing that we must overcome when we are talking about the criminal justice system, because if we were to allow vengeance to creep in and form the basis of our criminal justice system then we would in effect be saying that our criminal justice system is the law of the jungle. Would the Hon. Member not agree?

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out earlier, I do not see this as being a form of revenge. Obviously the Hon. Member does, and that is the basic difference. This is why it is a question of the conscience, perception and perspective of each individual. It has never been proven that capital punishment is not a deterrent, as marginal and questionable as this particular area really is.

The Hon. Member asked what advanced nations have capital punishment. The answer is the United States of America, Ireland and Belgium, to name just a few.

There are those of us who believe that the protection of society is not a question of revenge or vengeance, but is merely a question of the ultimate crime being controlled. When I was a member of a law-enforcement agency, I recall an individual who had killed a child and was incarcerated. Through the system of parole he was released, according to the laws of the land. He was not on the street three months before he had killed again. I am not saying that in this particular case capital punishment would have been the penalty in the first instance, but had it existed it certainly would have been a deterrent to the second murder.

I do not want to base this entire debate on a question of revenge. It is a question of the protection of society and we have an obligation as legislators and leaders of the country to come forward with the protection that is needed today and in the future.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take part in such an important debate, so important in fact that after my election the first question put to me by a news reporter when I first arrived in Ottawa was wether I was for or against capital punishment. Canadians are following this debate with interest because it is very important, yet at the same time sad for me because nearly 15 years after the death penalty was abolished in Canada the Canadian Parliament reopens the debate with a motion aimed at restoring capital punishment.

During that time mankind was able to send men to the moon and in orbit in space. As Canadians we are very proud of the Canadarm sent to the moon to repair satellites. Our scientific achievements are well known, but after 15 years, since yesterday, publicly in this House, by debating the restoration of capital punishment we admit we have failed and that as citizens we have been unable to find solutions to provide better protection for our society and prevent certain kinds of murder from happening again.

Any way you look at them, Mr. Speaker, statistics show that the number of murders did not increase since the death penalty was abolished in Canada. In countries where capital punishment is still on the statute books statistics reveal that the number of murders did not decline either. So, Mr. Speaker, what is the point of restoring capital punishment in Canada?

We have a serious problem, a problem of society. How to protect society? How can we make sure that certain criminal acts will not be repeated? How can we make sure that the life of every human being on earth will be protected? That is the real issue of the debate. Those are the answers which we as parliamentarians must find and give people. But what are we up to? We want to restore the death penalty. And when I say it is sad, Mr. Speaker, it is because by so doing we admit we have failed in our duty, that we are unable to move forward, to better our society.

[English]

Killing those who have killed in order to prove that killing is wrong in today's modern society is absurd. As a parliamentarian I do not believe the state should have the power to kill someone. If killing is wrong, why should the state have the right to kill? That is what we are debating here today. People often argue that if the death penalty is reinstated that will dissuade people from committing murder. On statistical grounds alone that argument does not stand up. Most of the time even if murderers knew they would die they would still kill because they are not normal human beings. They are sick. That is what we should be addressing: how can we solve the problem, how can we cure those who need help instead of killing them?

Mr. Speaker, assuming that some day on our planet earth—there are even some scientists who are foreseeing this in the more or less distant future—there are more human beings than the planet can support, what will happen? Would the authorities decide to kill a lot of people to ease the problem? Or would they look at the problem as a whole to try and find a balance and save all human lives? That is the question, Mr. Speaker. Personally, I feel that by reinstating capital punishment in Canada after 15 years, we show that we are unable to find solutions in our modern society, to develop effective preventive mechanisms to reduce crime and to protect our society against unbalanced human beings.

Mr. Speaker, those who are in favour of reinstating capital punishment will certainly say that three out of every four Canadians agree with them. In my opinion and on the basis of the great many thorough discussions I have had with my Saint-Léonard—Anjou constituents, these polls mean that people want better protection. It is our penal code that should be revised.

Of course, we have penitentiaries. But are they part of the solution? In penitentiaries, we take criminals and lock them up in small rooms. But is that a solution? Is that the way to cure them? Years ago, people felt that this was the solution. But today, have we considered all possibilities? Why do some people kill? If scientists can study and develop the technology to travel to the moon and throughout the universe, why can they not find out why some people kill instead of us wasting so much time and energy reinstating capital punishment in Canada after 15 years?

Mr. Speaker, I believe in life. I suggest that all human beings should be the right to live, even after committing a murder. It is our responsibility, as a society and as well-adjusted human beings, to find ways to help the murderer and to cure him, to protect both him and society, and not simply by locking him up to show him that everything is over, but maybe by truing to rehabilitate him. And it is my view, Mr. Speaker, that with all the scientific progress accumulated to date, if we really took the trouble, if we took the same amount of time available for this debate, if we used all the publicity enjoyed by this debate—and this is something I have been repeating for two and a half years, how many times have I been asked by the press whether I was for or against the death penalty. If we put all the emphasis enjoyed by the death penalty on finding a solution as to how to protect our society, how to rehabilitate and cure the people who kill, I think we would have a better society. This is where we should apply an ongoing effort, put all our energies to find a solution in the hope that some day our society will be better.

Mr. Speaker, of course this debate is very emotional. People who support capital punishment come up with examples—children that were killed, very young innocent children and women, all sorts of crimes that are really unacceptable. Of course there is no acceptable crime, but those crimes are most horrible. With capital punishment, they would like to say—Well, we found that individual guilty, we sent him to the gallows, the problem is solved. I do not think the problem is solved. First, we must ensure whether the convicted individual was the guilty one. How many people sentenced to die were innocent! Our judicial system is a human system, therefore subject to human error. There is that aspect. Think of the jury or the judge who sentenced someone to die and found a few years later they had erred. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, what their lives must be. So, the equation must be made on both side of the coin.

Those are horrible events, criminal acts with loss of life, but on the other side there is also the possibility of error. That has happened in history. Therefore, when someone says the solution is the death penalty, my answer is no, because statistics once more prove the opposite. Although some countries have capital punishment, the crime rate has not decreased. And here in Canada, the crime rate has not increased since we abolished capital punishment 15 years ago. We must therefore ask the question: Is that the right solution, and should we really, as a modern society, go over what was done 15 years ago, because this debate already took place twice in this House? Why should we, Mr. Speaker? I put it to you: Why should we have this debate at this point, rather than debating our judicial system, looking at our Criminal Code, bringing in real reforms to our penitentiary system? That is the kind of debate we should have, Mr. Speaker, and that is where we should begin instead of moving backward. We are not making any progress, we are regressing.

[English]

What are the alternatives? How can we reduce the number of murders? No one, not even the most staunch supporter of the death penalty, argues that its reinstatement will prevent all murders. The declared aim is to reduce the murder rate. If our society is serious about that goal we must resist the temptation to adopt measures such as the death penalty which are illusory. Instead, our support must be directed toward effective alternatives.

We must find better alternatives. We must make sure that our criminals are put away until they are rehabilitated in order to protect society. Nowadays, of course, Canadians are concerned. It is true that they are asking for protection. Opinion polls indicate that quite clearly. However, as I said, Mr. Speaker, what they want is not the reinstatement of capital punishment but a more fair and equitable society that would reflect the history of mankind. And when at the beginning I said that I was sad, Mr. Speaker, I am really sad. For the past 15 years, since Parliament abolished capital punishment, we have made considerable scientific progress. We have sent human beings on the moon, we are exploring outer space, we have heart transplants and we have made so many incredible and marvelous scientific discoveries. How is it that after 15 years, we have to come back to capital punishment and have no other alternative than going backward?

This is not progress but regression. And on this issue, Mr. Speaker, I will continue to try to convince my colleagues that the reinstatement of capital punishment is not the best direction to take, but that we should find a better system and look at the structure of our penal and rehabilitation systems. Perhaps it is true, Mr. Speaker, that our rehabilitation system should be closely examined. It often happens that people undergoing rehabilitation commit other crimes. We have to consider the whole question. However, capital punishment would not solve those problems. It often happens that a murderer does not think about capital punishment. He is not a normal person.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell my colleagues that I will vote against the reinstatement of capital punishment.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to congratulate the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) for his speech and for saying that he is against the reinstatement of capital punishment.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question on the way capital punishment is applied in Canada.

The Hon. Member has already mentioned a number of problems with capital punishment.

• (1540)

I would like to ask the Hon. Member to reflect on a very serious concern which I have with respect to the application of the death penalty, that being the fact that it is applied not to the rich and powerful in societies where it exists, but rather to those who are poor and, in many cases, are racial minorities.

A study was conducted by Professor Kenneth Avio at the University of Victoria which showed that native Indians, Ukrainians and French Canadians, interestingly enough, were executed in disproportionate numbers to English Canadians while the death penalty was in effect in Canada.

The warden of Sing Sing prison said this:

> Not only does capital punishment fail in its justification, but no punishment could be invented with so many inherent defects.
> It is an unequal punishment in the way it is applied to the rich and to the poor. The defendant of wealth and position never goes to the electric chair or to the gallows.
> Juries do not intentionally favour the rich, the law is theoretically impartial, but the defendant with ample means is able to have his case presented with every favourable aspect while the poor defendant often has a lawyer assigned by the court—with no experience.

Similarly, the former Governor of Ohio, Michael Di Salle said this:

> During my experience as Governor of Ohio, I found that the men on death row had one thing in common, they were penniless—the fact that they had no money was a principal factor in their being condemned to death.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member, who has spoken with great conviction against the death penalty and outlined a number of arguments, to comment as well on the unequal application of the death penalty in Canadian society.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, that is definitely one of the reasons. I wish to thank my hon. colleague for mentioning those facts. That is indeed one of the reasons why we should not reinstate capital punishment.

In actual fact, Mr. Speaker, when a trial is held, everything is a matter of credibility and a jury is asked to judge a person on the basis of facts and circumstances and even in some cases of appearances. This is also the danger I mentioned in my speech, Mr. Speaker, namely the fact that it has been proved that in many instances throughout history, jurys and judges erred in sentencing to death people who were proved to be innocent a few years later.

The have-nots in our society whose appearance may not be as neat and whose defence may not be as well prepared as that of well-off people, tend to be more easily sentenced. Because a person is not properly dressed, or does not have a good appearance, that person may give the wrong impression. And these statistics show that more of those have-not people have been sentenced to death than those who were well-off in our society.

It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that such things can happen under our legal system, and that is the main reason, that is another very important argument, Mr. Speaker, to show that the reinstatement of capital punishment will not solve those problems, but will indeed lead to more injustice. Therefore, instead of spending our time and energy on this debate which the House has been through twice already, it might be more worthwhile having a debate on our criminal law, on our social justice system in order to provide all Canadians with the same justice.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in the main body of his remarks I believe the Hon. Member said in effect that the state should not have the right to kill. Could the Hon. Member expand on that? In the case of war, if we were invaded by an enemy, does he not think the state would be in a position of being able to field an army which would possibly have to kill the invader in order to protect our territory? In short, surely it is a fairly wide statement to say that the state should not have the right to kill.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member took my statement out of context. With regard to capital punishment the state definitely should not have the right to kill. However, when a state declares war it does not declare the intent to kill but rather the intent to defend. The action of defence naturally creates the horrible thing which is war.

As far as I am concerned it is not right to extrapolate from the state's right to kill that parliamentarians can authorize the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to authorize someone to kill a person because he or she has killed. However, the case of war, in which we have to defend our country, is not the same circumstance.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member rather startled me by using a figure which I know that those in support of abolition often use, that being that since the time capital punishment was abolished in Canada the death rate for murder has not risen. Surely the relevant period to consider is not from when it was technically abolished but from the last time capital punishment was carried out in this country.

Could the Hon. Member tell the House whether he has checked the figures? If he has, would he not confirm to the House that the death rate from murder per 100,000 has more than doubled since the last time capital punishment took place in this country, which means that on average every year 300 more Canadians have been murdered than were murdered on average in the years previous? Does it not concern him that the murder rate would jump so dramatically as a result, at least in part, of the abolition of capital punishment in practice as opposed to the technical abolition to which he referred?

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I have all the statistics here. I have about 10 pages of statistics and I have a few other books from which I could quote. As we all know, Mr. Speaker, it all depends which side we want to look at and what point in time we want to consider. As I said before we can approach this from just about any angle. Those in favour of capital punishment are saying that the number of crimes has increased. Those against are saying the number has not increased. The point is, we have to know what periods the statistics are supposed to cover and how they are interpreted.

Mr. Speaker, what we are really talking about is human lives, and if we have to consider a human life in terms of statistics, I repeat, that is very sad. Fifteen years after the last debate on the subject, we still have no other alternatives, no other solutions to the problem, and here we are debating on whether to reinstate capital punishment, while in other areas we have made fantastic progress. Mr. Speaker, we can use statistics to prove that capital punishment does not act as a deterrent, while those who are in favour of capital punishment can use them to prove the death penalty does help reduce the crime rate. I think, however, we should consider the context from which these figures were taken.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: One last question by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether my colleague from Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) shares my view that this debate is useless and will not do anything to prevent young criminals from committing further offences in future no matter how the vote turns out. Does the Hon. Member agree with me that we should first deal with three issues if we really want to reduce the criminal rate and the number of murders? First we ought to spend months and months debating the establishment of full employment policies for the benefit of poor people, programs to find jobs for everybody. Second we ought to introduce legislation to ban all violence on TV, including NHL telecasts where we see hockey games which promote violence among young people. Third, we ought to be here to undertake a real reform of our penal system, a real reform of the judicial system. Personally I think that such debates would make it easier for us to reach the objectives we have in mind, they would be more practical than simply deciding to take someone's life.

Mr. Gagliano: Precisely, Mr. Speaker, this was the whole thrust, if you will, of the remarks I made earlier concerning capital punishment. I think that this debate, instead of channelling all our energies . . . I said at the outset that when I first came here, my first day as a new Member in Ottawa, the first question put to me by a news reporter was whether I was for or against the death penalty. As a new Member I was not asked whether I had any suggestions to make to solve the unemployment problem or something else. So instead of putting so much energy to decide whether capital punishment should or should not be restored, I fully agree with the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) that we should solve the unemployment program.

I say we must take a closer look at our rehabilitation system. We must have a closer look at it. People are often allowed to go free and they go on to commit other crimes. We should have a look at that, and at our judicial system as well. The penitentiary system we have now was probably designed hundreds of years ago. Do we really need the same system, or should we have a new one to meet the needs of today's society?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the House give unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) to ask a short question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Della Noce: Thank you for your patience, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to say the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) is to be commended, but I do not agree with him at all. As far as figures are concerned, he does not know what he is talking about, although I agree that figures can be made to say what we want them to say. However, his figures do not prove a thing. And I wonder whether the Hon. Member knows the difference between first-degree murder and unpremeditated murder. When he talks about possible errors, I do not agree, and perhaps I could give an example. If I go on the highway and I am driving too fast, and the policeman fails to stop me, are we going to stop writing speeding tickets because the policeman is no good at his job? Maybe we should get another policeman. I wonder whether the Hon. Member has considered that if there is the possibility of a judicial error, something he has failed to prove and will not be able to prove, even if he takes Marshall and Coffin as examples . . . Coffin is one of Senator Hébert's favorites and Marshall is a guy who perjured himself and anyway, he was not given a death sentence. I wonder whether in the case of a judicial error we should not consider revising our laws instead of ignoring the principle of justice altogether. I want to ask the Hon. Member . . . Even if the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) was referring to the consequences for the future, and there will be consequences, because before, the annual figure for people sentenced to 25 years in our penitentiaries was five, while today, this has risen to nearly 60, I wonder whether in 10 years' time, we will see that three-quarters of our prison population with 25 year sentences. I think it would be interesting to pursue the matter. My question to the Hon. Member is this: Would we not be better off reforming our laws, instead of giving up altogether on the principle of justice which is something to which Canadians are entitled? Surely, we cannot deal with crime without sentencing the criminal?

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, the difference between the Hon. Member for Duvernay and myself is that we both agree—and I said as much in my speech—that we must take a closer look at our judicial or penal system. A closer look at this aspect is definitly in order. That is the point I think should be debated here. That is where the problem lies. How does killing someone deal with the issue? Mr. Speaker, do you think that killing someone, once we have capital punishment, will mean fewer murders? The Hon. Member said that the figure . . . I have a paper on those figures. I didn't want to use them. I have them right here and I could use them, but as far as I am concerned, this debate goes beyond mathematics. It is a debate about people and about human life, and killing someone because he killed someone else is absurd, Mr. Speaker. We have serious problems in our society, and after 15 years we are back with the same debate and we still have no solution. And so we say: We must reinstate capital punishment. This is absurd.

[English]

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I will not begin my remarks, as most of us are wont to do, by saying that I am pleased to take part in this debate, because I am not. My conscience dictates, however, that I must.

Sometimes it is casually said in light of the importance of an issue that it is a matter of life and death. However, I need not remind my colleagues in the House that the debate on which we are now embarking is a question of life and death.

I must state clearly and unequivocally that when it comes to such an issue of life and death, I opt in favour of life. If, as a society, we respect human life as sacred and inviolable, and if we recognize the rights of each person as primary, how can we do otherwise?

As has already been stated often, the death penalty in this country was abolished in 1976, even though by a narrow majority. However, if there is one thing that the people in this country want, it is a rule of law that is firm, strong, and predictable.

I take the position that it is incumbent upon those who want to restore the death penalty to justify the taking of life in the name of the state. The onus is on them, and it is a heavy onus, to prove why we should join that small band of countries that, by some means or another, inflict the death penalty.

The motion we have to address commences with these words:

> That this House supports, in principle, the reinstatement of capital punishment—

That is what the debate is all about. Those first 11 words set out the real issue. As soon as anyone begins talking about first, second or third degree murder, or about hanging being too inhumane, that person is backing away from the real core issue.

• (1600)

Does any Government have the right to sanction the killing of any person? It is a simple question but one which deserves more than a simple answer. Advocates of the death penalty will skip the moral issue, but can we? I have a letter on my desk, and I assume each Hon. Member received a copy of that same letter, which was referred to yesterday. It was written by Leslie Parrott of Toronto whose daughter Alison was tragically abducted and murdered just last July. Mrs. Parrott writes in part:

> It has more than ever convinced me that we as a society cannot ever and must not ever condone killing, whether by state or by an individual, in any shape or in any form.

She continues on to talk about victims' rights and states her belief that in no way can anyone's suffering be alleviated by the deliberate killing of another. Her message is clear and unconditional. Human life is sacred and killing is always wrong. who could have said it better?

We have already heard in the context of this debate several biblical quotations, beginning with the Book of Genesis, as justification for state killing. First let me say that the Roman Catholic Bishops, and practically all the councils of the other established churches, hold that it is abhorrent in the 1980s to turn to the Old Testament to justify a legal and moral position. If the church or synagogue or Christianity means anything today, the lessons to be learned are lessons of love. Love thy neighbour. Have compassion, understanding, charity and forgiveness. These are the teachings and principles of the church. If we take them away, we have not much left. The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away. Life is not ours to create and it is not ours to take.

Of course, arguments will be raised in favour of reinstatement, setting out, first, that there will be deterrence if the death penalty is there. To me, this is the only justifiable reason. If it can be shown that the death penalty has a deterrent effect then we might justify the return of the death penalty.

The second argument is that the penalty must suit the crime and, third, what about popular opinion which calls for reinstatement? There are other arguments such as the cost factor, but time will not permit me to address every one of these arguments.

First, with respect to deterrence, there are many who really believe that the death penalty has an effective deterrent ability for those who commit the crime of murder wilfully and with forethought, premeditated murder, but to me this is the last group which is likely to be deterred by the death penalty because theirs is the perfect crime and they will not be found out.

The facts are that in most western countries which have abolished the death penalty—and interestingly enough, Canada is included—the rate of murder has dropped or, put in another way, it has not climbed significantly since capital punishment was abolished.

A recent Statistics Canada report indicates that the rate of 2.19 per 100,000 in 1986 is the lowest homicide rate in 15 years, down from the 2.75 rate per 100,000 in 1976. In the United States currently 35 of the States have the death penalty. There are some interesting comparisons. For example,

Maine and Vermont are side by side with basically the same kind of people, income range and otherwise. Maine does not have the death penalty, Vermont does, yet Vermont's murder rate is slightly higher than that of Maine. It is the same with Rhode Island with no death penalty when compared with Connecticut, North and South Dakota, Virginia and West Virginia as well as with Oregon and Washington, which have a death penalty. In each case, the state which does not have capital punishment has a lower rate of murder although just slightly, than the state adjacent to it which does.

It is argued that the death penalty is needed to protect policemen and prison guards, and we all agree that policemen and prison guards have a difficult job and need all the protection which society—we, the people—can give, but I say to you, Mr. Speaker, in all sincerity, that the death penalty will not make their jobs one bit safer. The subculture in prisons will be there tomorrow as it was yesterday.

I do not want to enter into the numbers game but we did in fact have a bad year in 1962 while the death penalty was in place. In the year of our last hanging, 11 policemen were murdered. The high number since that date was in 1984 with six police murders, and at that time there was a substantial increase in the number of policemen serving their respective communities.

From 1961 to 1983, 14 prison guards were murdered with no clear indication of the deterrent effect of the death penalty. Indeed, the President of the Police Association of Ontario writes:

> There is no concrete evidence to prove that it is or is not a deterrent and indeed it is quite likely that we will never know with certainty if capital punishment deters one who is contemplating murder.

I would ask my colleagues to note the reference to "one who is contemplating murder" since in this debate most of us are talking about premeditated and deliberate murder.

The Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police has decided it is futile to base an argument of reinstatement on the grounds of deterrence. The point is simply that capital punishment has no material effect on the murder rate. It is not a deterrent and it fails completely to meet the test of justifying a return of the death penalty.

I turn next to the crime penalty aspect, the penalty must suit the crime. Retentionists will argue that legislation must make it safe for the public to walk the streets at night and at least with capital punishment a murderer will not commit a second offence. For them, the only just punishment for a murder, that most heinous of crimes, must be death. It is an appropriate means of justice—or so they say. Apart from death, there is no guarantee that a second offence will not take place—and I will not guarantee that it will not take place, either. But it is to be noted that the rate of occurrence of a second offence of the crime of murder is, thankfully, the lowest of all criminal offences.

In looking at these issues, one has to weigh the balance. Sometimes the cure is worse than the disease. While I have the greatest respect for our system of justice and our courts, I do not for one moment believe that that system rests on that delicate balance of an eye for an eye, or a tooth for a tooth, or an assault for an assault, or a rape for a rape, or a life for a life. Of course the penalty must suit the crime; but a life for a life concept is barbarous, outmoded, and revengeful. Yes, some convicted murderers, not executed, may murder again. But let us weigh the results of the restoration of capital punishment.

All of us have read the recently released study by Professor Freedman of the University of Toronto. We have a system of justice made up of people with feelings as strong as those held by the Members of this House. There is no doubt in my mind that the reimposition of the death penalty would have an effect on jurors. I have had a member of the Supreme Court of Canada say to me that, in the event that the death penalty is reinstated, he will resign before invoking that penalty.

Once again, the most frequent argument against the death penalty is the gross inequality of its application. I am convinced, as some of you are, that the wealth and status of the accused will have some bearing on the result. I am just as convinced that the death penalty, if imposed, would be imposed more frequently on the poor, the socially deprived, the disabled, or on the ethnic and social minorities.

Our courts are not infallible. Occasionally they do err. One of the reasons that lawyers are so very much concerned about this issue is that they know that false testimony is sometimes introduced into evidence; they know that there are cases of mistaken identity, cases of biased or circumstantial evidence. All of these things make it possible to convict an innocent person. It can happen. It has happened. No amount of compensation or expression of regret will ever bring back a life that the state mistakingly takes. What a terrible crime by the state against a citizen!

You may ask: What about the polls? I have to admit that my constituents read the polls and read the results, and they are just as concerned about the rise in crime generally as are people across the country. I know that a majority of Canadians favour the restoration of the death penalty.

Some of my colleagues have said that they will vote in accordance with the wants and the wishes of their constituents, and they ask why I do not do likewise.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have come through three general elections, and in each one the issue of the reimposition of the death penalty has come up. It is a point that has been raised at candidates' meetings, general meetings, and in other forums. My answer has always been that I am opposed to the restoration of the death penalty. The people of St. Catharines do not expect me to change my religion or to vote against my conscience. I take some comfort in knowing my home community.

In this respect let me quote the words of Edmund Burke, who said: "Your representative owes you not his industry only but his judgment, and he betrays instead of serving you if he sacrifices it to your opinion".

Ours is not a "punch button" democracy. Each of us has been forced by the media to take a position on this question before having had the opportunity of engaging in a reasoned discussion or debate. Ours is not a country, either, of common referenda or plebiscites. We are expected to debate and fully reason any issue before the House before making a decision thereon. When the vote is finally taken on this issue, I expect the result to be a reasoned decision.

Those of you who were in the Chamber this morning to hear the words of the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) will know whereof we speak on this matter. For those who were not in the Chamber this morning for that speech, I commend it to you for your reading.

The real bottom line, as has been mentioned, is not the continued abolition or the reinstatement of the death penalty but our system of justice. It is our justice system that we have to look at and our justice system that we must be concerned with. I have always said that the taking of a life is the last thing that we should do, and I am not satisfied that we are anywhere close to having to take that last step.

One of the reasons that my constituents and your constituents feel as they do is that they are displeased and discouraged with our whole judicial system. They feel frustrated, ignored, and sometimes fearful for their own safety. They want to see that justice is being done. The public confidence in the judicial system is undermined by the discrepancies in sentencing. Confidence has to be restored in our parole system.

Canadians do not have faith in a system that they no longer understand. They read and hear little about it, and they do not believe that it reflects the kind of system that they were brought up under. Media coverage has led the people of Canada to believe that the crime rate is far in excess of what it is in fact, and they are now of the belief that only with the restoration of the death penalty will they be able to restore the law and order that was the norm in past times.

We are all concerned with violence in our way of life; far too many acts of homicidal violence take place in our society. But I sincerely do not believe that the return of the death penalty will resolve those problems. Rather, the problems of our society must be addressed by vigorous law enforcement measures, law reform measures.

Canadians want a society that is both just and humane. We want a criminal justice system that will respond effectively to the real needs of our citizens, who must be protected from crimes of violence. We, in our life-styles, cannot, at home and in our schools, continue a life of permissiveness without the counterbalance of restraint, discipline, and personal responsibility. Having disapproved of the use of the strap in our school system, the use of corporal punishment, we cannot now call for capital punishment for the weaker among us who did not learn discipline and responsibility.

Society can, through its courts, express clearly and forcefully its profound condemnation of murder and other flagrant crimes against the person without resorting to the death penalty.

When the Lord put his mark upon Cain, the first biblical murderer, and cast him out of his family and into the wilderness, he did not kill him; he forced him into a life, remembering each day the wrong that he had committed.

This debate will be followed by a vote of conscience, free of dictate, partisan or Party loyalty. In good conscience, I shall cast my vote against the motion. I cannot do otherwise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), on a question or comment.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, before putting my question to the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), I want to commend him for his excellent speech. It was a speech given with much feeling and much insight. I was certainly touched by what he had to say. In prefacing my question to him, I want to indicate that today was a day chosen by the Canadian Labour Congress to remember men and women who died or have been injured and possibly disabled in the workplace over the last year.

Those who would return capital punishment to the books of Canada have argued that it is essential to protect the innocent. Does the Hon. Member not think that it may be far more worth while for us to talk about corporate responsibility, for example, in terms of preventing deaths and injuries on the job, as there seems to be a far greater problem in that area? Is that not something on which we ought to spend more time and energy in trying to find the laws and processes that would prevent unnecessary deaths or maiming in the workplace?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) will not catch me out in a moment of softness. The problem of employer-employee relations is not a subject for this debate. However, I believe much progress has been made in respect of safety in the workplace. I support measures which are being taken to introduce a greater degree of safety in the workplace.

I do not take the position that accidents, which happen as a result of carelessness or otherwise, can be brought into the same realm of consideration as deliberate homicides. I am sure that safety in the workplace is a matter of concern that all of us are addressing.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I join in congratulating the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) on his first-rate presentation on this subject.

I understand that the Hon. Member is a lawyer and I should like to ask him a question concerning his profession. To what extent does he believe that the skill and intelligence of defence lawyers and prosecuting lawyers determine the outcome of a trial regardless of the guilt or innocence of the accused?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I thought I addressed that particular point in my speech. As a lawyer I recognize that it is a matter of concern.

There are variances of skills in lawyers, particularly criminal court lawyers. Some of them do a much better job than others. We also know that the law of the land provides a lawyer for a person charged with or accused of a capital offence. He will not go into court without one, but just as there are differences in the skills of parliamentarians in the House, there are differences in the skills of practising lawyers before the bar.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on a question or comment.

Mr. Lewis: And here is one now.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I look forward to hearing from the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) in due course.

Mr. Lewis: I have already contributed.

Mr. Robinson: I forgot we already heard from him. It was obviously a notable contribution to the debate.

I have a question for the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) referring to the support of major church groups in Canada for the continued abolition of capital punishment. He will know that all major church groups in Canada, including the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Anglican Church, the United Church, the Presbyterian Church, the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec, the Canadian Unitarian Council, the Evangelical Lutheran Church, the Mennonite Central Committee, and the Religious Society of Friends, officially support the continued abolition of the death penalty. In fact, we are even waiting for PTL south of the border to pronounce itself on this particular question.

The Hon. Member made a comment in respect of some of the concerns raised by those who spoke in favour of capital punishment and made reference to biblical passages in so doing, the old "an eye for an eye". Does the Hon. Member agree that Christian people in the example of Jesus himself should follow an example of forgiveness and reconciliation? Christ himself, as a victim of capital punishment on the cross, after all, said: "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do". He also saved a woman condemned to death by stoning for the crime of adultery by teaching: "Let he among you who is without sin throw the first stone".

I suggest that those who claim to live in Christ's image can therefore not abandon hope, faith, and the sacredness of life, even the life of a murderer.

Would the Hon. Member like to comment in respect of the extent to which biblical passages are invoked in support of capital punishment in this debate?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I was in the House yesterday when the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) pointed out the great number of communications received from United Church ministers and representatives of the clergy in a wide range of doctrine. I was careful to point out—and I firmly believe it—that the governing bodies of the established churches to which the Hon. Member referred are in their council in favour of the continuation of the abolition of the death penalty. There are some, perhaps in each congregation, in favour of restoration despite the fact that the councils have indicated by resolution that they favour the continuation of abolishment of capital punishment. I think that is so.

I have heard members of the clergy point out in their interpretation of the Scriptures extracts from different sections of the Old Testament, as well as the fact that Jesus was a victim of popular opinion. When Pilate himself could find no wrong, Jesus might be said to have been one of those who were innocent and condemned to death wrongfully by mass public opinion.

There is a difference in the interpretations. It takes a theological scholar to point out the differences and the inflections in each of the extracts. I do not want to dwell upon them particularly, but I certainly agree that the church councils are in support of continued abolition.

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). I think he made a very good speech, but that does not mean that we all agree. I hope my hon. colleague does not expect that to be the case. We are a normal family over here and everyone is allowed his or her rights.

There are five major jails in my riding of Duvernay which I have been able to visit in the last two years. When I visited the prisons, I spoke with inmates who had 25-year sentences. As the Hon. Member will know, when we removed the death penalty, we made a deal; we changed death penalty to 25 years firm. Is it more humane to keep someone inside for 25 years with no option, no solution, and no hope in a six-foot by nine-foot cell? I do not think jail is the best place to be even if our constituents say that they are better treated than in hotels. However, the jails I have visited are far different from a Sheraton Hotel.

Second, does the Hon. Member not think that a person who puts someone's life in danger puts his or her own life in danger? Is 25 years more humane? What is the Hon. Member's solution?

• (1630)

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I will not say that I have a solution. I recognize, as my hon. colleague does, that a prison life is not life in a Sheraton Hotel. It is a life of confinement and it is not intended to be a Sheraton Hotel environment. If a person commits a wrong, that person must be seen and known to pay the penalty.

The whole system of justice is an evolving one. We have come a long way since Elizabethan times when about 149 offences resulted in the death penalty. Even children under the age of nine who pickpocketed were put to death because they could not afford to keep them in jails. It was inhumane. Time and evolution have changed the system and the system will continue to change in the future.

If the consideration of a debate such as this dwelt on the system and improvements to it, perhaps we could find a better way of making certain that those who have committed a wrong who can be rehabilitated should be rehabilitated much more rapidly than those who do not have the capability of being reinstated into society. Only medical authorities, psychiatrists and others can have the expertise to determine whether or not a person should be released. I am satisfied that we have the talent and the ability to do that if given time and opportunity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) I will recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis) on a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to advise the House that the business for tomorrow will be report stage of Bill C-22.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) on debate.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

That this House supports, in principle, the reinstatement of capital punishment and directs that a special committee on reinstatement, composed of 15 members, be established, hold hearings and make its final report to the House no later than three (3) months following the adoption of this motion, such report to provide recommendations on:

(a) which offence or offences should carry the death penalty, and in what circumstances;

(b) which method or methods should be used to carry out the penalty of death, and in what circumstances;

That, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), this special committee be hereby appointed as a committee to prepare and bring in a bill no later than three months following the adoption of this motion, founded on the committee's recommendations on (a) and (b) above; such a bill shall be the object of a separate and distinct report of the special committee, and such a report shall be its final report;

That such bill, when reported from such special committee to the House, be deemed pursuant to Standing Order 107(1) to have been introduced and stand on the Order Paper, in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business"; and that, when the said bill has been read a second time, it shall stand referred to a Legislative Committee;

That the Striking Committee be empowered to name the Members of the special committee, provided that once the Striking Committee report is laid upon the Table, it shall be deemed concurred in;

That the special committee have the power to sit while the House is sitting and during periods when the House stands adjourned;

That the special committee be empowered to report from time to time and send for persons and papers, and to print such papers and evidence from time to time as may be ordered by the committee and to retain the services of expert, technical, professional and clerical staff;

That the special committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place inside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the appropriate staff accompany the committee;

That a quorum of the special committee be eight (8) members for any vote, resolution or other decision; and that the chairman be authorized to hold meetings to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof whenever six (6) members are present;

That any substitution of membership on the special committee be made pursuant to Standing Order 94(4); and

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when the special committee is ready to issue its final report and the said bill, the special committee shall present its report and the bill to the House by filing them with the Clerk of the House provided that the report shall then be deemed to have been laid upon the Table, and the bill shall then be deemed, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), to have been introduced at the first sitting of the House thereafter and to stand on the Order Paper in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business".

and on the amendment (Mr. Robinson) (p. 5311).

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I very much regret that the Government has reopened the issue of capital punishment and made it necessary for me to participate in this debate.

During the last election I made it clear to my constituents that I am opposed to the reinstatement of the death penalty in Canada. My opposition is on moral grounds, on grounds bound to conscience. I believe that my constituents respect my decision and I would not be prepared to change my vote or my view on this issue even if that were the price of retaining my seat in the House of Commons.

A number of people during the course of this debate will be making a number of common arguments, and I basically support the arguments made by others who will be supporting the continued abolition of the death penalty. They will argue, and I agree, that capital punishment is not a deterrent and it is not, therefore, justifiable on that particular ground. They will argue, and I agree, that to restore capital punishment in Canada would be an uncivilized act and that we as Canadians should look at the precedent and practice of most western industrialized countries in western Europe, of Australia, New Zealand and all other countries in the OECD, with the exception of the United States, which have either banned the death penalty or in the case of Belgium and Ireland have not used it for a very long period.

They will note, as I note, that the murder rate was down in 1986 and that it has not risen in Canada since the death penalty was abolished 11 or 12 years ago. They will note, and I agree, that the chances of execution with the death penalty restored would very much depend on a person's social class, on how a person looked, whether he or she were of the middle class or seen as a loser, the court the person drew, the judge he or she drew, the lawyer, the jury, the defence lawyer, the jurisdiction in which the person appeared, whether or not he or she appeared before a jury, and a number of other factors like that. In other words, this application of a reinstated death penalty would be very unequal.

I noted, for example, in the statistics that the chances of being executed in the United States are a great deal greater if a person has murdered a white person rather than having murdered a black person. In the Republic of South Africa, that great example to us all, of the 115 executions in 1984, 113 were of blacks, only two were of whites. Your chances of being executed because you were black were something like 12 to 15 times greater than if you were white.

In my own constituency there was a tragic case a year or so ago, the death of Celia Ruygrok who was working in a halfway house in downtown Ottawa who was raped and then killed by a man who had a previous conviction for murder. That case has been brought forward. One cannot comment on it too greatly here except to express one's extreme condolences and regrets to Gerry Ruygrok and his wife, her parents and to all of those in the great, close-knit and loving family.

Gerry Ruygrok has expressed to my Leader and through him to this House his opposition to the death penalty. The evidence coming forward in the case and also before the inquest indicated that had our criminal justice system been working effectively, had parole been revoked, as it should have been in this case, then the incident could and should have been avoided. It seems to me that it is an example where we say we might have avoided this particular killing had there been the death penalty. The assailant would have been executed previously for his previous first offence. Therefore, this was an avoidable death.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is hypocritical of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who says he is against the death penalty, to be perfectly willing to let Parliament spend time on this debate on capital punishment, in the knowledge that it might result in legislation that in the final instance could mean the death penalty for some of our fellow citizens.

Mr. Speaker, it is the Pontius Pilate approach. I believe the Government should have shown some leadership on this issue, either by deciding that its policy would be to reinstate capital punishment or by deciding to do nothing.

We are told that 70 per cent of Canadians are in favour of the death penalty. But, Mr. Speaker, very few of those Canadians consider it a priority. Incidentally, two-thirds of Canadians are opposed to the changes in the Patent Act being proposed by the Government, but the fact that the majority of Canadians object has not convinced the Government to drop the Bill. I agree that even if the Government is wrong about Bill C-22, it has the right and the duty, from time to time, to introduce legislation, even if that legislation is not supported by the majority of the people.

The Parliamentary Secretary who opened the debate said that now the Government had resolved the unemployment issue and dealt with Canada-U.S. relations and other problems it had been considering, it was time it kept its promise to hold a free vote on the death penalty.

Mr. Speaker, in seven provinces, the unemployment rate remains higher than it was during the recession from 1981 to 1983. An increasing number of jobs are part-time instead of full-time jobs, and some are for a short term only. In Newfoundland, the unemployment rate is 24 per cent. Among young people in Quebec, the unemployment rate is 16 or 17 per cent. The Government has yet to respond effectively to the youth unemployment problem that exists across the country. In fact, the recession is continuing. Mr. Speaker, there are all kinds of things for this Government to do. Ministers are complaining they do not have enough time to bring some very important Bills before Parliament and that we have many other Bills before the House that are just as important, but the Government will not be able to work on those Bills because Parliament is tied up with the death penalty.

Surely these other problems are more important than bringing back a measure which smacks of vengeance and which does not respond to the real problems of poverty, unemployment and the perception that there can and should be things done about security or law and order.

I would also point out that the scale of violence in Canada is grossly overestimated by many Canadians. One study that was done in Toronto indicated that Canadians felt that the murder rate in Canada was seven times higher than it actually is. In a single evening on the channels available in Metropolitan Toronto, more murders are perpetrated than occur in Metropolitan Toronto in an entire year. Most of the violence we see is fictional, and there is too much of it. From time to time, I feel thoroughly sickened by what I see on television. I see a set of values which, on the one hand is unduly commercial and appeals to people's vanity and greed, and on the other is perpetrating the myth that this is a violent society in which one can hardly dare to go out at night for fear of being attacked.

I have no problems when I walk anywhere in my constituency at any time of the day or night. There are some very limited areas in which I would recommend that a woman perhaps not walk at night, but in general our streets are safe. Our society in Canada is safe even though there are things we can and should do, particularly with respect to the concerns, feelings and rights of victims.

I would like to put some statistics on the record to put the question of capital punishment into perspective. In 1983, there were over two million Criminal Code offences committed in Canada. That is too many, but that included speeding and other offences which I would suspect would probably make virtually every Member of Parliament one of those who from time to time may have violated the Criminal Code. Of those offences, 8 per cent or 172,000 were violent crimes.

To put things into perspective, it is interesting to note that for each policeman or policewoman on duty in Canada, there was an estimated one and a half to two violent crimes committed in the course of an average year. In other words, the perception of police always fighting crooks is incorrect. In fact, police are doing many other things as well and they do not, day after day, come into contact with violent crime.

Of that violent crime, something like one-third of 1 per cent were murders. The average between 1977 and 1983 was 589. Of those murders in the same seven years, on average 178 were first-degree murders, 170 were second-degree murders, and 140 were unreported.

The rate of conviction for murder is relatively low. It is running at about 19 per cent for first-degree murder and 29 per cent for second-degree murder. That translates to an average of 32 convicted first-degree murderers per year between 1977 and 1983 and 120 second-degree murderers. Assuming for the sake of argument that half of the first-degree convictions would in fact go to execution—and I do not know if that is realistic or not—then we are talking about perhaps 16 murderers per year who would actually hang, be electrocuted, be given an injection or be killed in some other awful way. One then must ask oneself about the biblical principle of the sanctity of human life and the Commandment: "Thou shalt not kill". We as a state would violate it whether one or 1,000 persons were executed for crimes of murder.

If there is to be deterrence, one must ask, what would be the rational response, supposing there is one, of someone who is on the verge of committing a crime which involves murder? There are 600 murders in a year and 32 convictions for first-degree murder, 16 of which might lead to a hanging. That is a 2.5 per cent chance of hanging and only that.

Most crimes are committed in passion, in anger, under the influence of drugs or under the influence of alcohol, but we are to assume that despite that, the criminal or potential criminal will stop, have a moment of lucidity and rationality, and say: "If I shoot this gun, then I might hang for the crime. There is a 2.5 per cent chance that I would hang, but 39 times out of 40 that I will not hang". Is that a deterrent? No, it is not. It is ridiculous to suggest that criminals think in those rational terms when murder is essentially an irrational act, but I would suggest that that is a very real factor.

I would like to read into the record a few letters which have come from my constituents. Despite the opinion polls, the mail I am receiving from my constituents, which is substantial, is eight to one against the reinstatement of capital punishment and in favour of continued abolition. I have a letter here from young Elizabeth Monahan who lives in my riding. Her letter reads in part:

> I am 11 years old, my name is Elizabeth and I am totally against the death penalty. You say it's wrong to kill somebody and then turn around and kill somebody yourself now does that make sense to you. What's the point of killing somebody?

We say that of murderers, we should say that of the state as well. She goes on:

> And if you make a mistake and only find out too late what happens then, somebody's family is going to be pretty upset.

Another constituent who lives on Cartier Street has this to say:

> Dear Mike,
> I take this opportunity to add my voice against the imposition of the death penalty in Canada. I have lived in this country, my new home, for about thirteen years and the absence of the death penalty was—is one of the many humane institutions I enjoyed.
> I consider the death penalty as being nothing less than an act of collective vengeance, indeed legalized lynching.
> I trust that you and your colleagues will do your best to prevent Canada from regressing into the barbaric age of "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth".

Another letter from a constituent reads as follows:

> Dear Mike Cassidy,
> I am writing to encourage you and all the other MPs to keep the death penalty out of Canada. I am opposed to any brutal or cruel punishments. I do not believe that fear will prevent murder. We see in the U.S. that the more fear, the more murders seem to occur. At least there is no solid statistical evidence that capital punishment works as a deterrent.
> Families of victims deserve care & sympathy & support for their grief & anger. Those criminals who are out-of-control need restraint and also psychiatric care so they may change and not be tormented further by their own failings.
> I hope you will follow your inner conscience & that it will lead you to oppose capital punishment, to support victims' rights to grieve & anger, and to call for further psychiatric help for all those who commit violent crime. I also feel tight gun control will minimize the number of murders we have.

Another letter from a constituent reads as follows:

> One issue concerns me more than any other facing Canada in the next few months. That issue is the death penalty. I had hoped the debate was behind us for good, the "hanging and flogging" wing of the Conservatives notwithstanding. Unfortunately, it is not.

He goes on to say:

> We never should have to live again in a Canada which feels that legal murder is justice. All too much, the support on the other side is symptomatic of the kind of country people would like this to be—an Iran, a South Africa, a U.S.S.R., a China. No thanks, not my kind of Canada.

Another letter reads in part as follows:

> We too know the death penalty is not a deterrent. Legalized killing of humans out of a sense of frustration at the lack of options or while pointing to the cost of prison sentences, is dehumanizing and demeans each of us individually.
> Add to this the threat of executing an innocent party and you have a situation which is untenable on human, moral and legal grounds. We owe more to ourselves and our children.

> We wish you well in your attempt to convince your colleagues to affirm the basic morality that civilization's history has been intent to show us, that killing people is antithetical to our existence. Teaching by example is the best tool we have to create Canada as a peaceful and secure society. The example that puts human blood on all our hands is the wrong one.

I could go on and on reading letters but I will only read a final letter from Mr. Ken Cunningham, the President of the John Howard Society of Ontario. He points out the number of organizations concerned with prison rights, the churches and the like, which have stood steadfastly in favour of abolition. Then he goes on to say the following:

> As an organization which has worked for decades in the area of rehabilitation of offenders, we know that it is essential that the state's policies and practices model the behavior we expect of the offender. The death penalty, in our opinion is the ultimate hypocrisy. It does not reject violence, it embraces violence. It does not reject revenge, it elevates it to the status of law. It brutalizes us all. It removes the distinction between the murderer, who in his or her delusion feels justified in killing, and the rest of us, who in our delusions feel justified in killing the murderer.

I have quoted those views of my constituents at length and I subscribe to them.

This is a moral issue. The intensity of people opposed to reinstatement of the death penalty must be taken into account. I plead with my colleagues from all Parties. Listen to what Pope John Paul says. He calls for clemency and pardon for those who are condemned. The Canadian Council of Churches, representing 13 denominations, has said that it is implacably opposed to the death penalty. The Catholic Bishops in Canada have expressed very strong opposition. The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) has come up with a handful of church people who are in favour. Of course there will be some. However, an overwhelming number of our moral and religious leaders say: Do not do it. Do not go backwards. They point out that the biblical precept of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth was put into the Bible to stop wanton vengeance for minor crimes at a time when the death penalty was prescribed for such things as swearing, blasphemy, sorcery, or fornication. There would not be many of us left if those penalties were enforced today.

Mr. Nystrom: Order!

An Hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Cassidy: My colleagues suggest they have never been guilty of those sins. I wish them well.

The concept of an eye for an eye was a measure of penal reform in those days. It was to prevent worse penalties from being imposed. For God's sake, whatever your religious faith may be today, let us be guided by the religious teachers who are still, praise the Lord, around. I am a Unitarian. I respect the teaching of the Christian churches without being a Christian. I believe those things should be carefully listened to.

I want to say a final word about the process. The amendment put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) would effectively allow the parliamentary committee set up under this resolution to go around the country to examine the issue without being committed to reinstatement. That would follow the precedent set on child care, star wars, acid rain, the rights of the disabled, and so on. That is a good precedent. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) quotes the McGrath Committee which recommended wider use of parliamentary committees. However, he neglected to point out that McGrath recommended that these committees conduct general inquiries when policy choices have not been made. It is an abuse for this Parliament to turn around and make such a profound decision without having inquired into it much, much further.

I believe the process is fundamentally flawed. If we have to bring it forward at all, and I wish we did not, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) could still respect his commitment to a free vote by sending a parliamentary committee out to investigate the issue. We have noted that several Members of Parliament have already changed their position. Having voted in favour of capital punishment, they are now opposed. That comes with deeper and more profound study and reflection on a very difficult issue. I believe a parliamentary committee, whatever its initial prejudice on the issue might be, could well come back and recommend against capital punishment, particularly when we note that this has been done in most other countries.

[Translation]

So finally, Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying that I will vote against this resolution. For reasons of conscience I believe it is a moral question and I appeal to all my colleagues of all political Parties here in the House of Commons. If you have no doubt this is a measure which in the end is irreversible, and for this reason it is a bad way to make a decision when there is no consensus in the House of Commons. If there is no consensus, better live with the existing situation than restoring the death penalty and running the risk of legally killing certain people who have been found guilty of homicide, and then again change our point of view.

So I urge all those who may entertain some doubts to vote against this Government resolution.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Jepson: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my friend from the NDP. He cited passages from the Scriptures about an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. If I heard him correctly, I understood him to say he was not a Christian. As a Christian myself, it is my understanding as I study the Scriptures that an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth really means that the sentence should be commensurate with the severity of the crime. That is not to say that if a person takes another person's eye, that person will lose his or her eye. It does not mean that a person who cuts off another person's arm is going to lose his arm. What the Scripture is saying very clearly is that you must have sentences commensurate with the crime committed. That has to be clearly indicated to society at large.

I also heard his colleague commenting on the Catholic Church, the United Church, the Ontario-Quebec Conference of Baptist Churches, and so on. I think he was quite correct when he said the councils of those churches put forward their views on their opposition to capital punishment. What he did not say and what has clearly been expressed to those I have come in contact with, and is of course reflected in the polls we see across the country, is that they are not speaking for their total membership. In fact, I would respectfully suggest they are speaking for a minority. I know many United Church, Catholic and Baptist Church members who are in favour of the reinstatement of capital punishment.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, as I recall, the Member is an active Baptist and received the nomination in his constituency because of support from his friends and colleagues in his local congregation. I think he referred to the fact that the Ontario and Quebec Conference of Baptist Churches affirmed its opposition to capital punishment. I am not a Baptist and I cannot speak on behalf of all Baptists. However, I certainly respect the views of the Baptist community leadership. From the early days of all religions people have looked to their religious leaders for guidance on these subjects. In the case of the Baptist community I presume that is the Conference of Baptist Churches. In the case of the Catholic Church it is the Pope and the Bishops. They are the teachers of today and should be respected. I say that very sincerely.

I would point out as well that the Hon. Member says that perhaps the leadership of the Baptist community is not representative. Perhaps we should question having a free vote in this House, given the indication that this House of Commons is not reflective of the Canadian people today. I would point out that the NDP MPs will be voting against this resolution, and have so indicated. It is a free vote and they will be voting against it. The vast majority of Liberal MPs will also be voting against it. According to the current polls, we would have a Parliament in which there would be a couple of hundred Members elected from the NDP and Liberal Parties and maybe 75 or 80 from the Progressive Conservative Party. Under those circumstances, this resolution would be sure to be defeated. I think it is not only hypocritical but the Government has no credibility in putting forward this motion which would be defeated if Parliament reflected the political sentiments of the public at large.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

WAR MEASURES ACT

SUGGESTED REPEAL

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of repealing the War Measures Act, which authorizes unlimited and arbitrary exercise of power by the government of Canada during periods of war or apprehended insurrection without providing any review mechanism for such actions nor any basis for redress of the victims of unjust actions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before proceeding with debate, I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) that he was unable to move his motion during the hour provided for Private Members' Business prior to May 26, 1987. It has not been possible to arrange an exchange of positions in the order of precedence pursuant to the Special Order of the House agreed to on February 20, 1987. Accordingly, I am directing the Table to drop that item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to move this motion asking the Government to consider the advisability of repealing the War Measures Act, and I appreciate the opportunity to debate the motion this afternoon. I am sorry that the motion was not made a votable motion because I think there are many Canadians who would support Parliament expressing itself on this particular long-standing piece of legislation.

There have been indications at various times that Governments were considering a change to this legislation, amendment of it to weaken its Draconian powers or, conceivably, replacement of it with other legislation, but that has not happened.

It is incumbent upon me this afternoon to speak for all those Canadians who, at various times, have said that the War Measures Act should not be on the statute books of a country which believes in the rule of law, that the War Measures Act should be replaced or, at the very least, should be removed from the books so that we might enter a better area of provision for emergencies perhaps, if that is necessary, but without having this particular power available to Canadian Governments.

The legislation itself, particularly in Section 6 of the Bill as it was originally passed in 1914, indicates the kinds of powers which Governments have. It reads:

6. The Governor in Council shall have power to do and authorize such acts and things, and to make from time to time such orders and regulations, as he may by reason of the existence of real or apprehended war, invasion or insurrection deem necessary or advisable for the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada; and for greater certainty, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms, it is hereby declared that the powers of the Governor in Council shall extend to all matters coming within the classes of subjects hereinafter enumerated, that is to say:—

(a) censorship and the control and suppression of publications, writings, maps, plans, photographs, communications and means of communication;

(b) arrest, detention, exclusion and deportation;

(c) control of the harbours, ports, and territorial waters of Canada and the movements of vessels;

(d) transportation by land, air, or water and the control of the transport of persons and things;

(e) trading, exportation, importation, production and manufacture;

(f) appropriation, control, forfeiture and disposition of property and of the use thereof.

In this extensive clause are powers given to a Government of Canada to be invoked as a blank cheque to take practically any kind of action at all that it might think advisable in circumstances of emergency. We note that it is not only in situations of war, or even more, actual invasion of Canada, that these powers are available to Canadian Governments, but also in situations of insurrection in Canada, and not only actual situations of insurrection. The powers are available in a context of apprehended insurrection.

Anyone who thought in 1960 when the Bill of Rights was being debated in the House of Commons and when the then Prime Minister, the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, resisted suggestions that his Bill of Rights should supersede this legislation, that this legislation would not be used in peacetime discovered only 10 years later how wrong they were. In October of 1970 when kidnappings occurred in the Province of Quebec, as I am sure we all remember, and when the Canadian Government became anxious about maintaining order, as it claimed, and there was concern about finding those who had perpetrated these acts, the Government chose to use the War Measures Act, not only as a symbol, but as the reality of its exercise of power in the Province of Quebec. There were those far beyond the borders of Quebec who saw possibilities in this. I was living in the interior of British Columbia in those days. I was most shocked to hear a mayor of Vancouver speaking at the time of the possibilities of dealing with people in his own province under the new realities which the War Measures Act proclaimed.

The War Measures Act very significantly provided a basis for other actions. The proclamation of the Act was the authority for the publication of regulations. The regulations which were published made certain associations which had been legal before the Act was invoked now illegal. They made any sort of involvement with those organizations which had been legal before now a matter of crime.

In these contexts we saw the worst reassertion in our time of principles which long stood, back in the 1920s and 1930s, as Section 98 of the Criminal Code. These provisions followed the Winnipeg sympathetic strike which had been resisted by the first leader of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation year after year and were finally repealed in the middle of the Great Depression after the Liberal victory of 1935. A decade and a half after those provisions had been put in the Criminal Code providing for action against political organizations they reappeared in this context in 1970.

It was not only that kind of abuse of law by the Government of Canada that made the War Measures Act possible. We have still before us today, in the declaration of the present Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) that there is a need to redress the action against Japanese Canadians, the reality that the War Measures Act was the basis for moving against the Japanese Canadian population of British Columbia. Canadian citizens found themselves dispossessed and relocated. Many of them found themselves detained in the process and afterwards. They found their lives completely disrupted. In a somewhat similar way as those several hundred persons who were arrested in 1970 never obtained compensation, there has never been adequate compensation for the Japanese Canadians who experienced this under the War Measures Act beginning in 1942 and continuing for at least the next half a dozen years.

It was for those reasons that the Special Committee on the Participation of Visible Minorities, which did such yeoman work in the last couple of years of the previous Parliament, in its Recommendation No. 34 called upon the Department of Justice to "review the War Measures Act with a view to proposing the safeguards necessary to prevent a recurrence of the kind of mistreatment suffered by the Japanese in Canada during and after World War II". It was Japanese Canadians of course who suffered this, not Japanese citizens in Canada.

That was the recommendation of all members of the committee. I would go further, as I do in this motion, to call upon the Government to consider repealing the Act altogether. If we need some sort of emergency legislation, let it be properly drawn up. In this area of the Charter we need provisions which prevent the kind of arbitrary action which has been taken in the past. We need protection for the rights of Canadians.

In emergency legislation we need review mechanisms so that it is possible for those who have been detained or have otherwise suffered under the legislation to obtain compensation for what has been done to them. Nothing less than that is necessary. Individuals must have a basis for redress. It is not sufficient for the Government of Canada to act in this way. It is an abuse of rights and was such long before the Bill of Rights. It is tragic that the Bill of Rights was not regarded as being violated if action occurred under the War Measures Act. I am sorry to say that the provisions of the 1982 Charter allowing for reasonable departures from freedom, opens the same kind of possibility that we found in the fall of 1970.

Recognizing the possibility for arbitrary exercise of power, which needs always to be constrained by the law of the land in order to have the rule of law truly prevail, I call upon the Parliament of Canada to urge the Government to consider a repeal of this War Measures Act of 1914 and give us carefully considered legislation in peacetime that will not be rushed through as was done by our predecessors in 1914, in giving a blank cheque to the Government of Canada.

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) is to be congratulated for a most sensible suggestion that is, doing away with the War Measures Act, the subject of much controversy today. It is too severe an instrument to be used in circumstances short of war.

Perhaps what we should do is to look closely at the vacuum that would be left by this Act and see what should replace it. Maybe we need more precisely conceived and worded legislation to protect Canadians in many emergencies.

Since Roman times, Governments have recognized that they have a fundamental obligation to provide for the safety and security of their peoples in times of catastrophe. This dictum is summarized in the Latin phrase: Salus poluli suprema est lex, or, the safety of the people is the supreme law.

The Government of Canada recognizes this fundamental obligation and is committed to improving the national standard of emergency preparedness and developing the national capacity to provide for the safety and security of Canadians in emergencies of all kinds. This is done on the basis of partnership with the provinces, with mechanisms to provide comprehensive, joint planning and the formulation of co-ordinated arrangements for dealing with all aspects of emergencies falling under their respective jurisdictions.

Officials of Emergency Preparedness Canada, and other federal Departments have been addressing the entire question of legislation surrounding emergency response in Canada and during the course of their review a number of gaps in the legal framework for emergencies have become apparent, raising questions about the Government's ability to provide for the safety of Canadians during national emergencies.

The current statutory framework for authorizing emergency powers has some shortcomings.

The War Measures Act is generally conceded to be too broad and sweeping for peacetime public safety or public order emergencies. While it provides adequate powers for war or invasion, it includes few safeguards against abuse. Less provocative legislation for dealing with a deepening international crisis in not available.

Other statutes such as the National Defence Act, the Criminal Code, and several others Acts contain some provisions that could be applied to emergencies. In most cases these provisions are unnecessary for a minor emergency and likely to be very inadequate for a major emergency. Some would possibly be subject to challenge under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If invoked in combination, they would give rise to considerable confusion. Finally, few are adequately safeguarded. The Crown prerogative and the common law doctrine of necessity could possibly be used as the legal basis for taking emergency measures. However, the legal foundations of this approach are shaky and uncertain.

The Government could resort to the enactment of ad hoc legislation during an emergency, basing its legislation on the "peace, order and good government" clause of the Constitution Act. However, the ad hoc approach could result in hasty and poorly drafted legislation if prepared in the heat of an urgent crisis. The process could be insufficiently rapid if Parliament were not in session, and would be impossible if Parliament were dissolved when the emergency arose.

Emergency legislation is an attribute of statehood. Canada is unique among industrially developed nations in not having comprehensive emergency legislation on its books. As well, all of our provinces and territories have legislation in place to deal with their responsibilities in emergencies.

As I said, I understand that the Government is reviewing the entire matter, and because revocation of the War Measures Act is on its agenda, I am certain that shortly we shall be discussing this matter publicly and in much greater detail.

There is no doubt that we in Canada must give greater attention to the entire area of emergency preparedness and to our ability to respond to crises. Emergencies take many forms and arise from many causes. They may be man-made in origin or may be the result of acts of God. They occur in peacetime and in war, and the range of precipitating causes encompasses natural disasters, such as epidemics, earthquakes, fire, floods, tornadoes or drought; technological mishaps such as industrial spills, pollution or major accidents; civil disturbances arising from revolts, terrorism or riots, conventional war and finally, the ultimate threat of nuclear attack.

The common factors in these disparate events are the sudden threat they pose to the community, the widespread harm they cause, and the need for prompt, often extraordinary measures to mitigate their effects and recover from them. In different ways and to varying degrees they may place in jeopardy the life and property of the individual, disrupt the peace, order and welfare of the community and, in the most extreme cases, threaten the continued existence of Canadian society itself.

Our ancestors lived in a less complicated age. With increasing population, especially in our urban centres, and with the threat of technological threats of all kinds mounting—ranging from chemical spills to the possibility of some madman launching a nuclear or biological attack—we are at the mercy of forces often beyond our control.

Our entire civilization seems to hang on an electrical thread. We saw what happened last summer when downtown Ottawa was without power for days; we know what happens in many emergencies when the power fails in the winter at temperatures of minus 40 degrees Celsius. Even in mid-summer, when tornadoes strike a community and the power goes off for a couple of days, freezers full of food can spoil. We have seen many instances in Canada when communities have been isolated because of floods and food has been airlifted in. Even those with freezers stocked with food found they had nothing to eat because it went bad. We saw what happened not too long ago in Montreal when fire put Air Canada's computerized reservation system out of action for days. Add to this incidents such as the Mississauga train derailment, when escaping chlorine gas forced the evacuation of thousands, and it gives an idea of what kinds of things can happen in this country almost daily.

We are fortunate in having in Canada a sensible and effective emergency response system. Through the offices of Emergency Preparedness Canada, the agency responsible for co-ordinating the federal response to emergencies and for encouraging a uniform system of emergency response across the country, joint activities have been undertaken with provincial officials to evaluate current resources, both legal and material, assess actual needs, demarcate and co-ordinate respective responsibilities and to develop comprehensive plans for dealing with emergencies of any kind and of any scale.

The federal Government has concluded Memoranda of Understanding with all but three of the provinces and territories in order to demarcate respective responsibilities for emergency planning. A joint emergency preparedness program has been established with the provinces and territories to enhance the national emergency response capability and to encourage co-operation between the federal Government and the provinces and territories.

Further, disaster financial assistance arrangements have been put in place as a means of providing financial assistance to the provinces and the territories when the cost of dealing with the disaster would place an undue burden on the provincial economy. In general, the provinces and territories are well prepared to deal with the kinds of peacetime emergencies that have arisen in the past.

What we want in place of the War Measures Act is the kind of legislation other modern democratic states have had for many years.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate, but I am certainly not in support of this resolution. I think it would be the height of foolishness, if not idiocy, for a democracy that believes in the rule of law to disarm itself of the only method that it has consistent with the rule of law of dealing with crises.

Listening to the New Democratic Party and the arguments they raise that this should be repealed and that we should try to put something more modern and sensible in its place later, gives me one more reason to be glad that the Canadian people have never given the New Democratic Party the kind of support they have sought in election campaigns.

I have many reservations about the War Measures Act. If we had the wisdom that we have now when it was being drafted in 1914 it might have been a better and more moderate Act. I wish it were now possible to draft an improved version consistent with the principles which are fundamental to us in our democratic society today. However, the suggestion that that Act should be done away with, even if it means there is nothing in its place, is, to me, the height of irresponsibility. It is a way of betraying our democracy. It is a way of putting us into some predicaments.

Let me give an example of one or two predicaments in which we would find ourselves if this New Democratic Party resolution succeeded. My colleague, the Hon. Member from Scarborough, referred to the derailment in Mississauga where a few tank cars full of chlorine gas fell off the tracks and might have killed a quarter of a million or more Torontonians, people living in the Mississauga area. The emergency team to which the Hon. Member referred, which is established and does work well with federal, provincial and municipal volunteers, and so on, would have arrived on the scene. It would have needed to commandeer some buildings in the area to use as hospitals. They would have had to rely on the Expropriation Act, which the federal Government introduced very proudly a few years ago, which gives 60 days' notice to the owners of that building, and if the owners of the building did not want to allow them in, they would have absolutely no authority to go in to establish hospitals.

There is nothing in the law of Canada, nothing in the law of necessity and nothing in the Crown prerogative, which permits the Government to take away a large building from its owner even if hundreds of thousands of Canadians are dying outside and need to be brought in and sheltered. Perhaps the owner would co-operate. Perhaps the owner could be spoken to and even pressured, but I do not believe that is the way to run the country even in a time of war.

I believe the country should be ruled by the rule of law, and the War Measures Act is consistent with the rule of law. The Act itself, as primitive as it is, requires the matter to be brought to the attention of Parliament. It has to be legislated. Procedures have to be set out in regulations. They have to be available for people to look at. Surely to God that is a better way to deal with the crisis which could have arisen and can arise any day of the week in this vast country of ours. To suggest that we should have nothing like the War Measures Act which could save hundreds of thousands of Canadians in a crisis situation is irresponsible.

Let me talk about the possibility of invasion. We may never be invaded. I hope we never are. But if we are invaded, how are we going to respond? I was once Solicitor General. Let us say we are invaded and have the problem of what to do with our prisons. Let us say there is a terrible tragedy of the sort which occurred in Europe. Should the prison guards have to stay on the job? Should the inmates continue to be fed three meals a day if the rest of the population is starving? Should they be moved somewhere? Should the prisons be used for prisoners of war if we are successful in capturing our invaders and want to use the prison for that purpose? Should the warden be able to turn his guards on the civil authority or on the military authority for wanting to use our penitentiaries for that purpose? That is ridiculous. How could we handle an invasion of that scale without having the possibility of rapidly reorganizing rights and freedoms and doing it according to some basis of rule of law.

I do not like the War Measures Act. I could visualize a better version being drafted. However, to say we should do away with it, with nothing to replace it, is to say that there are circumstances where we are prepared not to have the rule of law at all.

I want to talk now about the Charter of Rights and Freedoms because I think the Charter of Rights and Freedoms must be reviewed as a very important constraint on the War Measures Act. Let us say that in a regrettable circumstance we are at war and some measures are introduced under the War Measures Act which establish press censorship. What if our military plans of defence of Canada come into the hands of the media? If they are printed, the enemy can buy copies of the daily newspapers and learn where Canadian troops are going to be deployed over the next few months. We could call in the media and order them, if we did not have the War Measures Act, not to print those plans, but we have absolutely no authority to do that. That would be an illegal act and, in my view, it would be an infringement on the rights of the press and a violation of the rule of law. Or we could introduce under the War Measures Act some program of censorship which would make it very clear that the authority defending our country in those circumstances would be legally able to order the media not to print any plans of the Canadian Armed Forces which fell into their hands. Without the War Measures Act we would have no legal way of doing that.

I will take my third example as a way of explaining what the Charter adds. Suppose people start writing letters to the editors complaining about the way in which the war is being conducted, about the way the Government is handling the powers it has, and the censor decides under the powers of the War Measures Act, because they are stated in very broad terms, that the Government does not need these critical articles to be printed in the newspaper. That, in my opinion, would be a violation of the Charter. The censor could not prevent the media from printing criticism of the Government, but it should be able to prevent the media from printing plans which show the way in which Canada will defend itself in the invasion, and I am still using my hypothesis of invasion. There is no way we could justify criticism of the Government being censored, whereas there would be justification for censoring the plans of the Canadian Armed Forces being printed in the media.

The Charter does add something, and when my friend regrets the fact that all we receive from the Charter is protection of things that are reasonable—we do not get the protection of everything or things that are not reasonable—frankly, it does not bother me very much. I am relieved that protection extends to what is reasonable. I voted for the Charter and I am quite sympathetic with the idea that rights which are asserted beyond the point of reasonableness in a democratic society and its circumstances are not protected. Therefore, to make a point, the War Measures Act has a lot to offer the Canadian people. Perhaps it could be improved. Perhaps it has been abused. I would say that with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms there is a considerable restraint on the way it can be exercised. For a politician who wants to be taken seriously to argue there should be no War Measures Act, that Canada should have no lawful way of dealing with emergencies until perhaps Parliament brings in another law, in my view disqualifies that person from participating in the discussion of what the rule of law ought to mean in a democratic society.

I want to conclude by saying that I defend the use of the War Measures Act during the FLQ crisis. My friend, the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. MacLean), used the FLQ crisis as proof that the War Measures Act is a big mistake and not necessary. I was there and remember the circumstances. The City of Montreal and the Province of Quebec were demanding that the War Measures Act be introduced. Ordinary citizens were afraid to go to work. They were staying at home because of fear of terrorism in the streets of the city. I also remember the effect of the War Measures Act. It restored a sense of confidence and peace in the City of Montreal.

If the War Measures Act had been a more nuanced instrument, and it should be, there might have been able to be a more precise and relevant intervention into the normal rules and regulations of the community. However, that was the Act that we had. It was brought in and it accomplished what had to be accomplished. I feel that the War Measures Act proved itself in the FLQ crisis. That is far from saying it discredited itself during that FLQ crisis.

As a member of the Liberal Party who voted in favour of the imposition of that measure at the time, I honestly believe that history will show those whom Mr. Trudeau described as "bleeding hearts" to have been on the wrong side of the issue. These people were unwilling to have our society defend itself by the only means that it had at hand.

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to echo the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and by my Conservative colleague from Scarborough East (Mr. Hicks) to stress the need to repeal the War Measures Act.

Never twice without a third time, as the saying goes. Sadly enough, the War Measures Act made these words even truer. It will not be imposed a fourth time, three times is enough. A number of Canadians of Japanese origin and a lot of Quebecers are the living proof that the letter may not kill, but it certainly can cause serious injuries.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the War Measures Act and its built-in excesses has caused enough harm. It is a dangerous weapon which no longer has its place, even in a legislative arsenal.

Appropriately my learned colleagues have pointed out that in recent years all political Parties have spoken against this unfair law and for the need to draft new legislation.

I do not think it is necessary to emphasize the fact that the former administration did not keep this promise. What matters is that our Liberal colleagues join forces with our NDP colleagues and with us on the Government side to give Canada emergency measures worthy of this great country of ours. Our laws should reflect what we are—one of the most democratic nations in the world. This is how we are seen worldwide, and this is how we see ourselves.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues who rose before me gave us a good idea of the kind of Bill which will replace the War Measures Act. Once it has been the subject of exhaustive consultations with the provinces, this Bill will provide the essential guarantees which are lacking in the current legislation. The War Measures Act will be subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Canadian Bill of Rights and the International Convention on Civil and Political Rights.

The interests of the provinces will also be adequately protected during emergencies. The consultation mechanisms provided under the proposed legislation are unprecedented in Canada's constitutional history, because they guarantee the provinces a major role prior to the declaration of a state of emergency.

Over the years, Mr. Speaker, the War Measures Act has given rise in this Chamber to comments where shame and anger were the predominant sentiments. That is why I want to say how proud I am of the steps being taken by our Government and why I want to share this sentiment with all the Members of this House.

[English]

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that there is not a Member in this House who does not subscribe to the repeal of the War Measures Act and its replacement by a comprehensive safeguard of legislation with which to deal with a wider spectrum of possible national emergencies in an appropriate manner.

The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) will be gratified to know that this Government has every intention of presenting such legislation. The people of Canada and their elected representatives have for years been demanding that this blunt instrument be abolished. Its powers are too sweeping. On two of the three occasions on which it was invoked, it involved serious violation of fundamental freedoms in Canada.

Other modern states have had appropriate legislation to deal with national emergencies for years. Canada is lagging in this respect. Despite successive promises by the former Liberal Government, nothing was done about it. But the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has, on several occasions, promised to do away with the War Measures Act, a blunt instrument designed for another age, and replace it with something more in keeping with our times. It is on our agenda, and will be presented to this House.

We want to be sure, Mr. Speaker, that what replaces this infamous Act is right and appropriate for our society and for our times. It is not simply a matter of throwing out an inadequate piece of legislation. Our society is much more complex now than in 1914, when the War Measures Act was originally enacted.

I do not know whether you are aware, Mr. Speaker, but that Act was passed without dissent and after just one half hour of debate.

The emergency powers granted to the Government were not spelled out in the legislation. Rather, the Governor in Council was given broad powers to declare a state of emergency, and then to pass orders and regulations that could replace any statute of Parliament, all without Parliament ever having its say. Under the Act, a proclamation is considered conclusive evidence that war, invasion or insurrection, real or apprehended, exists.

In the spring of 1971, realizing that the existing Act was too imprecise to deal with emergencies in a modern democratic state, proposals for legislation were considered. The Government of the day proposed the appointment of a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to consider the enactment of such legislation. However, that committee was not appointed, and the legislation was never introduced. And so the War Measures Act, a totally inadequate and inappropriate Act, remains on the books.

One of the troublesome features of this Act, Mr. Speaker, is that in the past, regulations under the War Measures Act replaced statutes and normal laws, after an emergency was declared, without the consent of Parliament. We want to ensure that the new legislation brings Parliament further into the process and builds in other safeguards to protect the rights of Canadians should the legislation need to be invoked.

We have every intention of ensuring that the civil rights of Canadians will be considered first and foremost. We want to place limits on the use of the Act, and tailor it to specific emergency situations.

Some would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps we should just throw out the War Measures Act and pass emergency legislation when it is needed. I feel that that would be dangerous. Such an approach could lead to delays in responding to crises, and it would be impossible were Parliament not in session or dissolved when the emergency arose.

In addition, legislation rushed through in the heat of a crisis might be more likely to run roughshod over civil rights than would a properly safeguarded Act, calmly and carefully considered, by Parliament, using the instruments which Parliament has provided.

As we well know, Mr. Speaker, natural and man-made disasters are occurring with great regularity. Canadians who say it cannot happen here remind me of those who argued, in the 1920s, that there was no sense in Canada preparing for emergencies because we lived in a fire-proofed house far from inflammable materials.

It is amazing how quickly developments can overtake the best prepared of organizations. One needs only to look at the recent New Brunswick floods, or the gas cloud that sent people to hospital in Calgary. Both New Brunswick and Alberta have superb organizations to look after the safety of their citizens. But things can happen out of the blue.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, did you know that more than 1,000 earthquakes occur in Canada annually? Because most of them happen in isolated spots, the damage is light, and they do not make headlines. But did you realize, Mr. Speaker, that scientists predict that within the next 25 years there could be an earthquake of catastrophic proportions in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia, in my own home area? An emergency preparedness official claims that such an event could be so disastrous as to be considered a national disaster.

For reasons such as these, we need to have in place national legislation, to identify very clearly the responsibilities of various orders of Government under crisis conditions of national proportions. The citizens of a society such as ours have the right to know in advance how their rights and freedoms might be limited in a serious emergency; and on the other side of the coin, what limits will be placed on government action.

I should like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by expressing our appreciation of the Hon. Member's efforts in bringing forward this proposal. I want to reassure him that the Prime Minister and this Government are committed to repealing the War Measures Act and replacing it with legislation that is fair and just. I can assure the Member that we will be doing that in the very near future.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) for bringing forward this motion. While I believe that the War Measures Act goes much too far and gives the Government much too much power, I believe that if we repealed that law we would have to enact another law to give the Government the power it might need under certain circumstances.

I wish the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) were here. I heard him make the point that we need a law and talk about what happened in 1970. I also heard him say that perhaps the law gives the Government too much power and should have been amended.

When the Liberals were in government, Members of Parliament were promised many times that the matter would be discussed and that we would receive a report on what happened. The present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was the Minister of Justice in 1970 when the War Measures Act was used at the time of the FLQ crisis. He promised on more than one occasion that Parliament would be given an opportunity to have a full discussion of what happened, and that Members of Parliament would be given a report in great detail of what really happened. That never happened in all the time the Liberals were in government.

I find it passing strange that the Hon. Member for York Centre would say some of the things he said. I was here in 1970 when the War Measures Act was used because there was a fear of insurrection. I understand the fear of the people of Quebec. After all, there had been bombings. There were also the kidnappings of James Cross and Pierre Laporte, followed by the murder of Mr. Laporte.

We could understand then the way the people of Quebec, and indeed the vast majority of the people of Canada felt. Not much was known about the real strength of the FLQ. I remember that a then Minister, a man for whom I had a great deal of respect, Mr. Jean Marchand, made the statement that the FLQ had more than 2,000 supporters and that they had infiltrated the unions, Radio Canada, and many other organizations. When the facts came out later, there was no truth in that claim. The FLQ never had more than a few members.

We opposed then, as we do now, separatism. We opposed then, as we do now and always will, acts of terrorism. However, we understood the fears and concerns of the people of Quebec.

We were not surprised by the stand of many people with whom we worked very closely in the labour movement, in the political area, and in the civil liberties area. People like Frank Scott who had fought the oppressive regime of Premier Duplessis for many years supported the imposition of the War Measures Act. We understood why he did that. We believed then—

Mr. Prud'homme: Not all of you.

Mr. Orlikow: Almost all of us. I did not take the time to look up the records—

Mr. Prud'homme: Well, I did.

Mr. Orlikow: If I remember correctly, three or four of our Members voted with the Government and all Conservatives except one were in support of the imposition of the War Measures Act.

We believed then—and I think time has proven that we were correct—that the Government had over-reacted. Let us remember what happened. Troops were sent into Montreal. Over 250 people were apprehended and incarcerated, some of them for several days, some of them for several weeks, if I remember correctly. After the investigation was completed, not a single one of those more than 250 people were charged, brought to trial, or convicted. We said then—and I say it now—that the Government over-reacted.

We can understand why it did in the same way as we understand why the then Government of Canada took the action of removing all Japanese people from British Columbia. There was fear and racial prejudice in that case. That action had the support of a huge majority of Canadian people at that time. With the passage of time, more and more people realize that the action taken during World War II was not only a mistake but should not have happened. Very few people, if any, would now defend what happened in the 1940s. I say that there are fewer and fewer people who will defend what was done in the 1970 FLQ crisis by the then Government.

While I believe that a government needs legislation which will give it power to act decisively in a time of emergency, the powers given to the Government of Canada, regardless of which Party happens to form the Government, under the War Measures Act as it was drafted many years ago go much too far. We need a very careful study of the present Act. We also need a redefinition and a redrafting of the Act so that the Government of Canada will be given the power it needs, not power which can be misused as I believe it has been on some occasions.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) and several other Members wish to take part in this debate, so I will try not to use up all my speaking time for this very important motion.

This is a debate we were not expecting today, but when I heard the first Member who spoke to the motion, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), the mover of the motion, I had to come to the House because I witnessed those events, and I could not, not even for a few moments, let a political Party rewrite history to make itself look better than the other Parties at the time.

Mr. Speaker, I regret only one thing and that is that we do not have more time to discuss a page in our history which is certainly not one of the most glorious in the history of human rights in Quebec and Canada.

Mr. Speaker, many of us who were young parliamentarians at the time were agonizing about this issue.

• (1750)

We were not "bleeding hearts" as my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) said earlier on. Many of us were agonizing as to what we were about to do. Having been very close to university students at that time, having had in mind the events of Kent University—I go by memory, not having prepared any notes, but I lived these events—when the army shot some young university students, all of us had those events in mind in the House of Commons on that famous unfortunate night when we voted for the War Measures Act. But one cannot say that one Party in this House has more virtue than any other. Thank God I reminded the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that his Party was not unanimous that night. There was a tough debate in the New Democratic Party at that time as to what to do. I agree many New Democrats voted against the Act, but they had a tough debate. I remember it only too well.

My price for voting for the War Measures Act was that I be included as one of the speakers. I would like to re-read my speech here today. It was the price I made my Party pay for me to vote for the War Measures Act. I was concerned. I knew that abuse could take place. I said that night in 1970—and I rely on memory as I have not looked at any notes—that we were going to vote for a tough law because we had nothing else. I remember that my Leader, who was then the Minister of Justice, wanted to pass a different Bill that would address itself to crises here and there in Canada so we would not be obliged to use the War Measures Act, but there was no agreement between Parties as to what kind of Bill that should be. It is all very well to say that the War Measures Act—

Mr. Orlikow: You had lots of time later.

Mr. Prud'homme: Let me say to the Hon. Member from Winnipeg that I have never seen his Party press that question since, if I may kindly remind him of that. Seventeen years later the NDP has come forward with a motion. But I have never seen New Democrats take an Opposition Day to try to impress in Parliament that we should get rid of the War Measures Act. Suddenly out of nowhere, maybe out of a new discovery of Quebec, they want to please some people.

I will say in English and in French that I will always regret having voted for the War Measures Act. I felt it was my duty as a Canadian with the kind of information that we had that I had to do so. I had no other choice.

When history is written we will know more. Maybe we will be told that we were not given the entire picture. Maybe we did not have good information on Canadians at that time. I will always remember and I will name him, the Ambassador of Tunisia—

. . . the ambassador of Tunisia and what he said to other ambassadors who were saying: "Mr. Prud'homme, how could a free country like Canada pass legislation like this? It isn't like your country". The Tunisian ambassador, the brother of the former Secretary General of the United Nations, then said: "Mr. Prud'homme, don't worry about them". And he turned to the other ambassadors, saying: "This kind of thing could never happen in your countries." And why not? Because the other countries who were attacking Canada's position on this issue had files on all citizens who did not see eye to eye with their respective Governments.

And I must admit that on that evening, Canada entered a secondary phase, in the sense that on that evening, we lost that pastoral aspect of Canada in which there was no intelligence service and we were not too familiar with the movements that wanted to change the order of things.

I could even use the remaining minute—because I promised to give the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) an opportunity to speak—I could even say that today, this might be an opportunity for me, I am not ashamed to say so, to apologize to those who were unjustly arrested. But this is something that was discovered later.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg should however realize that it is always easier to show virtue with hindsight and to suggest: I told you so, look at what happened. The decision that had to be taken that night was different. The atmosphere was different. And I would like to remind him that the Armed Forces were not sent to Quebec—they were already in Quebec.

And my own concern was to avoid the events at Kent University where young people challenged the military, knowing our military's loyalty and devotion, because it was people from the Royal 22nd Regiment that were there, rather than English-speaking regiments. And they were there to perform their duty. And I would have had lifelong regrets had there been bloody incidents. That was the great debate within our caucus, especially the Quebec caucus, whether we should do it or not. But when we thought of what could happen, we told ourselves: It is disgusting, and I repeat disgusting, but we will have to do something we do not like. Why? Because there is no other statute in our books. And I will conclude on a kind note by stating that the Hon. Member should be thanked for at least putting the matter up for debate.

If it could expedite this debate—Mr. Speaker, you are a man who is well-known within the legal community—we could have a legislation which is everything that the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) and all the others want . . . But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, and my NPD friends that if you think that it is easy to get a legislation on which all of us can agree, that is what we have been debating since 1970. We do not like the War Measures Act and we do not want it to be the only one in the statutes, but we have to find a replacement, and if NDP Members have suggestions to make, even after 17 years, I would be delighted to hear them, because we could have a legislation which is better, more in line with the spirit of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and more compatible with what we want to defend.

To conclude, I regret that we had to pass this legislation. I have something to say to those who were arrested, and I know them even better than the Hon. Member. Several of them since then have become political men and women. I am sorry they were subjected to the brunt of our police forces who abused a legislation we had given them by arresting just about anybody. But Parliament could no longer intervene because it had given them carte blanche.

If I take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, it is to prevent a single political Party to rewrite history within such a short period of time, and I hope that we may some day return to this issue in order to examine all aspects of the unfortunate debate held in 1970, which led to such regrettable events.

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the testimony we have just heard from the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) does prove that we are all here to do our best to serve the Canadian people who have elected us.

Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes left to me perhaps I should focus on what I would like to find in a statute designed to replace the War Measures Act.

As I see it, the War Measures Act should be replaced by a law which might be called, for example, the Emergency Measures Act which would provide the Government with the means to cope with the four major kinds of national emergencies. These include disasters—they were mentioned earlier—the state of emergency, the state of international crisis, and the state of war. We should keep in mind that it is important to respect Parliament's right of inspection, in consultation with the provinces, and with due regard for the individual rights of all Canadians. This legislation should be subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Canadian Bill of Rights. It should also be in accordance with the requirements of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and provide compensation for damages incurred by the victims.

Before resorting to this legislation or any part of it, consultation with the provinces would be mandatory. The length of time the legislation is in force should be limited, much in the same way as the nature of the special measures which will be defined in specific terms.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, all these elements ought to be included in the measure which should be introduced by the Government. I should hope that when the matter comes up for consideration by the House all those who have the national interest at heart, namely all elected Members of Parliament, will support an amendment to this law.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order shall be dropped from the Order Paper.

[English]

It being six o'clock I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock, at which time the House will proceed to the question of the current crisis facing Canadian grain producers.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

CANADIAN GRAINS CRISIS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Leave has been granted to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 29 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the current crisis facing Canadian grain producers.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert) moved:

That this House do now adjourn.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we have asked for this emergency debate because, as every Member of this House knows, and as anyone who is even remotely connected with agriculture knows, there is a crisis in the industry. All of agriculture is suffering these days but we are particularly concerned at this moment and for the next year about the grain industry. This debate is an attempt to bring before this House and the country the real crisis grain farmers are facing.

This crisis has been building for years, but during the last week or so there have been a number of events which have moved it from a crisis to an emergency. First, last week the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) announced an 18 per cent reduction in the initial prices for grain. Every farmer knows that that reduction was a minimum, because when the grain spreads are announced that drop will become greater. That 18 per cent decrease in grain prices comes on top of a 20 per cent decrease inflicted upon farmers last year. Even before that grain farmers across the country were feeling the pinch.

Second, yesterday the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced that he was removing the 18-month old moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures. That action puts at risk about 20 per cent of FCC borrowers who are in arrears. More than that, it sends a signal to financial institutions all across the country that the federal Government is removing its protection from farms. It sends a signal which indicates open season, not only on farms but on small businesses as well. It sends a signal that the Government will no longer make a commitment to retain the family farm.

Third, and perhaps this is the most devastating event of all, if you can call it an event, the Government has refused to commit itself to some kind of deficiency payment to make up for the reduction in grain prices. Many farm groups across the country, and many Members of this House, particularly in the Opposition, have attempted to get from the Government some kind of commitment which would assure farmers that some deficiency payment would be available.

Farmers realize that with the Government indicating much lower grain prices and that it will not commit itself to any level of deficiency payment, the crisis becomes an emergency. When the Government announces open season for farm foreclosures by removing the moratorium, the crisis becomes an emergency. The withdrawal of protection only applies to FCC loans, but every farmer in financial difficulty looked to that moratorium as a commitment by the Government to keep them on the farm. Why should a private bank go the extra mile to try and keep a farmer farming when the Government will not do it?

This crisis has manifested itself in many ways. First, we have had a large number of farmers leaving the farm. Quite often you will hear people say, well, it is not as bad this year as it was last year. It was not as bad last year as it was the year before. However, let us all remember that when a group of farmers leave the farm they do not come back. It is cumulative. Five hundred leave this year and 500 left last year and 1,000 farmers are off the land. If you extend it for three years, it goes up to 1,500, and so on.

The crisis has also manifested itself in a great deal of stress on the family farm, resulting in family breakup and discouragement for many farmers. Ordinarily spring is a time of great enthusiasm and renewal. Farmers are out cultivating, seeding, and this is the time the Government picks to take action it has taken and make the announcements it has made—lower prices, no protection. Many people think that life on a farm is not stressful; in ordinary and good circumstances that is possibly true. However, when your family depends on you, when the bank is looking over your shoulder and the Government is abandoning you, stress is something that you live with.

It is not that the Government has done nothing. It has done something. Previous Governments put in place the Western Grain Stabilization Program, and an insurance program. A drought relief program has been in place for many years. The current Government last year put in place a special grains program which supposedly gave $1 billion to grain farmers across the country. That promise was made last October. The money has not yet all materialized, but we expect it will come.

The Western Grain Stabilization Program pays for deficits incurred by farmers in the previous year. Those programs are in place and have helped but are not solving the problem. As one farmer told me, "they just keep you dangling a little longer but in the end you go under anyway".

How can the Government deal with lower prices set in an export market? They can negotiate, but Canada is basically a price-taker rather than a price-setter. Therefore, we must sell our grain on the world market at the available price. However, if the Canadian Government has a commitment to keep the agricultural industry viable it must take some action to ensure that farmers can survive. It must either guarantee the farmer a specific price for his grain or, if that is open to too many problems, guarantee him a basic return from his farm. All the Government really need do is assure the farmer that if he plants and harvests he can survive.

The Government says it has a debt review program in place and can, therefore, lift the moratorium. However, the review boards which have been put in place across the country have no teeth. They are unable to make judgments which will allow the farmer to remain on the farm if he is in trouble. The hated transition program makes no attempt to keep the farmer on the farm.

I think these two programs are an indication of the commitment which the Government has to the family farm. First, the Farm Debt Review Program does not have the mandate to keep the farmer on the farm. The Saskatchewan Farm Security Act has such a mandate and does everything to keep the farmer operating. The Farm Debt Review Board only brings the debtor and debtee together to talk.

The transition program is exactly that. The Government is spending money so that another 500 or 1,000 farmers can leave the farm. The moratorium should not have been removed until the Government had in place a debt relief program which would give the agricultural community confidence that it can survive and that the Government will help it to do so.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: We can only ask whether we have a philosophical commitment to the family farm. Europe has such a commitment. In Europe subsidy programs have been put in place. Although we may not like them and may disagree with them, they have been put in place because of a commitment to keep the family farm operating. Subsidy programs may not work well for us, but they have chosen that method in Europe.

Japan as well guarantees their farmers a price for their products which will ensure them of a living wage. We do not necessarily want to mimic these programs, but they assure those farmers that they are wanted and that their Government is willing to commit a certain amount of funds to give the agricultural community the confidence it needs.

The Government apparently does not have the commitment to the agricultural community to allow farmers to plant and harvest crops with the assurance that they will receive enough return for the product to allow them to survive. Across the country we have been facing a situation for some time which requires, not a band-aid solution but a global solution which considers all the requirements of the farmer.

It does not help to reduce the price of diesel fuel if farm taxes are increased. It does not help to reduce the cost of fertilizer if, by the same process, the cost of chemicals is increased. All parts of the farming process are important. Doing something about each part will, in the end, impact upon the amount which the farmer will take home.

However, that will not solve the problem. Canada must take a good look at the entire agricultural industry and make the decision that we want the agricultural industry and the family farm to survive.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: We must be willing to put in place a program which will allow that survival.

Today the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, which is the largest farm organization in the country, wrote to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney). He said:

> Saskatchewan Wheat Pool believes that the rural way of life and related service industries are in jeopardy.
> The Pool asks that all Members of Parliament recognize the very critical economic situation confronting western Canadian families and communities. This crisis has far-reaching social and economic implications for the national economy, as well as for the West.

Some of my colleagues will be telling you about the effects which the devastation of the grain industry will have upon them. The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool recommended that programs be immediately developed through federal and provincial co-operation to keep families on their farms in productive capacities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: The Wheat Pool is asking that we in the Opposition and Government put in place the political will to ensure that the agricultural industry, and particularly the farm family, can survive.

• (2030)

Mr. Hovdebo: Second, the Wheat Pool recommends that early consideration be given to the acute need for a substantial deficiency payment for the 1987-88 crop year. We have been attempting to get that kind of commitment for several months. The Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), the Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and myself have asked this question at least twice a week for the last month, but have yet to receive a commitment. Several farm groups have asked for specific commitments but none have been received.

Third, the Wheat Pool recommends that the Government continue its efforts to restore sanity in the international grain market. While this would solve the problem if it could be done, I have already said that we are price-takers, not price-makers.

The letter concludes:

> Saskatchewan Wheat Pool continues to be prepared to work with government to achieve short and long-term solutions in the interests of the farmers and communities of Saskatchewan and Western Canada.

That is the kind of commitment we need and are requesting. We asked for an emergency debate in order that we, as members of the Opposition, could suggest the kinds of programs to the Government that are needed to allow the farm communities to survive.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the motion this evening reflects a serious situation in much of Canadian agriculture, especially that part which is very dependent on grain and oil seeds. The area which is most responsible for that production in Canada is western Canada.

The Hon. Member opposite raised some concerns during his remarks that I would like to address. I do so with a certain sense of satisfaction, because it allows me to put on the record the kind of action the Government is taking in response to a very serious situation.

The Hon. Member raised three points. He talked about initial payments, about the concern over the Farm Credit Corporation's situation and the lifting of the moratorium on foreclosures, and he talked about the Government's refusal to commit itself to deficiency payments.

First I want to address the Farm Credit Corporation situation. I believe it is useful to put the over-all situation into some perspective, as I did in the House earlier today.

Of the approximately 225,000 commercial farmers in Canada, approximately 76,000 do business with the Farm Credit Corporation. It is no secret that some people have been having trouble keeping current and making payments to the Farm Credit Corporation. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) initiated a program whereby the FCC was instructed not to proceed with any foreclosure actions as far as Farm Credit Corporation clients were concerned.

In order to allay some of the concerns that have been raised by Members opposite during some of their observations and questions today, I want to outline as clearly as possible what the FCC is doing.

First, the Farm Credit Corporation will be able to deal with approximately 50 such situations a month. Those who find themselves in that unfortunate situation will meet with Farm Credit Corporation personnel on a one-to-one basis. They will have an opportunity to examine the current financial situation and consider alternatives to see how that farm can stay in business. Each farmer will be given a proper opportunity to work out the problems which, above all, will be based on his ability to pay. These cases will then be referred to the Farm Debt Review Boards.

Hon. Members will know that Farm Debt Review Boards were established last summer and are operating in nine out of 10 provinces. They have met with considerable success, with an over-all success rate in excess of 50 per cent and more than 60 per cent in Alberta.

In order to assist farmers to stay on their land, they will consider such things as set-asides of both principal and interest, interest rate write-downs, and setting aside or writing down interest in arrears. Farmers will be able to consider a lease-back option where, if it looks as though the immediate financial position is such that it could sustain outright purchase, farmers will be given an opportunity to engage in a lease-back. That is another option to help keep farmers on the land.

They will also have the option of buying the building site so that if it is judged that the farmer's operation is not viable he will have an option of buying his building site at less than market value. This is another way to help keep farmers on their farmsteads.

In addition, FCC has developed two innovative types of loans that attempt to address the over-all concern about interest rates. One is a commodity based loan and the other is shared risk mortgage.

Shared risk mortgages now operate at approximately 9.5 per cent. If we consider the commodity based loans for farmers strictly engaged in wheat production, this year they will be eligible for a loan at approximately 6 per cent. It is simply not the case that there is an open season on farmers, as suggested by the Hon. Member at the beginning of his remarks. The figures simply do not justify that assertion.

If the FCC continues to deal with approximately 50 cases per month, as it has indicated, in a year it will have dealt with a quarter of 1 per cent of all commercial farms in Canada.

This farm debt review process takes into account all those options which I said will be considered with the objective of keeping as many farmers on the land as possible. I hope that when Members understand the process that will be used to deal with people who are having problems in respect of FCC payments, it will allay some of the concerns that were raised about a wholesale abandonment of farmers and a lack of commitment to agriculture by the Government.

Let me address the situation as far as initial payments are concerned. It has been suggested that we should have kept initial payments at $130 per tonne for wheat and $80 per tonne for barley. I want to quote from people who deal with initial payments. Garf Stevenson of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool said: "The Pool agrees with the Government's decision to set initial prices to reflect world prices". Mr. Brunton of the Alberta Wheat Pool said: "The Wheat Pool is all in favour of the Wheat Board setting an initial price that reflects real market conditions".

There is considerable support for the setting of initial prices in direct relation to the existing world prices. If that is not done, two concerns came through to us loud and clear. First, most farmers do not want to see the Wheat Board system of selling used as an income distribution system. They want to see the pooling system we use, which has worked so successfully for Canadian farmers for the past number of years, kept separate from the system of income distribution or income support. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) says no one said that but by implication that is exactly what was said when it was suggested that initial prices should be kept at a level which does not at all reflect actual world prices.

Hon. Members will know that the second concern which was raised is with the livestock industry, and that the secondary industries which use feed grain as an input operate on a North American market. They have to be competitive right across North America, and that means in the United States.

What do we do to the people who use barley, for instance, as an input in the livestock industry? The Hon. Member will know that in fact 60 per cent and sometimes higher of the barley grown in western Canada is fed to livestock. Therefore, if initial prices are kept higher than the world market, the domestic feed industry, which is a bigger customer for feed grain in western Canada than our export market, is forced to compete with an artificially high price based on world market expectation. That is why the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool exercised good judgment when he said that the Wheat Pool is all in favour of the Wheat Board setting initial prices that reflect real market conditions. That is exactly what we attempted to do.

I would like to speak now about what has been going on in agriculture. Let me try to put some semblance of balance into the situation. There is absolutely no question but that we face extremely low world market prices for grain and oil seeds, but there are other sectors of the Canadian agricultural economy which are not in that kind of situation. The beef industry, for instance, is in relatively good shape. Markets have improved considerably. I could say the same thing for the pork industry and for the supply managed industries, the feather industries and the dairy business. That is reflected in over-all estimates of Canadian farm income.

If we take the 1981 to 1984 average, we find that the net total revenue from all farm production in Canada is $6.165 billion. Last year it was up to $7 billion as opposed to $6.1 billion. This is net total revenue from all farm sources. If we want to talk about total receipts, then we are talking about a $20 billion industry. The projection for 1987 as far as all farm income is concerned is virtually the same as 1986. That is all Canadian agriculture, for all commodities, no matter where in Canada.

Let us look at the situation which we all know is the most serious, what is going on in western Canada, the revenue from grain and oil seed production. That is where we have the problem. I will give some figures just to put the situation into context.

The 1981 to 1984 average was slightly over $3 billion. That is net total revenue, net income. In 1986 it dropped over $800 million to $2.2 billion. But the estimate for 1987 is that it will go up slightly to $2.5 billion. One can ask the question, how can we have net revenue go up when we are facing such very large declines in prices? It goes up for two reasons, Mr. Speaker.

First, the Government has taken the deliberate decision to assist the Canadian Wheat Board and other people who sell our grain commodities on the world market. In fact, we have been doing a very good job of selling. We increased our market share for the last crop year and we have the prospect of increasing our market share again this year. This year Canada, for the first time in a number of years, will account for in excess of 20 per cent of the world trade in wheat. That is a direct result of the Government supporting the Canadian Wheat Board in its efforts to sell.

The other reason the net revenue has gone up is because of the amount of support which has come largely from the federal Government. I would like to give some additional very startling figures to show what has happened as far as federal support of agriculture in western Canada is concerned. From 1983 to 1987, it has gone up dramatically. The average income support from the federal Government from 1981 to 1984 was $336 million. In 1987, it is estimated to be $2.6 billion. We have responded tremendously to a very difficult situation.

Let me give you an example of some of the ways we have responded. With respect to the Special Canadian Grains Program, Hon. Members opposite ridiculed us last fall. One of the Members of the Provincial House in Saskatchewan called it "mythical". He said it would never happen. Hon. Members opposite said it was going to be a loan guarantee. They said it was not going to be cash. But it was cash, it is cash, and it came in record speed. The crop year starts on August 1. Two months into the crop year the Prime Minister announced in principle that $1 billion was going to be made available. He said that in the Throne Speech, if Hon. Members will remember. Four months into the crop year the details of how the money was going to be paid out was announced. It was announced in December at the Agricultural Outlook Conference. So that four months into the crop year for which the money was designed to help, this Government made available the details of how that money was going to be distributed. The first payment to western Canada went out in January. The final amount will be made available towards the end of May. That is three months before the end of the crop year. That full $1 billion will be made available three months before the end of the crop year, which is exactly the time when that money is needed.

Farmers grow their crop during the summer season and sell it throughout the crop year which concludes on July 31. So the money would normally be received, if the price was higher, during that time period, and that is exactly when the $1 billion from the Special Canadian Grains Program is being made available.

Our response has been tremendous. Those of us who come from western Canada have long thought we have been left out of the decision-making process. Bureaucrats in Ottawa printed up forms and sent them out and we filled them in and sent them back. That did not happen this time. We sat down with farmers from right across the country, the majority of them from western Canada. That would be expected because the majority of the farmers who are in trouble come from western Canada; that is where most of the grain and oil seeds are produced. We sat down with the farmers and worked out a program together and on that basis I think we developed a very fair minded program.

The Hon. Member from Saskatchewan will know that Saskatchewan produces approximately 39 per cent of the grain. It received over 40 per cent of the benefit. Alberta produces 25 per cent or 26 per cent of the total grain. It received 26 per cent of the benefit. My own Province of Manitoba produces 15 per cent of the grain and it received 15 per cent of the benefit. It is a very fair minded approach to a very serious problem, and that approach resulted in money being put out at exactly the time of year it would have been received had prices been higher.

As far as the Western Grain Stabilization Act is concerned, one of the first things we did as the Government was to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act to allow for interim payments prior to spring seeding. We have seen the affects of that in the last three years running. We had an interim payment in April, 1985, of, I believe, $450 million. We had an interim payment in April of 1986 of $580 million. We announced an interim payment 10 days ago of $705 million.

That is a tremendous amount of money to be made available at a critical time of the year for farmers' spring seeding. When we couple the $705 million with the remainder of the Special Canadian Grains Program, we get very close to $1.3 billion going into Western Canada at the most critical time of the year, spring seeding.

If we look at the amount of money going into Saskatchewan alone I believe we will see that it is $676 million, a tremendous amount of money being made available at a critical time of the year. So for Hon. Members opposite to get up and suggest that the Government has abandoned agriculture and that we have no concern about it bears absolutely no resemblance to the record of this Government in agriculture.

Mr. Althouse: Read the motion.

Mr. Mayer: There is another approach that we have taken, one in which we have taken the lead as far as a Government and a country is concerned. We all realize that the problem we face is largely beyond our borders. It is international in scope.

Mr. Benjamin: So?

Mr. Mayer: It is a problem with the European community and the Americans who are in a trade war. Most farmers and most thinking people realize that if there is to be a lasting solution then it has to come about internationally.

What have we done internationally? We have taken the lead—

Mr. Benjamin: You sound like R. B. Bennett.

Mr. Mayer: —in attempting to arrive at some solutions. It was our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who sat down with farm leaders in Vancouver last year before he went to the Tokyo Summit to indicate to farmers that he would raise agriculture at the Summit, which happened. It was Canada which organized the five major wheat exporters getting together for the first time. We have been taking the lead. We played the lead role at the GATT meetings in Punta del Este, Uruguay, and agriculture will now be addressed as part of the main agenda of GATT. We have been taking the lead internationally in seeking a lasting solution to these problems.

Members opposite talk about us having no policy. We have policy. If I had another half hour I could go through all of the items that we have done internationally and cover the initiatives we have taken.

Mr. Althouse: Just tell us what the policy is for next year. That is what the motion is about.

Mr. Mayer: We are doing three things. First, we are seeking international solutions. Our Prime Minister is taking the lead in that respect. As he said today, we are getting some results. They may not be too dramatic, but they are steady.

Second, we have provided a tremendous amount of financial support, and I did not go into some of the things we have done in terms of reducing input costs. But we have taken considerable steps in reducing input costs. As I just pointed out, we have provided a tremendous amount of cash.

Third, and as important, we have encouraged and supported the Canadian Wheat Board in its over-all efforts to continue to sell our product around the world so that when these markets turn around—and we believe that they will—Canada will be in a position as a reliable supplier to maintain those markets and to supply them when prices go up. That is a decided difference from the approach of previous governments.

Some 15 years ago when we faced this situation in the early 1970s we had a Government which took us out of the international market, instituted a Local Initiatives Program, cut our production in half from one year to the next, and it was a disaster for us. It took us almost five years to recover our production. That is not our approach. Our approach is to support a very important industry. We intend to do that through this very difficult time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to speak in this emergency debate tonight concerning the current crisis facing grain producers. It was very interesting to hear the Minister talk about the controlled commodities such as dairy products and others. However, what the debate tonight concerns is the tremendous tragedy that is taking place in the western grain industry.

The Minister said that we will have a grain industry in this country with grain producers in two or three years when the market turns around. Most western farmers are not very certain in their own minds whether that will be the case. There is no commitment of a deficiency payment for the new crop year.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) told the House a few weeks ago, "We will spare no effort". I say to the Minister of Agriculture and to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), go to your banker and try to get money to put in a crop and say, the Minister of Agriculture said he will spare no effort, and give the banker 65 cents, and he will give you a cup of coffee. But he will not give you a production loan. That is what this debate is all about tonight. It is about whether or not the Minister and the Government, who brag day in and day out about how much they have done for farmers, will put up the money and give the commitment in the new crop year to see that we have a viable and operating grain production industry in Canada.

Clearly, the two actions taken in the past week leave great uncertainty about that. Grain prices are down by 18 per cent, on top of 20 per cent last year. Last year when grain prices went down by 20 per cent the industry said that in constant dollars grain prices were at the same level as they were in 1933 when the Bennett buggies were being used and R. B. Bennett was sitting in the seat which the current Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) occupies. I am not saying that Tory times are hard times; but a great many western farmers must think that tonight, because grain prices have gone down by 18 per cent due to international forces, and there is no question about that.

For the Minister to trot out the canard that somebody is saying that initial prices should be set above world prices is patently ridiculous. What we want to know, and what American farmers and farmers in the European Economic Community already know, is what type of stabilization deficiency payment will be provided. They want to know that. Maybe they do not have to know the exact amount. The Minister could simply come clean and say, "Look, we are going to provide the same returns, that is, what the market provides, plus the Special Canadian Grains Program, or a new special grains program, plus even throw in the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. We will give equivalent returns to what we gave last year".

The second thing about which farmers want some information is on the basis on which this will be paid. The Minister says that the farmers should only look at the market, that they should not assume that there will even be a program, which there probably will not be since there will be an election in Saskatchewan this fall. The Minister has said that they should not assume that there will be a special grains program, and that they should not assume on what basis it will be paid. It seems to me that a great many farmers might say that the only precedent they have is the one they had last year when it was paid on the basis of seeded acres.

A few weeks ago we had farmers from Lethbridge in southern Alberta saying, "What we will do this year is mind the land. We will do some recreational seeding. We can then say the land has been seeded. We will get the special grains program, if there is one, and if there is not one we will not have spent very much because we will not have put on any fertilizer, or worked up the land. We will not have used too much seed or too much weed control or anything else".

Surely, the Government owes it to the farmers of western Canada to tell them on what basis a deficiency payment, a special grains program, will be paid, as well as the amount. Surely, if the Government is to be fair it should come clean and give the farmers this information.

I believe that the pressure, not from us in opposition but from farmers from the three prairie provinces, will be enough that within a matter of a few weeks the Government will cave in and give this information so that farmers can go to their bankers, get their credit and know what is happening. American farmers know. They know exactly what the loan discount rate will be. They know what the target price will be. They know what the deficiency payment will be. They know on what basis conservation should be carried out, and so on. Western farmers do not know any of those things.

This afternoon I spoke to a western wheat grower who said that the crisis today is not so much with respect to the price of grain but the uncertainty of government policy. He said, "We do not know whether there will be a deficiency payment, or a special grains program, and we do not know on what basis".

Many believe that the payment should be completely neutral; that it should be on the basis of cultivated acreage. In that way, people would not be pressed to produce a certain crop, or even to seed unproductive acreage, unproductive land. But, no one knows on what the program will be based, or in fact whether there will be any program.

I was impressed by the fact that the Minister quoted the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. I talked to the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool today, and I can tell you that he is particularly concerned about this. It is for that reason he sent a special letter this evening to the Prime Minister, calling the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that the rural way of life in western Canada is in jeopardy.

He points out in his letter the critical economic situation confronting western Canadian families and communities.

This is a crisis that has far-reaching social and economic implications for the national economy, and particularly so for the west. The letter makes the point that programs must immediately be developed to keep families on the farm. What the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool is highlighting is the lack of a program for restructuring the debt. He talks about the need for a deficiency payment, and about the acute need for a substantial deficiency payment for the 1987-88 crop year.

The Government has been stonewalling up to now. The pressure is now on, and eventually it will have to set out the parameters of a deficiency payment and the basis upon which it will be made. As a nation, we have to be prepared for at least two more years of massive payments from the public Treasury to meet the shortfall in the price of grain.

Several of us met with six U.S. Congressmen yesterday noon, and the same group met with the Minister. Those U.S. Congressmen made it perfectly clear that the U.S. Farm Bill is not going to be changed during the course of the Reagan administration, with the result that we are looking at least at the current crop year and the next crop year. In addition, they made it clear that the export enhancement program, a program about which my colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) will be speaking in more detail, is going to be strengthened, thus increasing the competition for Canadian Wheat Board sales. That simply translates into the fact that the farmer is going to get less money.

If we are to have our agricultural industry survive in the face of these things, we are going to have to provide more deficiency payments, more special grains programs.

I should like to now deal with the precipitous action taken by the Minister yesterday in lifting the foreclosure moratorium imposed upon the FCC. Like Members of this House, Canadian farmers will be less than impressed with the mathematics of the Minister when he said that one-quarter of 1 per cent of the farmers will be subject to foreclosure. The FCC, when it talks about economic farms in Canada, does not talk about 225,000 farms; rather, it talks about the farms with gross sales of about $20,000 per year. Perhaps the Hon. Minister does not read the FCC literature. In any event, it talks about a figure of 75,000, with gross sales of more than $20,000 per year.

The Minister's action will permit foreclosure proceedings to be commenced against those farmers whose FCC loans are in arrears. They represent about 35 to 40 per cent of the long-term debt in the agricultural sector. About 6,000 of the 75,000 accounts with the FCC have been in arrears for more than two years, and the experience with the FCC is that if a loan is in arrears for more than two years, it almost invariably leads to foreclosure.

So, we are not here talking about a one-quarter of 1 per cent, but roughly 8 per cent of the FCC loans which are certain to face foreclosure proceedings. Well, the Minister says: "Don't worry about that; we are only going to foreclose on about 50 a month. The staff of the FCC cannot process any more than 50 a month. As a result, only 600 farmers a year have to worry about foreclosure."

The question I put to the Minister is: Which of the 600 of the 6,000 loans which are subject to foreclosure will be acted upon? That is what the banker is going to ask when the farmer applies for a production loan. Once the bank points out that the FCC is pursuing foreclosures, the farmer can respond: "Oh, don't worry about that. Charlie says that they are only going to close on 600 a year, and there are 6,000 altogether. If I am the last one subject to foreclosure, I will not be foreclosed on for 10 years."

And the banker, of course, would then say: "Well, the FCC has said they are going to foreclose. If you are going to be the last one foreclosed on, then you had better get a statement from the Minister for the Canadian Wheat Board saying that you will not be subject to foreclosure for 10 years."

That kind of thing, Mr. Speaker, just will not wash. If the Government is lifting the moratorium on foreclosures, then it is lifted. That will then lead to action on these loans. Regardless of how the Minister wants to sugar-coat it, that is the way it is.

This moratorium has been in place for 19 months. During that time, the Government should have put in place a debt restructuring program to solve the plight of farmers. Had they put in place a proper debt restructuring program, the moratorium need not have been in place at all. But the Government did not have such a program, and the moratorium bought time. In the meantime, however, no debt restructuring program was put in place.

The commodity-based mortgage that the Minister spoke of this evening was described to the Standing Committee on Agriculture today by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture as a program that should be sent to the Better Business Bureau to determine whether or not it meets the ethical criteria of a properly run program. That is how that organization viewed it.

I asked why it is that no one was taking advantage of it, and the answer I got was that people do not trust it; that it is too complicated. It is simply not a good program. That is evidenced in the fact that while there are 16,000 FCC loans in arrears, 6,000 of them for more than two years, only 1,200 farmers have taken advantage of that program.

The Minister talked about the Farm Debt Review Boards. I do not have the figures with me for all nine boards, but I can tell you that of 400 applications that have come before the Ontario board, agreement has been reached in 195 cases, and only in two cases has an agreement been signed.

In some cases, the banks have agreed to an agreement verbally but then welshed on it and went ahead with foreclosure proceedings. So, the Farm Debt Review Boards are not functioning that well. In my view, the moratorium should be maintained, and we should take the time to put in place much better programs. We should modify and strengthen the commodity-based mortgage, or throw it out. More funds should be provided for the rescheduling of debt by the FCC. As well, we need help for other groups.

Tonight I spoke with the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the largest Wheat Pool in Canada. He spoke about a program which the pool is examining for rescheduling debt. That is what the Minister must look at. He must maintain this moratorium and put in place new programs for rescheduling debt. He is not kidding farmers. The crisis is facing western agriculture and much of eastern agriculture as well.

This is an historic event. Unless special programs are put in place to cope with it, we will see the loss of an entire way of life in prairie communities and rural communities across the country.

Action is needed now. The Government should come clean, give a commitment on a deficiency payment, stop foreclosures which will start on Friday of this week, and put in place a proper debt restructuring program. If the Government does not do so, the problems faced by western Canadian agriculture and agriculture in other parts of the country will be horrendous. People in the House and across the country who are concerned about agriculture are willing to make that commitment, and the Government must make that commitment now to our rural communities. It is absolutely essential.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I join in this debate with pleasure. The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), and I have debated the agriculture issue in the House over many years, sometimes on different sides of the House than the ones we occupy at present.

My memory is long regarding the policies of Parties on agriculture. I listened with care to the Hon. Members when they outlined the problem, the serious situation facing grain farmers in the Prairies and across Canada today. I waited with anticipation to hear how these Hon. Members would assist the Government in solving the problem.

The Hon. Member for Prince Albert said that he was not too sure whether we should do what Europe and the United States were doing. Then he said that maybe we should help farmers. I waited a little longer, and suddenly he sat down. He did not give us the NDP policy on how it would handle the crisis facing Canadian grain farmers. He left the impression that all Canadian farmers were in the can financially, which is simply not the case.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Algoma outline the problem. I waited for the so-called famous Liberal policy on agriculture to assist grain farmers through the serious problem. At the end of his speech he sat down, after saying that special programs should be put in place to cope with it, meaning the farm problem. He also talked about commitment, a member of that Party talked about commitment. In two and a half years the Government has responded in more ways than the Liberals responded in the 20-odd years when they were in government. I will outline some of their responses.

However, let me deal with policy because it is important. When there is a problem, anyone can outline it, but a problem needs to be solved. When we were in opposition about the same time in the term of the former Liberal Government, I recall very well six or seven members of the Tory agricultural committee sitting down and drafting a 10-point policy to deal with the same problem. Grain prices were lowering. Interest rates were at 22 per cent. Inflation was double digit. Farmers were facing a serious financial crisis on the Prairies. As I said, we drafted a 10-point policy which we put before the Canadian people. We took that policy to Prince Albert. We promised it in the election, and it is already in place.

Where is the NDP policy? I looked all over for it. I thought it would come tonight. I searched the records and I found a few things which NDP Members say still stand.

They say that it might be necessary, as well, to take into public ownership some existing farm supply retail operations, farm assembly plants, meat packing plants, and canneries. That sounds very interesting. Would that solve the problem in the farm sector now?

Other proposals in the resolution would be tantamount to the state taking over agriculture, with farmers taking their marching orders from Ottawa. In its policy the NDP says that it would regulate the distribution, sale, and servicing of farm machinery to promote standardization. This is another NDP policy on agriculture.

They would also regulate food processing, wholesaling, and retailing industries in the public interest through the use of price controls. I wonder whether farmers would think this policy would solve the problems of grain farmers at the present time.

They went on to indicate the establishment of a public commission to determine a formula for farm unit size on a regional basis. Are they going to tell farmers what is the optimum size or the best size for their farms? Are they going to say that if they have a quarter section or more it ought to be sold off because it is not an NDP policy? I could continue, but it does not get much better.

However, the best one came from the Liberal Party. I want to deal with the policy of the Liberal Party because I do not have too much time. I searched for its policy. I had hoped the Hon. member for Algoma would stand and give us an indication of what it was.

An Hon. Member: He left.

Mr. Schellenberger: Yes, he left quickly. It seems that the Liberal Party has a policy which it announced a few weeks ago in Winnipeg. I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on April 11, 1987, because I think they said it better than I can. The article indicated that the authors of this feeble set of proposals were the members of an exclusive political group and that the task force consisted of two Members of Parliament, one being the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I am pleased to see him here tonight. I know he will take part in the debate. Perhaps he will elucidate this policy because it is very necessary for him to do so. He was one of the authors. The other author was the Hon. Member for Algoma who just participated in the debate.

The article went on to refer to 11 Senators from western Canada, the leaders of the Saskatchewan and Alberta Liberal Parties, and three Alberta Liberal MLAs who all came from cities. They really had an excellent group!

Perhaps they should have used another western Member. They have one more about whom they forgot, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner).

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): He is a Toronto Member.

Mr. Schellenberger: Oh, I thought he was from Vancouver. He was a little farther west but apparently he did not participate in the Party's hearings. Maybe his interests are further away from agriculture.

The Winnipeg Free Press article continued:

> Western Canadians who hope the Liberal Party might have learned something about their needs and aspirations during its two and one-half years out of office seem doomed to disappointment. Even the western members of the caucus remain sadly out of touch.

I cannot argue with that, because I looked at its policy, its 17-page report. The article continued:

> The 17-page report is an empty document offering ringing declarations of discredited party policy, outright distortions of economic reality and not a single firm proposal which would make any significant difference to the economy of western Canada.

It goes on and I will read only one more paragraph, but I would like to put this whole thing on the record. It says:

> Western Canadians, of course, know all about mismanagement and a lack of understanding of their economy. They know all about the connection between political and economic decision making. They got a taste of both when the political decision of the previous Liberal Government led to the economic disaster of a National Energy Program which put a large part of the western Canadian oil industry out of business.

On and on it goes.

An Hon. Member: The Winnipeg Free Press?

Mr. Schellenberger: Yes, The Winnipeg Free Press. I went through the report too. I was pleased to get a copy and I did not see anything different from what was reported there.

Now, what do we have? We have the Hon. Senator—I do not think they have ridings so I will have to use his name—Hazen Argue. He put his great big cowboy hat on and is driving around in an air-conditioned suburban talking about the terrible crisis on the prairie farms. Where was he when he was Minister in the Liberal Government and interest rates soared to 22.75 per cent? Was he driving around on the Prairies at that time?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Schellenberger: No, Mr. Speaker. He was not, but now he is trying for perhaps a little press because Lord knows the Liberal Party policy needs a lot of help. I do not think the Liberals will get it from the Hon. Senator who is driving around in western Canada in his truck pulling a trailer, trying to get a little press for agriculture. Did the Liberal Party deal with fuel prices, Mr. Speaker? Did the Liberal Party bring fuel prices down for western farmers when all Canadian farmers were going through that crisis? No, prices went up. The Liberals added taxes like the Canadian ownership charge, the Canadian compensation charge. Fuel prices went up for farmers. But what did we do?

Mr. Gauthier: You increased taxes.

Mr. Schellenberger: I am not kidding, and the Hon. Member should sit down and listen. What is the Liberal Party's policy? It is terrible. There is none. Interest rates were at 22 per cent, inflation was over 11 per cent and debt was rapidly increasing to over $20 billion. I sat in this House and watched the then Minister of Agriculture Mr. Whelan for 10 years. What did he do? He flashed his green hat around this country making speeches. I have a whole filing cabinet full of them. His speeches said nothing. What legislation was brought into this House? In 10 years we had 13 Bills, three of which dealt with farm credit, variable interest rates and borrowing outside of Canada.

Mr. Foster: You fought western grain stabilization all the way.

Mr. Schellenberger: We had a better idea. It is starting to hurt Members over there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Could we allow the Hon. Member to continue his speech?

Mr. Gauthier: As long as he sticks to the facts.

Mr. Schellenberger: The facts are there and they hurt, Mr. Speaker.

What did we have? The then Minister of Agriculture tried to put out fires, but he had no ideas. Several of his Bills were renewing old acts which the Tories had brought in during the Diefenbaker years. The then Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Whelan, ended his term with a gem and that was Canagrex which was going to solve all the farmers problems. That is what we got out of the Liberal Government and a Minister who was Minister for however many years he was Minister.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): We had 20 per cent interest rates.

Mr. Schellenberger: Yes, we had a wonderful time with interest rates. It took this Government with the policy that we announced well in advance of the election to deal with the very serious problems that farmers faced for a long, long time.

Mr. Orlikow: Are they now all solved?

Mr. Schellenberger: No, we still have much to do but we are working. We know there are difficulties. Let me take Hon. Members through some of the policies that have been put in place and have assisted agriculture.

Mr. Axworthy: If you don't, we will do it.

Mr. Schellenberger: We talk about commitment. In the next five weeks $1.3 billion will be mailed out to western farmers through the Western Grain Stabilization Program and through the special grains program to assist farmers put crops in the ground.

Mr. Axworthy: Where is the Agri-bond, Stan?

Mr. Schellenberger: We are working on that.

An Hon. Member: What about the PFRA Bill?

Mr. Schellenberger: That is my Private Members' Bill and I would be glad if the Hon. Member would stand up and support it. Bring it forward and we will deal with it.

Mr. Axworthy: What about agricultural research?

Mr. Schellenberger: I don't know if I will have time but I will talk about that too.

Mr. Axworthy: I will, though.

Mr. Schellenberger: In the Prince Albert declaration we said that we will remove the capital gains tax. We did that to the tune of a $500,000 exemption. We extended that to small business.

Mr. Foster: You did it for everybody.

Mr. Schellenberger: Absolutely. We do not show favouritism.

We removed the sales tax on farm fuels. This is reduced and will save farmers who farm 1,200 acres some $5,000 annually. We said we would change the western grain stabilization so that farmers could get the money when they need it at the beginning of the crop year. This is assisting them dramatically this year. An amount of $705 million will be sent out to farmers on April 20, 1987.

We said that we would change the Western Grain Transportation Act to remove the volume cap and to freeze the rate. We did that. Not only was the rate frozen but it was rolled back to an average of $6 a tonne, which assisted greatly in the movement of grain out of western Canada.

We promised to increase sales and expand our markets for grains. We did, even in this difficult time of world surpluses, where the EEC assists its farmers to the tune of $36 billion and each of the individual states in the community assists probably as much, so that some $70 billion is going out to 11 million farmers in the European community. There are 340-odd million people paying the tax bill.

Let us go to the American economy. This year some $24 billion will assist farmers to export to try to take a market share. Through all of this, what was the Canadian Wheat Board doing? It was selling and increasing our market share. It was not leaving our bins full like we had under the Liberal Government which had a four bushel quota total in one year. Then we had a Prime Minister who came to western Canada and said "Why should I sell your grain?" That is what we got from the leadership of the Liberal Party. But we did not get that from this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who says that our problem has to do with the subsidies and it ought to be included in the GATT negotiations. What happens, Mr. Speaker? That is where the problem is. That is leadership. It is not going out to western Canada and saying "Why should I sell your grain?" What kind of leadership did we have then for western Canadian farmers?

Mr. Gustafson: And then we got the LIFT.

Mr. Schellenberger: There are lots of examples of that type of leadership.

Mr. Axworthy: It is better than the Gucci shoes.

Mr. Schellenberger: Under our Prime Minister, when the farmers were in difficulty a billion dollars was offered. Now the commitment is there if the farmers in the upcoming crop year face the same kind of difficulty. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget said "We will be there". The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said "We will spare no effort". Given past examples, I would buy those kinds of promises and commitments any time over what we got from the two Parties on the other side. That is commitment. The budget on agriculture has been more than doubled. It was 50 per cent the first year, and there is a 60 per cent increase this year. Just a 1 per cent decrease in the interest rates saves farmers $130 million. How much have interest rates gone down in the last two and a half years? Four points. That is a saving for farmers.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Exchange rates are set in the States, not in Canada.

Mr. Schellenberger: We have hundreds of commitments. I give a rounding applause to the House of Commons because it has assisted. The Minister of Agriculture and the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) are moving this legislation so as to assist farmers. Hundreds of commitments have been passed by this House of Commons under the leadership of this Government to assist farmers. You would think, as we listen, regarding the difficulties in agriculture, that all farmers were in difficulty. That certainly is not the case. Some grain farmers are in difficulty. Others may get into difficulty. If you look at all the other types of agriculture, as the Minister of the Wheat Board pointed out, many are having an excellent year.

We find that many good borrowers are still coming to the Farm Credit Corporation. This year, it made some $300 million in loans. That was $70 million more that went out to the agricultural community than last year. Under commodity-based loans, another $300 million went out. Some $600 million-worth of loans went out to agriculture this year. These loans certainly would not have gone out to agriculture if everyone was in difficulty.

Comparing 1986 farm loans with those of 1985, one finds that year-over-year, almost $400 million more had gone out to agriculture. That shows that there is still a lot of good faith and many good borrowers, even with today's land prices and today's difficulties.

We have a problem and we will continue to deal with that problem which lies in the grain and oilseeds sector. I know these problems very well because my family went through bankruptcies. I know very well that it is difficult for any family to have to deal with a farm bankruptcy. As a Member of this House, I will do everything possible to see to it that as few farmers as possible have to face that very difficult trauma. Through the Farm Debt Review Board and the Farm Transition Program, we have offered even more assistance to those who will have to face that trauma.

This is not an easy time for any Member who represents a rural riding, but I will say in conclusion that I would far rather be here defending the policy of this Government than standing over there with the NDP and the Liberals defending their policies.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, tonight we are participating in an emergency debate called for two basic reasons. First, during the Easter break, the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board announced a decline in the initial price for Canadian wheat for the coming crop year. This year the decline was 18 per cent for No. 1 wheat. The previous year, the Minister announced at a press conference that he was cutting the price of wheat by 19 per cent, so we are getting pretty close to seeing a 40 per cent decline in the price of No. 1 wheat in the last two years.

There was a 28 per cent decrease in the price of No. 1 feed barley last year, but the Minister was not content with that. This year he brought that down another 25 per cent, so we are talking about a decline of just over 50 per cent in the price of No. 1 feed barley in the last two years.

What triggered the emotional outcry both in the House and in the country was not just that, I believe. It was the additional totally insensitive announcement made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) on Monday morning that he would lift the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loans, a moratorium that had been in place since February 17, 1985.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Just plain stupid.

Mr. Althouse: It was plain stupid, it was insensitive and it was not something we expected from any Government, particularly a Government that claims to have its finger on the pulse of agriculture and that boasts of its close relationship with Canada's farmers.

In their defence, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board have said that this decision will put only 50 farm families out of business per month. This reminds me a little bit of the Zundel defence. He said that it was not six million but it was only 100,000 who were killed and therefore there was no problem. Fighting with the figures is not the point here and the Chair recognized that when he decided to declare this matter an emergency.

How do these 6,000 farmers who may be on that list of 50 a month feel? No one knows if they are at the top of the list, the bottom of the list or when their loans will be called. They are already under a great deal of pressure. There have been some partial studies done in Brandon, Manitoba, and in Ontario of the kind of stress farm families are under. The study done in the Province of Ontario published reports indicating that more than 30 per cent of the farm deaths in Ontario which occurred during the course of the study were due to suicide. That means that there is a suicide rate among farmers of between 10 and 12 times that of the Canadian average. In its insensitivity, the Government has placed even more pressure on these 6,000 farmers who are facing extreme financial stress according to the Farm Credit Corporation. The Government has made certain that that extreme financial stress is made just a little more difficult. Those are the reasons we put this item on the agenda for this evening.

We along with a great many farm organizations in Canada say that in the short term, and I address this to the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) who said that we did not mention anything about policy in this debate, there should be an announcement, loud, clear and now, telling farmers what sort of assistance the Government is prepared to provide in the coming crop year.

A billion dollars was added to net incomes from last year and in order to maintain those incomes at approximately the same level, we will need between $1.8 billion and $2 billion to hold the line. That is the kind of figure about which Canadian farmers want to hear. They want to know if there will be that kind of firm commitment. They do not want to hear vague promises about how the Government has permitted the Western Grain Stabilization Act to function or about how there was a $1 billion Special Grains Program announced in the midst of the Saskatchewan election when it appeared that the Conservative premier would lose the election. The farmers want to know what will happen in the 1987-88 crop year and if the Government will maintain those levels of support and they want to know that now.

The Minister of Agriculture has been telling us in the House and through news releases that the farm organizations did not want to know about anything more than his vague promises of support and concern. We have received letters by mail and Telex in the last few days indicating that at least two of the very large farm organizations, one from Manitoba and one from Saskatchewan, have in fact demanded some kind of assurance. Many other organizations said as much after returning from that infamous meeting the Minister held back in March in which he said that the farm organizations did not really want anything more than to see his smile and shake his hand at the door.

In a letter dated today addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool asks all Members of Parliament to recognize a very critical economic situation confronting farmers and their families. It asks that programs be implemented immediately. The pool calls upon the Prime Minister to immediately develop programs through federal and provincial co-operation to keep families on their farms in productive capacities and, more to the point, it asks that early consideration be given to the acute need for a substantial deficiency payment for the 1987-88 crop year. That was said very clearly.

The same thing was said by the Keystone Agricultural Producers in Manitoba. On behalf of the grain producers in Manitoba, they call on the Government to announce as soon as possible an intention to introduce a similar program for the 1987-88 crop year with support levels at least equivalent to those of the 1986 program. The farmers want answers now and that is what this debate is all about.

The Minister of Agriculture said the reason he announced his lifting of the moratorium was because he had, in the time between September 17, 1985, and yesterday, initiated programs which would take care of the problem that approximately 20 per cent of farmers with loans outstanding presently face. He says the Government set up the Farm Debt Review Boards. It set up a transition program to assist people to leave agriculture if that is the only choice they have. The Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) referred to some of those programs tonight. He called them great successes. According to his figures, you would be led to believe that 50 to 60 per cent of the farmers who put their names in front of the Debt Review Boards maintained their farms and were successful in staying on the land.

Nothing could be further from the truth. What the Minister perhaps meant to say was that 50 per cent to 60 per cent were processed. Our information from those Debt Review Boards is that less than half survived the cut. About half are rejected out of hand. Half go to the Debt Review Board and of those one-half or one-quarter of the total may stay on the farm.

Mr. Schellenberger: It is 60 per cent in Alberta.

Mr. Althouse: I stress "may" because very few of them get written and signed agreements. Sixty per cent may have gone through the process but they do not have their farm saved yet, Sir.

Mr. Schellenberger: Yes.

Mr. Althouse: They have not saved their farm yet, Sir. I point to the testimony by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture in the committee this morning. They said that so far in Ontario there have been 425 applications received in front of the Debt Review Boards, of those 193 actually were reviewed, that after seven months, and of those, two succeeded in getting signed agreements. So we know where two farm families are in Ontario having gone through the debt review process.

The farmers in difficulty are estimated by Agriculture Canada to have about $10 billion in debt at risk. In Ontario it amounts to $2 billion. The sad fact is that as these farms become more and more at risk, the value of the farm assets that Canadian farmers are working with is declining quite rapidly. There is no clear formula, as you might imagine, but basically once you get into a down slide in price for the basic commodity, grains in this case, when you have a price decline of something like 50 per cent, which we have faced for all grains, the price of land will drop even more than 50 per cent. The rents simply cannot sustain those prices.

I made a series of calls around my riding, speaking with municipal councils and attending annual municipal meetings where farmers come out to discuss farm problems just prior to the spring planting. In areas where production is very high, very good land with good rainfall, the Spalding area in the black soil zone, well-watered, very high-yielding crops, land which has been continuously cropped for eight or 10 years on a cash rental basis, I heard stories where they are having great difficulty finding anyone to look after the land. The landlords have got to the point where they are offering the land if the rent will pay the taxes. People are not jumping to take it up. That is what it has come to and the announcement of an additional 18 per cent decline in the initial wheat price had not been made at that point.

The situation is bad and has triggered a tremendous decline in the value of farm assets. That creates its own set of problems. I submit that the Minister of Agriculture, by pulling off his moratorium, has set to work a whole host of other credit institutions who will take action that I think they were delaying because they were awaiting a signal from the federal agency.

I note that the B.C. Farm Credit Corporation, which is relatively small on a national basis, with only about 2,300 loans, some 488 of which are in arrears for more than two years, has now decided or is expected to announce shortly that it will be lifting the moratorium it had on provincial-based loans. There are 12 immediate candidates for foreclosure, most of them in the Peace River district. The banks in British Columbia, which has a very small agricultural base, are now estimated to hold, according to the B.C. Federation of Agriculture, some 40,000 hectares of British Columbia farmland. For those who think in Imperial, that is 100,000 acres. The FCC is now estimated to hold about 5,000 hectares, and with the lifting of this moratorium the B.C. Federation of Agriculture estimates that the FCC will be holding in excess of 35,000 hectares very quickly in the Province of British Columbia. Again, most of that is in the Peace River block.

Those are the kinds of things which have been triggered by what the Government's Ministers tell us were very simple and rather tame announcements. Those kinds of tame announcements put farm families out of business, under stress, trigger an even higher rate of suicide, and create distress and destruction, financial, economic, and social, throughout the farming community. That is the kind of announcement that only a Minister of Agriculture who was totally insensitive to the real situation could have made. I deplore it and find it very difficult to understand. Knowing him as a person, I thought he was in tune with what is going on in agriculture, but he seems to have totally missed the mark on this one.

We regret as well that no announcements have been made or no indication has been forthcoming from the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) as to what levels of assistance are forthcoming in the 1987-88 crop year. That is something we as New Democrats are looking for, but farmers represented by the Saskatchewan Pool and others, various federations of agriculture, and the National Farmers Union as well, have all called for more clear programs and clear intentions on the part of the Government.

You see, the problem is farmers' memories go back quite a ways. People my age and older hark back to the Diefenbaker Government which came out with an acreage payment under circumstances not unlike this in the 1960s. That was a very welcome program. I have to give the Progressive Conservative Government of that day great credit for having initiated the program. I also note with some awe that it managed to sell that $200 an acre maximum payment for two years before another payment was made, at which time there happened to be an election going on. They are starting to ask themselves whether this is not another of the same kind of political ploy.

Everyone, even four-year old kids on the Prairies, knows that the $1 billion came because Grant Devine was having trouble getting re-elected last fall. They noted that the pay-out did not come until the next calendar year which, I suppose, was to be expected, so they got through 1986 and 1987. The payment was broken into two pieces to spread it over a longer period of time.

With the signals they are getting from the two Ministers they are starting to think that some of the same shenanigans are at work here because it looks as though these payments will be stretched out as long as possible in order to keep everyone on tenterhooks and to keep it as a political issue before the electorate in the west. The Government is hoping it will result in its re-election.

I want to remind the Progressive Conservatives who sit across from me that it did not work for John Diefenbaker. The last acreage payment did not get him re-elected. I submit that unless the Government is honest and straightforward with Canadian farmers now, it will not work this time either. There are no political brownie points to be earned for withholding this announcement. Make it now as the farmers and farm organizations are expecting and give some necessary underpinning to the incomes of Canadian farmers which, by the way, are being maintained almost totally by federal programs. A good many of those programs were in place and would be operating regardless of which Party were in Government.

The net income of farmers in the coming year will be between $3 billion and $4 billion. According to the figures of the Minister, the Government will be pumping slightly more than $4 billion into the farming industry. We do not hear members of the Government talking about the fact that they have almost made farmers public servants or making comparisons with Russia, but if our Party was in Government I am sure they would be taking those kinds of shots at us. The net income of Canada's farmers in the last couple of years has come almost exclusively from the Government. That is deplorable. It is time there were some international agreements to change that.

Mr. Mayer: Tell us what to do.

Mr. Althouse: If the Minister will listen, I will point out that we cannot realistically reach such international agreements within three to five years. Therefore, this sort of pay-out will have to continue and be made on a regularized basis with the announcement being made at the same time as the wheat price announcements so that people will have some idea of what they are facing. That is our policy.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the early part of the speech of the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), he made reference to the initial payments being a reduction in price of 18 per cent. Western farmers understand that that is not the price but simply an advance received when grain is delivered to the elevator on the price to be received later There are headlines all across the country stating that wheat prices are down 18 per cent. This frightens bankers and all other people who deal with farmers. By repeating it here in the House tonight the Member is unwittingly attacking the Canadian Wheat Board.

If he read the Canadian Wheat Board Act carefully he would recognize, as very few farmers do, that the Minister has literally no power under this Act.

Mr. Benjamin: This is no time to brag about it.

Mr. Hamilton: The Act makes it very clear that the setting of the initial price is the responsibility of the Wheat Board. It is an indication to farmers of what the directors of the Wheat Board think the price will be for the coming crop year. The crop year lasts for another year and a half as far as payments are concerned.

I want to emphasize to all good Canadians that Members of Parliament, and particularly members of the Government, cannot make any comments about the Wheat Board which would attack its independence under this Act.

Mr. Benjamin: Who's doing that?

Mr. Hamilton: This Act was set up to make it clear to the country that the marketing of grain was turned over to an independent board which was to do the best job possible for the farmer.

The directors of the Wheat Board have tried desperately over the years to set an initial payment which they know is less than what the actual price will be. They are human beings and sometimes make mistakes, but sometimes they are right. Last year was a bad year for them. There is always pressure from farmers to get the initial payment out as fast as possible. That is a natural thing for them to push for and Governments are guilty of it too. However, the fact remains, as the directors of the Wheat Board know, that if that price is set too high, as it was last year, the Government will stand good for it but the responsibility essentially falls on the Wheat Board.

When Members attack the Wheat Board for making an initial payment which is too low, they are attacking in advance because they will not know what the price will be until the crop year is over.

Mr. Benjamin: Who's attacking them?

Mr. Hamilton: I would like to suggest that the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) would be well advised to listen because I will come to him later.

Mr. Benjamin: I've been listening to you for 20 years.

Mr. Hamilton: I have been trying my level best to impress upon the Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre, who is a fair person and a credit to the House, that by joining in this media misconception that the initial price is the price, he is unwittingly harming the farmers. I think that farmers in general understand that this is an advance payment.

Mr. Benjamin: It is not. It's the price on delivery.

Mr. Hamilton: It's the price on delivery to the elevator and is backed up by the Government with a floor price because the Governor in Council has to agree. By saying the things he has the Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre is adding a load on the back of the Wheat Board which it does not deserve. They are trying to be responsible. They remember when the Wheat Pool set the initial price in the days when the pools did the selling. They set the price at $1 a bushel and, through no fault of the pool, the world price collapsed to 32 cents. The Manitoba Pool, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and the Alberta Wheat Pool were all bankrupt.

• (2200)

The Bennett Government stepped in and bailed them out to keep them from going bankrupt. To this day the pools have not sold a bushel of wheat in spite of the fact that this was their purpose and they have a licence to do so. It is true, however, that they formed a group with the United Grain Growers approximately 15 years ago.

The fact is that we in the House of Commons, in our attempt to help the farmer, should not be creating a conception that the Wheat Board made a mistake by setting those prices too low.

Mr. Benjamin: Nobody said that.

Mr. Hamilton: I think the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. Benjamin) knows that several papers have mentioned the price being down 18 per cent. It was also mentioned today and tonight by the Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre.

Mr. Benjamin: No he didn't.

Mr. Hamilton: Are you saying that I am a liar, Sir?

Mr. Benjamin: I can't do that.

Mr. Hamilton: Anyone who has the reputation of being known as "Mr. Suck and Blow" hardly calls me a liar.

The point I am making is that we must relate the facts as best we can so that a proper decision can be made. The main fact facing the farmer today is the high interest rates with which he must deal.

The Opposition can be very constructive on this point. They must remember that when the Farm Credit Corporation Act was implemented in 1959, the Government provided a statutory ceiling of 5 per cent for interest rates. Some of us in the House will remember when the NDP-Liberal alliance allowed the Liberal Government to remove that statutory provision and raise the interest rates of the Farm Credit Corporation. The farmers will never forgive the NDP for joining with the Liberals in that initiative, simply to oppose the Conservatives who were in opposition. We are paying a heavy price for the love affair that existed then.

As a result of the New Democratic Party's dissatisfaction and perhaps dislike for us, its alliance with the Liberals ultimately worked against the interests of western Canadians. Our Government faced many problems during that 1957-1962 period, yet we tried hard to implement our five-point national policy program which is still in place today. I feel strongly about this debate because our Government is trying just as hard to honour that fundamental agricultural policy that we put in place between 1957 and 1962.

When I was in opposition many years ago, I was very much concerned about the Farm Credit Corporation drifting from its original purpose. However, no one listened to me because I was in opposition. The Farm Credit Corporation is now paying a heavy price as a result of the decisions by the bureaucrats who make the policy here in Ottawa.

In 1963, the Pearson administration established an agricultural task force whose members included the brightest agricultural and economic people of this country. That task force examined the past and considered the future, and reported in 1968-69. It predicted that there would only be a need for one-third of the farmers in Canada since we would only be selling three hundred million bushels a year by 1980. It recommended that young people be discouraged from farming and the acreage of farm land be cut in half in the west in three years. This was known in part of the west as the LIFT Program, lower inventory for tomorrow. However, the program turned out to be "lower income for tomorrow".

Although 87 per cent of the farmers were opposed to that program, they had to become involved because they did not have the reserves to survive through the year. Those memories will die hard in the west, and to this day they will hold to account those who supported that program.

I must give credit to the NDP that it was smart enough to dissociate itself from the LIFT Program and work for the farmers in opposing it. In the debate that took place between 1968 and 1972, the program was reversed so that I believe every seat in Saskatchewan became Conservative as a result of that debate.

My request of Hon. Members tonight is not to be so eager to shine in the House by reading these headlines in the paper about prices going down 18 per cent when only the advance payment has gone down.

I am saddened by the negative attitude from all Parties in the House toward the problems facing Canada. Therefore, I want to finish my remarks with a positive suggestion.

Let us consider, leaving the interest rate problem aside for the moment, how we can increase the price. When the Americans dropped their loan price last year, the natural response in Canada was to drop it as well. Furthermore, the Wheat Board sets its price as a result of a knee-jerk response to what is taking place in Kansas City and Chicago. But how do our customers react?

While the Americans dropped their price of grain and compensated their farmers at the same time, our customers did not take the bait of lower prices to buy American grain. Not only did the Russians and the Chinese refuse to buy from the Americans, they are asking us for more grain and pleading with us not to go out of production.

Economists tell us that the greater production of grains in the world is being equalled or surpassed by the number of people eating more bread grain than rice. This phenomenon has spread to Asia and North Africa so that no matter how much more the Chinese increase their production, they do not provide the type of wheat that their people want. They want fresh Canadian grain, and fortunately, there are innovative Canadians using Canadian know-how to increase the production of grain. It is Canadian expertise that has sold our grain around the world, and that is why our customers still want us as a steady supplier.

In closing I wish to say that while there is an impression that there is a surplus of grain in the world, there is no surplus of good Canadian grain. The fact is that we are moving as much grain as the railroads can carry. We have to improve the railroads and bring them to top efficiency. There is hope for the future. A positive suggestion would be to take a look at a bonus payment on wheat which does not cost the Government of Canada a cent. Let us follow the American custom on protein bonuses. I think that is 6 per cent, and for everything above that the farmer gets 70 cents to 90 cents. Let us adopt a practical solution. Let us ask the advisory board of the Wheat Board. We cannot give advice because that would be interfering. We do occasionally, but we are not supposed to do so. Let us ask the advisory board, which is elected, give it all the facts as to how we can set up a system where there is a ceiling of 5 per cent and 10 cents for every percentage point above that. Therefore, if the farmer grows 14 per cent protein, he receives 90 cents a bushel extra, and our customers will buy that because they are accepting that principle from the United States.

They want us to stay in production so they have to help us to keep us there. Conservatives will buy that, I believe. I think we should start to talk to members of the advisory board publicly and ask them to make this proposal to the Wheat Board. They have the right as elected representatives of the people of the west to advise the Wheat Board. Let them advise the Wheat Board. They should not shy away from their responsibilities because they are responsible to the people.

In conclusion, I believe all Canadians should unite on a positive approach to remedying this problem in all agricultural sectors, but at the particular moment it is needed in the grain and oil seeds sector.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, over the past three or four months there have been in this House three or four opposition days dealing with the problems of western Canada. There have been two or three emergency debates. The purpose of each debate was to try to draw attention in the forum of this country to the growing and accelerating difficulties being faced by farm communities in the west. Each time the answer from the government benches has been the same. It is not a problem. Do not take it seriously. They bob, they weave, they duck, they hide. They dig back into the vaults of history to try to find someone else to blame. The clear answer is that they do not want to govern. They do not know how to govern and, in fact, the people do not want them to govern any more, as we can clearly see from the polls. They are afraid to face up to their responsibilities. They are afraid to come to grips with contemporary issues and answers.

What do they do instead? They do as did the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) who digs back in the old files when he was a member of the Opposition and pulls out the old arguments and the old hoary tales of wrongdoing. It has never dawned on that poor soul that he is a member of the Government, that he is going into a caucus tomorrow where he has Ministers in front of him who are derelict in their responsibilities in dealing with the farm issue. He is much happier looking back in his old files and digging out the old arguments because it has never dawned on him that one of the clear responsibilities of a Member of Parliament on the government side is to try to persuade his own Government to accept the responsibility and requirement to take action on real problems.

Like a lot of Canadians I was a little intrigued and somewhat curious when I read the story about the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), having to build a large closet for his 84 pairs of shoes. I wondered what someone could possibly need all those shoes for. Well, we discovered the answer tonight. I think every Conservative Member of Parliament must have a huge closet full of shoes because they are all up on their tippytoes dancing around the issues so hard that they wear out their shoes quickly. We do not have a Government, we have a ballet company. What all Members of the Government are doing is jumping around on their tippytoes trying to evade the questions. They pirouette, turn, and do all the kinds of gymnastics they can possibly do in order to evade coming to grips with an issue that goes to the very deep and fundamental roots of the western Canadian economy and western Canadian society. That is what this emergency debate is all about.

I find it exceedingly interesting that the message finally seems to be getting through. A report on the National News tonight is that the Tories are in disarray, that they are in mass confusion. So what is their answer? They are going to send the Prime Minister out west. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the westerners will say: "don't send the PM, send cash instead". That is what they want. They do not want any more of the Prime Minister's blarney. They do not want him dancing around. They do not want an extra plane so he can carry his famous shoe collection with him. They simply want some assistance. All they want from the Government is some small sign that it understands what is going on.

Members of the Government love to get up and say: "We are farmers. We really know what is going on". Some of them may be good farmers but they are a lousy Government. They are lousy policy makers and lousy administrators when it comes to finding the kind of answers that will cut into the heart of the problem. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), quite correctly pointed out that for 19 months we had a moratorium on FCC loans. Surely one would think that in that 19 month period someone over there might have had the wit to come up with some answer to deal with debt restructuring. Farm organizations have done it.

The Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin asks where the policies are. There are many of them out there. We put some forward which the Hon. Member for Algoma presented. There was the world stability program put forward by the Wheat Pool. The policies are there, but the government Members must be incapable of reading, comprehending or responding because there has been no attempt during the 19-month period to find an answer that will allow the responsibilities to be shared between the farmers, the banks and the Government, the Government representing society and the banks carrying the private loans and the farmers themselves. We are saying that everyone must take a fair share of responsibility. They must come together. However, the Government has not even brought the major players to the game to the table to find an answer. It has not even had the capacity as a Government to bring together the major participants in this issue, the federal and provincial Governments, the farm organizations and the banks.

When we asked today in the House of Commons if it would not be important to bring together the banks to talk about this issue because they carry 60 per cent of the debt, the Minister asked: "Why would we do that? Why would we talk to the banks?" We know why the Government should talk to the banks. It is because every banker tonight is looking at the statement issued on Monday by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and is saying: "Well, if the Government can foreclose, so can we". They will begin to look at all their outstanding loans.

When farmers begin walking in and asking for their production loans, looking for the credit for the forthcoming crop year, Mr. Speaker, how do you think those banks will respond when the Government of Canada, in a disgraceful and despicable way, has said: "We are cancelling the moratorium. Instead we are going to let the grinding machinery of the FCC churn farm communities into bits and pieces"?

It is an open invitation to the banks and other credit operations to do exactly the same thing. What stops them now? What possible compunction would they have when the federal Government, which is presumably there to defend the farmer's interests—because it is a public interest organization, or at least it used to be—is acting in the crassest and most vulgar way possible? Yet the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board asks: "Why would I talk to the banks?" Is this something that does not involve them? Are they such generous, open-minded and charitable organizations?

The naivety and simplicity of thought which has been brought to this problem is mind-boggling. It would almost be laughable if the situation were not so serious. That is perhaps the worst condemnation that can be made. We have some jokes at the expense of all those Conservative Members who will not be here the next time around because, in western Canada, they have dropped 20 per cent to 25 per cent in the polls. They should ask themselves why. The reason is that the very people who elected them in 1984 no longer trust them, believe in them or have confidence in them.

One of their members had some courage. I refer to the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) who stood up and publicly said that the Government does not understand western Canada, is not responding to its needs and does not know how to cope with the problems. What did that Hon. Member receive as a reward for his honesty? He was chopped. He was sent off the team. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who has suffered incredible types of transgressions, could not abide 24 hours of honesty from a member of his own caucus. It was a matter of shooting the messenger because he did not like the message.

If Members opposite will not even listen to one of their own members who are prepared to say those things, and they will not listen to the people of western Canada who are saying those things, then to whom will they listen? At what point in time do we simply say: "For God's sake, go. We have had enough. You no longer understand what is going on. You have been blinded by your own sense of omnipotence that was passed to you in 1984, but it is no longer possible for you to come to grips with real issues in a real way"?

I wish to speak to the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin because he was so happy to say that he would read the promises that came from other Members. What I found particularly amusing was that the Hon. Member decided he would use the Winnipeg Free Press editorial page, not the news page but the editorial page, as his source of wisdom. That shows the bankruptcy of the Conservative benches. Conservative Members now rely upon the editorial page of the Winnipeg Free Press as their source of wisdom. Let us just follow that Hon. Member's logic through for a moment. He begged the indulgence of the House to listen to him. I would like to quote from the April 23 editorial of the Winnipeg Free Press which states:

> Prime Minister Brian Mulroney is inviting the smaller Canadian provinces to Meech Lake next week to enshrine their powerlessness in the Constitution.

It goes on to state:

> —the effect of his proposals will be to entrench even further the powers of Central Canada and to block any hopes of achieving the reforms sought by other regions.

Considering that the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin has placed such great faith in the editorials of the Winnipeg Free Press I ask him if he agrees with this editorial which states that his Government is now engaged in a process that will denude even further the powers of the western provinces and ignore the types of claims for reform coming from the Premier of his own province. If the editorial from the Winnipeg Free Press is so convincing to the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin maybe he will get up in his caucus tomorrow morning and read this editorial to his Prime Minister and tell him that perhaps he is making a mistake in his approach to constitutional reform. I give this advice to the Hon. Member: Do not necessarily rely upon the editorials of the Winnipeg Free Press. Listen to the people. What they are saying is that the Government does not know what it is doing.

Let us talk about all the wonderful promises that the Tories made. My goodness, Mr. Speaker, how proud they were at the great Prince Albert meeting when they launched their promises. They promised to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to offer agri-bonds. Do you see an agri-bond around, Mr. Speaker? I am looking under my desk and I do not see an agri-bond there. Are there any agri-bonds in Canada? No. I ask the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin to show me his agri-bonds. I ask him to show me his solution to that problem. I guess that is a promise that the Government has not got around to fulfilling yet.

Here is another interesting promise. Catch this one, Mr. Speaker. The Conservatives promised that they would expand agricultural research and development by providing greater assistance to agricultural colleges. In 1985 agricultural research had a budget of $263 million. In the Estimates for 1987 the figure stands at $221 million. I know that Tory mathematics have a curious way of flip-flopping. But I think that even the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin, even that Member who reads Winnipeg Free Press editorials and believes them, might be able to figure out that that is a reduction in agricultural research and development, not greater assistance. He might be able to figure out as well that when we are trying to meet toughened international competition, when we need to develop new crop strains and new products and value-added, where we will find this is in the type of research being done in the agricultural colleges. I ask the Hon. Member to explain to me and to western Canadians why his great Government that cares about agriculture so much has cut $50 million from agricultural research and development. I ask the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin to explain that small inconsistency in the promises.

I could go on and talk about a great many of the other great promises that have not been developed by this great defender of the Government.

Mr. Schellenberger: Go on!

Mr. Axworthy: The fact of the matter is that what the Government is carrying out is a camouflage operation. Let us talk for a moment about what the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) says with great frequency and in great seriousness. He says that his Government is doing all it can on the international front. He says that they are working diligently to bring to the attention of the world agricultural problems. Let us look at that proposition for a moment. Let us look at the proposition as to why the Government of Canada as yet has not put forward as yet its proposals on agricultural negotiation, even though it has had an invitation for over two months from GATT to do so.

A decision was made in Uruguay last fall and the GATT organization issued an invitation as late as last February for participating countries to put forward what their negotiating positions should be, what their priorities would be in agriculture and what they are prepared to deal with in terms of bargaining. If the Government of Canada is so active to show leadership and if it is so prepared to try to give direction, why has it yet been unable to find the wit or ability to put together its proposals to show where we want to go in order to give a message to the rest of the world?

We met with members of the Congressional Agricultural Committee yesterday. We read in the U.S. press that those great friends of the Prime Minister, Mr. Reagan and all the rest of them with whom he has jaw-boned time and time again, the very week we are debating this resolution are putting proposals forward to the U.S. Congress to expand substantially the Export Enhancement Act to apply to all countries and to change the U.S. Farm Bill and the U.S. Trade Bill to give even further powers on agriculture to force us out of the market. If that is the result of the Prime Minister's jaw-boning, then God help us in all of the other negotiations that he is carrying out. I say that because we are getting the reverse of what we want. That is the end result of his great efforts. It is a failure to provide specific proposals and an encouragement to his allies, the Reagan administration in the United States, to include in the new Trade Bill incredibly damaging measures dealing with agriculture and the expansion of the Export Enhancement Act. After all those discussions and negotiations what does our friend, the U.S. President, want to do? He wants to drive it even harder into Canadian agriculture.

One has to ask oneself from time to time what the Government is trying to do. We recognize full well that the drop in international price is a decision being taken in Washington and other places. One of the reasons why this resolution says that we need an immediate announcement for a regular form of income support, a deficiency payment, for western agriculture is that until we get that kind of clear signal we will not let our farmers be pushed out of business by the Americans or the Europeans. Until we get that signal, we will keep on pushing.

While it is essential to provide the necessary cash support to keep our farmers in business, it is also essential that we provide a clear signal to the international marauders and pirates in agricultural trade that we will not be cowed and intimidated by them.

We need an immediate announcement now so that our farmers will be able to obtain whatever credit is necessary in order to continue operating over the next crop year. In order to get the necessary moneys, the lending institutions need this kind of guarantee. As well, it will provide a strong and uncertain message to the Americans and the Europeans that we are not about to be backed off.

The Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board has said that he wants to have a strong international bargaining position, and the best way for him to achieve that is to rise in this House and announce a support system for the western grain producers for the next year, the year after that, and for however long prices are continued to be ratcheted down.

We have to send a strong signal to our competitors in the world markets that we are not going to be put out of business.

Such an announcement by the Minister would go a long way toward convincing these international pirates that it is time they backed off from this craziness and insanity in which they are engaging.

An Hon. Member: What is your policy?

Mr. Axworthy: The Hon. Member wants to know what our policy is. I have just outlined what our policy is. What I have outlined is an important policy to adopt. A second policy direction to take is to embark on the kind of debt restructuring that we have talked about. Our farmers need that kind of major assistance.

The Minister rose in his place and said: "Well, we are only going to crunch 50 people a month". It will be a game of Russian roulette. No one will know which 50 will be chosen. I suppose they will put all of the names in the hat and pull out 50. We will have 6,000 farmers who are more than two years in arrears all living in terror. They will not know from month to month whose name will be chosen from the hat. What a peculiar way of twisting the knife in the backs of these farmers!

An Hon. Member: It will be a knock on the door.

Mr. Axworthy: The fact of the matter is, that particular system has nothing whatever to do with the problem. The problem, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma, has said, is the incredible uncertainty which these farmers face. They are living in a state of never knowing exactly what is going to happen, or to whom.

What we have here is a failure of public policy. What we have here is a failure to put in place a farm policy that is relevant to the conditions we face.

All of the attempts by the Progressive Conservative Members in pulling out the old files and rehashing the old arguments will do nothing to assist in the crisis that our farmers are now facing.

If the members of this Government wish to redeem themselves in the eyes of westerners, they had better not send the Prime Minister out to do another song and dance number in those ballet slippers of his; rather, they need to show that they are prepared to come to grips with the conditions as they exist now, to deal with the problem as it is now.

If they do that, western farmers may have their faith restored in what we in this House of Commons can do, and what this Government can do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Foster: Here is the apologist.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have listened, with interest, to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and all I can say at the outset is that his remarks do provide a fairly accurate reflection of what the Liberal Party is and what it stands for.

An Hon. Member: Nothing.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member chastised the Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) for quoting the Winnipeg Free Press, and he went on to complain about its "bankruptcy of ideas". So perhaps I will quote the Edmonton Journal, which also has something to say about the Liberal Party.

In the April 14 edition, we have the following statement:

> The Grits have a solid policy, Turner said recently. It's just that they haven't "correlated, co-ordinated, communicated, repeated and honed the message."

Well, of course, that is absolutely accurate, because they have nothing to correlate, they have nothing to co-ordinate, they have nothing to communicate. And we have heard nothing further from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry this evening. It is the same old rhetoric that we hear every time he gets up to speak.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry talked about debt restructuring. Where was he in 1981 when the Cabinet of the day, that august Cabinet that was so deeply concerned with the issues and affairs of western Canada, allowed interest rates to rise to such high levels?

The prime rate in 1981 stood at 22.75 per cent. Today, Mr. Speaker, it is 9.25 per cent—a difference of 13.5 percentage points.

Mr. Althouse: You voted with him on that. You voted with him.

Mr. Mazankowski: I thought the Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) had already spoken. I can recall listening to him, and I wish he would give me the courtesy of listening to me. He did not have a heck of a lot to say. If he wants to speak from his seat, perhaps we can, by unanimous consent, give him the opportunity to speak once more.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Althouse: You participated in the interest rate process by voting for the Bank Act. You supported it.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member speaks best from his seat, Mr. Speaker.

In 1987, the rate on farm improvement loans stands at 10.25 per cent; in 1981, the rate was 23.75 per cent.

We now have a Senator travelling around western Canada in his air-conditioned Suburban, pulling a trailer. He is travelling the highways and byways, saying how terrible the conditions are in the agricultural sector.

I can tell you about the disasters that were inflicted upon agriculture when the Liberals formed the Government. This particular individual was the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board in the last Liberal Government, and he did nothing. Now we have "blazing" Hazen Argue going around the countryside trying to drum up political support on the backs of the farmers. He is trying to use the farmers, who are in serious trouble, as a means by which to drum up political support. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, he is not gaining much support, and he certainly is not gaining any credibility for the Liberal Party.

Here we have a communique headed: "Western Liberal Caucus Releases Report on Western Economy". This is the official policy, Mr. Speaker, that was issued by the western Liberal caucus on the western economy, not the policies that are put forth during these emergency debates. And what are they going to do? Well, they propose that a federal-provincial conference on economic union "be convened as the first step in developing an economic blueprint for the West." The communique goes on to say:

> The conference would establish policy priorities for each of the major regions and sectors of the economy including education and research and development; . . .

That is what the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin was referring to, Mr. Speaker, when he quoted the Winnipeg Free Press in respect of this hollow, shallow, empty document, a document that was not even concurred in by the Leader of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Axworthy: Let's see what you will produce. Are you going to reopen the Science Centre?

Mr. Mazankowski: And what else do they propose? This is really a dandy. They are also going to consider efforts—

Mr. Foster: Don't let the polls go to your head.

Mr. Mazankowski: What was that?

Mr. Foster: Don't let the polls go to your head.

Mr. Mazankowski: Polls go up and polls go down. As Mr. Diefenbaker once said, only dogs know what to do with polls.

What else do they propose to do, Mr. Speaker? Another of their proposals is that, by "considering efforts to rationalize the many federal and provincial programs, the federal Government maximizes the use of scarce resources and sends a clear message to both Canadian farmers and to the farmers and agricultural industries of other countries that Canada is committed to remaining in the business of farming".

Well, I can tell you that we have no difficulty with that.

Mr. Axworthy: Then, do it. Do it.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, very clearly, never in the history of this country—

Mr. Axworthy: Announce it right now.

An Hon. Member: Let's hear it. Come on. Let's hear it.

Mr. Mazankowski: —never in the history of this country has so much support been given to the agricultural community. Never before in the history of this country has so much support been given to the agricultural community, both in terms of policy and support, direct and indirect.

Mr. Axworthy: Let's hear it.

Mr. Mazankowski: My hon. friend says "Let's hear it". My hon. friends opposite were huffing and puffing last October about a deficiency payment. They said it would not happen; that it was going to be a loan. And then it was going to bear interest; and then it was going to be an interest-free loan; and then it was going to be shared with the provinces; and then it was going to be this, and then it was going to be that.

They were the most disappointed people in Canada when we said that we were going to pay $1 billion to our farmers, and they still are—and that is what is bothering my hon. friends opposite, Mr. Speaker. That is exactly what is bothering them.

Mr. Foster: So tell us about this crop year.

Mr. Mazankowski: I do not know what my friends opposite know about farming. I know the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board gave them a lesson today. Our farmers are getting their money now, when they need it to put the 1987 crop in. That is what is happening now.

Mr. Axworthy: He is going to have to go back to farming very soon.

Mr. Mazankowski: At least he has something to go back to—which is more than you can say.

Mr. Riis: Not for long. Another year and the farms won't exist.

An Hon. Member: Are you going to go back to selling cars?

Mr. Mazankowski: Certainly—and I am proud of it. It is an honest living.

Mr. Foster: Except no one can afford to buy cars any longer.

• (2240)

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, Mr. Speaker, the NDP—

Mr. Axworthy: You are getting hot under the collar, Don.

Mr. Mazankowski: No, not at all. I have lots of time, Mr. Speaker. I hope you are knocking off the interruptions.

Mr. Prud'homme: We will give you consent, if you want it.

Mr. Thacker: They could not make speeches when they were standing up; now they want to make them when they are sitting down.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is quite clear that the NDP motion was more of a show than something of substance; a couple or three have stuck around for the debate. However, there is very little in terms—

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There has been some reference made to those who are here or not here in the House of Commons.

I guess I just want to point out that fewer than 10 per cent of the entire Tory caucus are present in the House this evening.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) referred specifically to the absence or presence of a Member. On debate, the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: I think the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) put this issue into perspective when he talked about the NDP wanting to maintain artificially high prices established by the Canadian Wheat Board. Of course that is not really supported by the farm community. Most of the things that have been advanced by the NDP are not supported by the farm community.

Mr. Riis: You guys promised agri-bonds.

Mr. Mazankowski: For example, to quote Mr. Wayne Easter—

Mr. Riis: What about Section 31? I remember you guys campaigned for three years on that before the election.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could we listen to the speech of the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister, please.

Mr. Mazankowski: As the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain pointed out, in effect the New Democrats have really been deliberately or unwittingly attacking the Wheat Board. The Wheat Board makes the recommendation for the establishment of the prices. To do otherwise would be certainly in violation of the spirit, if not the intent, of the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

They are asking for a further $1 billion pay-out. However, I should like to refer to the January 8, 1987 edition of The Ottawa Citizen which quoted the NFU president as follows:

> I know the Government believes it's proceeding in the right direction with its $1 billion grain program, but we need a program that actually deals with the real problems we're having, not one that throws x amount of dollars at us.

These people across the way are asking for more money without really looking at the root causes. I will get to the root causes very shortly.

I should like to make another point by referring to the October 30, 1986 edition of The Ottawa Citizen, which reads as follows:

> A past-president of the Canadian Grains Council . . . told delegates that the federal $46.6 million Rural Transition Assistance Program designed to help farmers forced off the land is an example of government policy that honestly looks at the problem of debt-burdened farmers.

Those are the kinds of things that clearly reflect that the policies of the Government are on the right track. There is no question about that.

The Opposition is now charging that thousands of farmers will be put off the land as a result of the actions which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced on April 27. That is absolutely false. It is malicious and it is misleading. If Hon. Members had had the courtesy of at least reading the news release and listening to the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), they would have a clear idea of why this action has been taken.

The moratorium was really beginning to create two classes of farmers in financial difficulty—the FCC farmers who were not facing foreclosure and therefore not applying for assistance through the debt review process, and the non-FCC borrowers who through the debt review process have access to an impartial review of their financial situation.

When the moratorium was put in place, it was put in place until such time as other programs such as the Rural Transition Assistance Program, farm debt review boards, commodity based loans, and shared risk loans, were put in place.

As has been indicated, every farmer who is in difficulty with farm credit will be dealt with on a personal basis, and arrangements will be worked out in a satisfactory manner. This action is not to force farmers off the land. This action is to help keep farmers on the land and to help establish a viable farm unit. That is the point which has been clearly lost, deliberately or perhaps unwittingly; I am not sure.

Our record in agriculture as a Government is clear. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has not, is not, and will not abandon or ignore the farmers of Canada. We recognize, as do all Members, I am sure, that there are some very serious problems particularly in the grains and oil seeds industry. There are difficulties caused by actions beyond our control, but we have responded on several fronts.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry talked about the international front. A year ago, before the Prime Minister left for the Tokyo Summit, he met with the agricultural community and was successful, with the support of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), in bringing agriculture to the top of the agenda at that summit.

Since then there were multilateral trade meetings in Uruguay. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) met with the Fair Traders group in New Zealand where she outlined five basic principles. Perhaps I should put them on record. They read:

Agriculture policies should be designed so as not to adversely affect international trade.

To this end progressively over time:

(1) agriculture policies must become more price responsive;

(2) support should be provided for farmers not farming;

(3) countries should freeze and seek to reduce governmental assistance measures that artificially distort world prices;

(4) countries should not introduce new import barriers not mandated by existing legislation;

(5) these basic principles must be implemented collectively.

Essentially those principles were accepted. Out of that meeting has been arranged a further meeting of the Cairns group which will take place here in Ottawa between May 21 and May 23.

At the present time the Minister for International Trade is in Japan furthering this campaign. I am pleased to report that momentum is building to deal with the crisis in agricultural trade caused by huge export subsidies. It is the only long-term realistic solution, and I think progress is clearly being made.

I should like to refer to the Sunday, April 26 edition of The Edmonton Journal which reads:

Canada, strongly supported by Australia, has championed the cause of countries that have seen their agricultural trade suffer largely due to a farm subsidy battle between the United States and the European Community.

I think that is pretty clear evidence that we are on the right track, and we are making progress.

That is what Mr. Lang believes in. That is what Mr. Turner of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool believes in. That is what Mr. Simpson or the editorial staff of The Globe and Mail believe in. That is what Darryl Kraft, the head of the University of Manitoba believes in. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry knows him. However, he has suggested that that is the right long-term course of action. That will provide the long-term solution.

What do we do in the meantime? We have addressed the input cost question. I just referred to the massive reduction in interest rates, which has been the result of good financial management by the Government. Every time the interest rate goes down by one percentage point, the farmers of Canada save between $130 million and $140 million. If we look at it, it has dropped at least 5.5 percentage points since we assumed office. That is a savings on an annualized basis of something between $600 million and $700 million.

Interest rates are the lowest in 14 years. FCC rates are the lowest in eight years. We removed all fuel taxes, 33.75 cents per gallon.

Those people over there did nothing. They put on fuel taxes. Farm fuel is now nine cents to ten cents per litre in Alberta, that is, 40 cents per gallon.

Do Hon. Members know what it was in February, 1984? Farm fuel was $1.45 per gallon or over a dollar per gallon more than it is today. There were 60 cents worth of taxes on that fuel thanks to the NEP. There were taxes on ammonia of something like $70 per tonne. Freight rates have been reduced.

Mr. Foster: Freight rates are going up by 50 per cent.

Mr. Mazankowski: I said that freight rates have been reduced. They were $7.70 when we came into office. It is about $6 now, and we will see what happens.

Mr. Foster: They are going up.

Mr. Mazankowski: We have to comply with the legislation which the Liberal Party brought in.

Mr. Axworthy: You are the Government. Change it. Act like the Government.

Mr. Mazankowski: We rolled back the freight rates for a period of two years, as we said we would. We are encouraging diversification and broadening the economic base. We are also encouraging new opportunities in agriculture, research and development, demonstration projects, minimum tillage, soil conservation, and new techniques in soil management. Those are all things that are very much a part of our efforts to stabilize, broaden and diversify the western economic base, particularly the agricultural base.

• (2250)

In terms of direct support, Mr. Speaker, something in the order of $3.5 billion will be flowing into the agricultural industry, primarily to the western Canadian economy this year. That is an increase of 58 per cent over last year. When you look at last year's 1986 realized net farm income, it was up 20 per cent over 1985. The 1987 projections are that it will be about the same with the support. As a matter of fact, the Alberta Wheat Pool budget says that 1986 total realized net farm income in Alberta was $788 billion, a remarkable 45 per cent over the 1985 level. In 1987, Statistics Canada projects that the Saskatchewan farm income will be up by 34 per cent over last year. The Alberta farm income, as I said, is about the same. This graph, which was included in the Canadian special grains program, clearly demonstrates that with the $1 billion special pay-out the 1987 farm receipts will be roughly the same as 1986.

Mr. Mayer: That is right.

Mr. Mazankowski: Perhaps that is not something to crow about but at least it does not reflect the kind of dismal situation that some people across the way would suggest.

What else are we doing? The Minister of Agriculture is working very closely with farm groups, and will continue to do so. I noted again that the Hon. Member across the way suggests that unilaterally we should do this, this and this without any consultation with the farmers. We believe that consultation with farmers is very much a part of the success of salvaging this industry and working with it.

I could go on. I just got a letter today from the Canadian Cattlemen's Association to the effect that it will be saving roughly $100 million annually as a result of the action we took to reduce the imports of subsidized beef from the EEC.

Mr. Foster: You backed down on that.

Mr. Mazankowski: There are a number of things that have been done.

We must put this into perspective. This Government inherited a legacy of crippling interest rates, high unemployment, burdensome debt, a huge deficit and a crippled economy.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That is not washing any more, Don.

Mr. Mazankowski: In 1983 farm income was the lowest in 45 years since 1938, down 48 per cent from 1981. Let us look at the rise in bankruptcies. In 1979—that is when we were in office for a short period of time—there were 125 bankruptcies. In 1983 there were 488 bankruptcies, and in 1984 there were 551 bankruptcies, but since September, 1984, bankruptcies have declined—

Mr. Foster: You had a moratorium on.

Mr. Mazankowski: —by 8 per cent to 508 and to 440. They laugh on the other side.

Mr. Axworthy: You are a joke.

Mr. Mazankowski: Because we have addressed the fundamental problems. Members in the Opposition find that a joke.

Mr. Axworthy: There were 837 applications this month alone.

Mr. Mazankowski: We will continue to price and sell aggressively, maintain and increase our market share. We will support our farmers on the international front. We will continue to work with them in reducing input costs. We will continue to work with them in diversifying and broadening the economic base. We will continue to give them direct support, something the opposition Members across the way would not do. The ultimate objective is to restore order and sanity on the international scene. We will continue to work at the international level under the leadership of the Prime Minister, supported by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board, the Minister for International Trade and the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I think it is useful to note that the only time when we discuss agriculture in Canada is when members of the Opposition ask for emergency and special debates on agriculture.

Mr. Mayer: What a bunch of rubbish.

Mr. Riis: We wait month after month, year after year to spend some time debating some new policy, some new Bills to help farmers, to help those food producers. I cannot remember when we have taken two or three days in this House to debate a Bill on agriculture. The only debate, as tonight, is when the Opposition asks the Speaker whether or not he believes that the farm community is in crisis, that there is an emergency situation requiring a special debate.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis) said earlier that there is no problem in the farm community, there is no reason for a special debate tonight, there is no emergency. I would ask him to go out west and visit any prairie province. He should go out through Ontario, Quebec, Atlantic Canada and British Columbia and ask the food producers whether there is a problem in the farm community today. He would have to look long and hard to find a single farmer who would say no, that everything was fine.

That betrays the insensitivity of this Government. It has lost touch with reality. What we have found today, as a result of the last few announcements, is that the Government has abandoned the family farm. This Government has said that the family farm is finished; it is agribusiness and corporate agriculture. The family ranch and the family farm is no longer a viable operation that we are prepared to support.

Mr. Gustafson: That will not sell.

Mr. Riis: That is what he said, Mr. Speaker. That is what they are saying. The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) said, "I was out here last year and said that the price farmers will get for wheat will go down 20 per cent", and then a week ago he said, "This year it will go down another 18 per cent". In the prairie economy men and women can no longer raise grain profitably. They no longer have prices to cover their costs. I speak about this from a personal perspective. My grandfather drove out to the western plains in an oxcart and a car with his family with him mile after mile, hundreds of miles on to the bald Prairie, with prairie wool that deep, Mr. Speaker. The Conservatives laugh at my grandfather who settled the west—

Mr. Mazankowski: They are laughing at you.

Mr. Riis: They are laughing, and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is now laughing and saying that this is a joke. Let me finish my story.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would never want to laugh at the parents or grandparents of anyone. It is the Hon. Member who is a joke.

Mr. Mayer: He is an embarrassment.

Mr. Riis: Let me expand on what the Deputy Prime Minister calls a joke and what the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board calls a joke. My grandfather settled in southern Saskatchewan. His sons and daughters built and expanded that farm. Their sons and daughters built and expanded that farm. Today they are uncertain whether they will be able to continue because of the inaction, in part of this Government. They feel this Government has turned its back on them. The Government has said, "We are no longer interested in a family farm that for three generations has struggled on the plains of southern Saskatchewan".

Let me tell you something else. This past month I have toured my constituency and I have attended three auction sales, all ranches that have been forced out of business. They can no longer continue. On one ranch, the Bar P Ranch, the rancher's health has broken. He had run the ranch for two generations. He has a stress-related health problem because he simply cannot continue with this impossible 200 head cow operation. He can no longer continue and he is selling out. That was one auction sale, Mr. Speaker. I saw men who have worked 20 hours a day for their entire life, rough, tough cow men, standing there with their eyes bleary because they know that it is not the Cartwright family or the Brown family who own the ranch lands but the Bank of Montreal, the Royal Bank of Canada, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. The banks are taking over the country. The banks are taking over the ranch lands of central British Columbia. Today when the questions were put—listen, is the Minister now prepared to meet with the bankers to see what kind of a situation we can arrange? The Minister said he was not prepared to do that and was not even interested. It is time we had a Government in place that put farmers rather than bankers first. That is not what we are experiencing at the moment.

One might ask why the Minister would say that. I remember when the Hon. Member for Lethbridge (Mr. Thacker) was on this side of the House. For two or three years before the last election, he kept rising to say that when his Party governed, there would be agri-bonds, agri-bonds would save the day and enable the farmers to continue. As a matter of fact, I said that I thought that the idea of agri-bonds was a good one. The then Prime Minister who was running for re-election also said that he would put agri-bonds in place if his Party was in power. Do you see any agri-bonds here today, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Holtmann: No, you don't.

Mr. Riis: We do not see any agri-bonds today because the Conservatives have betrayed the people of Canada. They have gone back on the promises they made in western Canada while the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was touring the food-producing areas of western Canada.

Then there was another idea, an idea for a farm creditors' arrangements Act, an Act introduced during the 1930s and 1940s to stave off the banks from foreclosing on quarter-sections containing homesteads. I vividly remember Members opposite saying when they were in Opposition that they would bring in a new version of the farm creditors' arrangements Act when they were elected so that they could keep the bank away from the doors of farmers and ranchers. Where is it? There has been not a word, not a murmur, not a phrase. They have abandoned it. Instead, they brought in a toothless Debt Review Board that quite frankly is a joke in the agricultural community.

The Conservatives did take a step in the right direction when they placed a moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures. At that time, 673 farms that were on the brink of bankruptcy were saved. However, rather than developing programs to assist those hard-pressed food producers, 19 months later when the situation is worse than ever, what has the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced? He has announced that he is lifting the moratorium, throwing these people to the wolves, opening them up to the banks. What would you do, Mr. Speaker, if you were a banker and there were all of these farmers who were overdrawn on their accounts?

When representatives of the Farm Credit Corporation appeared before the Agriculture Committee just a few weeks ago, they said that within their jurisdiction, there were 13,680 farms that they considered to be insolvent. There were a further 53,010 farms with serious, major, critical cash flow problems. There were 6,000 borrowers who were more than two years in arrears and more than 15,000 borrowers with serious arrears problems. Those are only Farm Credit Corporation borrowers. That is a small part of the agricultural community. We are talking about hundreds and hundreds of farms that are bankrupt and have now been abandoned by the Farm Credit Corporation. On top of that, there are thousands and thousands of farmers across Canada who will go bankrupt unless some action is taken but the Government says that there is nothing it will do now, it will back away from all of this.

I will continue to describe my visits to the various auctions. I attended a second auction only two weeks ago. I feel quite choked up when I vividly recall that evening. A family that had been on the land for three generations had experienced severe economic difficulties through no fault of its own. This family experienced difficulty because of high fuel costs, high fertilizer costs, high barbed wire costs, high costs right across the board. Farm credit rates were very high—

Mr. Holtmann: Barbed wire?

Mr. Riis: Oh, they laugh. The Conservatives sit here and laugh.

Mr. Holtmann: Do you know what barbed wire is? Barbed wire. You're a haywire farmer.

Mr. Riis: The Conservatives sit here and laugh at these stories. I want the people of Canada to know—

Mr. Holtmann: Haywire is what you're talking about.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for calling something barbed wire.

Mr. Blaikie: Ranchers use barbed wire, Felix.

Mr. Holtmann: They don't use barbed wire but Bill Blaikie wouldn't know that if his life depended on it.

Mr. Orlikow: Ignore him because he won't be here after the next election.

Mr. Riis: As my friend from Winnipeg says, I can ignore my hon. friend because his life here is very, very short.

Mr. Holtmann: It's not barbed wire. I'm a farmer, buddy.

Mr. Riis: Ranchers use barbed wire. Forget it, Mr. Speaker. It is irrelevant.

Mr. Holtmann: Pack it in with the barbed wire. You're a haywire outfit.

Mr. Riis: I do not want to get angry tonight.

Mr. Benjamin: Go ahead, get angry.

Mr. Riis: As they are laughing, I want to continue because the gentleman to whom I was referring, a cattleman, had lost his ranch after three generations. He lost his family. His wife and three children had left because of the severe economic problems. He was standing there while all of his household equipment went out. Even his personal guitar was sold for $25 or $30.

Mr. Thacker: Are you opposed to the transition program?

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member for Lethbridge is talking about the big program the Conservatives brought in, the one program that is designed to help farmers get out of farming. Rather than have programs designed to assist farmers to get out of the business, we say it is time we started to see programs introduced in the House of Commons designed to put people back into farming. Put them back on the land.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You've got no will over there, that's your problem. You haven't thought it out. You've got no programs.

Mr. Riis: Ten days ago, I attended another auction. At that auction, I met a family whose youngest son had committed suicide as a result of severe difficulties in the family and financial problems.

Then I had a chat with the auctioneer at that auction. I told him that this was one of the worst months I had experienced, visiting the various ranch and farm communities in my constituency. I told him that these people had been forced off their land. He told me that he is an auctioneer but his father was a cattleman and he was born on a ranch. He said that his ranch went bankrupt and now he is an auctioneer but he would rather be a cowboy. That is the situation in parts of western Canada. That is what is happening to my own family in southern Saskatchewan. They are being forced off the land.

We say that there is an emergency here. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), who introduced the motion asking for a special debate, reminded us of the various problems farmers are facing. He told us that the Ontario Government did a study in 1985 and found that 38 per cent of all farm fatalities occurred as a result of suicide. That does not happen in any other sector of the economy.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture did a study and released its results a few months ago. It found that 80 per cent of farmers suffer from stress and stress-related illnesses.

We are sitting here waiting week after week. We ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board where the programs are. We ask them where the initiatives are. Where is the leadership to do something for our food producers? We do not get new programs. We do not see Bills brought into the House. We hear announcements like the one taking the moratorium off Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures. We hear the announcement that the price received by grain producers will be 18 per cent lower than it was last year. That is an abandonment of the family farm.

Other countries consider the family farm to be paramount. They believe that the family farm is a productive unit that must be kept in place and retained as a viable operation. My friend and colleague from Yorkton—Melville brought in a Bill for parity pricing so that food producers would be able to receive prices for what they raise on their farms and ranches that would at least meet the bare cost of running their operations. Did the Government support that? No, it did not.

Then we called for agri-bonds. There is no support for that. We called for a Debt Review Board with some teeth but got no support from the Government. We now call for a support package for the western grain producers and we hear no comment. How can a grain producer plan in the spring of the year for his future, for the months and years ahead, when the Government refuses to say whether or not it will bring in a package of support that will enable him to continue on as a farmer in western Canada? It is impossible.

Farmers in western Canada sit in coffee shops and over the kitchen table discussing whether or not they should plant this year and if they do what they should plant because there is no security, no indication what the Government plans to do, no indication of any kind of support. Then they read the newspaper that same day and find that the Prime Minister has dipped into the Progressive Conservative re-election fund to the tune of $308,000 to build in part special cupboards for his 85 pairs of shoes and 100 or so pairs of shoes for his wife. People wonder if this individual understands the problems in western Canada. Can he begin for a moment to understand the incredible duress and stress that western producers are experiencing these days? No, he cannot.

We will probably see tomorrow that the Bill introduced for discussion will deal with the abolition of Canagrex. The Government is still trying to get rid of Canagrex, a corporation that was out opening up new markets and new opportunities for Canadian farmers.

Mr. Holtmann: What did it do?

Mr. Riis: I will tell the Hon. Member what it did. With a very limited budget it was finding all kinds of new market opportunities.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Holtmann: It did not find anything.

Mr. Riis: It was going around the world identifying export opportunities for our farmers.

Mr. Holtmann: Don't give me garbage like that.

Mr. Riis: We have respect for our farmers. We believe in them. We believe in the family farm. It is time the Hon. Member believed in the family farm and family ranch and got away from supporting corporate agriculture. What is wrong with the family farm or the family ranch? We in the NDP support them. Yet the Bills we debate on agriculture deal with how to get out of marketing our products.

Times must change. As the evening wears on my colleagues are going to be laying out a whole set of proposals and solutions. I suggested agri-bonds because you promised agri-bonds and you reneged on that promise. I referred to a Debt Review Board with teeth which you promised and you reneged on it. I referred to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, or a version thereof, which you promised and which you have reneged on.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): We never promised that.

Mr. Riis: What on earth have you delivered on?

To allow the debate to continue to the fullest extent so that all Hon. Members who have positive, creative solutions to the problems faced by Canadian food producers, and pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(a), I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

> That this House continue to sit past twelve o'clock for the purpose of continuing debate on this very important matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I find the motion in order.

Will those Members who object to the motion please rise in their places?

No one having risen, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is deemed to have been adopted.

Resuming debate.

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I wish that as a Member from Ontario I could say I was pleased to participate in this debate tonight. Unfortunately I cannot express that sentiment. I have listened with great chagrin to the theatre across the floor, particularly from the last speaker for the NDP, and it makes me sad to think that we have people in this House who can make fun of so serious a problem.

Agriculture is perhaps facing its most serious time since the 1930s. It is perhaps even more serious than that. What really bothers me is the absolute lack of knowledge on the part of some Members opposite concerning what is actually happening in agricultural communities. In my area the crops are going in. They are going in under great difficulty, but they are going in. Crops will go in across western Canada; under great difficulty but they will go in. Farmers are a resilient group, always have been and will continue to be in the future.

Members from downtown Brantford and downtown Sault Ste. Marie who understand so much about basic agriculture have all these wonderful plans for agriculture. We just heard the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) talk about Canagrex, that great institution put in place by the former Liberal Government, supported by the NDP. It is supposed to have sold millions of dollars worth of commodities. It did not sell one thing. Not one thing.

Then we have the NDP proposing that we move to parity pricing. To do that would require that 50 per cent of the farmers now on the land go out of business. I want to ask Members opposite which of them are going to be prepared to leave the land? I have not heard from any volunteers.

Mr. Althouse: How do you figure that?

Mr. Fraleigh: Because of the simple fact that the only way you can implement parity pricing is to have production controls. What are you going to do with 90 per cent of the wheat produced across the Prairies? Feed it to the sparrows?

The Government will support our agricultural industry as it has in the past and will in the future. We are hearing all of this doom and gloom and how they want the Government to make an announcement right now about what financial support it will give to agriculture in the coming year. I think the farm community is convinced that the Government has shown it has some sympathy for the plight of the agricultural community. We are unfortunately having to place government funds in the hands of farmers to allow them to put their crop in this year.

There has been a great deal of debate tonight on the lifting of the FCC moratorium, and all kinds of allegations have been made about the great flood of foreclosures which will occur. I suggest that there will not be a great flood of foreclosures. If anyone would like to debate that point I would be more than pleased to do so.

The NDP and Liberals have asked what this Government has done for agriculture. They singled out one item from the Prince Albert statement which the Government has not delivered on so far. I want to take a minute and expand on some of the reasons for not delivering on that proposal. The Government formed a joint committee of the Standing Committee on Agriculture and the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs to review the three financial problems encompassed in the 16 points made in Prince Albert.

Contrary to what the Liberals or the NDP might have done, we went out and consulted with the farm community. The farm community told us that they did not want Section 31 to be monkeyed with at the present time and we listened. A joint committee went to the United States to review their agri-bond program and we came back with all-Party agreement that there was too much slippage in such a program, that the benefits were going to the banks and investors rather than to the farm community.

The Opposition has asked what the Government has done.

Mr. Foster: No, what it's going to do.

Mr. Fraleigh: I will tell you some of the things that we have done, are doing, and will continue to do. After much dillying and dallying by the Minister of Agriculture under the Liberal Government the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced a long-range five-year dairy program for which the industry had been asking for six years. After a great deal of negotiation with the egg-hatching industry, we implemented a national agency for that group. In consultation with the farmers we implemented a program which the farm community wanted.

Since it was brought up by the Opposition, I will take a minute to review the 16-point agricultural policy which was announced at Prince Albert. I want to point out for their edification some of the things which were promised and carried out. We said we would remove the capital gains tax for farmers and we did. We gave the farm community a $500,000 capital gains exemption effective immediately. We said we would remove the sales tax on farm fuels and we did it.

Mr. Foster: But you put it back on.

Mr. Fraleigh: We did not put it back on at all.

Mr. Foster: Yes, you did. In September, 1985, you put it back on.

Mr. Fraleigh: The Member wanted to know what we are doing now and I am telling him what we are doing now. There is no federal tax on farm fuels. We said we would change the Western Grain Stabilization Act and we did. We said we would change the Western Grain Transportation Act to remove the volume cap and freeze the rate. We did.

We promised to increase sales and expand our markets for grain. In the past year, in perhaps the most depressed period for grain that the world has seen since the 1930s, Canada increased its share of the world market. I fully understand that we did it at a loss, but we did maintain those markets and they will be there when grain markets turn around. We said we would allow dual labelling with both metric and Imperial on chemicals and we did it. We said we would bring forth a new red meat stabilization program and we did.

I would like to stop for a minute, Mr. Speaker, and expand on that particular program. There has been a tremendous take-up in both the cattle and hog industries of the tripartite stabilization program. We have gone through a reasonably buoyant time in both of those sectors. A kitty is being built for those farmers to draw on in times of depressed prices.

We promised to reduce the flow of EEC beef and we did it. We said we would establish farm debt review boards and we did that. We said we would impose a moratorium on branch line abandonment until all options and alternatives could be considered and we did that too.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that of 16 major policy initiatives promised by the Government, 14 have already been delivered upon and serious consideration is being given to methods to address the other two. That is not a bad record. It has been suggested by members of the opposition Parties, particularly the Liberals, that our agricultural policy has no substance.

I am not going to repeat all of the remarks that were made a couple of months ago after the introduction of the Liberal policy for western Canada. I am sure most Members in this House have read them all. However, the major response from western Canada was that there was absolutely no substance to any of those recommendations. It is a sad day for agriculture when it must depend upon the Government for hand-outs, but that is the reality of life. The Government has committed itself to support the agriculture community in the future and we intend to live up to those commitments.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the evening is now getting late and there are still several Members who wish to speak on this emergency debate on the subject of the crisis on the farm front today which was forced on the House by the New Democratic Party. This crisis has not developed only in the last few weeks or months. Over the last several years we have seen the financial position of the farmers of Canada deteriorating, at first slowly and, in more recent times, rather quickly.

I should begin this evening by stating that in this debate I will speak primarily about farmers in my constituency in central Canada. However, farmers right across the country are suffering today as a result of poorly thought out government programs, world market forces, and the inability of successive Governments to respond to those world market forces.

I recall talking, not long ago, to a Conservative Member of Parliament from Westminster who was visiting Ottawa. I asked him why the British farmer today is doing quite well relative to the situation which had obtained in the United Kingdom prior to its entry into the EEC. He said that the British farmer is better off today than it was at that time because the Government made a conscious philosophical decision to preserve British farms. It was a Government's conscious, philosophical decision rather than an economic one. It was a commitment that farms in the United Kingdom were worth preserving.

After hearing him say that, I could not help but think that the major problem in this country is that we do not have a Government in Ottawa, nor did we have one prior to 1984, which was consciously prepared to make the philosophical decision that the family farm was worth preserving. Unless and until we have a national farm policy, the basic premise of which is that the family farm is a viable, worthwhile economic union and that the rural way of life must be preserved, we will not be able to tackle the day-to-day financial and economic problems which plague that sector of the economy. Once the basic philosophic decision is made, the solutions will begin to flow from that basic decision. The fact that we have not yet arrived at that point is what is so deplorable about the reason behind this debate tonight.

I am convinced that if we had a rational national farm policy in this country to preserve the family farm, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) would not have announced the lifting of the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loan repayments a few days ago. It would have been logically contrary to a national farm policy because he would have realized that lifting that moratorium would injure perhaps anywhere from 50 farms a month to 600 or 6,000 farms a year.

Mr. Fraleigh: What would you have done?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It would not have been government policy and he would not have made that statement. He would have convened the best minds in the farm community to try to work out other alternatives. I am certain that if the will was there and the philosophical national farm policy existed, in principle, the financial solutions would have been forthcoming.

This evening we are not just debating a financial crisis on the farm front. We may very well be debating the end of the family farm as an institution in this country. I am not suggesting that farmers will go into bankruptcy in the near future. I am saying that this might very well be a watershed week in the history of family farming in this country.

From now on, an increasing number of farmers will be of the belief that Ottawa does not care and is casting them adrift at the darkest moment of their economic crisis. They will believe that Ottawa is telling them that they must pay up or go out of business.

This will first have a ripple effect that I predict will become somewhat of a tidal wave in Canada, under which people will finally give up. How much longer can we in Ottawa expect the resilience, to use the words that were mentioned by the Member opposite, the faith and determination of our farming communities—

An Hon. Member: Don't worry about us, we will manage all right.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): —to keep the family farm alive? I do not think we can expect that to continue much longer.

The European Economic Community knows how to look after its farmers. I am not talking about subsidies but about breaking into new markets and selling their surplus products as well as subsidizing the farmers. The EEC has a commitment to maintain the family farm as well as farm and food production in western Europe.

Let us consider the United States, that bastion of free enterprise that philosophically does not believe in interfering in the market-place yet chastises us every time we do so. The Americans introduced their American Farm Bill, which is contrary to their philosophy, in order to protect their farmers against the EEC.

What is the federal Government doing? I believe it is in the process of providing $1.3 billion or $1.4 billion. While I am not arguing against that or suggesting that the Government is doing nothing, I am saying that in the global sense of the financial crisis facing farmers it is only a stop-gap solution. It is not a long-term solution or policy.

Mr. Fraleigh: What is a long-term solution?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): The farming problem in this country—

Mr. Gottselig: Tell us about it. Give us your answer.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Stop-gap solutions are discouraging to farmers. They do not know whether they will have a reasonable income in order to continue. They go from seeding to harvest, and back to seeding without knowing what will happen in six months or a year.

Is it any wonder that farmers who are interviewed on television almost every night are saying that they will not seed 50, 100 or 200 acres this year because it will not pay them to do so? They ask: "Why should I go out to work on the field when I know that I will come up a net loser on it"?

Mr. Gustafson: You find that farmer and let us know.

An Hon. Member: Only the socialists are saying that.

Mr. Gustafson: You find that farmer and let us know.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I have been in the House many years and know that at this particular time of the night it is very easy to heckle. I do it from this side and Members do it on the government side.

As I look around the House, most of the Members in the House right now represent ridings in which there are many grain growers. I am not so certain that they are taking this debate all that seriously, and they should be. They should be telling the two Ministers responsible for agriculture in this country what they believe the solutions are for their farmers in their constituencies. I have yet to hear anything in a speech tonight that would indicate that they have any solutions or answers to the farm problems.

Mr. Gottselig: Let's hear yours.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): A couple of months ago I convened a farm forum in my constituency. We invited various farm producer groups to make representations in the morning, and 13 different producer groups came to present their briefs. In the afternoon the meeting was open to individual farmers. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and the Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), who are farmers, were also in attendance. I am not a farmer, but I helped to provide the forum for the farmers in my constituency to come and be heard.

Mr. Mayer: Why did you not ask me? I am a farmer. Why did you not ask me?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You are welcome any time, Charlie, to come to Brant and tell the farmers what wonderful things you are doing for them. I will not be responsible for your safety when you leave.

Mr. Mayer: I will be happy to come.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): But I do not want to be responsible for what may happen to you. Consider it an open invitation to come to Brant any time you want, but don't say that I personally invited you because I do not want to be part of something rather unsavoury that might happen.

Mr. Mayer: You are not going to invite me?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Contrary to what you guys think over there, you are not quite as popular as you think on the farm front today. I know what is causing you to be nervous. I know what is causing you to be upset. However, nothing is coming from it. Farmers are going bankrupt day in and day out and all we hear are speeches from the Ministers. All we see are stop-gap measures.

The Hon. Minister was not in the House when I opened my remarks.

Mr. Mayer: I heard what you said.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): The problem is that you have not established a raison d'être, a philosophical reason for maintaining the family farm. If you can devise a national policy you will probably find the answers.

Mr. Mayer: You did not listen to my speech.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Our meeting was a success in terms of receiving much input from very concerned farmers. I want to stress that this meeting was totally non-partisan and not made up of members of any political party.

Mr. Mayer: Why did you not invite me if it was non-partisan?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I want to tell the Minister about some of their major concerns. I am not only talking about the lifting of a moratorium on debt, which is a major critical issue at this time, but there are many very difficult, complex problems facing the farm community today not just in southern Ontario or my riding of Brant, but right across the country. In that list we have, for example—and this will come as no surprise to the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board—low commodity prices, high production costs, debt, land values, depreciation or erosion, short term aid, long term solutions and the lack of them, marketing, free trade and political will.

• (2340)

Mr. Mayer: Cost of machinery.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): The farmers could pay for Massey Ferguson combines when farmers were making a decent living. They could afford those combines. They cannot afford them today because they are not making any money. That is one problem.

With respect to low commodity prices, and virtually everyone tonight has mentioned this as a major problem, obviously there has to be some kind of guaranteed assistance in the short term. The American Farm Bill is helping its farmers. The EEC is subsidizing its farmers. Are we going to sit back and let our farmers go out of business because the Conservative Government is opposed to some kind of subsidization which is guaranteed to farmers for, say, two, three or four years, not just every six months or from seeding to harvest?

We should be telling the farmers that we are going to guarantee them a reasonable return on their investment and hard work for the next five years, if need be, in order to give them a breathing space so that they can plan ahead instead of thinking: "Well, this may help me this growing year, but God knows where I will be next year".

With respect to high production costs, farmers in my riding today are receiving less today for a bushel of corn than they were in, I believe, 1975 or 1977. Yet their production costs go up every year. I may be wrong but I think they are something like seven-fold higher than they were in 1975. That is a lot. It may be five-fold, but the point is that production costs have gone up immensely and prices have gone down. I would like to know what small city industrialist who employs perhaps 15 or 20 people would stay in business under those conditions. But a business in the city can perhaps get out of one line and move into another line which is more productive. What can a farmer do? Can he give up the rural life, give up his traditions?

I talked to young farmers in my constituency and they feel embarrassed. I am sure that is true across the country. Our farmers are among the best trained farmers in the world. We have a sign on a farm gate in my constituency which says "Century farm". It was a project, I believe, of one of the young farm organizations in Ontario. Young farmers feel personally ashamed that they are getting deeper and deeper into debt and can see nothing but bankruptcy at the end, when their grandfather, greatgrandfather, and in some cases their great greatgrandfather, going back to the 1840s and 1850s, first started farming on that parcel of land. It is easy for us to say that they should not feel personally guilty but they do. That is what young farmers are like.

It would be different if the situation were as it was in the late 1950s when a lot of farmers refused to modernize, to study and to improve their ability to farm. But today some of the best farmers are going bankrupt. Is it true in city industry that the best industries are going under? I do not think so. I think the industries which are going under in our cities today, certainly in southern Ontario where the urban economy is basically booming in the so-called "golden horseshoe", are seen as very poor businessmen, incompetent in many cases. But in farming it is the best farmers who are going deeper into debt and are staring bankruptcy in the face.

The other problem, of course, is debt, and that is what this debate is all about. I would like to ask the Minister, who is here, why, in God's name, did the Government decide at the end of last week to lift the moratorium? Why now? Was it pressure from the banks so that they could then go into lockstep right behind? Was it to give them further justification to pull the rug out from under their debtors?

Mr. Mayer: What has that got to do with the banks? It has nothing to do with the banks.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): The farmers are beginning to wonder whether or not the Government was pressured by the banks into making this move.

Mr. Mayer: It has nothing to do with the banks whatsoever.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Well, many farmers are beginning to doubt that. Many farmers are saying that perhaps the Government knuckled under to the banks and made the first move. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is saying he is not getting his message across. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is saying that one of the reasons the Government is doing so poorly in the polls is that it is not selling its programs to the people. It is not informing the people. Perhaps the Government had better start doing that because the farmers in my constituency, generally speaking, are saying to me it is the banks which are probably pushing the Government into lifting the moratorium. If the banks are not, the Minister had better go down there and tell those farmers the true story.

I find it depressingly agonizing to participate in this kind of debate. I have been involved in debates like this before in this House, in my constituency and in other parts of Canada. We are dealing with some of the best farmers in the world. I am not exaggerating when I say that the suicide rate is 12 times the national rate by occupation. Something is obviously wrong. The incidence of nervous breakdowns, mental illness and emotional stress is highest amongst farmers, farmers' wives and their children. Something has to be done and it has to be done soon.

Let me end by simply saying that the solution to preserving the family farm in this country is not to fund its demise. It is not to pass on money to farmers so that they can get out of farming. My God, how hypocritical can a policy be? It is argued on the one hand that we want to preserve the family farm and on the other hand the Government is prepared to give them money to get out of farming. That is the national disgrace which we are debating tonight.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I see that Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark), the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) and the Hon.

Member for Lambton—Middlesex (Mr. Fraleigh) seem to be surprised to see a Montreal Member of Parliament participating in the debate. Even my esteemed colleague who just spoke, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), said: "You, Marcel, are not going to participate in this debate?" Well, yes, I am, and very briefly. It may surprise a lot of people but it is for the Canadians who are watching us from across Canada. It is 10 minutes to 12 o'clock at night in Ottawa and in Vancouver it is 10 minutes to 9 o'clock.

I will try very briefly, if I could get your attention, Mr. Speaker, and that of my friend and esteemed colleague, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), to explain to Canadians what is going on and I will do that a little in French so I can talk especially to those who understand French and try to get their sympathy and understanding for the plight of people in Canada who at the moment are going through tough times.

I am not going to be partisan because I am not familiar enough with the subject of the western economy. My colleague would be right in correcting me if I were to be wrong in my facts and figures.

[Translation]

But when I see, Mr. Speaker, that the price of grain was and—

• (2350)

[English]

I do not mind being corrected by my colleague if I happen to make an error. If I do make an error I will admit it right away. What I want to say will still make sense. But if I make a mistake I ask my colleagues, especially Members opposite from Brandon—Souris, Moose Jaw and Lambton—Middlesex, and my esteemed colleague the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Gustafson), a long-time friend if I may say so, to correct my figures. What I do see is that if it is true that in—

—in 1984, the price of wheat was about $170, in 1985, it was around $160, and in 1986, it was around $130, and in 1987, we have just heard it will be around $110, it doesn't take an expert to realize that we have a major problem here, and that there are Canadians in one part of this country who are suffering the tragic effects of an economic was being fought by the United States and the Common Market. Canadians have been caught in the middle.

I just want to ask the people of Quebec to stop and consider the tremendous problems facing Canadians in western Canada.

I make no apology for speaking here tonight because Quebecers, even if many of us have now become urbanized, do not have to go back very far in their history to discover a past that is firmly rooted in the rural communities of their province.

[English]

I for one could claim to be a Montrealer, that is true. However, my grandfather and all of my uncles and cousins in Two Mountains are all farmers. As I was saying, we do not need to go far back in Quebec society to find very strong attachments to the rural life. It should be understood by Quebecers especially that there is an immense problem in western Canada at the moment. I imagine that it is not easy for the Government to cope with it. It is for that reason I want to have my remarks on the record, even if they are brief.

I made some notes while one of my colleagues was speaking. I wish to request in the strongest possible terms that the Government give a commitment now to save the family farm and the entire rural life of the country.

The lifting of the moratorium on loan repayments announced by the Government and the fact that it will now start foreclosing on thousands of farm loans causes great distress. There is no doubt about that. We have to understand the family concept. We have to understand what it means for someone who, suddenly, because of outside forces, finds himself in an immense difficulty. I do not necessarily blame the Government for this. I think it is the duty of all Canadians to follow closely the events that are taking place.

As a Canadian I do not apologize for taking the floor at this time. As I said in French, I am not an expert on the western grain economy. However, I want to have the same version in both languages. It is too easy to go from one to the other and not to say exactly the same thing.

People will probably say that here I go again on my Canadian trip. However, to me, that is the price that we pay when we are Canadians. Sometimes it is the Maritimes that suffer. When that happens western Canadians have to show generosity. Sometimes it is central Canada that is freezing. It is not good for Canada to hear people from western Canada say: "Let them freeze in the East". When the West is suffering it is not in the good interests of Canada to say: "I am from Quebec and $1 billion last year is too much and maybe another billion this year is too much". That limits the scope of what Canada should be for all of us.

We are all in this boat as one, supporting each other. That is the strength of Canada. That is why many of my colleagues and I said during the famous debate that took place some years ago in the Province of Quebec when some Quebecers wanted to pursue their future in another way, probably by moving out of Canada and having their own country, that the beauty of Canada, with a small population of 25 million, is in helping each other. We must understand that when there is a rough time in one part of Canada we should all be interested in the good of each other. It is late, I realize that, and when it gets to be this time my English leaves me, but —in French, I would like to state that we must understand there is now a tremendous tragedy in western Canada. And I know Quebecers ask that question often enough. I see my esteemed colleague, the new Member, and he knows there is often a tendency to say in Quebec: The Canadian Government always looks after western farmers, which always find themselves in a tight spot, and it always gives them a lot of money. But it must be added that the money that comes back to Canada brings a lot to Canadians from coast-to-coast. And this is why I believe we should unite in these difficult moments.

[English]

We have in these difficult times to get together and sacrifice. Some people in one part of Canada have to sacrifice so that other people in the rest of Canada can survive. Of course it will be an immense tragedy for someone like me who is still very attached to the rural farming area.

I do not know if I said it in French or English but it is well known in Quebec that my family comes from rural places in Quebec. I am very proud of that. I do not see why people should not repeat such a thing in public. I have learned a lot about the attachment to the earth and the values that one sometimes finds more in rural communities than in urban communities. For that reason, and for that reason alone, I want to say to the Government that I am positive that it will have the entire support of our Party in the decision, as difficult as it may be, that it must take in the future.

Of course the Government will have to find the money to carry out its decision. In finding the money it will help our rural communities to survive. It will keep what is so precious in Canada. I do not see that because I am from Montreal I should remain silent. I do not see why I should not show to the rest of Canada my attachment to rural communities and to the fact that it is a duty of all Canadians to support each other.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Shame, shame! What have you done for them?

Mr. Prud'homme: Is the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) saying "Shame"? Perhaps he would like to stand up. If he says that what I say is shameful I do not know on whom. Is it shame on him or on whom?

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): What did you do for westerners?

Mr. Prud'homme: Perhaps the Hon. Member will make his own speech in a minute—

[Translation]

Let me say it in French: I certainly have no wish to allow myself to be let by the Hon. Member, because the tone would then be different. He knows it very well. I am simply trying . . . I have been provoked by a Conservative Member, a newcomer. If I wanted to be—

• (0000)

I do not wish to be unkind. Perhaps I should not attach too much importance to what he has said. It is not my habit to be unkind. However, if necessary, I shall indeed be so.

It is midnight now in Ottawa, and I would ask my hon. friend opposite to remain calm. I am merely trying to be helpful. If you do not wish me to be helpful, I can become viciously partisan—in which event I would be unhappy, because I do not think I would have contributed in any way to solving a very difficult situation across Canada.

I shall conclude my remarks in the French language to ensure that my explanation is accurately on the record.

If the Government provides $1 billion in aid for the grain farmers of western Canada, that is something that will have to be explained in other parts of Canada. Such an aid package might lead to further requests for assistance. The shoe and textile industries in the Province of Quebec are in need of assistance and protection.

One of the strengths of Canada is that we do help each other. Without that kind of understanding, Canada would have no raison d'être.

Therefore, I once again make a plea—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: I must admit that you are really unpleasant. If we want to have a serious debate and the Hon. Member continues to be that unpleasant, that is not the tone I like to use in this House. But each time the Hon. Member seems incapable of holding back, and I am referring to a Conservative Member I would prefer not to name, to make it less difficult for him to get re-elected in his area. But I find him really unpleasant, I must say, for someone who is still in this House until midnight. Anyway, Mr. Speaker, maybe with the passage of time he will learn that on occasion we can hold non-partisan debates.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I feel you are showing a lot of courage to remain with us at such a late hour, and I feel you are being very patient. But you recognize, as I do, the significance of this debate, for you and I have deep roots in Quebec, a Quebec on the move and which remembers. In Quebec, our motto is: I remember.

Well, I should like people from western Canada to continue to remember that they exist and that if we do not come to their rescue and help them through these very difficult times, Canada as a whole will suffer. It is necessary to explain that to Quebecers. All Canadians will suffer if we do not help our fellow citizens from western Canada who are having a very hard time. I hope the Hon. Member who has now decided to keep quiet will understand that this is the right tone to use in this debate, which is being held under very difficult conditions.

I thank you for listening to me and I urge again the Government to do everything humanly possible to help these farmers who are experiencing extreme difficulties; the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party will do their duty be supporting any action which the Government may announce, but we hope that such action will be announced very shortly.

[English]

I believe my young friend opposite is the Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Harvey). I think that is the case. I do not wish to accuse wrongly someone who is absent.

An Hon. Member: He is the Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté).

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: —the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) understands that that is what makes Canada beautiful. Yes, we are asking you to co-operate with us. Tomorrow morning, you will hold a caucus meeting just as we shall. Well, join our efforts. We want to tell you to go ahead, that we will not fight you. But go ahead, tomorrow morning, stand up in your caucus and say: We are Canadians from a different region.

[English]

I will say it in the French language. Were I to make these remarks in the English language, the French language Members would have difficulty following the debate.

I do it in French. Stand up tomorrow morning and tell my friend and colleague the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

[English]

On this issue, I am going to stand up for you, and when the time comes that we need your support, I shall expect you to give it. I hope you can see where I am going. When we ask for your support on a matter that is important to us, be it on the question of the Constitution or other important matter, we will be asking for your support.

At the meeting to take place on Thursday next, my province will be requesting certain changes to the Constitution. I purposely do not use the word "demand".

While those changes may not be too popular in the rest of Canada, we will ask you to try to understand our feelings on it and provide us with your support.

While issues involving the Constitution and the need for aid to western grain farmers may not on their face appear to be related, they are in fact related in the sense of the give and take that Canada is all about.

You can count on my support in respect of any action you take on this issue. While it may not be popular in my province, I shall go about my province explaining to its citizens the importance of helping each other out.

• (0010)

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, obviously I am very surprised that my honourable colleague from Saint-Denis, a city dweller from Montreal, has come out this evening to speak on the subject of agriculture on behalf of the Liberal Party. Judging from what we have seen this evening, particularly from the NDP and from certain Liberals, it seems that just about anyone can stand up and say just about anything regarding agriculture. You know, Mr. Speaker, when I heard my colleague from Saint-Denis speak about the national scope of this issue and use well-known expressions such as mosaïc and from coast-to-coast and speak about the importance of Canadian unity, I began to wonder why our predecessors, Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Turner, did not appoint him Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. Had he in fact been appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, we would certainly not, in my opinion, knowing the Member for Saint-Denis as well as I do, have encountered some of the problems we have had with agriculture in recent years.

Mr. Speaker, when my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), began his speech, he quoted approximate figures, from 100 to 160, in describing a real problem faced by farmers, particularly by grain producers. However, he is going a little too far by claiming in a round-about way that these problems are due to the Progressive Conservative government's failure to take action.

Mr. Prud'homme: I never claimed any such thing!

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Because, Mr. Speaker, if we look at this whole issue objectively, to use the words of my colleague from Saint-Denis, whom I would like to congratulate in being the only opposition Member in attendance, he is the only Member from Quebec to have spoken out on this matter. Perhaps he will be joined by his colleagues later.

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Hon. Member has a speech to make and I will stay to hear it. However, he knows very well that it is not a parliamentary custom to reveal who is or is not in the House and who has or has not participated in a debate. Indeed, this is a useless point to debate since I could say that there is not one single Minister seated in the front row benches. Then you would say that there is no one seated in the front row of the Opposition benches. Mr. Speaker, I would simply like you to remind the Hon. Member, for whom I have a high regard, that we do have an issue to discuss. I am interested in hearing what he has to say, but if he resorts to partisan politics, I believe I can find more important things to do at this hour of the night! I do want to listen to him, but I see no point in his noting either the absence or presence of members. It is not customary and it adds nothing whatsoever to the debate.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I think that it does indeed add a very important element to the debate because, setting aside all partisanship, many federal Liberals are at the present time travelling throughout Quebec, Ontario and the Maritime provinces saying that the Progressive Conservative government is doing nothing for Canadian agriculture. I am not the one saying this, Mr. Speaker. The Liberals are. Is this partisanship or an objective debate? I cannot believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Member for Saint-Denis would say such things. If we want to talk about statistics, we could talk objectively about interest rates. In 1984, when we came to power, interest rates were in the 16 to 22 percent range. Today, they stand at 10 per cent. Yet Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) accused the Government a while ago of failing to take concrete action. Mr. Speaker, interest rates have fallen from 16.75 per cent to 10 per cent, from 22 per cent to 10 per cent! The interest rate on loans is now 6 per cent! These are concrete actions on the part of the Prograssive Conservative government since coming to power in 1984. Mr. Speaker, to maintain that the Liberals and New Democrats will support the government motion in favour of agriculture—when in fact the Liberals and New Democrats opposed the introduction of the capital gains exemption. They claimed that it would only help the rich. They said that it would not help Canadian farmers. That's funny, because I represent a rural riding. I have travelled throughout my riding and I have met with farmers. They have told me that the elimination of the capital gains tax has allowed the family farms to survive to this day, because parents are not forced to sell at two, three or four times the price because of the tax. Now they get a capital gains exemption. Mr. Speaker, this is one concrete step we have taken to help agriculture. We have indeed taken action since 1984.

I could also speak objectively about our electoral platform. Some opposition Members will say that we have not kept any of our promises. Fine. But I remember the commitments we made in 1984. I'm sure the Liberals and New Democrats have them written down in their little books. We spoke of doing away with the capital gains tax. We have followed through on this. We also spoke of formulating a long-term dairy policy. This has also become a reality!

During the 1984 election campaign in Quebec, Mr. Speaker, I remember that the interest rates charged by the Farm Credit Corporation were 16.75 per cent. Farmers were saying to me: "You know, Mr. Champagne, if interest rates were in the 10 per cent range, that would be reasonable. Then we might be able to see the light at the end of the tunnel." In 1984, when the Farm Credit Corporation was charging 16.75 per cent in interest, the provincial Office du crédit agricole was charging only 8.5 per cent. There was a difference of 8 per cent between the two agencies. This means that in 1984, the chances of survival for a young farmer wishing to take up the challenge, to take his rightful place on the Canadian agricultural scene and to assume the social role of economic "developer", worker and taxpayer, were slimmer if he turned to the Farm Credit Corporation for assistance instead of to the Office du crédit agricole. Why was that? Because at the time, there was no mechanism in place to provide for competitive interest rates between the two farm credit agencies. Therefore if two farmers borrowed the same amount, one from the provincial corporation and the other from the FCC, the one borrowing from the province had a better chance of coming out ahead. All the farmer who borrowed from the federal agency had to show for his efforts, in many cases, was a moratorium.

Mr. Speaker, we were not overjoyed about introducing the moratorium. The fact is we realized that there was a debt problem. The problem existed because to a certain extent farmers had not been dealt with in a responsible manner.

When our Government says that it represents fairly effectively the entire agricultural population, it means that it has Members involved in agriculture in almost every province. Although I have a great deal of respect for my colleague from Saint-Denis, he cannot say the same about the former Government which had no more than one or two sitting Members west of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, what kind of treatment did western farmers receive over the last 10 or 15 years? It is normal for them to get what they rightfuly deserve now. It is normal for us to want to help out our western farmers and grain producers in their time of need. How did we in fact help them, Mr. Speaker? First of all, by instituting payment stabilization mechanisms. The former Government did not feel that such mechanisms were really needed, but we put them in place. We agreed, coast-to-coast, to use a well known expression, that it was important to agriculture to implement such mechanisms. We allocated one billion dollars in aid and we succeeded, Mr. Speaker—as for the New Democrats and the Liberals, I believe I see the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) laughing about the situation. I think that this is shameful indeed since when his Party was in power, he did nothing at all for agriculture. It was our government, Mr. Speaker, that distributed $1 billion equitably between the farmers from the west, the east and the Maritimes. We did this for a reason. We realized that Canadian farmers needed the government's support. During our 1984 election campaign, we gave our firm commitment that we would take action in this area.

Of course the opposition Parties claim that we are not doing enough. But you can never do enough. Mr. Speaker, we have to look at what was done in the past and what is being done today. Some of the expectations of Canadian farmers have been met through the introduction of the 6 per cent loan program, the signing of a long-term dairy policy for farmers in general and the one billion in aid. When the Opposition accuses us of not having done anything—and I am speaking here of those who want to raise this debate beyond the realm of partisanship—it should take a good hard look at what's happening across Canada. However, it should not view the situation across the country from the comfort of an air-conditioned limousine. It should travel to the rural ridings and look at what's happening with farmers. If it is truly objective, it will see that the Progressive Conservative Government has fulfilled about 80 or 90 per cent of its 1984 election promises.

I heard members of the New Democratic Party speak of agri-bonds and of the fact that our Government had not introduced any agri-bonds. However, I would like one opposition Member to rise just once and say: "Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Government, through the Farm Credit Corporation, has made it possible for farmers to take out loans at 10 per cent interest, rather than 16.75 per cent". Of course no Opposition member has ever once done this. No, the opposition Members have only risen to protest the lifting of the moratorium. Mr. Speaker, what is even more scandalous is the fact that the New Democrats supported the Liberals in their failure to take steps to formulate a clear, concrete agricultural policy.

It's true, Mr. Speaker. When have we ever seen the New Democrats rise and say to the Liberals: "When your Party was in power, interest rates were too high".

Some Hon. Members: They kept them in office!

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): That's quite true, Mr. Speaker. I can see that some of the New Democratic Members are amused by this statement, but that's what really happened. Yes, indeed.

As my colleague from Saint-Denis pointed out, when one wants to work for the sake of unity—and I'm excluding my colleague from Saint-Denis here because he is the exception that confirms the rule in many cases—when one wants to establish farm programs and work in a positive way, this does not mean that one must put obstacles in the government's way. It means that one must look at the positive achievements and work to improve, rather than criticize, the situation.

All that we keep hearing in the agriculture committees and in reports everywhere and in the statements by the Opposition on the subject of agriculture, is that the Government has failed to keep its promises.

Our electoral platform, Mr. Speaker, was very simple. It contained 12 promises, more or less, to quote the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis: to provide financial aid to farmers, to renew their confidence, to establish the marketing boards of their choice, to sign a long-term dairy policy, to reduce the rates charged by the Farm Credit Corporation, to introduce a capital gains exemption, to have grain stabilization payments more in tune with reality and to deal equitably with the agricultural community as a whole. We have fulfilled our promises, Mr. Speaker. Why then does the Opposition continue to criticize us, why did it insist on holding an emergency debate to discuss the plight of farmers and why is it trying to make the Government out to be the villain?

Mr. Speaker, the opposition Parties must be very well aware of the fact that the current problem is the result of a trade war between the European Economic Community and the United States.

Canada, despite its efforts and the funds allocated to agriculture, does not have the power to control the United States and the European Economic Community or to demand that they act as it would like. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that we are being unfair in telling Canadians that the Government is irresponsible. When has any government, with the exception of ours, taken such a radical stand and provided one billion in aid to grain farmers? The Government took such action because it realized full well that farmers were experiencing difficulty on international markets.

The Government was acting in a responsible, moral manner toward farmers. In providing this aid, the Government was acknowledging its economic responsibility and its economic priorities and was admitting that Canadian agriculture, not simply agriculture in Ontario, Quebec or the Maritime Provinces, is the cornerstone of healthy, future growth and development. It was acknowledging the expectations of Canadians wishing to make farming their livelihood.

Never once did the Government claim to have resolved all of the country's agricultural problems.

We are continuing to work in this area. For the first time ever, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) met with his 10 provincial counterparts to negotiate a national agricultural policy. They continue to meet regularly and are scheduled to get together this summer in Quebec City. Together, they have given a new thrust and impetus to farming in Canada. They are trying to avoid what happened in the past when the federal Government disregarded the wishes and demands of the provinces.

Thanks to our innate knowledge, we believe we are doing what is right for agriculture in Canada. We have seen, Mr. Speaker, the effects of a $200 billion deficit in the agricultural sector and what happens with interest payments when this deficit must be reimbursed. Funds cannot be used effectively for agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, when the Liberal Government completely disregarded the demands of the provinces and sought only to create a climate of confrontation within a federalist context that clearly made no sense, it caused serious harm to agriculture. The impact of this confrontation will be felt by future generations.

Do the New Democrats and the Liberals object to our adopting a conciliatory approach with the provinces? Do the New Democrats and the Liberals object to our consulting with our provincial counterparts to ensure that agriculture remains the cornerstone of economic development? That's what I've been hearing all evening from the Opposition, nothing more than recriminations based 90 per cent of the time on partisan feelings. The 10 per cent exclusion is for my colleague from Saint-Denis.

Mr. Speaker, it is highly unusual that I have not heard one opposition Member say this evening that the government has done at least something good. I can say one thing, Mr. Speaker.

As a responsible Member and as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, I can say that since 1984, our Government has worked to rebuild the agricultural sector. This task cannot be accomplished alone. It will require the concerted efforts of many parties. This means that meetings will be held and concessions will be made. Policy discussions concerning agriculture will take place with each province. Our Government will not indulge in navel gazing, as most of my Opposition colleagues who feel they are very knowledgeable about this issue are prone to doing. Mr. Speaker, we have seen what innate knowledge can accomplish. If the Opposition accuses us of not keeping our election promises, we can find a great deal to say about the broken promises of the former Government. And we could also say the same about certain provincial NDP Governments.

If we want to raise the level of this debate beyond the realm of partisanship, we must recognize, firstly, that Canadian farmers are in trouble, and secondly, that the Government has taken steps and will continue to take steps to turn the situation economic problems by instituting certain structures and mechanisms.

In all honesty, Mr. Speaker, when I see the Opposition criticize our Government for giving $1 billion to Canadian farmers to help them out, when I see the Opposition criticize our Government for providing a 6 per cent loan system—something which has never been seen before—when I see the Opposition protest shared-cost interest rates, when I see the Opposition criticize the drop in interest rates, the introduction of the capital gains exemption and efforts to formulate national agricultural policies with our provincial colleagues, I ask myself, Mr. Speaker, who is acting in the most responsible fashion, the Opposition or the Government. The Opposition only indulges in negativism. The Government, n the other hand, is showing its willingness to implement a policy that will save our agricultural industry, not in the short term but in the long term.

[English]

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in the emergency debate at this early morning hour, at least it is in Ottawa, which has been requested by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). There is obviously no doubt that agriculture, particularly western agriculture, is facing a crisis in many ways similar to that faced in the time of the Great Depression. There are similar as well as different aspects to the crisis that confronts agriculture today, and I agree that there are no simple, easy solutions. It is a very complex age with new developments occurring on the political front, on the economic front and on the technological front which increase the uncertainty in agriculture today.

As I said, there are no simple, easy solutions. We have to deal with the economic problem that exists in the trade war between the European countries and the U.S.A. where billions of dollars from the public treasuries of Europe and the United States are being used to support their respective farmers. This has been explained by Members on all sides of the House. The Canadian farmer, in essence, is out there alone. He is suffering because he does not have the type of protection given to the European and the American farmer. There is talk about the uncertainty being brought about by technological changes, changes in genetic engineering and hydroponics which can change the face of agriculture in a very short period of time. These are some of the long-term uncertainties that farmers, particularly western Canadian farmers, face.

It is true that this Government has spent more on agriculture than any previous Government. There is no doubt of that. Given the magnitude of the crisis it would not really have mattered whether we had a Liberal Government, a New Democratic Party Government or a Conservative Government, because any responsible federal Government today would have had to have spent the amount of money that has been spent supporting the grain producers of Canada. Not to have done so would have created such a crisis that we would have had a worse situation made so much worse. No responsible elected Government could have withstood the political uproar that that would have created.

I agree that this Government has spent more than any previous Government on support for agriculture. However, we must ask if it has been adequate. Given the support the European and American farmers face, have we provided enough protection for our farmers to ensure that they will survive at least on a minimal level? To that question, the answer must be a resounding no. The policies have not been adequate. They have not provided the support that is necessary to enable the family farm to continue to be a viable economic operation.

Let us look at some of the figures dealing with farm bankruptcies. The evidence before the Agriculture Committee on March 24 dealt with farms with sales of over $20,000. We learned that 8 per cent of those farms are basically insolvent. That amounts to roughly 13,680 farms. Evidence also showed that 23 per cent had major cash flow problems. That amounts to around 53,000 farms across Canada.

Thousands of farms on the verge of bankruptcy are ready to go down the tubes. The policies of the Government have not been adequate. They have not prevented that crisis. They have not provided the security that would assure those farmers that they will not go into receivership. That is the simple truth of the matter.

A sense of betrayal is felt in many rural areas across Canada and I would say particularly in western Canada. For many, many years, western Canadian farmers have very consistently voted Conservative. They have continued to return Conservative Members of Parliament to Ottawa year after year. Of the 14 Members of Parliament who come from my home province, there are only five New Democrats. There is a sense of anger and betrayal in western Canada. Because western Canadians have voted Conservative in so many elections, they had the sense that a Conservative Government in Ottawa would at least be sympathetic to and would understand the needs and problems they face.

When I return to the rural parts of my constituency, the message I get is one of anger and disappointment. They are angry and disappointed because the Government has not been adequately addressing their needs and concerns. They feel that they are on the edge of going bankrupt and they have no confidence that the Government is aware of their situation or, more important, has any coherent plan in mind to prevent them from going into bankruptcy.

We in the House of Commons have asked time and time again for the Government to make a public statement as to its intentions. Farming in and of itself is a very risky business. There are a great many uncertainties including the weather, the market, costs and the grasshoppers. A farmer runs a gambit of gambles. One of the other gambles is what the government policy will be. Farmers are making business decisions about what to plant and how much to plant and they recognize it is a gamble because they do not know what the government policy will be. They do have the sense that in the end, the Government will have to provide some program of deficiency-type payments but they do not know upon what basis it will be provided. They want to act in an economically rational and sane way but they cannot because there is this other uncertainty, the uncertainty about the programs.

We in the House of Commons have been rising day after day trying to get from the Government some indication of its thinking. Does it have a coherent policy in mind? I have a terrible suspicion, and I pray that I am wrong, that the Government really does not have a coherent policy in mind. This is inexcusable because everyone knew that the trade war between the Europeans and the Americans would occur. When the U.S. Farm Bill was before the American legislators and when it was passed, we knew what the results would be. There was a lot of lead time that could be used to begin to get some sense of the problem for Canadian farmers and to begin to devise some mechanism that would afford some protection for Canadian farmers.

The first time we got to hear about a program was, I believe, a day or two after the Speech from the Throne was read in the fall of last year. In the speech itself, there was no mention of a specific program. In fact, there was very little mention of agriculture. When this was raised in the House, the Government tried to justify it by saying that this was the first time agriculture was mentioned on the first page of a Throne Speech. Well, big deal. Obviously that would not wash on the Prairies.

At that time, there was an election occurring in Saskatchewan. When the Speech from the Throne was brought down, the Deputy Premier of Saskatchewan was in Ottawa trying to ensure that there would be something there for Canadian farmers because Mr. Devine's Conservative Government was in serious trouble back in Saskatchewan. Well, there was nothing in the speech so the Deputy Premier of Saskatchewan, the Premier of Saskatchewan and a fair number of Saskatchewan cabinet Ministers started phoning. They phoned senior cabinet Ministers from Saskatchewan and I am sure they phoned the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). They did get something. When the Prime Minister spoke, inserted in his speech was the promise of $1 billion.

Then we in the House tried to get some idea of what this $1 billion was all about. Day in and day out, we asked if this was new money and what the thinking behind it was. It became apparent that the announcement of the $1 billion did not reflect something that had been thought through, something that had required some intelligence to determine how the Government would tackle the problem. It became obvious that it was a political response, not a response to the crisis facing farmers today, not a response to the wars between the Europeans and the Americans—

Mr. Gérin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the Honourable Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) on a point of order.

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I see that it is now 1.40 a.m. I have listened closely to the NDP Member because it was the NDP who called this emergency debate. I have listened to the debates in this House for the past six and a half hours and I have failed to note any emergency. What's more, I can see that there are only three NDP Members here tonight. Yet, they claim that there is an emergency. If there is in fact an emergency, I think that the NDP should prove it. From everything I have heard today, I can detect no emergency as such.

I am prepared, Mr. Speaker, to do my duty as an MP, attend the debate, intervene and listen to the speaker, provided that the Opposition can prove the urgency of the problem or that the Government is failing to do its duty. I believe, Mr. Speaker, and I'm sure you will agree with me, that Canadian farmers feel that we have done our duty.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is not a true point of order.

Mr. de Jong: First, Mr. Speaker, you are being challenged with this point of order. Second, had the Hon. Member been listening to my remarks when I quoted the number of farms and farm families on the verge of bankruptcy, he would not come into this House and say there is no crisis. Third, I was trying to explain to the Hon. Member why there are many farmers in my constituency who are wondering what to seed and how much to seed. They are wondering right now, tonight, and it is an emergency for them.

It may not be an emergency for the Hon. Member of the government Party. That is his problem, but if he wants to understand the emergency nature of the crisis, I invite him to come to Fort Qu'Appelle, Qu'Appelle, Edenwold or Balgonie and talk to some of the rural members of those communities. In that way he will get some appreciation of the crisis which exists for some of the people whom I represent.

While giving credit to the Government for bringing in its $1 billion support program, I was trying to point out that this program was not a result of planning, thinking, anticipating and intelligence, but was a response to a political problem which existed for the Conservative Party in Saskatchewan. This became typified when a reporter from the Star Phoenix overheard the Premier of Saskatchewan, in the middle of the campaign in a small motel room in the wee hours of the morning, phoning senior cabinet Ministers in Ottawa and saying there was going to be hell to pay unless the feds came through with some package.

That is the story behind the so-called billion-dollar deal. The Government is trying to stretch that out as far as possible. It is trying to get maximum political results from minimum public involvement, effort and assistance. That is what it is all about. It is the barest of minimum and is not enough to cover our farmers who are totally exposed. That is the message we are trying to send to the Government. It is a message the Government is determined not to hear.

We have heard government Members in the House tonight dancing around the basic issues. They listed all the sins of the Liberals and the Liberals have many sins. It is all summed up in my mind and, I think, in the minds of most western Canadian farmers, in that one simple statement by former Prime Minister Trudeau: "Why should I sell your wheat?" The arrogance and the lack of understanding of what the country is all about is exhibited in that one quote. It says volumes. That one sentence will condemn the Liberal Party in western Canada for years and years to come.

The people of western Canada expected better from this Government and they did not get it. That is the cause of the sadness, frustration and anger which exists in western Canada today. That is why there are political movements beginning in western Canada which are thinking in terms of separation. They believe that the people they supported year in and year out in election after election have forsaken them now that they are in Government. Significant numbers of western Canadians are now talking in terms of western separation.

Our frustration in the west is due to the fact that when times were good we paid our share. When the Liberals were in Government they made resource grabs. They tried to grab the potash in Saskatchewan. To set the record straight, we never supported the National Energy Program. The Conservatives continued to tell that lie. If they would go back to the voting record they would see that it is Goebbels propaganda of repeating a lie to insist that we supported the National Energy Program.

The National Energy Program took about $25 billion out of the west. We in the West say that the $1 billion that the Government has spent on farm assistance is the first billion dollars and there are $24 billion more to go. That is the position of the west and I have a lot of sympathy for that.

The economy and well-being of hundreds of thousands of farmers in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba is at stake. From a federal Government we expect responsibility and the assurance that it will stand by us to see us through these difficult times and will not sell us down the river. Unfortunately, the Government has not yet given that message.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I had the good fortune to leave the city this morning and fly to the great Province of British Columbia and meet with a number of leaders of farm organizations. I participated in the opening ceremonies of a world-class research centre which was designed, sponsored and built by Agriculture Canada. I refer, of course, to the opening of the Summerland Station. I am happy that I arrived back here tonight in time to have an opportunity to listen to some of the debate in the House. I welcome this opportunity to participate in the debate regardless of the hour.

Mr. Speaker, I have been in this House for 15 years and I believe I have participated, almost without exception, in all of the opposition days in this House. I have never heard so many false statements coming from the other side; I have never heard so much untruth coming from the other side; I have never heard so many extreme statements coming from the other side and, indeed, so much hypocrisy, as I have heard within the last hour or hour and a half that I have been back in the House.

To stand up and say that the Government has done absolutely nothing for Canadian agriculture is absolutely false. It is untrue.

Mr. Orlikow: Nobody said that.

Mr. Wise: Although I was not here, many of my colleagues were who are knowledgeable on agriculture and understand and have a full appreciation of the situation. Many of them are farmers, which makes a big difference. I do not see too many farmers on the other side, particularly on the Official Opposition benches. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I do not see anyone sitting on the benches of the Official Opposition. To be accurate, I do now see the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) in his seat, but I do not believe the Hon. Member is a farmer.

I do want to give some credit to the NDP Members, particularly the last speaker. I must admit that many of his comments were very sensible and I listened to the Hon. Member very closely.

However, I have notes on certain comments which were made. It was said that the Government has done absolutely nothing for Canadian agriculture and that is not true. We made 16 campaign commitments to which I guess I will have to refer again. I am sure previous speakers, particularly those on this side of the House, have utilized this opportunity to set the record straight. We have to keep doing it over and over again. The fact of the matter is that we campaigned across this country and made some 16 commitments. To date we have fulfilled 14 of those commitments and we are going to fulfil all of them. We are going to deliver on all of our promises, certainly well before the end of our mandate.

In addition to that we have to date taken some 414 agricultural initiatives. That is more than one initiative every other working day since we were sworn into office. We have delivered more than $6 billion, most of which went into the hands of Canadian farmers.

I can remember being the Opposition dairy critic and then the Opposition agricultural critic and I remember many farm organizations coming to the capital and saying that if we have the opportunity of getting into Government, and they certainly hoped we would, if you have one thing to do for us would you do something about capital gains. Shortly after we were sworn in, in fact in the first Budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) delivered on that campaign commitment.

I can recall a number of people meeting with us and asking us to do something about farm input costs. Would we give some serious consideration to a rebate of the excise taxes on farm fuels. Obviously because of the priority we place on agriculture we responded to that request. In doing so we effectively eliminated all federal sales and excise taxes on farm fuels. That represents a saving to Canadian farmers of about $200 million.

On a subject which is fairly close to my own heart, that of the dairy industry, I can remember dairy farmers coming to Ottawa year after year since about 1970 asking the federal Government to deliver a long-term dairy policy. We responded, made the campaign commitment, and in January of last year this Government provided a long-term dairy policy. We made a long-term commitment of five years and $1.5 billion. Another request made of us was to amend the Advance Payments for Crops legislation. We did that and doubled the payments. We were requested to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act. We responded and did so, and I am going to say something more about that. I am sure my colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) had something to say about that earlier.

For over a decade the provinces and meat producers in this country have been working together to try and put together a tripartite stabilization program for red meat. The previous Government was never able to negotiate successfully with the provinces or the producers. Indeed, it was unable to amend the Act and provide the legislative framework for tripartite stabilization. We were able to negotiate with the provinces and the producers, amend the Act, and deliver on another campaign commitment.

The list goes on. I am not going to use all my time to list all of the campaign commitments, but I thought it was appropriate to read into the record some of the major requests made to us by farm organizations and I think it was appropriate to remind people that this Government has responded. I am sure that with the help of the Parliamentary Library the record would show that the Government has delivered on more campaign commitments than any other Government in the history of the country. I am sure that if you look at our record, not only legislatively but also on delivery of badly needed financial support, it will show that this Government has responded to a greater extent than any other Government in the history of Canada.

When this Government was sworn into office, the budget to operate Agriculture Canada and pay for support programs required about $1.2 billion. Now here we are not even half way through this year and the commitments we have made amount to over $4 billion. In addition, we continue to work with farm leaders. We met them on March 5 and we will meet them again in the first week of June. We will continue to work with them to work out some new support program. I have heard some Members say that we should make some commitment about the kind of program we will have. We should make some commitment as to the extent we will be able to finance that program. What will be the distribution formula?

I would just remind Members of the fact that in our meeting of March 5 with 55 farm leaders, representing 35 farm organizations, we issued a joint press statement to the effect that farmers should make the decision themselves. Farmers must read market signals and I know their difficulty. However, they are in a far better position than you and I or all of the bureaucrats in Ottawa and in all the provinces, as well as all the politicians, to read the signals of the market-place.

We could put all these so-called great minds together but invariably we would not be in a position to read market signals with the accuracy that farmers and farm organizations can for themselves. That was precisely why we came out of that meeting with a press release. I do not have it with me, but I have read it into the record a couple of times and I would remind Hon. Members, particularly those across the way, that this was not a press release written by the Minister of Agriculture or his bureaucrats. This was not a press release by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Foster: It was written by your guys.

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member for Algoma was not there. He speaks with the same uninformed voice on this issue as he does on most occasions in the House. No question about it.

Mr. Foster: Most of them felt used so I would not bring up that argument, John.

Mr. Wise: There is no question about the fact that there is a very clear message that we should not be making statements of this kind at this time.

I have complimented the Member who spoke previously but he made a few comments that were not quite correct. He indicated that when the Government made the commitment to support Canadian farmers we arrived at a billion-dollar figure. He gave some political reason for why we arrived at that figure. Of course, he is wrong.

I cannot say when the Saskatchewan election took place, but I can say that we were meeting with farm leaders at the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) initiative and as a result of his leadership. It was at his request that the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and myself, as well as the Parliamentary Secretary, the Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), convened a meeting of farm leaders in Vancouver before he left for the Tokyo summit. The Hon. Member for Algoma speaks from his seat, but he was not there.

Mr. Foster: You were not here when I spoke.

Mr. Wise: Perhaps that is a good thing. The fact is that we were meeting with farm leaders throughout the late spring and early summer and were working with farm leaders throughout the season. Indeed, we had come to the conclusion that it would require at least a billion dollars and we then continued working with them to devise some fair and equitable form of distributing that $1 billion.

We should not be critical of farm leaders but should compliment them. When we met in Ottawa at the Sir John Carling Building, many people thought that it would be impossible for 25 or 30 farm leaders to sit down with us to work out some type of program that would be fair and equitable, with a fair and equitable distribution formula. That can only be achieved by working together, and as a result of the leadership of the farm leaders involved in those meetings we were able to form the program. We were able to develop a formula that was fair and equitable.

If we look at that formula and consider a typical grain farm in Saskatchewan with the cropping pattern that the individual uses, and put that through the Special Canadian Grains Program formula, we will find that it triggers out about $9,300. If we look at southwestern Ontario and consider a typical farmer and his farm's cropping pattern, we will see that it will trigger almost identical to what the typical farm could receive in western Canada.

Let me indicate that we are basically in the same position this year as we were last year. It is not appropriate for us, at this time, to indicate the degree of support that will be required. It is not possible to indicate at this time our financial ability as a Government to respond.

However, the commitment was made in the Speech from the Throne that the Government will spare no effort. Furthermore, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in his February 18 Budget, extended a mandate to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board and myself to reconvene those meetings. We reconvened the meetings and held the first one on March 5.

I have made reference to the statement that was issued and there may be some question about it. However, I will stand by that statement and I am sure, if you want to check with the farmers who participated at that meeting, the vast majority of them stand by that statement. I have talked with many of them since then and, indeed, they still stand by that statement. We will be meeting with them in June and will continue to work with them to develop some type of program.

There has been a fair amount of time and comment, perhaps quite properly, on why the Government made a decision to lift the moratorium. I remind the House that there is no question that the phase-out is very much controlled.

While I placed that moratorium on farm foreclosures, I must remind the House that the foreclosures only applied to FCC clients. The Minister of Agriculture has no authority to place that moratorium on clients other than FCC clients.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, you have the authority.

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member says that I do. I do not. I took that initiative at the time for good reason. If I had the opportunity to do it again I am sure I would introduce it. I indicated when I placed this moratorium in September, 1985, that there were a number of things that we as a Government wanted to do. The first was to respond to the interest rate conversion program. We did that with an $80 million commitment, bringing down the 5,600 FCC clients from 16.75 per cent to 12.75 per cent.

I said that I wanted to introduce the shared risk mortgage. We introduced that.

I indicated that we wanted to introduce the commodity-based loan. We have introduced the commodity-based loan.

I indicated that we wanted to bring forward the Farm Debt Review legislation which, indeed, we put into place. I said that we wanted to establish Farm Debt Review Boards in all the provinces. They have been established in all the provinces.

I indicated that we wanted to let these review boards have an opportunity for some experience in order that they could be established and functioning. That has happened and they have been doing an excellent job. While some people are critical of the legislation, there is no question in my mind as I continue to consult with the rank and file of the farm population that that legislation is right.

I am also satisfied that the farm debt review process is proper and that they are doing an excellent job, considering the very difficult cases that the Farm Debt Review Board must deal with.

I see that you are giving me a signal, Mr. Speaker. I have not really begun.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Minister to continue?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wise: I thank Hon. Members for the courtesy. I will try not to take too long.

I also indicated that we wanted to develop the Canadian rural transition program.

The Government has been forced to break new ground on just about every occasion in the last year and one-half. Any Government can enlarge, enrich or expand existing programs with very little difficulty, providing the financial resources are available. Although we have had the financial resources, the challenge is writing new legislation, developing new programs and new schemes. While this can be done, we must have the will of the Government and the co-operation of the Canadian farm population. We have had that will and that co-operation as well.

I suspect that those who are critical of the performance of the Farm Debt Review Boards have not taken the time to research and consider these questions on a case-by-case basis. I invite them to do so.

I also ask them to consider the question of the moratorium. I will always have to live with the question of whether it was the right decision for me to place that moratorium on FCC foreclosures in September, 1985. Has it been helpful or harmful to those people who have been held in that moratorium net? I can say that in some cases of which I am aware we might have been better off not to have placed that moratorium initially, or, perhaps certain people would have been better off financially if we had removed the moratorium earlier. I am sure that reasoning will make sense to Members if they consider that for some time.

If we look at the people who are in serious financial trouble we would probably find there is some exaggeration in these numbers. I think people have a tendency to make extreme statements.

The FCC does have a higher percentage of high risk cases. How did that come about? It came about very simply because the previous Government did not make sufficient funds available to the Farm Credit Corporation.

Second, the previous Government directed the Farm Credit Corporation, quite contrary to its mandate, to become a lender of last resort. When that direction is given, then the corporation has to assume, not by choice but rather by necessity, a far larger percentage and number of high risk cases. That is why the traditional lending institutions have a figure of probably 4 per cent, 5 per cent, 6 per cent or seven per cent in very serious trouble, and if we look at the Farm Credit Corporation we find these figures much much higher.

Hon. Members opposite are critical of the performance of the Farm Debt Review Boards which, incidentally, have about a 55 per cent success rate across the country, about a 66 per cent success rate in the Province of Ontario and about a 65 per cent success rate in the Province of Alberta. If we look at those individuals who are in trouble on an almost case by case basis, we find almost without exception they go back to the mid 1970s. What happened in the mid 1970s? The so-called experts around the world looked into the late 1970s, the 1980s and beyond, and sent out signals. The signals were very dangerous, very inaccurate and wrong. They have caused a great deal of difficulty to many people who are in the farming business today.

The experts indicated that farmers should expand their operations. They should not bother renovating a barn, they should bulldoze it down and build a new one. They advised not to borrow $25,000 to renovate something, but just tear it down and they would be happy to lend the farmer $100,000 or a quarter of a million dollars.

Farmers were told to buy more land, that they were not going to have any difficulty at all because interest rates were going to remain stable. Well, the experts were wrong. They said the inflation rate was going to remain stable. They were wrong. They said farm input costs were going to remain stable, but they were wrong. They said that we would be going through a time right now of record high commodity prices and they were dead wrong there. They said as well that we would be going through a time of world shortages in commodities and we have gone through a period of world surpluses.

We have heard the predictions and encouragement of the previous Government. I can go back into Hansard and dig out speeches of my predecessor who travelled the country sending messages to young Canadian farmers to go out and produce to beat the band because the future was theirs and would be secure. Of course, we have now found out that all of those things have turned out to be wrong.

Upon examination we find there was another factor. One of those conditions which the experts said would not happen, which did happen, was probably the major contributing factor to the farmers' downfall and to their difficulty, and that was the interest rate increases. A lot of people really could be in a much better position today had they had not been caught up in the interest rate increases which occurred in 1981 and 1982. During that period of time interest rates increased from 9 per cent and 10 per cent up to 25 per cent, 26 per cent and 27 per cent. Anyone who operates a farm or business will automatically and immediately recognize the damaging effects interest rate increases of that kind have.

Members of the Official Opposition in particular are indicating to us that we have not done enough for agriculture, yet we have increased our Budget from $1 billion to $2 billion to $3 billion to $4 billion. I do not know what more will be required, but because of the priority the Government places on agriculture, we have been with Canadian farmers in the past and we are going to be with them in the future.

We have seen tonight the hypocrisy of the Liberal Members of Parliament who have made critical comment about the Special Canadian Grains Program. That $1 billion was the single largest payment to Canadian farmers by any Government in the history of the country. A billion dollars is a tremendous amount of money.

What was the added input costs to Canadian farmers because of interest rates increasing from 9 per cent to 24 per cent or 25 per cent? The fact is that an added input cost of about $2 billion was extended by the previous Government in allowing interest rates to run from 9 per cent to 24 per cent and doing almost nothing about it. There was one measure, the Special Farm Assistance Program, which assisted about 1,900 people. The interesting fact about that was the added cost of that program was carried on the backs of other Canadian farmers. There is an input cost which exceeds by quite a lot the harmful effect on Canadian grain prices as a result of the U.S. Farm Bill, the Export Enhancement Program and the trade war between the United States and the EEC.

I would like to conclude by setting the record straight with respect to the lifting of the moratorium. I made some earlier comments about it and I could still talk for quite a while and give a number of experiences with respect to it. However, I am not going to take the time of the House to do so. Some people, again the uninformed—the uninterested I suppose—have indicated that the Farm Credit Corporation will be going in and seizing farms left, right and centre. All Hon. Members, if they want to be honest with themselves, know full well that I have always been complimentary and will continue to be complimentary to the Farm Credit Corporation. It has served Canadian farmers extremely well over the last 55, 56 and 57 years. I was complimentary of the Farm Credit Corporation when I sat across the House and I will continue to be supportive of that corporation.

Canadian farmers know that the Farm Credit Corporation is more understanding, and more sympathetic in dealing with their cases than any other lending institution in the country, and it is going to continue to be that way. The Farm Credit Corporation, by lifting the moratorium, will not be going out seizing farms and putting farmers off their land. That is not its task. That is not what it wants to do. Its philosophy is the same as the Government's philosophy. We are going to do everything possible to keep farmers on the land and in the business of producing food. There is no question about that. So let us put aside that inaccuracy.

The Canadian farming population have enough difficulty as it is. They do not need to read statements to the effect that the Farm Credit Corporation is going to go out and seize farms and put massive numbers of farmers off the land. They do not need that. It is not going to happen. The corporation does not want to put large acreages of land onto the market-place for very obvious reasons. Everything that can be done to reach agreements will be done.

The Farm Credit Corporation will be going out and sitting down on a one-to-one basis with every individual who has been affected and held by the moratorium. Again, every effort will be made to reach an agreement, to reach a settlement. We will look at the utilization of longer term leases than we have been able to sign up to this point in time. We believe that under the Act we can sign a lease for five years. That is not bad, but it is not long enough, and for very obvious reasons. We know that.

We know as well that it might be possible for us to extend the five-year lease to perhaps seven or 10 years. We believe that we can do that through the Order in Council process. If we can use the Order in Council process to provide a longer term lease, then we will do it. Do Hon. Members know why? Because we want to keep people on the land. We do not want to put them off it. We will be looking at every opportunity, at utilizing everything that we have—

Mr. Benjamin: How come they're still going off the land?

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member raises a legitimate question. He asks why some are still going off the land. It is very obvious that it is the same with the speculative number that is used as far as those people who are held by the moratorium are concerned. When we start to negotiate with them we know already that during that period of time a large number of clients have come forward on a voluntary basis. In some cases settlements have been reached. We know that some of them will come forward on a voluntary basis to indicate to us that they have had an opportunity to assess their situations, that they have had an opportunity to look at their futures and they have determined that it would be better for them to go. In fact, some of them have told me that they might have been better off had they gone earlier on their own. That is why I raise the question with respect to whether or not the moratorium has been helpful or harmful.

Mr. Benjamin: They had no choice.

Mr. Wise: But that process will only allow the corporation to deal with upwards to 50 cases—I say upwards, Mr. Speaker, to 50 cases per month on a national basis. That is not 50 cases in Alberta or 50 cases in Ontario. It is 50 cases on a national basis per month. They will then have communication on a regular basis, whether it be weekly or monthly, with the farm debt review boards in each province.

There will be some cases in which the corporation will recognize that a settlement can be reached if these people are referred to the farm debt review boards. Thus they will be referred to the farm debt review boards. Other settlements will be more difficult to reach. Then, there will be others which, obviously, will have to be referred to the review boards by the Farm Credit Corporation. The Farm Credit Corporation is the same as any other lending institution.

Mr. Benjamin: That's the problem.

Mr. Wise: It is bound by the Act. It is bound by the farm debt review legislation. Therefore it will not be seizing lands. There will not be a large number of farmers losing their farms.

Mr. Benjamin: The banks will do it.

Mr. Wise: The other important thing to remember about this is the fact that when a farm debt review board in a province believes it has an adequate number of cases with which to deal it will then signal the Farm Credit Corporation that no further action be taken until such time as it has adequate time to deal with the cases with which it has to deal.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Minister. I appreciate all the matters he is going into. Will he permit a question?

Mr. Wise: Absolutely.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman this. Is it not correct that it is not the FCC that seizes the land, it is the lender of first resort, the banks, through which the FCC guarantees loans and it is the banks that end up as the holders of the land and not the FCC?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked a legitimate question. The danger is in generalizing. If I were to give the Hon. Member a general answer it would be no. However, it would carry with it some inaccuracy because in some cases the action of the farm debt review board is not the decision of the FCC. It holds a secondary position, shall I say, and the primary client or creditor is the bank. So of course the bank would be the one that would petition it. Regardless of whether it is the bank petitioning or if it is the FCC petitioning there is still that process.

I could go on for quite some time, Mr. Speaker, but I know that there are a large number of Members on this side of the House in particular who wish to participate in the debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: We want to hear them.

Mr. Wise: I thought that it would be advisable to concentrate on some of the larger measures we have taken. This Government has done more for Canadian agriculture than has any other Government in the history of the country. I wanted to point to some of the reasons why we have some very serious financial positions in the farm community today. I wanted to give some clarification as far as the moratorium is concerned.

I could take a considerable amount of time to indicate where the real problem lies and where the Government has really concentrated its efforts. I could indicate where the Government and, in particular, the Prime Minister have played a leading role in the international forum with respect to bringing this problem to the attention of world leaders. I could also mention the new round of multilateral trade negotiations. The Prime Minister has been successful in placing agriculture on the agenda and some real progress has been made in terms of bringing about an earlier resolution.

I ask Members opposite to examine the record. I ask them to look at the make-up and the composition of the caucus which speaks for itself. I ask Hon. Members opposite to look at the composition of Cabinet and the statements that have been made. If Hon. Members were to check the record they would find that this is the first time in the history of the country in which the Prime Minister has referred to the plight of the Canadian farmer and the subject of agriculture more frequently than any other Prime Minister in our history. There is no question about that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: We have been supportive of Canadian agriculture in the past. Our mandate is clear. Our schedule is clear, as is our timetable. We will continue to work with farm leaders. At the appropriate time we will make announcements. But it is inappropriate at this point in time to indicate exactly what the financial support will be. It is certainly inappropriate at this time to indicate what type of repayment or formula of distribution will be required.

As I talk to Canadian farmers they are quite appreciative of what we have done. They recognize that the Government recognizes the industry. They know that the Government places a priority on their industry. We have been helpful in the past and we are with them today. We will have to be with them tomorrow and into the future particularly when we consider some of the grain and oil seed sectors. Those problems will not go away tomorrow. They will be there tomorrow and for quite some time. Because of the priorities we have we will continue to hold them in the same priority as we have held them in the past. We will be there with them in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to follow at 1.30 in the morning the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and to see the tremendous support that agriculture has here in the House of Commons. While this debate may have its downside at 1.30 in the morning, I want to assure the constituents of Assiniboia, all the western Canadian farmers and all farmers across Canada that there has never been stronger representation in the House of Commons for farmers than what we have witnessed here today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: The leadership that has been given by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), by the Minister of Agriculture and by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) has never been equalled before in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (0130)

Mr. Benjamin: Is that the Anvil chorus or the Greek chorus?

An Hon. Member: That is the truth.

Mr. Gustafson: That was just a warming up exercise.

Mr. Foster: It is the Hallelujah chorus.

Mr. Gustafson: I should like to speak for a moment about the questions put forward by the Opposition this evening. There is a major problem in the way in which the NDP and the Liberals have put forward this debate.

An Hon. Member: There is a major problem with the NDP!

Mr. Gustafson: In bringing forward the debate in the way they have, the Liberals and the NDP are challenging the Canadian Wheat Board and the decision made and supported by farm groups, thus undermining the Canadian Wheat Board.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gustafson: I wish to read to the House some of the things that the farm groups have said. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), just a few minutes ago, reiterated the support that the Government has had from various farm groups across the country.

I quote from the Winnipeg Free Press, as follows:

> Canada cannot possibly match the power of the treasuries of either the U.S. or the EEC. The government would have made a bad choice had it announced initial grain prices that were unrealistic and had dealt with the resultant deficit after the fact.

Neither the NDP nor the Liberals recognize where the problem comes from.

Mr. Benjamin: Sure we do.

Mr. Gustafson: The problem stems from the U.S. and EEC agricultural subsidies.

Mr. Benjamin: And what are you doing to protect our agricultural sector?

Mr. Gustafson: In introducing these subsidies, neither the EEC nor the U.S. has looked into the future. Well, we have a Government in Canada that is looking into the future. In so doing, we have come to the conclusion that the answer rests in an international solution.

Mr. Benjamin: That takes three to five years, if we are lucky. What are you going to do tomorrow?

Mr. Gustafson: It is obvious to me that the Opposition, in wanting to intervene on the initial prices of grain as set by the Canadian Wheat Board, is not looking for a long-term solution to the problems in the market-place.

For the benefit of the Opposition, I want to read—

An Hon. Member: Why don't you tell us what SaskPool is saying.

Mr. Gustafson: If the Opposition would just listen for a moment, I can tell them what the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool has to say. I quote Garf Stevenson, President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, as reported in the Western Producer of April 23, 1987:

> —the Pool agrees with the government's decision to set initial prices to reflect world prices.

That is what SaskPool is saying. That is one of the largest, if not the largest, farm groups in western Canada.

Next, let me tell you what the Alberta Wheat Pool is saying. I quote:

> —the Wheat Pool is all in favour of the Wheat Board setting an initial price that reflects real market conditions.

That is the Alberta Wheat Pool. Next, let me quote what the Cattlemen's Association is saying. Again, I quote from the Western Producer of April 23, 1987:

> Chris Mills, policy adviser to the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, said the CCA agrees with the grain groups that initial prices should be set realistically to provide "one clear signal" what world prices are and to avoid distorting domestic feed grain prices.

Mr. Benjamin: A tough cookie!

Mr. Gustafson: I could go on and on. We have the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association saying the same thing: They support it.

Mr. Benjamin: An arm of the Tory Party.

Mr. Gustafson: In fact, I have not been able to find a farm group that does not support this policy. We have heard all night that the farm groups do not support the position the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is putting forward, the position that the Minister of Agriculture is putting forward, the position the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) is putting forward on this subject, both in Question Period and over the last week.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I am wondering whether the Hon. Member will permit a question.

Mr. Gustafson: Certainly.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has quoted Garf Stevenson, the President of SaskPool. Does he agree with the request in Mr. Stevenson's letter that the Government provide, on an urgent basis, substantial deficiency payments for the 1987-88 crop year?

Since he is quoting Mr. Stevenson with regard to the setting of initial prices, perhaps he can tell us whether or not he agrees with the request in this letter from Mr. Stevenson to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Gustafson: Certainly, we have no problem with that kind of request. The Minister of Agriculture has made that very clear. He has said that he was at a meeting less than a month ago at which Mr. Garf Stevenson was in attendance—and indeed, I was at that meeting. At that meeting, it was indicated, very clearly, that the Government had already set in motion a request to the farm groups for advice along these lines.

An Hon. Member: This is a letter dated April 28, 1987.

Mr. Foster: Are you agreeing with the request set out in this letter?

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member must understand that it is a process of seeding and harvesting. We are dealing with a crop year now that will not end until July 31, 1988. The farmers will receive, this week, a payment from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, amounting, in the case of the average farm of two sections in Saskatchewan, or Manitoba, or Alberta, to something in the order of $14,000. In less than a month from now, the farmers will receive, by way of a deficiency payment, up to $25,000, and that payment will be relative to the crop year ending July 31, 1987.

I think there has to be a clear understanding as to what it is we are talking about. It is clear that the farm groups understand it. And so, yes, a letter from Mr. Stevenson looking forward to the future is quite proper. But for the Opposition to make the accusation in this House that this Government has not been dealing with the situation is uncalled for.

An Hon. Member: It is outrageous.

Mr. Gustafson: It is totally uncalled for. I am sure the farmers recognize this. Farmers are very knowledgeable when it comes to agricultural issues. They realize the importance of the situation and appreciate the problems they face.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Stevenson's request is set out in this letter.

Mr. Gustafson: No one here would deny that the agricultural sector is facing problems, and will continue to face problems; but we, as a Government, are dealing with those problems, and we have a record of dealing with them.

As we look to the future, the agricultural community can have confidence in the direction that this Government will take on its behalf.

I wish to get back to the point I was making about the setting of the initial prices for grain. This Government has taken the position that we will support the farmer in place of supporting the commodity—something which can only distort the international market-place. I think that is very clear.

The Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board has provided leadership in this area internationally, as has the Prime Minister.

The Minister of Agriculture spoke about the meeting held in Vancouver attended by some 30-odd members of the agricultural community, a meeting was held before the Prime Minister attended the Tokyo Conference.

An Hon. Member: That was after the smoke and mirror show here in Ottawa.

Mr. Gustafson: I was at that meeting personally, and it was very interesting to see both the interest of the Prime Minister and the response of the farm groups to the Prime Minister in terms of what could be done internationally.

There has been a great deal of co-operation on the part of the farm groups, on the part of the Prime Minister, on behalf of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, and on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture and the Government in general, and that kind of co-operation has resulted in Canada providing leadership in the international arena toward finding a solution to these problems.

If anyone has a quick formula to solve these problems, we would certainly be open to hearing it. Canada will be providing leadership in this area. No other country is in a better position than Canada to provide the necessary leadership.

Canada recognizes that one of its great building blocks has been and will continue to be agriculture. The Government sees the importance of that building block. We intend to build upon it.

There is no question that we face difficult times. The initial price certainly was a disappointment. We on this side of the House do not like the word "subsidy". We are not particularly elated by the fact that we have to bring in subsidies, but at this point in time there is no other choice but to subsidize farmers.

What about the Farm Credit Corporation? I should like to refer to my own riding. Many farmers facing difficulties have been in my own livingroom. It is to the credit of the FCC that I have seen more flexibility on the part of that corporation in the last few months—and I see several Hon. Members nodding their heads—than I have ever seen before.

The Minister of Agriculture just made statements in the House about the fact that the review process is a move to help farmers. A number of us met with the committee chairmen who attended before the standing committee. They put forward the difficult situations faced by farmers in all provinces. A past Member of the House of Commons, Doug Neil, is serving the committee from the Province of Saskatchewan very well. He gave an excellent presentation to the standing committee on the work being done in Saskatchewan which faces one of the more difficult situations in terms of bankruptcies. The flexibility on the part of the FCC is a credit to that organization.

What was the cause of the problem? I should like to deal with it. The basic cause of farm bankruptcies goes back to one thing—high interest rates. I am talking about interest rates of 22 per cent, 23 per cent, and 24 per cent. We had those kinds of interest rates three years running. If we take 20 per cent interest rates and multiply them over three years, we find 60 per cent of the principal debt of the farmers involved. Farmer after farmer has said to me as a Member of Parliament—and I am sure others have experienced it in their ridings—that his problems began with 20 per cent interest rates. They ask why the then Government of Canada did not do something about them.

I can recall the situation after we were elected in 1984. Day after day we heard the following cry: "Get interest rates down". Do Hon. Members know that they are down by 10 per cent to 12 per cent? I do not hear Hon. Members opposite giving any credit to the Government in this regard. There is a lack of vision on the part of the Opposition. It does not seek a solution.

The Liberals failed farmers drastically. That is one basic reason farmers in western Canada have very little confidence in the Liberal Party.

Let us look at the record of the Government. It was a difficult time to represent the Government as chairman of the task force on drought in western Canada. In my riding, especially in the Bengough and Swift Current areas, that drought went on for about three years. However, it was not until the Conservative Government was elected in 1984 that something was done. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture, and the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board said that something had to be done. The Government set up a committee. We went to Bengough, Saskatchewan where there were 1,500 farmers. Hon. Members probably remember seeing it on television. One farmer was going to kick us all the way to Ottawa and back. They wanted an instant solution. We were saying that we wanted to hear from farm groups and from farmers. We were asking for just a few days.

The Government responded to the drought. Certainly some farmers were not satisfied. There was an odd problem here and an odd problem there. Few things in life are perfect. For the most part farmers in southern Saskatchewan, southern Alberta, southern Manitoba, the Peace River area, and wherever else there was drought were satisfied with the way in which the Government treated them.

There is a parallel situation now with the deficiency payments. The Opposition is asking us to do something quickly. It is asking us to respond momentarily, before we have had a chance to hear from farm groups or to move in a seasonal way.

I am going to close off now because I have covered the ground. I could tell the House about our record again and again. We will put our record up against the record of the other Parties in the House. We are proud of what we have done. We have not done enough. More must be done. Agriculture is important. However, when it is done, it will be this Government that will do it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I represent an urban constituency, but I do not hesitate to participate in the debate because many of the people I represent are railway workers, farm machinery industry workers, oil workers, truck drivers, and dairy workers. They know from experience that their welfare depends upon a prosperous agricultural industry.

When farmers suffer, they suffer. If there is a drought or a flood, there are no crops. If the price farmers receive for their crops is not enough for them to make a living, then my constituents suffer.

What is happening to farmers? They are efficient producers. They are as efficient as any in the world. We must ask ourselves why they are in trouble. It is not because they have failed. They are in trouble because of the tremendous subsidies which the United States Government pays to its farmers and which the Governments of countries belonging to the European Economic Community pay to their farmers.

The Government is on the right track when it tries to persuade the American Government and the Governments of the countries belonging to the European Economic Community to stop the insane levels of subsidy. However, the Government is kidding itself—and it is certainly kidding farmers—if it thinks that the subsidies paid by these Governments will be reduced very much in the next short while.

The farmers of this country are in trouble, Mr. Speaker. No member of the New Democratic Party who has spoken in the debate today has said that the Conservative Government has done nothing to help the grain farmers of western Canada. We know, and the farmers know, that the Government produced a deficiency payment of $1 billion. I do not have time today to debate why the Government produced that payment or whether it was pure coincidence that the Government did that in the midst of a Saskatchewan election, but the Government did produce it. What we say and what the farmers are saying is that that one shot payment is just not enough.

What is the situation of our farmers, Mr. Speaker? Let me quote from the Winnipeg Free Press of a week ago, April 21, dealing with the decision of the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) to reduce the initial payment by 18 per cent. The paper reported that decision as follows: "Prairie grain farmers will receive a record $705 million payment to offset an 18 per cent drop in initial prices, Wheat Board Charlie Mayer announced yesterday. It is the second straight year prices for wheat, oats and barley sold by the Board have dropped. The University of Manitoba agricultural economist Darryl Croft said increased funding will not offset the low prices set by the Board. He said that prices in government funding, while realistic, are disappointing to all farmers who rely on grain sales for their income". I could quote further. Then the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced that he would terminate the moratorium on farm credit foreclosures. The following is the way The Globe and Mail reported that in yesterday's newspaper. I want to quote from part of the The Globe and Mail's report because of the claims of the Minister of Agriculture and of the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) that farmers were satisfied, were happy, with the Government's decision with regard to the reduction in the initial price and with regard to the finishing off of the foreclosure program. Here is what The Globe and Mail reports in yesterday's issue "Garfield Stevenson, President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, said that the termination of the moratorium will cause a further decline in the market value of farm land. It is completely irresponsible and just not acceptable. I thought the Minister had more on the ball than this". I see the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark) here. Then The Globe and Mail also quotes the President of Keystone Agricultural Producers, an organization which represents all the farm producers in Manitoba. This is what The Globe said: "Jack Penner, President of the Manitoba Keystone Agricultural Producers said termination of the farm credit moratorium will make it more difficult for farmers to get loans from banks and other lenders. At this time of year many farmers are trying to borrow money to purchase fuel, seed, fertilizer and chemicals for the coming crop season. A farmer needs a lot more cash at this time of the year than at any other time of the year. This is an extremely unfortunate time".

Maybe Members will say that the two newspapers misquoted or took out of context what the farm leaders said. Let me put on the record part of a letter sent yesterday which was addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) by the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, Mr. Stevenson. "The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool believes that the rural way of life and related service industries are in jeopardy. We specifically recommend (1) that programs be immediately developed through federal and provincial co-operation to keep families on their farms in productive capacities. (2) that early consideration be given to the acute need for a substantial deficiency payment for the 1987-88 crop year. (3) that the Government continue its efforts to restore sanity in the international grain market".

Let me go back for a second to what farmers are saying about deficiency payments. They say that they want early consideration. They want a substantial deficiency payment not for last year's crop year but for the 1987-88 crop year.

Last week the President of Keystone Agricultural Producers, Mr. Jack Penner, a good friend of the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board, wrote to the Prime Minister. Here is part of what he wrote: "On behalf of grain producers in Manitoba, we call on your Government to announce as soon as possible an intention to introduce a similar program for the 1987-88 crop year with support levels at least equivalent to those under the 1986 program. We feel strongly that any such additional program should be based simply on acreages to keep the production neutral. The farm financial crisis is so serious that we feel action must be taken prior to the end of April to assure grain farmers in the business community that the federal Government is supportive".

He goes on to say, "A second important step should be a bold new initiative through the Farm Credit Corporation to save thousands of commercial farms from insolvency. In addition to new loan funds at affordable rates, the FCC should become a full service lender to the farm community. This we feel will provide the assurances required now by the farm community in times when other lending institutions are threatening to withdraw services".

I find it very strange that when Members on this side of the House raise these kinds of questions and make these kinds of suggestions we are told that we are being alarmist and that we are making the situation worse. We are told that farmers are satisfied, that they are quite happy with the Government. I happen to believe that when the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool speaks, when the head of Keystone Agricultural Producers speaks, they know what their farmers need. Obviously we can see just by reading from those two letters that they are far from satisfied with what this Government has done. We are always accused of being wild-eyed radicals and the things that we say are said for partisan advantage.

I found some very interesting information in a January issue of the Western Report.

Mr. Benjamin: Another socialist magazine.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not know of a more right wing free enterprise publication that is printed in Canada. Let me read a couple of paragraphs from this issue. Here is the situation of an Alberta farmer, from a province which has been represented for so many years by nothing but Conservative Members of Parliament.

Mr. Benjamin: And what did it get them?

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, what did it get them? Let me illustrate what it got them from this issue of the Western Report. In 1970, Marvin Dahl, 47, he joined his father, Clifford, on the 50-year old family farm 12 miles south of the ranch. The younger Dahl is now trying to pay off half of a $600,000 debt by selling 640 acres. He would like to sell to his son Richard, a hired hand until the faltering economy forced his lay-off.

• (0200)

Richard's yearly loan payments on such a purchase would be about $27,000 and, with annual operating costs of at least $35,000, he could not make ends meet. Marvin says it would take 15 uninterrupted years of profitable farming to turn the Dahl operation around. He is not hopeful. Neither is his 85-year old still-working daddy who absolutely loves farming. I think it is very painful for him to sell off a piece of land.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Are you ashamed to read such a thing?

Mr. Orlikow: Is it a shame to read such a thing?

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Are you ashamed?

Mr. Orlikow: I think it is a tragedy that that kind of thing happens in Canada.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): And you make this happen.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that I made this happen. This Party to which I belong has never been in federal Government in this country. It was the Conservative Party which promised the farmers of Canada that if elected, it would bring in programs which would help solve the problems of the farmers. In fact, the problems are worse than they have ever been.

We heard from Conservative Members and from the Minister that we are exaggerating the difficulties. The same article indicates that the Alberta Agricultural Development Corporation estimates that from 770 to 850 Alberta farmers exited their operations in 1986, including almost 400 who went into either receivership or bankruptcy. That is the same number as was recorded in all of Canada during the 1960s and the 1970s.

An agricultural economist from Lethbridge has said that about 5 per cent of some 7,000 farmers in his area are leaving every year and he predicts that if the economic climate does not improve, the region could lose up to 30 per cent of its farmers over the next two years. Those would be the ones he considered to be in serious financial difficulty, mostly young men.

That is the situation which is facing farmers, particularly in western Canada. What goes along with those economic difficulties are tremendous psychological and emotional problems. Studies done by two professors of Brandon University have revealed that stress symptoms such as headaches, marital problems and irritability were three or four times more prevalent in the average farmer than in an RCMP officer three days after being involved in a shooting. It is not surprising to hear of these kinds of reports when we know the difficulties farmers are experiencing all across Canada.

Mr. Holtmann: That's Charlie Mayer right there, Maclean's magazine, you want to see it, as a farmer.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Benjamin: You should have that crutch for your brains.

Mr. Orlikow: I know it's late and I suppose the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) is getting tired, but I would suggest that he observe the rules of the House and stay in his own seat.

Mr. Holtmann: I can't walk by here, seriously? Yes, I can.

Mr. Orlikow: We are calling for at the very least an immediate government commitment to provide Canadian grain farmers with the guarantee that total incomes received for crops being planted now, the 1987-88 crop year, will equal those of last year. It would cost between $1.5 and $2 billion. We also ask that such assistance be available and known to farmers, not just for one year but for the next three or four years so that farmers will know the problems they face.

We know that the Government is working on the international front to bring peace to world grain markets. We hope it succeeds. However, even with luck, we know that this will take a few years. There will be no quick fix because the Americans and Europeans are not ready for it.

I have already said that the Government has provided assistance to the farm sector in this last year. The Government says it has consulted with farm organizations but if I understood what the letters from the President of the Saskatchewan Pool Elevators and the President of Keystone Agricultural Producers were saying, the Government may have consulted with them but it certainly did not listen to them.

We say that government assistance, though significant, has simply been inadequate. Even while the Government provides assistance with one hand, it takes it away with the other. The Conservative Government has increased taxes, service fees, freight rates and a host of other direct and indirect costs to farmers. The Government should not—

Mr. Holtmann: Here's a couple more for you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That should not be done in the House.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, could you have the Sergeant-at-Arms remove this idiot?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has the floor.

Mr. Benjamin: Get out of here.

Mr. Holtmann: Try and get me out of here.

Mr. Orlikow: The Government should announce a deficiency program for the coming crop year now. It should not have lifted the moratorium as it did and it should not have done so until it had addressed the broad question of farm debt, which now amounts to about $25 billion across Canada. Much of it is still held at the high interest rates with which farmers had to deal during the Liberal regime.

The Government has said that it cannot afford to do more for farmers. We remember that the Government was able to find $1 billion to save a bank. We remember that the Government recently allocated $350 million to help small oil companies. We do not object to that. We know that the Government permitted a $500 million tax break for the purchasers of Gulf Canada. We know that the purchasers of Dome will probably get $2 billion in tax credits. We know that the banks were permitted to loan several billions of dollars to keep Massey-Ferguson going. We know that the Government has been able to find hundreds of millions of dollars to help modernize a paper plant in eastern Canada. We do not object to all of this but we say that if the Government was able to find that kind of money for those things, the Government can and must do much more than it has done for farmers. After all, they are the backbone of western Canada and there have been limits to what the Government has been willing to do. We say that has not been good enough.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to join in this debate which focuses on a very important problem facing our economy at this time. I would be remiss if I did not compliment the Hon. Member who just spoke, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), for a very reasonable and responsible contribution to the debate.

I think it is important that Canadians be reminded again of the crisis that is facing Canadian grain producers. It is important also that Canadians understand that the mover of the motion which brought about this debate and his Party do not have a monopoly on concern for the farm community or for Canadian agriculture. The fact is that this Government, in spite of the legacy of past debt which hampers it, has made an unprecedented response to agriculture and particularly to the hard-pressed grains sector.

I believe prairie grain farmers understand very well that the problems they face are caused by factors that lie beyond our borders. The disastrous grain trade war that is going on between the European Economic Community and the United States, both economic superpowers which are determined to retain and enhance their share of the world grain export market no matter the cost, is such a factor.

Both the common market and the Americans are subsidizing their farmers considerably on wheat production and then dumping that production on the world market at virtually any price through export enhancement programs. In the result, Canada, which is heavily export dependent, in fact exporting 80 per cent of its wheat production, and with a population of 25 million, is facing unfair competition from the EEC which has a population base of 330 million and exports perhaps 20 per cent of its production. Of course, the Americans have a population base of some 250 million and an enormously larger treasury. Obviously it is extremely difficult for Canada to match the treasuries of western Europe and the U.S.

Canadian farmers know this. I believe the great majority of them feel the response of this Government has been fair and reasonable. However, I have a fear that there may be some misunderstanding in some of the urban areas of Canada. I hear rumblings of disquiet over what some urban dwellers appear to perceive as very handsome payments being made to the farm community. There are stories in the press that the average amount of government payments to farmers is in the area of $25,000 to $30,000 in cash each year. One hears mutterings of discontent about this from those in urban areas who do not understand the importance of the agricultural sector to this country.

I think it is extremely important that in this debate we outline again the seriousness of the plight facing grain farmers. As a Member from Saskatchewan I would like to give some figures. They will relate solely to the Province of Saskatchewan. This information has been given to me by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and Statistics Canada.

Total farm receipts in the 1986 calendar year, crop, livestock and other, was in the area of $4.1 billion. Operating expenses were $2.8 billion, depreciation $674 million, leaving a net realized farm income of some $636 million, down 9 per cent from 1985. At first blush, $636 million in net income might sound pretty good, but the fact is that this is divided up among approximately 66,000 farmers in Saskatchewan. The average net income in 1986 per farm was in the area of $9,600, representing a return on capital and a payment for labour. Out of that sum obviously the farm family must not only meet its everyday living expenses such as food, clothing, heat, utilities and so on, but also pay the principal on loan payments. By way of comparison, the minimum wage in Saskatchewan at $4.50 an hour, based on a 40-hour week, returned some $960, obviously without the kind of intensive capital investment that the average farmer has made.

I should point out that these revenue figures include contributions from the federal Government of considerable magnitude. In 1986 there was crop drought assistance of $71 million, under federal-provincial crop insurance some $120 million, the federal farm fuel tax rebates accounted for another $43 million, and the western grain stabilization accounted for $450 million.

The fact is that without these federal programs farm income in Saskatchewan for 1986 would have been a negative figure. Projections for 1987 point to gross farm receipts of $4.2 billion, operating expenses of $2.7 billion, depreciation of $678 million, leaving net realized income of $849 million or around $12,500 per farm. That is up 33 per cent from 1986. Federal government payments contributing to this gross farm income in Saskatchewan for 1987 include $415 million under the special grains program, roughly $50 million in fuel rebates, and $382 million being Saskatchewan's share of the interim western grain stabilization payment, and those cheques are now in the mail with more to come. By June the federal contribution to the Saskatchewan grain sector will be in excess of $850 million. That equals the entire projected net income in farming in Saskatchewan for 1987.

While this is going on the equity position is eroding. In 1984 the average capital investment was some $460 an acre. The average farm size in Saskatchewan is around 1,000 acres. There is an average capital investment of $460,000 in land, machinery and equipment. I know that some may find these figures rather tiresome but I think it is important at some stage in this rather lengthy debate that up-to-date figures go into the record in order to try and illustrate the impact of government assistance in turning around, indeed in keeping afloat the farm sector in Canada at this time.

The latest figures for 1985 indicate an erosion of equity as capital investment dropped to $420 an acre as a result of falling land prices. Undoubtedly the 1986 figures, when they are available, will indicate a further diminution of land values and a further erosion of equity. That represents a brief summary of farm income and equity positions in Saskatchewan. It is an indication of the importance of the federal response.

The mover of this debate cited lower grain prices, the lifting of the FCC moratorium, and the matter of deficiency payments for the next crop year as reasons for the debate. We all know that the initial price for No. 1 wheat in 1985-86 was $4.35 a bushel. It fell in the current year to $3.54 a bushel, and for the next crop year, 1987-88, it will drop to $2.99 a bushel. Canadian farmers also know, as do opposition Members, that this disastrous decline was caused by the subsidy war originating beyond our borders.

In order for Canada to retain its traditional share of the world export market it is necessary that the Canadian Wheat Board lower its prices in order to meet world competition. That is the reality. The Canadian Wheat Board has its sensors in the market-place and recommends to the federal Government what the initial payment should be. Farmers know that quite clearly and I think opposition Members should understand it as well. One would hope they are not questioning the integrity of the Canadian Wheat Board in that regard.

Opposition Members lament the lifting of the FCC moratorium which has been in place for some 19 months. The fact is that the employees of the Farm Credit Corporation, and I am not talking about head office people in Ottawa but the people who work in the field and deal every day with farmers in Saskatchewan, tell me that of the farmers who are experiencing difficulty in making their payments, the good operators come in ahead of time. If they are having difficulty making payments, they come in and talk to their counsellors and discuss the problems and find ways to overcome the difficulties. The FCC counsellors also say, unfortunately, that there is a small minority of borrowers in difficulty who tend not to co-operate, who tend to avoid the situation. They have to be called in or badgered and some suggest they hide behind the moratorium.

What the FCC people tell me is that the moratorium might as well be lifted because it is not going to make any difference at all insofar as a responsible and co-operative farmer is concerned. There are ways of assisting those people and they are being used at the present time and will continue to be used. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) indicated earlier in this debate the possibility of some further initiatives and alternatives.

The FCC field people do make the suggestion that perhaps the commodity-based loan criteria of equity might be changed somewhat in order that existing FCC clients whose equity has eroded might still be able to qualify for a commodity-based loan. I think it is a sensible suggestion and I urge the Minister of Agriculture to seriously consider the proposal.

The Opposition is asking for assurance of a deficiency payment for the next crop year which begins August 1, 1987, and ends July 31, 1988. We are 15 months away from the end of that crop year. One might ask whether they do this in order to gain some political points, whether they would expect the Government to do this without knowing all of the factors; the size and quality of the crop, world prices in the future, and conditions in other countries.

They ask this with the full knowledge that $705 million in interim payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Act is already in the mail and the fact that there will be another $700 million paid to Canadian grain and oilseed producers in the next month under the final instalment of the Special Grains Assistance Program. They know, too, that last fall the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a commitment in the Throne Speech that the Government would spare no efforts in protecting the interests of Canadian farmers and that that commitment was followed up with a $1 billion Canada Grains Assistance Program.

Actions speak louder than words. I believe that most western farmers know that the Government is solidly behind them, not with the empty rhetoric which characterized the previous Government, but with action, programs and cash.

I would be less than honest if I did not indicate that I was somewhat disgusted by the antics of some members of the Liberal Party earlier this evening. I find repugnant their smug response that somehow it is the fault of the Government that world grain prices have dropped and their temerity in suggesting that the Government is insensitive to the Canadian grain sector.

This comes from a Liberal Party which brought capital gains to western agriculture in 1971 and initiated the infamous LIFT program which brought 23 per cent floating interest rates to Canadian agriculture in the early 1980s which amounted to a time capsule, a delayed reaction which is being released even at this time. Interest rates were the root cause of the debt problems of many Canadian farmers.

The Leader of that Liberal Government said, "Why should I sell your wheat?" During the good years in this country that Party not only failed to balance the books but in fact went head over heels in debt for magnificent and outstanding programs such as Katimavik. In the good times the Liberal Party saddled the nation with a debt of such magnitude that the interest charges on it now consume virtually one-third of federal Government revenue.

This massive debt servicing requirement makes it extremely difficult for the Government to be able to respond to the urgent needs of Canadian agriculture without running up the deficit further, increasing inflationary pressures, and putting upward pressure on interest rates which can only harm the farm community. That, I think, represents the Liberal legacy. What do they offer today? A 17-page report, Directions for the West, which the Winnipeg Free Press quite properly describes as "pathetic and empty".

I want to touch briefly on some of the initiatives which the Government has taken with regard to Canadian agriculture, some large and some small, which I believe indicate that the Government has paid attention to prairie grain farmers, initiatives which contradict in a very real and concrete way the allegations put forward by the mover of this debate.

For all practical purposes the Government got rid of capital gains immediately upon taking office, the fulfillment of a campaign commitment made when land prices were higher. The Government instituted a program of farm fuel tax rebates which, in effect, has eliminated federal taxes on farm fuels. It changed federal-provincial crop insurance to increase coverage without premium increase.

It amended the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act to tidy it up and eliminate the need for the landlord's signature to be obtained in order that a tenant can secure cash advances. It amended the Western Grain Stabilization Act to provide for timely interim payments each spring in time for seeding. These were sizeable payments; $580 million in 1986 and $705 million this spring.

The Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) today, or I guess I should say yesterday, in Question Period noted that the Western Grain Stabilization Fund is presently in deficit. It has been exhausted and in view of the fact that the accumulated past contributions by both the Government and producers have run out, the fund will have to be replenished with new money. This may well be the time to open up the Act to enable the approximately 17 per cent of western producers who are not part of that program to enter. I believe the Minister indicated that he is certainly prepared to examine that situation.

There is the situation of the No. 5 Durum which a number of producers on the Prairies have and, unfortunately, cannot get rid of other than by mixing with hay for animal feed. In the circumstances they have a crop and therefore cannot secure crop insurance. They cannot contribute to western grain stabilization because they have not sold the product. I wonder, as do producers, whether there is some mechanism by which contributions to the Western Grain Stabilization Program might be made in such circumstances. That is the type of problem which all Members in this House, regardless of their partisan stripe, ought to try to address themselves to for the benefit of agriculture generally.

The Government supported Canadian cattlemen in their successful countervail application against European Economic Community beef. It instituted Debt Review Boards which I believe are generally working well. It instituted the commodity-based loan program, an innovative and experimental approach to existing Farm Credit Corporation mortgage clients. As I mentioned earlier, I think there may be room there to ask for consideration of changing the equity requirements.

I should compliment the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) who noted an ill-conceived heavy equipment over-allowance special audit being performed by the bureaucrats, a program which threatened the farm community with the spectre of field auditors from Revenue Canada examining every single machine deal which has taken place in the last four or five years and trying to substitute their idea of the fair market value of that piece of equipment for that fairly arrived at in the market-place between the dealer and the farmer.

After reviewing that situation in detail and noting that farmers are already subject to the same kind of audit procedures as is every other taxpayer, the Minister believed that there was indeed no need for a special over-allowance program targeted at the farm community. As a result, he has responded to the representations of Members on all sides of this House and cancelled the program.

For years we witnessed the almost annual shutdown in the flow of grain from the farm gate to the ports through stoppages at Vancouver and Thunder Bay. There is presently a Private Member's Bill, Bill C-244, coming before this House, the intent of which is to substitute a process of binding conciliation for the strike or lock-out mechanism. I urge Members of this House to support that Bill.

The Western Canadian Wheat Growers and United Grain Growers have already indicated support. Perhaps the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool which is, quite properly, quick to ask for assistance for farmers, might consider publicly getting behind such a Bill which would help to maintain Canada's reputation as a dependable supplier of quality wheat and would also enable farmers to avoid those inevitable demurrage charges which result from these stoppages. Certainly many pool members individually want this legislation and I suggest that if the NDP are genuine about wanting to help the farm community they will get behind an initiative of this nature.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that interest rates generally are down 4 per cent as a result of the prudent approach of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), as a result of downsizing of Government which, incidentally, has been battled every step of the way by the Opposition in this House, in spite of low world oil, grain, potash and uranium prices owing to factors beyond our borders, and in spite of the monumental deficit build-up of the past.

Against all odds the Minister of Finance has been able to find ways to service that awful debt, to help out the agriculture and energy sectors, and still reduce the growth in the deficit. The result of that is 700,000 new jobs and 500,000 people in the workforce.

Clearly, the answer to the problems here is $6 wheat and the solution lies internationally, beyond our borders. In the meantime, producers can rest assured that the commitment in last year's Throne Speech that the Government will spare no effort to assist the farm community during these difficult times will be met. There is no question that western farmers and all Canadian farmers will know, in terms of actual cash received, and action rather than words, that the Government will live up to its commitment.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the debate tonight. I was impressed with some speeches, amused with some, and disgusted by others.

I say to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) with the greatest respect, that if there is anyone who is in no position to complain about what is happening in agriculture today it is the Liberal Party.

Mr. Thacker: Don't wake him up.

Mr. Benjamin: That is all right, they were like that then.

There are not many of us left here, but I am one of those who had to suffer through operation LIFT at the hands of the Liberal Party and Otto Lang. I saw the abandonment of 3,000 miles of railway track in the prairie provinces at the hands of Otto Lang and the Liberals.

When they introduced the Grain Stabilization Bill, I can modestly say that I helped four farmers take the Liberal Government to court where we won the case and $100 million. The ultimate irony is when we consider who led the fight and introduced the Bill to get rid of the statutory grain rates. It was the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), who had the unmitigated gall to get up and cry about the high cost of production for farmers. If he had at least the courtesy to blush, I would have accepted his conversion on the road to his own Damascus. However, he did not have the courtesy to do so.

As well, there is a Senator travelling around southern Saskatchewan on a mission called "Journey for Justice". In October, 1983, we had a reception here to deal with retaining the Crow's Nest Pass rate for grain producers. Three hundred farmers from Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba gathered in the Railway Committee Room and asked the Hon. Senator if he would resign from the Senate if the Bill to eliminate the statutory grain rate was passed. The Senator left the meeting. I do not believe we need to hear any more from Liberals because they are the ones who are responsible for this dilemma.

I want to deal with the Party that is perpetuating the sins of omission and commission. Since Confederation, grain producers have only wanted what they believe is rightfully theirs, which is a price for their product which provides a return for their cost of production and their cost of living. They have never asked for more than that.

Grain producers have never been able to set their own price for their production yet a union member can bargain for his wages in an attempt to meet his cost of living. If he is not satisfied he can go on strike.

Professionals can set their fees to recover their costs and maintain their standard of living, as can Members of Parliament. However, as soon as a farmer asks for a return that meets his cost of production and provides a half decent living the Government decides to lift the moratorium on his mortgage. The concern is not that the Government will seize the land of one farmer or 500 farmers, but that it is prepared to lift a moratorium on their mortgages at the FCC. It means that the Government does not give a damn.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): That is not true.

Mr. Benjamin: It means that it is not prepared to provide the same standard of living for agricultural producers as it is prepared to provide for every other sector of our economy that can set its price and recover its cost or shut down.

Agriculture is so fundamental to our country that it cannot shut down.

There has been much said in the press about the fact that Mexico, Poland and Brazil owe the banks of Europe and North America tens of billions of dollars. There is a consortium of eight banks—six American and two Canadian—which are owed $6 billion by Poland, Mexico and other countries. Furthermore, a consortium of six airlines in North America owe those banks $6 billion.

One does not often read amusing stories in the financial pages of The Globe and Mail, but I was amused to read the interview with the vice-president of the Chase Manhattan Bank, the spokesman for this consortium of banks. When asked if he was worried about the money owed to the banks by Mexico, Brazil and Poland, he said: "I know that six months from now Poland will still be there. However, I am not so sure about those six airlines".

When we apply this reasoning to the Farm Credit Corporation, we see that the land stays, the bank stays, but the farmers must leave. There is something fundamentally wrong in a system that allows us to bail out other countries, airlines, railroads, automobile companies by writing down their debts and writing off interest charges but when it comes to farmers—

Mr. Shields: And we can pay the Crow's Nest Pass rate to the railroads under the direction of the NDP.

• (0240)

Mr. Benjamin: My hon. friend should either sit down or fall down.

I find that double standard unsupportable and I think my hon. friends opposite will agree that there is a double standard. The land stays there, the banks stay there, and the farmers have to leave. Every civilization going back to the Babylonian destroyed itself when it destroyed its agricultural community, and that is what we are in the process of doing.

The Government talks about lifting a moratorium and tells us it will not review more than 50 farmers a month. Is that not nice of the Government? It could review 100 farmers a month or 500 farmers. After all, there are upwards of 7,000 in them in hock up to their eyeballs. But it was very nice of the Government to say it would only do 50 farmers a month. I thought that was sort of half decent. Fifty farmers a month is only 600 a year. If we give this Government another couple of years, that will only be 1,200 or 1,300 more farmers who have been called up on the carpet.

Why does this Government not say to the farmers: "You cannot possibly pay the principal and interest on the loan on your land and machinery, therefore, we will cancel the mortgage. You get the land. You pay a lease fee which covers the minimum interest charges and land taxes and it is yours"? It stays in the family. It does not go to anyone else. Banks do not know how to run farms. Why does the Government not do that? I hesitate to mention the word but I have to bring it up again, it is called "banking land". It is called a "land bank". It is the means to preserve our rural communities and family farms. It is not just farmers, it is every bulk dealer, corner grocery store, postmaster, local school, curling rink, you name it, in every province of this country, which is at stake. So it ain't just wheat and it ain't just farmers.

The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) talked about initial prices. I want to remind you gentlemen, when he accuses us of attacking the Canadian Wheat Board, that he is the man, as Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board in 1960 who removed feed grains from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. He was the one who started the attack on orderly marketing in the Canadian Wheat Board, and that was endorsed and continued by the Liberal Party when it took over, which means there ain't no difference. Let us bring interest charges under the Farm Credit Corporation at or below the bank rate. Let us not only put in place a moratorium, let us say to all the family farmers in this country—

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): What is a family farm?

Mr. Benjamin: This fellow wants to know what a family farm is. Would the Chair give me a few minutes extra time so I can explain?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Tell me what a family farm is.

Mr. Benjamin: This is the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and he does not know what a family farm is.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): I am waiting.

Mr. Benjamin: That is a hell of a place for him to get an education. A family farm is a farm which is operated by a family. Will that suffice? Does the hon. gentleman need more of an explanation?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): No size limit?

Mr. Benjamin: What has that got to do with it?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): I do not know, I am asking you.

Mr. Benjamin: What the hell are you doing over there?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Incorporated?

Mr. Benjamin: What is the difference? That just shows you the mentality of these right-wing, private enterprise, bottom line Tories who say it is all right if you have a family farm but if you cannot make a buck, tough cookie.

Government policy tells farmers that the Government will not defend them against world markets. It expects the family farmers to pick up the costs of competing with other countries. We are into a war and the last thing we need to do is lift a moratorium on farm mortgages. That is the last thing we need to do. In fact, it is not an advance payment when they announce initial prices and the Hon. Member from Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain is totally wrong. That is the price the farmer receives when he delivers his grain. It is not an advance payment.

An advance payment is not dictated by the Canadian Wheat Board. It is dictated by the Treasury Board and the Government of Canada, and no one else. The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain and my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Kindersley—Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) who is sitting there grinning like something else, try to peddle that nonsense. The fact is that the Canadian Wheat Board wanted to set initial prices based on cost of production to get some kind of reasonable return, and the Treasury Board and the Government of Canada said to lower the initial prices.

What is needed in addition to not cancelling this moratorium on mortgages is for the Government of Canada to say to the Canadian Wheat Board: "You have an initial price. Tell the grain producers of western Canada that we will provide a final payment".

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): How high should it be?

Mr. Benjamin: It should be the cost of production which has to be not less than $5.50 or $6 a bushel. I will not argue about 50 cents. That is what it has to be. That will cost at least $1.5 billion minimum. That is what is required just for the grain producers. In addition to that, all the other producers who have Farm Credit Corporation mortgages, whether they live in Atlantic Canada, Quebec, Ontario or British Columbia, are also entitled to their cost of production on their prices.

Mr. Shields: How about the farmers in the Territories?

Mr. Benjamin: My hon. friend from British Columbia—no, that is not where he is from. He is from somewhere. I wish he would at least sit in his seat. Wherever he is from, we are going to send him back.

There are some farms, by the way, for the edification of my hon. friend, near Yellowknife and Whitehorse. They grow great vegetables up there. But rather than pay attention to the vegetable who is sitting there, I want to conclude, if Hon. Members are lucky—

• (0250)

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Cancel all FCC mortgages?

Mr. Benjamin: No. I say you place a moratorium on all Farm Credit Corporation mortgages. You put a moratorium on the whole works. Those farmers who are viable will pay up. Farmers are honest people. They will not fall into arrears. Why do Members opposite not trust the people instead of the banks?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): And the ones in arrears, do we give them the land?

Mr. Shields: No. He wants a federal land bank. That is what he is after.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, could I have another half hour to teach these dummies something? In the dirty thirties the Tories were in power followed by the Liberals. But it was the CCF who had to bail out Saskatchewan. They told us that money did not grow on gooseberry bushes. Who was it that victimized farmers with seed grain debts, relief debts and property tax debts in the dirty thirties and early forties? It took a war and a CCF Government to clear that situation up. But we declared a moratorium. We cancelled those bloody debts. We told the banks to go to hell. We brought in a farm security Act which did not allow anyone to take a home quarter of land and a farmer's home away from him.

I want to tell my hon. friend opposite that he should get the courage and the intestinal fortitude, to put it nicely, to say to the financial institutions, including a government financial institution, that no longer will we allow our agricultural producers to receive less than their costs of production. That has to be a minimum goal of any Government of any political stripe. If that means higher costs for consumers it means that we will offset it for old age pensioners and the poor in other ways. And the rest of us can darn well pay our share of the costs of that agricultural production. We must stop preventing the one and only sector—although I guess we could add the fishermen to that—in all our economy from receiving a price that covers its costs of production.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): How about forestry?

Mr. Benjamin: They have always had that. They never missed on that, never. Agricultural producers and fishermen are about the only two sectors of the economy which have never been able to institute a price that covers their costs of production. That is all we are asking.

I want to compliment the Government for what it has done thus far. It has done a lot more than the Liberals did, which is not a hell of a lot to brag about. It has done better than the Liberals. The Government is like the two guys out fishing. The boat tipped over and one of them hollered: "Help, I can't swim". The other one said: "This is no time to brag about it".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the House be inclined to give an extra one minute to the Hon. Member?

Some Hon. Members: No way!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member conclude his speech immediately, please.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you and the gentleman standing at your side for your courtesy and patience. I have not quite finished. I am sorry that my friends opposite do not want to hear more of what I have to say.

[Translation]

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak in this debate after the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). When he started his comments, the Hon. Member told us that he had been both amazed and disappointed when listening to the speeches made here in the House this evening. Mr. Speaker, I was expecting a Member with the extensive experience of the Hon. Member for Regina West to produce a truly excellent speech. Unfortunately, we were treated to a flood of verbiage totally devoid of ideas, something the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is particularly good at. Mr. Speaker, it takes incredible nerve to ask for an emergency debate on the situation of western grain producers. Nerve, however, is something of which the Hon. Member for Regina West and his seatmate from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) have an abundant supply. Mr. Speaker, this is not an emergency because many western grain producers are in intensive care and others are enjoying extended care. With the kind of policies we had for the past 20 years, certain producers went from emergency to intensive care, others to extended care, some years ago, nevertheless, our socialist friends have changed the words to their tune and now keep repeating this Government is not doing enough.

Mr. Speaker, whatever we do, it will never be enough, and there are producers, not only in western Canada but across this country, who have gone from the emergency stage to the terminal phase. Their financial health has deteriorated to the point where treatment would be to no avail. They are doomed. The tragic part is that we got into this situation as a result of the socialists being hand-in-glove with the Liberals. Mr. Speaker, this crowd of unfrocked capitalists never had to manage a single dollar of taxpayers' money and never will. They will never have a chance to run this country. The closest the Hon. Member for Regina West has come to a western farmer is in his air-conditioned Cadillac with the windows rolled up tight. That close.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have not paid for my last car, let alone drive a Cadillac. I am a socialist from Saskatchewan. I do not have a Cadillac and I have never had one.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, those unfrocked capitalists, as I said before, probably leave their Cadillacs in Ottawa when they go out west. And if they don't have a Cadillac, they borrow or rent one.

Mr. Speaker, our socialist friends can go on with their campaigns to win members. They were campaigning all over the country, not just in Western Canada but also in Quebec: operation charm. Well, moral victories will be about as close as they will get to power. Between elections, their operation charm, led by the kind of leader they have now, a leader who—

Mr. Speaker, when one has no responsibility for running the country, no administrative concerns, one can afford to make promises and bend socialist principles so far as to promise the capitalist banks will be making the same enormous profits they are making now. The banks are making these profits because our unfrocked capitalists, our Sunday socialists supported the Liberals for so many years. Mr. Speaker, you will never see one of these socialists rise in the House to support one of the Conservative Government's policies. Never! That is because their support comes from the west. There are no Liberals in the west. There are Conservatives. So how can we logically expect our Sunday socialists to support a good policy introduced by the Conservative Government?

Mr. Speaker, they can go on harping on the fact that it is not enough, but that is not going to stop us from trying to correct 20 years of irresponsible administration by a Liberal Party supported by its socialist bedfellows. Mr. Speaker, that is not going to stop us from fulfilling our election promises. It will not prevent us from further developing our agricultural industry and trying to keep it on a sound basis, to improve the situation and do everything we can to help those who are in financial difficulty today.

Earlier I was listening to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) giving us a lecture. Mr. Speaker, I shall refrain. I will not bore you with another lecture. You have had enough tonight. It is past three o'clock in the morning. The Hon. Member recalled the case of the young farmer who had taken over the family farm from his father with a great deal of courage and goodwill and enthusiasm, and who was now facing tremendous financial problems. The Hon. Member was trying to impress western farmers with his knowledge of a situation that they know a lot more about than do our socialist friends.

But, Mr. Speaker, sitting here I found it hard to imagine that the accomplice of the Liberals would even dare before the House—indeed, Mr. Speaker, this is not a theater because, if a hockey game had been scheduled for this evening in western Canada, would our socialist friends have asked for an emergency debate? No way! But you know that the Edmonton Oilers have defeated the Winnipeg Jets. So, considering that Eastern and Central Canada had something to watch, like hockey games, they thought they would simply have to perform for their electors and others they are trying to woo. And they have managed to do just that.

Still, Mr. Speaker, I thought it was my responsibility to remind them that these sittings are doing them good only in between election campaigns. It will probably give them a roller-coaster image in public polls, but it will not lead them to power.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, because I know that many of my colleagues also have interesting comments to make, certainly more so than what we have heard so far from our colleagues opposite, I should like to remind our Liberal friends that the commitments of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are quite different from those of their former Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, who once told western grain producers: I am not going to sell your wheat.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, a Prime Minister who dares mouth such inanities has little in common with a man who had the courage to put on the economic summit agenda a topic like the economic problems facing farm producers, as Prime Minister Mulroney did in Tokyo.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for giving me this opportunity to set the record straight in the House. We simply could not sit still after listening to some of their remarks, there has to be a limit somewhere. I do not think I am exaggerating when I say that our socialists friends, this tiny group of unfrocked capitalists, have almost gone too far this evening.

• (0300)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Van De Walle): The Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie).

Mr. Holtmann: He is not a farmer, but he will do the best he can.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should begin by first addressing what has been said in jest by the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) about my not being a farmer. In many of the exchanges in the House, both in Question Period and in debate, I have been disturbed by the presumption—and I understand it to a degree because I think it is a natural tendency—that people who are not farmers by vocation or by occupation somehow have some diminished right to speak about agriculture. Today during Question Period certain members of the Opposition had a few remarks to make about my Leader in respect of the fact that he was not a farmer. I have seen that in the House since I came here in 1979. I want to say that I reject that.

I respect the knowledge which farmers have by virtue of the fact that they are farmers. Therefore, obviously they have a unique and important perspective on any debate when it comes to agriculture. However, the fact of the matter is that this is the House of Commons, this is Parliament. All of us are charged with the responsibility of being as informed, as reasonable, and as intelligent as we can about all issues before Parliament.

What would happen if we restricted a transportation debate to those people only who have had experience in the railways? What would happen if we restricted a health care debate to only people who were formerly nurses or doctors before coming to the House of Commons? I use these as examples. In that event surely we would not be able to do our jobs properly.

I simply ask Hon. Members, some of whom are farmers and some who are not, to respect the fact that even though some of us may not be farmers we have taken an interest in agriculture. In my own case—and I am not the agriculture critic or anything like that—I have taken an interest in agricultural matters, particularly from an environmental point of view, for many years.

I think these perspectives must be thrown into the mix whenever we are debating something. I hope that will be respected by Hon. Members.

I do not come from an agricultural family although my grandfather was a homesteader in Saskatchewan. We are not primarily a farm family; we are primarily a railroad family. When Members talk about the railways, I do not get up and say that because they do not have any carmen, machinists, switchmen, or hogheads in their families they do not have any right to comment on matters pertaining to railways. I think the same respect should be shown when it comes to other matters.

We all know that it is late. We have had some sharp exchanges tonight. We have also had what one might call, in a more negative way, partisan debate. Surely we all agree that it falls to the Opposition by virtue of the procedures of the House, not by virtue of anything else, to call for emergency motions. Obviously the Government does not call for an emergency debate; it is the Opposition which does that.

I hope it would be fair to say that all of us recognize that there is a crisis, indeed an emergency, in the agricultural sector. If it is not an emergency, it is at least a continuing crisis. Even though we may disagree with each other strongly, I think it is very useful for the House of Commons and for Members of Parliament to have it out about the issue, so to speak. The only problem I have with that is that there is a tendency in which we all engage—and I am not pointing fingers here, except to point fingers at all of us including myself—to want to ridicule the arguments of others or to have a laugh at some of the claims or policies espoused by various Members.

However, I hope we can all agree on two things, the first one being that there is a crisis. The Government itself acknowledges that. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) acknowledges it when he rightly claims that he is trying to put this matter on the agenda of various international meetings, both bilateral and multilateral ones. The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), and others acknowledge that we have a crisis. They may not agree with our analysis of the emergency or crisis, but they agree that there is a crisis. Certainly that should be common currency in the debate before us.

The other thing upon which we could agree is our mutual desire and commitment to solve the crisis or to reach some kind of solution however we might disagree about the solution.

I begin by saying that I do not doubt the commitment of many members of the government Party to trying to find a solution to the crisis now facing us in respect of agriculture. I do not think that we should get into impugning the motives of each other in respect of the particular crisis. I think we should have a real debate, and we have had some of that tonight.

That is what the House of Commons is for. I make a plea for Parliament being what Parliament should be, that is, a place where people of differing views who represent the people of Canada get together and debate, albeit in a lively fashion, but in a serious fashion, what might be some of the solutions to the serious problems faced by the country. One of the most serious problems which the country is facing is indeed the crisis in the agricultural sector.

I sometimes sense a problem, and I hope I will have the time to get into it. I hesitate to say it to a certain extent. There are two sides in this House and there are really only two sides to the debate, that is, that of the Conservatives and that of the New Democrats, because the Liberals went home a long time ago. They do not really care about western Canada or about the agricultural sector. I think it is fair to say that both the Conservatives and the New Democrats care in their own particular ways about the future of western Canada, even though we disagree sometimes with each other.

The one Liberal Member who has been here all night has just wandered back into the House. However, I think it is fair to say that we might both be open to the accusation that we are two sides of the same coin. We might be open to the accusation that the argument we carry on with each other about agriculture is within the limits of a certain understanding of agriculture and of Canada's place in the global agricultural economy that has grown up over the last 40 years, a place which many Canadians take for granted and regard as simply a fact of life.

I do not have the answers to the questions, but I hope I might be able to ask some of the right questions. I think that is what Canadians will be looking for, particularly farmers. I do not think farmers are particularly impressed by either side or by both sides of the House getting up and saying what they would do for farmers or what they have done for farmers. I think farmers and Canadians in general are looking, when it comes to agriculture and a lot of other questions, for who is asking the right questions. I think they are looking for, to use a phrase from a novel by Robert Heinlein, Stranger in a Strange Land, "who has Grokked on" to what is really going on in the agricultural sector.

In the time remaining I hope to ask some of the right questions. I hope in doing so that we begin to listen to each other in a way that we have not been doing all evening and in a way we are not in the habit of doing in the House. Surely there should be a way for us to arrive at, if not some common solution, some kind of description of the problem. A lot of talk has gone on here tonight about the family farm. The Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark) is not yet on the record. Everything he has had to say tonight so far has been from his seat.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): My turn is coming.

Mr. Blaikie: But he tells me that his turn is coming and that he will be on the record soon.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Don't go home too early.

Mr. Blaikie: He says, don't go home too early. I won't. I will be here until the last dog is hanged, not to refer to any other debate that is going on in the House, Mr. Speaker. What I hope to do is to raise some of the difficult questions. Just yesterday we had another emergency debate having to do with ownership, and a great debate, again primarily between the New Democrats and the Tories—

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Where are the Liberals?

Mr. Blaikie: —about the ownership of the Canadian energy sector. The debate was focused on the New Democrats' abhorrence of the fact that Dome Petroleum may be bought by an American multinational, and the Conservative Government's arguments that this is the best solution in the circumstances, et cetera. Fair enough, that is the debate. What we were talking about was the question of ownership. What we are talking about, when it comes to the question of the agricultural sector, is also a question of Canadian ownership and of who will own the land, not tomorrow and not even five years down the road. We can talk about all the statistics surrounding bankruptcies, et cetera, but we are really talking about whether or not in 50 or 100 years we can fairly forecast or speculate on whether the agricultural land in Canada at that time, either 50 or 100 years from now, will continue to be owned and farmed by families, by owner operators, by people, as opposed to institutions. I know that the Conservatives, some of them anyway for what I think are partisan political purposes, like to brand New Democrats as people who want to nationalize the land, and all this sort of thing. That simply is not the case, Mr. Speaker. I think there is a common commitment between the Conservatives and the New Democrats to individual ownership of farms.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Not to interrupt a fine speech, but would my hon. friend opposite permit one brief question?

Mr. Blaikie: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, why did the New Democratic Party, in the debate on the entrenchment of the Constitution, oppose the entrenchment of the right to property which would have guaranteed absolutely that people would have individual ownership of property for 10 years, 100 years or 1,000 years?

Mr. Blaikie: The Hon. Member raises an old favourite of his concerning property rights. He continues to ignore the fact that during the Constitution debate one of the main obstacles to entrenching property rights in the Constitution was the provinces of Canada, most of which had progressive Governments at that time. I do not make any apologies for the fact that the New Democratic Party at that time was opposed to the entrenchment of property rights because it is quite illusory for the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) to imagine that property rights have only to do with the rights of individual farmers. Property rights could well have to do with the rights of banks and multinational corporations and could well have to do with the rights of a great many other institutions which make claims about their property which are at odds with either the environmental, the social or the long-term well-being of either society as a whole or of regions of this country. I can imagine a great many situations in which the property rights of large and powerful institutions like the banks would be at odds with policies that various Governments might want to adopt from time to time for the very purpose of preserving individual ownership of land.

I ask the Hon. Member to consider that, but to note that one likes a certain degree of predictability in political debate. If there is one thing that is predictable in this House of Commons it is that in the course of my speeches about a variety of subjects the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills will get up and raise the matter of property rights. To the extent that I am a small "c" conservative and like some things to be permanent in this world, I welcome that intervention once again by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Thacker: Tell us more.

Mr. Blaikie: Tell us more about the small "c" conservative business. It seems to me that one of the ironies of Progressive Conservatives, politics in this day and age is that although certain values are espoused, and presumably authentically espoused, about the preservation of the family farm, of traditional values, of smaller communities, a rural way of life and all these sorts of things, one has to ask whether or not those are the primary, the fundamental values of the Progressive Conservative Party. When a Progressive Conservative Government has to choose between intervening in the market-place in order to preserve the economic and social structures and so nurture and enhance those values or of allowing the market-place to take its full effect, a certain kind of conceptual paralysis takes over Conservatives at that point. They are unwilling to do so, and I think this is part of the debate that is going on here tonight.

It is not a question of the internal commitment, at the feeling level, of Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament to preserving the family farm or preserving the rural way of life; it is a question of whether or not they have the capability, ideologically or philosophically, if you like, to imagine acceptable solutions to those problems. I would contend as a New Democrat that most of the solutions to these problems—and I do not pretend to know all of them but in my judgment, whether Progressive Conservatives want to hear it or not—will be interventionist in nature. They will require more than simply standing back from trends in the international market-place and simply trying to put out brush fires here and there or throwing a billion dollars here or having a program there. Part of what is involved will be the kind of intervention, the kind of reshaping of our agricultural economy, to preserve those values and to preserve the family farm, that most Progressive Conservatives will find unacceptable. That is the problem. Otherwise, it seems to me that what we are facing is a situation in which we will literally, over the course of time—perhaps not in the lifetime of very few people in this Parliament—have a return to a kind of feudalism where one of the very foundations on which this country was built, which was the widespread individual ownership of land, will have disappeared.

What I cannot understand for the life of me is why certain members of the Progressive Conservative Party cannot see the danger to the very things which I believe they genuinely cherish in not resisting trends which now exist in the agricultural market-place. I cannot for the life of me understand that.

I see that you are giving me the high sign, Mr. Speaker. I hope to touch for just a moment on some of the environmental questions which I think perhaps would take us a bit above or at least to a different dimension of the debate with respect to agriculture in Canada. With the permission of Hon. Members, perhaps I could be granted time beyond the normal time.

• (0330)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member a few more minutes to complete his speech?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the environment. Copies are available of the report of the World Commission on the Environment, the United Nations Commission headed by Norwegian Prime Minister, Gro Brundtland, dealing with the future of the world environment. One of the most pressing environmental questions the whole world must address is the question of agriculture.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): The right-to-farm legislation?

Mr. Blaikie: I am not sure what the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris is going on about but perhaps if he would give me a chance to explain what I am talking about, then when he gets his turn, he can tell us what he means by right-to-farm legislation.

In Canada, there is a tendency to see environmental problems as being primarily problems of trans-boundary air pollution, acid rain emissions either coming from the United States or from our own smelters and hydro plants or water pollution. Globally, one of the more pressing environmental problems is the disappearance of productive arable land. We have not faced up to that question here in Canada because I think many Canadians have been under the illusion for years that unlike other parts of the world, we live in a boundless environment, we can do what we want when we want and to the extent that we want with our environment.

When I was growing up and going to elementary school in the 1950s and early 1960s, the impression that was created among young Canadians was that Canada was a land of boundless resources and that the future lay in exploiting those resources to the fullest. We were given the impression that there really was no end to the exploitation of our natural resources. One of those resources is the soil of western Canada. We heard western Canada called the bread-basket of the world and so it was.

Mr. Gottselig: It still is.

Mr. Blaikie: So it is and so it could remain. However, it will have to be that bread-basket in a changing world.

When I grew up, the world was full of countries that were unable to feed themselves. This provided a demand for Canadian grain, a demand that in many respects does not exist any longer. It is not that the world does not need Canadian grain any longer, as the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) mentioned. Our grain economy has been based on providing grain to countries able to pay enough for grain that the production of it was made sustainable in Canada. We may be moving into a different era now, not only with respect to costs of production but also because most of the people in the world who need food cannot pay for it. There, of course, I am alluding to the question of world hunger. I do not propose to try to deal with that tonight but I think it is something that should be on our minds when dealing with grain production.

I wanted to touch on the question of soil erosion. I would call the attention of the House to the report on soil conservation prepared by the Standing Committees on Agriculture, and Fisheries and Oceans for the Senate of Canada.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Don't filibuster all night just because we gave you some extra time.

Mr. Blaikie: You can rest assured that I will not read the whole report since the Pages have gone home for the night and I do not have a glass of water. Reading from the beginning of the summary, the report indicates the following:

> Soil erosion may well be the most underrated yet most damaging natural resource problem of the 80s. Must we wait for crisis conditions before action is taken to safeguard our scarce and dwindling soil resource base?

There the report quotes the Soil Conservation Society of America, Ontario Chapter. I see Hon. Members are trying to bring my speech to a close. I will say what I have to say and then Hon. Members will have their chances as well.

We have been literally mining our soil. We have been treating it not as the renewable resource it should be but as if it were a gold mine or a nickel mine. We are taking away from it as much as we possibly can, as quickly as we possibly can, without having regard for the future. In doing so, we have developed attitudes toward production that have resulted in other environmentally destructive tendencies.

As the environment critic for the federal NDP, one of the things that has come to my attention has been the extent to which, by virtue of the system that is in place now, farmers are pressured into putting as much land into production as possible. This is a concern shared by groups like Ducks Unlimited, for instance, hardly a socialist organization. Not only is this pressure put on farmers but another pressure is put on the habitat of waterfowl through the environment. All I am saying is that everything is connected to everything else.

When we consider the economics of agriculture or for that matter the economics of anything else, we do not take into consideration the fact that we have to do more and more in order to get the same result. Input costs are going up astronomically, not only for agriculture but for forestry. We have to go farther and farther to get to the mature trees. The same is true of the fisheries and of many of our natural resources because we have not managed those resources properly.

It is the environmental dimension of the agricultural crisis that all of us should be able to jointly address. Perhaps in addressing that we could find some common ground, some way of asking ourselves the difficult questions that must be asked if we are to have sustainable agriculture well into the 21st century. We should not be faced with history's judgment that we left our children with a disaster in western Canada and that is precisely what is in danger of happening if we do not smarten up.

The summary of the report on soil conservation to which I referred earlier reads in part as follows:

> The Committee found that much of the problem lies with the great pressures being placed on our agricultural sector. Canadian farmers have been asked to demand the last ounce of productivity from our soils—largely because of economic necessity, international prices and technological progress.
> As well, both old and new agricultural practices have contributed to the problem.
> Old practices and technologies such as summerfallowing and the use of mouldboard plows contribute to salinity and erosion in certain parts of the country.
> New practices and technology, such as the use of monoculture and large, heavy machinery contribute to loss of organic matter, soil compaction and erosion.

It then concludes by saying that over the years the priority put on production has taken its toll on soil quality.

• (0340)

There are many other criticisms contained in this report which has received a lot less attention than it should have. We do a lot of talking, and I am as guilty as anyone else, about high profile environmental matters like acid rain, but in the meantime our soil is disappearing. According to this report that is not an environmental problem which can be rehabilitated. Once it is gone, it is gone.

I ask Hon. Members to think about the ways in which we have externalized the cost of the way we do certain things in our economy. We now have to pick up a lot of the costs of the way we do things. The fact is the costs, which have been externalized and not taken into account because we have regarded soil and air and water as free commodities which we did not have to take into account in the way we accounted for our economic activity, we now have to take into account. We now have to ask, what is the cost of replacing fertile soil? What is the cost of good clean air? What is the cost of having potable water? What is the cost of doing all these things?

Mr. Holtmann: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) has gone quite over his time limit in talking about soil erosion and I think you ought to recognize me as the next speaker.

Mr. Blaikie: We will when I am finished.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member did get unanimous consent to continue and I am sure he will not abuse the courtesy given him by the House.

Mr. Blaikie: I will not abuse the goodwill of the House much longer.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): How about 30 seconds?

Mr. Blaikie: I sense that Members are absolutely mesmerized by what I have to say.

Mr. Riis: You can call it that.

Mr. Mayer: We are all nodding. Off.

Mr. Blaikie: I do not see anyone nodding off.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Vic is sleeping behind you.

Mr. Blaikie: I cannot speak for the people I cannot see. I look across the House and see Hon. Members on the government side are truly fascinated with some of the things I have had to say. I note that the one Liberal was not mesmerized.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Where is he?

Mr. Blaikie: He is either under his desk or he has gone back into hibernation. It is very difficult to tell when Liberals are conscious and when they are not.

With respect to the environmental dimension of our agricultural crisis—

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Which you are now concluding.

Mr. Blaikie: —I would just like to conclude by saying, in all seriousness, that this is something which has been quite neglected, not only with respect to agriculture but also with respect to a lot of other environmental problems we are facing. The chickens are coming home to roost. We are beginning to reap what we have sown. We have ignored all kinds of things which needed to be taken into account in the beginning and as long as we have Governments committed only to organizing things with respect to short-term economic realities, which are the only realities that Governments who worship the marketplace can have any regard to, we will not get the kind of solutions we need.

That is what the Senate said in its report Soil at Risk. One of the greatest factors in our inability to address these problems is our—they do not quite say it this way, but our idolatrous relationship with short-term economic realities. We need to have some leadership from Government in this country. We have to look 10 years, 20 years, 100 years down the road and begin to ask how can we reshape our economic priorities, our economic incentives, our economic structures, to take into account the fact that we have a moral responsibility when it comes to soil or air or water, or whatever the case may be, to leave to our children and grandchildren a sustainable planet. That is what we should be talking about.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to address this House tonight. It also gives me a great deal of pleasure to follow the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). If he could get me a glass of water, seeing as how we have dismissed the Pages, my headache might go away. At any rate, that kind of thing happens from time to time in this place.

I would like to start off by congratulating the NDP. They are not the Official Opposition, although they would like to be. However, I would like to congratulate them for bringing this motion forward.

Mr. Blaikie: We are satisfied to be the real opposition. In the short term.

Mr. Holtmann: They can debate that whenever they want.

They have done a great service to agriculture tonight by focusing on what this Government has done for agriculture. They have brought that to everyone's attention. No one will ever deny them that opportunity whenever they want to focus on what this Government has done for agriculture.

I would like to point out, and I am sure you understand this, that the people sitting in this House tonight, like myself, who are farmers are here and we are not even tired. There is many a time a farmer at four o'clock in the morning is still harvesting his grain. He is still getting dirt under his fingernails. He understands what farming is all about, as does the odd member of the NDP, and the even odder member of the Liberal Party. They do not farm. That is not their fault. It is their fault that some voters do not vote for them. We all know they try to represent a part of agriculture. They try to represent a part of this great nation.

I think the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill was a brave individual this evening to stand up and try to defend the undefendable in his Party. I give that man credit. We all have to give him credit because what we heard before he spoke was garbage. Nonsense. You understand that, Mr. Speaker. What was going on here in this House today was the Laurel and Hardy show of the Opposition. To call this an emergency debate after all the things that this Government has done is ridiculous. To sit here at four o'clock in the morning and say this Government has not done what the Opposition says it should do is pure hypocrisy, and I will prove my point in the next 20 minutes.

Mr. Althouse: Do not criticize the Speaker while you are doing it. He decided it was an emergency.

Mr. Holtmann: Just relax over there, you will have your shot at it.

Mr. Althouse: Just giving you advice about the Speaker.

Mr. Angus: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am just wondering whether the Hon. Member is actually questioning the decision of the Speaker in accepting the fact that this is indeed an emergency. Perhaps you would like to rule on that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think there is a need to rule. I will let the Hon. Member go on.

Mr. Holtmann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Never once did I think of challenging the decisions of the Chair. It was the NDP who proposed this motion, no one else.

Mr. Althouse: The Speaker decides whether it is an emergency.

Mr. Holtmann: I thank them for it because Canadian farmers have had another opportunity to find out what this Government has done. Members of Parliament in the Government, farmers and otherwise, have told Canadian farmers one more time what the Government has done. I thank the NDP.

I will now go on. I want to refer to Grain News. Opposition Members quote different things from time to time without giving the whole story. Grain News is circulated to most farmers in western Canada. The headline reads: "Manitoba Farm Budget Swamped by Saskatchewan and Alberta". For those Canadians who do not know it, Manitoba has an NDP Government. The Opposition has accused us of doing so little for farmers, of not addressing the issue of farmers at all.

However, of the total budget of $3.9 billion of the NDP Government of Manitoba, it will only spend 1.8 per cent of it for the 1986-87 year, $70 million, for the farmers in Manitoba. The NDP Opposition suggests that the Conservative Government does not do enough but the fact is that it has done more for agriculture than any other Government in the history of Canada. It will continue to do more and to address the problems of farming in agriculture and I am very proud to be a part of it.

Let us compare that with the Province of Saskatchewan, which has a Tory Government at the present time. Its budget for 1986-87 is 4 per cent or $134 million. That is a significant effort by a Tory Government to help agriculture in the main grain producing area of Canada. The Province of Alberta goes so far as to spend 5.3 per cent of its budget, $570 million. That is a commitment. It does not solve every problem, but who in the dickens said it would solve every problem for every farmer?

This afternoon we heard from a member of the Opposition that a farmer in his riding committed suicide because of the hardships of farming. That situation exists in every riding, but not only with farmers. It exists with people on welfare and people whose businesses have gone bankrupt, perhaps because of interest rates of 22 per cent. It is not the present Government which is responsible for that. If the Opposition chooses to condemn us for low interest rates, I will accept that condemnation. Canadian farmers know all too well that low interest rates have saved them millions of dollars.

My little Province of Manitoba has an NDP Government led by a Premier by the name of Pawley. The Premier of Manitoba decided to urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to turn down lower initial grain prices. He could not give a doggone about the wheat growers in Manitoba. The Members of the New Democratic Party are not farmers. They are in bed right now under the sweet covers when real farmers who have dirt under their nails are probably seeding their crops on the Prairies.

Where are their Members during this debate which they initiated? They are very much ashamed to present their case on an emergency debate because they knew I would bring up the NDP Government in Manitoba. That is why they are not here. They have lots of words but no actions.

The Premier of Manitoba says Canada should pay farmers the cost of production. The Premier of Manitoba would not do what the Tory Government of Saskatchewan has done, that is, to put the province into serious debt to help farmers. In fact, the federal Tory Government of Canada has probably extended the highest deficit for farmers ever in the history of the nation. The Party which introduced this motion is tremendously lacking.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Tell us about fuel prices.

Mr. Holtmann: I am going to get into fuel prices. I have said enough about the New Democratic Party because it does not have the background to do anything. The one province in Canada which has an NDP Government is obviously not listening to their representatives here in Ottawa. Words do not create action.

One would think this would be the motion of the Official Opposition. It was very comical to see the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) get up to speak this evening. I was not in the House but I listened on the tube while I was having my supper tonight. I listened to the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry talk about farming.

Western Canadians do not want to hear that guy from Fort Garry talk about agriculture. He does not know a darn thing about it. That is the fact. It makes them absolutely sick to hear that hon. gentleman talk about how he and his Party are going to help farmers in western Canada. They do not believe him. They would like to believe him but they have been led down the garden path for 22 years, and there are Members in the New Democratic Party who have followed the principle of the Liberal Party of helping western farmers.

I will tell you a very sad story, Mr. Speaker. My dad was a devout and very strong Liberal for many years mainly because when he immigrated to this country there was a Liberal Government in power. He associated his ability to immigrate and start a life in Canada with the Government in power in 1926. He changed his mind when we had the likes of Pierre Elliott Trudeau and the Liberal administration, of which a good number are still here.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Hazen Argue.

Mr. Holtmann: The Member can name a lot more than I can because I am a new Member of Parliament. My father changed his mind about what a Liberal Government can do for western farmers in general. He had no use for them any more because not only did that arrogant group not give a darn about us, but they told us so. They literally told us exactly that.

As long as I am a Member of Parliament there is not a western Canadian who will ever forget what the Liberal Party did to us, whether with regard to interest rates or its attitude about selling our grain. As a matter of fact, the Liberal Party could hardly elect one Member of Parliament and now that the Government has done so much for agriculture all across Canada it is pretending, through the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), to now have all the solutions for us. It is true that there is an emergency on hand, prices are going down and there are real problems. However, that Party will never be a Government with representatives from every province who understand farming. A Liberal Government will never be in that situation again because farmers do not forget.

Many Members who do not represent farming areas may believe farmers are not intelligent. I suggest any Member who rises to speak on this issue better know something about farming because farmers will not be fooled by those drugstore cowboys we have heard tonight. I do not take this issue very lightly and anyone in the Opposition who wishes to speak better know something about farming because, quite frankly, my constituents do not want to hear their rhetoric, garbage and promises.

During the Easter break I met with farmers. Some Hon. Members may be shocked to learn that not only do farmers not like subsidies, they hate them. In fact, many farmers in my area refer to the Special Canadian Grains Program as a kind of welfare payment. They will accept it because it helps them to buy grain, fertilizer, and pay for the gas in their tractors to seed their crops, but they have never received such a payment in the history of this country. They are grateful.

I challenge Members opposite, especially the New Democratic Party who proposed the motion, to suggest that the Government has not done enough. I challenge them to reflect on what has been said in this debate.

The only New Democratic Government in this country, in Manitoba, does not care. I will stay to the end of this debate and if I hear a member from that Party defend this motion, every person in my riding will hear about it because I will tell them personally that the idiots who are giving us this rhetoric are not farmers.

The New Democratic Party accomplished something tonight. They provoked the Government into telling Canadians what has happened in the last two and one-half years. Canadian farmers have never had such a direct input into this Chamber as they have had under this Government. The opposition Parties have demonstrated that they play an important part in this Chamber by allowing us to explain that.

I want to draw the attention of the House to a magazine article in a periodical that one can hardly consider a farming magazine. It is Maclean's magazine. Of course, the main story in Maclean's this week concerns Dome. I will not deal with that issue now because the NDP will suggest that we borrow, loan or give money as a Canadian solution to buy Dome. I presume the NDP can find money under shoe boxes to pay for these solutions. Farmers pay taxes as well, but how do New Democrats know that farmers want to buy Dome Petroleum? That may be another of their suggestions, considering the ridiculous proposals they have made already.

In any event, page 10 of Maclean's magazine contains a photo of our good looking Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). I have heard that members of both opposition Parties actually believe the Minister is doing a favourable job for Canadian farmers. He is a farmer and, in this photograph, he is farming and actually holding a grease gun. I wonder if anybody in the Liberal Party knows what a grease gun is, but I know that there are some members in the New Democratic Party who know what grease is.

I am proud that we have a man representing the Wheat Board who understands the grain industry. If the New Democrats were ever the Government, I would not doubt that they would make the Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Incidentally, at one time he belonged to the Young Conservatives. He admitted that.

Mr. Blaikie: Youthful folly.

Mr. Holtmann: There are those in the New Democratic Party who believe they can run the Government. I suggest that they have a lot to learn, especially as far as their Leader is concerned, when he talks about agriculture.

The Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill said that one does not necessarily have to be a farmer to speak about farming and agriculture. That is a fair comment, but you will never hear me begin to talk about science and technology because I do not think I am capable of doing so.

Mr. Blaikie: That may be true.

Mr. Holtmann: Or about the environment.

Mr. Blaikie: That may be true.

Mr. Holtmann: But I would not have you out on my farm milking cows, either.

Yesterday and today the Hon. Member's Leader attempted to demonstrate the plight of the farmer and the plight of agriculture. From time to time one must admire their Leader, but from time to time one must wonder about him as well.

In closing, I suggest that the Leader of the New Democratic Party should carefully decide in which direction he wishes to take his Party because he has nothing on this Government in terms of what it has achieved, in terms of its interest in farming, and in terms of its interest in all types of production.

We introduced enabling legislation for tripartite agreements. It is interesting to note that only one province decided not to get involved in that tripartite legislation. It was none other than the Province of Manitoba that did not want to work together with other Governments so as not to bring its budget for agriculture any higher than 1.6 per cent. Will the Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill ask his Premier to help farmers a little more since it will only cost another quarter of a per cent or three-eighths of a per cent of his Budget? He will not do it. Let me tell you something. It will not help you in the next election. I see that my time is up.

Mr. Speaker: The time may well not be up, depending on the mood of the House. However, I must say to the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) that the custom in the House is not to refer directly to any other Member, but to make reference through the Chair. The Hon. Member is certainly pursuing his comments with vigour. It may be the wish of the House to allow the Hon. Member to continue. If that is the case, I am quite prepared to continue to recognize the Hon. Member.

• (0410)

Mr. Holtmann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield further time this evening to some of my colleagues on all sides of the House. However, I would also like to impress upon the Canadian public and the farming community—

An Hon. Member: They are watching right now.

Mr. Holtmann: The Hon. Member says they are watching right now. The farming group out west are watching right now.

Mr. Blaikie: They were up to about 20 minutes ago.

Mr. Holtmann: That is another thing which someone ought to point out. Farmers do not like the high-faluting talk we heard here tonight. There has been a lot of fancy dancing and reading out of books, worrying about soil erosion. When the New Democratic Party introduced this motion, it did not introduce a motion on soil erosion. It was about grains. Yet we heard quite a lot of rhetoric about the environment and so on. Those Hon. Members should stick to the subject.

Mr. Blaikie: I did stick to the subject.

Mr. Holtmann: No, you did not stick to the subject. This motion is on farming.

Mr. Blaikie: Yes, I did.

Mr. Holtmann: Let us not get into debate because I have something that I want to show you folks over here. It is 4.10 in the morning, Mr. Speaker, and if I miss addressing the House through the Chair, I apologize. Something happened in Manitoba and it is just the tip of the iceberg. A Member of the New Democratic Party at one time talked about the tip of the iceberg and I thought it was an appropriate point of view at that time, and this is another tip of the iceberg. Manitoba came down with a new budget. It did not help the farmers very much but I will tell you what it did, Mr. Speaker; it scared the dickens out of the bankers. They were scared so badly that banks are now closing in the rural areas of Manitoba. Banks to help farmers are closing. I do not know what members of the New Democratic Party are thinking about. The headline of the article reads: "Royal Bank Blames Taxes for Rural Closings". I am sure all parties would want to pick this up because the NDP Government in Manitoba is making things difficult for the banks and farmers are not going to be protected. What Mr. Pawley hopes is that they will go to the credit union. Some day, if he gets his wish, every province in Canada will have an NDP Government and the federal Government will be NDP. Do you know who is going to run the banking in this country then, Mr. Speaker? It will be the credit union.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Holtmann: We know where the New Democratic Party stands. When the next election comes, and we are all out campaigning, I want every Member of the New Democratic Party to tell the people that their next bank will not be the Royal Bank, the Bank of Commerce or the Bank of Nova Scotia, because the NDP is going to franchise them into the credit union. There might be a lot of people running away from this country.

Mr. Blaikie: Let us have an election right now, Felix.

Mr. Holtmann: They are really excited about that. That is what they are going to campaign on next time. I am going to close by saying that Canadian farmers really want fair representation. They want people who understand their business. I think they also recognize that no one can represent them better than a Tory Government and a Tory Member of Parliament. That is what they have so far and they know that is what they are going to get in the future.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am also very pleased that you found there was an emergency which permitted us to stay up all night, it now being 4.15 a.m. You found an emergency yesterday and I hope you can find an emergency tomorrow so we can come back here again and again because there is a record of this Government which needs to be shown to the country.

This Parliament is built for the Opposition. The national media queue in only to Question Period, which is designed for the Opposition and which we, when we were the Opposition used very effectively. It does, however, have the effect over time of giving a false impression which people will pick up and the effect of these debates is to give us a chance to even the score, so to speak. Over the course of last night and this morning we have been able to show what a truly wonderful record the Cabinet, under the able leadership of the Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, has put in place and I would like to talk about that in terms of my own riding.

I know my riding very well. I have been here for eight years. I have many, many good friends out there. In 1984 when we had barely come to power, the livestock industry was in serious trouble, and the Prime Minister was there. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) was there and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was there.

We in Alberta have great pride in our Deputy Prime Minister who has served Alberta and this country so well and who is still here at 4.15 in the morning. The Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) are here. These are Ministers of the Crown and they have stayed here throughout the night. I do not ever remember that occurring when we were in opposition and the Liberal Government was in power. There was never a Minister of the Crown who would stay on. I remember one time speaking at 6.30 in the morning in an all-night debate and there was not a Minister of the Crown in the House.

In 1985 my constituency got into a serious drought problem. The highest payments went to my riding. The farmers in Pincher Creek and down through Cardston had the highest per acre payment of this entire country. Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board were there when I, as the Member of Parliament for Lethbridge—Foothills, told them that we had serious problems and needed their help. The Cabinet was there and the Progressive Conservative Party was there and we received the highest per acre payment in the entire country.

Again in 1986, through no fault of any individual farmer, but because of subsidies caused by socialist Governments and other Governments in Europe which built up over the years, we got into serious problems. The Americans then took them on nose to nose and we had that enormous battle between these economic super powers. We now have serious problems, and they are affecting my riding. Again, when we came as Members of Parliament to Cabinet and said we needed help, they were there. Prime Minister Brian Mulroney was there when he was needed and the Deputy Prime Minister was there, not only for the $1 billion, but for a stabilization program which has been richer than any program in the entire history of this nation.

Then we put in sound agricultural policies like tripartite stabilization where we have a producer who has to make a premium payment, a provincial Government, because agriculture is a concurrent jurisdiction in this country, and the federal Government. That is the way to set up a program which will last for years and years. This Government was there.

In my riding I have some 600 plus sugar-beet growers. There were some 600 in Manitoba and some in the Province of Quebec. They were in deep trouble and in fact in 1985 we did not produce any sugar-beets in Alberta. But I went as a Member of Parliament and said we needed help for the sugar-beet industry. We initiated a program through the officials in Lethbridge, brought the farmers down and talked to Conservative Members of Parliament from every province, and the Progressive Conservative Party was there, the Cabinet was there.

For 20 years, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) should understand, sugar-beets were a designated commodity under the Agricultural Stabilization Act. That meant that every year members of the industry had to come to Ottawa and get on their knees to beg the Minister of Agriculture for help. It was a yearly, fragile situation. Within two years—

Mr. Foster: You refused to make the payment in 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Thacker: —we have made the product of the industry a named commodity. We signed a 10-year agreement to that effect the other day.

Mr. Foster: You refused to make the payment under the ASA.

Mr. Thacker: The Liberal Government was responsible for 1983 when the industry did not receive an ASA payment. That was under the regime of the Liberals.

Mr. Foster: We made the payment every year as required. Look it up.

Mr. Thacker: It is now a named commodity. The industry is immensely proud, and we have saved the sugar-beet industry in Alberta.

What about Manitoba that is controlled by a socialist Government? Because sugar-beets are grown in Conservative ridings in that province a mean and vicious socialist Government refuses to help farmers. They are human beings who are going down the tubes. There are suicides, yet the socialist NDP Government of Manitoba refuses to help. That is a mean-spiritedness in a way that is unknown.

Mr. Shields: Typical NDP.

Mr. Thacker: We have a research institute in my riding called the Animal Diseases Research Institute. Ever since I have been a Member of Parliament we have been trying to get a new building. The Institute is manned by 12 top-notch scientists who have a research staff and technicians who bring the complement up to a total of 58 to 60 people.

For years these scientists have been doing vital research on viruses. They have been working with very dangerous animal viruses which, if allowed to escape, could cause havoc in the livestock population, let alone in the human population which lives in the vicinity of the Institute. For years and years the Liberal Party delayed the construction of the station. Every year I would come before the committee considering the Estimates and ask the Minister when we would get the building. I would talk to officials in order to keep the pressure on. It was promised every election. And after every election its construction was delayed.

Our Party formed the Government in 1984. Because of the enormous national debt and the deficit there had to be all sorts of cut-backs. But not to the Animal Diseases Research Institute in Lethbridge—Foothills. So my people in Lethbridge—Foothills know—

Mr. Foster: The Liberals approved it in 1983.

Mr. Thacker: —that the Conservative Government gave them that building. All sorts of other ones were put on hold, and this one could well have been put on hold as well.

Mr. Foster: The Liberal Government approved it in the spring of 1983 and you know it.

Mr. Thacker: Had the Liberal Party been re-elected the building would not have been constructed. Its construction would have been delayed again.

I would now like to talk about the Lethbridge Research Station which is another research institution at which fabulous research on soil conservation and irrigation in southern Alberta is carried out. There is also a feed mill involving some $6 million.

I would now like to talk about the airport in my riding. For years and years we have needed a garage. It was not improved until the Conservative Party came to power. For years and years we have needed a new fire hall. This matter concerns the safety of people. I heard members of the Opposition yelling and screaming about safety at an airport the other day. We needed a fire hall and it was not there when the Liberals were in power. When the Conservatives came to power a new fire hall was constructed, one which is absolutely first-class.

Our airport runways needed to be hard-surfaced. That is something which should have been done for years and years. But it was never done until the Conservatives came to power under the present Prime Minister. It is a fine airport now as a result of changing Governments.

Mr. Foster: Brian needed a shoe cupboard and he got it.

Mr. Thacker: Waterton National Park is a site that we hold out as Canadians to attract tourists from around the world. It has a main street which is in an absolute shambles, a disgrace to a nation such as Canada. We could never get it changed. It is now being redone. It will be a proud main street which will attract tourists who will come back again and again.

Mr. Foster: Tell us how your farmers are suffering.

Mr. Thacker: There is a coal town in the Crowsnest Pass which is in very deep trouble because for years and years the Liberals would not do anything about coal. Within months of being in power we had a joint federal-provincial task force put in place. There is a very distinct possibility that we can export more coal to Ontario. In spite of the federal Liberals we may have a better chance with the provincial Liberals since they seem to be talking sensibly about the subject.

There is also a Community Futures program. Tonight the Minister signed a document for the Crowsnest Pass to become a Community Futures town, which will give it hope. We have an enormous infrastructure of towns, houses, water facilities and sewage facilities, schools and churches, but it is a one-industry town. Like 800 others it is in very deep trouble. It now has a chance under the Community Futures program.

I could go on and on and talk to you, Mr. Speaker, about the advance payments that were doubled by our Minister of Agriculture. I could also speak about the Western Grain Stabilization Act which has poured hundreds of millions of dollars into western Canada that would not have been poured into it under the Liberal regime because we changed the statute. Under the former Minister of Agriculture, Eugene Whelan, the Liberals averaged about one agricultural Bill a year. We have had well over 10 Bills go through all totalled, which affect agriculture in major ways.

I would now like to refer to cash advances which are simple measures which could have been taken years and years ago but were not. Which Party doubled cash advances? It was the Conservative Party under the present Prime Minister. Which Party changed the Western Grain Transportation Act? It was the Conservative Party under the present Prime Minister.

Let me delve into the other Parties. What does the New Democratic Party have to say about agriculture? I want to read some of the Party's resolutions on agriculture. Mr. Speaker, I want you to ignore its position on NATO which would totally abandon our allies. The NDP wants to pull us out of NATO.

I want Your Honour to forget the Party's position on NORAD. It would isolate Canada so that we would lose our freedom far faster by being outside NORAD than by being in it.

I want you to forget the Party's insult to President Reagan, Mr. Speaker, who was here as a representative of the people of America and as our invited guest. Members of the New Democratic Party did not have the courtesy even to hear him out. That was a very real error of judgment on their part. What it shows, and it comes out on occasion, is what they would be like in power. It shows a lack of tolerance and a lack of respect. That is what we would get if that Party were ever to form the Government.

I do not want you to speak, Mr. Speaker, on the justice question. I have been a member of the Justice Committee for some four or five years now. I have sat in committee when members of the NDP have put forward motions which would have had the effect of legalizing anal intercourse between boys 14 to 18 years of age. That is what the NDP stand for. It is the Conservative Government that defeated those motions which would have legalized anal intercourse between boys 14 to 18 years of age. This is what Canadians need to hear because that Party is so sanctimonious.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) talked about his Leader. Members of his Party have said some very unkind things about the Prime Minister, things that are not fair at all. What is fair about the Leader of the NDP is that he refused to take a reduction in salary. The Leader of our Party, the Prime Minister, took a reduction in his salary. We threw out the same challenge to the Leader of the NDP. We said: "Okay, if you want to help ordinary Canadians then reduce your salary by 15 per cent". He refused.

Mr. Langdon: That is not true, and you know it.

Mr. Thacker: I have seen that gentleman day after day leave the Chamber in his lovely fur hat and his lovely fur coat, with a big cigar, and get into a limousine and drive off. He refused to take any drop in income. How does that help the old people of Canada? Our Prime Minister led by taking a drop in his income.

Let us not talk about that. Let us talk about what the NDP plans for farming. The way one can find out what a Party wants to do is by going to the resolutions that are on its books. We have all of the resolutions.

I wish to read for Members the NDP resolutions on farming. First, I will refer to something under the subtitle "Process of Planning". That sums up the NDP—the process of planning—since every socialist nation in the world believes in central planning. They believe that a small group can make decisions that will affect the masses, and the masses have to accept those decisions; and if the masses do not like the decision, then the system becomes more and more oppressive, and on it goes, as will become apparent when I read to you what the NDP has to say about farming.

• (0430)

Under the subtitle "The Process of Planning" they have an omnibus resolution on the future of the family farm. They recommend the "establishment of industrial plants to be co-operatively or publicly owned for the processing of food and the manufacture of farm supply items in the region of production".

There it is, Mr. Speaker: There is the nationalization; there is your Canagrex, plus.

And I can go on. The resolution goes on to state that related industries and services "should be encouraged through industrial estates and planned communities".

The NDP philosophy calls for collective estates and planned communities.

This is their resolution, Mr. Speaker. I would like to have them rise in this place and tell us—

Mr. Althouse: You will find that type of planning in every major city in this country.

Mr. Thacker: It goes on and on. If this is not the policy of the NDP, I invite them to rise in this place and say so.

Mr. Althouse: It is not terribly radical. Everybody has been doing it for some time.

Mr. Thacker: If the policy of the NDP is not that well represented by the resolutions it has passed, what is that policy?

The resolution goes on to say that it might be necessary, as well, to take into public ownership "some existing farm supply retail operations, farm machinery assembly plants, meat-packing and canneries". If they wish me to cite the number of the resolution, it is D.1.1.

That is the policy of the New Democratic Party. Why is it that the members of that Party are not telling people about that policy?

Mr. Althouse: It is not—

Mr. Thacker: When I tell my constituents about these policies, the immediate response is: "My God, I had no idea they stood for that type of thing. I didn't realize that they stand for abortion on demand". And that is right up to the day before the child is born. That is the NDP policy, and it is done through the injection of a saline solution into the amniotic fluid which burns the skin off the foetus.

That is the reality of the NDP policy. Once abortion is removed from the Criminal Code, that is what we are faced with; and that is what we are now telling people.

There was a time when the New Democratic Party could be ignored as a lunatic fringe. Now that it is up in the polls, people are starting to look at it, and we now have to tell people exactly what it stands for.

We can no longer afford to be smug about the New Democratic Party. It is a Party that is coming down in the polls, and it is going to come down real hard.

The proposals contained in this NDP resolution are tantamount to the state takeover of agriculture, with farmers taking their marching orders from Ottawa. We all know what that is like. I can remember the LIFT Program, where we were taking our orders from Ottawa.

For example, under this resolution, government bureaucrats would decide what equipment a farmer could buy, as they, to quote the resolution, "regulate the distribution, sale and servicing of farm machinery to promote standardization".

There it is again, Mr. Speaker: The NDP wants everybody to be exactly the same. They would not want to see private ownership of property for fear that someone might get ahead in this world.

I have had enough, Mr. Speaker, of the NDP. I cannot take it any more. But what about the Grits? They, too, have a resolution on agriculture. This is a resolution that is hot off the press, having come out only a couple of weeks ago.

The Liberals conducted a study on the western Canadian economy, coming out with some proposals—proposals which the media has had a fine time with, and quite properly so. Everybody sees these proposals for what they really are.

For the agriculture sector, here is what the Liberals say:

> It is vital that the Canadian government take action that gives a clear message to both Canadian farmers and to the farmers and agricultural industries of other countries of the world that Canada is committed to remaining in the business of farming.

That is exactly what the Progressive Conservative Government has done.

In making this statement, what are the Liberals talking about? Are they talking about market share?

The paper goes on:

> The Western Caucus recommends that the federal government consider efforts to rationalize our many and diverse federal and provincial agricultural programs so that our scarce resources can be put to maximum use—

In this proposal, Mr. Speaker, they use the word "rationalize"—and we all know what that means. It means "to cut back". According to Webster's, "rationalize" means to provide plausible but untrue reasons for conduct. That is the Liberal Party of Canada. That is the misinformation and false material that they have been putting out for years and years.

But what is it they are going to rationalize? Which programs will they cut out? Will they cut out the Western Grain Stabilization Act? Will they cut out the Agricultural Stabilization Act? Are they going to cut out crop insurance, the dairy policy, the marketing products boards?

These are all "safety net" programs serving western Canada, and indeed all of Canada, in a very fine way; and yet, the Liberal Party is going to "rationalize" them. It is going to take these programs away.

Are they going to take away the Farm Fuels Tax Relief Program? Are they going to take away the capital gains exemption? They certainly will. Every farmer in this country, every small business person in this country needs to understand that the moment a Liberal or NDP Government is elected, they will lose their capital gains exemption.

This very thing happened in Ontario. The first thing the Liberal Government did in Ontario was to take away the capital gains exemption, thus taking away one of the fundamental rights of the citizens of this country.

Because of the policy of the Progressive Conservative Government, under the leadership of Prime Minister Mulroney, every citizen of Canada has the opportunity to amass $500,000 in capital exempt of taxation.

Mr. Althouse: There was a capital gains exempt program in place in Saskatchewan long before the federal program.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, once an individual accumulates $500,000 in capital exempt of taxation, he or she will no longer need government hand-outs. No NDP Government will be able to influence them. With $500,000 in accumulated capital, Canadians would be able to stick their fingers up at an NDP Government and tell that Government to get out of their lives.

But that is not what the Liberals and the NDP want. If they have people in senior citizens' housing, if they have them in public housing, if they have them on welfare and on child care payments, they have them exactly where they want them. If one needs the cheque that one is receiving from Government, that individual has to be respectful toward the Government.

Under a Progressive Conservative Government, we have the opportunity to build our own estates, and even ordinary Canadians can build an estate worth $500,000 very easily, and they will; and once they do so, they can be free of Government.

It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that we need a Progressive Conservative Government, not only for the current four-year term, but for at least two more terms. If that comes to pass, we will truly get this country turned around.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, let me say that I appreciate the opportunity, at 4.27 in the morning, to join in the debate that faces the grain farmers of our country, and particularly those in western Canada.

We have heard a great deal of nonsense from the last two Progressive Conservative speakers, who chose to talk about the crisis primarily by attacking us and the Liberals as being opposed to considering what actually needs to be done for the farmers of Canada.

I suspect that the farmers of Canada will see through that kind of guff, turfing Progressive Conservatives out at the next opportunity, as the public opinion polls across Canada suggest will happen.

There is certainly a crisis in agriculture in Canada, and that becomes apparent in an overwhelming way when one tours any of the agricultural parts of our country. I had the opportunity to spend the last week of February in southern Manitoba. In fact, I started out in the riding of the Member responsible for the Wheat Board, the riding of Portage—Marquette, and went south and west from there.

I very quickly discovered the sense that farmers have of no one dealing very effectively with the problems that they face in the production of grains. Our farmers are looking about desperately for answers. Instead of being used for partisan gain, the farmers of Canada want their Members of Parliament to consider real solutions to their problems, thus enabling them to carry on their operations.

The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) wondered about the amount of experience in farming that might exist within the New Democratic Party caucus. I say, with pride, that I grew up on a Manitoba farm. Before going off to the University of Manitoba, I lived on a mixed farm in southern Manitoba. I know what it is like to work the grease gun, to drive a tractor, to care for pigs, and to do the various things that are required in a farming operation. I have to admit, of course, that it has been years since I have had the pleasure of working on a farm and experiencing first-hand what is involved. To be away from the farm is not necessarily to be removed from the problems, the challenges, and the recognition of the importance of agriculture and the need to come to grips with the situation facing us today.

We in Thunder Bay have a very large interest in prairie agriculture. We move more than half of the grain grown on the Prairies year by year, or at least we want to move more than half of it. We have 1,200 workers—and not many years ago we used to have 1,800 workers—moving from 20 million to 25 million tonnes of grain each season. We have our own interest in agriculture and our own reason to be concerned about the situation facing us now.

The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake had something to say about the contrasting record of the prairie provinces in dealing with the farm situation facing them. It is worth recognizing that the Province of Manitoba has a much smaller farming area than is true in Saskatchewan and Alberta. That would immediately suggest that expenditures on agriculture would be a smaller proportion of the budget in Manitoba than is true of the two provinces to the west.

However, it is worth recognizing that in the Province of Saskatchewan the Conservative Government became involved in one of the most incredible pieces of buying itself power which we have seen in a long time. The loans offered to Saskatchewan farmers before the last provincial election amounted to well over $1 billion in total. They went to farmers whether or not they needed them.

It is a scandal of the program that farmers took the money and put it in the bank in order to earn interest on it. They knew that they would have to pay less interest than the bank was paying. They used taxpayers' money to give themselves a bit more of a cushion.

In some cases farmers who have been at it for a long time do not have the burden of interest which oppresses so many of the younger ones. For farmers in reasonable circumstances, this was a nice addition to their incomes.

I was in Saskatchewan a few weeks ago. I was told that one of the results was—and it was on the front pages of the newspapers—that communities and cities in Saskatchewan were facing cut-backs in provincial government expenditures. Of course the consequence was incredible unrest among the people of Saskatchewan in its cities, towns, and perhaps country areas.

In fact, I was told that the Conservative Government in Saskatchewan was hesitating to recall the Legislature because of the reaction to what it was doing as a result of its incredible deficit. Thanks to the farm program, a total of $1.2 billion or more had been added to the deficit. That Conservative Government faced the possibility that as many as half a dozen MLAs might cross to the opposition benches to sit as independents. In such circumstances the Government would lose the majority which it had just spent an incredible amount of taxpayers' dollars trying to win.

That kind of politics or that kind of assistance to agriculture is incredible. Farmers cannot have any respect for it. It is simply incredible that an agricultural economist, as Premier of a province, could indulge in that kind of political adventurism with the resources of a province. It is just an indication which matches the kind of partisanship we have seen in the last two Conservative speeches. They are prepared to do anything in order to maintain power and, in the process, achieve only a short-term answer to the difficulties facing us.

When I was in Manitoba in the last week of February I was struck by the fact that there is a diversity in the experience of farmers. For example, there are those involved in the dairy industry who are not doing all that badly. There are those farmers who have been able to take advantage of supply management arrangements as a result of thinking ahead and the kind of planning which New Democrats, in the resolutions in our policy book, have put forward over the years. Those farmers find themselves able to carry on.

In dealing with the crisis facing us in agriculture these days, it seems to me that the beginning of wisdom is to recognize the need to consider the possibilities of supply management in other sectors of agriculture beyond dairy, egg and poultry production and so on where we have seen successful application of marketing boards in various provinces.

It is not easy to consider supply management for grain production when the grain growing areas of the Canadian west have flourished in many years on the basis of production for world markets. Considering the possibility of managing the world's supply as Canadian Governments have done for many years in the past through international wheat agreements seems almost impossible these days. There is no point in wasting breath on partisan rhetoric when the first problem faces us.

Subsidization of production in the United States and in Europe—in fact it is in many countries of the world—has created a situation of over-supply and has driven down prices to such an extent that prairie farmers who have gloried in growing grain for the markets of the world find themselves unable to sell their products at any kind of remunerative price.

I must confess that in visiting with farmers in Manitoba in February and talking with them about their situations these circumstances were driven home to me particularly. No matter what crop one took, if it was a grain crop designed or destined for large commercial markets, the prices farmers expected to receive for production were driven home. Of course the announcement this week of 18 per cent less than the level of last year only underscored the urgency of the situation. The distressing or profoundly shocking reality of the industry was that for crop after crop one could look at the value of output per acre and discover that it would not match the cost of production, the cost of various inputs, particularly the fuel, chemicals, and fertilizers required in order to produce grain on the basis that farmers presently produce it.

I talked with one large commercial farmer in Winkler who showed me the calculations he had made in the days before I was there. In crop after crop he expected that, on the basis of a good yield and at the prices one could expect at that point, he would be losing from $15 to $50 per acre.

That of course is the brute reality which has had the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) and the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) calling upon the Government, almost day by day, to make clear to farmers what it would do to ensure that they can cover the costs of production in this season and be assured of it at the time they made their decisions to seed.

If one faces that kind of situation, what is the logical thing to do? It would be not to grow anything. When a grain farmer can plan reasonably in February, 1987 to make a profit only on the certified seed business—and of course there is a small number of farmers who are able to do that—we recognize how serious is this crisis. It is a crisis which has resulted from the grotesque subsidization policies of the United States and in other countries as well. That is at the root of the difficulty. Clearly having international discussions with the various Governments concerned to cut back on these things to do the rationalizing which the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) was disparaging a few minutes ago when he was looking at one of our resolutions, to come to some kind of reason in these areas, surely it is a kind of lunacy to disparage it when that is exactly what is required. It will not be easy to do that. There is always the possibility in the present circumstances that the grain which Canadian farmers want to produce will not be saleable in these next years because it is not actually needed on the world markets, almost aside from the policies of the United States, the European Economic Community and other countries.

I hesitate a bit to say that because there is by no means an end to starvation on the globe. Rather the contrary. The debt situation in which various countries find themselves is such that they do not have the resources these days to buy food. Of course what we find in many cases is the production of cash crops in these countries for export in a desperate desire to earn the foreign exchange they need to meet the interest payments on the borrowing which they did in years past. Those activities require rationalization.

What we need is to come to grips with the international debt crisis facing us these days. It was made so much worse by the interest rate depression of the early 1980s which loaded countries down as it loaded Canadian farmers down with the enormous debt. We need to recognize that we are sliding toward depression rather than moving to prosperity. That requires intelligent thought, not partisan wrangling of the sort we have had here this morning.

If it becomes clear that prairie farmers can grow far more than we are going to be able to sell this year over the next five or 10 years—I should not try to add up the years into the future because it becomes too difficult to know those things—but if it is not possible to sell anything like the kind of output we can achieve, then what are we going to do about it? What are the possibilities that we can deal with the human dimensions, the environmental dimensions, the economic social dimensions of the problems that face us? What are the possibilities that we can come up with means to enable older farmers whose expectation just a few years ago was that their pension would be drawn from the sale of their lands? That is why we New Democrats are determined to maintain the capital gains exemption for the family farm, because it is exactly that. It is a source of the farmer's retirement income so he can sell his farm and buy a new one or do whatever he will with the money that results from the sale.

What if it is not possible for an older farmer to do that any longer? I met farmers in Manitoba who were desperately anxious about that happening to them. What are we going to do about younger farmers, the people who entered the industry in the last few years, those who were encouraged by professors and faculties of agriculture in various places, such as the University of Manitoba, to do it big, who had bank managers encouraging them to load up with debt and to go with the most advanced kind of agriculture which is incredibly capital-intensive, who then found the Bank of Canada following faithfully behind the Federal Reserve Board of the United States? The Canadian Government allowed the Farm Credit Corporation to do the same thing. The Liberal Government did nothing to reduce the impact on farmers of loading them down with incredible burdens of debt. What are we going to do when these young farmers find themselves faced with a Government allowing the Farm Credit Corporation to lift a moratorium on foreclosures?

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) may do his best to minimize the number of farmers who are affected. My God, what will these young farmers do when they find themselves faced with banks and the Farm Credit Corporations approaching them? I got one sense of the desperation, the change in mentality. Conservative Members of Parliament may still think they know what is going around them in the prairie provinces. Farmers are prepared, in Manitoba at least, to think about the possibility of land banking arrangements of various sorts that they would not have thought of a few years ago because they face the possibility now of farming bank land and not owning the land any longer. In those circumstances what is one going to do about that situation?

These Conservative MPs may still think they know what is going around them in the prairie provinces. What are the possibilities of using various pro agricultural programs which the federal and provincial Governments have? What are the possibilities of taking the crop insurance schemes, the western grain stabilization arrangements, the special grains programs as an instance of what the Government can do as a kind of one-shot special program? The farmers are desperately anxious these days that it might be pretty close to a one shot arrangement. The politics of it will force the Government into doing something similar, I am sure, for the next crop year, but how long will it be before the farmers know what that action is?

What are the possibilities that these various arrangements could be integrated into a plan that would not necessarily cost any more than is presently the case but that could be operated on the basis of a crop insurance and a price assurance scheme?

What are the possibilities that through the offices already existing for crop insurance we add to the activity there and to the arrangements without necessarily adding very much to the cost in order to provide the farmer with protection both against natural disasters, which will occur some of the time, and against the consequences of the kind of price decline we have these days?

Across the West a great deal of thought has been given to these plans. The great grain growing Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, even more than Manitoba, are areas in which Governments and farmers and their organizations are wrestling with these questions. Instead of serving up all the partisan guff we have had last night and this morning, why is the Government not considering the possibility of doing something in the way of long-term planning, if you will? If planning is a dirty word, come up with some other word that assures farmers that their needs will be met.

I want to say in addition that the speech made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), in which he talked about environmental concerns seems to me immediately relevant when I note that the Agricultural Institute of Canada in a presentation it made to all three of the federal caucuses here in Ottawa not very long ago declared the need for an effective strategy to halt and reverse the long-term effects of soil degradation. It recognized that although many current practices are effective in controlling soil degradation, they are frequently uneconomical in the short term. This means that innovative soil and crop management practices combining soil conservation measures with sound economics must be developed, and the performance of these must be monitored beyond the first few years. That surely points to another of the directions in which we should be going.

Surely if the soil itself is in question, the basis for agriculture in the long term is also profoundly in question. What we want to do is to consider the possibility that we might bring our supply down to a level which would match the market in Canada and abroad while at the same time we provide farmers with the financial resources required in order to allow this land to be restored.

I want to suggest seriously the reduction of acreage in order to reduce production with the intention of renewing the soil, taking land that is being cropped year after year with the use of chemicals, the summer following having been abandoned. We should consider ways in which that soil could restore itself over several years perhaps but be out of production in the process of restoring itself. Surely in the present circumstances that is the kind of thing that should be done. We might remember that it was in the "dirty thirties" of the Great Depression and drought experience of the 1930s that the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act was passed and the Canadian Government began to provide resources for that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. I see that he has not completed his speech. Is it the pleasure of the House to allow him a few more minutes to continue?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): The PFRA activities over the years have been very important in restoring land in areas where the kind of cropping that has been taking place previously did not make sense.

• (0500)

I would suggest that that instance from half a century ago is one that we might well keep in mind today as we recognize what the agrologists are telling us, which is that we need to deal with soil degradation. Surely taking land out of production in order to bring us closer to producing a crop that can meet Canadian needs and find sales abroad, combined with a crop-insurance and a price-assurance scheme, would provide a long-term plan for agriculture. The farmers are desperate for that sort of a plan.

I was struck by the urgency of one of the constituents of the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board who swept the Liberal proposals off the table with the back of his hand. He recognized that the Special Grains Program was something more than a mandate though it had not been as carefully targeted and well carried out as it might have been. He said that we need progressive planning for agriculture. On the basis of what I have heard tonight, we are not getting that planning from Conservative Members. I urge the Government to take up the thoughts that I have put forward, though they are hardly original to me. I have listened to farmers carefully, talked with them about the situation and recognized the good sense of what they were saying.

Let us get together with the provinces. Let us realize that we need a long-term plan for agriculture and let us get it by doing something. The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board is himself a farmer in Manitoba. Surely Members like that have the sense to know that this must be done. I hope he has the clout in Cabinet required to move the Government toward just that kind of future for grain growers, a future that might match the reasonable prosperity farmers in various other sectors have experienced thanks to the supply management programs worked out over the years by marketing boards.

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to rise this morning at three minutes after 5 a.m. to add my words to this debate that has been going on since early last evening. I would first like to comment on some of the speeches that have been made and particularly on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis is a very experienced parliamentarian and certainly speaks very eloquently in both official languages. I thought he made a very reasoned presentation, pointing out the difficulty facing Government when dealing with this crisis in agriculture. He pointed out that regardless of the Party in power, it is a very large problem and one that will cause a good deal of difficulty for a Government.

I thought the reasoned approach the Hon. Member took and the way he expressed his feelings did him credit as a parliamentarian. That type of debate is more needed more often than debate containing the rhetoric in which we often engage and the interchange back and forth across the Chamber. Tonight, though, I thought that some of the very friendly interchange that went on across the floor added greatly to the debate.

The problem with which we are faced has been highlighted many times, not only in this Chamber but certainly around the country. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) who just spoke made mention of the fact that he was in southern Manitoba last week in the riding of the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I myself have had meetings in my riding.

I recently attended a meeting that dealt with a railway problem and the problem of wheat prices and farm financing came up at that time. I heard about the crisis, the extreme interest rates some people are paying and the cost of servicing those debts. I heard of the difficulties that are being caused by the cost price squeeze in which agriculture is involved.

The problem has been highlighted over and over again. It is generally agreed that this problem began in the early 1980s with the high interest rates of the time. Last week, while I was driving to my constituency office in Moose Jaw, I happened to be listening to a CBC radio program on which a group of farmers from Manitoba were discussing their spring planting plans and the financial situations on their farms which varied from small farms to very large farms. As I recall, the largest farm had 2,500 seeded acres. The only farm that was not in extreme financial stress was the small farm because it had absolutely no debt. This farm was owned by a lady and the land was farmed by her son. She made mention of the fact that they were in no difficulty because they had no debt load. The actual cash cost of operation was the only cost they had to bear. They did not have a big mortgage to service.

One of the other farmers had a large mortgage to service and he made mention of the fact that his troubles began in the early 1980s with the high interest rates. That is a story that is very familiar to me. I often hear it from constituents of mine and from other Members who relate stories their constituents have told them. The problem is the inability of producers to service their debts based on today's costs, the cost price squeeze.

Many of us came through the high-interest years. I am a farmer and I still operate a grain farm in Saskatchewan. As a matter of fact, I was on my tractor on Monday getting ready to plant the 1987 crop.

Another fallacy that is being promoted by the media, by some agricultural groups and certainly by some opposition Members is that land will lie idle this year. I can assure the House that in the area of Saskatchewan with which I am familiar, the south central portion of Saskatchewan more commonly known as the federal constituency of Moose Jaw, I do not know of one acre that will not be planted this year.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Good land.

Mr. Gottselig: My colleague, the Hon. member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark), has mentioned that it is good land and it is. He knows that very well. I am sure he has some real estate in that area. It is a great part of Saskatchewan and the land there is very, very productive. It is farmed by people who for the most part are second or third-generation farmers whose ancestors came from overseas, as did mine. My grandfather came to Regina in 1901 and farmed in that area. My father farmed there all his life and I am now farming some of the land my father farmed. The land means something to me. I feel great compassion when constituents relate the difficulties they are having servicing their debts.

It is often said that these farmers must make management decisions. That may be so, but they make those decisions after consultation with bank managers, farm credit field men or people who counsel them to buy land. Often they make the decision on the basis of interest rates that were reasonable at the time but later almost doubled. A lot of farm mortgages that I am aware of went from 12 per cent to 18 per cent, 19 per cent and 20 per cent. An operation that was viable at 12 per cent simply is not viable at 20 per cent. There is absolutely no way you can service that debt.

You really cannot say that the producer made the management decision. He made the decision at 12 per cent, but he certainly did not anticipate interest rates getting to the level they did. He was probably told by a bank or some other financial institution that he probably did not have to worry about interest rates getting to that level.

When we talk about this production problem we have, I want to point out that my area of Saskatchewan has very, very productive land. With any kind of break at all in the weather, with some rain, and we do not need a lot if we get it at the right time, we produce abundant yields. We must export about 90 per cent of our production. For us export is a necessity and a very large part of our operation. The European Economic Community has an over-production of only about 20 per cent. That means mountains of butter and grain and beef and all those other commodities, but it is only a 20 per cent problem for them. The Americans also consume much more of their produce than we do. They do not have the same problem. The Americans and the EEC are both determined to bring the other to its knees. They are going to have this shoot-out in the international market-place and we are caught in the middle. We know that we simply do not have the treasury to fight this subsidy battle. There is just no way we can take them on. Our treasury will not stand it.

Having said that, we have to put something in place and we have done several things. The most recent thing we did, I guess, was put in place the special Canadian grains program. We put $1 billion into the farm economy. That money went to grain producers. It was certainly a big help, and that commitment was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). We are not going to abandon agriculture this year. We did not abandon it last year. We changed the western grain stabilization process over the last two years and made record pay-outs.

One of the most important things we have done is to get the major world grain exporters to sit down at the table and discuss the subsidy problem. We had the chairman and two other Members of the British House of Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture here last fall and they appeared before our Standing Committee on Agriculture. They admitted that the subsidy war had to end. Even in Europe they were not going to be able to keep up the subsidy forever. The problem there is that it is part of their social policy. Some members of the EEC are involved in elections each year. If there was even a hint of the farm subsidy program being cut back or dropped, Governments would fall.

We are all political people in this House, I presume. We know that in order to accomplish programs, you must remain in power. That is the number one rule. So, to get them dealing with this problem will take some negotiations at a very high level, and I think it is to the credit of our Prime Minister and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) that these discussions have been initiated. They are dealing with the problem at the highest level in the GATT negotiations.

We have kept up our grain markets. Certainly we have had to meet the competition. That is the reality of the day. Anyone who is an agriculture producer in Canada today must certainly be aware of the uncertainty in the international market-place. I spoke to many of my constituents before the last initial price of grain was announced. They were anticipating a decrease. Everyone felt it had to come. There had to be a decrease in the price to meet world competition today. However, they also stress the need for a special Canadian grains program this year. Certainly I have voiced that concern to the Ministers at our agriculture and national caucuses. Other Members have as well. We are well aware of the necessity to put in place a special Canadian grains program again this year.

We are told that farmers are going to get anywhere from $25,000 to $35,000 this year in direct government subsidies. Granted that is not enough, but think of the stress there would be if we did not put that money in place. We are never going to be able to put out enough money that people would finally say yes, it is enough. However, within the fiscal restraints placed upon us we must look after our agricultural producers. Agriculture is the front line in any country, and having an adequate food supply is necessary.

We also know that the high quality wheat we produce sells very well year in and year out. Through the Canadian Wheat Board we have gained a far larger share of the world market than other countries. At the Agriculture Outlook Conference last year here in Ottawa we had a professor from a U.S. university who mentioned the fact that although the Americans had much more grain, it was of a lower quality and was not selling as well as ours. He said in a tight market situation we are actually gaining a much larger share because of the high quality grain we produce. He commended us for stressing high quality and remaining competitive by producing that high quality. Both Americans and the EEC are producing varieties of grain which produce more bushels, although of a lower quality, in order to get the maximum subsidy. We have maintained a consistent quality in our hard red wheats and that is something we are going to continue. The high-protein wheat is in great demand. It is selling well and commanding a premium price in a tight world market. We have to continue with that.

We have done several things, one of the really important ones being the lowering of the price of fuel. The average farm in Saskatchewan is 1,000 to 1,200 acres. The reduction we brought about in the price of fuel means that on a 1,200-acre farm the saving amounts to $5,000. That amount in today's tight economy is a lot. That is one of the very real things we have done. The lower interest rates we have today represent a considerable saving to agricultural producers. There is hardly a farmer today who does not have to get an operating loan some time during the year.

People tell me that they never used to have to be concerned with operating loans but that now, because of increasing costs, some time during the year they need to have operating money. They have to go to the bank first thing in the spring and arrange for operating money to plant the crops. The special Canada Grains Program which is coming out, the Western Grain Stabilization Program, and the fact that we are moving grain at record levels this year will assist producers greatly in dealing with those costs.

The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board recently returned from a trip to the Soviet Union. While there he made some excellent contacts with the Russians, resulting in the firming up of some of the long-term sales agreements we have. We have some long-term sales agreements with Brazil as well. We amended the Western Grain Transportation Act. The projected rate would have been $11 per tonne under the formula which was in place when the Liberals were in power. We have reduced that to an average rate of $6 per tonne.

I would like to quote the responses of some farm papers to some of the programs which were announced by the federal Government. The Manitoba Co-operator of May, 1986, commented on the farm package which was announced by the Prime Minister. It said:

> It is a far cry from former Liberal Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau who told prairie grain growers: "Why should I sell your wheat?" . . . It is also unlikely Trudeau would have vowed to bring up agricultural problems at the economic summit or talked about the need for government action on them.

I believe that represents a very solid endorsement from a newspaper with a rural voice.

Ray Guay, commenting on the rural transition program said:

> In short, the program is pure common sense and will help only those who have no choice but to leave the farm.

Barry Wilson was quoted in The Western Producer, another rural newspaper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I notice that the Hon. Member has not completed his speech. I gather it is the will of the House to allow him a few more minutes to conclude. The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) may continue.

Mr. Gottselig: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, Barry Wilson was quoted in The Western Producer of May 15, 1986, with regard to the Prime Minister's agricultural initiative. He said:

> It—marked the first time in at least six years that a Prime Minister devoted a press conference primarily to agricultural issues.

That speaks well of our Prime Minister, the record of our Government, and the input which western Members of Parliament have.

The representation which the Conservative Government has from western Canada and the Ministers from western Canada who have very key portfolios are an indication of why agriculture is getting the additional attention and cash which it is receiving. I think that demonstrates very clearly that we have a strong commitment to agriculture.

We recognize the need to provide assistance to agriculture, which is a very troubled sector at this time. As the Member for Saint-Denis mentioned in his remarks, next year it could be the Maritimes and after that it could be central Canada. The areas that need special attention because they are going through particularly stressful times must be addressed. Our record in that regard speaks for itself. It is a good record and shows a commitment to agriculture by the Prime Minister and all Members on the government side of the House.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin with a few complimentary words for the Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) who made a very straightforward and sincere speech. He is obviously quite well informed about conditions in the Saskatchewan economy. Two key points which were stressed by the Member deserve to be emphasized.

The first is that the 12 per cent management decision which gets translated to a 20 per cent interest rate situation is an extremely difficult situation for any farmer to face. That is something which the House has not yet sufficiently addressed in order to reverse that situation and make it possible for good farmers who made a correct management decision at the 12 per cent interest level to get back to the point where they can once more make decisions without the huge debt overhang which the change to 20 per cent eventually brought about.

The second point which the Hon. Member made was what he called the international shoot-out which is taking place in the grain trade. There is absolutely no doubt that such a situation exists. However, the Member went on to say that our treasury obviously cannot afford to respond to that. My comment in response is that this country, this treasury, and this society cannot afford not to respond to that situation. If we fail to make sufficient response to that international shoot-out there will be a great many family farms going down the drain, a great many people badly hurt, and our economy, which depends on good solid economic conditions in the farm sector, will be in much worse shape.

This is not only a western problem. I am not trying to suggest that it is not a western problem. Western farmers are facing immense difficulties. However, I want to make it clear that in Essex County in southwestern Ontario farmers are feeling precisely the same kinds of economic stress, the same kinds of pressures, and the same sense of frustration and fear as is being felt throughout western Canada. We conducted a survey of farm families within my constituency, concentrating on farm women in particular. I have 200 or 300 of the survey results in the House this morning in which the responses are consistent.

One family says that they feel very much under pressure and that it is the financial crunch which is causing that sense of stress. When they were asked what issues are of most concern to them as part of the farming community, they responded that they wanted to make a decent living to survive. That answer was given by a farm family from Pointe aux Roches.

Another farm family from Stoney Point responded that the issue of most concern was the price of produce and a need for low interest rates.

The response from Maidstone suggested that the main issue was crop prices, the price of machinery repair, and fair marketing boards. The response from Wheatley asked for adequate income. That family states: "We have sold one-third of our operation just to remain solvent".

A response from Tilbury states that the price of our crops, bank interest rates, keeping input costs down of fertilizers, sprays and fuel were the main issues.

Another response from Wheatley states better prices and lower interest rates. A response from Comber is for better pricing on grains, fairer taxes for farmers, and better farm insurance rates.

Another response from Comber identifies commodity pricing, better marketing of crops and so on as primary issues. I could go on to list a whole set of responses to the surveys, but these responses form a clear picture of serious impending disaster which faces a great part of our farm community in Essex County.

Earlier this year in Essex County we conducted a farm forum to give farmers and farm organizations across the county an opportunity to speak both with our provincial and federal agricultural and trade representatives. There were 16 organizations from the whole breadth of commodity groups speaking to us. These groups included the National Farmers Union, the Essex County Federation of Agriculture and groups of farm women.

The message which they placed before us was one of extreme urgency. First, they felt that the deficiency payment which had been made especially by the Government—the so-called $1 billion which the Member who just spoke suggested had done so much to solve the distress in the farm community—had simply not been nearly enough to try to meet the debt pressure, price pressure and cost of production pressure which farms in my community experience.

Soybean producers in particular suggested that the way in which that pay-out had been calculated, crop by crop, had not been sufficiently thought through to be fair to soybean producers, compared to those who were producing other commodities. They also expressed a tremendous concern about what would happen to them, their marketing boards, and their protection from low cost imports from the United States under a potential free trade arrangement with that country.

They stressed that help was very badly needed with respect to the debt crisis and that the Debt Review Boards which had been set up simply did not have enough power to be able to reach real solutions which would put them in a position to survive satisfactorily as effective farmers.

As part of that, they felt that more financing was required for the Farm Credit Corporation. They also stressed to us that it was necessary to have improved marketing structures for farm commodities and thereby gain improved pricing levels for crops across the board in this country.

Finally, they stressed to us that one of the promises which the Conservative Party made in the last campaign, to improve significantly the operation of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act to permit farm loss deductions from off-farm earnings, had not been carried through. They stated that it was crucial that this be done if farmers in Essex County were going to survive. We are facing a serious crisis that affects not only the west but Ontario as well. It is a crisis that is sure to continue.

On Monday, we had a meeting with a group of U.S. Congressmen, primarily from western states, who stressed very strongly to us that the U.S. Farm Bill will not disappear and that the Americans would not back away from the extremely high levels of subsidy they have been providing their farmers.

They stated that from their perspective the shoot-out in the international grain trade will continue and the assistance they are providing to American farmers, which is having such a devastating effect on prices for Canadian farmers, will continue to be a reality.

I do not question the sincerity of many government spokespeople who are trying to develop a response, but so far it has simply been inadequate. As the Ontario Federation of Agriculture told us just yesterday morning, with respect to Debt Review Boards, there are simply not enough enforcement mechanisms to permit the debt review process, first, to establish a clear-cut agreement in the case of a farmer who faces high debt, and second, to turn to the courts if necessary to ensure that some kind of debt relief is achieved for that farmer.

There is simply not enough done with respect to fighting back with financial help to farmers in the face of the tremendous grain war which continues. It has not worked in the past sufficiently; at least that is the very strong message I receive from my farming community, and it is certainly not working so far as the future is concerned in that there has been no commitment made to this point. There has not even been an inference that deficiency payments, which are so crucial for this coming crop year, will again be made available by the Government.

With respect to input costs, we have not seen any action taken seriously to bring down the cost of inputs, especially fertilizers, which for many of the farmers in my community are a key part of their costs.

My farming families also look at free trade not as something that is going to assist them but as something which is a very serious threat to their future livelihood both because of the import competition which they will face from the United States and because they see it as a very serious threat to the future of their marketing board structures where these have been established.

Finally, we have to say that there has been a great deal of talk with respect to the problems of the international grain trade. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) have talked a great deal about it. The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) has also talked about it a great deal. Despite this, there has not been a single concrete step taken actually to do something about the serious problems of the international grain trade.

The story we heard in Uruguay at the GATT meetings that took place there was that our Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board had not pushed forcefully to try to get immediate and strong changes to improve the situation in the international grain trade. So I have to ask how much of the talk which is taking place is simply for rhetorical purposes and how much is a serious hard hitting effort to try to save Canadian farmers from the crunch they are facing?

When I think of the future, and as the farmers in my community think of the future, we look for action, and action of a definite and immediate character. We look for action first to establish orderly marketing arrangements for a much wider range of commodities. Second, we look for action with respect to giving much more strength and effectiveness to debt review boards. Third, we look for action to cut back the costs of inputs and, fourth, we look for action with respect to trying to reduce the threats which are coming from that international grain shoot-out which is taking place. Those are the challenges which face the Government. I have to say, looking at it from the perspective of my farming community, that the challenges have not been met. They are challenges which have to be met not just for the sake of farmers in Essex County, not just for the sake of farmers across Canada, but for the sake of a sound and effective economy and economic future for us as a country.

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to be here this morning to take part in this debate. I think I can indicate to the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) that we do take this debate in a serious manner. I think the fact that there are those of us here on the government side representing agriculture in such numbers indicates that we do have a commitment and concern.

I see it is about 16 minutes to six o'clock, which would be 15 minutes to four o'clock in Alberta, and that is about the time a lot of our people are getting up to go out on the land to do a lot of things. I have never gotten up in the House at this time of the day to do anything but I have done some strange things at this time in the morning. I have been in the livestock business and agriculture all of my adult life. I got into the cattle business when I was 18 years old, buying some cattle in the fall and seeing the price of that livestock cut in half with foot and mouth disease in February of the following year.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) indicate the background of his family as they moved west. A lot of us, I think, came from a similar background. My family went west in 1883 with the railway. They took out a homestead and developed a horse ranch. After the country was settled my family turned primarily to livestock production. Horses were needed in those early days as settlers came in to develop western Canada. Everyone needed a team and a saddle horse. We ran a lot of horses then and I still maintain the brand which was used in the early 1880s on our horses. We still run cattle with the same brand.

I have two sons at home who, if things are going well, should be getting ready to continue seeding again this morning. I have two sons who are producing grain and livestock on some of the same land their great great grandfather developed before the turn of the century. I think it goes to show that with good animal husbandry and a commitment to agriculture, we can ensure that another 100 years from now other generations will be making use of the same land which is so important to the development of agriculture.

I do agree with some of the comments made by Members of the New Democratic Party on soil degradation. It is important and we should look into it. But I get a little nervous at times when, after agreeing with Members of the NDP, they come back and say something which makes it very difficult to agree.

Speaking at this time of day, one thing I can tell, Mr. Speaker, and I do not know if it is appropriate in the House of Commons, but in the livestock business, a number of things work out better in the early morning. I spent 11 years breeding cattle artificially. I found that cows were more romantic at this time of day. It was easier to pick up a cow that was in heat. The other thing is that if one is moving cattle any distance this is the best time of day to do it. The sun will just be coming up and it will still be cool. The flies will not be too bad.

I found that I could move a little bull a lot further this time of day. I do not know whether it works the same in the House or not. In listening to speeches tonight I think it has become obvious in some cases that that may in fact be true.

I can sympathize with a great many of those people we are talking about tonight, those people who are in agriculture and who are in debt. As I indicated earlier, I have been in it all my life. I could also tell Hon. Members that I have probably been in debt most of that time as well. Most of us in agriculture have never been out of debt. We are either using operating capital or we are expanding. It has been difficult, I know, and I have met a great many of those farmers who will eventually meet with our farm debt review panels. The difficulties they face are as a result of a number of things, certainly the result of what we see happening on the world market.

A great many problems in the country would go away with $6 wheat and $25 oil, problems created outside Canada, but also problems to which the Government has attempted to react in both of these areas. More measures have been taken in these areas. I think people in western Canada will appreciate, knowing the difficulties they are in at the present time, that the Government has tried to do its utmost to bring forward programs which, in some cases, have been emergency programs. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) talked about the drought program in particular. These are programs which respond to matters about which we cannot make forecasts.

Those of us who have been in agriculture, and this is where I probably take exception to some of the comments made by members of the New Democratic Party, realize that there are no guarantees. I guess we are in agriculture to do the best we can to make a living, to try to do what is best in the region in which we live to take advantage of the climate and soil conditions to produce livestock, grain, hogs, whatever it may be, and to make the best use of it. But nobody ever said that there was a guarantee because you wanted to be a farmer.

I think we have seen that in the business sector. People in other areas have come to realize that we do take some risks. It is risk-takers who developed the country. If there had not been people willing to go west in the early 1880s when the country was developed, people willing to take risks without any of the guarantees that we seem to need in place today, then this country would never have developed into the type of land about which we, as Canadians, can be proud.

I am sure that a great many things can go wrong when one is in the agricultural sector. Some 20 years ago this month we had a severe storm in southern Alberta. I am sure some Members will remember the spring of 1967 when feed was airlifted by helicopter into the Foothills. I recall it very vividly. We were almost through calving at that time. The weather was not that cold and we had about a foot and a half of heavy wet snow. The sun was high, as it is at this time of year. In my case the sun happened to come out, which reflected on the snow. I had Hereford cattle. The udders of the cows were sunburned and before the situation was over we had lost 75 cows. Those are the types of things that can happen. Good management could not have made any difference in that situation.

I think a great many people who were hurt, certainly more than I was at the time, felt it was part of the risk one takes in being in the real world of business. I do not think anyone ran to Government for help. They tried to do the best they could. But we are in a different situation now. Certainly, much of it is caused by the financial crisis in which we have found ourselves. Almost all of us in agriculture are still paying off the debt from the times when interest rates were as high as 23 per cent and 24 per cent. I had cattle in the feedlot. A feed bill which had to be paid regardless of the interest rate came in every month. I am still paying that debt, as I am sure many people are.

The ones who are having the difficulty, and I have met with them as I said earlier, are a great many young farmers who have come into my constituency office. It is the young farmers who got into agriculture in the late 1970s who have been hurt. Other established farmers, probably through good management, saw their way clear to be able to expand and did go out and use money that was expensive at the time to buy land that was extremely expensive. I think Hon. Members will realize that the price of land from Valuation Day went up dramatically from 1971. In some cases it went up five and six times as much as it had been when we valued that land for tax purposes in 1971. If there was someone here to recall it from the Official Opposition they would remember what happened when capital gains came in. Capital gains did a number of things. I can tell Hon. Members that it did a number on agriculture. What it did was help to escalate the price of land.

When credit was relatively easy to obtain and a piece of land came up for sale, the person selling the land, after consulting with his accountant, felt that whatever he needed out of it he needed after the capital gains tax was paid. So that was added on. It was added on again and again and again. The land in parts of southern Alberta that was valued at $12,000 a quarter, by the late 1970s, by 1978, was hitting around $40,000 and peaked at about $75,000 to $80,000. That was about the top. It is on its way back down now. At that price, with high interest rates, there is nothing that one can produce in agriculture that would sustain it. I am surprised that the situation went on for as long as it did before we reached a point of collapse. I suppose some people who are in this serious financial situation could have survived, but a great many of them were very badly hurt.

I think that those people who have complained about the $500,000 capital gains exemption should sit and listen to some of the people who tried to sell out prior to the exemption being put in place. There were elderly people who wanted to sell out and transfer their land to the next generation. However, because of taxes, because of some of the debt load they were carrying, there was very little left by the time they liquidated the farm and paid off the debt that most farms carry, as well as the capital gains. So it certainly had an effect on agriculture.

The fact is that the capital gains exemption has been put in place for all Canadians. It should be an incentive to Canadians to work to invest. There is something about having initiative. I do not think initiative is a dirty word on this side of the House. I do not think guts or backbone are, either. I think it takes people who are willing to get out and work. If one does and if one is successful then probably one should have the right to enjoy some of the rewards of that success.

I think those are the things to which Canadians can look forward. We have gone through numerous programs, and a great many other Members have commented on the programs that the Government has put in place. I have listened to members of the Opposition who have criticized most of the areas in which we brought in programs.

I went to the presentation that was made in the case of the Liberals, something called "Directions for the West". It was put out by the Liberal western caucus. I believe there were two Members of the Commons and about 10 or 11 from the other place who went out and held a series of hearings and came up with a long list. It is a good page long and the last page summarizes some of the problems. I think we are all aware of these problems. Some of the recommendations have already been commented upon. I would hope that they would not bring forward a program similar to the LIFT program they put in place in 1971, the full name of that program being Lower Inventory For Tomorrow.

I had a permit book at that time, and still do. Some aerial photographs were taken of my land, and I received a letter from Winnipeg stating that my permit book did not match with the expert analysis done as a result of the aerial photographs that were taken. I was asked to make the necessary corrections in my permit book. They had inadvertently included some of my neighbour's land and some land that had been used to raise horses.

That program was brought in as the answer to some problems that existed at that time. Certainly, it created additional problems. It did not do anything for the agricultural sector—other than perhaps leading to a change of Ministers.

The Liberal policy paper talks about ensuring that "returns from grain production in the new crop year will at least equal the level of the 1986-87 crop year".

It asks that we make initial payments at some level that has nothing whatsoever to do with the market-place, and nothing to do with reality, thus depriving those in agriculture of some indication of the direction in which things are going. We need only look to Europe to realize the problems that can result from such an approach.

If you have $6 a bushel wheat, $7 a bushel wheat, $8 a bushel wheat, people are going to grow it until it literally buries them—and that is exactly what has happened.

There seems to be a real problem in having the public understand what we are talking about when we speak of initial payments, final payments, stabilization payments, and deficiency payments. The public does not seem to realize that, in most cases, these payments represent the moneys due to the farmers for the products sold.

Certainly, the market price has to be there to indicate the reality of the market. Looking back to last year and what happened to barley, of the $203 million deficit that we saw, $179 million was attributable to the problems in marketing barley.

That meant that livestock producers in Canada were paying 75 cents a bushel more to use Canadian barley to feed Canadian livestock in Canada than we were selling that barley for on world markets.

This is the type of thing that we have to be very careful of. It is fortunate that the livestock situation turned around. Had our livestock producers been losing money in addition to paying that premium for barley, we would have heard a lot more from that sector.

The Liberal policy paper also speaks of maintaining the current freeze on grain freight rates charged to farmers.

Had we continued with the Liberal structure, those rates would now be somewhere around $11 a tonne.

Another proposal is to reduce farm input costs "through methods that include measures to deal with high chemical prices". What did the Liberals do in this regard? They switched to the metric system of measurement for chemical containers, with the result that we never knew the precise price or rate of application.

The last of the five proposals is as follows:

> —in view of the worsening farm debt crisis, to provide greater assistance to preserve the family farm as the primary means of production and a vital part of rural Canadian life.

These are the recommendations flowing from the Liberal task force on the western Canadian economy. Those constitute the total sum and substance of what came out of that tour across western Canada.

Let me quote again from the Winnipeg Free Press of April 11, 1987, as follows:

> The 17-page report is an empty document offering ringing declarations of discredited party policy, outright distortions of economic reality and not a single firm proposal which would make any significant difference to the economy of Western Canada.

The Liberal Party was in power for a great many years and had the opportunity to bring in all kinds of programs, and yet its members rise in this Chamber and criticize whatever this Government brings forward.

As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) indicated earlier in this debate, this Government, in the last two and one half years, has brought in more programs for the agricultural sector than any past Government.

Let me now turn to the New Democratic Party. I have here a resolution reference, a document published last fall outlining a number of resolutions that that Party has in place—and I gather that they are current today. Under the subtitle "The Process of Planning" we have an omnibus resolution on the future of the family farm, recommending the "establishment of industrial plants to be co-operatively or publicly owned for the processing of food and the manufacture of farm supply items in the region of production".

The resolution goes on to say:

> This industrialization in rural Canada would provide new employment and enable those who migrate out of farming to find alternative jobs within the region.

This Government has come up with the Rural Transition Program. It is not something that is intended to move people out of agriculture; rather, it is intended to give those in our agricultural sector the same opportunities that are taken for granted by people in other sectors of the Canadian economy. That is its only purpose.

Certainly, with funding of $46 million, it is not a rich enough program to cause people to flock out of agriculture. But for those who do—and there will always be people getting out of agriculture—the program is there to provide some assistance.

And why shouldn't the self-employed in agriculture have the same benefits that others in this country have taken for granted for years?

I see that my time is drawing to a close, Mr. Speaker. In the remaining time, I should like to highlight one or two other items arising from the resolutions of the New Democratic Party. Under the same subtitle, we have the following:

> It might be necessary as well to take into public ownership some existing farm supply retail operations, farm machinery assembly plants, meat-packing and canneries.

I can assure Hon. Members right now that as long as I am in the livestock business, I will be very reluctant to ever take a product that I have produced to a government-operated packing plant.

The same resolution goes on to recommend limits on farm sizes. It is the policy of the New Democratic Party to establish a public commission to determine a formula for a farm unit size on a unit basis.

Mr. Gottselig: Big Brother looking over our shoulders again.

Mr. Porter: How would you like that? What does that do for one's initiative?

Mr. Gottselig: The socialist answer: control.

Mr. Porter: I invite the Canadian people, when thinking about the New Democratic Party, and its Leader, to remember that the doctrine of "socialism" goes hand in hand with it. The members of the New Democratic Party stand in this Chamber and very proudly announce that they are socialists.

I remind those Canadians looking for an alternative to keep in mind that there are socialist Governments in other countries, and they should look to the experience of those countries.

While I know that there is much that can be done to alleviate some of the problems facing the agricultural sector in Canada, I think we should acknowledge the support that we have received from this Government. The Ministers of this Government who are involved in the agricultural sector are to be commended for their efforts. The various farm organizations and individual farmers have been able to work with this Government and its Ministers in bringing about solutions to the current problems. I know that more has to be done, and I have no doubt that it will be done.

There are Members on the government side of the House who are willing to make every effort to see that the appropriate initiatives go forward.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can say that I am happy about debating at this hour of the day, though I must commend the Minister for his presence throughout this long debate. I hope that his presence means that this Government will take further action in alleviating the problems facing the agricultural sector.

Obviously, the Government does deserve some credit for the increased support that has been forthcoming for the agricultural sector, and particularly for the grain farmers of western Canada.

However, as one considers the over-all situation, what stands out is the crisis in the farming sector of western Canada. While there has been help, it has not been sufficient or adequate to give farmers the security they need in order to continue their struggle to survive and to continue their efforts at planting and producing crops.

• (0610)

I just wanted to ensure that I put forward at least my understanding of what is going on. To put it quite simply, while farmers are receiving some increased aid, what they need at the moment is to know whether or not they will be receiving a deficiency payment for the crop they will seed this spring. I know that my colleague will correct me if I am wrong, given that he is a farmer. Farmers need to know that because they need to know how their books will balance at harvest time. If everything goes well—and of course the weather is beyond their control—and they have a good harvest, they need to know whether they will make a profit on it or whether they will suffer a loss. Farmers need to know whether they will have incomes as a result of their efforts so that they can decide whether or not to seed.

Of course it is not a viable alternative to say that given the fall in prices the odds are that they will lose money on their crops. Over the last few years farmers have been struggling to keep their operations going. They need an assured income so that they can continue to hang in.

We all know—and I am sure farmers know it better than any of us—the international context in which grain farming in western Canada exists today. The fact is that there is a trade war between American farmers and their Government and European farmers and their Governments. These powerful and large Governments are pouring billions of dollars in subsidies into their farming sectors which put at risk our entire grain industry. One of the first aspects of the grain trade at which we must look is the whole question of international trade. The Government has undertaken an initiative in what they call free trade. It has sought to negotiate an agreement with the United States. While Mr. Reisman is meeting with Mr. Murphy, what is going on in reality is that the American Government is grossly oversubsidizing its grain industry, which is threatening the very existence of Canadian grain farming. The American Government is threatening the way of life in western Canada, and the Government blindly proceeds with its trade initiatives and says that it will negotiate a trade agreement with its American friends.

Given the present action of the Americans with regard to grain and what it is doing to the grain sector in western Canada, with friends like that, who needs enemies? The Government is blithely going ahead and promising prosperity as a result of a trade agreement with the United States.

If we were to have some confidence in the capacity of the Government to address vital issues affecting Canadians, such as the whole question of international trade, particularly in grain, and therefore the survival of grain farming and the western Canadian economy, we would want to see some results in terms of the present actions of the Government.

However, the Government is cosying up to the Americans, and Ronald Reagan is singing songs with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) while our farmers are suffering. That does not leave us with much confidence. In fact, it leaves us with a sense of worry, because it looks as if the Government believed in the tooth fairy, that if it could only sign an agreement with the Americans everything would be okay. It seems to close its eyes to what is actually happening.

Mr. Shields: Let's socialize the country and that will really fix things, won't it?

Mr. Keeper: I hear a voice over there which is attempting to distract the debate.

Mr. Shields: I am not trying to distract.

Mr. Keeper: He is not addressing the question before the House. He is simply seeking to label other people and to raise a kind of ideological bogeyman.

Mr. Shields: I don't know why they resurrected you out of bed, Keeper, because you are not contributing a heck of a lot.

Mr. Keeper: Has this Hon. Member spoken, Mr. Speaker? Why does he attack from behind the curtains a Member who is seeking to contribute to debate on one of the most urgent questions affecting the whole of Canada? How dare a Member of Parliament, a member of the Conservative Party, refuse to participate in the debate before the House yet have the unmitigated gall—

Mr. Shields: I have been here all night while you have been home in bed.

Mr. Keeper: —to shout as he wanders among the empty benches over there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Thacker): I would want to assure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) that the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) has been here all night and is awaiting his turn. He is on the list, and I am sure we will hear from him shortly.

Mr. Keeper: I am glad that the Chair is so impartial. I thought if there were one institution in the House which is supposed to maintain order and to represent all sides of the House that it would be the Chair.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Are you challenging the Chair?

Mr. Keeper: I would welcome the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) entering the debate rather than abusively shouting from that side of the House.

Mr. Shields: I was not abusive at all. I was stating facts.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, he continues. I notice that you sought to constrain me in my comments, Mr. Speaker. I hope you will constrain him as well.

Having commented about his lack of participation in the debate up to this point and about him shouting from his seat, I am disappointed at the moment by the lack of participation on the part of the Liberal Party over the last few hours. Where have the great Liberal defenders of western farmers been since midnight? Where are they?

Mr. Shields: They are where you were.

Mr. Gottselig: Home in bed.

Mr. Shields: That is where you were.

Mr. Mayer: We are better off without them. Who cares?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, it is entertaining to hear the shouts from the Conservative benches, even those from the front-bench on that side. The kind of loud noise I should like to hear from the Conservatives, since they are in office, is that of their standing up and saying that they will make a deficiency payment and that they will guarantee farmers an income during this crop year equal to that of last year. That I would like to hear. If I heard that coming loud and clear from the other side, I would applaud. In fact I would sit down and I would congratulate the Government on having recognized the urgency of the agriculture situation in western Canada.

• (0620)

I do not come from a rural riding. I cannot say that I have farmers in my riding. I come from an urban riding, but even Members of Parliament who come from other ridings have to recognize the agriculture crisis existing today. People are now making their decisions about whether to seed. People need assurances from the Government that they will have security of income so they can seed and can stop living in fear of losing their farms so that families can live a normal life rather than be under constant stress. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) put forward this motion calling for an emergency debate concerning agriculture because the situation is urgent.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Where has he been all night?

Mr. Keeper: I hear again more Conservative voices out of the dark.

Mr. Mayer: It is not dark outside, it is light.

Mr. Keeper: If only those voices could say, yes, we understand the threat to the western Canadian farmer, we understand that a whole way of life is under threat in western Canada, and not only do we understand it but we are willing to do something about it; we are willing to use the instrument of Government to provide the basic minimum of security to western farmers so that the farm community can continue to exist and that farmers can at least survive, if not aspire to a half decent sort of life. Those types of interruptions I would welcome. They are yet to come. I hope the government Members realize that one of the reasons we kept them here all night and that we will continue to do so is the very real crisis exists that on the farm. We want action. We want the Government to wake up. This is the time of day when the Government should be waking up. We want the Government to wake up to the reality that people have a right to security of income.

I was saying earlier that I am a Member of Parliament from an urban riding, that I do not have farmers in my riding. I may have the odd one, but by and large my constituency is not a farming community. Even as an urban Member, I am aware that there is a crisis in agriculture, that there is a crisis in grain farming in western Canada. All you need to do is to listen tentatively to the mass media. Peter Gzowski had a group of farmers recently on his program. He did a magnificent job of reporting the human situation of western Canadian farmers. He had a number of men and women speaking from a personal perspective about the situation on the Canadian farms. These people got to the point where they were starting to share what they called "sick jokes" about the present crisis on Canadian farms. One was about a farmer who was taken to task by the Children's Aid Society for child abuse. They said, "We cannot believe that about this upstanding member of the community". What he had done was to turn over his farm to his children, and they said that was child abuse.

Mr. Gottselig: That is the type of joke you would tell.

Mr. Keeper: I hear the Member over there saying that that is just the type of joke I would tell. That joke, described as a sick joke, was told on the Peter Gzowski show, and it is an indication of the crisis in western Canada. People's whole way of life is threatened. The capacity of people to make their living is threatened. People who have lived on their farms for generations are now having the rug pulled out from under them. When people are under such stress then it is time for the Government to act.

We had a Prime Minister who came out to western Canada and said, "Why should I sell your grain?" That is what we got from the leadership of the Liberal Party. But we did not get that from this Prime Minister who goes out into the world and says that our problems have to do with the subsidies and that grain prices ought to be in the GATT negotiations. What happens, Mr. Speaker? That is where it is. That is leadership. Not going out to western Canada and asking, "Why should I sell your grain?" What kind of leadership did we have then for western Canadian farmers?

Mr. Gustafson: And then we got the LIFT.

Mr. Keeper: Why have a Government? If governments are not to act, why bother to have governments? Let us just rely on the so-called market and let everybody come and go at the whim of the market. Obviously, in the present case we are not just talking about a market, we are talking about the American and the European Governments that have intervened in the grain market and have subsidized their farmers. We have an international trade war going on and that is why our farmers are suffering.

When farmers are suffering so greatly, it is time for the Government to step in and take action. The individual farmer cannot defend himself or herself in the present circumstance. We do need our elected institutions to provide the basic security that farmers need in order to continue to survive. In a couple of years when this crisis is resolved we should be sure that we have farmers who will be there to grow the grain and take advantage of the international markets, not having been driven out of farming because the Government failed to act and failed to get the message that the whole way of life in western Canada is threatened. It is impossible for farmers to face the present circumstances without solid action by the Government. We wanted this debate so we could get across to the Government that while its increased support for western agriculture is appreciated, the Government has to take another step.

The Government needs now to tell western farmers that they will have a deficiency payment for the present crop to be seeded now so that farmers know, when it comes time to harvest, that they will make money on the crop. We need that additional security. We in Canada in western liberal democracies have used the Government ever since the 1930s, even since the election of Theodore Roosevelt in the United States, to provide a measure of security for citizens. We would not say to people, "If you haven't got a job or if you don't have unemployment insurance, then we won't give you any social security to enable you to eat". We are not willing to be that harsh to allow the whole of people's existence to depend upon the market. In the same manner in terms of agriculture we need to say that it is the function of Government to provide at least a minimum basis of security.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are indicating that my time is coming to a close. It is a legitimate function of Government to provide a base of security for all Canadians, for western Canadians, for western Canadian farmers, for the grain farmers, and now is the time to do it. Now is the time when the whole way of life in western Canada is under threat. While the Government deserves credit for the action taken so far, it needs to take another step and provide that minimum of security, and it needs to do it now.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, let me begin with a personal observation. As I sat here throughout the night, I thought back to my nomination night. Some of my friends in the House were there then. I remember making my acceptance speech at 1 a.m. and thinking that was really quite an incredible time of night to be making such a speech. I see it it is now 6.30 a.m., dawn has arrived in Ottawa, and as others have indicated, the farmers will soon be on the land in the Prairies if indeed they have not worked all night like some of us have.

I also want to note with approval that throughout the night we have been honoured with the continuing presence of several cabinet Ministers. My time here is not all that extensive. It is only about three and a half years now. However, I remember other all-night debates and I do not remember Cabinet Ministers being present.

During the course of this evening we have seen the continuing presence of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). I hope I have not forgotten anyone. As well, we have had many of our caucus here during the night. Perhaps it is only coincidental but many of those are either farmers or have a continuing interest in agriculture. Let me say at the beginning that I have never pretended to be a farmer as such, but I am proud to say that I grew up on a farm and I continue to own farmland. I think I recognize, therefore, the importance of this debate on the issues before us.

I also want to make it clear that we on the government side recognize the gravity of the problem which exists in the grain and oilseed industry in western Canada. We have recognized and continue to recognize those problems. The proof of that recognition lies in our record to date and the fact that we readily participate in a debate such as this. I for one will agree that the NDP are sincere in sharing that concern as well. I must say that I am disappointed, however, that throughout the last four and a half hours only two Parties have been represented in the House, to the best of my recollection. I think that is unfortunate because it suggests there is not as much interest as there should be.

The Hon. Member who just spoke made reference to two or three points which I would like to refer to. He made reference to the freer trade talks, if I remember correctly, and did so in a critical fashion. I have just had the opportunity to look at the Western Producer dated April 23, 1987, and I thought Members might be interested in a story contained therein. The headline reads: "Free trade would help Manitoba hog industry". In light of the fact that both the Hon. Member who just spoke and myself are from the Province of Manitoba I think this is a particularly interesting story.

The story says that an increase in exports is a key to a healthy hog industry. William Boggs, Chairman of the Manitoba Hog Producers' Marketing Board, said Manitoba must export 70 per cent of its present pork production. In order for the industry to grow, export markets must be developed further. That implies freer if not free trade. The U.S. market in particular is important to the province's hog producers. Boggs said that three-quarters of its exports go to the U.S. He said we must keep a door open to U.S. trade. We in Canada must be constantly on top of potential Canada-U.S. trade road-blocks and we must be in a position to remove or, better yet, prevent their formation.

Later on in the same story he said in spite of the fact that some analysts predict gloomy hog prices toward the end of this year, he was more optimistic and still looked for a very positive market in 1987. That forecast is based on the fact that the hog kill in the U.S. is 50,000 head short of what it was a year ago. Hamburger from the dairy herd buy-out will soon be moved off the market and the Americans predict an 8 per cent to 10 per cent decrease in slaughter cattle for later this fall, and that the amount of red meat in cold storage in the U.S., particularly pork, is the lowest it has ever been.

What that story suggests very clearly is the very significant importance of the freer trade talks to at least Manitoba's hog industry. I think you will find if you look at the future of this industry in other parts of the country there are benefits to be derived. I say that because the Party which has proposed the motion this evening has consistently downplayed, criticized and ridiculed the significance of the freer trade talks. I think we on this side have perhaps done ourselves a disservice by not adequately rebuking their criticisms to this point in time.

With respect to the problem which does exist in Canadian agriculture today, there are two or three points which have been made earlier this evening but it is important to reiterate them.

First, as you know, the high interest rates of the 1970s had a devastating impact on a certain group of farmers. That group of farmers are those in their thirties and forties who, through no fault of their own, began farming at a time when inflation was beginning to occur and interest rates were beginning to rise. As a result that group found itself with a very heavy debt load. During the days of rising inflation the significance of that debt load was not as apparent as it would subsequently become.

Unfortunately, in the 1980s a combination of that debt load, deflation, and the trade war currently under way between the EEC and the U.S., put a generation of farmers in a very vulnerable position. For me this was a very tragic situation and one which the Government must continue to address. I stress that because I think our record to date is an excellent one, particularly bearing in mind the legacy we inherited some two and a half years ago.

When I speak of that legacy I am referring of course to the size of the national debt and what it means with respect to interest rates. As you know, this Government must spend somewhere around $28 billion or $29 billion on interest alone to service the national debt. That is an incredible sum of money which, if it were available to us, would give us a great deal of latitude to deal with problems, whether they be in agriculture, the forest or fishing industry, or wherever. We do not have that flexibility today, to a large degree because of the debt we inherited from our predecessors.

As to our own particular record, I think there are several points which need to be stressed. The most important thing I want to say at the outset is that I for one am particularly pleased that the Canadian agricultural community is served by two particularly distinguished Ministers. As you may know, I have been a teacher most of my life. I have had a strong interest in Canadian history and I do not recall anywhere in Canadian history, at least in the last 30 years, when Canada has been as well served, and Canadian agriculture has been as well served, as it presently is by the Minister of Agriculture. He is very sensitive to the needs of the community.

There seems to be some strange sounds coming from the Chamber.

Mr. Angus: It is your dentist.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Maybe it is a legacy of the previous Government. They are feeling uncomfortable. They may not be present in body but perhaps some of them have consciences acting up.

In addition to the leadership provided by the Minister of Agriculture, I want to make particular note as well of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. First of all, in that Minister we have had leadership provided by someone who is a prairie grain producer and who continues to operate a farm in partnership with his wife and who knows all too well the problems experienced by Canadian agriculture. It is for that reason I am very confident of his sensitivity and understanding, and I think that has been evident in his policies to date.

Let me just make a couple of comments about two of the points discussed here in the course of the evening, the question of initial prices and the FCC moratorium. First with respect to the moratorium, it was very clear when that was put in place its purpose was to provide time for certain programs to be developed. The moratorium was never perceived to be, by any spokesman on this side of the House at least, a solution in itself.

Since that time two programs in particular have been developed which have reference for the farmers who would be affected by severe economic conditions. I think particularly of the Farm Debt Review Boards which are now in place in each of the provinces. My understanding is that many of the initial start-up problems have been alleviated. When the chairman of that group appeared recently before the Standing Committee on Agriculture he spoke with confidence about their responsibilities and the future.

I would like to address a few remarks, if I may, to the Rural Transition Program because I think it has been very unfairly criticized by some politicians, some farm organizations and, unfortunately, by the media as well. I happened to be at the press conference where this program was announced. One of the things which disturbed me at that time was that, seemingly out of the woodwork, there arrived at that press conference of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) a number of journalists whom I never see at meetings of the Committee on Agriculture.

Although there are some 350 journalists who work on the Hill, I regret that there are only four or five who, with any consistency, appear at meetings of the Committee on Agriculture. The unfortunate significance of that is that when a major event comes along which does attract the attention of the Gallery at large, it seems to me that many of them come to their responsibilities with an inadequate background which is often reflected in their reporting.

The Rural Transition Program has been badly maligned by its critics. I happen to believe it is long overdue and am very pleased that it is now in place and is able to provide a service to those who wish to participate in it. It provides, albeit perhaps in an inadequate way, the types of opportunities for retraining and financial assistance for relocation if desired which have long been available to other sectors of the economy but have historically been denied to the agricultural community.

Having been involved in education most of my life, I have been aware that many young people have received assistance to achieve upgrading. Older people in urban communities who wish to go back to school have had programs available to them but these types of programs have consistently and tragically never been available to the farm community. In addition, it has been denied the opportunity of participating in programs such as unemployment insurance.

Transition from rural areas to urban areas is not a new phenomenon. However, when it occurred in the past the people who were compelled to or chose to make that transition, for whatever reason, were denied the basic economic and counselling support programs which were often available to their urban neighbours.

The Rural Transition Program is now providing those services in a small way. I am pleased that in the Province of Manitoba, for example, a major part of this program is being provided by a research team and support program in the City of Brandon. Through fairly constant consultation with them I know that both the dollars and the counselling which is now being provided to the rural community, which was not available previously, are much appreciated and, quite frankly, much needed.

I have heard Members opposite suggest that this program is somehow or other designed to either persuade or force people to move off the land. Nothing could be more ridiculous than that assertion because it implies that you could persuade someone to leave the land for approximately $6,000 per year, which is the type of support of which we are speaking. It is, quite frankly, an insult to the Canadian farming community to imply that they would make decisions about this issue based upon that rather meagre sum of money.

People who are leaving agriculture today deserve the kind of support which the Rural Transition Program is trying to provide. I dare say that we should be doing more to benefit them. For example, one of my criticisms of that program is that it will provide assistance for only one year. As you know, Mr. Speaker, someone who wishes to enter into a university program of more than one year is not eligible to participate in the Rural Transition Program and I think that weakness should be remedied. Another deficiency in the program, as I understand it, is that they cannot participate in part-time programs. I think that is also something which the Government should address.

However, the concept is extremely valuable and has been long overdue. I feel nothing but frustration and anger with regard to those who deliberately misrepresent that program to the public because, in so doing, they are adding to the aggravation felt by those who are compelled to participate in it because it is implying that they are somehow being bought off. As I say, Mr. Speaker, that is both inaccurate and insulting.

It is important to look to the future and I see some signs for positive encouragement. Speaking as an individual Member of Parliament rather than on behalf of the Government per se, I believe that the Government will have to continue to provide assistance in the future comparable to that which it has provided in the past.

I say that because I recognize, as do others, that the 18 per cent decline in initial prices, which is an accurate reflection of what is unfortunately occurring in the world market, has created a real financial crisis on the Prairies. I have confidence, however, because the Government has demonstrated its sensitivity to this problem with the $1 billion program—

Mr. Cassidy: By lifting the moratorium, that's sensitivity? Is that what the Hon. Member says?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): The Hon. Member who has just awakened and returned to the House will have a chance to speak in the near future if he will let me conclude.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member's sensitivities are dulled by being here too long.

Mr. Mayer: Oh, he woke up grumpy.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): The $840 million which has been made available to prairie grain producers is the largest program in Canadian history. The $705 million interim payment which is going to western grain producers this week is an insurance program with the farmer putting up $1 for every $3 put up by the federal Government. That program will provide a record payment as well to prairie grain producers this year. The total cash flow of $1.3 billion which will move on to the Prairies in April and May is a record amount of cash flow from any federal Government to the Prairies and will very much assist with the financial needs of the farmers at this time.

Speaking again as an individual Member, I suggest to the Government and the House that in the fall when we know what the world market is, what the supply of grain is, and what the grade of that grain is, we will be able to address the problems which exist at that time.

I believe the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board can feel very good about their contributions to western Canadian grain producers at this time because none of their predecessors at any time in Canadian history have provided either a greater amount of leadership or a greater amount of financial assistance. For that prairie grain producers are very grateful.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This debate began 11 hours ago. Many of us have been here throughout the night and I want to make sure that we recognize the support we have received throughout this debate. We do not know how long it will continue. The table officers, Hansard reporters, translators, those working in broadcasting, the employees in the cafeteria and the bus drivers have been here all night, along with the Pages.

Many things take place that are not obvious in terms of the operation of the House. We have been and continue to be very well served by all the people who looked after the proceedings of the House this evening.

On behalf of all Members who have been here throughout the night and are here now, I want to recognize the contribution they have made and say thank you, because we appreciate the way they have looked after us throughout this night during the debate on a very important issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Party, I want to add comments to those of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). It is very clear that the staff who work behind the scenes are extremely important to the operation of this place. From time to time there are occasions when we keep them long past the normal time they return home. We thank them for their work tonight and most other nights when they are here to provide the support that is necessary for this place to continue. I thank them on behalf of my caucus.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to echo the sentiments expressed by my hon. friends.

I want to participate in this debate because I am very concerned about the situation facing western agriculture and eastern agriculture not only for the crop year into which we are entering but for the future as well.

This debate was triggered by the Government's decision to lift the moratorium on the FCC loans. We are talking about whether agriculture in western Canada has a future and whether the Government's record will be one of a Government that turned its back on western Canadian agriculture after making many promises when in opposition, and of a government which effectively brought on a situation where western Canadian agriculture was cut to half or one-third of its traditional place in the Canadian economy.

Under current circumstances, the moratorium being lifted on Farm Credit loans is not just a direct threat to some 7,000 farmers who are currently behind in their payments and may now find themselves being foreclosed by the FCC, it is also a signal to every supplier, bank and financial institution that is involved in western agriculture that the Government has lost faith in western farmers.

The Government, through the Farm Credit Corporation, has lost faith and since the FCC is effectively the lead lender in this particular area, the message will be absorbed and acted upon by banks and other financial institutions.

I suspect that as early as yesterday morning when the announcement was made public in the press, people in the boardrooms, the headquarters of Canada's major banks and in the financial institutions in New York, London and Tokyo were asking about the situation with lending to Canada's western agriculture now that it appears the Government is lifting a moratorium that was initially imposed to protect farmers in September, 1985.

The financial institutions will examine the actions of the Government over the succeeding period of some 18 months to see that the Government did make a certain commitment for a while. It has taken initiatives in terms of international trade, through meetings with other countries that are involved. Clearly, the subsidies from the United States Government to its farmers and the subsidies from the EEC to its farmers are a major reason for the problems currently facing farmers in Canada.

These financial institutions will also note that the Government came through with the Special Canadian Grains Program for the 1986 crop year, albeit possibly because of the Government's hopes of keeping Saskatchewan as a Conservative province at the time of its provincial election.

They will want to know the significance of this latest measure in terms of the future of agricultural policy in Canada. Does the Government intend to help western Prairie farmers remain in operation and ensure that they can survive the difficult period until this subsidy war between the United States and the EEC has been successfully concluded, or has it decided that the stakes are too high and is pulling its chips from the game, thereby foreclosing on western grain farmers if necessary?

Any financial institution would be justified in concluding that the Government is turning its back on western farmers. That is a sad fact but the FCC itself estimates that some 8 per cent of farmers, 14,000, are essentially broke and that 23 per cent, 42,000, are under serious financial pressure.

If I was running a financial institution and was conscious only of protecting my investment; if I was being harassed because my loans to Brazil, Argentina and other Third World countries were turning sour and could not be collected; and if I was being told that Dome will bail out its secured loans at 65 cents to 75 cents on the dollar and my bank was heavily involved, and was also told that the Government no longer had faith in western grain farmers, I would be issuing orders to the prairie branch in Winnipeg that it start to cut back and not extend new funds to those farmers. I see some Conservatives nodding their heads.

Mr. Mayer: We are nodding our heads in amazement at how ignorant the Member is.

Mr. Shields: He does not understand the issue one bit.

Mr. Cassidy: If the Government Members say that they know this is the case, why is the Government turning its back by invoking this moratorium?

Mr. Shields: You do not understand the issue.

Mr. Cassidy: When the issue was raised, why did the Government not recognize that a mistake was made and tell the Farm Credit Corporation what it was doing to western farmers.

Mr. Mayer: Go talk to the farmers. The only thing you know about agriculture is that you probably had eggs for breakfast.

Mr. Shields: Leave Ottawa once in a while. Go and see what happens on those farms.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member says that I should leave Ottawa once in a while. I was in western Ontario just four days ago.

Mr. Shields: My God, he went west.

Mr. Cassidy: Let me tell Hon. Members from western Canada that the problems in agriculture are not confined to western Canada. They are also being experienced in eastern Canada.

London, Ontario is the heart of the western Ontario farming belt. I want to tell Hon. Members that land that was being rented for $100 an acre a few years ago is now going begging because farmers cannot afford to farm it themselves and cannot find anyone else to farm it.

I talked to a friend who was farming 450 acres five years ago in the area of London. She is now only farming 85 acres. The reason that she is essentially going into retirement is that she cannot make a dollar from the farm. She pointed out that the input costs have continued to rise, as anyone will know, but that the prices she fetches for her produce goes down. Last year she had a white bean crop which almost failed totally because, after an excellent summer, weather conditions turned against her.

I cite these facts to indicate to Hon. Members opposite that one can be an urban Member, as I am, and still have a good idea of the situation facing farmers in the farm economy. I suggest to Hon. Members from western Canada who were barracking a minute ago that I believe the crisis in western agriculture is a crisis that affects all Canadians, whether they be represented by urban members or rural members. If they try to wrap themselves in the flag and suggest that only they alone are qualified to talk about this issue, they are talking hooey. If they try to wrap themselves in the flag and say that they alone are qualified to talk about this particular issue, then they are talking hooey.

An Hon. Member: What is hooey?

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member should know. He would find it on his farm if he looked for it.

We are talking about a very serious situation, and as the finance spokesperson for the New Democratic Party I have been pointing out that we are facing a situation of unreasonable and unjustifiable world competition, and the choice we face in Canada is whether we are prepared to weather this out with our western farmers or whether we are going to have a Government which decides to abandon the western farmers and just simply throw them out to the free market hoping that somehow some will survive. The Farm Credit Corporation figures would indicate those farmers will not survive under those circumstances.

The transition program mentioned by the Hon. Member who just spoke is certainly not going to bring them out of that particular situation. It will affect too few. We have to make a choice, and this is what my Leader was saying yesterday when he was asking questions of the Government on this particular issue. Are we as a country prepared to seek to maintain western agriculture during this period of transition or is the Government intent on imposing a short, bitter and devastating shock of readjustment on western farmers which, in the next year and a half, could easily mean 10,000 to 20,000 western farmers forced out of business, hundreds of thousands, if not millions of acres of prairie grain producing land, the most efficient grain producing land in the world, forced into idleness and in many cases forced back into prairie with no agricultural uses at all? These are the choices we are talking about.

I am very concerned as well because I represent urban workers, many working for the Government of Canada and working in high tech industries which serve rural as well as urban uses. It is quite obvious, as my friend the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) indicated as well, that urban workers and the urban economy in Canada are also affected by the crisis which is now taking place in rural Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize how serious the problem is now that the Government has decided to lift the moratorium on FCC foreclosures. The crises affects not only western wheat growers, but also farmers in eastern Canada. The figures of the FCC show that about 8 per cent of Canadian farmers are going through very hard times and are probably bankrupt. In addition, 14 per cent of farmers, or about 42,000, are having serious financial difficulties. As a whole, nearly one third of our farmers are now affected.

In addition, it is quite clear that, while one third of the farmers are directly affected by the financial crisis, the picture is not that good for the rest of them either. In western Canada, farm income will be substantially lower because of the announcement that decrease the prices paid under the Government program will go down by 18 percent, after a 20 per cent decrease last year. The crisis is affecting everyone. This means that even the farmers who are still financially healthy, who have resources, who have finished paying for their land and, who do not have large mortgages or bank loans to reimburse have seen their incomes and profits go down.

As I have just noted in English, the situation in eastern Canada is also difficult. Last weekend, I was in London, Ontario, where I spent some time with a farming friend who worked about 500 acres some five years ago. She told me that people used to pay $100 an acre to lease farmland, but that the land-owners in her region of rich farmlands in south-western Ontario cannot find any farmers willing to lease their land. They have to let it to the farmers free to ensure that someone will work the land and keep it from deteriorating. My friend, who used to work 500 acres, now works only 85. She decided to reduce her acreage because the rest was not bringing in any profits. The profitability of agriculture is therefore affected in both eastern and western Canada.

The situation in Western Canada is particularly serious. The moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures has just been lifted. This gives a message not only to the farmers who are directly affected, but also to all banking institutions. It is now time to seed for the 1987 crop year. All the farmers who need bank credit to begin their activities in the spring will therefore be affected. All the farms and all the farmers with mortgages or bank loans will be affected because the banks will have to reassess farm credit, especially in western Canada. The banks will consider the fact that the Government has lifted the moratorium and will see in this a very clear message, namely that the Government has decided not to continue to support the farmers until the subsidy war with the United States and the Common Market has been resolved. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that the agricultural crisis began with the decision of the Common Market to subsidize farming and the decision of the American Government to respond by subsidizing American farmers instead of letting them face this difficult situation by themselves, going as far as subsidizing wheat sales to what President Reagan called the evil empire, the Soviet Union. What can we, in Canada, do in such a case?

On a point of order, I object to the comment of the Hon. Member. I believe that such a comment is out of order and should be withdrawn.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am not sure what the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) said.

Mr. Shields: Then I will repeat it, Mr. Speaker, so that you may rule.

Mr. Cassidy: You had better not.

Mr. Shields: The New Democratic Party was referring to the President of the United States being in Canada addressing this body and the Hon. Member started to make remarks about the President in his speech. I said: "And that is the time the NDP made complete asses of themselves". I think that is quite in order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would hope the Hon. Member would not use that type of language. However, I must say it is not unparliamentary because it referred to a Party. However, I hope in future Hon. Members will refrain from using that type of language, even though we have been debating the matter for some 12 hours.

Mr. Cassidy: I would point out the hour. This has been a prolonged debate. However, I will bear in mind that while I cannot refer to an Hon. Member as an ass I certainly can refer to his Party as a group of jackasses and I may seek to do so in the future.

I do not want to enter into that kind of retribution because this is an extremely serious situation. What I want to say is that this Government came to power because of the alienation of western Canada and because of the concern among westerners that the Government of Canada was somehow dominated by Ontario and Quebec and that the Government of Canada under the Liberals was really not conscious and aware of the situation which existed in western Canada. This Government came to power, therefore, intent on redressing, or so we were told, that particular situation. It has been so successful that at the present time the Conservative Premier of Alberta is proposing a Triple E Senate, a specific change which I doubt will ever be accepted by all the provinces which would have to agree to such reform. This is being done because there is a feeling in Alberta, and the other western provinces, that the Conservative Government has failed the farmers and the people of western Canada.

The feeling that the Government has failed was already abroad and can only be exacerbated by the decision to lift the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loans. People out west will very rightly say: "Look, we have to make our decisions today about the crops we put in the ground for 1987. We cannot wait under current situations. We are so squeezed now with two cuts of 20 per cent apiece, or thereabouts, in the initial payment that we cannot afford to wait until the fall to find out whether or not there will be another special grains program".

There have been suggestions from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and from the Minister responsible that the Government may do something. But westerners are not fools. We know that there will be no election in Saskatchewan to save their bacon next year in the fall. There is no election scheduled for Alberta or Manitoba. They know that there is a very strong correlation between special grains programs and elections that the Conservatives hope to win provincially. They do not want to be left to hang out to dry and to have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who I suspect is the genius behind this particular move on the moratorium, go to his colleagues in August or September, fold his arms and say: "Boys and girls, I know what it is like. I am awfully sorry but there is no money left in the kitty. I am not prepared to come up with the money that is necessary in order to keep western farmers in business because I represent Bay Street. My constituency is in downtown Toronto. The people I really listen to are those who run the banks, and the investment dealers and other people like that, the world from which I came. As far as those people are concerned, you can put 'paid' to western agriculture".

He, in August or September, will then try to impose his will on the Government and pull the plug on western farmers. He pulled the plug by having the Farm Credit Corporation which comes under the authority of the Minister of Finance impose—

Mr. Shields: Socialist clap-trap!

Mr. Cassidy: This is not socialist clap-trap at all. The Hon. Member objects like he does because he knows that this is what happened. One Minister pulled the plug on western farmers. The Government should now come through and redress the damage by doing two things.

In the first place it should say: "We were wrong to lift the moratorium. Now is not the time". In the second place, as we indicated in Question Period yesterday, the Government should now, this month, this week, today, very clearly indicate to western farmers what they can expect in terms of total revenues from the grain production in the 1987 crop year. As far as the New Democratic Party is concerned that is what we are saying.

The farmers have been so battered that they cannot afford to go into the future with a hope and a prayer and nothing more. We need specific, bankable promises from the Government. So far we have not had them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), finally.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I came to the House for the emergency debate that was authorized through Your Honour's august Chair. I arrived at eight o'clock, which was the starting time for the debate. I had to smile because Members of Parliament on the government side were waiting, as is the custom in the House, for the sponsoring Party to form a quorum so that we could get started in this debate that was called by a member of the New Democratic Party. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, for 15 minutes we stood and waited for the two opposition Parties to come up with 20 Members to sit in the House so that we could start the emergency debate that they triggered?

Mr. Cassidy: You tried to kill the debate. That was your concern.

Mr. Shields: No. In the end government Members had to make up the quorum, which is not the way tradition goes in this place.

Mr. Cassidy: You tried to kill the debate. That is what you were doing.

Mr. Shields: The Hon. Member says that we tried to kill the debate.

Mr. Mayer: Who was here all night? Where were you?

Mr. Shields: On the contrary, we wanted to hear what Members opposite had to say, and they could not form a quorum to get the debate started. Approximately 20 or 30 members of the Government have been here at any time all evening. I want to tell Hon. Members that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was here all night. The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) was here all night, as was the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) was here all night. That is unprecedented. We have been here speaking in this emergency debate.

Mr. Cassidy: You have more people than the two opposition Parties combined.

Mr. Shields: We now hear from old "Senator Fog-horn" across the way. He just arrived here. He went home last night, went to bed and has come here pretending to all who can hear that he has been here taking part in this debate.

Mr. Mayer: He snored all night.

Mr. Shields: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) just arrived. He did not take part in this debate. He does not even know what has been discussed, which is obvious. He would not have brought up some of the matters which he did bring up in his comments if he had been here.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre talked about the moratorium of the Farm Credit Corporation. He then said that the banks would receive a clear signal and so on. I want to make sure that the Hon. Member understands that there was never a moratorium on bank loans.

Mr. Cassidy: That is not what I said.

Mr. Shields: The moratorium was placed on the Farm Credit Corporation because—

Mr. Cassidy: You should have been listening harder.

Mr. Shields: Perhaps the Hon. Member could listen for a moment. I do not mind him interjecting once in a while but I suggest that he just listen. He might learn something, he just might. I doubt it but he might.

Mr. Angus: Especially from you.

Mr. Shields: The moratorium was placed on the Farm Credit Corporation because it was given a mandate by the previous Government, which came out of the legislation, and it became a lender of last resort. A great many farmers, because of the disastrous interest rate policies of the previous administration, were caught in the credit squeeze that went on. Some of them got into tight situations.

I want to tell the Hon. Member that I have farmers in my riding and that I have worked with the Farm Credit Corporation. I have always found the corporation to be very helpful. I have always found when I went to the people there with a farmer who was having a problem, and we had to do some work on a loan to redo it, to stretch out the payments, or to refinance it in some way, that they were always there front and centre ready to do it.

The need to put a moratorium on the Farm Credit Corporation was as a result of the legislation under which the Farm Credit Corporation was operating. We brought about the moratorium so that we could put in place farm debt review boards to assist farmers and so that we could also put in place a transition program to assist farmers. These were the measures which had to be taken so that farmers who were experiencing financial difficulty could sit down and so that we could work with them to help them through a crisis situation.

Let us look at what is happening now that we have the farm debt review boards working, and working well, and now that we have the transition program working, and working well. We had farmers, instead of making the effort, some of them, who were quite able to pay their loans and keep current with the Farm Credit Corporation. But all they did was look over down the road and say: "There is not much need for me to keep myself current because there is a moratorium". What were the banks saying? The banks were saying to farmers in my area: "We are going to cut your loan off because you can now go to the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow because they have a moratorium". That is the type of situation and climate we would have been creating if we had carried the moratorium on any further. The moratorium served its purpose. It allowed us the time to do what we wanted to do. We will now be able to work with those farmers in a sensible way.

I also smiled to myself when I listened to a number of Members of Parliament, particularly from the NDP, since Liberal Members of Parliament were not here past midnight. I have not seen anyone in their benches all night long. There were perhaps three speakers from the Party during the whole debate. I had to smile because about every second Member who stood up talked about the $1 billion or the 5.30 phone call that Premier Grant Devine made to Ottawa seeking help for farmers. I think they missed a very significant point. The very significant point about Grant Devine phoning Ottawa was that there was somebody here in Ottawa to take the call. There was somebody here in Ottawa to take the call and to say: "Yes, we understand that you have a problem; we understand the Province of Manitoba has a problem, and we will do something about it."

• (0720)

Mr. Cassidy: That was last year. What about this year?

Mr. Shields: The significant thing to bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, is that there was somebody in Ottawa who would answer a call from Grant Devine.

Can you imagine Allan Blakeney calling Pierre Trudeau and asking for some assistance for the agricultural sector in Saskatchewan? Pierre Trudeau's response would probably have been: "Why should I bother helping you? Why should I sell your wheat?"

This is the kind of thing we are talking about.

Can you imagine Peter Lougheed telephoning Ottawa requesting help for the farmers of Alberta?

The whole point is, there is now someone in Ottawa who is there to answer the telephone call when it comes and respond—and I think that is important.

We now have a Prime Minister in Ottawa who responds to the concerns of western Canada, and he has made that clear on a number of occasions. He made that clear with his actions on the National Energy Program; he has made that clear through the Prince Albert Declaration.

We on this side of the House do not take the position that there are no problems in the agricultural sector. We do not say that we have all of the answers. What we do say is that we have a Government in Ottawa which is going to respond to the regions, and in fact it has responded in an unprecedented way to date.

Without taking into consideration interest rates, we know that farm income in 1987 will surpass the farm income in 1986. We know today that farm incomes for 1987 for grain and oil seeds will exceed farm incomes in 1986.

Given current commodity prices and the situation that exists between the EEC and the U. S., one should consider that a tremendous accomplishment of this Government.

Let's talk about some of the reactions to the Government's record on agriculture.

Prime Minister Mulroney, in April of 1986, announced a farm package. Alex Binkley, as reported in Manitoba Co-operator of May 8, 1986, had this to say about that farm package:

> It is a far cry from former Liberal Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, who told Prairie Grain growers: "Why should I sell your wheat?" —It is also unlikely Trudeau would have vowed to bring up agricultural problems at the Economic Summit, or talk about the need for government action on them.

Next we have Barry Wilson of The Western Producer, who had the following to say:

> It—marked the first time in at least six years that a Prime Minister devoted a press conference primarily to agricultural issues.

Let's see what they had to say about the Rural Transition Program. Ray Guay of the Saskatoon Star Phoenix, on September 12, 1986, had the following to say:

> In short, the program is pure common sense and will help only those who have no choice but to leave the farm.

Gren Winslow, of the Cattlemen Magazine, in August of 1986, had the following to say on the Farm Debt Review Act:

> A good idea has come out of Ottawa which deserves support. It's the Farm Debt Review Act. It has merit, not for what it does, but for what it does not do—it does not impose mandatory solutions on negotiations between farmers in financial trouble and their creditors.

These publications, Mr. Speaker, are organs of the farm communities. These are the people who speak for the farmers of western Canada.

On December 4, 1986, we had an editorial in the Manitoba Co-operator on the Western Grain Stabilization Act amendments and the 1986 final payment. I quote from that editorial:

> Just when government officials must wonder if they can ever do anything that will please a restless or seemingly unappreciative agricultural community and farm press, along comes an action that warrants curtain call after curtain call. The recent payout from the much-improved Western Grain Stabilization Program is such an action.

That is the view of the Manitoba Co-operative, a publication that has not always been kind to this Government and the actions of this Government.

What has been said about the Special Canadian Grains Program? I quote from the Regina Leader Post of December 10, 1986, as follows:

> Farm leaders from across the country have praised the federal Government's decision to provide farmers with $1 billion to offset the impact of an international grain war.
> Avery Sahl, First Vice-President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, said: 'I'm pleased there are no strings attached to the money. It is cash and not a loan and that is good news.'

As I said, that was the view of the Regina Leader Post, as expressed on December 10, 1986.

And what did the Opposition do with respect to this announcement? They spent the time between the Prime Minister's pledge of $1 billion and the Government's delivery of the program unnecessarily scaring farmers.

On countless occasions, thoughtless Members opposite stood in this House and asked if this $1 billion was new money, a loan, or what.

Time and time again the Leader of the New Democratic Party stood in this House and asked: "Is it new money?"

All that the Members opposite were doing through that tactic was to add to the fear and uncertainty on the part of the farming communities of this country.

Let's look at some of the things the New Democratic Party, the Party of the socialists, was perpetrating on the Canadian people.

My colleague from Lethbridge, earlier in this debate—and I think it was around two o'clock this morning—made a couple of points that I should like to reiterate at this point.

One point he made was that traditionally we did not have to worry about the socialists; that we always looked upon them as the "kooky" left. But now that they are up in the polls, they are beginning to think that they can smell substantial successes in an election—and God forbid that they ever form a federal Government.

In the light of the standing of the New Democratic Party in the polls, I think we should make perfectly clear to the Canadian people exactly what it is that these socialists, masquerading as the New Democratic Party, stand for.

The New Democratic Party consider convention and NDP Federal Council resolutions to be binding. Over the years, they have developed an extensive list of resolutions, covering everything from the nationalization of the meat packing industry to legalized prostitution.

And what are some of those resolutions? Last fall, Mr. Speaker, the NDP published a consolidation of those resolutions in a publication entitled Resolutions Reference—and I want to thank my hon. friends for doing that. We are now going to be able to use this published document to show the socialists for what they are.

I have a copy of this publication, and I suggest that all Members of Parliament and all Canadians obtain a copy. They will find it to be an enlightening document.

For those who are seriously thinking of embracing the socialist horde known as the New Democratic Party, this publication should be mandatory reading.

As the Foreword to the book states, this book contains those resolutions passed by New Democrats since 1961 which are still current today, that is, resolutions which have not been overtaken by events or superseded by subsequent resolutions.

Let's look at some of these resolutions. While there are many of them, I want to highlight but a few.

We have a resolution on exchange controls. We all know what exchange controls are.

The NDP realizes that there would be a massive flight of capital from Canada if they were ever elected.

• (0730)

As such, the NDP has a resolution which is still current today. It calls for the NDP to use exchange controls to prevent the flight of capital. What a difference that would be. We have created nearly one million jobs since taking office two years ago because of the attraction Canada has become for investment.

We are a trading nation. We are an international nation. We need capital to develop our resources. We have attracted unprecedented numbers over the last few years and have created jobs. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what would happen if the socialists in the NDP were brought to power and they put on exchange controls? The jobs would go.

Let us look at sexual offences. One NDP resolution, which is still current today, calls for amendments to the Criminal Code which eliminate the definition of crime on the basis of consent in adult sexual activity in Sections Nos. 155, 157, 158.1, 179.1, 180.1(d), and 193 and define such activities as crimes only on the basis of commitment of acts of violence. Unlike those who attend NDP conventions, most Canadians cannot cite the sexual offences provisions of the Criminal Code section by section.

Let me translate it into layman's language. This resolution states that the NDP will legalize prostitution, common bawdy houses, sex in public places, and group sex, provided that everyone consents and provided that there is no violence. What about the neighbours who may not consent to having a brothel next door? Is it not strange that a Party which claims to have principles will sometimes try to hide them?

Let us now look at population growth controls. I am talking about a socialist Party which is parading itself as being an alternative Government or even an alternative Official Opposition. Some NDP resolutions sound as though they were plagiarized from Mao Tse-Tung's little red book.

One resolution which is still current today states that population growth will be directed toward areas that require more people. Does this mean that the NDP will tell people where they may live? Does it mean that the NDP will solve the problem of regional unemployment through mass migration?

We are talking about resolutions which are current today and have been published by the New Democratic Party. The NDP not only wants to control where Canadians live, but it wants to control what consumer goods they would be allowed to manufacture and purchase.

Another resolution which is still current calls for legislation to define and prohibit the manufacture of socially useless energy consuming devices, for example, electrical gadgetry. What is included in that definition of socially useless electrical gadgetry? Does it include VCRs, electric razors, blow dryers, food processors, dishwashers, and electric lights?

The NDP also has resolutions to look after airport expansion. Its Members do not want any more. They have a shopping list of Crown corporations which is quite extensive.

Turning to the area of farm planning, one of its resolutions indicates that it might be necessary, as well, to take into public ownership some existing farm supply retail operations, farm machinery assembly plants, meat packing plants, and canneries.

I know that my time is coming to an end, but there are just two more resolutions to which I want to refer. They are very important because we are talking about agriculture. One resolution recommends limits on farm sizes. The NDP wants the establishment of a public commission to determine a formula for farm unit size on a regional basis. The commission's findings would be subject to local approval. Can we imagine that?

The very last one is a current resolution which is still on the books of the NDP. It indicates that farm income would be negotiated directly with farmers on an industry-wide level and would be based on costs of production, family need, and the productive potential of various farming operations in relation to what was produced. It is to be negotiated. Will it be negotiated in the way industrial unions negotiate? How do farmers shut down their operations for six months? It blows the mind. Truly it is what socialists stand for. Canadians should recognize this debate for what it really is—headline grabbing by the socialists in the NDP.

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, never in my wildest imagination did I think that I would be speaking in the House at 7.35 a.m. I have been here since eight o'clock last night. It is amazing. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said to me: "Walter, stick around. This will be interesting".

It has not only been interesting but very revealing. I suppose in some ways we should thank the NDP for this debate. The Conservatives have capitalized on this opportunity to expose the socialists and their policies. Farmers will not be fooled.

If efficiency and competitiveness could guarantee a fair return, Canadian farmers would not have as many problems as they have today. There are no better, more efficient or more competitive grain farmers in the world. We have good land and a good grain growing climate. Canadian farmers produce quality products. However, those things do not count as they used to in the world market-place.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Van De Walle: Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting for—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. We have listened to Members for 12 hours. Could we listen to a few more.

Mr. Van De Walle: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that some of these Members have just come into the Chamber.

Mr. Fulton: There are five Tories in the House.

Mr. Van De Walle: Should I count them for you?

Mr. Fulton: One, two, three, four, five.

Mr. Van De Walle: Count the ones in the back too.

We must recognize the reality of subsidies. Only a few countries have treasuries rich enough to meet that of the United States. Canada cannot possibly meet it. Everyone who thinks otherwise should consider the facts for a moment. Farmers do not want subsidies. They want a fair price and a stable market.

Let us look at the happenings in the European Common Market. About two-thirds of its budget is spent on agriculture. The common agricultural policy of the community is providing $33 billion Canadian in farm expenditures. European farmers are now receiving about $480 per tonne for Durum wheat, compared with Canada's 1987-88 initial price of $110. Their farmers are receiving $285 per tonne for barley, compared with Canada's initial price of $60 in the next crop year.

Because of these heavy subsidies, the European Common Market has moved from a net importer of 24 million tonnes of grain 10 years ago to being the third largest exporter today behind the United States and Canada. That is what we are up against.

The U.S., with a huge treasury, has a five-year Farm Bill. For the 1986 fiscal year alone, the Bill will provide in the neighbourhood of $35 billion in direct farm program payments. In addition, the United States is targeting markets with heavy export subsidies under its export enhancement program. Those are the stakes in the subsidy war. Canadian farmers are victims of this war.

Subsidies and surpluses have combined to push world grain prices to ridiculously low figures. Often they do not even cover the farmer's cost of production. Western Canada is being particularly hard hit because that is where most of the grain is produced. A number of farmers are suffering the consequences and the economies of the many rural communities in the west are feeling the impact. That is why this Government has taken the unprecedented action to provide direct assistance to grain farmers during these difficult times.

Actions within our boundaries are not enough. Canada is a major grain exporter. Grain producers derive the great majority of their farm income receipts from exports. The reality is that we face an international problem that will require an international solution. I just want to point out that the federal Government has placed a very high priority on seeking fairness in the world agricultural trade. It is this Government's objective to establish fair international rules of trade in agriculture for all countries to follow.

Let us talk about the Government's action on the international solution. Canada has placed agriculture on the GATT agenda. Canada has organized meetings of the producing countries. That is positive. That is leadership; yes, leadership that was provided by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), by our Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), by our Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer).

As a former director of a large grain company, a farmer-owned company, I was pleased to see the statements concerning initial prices by the United Grain Growers and the prairie pools. What did they say, Mr. Speaker? These companies, speaking on behalf of their farmer members, indicated their support of the Canadian Wheat Board's setting of initial prices that reflect world market prices. I think that is very important. I was surprised that some of the Members opposite are questioning the Canadian Wheat Board's decision. Initial prices have to reflect the world market-place. That is a sound decision. We have to come to grips with reality.

These are difficult times for grain farmers. During the few months that I have been in Ottawa, I have listened to Hon. Members in the Opposition state the problem over and over. I did not come to Ottawa to have the problem restated for me. As a grain farmer, an agri-businessman and a former director of a farm organization, I know the situation. I am pleased to be a member of this Government, a Government that is addressing the situation, a Government that is showing leadership. When was the last time that a Canadian Government paid $1.3 billion to the farmers? I ask the question, Mr. Speaker. When was the last time?

Mr. Thacker: Never.

Mr. Van De Walle: That is right. Never in the history of Canada has any government ever made those kinds of commitments to farmers. I want to indicate to you that farmers will plant their crops this spring. I am amazed at the negative attitude that exists on the part of some of the Members. Do they not have any future? Do they not see a future in Canada? I do and I know the farmers do. We have heard all this doom and gloom about the family farm, how it is going to disappear and all that sort of thing. But let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that my parents came to this country and it as the land of opportunity. We have a family farm. That family farm will continue to exist, along with the other family farms, because we are resourceful, innovative and we will survive. More than that, I know that all Canadians want to see agriculture prosper.

In conclusion, may I say that here in Canada it is my belief that we have demonstrated that this country can produce quality grain. We have maintained our share of the world markets. Agriculture is important to the economy of Canada. It means employment and food. Farmers know only too well that this Government is committed to agriculture. A strong viable farm industry is in the interests of all Canadians. Our Government has provided assistance to farmers when it was needed in the past and I know that we will provide that kind of assistance again so that agriculture will be viable.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in this debate this evening.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): This morning.

Mr. McKnight: I started this evening, but you are right, it is morning. I entered the House shortly after eight o'clock last evening and was able to listen with great attention to the debate. As my colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), did earlier I would like to pay tribute to those servants of Members and servants of the House who have been up all night. They were up the night before in another emergency debate and I want to express my thanks and gratitude to the people who serve us so well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: It is not unusual for farmers, like the Hon. Member who just spoke, or the Members from this side who have been taking part in this debate, to be up all evening. I have been up many evenings seeding my crop. I have been up many evenings taking off my crop, as have other colleagues. I have been in and out of a nice warm bed at calving time.

• (0750)

I think the Liberal Party put up three speakers. I see that a Liberal Member is present now. I hope he said goodbye to his teddy bear and rushed over to the House at the call. It is nice to see him here.

There has been much debate this evening and I would like to pay a compliment to two Hon. Members of the Opposition who took part in this debate. When Hansard is reviewed sometime tomorrow or later today, Hon. Members and Canadians in general should read the speech delivered by the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) on behalf of the New Democratic Party and the speech delivered by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on behalf of the Liberal Party. One would find in those speeches that the concern for western agriculture and agriculture in general can be very well expressed by Hon. Members who may not be as closely associated with the agricultural industry as some of us are.

The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) mentioned earlier that the Government does not set the initial price of wheat. The Government seeks advice from the Canadian Wheat Board and accepts, rejects or compromises on that advice when necessary in establishing the initial payments farmers receive for grain. Members of the NDP have long espoused support for the Canadian Wheat Board. Today, speaker after speaker condemned the initial prices set by the Canadian Wheat Board as being too low, not just this year but last year as well.

I find it strange that members of the NDP have been leaderless throughout this debate. The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) was much more concerned about the shareholders of TransCanada PipeLines and Bell Canada during yesterday's debate.

Mr. Manly: Where's Mulroney?

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party asks where the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is. I am sure the Prime Minister is in his office watching this debate with great interest.

Mr. Manly: Why isn't he here speaking?

Mr. McKnight: I would suggest that the Hon. Member take his time. I presume that the debate will go on and in all likelihood, other people will enter into it.

I would like to take a minute to talk about the contribution the Government made to agriculture and particularly to the grains and oil-seeds industry during the last crop year. The Canadian people have supported the grains and oil-seeds industry in western Canada to the tune of $27,000 per commercial farm. That was a commitment made by the Government, but it has been supported by the taxpayers of Canada.

In my Province of Saskatchewan, net farm income will increase by 34 per cent this year. Why will it increase? A couple of reasons are quite apparent. The Special Grains Program was delivered. I remember when that program was announced. I remember that the Leader of the New Democratic Party in Saskatchewan said that it was a charade, it would not be new money, it would be a loan, it was flim-flam. I remember the Liberals here in Ottawa—we do not have too many Liberals in Saskatchewan—saying, as did the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), that the money would have to be repaid and would come from existing programs. His Leader said the same thing.

We now have proof to the contrary. In the Province of Saskatchewan, the Special Grains Program delivered $415 million while the anticipated net farm income before that program was about $425 million. That one government program doubled the net farm income in the Province of Saskatchewan.

Let us take a moment to look ahead. Totalling the production of wheat, feed grains and oil-seeds with what could possibly be $4 million of support in this crop year could amount to an assistance package to the producers of $2.50 per bushel, and Hon. Members will be able to check this at the conclusion of the year.

I made a comment earlier about $4 billion. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party, concluded his remarks by saying that about $4 billion will be paid and that that was terrible because the net farm income of farmers in western Canada would come almost totally from Government. He said that that made farmers public servants. Then in the same breath he told us to put in more money—

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not sure if there is a rule, but I think it is generally the practice for Hon. Members who are quoting other Hon. Members to quote them accurately. Had the Hon. Member been a bit more awake, he would have noted that I said that given those figures, were we Conservatives, we would probably complain about farmers being nothing better than civil servants and we would make a lot of politics out of it. However, I had no intention of doing that. I think the Hon. Member should at least quote other Hon. Members accurately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is a matter for debate.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I will take the Hon. Member's words under advisement. I will have a look at Hansard and see—

Mr. Boudria: With due consideration.

Mr. McKnight: The Liberal Member who has now arrived said, "With due consideration".

Of the three members of the Liberal Party who spoke, I paid a compliment to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, but I would like to mention now the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who was a Minister of the Crown in the last administration. He condemned this Government for not doing enough. Hon. Members opposite said that last year grain prices were reduced by close to 20 per cent and this year wheat prices by 15 per cent, with the total close to 18 per cent. Compare that with 1981 to 1983 when the Liberal Government was in power. At that time, there was a decrease of 48 per cent, but what did the Government do? That decrease was the largest since 1938. It brought the value of grain down to 1938-dollars. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry railed and condemned this Government, but what did his Government do? It did nothing.

Senator "Blazin" Hazen from the other place is travelling across southern Canada with his whiskers, his big hat and his pointy-toed shoes. He is saying: "We want justice". Where was he? He was a member of the Cabinet of the Liberal Government. Not only that, he was the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In 1983 did he do anything? No. Did he go to Cabinet? We are not sure because we do not know if he was allowed to go to Cabinet. It is sometimes alleged that he attended Cabinet but we never saw anything that would make us believe he was there.

In 1981 the prime rate in Canada was 22.75 per cent. Now, in 1987, it is 9.25 per cent. When the Liberals were in power with their high interest rate policies in 1981, FCC loans were at 16.75 per cent. Today FCC farm loans are at an eight-year low at 10 per cent. Farm improvement loans were 23.75 per cent in 1981. Today they are at 10.25 per cent. Yet the Liberals have the audacity to condemn the Prime Minister and this Government for not doing enough for western farmers. They did absolutely nothing. They did not even have the courtesy to recognize that there was a problem.

Let us look at subsidies in the U.S. and the EEC. The Americans subsidize agriculture to the extent of $3 billion a month. The EEC is spending $6 billion on storage alone. We cannot compete with that, but if we could, would it be right? The Americans took on the EEC and what happened to Canada, Australia, New Zealand and Argentina? What happened to our producers? If Canada joined in this madness what would happen to Australia, New Zealand and Argentina? If Australia joined in this madness what would happen? It is sheer lunacy to enter into this form of competition. As much as it is needed at this time Canada cannot afford it and it is not the way to solve the problem.

I want to talk briefly about some statements made yesterday and early today. First let us talk a little bit about the removal of the moratorium as a sign of confidence. I hear the NDP and Liberals laugh and snicker. Yet it is a sign of confidence because this Government and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) have put in place programs which will allow the removal of that moratorium. It is a sign of confidence because we started with interest rate write downs, we put farm debt review boards in place, shared risk mortgages in place, commodity-based mortgages in place, and a rural transition program in place.

I heard members from the NDP say the rural transition program is wrong. If that is so, then it must be wrong to have unemployment insurance. With that attitude the NDP must believe that unemployment insurance is wrong for the workers that they claim support them. They must believe it is wrong if they condemn the rural transition program.

This Government and the people of Canada contributed to agriculture in the form of the special grains program. We put money at the disposal of western farmers and agriculture in general.

Instead of supporting that, instead of building confidence and making the financial institutions believe that this is going to work, what did the NDP and the Liberals do? They spread gloom and doom. They dragged down that confidence. They refused to assist and buoy up the farmers. Farmers are by nature confident people. We put a crop in the ground in the spring and we know we are going to be taking it off in the fall. We get calves in the spring and we know those calves are going to be worth money in the fall. We have confidence.

Yet what do the Liberals and NDP do? Because we have removed the FCC moratorium, because we have confidence that we have programs in place to keep farmers on the land, they send signals of doom and gloom. I heard the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), whose only concern and knowledge about agriculture is that as long as Safeway is open he is sure it is in good shape, say that this is a bad signal to the financial institutions. The bad signal is being sent by the NDP and the Liberals. They have negative thoughts.

Mr. Riis: Are things getting better?

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has returned from his nap and wants to take part in the debate from his seat. Yes, things have gotten better. I want him to know that bankruptcies have declined.

Mr. Riis: Do you want to put your seat up?

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member can wait. In due course there will be an election. Look at the nervousness of the NDP. They are concerned about what they are doing. They are concerned about the gloom and doom they are spreading. They are concerned about what they are doing to drive farmers into not believing the effort made by this Government and the people of Canada. I cannot understand why, when the people of Canada, and the Government and the Prime Minister, put effort and energy into programs designed to assist farmers to stay on the land, why those two Parties opposite—not so much the Liberals because they have not been here—forecast nothing but doom and gloom.

I had an opportunity to see the Leader of the National Farmers Union on television talking about the moratorium—more gloom and doom. I do not know, but maybe he was caught up in the moratorium; maybe he was in a conflict of interest; maybe he was one of those who were in default. That is possible. I can see no other reason why a leader of a farm organization would be so negative about all of the programs put in place by this Government. I do not understand it. I may be jumping to conclusions but I cannot find any other reason for that happening.

I would like to say in conclusion that I compliment the NDP for allowing government Members to take part in this debate in order to clearly enunciate the actions taken by the Prime Minister and his Government, and the support the people of Canada have given the grains and oilseeds industry in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: This emergency debate commenced at eight o'clock last night and has been pursued vigorously by Hon. Members on both sides until now. I think all Hon. Members would appreciate that it would be appropriate now for the Chair to recognize the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

• (0810)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to participate briefly in such an important debate which involves the well-being of farmers in general, the agricultural community and, in a special way, the well-being and future of western agriculture. I suppose that in many ways this debate is about attitude as well. It was called by the NDP in a fit of interest for western agriculture, yet the NDP could not summon enough Members for a quorum to begin the debate. That is a question of attitude. They did not even care enough about western agriculture to have a quorum to begin the debate.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Angus: Where were you all night?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) remark made just a moment ago, less than five minutes ago there were less than five Conservatives in the House.

Mr. Angus: We can all play the same game.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Speaker: There is a tradition in the House that Hon. Members refrain from remarking on who is or is not in the House. As Speaker I have been in and out of this House for a good many hours. I do not think any Hon. Member would want me to begin to identify who has been here and who has not been here all night. The Right Hon. Prime Minister should proceed.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that my hon. friend took such offence at my remark.

Mr. Riis: There were no Tories in the House at all by the way, Brian, to begin the debate.

Ms. McDonald: Why don't you deal with the issue?

Mr. Mulroney: The NDP seems to be offended by this. It is a question of attitude.

Ms. McDonald: Deal with the issue.

Mr. Mulroney: If the matter is important enough to generate an emergency debate the NDP should ensure that its members are here, because this Party is here to defend the interests of western Canada. They had better stop saying one thing and doing another because western Canadians are fed up to the teeth with the hypocrisy of the Liberals and the NDP on western Canadian issues.

Mr. Riis: Check the polls. You're at the bottom of the ladder. They're laughing at you and your Gucci shoes. Have you got your Guccis on?

Mr. Mulroney: I will acknowledge to my hon. friend that it is true that last autumn we received a call from a western Premier saying that western farmers are in trouble in agriculture and are asking for help. My answer to that was, yes, we will help western farmers.

Mr. Riis: You should be embarrassed.

Mr. Mulroney: A former Prime Minister got a call in not dissimilar circumstances and said, "Why should I sell your wheat?" The Prime Minister of Canada and all Members of Parliament have an obligation to sell western Canadian wheat because that is our duty to western farmers and to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Riis: Your Parliamentary Secretary didn't even want a debate. He said there was no need for a debate.

Mr. Mazankowski: Do you want to make another speech?

Mr. Riis: Yeah, I'd like to make another speech.

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. House Leader of the NDP is an outstanding member of this House and will be given opportunities to make more speeches, and I will listen to him with respect as I always do. I know he will want to do the same for members of the Government as they address some pretty fundamental issues.

I indicated that this is a question of attitude. It is very much a question of attitude. We indicated to western Canada very clearly in the campaign that we would get rid of FIRA. We said that we would get rid of the NEP. We said we would implement the Prince Albert declaration designed to be of assistance to western agriculture, western energy, and western Canada in general.

We said we would deal with the question of interest rates. Lowering interest rates is not just an abstract theory. For every percentage point they are lowered farmers pay approximately $150 million less to the banks. We have lowered them between 4 per cent and 5 per cent which results in $600 million to $700 million that farmers are not paying to the banks but using to reinvest in their own farms.

We said that we would deal with a capital gains exemption for the family farm. We said we would get rid of the tax on farm fuels. We have done this. We made a series of commitments to western Canada and we have honoured them because by building a stronger base for western Canada we are contributing to Canadian unity.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, francophone or anglophone, Conservative or New Democrat, we must all face up to the regional realities of this country. Western Canada is going through difficult times. It is true that certain regions of Canada—for instance, Ontario, Manitoba, some regions of Greater Montreal—are experiencing a rather significant economic recovery. We have serious problems in western Canada, in Alberta, in the interior of British Columbia, in Saskatchewan, and our fellow Canadians in these provinces quite properly expect national assistance from the federal Government.

[English]

I am here to say on behalf of all Canadians that this is not something for which western Canadians or farmers are asking. This is something which Canada must respond to in the interests of not only fairness to western Canada, but to our own citizenship and the building of a stronger united Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I saw Alvin Hamilton participating in this debate late last night.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: I apologize. I referred to him as Alvin only because that is the way the country has known him and loved him. It was a great privilege for me to work with him 25 years ago as a private secretary, to have travelled with the Minister of Agriculture to every village and town in western Canada and to have seen first hand the tremendous strength of western agriculture and the tremendous commitment of farmers; their devotion to family and their devotion to hard work.

An extraordinary situation has developed in Canada. It is not to be blamed on political Parties, but it is here. Farmers in Canada in general, but western Canada in a special way because of the nature of the territory, have always been told that if they work hard and make sacrifices they will increase their productivity, contribute to the national wealth, and will be rewarded. Western farmers have devoted their lives to making Canada a richer and better place. They have increased their productivity and have been penalized for it. That is wrong and must be reversed. Farmers must receive a greater degree of fairness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: The matter of the climate in which this is dealt with is also important because it has been placed in the context of western Canada. I doubt if there has ever been a federation within which there has not been regional strains and tensions. It is the duty of federal politicians, not to exacerbate those strains and tensions but to try to reduce them, to try to harmonize the interests of the people of Saskatchewan with those of the people of Nova Scotia.

[Translation]

The interests of Matane with the interests of the residents of Esterhazy in Saskatchewan.

[English]

The beauty of Fort St. John, British Columbia, must be brought into harmony with the interests of Port-au-Basque, Newfoundland. That is the obligation of federal Members of Parliament and that is what we are here for. That as well requires a degree of fairness in representation.

This is indeed a country of regions. Thousands of miles of geography are bound together by a small population base essentially in the south. There are indeed discernible regions with different interests. This is a vital part of our citizenship. We have to respond to it not in a parochial way but in a recognition that these regions make our national strength when brought together by a national Parliament.

Let us examine those from western Canada who sit on this side of the House. The trade issue, which is the top issue in Canada today, is being handled by a person from British Columbia.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle), the Deputy Prime Minister and Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) are representatives from western Canada in the Government of Canada. I invite Hon. Members to objectively analyse this and compare it with other administrations. I believe they will come to the conclusion that never, since this Parliament was founded, has western Canada been more powerfully represented in the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Not only are the internal workings of government important, all of us must realize that we have a role to play and a place of strength and importance in the national Government. This translates as well into a number of different instruments. We are all familiar with how the House and, in many ways, how the Government works.

For example, it is important to mention that there are very powerful visible committees of Cabinet. The Government Operations Committee of Cabinet, which is so important, is chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister, who is from Alberta. The Foreign Policy and Defence Committee, which is second most important, is chaired by a member of the Government from Alberta. The committee on social policy, which is responsible for all social policy spending by the Government of Canada, is chaired by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is from Manitoba. The committee dealing with economic expenditures is chaired by the Member from Quebec.

I suggest it is an indication of the tremendous respect for regional realities and the tremendous role that western Canada plays and must play in the heart of the decision-making process in Canada. I made a commitment to the people of western Canada that these things would happen, and that, most of all, western Canada would be brought back to the centre of the decision-making process in Ottawa from which it had been estranged for 20 years. I stand in the House today to tell you that western Canada is very much playing a leadership role in the decision-making process in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The issue today is not about partisanship. On a question involving agriculture, alienation and concern, the issue is about human beings. Today it involves farmers, their spouses and their families. I believe it is a great tribute to the House that we are all here doing our best to try to improve the lot of farmers.

Regretfully, I doubt very much that our great newspapers will reflect the prominence that this issue should have. The subject of this debate on western agriculture and agriculture generally should be on the front page of every newspaper, English and French, from St. John's to Vancouver. I doubt we will see it, but I say to those responsible for establishing the priorities in the media that this is an opportunity for them to prove their involvement in the true national priorities. If ever there was a question that should be dominating the front pages of the eastern press, it is the problems of western agriculture. I invite them to get with it, deal with an urgent and important issue, and give it the publicity that it deserves so that all Canadians can be aware of this dilemma.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Later, we can see what those front pages reflect, but I say with sadness that I doubt very much if this tremendous priority that is shared by all Members of the House will find that kind of reflection.

The issue today deals with a number of vital areas that go to the heart of federalism. These areas include the perception of estrangement by western Canada, the question of agriculture and the implicit question of transportation. Also inherent in this issue is the question of protectionism internationally and our role internationally.

I cannot imagine anything more important for an easterner—someone from Toronto, Peterborough, Halifax, or St. John's—than to understand this clear sense of frustration of western Canada. They are crying out, asking Canadians to try to understand, not that they are dissatisfied with their Canadian citizenship, but that there is a sense of délaissement and that western Canadians are not receiving the priority for their concern that western Canadians are being hit with a double whammy in declining energy prices and commodity prices in agriculture.

May I say in tribute to all Members that the House of Commons has responded very nobly to that concern and will continue to do so. It is important that all Canadians, from Vancouver to St. John's, English and French, understand the cri de coeur of western Canadians. By our actions in government and in the House of Commons we are trying to signal to western Canada, as we would to any other region, that without fairness and a sense of justice and a perceptible feeling that indeed this is a reasonable country, we have failed western Canadians and all Canadians in our duties as national parliamentarians. That is a duty which we never lose. Today we are talking about the lives and welfare of people who work the soil and contribute to our national well-being and are going through extremely difficult times.

I know that statistics have been mentioned throughout the debate last night, and arguments have been made back and forth. May I touch on one aspect of our attempt as a Government to resolve the international grain subsidy wars which, in many ways, are at the heart of the problems facing our producers today.

No one is scott-free. In this business no one is perfect and no one is without the stain of sin. However, these subsidies, particularly those that have emanated recently from the United States and the European Community, which can only be characterized as a trade war, have driven down world prices and have distorted both production and marketing patterns. This war is having disastrous implications for traditional exporting nations such as Canada and Australia.

As I indicated a year ago, my Government is not prepared to stand idly by while Canadian farmers go down the tubes through no fault of their own. I recognize that when we responded with a billion dollars for western grain farmers that inadvertently we were contributing, not to the immediate resolution to the problem, but perhaps in some way to at least getting Canada a position at the table so we could tell the others that in the name of God we cannot let our farmers go down the tube while they are fighting wars. But if the war continues we will all lose.

Canada's treasury is not large enough to compete with the Europeans and the United States while they wage this fratricidal war that can only doom Canadian farmers. That is why I know Members of Parliament recognize the importance of government programs and of bilateral arrangements with provinces. Indeed, that is what we did.

I make no apologies for having authorized the emission of $1 billion in cheques to western farmers last October. It was the right thing to do. Western Canadian farmers were hurting; we received the request and we responded affirmatively. It was the right and proper step for the Parliament of Canada to take. However, it does not solve the problem.

The alternative is more billions and more billions of dollars. When this is added to the burden of debt we inherited, there is an increase in interest rates which are then passed on to the farmers who are placed on the treadmill to oblivion from which we, as parliamentarians, must try to remove them.

If there is one issue that should not be partisan, it is an approach to international commodity difficulties on behalf of farmers.

• (0830)

As an initial step, Canada chose to make agriculture its top priority at the annual economic summit of industrialized nations in Tokyo last year. That marked the first time in the history of economic summits that any country had made agriculture a priority. Before leaving for the summit, I, along with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), and the distinguished Secretary of State for External Affairs met with farm leaders. We got them together in Vancouver and discussed Canada's strategy for the summit. The summit was an effective step forward in our efforts to get agriculture on the GATT agenda.

Following the Tokyo Summit, Canada organized a meeting with the five major wheat exporters in Whistler under the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. A second meeting was held in San Diego. These meetings have increased mutual understanding about agricultural trade and have strengthened our collective resolve to restore fairness to the world grain trade.

Another of the key steps involved a group, a very important group we have come to refer to as the Cairns Group, 14 countries including Canada, all of which consider themselves fair traders in agriculture. By co-operating, these countries are aiming to balance the power of the European community, the United States and Japan. We do not have to go much further than a trip which is taking place this week between two economic super powers to see the debilitating impacts of protectionism even against a power like Japan.

Where the United States reacts, rightly or wrongly, against an economic power like Japan, one can see the incredible effects not only economically for those two countries but the powerfully negative impacts on currency transactions around the world and the way in which that ultimately impacts, strange to say, on the guy who always gets it in the chin, the Canadian farmer. All of these variables cannot be seen in isolation. Currency transactions in Tokyo, economic summits in Punta del Este all impact on the Canadian prairies and those who make the Canadian prairies grow, namely, the farmers.

This interlock of interest, I think, is shared in the House of Commons by Members of all Parties because if there were an easy and one-shot solution, I think Members would have shared it with all of us a long time ago. So we got together for the first time in Cairns, Australia, last August and our representative was the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. There we agreed on a common approach for agriculture which could be taken to Uruguay at the launching of a new round of multilateral trade negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. These negotiations, which are now under way, will seek agreement on new rules governing international trade. There is no miracle or overnight solution, but the fundamental building blocks are in place for a sane resolution of a complex and tragic problem.

The co-operation and solidarity of the Cairns Group was a major factor in the eventual success at the GATT launching. We obtained agreement for a very explicit reference to trade in agricultural products which has never happened before, a fact the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, who knows a lot about this, will confirm. Year after year the Europeans tried to avoid the inclusion of this kind of discussion. Members of the Common Market, for reasons we can well understand, tried to avoid Canada's insistence on bringing this matter forward simply because of the very structure of their own agricultural basis and the enormous and overwhelming subsidies which are paid to European farmers, which then engender the kind of reaction in the United States which impacts so negatively on our own producers. So we obtained that agreement for a very explicit reference to trade in agricultural products. It called for talks aimed at establishing greater discipline on the use of all direct and indirect subsidies in agriculture with a view to achieving more open and fairer trade.

It is predicated on a simple proposition as far as Canadians are concerned. We believe that Canadian farmers, if uninhibited and unfettered, are tremendous producers who can compete with anyone in the world. It is only when they are crushed by subsidies coming at them from the competition that they cannot compete, and this is designed to free up the entrepreneurial genius of the Canadian farmer so he can compete and build a stronger Canada through his own efforts.

Following the Uruguay round, I personally met again with farm leaders and other Ministers to keep them abreast of our efforts, our imperfect efforts, because this is a long and difficult struggle. It has been a year of hard work and of building bridges with other countries. I think I can tell the House with a modest degree of satisfaction that our efforts on behalf of agriculture are beginning to pay off. But it is far from over. Now that agriculture is on the GATT agenda, Canada is continuing to push for an agreement that would establish fair rules governing world agricultural trade.

The Cairns Group will meet again next month, this time in Canada, down the street, and I invite Members of any political Party, when the representatives of the Cairns Group are here, to please take the time to visit with them. Please take the time to share your views and the views of your Parties with the international representatives who, at our request will be meeting down the street here in Ottawa prior to the Venice Summit so that we can have the kind of common front and approach which Canadian farmers expect from responsible parliamentarians. I assure all Hon. Members of the full co-operation of the Government in their efforts to participate in this process.

On another front, when the President of the United States came to Ottawa earlier this month we discussed at very great length two things; first, the choice we were given last year. Canada was given, as all the participants were, one item which could be raised at the industrialized summit. As Prime Minister of Canada, I chose to raise the issue of western agriculture at the summit. We made the first case which has been made for agriculture in those terms at the industrialized summit and at my meetings with President Reagan here.

Because of the tremendous impact, obviously, that the United States has on this kind of venture, I worked closely, as did the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with Mr. Shultz in seeking joint approaches, this time in Venice, so that measures we initiated last year in Vancouver and carried to Tokyo could now be brought to some degree of fruition with the support of the United States of America and other industrialized countries which surely must have come to that conclusion when we were telling them last year, that this was lunacy. The $24 billion and $25 billion worth of subsidies going to the agricultural producers in the United States would cripple not only people in Australia but throughout western Canada, would imbalance traditional markets, would be unfair, debilitating and would have the kinds of anti-free trade implications that we are all trying to resist. I think it has dawned on all of the others that perhaps that was right and perhaps it is time for us to come together in a sense of maturity and reasonableness to protect people in all countries.

I preach for my own parish. I have no hesitation in saying it. When I go there, I defend the interests of Canadian farmers. But I think the interests of Canadian farmers are defended fairly. Western and European farmers find solace in that because their interests are being fairly represented by their leaders, as are the interests of the United States farmers.

So it is a complex and a socially challenging issue.

The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) met last week with the Trade Ministers of Japan, the United States and the European community. It was their first meeting since the launch of the Uruguay round. Our Minister stressed that agricultural issues are at the top of our agenda for the summit in Venice and for the GATT. She told them that for the Government of Canada no issue is more important than agriculture. I think all Hon. Members would agree—because we are pleased when a Canadian succeeds in representing our interests so vigorously—that the Minister scored a victory for Canada by getting their commitment for the first time that this matter be properly discussed as an agenda item at the OECD meeting in Paris next month.

So the work and the pressure continue. Sanity will not be restored to world agricultural trade overnight. We recognize that. It is a long and a difficult process. No one invented this problem yesterday. The problem was some time in coming. It has been exacerbated by nationalistic impulses in other countries. It has had very grave and serious consequences for western producers. It is something that I think the farmer more quickly than anyone else understands—there is no quick fix. It will not be resolved satisfactorily overnight.

However, I think Canadian farmers will watch the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada to measure the seriousness of our commitment and the logic of the steps we have taken. Farmers are saying: "Do not give us a quick fix that is not going to work in six months. We know there are grave international implications. We know that they can only be solved in co-operation with the summit countries and with the GATT. We want the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada to work in harmony with their trading partners to ensure that this trade war stops and that Canadian farmers get every reasonable opportunity for fairness and prosperity".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, internationally our principles state that the agricultural policy should be designed so as not to adversely affect in any way international trade. To this end, and progressively over time, agricultural policies must become more price responsive. Support for agriculture should avoid production incentives, namely, support should be for farmers and not necessarily for any specific kind of farming. Farmers are the key.

Individuals, human beings are what this debate and what this commitment are all about. Countries should seek to reduce governmental assistance measures that artificially distort world prices and contribute to an accelerated trade war. Countries should not introduce new import barriers that are not mandated by existing legislation. These basic principles must be implemented collectively so that the United States, the Community, Canada, Australia and the Cairns Group can respond in a timely and effective manner.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of all farmers in Quebec, Ontario, the Maritimes and western Canada, I think this was an excellent opportunity for parliamentarians of all political factions to air their views on the agricultural sector which is so important, so vital with respect to the future of Canada. We have a serious and even a moral obligation towards our agricultural community. For decades now this community has been making a generous contribution to the national well-being, and now as parliamentarians we have an opportunity to respond directly to the concerns of both this community and the individuals who belong to it.

[English]

That is what it is about. In my judgment the debate is about finding long-term solutions to very complex problems that escape the simple writing of a cheque yesterday. I say without the slightest fear of contradiction by anybody that the influence, the real influence, in the decision-making process by western Canadians that I have talked about—I see my friend from Winnipeg has just come in.

Mr. Axworthy: Let's talk about the CF-18, shall we?

Mr. Mulroney: I can tell my friend from Winnipeg that he missed the area of the debate in which we talked about maturity. He would not recognize maturity and fairness if he tripped over them. This is a debate about western farmers.

Mr. Axworthy: And I was in the debate last night!

Mr. Mulroney: If you want to talk about something else, you can talk about it any day, because my Government and I have always stood for the interest of western farmers, and that is what we are standing for today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: And I talked about six hours before you got around to it, my friend. I was here six hours before you were here.

Mr. Mulroney: I say to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy): Where were you when a Liberal Prime Minister—

Mr. Axworthy: Get off your dancing shoes, Mulroney!

Mr. Mulroney: —said that you did not want to sell western wheat? Why did you not resign? If you had any honour you would have resigned from the Liberal Party.

Mr. Axworthy: Get on your dancing shoes, Mulroney. Come on, get on your dancing shoes.

Mr. Mulroney: If you had any guts and honour you would have stood up in your place and you would have said: "This is an insult to western Canada and I will resign from the Liberal Party".

Mr. Axworthy: Let's see your shoes, Mulroney. Come on, let's see your dancing shoes.

Mr. Mulroney: But you did not have the gumption to do it and that is why the Liberal Party is paying the price it is today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry was doing well today, until he got up. This is early for him. He usually struggles in here around Question Period to ask his question. I realize that this is a little early for him, but farmers have been up for hours. They know who has been here participating in this debate. They know that this is a complex and difficult challenge.

Mr. Rodriguez: Where were you?

Mr. Axworthy: Where were you last night?

Mr. Mulroney: They know that we have had 19 Members participate, as have the NDP. I believe that there have been 18 or 19 Conservative Members participate in the debate and at least 15 NDP Members. What do I see? Three Grits?

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Axworthy: I was one of them!

Mr. Mulroney: There they are, Mr. Speaker: Foster, Axworthy and Prud'homme—Faith, Hope and Charity of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) on a point of order.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, it should be important for the House to note that four Conservative Members of Parliament have spoken consecutively since I have been in the House, and I have not yet been recognized today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: I am glad that they let others speak because they have been in the House longer than I have been here. But I do not expect the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to engage in that type of partisan nonsense. After all, I was up before he was this morning.

Mr. Foster: He has his black Guccis on today!

Mr. Axworthy: Show us your shoes, Brian. Get up on your toes and show us your shoes.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Axworthy: Go back to your renovated bedroom.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members will know that this debate started at eight o'clock last night and it is now 8.50 this morning. The Chamber has been visited from time to time by Hon. Members. However, it seems to the Chair that there is no particular advantage to be gained by commenting on who was and who was not here during these many hours. As a consequence I think that perhaps the House would be pleased to hear the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) complete his remarks.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, we have gone from the commitment of John Diefenbaker as Prime Minister to the very distinguished Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) to a great Minister of Agriculture who spoke in this debate. This has been the tradition of the Conservative Party in regard to western Canada and to western problems.

I indicated at the beginning of my speech that in my judgment, apart from the complexity of the issue that we will try to resolve together, that this is also a question of attitude. It is a question of the perception of estrangement, the kinds of difficulties that western Canadians feel far removed from Ottawa, which is why I tried to deal with this in very real terms. But it is a question of attitudes. I thought it was best summed up, if the truth be known, by something that was met with some criticism by the Liberal Party here in the House which I acknowledge to be true. It is true because when we get right down to it, it is a question of how a federal Government will respond to a region, or an individual, or to a group of individuals. And it is true that in the autumn of last year, when you get right down to it, the attitude was there. We did receive a call for help from the western Premiers, who said they were having difficulties—

Mr. Foster: At 5 a.m.

Mr. Mulroney: The Member opposite says, "at 5 a.m.". What is wrong with a call coming in at 5 a.m.? Does he not know that there are time changes between the west and the east? I am here and available to take a call from a western Premier at any time of the day or night. I do not refuse to take the call because it comes at 5 a.m. If a western Premier telephones, I take the call and I try to work with him and his Government to solve the problems confronting western Canada.

When you get right down to it, the main criterion for progress is attitude. It is true that we received a call for help, un cri du coeur, from western Canada. The caller said: "Look, western Canadians are hurting. Our farmers are hurting. It is going to cost an arm and a leg to solve these problems. Will the Government of Canada help the farmers of western Canada?" And the answer by the Prime Minister of Canada was: "Yes, we will help western Canadian farmers", as I undertake to do now.

Mr. Axworthy: Let's hear the announcement.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, there was a previous call for help from western Canada. A western Premier called a previous Prime Minister and asked for help in selling Canadian wheat, and the answer the caller got was: "No, I will not. Why should I do that?"

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, as Prime Minister of Canada, our obligation to western Canada and to the east, to the north and the heartland of Ontario, and to all other regions, is the same: We will respond when called.

The Hon. Member opposite finds it unusual that I would respond at 5 a.m. I do not find that strange at all. If there is an area of Canada that is suffering difficulty, if there is a group of Canadians suffering any kind of difficulty, it is the obligation of the Prime Minister of Canada, on behalf of his Government and the Parliament, to respond.

It happened that we received telephone calls from western Canada for help—and I can tell you what the position of my Government was then, what it is today, and what it will always be: When western Canada asks for help, to the extent humanly possible, Brian Mulroney and the Government of Canada will say, "Yes". We are there to build a stronger western Canada and to build a stronger Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I wish to pick up where the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) left off. The Prime Minister has spoken for half an hour or so talking in general terms about the problems of western Canada and alluding to problems elsewhere, and his concluding words were to the effect that if someone calls from western Canada and there is a need—

Mr. Shields: We got you out of bed, did we?

Mr. Broadbent: If there is a need—

Mr. Shields: Did we get you out of bed, Ed?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Axworthy: You guys are sensitive this morning, number three in the polls and going down. It really hurts!

Mr. Speaker: Order. While under the strict rules of this debate, the Prime Minister would have been limited to 20 minutes for his remarks, no Hon. Member interrupted his remarks to raise the issue. All Hon. Members extended to the Prime Minister the courtesy of allowing him to continue his remarks well beyond the 20-minute time allocation. That is simply the usual courtesy that is extended by Hon. Members of this House.

The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) now rises to take part in this debate, and I would expect that all Hon. Members would extend to the Hon. Member for Oshawa the same courtesy that was extended to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Shields: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), on a point of order.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I was extending to the Leader of the New Democratic Party the same courtesy that the New Democratic Party House Leader extended to the Prime Minister of Canada at the outset of his remarks this morning. I thought that perhaps my point would be made much clearer to the socialists on the other side were I to do to the Leader of the New Democratic Party precisely what the House Leader of that Party did to the Prime Minister when he commenced his remarks.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his point. I repeat what I have said: A great courtesy was extended the Prime Minister this morning, and I would expect that all Hon. Members would extend the same courtesy to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With that slight altercation behind us, I shall now get on with the substance of the debate.

I was about to say that the Prime Minister spoke at some length, as it is entirely appropriate for him to do, and during the course of his remarks he made the point that when a western Premier calls and demonstrates a real need in respect of particular problems in the west, he, the Prime Minister, responds. Well, Mr. Speaker, during the course of his 30 or 35 minute speech, the Prime Minister talked in generalities. He did not give a single new response.

I say to the Prime Minister, if the situation was bad last fall, when the Prime Minister did respond, in the middle of a Saskatchewan election, to a call, the situation in western Canada is worse today, and now is the time that action is required; now is the time that the Prime Minister should be responding.

Let me take a moment to deal with that situation. We are having this debate by virtue of a motion brought by a Member of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), who himself is a farmer. He is one who recognizes the absolute necessity for the Government of Canada to respond, not simply in the long term—and I will come back to that in a moment—but in the short term to the very serious crisis that is taking place today in western Canada.

In that context, I want to say that it was interesting to again hear the Prime Minister talking about the long term. As the Leader of a Party that has always believed in planning, I can tell you that when one hears a Progressive Conservative talking about the long term—and with your background, Mr. Speaker, you will appreciate what I am about to say—one can be very sure that he is not prepared to do anything about the short term. The only time Progressive Conservatives are interested in the long term view, Mr. Speaker, is when they have nothing to offer in the short term.

The situation in western Canada is indeed serious. I had the occasion to attend a meeting last night at which various farm groups from southern Ontario expressed their concerns and apprehension about a free trade agreement being entered into with the United States with nothing being done about the need of farmers to have effective marketing boards.

It was pointed out at that meeting that somewhere between 23 per cent and 25 per cent of Canadian farmers are on the point of bankruptcy, or are at least in a very precarious financial situation—and that applies to farmers in all agricultural sectors: grain producers, corn producers, hog producers, dairy farmers, and so on. While the costs of production have been on the increase, commodity prices have been on the decline.

I say again to the Prime Minister: If the situation was bad last fall, it certainly has worsened since that time; and we recently had the announcement that grain producers are going to suffer another 18 per cent drop in prices. So, if action was needed in the context of a Saskatchewan election—or, to put it bluntly, to buy votes—now action is needed to save farms all across Canada.

In this context I wish to say something about two immediate areas where we thought action could have been forthcoming, two areas that we in this Party asked questions about in Question Period yesterday and to which we received no answers; two areas that we kept front and centre in the contributions made by the members of the New Democratic Party in this very important debate.

The first one was the credit position of farmers. As the House knows, the Government, with what seemed to be calculated insensitivity, announced that on Friday the moratorium on farm foreclosures will be lifted. When the moratorium was put on some 19 months ago, it was said by the Government at that time that there were good reasons for it.

Indeed there were good reasons for putting a moratorium on foreclosures. Farmers were in the midst of a crisis over which they had no control. The vast majority of farmers who then found and now find themselves in difficulty are not in this position because they were incompetent or did not know what they were doing. It is because they were caught in an international crisis in part and a domestic crisis in part, the general nature over which they have no control. For the men and women, whether they are industrial workers, miners, or agricultural workers, in this kind of situation, a Government with any sensitivity should rapidly move in, bail them out, and protect them in the short run. That is what is needed now.

However, the point is that when the moratorium was put on some 700 farmers specifically, at that time, were on the verge of losing their farms. It was a serious situation, so action was taken. Now when the situation has not become better but has become worse, and when there are about 6,000 farmers in the same position as the 700 were in 19 months ago, does the Government say that logic should compel us to extend the moratorium? By no means should it be forever because farmers are self-respecting and, as Canadians in other walks of life, they want to make their contributions and to ensure that they have responsibility over their farming operations. They want to live up to those responsibilities, so they do not want an indefinite extension. If there was a crisis when there were 700 farms on the verge of bankruptcy, surely when that number has now risen to 6,000 we should be announcing an indefinite extension of the moratorium until farmers are out of the crisis, not lifting it on Friday.

I do not need to remind the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that not long after he came to office certain banks at the other end of the economic ledger required in his judgment immediate bail-outs. They got billions of dollars. That decision was made over a week-end. I say to the Prime Minister that many more Canadians, specifically Canadian farmers, are being threatened at this time. If he could take that action for the banks, surely he should be taking it in the interests of prairie producers.

We will continue to press right up until Friday for the Government to rethink its decision to put an end to the moratorium. It must think about the serious situation of farm families and the importance of a farm family as a continuing and crucial element to the social fabric of the country. It should think about those farmers, think about those families, and announce by Friday a change in its decision to lift the moratorium on foreclosures. That is one specific with which the Prime Minister could have dealt today. He could have come into this important debate and said, "Yes, there has been some reconsideration and we are going to change that". However, he did not do that.

I should like to refer to the second area. If anything is perhaps more serious—and certainly it is equally serious—it is the income position of farmers who are rising this morning across the country as we sit here. With the time difference between here and the Prairies, they are up now and are seeding. They are making crucial decisions about the income fate of their families for the coming year because they are putting in their present crops.

What the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) did yesterday frankly surprised me. I have respect for the attitude of that Minister. I think he takes his responsibilities most seriously. I do not agree at all with the policies he is implementing right now.

When he responded to questions which I put to him yesterday he left the impression that there was something off about my question. Well, I do not think there was. I did not pretend then—and I do not pretend now—to have the same detailed knowledge of agriculture as the Minister of State for the Wheat Board who happens to be a farmer. I respect that there are certain things in this area, to say the least, on which he has more detailed knowledge than I have.

I asked the following question yesterday on behalf of grain producers who were making decisions now, and on behalf of my colleagues in the NDP who know the details of agriculture, would the Government of Canada be prepared to guarantee farmers who are currently seeding that when they look at the final results of their crops in terms of net income it will be no lower than it was for last year's crop? The question was relevant, and I ought to have received the answer that the Government of Canada would guarantee that the income would not go any lower. Again I ask the Prime Minister that question. We will get back to it in Question Period today. He could have dealt with it.

The Government of Canada should recognize that grain producers had a 20 per cent drop last year. The announcement indicates that they can expect another 18 per cent drop unless they receive a deficiency payment. We are saying that a deficiency payment should be announced to ensure that farmers working out there and putting in new crops as we are debating today will not have a drop in income which will take them below what they got last year. That is the point.

I say to the Prime Minister quite seriously that we agree that long-term solutions are needed. We agree that action must be taken through GATT. We agree that all pressures ought to be put on the European Community to stop its counter-productive, massive subsidy program which has been equalled and exceeded in good measure by the United States. With these massive subsidies by these two large economic entities in the world—the European Community on the one hand and the United States of America on the other—we cannot compete over the period of a decade. Canadian farmers do not want that. Canadian farmers can produce competitively and they have shown it. They are the best in the world in the grain sector if the competition is fair.

We agree that steps should be taken at the international level to get the EEC and the United States to live up to their own rhetoric. The rhetoric, particularly in the case of the United States, is to put an end to these kinds of subsidies. If the Americans are going to preach to others abroad, they should start practising it at home.

Indeed there are long-run steps which must be taken. I could talk about other measures such as stabilization of income programs for our producers as well as certain international steps. However, I want to return to the emergency.

By definition, the emergency concerns steps which should be taken now. We cannot stand back and watch our grain producers getting some $3 per bushel, which is well below what it costs them to produce. We cannot tolerate depression level prices. We cannot stand back and watch 23 per cent to 25 per cent of our farmers being on the verge of bankruptcy. We cannot stand back and watch a moratorium, which was appropriately put on farm foreclosures 19 months ago, being lifted on Friday.

We want the Government of Canada to live up to its short-run obligations as well as its long-run obligations. This means that the Government must come to the aid of Canada's prairie producers now, at a time when there is not an ongoing provincial election and when the need is much greater than it was last fall when there was one.

I would conclude by saying that from now until Friday, we are going to keep the heat on. We are going to get the Government to realize what it must do about the moratorium on foreclosures. We will put the pressure on the Government so it will announce an appropriate deficiency payment for farmers who need it and deserve it.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this morning we heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) say that his Government would be prepared to respond to a call from the farmers of Canada. Before this debate began and, indeed, during its currency, the Prime Minister received an urgent wire in the form of a telecopied letter from Garf Stevenson, President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, relating to this emergency debate on, as he puts it in his letter, the farm economic crisis. Though there was no response made by the Prime Minister this morning to this particularly urgent call, Mr. Stevenson did call upon the Prime Minister to bring to mind the fact that the rural way of life and related service industries are in jeopardy. Mr. Stevenson said the following:

> The pool asks that all Members of Parliament recognize the very critical economic situation confronting Western Canadian families and communities. This crisis has far-reaching social and economic implications for the national economy, as well as for the West.

Then the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool set forth what he believes would be a minimum program including joint federal and provincial co-operation to keep families on their farms in productive capacities, early consideration to be given to an acute need for a substantial deficiency payment for the 1987-88 crop year and the continuation of the federal Government's efforts to restore sanity in the international grain market.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and myself held a joint press conference in Winnipeg and Ottawa last week dealing with this very issue. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), spent a good deal of the Easter break dealing with this issue. Last week, for the thirty-second time since the election, I as Leader of the Opposition travelled to western Canada, not only to meet the commodity crisis in wider terms but to again respond directly to the agricultural crisis.

We are desperately concerned. We are dealing not only with a cyclical crisis affecting part of our economy, we are dealing with the survival of the family farm, we are dealing with the survival of a way of life in rural communities and we are dealing with something that is now beginning to affect the infrastructure and tax base of all of western Canada. It is affecting the survival of rural municipalities in the western provinces. We have a major situation on our hands, a situation that is not cyclical but is structural. If the Government of Canada does not respond in urgent and immediate terms, we risk sacrificing an entire way of life.

The Prime Minister spent some time dealing with the international grain crisis and describing in rather vague terms what the Government was doing to try to bring together the major producing powers in an attempt to restore some sanity to international grain markets. That was just one of the items mentioned by Mr. Stevenson in his urgent letter to the Prime Minister of last night. What the Prime Minister did not say is what the Government will do by way of an urgent and immediate response.

We on this side of the House believe that we need now an announcement of a deficiency payment sufficient to restore this year's prices to last year's initial prices and to guarantee to Canadian farmers at least the same returns as they received last year. That is number one. Second, we believe that not only must this cash flow be maintained and maintained so that farmers know when to seed, what to seed and whether to seed, we also believe that the growing credit crunch and avalanche of debt, punishing Canadian farmers, should be resolved soon and in some meaningful way.

Yesterday during Question Period we said that we could not understand the cruel, insensitive timing of the lifting of the moratorium on farm debt by the Farm Credit Corporation. One week after the initial grain prices were lowered by 18 per cent, the Government lifted the moratorium and threw the 6,000 farmers who were at risk into immediate jeopardy. That we cannot understand and we want a rationalization of it.

I have studied recent interest rates applicable to prime, efficient farmers. On 15 or 20-year mortgages the interest rate under the Farm Credit Corporation, which is supposed to be a preferential rate, is 11 per cent.

Mr. Blenkarn: Oh?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is 11 per cent and long-term, 15 per cent to 20 per cent. I could say that the Hon. Member from Mississauga is a short-term operator. He ought to look at the long-term rates. I have them right here.

Subtracting the current rate of inflation, which is running at approximately 4 per cent—and here I am sure I will again get some gratuitous advice from Mississauga—from the 11 per cent, the real rate of interest faced by farmers under the preferential status of the Farm Credit Corporation is 7 per cent. That is higher than the rate farmers had to pay during the height of the recession in 1981-82 when in effective terms they were paying a real rate of 1.5 per cent. Now they are paying 7 per cent.

Western farmers are in deep trouble and the response of the Government is totally inadequate. Initial prices for grain as announced by the Wheat Board last week have been cut by 18 per cent over last year's prices. Last year initial prices were down by 20 per cent over the year before. In 1984-85, the price per tonne for No. 1 wheat was $170. In 1986-87, that price was reduced to $130 per tonne. This year, under the initial prices just announced by the Wheat Board, No. 1 wheat is down to $110 per tonne. In three years the initial price has gone from $170 per tonne to $110 per tonne. That is lower than the cost of production.

Last year the Government could say that it was eating into the profit margins of farmers. Most farmers could not even meet the cost of production last year, but this year it is certain that even the most efficient farmer who is all paid up and has his family working with him will not be able to meet the cost of production. I challenge the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board to argue that point.

A couple of years ago, in 1984-85, No. 1 barley was $125 per tonne. Last year, 1986-87, it was down to $80 per tonne. In 1987-88, this year, under the initial prices just announced, it is down to $60 a tonne.

Mr. Foster: No deficiency payment.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And no deficiency payment. Farmers have a decision to make. They have to decide what to seed, when to seed and whether to seed. The Government has made no commitment to the farmer at this time when the farmer needs answers. The farmers need answers and they need them now, not next July or next October.

It seems that the only time western farmers see any activity on the part of the federal Government is when a provincial election threatens a sitting provincial Government.

[Translation]

At the minimum, we want the Government to guarantee to farmers that the return for this year's crop will be at least the same as last year's levels. We must tell farmers they will get the support they need and deserve and we must send a strong signal to rural Canada and the agricultural industry that we as a nation are in the grain business to stay.

[English]

I think we must also send a strong signal to the United States and the European Community indicating that we will not let our farmers continue to be the victims of our officially low grain prices, provoked by a treasury war between Europe and the United States which has prompted an artificial surplus and has lowered prices throughout the world.

• (0920)

As I said to the President of the United States when he was in this country three weeks ago, the U.S. Farm Bill, with its export subsidies, is killing the Canadian farmer. I was bitterly disappointed when the President spoke in this Chamber to hear not one word on agriculture, not one word in response to the Canadian farmers' plight, not one word to indicate he would attempt to rationalize the North American market, not one word in response to what I hoped the Prime Minister said to him in those private meetings that there must be some rationalization of the North American and world grain situation. If the American Congress continues to artificially ratchet down grain prices by way of subsidy, our grain producers are going to be driven off the land and we are going to be a different kind of country. Yet there was no public response to that by the President of the U.S.

Farmers are not asking for hand-outs. They are asking only for what is rightfully theirs, a fair price for their grain and fair market conditions. This is not just a cyclical economic crisis. It is taking its toll in human terms. Farms are facing bankruptcy.

The psychological pressures on farm families, the concern about whether children will stay on the farm, is forcing family breakups. A whole way of life is being threatened.

I have said that the only way western Canada seems to be able to get assistance these days from the Government is through threats. The fear of an election loss in Saskatchewan last year brought aid to farmers last fall. A threat from Premier Getty to split the Alberta Tory Party finally brought some help to the oil industry. Farmers are getting ready to seed their 1987 crop. They have tough decisions to make and they need answers from the Government and they need them now.

I want to conclude as I began by saying that we in the Opposition call upon the Government to do two things immediately: Announce a deficiency payment sufficient to raise the return this year to farmers equal to last year's return, and do it now so that farmers have some assurance that when they seed they will have a return that will cover at least the cost of production. Second, we call for a rationalization of farm debt and a revocation of the decision of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to lift the FCC moratorium.

I end where I began by reciting the urgent letter telecopied to the Prime Minister from Garf Stevenson last night during the course of this debate. If he has not already seen it, he will find it in his files. On behalf of western farmers Mr. Stevenson calls upon the Prime Minister directly for immediate action. He wants joint programs to keep the family farm alive. He referred to the deficiency payment. He wants restoration of sanity in the international grain market and I would add, as well, the rationalization of farm credit to assuage the overwhelming avalanche of debt which is absolutely crushing the family farm in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to see the change which has come over the NDP and the Liberals during the last few days.

I would like to deal with some of the things which are the cause of farmers being in the position they are in today. A lot of it is because of policies put forward by the Liberal Party and supported by the NDP. I am not talking with the wind like some members of the Opposition. I spent four days of last week visiting farms and towns in my constituency. I know what farmers are saying.

Farmers are not crying crisis as the Opposition is today. Sure there is a crisis. They know the Government will come through at a proper time and in a proper way. That is the message the farmers are sending. They are not worried as they were a few years ago. They can recall that in 1979 we had good prices. Inflation was driving the price of food up. Things were good on the farm. Young farmers said here is our chance to expand. We will buy more land and so they did. They expanded their holdings so they could make a greater contribution to Canada. Then what happened? The situation changed entirely.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope the Hon. Member will move over to his own seat so that he can participate in the debate. I regret to point out that he is now at the wrong seat. I know the debate has been going on all night, and I regret I have to interrupt the Hon. Member.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the only thing I was trying to do was get closer to the Government. I know the Government is going to come through at the proper time with help for western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: I apologize for being at the wrong seat. I thought there was something funny over here, but I did not realize it was me.

As I was saying, prices started to change and interest rates went up and up and up. We pleaded with the Liberal Party to do something about interest rates. They went up to 22 per cent. That is the main cause of farmers being in trouble today. The international situation is certainly serious, but not as serious as the problem caused by the increase in interest rates which was permitted by the Liberal Party and not opposed by the NDP.

Many young people have already lost their farms. They were losing their farms during the Liberal Government; but what did the Liberals do? Not a thing. They let interest rates rise and rise and rise. Now they are crying the blues. Now they are suddenly interested in the western farmer and farmers in general. I say "suddenly".

Sometimes when we asked the Liberal Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Whelan, when he would do something, he would say "soon". His only reply was "soon". Well, "soon" never came. There were more than 1,400 farmers in this country who went bankrupt during the term of the Liberal Government because they did nothing about interest rates. They may have short memories but farmers do not. Neither do Members on this side of the House. We pleaded with the Liberals to change that policy but nothing was done.

Today there are still farmers who are stuck with interest rates from that time. This Government is doing something about it. We are going to the banks and asking why they set interest rates at 14 per cent, 15 per cent and 18 per cent today when the prime rate is below 10 per cent? That should be changed. We are doing our utmost to have that changed. However, it is not the Government, it is the banks who have a lot to do with it.

The problem lies with the Bank Act passed by the Liberal Government. Our banks should have a mandate that when interest rates drop from as high as 22 per cent and 23 per cent to below 10 per cent, there must be a corresponding change in mortgages which were taken out during that time. Otherwise there is simply a massive amount of money going to the banks which is unearned and unnecessary. The banks have to keep going, but they have to be realistic as well.

What is one of the main causes of many farmers being on the verge of losing their farms, or in fact losing their farms? The international situation is only a small part of it. The main cause was the interest rates permitted by the Liberal Government during that time. They are still stuck with those rates and we are feeling the aftermath now. So is the farming community. It is the aftermath of the Liberal Government.

The same thing applies to the energy situation. What is the problem there? Again it is the aftermath of the National Energy Program. That is what ruined the energy situation in Alberta.

• (0930)

It was a deliberate attempt to destroy the energy industry in the Province of Alberta and, to a lesser extent, in the Province of Saskatchewan. The Liberals can talk all they want today but they cannot change that. They did their utmost to get every rig possible out of Alberta. There was a line-up of rigs leaving the country because of the national energy policy. Today we are suffering the aftermath of the Liberal administration and no one can deny that.

The Member who was the Minister of Energy in the Liberal administration said there is more drilling going on today than there was last year. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) had shown pictures of rigs lined up at the border leaving the country along with the expertise and their capital.

It is no wonder that western Canada is in a depression today. It is a created depression almost as bad as that imposed upon Ukrainian people years ago. I have read the history of how Ukrainian people had to submit to giving two-thirds, 75 per cent or 90 per cent of their production to the communist regime. Hundreds of thousands of Ukrainian people died, not because the land did not produce, but because food was taken right off their tables for taxation. It is a blight on the history of the world that that was ever permitted.

That is almost comparable to the depression created by the Liberal Party with the national energy policy. It affected every farm. One of the main causes was the increase in fuel costs because of the national energy policy and the massive taxation imposed upon the people. It is comparable to what the Communists did in Ukraine during the 1930s when people died right and left because of a lack of food.

The same thing happened in Alberta as a result of the national energy policy. I saw the effects on our towns and villages, our merchants, and even on our churches. Everyone felt the depression which was created by the national energy policy deliberately to hurt one part of the country.

They now stand up and ask what the Government is doing for western Canada. They cry because the Premier of Saskatchewan phoned in the middle of the night. Well, the Premier of Saskatchewan was so concerned that he was up in the middle of the night worrying about what could be done to help the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The walls were too thin.

Mr. Taylor: The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) did not mind getting up a three o'clock in the morning to answer the call. When we told the Liberals about the national energy policy they scoffed and the people of western Canada will not forget that.

Mr. Rossi: No, they know you're bluffing.

Mr. Taylor: Members can smile all they like but the western farmers did not smile because that policy resulted in scores of them losing their homes and farms. One of the major reasons that scores of them are on the verge of bankruptcy today is the high interest rates which were supported by the Liberal regime which did nothing about it. It is not the international market which is causing them to lose their farms today. The international market will have an effect from now on and I will deal with that in a moment, but let us not kid ourselves. The Liberals and the NDP are not pulling the wool over my eyes or over the eyes of the farmers of Canada.

Farmers know that the main cause was the national energy policy and the high interest rates during the Liberal regime. I ask any Member on that side of the House to prove that that is not so. That is a proven fact which has been notarized by many, many people.

I have sat in farm homes with people who are today still paying 15 and 18 per cent interest. When a man on the farm weeps, you know there is something wrong. The whole family was crying because the bank was going to take over their farm, not because of anything the present Government did, but because of the interest rates which were permitted to be charged during 1981, 1982 and 1983.

I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) in this Government to plead with the banks and he did that. One fine young third or fourth generation farmer in my constituency saw the opportunity to expand his holdings in 1979, thereby making a better contribution to his country and providing a better living for his family. He bought more land. How was he to know that the Liberal Government would permit interest rates to go up to 22 per cent? The bank then said it would take his farm because he could not make his payments. What farmer can make payments with a 22 per cent interest rate? What business in Canada can stand up under an interest charge of 22 per cent? It is impossible.

I lived through the depression years. I was teaching during the hungry thirties and saw an insurance company remove a farmer from his farm. I went to the company and said, "This man has farmed here all his life". They said, "He owes money and if he cannot pay it, off he goes". Other farmers pleaded but nothing happened.

I will tell you the story of that farmer. His wife had TB. There was no medicare, no free medicine for tuberculosis in those days. The most important thing for him was to save his wife, so he borrowed the money to send his wife to the best doctors he could find. He borrowed the money when wheat was selling for about $2 per bushel. He expected to repay bushel for bushel plus a little more for interest charges. His wife passed away. The insurance company then said that he was way behind in his payments. How could he make the payments when the price of wheat had dropped to 19 cents a bushel and the price of eggs had dropped to six cents a dozen? This was in 1934 and the insurance company would not even listen. It said, "Off he goes."

That farmer pulled a granary which was on skids to another piece of land which another farmer said he could farm for him because he was being treated shabbily. That farmer lost his farm through no fault of his own. There was no compassion or consideration. The company even threatened to take him to court for moving the granary which was on skids.

I have seen many such things during my lifetime. I have recently been in farm homes where the same thing is happening. The high interest rates which prevailed in 1981, 1982 and 1983 are now catching up to farmers just as the interest rates of 1918 and 1919 caught up with the farmer of whom I just spoke. At that time scores of people were moved off their farms. In 1935 a moratorium was put on by the Government of Alberta, supported by the Government of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. After 1936 we were able to save hundreds of farms in Alberta.

However, the moratorium had some bad effects. Farmers in my riding tell me today to be cautious with moratoriums because they suffered for many years as a result of the moratoriums imposed by the Government in 1937 and 1938.

The farmers said that without credit they cannot operate and want us to proceed carefully when using moratoriums. There are better ways to deal with the issue because moratoriums hurt farmers who are able to get credit and need it to operate. We must be careful that we do not adversely affect the farms that are not in trouble. While there is some merit to moratoriums, I have suggested to the Government that it proceed cautiously. Not all the farmers in my riding want moratoriums to be extended, and many of them are completely against a moratorium because it ruins their credit.

Our Government realizes the necessity of moratoriums and the Minister of Agriculture has extended moratoriums on FCC a number of times. However, if we follow the Opposition's suggestion and impose too many moratoriums, many farms that are solvent could go on the rocks. We want to save the farms that are already suffering, we do not want more farms sent down the drain.

In 1937 we established Debtors Assistance Boards which were able to bring together the principal lenders and the borrowers. Those boards were given the power by legislation at that time to roll back the interest rates because they were completely unfair.

The Minister of Agriculture has established boards that will be able to allow both sides to meet. These boards do not yet have the power to force back mortgage interest rates, which may become necessary if the financial institutions and insurance companies insist on retaining interest rates of 15 per cent to 20 per cent that were in effect between 1981 and 1983. The farmer, or anyone else, cannot make ends meet at such interest rates, no matter what the Government does. The farmers who are experiencing difficulty today are those who tried to expand their holdings during better economic times in 1979 and 1980. They had no idea that interest rates would jump so dramatically, which is one of the major causes of farmers losing their homes today. They have not been able to catch up to those interest rates and are therefore losing their farms.

The Minister of Agriculture is considering what should be done. It may be necessary to amend the Bank Act, which I support if it can be done. I believe the banks should receive a fair rate to which they are entitled for repayment of their loans, but they have no right to expand their financial holdings by ruining farmers in this country.

We must help the farmers who are still paying interest rates of 17 per cent. If the financial institutions refuse to take action, I hope the Government will do so.

You are signalling that my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker, but I have much more to put on the record. I listened to Opposition speeches. I am amazed how they have suddenly realized what is happening in the agricultural industry, as if a great light suddenly shone upon them. I wish they had come to that realization between 1982 and early 1984 because today we are suffering from the agricultural policies that were enacted during that time.

The agricultural community is receiving help from the Government. The crop year does not begin until July 1. The farmers I have visited are not worried about the seeding because $700 million will go to them very soon. That money was authorized by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture, and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). They are men of compassion and understanding. I sometimes get nauseous when I hear Members opposite talking about the problems of farmers when I realize what they did only three or four years ago. Furthermore, some of them do not know the front end of a hog from the back of a cow, yet they stand up to plead for the farmers. They should have given them more consideration when they were in power because now we are suffering the aftermath of what they created.

We will correct the situation, but it will take time. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board are anxious to pull the country together and help every farmer. That is what we are determined to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), I want to advise the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) that we gave the three leaders an opportunity to speak. Therefore, we are returning to the regular rotation which is now to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. I will then recognize a Member for the Government and the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The rotation of leaders meant that a Liberal spoke, then a Conservative. Now it should be the time of the New Democratic Party to talk and I respectfully ask that I be allowed to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, we have been sitting all night, and the debate may go on for a couple of hours, to discuss the crisis situation in our agricultural industry, especially in western Canada. However, the situation is not unique to that part of the country because the same problems exist elsewhere in Canada, and in fact in the very province and riding which I represent.

Before I continue my speech today, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to speak on behalf, I hope, of all Members of this House and thank our parliamentary staff which has had to work all night.

[English]

Sometimes some of us tend to forget about the people who assist us in doing our job here on Parliament Hill. This morning, when I came to the House at approximately 7 a.m. and took the familiar mini bus that brings us here, I was talking to the driver who informed me that he had been working since two o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Indeed, the people who work for us and spend those kinds of hours, whether they work for us as messengers, bus drivers, clerks at the Table, interpreters, or camera personnel, certainly deserve special recognition on a day like this, when we have subjected them to a very tough time. I certainly hope that the Speaker will issue the appropriate thank you on behalf of all of us to the staff who serve us so well.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canadian farmers have suffered two major setbacks in the last few days. First, we heard about the lifting of the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loans, and second, the Government, or should I say the Canadian Wheat Board, announced that initial payments for this year will be 18 per cent lower than last year. The impact of this price drop will be particularly severe if we consider the fact that the situation in the industry was not very good to start with.

[English]

How did we get into this situation? I listened to speeches by Members opposite. The Prime Minister and other Members have alluded to some of the issues. There is one essential point that I believe has not been raised yet. First, we should remember that the current crisis in the prices of commodities is due to the U.S. Farm Bill. There is no point in calling it anything else. That is in fact the cause of the difficulty we are in.

Some people will say that the U.S. Farm Bill was implemented in order to react against similar legislation initiated by the European Economic Community. That is at least partially accurate, but not totally. There is some measure of accuracy to that suggestion. However, we should remember that the effect we are seeing now in this country directly results from an initiative of the United States Congress, signed by the President in December of 1985, known as the United States Food Security Act, 1985, commonly referred to as the U.S. Farm Bill.

That Bill was debated for months in front of the U.S. Congress. From April 22 to April 24, 1986, a delegation of Members of this House went to Washington in order to be briefed on the U.S. Farm Bill and to find out just what effect it would have on Canadian agriculture. We listened to presentation after presentation describing to us the ill effects this legislation would have on Canadian farmers.

First Bank Agri Services, a division of Bank of Montreal, published a document in February of 1986. It was a document prepared for them by Chase Econometrics and in it we were given the effects of the U.S. Farm Bill. The predictions at that time of Chase Econometrics for the Bank of Montreal were that in 1986 the price of wheat could vary between $2.40 and $2.70. In 1987 it could vary between $2.28 and $2.85. In 1988, it could vary between $2.17 and $2.71. In 1989 it could vary between $2.06 and $2.57, and in 1990, it could vary between $1.95 and $2.44. You have obviously noticed, Mr. Speaker, the dire predictions here and the direction in which the prices will be going, according to Chase Econometrics for the Bank of Montreal.

Knowing that this would be the effect of the U.S. Farm Bill on Canadian agriculture, I have to ask a question of the Government. Where was the Government at the time that Bill was going through the U.S. Congress? We have an embassy in Washington, as we all know. I was at the Canadian Embassy and in view of the deplorable effects of this Bill I asked who we hired to lobby Congress and why were they not more successful in providing some relief for Canada. The answer was that no lobbyist was hired to try and defeat or modify the Bill or convince the U.S. Congress to do something with that legislation.

The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) talked about the fact that commodity prices are low because of the previous Government. That is utter nonsense. I do not pretend that everything was perfect under the previous Government but at least this Member of Parliament, coming from the region he does, should know better.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the Hon. Member wants to be accurate. I never at any time said that commodity prices were low because of the previous Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: We will review Hansard later, Mr. Speaker. I definitely recall hearing the Hon. Member telling us that the agricultural prices to which farmers are subjected today, and the agricultural crisis, are because of low commodity prices and he said that was caused by the previous Government, and even accused the previous Government of doing things which were similar to what the U.S.S.R. did in Ukraine some 50 years ago. I remember hearing the Hon. Member saying that. He should not have made those remarks. They were totally inappropriate, but were nevertheless made by him. He should apologize for them to everyone, including the Ukrainian-Canadian community, for uttering such nonsense.

I would like to raise with you, Mr. Speaker, other effects of the U.S. Farm Bill. First, there is a law in the United States which has $70 billion worth of subsidies designed largely to displace other world markets. We are "other world markets" because we sell our products on the world market as well.

According to the United States, and this is information they gave to me in Washington—I am reading from notes I took there—in 1980 the United States decided to boycott sales of wheat to the Soviet Union. It did that for the specific reason that the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan. Because the United States cut off sales to the U.S.S.R. it resulted in a large surplus of wheat at that time. The Americans said that the other countries took advantage of them. They expanded their own markets and the U.S. even accused Canada of having done that.

That is totally ridiculous. Obviously, someone should be straightening that out in Washington. The Americans said they had to do something. They said that Argentina, Brazil, Canada and Australia expanded their markets at the expense of the United States. They said that prior to the embargo they had 32 per cent of world wheat sales but that had now gone down considerably and that the 49 million tonnes they produced in 1982 was now in great measure surplus rather than used for foreign sales. The Americans also said that there is another cause of all this.

At the same time this phenomenon of the Afghanistan boycott was proceeding, there was another situation. Many countries in the Far East, for instance, became largely self-sufficient so that has caused the surpluses we have today. What is the American solution? They will embark on this program and depress prices until the others are out of business. The Americans were quite candid about that.

Do the others get discouraged with their own subsidies, particularly the EEC? I do not pretend to know Europe as well as perhaps some, but a number of us have ancestors who came from Europe. We know that Europe suffered greatly during the Second World War from hunger, and to believe that the Europeans are going to stop producing because they have to inject too many subsidies is not to remember history very well. There is a will in Europe to be self-sufficient in food which is quite powerful. In my view it is a great deal more powerful than the Americans believe it to be. The subsidies in western Europe will continue, contrary to what the Americans believe.

We now have large U.S. subsidies which will continue on until 1990 since the U.S. Farm Bill will be in effect for five years. There are EEC subsidies which will not stop for reasons which I described earlier. Canada is stuck in between with only two choices. The first choice is to convince everyone else to reduce their subsidies, particularly the United States. The second choice is to increase our subsidies to the level of theirs so that our farmers can exist. There are no other choices. We cannot enlarge the planet in order to find new markets. We cannot do that. What we have to do at this point is to convince the Americans to cut it out.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) went to great pains complimenting and congratulating himself, forgetting of course to mention that at the Shamrock Summit of 1986, though we all received glossy pictures of the Prime Minister and fancy booklets, there was no mention of agriculture. Four months after the U.S. President had signed into law the U.S. Farm Bill the Prime Minister in the booklets, leaflets and information kits concerning important issues to be discussed in Washington, failed even to mention the U.S. Farm Bill.

He now has the unmitigated gall to stand here in the House, chastise everyone else, saying that some opposition Members did not speak, when we sat down to let him speak early this morning out of courtesy—not to him but to the office which he holds. He then has the nerve to make remarks such as he did earlier today in the House.

The Prime Minister should get a little bit more serious about this issue. It is important to western Canada. It is important as well to regions such as the one which I represent, which is largely agricultural but in a very different part of the country.

The Prime Minister said that he talked recently to President Reagan about this very important issue that he described. He forgot to tell us that there is talk of increasing the export subsidy under the U.S. Farm Bill. There is talk now of increasing it, after the President left here. That is what the U.S. is now planning to do.

[Translation]

The Prime Minister also referred to GATT and spoke in glowing terms about the steps he had taken in this respect, but unfortunately, he forgot to mention that the documents requested by GATT two months ago, on the specific position Canada was taking, have yet, as far as I know, to reach GATT. And this is about the very subject we spent the night discussing in the House. I think the Prime Minister would be well advised to go back to his office, instead of putting on another pair of Guccis, and to act on GATT's request and provide the necessary documents so that we can put an end to this subsidy war through multilateral negotiations.

The Canadian farmer is no longer competing with the American farmer. He is competing with the U.S. Government. How is he ever going to win, Mr. Speaker? Nobody in Canada can win this fight. The Canadian farmer is not begging for subsidies, he seeks justice and, if he is to compete against the American Government, is it not normal that he should expect some kind of assistance from the Government of Canada. The Government of the United States is certainly not going to hand money over to farm producers in this country. Will Canadian farmers have to apply for foreign aid? How can they rely on the Prime Minister to get what they need? Members opposite were telling us earlier that the season has just opened, that perhaps we will hear better news later on. Mr. Speaker, we simply cannot seed retroactively, we have to do it right now if we want a harvest this fall. A farmer cannot wait for subsidies at a later date and then decide that he should have seeded two months earlier. The farmer needs this information, and he needs it now.

I urge the Members of this House to continue to raise these important issues today for as long as it takes to convince the Conservative Government to do something. True enough, subsidies were made available last year, Mr. Speaker, but this happens to be the worst agricultural crisis ever in this country, and it calls for whatever action is required on the part of the Government. The Government would not be doing our farmers a service nor showing how generous it can be with them, because anyone producing food does so for the good of all Canadians and not only for those who are directly involved in the agricultural sector. Therefore it is the duty of the Prime Minister, the duty of the Government, and the duty of all Members of this House to make a positive contribution to ensure a sound agricultural economy.

[English]

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to have an opportunity to speak on this very important issue. I have a very personal feeling about entering into this debate since I was born and raised on a farm and have farmed, as have my father and my grandfather. In fact, my great grandfather came from England to Ontario and broke the land. I feel something very different than I have ever felt before in the House of Commons when I hear the rhetoric from academe and Bay Street about farming.

Farming is very different from any other profession. I do not know who can really feel it better than someone who has been there. Farmers think long and hard about things. They do not make a lot of rash decisions. They also have some interest in their fellow man and they would probably listen instead of milling around behind me. I listened with interest as the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) was talking. I did not see one farmer elected to the Official Opposition sitting in the House today. I say to them, do not beat up politics and get into long-winded rhetoric when you are dealing with such important people.

Mr. Boudria: Say that to the Prime Minister of all people.

Mr. James: Farmers sitting here this morning would probably not make the type of interjection that I just heard from behind me.

I want to tell Hon. Members, because I feel very personally about this matter, that as a boy we did not have a lot. My father took over the farm from my grandfather; through some adversity it carried a great amount of debt. When my mother and father got married they had two old cows and a debt-ridden farm. They did not ask for a whole lot from the Government. They put their heads down and went to work. I would like some of the people who have talked so much today experience that. As kids we did not have anything. We had hand-me-down clothes. I had to milk cows by hand in the summer when the perspiration would roll right from the top of my head to the bottom of my feet; my head was up against one old hot cow with another behind me. By this time we had at least 10 or 12 milking cows. I am glad that I had those experiences. We have at least 20 farmers sitting on the Government benches today, each of whom has I am sure, at least as much farming experience as have I. As such, we have a good understanding of what is needed to address the serious problems facing the agricultural sector in Canada today.

It is with reluctance that the various farm groups approach governments for assistance. In cases where assistance is forthcoming they want it developed with some thought and understanding. They want input from the very learned and qualified groups within Canada, as was the case with the recent grain subsidies.

Just this past weekend I had a discussion with my brother, the full time operator of our farming operation. It is an operation that is not making huge amounts of money. However, that does not cause me to come into this Chamber and fly into a rage against the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), as has happened during the course of this debate.

Both the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) are farmers, and as such have a good understanding of what is required. Certainly, they know more than those who have practised their professions on Bay Street, none of whom have ever had to milk a cow or lift a sheaf of wheat. These people did not have to get mired and dirty in order to make a living. In order for the children of farm families to attend university the family itself had to work that much harder.

I am very concerned about the way in which this whole question is being approached. I am sure that my neighbours in the Sarnia-Lambton area are chuckling at the kind of rhetoric we have been hearing during the course of this debate, particularly from people who have little or no understanding of the problems of the farming community and the way in which they should be addressed. We need a thoughtful approach to these problems, with important input from the farm groups and organizations that exist in this country.

In 1981, the prime rate was at 22.75 per cent. Farmers today are still trying to get out from under the debts incurred during that period. Where were these people then? This is a point raised by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), an individual who has lived with the problems of the farming community longer than I. He was no doubt appealing for a saner approach to interest rates in those days. Today, an FCC five-year loan is at the rate of 10 per cent.

As we went into the 1984 campaign, as a farmer I was certainly impressed by the 16 point agricultural policy developed by the Progressive Conservative Party. I am sure my colleague from Bow River was instrumental in the development of that policy as, no doubt, was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, and others.

That policy came out of a conference held in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, and became known as the Prince Albert Declaration. The Progressive Conservative Party in that policy said it would remove the capital gains tax for farmers. Since forming the Government, we have provided for the accumulation of $500,000 exempt of taxes. We said that we would remove the sales tax on farm fuels. Of course, we have done that. We said we would change the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Again, that certainly has been done. We said we would change the Western Grain Transportation Act to remove the volume cap and freeze the rate. Again, that was done. Going into the 1984 election campaign the Progressive Conservative Party promised to increase sales and extend our markets for grains. Certainly that has been done. We said that we would bring forth a red meat stabilization program, which we did. We say that we would allow dual labelling, and we have. As well, we have acted to reduce the flow of subsidized beef from the EEC. We said that we would establish Farm Debit Review Boards. We have done so.

I am proud of this Government, a Government that put together that Prince Albert Declaration and in fact followed through on it.

We have heard a lot of rhetoric and yelling about how the western farmers feel. In that regard, let me quote from the Winnipeg Free Press of Thursday, December 18, 1986. The article is headed: "Pool praises PM." It states:

> The Alberta Wheat Pool has praised the government of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney for his handling of problems in the agricultural industry—
> It is really quite an extraordinary hard time in agriculture right now and we feel that so far the present government has responded well.

Certainly the score card, according to the Winnipeg Free Press—a very important newspaper when it comes to the agricultural sector—comes down in favour of this Government. That is an article that was written at the time the deficiency payment was made.

Next I have a publication entitled: Wheat Pool "budget". Under the heading "Farm Income Record in 1986" we have the following:

> Alberta Agriculture estimates that 1986 total realized net farm income in Alberta was $788 million, the highest level on record, and a remarkable 45 per cent over the 1985 level.
> The record was achieved because of lower operating expenses, a healthier livestock sector and substantial government program payments.
> Payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Plan, crop insurance and other programs accounted for an estimated 17 per cent of total farm cash receipts in 1986.

That is not to say, Mr. Speaker, that there is not a problem, and one which we need to address, in western Canada and in Canada generally in connection with grain sales. I do wish to emphasize, however, that this is a Government that has shown the way. It is addressing the situation in a very forthright and planned manner.

I know that our farmers do not have the same confidence in the opposition Parties, the members of which have given us so much rhetoric since the start of this debate.

In that connection, I should like to quote from the Winnipeg Free Press of April 11, 1987. The headline is: "No hope from the Liberals".

The article states, in part:

> Even the western members of the caucus remain sadly out of touch—
> The 17-page report is an empty document offering ringing declarations of discredited party policy, outright distortions of economic reality and not a single firm proposal which would make any significant difference in the economy of Western Canada.

It goes on to say:

> Most of the actual proposals of the task force are so vague as to be meaningless.

• (1020)

Then it went on to indicate:

> On agriculture, the task force boldly recommends that "income support measures such as the Alberta Liberal Party's suggestion for a negative income tax for farmers should be examined more closely".

It continued:

> Significantly missing from the group are two other elected Liberals: Manitoba Liberal Leader Sharon Carstairs and John Turner, Member of Parliament for Vancouver Quadra and Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada. Both should consider themselves lucky to be out of it.

That certainly reflects some thoughts from western Canada on the vague, quickly thrown together, wild promises in connection with agriculture.

We have a Government with many actual working farmers who know what it is to have callouses on their hands. They are part and parcel of the way in which we think a government should address the problem.

I should like to refer to the document entitled "Directions for the West—Proposals for the Western Canadian Economy". This Liberal proposal was immediately dismissed by the Winnipeg Free Press as an empty document.

Who are these experts on western Canada? Is it the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy)? I do not know how many cows he has milked or how many sheaves of grain he has stooked. I do not know how understanding he is.

Let us reflect upon what has happened in terms of federal support for agriculture in western Canada since 1983. According to the graph which I have before me, it would be about $300,000 million. In 1984, when the Conservative Government came into play, it shows that federal support of agriculture went up to $1 billion. In 1985 it was about $1.7 billion. In 1986 it was about $2.2 billion. For 1987 the forecast is in the area of $3.2 billion.

I think farmers in western Canada understand a Government which is moving toward assisting in a thought provoking, organized manner, not flailing about with rhetoric. I think that is very important to my farming colleagues across Canada, especially those in western Canada—and we grow a lot of grain in Ontario—in this depressed price time, the result of large amounts of subsidies by the United States and the European Economic Community. They are depressing the prices and we are caught in the middle. It is something which we must address in an organized way.

At the same time it is important that we remember that the Government has brought forward over 400 separate initiatives providing $5.76 billion to the benefit of Canadian agriculture, in sharp contrast to what the previous Liberal administration did. Farmers in Lambton County must chuckle a lot about the statements of Hon. Members on the opposition side as they reflect on what they did. Of course the NDP could not do anything because it has never been in Government. I am sure those farmers remember what the Liberals did not do when they were in Government.

On the grains and oil seeds side, a $1 billion payment has provided and will continue to provide a needed boost to cash flow. There have been a number of other issues including new grain deals, advance payments for crops, the record interim payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act, cash advances for unharvested grain, and amendments to the Western Grain Transportation Act. The producer freight rate was maintained. There is a new domestic feed policy, and commodity based mortgages were introduced. Farm debt review boards were put in place. There was the Canadian Rural Transition Program, and of course, reduced interest rates.

I see you signalling, Mr. Speaker. I will probably not have time to deal with all the initiatives we have introduced as a government. Of course the farm fuel tax relief was introduced. We also assisted specialty groups. Our long-term dairy policy was lauded and appreciated by that industry.

As a farmer who has deep roots, serious concerns, and an understanding of the industry, I ask the Government to move toward addressing the international pricing situation of grain farmers with a lot of thought, sincere study, and certainly the help of the farming community and its important organizations.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak in the debate, and I want to say a word of appreciation to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) for having initiated it.

The Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) who just spoke complained about what he called opposition rhetoric. I do not think that the people in western Canada see it in quite that way. They recognize that we have identified very clearly the crisis facing farmers in western Canada and that we are asking the Government to do something about it.

I also heard the Hon. Member read a list of things which the Government has done. Our Party is in full accord with some of those things. We appreciate that those measures have been taken. However, right now we are facing a crisis which demands further immediate action to save the family farm economy of western Canada. It is not good enough for the Conservatives to say that they have done thus and so and the following. They must address the present crisis. They cannot live on the basis of what they did a few months ago. That is not good enough. That will not help the people facing the crisis today.

Also the Hon. Member seemed to suggest that there was something wrong because some of the Members who have spoken were not farmers themselves. He suggested that if academics or business people became involved in the debate, somehow it reflected wrong priorities.

I recall a story which was told by Bill Irvine, a pioneer member of the CCF. I think he was first elected as a member of the Labour Party back in the 1920s. When he and some of his fellow members from western Canada came to Ottawa, they were looking to address some of the urgent issues facing western Canada at that time. The first issue with which they became involved related to Cape Breton coal miners. It was a real eye-opener. He represented western interests. He was very concerned about the needs of western Canada. However, when he came here he had to be concerned about the crying needs of Cape Breton coal miners. It gave him a new vision of what Canada was all about.

I think Hon. Members of the House recognize that, whether we come from a farm in western Canada, a fishing community in British Columbia, or an auto manufacturing town in Ontario. I think we are all concerned with the over-all economy of the country. The fact that we do not come from one particular occupation should not prevent us from being able to speak when a crisis threatens a particular sector of the economy.

The emergency today has been very clearly outlined by our Party. It has three basic components. Of course the first is that initial grain prices announced by the Canadian Wheat Board are down 18 per cent on average from what they were last year, and they were already down 20 per cent from what they were the year before. This results in the lowest initial prices in 15 years and creates a real problem for farmers as they plan their crops for the coming season.

The second part of the crisis is the fact that on Monday of this week, the Government announced that it was lifting the moratorium on the Farm Credit Corporation loans. If the first of those can be said to be due to international markets, and we certainly recognize that international markets are important and that the price of grain is determined on international markets, the second of those is the direct responsibility of the Government. The Government chose the worst possible time, both financially and psychologically, to take that kind of action. It completely undercuts the confidence not only of farmers in their own abilities but it also undercuts the confidence of the financial community in the farmers to whom they will be extending credit. They see that the Government itself is not standing behind farmers.

When the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) spoke, he said that the problem relates back to the high interest rates that were a result of the previous Government. I remember when the Bank Bill was introduced by the previous Government. At that time, the New Democratic Party introduced amendments that we hoped would help to bring this matter under control. The Conservative Party supported the Government rather than the progressive amendments that would have done something about high interest rates. It is a little late for the Hon. Member for Bow River to complain about high interest rates.

The Hon. Member said that they might have to bring back the Bank Act and take a look at it. It comes up for review every 10 years. We hope that this time, Conservative Members might take a little more progressive approach to the Bank Act than they have so far. Every relationship I have seen between the Conservative Party and the Canadian banks does not give me very much hope and I do not think it gives the farmers of Canada very much hope either. I doubt the Hon. Member himself has much hope since, knowing his background, I believe that he does not have any great love for the banks.

The final part of this crisis is the refusal of the Government to guarantee that prices paid to farmers this year will be no less than what they were last year. If there was such a guarantee, the farming community would at least know that there would be a floor beneath which it would not have to sink. The Hon. Member for Bow River said that the Government will come through at the proper time and in the proper way. This is the proper time. Farmers are facing the crisis now. They have to make decisions about their crops now. They face this huge question mark now.

We heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) speak for 35 minutes. It had been hoped that intervening as he did in such an emergency debate, he would have had something to say. It was hoped that he would have announced the reconsideration of the decision to lift the moratorium on FCC loans or that he had decided to institute deficiency payments. That would have given a real sense of hope and confidence to the farmers. Instead, we listened to 35 minutes of diatribe against the Opposition and then a long list of some of the things the Government has already done. We heard the suggestion that this was an international problem that had to be solved on the international stage. We agree that international efforts are required to solve this problem but it also requires some immediate short-term action that will help farmers right now.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) said that the lifting of the moratorium was an expression of confidence in the farmers and accused us of not having any confidence in them because we wanted to see that moratorium kept in place. What nonsense. It is as though a swimmer had decided to swim across a lake, a storm comes up and the driver of the boat that had been guiding the swimmer suddenly says that he is confident that the swimmer could make it to the other side of the lake and then takes off and leaves the swimmer by himself. That kind of confidence is not really very helpful. We need the kind of confidence that stays with the farmer, the kind of confidence that tells the farmer that we believe he can make it and we will stay with him every step of the way until he does make it. That is the kind of confidence the Government should be showing in farmers rather than the kind that abandons them. I say to the Hon. Member for Bow River that now is the proper time for the Government to be taking some action.

The House of Commons often suffers from a degree of unreality. I suppose that is perhaps inevitable in this kind of a deliberative chamber but in order to help us keep in contact with the reality that is facing Canadians from coast to coast, we are given good travel budgets, phone privileges, mailing privileges and constituency office budgets. That should help us keep in touch with what our constituents are thinking.

I know my colleagues from Saskatchewan and Manitoba have been bringing the needs of the western economy and prairie farmers before the House because of the representations they have heard from their constituents. I presume that at least some Conservative Members have been availing themselves of the resources available to them to hear what their constituents have to say about the real problems they face. I presume they even try to raise some of these issues in caucus. Why has the Government not acted? Why has the Government chosen this particular time to lift the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loans? Why has the Government refused to give the kind of guarantee to farmers that would enable them to go ahead and plant with hope and the confidence that they will be around next year at this time?

As I was preparing for this debate, it occurred to me that it has been exactly 49 years since my own family left a farm in Saskatchewan. My father had spent 22 years of his young manhood on that farm and my mother had spent nine years there. They literally had to walk away because of a combination of poor crops caused by rust, dust, grasshoppers and Russian thistles, low prices and a Government that either did not care or could not help. They literally walked away with nothing but a few possessions. Today's details are different but the basic issue is the same. The family farm is threatened and the whole economy of the prairie provinces is under threat.

Just three or four years ago, one of my brothers-in-law who was a farmer in southern Alberta faced this same situation. Because of over-expansion, high interest rates and low commodity prices, he found that he had to sell a family farm and go into another business. Of course, he was not unique nor was my father. I represent a riding in British Columbia in which there are hundreds of retired prairie farmers. Some of them retired after good years, some, like my father, got out because they were literally forced out by poor crops and worse prices.

We face a very serious situation. The Government is refusing to take action to address it. The Government is relying on the fact that it did some things in accordance with its election promises but it is not meeting this current crisis. That is what we must emphasize over and over again. In this respect, the Government is following the same line it is taking with other primary producers.

We have seen the bungling on the softwood lumber issue. The Government was completely incapable of standing up for the interests of Canadian lumber producers. As a result we now have a 15 per cent tax on softwood lumber products. That can perhaps be managed by some producers when markets are buoyant, but it will decimate the interest once there is a bit of slack in the market.

In the same way we have seen the Government's refusal to really come to grips with the needs of the fishing industry. We have a decline in our small craft harbours program. Officials have come before the committee and testified that in order to meet the needs of small craft harbours they need literally millions of dollars. Some $127 million a year is needed and they are getting less than $50 million. we are going to have to shut down small craft harbours across Canada because the Government is not taking seriously the need to maintain an infrastructure for one of Canada's primary resources.

We have seen the back down by the Government in its dealings with France over St. Pierre and Miquelon, refusing to stand up for the needs of Canadian fishermen. We have seen the destruction of habitat while the Government brings in what it calls a no net loss habitat policy which allows fishery habitat to be traded off to other industries. The result is the destruction of valuable fish habitat. We have seen the postponement of promises to create a salmonoid enhancement program.

We see one area after another where the Government is abandoning the primary resources of our country. The latest issue of course is the sell-out of Dome. We are no longer going to maintain any kind of Canadian ownership or control of that very important company. We have to ask why. What are the Government's priorities? Of the 137,000 jobs created last year all but 5,000 were in the Province of Ontario. We certainly have nothing against Ontario. That province needed 132,000 jobs. More power to them. Yet we need jobs in British Columbia. They need jobs in western and Atlantic Canada and in Quebec. Why do we not have policies that would help the economy right across the country?

Getting back to the issue at hand, we need a commitment by this Government to keep the family farm as a workable, economic unit. The land will not go away. Even if some of the people currently farming that land go bankrupt and are forced off the land, even if commodity prices are depressed, at some future time the land will be important and someone somewhere will be interested in farming it. However, unless the Government takes action now the people who are going to be farming it will not be the family farmer. It will not be the people who have invested their lives, the welfare of their families, their savings, their energy, their hopes and their initiatives into building up a farm. They have seen all that destroyed by a combination of international commodity prices and a non-caring Government. It will not be those people on the land.

What we are asking as a Party is that the Government should take action. It should recognize the situation of Canadian farmers, see it as an emergency. Now is the time when the Government should be taking action, not six months from now. Give farmers a chance now so they can plan their crops properly.

It is interesting that some of my colleagues have already pointed to the element of stress in the life of Canadian farmers. They pointed out that the picture of an idyllic life on the farm is completely false. Growing food, they conclude, is one of Canada's most stressful occupations. The stress is chronic and dangerous. The Western Report of January 12, 1987, says that the study revealed that stress symptoms such as headaches, marital problems and irritability were three or four times more prevalent in the average farmer than in an RCMP officer three days after being involved in a shooting.

What is more, the stress on the policeman is transitory, a one-time event, but for farmers the stress just goes on and on. We are talking about stress on our primary producers, the people we require to produce food not only for Canada but for other parts of the world. These are the people we look to to earn primary income for Canada. We are abandoning them in a time of difficulty. They are always under some stress. Now they are under particular stress and we are abandoning them.

For our part we call at the very least for an immediate government commitment to provide grain farmers with a guarantee that total grain receipts for crop being planted now, the 1987-88 crop year, equal those of the 1986-87 year. The Government should not lift the FCC moratorium until it announces a deficiency program for the upcoming crop year and addresses the broad question of Canadian farm debt, which is about $25 billion across Canada.

I urge the Government to recognize the seriousness of the situation we face now. It is not a question of rhetoric. It is an emergency out there on the farm. It is not good enough to simply reiterate what has already been done. Let us have some action now.

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased you were able to recognize me today because I think this debate, more than any of the debates we have had recently, clearly demonstrates what our Government has done, is doing, and intends to do in comparison to what some speakers on the other side have had to say.

I would like to first address a couple of the issues raised earlier in the debate by the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). The Leader of the NDP complained about the Government bailing out the banks. He said that Government had $1 billion for the banks but nothing for the farmers. I would like him to know that we did not bail out any banks at all. Those banks are gone. They are dead. They are in receivership. The people we reimbursed were the people in western Canada who had money in those banks and organizations such as municipalities, school boards, credit unions, the City of Grande Prairie, hospital boards, co-ops and farm businesses. These were the kind of people who needed support.

We recognized that the economy was in a sensitive situation. The western economy could not stand the blow of losing $1 billion. We came to the aid of the west when it was needed because those organizations and groups depend for their revenue on people who pay property taxes, farmers and others. That is their only source of revenue. We recognized that so we supported them and the farmers. The Leader of the New Democratic Party should recognize and understand that. The fact that he does not clearly demonstrates that he does not understand the west or farmers, and probably never will.

I will say a little more about the Leader of the Opposition. If there was ever a speech from Bay Street, we heard it this morning. He told us something about nominal interest rates and real interest rates, trying to suggest that the interest rates of today are somehow higher than the interest rates of 20 per cent, 25 per cent, and 30 per cent which we had three and four years ago when the Liberals were in office. He made some kind of argument on inflation, nominal interest rates and real interest rates.

The fact is that while you can listen to some ivory tower economist or Bay Street lawyer, to the farmer "interest rates" means what he pays out in cash. To the farmer cash is cash and money is money. If your payments are half today what they were five years ago that is all that matters. Frankly, it does not matter one bit to the farmer whether some Bay Street lawyer or ivory tower economist from the New Democratic Party tries to tell us that interest rates of 10 per cent or 12 per cent are really higher than interest rates of 23 per cent because the farmer knows better.

This debate demonstrates the kinds of people there are in the two Parties. Part of the problem with the Liberal Party is that they do not have any members who understand farmers and the west. They never have. The problem with the Liberal Party is that they cannot assemble enough members of their caucus who know something about agriculture to have a game of checkers.

A Member has just handed me some figures on interest rates and I will read them into the record before I go on. The prime rate today is 9.25 per cent, the FCC rate is 10 per cent, and the Farm Improvements Loan Act rate is 10.25 per cent. In 1981, when the former Government was in office the prime rate was 22.75 per cent, we had a 20-year FCC rate of 16.75 and the Farm Improvements Loan Act rate was 23.75. That is more than double what they are now. Where were Hazen Argue and the Leader of the Opposition then? Well, we know where the Leader of the Opposition was. He was on Bay Street. He was the one collecting these interest rates.

I want to talk about farming and agriculture in the west. We have heard from many Members on our side today, from farmers and Members from agricultural ridings. I happen to represent a city riding, but I can remember my roots. I can tell you a little about my roots to illustrate that while some of us may represent people in cities today we know what it is like to live on the farm.

I spent my first 17 years growing up in a place called Bruce. Those of you who read Quorum may have noticed an article a couple of weeks ago about a visit paid there by Don Mazankowski, the Member of Parliament for that area, as well as John Wise. They addressed a group of 300 farmers in a little community of only 75 people. The commitment of the Government is illustrated when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) is prepared to meet with people in such a small community and tell them about the Government.

During the 17 years that I spent there my father was a machine dealer, a hog buyer and a cattle buyer. We did a little farming as well. I shovelled my share of fertilizer and grain and some of that other stuff, too, at least enough of it to give me some experience in how to handle some of the things which the Opposition throws at us from time to time.

For your benefit, Mr. Speaker, I would indicate that I got to know the present Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), the Member of Parliament who represents the area where I grew up, a long time ago. I met his wife even earlier than that. She was the nurse in the delivery room when I was born.

I was in Prince Albert just about three years ago in early July when the Conservative Party, then the Opposition, unveiled its program for western agriculture and western farmers. There were 53 or 54 items in that program. I was in Camrose last week in the riding of a prominent western Member, the chairman of the Alberta caucus, Arnold Malone. There were many farmers there. I was reviewing that program and saw that 44 of those 53 points have been addressed in the time since we have been in office. The other nine are currently at some stage of development.

The Government has always been aware of the needs of farmers and agriculture. We have a long history of involvement. The importance of maintaining a strong and dynamic agri-food industry has always been well understood by my Party. Indeed many, perhaps the majority, of agricultural institutions which all farmers and all Members of this House will be familiar with were brought forward by Conservative Governments, including that of Mr. Diefenbaker. The Canadian Wheat Board, the Farm Credit Corporation, crop insurance, the Agricultural Stabilization Act, ARDA, and the PFRA are primary examples of our concern for Canadian agriculture.

I want to make it clear, however, that these institutions and organizations and legislation are only support mechanisms. They were never intended to interfere with farmers' personal freedom and responsibility for their own success.

Any farmer is aware of the harsh realities of agricultural life. He knows that farmers have to be careful, have to be frugal, and have to work hard and live within their means because of the narrow margins, the traditionally poor returns on capital, and the terrible risks which farmers face both through natural hazards and market risks. The market-place is no less threatening to farmers than flood or drought or frost.

Each farmer must take primary responsibility for coping as best as he can with these hazards. Farmers understand that there is no escape from these harsh realities and no excuse for bad management. In short, they must carry their own weight, take their own risks, and live with the consequences. Every independent businessman must maintain that sort of attitude toward his or her enterprise.

However, the federal Government recognizes that there are some aspects of agricultural life which are unique; the vulnerability to the weather and to international political and economic forces for example, plus the historically low rate of return on capital, all of which require governments to adopt special programs for farmers. This is not done to guarantee every farmer a living, but to ensure a general environment in which Canadian farmers may prosper and also to ensure that Canadian consumers have a continuing supply of high quality food at reasonable prices, something which is particularly important to Members such as myself who represent urban ridings. In addition, government support to the agriculture industry enhances that industry's contribution to the national economy, for example, its contribution to the balance of trade.

If hard work and farming skills could solve the problem it would be behind us by now. However, farmers know that they have no control over their problems and that is very frustrating for them. The cause, as has been stated here earlier by other speakers, is rooted outside Canada's borders. An international subsidy war between the Europeans and the United States has pushed world grain prices so far down that farmers today cannot even cover the cost of production.

This is an incredibly costly war. Literally billions and billions of dollars are being spent. Canada's treasury simply cannot compete dollar for dollar. However, we are not backing away from the problem one bit. We are approaching the situation on three fronts. First, we are working hard to maintain our current markets for grain and we are seeking new ones. With aggressive marketing we are stressing Canada's strengths: dependable delivery, reliable supply and, above all, high quality.

Under the leadership of the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), and even in the face of massive export subsidies, this approach has earned Canada a larger world market share for grain. It is expected to increase to 21.5 per cent for 1986-87.

Our second approach is to fight hard at the international level for fairness in world agricultural trade. Canada pushed successfully to put agriculture on the table in the new round of multilateral trade negotiations. Agriculture is our number one priority in the GATT negotiations, in contrast to the former Government that bargained away, neglected, and ignored agriculture in trade negotiations. If it had not done that and had placed agriculture in the priority position that we have, we would not now be facing these problems.

• (1100)

My colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) has met twice with Ministers from the world's leading grain exporting nations. In fact, Canada organized and hosted the first meeting. Canada is also organizing a meeting for late May, which will bring together 14 of the world trade Ministers to deal with the agricultural trade issue. They will consider their collective position to be carried to the Venice Economic Summit of western nations by Prime Minister Mulroney. These initiatives will eventually restore fairness to world grain trade and a realism to world grain prices. But solutions will not come quickly.

That is the reason behind our third approach. We are providing substantial assistance to grain farmers. It is assistance of a size never matched in this country's history.

In the past two years, prairie farmers have received record payments from the Western Grain Stabilization Program and this year's payment will easily set a new record.

We took the initiative to amend the Act so that farmers would receive interim payments in the spring. Those farmers who participate in the program can expect a substantial interim payment to be announced before the end of the month.

In addition, the Special Canadian Grains Program, the billion-dollar package to which has been referred in this debate, was $1 billion in direct cash to grain and oil seed farmers who have been hurt by the international subsidy war.

Alberta farmers will get more than $265 million of that amount. So far, we have mailed cheques for $76 million to farmers in Alberta, and the final payment is going out in May.

The program is going well. There are some hitches and some concerns, but we are dealing with them. We will resolve them.

In the meantime, Charlie Mayer and John Wise are continuing to consult with farm organizations—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Would the Hon. Member resume his seat for one moment? He has done this throughout his whole speech, but I hope he will mention Ministers only by their portfolio. It is not necessary to name them. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin).

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for that oversight. As you know, I prepared quickly for this debate. I scribbled a few notes and was not as careful as I should have been.

Mr. Waddell: Say hello to your mother.

Mr. Dorin: I do not know if she is watching. She is probably working.

Mr. Robinson: She just joined the NDP.

Mr. Dorin: Not likely. You do not know my mother.

All of us agree that seeding decisions must continue to be based on the market-place, not on the expectation of what sort of formula may be used for future government support. To the extent possible, any program that we devise must be market-neutral.

Farm leaders were instrumental in putting together the formula for the billion-dollar program. We will continue to meet with them to discuss further options. The bottom line is that our grain industry must be maintained. We must emerge from the current problems in a strong international position.

Because Canada, especially western Canada, is in the grain business and we intend to stay in it, it is important to work on all of the three fronts I have mentioned. We are in the grain business to stay. We will hold on to our markets and build new ones.

The Government of Canada intends to stand firm behind our farmers. That is a commitment we have backed with action in the past. It is a commitment that we will back with action in the future. Farmers want results, not rhetoric. They have been getting results, not rhetoric.

This morning we heard some examples of what we have done. In the time I have remaining I want to mention one or two of those examples.

Members have talked about the Special Canadian Grains Program. The total of western economic support for farmers during 1986 was an average of $21,500 per commercial farmer, not including that special billion-dollar package. That is a significant amount that is unmatched. That amount indicates the support and commitment of the Government to western farmers, Canadian farmers and agriculture in general.

I could go on to list 40 or 50 other initiatives we have taken in the last two and one-half years, but I believe that you have signalled that other Members want to speak. I am pleased to have an opportunity to hear them because we want to know what the Opposition has to say. We know that when people compare what we have done to the initiatives and programs the Liberals have brought forward in the past couple of weeks, they will realize who is on their side, and who supports and understands them.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to take part in this debate because it deals with the most serious farm crisis that western farmers have probably witnessed since the Depression.

I heard a number of Members opposite say that many of us in the Opposition should probably not speak on farm policy. They suggest that since 20 of their back-benchers and Cabinet Ministers are farmers, they are the most knowledgeable about agriculture.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I never suggested that members of the Opposition should not speak. In fact, I encourage them to do so because the more they speak the better we look.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I was not in the House to hear all of the Hon. Member's speech. I was not referring to him, but to other Members whom I heard during the night and this morning. The message came across quite clear, as it does daily in the House, that they believe we on this side of the House should not become emotional about our agricultural sector because we do not understand it. I suggest that members of the Opposition should check our backgrounds more carefully.

The Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) said today that he was brought up on a farm, was involved in the agricultural industry and knew a great deal about that industry in Canada. I do not doubt that the Member was very sincere in what he was saying.

However, I want to tell him that I have a similar background. I was born in 1935 in the Province of Prince Edward Island. I grew up on a family farm and probably milked as many cows—by hand—as any Member of Parliament here today. I know a little about the black flies in the summer and cows swishing their tails when we tried to milk them. Of course, those were the days before milking machines; farmers have progressed a great deal since then. In 1935, the year I was born, my father's total income for the year was $366. When he passed away a few years ago, we still had the old receipts, bills and mortgages which were paid by my father, who was trying to hold on to a family farm on a total of $366 a year and raise a family of three as well. He also looked after my grandmother. At that time there were no senior citizens, homes and the grandparents lived with the son and his children. So I know a little bit about hardship and a little bit about agriculture. Indeed, I dabbled in cattle, operating a small beef herd for many years up until the time I was elected to this House in 1980. My son is still operating the family farm which goes back to my grandfather, some 140 years ago. So before we start commenting on whether or not someone is qualified to speak, we should check their background.

I must say that I am very pleased to see lawyers, veterinarians, doctors and former school teachers take part in this debate because I think they also have a deep interest in our agricultural sector. I want to also point out that the debate which has been going on since eight o'clock last night is not just a debate about western farmers. Yes, that is where the crisis is today but I remind all Hon. Members—and they have heard me on the subject many times since I became a Member of Parliament—about the plight of our potato farmers in the Province of Prince Edward Island. For the last three years, up until this year, we have had a crisis situation in our potato industry. This year the price is a little better. Farmers are certainly able to meet their costs and to pay off a few of their debts.

I just came back from my riding where I talked to a number of farmers. One individual in particular told me that he is going to show a bit of a profit this year and will be able to pay off a few of his bills but his problem is that he is getting himself into a situation where the banks may foreclose on him. They could not do it last year because he was so far in debt. They knew there was nowhere else to go. The problem is, in some cases, when one has a heavy debt load and gets near a point where one's assets cover one's debts, that is when the banks get a little shaky and can foreclose very quickly. We have seen a lot of that in my province over the last four or five years.

This is what is happening in western Canada today, and it is happening not only in western Canada. The lifting of the moratorium on foreclosures by this Government is going to have a tremendous affect on eastern Canada, Ontario and the west, as we mentioned before, because of the decline of world market price for grain. It is down 18 per cent this year and was down 20 per cent last year. that is 38 per cent below what it was in 1985.

There is no question about what is taking place. One does not have to be a Philadelphia lawyer to figure that one out. Whether one is a farmer, a lawyer, an economist or a dentist, it does not make much difference. It is very simple arithmetic and certainly everyone in Canada can understand it. I hope that everyone in Canada does understand the serious situation in western Canada. More than that, I hope the Prime Minister and his Cabinet, his inner circle, will understand. We know there was $1 billion put in place last year to help the grain farmers, particularly those in western Canada. That was appreciated. I think I would be less than honest if I said anything different. It was a help. However, government Members say to us: "Look what we have done for farmers". That $1 billion was set aside for the farmers, we agree, but why was the $1 billion put in? It was because there was such a serious crisis. If the money had not been put in most of the farmers would have been gone. Any government with any compassion would have done that, and should have done more.

What we are saying in this debate today is that the Government must move and move quickly not only to put in another $1 billion but to ensure that farmers in western Canada and right across the country are able to put in their crops this year and be guaranteed a price no less than last year. That is not much to ask.

I have heard people asking why we are always standing up and fighting in the House of Commons and elsewhere for the farmers. The farming industry is the real base of our economy. Any country in the world which loses its agriculture sector is kaput, as they say in Newfoundland. It is gone. We cannot be held hostage to other countries, if we lose our agricultural industry, because that is when Canadian consumers are going to pay through the nose.

We all know that farm prices are far too low and we do not have to tell the farmers how to produce. Canadian farmers are the most efficient farmers in the world—any statistics will tell you that, Mr. Speaker even with all the obstacles they have to face such as climatic conditions and so on. They are the most productive farmers in the world, but they have to be given some least a return on their investment. If we do not do something immediately and disallow foreclosures on farm properties in Canada, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, we will be in the most serious crisis this country has ever faced. I say that because when a farmer has a large holding of land and goes bankrupt, the price of that property also declines. It affects all the other farmers. Their collateral is gone. That is a very serious situation. It will have a snowball affect. So we must maintain our integrity as a national Government and as Members of Parliament and see this issue very clearly.

I was looking at the May 4 edition of Maclean's magazine and came across an article entitled "Down and out on the Farm". This is not news to me, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to quote one paragraph:

> Western farmers can recite a litany of economic misery. In Saskatchewan, which relies most heavily on grain farming, total farm debt climbed from $3.4 billion in 1981 to $4.8 billion in 1985. During the same period net farm income dropped to $699 million from $1.1 billion.
> In response, the value of land in southeastern Saskatchewan has dropped as much as 40 per cent in the past three years.

• (1120)

That is exactly what I am trying to point out. We have seen it in my province when we used to pay $1,000 per acre for good potato land. Today and last year some of that land was going for less than $400 per acre. But the farmer had worked for 25 and 30 years on that land. He had put in hard work, blood and sweat. His wife and kids also worked on the farm. The family farm is not a one-man operation. Farming involves a whole household. If we lose our family farms, if we allow them to disappear, it will be an extremely sad day for us all.

The Government has to come up with a program. It has to do so immediately. It is not good enough to say that when world prices go up in two or three years' time that we will still have enough farmers to produce grain at a good market price. I am as much for free marketing as anyone but there comes a time when we have to stand up to provide from the Treasury some money to help an industry. We had no problem in this Chamber and the Government had no problem when the banks in western Canada got were in trouble. We were there very quickly to help that situation out, to bail them out.

Mr. Blenkarn: Bail who out?

Mr. Henderson: Bail out the depositors. Some of these depositors had millions of dollars on deposit . There was no risk at all and they were receiving a high interest rate. The reason they had their money in those banks was because of the high interest rates they were receiving over and above ordinary bank interest rates. That is the same sort of principle as if I were to go to the horse-races tomorrow and bet on a long shot and lose my money. I could take my ticket back to the Government of Canada and say that I took a chance, I lost, now come up with the money. The Government had no problem coming up with solutions to those types of situations. But I can tell Hon. Members that when our primary producers are concerned, whether it be in agriculture or fisheries, we seem to be very slow in acting. That is disgraceful.

I come back again to the $1 billion payment. I recognize that some people say that this $1 billion was paid out on account of the election in Saskatchewan. I do not know. But whatever happened with respect to the $1 billion we are glad. We support that amount of money going to western farmers. What we are saying is that that was not enough. It is not the farmers' fault that the world price of wheat is down as low as it is. It is the fault of the European Economic Community and the fault of subsidization in the United States.

We have to look at these issues in a clear and concise manner. We have to make up our minds, as does the Government, with respect to whether or not we want an agricultural industry in five years' time or three years' time or two years' time or whether we want to see it disappear. I can tell Hon. Members that I have seen in my own province over the years some of the small family farms that disappeared and went into more corporate-type farming operations. It is a sad day when something like that happens, because when they get into trouble the whole community is in trouble. This happens when we get into specialized commodities. At one time we were very general in agriculture. Certainly, in Atlantic Canada in my province we had beef, pork, grain, potatoes and in the wintertime there was the woodlot. There was some diversification. But when we get into specialized farming in just one commodity and the price drops, as it has dropped for wheat, which is also what happened with potatoes, one is left with nothing. There was nothing to pay off some of one's debts to tide one over.

I know that my time has expired. I am pleased that I had this opportunity to speak out on behalf of farmers as one Member of Parliament among many who understand the agricultural industry and who worked hard at it over the years. I think every one of us in the House of Commons should take a sober second look at what is happening in western Canada today, especially in respect to our agricultural industry. We should once and for all make a commitment here, before this debate is through, that we will support agriculture and maintain the industry. We should commit ourselves to doing our best to create more and better markets. The problem in agriculture today is with respect to the consistency in the market-place. As I said before, there is no problem to produce. The problem is to sell. I fought the Bill which dealt with the demise of Canagrex. It may not have been a panacea for all the ills of the agricultural industry. No one here said it was, at least no one on this side of the House. But anything that helps in creating and developing new markets in agriculture is good. It is good for our agricultural community which is the basis of community life in Canada.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I normally would not be expected to speak on an issue concerning agriculture. Mississauga South is not an agricultural constituency. But I must advise the House that I have been directly and heavily involved in farming for the past 25 years. I am a partner in a very extensive dairy operation, as well as a partner with my son in a fish farm. I have some interests in embryo transfer and the transfer of cattle by air to other parts of the world. That type of activity has made me quite conversant with what is in fact happening in the reality of agriculture.

This debate got off on a very foolish footing. I am surprised it was even brought to the attention of the House. I wish to read into the record an article from the Alberta Wheat Pool magazine dated April 10, 1987. The heading is: "Farm Income Record in 1986". The article states:

> Alberta Agriculture estimates that 1986 total realized net farm income in Alberta was $788 million, the highest level on record, and a remarkable 45 per cent over the 1985 level.
> The record was achieved because of lower operating expenses, a healthier livestock sector and substantial government program payments.
> Payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Plan, crop insurance and other programs accounted for an estimated 17 per cent of total farm cash receipts in 1986.
> Payments in the form of farm fuel rebates, and feed grain adjustment payments and other expense reduction programs reduced total operating expenses by an estimated 12.6 per cent.
> Total farm cash receipts for 1986 was not significantly different from that in 1985. Lower grain prices were largely offset by higher government subsidies and higher livestock prices. Total crop receipts were down by 7.7 per cent from 1985 and total livestock receipts increased by 6.7 per cent.
> Total operating expenses for 1986 declined by 9.8 per cent. This is the lowest level of operating expenses since 1980.
> Net farm income in 1986, which includes the value of inventory change, is estimated to have surpassed all previous records. Record total crop production in 1986, following two consecutive years of drought has increased the value of inventory change by an unprecedented $582 million from 1985. This, combined with record program payments, has pushed net farm income to an estimated $1.28 billion compared with $457 million in 1985.

Mr. Speaker, where is the emergency? The Leader of the Opposition, totally non-conversant with what has happened, has indicated that the interest rates for Farm Credit Corporation loans are at an all time high. Let's get the record straight. The interest rate on a five year fixed interest term mortgage is now at 10 per cent, compared to a previous rate of 10.75 per cent; loans under the Shared Risk Mortgage Program dropped 1.25 per cent, to 9.5 per cent; the rate for a 10 year fixed term is 10.75 per cent, a reduction of one quarter of 1 per cent; loans with fixed terms of 15 years or more remain unchanged, at 11 per cent.

• (1130)

Under the Corporations Commodity-Based Loan Program, the interest rate remains at 6 per cent for the fully indexed option, while the rate for the partially indexed option has been reduced to 8.375 per cent from 8.50 per cent. And I could go on and on.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is, this Government has made sure that the interest rates charged to farmers by the Farm Credit Corporation are lower than people pay on their homes, lower than business pays on its activities.

If one can borrow long term money at 10 per cent at a time when the prime rate is at 9.25 per cent, that amounts to decent financing—and that is what has been made possible by this Government.

Let's talk about this Government's spending on western agriculture. When we formed the Government in 1984, the federal Government was assisting agriculture in western Canada to the extent of about $1 billion. This year, it is estimated that federal government assistance to western agriculture will amount to more than $3 billion.

It has been said that we are abandoning the farmers. What utter drivel! It is little wonder that we stand in this place today responding to this fool motion, answering this fool's suggestion that there is an emergency.

Yes, there are problems. But, is there an emergency? I say, "no".

We have made sure that the farmers of western Canada have sufficient cash in their hands to plant their crops and to make sure that their bills are paid, they have sufficient cash to run their operations.

It has been said that we should guarantee future prices; that we should intervene in the market-place to guarantee crop prices next fall, next year, the year after and two years down the road.

The farmers today are on their tractors and are planting, and they will be doing so for another month. Assuming they get decent weather and that they are not bothered by hail, drought, flood or insects, they will have a crop; and hopefully farmers right across the world will have a crop. But that isn't always the case.

While the future market may look glum today, it is a market that can turn around in an instant. We have seen it turn around.

Mr. Speaker, you and I were Members of this House in 1972, when there was a limit on how much grain a farmer could sell. Farmers who had grain but no permit to sell sold it under the table for as little as 50 cents a bushel.

We have been here before. We have seen the prices change rapidly.

Sir, it is about time that we all recognized that the real problem in agriculture, and indeed the real problem in business generally, has been too much government interference. We have guaranteed too many things.

We now have a problem in world grain prices because other Governments have subsidized the production of grains. Because of the over-supply, the market balance has been upset.

You and I both know, Sir, that it is the market-place that determines reality. We can wish to our heart's content that the wheat price be set at $8 a bushel or $9 a bushel. We can wish to our heart's content that Ontario corn would sell for $150 a tonne. But in the end, it is the market-place that will determine the price.

We can sit back and pretend that the cost of production is approximately average right across the country. People talk easily about the cost of production. But what in fact is the cost of production? The cost of production can vary dramatically from farm to farm. There are many factors involved, including the individuals working the land, the make-up of the land, the kind of equipment used, the kind of weather experienced, and so on.

Those are the factors that determine the cost of production. One farmer can make money at $90 a tonne for corn, whereas his neighbour couldn't make money at $120 a tonne for corn. And why is that? One has to look at the cost of production. One has to look at what it costs to produce that crop on the two farms.

The attitude that the Government can come in and guarantee the cost of production is absolute nonsense. It is something that varies from farm to farm, from district to district, from farmer to farmer, from week to week, from year to year. It is absolute nonsense to say otherwise.

Farming is the type of activity where you buy retail and sell wholesale. When a farmer is sitting on his tractor planting a crop, he doesn't know whether or not he will have a harvest in the fall. He doesn't know whether a newly born calf is going to grow; and if it does grow and is bred, he doesn't know whether he is going to end up with a heifer or a bull, and how it is going to grade. There are simply too many variables involved. You put your best efforts forward and you take the risk. The world is full of risk.

Let's get down to the real problem that is affecting agriculture right across the country, that being the price of land and what has happened to the price of land in recent times, with the consequent result on net farm equity.

Through the 1970s, the price of agricultural land was bid up far beyond all reality. The Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) cited the case of potato lands in Prince Edward Island being bid up to $1,000 an acre. Good potato land near Alliston was bid up to over $3,500 an acre. One wonders why land gets bid up that high. Somewhere along the line, there was a financial system in place that was prepared to put more money into agricultural lands than it should have; and we had people gambling perhaps a bit more than they should have. But that is the way the world goes. People do bid up properties beyond their value. The reality is that the value of the land is only equal to the value of the crops that can be grown on it.

An Hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Blenkarn: It is worth no more than that. The fact that the crop prices do not reach astronomical prices leads to the conclusion that land prices cannot stay astronomically high. That being so, who is going to be hurt?

Well, the land-owners themselves are going to be hurt, the banks are going to be hurt, the Farm Credit Corporation is going to be hurt. Lenders generally are going to be hurt.

That is what the market does on occasion. Somewhere along the line, you have to wash out some of these ridiculously high prices.

To suggest that we could somehow step in and guarantee some of these inflated values is utter and complete nonsense. It wouldn't do anybody any good. As I said, land is worth what one can grow on it and sell. If one has to plant and grow crops of lesser value, then the land is worth less money.

• (1140)

We have had a few things going for us. Interest rates have dropped, which has helped considerably in terms of financing. We cannot control world prices for commodities, and if the prices of land have to drop, then they will have to drop.

We have incorporated farm review boards and have tried to make it easy for people to settle their claims. A number of banks have taken substantially less than 100 cents on the dollar on their mortgages. They have rewritten their mortgages at less than face value and allowed existing good operators to continue to operate their farms and get them back in shape. They have recognized as lenders that they made a mistake.

The Farm Credit Corporation will have to recognize that it has made some mistakes and will have to take substantially less in some cases than the amount on its books.

Co-ops which advanced money that they should not have advanced to customers are going to have to take less than they have on their books. That is the nature of falling land prices.

However, there is sunshine at the end of the rainbow. The sunshine is that young people entering farming will be able to get in at a decent price level again. As well, people will be able to buy machinery at a decent price level again. The marketplace will work the whole issue through. If we sit back and say that we must maintain a moratorium on mortgages forever and ever, we delay facing the realities of the time. Realities of the time not faced today must be faced tomorrow. When we put a moratorium 19 months ago on FCC mortgages, people were facing foreclosures. Those people are still in difficulty, and to that extent it is time that they perhaps looked at and reorganized their affairs and lifestyle. If it means that some people who have borrowed more than they should must find another occupation or be something other than farmers, sometimes that is the way it has to be. There are other people with experience who want to become involved in farming.

I notice you signalling, Mr. Speaker, but let me indicate briefly that I have been involved in financing for a long time. In my years as a lawyer I only issued a writ of foreclosure on three occasions. However, I was involved in repossessions to settle mortgages on houses, farms, and businesses. The best thing we can do for someone is to say: "You are not going to make it. Let's settle it so you can start a new life, have new prosperity, and have the debt taken off your back". To say that to do some foreclosing or do some pressing on debts which cannot be handled is not to understand the reality of financing.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to participate in the debate and to speak in favour of the emergency motion brought forward by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). Both that Hon. Member and the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) are agricultural spokespersons and farmers themselves. They have been out there on the Prairies in western Canada with their ear to the ground.

They and most farmers in the country would be somewhat astonished at the chilling remarks just made by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who really sort of summed it up by saying: "Let the market take its toll". The Hon. Member for Mississauga South did not deal with the cash flow issues facing farmers in western Canada. I intend to do that because farmers who are listening and watching in this debate know the agony among themselves as primary producers of what is really going on out there in the west. They trust that the emergency action taken by the New Democratic Party will in some way alert the Government to what they have been saying to us as we travelled throughout western Canada. Many Members, particularly from the government side, who have spoken in this debate talked about their roots in agriculture. The roots in my family go back over 300 years when my forefathers arrived in the Maritimes from Ireland as spud farmers. There are relatives of mine in almost every province and territory in Canada who are involved in agriculture in some way or another.

In my constituency in northwest British Columbia there is a deep and long-standing interest in what happens, not just in agriculture, but certainly in terms of grain. We have one of the most modern, state of the art grain terminals in the world at Prince Rupert. With the upgrading of the CN line, people from Smithers to Prince Rupert are abundantly aware of the importance of the grain trade to our constituency and to farmers right across the Prairies. We see those grain cars coming through every day on their way down to Prince Rupert to service not only the Pacific Rim but other markets of the world.

Within my constituency as well there are hundreds of farmers. Most of them are involved in dairy and beef. There is some limited grain production, but principally in northwest British Columbia they are involved in various mixed operations.

I should like to spend a moment referring to the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who spoke in the debate a couple of hours ago. He urged the media to make this issue a front page one from coast to coast in the newspapers and on the radio. Then we heard the remarks of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South who suggested that he was surprised the issue was even brought before the House. We also heard the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Gustafson), who is from the Prairies himself, saying yesterday as the debate began that there was no reason for it. Earlier this morning the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) said that it would be lunacy for any further assistance to be provided to the farmers in the West.

Who is really speaking for the Government? Why does the Prime Minister say that this should be a major number one issue, not just in western Canada but right across the country, upon which the media should be focusing and talking about to farmers, banks, machinery producers, and everyone else? That is what the Prime Minister said, but the majority of other Conservatives who have spoken have said that we should let the market take its toll, let the farmers go down, take away the moratorium, and not provide any floor price in terms of grain for the coming year.

One has to wonder who is really speaking for the Government. Because of the announcement in terms of the lifting of the moratorium—and we saw a 20 per cent price reduction last year—we will see a further 18 per cent drop for the 1987-88 crop year. One thing we know is that the Cabinet in the present leaderless Government has overridden the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). It certainly did not sound like the view they hold as those who are in most direct contact with Canadian farmers.

The Prime Minister now plans to make a grand tour of western Canada for three days to find out what is really going on there. I am sure that as a result of the emergency debate brought forward by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert there will be farmers at every place he touches down, unless he just touches down briefly for quick Conservative meetings where people are rallied in and rallied out and there is no opportunity for western farmers to have their views heard. I am sure western farmers will try to tell the Prime Minister what they think about what his Party has been saying, that the emergency debate is unnecessary, unwarranted, and so on.

We in the New Democratic Party are calling for a number of things. At the very least, we are calling for an immediate government commitment to provide Canadian grain farmers with the guarantee that total grain receipts for crops being planted in the 1987-88 crop year will equal those of the 1986-87 crop year. That will cost between $1.5 billion and $2 billion.

We heard the Hon. Member for Mississauga South crowing about the lucrative area of agri-business in which he is involved. He said that he was surprised the issue was being raised and that we should let the market take its toll. There are farm families sitting out there in communities—men, women, children, grandparents, aunts, uncles, and other relatives—who are capable of calculating with the greatest of care.

We in this House have a responsibility to dispel the myth that is held in many of the urban areas of Canada, on Bay Street and among certain financial groups, that every farmer in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia has a huge farm, a huge bank account, a Winnebago, goes golfing for six months in Florida and keeps his feet up the rest of the year just planting a quick crop in the spring and harvesting it in the fall. That is hardly what actually goes on on the farm. Farmers take great care with everything, Mr. Speaker. At this crucial time they determine what to plant, how much to plant, whether or not to fertilize once or twice, what kind of farm improvements to make, whether to do some fencing somewhere, whether to move some of the grain sheds, what kinds of livestock to have, what kind of machinery could be bought, leased or borrowed.

All of these crucial questions are honed with a sharp pencil day after day in trying to figure out where a few pennies can be saved. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South for the Government says some producers can produce corn on a piece of land for $90 a tonne whereas someone on a farm nearby cannot make money unless he is getting $130 a tonne. We all know that, Mr. Speaker. We are talking about the broad issue of what is happening to the farming community in western Canada. We all know that. Members in this House were not all born yesterday. We have seen the Government increase taxes, increase service fees, increase freight rates, bring in Bills C-18 and C-19 which will see the dismemberment of all kinds of branch lines and add a whole new layering of costs to all kinds of prairie producers.

There are some things the Government has been doing that have been worth while. I am never one in this House not to point out the good things the Government has been doing as well as pointing out what it should be doing and should be addressing itself to.

This Government is working hard on the international front to bring peace to the world grain markets. We know what is happening concerning the subsidization in the European Economic Community to its farmers, and then the rash move by the Republican Government in the United States to bring in the U.S. Farm Bill which provides, in some cases, to some buyers, one bushel free for every three they buy. In some cases it is even more lucrative than that. We know what the impact is on our Canadian farmers.

The sheer illogic of what government Members have been saying has to be pointed out in relation to that. They say, "Now we cannot continue the moratorium. It is creating a credit crisis and so on. Let the market take its toll". This is the same Government that 18 months ago brought it in. Let us take a look at the evidence given by the Farm Credit Corporation on March 27 before this House. With regard to farms with over $20,000 in sales, 8 per cent of those farmers are involved, so of the 171,000, there are 13,680 farmers involved, and 23 per cent of Canadian farmers have major cash flow problems, that is 39,330, for a total of over 53,000 farms in western Canada facing economic difficulties.

The same evidence comes from the Farm Credit Corporation. Six thousand of their borrowers are more than two years in arrears. Twenty per cent are in arrears at some level, 673 farmers were near the foreclosure level 18 months ago when this Conservative Government brought in the moratorium. The situation is worse and it comes up with a totally wrong-headed argument that now all of a sudden a moratorium should not be kept in place. The Government says it will be there forever and ever. What an interesting time it is to pull the plug on the moratorium right at the time when farmers are heading on to their farms to seed and consider what kinds of crops they will be putting into the ground!

We have the statistical information before us, but let us not just think of them as statistics as the government Members seem to want to talk about western farmers. They are men and women out there. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), pointed out the stress level that is found in the agricultural community, not just in the grain sector but in the beef sector, the dairy sector and the fruit sector. Throughout the agricultural sector in this country we are finding stress levels that are being studied by physicians far above those that you find in supposedly high stress occupations. As my colleague pointed out, an RCMP officer three days after being involved in an incident involving a shooting has only the same levels of stress that the average Canadian farmer experiences every day. For the Government to put such chilling remarks onto the record saying that this debate should not be going on, it is not an emergency, let the market-place take its toll, is sheer hypocrisy. It is ludicrous and the Government's arguments in this debate so far have been totally illogical.

The Government should not lift the moratorium until it announces a deficiency program for the upcoming crop year and it addresses the broad question of farm debt, which is about $25 billion across Canada, much of which is still held at the high interest rates caused by the former Government, a point made by Members on the other side.

Government Members are always asking, "Where are you going to get the money if you need a couple of billion dollars to help the farmers now so you can put a floor back in the system and maintain some kind of reasonable and reliable financing for those farms?" Let us think back to the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) when the Little Egypt Bump came along for the Reichmann brothers in the Gulf deal. He said, "This is terrible". But once the loophole is closed it is closed, but after the cattle have left the barn. They get the billion dollars.

Let us look somewhere else, Mr. Speaker. Let us look at big corporations. There are over $30 billion in back taxes. Why don't we get the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) to collect some of the money owing from big corporations, particularly those which are capable of paying readily and easily right now rather than using their capital to gobble up other smaller companies which are proliferating from one side of Canada to the other? Why not collect some of that back revenue?

An interesting point was made at a convention I attended recently in Vancouver, perhaps one on which a lot of Canadians have not reflected. One gas station attendant working in Red Deer pumping gas pays more tax than any one of the major oil companies in Canada. That is a travesty, Mr. Speaker. Any single farmer in Canada pays more taxes than any of the large banks or any of the large oil companies. One bank teller in Regina pays more tax than any of the banks, including the bank that he or she might be working in. There is money out there that can be brought in to address problems which this House must respond to when emergency situations arise.

We are in a world that was crisis-ridden in terms of the availability of protein in particular, but in terms of grain we have to think about what is going on and think about what the Government is saying. The Prime Minister says, "This is a long-term problem. We have to think about currency decisions made in Punta del Este. We have to think about all these international issues". Of course we do, Mr. Speaker. That is why we were elected here and that is why we have a Government. What the Government is failing to address logically in terms of cabinet decisions is what are the effects in Canada of not addressing the ability of the farmers to remain solvent, not addressing the need for farmers to have a floor price whereby they can have reliable information on cash flow so they will know how much fertilizer they can buy, what they can spend on fuel, what they can spend on clothing for their kids, what they can spend on fencing, what they can spend on everything else on their farm. Instead, they are left in a crisis situation.

Let us look at what the farm leaders are saying. Let us have a look at what Wayne Easter, President of the National Farmers Union had to say yesterday. The Prime Minister says that this should be the major issue in Canada, front page, everywhere, a major issue on radio and television. All of his back-benchers says no, no, no. That is not the case. This is not a big issue. Let the market operate freely. But with what does the Government start this session after Easter? A Bill on hanging. The Government did not start this session dealing with the crisis in agriculture. It started with announcements saying that the moratorium has ended. It is not going to do anything about setting a floor price. As a matter of fact, the Government is going to let it drop another 18 per cent after a 20 per cent drop last year. Here is what the National Farmers Union had to say yesterday as reported in The Globe and Mail:

> I just can't understand why he would announce it now, said Wayne Easter, President of the National Farmers Union.
> "Normally farmers feel a sense of optimism at this time of year", he said. But this tears the heart out of thousands of farmers".
> Mr. Easter noted that the Canadian farm economy has deteriorated steadily since the moratorium was established in 1985.
> "I think it's ironic that they are making this announcement on the same day as Parliament opens its debate on capital punishment," Mr. Easter said.
> "To lose your farm is the same as capital punishment. When they lose their land, farmers feel that the life has gone out of them."
> "Garfield Stevenson, President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, said the termination of the moratorium will cause a further decline in the market value of farmland.
> "It's completely irresponsible and just not acceptable," Mr. Stevenson said.
> "I thought the Minister had more on the ball than this".

Another spokesperson for farmers, Jack Penner, President of Manitoba-based Keystone Agricultural Producers, said that the termination of the Farm Credit Corporation moratorium will make it more difficult for farmers to get loans from banks and other lenders.

Let us think about what some of the Conservative Members have been saying. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has said that one of the factors involved when farmers are getting credit is the moratorium that is in place. Where do government Members get this airy-fairy idea that everything is just fine in western Canada? Where do they get the idea that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) can come in here and blow hot air about Punta del Este and all of these other matters for 35 minutes without dealing with the reality of what is taking place on the farms? When there is that stress level, that cash flow problem and those family farms in trouble, the Government has to act. To say it will wait a year or two and then see what kind of consolidation of land base there will be is not good enough.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) says that this is great because, as existing farmers are moved off the land, opportunities will open up for young farmers. What hypocrisy. Anyone who has read any of the history of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or British Columbia knows that the overwhelming majority of farms are intergenerational. When generations of farmers are driven off the land, we cannot expect someone to pop freshly on the scene to buy a couple of sections of land and suddenly get it going as a major grain concern.

Let me touch on a few of the things the Government has done that have been important, but have not fully addressed the issues before us today. The Government has provided assistance to the farm sector, but it is now saying it will do so no longer. It provided assistance during the Saskatchewan election because the Prime Minister was awakened from his sleep, next to his Gucci shoe parlour, at five o'clock in the morning by Grant Devine saying that he would lose the election, he needed some money. The Prime Minister acted quickly then and made a big announcement of $1 billion.

The crisis is exactly the same now. We are facing major losses of markets to the United States because of the crippling effects of the U.S. Farm Bill and what is happening in the European Economic Community. To simply say that we will let as many farms sink as required over the next couple of years and then come forward with help is hypocrisy. The action the Government took to bring in the moratorium absolutely requires it to maintain the moratorium. The Government that gave $1 billion last year under exactly the same circumstances should give the same kind of money and more to the farming community now.

The Government has consulted farm organizations but it clearly has not listened. It has not heard what farmers have been saying. Simply put, what the Government has done to date has helped a little, and it is doing a little on the international front, but the arguments that have been made in this debate over the last 16 hours demonstrate to me and to every farmer in Canada that it is time to throw the bums out. Conservatives are not representing the farm community. Farmers will wake up and realize it the next time an election is called, and I hope that will be very soon.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate my colleague and friend from British Columbia who is relieving his frustrations through this primal scream therapy.

Mr. Robinson: It's the farmers' frustrations we are worried about.

Mr. Oberle: All of us are frustrated. I cannot say that I derive any great pleasure or satisfaction from having to rise in the House today to speak on this critical issue. The debate has been going on all night. That points out just how critical we all believe this matter to be. For a moment, however, I thought I was in the wrong place. As I was walking through the Chamber, I saw no one in the benches of the Official Opposition. There is still no one there. Oh, I am sorry, someone is there now.

Of course, it has been a long debate. All of us addressed ourselves to the issues. It is not a simple matter. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I represent an area in British Columbia—

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, about the latest comments concerning the attendance of opposition Members, I would point out to the Chair that there are barely five Conservatives in the House—and there are more than 200 of them all told—whereas we have 10-odd opposition Members.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. That is not a point of order. However, as Hon. Members know, we have been debating this particular motion all night and we are continuing to do so. We have been debating it since eight o'clock last evening. Hon. Members are walking in and out of the House at this stage of the debate. I would not want anyone to reflect on who is here and who is not. There are Hon. Members behind the curtains and in the lobbies. I know they are all here ready and waiting to debate the matter.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate those remarks. Throughout the night there has been on both sides some abuse of the rules regarding reflecting on the presence or absence of Members of Parliament. I know that quite a few members of my caucus are in the lobby and I understand that there are government Members in the government lobby. We appreciate that Members cannot sit here for 24 hours. We also appreciate that some Hon. Members have phone calls to make; we also understand your ruling and we will follow it very assiduously.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, if it was perceived that it was my intention to cast any aspersions on members of the Opposition, that was not my intention. Indeed, I said that I myself was out of the House to attend to some urgent business in my office. I merely expressed my fear that I may have missed the debate. Obviously other Hon. Members feel the same pressures after a debate of this length.

I want to point out that I represent an area which is heavily dependent on agriculture for its economy; that is the Peace River country of British Columbia. That area has been a very productive wheat and forage-crops-producing sector, but it is an area that is perhaps suffering more than other prairie regions because it is the newest such area. Some of the area is still being developed. That it has not been settled for very long points to the fact that there is a heavier per capita debt load in the area. Of course, farm financing is the root of the crisis we are debating today.

In the 15 years that I have been here, I have experienced nothing that has caused me more anxiety and pain than this situation. I share with my constituents, my friends and my neighbours the suffering that has resulted from this serious problem.

I deal with people who have inherited farms which have been developed over three generations. Many of these farms were paid off at one point and were debt-free. Often, young farmers who had gone to school came home and encouraged their fathers to get into partnership with them, buy equipment and develop the farms in the modern way. These people then would go to the bank or the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow some money, but they would find after a few years that the roof had collapsed and the land had eroded beneath their new machinery. They would then have to walk away from what their grandfathers had pursued as their first dreams, from a business that had sustained families for a long period of time.

Sir, you cannot explain in words what goes through the minds of these people as they have to make these decisions. All of us deeply sympathize with them. The question is, what can you do about it? What can a Government by itself do about this? In order to answer these questions one has to look at the costs. One has to first understand that agriculture in Canada is an export industry. We are not just feeding our own population. If we were, we would have to decrease our farm output in a major way. We do not have a population base to sustain the farm structure we have in place. Therefore, we are left heavily dependent on foreign trade.

World markets have undergone a critical adjustment in this century. I looked at some statistics the other day and found that at the turn of the century in North America 46 per cent of the people were engaged in the production of food. Today it is less than 4 per cent. Farmers have become more efficient. Research and development has produced better, healthier and faster growing crops. We have improved our market share. We have built on the strength that we have in Canada through improved species to put our land into production and help feed a hungry world.

However, we have become too dependent on world markets and there is nothing we can do about it. We are now in a situation where we are very much dependent on price trends, transportation facilities, climatic conditions, and other similar factors. We are perhaps more dependent than any other country on the policies of other countries and groups of nations who have chosen to pool their agricultural policies to become more efficient and better satisfy their own needs.

What has brought on this present crisis is an agricultural trade war between the European Economic Community and the United States. In attempting to find a long-term solution, as I see it, we should look at what the EEC has done. Certainly it is the cause of the situation we are in right now. Agriculture is perhaps the biggest factor in keeping the EEC together and developing in the way it has in the post-war period. What the EEC leaders said many years ago, as the community came together, is that a farmer ought to be able to earn as much in return on his investment and labour as anyone in any other industry.

There are of course countries that joined the EEC who are as dependent on agriculture as are we in Canada. It would not have been fair if the average income of their citizens was something less than that of the highly industrialized countries like Germany and Austria. So the EEC said it would have to develop a program that would assure the farm-oriented countries an income comparable to that of the industrialized countries.

They immediately discovered that if you passed along the cost of securing such an income for the farmer to the consumers of the EEC, which would be the obvious thing to do, food prices would have to triple. Those prices were already high in Europe. Consumers were already paying in excess of 40 per cent of their disposable income for food. Therefore it was quite obvious that that could not take place. They could not permit the farmer or the farm dependent countries to increase prices to the consumer. There had to be some kind of subsidy.

The conclusion they came to was very simple. Instead of raising food prices to the point where half the population could not afford to eat, they would have to subsidize the farmer to continue producing cheap food and pass the cost through to the rest of society. They then taxed other industries to support the farm economy.

So far so good. If that were the basis on which the Europeans had developed their farm policies, that would have been fine. However, they should have as well brought in some production limitations and supply management. They did not. Because of the farmer's new-found wealth, production went up to the point where they are now heavy competitors in world markets. They compete with Australia, the U.S., the Argentine and Canada in the production of cereal grains. Had they put some limits on their production it would have perhaps worked, but they did not and now they have a serious problem. The EEC finds it very difficult to sustain this kind of policy.

In addition, they have created an even greater problem for Canada, the U.S. and other countries. The U.S., with its 240 million consumers, could afford to take a very aggressive stance against these EEC policies and subsidize their farmers until they were once again competitive. However, there just is not enough money in our treasury for us to compete with those kinds of measures. We are being ground between the U.S. and Europe as a result. We are sitting between those two millstones and desperately looking for ways to bring some sense to the whole situation.

What are the solutions? First, you have to break them down into the long and short terms. We hear the NDP lamenting the fact that we should be spending another $2.5 billion subsidizing our farmers. We should announce deficiency payments for the next crop year so we create some stability. Yesterday they told us we should borrow $5 billion to buy Dome Petroleum to keep it in Canada.

As I hear these things I ask myself where is the money going to come from? What difference does it really make whether a foreign company owns part of our oil patch or a foreign banker owns the whole country? There is no money tree sitting outside this place. You have to borrow the money, you cannot create it. We are being pushed more and more abroad and offshore in our borrowing. So I ask the question, how can you responsibly mortgage the future of our children by going abroad to foreign bankers and borrowing the money to sustain these programs?

If the farmers need an indication of what they might expect from this Government let them examine the record of the last two years. What have we done? We have tripled the farm support systems that are in place. We are spending in this crop year over $3 billion, which is three times more than the previous Government spent in one year. Let us look at some of those programs. We moved very aggressively to keep the banks honest and to improve the services of the Farm Credit Corporation. We have made deficiency payments of $1 billion for last year's crop. That was not intended to do anything other than permit the farmer to put his crop in the ground this year. Then we will see what happens as we go along. We will see where we are in the fall. We will see if our efforts in the international arena, in GATT, our discussions with the industrial countries, discussions which we introduced, produce any results.

If farmers want an indication of what they might expect at the end of the next crop year they can examine our record. We shall not sit here and preside over the demise of the family farm, nor shall we preside over the demise of the farm economy, because it is part of our culture, part of Canada, part of our history. We shall ensure that it remains that and that farmers will get a fair shake.

However, it is not easy. There are no easy solutions. Perhaps we ought to look, in a global sense, at what the Europeans have done. Perhaps we ought to remind countries like Japan and some of the Asian industrial countries that they, too, have a responsibility to feed the world. They cannot rely on only the food-producing countries to do that and starve in the process. Perhaps we ought to develop a global scheme similar to that which the European Community has within its own borders. We are working toward that. We have introduced that debate in the national forum.

We have made a deficiency payment of $1 billion. There will be a payment made under the stabilization fund, which all comes from the federal Government. There is nothing left in the fund. There have been transportation subsidies, feed grain assistance, and crop insurance. There are freight rate subsidies and interest subsidies. We have also introduced a Farm Debt Review Board.

When the moratorium was put in place we said that it would stay in place until such time as there were checks and balances and another program in place. We have put another program in place and we are told it is working well. In 80 per cent of the cases which are examined a solution is found which is good for the bank, good for the farmer, and fair to the taxpayer.

We are not going to foreclose on 6,000 farms tomorrow morning. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has clearly stated what the policy of the Farm Credit Corporation will be. We have put in place programs which will permit the farmer, when all is said and done, to make the transition to another way of life.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, before the Conservative Government came into power a farmer who lost his farm was not entitled to unemployment insurance or any of the benefits to which every other citizen is entitled. He walked away from the farm. He did not even have his house because that was part of the land on which the bank foreclosed. He walked into the city and stood in the soup line without a place to sleep. That has all changed. Adjustment programs have been put in place for the most extreme cases.

There must be more because the adjustments and prices which we are experiencing are not just temporary. The long-term outlook is not that good. We must develop long-term solutions and find different uses for our grain. In Dawson Creek we are building an ethanol plant, with the help of the federal Government. The province has been generous in helping us promote this concept. When it is in full operation it could potentially use all the grain produced on the B.C. side of the Peace River country. It will be converted to ethanol and, hopefully, be used in motor fuels. That is only one solution to which we could perhaps look in the future.

This is not a simple matter. It is a very serious crisis. All of us on all sides of the House recognize this crisis and we welcome the support of the Official Opposition and the NDP in helping to find a solution. There is no doubt in my mind, Sir, that in the short term we will have to find additional resources through the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, and others, to stave off the most serious of the impacts which we are experiencing. However, in the long term Canada has committed itself to taking the lead, to bringing together the producing countries and discussing this serious global crisis with the other industrial countries. We have introduced this debate in the international community and shall pursue it with great vigour.

As the NDP, in particular, points out, we must send out a signal indicating where our farmers will be at the end of the next crop year and what will happen to the crop they will harvest this fall. I cannot predict that at this point. If they need an indication they should review what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in many meetings with farmers before he travelled to Japan to discuss this matter with the seven industrialized countries. They should review the speech which the Prime Minister made early this morning in the House. They should judge us by our performance over the last two years.

They will find that we will be their friend rather than their competitor. We will ensure that Canada remains a strong producer of agricultural products, that we will continue to play a vital role in maintaining a vibrant farm industry, and that we will continue to preserve the family farm which is so much a part of our culture and history.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for allowing me to take part in this important debate which concerns a historic crisis affecting our farming industry, perhaps especially in Western Canada.

The attitude of the government Members in this important debate can be summarized quite simply. Most of them claimed to know all about agriculture. They tried to prove it in various ways. Some said that they had lived on a farm for many years. Others told us that they knew about agriculture because they were married to someone from the farming community. They have quoted all kinds of facts to explain that they know all about agricultural issues. They have also told us that they know all about farming because of their large constituency in western Canada. It is indeed a fact that there are many Conservative Members from western Canada.

This automatically tells us what the most important agricultural issue is in the eyes of the government Members.

First, they told us that they knew all about farming, and then they said that they would explain what they have done for farmers. They listed a whole series of initiatives which they judge useful enough and relevant enough to give farmers hope for the future and security. We have been told time and again that this Government is spending one billion dollars to alleviate the dramatic problems of agriculture, especially in western Canada. In spite of the seriousness of the situation, farmers have been told: Do not worry, we shall take care of the problems; the past is a guarantee of the future; we shall be there to help you.

However, Mr. Speaker, in view of the seriousness of the problem facing these people, it is obvious that we need more than vague commitments. We need clear statements, firm commitments and official guarantees. We are now going through a crucial period in terms of our strategy.

The producers need to know in advance what the future holds for them, and they need to know exactly what the commitments of the Government will be. However, the Government has systematically refused to announce its plans and to give any indication that would enable the producers to face a very uncertain future.

It is as if a worker who needs his car to earn his living were to be told: We have repaired your shock absorbers, repainted your car and fixed your rearview mirrors, but we cannot do anything for you if there was a major problem, with the motor, for instance. This is what the producers need, Mr. Speaker, a commitment that the Government will do something about the sources of the problems facing this essential industry.

Faced with that, I conclude that if one is optimistic, one may believe or feel that one might be entitled to another billion dollars, for instance. But it is my view that in any serious analysis, in any intelligent reflection, producers have every reason to be extremely concerned, and for a number of reasons. I listened a few moments ago to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) when he said: Listen, the situation is serious, I agree, the problem is dramatic, I acknowledge that, but we must be realistic, the market will have to straighten that up, market forces will have to apply. So what need have I to be more explicit? What need have I to give further details—all this means that those who are having difficulties, those who have accumulated significant amounts of debt will be wiped out by market forces, and they will have—I am using his own terms—to change trades, they will have to redeploy, change direction.

There are thousands of farm producers who right now have enjoyed a breathing space because of the moratorium, who sincerely believed remedial action would be taken, they could relax, difficulties could be met, especially financial difficulties. We have that Member here, who has been in this House for a number of years, who supposedly is well placed to know the concerns and the needs, and this is what he has to say: market forces will have to decide; farming is no exception to rule, we must face up to the fact that the weak will go belly up, to the detriment of bigger ones. These are the facts, and that kind of statement in my view deeply concerned western farmers.

We have another farmer, a Quebec Member this time, the former Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) who stated a few months ago: Farm producers in the near future will have to stop being welfare bums. That statement made a lot of noise, because in fact agriculture is a strategic industry in our economy, and it is an industry that had, has and will have to be supported by the Government, for all kinds of reasons, the two major ones being that it is an industry where participants do not have the ability to make fully informed decisions, the required information including two factors, the first of which of course is wheather conditions, the necessity to abide by nature. This in itself is something of basic importance, because farm producers do not have the ability other businessmen have to take enlightened and intelligent decisions based on all the facts. Producers do not have the capacity nor the possibility to predict what Nature holds for them. This is the first aspect.

The second aspect, Mr. Speaker, is the issue of international markets. At present, international markets are all-powerful, deregulating or, to be more accurate, destabilizing prices so that a country such as Canada has to perform in a very difficult and painful environment. For that reason also, Mr. Speaker, producers cannot take enlightened decisions and plan ahead as businessmen do. They cannot go and see their banker and tell him: "Sir, I cannot meet my commitments. On the other hand, I anticipate a fine season and good revenues." This is precisely what a businessman can do. Thanks to some studies which can be made, he can convince the banker or the bank manager to wait, to make him understand what basically makes sense. The producer cannot do so, because as I mentioned it, he cannot control nature, not to mention international markets. Such being the facts, the banker and the financier is not an ally of the producer but his enemy, because with his conservative mind, the banker will expect the worst. And the worst, given what happened during the past few years, is quite dramatic. And as a result, several farms and facilities are now in very difficult situation.

Throughout that debate, we heard moving testimonies of farmers, of families of producers who are really desperate as there is a very strong possibility that they might lose in the very short term what it had taken them 25, 30, 40 years, and even in some cases, several generations to build.

In view of the attitude of this Government, Mr. Speaker, I think that farmers have every reason to be concerned, to shout aggressively and to demand concrete measures. An in my opinion, the Canadian Government must on the one hand take quick action as I believe it is essential to preserve that part of the market which we could only secure through several generations of work. On the other hand, I also think it is important to fight aggressively, on the international markets of course, while hoping that a relative harmony may be restored at some point. I believe there is a basic need to support producers for reasons which in my opinion are self-evident.

I would be willing to accept a statement like that of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who said: "Market forces should be allowed to work, and those who cannot compete should get out of the business, consider selling their farm and learn another occupation or relocate themselves"; I would be willing to accept that kind of theory if we were talking on an industrial level, if we were dealing with small and medium businesses. However, let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, that it is an absolute shame to adopt and spread such a philosophy with respect to the agricultural community. We should understand that the agricultural industry is what enables us to feed our society, what provides us with the most basic commodities, those commodities which are essential to the welfare of society. Just on that account, and just to that end, I believe the Government should take an exceptional, distinctive and specific stand with respect to the agri-food sector. I think it is not decent or acceptable to view the agricultural industry as an ordinary economic activity on the same level as any other economic sector. In this respect, and for those reasons, the Government should have a reassuring, comforting attitude, an attitude which would enable producers, in particular western producers who are faced with a tremendous crisis, to look to the future with a maximum of safeguards. The producers who are now having problems should be able to go to their banker and say: Here are the statements of two senior Ministers of the Conservative Government who have made a firm commitment that, if the international problems are not resolved, they will make whatever decisions are necessary to help us. As I have already said, the Government should urgently announce its intentions so that the producers who are in the most difficult position will not make any hasty decisions in the belief that they cannot get what they need, and systematically abandon their farms.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the very vague and confusing commitments made by the Government, I am trying to put myself in the shoes of someone who is affected by the crisis and who wonders: Should I seed, and since the moratorium has now been lifted, should I take the trouble to go to banker and try to get an individual moratorium or to come to some sort of an agreement with him? Should I take all these steps? I have to ask myself these questions. First, it seems that one way to look at the problem is to say that the past is a guarantee of the future. This is a very common attitude which is admittedly acceptable from many aspects. However, if we apply this principle to the present problem, the western producer must still ask himself whether it is worth it to do these things.

Objectively, I believe that he should consider the statement of the Hon. Member for Mississauga who very clearly and honestly said that we have to get rid of the weak and that the market forces must be allowed to take their toll. There have been all sorts of statements to this effect, and we also have to look at the record of this Government after two and a half years.

As far as their achievements are concerned, government Members will naturally tell us, with the figures to support their claim, that they have made so many promises and kept so many of them. As you know, Mr. Speaker, most of these promises were about minor issues. However, if we examine the basic problems of agriculture in the light of Government achievements, we naturally have to look at Canagrex. What has happened to Canagrex? It has gone down the tubes. What was its main purpose? To use the phrase we have heard in all the speeches, the purpose of Canagrex was to develop and identify external markets, which is a basic problem for Canadian agriculture. What has happened to Canagrex? It has simply been done away with.

When Canadian producers analyze what has happened, they must also consider the position taken by this Government with our American neighbours on the infamous 15 per cent tax on lumber.

As my allotted time is coming to an end, Mr. Speaker, I shall try to quicken the pace as I make my last few points.

We have also seen this Government increase inspection costs in what can only be described as a cruel and savage manner. The Government decided, just like that, to ensure that producers will pay for inspection costs: some $30 million were taken away from our producers' ability to pay, to the detriment of course of the quality of our products which always has been our international hallmark. We had a corporation for marketing, and we had good quality. The corporation was dismantled, then inspection costs were increased by $35 million.

Everyone is also aware, since it is in the news, of this Government's disquieting approach to the important matter of free trade. Everybody is concerned, nobody knows for sure what is the right banner. This is a picture admittedly that is somewhat summary. But, on the other hand, we have this Government's sales attitude, a Government that helps the banks that do not have to put up with weather, that have control over shocks, that can plan in the light of financial statements, but that lose $1 billion because of very bad decisions. Very rapidly, on its own initiative, the Government decides to pay $1 billion to a few hundred people. Let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, that in the current circumstances that $1 billion would be most useful.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that in the absence of strong actions, in the absence of clear measures, in the absence of self-evident measures, farm producers and especially western producers—although their concern is shared by Quebec producers—are extremely worried, and I think that as politicians, we should also be most worried in the face of such inaction, such totally irresponsible attitude on the part of this Government.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to address the subject before the House today. I spent over two years acquiring a wealth of experience in the agricultural industry, and I had the privilege of being raised on a family farm that has been in the same family for over 300 years. I am therefore in a position to appreciate the constraints that have been placed on the agricultural sector over the years.

The Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), who quoted me earlier, and unfortunately I will have to respond from the television screen, referred to an engine breakdown in Canada's agriculture. My father used to tell me, and I came to realize this myself, that the principle driving force behind our agriculture is often the heart and soul of the farmer. And if anything has been lacking for 20 years in this Chamber and in our Governments, it was that very heart and soul. The previous Government which ran the country for twenty years and allowed interest rates to rise above 20 per cent certainly did not have much soul. They were quick to forget it ever happened.

When the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe quoted me earlier on the subject of farm producers who do not want to go on welfare, I was, as so often, quoted out of context, and if the Hon. Member had taken the trouble to make enquiries and meet with farm producers . . . I have 1,300 in my own riding, and I'm certainly not ashamed of that. In fact, I am very proud of the farmers in my riding, Mr. Speaker. I met them, and I spoke and still speak for farm producers who want to make a decent living in Canada and be treated as first-class, not second-class citizens, and that has always been my message, in everything I have said and written. I think the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe should check his sources. These are just a lot of rumours which he took at face value, without checking any further.

Mr. Speaker, never has any Government done as much for Canadian agriculture as this one, and that has been crystal-clear ever since we came to power. When we came to power, Mr. Speaker, the previous Liberal Government had practically broken off every dialogue with the industry, and we know that Canada has 750 agencies involved in the agricultural sector.

Under the previous Government, however, and we remember its arrogance, there was practically no discussion or consultation with the agricultural industry. In fact, that Government went on tolerating a system that literally gouged our farmers with interest rates as high as 20 per cent and even 22 per cent and 24 per cent. Our Government restored the country's economy. It was not just a matter of dealing with agriculture but of considering the economy in general in this country. Our Government restored the economy by dealing with fundamentals, with factors that have a major impact on the economy such as the inflation rate, which was brought back to manageable levels, and also and especially interest rates. How can they say we were insensitive, when today interest rates are down to around 10 per cent?

Mr. Speaker, when I was travelling through my great constituency of Bellechasse during the election campaign, interest rates were the main issue raised by farm producers. In that respect, Mr. Speaker, we have fulfilled our mission and we will continue to monitor the situation very closely. How many millions and billions of dollars can this represent? A drop from 20 per cent to 10 per cent in interest rates on billions in mortgages and various kinds of loans made to Canadian agricultural producers. We are talking about billions of dollars, Mr. Speaker, and it was through the measures we took that interest rates were brought down to levels which agricultural producers could live with. The previous Liberal Government had never been unduly concerned about such issues.

For over two years, Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege—I repeat, privilege—to act as Parliamentary Secretary to both Ministers, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). The other privilege I had, Mr. Speaker, was to work for my peers and colleagues as chairman of our Party's agricultural caucus. As a matter of fact, our Party's agricultural caucus alone has more Members than the whole Opposition put together. Never before we took office had a Government spent so much time and energy looking after agricultural interests. The reason is simple: For the first time we had a truly national Government representing all regions of the country, whereas the previous Liberal Government spoke up for central Canada, Ontario and Quebec, completely ignoring the other regions of Canada. It was never in a position to listen to a group of people who, gathered around a table, did represent all regions of Canada. We set things straight. We restored the delicate balance, Mr. Speaker. We are aware of that. Not to mention our many meetings with the leaders of the agricultural community over the past two and a half years. To become familiar with these questions our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself went out to see the leaders of the farm community both at their annual meetings and here on Parliament Hill. Both the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board as well as our caucus held several meetings with Canadian agricultural leaders to find out just what their problems were and to gain first-hand knowledge of the agricultural situation in Canada.

There is no ready-made solution. Perhaps it was easier in those days when none of the Liberal Members could represent certain regions of the country. The Government could go about its business with its customary arrogance, totally disregarding these regions. But that is not what we did. We would much rather discuss and consult these people right across Canada with a view to finding solutions which did not come easily but which are already giving obvious results. Besides, the national strategy put forward during the meeting of First Ministers who had mandated the Agriculture Minister to develop an agricultural strategy has been fruitful and an unprecedented consensus has already been achieved about that national strategy. Not a word has been said about this today. They tend to forget it. The Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) would rather dream of statements that go back a few years without even checking his sources.

Perhaps we could, Mr. Speaker, if you would let me, although many of my colleagues have already quoted some figures that speak for themselves about the plight of farmers in Canada... Mr. Speaker, for the past couple of years, $6 billion have been injected in the farming industry through more than 400 separate initiatives in every agricultural sector. That is a lot of money, Mr. Speaker. That is a lot of money and it shows that we have come seriously to grips with the problems faced by the farming community. More than 400 separate initiatives have been taken in the agricultural sector. What is the Liberal record? Let us go back 20 years in the past. Nothing was done.

Mr. Speaker, for the past two and a half years, our Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board has continuously met with wheat producers and their representatives both here and throughout the world, in spite of the inherent problems of that sector. If you set aside any partisanship in this regard, everybody is aware that international trade of agricultural products is a world-wide problem. We are dealing with surpluses. We are faced with countries like Europe and the United States that subsidize heavily the farming industry. Our Prime Minister and our responsible Ministers have already "rung the bell" about that issue and ensured that it is one of the major concerns during meetings between farmers' representatives and Ministers and leaders of the most industrialized countries.

Also we have made sure—and the Liberals never did it in the past—that for the first time, agriculture would be one of the main items on the agenda of economic discussions and especially during the new round of negotiation of the GATT agreements. That is what we have to do, Mr. Speaker. As a priority we must get all parties to sit around the same table. That is exactly what the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board has done on several occasions. He is constantly travelling the world to try and maintain our share of the markets and we have succeeded repeatedly with several countries, the USSR in particular not so long ago. We are currently negotiating with China and Brazil. Everywhere in the world we are holding on to our share of the market. That was our duty and we defended with the utmost energy our Canadian wheat producers. I have not mentioned yet the money we invested during the last two and a half years.

Let us now talk about farm financing. One of the points I raised during my campaign—another one was interest rates—was the whole question of loans. Farmers were not happy with the loan structure set up by the Farm Credit Corporation. To give you an example, in the whole Province of Quebec, in 1984, there were only 75 loans. It had become laughable. The Farm Credit Corporation was giving out less money than the smallest credit union in my riding of Bellechasse, where there are some 60 municipalities, Mr. Speaker. Consequently, we had to put some life back into the Corporation in order to meet the needs of the Canadian farming community. That is what we did, Mr. Speaker, and I think we did well.

What about the new 10-year loan program of the Farm Credit Corporation, with a financing of $700 million, where payments are based on commodity prices, with a floor rate of 6 per cent. They never mention this program. They never did anything themselves. As for us, over $100 million in loans have already been granted under this program. This has helped to meet a need. The Farm Credit Corporation has already granted six or seven times as many loans as before in Quebec alone. These are the figures. We are therefore meeting the needs of the farmers better than the previous Government had done before the 1984 election. The figures prove it.

What about another initiative, the Farm Debt Review Board? In spite of the concrete action taken by our Government during the last two years and in spite of our lowering the interest rate to about 10 per cent, we found that a number of farm producers had unfortunately not succeeded in recovering from the black period, before our coming to power, or should I say the red period, since they were substantially in the red at the time.

What we have done, Mr. Speaker, is to show some compassion in dealing with the problems of the farm producers who are the most affected by the crisis. This is why we set up the Farm Debt Review Board. Under this compassionate program, local people analyze the files of farm producers and try to find ways to keep them on the farm. We are not trying as you said earlier to get farmers out of farming. That is completely untrue. What we said, and the Opposition should not try to distort our words, was that some farmers cannot remain in business. It would be structurally impossible. We cannot set up individual loan structures for all 280,000 Canadian farmers. We have to set certain standards. However, we have to try to make these standards more flexible. This is what we have done and thousands of farmers have been able to remain on the farm thanks to the Farm Debt Review Board. In some cases, it may happen that some producers, in spite of that, are forced to get out of agriculture. We are all sorry, but there is no choice.

We also established a program to meet those requirements—

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Unemployment insurance.

Mr. Blais: No! If you had taken the time to read the program we set up, the financial aid program to help make the transition, the relocation, the search for a job and the training of farm producers in other fields. Under your Government, there was no provision at all. Farm producers, being small entrepreneurs, were entitled to none of those programs. We opened the door for them, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration ensured that those programs were made more flexible to meet that need. This is what I call responding adequately to the representations of farm producers. Shared risk mortgage programs—already, a quarter of the FCC current loans are eligible to that program. The $500,000 capital gains program. Yes! They sometimes scoff when we refer to tax reform and ask that such a provision be abolished. But the provision had a direct impact on farm property transfer from father to son, and it enabled many young farmers to get started. It opened the door to young farmers, and this was an urgent request of the farming industry. We responded adequately, Mr. Speaker. There is still more to do. We are aware of it. We established a dairy policy that involves thousands of farm producers, $1,5 billion in that area. This is how we supported farming.

Consultation, Mr. Speaker, and I will conclude on this, consultation since we came to office ensured that this Government's Ministers of Agriculture, that is, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board and the Minister of Agriculture proper, met regularly with all their counterparts in Canada to find together solutions to the problems that confront us. I urge opposition Parties, both the Liberals and the New Democratic Party, to help us, to sit down with us to earnestly look for solutions to the problems that confront us and to try and forget their partisan attitudes and their narrow-mindedness in order to evaluate situations, and I would say the many benefits we extended to Canadian farm producers.

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in this special debate. We have a crisis in rural Canada the likes of which we have not seen since the 1930s. Despite that crisis, we have a Government that has announced that, as of tomorrow, the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loan foreclosures is going to end.

Assuming the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loan foreclosures ends, the banks and other lenders will take that as a signal that they can be a lot tougher on farmers who are indebted to them—and that would be like putting a skunk into the hen-house. The banks will be going after the farmers with avengeance.

Mr. Speaker, this Government thought things were so bad a year ago that it put in place a moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loan foreclosures. Yet this year, with crop prices going down another 18 per cent, it proposes to lift the moratorium.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

An Hon. Member: It doesn't make any sense.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of Tory logic we had in the 1930s with R. B. Bennett. That is the kind of logic that led to my grandfather saying that "Tory times are hard times".

In those days, the farmers of this country were forced to remove the motors from their cars and hitch their cars to horses, calling them "Bennett-buggies".

As a result of that kind of logic, this country rejected the Progressive Conservative Party for a couple of generations.

What we are seeing now, Mr. Speaker, is a re-enactment of the 1930s. Crop prices have reached the level they were at in the 1930s, while production costs are at the levels of the 1980s.

Mr. Speaker, as the Member of Parliament for Yorkton—Melville, I shall not sit idly by and watch the Progressive Conservative Government of this country destroy the family farm, destroy a way of life—a way of life that my forebears built in rural Saskatchewan and across this great country of Canada as they pioneered this land.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, this Government has taken the decision to end the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loan foreclosures. At the same time, it has announced that, on top of a 19 per cent rollback in wheat prices last year, this year the Canadian Wheat Board will be paying 18 per cent less on the wheat crop.

Mr. Speaker, we haven't seen these kinds of prices in rural Canada since the 1930s.

For the last 20 years, the people of western Canada have been looking for some fundamental changes in the way this country is run. What they want is fairness from Ottawa; what they want is equality from Ottawa.

Over the course of the history of this country, western Canadians have voted for a number of different political Parties. In the west, we had the formation of the CCF and the Social Credit Parties. Many western Canadians turned to John Diefenbaker and the Progressive Conservative Party.

After 20 long lean Liberal years in western Canada, the Progressive Conservative Party was elected to office in 1984. People had some hope, some optimism that things would change; that there would be fairness, justice and equity for the people of western Canada.

And, Mr. Speaker, what do we get? We get worse times now than we have had since the 1930s, when another Conservative Prime Minister, R. B. Bennett, was the Prime Minister of Canada, and he shafted the western part of this country during the Great Depression.

An Hon. Member: Are you being honest?

Mr. McDermid: Let's talk about the 22 per cent interest rates that prevailed during the term of the last Liberal Government.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, there is great disappointment in western Canada. There is—

An Hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Nystrom: My friend says, "nonsense". One needs only to look at the results of the Pembina by-election in Alberta, a riding that had a Progressive Conservative majority of 30,000 votes reduced to a pathetic 200 votes in the by-election.

An Hon. Member: It was good enough to win.

Mr. Nystrom: They can be as cynical as they wish, but the people of western Canada are speaking, and they are saying "no" to this Progressive Conservative Government.

In fact, the Minister of Labour for Saskatchewan, a good friend of mine and a Progressive Conservative MLA from Melville, said at the recent Progressive Conservative convention in Yorkton that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) should go to the west and get his shoes dirty. In that way, he might better understand the problems of western Canada.

An Hon. Member: He should get his Guccis dirty, you mean.

An Hon. Member: He is visiting western Canada next week.

Mr. Nystrom: I do not know what happens to Guccis when one wears them into a barnyard, but I wouldn't want to be around afterwards.

Here is a man, who can build a closet for some 84 pairs of Gucci shoes and whose wife can tear up a carpet three or four times, using public money and using money of people who contribute to the Conservative Party of Canada. That is the kind of man who is the Prime Minister of Canada, and that is why people in western Canada are saying no to the Conservative Party.

Let us look at the headline which appeared in this morning's edition of The Globe and Mail: "Getty to caution leaders on western separatism". Premier Getty, a Conservative in western Canada, has said time and time again in the last few months that we have a Government which is so insensitive to western problems that unfortunately some western Canadians are turning toward separatism.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: They know that. I know that. The man who had the courage to get up in the House of Commons and say that is the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour). He had the courage to get up and say that we have elected a Government which is insensitive to the problems of western Canada and because of that he would wait until the end of June before deciding whether to stay in the Conservative Party.

I know that some long-time distinguished members of the Conservative Party like the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) must be sitting in the back-benches gnashing their teeth and just cursing the insensitivity of the Government across the way.

Mr. McDermid: You should have heard his speech this morning.

Mr. Nystrom: It is not only Mr. Getty, the Premier of Alberta, who is disappointed with these birds. He said about three weeks ago that he might separate the Alberta Conservative Party from the federal Conservative Party because it is so insensitive. It is not only the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona. It is also the voters of Pembina, as well as the people of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba who are saying that it is time for a change and time to get rid of the Conservative Party which is destroying the country and western Canadian farms.

Mr. Fennell: What absolute nonsense.

Mr. Nystrom: Tory times are tough times.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: If John Diefenbaker were alive today, John Diefenbaker would be extremely upset and disappointed about how the Conservative Party has strayed from its roots.

Mr. Fennell: He is turning over in his grave listening to you.

Mr. Nystrom: At one time the Conservative Party was a great nationalist Party. It stood up for a strong Canada.

Mr. Fennell: It still does.

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is now talking about western Canada. I trust that he is not including British Columbia in his harangue at this point in time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has the floor.

Ms. Mitchell: What have they done in British Columbia?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, in British Columbia the Conservative Party is a dismal third, and the Conservatives know it.

Mr. St. Germain: Let's talk about British Columbia.

Mr. Nystrom: If he would get up and fight a little harder for the people of British Columbia, perhaps the Conservative Party would not be third.

Later on today we will have some speeches from the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), and the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). They will tell us how the Conservative Party has sold out British Columbia along with its friend, Premier Vander Zalm.

I appeal to my friends in the Conservative Party to wake up. What is happening in prairie Canada is that a way of life is now being threatened like it was in the 1930s.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: They are cynical.

An Hon. Member: Sucker.

Mr. Nystrom: "Sucker", he says. Now they are cynical. They should have been with me last Friday in the little town of Danbury in my riding when I met with some farmers. We talked about the problems which they had. They are seeing their neighbours going bankrupt. They are seeing neighbours like Jim Feeley of Preeceville who had an auction sale last Monday. These farmers are seeing farmers selling out because they are not getting the kinds of prices for their commodities which they should be getting, and they are seeing farm input costs going up. They can be cynical if they want.

Mr. Gottselig: What happened last fall?

Mr. Nystrom: Come with me to the city of Yorkton some time. I also met last Friday with three people who run a crisis centre in the city of Yorkton, a place which did not have a crisis centre a few years ago. In that small community in the last year over 1,300 people called the crisis centre. Many of them were suffering from stress. Many of them were farmers with financial problems because of the Conservative Government.

Mr. McDermid: Because their Member of Parliament would not go home to meet with them.

Mr. Nystrom: This Member of Parliament will take on any Conservative in my riding in the next campaign. I invite the Prime Minister to come and run in Yorkton—Melville. We will talk about the problems of real people in that campaign if and when he dares to call it.

An Hon. Member: You should have done your job.

Mr. Nystrom: I hear a British Columbian talking down to us prairie folk once again. I know I am just a prairie boy and a farm boy. I picked up a copy of the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix—and I see the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) is here—which contained the following headline: "Food bank restricts help to those near Saskatoon". The Saskatoon food bank had so many people coming to it that it had to make a decision that it could only give food to people within the near radius of Saskatoon. This is Canada. This is 1987. This is Canada with its resources, yet we have food banks giving food to people because they cannot get money to buy food and we have a Conservative Government which wanted to change things for people in the west.

Mr. Ravis: What has that got to do with it?

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon is asking what a food bank has to do with assistance to farmers. It is incredible to hear a Conservative Member of Parliament from Saskatoon saying that. John Diefenbaker must be turning in his grave.

Mr. Ravis: What an actor.

Mr. Nystrom: What do food banks have to do with the assets of farmers? If the farmers in our province are better off, everyone is better off. If farmers are better off, there are jobs for people in towns and cities including Saskatoon, and we would not need food banks.

The newspaper indicated that the agency decided and voted at its last meeting to restrict its operations because of heavy demand from rural Saskatchewan, from rural people. That is what it has to do with farm prices, and the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East should know better than that.

Also the article indicated that the food bank was getting people walking in off the street and asking for food. According to the article the director of the Saskatoon food bank said: "It is damn scary. People are having trouble getting food on their table and clothes on their back". If Conservative Party Members think that that is funny and that it has nothing to do with the farm economy—

Mr. McDermid: Be nice, Lorne. Nobody is laughing.

Mr. Nystrom: The Member asked what it has to do with farm prices. It has everything to do with farm prices.

One reason is that we have a Conservative Government which has driven down prices to the lowest level we have had since the 1930s, and we will not stand for it.

Mr. McDermid: What absolute nonsense.

Mr. Nystrom: I hear the Hon. Member saying: "What absolute nonsense". What nonsense is it that people in Saskatchewan are suffering? What nonsense is it that people in my riding are selling out because we have a federal Government which is providing grain prices for No. 1 wheat at $2.99 per bushel, while the United States has a guarantee of $6.10 Canadian per bushel of wheat? What nonsense!

We have a Government which is not supporting farm prices like the Americans and the EEC, and we have Government Members saying: "What nonsense".

Our farmers want a guarantee from the Government of Canada that as a minimum the final income for farmers next year should not be any lower than their final income last year. That is exactly what farmers want.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: I will tell you what else our farmers want, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ravis: They do not want a socialist Government.

Mr. Nystrom: I see the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East giving me thumbs down, indicating that farmers do not want that. I will remember that as well as I campaign in his riding in 1989.

Mr. Gottselig: All the MLAs in your riding are Tories now.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member is saying that all the MLAs in my riding are Tories. They were Tories before. That is the biggest thing I had going for me. I have no bigger allies than the Tory MLAs in my riding, because people see them every day and are reminded about the fact that Tory times are tough times. That Party no longer stands for things that John Diefenbaker stood for. The best thing I have going for me is those five Tory MLAs. They will be the biggest asset I will ever have. Those same Tory MLAs are afraid to call the Saskatchewan Legislature into session.

Let us look again at this morning's edition of The Globe and Mail. It must be serious if it makes the eastern press. It indicated that Saskatchewan was warned about spending. The Lieutenant-Governor of Saskatchewan is warning that he will take action because the provincial Government seems to be continuing spending indefinitely without approval from the Legislature. We have a Government in Saskatchewan which is spending money without a budget and without calling the Legislature into session. That has never happened before.

They are afraid to face the people of Saskatchewan. They know that Tory times are tough times. We have a deficit now which is larger than we ever had in the Province of Saskatchewan, because of an irresponsible, insensitive Conservative Government. That is why I say the biggest asset that I have in my riding is five Conservative MLAs because when the next federal campaign comes I am sure even the Liberal Party and the Rhinoceros Party will move ahead of them and be my stiffest opposition.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we want a guarantee that next year's price will not be a dollar lower than this year's price. We also want a guarantee that this Government will come to its senses, and instead of ending the moratorium tomorrow on Farm Credit Corporation loans and throwing over 600 families to the sharks, what I want tomorrow is a guarantee that that moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loans will continue. In addition, I want a guarantee to extend the moratorium to the private banks and financial institutions so that they will not be able to go out and take away a farmer's land. I see the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) is smiling in agreement. I am sure he is embarrassed to be a Member of the Conservative Party because he is afraid to get up in this House and speak to the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona and talk about the insensitivity of Gucci boy, the Prime Minister and the problems of western Canada.

The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East was shouting from his seat a few moments ago. He said what about the NDP and the CCF. Back in the 1930s when the Bennett administration drove us to despair and into poverty all across western Canada, when we had Bennett buggies and starvation in western Canada, the Saskatchewan people elected a CCF Government. At that time the banks were foreclosing on thousands of Saskatchewan farmers.

What did the CCF do? The CCF brought in the Homestead Act and said that a bank could not foreclose on the homestead of a farmer and take away the farmhouse and the farm from an ordinary farmer and his family. That is what the CCF did with Tommy Douglas. Who opposed that? Members of the Conservative Party. If Tommy Douglas did that in 1944, if he could bring in a Homestead Act to protect the family farm, the family homestead and protect the home for the kids, the wife, and everything else, why can we not do it in 1987? I ask that question of my friends in the Conservative Party. They are remaining silent now because they know if we did that we would be talking to their friends, the big bankers in this country. Of course that is where they get their campaign funds and when the banker says jump, the Conservative Party asks how high?

An Hon. Member: Be honest.

Mr. Nystrom: Honesty again. Take a look at the reports of the Chief Electoral Officer of this country. Take a look at the reports of where the Conservative Party gets its money. The Party that gets the most money from the banks is the Conservative Party of Canada. If anybody wants to challenge that, please get up and challenge it now.

Mr. Rodriguez: Then they lend it.

Mr. Nystrom: That is why the Conservative Party will not stand up for the farmers. That is why it will not impose a moratorium on the banks taking over farmland and that is why we are having more and more farm suicides, depressions, crises, family problems, drug problems and alcohol problems all across rural Canada. That is why for the first time in the history of Canada we have a national Government that is running not second in the polls but is running third in the polls from one part of this country to the other. That has never happened before. The people of Canada are rejecting the Conservative Party.

As I say, there are many things we can do. I would like to see the Conservative Party bring down farm input costs. Why doesn't the Government bring in legislation for generic farm chemicals so we can reduce the price of farm chemicals in Canada? Why doesn't the Conservative Government bring down fertilizer prices in Canada?

Why does the Conservative Party sit idly by when the CTC allows the CNR to charge variable rates, and with variable rates in Canada, which is like free trade and deregulation, the CNR and the CPR will play God. They will decide which community pays which rate and the small communities will be wiped out. Where is the Conservative Party when the CTC makes those kinds of decisions? The Conservative Party is silent. It is silent as it stands on the side of the railways, the banks, and on the side of the big private grain exchange.

The time has come in this country when western Canadians should unite in a crusade to demand our fair share of the national economy, a crusade that says Canadian farmers should receive as much as American farmers, a crusade that says American farmers and Canadian farmers should receive no less than what farmers get in the European Common Market. Why do Conservative Party Members rest content when the Canadian farmer receives $3 a bushel for wheat and the American farmer receives $3 a bushel for wheat and the American farmer receives $6.10 a bushel for wheat. I think that is shameful. I think it is disgusting and I appeal to the Prime Minister of Canada to call an election as soon as possible so the people of this country can vote and elect into office for the first time in Canada a people's Party that represents the ordinary average Canadian and make Ed Broadbent the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have been here most of the morning, and I was here last evening listening to the debate. With this last performance, that is what it was, the Hon. Member should go to Hollywood. The walk would do him good.

Mr. Riis: Go out west. Have you heard of Calgary?

Mr. McDermid: I used to have a great deal of respect for the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) but after that performance, after the half-truths, the quarter-truths and the no truths that were presented, as well as the rhetoric that came from the Hon. Member, I lost a great deal of that respect. I do not think the people of Yorkton—Melville will really think that that was a great performance. It was 100 per cent rhetoric. It was all nonsense. There were no solutions to the problems, very serious problems which the agricultural community is facing these days.

Mr. Riis: What did the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) do?

Mr. McDermid: As soon as an urban Member from Ontario stands up who does have a rural area within his constituency, the intolerance of the NDP comes forward. "What is a guy from Brampton doing speaking on agriculture?" That was the first thing the New Democrats all started yelling. That is the intolerance of the New Democratic Party. That is what will put them down in the polls come the next election. The Hon. Member talks bravely between elections, but at election time we will see how brave the Hon. Member is.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh,

Mr. Riis: What are you going to do about agriculture and farming?

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member knows full well, when he says that the Conservative Government had driven down prices, that the farmers themselves know that we have a world commodity price problem on our hands. If the Hon. Member is honest, the farmers have told him, as they have told me, that the high interest periods in the early 1980s when the interest rate went up to 22 per cent were when they got into trouble. If the Hon. Member is honest, he will say that, but he does not say that. He does not tell the truth in his speeches. That is why I lost a lot of respect for the Hon. Member, something I used to have. He is normally a very fair person. His speech today was a bunch of socialist rhetoric drivel. It was nothing more.

The Hon. Member knows that the moratorium on farm credit was put in place until we had a chance to bring in farm debt review boards. They were brought into place.

Mr. Orlikow: What are you smoking these days?

Mr. McDermid: Eighty per cent of the cases that they have studied have been handled successfully.

Mr. Riis: What does that mean?

Mr. McDermid: That means they have refinanced and that they are operating and have reached successful conclusions for the farmers.

Mr. Orlikow: For the banks.

Mr. Riis: Have you talked to a single farmer?

Mr. McDermid: Sure.

Mr. Riis: Table a list of the farmers who have been rescued through this.

Mr. McDermid: I will tell the Hon. Member that I am participating today because I want to talk about—

Mr. Riis: Farming.

Mr. McDermid: No. I want to talk about the long range areas that we in the Department of Trade—

Mr. Riis: It is a crisis now.

Mr. McDermid: Here are the New Democratic Party Members. We sat and listened to the New Democrats speak and we sat and listened to the Liberals speak, but the New Democrats will not give the same courtesy to the Conservatives.

Mr. Riis: Say something.

Mr. McDermid: If you will let me. If the Hon. Member would quit harping and yelling all the time and sit and listen to some facts, I could tell him what the Government and our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have done.

• (1330)

Mr. Riis: Tell us what you're going to do.

Mr. McDermid: That is exactly what I am going to do if you give me the chance. Would the Hon. Member please keep his mouth shut so I could do it? I would really appreciate it. Just show a little courtesy.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Riis: I'm going to listen carefully. Will you?

Mr. McDermid: Thank you very much. This Government has had in mind the interests of the farmer since it first took office.

Mr. Riis: You're going to say what you're going to do now?

Mr. McDermid: That's right. The Department for International Trade was led first by the Prime Minister who met with farm leaders. He did not tell farmers to go sell their own wheat, he did not tell them to go peddle their own implements. He met with them—

Mr. Riis: That's history. We don't need an history lesson.

Mr. McDermid: But you do need a history lesson.

Mr. Riis: We don't need a lecture either.

Mr. McDermid: Members of the New Democratic Party do need a history lesson. After listening to what the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) just said, it is obvious that they do need a history lesson because he was less than truthful in his presentation.

Mr. Riis: You haven't got a single thing to offer the farm community, admit it.

Mr. McDermid: The Government is leading the world in agricultural matters as they concern the trading nations.

Mr. Langdon: Oh, come on.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) is making snide comments as well. I read the comments about the Hon. Member who has all the answers to the problems.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member would permit a question.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to answer the Hon. Member's questions if he gives me a chance to make my presentation. After that, I would be happy to answer questions.

As I was saying before being so rudely interrupted by that intolerant bunch across the way, the Prime Minister was the first international leader to bring the problems of agriculture to a major summit meeting. From that point on, the Government has been pushing at every single opportunity to get agriculture to the top of the agenda in the trade discussions, and it is having success.

Mr. Langdon: Were you at GATT?

Mr. McDermid: Let me explain this to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor who likes to heckle. I am telling him about our position in agriculture.

Mr. Langdon: I'm just asking you, were you at GATT.

Mr. McDermid: It was our Government and our Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) who, by the way—

Mr. Langdon: She didn't even get to the GATT meetings.

Mr. Riis: She wasn't even there.

Mr. McDermid: This is the intolerance and insensitivity of the New Democratic Party. The Minister's mother died when she was on her way to the meeting and she had to go home. That is the insensitivity and nastiness of the New Democratic Party. That is a prime example of the way members of the NDP act.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That is a totally inaccurate description of what took place. It is not possible to make accusations like that when the facts are that the Minister was kept in Canada until after the meeting with the premiers on Wednesday—

Some Hon. Members: That's not a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: It's a point of truth.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must rule that that is a matter of debate and the floor has been given to the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid).

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the facts to the attention of the Hon. Member. The Minister was in the air on her way to Uruguay for the meetings which were still going on when she called home and her mother had passed away. The Hon. Member is being totally unfair.

Mr. Langdon: The meeting was finished.

Mr. McDermid: The real NDP is beginning to show.

I would like to return to what is going on in the department of trade as it relates to Punta del Este, Tokyo, Portugal and the meetings of international trade Ministers that took place in Lake Taupo, New Zealand, where the Minister for International Trade laid out the principles that should affect world discussions on agriculture and trade at this time.

It is a world problem, there is no question about that. Yes, the short-term things must be done and they are being done. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the Minister of State for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and the others have discussed that. However, I think it is important that the public understand that there must be some long-term solutions to a problem that is not the fault of farmers or of Canadians. It is a world commodity problem that must be tackled and it takes time. That is why we are now getting it to the top of the agenda. This Government is the first Government that feels that agriculture is so important that it has to be at the top of that agenda when world leaders meet and we are getting it there.

Mr. Nystrom: What about Diefenbaker?

Mr. Riis: Who called this debate?

Mr. Nystrom: Don't criticize Diefenbaker.

Mr. Riis: More history.

Mr. McDermid: Members of the NDP quote Diefenbaker quite frequently. They like quoting him better than they like quoting Tommy Douglas. I got a chuckle out of the Hon. Member quoting him again today.

Agricultural policies must become more price-responsive. Support for agriculture should avoid production incentives. The support should be for the farmers, not for farming. Countries should freeze and seek to reduce governmental assistance measures that artificially distort world prices, as we are seeing with the European Economic Community's subsidization contest with the United States. Of course, Canadian farmers are being caught in the crossfire. It is very important that agriculture be kept on top of the international agenda. Countries should not introduce new import barriers not mandated by existing legislation. These basic principles should be implemented collectively. I do not think they can be implemented separately. Those are the principles on which we are working now.

I can tell Hon. Members that momentum is gathering for those kinds of principles. More and more, the Ministers of Trade and heads of state are realizing that agriculture is the number one problem in the world commodity base today and that something must be done about it.

Because of the momentum that was started when our Prime Minister insisted that agriculture get on the agenda of the Toyko Summit, many more actions have been taken by the Prime Minister, by the Minister for International Trade, by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), who also played a very important role in Uruguay, as well as by many others in the Government. We are making headway on the international scene and we will come to successful conclusions in the negotiations that are going on now.

Mr. Riis: What are you going to do about the farmers now?

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member can sit there and criticize the activities of the Government, but I think the Government is playing a leading role in the world. I do not think any Government has consulted more with the agricultural industry, has kept them more up to date about it activities, has taken so much of their advice and has worked so hard with them.

Among all the farm groups and farmers I meet the Minister of Agriculture is held in very high regard. The Government fully understands the problems of agriculture, not like Governments of the past. The Government is taking action. There is no sense in me listing that action in my speech, but this action will continue to take place because the Government is sensitive. Well over $1 billion will be in the hands of farmers within the next five weeks because the Government is taking action. That is a very important impetus for the farm community. They know this Government cares for them. That is why they support us and will continue to support us.

• (1340)

Members of the NDP are great; between elections they are on top. You know what we should have in this country for the NDP; we should have elections between elections so then they might win.

Mr. McCurdy: Let's have an election right now.

Mr. McDermid: Unfortunately for the NDP, but fortunately for the Canadian people, they are not going to have one. I can assure the Hon. Member of that. We have a mandate and we are going to fulfil it. Come election time, when the Canadian people look around and see what this Government has accomplished, they are going to support us. They will support us next time around because they know we are on the right track and we are doing the right thing. That applies especially to agriculture. For once agriculture in this country is at the top of that important pecking order. Previous Governments placed it so far below that it was totally ignored.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member which he indicated earlier he would answer. He is correct when he says that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) have raised a question at international meetings concerning the harm done to farmers all around the world by the tremendous subsidies paid by the American, Japanese and EEC Governments to their respective farmers. Those Ministers have suggested that there is movement, that we are going to see action, that we are going to see a reduction in those subsidies.

Will the Hon. Member tell Members of this House and the farmers of this country when the Government thinks those subsidies will be reduced in a real way? Is it five years from now, 10 years from now, 15 years from now? If it is going to take 10 years, a hell of a lot of farmers in this country will no longer be farming.

Mr. McDermid: I thank the Hon. Member for his question and I agree with him. I cannot give him an answer as to when. I have stated right from the beginning that there are long-term and short-term problems. This is a long-term problem.

Mr. Orlikow: In the long term we will all be dead.

Mr. McDermid: I listened patiently to the Hon. Member's question, perhaps he would give me the courtesy of listening to the answer. Be fair about it.

I wish I could say it was going to be next year. I do not know. All I know is that for once at the OECD meetings coming up agriculture is going to be at the top of the agenda for discussion. It never was before. All countries are now beginning to realize the seriousness of the situation and how it is disrupting the agricultural industry right around the world. They want to do something about it. That is important and it gives hope to farmers. At least something is being done. It was ignored before. It is not any more. This Government is leading the charge and I am proud to be a part of this Government.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, we have heard talk in this House about interest rates and who has done the most for farmers. The debate has been going back and forth across the floor between the NDP and the Conservatives. They are calling each other intolerant. They are so intolerant of each other that they have almost lost track of the issue under discussion. I have heard comments today from speakers blaming—

Mr. Rodriguez: Considering that you have been out for the last 24 hours!

Mr. Hopkins: —the Liberals for high interest rates in the early 1980s. Today, when we have a grain problem, who is the Conservative Party blaming? They are saying this is not a Canadian problem, it is the fault of someone else outside our country altogether. If they want to be intellectually honest in this debate they will fully appreciate and understand that the high interest rate problem they are always throwing up in this House was an international problem affecting every nation in the industrialized world. That is a fact of life. It is not just a matter of debate and conjecture back and forth across the floor of this House.

Mr. McDermid: Tell us how you handled it.

Mr. Hopkins: I was quite interested in hearing the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) state that the Government was leading the charge on agricultural problems in the world today. We have all heard of the Charge of the Light Brigade. We know what happened to them. The same thing is going to happen to the Government. When a crisis arises it is not what the Government says it is going to do, but how it handles that crisis that will determine how it is perceived by the Canadian people. The Government has been perceived as incapable of handling such crises.

We have seen all these arguments and debates on free trade. At the time we have an American Farm Bill creating problems for Canada the Government does not want to raise any fuss, simply because it does not want to create bad relations with the U.S.

I seem to be making such an effective presentation here in the House that someone is drilling a hole through the wall up there.

Mr. Gottselig: Someone is trying to get out.

Mr. Hopkins: If that is a Government ploy I wish it would call off the driller. It is up to Mr. Speaker to protect all Members in this House, their rights and privileges. I would thank him for sending someone to ask that Conservative up there to put his bit and tools in the box until after this debate is over.

It is quite obvious that the Government is on the defensive on this issue. That is why it is so arrogant about other speakers. I was appalled this morning to hear a couple of Members get up and talk about members in the Opposition who have no right and no qualifications to speak in this debate. I would simply like to say to them that there are a few of us who have that right and those qualifications.

I have a very deep and abiding feeling for the agricultural problems of this country and for the grain farmers. I grew up on a farm. I lived on a farm for many years. I taught school in rural areas and lived in farming communities, not just in one location but in a few. I go back to the day when my mother and father hardly had a cent to their name, but their name was good. That is what happens in rural communities. That is what happened in those days. The word of people who owned a farm was good. It was as good as a certified cheque.

I can remember an all-day trip of 25 miles to town. You stopped at every swamp along the way to put water in the radiator. My father and mother, as I say, never had any money but they were very genuine, loving people. It is because we had parents like them that we got a solid footing for the rest of our lives. That comes from farm communities.

I can well remember driving up to a gas station with my father in a Model A Ford, asking to have $1 worth of gas put in the car and charging it. There was no question asked. They simply did it. It was fully understood. A good lesson to be learned in this debate is that a person's name is probably one of the greatest assets one can carry in this life. We are again seeing people who are having trouble getting $1 in these times when $1 is not worth very much.

I have stated that I have great feelings for the problems of farmers. There must be some form of debt restructuring worked out. People who have had problems with mortgages in the past, which the Farm Credit Corporation is still holding, should be given the opportunity to repossess their farms and start anew. That is only fair ball. Otherwise, in many of these cases the banks or the Farm Credit Corporation will sell those farms at a loss. Not only will they have lost money on the farm, they will have lost the farmer, who will have lost his livelihood and will have to find another way to make a living.

I can remember very well the days when we drove teams of horses for two, three, or four weeks at a time, from farm to farm, on threshings from early morning until darkness fell at night. Farm women do not and have never received enough credit in this world. When my father and the rest of us were working until dark my mother used to milk every one of the cows by hand, turn the separator, feed the calves, and clean up everything after she had done her own day's work. I say this because I do not want to hear remarks from the other side of the House that no one in the Opposition is qualified to talk about farm problems. That is an arrogant attitude that this place would be well rid of.

During this debate on grain in western Canada the farmer's pride is coming to the surface. He believes his credibility is at stake. When farmers cannot make their payments they tend to blame themselves and feel guilty, even though they are living in an environment over which they seem to have no control. That is the time when the sympathy, the empathy, and the understanding of their financial plight must come to the fore.

The credibility of farmers and their desire to continue to farm will affect the entire community in which they live. It will affect the fertilizer dealer, the farm implement dealer and the local garages. The farm economy reaches into almost every facet of our society. It is not strange that that is so today, because that has always been the case extending back to pioneer days. Fish was a major economic item as was timber and agriculture, and western grain in particular. Western grain was the reason for the great boom in railway building across the west. That is the type of thing which is in jeopardy today.

Parliamentarians should have pride in those three major economic factors which have been the foundation of Canada. We should have pride in the people who built up those farms and who have carried them on, in the people who built up the transportation systems to serve them, and, indeed, the people who are trying to sell grain today.

Why are we pussyfooting around with the American Farm Bill rather than saying up front, as the Government should, that it is absolutely bad international relations for Washington to have brought forward the Farm Bill which is highly subsidizing grain and practically putting the Canadian farmer out of business? If one government is going to do that, another government is either stuck with doing the same thing or it will ignore a large sector of its own economy.

This is the test of the Government. Will it bring in a plan for debt restructuring for the farmers to try to get them over the hump? Will it then become more aggressive in the international market on their behalf? It is all right to stand up in the House and talk about trade talks and how the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) took his efforts to Tokyo or Uruguay, but that is not much help to the western grain farmer today when the Farm Credit Corporation will have the opportunity to foreclose on Friday of this week, two days hence. Banks will move in too, because they will see this as a cave-in of the Government with regard to supporting the moratorium on mortgages. It is a sad day when the Government has lifted the moratorium on farm mortgages without having anything else in place to support the farmers, anything for them to work toward, anything to give them some hope.

I have here a list of the various grain and seed prices, the cost of production and the return from sales. It is sad that the American Farm Bill is subsidizing American farmers and their grain to try to outdo the European Economic Community, which is itself trying to outdo the Americans. Agriculture is so structured and financed by government in all those countries that the only position the Government of Canada can take is to be prepared to fight the international markets. It must get together with international governments and come to an agreement, because everyone is hurting each other.

This is a time for solid leadership in this country and throughout the world on agricultural problems. We do not need the Charge of the Light Brigade, about which the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) speaks. We need someone sitting at the table with a firm knowledge of the subject and with empathy for the farm community back home which is witnessing tremendously tough times, which is putting in crops, buying fertilizer, and selling the product for far less than the cost of production. The only way the farming community will exist is by being subsidized in the same way as is the European Economic Community and the American farmers.

This is a tough question and the solution is debt restructuring. That is what should be put in place instead of the removal of the moratorium from mortgages with absolutely nothing to prop the farmer up until we get over this international hurdle.

• (1400)

I come back to my original statement that the Government cannot handle these crises in a knee-jerk fashion, as they arise. Governments will be judged on the manner in which they handle each crisis as it arises. The Government has pulled the rug out from under the farmers by telling the Farm Credit Corporation that as of Friday of this week it is free to move into those farms and foreclose on mortgages. Is that the policy of the Government?

During the last election campaign my opponent said that the Conservatives would solve the agricultural problems in Canada in two years. The Conservatives have had almost three years, yet today we see that the farm community is facing a bigger disaster than ever.

People are not impressed when they see the comparison between past issues and present. They are not impressed by the Government passing the buck or by the Government becoming so intolerant that it cannot conduct a civilized debate.

Let us consider other questions relating to the farm community in this country. Let us consider rural post offices as they concern the farm community. The Government does not want to attack the real problem of economics within the Post Office corporation, so it singles out the small postmasters in the small rural communities where they believe there is no clout to fight back. They will force every mail contract to go up for tender. It does not care whether that mail contractor has been doing an excellent job or whether that mail contractor has excellent relations with the people along the rural route. The Government will bring in someone else unless that person is fortunate enough to retain the contract.

The sad part is that rural mail contractors have only recently reached a price which makes it worthwhile for them to operate a rural service. For years, they worked for nothing. I was one who supported them over the years because those who come from a rural riding know the service that they provide and the necessity of that service.

In order to get the message of the farm community across it is necessary to have television and news media that relate to their problems and understand the real crisis that they face. The recent terrible decision by the CRTC to allow John Bassett and his friends to bring in another major television station into Ottawa must be the most inconsiderate and unworthy decision of intelligent people. It will destroy the advertising market and the income that already exists for the mid-Canada television network that has stations across eastern Ontario, northern Ontario, Pembroke, North Bay, Sudbury, and Timmins. Furthermore, it will be to the detriment of the CJOH Station here in Ottawa because it will remove revenue from it.

Mr. McCain: You are really interested in the farmers.

Mr. Hopkins: It is very interesting to farmers because when people want to get news on farm problems in this country it will not come from a major city network bringing it into Ottawa, which is really located in the middle of a large urban area of eastern Canada. I hope that the Government will send the CRTC back to the drawing board to review that case again. I hope that the Government will announce before Friday that it will come in with a debt restructuring program for farmers who are in trouble and thereby show the great empathy which it claims to have for the farm community. I hope it will attend international meetings and tell the leaders of the world that we must come to our senses as leaders because if one subsidizes, the rest will follow suit. The only proper step to take is to agree to bring down those subsidies and let the market stay where it should be. If you are not going to do that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired. Is it the pleasure of the House to allow the Hon. Member one more minute to conclude?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief, and I thank the House for its consideration.

Let me return to the economic problems and whether the Government has enough sympathy to understand the plight of individual farmers. One need only imagine the farmer who is wondering whether he will even put in a crop, knowing full well that if there is no help coming from Ottawa he will be selling his product for less than it is worth, and if he does not go down now he will go down later. What a future!

When we consider the great contribution agriculture has made to Canada and the contribution we have made in research and development to assist other countries in the world, I think it is time that some of that considerate attitude was displayed at home in dealing with our farmers. They not only have to risk the weather, they must risk dealing with the world market.

I mentioned the European Economic Community. Our farmers also must risk the results of the American Farm Bill, as well as the Conservative Government which promised them everything in the last election. Farmers do not know where they stand today, and I call upon the Government to bring forward a constructive plan that will lay the groundwork to save the farm community in this country. I call on the Government to show some of that empathy because it reflects the heart and soul of the pioneering and modern industries that relate to the agricultural community in this country.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) as well as to the Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson). Both of their speeches contained some rather startling facts.

Let me deal with the Member for Egmont. He was a member of the P.E.I. Legislature and subsequently became a Member of the House of Commons. While I give him credit for having taken some interest in agriculture, when he was a member of the governing party in the Province of P.E.I. and the House of Commons, at no time did I hear him speak up for the farmers when the Liberal policy that was in place was to the disadvantage of his constituency.

The Hon. Member for Egmont spoke of corporate land ownership. Corporate land ownership came about because the Government of Canada, particularly under the leadership of the former Minister, the Hon. Eugene Whelan, ignored some of the very basic and historical policies that had kept the family farm in place. He abandoned price stabilization payments. Historically, price stabilization payments were made before planting. That is the request of the NDP and the Liberals at the moment. They say the farmers should get their money beforehand so that they can plant.

However, I never heard any member of the New Democratic Party bemoan the fact that the horticultural industry could not get price stabilization payments before planting. As I made representations in this House on behalf of the potato industry, about which the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) and myself are very basically and critically concerned, there was not a squawk when they could not get the money, if they could get it at all, in time to plant. Why then is the New Democratic Party so concerned at this moment of seeking agricultural support when its policy has not been agricultural at any time in a meaningful way, and when it has never supported anyone but the Liberal Party, whether it be in committee or in the House? The NDP objective has been to keep the Liberal Party in power, not that there should be good government in Canada.

• (1410)

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that as soon as one touches on the truth, the chirping from the NDP begins, the interference, the heckling, because they know they are extremely vulnerable historically as it relates to agriculture. The Member from Vancouver who has not been associated with agriculture, laughs. I think that merely emphasizes the lack of concern and knowledge the bulk of NDP Members have as it relates to agriculture. Certainly, with the exception of two or three, those Members are devoid of good advice and have not acted on behalf of agriculture. In the process of my remarks I will emphasize—

Mr. Waddell: I used to own a small herd of cattle.

Mr. McCain: I am not going to pay any attention to those guys, none whatsoever. Let them heckle and show that they cannot stand the truth because that is what they are demonstrating to the people of Canada.

Ms. Mitchell: We can't stand your truth.

Mr. McCain: They cannot stand the truth of the weakness of their historic position and their determined intention to exploit the downtrodden for their vote regardless of what may be the consequence and without having specific suggestions and policy which would correct the position of the downtrodden.

If those Hon. Members want to get down to cold hard facts of policy and become believable, then I think it is time for Canada and this House to pay attention to them. However, in the past they have been grossly supportive of agricultural neglect by the Liberal Party, and only now are they waking up to the fact that historically they have been wrong and they would like to be right for a change.

There was no response from either the Liberal or the New Democratic Party when 10 per cent of all the potato farmers in Carleton—Charlotte and in the constituency of Madawaska—Victoria fell through the economic skimmer. It was then that corporate land holdings began to develop. It became so bad in Prince Edward Island that I believe the Government of P.E.I. passed legislation to prevent corporate acquisition of land. The little family farm could no longer survive under Liberal policy, yet Liberal policy was supported religiously and without concern for the farmer by the Hon. Member for Egmont and received total support from the New Democratic Party.

Where was the Hon. Member for Egmont, for instance, when feed freight assistance became of very little value to Atlantic Canada? Where was the New Democratic Party? Where was the lady from Vancouver at that point in time? Her voice was not heard.

I would like now to raise a few other questions. Where was the New Democratic Party when apple juice flowed into Canada and we became the gateway to the American market for subsidized product by the European Economic Community for shipment to the United States? Not only did the Europeans export a highly subsidized product and destroy the apple juice industry in Canada, but we were the gateway for damages it might do in the United States, supported, of course, by the NDP with no action by the then Liberal Government. Where was the New Democratic Party and where was the Liberal Government, because they then held the seats in the Niagara Peninsula? Where were they when foreign fruit arrived in Canada at less than the cost of containers and packing in Canada? Where were they as a large portion of the Niagara Peninsula and the Okanagan fruit industry were destroyed because of that? Where were the members of the NDP at that point? They were supporting the Liberal Party, which had a policy to have industrial trade and to hell with agriculture.

Mr. Waddell: Who supported the Liberal Party? What are you talking about, supporting the Liberal Party?

Mr. McCain: Those Hon. Members have now become extremely conscientious in their support of the agricultural community of Canada after ignoring it utterly and completely.

One of the difficulties in Canadian agriculture today was caused by the abandonment of the price stabilization policy which Jimmy Gardiner, who was a good Minister of Agriculture, even if he was a Liberal, conscientiously, assiduously and regularly supported. When that was abandoned, where was the NDP? They paid no attention to the pleas of the Conservative Party on behalf of the fruit and vegetable industry of the Okanagan and the Niagara Peninsula. They were not with it. But I believe they now feel they have an agricultural community which might support them if they could now sham their way in an attack on the Conservative Party while still virtually on every occasion conscientiously voting with the Liberals?

It seems rather unjust that this debate should be taken on without any recognition of the contributions which have been made. Where were those members of the NDP, those heroes of the west today, at the point in time when a shipment of grain went from the European Economic Community and the subsidy paid for that shipment exceeded the price the Wheat Board was paying the western farmer? The subsidy alone exceeded the Wheat Board price for the grains exported on that day. There was not a word of that from the NDP, not a word.

Mr. Waddell: We went to Brussels directly and we protested.

Mr. McCain: Not a single member of the NDP criticized the Liberal Party's stupid trade negotiations which permitted that to happen. But we took their apple juice to the detriment of the Niagara Peninsula.

Mr. Waddell: We ran against the Liberals in the election of 1980.

Mr. McCain: You ran against the Liberals so you could get a chance to support them by your behaviour after you got elected.

I have to say that I have some sympathy with some of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins). I too saw some of the things he has related in his remarks. However, at that point in time it was the policy of both the Liberal and the Conservative Parties to keep the farmer in his place by recognition of his need with subsidies or price stabilization payments when the market was down. It was the Hon. Mr. Whelan as Minister of Agriculture who abandoned that. It was when the Trudeau Government took over this country that the Minister of Agriculture began to have no voice. That encouraged Canada, province by province, coast to coast, step by step, but not necessarily in order. It encouraged the Province of British Columbia to use its own treasury to support its agriculture. It encouraged Alberta at a later date to do the same thing, and it encouraged production of items which were already in surplus supply in Canada. It encouraged the Province of Saskatchewan to get a land bank and to support the increase in herds, which proved to be absolutely devastating to the cow-calf operation. Where was the NDP at that point in time? They were still voting with the Grits who mismanaged that structure as well. The NDP was still voting with the Grits, and the quicker it is known that this was an act of a chameleon, the quicker the public will know what this show is.

The New Democratic Party has not mentioned that the interest rates for FCC are now lower than they have been since 1979. It is not mentioned that certain emergent loans are made to the farmer at a rate of 2.5 per cent. It has not been mentioned that $750 million was paid out of the grain stabilization fund. It was not mentioned that $1 billion has been paid to the western farmer in addition to that.

• (1420)

Mr. Waddell: Via the Saskatchewan election.

Mr. McCain: Members opposite have compared that with the banks. They have said that we gave more money to the banks than we gave to the western farmer. Mr. Speaker, I ask you if there had been a discrediting of the banking system in Canada from where would the farmer borrow his money? If the farmer had money on deposit in that bank how would he get it if it were not bailed out? As has been mentioned several times, how would one sit with a multitude of municipalities in Ontario and in the West which had moneys deposited with those banks, and where would one's Party stand on the basis of the policy enunciated in this debate and in others?

I submit that it is ridiculous to compare the idea that banks have been assisted, because agriculture in the west has been assisted to an even greater degree than were the two banks, with a credit liability of all of the banking system of Canada.

Mr. Waddell: Poor banks!

Mr. McCain: Whether they are rich or poor is not significant. Their presence in Canada is indispensable. How the Hon. Member may wish to regulate and control is his baby.

Mr. Waddell: It's the peoples' money that is indispensable.

Mr. McCain: However, the people of Canada cannot get along without a secure banking system as ours has been historically. In fact, it is better than that in any other part of the world. That is a credit rating that we need to have for the nation, for our farmers, our fishermen, our manufacturers and all who are interested in money. That could not be rejected.

Furthermore, the commitment of the Conservative Government has been that it shall not neglect agriculture. It has not neglected agriculture. It will not neglect agriculture. That is the commitment that has been made but that has not been mentioned at any point in time in this or in any other debate.

I say again—and it has been repeated both in attack and in defense—the presentation by both the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party is totally and utterly misleading. It is recognized by every honest Member of the House that there are some people in the farming community who cannot ever, ever handle the debt load which they have undertaken. None are more willing to admit that than the farmers who have appeared in Saskatchewan before the appeal boards or the farmers who have appeared before other appeal boards under Farm Credit Corporation arrangements. None have been more willing to admit that than the farmer. It is absolutely and utterly impossible that every single last farmer can be held up. It is just not possible.

If members of the NDP want to heckle, let them remember their total inconsistency in terms of their support of the Liberal Party as it governed this country.

Mr. Waddell: We never supported the Liberal Party. What are you talking about?

Mr. McCain: They supported the Liberal Party by their votes in this House in 1972-74.

Ms. Mitchell: Where did you get your facts? Sit down!

Mr. McCain: Members of the NDP supported the Liberals in 1979-80 to the ouster of the Clark administration. They wanted Liberal policies which have by no means produced anything like the assistance the Conservative Government has extended to agriculture on a national basis.

Mr. Waddell: Where is the support of the Liberal Party? Tell us. Give us one vote.

Mr. McCain: Where was the NDP—

Mr. Waddell: We never supported the Liberal Party.

Mr. McCain: You supported the Liberal Party in your votes which ousted the Clark administration. The vote of confidence in 1979-80 is the only one you need.

Mr. Taylor: In bed with the Liberals.

Mr. Waddell: We voted against the Clark Government?

Ms. Mitchell: Tell us about Petro-Canada in 1979.

Mr. Waddell: The people voted against the Clark Government.

Mr. McCain: Do you suppose those fellows are run down yet, Mr. Speaker?

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is quite knowledgeable, I think. I was very disappointed with the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville who should be knowledgeable in agriculture by who made a speech which was at best misleading and at worst—I guess I am not allowed to use the language that I would like to use in the House. Let us say that it was misleading and much, much more. It certainly did not depict the situation of agriculture in the west or in any other part of Canada. But the thing his speech did do is to ignore agriculture in every part of Canada except the the grain grower, and that is absolutely and utterly inexcusable. I say that because from Vancouver Island to St. John's, Newfoundland, there are farmers who need recognition, and they shall get it from this Government.

I want to repeat one of the remarks that I have made. If the NDP were conscientiously and historically interested in agriculture, why did it support the Liberal Party which failed to negotiate a deal with the GATT structure and which did not recognize the expenditure of billions of taxpayers' dollars to subsidize agriculture both for domestic consumption and for export? Why did members of that Party not upgrade the Liberal Party at the point in time when that subsidy exceeded the Wheat Board's payments of the day for the export of grain into our own markets?

I have seen hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker, but I submit to you that the NDP at this moment in time on the basis of its history and its present plaintive representations to Canada can very properly be accused on an historic basis of a hypocritical structure and a hypocritical presentation without the facts and of failing to recognize the contributions that have been made. It is quite proper that an opposition Party should ask for more. That, perhaps, may be the exact position that the Opposition should take. But to fail to mention the assistance that has been extended to agriculture is not good moral behaviour which is expected by the Canadian population from a Party within the House.

When one tries to exploit the farmer when he is in difficulty by an about-face imposition and by a pursuit of the vote and the vote alone, I submit that that is the cruelest exploitation that the farmer of the country has ever experienced as it relates to the Liberals and their historic performance, and as it relates to the NDP and its support of the Liberals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to stand and to speak to this very important topic today. I must say to the Hon. Member who just resumed his seat that I think it is quite an indication that he sees the New Democratic Party as a threat. Indeed, the polls should confirm that for him. I say that because he devoted his whole speech to a listing of references to the NDP. As the hon. gentleman who sits at the Table could tell him, most of the facts were, of course, distorted. However, I will not waste time in refuting them.

I wish to concentrate my remarks today on the impact of the economic situation with which the families of Canada are faced, which is stressful and which has become even more so this week. I would like to look at it from the point of view of the critic of social policy. I would also like to pay tribute to the many, many thousands of farm women across the country who face intolerable stress along with the rest of their families and who are carrying tremendous workloads.

We know that today we are very concerned. In fact, the reason this emergency debate went on all night last night and will continue to go on as long as this Party has speakers to put up is that we are extremely concerned at the announcement made this week that the Farm Credit Corporation will be given information to begin to foreclose on family farms. This comes, of course, as my colleagues have said over and over again, on a deepening crisis, where we have seen prices for Canadian grains plummet by 20 per cent last year, and a further 18 per cent this year.

This must be simply terrifying for farm families who already are coping with unbearable pressures and feelings of hopelessness. It is those pressures and sense of hopelessness that will be the theme of my remarks today.

A number of Hon. Members have spoken from their experience as farmers themselves, or having come from agricultural communities. I grew up in an agricultural community in southern Ontario, and I continue to share some of the very strong feelings that our rural population hold for their communities.

In my remarks today, I shall be speaking to the findings of some very significant authorities. Before getting into the main theme of my remarks, I should like to repeat once again that the New Democratic Party is today calling for a commitment from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)—and I would hope that this commitment will be forthcoming—that, at the very least, Canadian grain farmers be provided with a guarantee that total grain receipts for crops planted in this crop year will equal at least those of last year, $1.5 billion to $2 billion, moneys which are so essential for our western grain producers.

We acknowledge that the Government is working on the international front, and that many of the problems can be attributed to what is happening on the international front. However, as Canadians, we cannot tolerate this threat to the basic economy of Canada.

As well, we hope that the Prime Minister and his Government will reverse the proposed lifting of the moratorium on foreclosures, at least until a deficiency program has been announced for the upcoming crop year.

It is important, also, to address the broad question of farm debt, much of which is still at very high interest rates, interest rates which were, of course, tolerated and in fact escalated by the previous Liberal Government.

Many thousands—not just a few families, as the Minister said earlier in this debate—of farm families will be adversely affected by the lifting of the moratorium on FCC loan foreclosures. In addition, we know that the banks, credit unions, trust companies, and other lending institutions will follow the lead of the FCC, thus leading to increased foreclosures.

This is a very serious problem. What I should like to do in the remainder of my time is to focus on this problem from the point of view of farm families and farm women. In that regard, I shall have reference to a report presented to the Standing Committee on Agriculture on May 12 of this year. This is a report prepared by Dr. Jim Walker, a research psychologist at Brandon University.

Dr. Walker and his colleagues carried out a very extensive study of farm families. During the course of their work, they heard farmers describe the "heartbreak of trying to cope with impossible economic situations". They heard from farm wives and husbands describing how their marriages are slowly falling apart; they mention the fact that they saw farmers break down in tears while filling out the survey.

In addition to the traditional stresses that our farmers bear, farming has now become an almost intolerably stressful occupation. The policies of this Government do not recognize this, nor do they deal with it. This Government, through its proposal to lift the foreclosure moratorium, is adding the additional threat of foreclosure.

This particular study highlighted a number of stress factors. It is a study that should be of great interest to those who are interested in human nature, human behaviour. The researchers found that rising expenses are at the top of the list when it comes to creating stress, followed by low commodity prices.

The lives of farmers are stressful because of their concern with the continued financial viability of their farm. They find that they have too much to do in too little time, particularly the stressful work at peak times.

These are all situations that cause stress in farm families. But even more important, and I note that this fact has been documented in other reports I have studied, up to 80 per cent of the respondents quoted Government policies and regulations as causing stress. Other factors are long work hours, weather and crop loss due to wet weather, not to mention equipment failure and the Government's cheap food policies. Those are just some of the factors that lead to stress in farm families.

The study to which I have reference was conducted over a year ago. Added to the stresses that those families were facing at that time is the additional stress that the current situation imposes on them. Day in and day out, farmers and their families have to deal with a great number of stresses, many over which they have little or no control. They are powerless to control many of these stresses.

Farmers are strong, independent and resourceful people, and today we see them turning to professional help as they never have before, and all because of the physical and psychological stresses they have to suffer.

I should like to highlight some of the situations outlined in the report. The report cites the example of a Saskatchewan farmer who complains of being under a lot of stress. It quotes him as saying, "I feel I have a lot of stress, and I am always so tired, without any reason". Fatigue is a common symptom of chronic stress. Of those surveyed, 49 per cent reported frequent fatigue.

The threat of stress to the family unit also shows itself in many different ways. One farm wife was quoted as saying, "I was 30 hours a week off the farm. The stress was incredible during peak periods. There is more stress than I can handle. I hope our marriage makes it, but I do not know that it will."

We have physical symptoms within families. I will not go into them. We have reports of serious disruption of sleep patterns, personality problems, health problems. Indeed, these stresses not only constitute a threat to the marital situation, but in fact lead to behavioural problems.

All of these things are related to family stress, stress which is caused by the intolerable economic situation in which our farm families are living.

Another farmer had this to say. "I often wonder what I would do or how our family would manage if we quit farming, or were unable to continue to farm. I am presently 32 years old. I have two pre-school children, and I really do not have any reliable farming future. We are just living to have three meals a day."

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) in his speech, spoke of the food banks in Saskatoon, and that is something that is astounding to me. Being from Vancouver I am used to seeing food-banks in that city. That in itself is an immoral and deplorable situation. However, I had not realized that we now have members of our farming communities going to food-banks. The food producers have so little money to buy food for their table that they are now going to food-banks in Saskatoon and are in fact being turned away.

An Hon. Member: Tory times are tough times. Shame on the Tories!

Ms. Mitchell: Getting back to the survey, another farmer is quoted as having asked those carrying out the survey whether they knew of anyone who wanted to buy a half section farm in the south western corner of Manitoba. That was a year, maybe two years ago. It may be that that farm has since been the subject of a foreclosure application, or perhaps it has been sold. In any event, my suspicion is that that farmer has now lost his farm.

It is little wonder that the members of our agricultural sector look to the future in despair. In fact, according to this survey, 11.4 per cent of those interviewed had in fact thought of killing themselves. According to the survey, the rate of suicides in farm communities is extraordinarily high. The instances of suicide in rural areas in Manitoba where the study was done were much higher than in urban areas. As I said, there has been a tremendous increase in people with mental and other health problems.

The report refers to another farmer who put it this way. "Many days I feel I cannot face another day". He indicated that it was extremely stressful to try to make ends meet and hold things together,that he had his best 30 years in the farm, and that if he lost it he would have worked all his life for nothing. Then he asked: "Does this make me a total failure?"

This farmer and his fellow farmers have not contributed to the situation. They contributed labour to their farm operations by working night and day over the years, yet they have no control over the situation. They have elected Members of Parliament from the west and from other parts of Canada to do something about it. The Members in the House can do something about the situation which is hurting these families. I appeal to my fellow Conservative colleagues to get to their Prime Minister today and to do something about it. They have the power to do it.

Some Hon. Members: He was here.

Ms. Mitchell: I hear them saying that he was here, but what did he say? He said nothing. He spoke for 40 minutes and made no commitments to the farmers of western Canada. I think it was absolutely immoral.

I also want particularly to mention the increase in violence occurring in rural communities. I have heard this from many women's organizations. We tend to think of it as an occurrence in urban communities. Transition houses for battered women have been set up. For instance, there is one in Brandon,

Manitoba, which has experienced a 50 per cent increase in the number of women who have sought shelter because of family violence in the rural community around that city. Also there has been a 70 per cent increase in the number of children who are in shelters because of family violence.

I have attended many hearings as my Party's critic for the status of women. Children who are battered now will grow up to be batterers. There are many long-term problems.

I hope Hon. Members will read this excellent survey in detail which was taken in May, 1986 before we had the present punitive policies and lack of action. It concluded as follows:

> We believe the danger signals are all there. We believe it has reached the point where farm stress is killing people. We believe that the risk in the increase in the incidence of rural violence appears great. We believe we owe it to those who feed all of us in Canada to respond with action, with compassion and with humanity.

Again I appeal to the Government, particularly to the Prime Minister and the Minister responsible, to reverse its policies and to respond with action which will relieve the situation today, at least temporarily, until the more complex problems can be turned around. I appeal to the Government to ensure that the foreclosure policy is not allowed to go forward, so that we protect family farms and those who are facing devastating situations in their homes.

I should also like to refer to the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women. We do not usually think of this group being concerned with farmers, but it also talked about over a million people living on farms, less than half of whom are women. It dealt with the financial stress which is pressing in on farm families. Although the report was written a couple of years ago, it indicates that they are experiencing intolerable stress.

The number of family farms decreased by 13 per cent in 1981. While the net farm income in Canada decreased, total farm debt increased by 17.5 per cent over a 10-year period. It is much higher today. The 1984 survey by the Farm Credit Corporation showed that 17 per cent of farms were in severe financial difficulty. Surely it is up to almost 75 per cent today. In 1982, 19 per cent of farm families in Canada lived below the poverty line, as compared with 13 per cent of non-farm families who lived below that level.

I have attended child care hearings and Secretary of State hearings before which farm women have appeared. We have been told that they can hardly find enough money to buy groceries and about the nightmares they have because the bills are piling up. We were also told about the triple burden of farm women. Usually they are working with their partners on the farm in farm activities. Often they must take their children along with them on tractors. They are also carrying on traditional home-making roles in caring for the home and the children. In addition, they are often the ones who must go into nearby villages to work part time or full time so that there will be some cash to put food on the table. We talk about double discrimination and double disadvantage for women; these women are triply disadvantaged.

Let us add to the situation the current drop in farm prices this year, and the fact that there has been no commitment on the part of the Government to help farm families even as much as it did last year. We commend the Government for stepping in last year, but we must have it again this year. There must also be a commitment to do something about the foreclosure problem.

I see that my time is almost up. I had many more comments I wanted to make, but I should like to mention particularly the whole question of child care because it is a very current and important issue. We were told by many farm women, and also studies showed it, that there has been a very high incidence of accidents involving children on farms.

It is very critical that we have a different kind of child care for farm communities, one of the issues which was written up at length in the report of the Special Committee on Child Care. It recommended, in addition to normal funding, that Agriculture Canada should promote the safety of children.

Our own NDP report entitled "Caring for Canada's Children" strongly recommended that the federal Government establish a community initiatives fund which would receive $26 million this year and would be continued over the next five years, so that farm communities could develop innovative child care, such as buses picking up children or child care workers going to the farms. It must be a different kind of care than that in the cities.

In addition, we know that farm women share the concern about general agricultural problems. They also have concerns about equality from the point of view of their role on the farm. A whole new generation of farm women is adamant that they must be recognized as equal partners in both their marriage and their farm business. I am very glad to say that this is beginning to happen, with younger farmers particularly.

Farm women have many difficulties getting financial recognition in their own names. They must have land in their own names. They must qualify as operators. Farm women should be recognized for Prairie Grain Advance Payments and other farm assistance programs. I am glad to say that one of our Members has been working on that.

Stabilization plans and marketing boards should recognize both producers—the husband and the wife. Farm spouses cannot contribute to their own future under RRSPs. We are also very concerned about wages, contributions to the Canada Pension Plan, and unemployment insurance coverage. Rural women want a recognition in matrimonial property laws. I could go on and on and on. Farm women and support groups come out with recommendations and I hope when we have more time we will look at them.

I appeal again to the Government to rescind the decisions it has made that will increase the pressures on farm families, particularly on farm women, and to provide financial assistance, to make sure there will be no foreclosures either through the Farm Credit Corporation or, even better still, something further.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me this opportunity to speak in the House today. As a member of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, I have had the honour and the privilege of listening to farmers from coast to coast talk about the problems and challenges they will be facing in the months and years to come. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) who spoke earlier mentioned the crisis situation and state of shock being experienced by families in western Canada. I agree, and I share her concerns. In any case, I must admit that unlike her colleagues, she showed some common sense in what she said, except where she referred to day care centres in rural areas. I think that logically, and if we want to be sensible, our priority should be helping farm families and not opening Government-supported day care centres, at a time when families are in such tremendous difficulty.

Mr. Speaker, since we are discussing agricultural problems, I would like to mention to the House that I toured the rural areas in my riding recently and met all the organizations in my riding, from the Outaouais to Mirabel.

I found that in my riding, at Notre-Dame-de-la-Paix which is not very far from here, potato farmers are having serious problems. They know how concerned I am about this, and I would like to remind them today that my riding office and I have taken steps to try and find ways to help these farmers.

Mr. Speaker, I think I can say with some pride that it may be thanks to my efforts that today, the Office du crédit agricole du Quebec may be willing to help these potato producers.

Mr. Speaker, I come from a riding that has suffered a great deal as a result of the policies of the previous Government, and I would like to say that once again, we have been able to deal with a serious problem created by that Government. I am referring to the obscene expropriation of Mirabel farmland as a result of which at the time, hundreds of farm families in my riding were uprooted.

Mr. Speaker, the very Liberals who today claim to be the sole defenders of the poor and the homeless had no hesitation at the time in evicting for the purposes of their own shameless liberalism, entire farm families which have never fully recovered from those barbaric measures.

Today, many of these families have gone back to their homes and their land, feeling that at last, a Government has given them their due. Mr. Speaker, the people of Mirabel are no fools. They know that going back to farming after so many years is not easy, and that they will have to think of ways to find a niche within a controlled market such as the market for milk, for instance.

Mr. Speaker, Mirabel farmers have set their sights on objectives that may seem very ambitious today, but I am sure that in the medium and long term they will be vindicated. I am referring to their export projects. The Mirabel UPA is about to develop a unique expertise in international agriculture. They intend to combine foreign expertise with their own and then export their methods to developing countries.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to emphasize these facts in the House today to indicate to what extent farmers in my riding, in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada can, as the Prime Minister said in his remarks this morning, be ingenious when we give them a chance to show what they can do.

The Government of the Progressive Conservative Party took action. The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), bolstered by the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) leadership, made it a point to give top priority to the agricultural sector because of the war of subsidies between American and European producers which drove prices even further down and threatens our traditional markets. For quite some time now the farm commodity trade has been the weak point of GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, particularly so since 1955 when the Americans demanded exemptions with respect to their domestic production subsidies. The conference held in Uruguay made it possible to reach a compromise so that at least the matter will come up for debate. We are not satisfied with talking about it, Mr. Speaker, we take action.

Since yesterday I have been listening to the speeches of NDP and Liberal Members and I am quite simply bewildered by the paralogism of opposition Members who have the nerve to say that the Conservative Government has killed agriculture. They have the nerve to say that. Mr. Speaker, how can anyone be so blind, how can anyone stand still when listening to so much verbal trickery on the part of New Democratic Party Members who would have Canadians believe that if they were in office—Heaven forbid!—they would have done better than the Liberals. They would do better than the Conservatives or any other Government which would have been in power during times of such serious crisis as the one we are experiencing now. I can hardly wait to talk about such absurdities during the next election campaign. I am really looking forward to the day when the written and spoken press will at long last write and tell the truth about the economic illogicalness of this political Party which would go as far as bringing relations between men and women under state control.

It is unbelievable, Mr. Speaker, newspapers these days are full of articles about the contributions of opposition Members and their insanities. How do you explain the fact that the press does not even bother to mention the interventions of Government Members so that Canadian who are listening to this debate might have a better idea of what this Government has done? There is still room for improvement, of course, and nothing is perfect, as the Prime Minister said in his remarks this morning. Still, for the sake of equity, people must be made aware of our record. Mr. Speaker, I must tell you this, I think this House has become a sick place.

I regret having to say so, because it is incredible that no reference has been made to the tax rebate of 6.5 cents per litre of fuel in addition to a special discount of 1.5 cent granted to farmers as well as mortgages based on primary agricultural products, the setting up of committees to review farm debts, the Canadian rural transition program, reduced interest rates of the Farm Credit Corporation, the Agricultural Stabilization Act, the capital gain exemption of $500 000 on a farm, the Grain Advance Payments Act, the long-term dairy policy. No mention has been made of all that, because there was no scandal to be denounced. They are good news. Special programs worth several million and the most recent program worth 1 billion for grain producers, and I could go on. What is the matter, Mr. Speaker, with our parliamentary system? Lies make the headlines while true facts are not mentioned. People can talk through their hat in this House and any sensational news item is reported and when Canadians are wondering what is going on, we are unable to tell them the truth.

Farming is experiencing a serious crisis. I deeply regret it. Mr. Speaker, I am telling you from the bottom of my heart that we should help our western farmers who are indeed desperate, I know, having read and heard the many representations made. I think it is really unbelievable that because of farm debts, our colleagues representing other provinces should witness the breaking up of family farms which were the cornerstone of our western economy. Mr. Speaker, no government or elected member can remain insensitive to that. That is why we are part of this great country.

It is the "raison d'être" of our Confederation. It is in times such as these that we should close our ranks and show generosity. Mr. Speaker, it is nobody's fault in Canada if the Americans and the European Economic Community subsidize unreasonably their respective farming communities, making it possible for purchasing countries to get the lowest prices imaginable.

Mr. Speaker, when our commitee on agriculture visited Washington last year, we met the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture. I asked him the following question: How can you say that you are our friends and extend to us such a warm welcome, when your Farm Bill is causing so much damage to the grain industry which is so dear to all Canadians? The Secretary replied that he understood my point quite well, but that Canadians themselves should try to understand the United States which is faced with huge farm problems.

The Prime Minister of Canada is not to blame. Mr. Speaker, I hope and trust that all Canadian voters, yours and mine, honourable friends, will realize that what the Opposition is saying is sheer nonsense. I am sure of that, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps I mention this unnecessarily, for Canadians are certainly much more enlightened than the Opposition gives them credit for.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that our trading partners cannot boycott European or American goods which are cheaper than ours just because their subsidies are hurting our farmers. These countries are faced with serious problems too. People are all alike. When we go shopping, what do we do? We choose what is the least expensive. That is quite natural. How can a country as large, but as sparsely populated as Canada compete on an equal footing with the United States where the Government can collect revenues of billions of dollars each time a tax increases by one cent? We have a small population and limited resources. I find it quite incredible that we should talk about nationalizing. A commitment of $1 billion was announced a short time ago. After our Government hade made this commitment, the New Democrats and the Liberals immediately said: Give us another billion! This would make $2 billion. I do not even know where we can find $13 billion to subsidize day care. They speak about billions as though they were speaking about nickels and dimes. We have to be realistic. Matters are getting out of hand, Mr. Speaker. Fortunately, the Canadian public saw what was happening in 1984 and elected a Progressive Conservative Government with a Minister of Finance who knows about figures and who knows that one plus one make two.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, as I have not much time left, I would like to say that we, in Quebec, were proud to hear the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announce a long term dairy policy. We were proud to be able to tell Quebecers recently that, for the first time ever, a Canadian Government had allocated $1 billion to Western farmers. This is not peanuts and this money was being spent in Canada. For the first time ever, $30 million will be spent in Quebec. That is a lot better that nothing! These are real initiatives, Mr. Speaker, these are real policies. We have taken action and we want people to know it. Perhaps more people would know about it if it were not for television reporting which gives the impression that there is no one on this side of the House. Yet, there are 211 of us. We speak, but no one ever reports what we say. The focus is on the Opposition Members who believe that they are the only ones who have anything worthwhile to say. There are limits, Mr. Speaker, and the truth has to come out. This is why I wanted to take part in this debate. I have been a member of the Standing Committee on Agriculture for two years. I have been listening to the Hon. Members and they do not even know what they are talking about. They should come and see what is going on in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. They would realize to what extent Canadian farm groups are supportive of what our Government has accomplished and that they keep on saying so week after week. Listen! I do not know where you get your stories, but if you bothered to drop in during the Standing Committee on Agriculture, you would realize that what you are saying does not make sense.

It was said in the Throne speech, Mr. Speaker—and I am very proud and honored to be a part of a government, of a political party, the Progressive Conservative Party, that does things . . . We do not only talk, Mr. Speaker, we do things. I would like to recall what the former Prime Minsiter said one day in a conversation. Prime Minister Trudeau was so arrogant in those days that he thought that he was the permanent one man show. No one, he thought, could match his wits an his talent. So, one day, he asked western farmers how it was that they had to sell their grain. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, what brains it takes to utter such absurdities.

So it is easy for someone outside the ring, watching a boxing match—I love boxing—to say: "If I had been in his place, I would have pounced him, I would have done this, I would have done that!" But when you are inside the ring, it is not the same.

I look at the Hon. Member opposite who once was Solicitor General and who must remember from his time in office that things are much easier on the other side where Members can say whatever they want and pick at any small news from reporters who are themselves too busy to make their own research. A reporter I will not identify, Mr Speaker, said that he relies on what Opposition Members say to be part... Reporters have become the Opposition's researchers. Imagine! Opposition Members come to the House saying: "I have learned from a reliable source—" when, imagine, Mr. Speaker, the information appeared in the Toronto Star. They hold as the absolute truth whatever is published in the Toronto Star.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say the Government has acted. I am proud of the Prime Minister. For the first time, the agricultural matters are on the GATT table. For the first time, they were discussed when President Reagan came here. There are even some on the other side of the House who have no respect for visitors, who allow themselves to say anything at all, even to interrupt a speech by the President of the United States. That is going too far, Mr. Speaker. There will be an election, Mr. Speaker, and we will see then the effect of their behaviour if they keep this up. It will be fun, Mr. Speaker. I am anxious to start campaigning and reveal the truth.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York-Centre): Having had the pleasure to hear from beginning to end what the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) had to say, I intend to address some of the points she raised. I will not try to answer her questions about the Toronto Star article, for this newspaper did not seek my advice as to what it should print, and I said what I said to the Toronto Star reporter because I believed it to be the truth. The Hon. Member has made a few statements which I should like to repeat, for I believe they are quite funny. First, she said that farmers todays are happier than ever before. They appear before the Standing Committee on Agriculture to say that they are happy. Then she said that they are faced now in western Canada with the worse disaster since the Great Depression of the 1930s. I just cannot see how farmers can be so happy when they are faced, as she said, with the worse disaster since the Great Depression. Third, she emphasized that the Prime Minister can do nothing. Why ask the Prime Minister to do nothing. Canada is a very small country compared with France which is now selling much more grain than Canada, and it is certainly not as large as the United States. Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with these statements as well as with others.

A final point which she raised is that Parliament is facing very hard times, that we are wasting our time with such a debate, that we should consider other matters and stop talking about this problem for which she feels there is no solution or at least about which the Prime Minister can do nothing.

• (1510)

[English]

There are no farms in my riding. There are no farmers living there. I am a city slicker, I suppose you could say. Why would someone from the city want to stand up and participate in a debate like this? I would like to begin by putting a marker on the farming industry of this country on behalf of city people.

We in the cities of Canada are very proud of our agricultural community. We are proud of the fact that this is a great agricultural power. We are disturbed to hear that France now produces more wheat than Canada. We are concerned that the price of wheat dropped 20 per cent this year after dropping 18 per cent last year.

We look across our country and see an industry hurting and people suffering. Yet we hear government supporters saying there is nothing that can be done about it. There is nothing the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) can do. They have given the farmers $1 billion and they should be content with that. That is not enough.

We in the cities of this country are not satisfied and we do not accept the fact that the Government just this week announced that foreclosures will begin on farmers who have defaulted on government-financed loans. We are taxpayers just as they are, but we do not accept that. We do not think the Government should be making the situation of the farmers worse and worse at a time when the Government has failed to announce whether there will be deficiency payments or not. You cannot expect a farmer in this terrible plight to just roll along, as in the 1930s, and go looking for private financing while being unable to tell the banks or the co-ops or the mortgage companies that there is going to be a deficiency payment and what it is going to be.

Another thing we know about farmers is that they are the biggest risk-takers in the public interest in the whole of the economy. I do not know a businessman or a worker in urban areas who takes the kind of risk that the farmer does. He has to decide whether to plant, what to plant and how much to plant. He has to sit back not knowing what his interest rate will be or the exchange rate on the Japanese yen, French franc or American dollar. He does not know what the weather will be. One or two rainfalls at the wrong time can make all the difference. Yet the agricultural sector takes those chances year after year with the backing of the Government, the Canadian Wheat Board and the backing of a certain set of policies which, to a certain extent, subsidize the risk they take. Yet this year, after a terrible year last year, the rug is pulled out from under them by the Government. City people, although we are not direct sufferers in the situation, do not like it, do not agree with it, and do not accept it.

I would now like to come to the Hon. Member's point concerning Parliament. Because there were not many Members on either side of the House at the time, I had the distinction of hearing the whole speech by the Prime Minister this morning.

An Hon. Member: A good speech.

Mr. Kaplan: It was a good speech. You could say it was a speech I listened to from one end to the other. However, what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) does not realize is that speaking is not good enough. It is not good enough for him to stand up and tell us what is wrong with us. It is not good enough to go on at great length insulting the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). That is not what Canadians want from the Prime Minister.

I agree that Parliament is a place where talking goes on. The opposition Parties talk; they have criticisms, ideas and questions. Yet there is only one Party here that can act—the government Party. After the last election that Party came into office with 211 seats and with promises to solve all the problems of the country, particularly those of the west were there is a deep sense of grievance. The Government brought with it from the west the great hope that its concerns were going to be the concerns of the Government.

I heard every government Member who stood up criticize Mr. Trudeau for asking, why should I sell your wheat? He said it. I read it after he said it. However, the Government of Mr. Trudeau sold wheat. He asked, why should I sell your wheat? He then went on to sell it in record volumes year after year after year. So much for talk. That Government is doing nothing but talk.

The only reason the opposition Parties are dragging this on is to get the Government to do something. What are we getting? The Government is not doing something. It is telling the country how terrible we and the NDP are, how terrible are the policies of the past. The Government is telling the Canadian people how much it loves the farmers. Every speaker has said that the farmers are the backbone of the nation, that we count on the industry, that farmers are needed, that we have a special mandate as a country to produce grain better than other countries who can do it only with subsidies. Yet what are we doing about it? Nothing.

We have to keep this up in spite of the objections of the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) until the Government stops talking and starts acting. It is the Party with the mandate to act. We are the ones, if you like, with the mandate to criticize, to make proposals, to carry on a debate, to surrender Question Period for a day to make a point. It is the Government that has to act.

We call on the Government to act. Not to tell us things which in its opinion have brought us to the situation we are in, things that we should have done while we were the Government, things that the NDP are doing or not doing in relation to the Liberals.

What does that have to do with the plight of farmers in western Canada who were told by the Government that they would be represented in this House and who have been betrayed in this one week by the opening of the door to a foreclosure process on government mortgages and a refusal to indicate whether there will be a deficiency payment and what that payment is going to be?

This is a terrible time for farmers. This morning my Leader referred to some figures dealing with what it means to a farmer to be paying interest at current rates. Members opposite jumped up and reminded us what interest rates used to be in the past. In some years they have been higher. However, there has not been a year when the real rate of interest paid by farmers over the Consumer Price Index at an annualized rate has been higher. In other words, the real interest rate that the farmers of Canada are paying on these mortgages is very, very high and growing. The Government has to take account of that as well, but it is not doing so. It is not looking at the burden farmers have to bear.

I listened with interest as well to the Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte (Mr. McCain) when he talked about how the farm situation was so terrible that we just had to let some farmers go down the drain. He said we just had to recognize that there would be farmers who would go down, family farms which would have to fold. That is just not good enough for the Government. That is fine for him to have as his opinion; people have opinions like that, but that is farmland which can be used.

The process of foreclosure and sale which is now being contemplated by the FCC will only result in some other farmer being on that land after the legal process is over. That is unfair, uncaring and wrong from a Government which made so many promises and has had so much support from western Canada.

The Government must do more. Before this debate is over it must stand up and put something concrete on the table, rather than this continuous criticism of us and this obsession about what is wrong with the NDP. The Government must put something on the table to support the farming industry which put so much confidence and faith in the Government.

I was looking at the story of the sugar-beet industry before I came in here. This is another example of a western agricultural application by a Government which gave that sector so much promise. The Conservative Government claims to be committed to western farmers, yet has still reached no agreement with the Manitoba sugar-beet farmers. They are at loggerheads. The farmers have done no seeding yet this year, or at least they had not a week ago when this material was prepared.

What excuse is there for the Government not getting on with solving the problems of the sugar-beet industry and the other problems which are being referred to by so many of us so well? As I keep saying, we can refer to them but only the Government can do something about them. The time is now, today, for the Government to do something about them.

The Prime Minister wanted us to realize, and he explained very well, that there are a lot of international problems, that other countries are subsidizing their industry. I am not in favour of a world solution which will result in over-production and over-subsidization. That does not make sense to anyone. I understand that the Prime Minister wants to have such a policy ended in whatever countries practise it. However, Canada must recognize that until that is done, that is the kind of world we are in, that is the kind of international market in which our farmers are producing. If the competition is subsidizing their farmers and their production, I do not see how we can escape helping our own industry in the same measure.

A few weeks ago the most important politician in the world addressed this Chamber; the President of the United States. The United States is a great friend of ours and a great competitor of ours in a lot of industries including agriculture. The Prime Minister has made a great deal of the importance of having a good relationship with the United States and with the President of the United States. Canada has already paid a pretty high price to obtain, for the Prime Minister, that so-called good relationship with the President of the United States.

The United States can be criticized for a number of its policies in the agricultural field, policies which actually violate agreements which the United States has entered into and undertakings which the United States has given. One would have expected that the Prime Minister, who wants to help the agricultural industry in Canada and do no more subsidizing than he has to, would be working hard to get Canada's competitors, such as the United States, to reduce their unfair subsidies and unfair support and trade programs which are damaging the Canadian agricultural industry.

We heard the most important politician in the world stand in this place, make a long speech and say not one word about agriculture, not one word about wheat, nothing to indicate that the Prime Minister of Canada had made the point to him that our agricultural industry was suffering from unfair American policies, or even that the Prime Minister had raised the subject with him.

We know that Canadians have brought a long grievance list to the attention of American legislators. I want to draw your attention to a document put out recently by our Embassy in Washington. It is an unclassified document in which Ambassador Gotlieb makes point after point, in black and white, as clear as can be, ways in which the United States is unfairly competing with the Canadian agricultural industry. For example, with regard to food assistance, Section 616 of the American legislation provides that the American Secretary of Agriculture shall require that, in each food assistance agreement with a foreign country, the recipient country agree to give preference to the United States in future food purchases. That is in violation of a number of international commitments, as the Ambassador says, including the principles of the Food and Agricultural Organization of Surplus Disposal and the Wheat Trade Convention under the International Wheat Agreement.

Did the Prime Minister raise that with the President of the United States when he was in town? We do not know, but we do know that the Americans are not doing anything about it. They have decided not to act and not to respond.

With regard to export enhancement, Section 622 of that same statute would extend the Export Enhancement Program, an export subsidy, for an additional two years, and the Americans are giving it an extra $1 billion in funding. Our Ambassador tells anyone who will listen to him that this measure will continue to depress world agricultural prices and increase the pressure on other countries to strengthen their own support measures. Our Ambassador says that Canada will not allow its traditional markets to be eroded through the use of such export subsidies of other countries, in this case, an export subsidy of the United States.

The Government has failed in many, many ways. It has failed the people who sent it to office. It has failed to keep its most important promises. It has failed to help its friends, because the agricultural industry in western Canada has certainly been a great friend and supporter of the Prime Minister and the Conservative Party. Today is the day that the Government should show that it cares and will not allow this industry to continue to suffer.

I see that my time is up, but I want to assure the Prime Minister that city people will not object and will not complain if he takes steps to bring the agricultural industry of western Canada through these tough, tough Tory times.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to explain our policies, the policies of the New Democratic Party, with respect to our farmers, both in western Canada and in Quebec.

Following numerous discussions with my party colleagues, I realized that basically, the problems facing Western farmers are the same as those facing farmers in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I also realized that my Party, the New Democratic Party, speaks for all Canadian farmers and is a Party that is historically rooted in the agricultural movement.

It is a fact that one out of every four Canadian farmers is facing serious financial problems. Today, and this has been going on for a number of years, we have a very serious crisis facing farm families and entire farming communities. We know that with free trade, the situation can only get worse. In fact, representations made by the Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec were most emphatic in this respect. I have met with UPA representatives in my office in Repentigny, the riding of Terrebonne, and also in Ottawa. I can say that their fears are entirely justified, and that as far as our party is concerned, we fully support their concerns. Free trade will have a direct impact on the entire marketing board system—

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) whether I may ask him a question?

• (1530)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No, I am sorry but I cannot allow any questions at this time. That is not a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Toupin: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, free trade will have a direct impact on the whole marketing board system. The direct impact will be felt by dairy producers in Quebec as much as by western farmers who need the Canadian Wheat Board. Free trade will have dire consequences for Quebec farmers in particular. This is why I entertain many doubts, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to say that there has been some double talk from the word go. In Quebec we talk about free trade, whereas the Government of Canada talks about freer trade. To put it another way, from the outset the Conservative Government has been using double talk, referring to free trade in Quebec and to freer trade in the other provinces of Canada.

Second, therefore, like all Quebec and Canadian farmers, I believe that all Canadians are entitled to know the basic facts concerning free or freer trade. Let me explain. Some economists will divide the various industries into 34 groups, more or less. What is needed before we take a position, contrary to what the Conservative Government is doing, is to know for each industry, first what firms cannot survive free trade, what firms or groups of firms will need an adaptation period to survive, and what firms can compete immediately. Then, at the level of each category of business and each particular business, we must know the human costs, which is the most important factor—the number of jobs that will be lost in any given industry, in any group of firms, in any given firm. Also, how many new jobs will be created, in order to make a value judgment.

Mr. Speaker, why have this debate today? Simply because the Conservative Government decided to lift the Farm Credit Corporation's moratorium on foreclosures, which in principle was to be effective this coming Friday.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we know that the banks in turn will now be in a position to foreclose on those farm loans. All they will need to do is follow the example set by the Farm Credit Corporation, in other words this Tory Government.

We also know that the price of wheat has come down 18 per cent this year, after declining some 20 per cent last year, and that, very soon if this is not already the case, prices will no longer cover production costs.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian farmers, Quebec farmers are going through a most difficult period. I feel that as a Government, in the case of such a basic industry as farming, we must take all the steps needed to save our farmers, to save our family farms and to save that industry. We in the New Democratic Party, are saying that the Canadian Government must give farmers the assurance that their return this year will not be lower than it was last year. The agricultural economy of western Canada, the farmers' families and communities of western Canada, must be protected. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Quebec farmers and the Quebec farm community are aware of the seriousness of the situation, not only for themselves, but also for their fellow farmers in western Canada and that they sympathize with them.

Quebec farmers also know that a solution has to be found to the problem of our debt, a $25 billion burden in Canada for our farmers. We know, and they know, that the problem of excessive interest rates for farmers is unjustified. In that respect, I wish to emphasize that about a year and a half or two years ago, in the Finance Committee, at about the same time in the House of Commons, we dealt with a number of specific points with respect to farmers, including Section 31 of the Act which deals with part-time farmers. We had suggested a number of solutions to help them.

There was also the tricky question of funding for Canadian farmers, in particular the matter of interest rates. There had been some discussion on a tax measure, an inadequate one by the way, which had been developed in the United States but which would not have been profitable to Canadian farmers because of a fiscal loss, and which was rejected. We had however suggested a direct approach by saying that to help our farmers, in Quebec as well as in western Canada, the Farm Credit Corporation should be allowed to take direct action by charging appropriate and reduced interest rates.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, one farmer out of four is faced with serious financial difficulties. I ask the Conservative Government: What will happen to them after the moratorium is lifted? What will the banks do? Follow the example of the Conservative Government?

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the farmers' debt load is too high. It must be reduced, and that is what our Party, the New Democratic Party of Canada, advocates.

I am proud, Mr. Speaker, to be taking part in this debate today, a debate that went on all night. I may point out that none of the Liberals saw fit to come and defend Canada's farmers, western farmers.

An Hon. Member: Right on!

Mr. Toupin: One of my colleagues says: Right on! And it is the truth.

• (1540)

I also want to say that the problems of western farmers are very similar to the problems of farmers in Quebec. As a French-speaking Quebecer, I also want to say that French-Canadians, including farmers, whether they live in northern Alberta, Manitoba or Saskatchewan, in Laflèche, St. Paul, St. Albert, Gravelbourg or elsewhere, have not been forgotten by the farmers and the people of Quebec, and that they can count on our support and the support of our Party.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the New Democratic Party of Canada, that its members, defended the interests of farmers yesterday, last night and today, as they have for so many years, and that we will continue to defend the interests of farmers in the west, in Quebec, in Ontario or in any other province. It is now up to the Government to listen to us and to act accordingly.

CANADIAN GRAINS CRISIS

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise the House that there have been consultations with the House Leaders, and it has been agreed that the House should resume consideration of the current crisis facing Canadian grain producers. The question now before the House is that of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That this House do now adjourn.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hovdebo:

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King).

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly delighted to have this opportunity to join in this debate today.

Mr. Gauthier: Where were you yesterday?

Mr. King: I was frustrated in my desire to speak yesterday by the inability of the Opposition, which raised the question in the first place, to provide a speaker to maintain the debate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. King: It is rather ironic that the New Democratic Party which introduced the debate could not have someone here to carry it on. I am delighted to have this opportunity and I appreciate the effort.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): He is still not standing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that all Hon. Members will want, after all the events of the recent day or so, to hear the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King). I just want the House to know that I see the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the fog has cleared today—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: —and the view from the Chair is clearer.

I want to point out to the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King) that, in fact, I was standing in my place yesterday afternoon before we had that six second dash.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has raised an important matter, but I do not think it is a point of order. It is probably a matter for debate. The Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen.

Mr. King: It is not only irrelevant, it is untrue, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. King: I think it ironic that we are here today—

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen really means to say that other Members, remembrance of events past is perhaps not as accurate as they might be. The Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. King: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the revised wording. It would be laughable, if the subject were not so difficult for many Canadians, to hear members of the Liberal caucus sitting opposite talking with such feigned concern about agriculture and about the west.

Even the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) got into the act, making a case for everything that he failed to do in the period in which he led a Government that totally failed agriculture and totally failed the West in so many critical areas of economic activity. His speech yesterday can only be treated with a degree of cynicism that it so richly deserves. We do not need to go back to former Prime Minister Trudeau's disparaging and insulting remarks to western farmers, remarks that defined his personal attitude and that of the Liberal Party toward exercising some of the responsibility that they had to the west and to farmers. That Government chose to turn its back on both the west and its farmers, just as it did when its policies brought about interest rates of 22 per cent and higher, which really is the root cause of the difficulties plaguing agriculture and many other segments of our economic society.

Yesterday we heard the Leader of the Opposition complaining bitterly that Farm Credit Corporation rates are averaging 11 per cent. I would like to ask what action came from his Government to help farmers locked into contracts with 16.75 per cent interest. What did the Leader of the Opposition do when it was within his power as Prime Minister to do something to assist those farmers that he is now so zealous in defending? The answer is nothing. Neither he nor the Liberal Government he led did anything. It was the Government of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who, together with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) looked at those terribly high interest rates that Liberal policy had brought about and who took the action to reduce the rate for all those farmers who were locked in at 16.75 per cent interest. That is only one of the many positive actions which the Hon. Minister of Agriculture has brought to bear on the critical pressures which threaten agriculture in Canada.

If time permits I will talk later about the many varied positive actions which the Mulroney Government has taken in support of agriculture and in support of farmers. The point which has to be made is that every one of these supportive actions by the Mulroney Government could have been taken months and years ago by the Liberal Government which preceded the Mulroney Government. The problems existed then. In fact, it was Liberal policy that produced the most damaging of these problems. The problems existed but the Liberals did not have the will to address them. They refused to accept responsibility when they were in office.

• (1110)

Yesterday the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) said some things that I think should be noted. He said that when the former Liberal Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Whelan, was asked when the Liberal Government would do something for farmers facing disaster as a result of interest rates that went up beyond 22 per cent, the Liberal Minister of Agriculture responded by saying: "soon, soon". The Liberal Government never did provide the relief that farmers sought.

Mr. Taylor: Soon never came.

Mr. King: The "soon, soon," of Mr. Whelan, the former Liberal Minister of Agriculture, was in reality: "never, never". There was no relief from the Liberal Government under Prime Minister Trudeau nor under the Prime Minister who succeeded him.

I would like to add my voice to that of the Hon. Member for Bow River in evidence that will add to the growing body of cynicism which surrounds the statements made in this debate originating from Liberal benches. Yesterday the Liberal Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) said that "speaking is not good enough and that there is only one Party that can act, and that is the Government". He said that "only the Government can do something".

The fruit growers in British Columbia shower apples upon the Members of the House of Commons annually. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you profit and benefit from them. Those fruit growers from British Columbia's Okanagan Valley would say that it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member for York Centre could not yesterday have spoken with some retroactive effect. Where was the voice of York Centre when Okanagan farmers were asking the Liberal Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. Eugene Whelan, to honour the obligations under the stabilization Act which the Act imposes for commodities designated in it?

When I repeatedly brought to Mr. Whelan's attention the matter of a deficiency payment for Okanagan orchardists, a deficiency payment which would be triggered by the disastrous 1983 prices for soft fruits including peaches, apricots and cherries, the answer I received was "no", even though Mr. Gerald Geen, the President of the fruit growers' association, and I raised it personally with Mr. Whelan. The Liberal Government would not make that payment even though disaster faced many farmers as a result of the disastrous prices that returned only 20 per cent of the cost of production to those farmers I represent. Mr. Whelan said in the House and to me: "We aren't going to pay".

Contrast that with the action taken by the present Minister of Agriculture when this Government took office. The Minister of Agriculture reversed that unworthy decision and made that very substantial payment after the people of Canada had the good sense to put the Progressive Conservative Government in place. By that single action, the people of Canada provided Canadian agriculture a benefit unequalled in the history of Canada. Never has agriculture received so much legislative, policy and Treasury attention from Ottawa.

Let me read from the March 1987 issue of the magazine entitled the British Columbia Orchardist. The President of the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association, Gerald Geen, who represents some 2,000 farmers concentrated in the Okanagan, Similkameen and Creston Valleys, wrote the following in response to the $4.5 million payment made recently to apple producers in the area:

> The really good news is that the federal government has just announced that stabilization payments will be made to Canadian apple growers for their 1983 and 1984 apple crops.

He went on to say the following:

> I can tell you that our industry has had very positive support on this matter from the Prime Minister and one of his senior policy advisors who last summer spent two days with me in the Okanagan; Right Hon. Joe Clark, Secretary of State for External Affairs who met with Fred King, Martin Linder and myself last August; Hon. Michael Wilson, Minister of Finance; Hon. Pat Carney, Minister for International Trade; Hon. John Crosbie, Minister of Transportation; Hon. Tom Siddon, Minister of Fisheries and Oceans; Hon. Frank Oberle, Minister of State (Science and Technology), several other key Cabinet Ministers and the entire B.C. Conservative Caucus.
> I especially want to recognize the Minister of Agriculture, Hon. John Wise, and his assistant Mr. John Donald, for vigorously supporting our request for stabilization during the last twelve months . . . On behalf of our apple growers,

I want to thank everyone at the federal government level who has in any way assisted our industry in getting this payment. Your efforts are very much appreciated. The forthcoming funds are very much needed by our producers.

I read that into the record because I want to emphasize the fact that despite what is coming from the benches opposite, Canadian farmers know the facts and the facts are that they and their difficulties are receiving more attention from this Government under the Right Hon. Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) than any other Government has provided to agriculture in Canada.

On Tuesday of this week, the Hon. Minister of Agriculture was in the riding I represent, Okanagan—Similkameen, to open officially the new $24 million Agriculture Canada Research Centre. More than 1,500 citizens of the area were there to demonstrate the popular support which the Summerland Experimental Station as it was called in 1914 when it was established, has earned from farmers in all of British Columbia.

• (1120)

As I have already mentioned, Mr. Speaker, I have often brought with me apples to distribute to Members of Parliament—

An Hon. Member: And cherries.

Mr. King: And cherries, and apricots, and peaches—

An Hon. Member: And wine?

Mr. King: All of the tremendous produce that comes from the Okanagan Valley. One apple that gets great attention here is the Spartan apple, a strain that was developed at the Summerland Experimental Station. It is a beautiful red apple, a cross between a McIntosh and a Newton. I know that it is one of your favourites, Mr. Speaker.

As I say, the Spartan apple was developed at the Summerland Research Station. You may consider it Agriculture Canada's contribution to your well-being, Mr. Speaker. But that facility is also involved in fruit processing techniques, in controlled atmosphere storage research, and other areas.

I heard the other day about a tremendous new facility that is going up in the Province of Ontario that will keep apples for a full year without deterioration. The Summerland Research Station has been involved in that type of work for 30 years, and such facilities have existed in the Okanagan Valley for 25 years at least. In fact, we have controlled atmosphere storage for something like two million bushels of apples in place in the Okanagan Valley.

The reason the Okanagan is at the forefront of horticultural technology is the Summerland Experimental Station and the efforts that the federal Government has put into research at that facility.

Low volume orchard spraying—something which every environmentalist in Canada should rise up and cheer—also owes its development to the Summerland Experimental Station of Agriculture Canada, as do the new irrigation techniques that are in use.

The Okanagan area has average annual precipitation of only 10 inches. Without irrigation, nothing could be grown. Water for irrigation is a precious commodity and something which must be used judiciously, and toward that end, the Summerland Experimental Station has assisted farmers in the Okanagan in developing water saving techniques.

It is important that we point out what Agriculture Canada is doing for farmers in this country, and particularly the degree of attention the Minister of Agriculture has devoted to research in agriculture.

Let me just take a moment to outline for you some of the programs and expenditures this Government, under the direction of the Minister, has been engaged in.

At Vegreville, Alberta, we had an expenditure of $4.57 million for construction and research into soil quality; in Quebec, an experimental farm complex at a cost of $6.1 million; in London, Ontario, $16 million for an office-laboratory complex; at L'Assomption, Quebec, $8.5 million for research facilities to find alternate crops for tobacco growers; at Big River, Saskatchewan, $1.5 million for expansion of the Provincial Forest Nursery; again in Saskatchewan, $577 million for the expansion of a livestock centre; at the Lacombe Research Station, Alberta, $210,000 for library facilities and a conference room; at St-Jean-sur-Richelieu, Quebec, $16 million for an office-laboratory complex; at Lethbridge, Alberta, $22.3 million on the Animal Disease Research Institute; at Guelph, Ontario, $2.7 million for a new animal pathology laboratory; at St. Hyacinthe, Quebec, $17 million for a pathology laboratory; and in Nepean, Ontario, $33.6 million for an Animal Research Center office-laboratory complex.

When you add to those expenditures the $24 million that has been spent at the Summerland Experimental Station, total expenditures amount to some $150 million. The expenditures of Agriculture Canada on research funding are projected to be $240 million for 1986-87.

To my mind there has been a degree of confusion brought about by the Opposition as to the effect of the lifting of this moratorium. I think it needs to be made clear that the moratorium that was in place is one that applied only to contracts with the Farm Credit Corporation. It did not apply in respect of loans or mortgages held by private sector lending institutions.

The moratorium is unsustainable forever. There is probably no time at which it could be lifted without someone being affected. It is for that reason that it was put into place in the first place.

The Government has now put into place farm debt review boards and the Rural Transition Program, both of which will be effective in easing the problems associated with the lifting of the moratorium. The moratorium itself was not designed to eliminate these problems; rather, it merely provided some breathing space.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is drawing to a close. I wanted to talk a little more about Spartan apples. Given the time constraints, I shall just have to bring you one and demonstrate in that way what it is I am talking about.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am glad today to be able to join in the debate on the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) concerning the crisis in the grain industry—

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), on a point of order.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I understood that the rotation for this debate was to go from a government Member to the Official Opposition, and then back to the Government, and then back to the Official Opposition.

The NDP put up a speaker last, and then the House was adjourned. I should think today it would have been appropriate to have gone to a government speaker and then back to the Official Opposition. The Hon. Member who is standing now is—

Some Hon. Members: It would be appropriate for you to sit down. The Speaker is standing in his place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All I can say is that I call them as I see them. The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River is now being called.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, a deepening crisis has been developing on Canadian farms over the past two years. Nowhere is this more evident or more serious that in the grain economy of western Canada.

We are, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, engaged in the world today in a form of trade war that is particularly vicious and one in which Canada is, in one sense, the main victim and, in another sense, has no alternative but to participate.

The export subsidy war between the European Economic Community and the United States has caused prices for Canadian grains to plummet. Prices dropped 20 per cent last year, and a further 18 per cent drop for the 1987-88 crop year was announced by the Canadian Wheat Board last week.

Who among us, Mr. Speaker, could face a cumulative reduction in our incomes over a two-year period of something in the order of 40 per cent? I say that, of course, in the context of a small business operation, which most Canadian grain farms are, and in the context of having fixed costs, many of which have risen dramatically over the years leading up to the drop in revenues. We are all aware of the rising tide in interest rates that engulfed farms in western Canada in the early 1980s; we are all aware of the rising costs of energy, fertilization and labour for farming operations. Yet, while these costs were rising, farmers, for the last two crop years, have faced what can only be described as reductions on a disastrous scale.

On Monday last, with perhaps the worst timing possible, with farmers already under severe stress, the Government announced that on Tuesday, the very next day, the Farm Credit Corporation would once again be permitted to foreclose on family farms. The moratorium that had been in place for 18 months was being lifted.

I should point out that the Farm Credit Corporation is, after all, seen very much as the bellwether and leader in terms of farm lending. Everyone in this House knows what happens when one bank raises its mortgage rates. When this happens all the other banks follow suit. I think it can be anticipated, and the Government must surely expect no other consequence, that other lenders to farmers will take this as a signal that it is again open season on farm foreclosures.

The Government has refused to make a commitment to a deficiency payment program in the forthcoming crop year. It says that those sorts of announcements will come at the appropriate time. That time is now. Farmers are traditionally, and I believe never more than today, plain-spoken people who understand the facts and know what is going on. In plain talk, a deficiency payment program is a subsidy. Some people would call it a hand-out and farmers would much rather make their income on a market system which provides them with a price return for their commodities than accept a subsidy on the production of those crops.

What we are calling for, and not because this Party has any ideological commitment to subsidies, not because we believe that the farm economy and the grain war can be sustained indefinitely in the face of what has been happening, but simply because this Party understands that it is a case of survival for western grain farmers and the western grain industry, is a commitment to provide Canadian grain farmers with at least a guarantee that the total receipts for crops this year will equal those of the last crop year.

In doing so it is obvious, I think, that we ourselves and those others who support such a move are not taking this on as some sort of welfare commitment, but are very seriously addressing the short-term remedy for the Canadian grain farming situation, without which short-term remedy we will never have the opportunity to bring in the long-term solutions which, of course, can be the only solutions for the grain economy.

As Oscar Wilde observed, in the long run we are all dead, but Canadian farmers may not survive the short run. They are very willing to absorb the impact of inflation and the increase in other price factors if only they could have a guarantee from the Government on the revenue return to the farmers.

We are not bringing this motion forward in some spirit of partisan and unreserved condemnation of the Government's total approach to the farm economy because we do understand that there have been some worth-while initiatives introduced and some worthwhile accomplishments. We know that the Government is working hard on the international front. Any Canadian Government would, because the anarchy, the discounting and the marketing manoeuvres that are being carried on at the moment in the world grain market can only lead to further chaos if measures are not taken to restrain them.

We know that the Government understands also that the grain export economy is, if you like, to a large degree the mirror image of the agricultural situation in the Third World and in less developed parts of the Second World. We know, after all, that Canadian grain should never be sold or distributed in such a way as to affect the viability of the Third World farmer because, without the opportunity for the Third World farmer to produce her crop and sell her crop for a cash return, and also to use her crop to nourish her family, those who took that opportunity away would be guilty of a crime against humanity which would have the most profoundly sincere consequences in the Third World.

This Party does not say that the Government has totally failed to assist the farm sector in recent months. We question very much the Rural Transition Program. We know that something useful at least has been accomplished through the debt review boards and we know that the Government has consulted with farm organizations, although often the effects of having listened are more evident in the breach than in the materialization. I return again to the fact that government assistance has not been adequate and will not be adequate without new announcements to ensure the short-term survival of the western grain economy in order for it to be able to take advantage of the opportunities which still exist to be taken advantage of in western Canada.

The alternatives to a deficiency payment program, the alternatives to other adjustment measures, are indeed no alternatives. Without an announcement from the Government we will be looking at widespread bankruptcy. We would be looking not simply at economic dislocation, not simply at unemployment which, after all, is something which, regrettable though it is, many of us have some experience with and which we as a society have measures both to combat and to ease the short-term difficulties therein entailed, but at something as serious as bankruptcy and unemployment. The seriousness is doubled by the very fact that it means the end of a way of life for anyone in western Canada who is forced off his farm by the lack of assistance forthcoming from the Government.

We know that stress increases on individuals in direct proportion to the number and magnitude of changes that they have to undergo in their lives. If we allow the western grain farmer to be subjected to the stress of bankruptcy, unemployment and relocation all at once, we will see people who are stressed beyond belief, stressed beyond the comprehension of you, me, or any of us, and perhaps stressed beyond their limits to sustain themselves in the face of that sort of trial.

We would be looking not only at the disappearance in the less prosperous parts of grain producing western Canada of the farms, but also at the disappearance of the entire rural community. That includes bank branches, lawyers, doctors and the co-ops and credit unions which built western Canada and enabled farmers to build up farm economies in the first place. Perhaps even more serious than those consequences, it would bring about, of course, the complete absence of soil stewardship.

Sometimes when I travel from the farm areas of my riding I travel through farming areas of Manitoba. I am often impressed by the scale of those operations and, in some way, a little envious for my own farmers who must contend with a much smaller market, who are generally much more diversified than farming only a single commodity, whether it be grain or potatoes, and who have themselves been facing many, many trials over the past few years which the provincial Government has been somewhat reluctant to assist them with and which, unfortunately, because they are not grain farmers, federal programs have also not touched on very much either. My farmers are in a serious condition but they understand that because the average western farmer does not have access to alternative employment opportunities, does not have access to the wood lots which are available to northwestern Ontario farmers. It is the western grain farmer who is in the worst situation.

In talking of soil stewardship, let me say that last week-end was a fairly windy one in western Canada. As I drove down the highway I could see topsoil blowing off at a time of the year when it would normally be nicely fixed in place even if it had been tilled. The fact is that when there is an agricultural depression, the future prospects of the agricultural economy are drastically diminished by the farmers' inability to conserve his soil.

The Government has provided some assistance, but on the other hand, it has allowed the input cost to farmers to rise. As a result of the announcement of the discontinuance of the moratorium perhaps during the worst time of the year, in spring, we face a very serious situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canadian farmers are saddled with a $25 billion debt. We know—and they know—that the interest rates set by the Liberal Government are too high and that farmers simply cannot survive.

[English]

Let me deal with the long run solutions for the farm economy, because without alternative markets for those crops there will be farmers who will go out of production. Some months ago I had the pleasure to participate in the Energy Committee's investigation of fuel alcohol. I was struck by the strong desire of some sectors of Canadian agriculture to link their grain surplus problem with the country's energy situation, particularly in respect of gasoline supply.

There have been corporate announcements of imminent petrochemical solutions to gasoline lead octane problems, but I believe from the evidence I have seen that there are biochemical and biomechanical solutions available that could utilize grain production in western Canada as a feedstock. This could strengthen the price of grain that is sold for food and thus enable our farmers to dig themselves out of the hole in which they find themselves.

Will the Government let our mostly foreign-owned oil refining industry turn its back on Canadian farmers, or will the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), who has a grain ethanol plant producing in his riding, take some action to ensure that the octane requirements of Canada's future production streams are met in a way that provides an economic opportunity and future for Canadian farmers?

Fuel ethanol has been available in Canada for six years. It will be one year ago tomorrow that the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources produced a report that favoured a 5 per cent to 3 per cent blend of ethanol and methanol, not only in order to reduce Canada's reliance on imported additives, but also to help farmers of western Canada with a new crop market. Nothing has been done. We understand that some low-level studies have been conducted within the Canadian Wheat Board, but the fact is that the Government must take action because it knows a solution is available and that there are remedies to help the western farmers with another market for their grains.

The fact is that the Government has sold out the farm economy indirectly to the multinational oil interests. Everyone should realize that there is no free market in petroleum production within Canada. There is no free market in refined gasolines. By making the policy decision that the so-called free market would decide, the Government is on the verge of cutting off a major economic opportunity for Canadian farmers and giving it, instead, to the multinational oil companies. Furthermore, this is in a form that will create very few jobs and will essentially keep that centralized control so much favoured by the multinationals.

We are told that there are imminent investments in the MTBE plant of $275 million each for a plant in western Canada and a plant in eastern Canada, creating 100 jobs each. That is the sort of solution to Canada's octane shortage that this country simply cannot afford because when the remedies are technically available in a new and developing technology that still has its economy of scale and has its efficiency and effectiveness developments before it, we would be very poor Canadians if we were to sell such an opportunity to the already excessively dominated multinational oil industry.

Supply concerns of the 1970s in the United States prompted federal and state tax incentives, and a large independent refining industry controlling half of U.S. capacity, which is something that does not exist here, co-operated with the move to introduce ethanol into the fuel stream. Canadian production today is the same as it was in 1981, unfortunately, when Mohawk Oil recommissioned a 7.2 million litre a year distillery in Minnedosa and began selling that 10 per cent blend. Why is that 10 per cent blend not available right across the country? Why are Canadian farmers being denied the possibility of $200 million, or $400 million or $500 million a year in additional revenue, even just in the short term, with the 5 per cent—3 per cent and 10 per cent ethanol blends that would be marketed and commercialized virtually immediately?

Recent bipartisan moves in the United States Congress and administration may soon mandate oxygenated fuels, ethanol and methanol to help meet the 1987 Clean Air Act standards. That policy is supported by 46 United States Senators, Republican and Democrat, and by Vice-President Bush, who of course has aspirations to the presidency himself.

Whether or not that happens, North American oil refiners have to fill an emerging octane gap, estimated at possibly over $10 billion a year, with lead replacers of their choice and not necessarily the public's choice.

Canadian Government and parliamentary support for pro-ethanol forces in this country as well as world-wide could help tip the scales in favour of the biochemical option for lead removal and to reduce other emissions. Ethanol is a fuel that is well known and presents very few environmental risks. Of course, it has great economic potential.

You are signalling that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I could have talked for much longer and I hope to have a further opportunity to talk on the possibilities and the potential that ethanol has for Canadian farmers, particularly Canadian grain farmers. More jobs will be created throughout Canada, more Canadian farmers will be able to keep farming and be profitable. International success in ethanol production could help strengthen world grain prices and we could keep the Canadian western grain economy going, if the Government had but the vision to use its legislative powers toward that end.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, although I acknowledge the vital import of the agricultural producers' great contribution towards feeding Canadians, as well as their right to earn a decent living and to get a fair price for their products, I must admit that the intricacies of agricultural production, particularly wheat, fall somewhat beyond the scope of my expertise. As you would know, Mr. Speaker, I feel more at home when dealing with communications and cultural matters. CBC listeners can often hear programs concerning farmers, and I can assure you that the day-to-day problems of the farm community are often explored not only on these programs but also in the course of educational and regional programs. A current topic has been the 18 per cent drop in the price of wheat and the definite possibility that agricultural producers may very well lose both their farms and their homes.

Mr. Speaker, you also know that I used to be the critic on the status of women, and we were made vividly aware of the very serious situation of Mrs. Irene Murdoch and the discrimination she experienced when the court ruling did not give her any recognition for all the work she had done, day in and day out, seven days a week. Since then there has been some improvement in the situation of women who happen to be full-fledged partners in the agricultural community.

I believe that we should pay homage to couples, both men and women, and their children who work very hard on farms throughout Canada.

Until now, Mr. Speaker, as a woman living in urban surroundings I was hesitant to join in this emergency debate on the agricultural crisis in Western Canada. But after listening to my colleagues in the House, even though I am not all that familiar with agricultural affairs I can still readily appreciate the human drama being played in Canadian rural homes, their sentiments of fear, anxiety and frustration.

I have often travelled through the countryside with my family to admire the scenery and the wild flowers, to pick up daisies, blueberries, strawberries and raspberries, to buy fresh and tasty farm products, to marvel at the sight of wide expanses of wheat and corn fields. Particularly in the fall, I never get tired of looking at the fairy-tale colours of the trees.

However it never occurred to me that a house-for-sale sign might indeed hide a human drama due to this Government's inadequate farm support policy. Certainly this insensitive policy of the Conservative Government cannot be the result of laziness on the part of farmers, the lack of motivation, the long hours of work, a reduced budget. Quite the contrary, farmers are so anxious and so proud to preserve the heritage which in many cases was left to them by their ancestors that they do not think twice about toiling under very harsh conditions and making do with aid programs which fall far short and might even be described as being totally unacceptable.

Monday's announcement by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) that the Farm Credit Corporation of Canada would lift the moratorium declared on September, 1985, with respect to foreclosures on bankrupt farms has created utter distress for hundreds of owners of small and medium-size farms, leading them to despair, family violence and, in some cases, suicide.

[English]

It has become quite evident through the course of this urgent debate that a long-term vision of society is absolutely critical in order to arrive at the short-term remedial steps required at this time. If we as Canadians value the family farm, its stability, its place in the grand design of our society, then the necessary fiscal measures must be taken to enable farmers to survive this crisis.

On the international stage the grain subsidy situation is being fully addressed and increased efforts are being made to restore sanity in international grain markets. However, my Leader and my colleagues have tried to make the Government understand that just citing figures and comparing them to those of last year or the year before, boasting about how much more the Government has invested in the West's economy than the Liberals did, are not answers to the family farm crisis. They bring no solace to the individual farmer and the crisis in his family life. The way to demonstrate leadership is not to say: You did not do it and we are doing something. The way to demonstrate leadership is to come up with a plan of action.

We acknowledge that $1 billion was pumped into the agricultural economy last year. I will not go into the way it was offered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as a sort of little lollipop dangled in front of the voters in the middle of a provincial election. It was a needed support. However, because that is true it does not mean other similar steps do not have an ongoing and important place in the plans and policies and political vision of the Government. Obviously it is a Government with no vision and certainly no heart. Farm families are paying a heavy price while the Government dallies and promises schemes for diversification of the economy.

Monday's announcement of lower initial grain prices for 1987-88 indicates that the price of wheat will be down by 18 per cent and that of barley by 25 per cent. When those announcements were made the Government should have given some indication of how it intends to react to this new crisis. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma, has given this House the benefit of his wise counsel, deep commitment to and knowledge of this field. I do not pretend to have that knowledge but why can the Government not listen to our experts? It could take some direction given that it is completely lacking in any ideas of its own.

The Government has boasted of improved federal-provincial relations. If that is true, why does it not sit down with the provinces and co-operatively develop a plan to keep families on the farm in a productive capacity? Why does it not see them through this short-term crisis until it can bring forward that White Paper we have been waiting and waiting for, which obviously has no content, no concept and no political vision? Let the Government at least support the family farm which is such an important part of our heritage and our institutions. Rural family farms are revered institutions in our society. Rural communities and related industries are all in jeopardy. It is not just the farmer who is affected; it is the manufacturer of the equipment the farmer uses and the supplier of seeds and everything else needed in the ongoing operation of a farm.

The reason I am speaking in this debate is that the crisis has far-reaching social and economic implications, not just for the West but for the total economy. As I said, one cannot remain apart. We cannot live in glorious and ignorant isolation from the problems of all Canadians. We are a grand and widespread country. We have regional differences, but we are expected to address them. That is our social contract and that is what the Government has failed to do.

I think it is important that all Canadians, Francophone and Anglophone in every part of this country, pay attention to this situation. Because you live in one of the metropolitan centres across this land does not mean you can be insensitive to this crisis. We know man cannot live by bread alone, but we also know that bread is the staff of life, and that is particularly true for the western farmer.

If you have listened to some of the root causes of the problem we are addressing, as I have over these last many hours of debate, they sound like the plagues which afflicted the Egyptians: drought, grasshoppers, dust, wind, and locusts. Then we have the heavy subsidization of the U.S. and EEC farmer. We have the astronomical drop in prices, the third straight year of decline, which could mean the total return to producers will be 40 per cent lower for wheat, 45 per cent lower for oats, and barley payments below the 1984 per tonne payment. Flax seed and canola prices are lower by 34 per cent and 32 per cent respectively. One can sense the tremendous tragedy taking place and it is easy to understand the frustration and fear for survival which is being echoed behind the doors of each one of our family farms. It becomes obvious that the responsible, dedicated producers, individual farmers carrying on a family tradition or fulfilling a private dream, watch helplessly as forces beyond their control choke life out of their land and choke and close their visions of the future.

• (1200)

What does this requiem for the family farm mean in human terms? Let us consider what one of the studies that was done and reported has to say about this matter. I am reading to you, Mr. Speaker, from the Western Report of January 12, 1987, in which there appears an article entitled: "Farmers Under Stress". There is an interesting quotation from Pliny the Elder who stated:

> The agricultural population—produces the bravest men, the most valiant soldiers and a class of citizens the least given of all to evil designs.

I hope that that continues to be the motto of this sector of our society. I suggest, as the article states, that:

> Blissful, wholesome farm life, replete with golden wheat fields and rosy-cheeked dairy maidens, is the stuff of prose and poetry. In reality, being a farmer has become so trying that two University of Brandon psychologists say it is now more stressful than being a police officer or a multinational corporate executive.
> Last winter, Drs. James and Lilly Walker set out to ask 1,200 farmers what effect the poor economy was having on them. Last month the pair released the resultant report, Characteristics and Correlates of Stress Among Canadian Farm Families, at a University of Brandon conference called "Hungry for Answers—the Farm Community in Crisis." Growing food is one of Canada's most stressful occupations, they concluded. Declares the duo: "This stress is chronic and dangerous."
> The study revealed that stress symptoms such as headaches, marriage problems and irritability were three or four times more prevalent in the average farmer than in an RCMP officer three days after being involved in a shooting. What's more, the stress on the policeman is "transitory," say the authors, a "one-time event." But for farmers, the stress just goes on and on.

The Walkers went on to give some additional notes of the methodology that they used in setting up the 79-question survey which included queries about the weather, social problems like spousal neglect, workload and general worry. The article continues:

> Stress levels were partly measured by awarding points to such frequently troubling things as insufficient cash flow, debt load and rising expenses. Says Dr. James Walker: "Farmers create a lot of their own stress by being worried about the weather and prices."

That is enough for them to worry about without having to worry about poor government policy and inadequate government planning.

The great question which must be asked is the following. What should the Government do? We know that during the course of the last election campaign the Tories presented a series of 20 from-the-heart type promises. I would like to mention just three or four of them. One of the 20 was to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to offer agri-bonds so that farmers will have access to reasonably-priced funds. Has anyone heard of the Government creating agri-bonds? I think not. Another promise was to revise Section 31 of the Income Tax Act to reflect the principles of equity. There have certainly been no principles of equity mentioned in this situation. Another promise was to re-establish a long-term dairy policy. The Government cannot even bring about a short-term policy of crisis intervention, how can it even think in terms of the long term? Another promise was to expand agricultural research and development by providing greater assistance for agricultural colleges, more funding for research and development, and amending tax policy to encourage private sector investment. What has the Government done in this respect? It has closed down research facilities.

One last point I would like to bring to the attention of the House is the Prime Minister's promise to allocate the necessary funding to assist producers in refinancing their loans at current prevailing rates. What the Government has really done is to send a message to the banks to foreclose, instead of having all the banks, as well as the Federal Business Development Bank and the Farm Credit Corporation, support the worker. I have not even mentioned the fact that the Government has abolished Canagrex, a fine Crown corporation created by Mr. Eugene Whelan to market Canadian agricultural products abroad.

The Prime Minister is on his way out west. If he is going to be visiting Red Deer and Lethbridge, Alberta, North Battleford, Moose Jaw and Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, and Winnipeg, Manitoba between Wednesday and Friday of next week, I would like to ask him to deliver the following message on his trip. I suggest he use his marvelous hyperbole in a constructive way at that time. First, let him reinstate the FCC moratorium on farm foreclosures and introduce a proper farm debt restructuring program. Second, let him announce a deficiency program for this year's crop. Third, let him announce the long-promised western economic diversification strategy.

During this debate four Ministers of the Crown have spoken, including the Prime Minister. But not one of them gave any commitment for specific assistance. I suggest the Prime Minister has a glorious opportunity, and we know how he loves photo opportunities, to announce at least those three constructive policies. If he does, I think that perhaps some of the stress, strain and family discomfort and dislocation which has been expressed in the debate over the last two days might well be alleviated. Let him show some leadership.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on the issues and problems facing the agricultural industry in Canada. Many Members of the House may not be fully aware that we in Atlantic Canada have a very important agricultural industry, including an important agricultural industry in Nova Scotia. In Nova Scotia we have problems in our agricultural sector. In Atlantic Canada we have the same or similar problems to those about which other Members have spoken in respect of western Canada. I know from speaking to members of my caucus from Ontario and Quebec that farmers in both those provinces have serious problems as well. From time to time in caucus we have heard strong and aggressive voices concerning the agricultural industry. Members of our caucus from all provinces bring forward, in an aggressive way, the problems that are facing the agriculture industry in Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick—all the Provinces of Canada. Of course, the motion before us deals specifically with western Canada.

We know what the problem is. However, that is not the issue. The issue is what is being done to address the problem. In this respect I am proud to stand here today to speak on just what our Government has done to address the problems facing the agriculture industry from the East Coast to the West Coast. The commitments that were made and honoured are well known by those in the agriculture industry.

Farmers are convinced that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and the whole Progressive Conservative caucus are strong allies of their industry. For example, they know that 14 of 16 campaign promises in the Prince Albert statement have been addressed. Farmers know that 414 initiatives having a total value of $6 billion have been implemented by the Government. They know that this is a record after only two and a half years of this Government being in office. They know the mess that was left after 20 years of Government by the Liberal Party. They know that for every 1 per cent drop in interest rates there is a savings to the Canadian farmers of $120 million.

The Canadian farmer knows all about this. He has full confidence in the policies being pursued by our Government. It is ironic that food remains our best buy as consumers. It is ironic that we pay more for a litre of pop than we do for a litre of milk. That is typical of the situation that faces our farms. The farming community faces the situation of rising costs and decreasing revenue. It is a serious problem, Mr. Speaker.

I am going to outline through you, Mr. Speaker, to other Members of the House and to the Canadian public what has been done in two and a half short years to address some of these problems to rebuild the strength of the Canadian agricultural industry. I am going to start by referring to the Atlantic livestock feed initiative. This policy brought in by our Government and an agreement signed just two or three weeks ago between the federal and provincial Governments is an attempt by our Government to establish feed grain self-sufficiency in Nova Scotia and in all of Atlantic Canada. Under this policy, our Government has committed itself to maintaining for a period of time freight rate assistance on grain that moves into Nova Scotia, grain that is important to the beef industry and other livestock industries in Nova Scotia. We have done more than simply continue a subsidy in keeping with our philosophy of developing the regions. We have put in place a series of incentives that will help the Nova Scotia farmer grow his own grain so we will not have to import grain from outside our province. We will create jobs in the grain industry and we will keep money at home, money that until this point in time has been going to another part of our country. It is all relative, isn't it, Mr. Speaker?

Let us look at what was done on the same issue by the previous Government. I will tell you what that Government did. The Liberal Government did nothing over the last 10 or 15 years when the feed freight assistance rate was declining. There was no serious attempt to address this problem of the agricultural community of Nova Scotia. We have been in office but two and a half years and we have responded and put in place a program after consultation with the industry, a program which is welcomed and a program that is good for the economy of Nova Scotia, not just the agricultural sector of that economy.

What about the question of the financial plight of the farmers in this difficult time? What have we done to assist and put in place an equitable forum where their debt situation can be discussed? We have established farm debt review boards. Legislation has been passed to set up farm debt review boards composed of people with knowledge and experience in farming and financial matters. This process has enabled many farmers to remain on the land. It provides an opportunity for independent third party review to the farm community. It assists in setting up voluntary arrangements between a farmer and his creditors to help ensure the survival of the farm business. Surely that is a constructive response to the financial problems facing farmers, giving them an opportunity to have their case presented in an open and a fair way.

What else is there, Mr. Speaker? The reality is that there are farmers who, in the end, want to leave the farm. They want to undergo a transition to another kind of employment. We have responded to this reality and established the Canadian Rural Transition Program. It is designed to help families who have to leave farming because of financial difficulties to make the transition to new employment and another way of life. The federal Government will provide financial assistance for farmers' transition, relocation, job search and retraining. This is not a program that is encouraging these people to leave the farm. This is a program which has been implemented in response to representations from the people who say, "We are ineligible for many of these programs because we were farmers. We are being discriminated against". We have responded with a sensible program, one that is sensitive and addresses the social needs of these farmers.

What about the financial position of farmers? What happened to them? It was only three years ago that farmers were paying 18 per cent and 20 per cent interest rates when they bought a piece of machinery or farm property. And when they incurred debt, they had interest rates that sky-rocketed. We all remember that. We remember the foreclosures in the Canadian farming industry. You know, Mr. Speaker, and Members of this House know that we now are enjoying the lowest interest rates in almost 10 years. That is in no small measure a result of the economic policies followed by the Government. Since coming to office the interest rate has dropped from 14 per cent to about 11 per cent. That means savings of $150 on a $50,000 mortgage every month. As I said earlier, that is a saving of $120 million to the Canadian agricultural industry for every 1 per cent drop in interest rates. That is of benefit to farmers in Nova Scotia, Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia.

These are policies of general application that have been of enormous benefit to the agricultural community. What we all remember is that the Liberals and New Democrats joined together during the 1970s to follow policies of fiscal irresponsibility that resulted in high interest rates. They just did not drop out of the air. Those high interest rates resulted from the irresponsible management practices of the previous Government, supported by the New Democrats.

What about the National Energy Program? What did the National Energy Program do for the energy costs of western and Atlantic Canadian farmers? Where were the Liberals and New Democrats? We all know where they were. They were closely bound together in support of a policy that not only destroyed a lot of economic activity in the petroleum industry in Canada but put billions of dollars of taxation on all Canadians, including the western Canadian farmer.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it is the practice if not the requirement of the rules of the House that speakers tell the truth when they are presenting their arguments. I would caution the Hon. Member to check the voting records before he regurgitates material from PC headquarters.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is debate. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) has the floor.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I guess the best test of whether or not I say is true is the fact that it is like salt on the wounds of the New Democrats to hear me bring forth the truth in this Chamber today—

Mr. Althouse: You supported the Bank Act.

Mr. O'Neil: —to remind the western Canadian farmers that the New Democrats were responsible along with the Liberal Party for the high interest rates—

Mr. Althouse: No.

Mr. O'Neil: —and the National Energy Program which was a tax burden on Canadian farmers.

Mr. Althouse: That is not true.

Mr. O'Neil: The truth hurts. You hear them, Mr. Speaker. They do not want to hear it.

Mr. Althouse: The Conservatives voted for the Bank Act.

Mr. O'Neil: What can we do, Mr. Speaker, they do not want to hear the truth. The Canadian farmer knows it and the Canadian public is going to hear it.

Mr. McCurdy: Don't get excited.

Mr. Althouse: Look at the facts.

Mr. O'Neil: The farm fuel tax relief program which we implemented was an attempt to reduce the tax burden.

Mr. Gauthier: Kiss and make up, guys.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. O'Neil: I am very pleased that the New Democrats are so sensitive because it tells me that it is very much a political issue in western Canada. What is very much a political issue is their support for the policies of the previous Government.

Mr. Althouse: It is a matter of the truth.

Mr. O'Neil: We have responded. We brought in policies that are aimed at reducing the financial burden on these farmers. The farm fuel tax relief program which is a saving of hundreds of dollars to the western Canadian farmer was brought in to address this very severe financial and social problem.

• (1220)

We have responded in a sensitive way to the economic and social problems of the farmer. The previous speaker asked where the long-term dairy policy is. It is obvious that she does not read press releases or newspapers. The federal Government's commitment of $1.5 billion over a five-year period is well known. There is a five-year dairy policy designed to ensure the long-term health of the dairy industry in Canada. We know that a dairy industry exists in all parts of the country and my riding is no exception. In my riding, there is a strong and viable dairy industry and the dairy farmers that I represent are very supportive of that initiative, as they are of the other initiatives—

Mr. Foster: Cut by $15 million a year, too.

Mr. O'Neil: I hear the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) chirping today, but there was no chirp from him when farmers were paying 20 per cent interest rates, when there was no dairy policy, and when the National Energy Program was sinking the Canadian farmer with high interest rates. He should moo like a cow rather than chirp like a bird. The reality is getting through to the Liberals. It is their record about which we are speaking and which we are showing to be as weak as it was.

What about the capital gains tax exemption? That is something that was long sought by the agricultural industry. Where was it? The Liberals had 20 or 30 years to respond to this need of the Canadian farmer who spent his life building up equity in a business as his pension and who did not want to get penalized when he sold his equity which was built up over 30 or 40 years. Where was the capital gains tax exemption when the previous Government was in power? It could have implemented it but it did not.

Was that tax exemption high on the agenda of the New Democrats? I do not know, but the Canadian farmer knows how much of a priority it was for the two opposition Parties, and he knows also how much of a priority it was for the PC Government when it took over in September, 1984. Farmers know that we implemented a program that responded to their long sought goal.

What about the international situation in the agricultural community? What about the fall of prices which has resulted in some of the uncertainty in the international community? Has this Government responded to that situation in two and a half years? Indeed it has. Canada has been at the forefront of those nations calling for a new set of ground rules for international agricultural trade. We would have had trouble even getting the leadership of the previous Government to talk about farmers, but our Prime Minister at the annual Economic Summit of industrialized nations held in Tokyo last year chose to raise agriculture as Canada's number one agenda item. That was the first time agriculture was raised at such a summit. All leaders agreed that a solution must be found to the international subsidy wars.

Finally, we are trying to get an informal international agreement on agriculture trade practices during the period of negotiation of new GATT rules. This may well take years, but Canada has proposed a number of principles that we hope will result in greater international stability and security in the trade of important agricultural commodities.

Surely it is clear that in two and a half years, our Government has responded in an unprecedented manner to the problems of the agricultural industry. The Government has followed through on a total of 14 out of 16 promises and has provided 414 initiatives valued at $6 billion. The people who must answer today for the problems in the agricultural industry are in large measure sitting on the benches of the two opposition Parties.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure you know, those who come from Cape Breton are renowned across Canada and in the House for the eloquence of their rhetoric and the honesty with which they present their points of view. No matter from what side of the House we come, we are often impressed with the clear and compelling way in which they present their cases.

Just moments ago, we heard from the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil), the last of the speakers on the government side. It was unfortunate that we heard from him last and I would hope that the character of that speech would encourage others to present themselves because it has left an awful taste in all of our mouths. This is so because someone who represents Cape Breton has presented a case which is based on such utter and complete falsehood as was the allegation that it was the New Democrats who supported the Bank Act when in fact it was the New Democrats with one lone Tory, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who opposed that Bank Act. I rise now to say that if we are to defend a particular point of view, we must do so truthfully or we do harm to the argument we are trying to present.

I am very, very proud of the fact that the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) initiated this very significant debate in the House of Commons. I know that he is a fit representative of the New Democratic Party because this Party is a Party that has its roots on the farm and in the west. However, it also has its roots among the labourers of the city. Because of the initiative of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert and my Party, the concerns of the farm will be clearly dramatized to those of us who live in the city.

I have heard speaker after speaker during the course of this debate suggest that those of us who come from the city should not be involved in this debate because our ignorance would contribute nothing to the expansion of knowledge or information or the solution of the problem that exists in our agricultural sphere. Among that category of Members of Parliament, I may be regarded as an example of urban rot, but I stand here proud to participate in this debate because I think it is about time the people of the city had dramatized for them the situation on the farm. I am sure they share with members of my Party the absolutely compelling point of view that just as we must seek justice and economic security for the people of the city, we must make those people understand that their security, prosperity and justice depends upon economic security on the farm.

When I, as others in the city, eat my shredded wheat, my corn flakes or my meat and drink my milk, I must recognize that all of those commodities are produced as a result of blood, sweat and tears. There is no one who does not understand that the commitment to the land is something that can only be maintained with a great deal of hard work. I do not think there is anyone who does not know that those who work on the farm rise early and work late. They develop callouses upon their hands in an effort to produce from the land.

There are not too many among us who understand, however, that when we talk about blood, that blood truly exists. There is a higher rate of accidental death on the farm than there is in other areas of labour. As well, of the unnatural causes of death on the farm, one-third are suicides, so great is the stress. When we recognize that in that which we eat there are tears as well, it is another assertion that the stress on the farm has become overwhelming. Why should it not be overwhelming? We realize that in the last crop year, prices were cut by 21 per cent, and this year they will be cut by 19 per cent. I think it is incumbent upon every worker, every business person, every professional in this country to look at their own situation and imagine taking a 40 per cent cut in their salaries or wages. They would then begin to understand the situation in which the farmer finds himself.

When one reflects upon the fact that the dire circumstances in the farming community are made worse by the announcement that effective tomorrow the moratorium on FCC loans will end, we begin to gain a comprehension of the existing situation. How many Canadians recognize that the price of grain, as a result of cuts last year and this decision, is no different from what it was in 1976 and 1977? Yet the cost of doing business has tripled. We then expect the farmer to survive.

I understand, but perhaps others here do not, that there exists in the international market-place a severe set of circumstances which make competition extremely difficult. The EEC is subsidizing its farmers to the tune of about $70 billion a year. The U.S. is subsidizing its farmers to the tune of around $22 billion a year. World prices are thereby reduced. This is something which is not under the ready control of the Government, but we encourage it to persist in its efforts to reach international agreements under GATT which would provide a solution to the problem. However, it is no contribution to the plight of the farmer for the Government to decide that the moratorium on FCC loans will end tomorrow.

I know the Government is claiming that there are only a small number of farmers affected. I have heard both the number 6,000 and the number 600. I have heard that it only involves 50 farmers a month. However, if one opens up The Toronto Star this morning—I will readily admit as a microbiologist and biochemist that I do not have the information readily available to me so I must depend upon information supplied by a number of sources—he will find that the assistant manager of the FCC office in Edmonton points out that 10,000 prairie farmers are $227 million in arrears on FCC loans. He says that technically they are open to foreclosure. If one looks at the individual provinces, one finds that 21 per cent of FCC accounts in Alberta and 24 per cent of FCC accounts in Saskatchewan are in arrears. The situation is so severe that one should not be surprised that there are 8 per cent or 25,000 fewer farmers this year than last.

When the Government blithely terminates the moratorium, one must look around to see to whom the Government looks for advice. I watched television last night and saw the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) claim that all significant farm organizations said the moratorium should be removed. When one examines that statement, as the NDP readily does on all occasions, and checks the facts, we find that the National Farmers Union, the three prairie Wheat Pools, and other farm organizations flatly deny that any such statements were made on their behalf. That they would support the lifting of the moratorium as claimed by the Minister of Agriculture is flatly untrue.

What kind of advice is the Minister of Agriculture following when he chooses to lift the moratorium in the hasty fashion in which he did and without putting in place the necessary steps to ensure the survival of our farm community? If one examines the submission of The Canadian Bankers' Association to the Standing Committee on Agriculture and looks at its recommendations, one finds that its fifth recommendation was that there should be no consideration given to debt moratorium or compromise. It is not to the farmers in trouble that the Government is listening. It is listening to the bankers. That of course is in line with a long, long tradition.

If one examines the other recommendations of the bankers, one confirms the source of the advice and direction the Government receives and according to which it acts. The banks recommended that government transition programs involving relocation, retraining and support be implemented. Get them off the farms. The second recommendation was that farm financial review boards should be restricted to an advisory capacity with consideration to be given to the powers of direct lending or provision of loan guarantees to existing lenders or future lending operations as deemed possible. That is certainly being implemented because in Ontario we find that of 425 cases before the review board, 193 have been completed and only two have signed agreements.

Whose advice is the Government following? Whose pleas is it listening to? It said there should be a great deal of circumspection about the introduction of such programs as agri-bonds. When one considers that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Government promised the implementation of an agri-bond program and it is yet to be heard from, one confirms the source of advice for the Government and its approach to the problems of farmers.

We understand that the problems in agriculture are complicated. However, it is a sorry state of affairs when we can ensure that arms suppliers are well paid and profits are high, when trillions of dollars are spent on arms which are often given away, yet in Canada the farmers are going to food-banks and thousands starve across the seas. It must be evident that it does not need a great genius to find a solution that would feed the world and make sure our farmers are fed. However, that is not going to be done by a Government that announces so much negative action, as it has over the last two weeks, while refusing to commit itself to the minimum contribution to an improvement of the lot of the farmer, that being an announcement for the next crop year of deficiency payments at least as high as they were last year.

I hope this debate initiated by the NDP will lead not to continuing partisan conflict in the House but to a creative culmination of an effort to ensure that in Canada we will maintain our farms and our farmland.

• (1240)

It must be clear to those of us in the city that if the farmers suffer and farms disappear, the city person will not be very far behind. That should be the message to all Canadians insisting that justice be accorded to the farmer.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, it is seldom we have debates like the one we are having now in the House of Commons. Canadians who are watching the proceedings, especially those who live in our major cities and urban areas and are not terribly familiar with the problems of the agricultural industry, are problably wondering what is going on.

The main reason why the Official Opposition is firmly resolved to make every effort to focus the attention of the Government and the public in general on this issue is that we have today a crisis situation, a serious and tragic one, which affects all grain producers in Canada, and especially our western farmers.

Why do we have this crisis? The answer is quite simple, Mr. Speaker. Last year, as a result of decisions made by this Government, the price paid to farmers for their grain went down 20 per cent. And as if that were not enough to jeopardize the viability of farming operations, a few days ago the Government and the Canadian Wheat Board announced that prices for the 1987 crop year would go down another 18 per cent. Last year it was 20 per cent and this year 18 per cent. While prices paid to farm producers went down 20 per cent and 18 per cent in two years, input costs have continued to rise, including the costs of various kinds of energy and the cost of chemical fertilizers and pesticides. Production costs are going up while prices are going down, so that grain producers across the country—in fact most grain producers happen to be in western Canada—are facing bankruptcy.

To give some indication of what the drop in prices paid to producers represents, the Leader of our Party, when he spoke in this debate yesterday morning, pointed out that in 1984-85, No. 1 wheat was $170 a tonne. In 1986-87, the price was down to $130 a tonne and this year, the Wheat Board announced that the price for No. 1 wheat would go down further to $110 a tonne. The producer who sees the price per tonne drop from $170 to $110 over such a short period is under considerable financial pressure.

The price of other grains such as barley, for instance, has gone down as well. Mr. Turner told the House about these major price variations. In 1984-85, producers were getting $125 a tonne for No. 1 barley. In 1986-87, the price was down to $80 a tonne.

We heard a few days ago that the price for this year's crop is down to $60 a tonne, which means that in two years, the price of No. 1 barley has dropped from $125 to $60, less than half, so that our grain producers are facing a major crisis. The lower prices they get for their crops this year will make it increasingly difficult for farmers to finance their long- and short-term loans. It puts families, in an industry where most operations are still based on the family farm, under severe financial pressure and physical and moral stress. These farmers do not know how long they will be able to survive, to operate their farms and not only that, to stay in their homes. As though it were not enough to have to worry about the price of grain, farm producers have now been informed that the Government has decided to let the Farm Credit Corporation lift the moratorium on foreclosures.

In 1985, the Government had decided to put a moratorium on the foreclosures that would otherwise have resulted from decisions by the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation. Last week, the Minister responsible announced the moratorium would be lifted, so that we have a situation where in a short period of time, farmers first heard that the Canadian Wheat Board, obviously with the Government's blessing, had reduced prices for their crops, and then that the Government had lifted this moratorium. Less income will make a bad financial situation even worse and, since the Farm Credit Corporation will now be able to seize farms and farm equipment, it only adds to the pressure and puts farmers and grain producers in a practically untenable situation.

Mr. Speaker, the decision to end the moratorium affects not only western producers but also producers in Quebec and other regions. This morning, in La Presse, there was a long article by reporter Pierre Gingras describing how a number of Quebec producers might be affected by the Government's decision to end the moratorium on foreclosures on farms whose owners are in arrears on loan payments to the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation. Here is what he wrote: "Over the next few months, once the moratorium has been lifted, about one hundred Quebec farm producers will be getting Farm Credit Corporation of Canada foreclosure notices preventing them from declaring bankruptcy with respect to farms financed through FCC". He indicates as well that the FCC has 74,000 customers, including 7,500 in Quebec.

This decision obviously affects all producers, and this question does not concern only western producers, but Quebec farmers as well.

As a matter of fact, if we look at the overall agricultural situation we can see that western producers have to cope with falling commodity prices, but eastern producers in general—including those of Quebec since we are part of the eastern region—are hard hit by other economic factors, more especially by the decisions of this Government or its lack of political courage to seek solutions to the extremely serious problems facing our producers.

We have just gone through a spring period and once again all sugar bush owners were able to see for themselves the ravages caused by acid rain. I should think that in recent weeks most parliamentarians have received letters from Quebec's Union des producteurs agricoles indicating losses incurred by farmers who run maple sugar operations, losses which can be directly traced back to acid rains playing havoc with our maple forests. As can be expected, they want the Government to take a tougher and more direct approach in its discussions with the United States in an attempt to find a solution to the acid rain problem.

The second stressing situation for both eastern and western producers is that, in view of the free trade negotiations with the United States, they wonder what is going to happen to the marketing boards which regulate production. Of course this concerns our industrial and whole milk producers, our poultry producers and our egg producers because all these commodities now fall under marketing board regulations. These marketing boards may be put on the table in the negotiations with the United States. Several of my colleagues and I had an opportunity to tour the western provinces, and we also met with Maritime, Ontario and Quebec agricultural producers. We got the same message from coast to coast: Ask this Government not to put marketing boards on the negotiation table. Everywhere people told us that giving up the marketing boards would mean a large number of farm producers would disappear, and with them, a rural way of life that has been a part of our society for so many years. Farmers are in a very good position to compare the situation we have now under the marketing boards with the way things were handled previously, when milk, egg and poultry producers were subject to broad market swings, to dumping by the United States and other countries, all of which put them under extreme financial pressure. They do not want to go back to those times.

In this debate, the Liberals are asking for three things. Our Party Leader, Mr. Turner, made this very clear in his excellent speech yesterday, it was repeated by our Party's agriculture critic, and perhaps it would be appropriate for me to repeat our Party's demands at this point. The Liberals are asking for reinstatement of the moratorium on farm foreclosures by the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation. The Liberals want the Government to continue the moratorium so as to avoid putting additional pressure on producers already faced with two consecutive reductions, 20 per cent and 18 per cent, in the price of grain.

Second, we are asking the Government, now that farmers are about to seed their 1987 crop, to let grain producers know what kind of price they can expect for their grain at the end of the 1987 crop year, in other words, to announce immediately a deficiency payment program for this year's production, not last year's but the production for 1987 which farmers are seeding at this very moment.

Third, we ask the Government to deliver on the promises it has been making for the past two and a half years, and I am referring to the promised Western Economic Diversification Strategy.

Mr. Speaker, this debate may seem inordinately long. I know this has exasperated some people, but it is the only way we in the Opposition can show grain producers, both western grain producers and those in the rest of the country, that we are doing our duty, that we are concerned about their situation and that we are acting responsibly by pressuring the Government to take action. We are not only talking about farm foreclosures but about a whole way of life that is being destroyed as a result of this Government's failure to act.

[English]

For three days the House has been debating an issue of fundamental importance to every Canadian. It is the survival of our family farms.

No matter where one lives, whether it be in the Cities of Vancouver, Edmonton, Toronto, Montreal, Halifax, or St. John's, every Canadian must be seriously concerned about the crisis facing rural Canada today.

To be objective, part of the problem facing rural Canada is caused by international forces such as the U.S. Farm Bill, with its huge subsidies, that was enacted by the United States to counteract the farm subsidies of the European Common Market. These subsidies must be vigorously opposed by the Canadian Government at every available opportunity. However, many of the problems facing our farmers are made in Canada and are directly the result of the Government's action or inaction.

Surely the Government realizes that one of the greatest crises in Canadian farm history is not going to be resolved by the Canadian Wheat Board cutting not only last year's price of wheat by some 20 per cent, but also cutting this year's price of wheat by 18 per cent.

As if this situation was not bad enough, the Government announced this week that it is lifting the ban on farm foreclosures by the Farm Credit Corporation. At the very time when farmers desperately require stability in their industry, and at the crucial seeding time of the year, the Government decides to choose this time to undermine further the confidence of the farming community by reintroducing foreclosures of our family farms. Moreover, the Government has compounded this deplorable situation by refusing to give a commitment of a deficiency payment for the new crop year this year to our farmers, at the very time when they have to make a decision on whether or not to seed. Surely, even the Government realizes that farmers have a right to know today what return they may reasonably plan to expect on their investment.

Not only has the price of wheat been going down but also decisions by competitors have been creating more problems. Unfortunately, I do not have enough time to read a letter sent by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) concerning the American Government's decision on the sale of barley to Saudi Arabia. That will create additional problems for our farmers.

There are other problems in western Canada, one of which concerns the sugar-beet industry, particularly in Manitoba. In 1985, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) indicated that he would announce a sugar beet policy and that the federal Government would cover debts going beyond 1987. Neither of these commitments have been met. Instead, the Conservative Government in Ottawa continues to haggle with the NDP Government in Manitoba over developing a support program for the sugar-beet farmers of Manitoba. Meanwhile, a whole industry is on the verge of collapse.

If agreement is not reached shortly on this important matter, the Manitoba Sugar Company will be forced to close down, which will put a $90 million industry out of business, wipe out 300 to 400 farmers, and cost up to 500 jobs.

Mr. Mayer: The Liberal Government in Quebec sold out the whole sugar-beet industry.

Mr. Garneau: If the Government of Quebec did that, it is because of the Tory Government that refused to take action. I had the opportunity to meet with the sugar-beet producers in Quebec. The Tory Government refused to give the annual payment beet producers normally receive. That is why the Quebec Government is fed up with the Tory Government. It never happened the year before. The Government refused to make the payment to the Quebec farmers, the beet producers.

Mr. Mayer: Shame on the Liberals in Quebec.

Mr. Garneau: The Tories refused to make the payment. That is why they closed not only in Quebec but also possibly in Manitoba, in your own province.

Mr. Mayer: Shame on the Liberals in Quebec who sold out the sugar-beet industry in Quebec.

Mr. Garneau: When I visited the producers in Manitoba a year ago they were well aware of the fact that the Tory Government refused—

Mr. Mayer: What a windbag.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the sugar-beet industry is in jeopardy because of the Government.

Mr. Mayer: What a windbag.

• (1300)

Mr. Garneau: The Quebec Government had to make a very important decision which has affected many producers because this Government refused to make the payment that was due to the farmers, not only the Quebec producers but many of the other producers. I met, I don't know how many times, with the Alberta producers here in Ottawa. I also met with them in Alberta.

Mr. Mayer: You should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. Garneau: I also met with the producers in the Province of Manitoba and they gave us the same message. It is the same message in Quebec, in Alberta and in Manitoba. This Government has refused to make the payment. That is why the Quebec Government had to shut down an industry which had been created in 1945 by a Liberal Government. When I was Minister of Finance in Quebec, we were making those payments. We had to support and we did support this industry. It was done by the Liberal Government. As soon as the Tories came to power we had to shut down an industry which was very viable and created jobs for farmers and other workers.

Mr. Mayer: As soon as the Liberal Government took over in Quebec the first they did was shut it down. You know that.

Mr. Garneau: I just want to say that not only the wheat producers but the sugar-beet producers in Manitoba are in great difficulty. I cannot press the point strongly enough. I would like to urge the Government to make a decision as soon as possible to try to solve a problem which could create additional difficulty for Canadian farmers, particularly western farmers living in Manitoba.

The farmers are also preoccupied by some other policies of the Government, mainly, the tax reform. We met with the Farmers Association whose members come from all parts of the country. They raised very important questions about the business transfer tax. When the price of wheat is going down and we hear from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that the business transfer tax will be applied to their products that is another area of concern.

In summary I would like to repeat the three requests the Liberals are making during this debate; first, to reinstate the moratorium on farm foreclosures; second, announcement of a deficiency program for this year's crop and, third, announce the long-time promised Western Economic Diversification Strategy. Those are the three points we want to stress during this debate.

We hope that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) goes to western Canada next week he will not bring with him empty promises, but concrete promises. What the farmers in western Canada want to see is cash, not just the Prime Minister of the country.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get involved in the debate and to make a couple of points with respect to the debate. I think people who know western agriculture such as the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and many of my colleagues on this side of the House who come from western Canada, realize there are a number of facts we have to get back on the table and see where we go from there.

The first point which has to be made is that western Canadian farmers understand the root causes of the pricing situation in the world today with respect to grains. We know the reductions which have taken place. I think it is important for all of us to know what we are competing with. The Liberal Party said previously, for instance, and the spokesman for the Party with respect to financial matters made the same point again with respect to the barley sale to Saudi Arabia by the United States, that Canada's share of international grain sales is going down. That is not the case. It is quite the opposite. In fact, it appears very clearly today that the sales through the Canadian Wheat Board, Canada's portion of international grain sales, is going up. That is the first point to be made.

The second point we have to make is the pricing policy. I want to note very clearly that we are competing very well in terms of sales. We are competing very well in terms of quality, and we are competing very well in terms of traditional and new markets. What we, as Canadians, are competing against is national treasuries. We are competing, for example, against the treasuries of the European Community. The European Community has made a decision, post-war, that Europe would become self-sufficient in food regardless of the cost to the treasury. That is the first point which has to be made. No one in this House is to blame and no one in Canada is to blame.

I would suggest that no one who understands the international grain market in Canada wants that situation to continue, least of all the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. That is the first point to be made.

The second point is that we are competing with the United States Farm Bill which was a response by the United States primarily, not totally, against the action of the EEC. The point now is that the United States is spending about $25 billion U.S. in support of grains. That is projected to go to $30 billion U.S. next year, at least that is the estimate. So the question for us then clearly becomes what can the Canadian Government, the Canadian people, do not only to maintain markets, which we have been doing, but also to sustain the efforts of our Canadian grain producers?

I think it is best if we take a look at what some farm leaders are saying. I have been hearing a lot of rhetoric around the House today. I think if we look at what was said by the former Chairman of the United Grain Growers, Mac Runciman, who is a respected person in the grains business, he really describes the contribution of a number of Members on this issue. He said that he used to say when he was Chairman that the grain business was 14 per cent protein, and those of us from the grain belt know what that means, and 86 percent politics, "And the bad news is that over the past number of years—", and I would add during this debate, "—that the protein content of our business is falling fast and the political content is going up", and that is not helping our grain producers. I say that with respect because I think we have to get to some first principles.

The first point the Liberal Party now makes is that we have not done anything. Then when they are challenged in the debate they say: "Well, maybe you have done something but you haven't done enough". That is the point they make. When I take a look at graphs, and this source is Agriculture Canada, and I take a look at federal support of agriculture in western Canada, I see that in 1983 it looks like approximately $250 million. In 1984 it had gone to about $1.2 billion, and I can go to 1987 to the forecast of over $3 billion.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): At least I have their attention now. They do not want to speak about that. Then we take a look at interest rates because they ask what about the moratorium on the FCC. In 1981 the prime rate in Canada stood at 22.75 per cent. That was devastating to grain farmers. It was an incredible figure. This year the interest rate is 9.25 per cent on prime.

Let us look at the Farm Credit Corporation, because the Farm Credit Corporation, as we know, has to pay the average price of the TB Bills. In 1981 it was 16.75 per cent. This year, now today, it is 10 per cent.

Of course, all of us would like to have it even below that but I think it is important to get some of these facts on the table. What I am pleased about is that when I speak to my grain farmers in my riding, they understand. They are reasonable and understand. They do not like the situation but they understand it and want to see where some of the solutions lie. But then we listen to the New Democratic Party.

I come from Manitoba and we have an NDP Government. The last time I looked at the Constitution, agriculture is a shared responsibility, a responsibility shared by the federal Government and the provincial Governments. Members of the Opposition say that there is no money for seeding now.

• (1310)

Mr. Althouse: No, we did not. We did not state that in our motion.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Do Members of the House, do Canadians, understand that in the next five weeks, that is, between today and roughly the end of May, $240 million will go to grain producers in Manitoba alone under the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the Special Canadian Grains Program? That money for Manitoba to be given in the next five weeks is equal to the total given to Canadian grain farmers in the whole of 1983. If that is not enough evidence for Members opposite, and maybe it is not, then let us take a look at Manitoba's contribution. I said that this is a shared responsibility.

Do Hon. Members know what the total budget of the Manitoba Government is for agriculture for next year? It is $84 million. Yet Members opposite have the gall, the audacity to come in here and say that we are not doing enough. If we are not doing enough then where is Mr. Uruski? Where is Mr. Pawley?

Mr. Althouse: It's 30 per cent higher than the previous Tory Government gave.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Hon. Member likes to interject. Let us talk about Saskatchewan. I could talk about the Hon. Member's province too. Let us compare these figures to the figures of Premier Blakeney. Hon. Members will see that they pale by comparison. The point is that members of the NDP like to make great pronouncements but they hate facts. They do not like facts.

Mr. Althouse: Saskatchewan is all loans.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): They say that they are in favour of the farmer. Let us look at that situation. Let us look at what the Government has done in this regard. I cannot go through the whole list but I will give Hon. Members a few examples of what the Government has done. Canadian farmers have been begging for and wanting an exemption on capital gains. Why? Because they say that the proceeds from the sale of their farms is their only contribution to their retirement funds. They say that when they retire that is all they will have. What is the position of the New Democratic Party with respect to capital gains?

Mr. Althouse: Look at Saskatchewan. It was the first place to give an exemption.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Members of the New Democratic Party want to abolish it.

Mr. Althouse: Saskatchewan gave an exemption 10 years before you guys.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): They do not want farmers to have capital gains.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is not true.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Even as they see farms going down in price members of the NDP want to tax the Canadian farmer on that. That is the position of the NDP.

Mr. Althouse: It is not!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): They hate it when they get it, but they love to dish it out.

Mr. Althouse: It's too bad you don't know the policy. You should check your facts.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What about other issues? What about the federal sales tax on farm fuels? Measures were taken in that regard. What about the establishment of the agri-bond program? It was done.

Mr. Foster: It was not done.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What about the assistance to farmers by the FCC? That was done.

Mr. Foster: Get your list straight. We know you don't know anything about it.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I could go on and on and on. The point is this. Members opposite like to talk both ways.

Mr. Foster: Tell us about those agri-bonds, Jake.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): They like to say, yes, reduce the deficit, reduce the interest rates, reduce that liability and at the same time raise prices beyond anything that taxpayers have the ability to meet.

I want to talk about sugar-beets today because I know what is happening in sugar-beets. We have a tripartite agreement with Alberta. The Quebec Government decided to get out. There was no tripartite agreement. It was the Liberal Government in Quebec that did it. Now let us talk about Manitoba. In Manitoba we are negotiating, trying again one more time to negotiate a tripartite agreement. But Manitoba does not want to be part of it. How can there be a tripartite agreement in that case? What is happening in Manitoba, and we know it very clearly, is that Members of that Government ask why they should support sugar-beets when they are not grown in areas they represent in the Legislature. That is how political it has become in Manitoba.

Mr. Althouse: They said you did not keep your word in the 1984 agreement. Why should they sign another one when you did not keep your word on the last one?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I enjoy the Hon. Member's rhetoric. I am glad I finally got his attention.

What it really boils down to in terms of the grain industry is this. Is there a possibility, if the pressures are international, to get what I think of as subsidy programs by the EEC and as a result of the U.S. Farm Bill turned around? What have we done? What we have done is this. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has taken the lead, both nationally and internationally. That work has been very closely co-ordinated with the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. What have they done? They have visited countries that are involved in grain production to try to discuss the issue and to try to come up with some modus operandi whereby we will not all drown in subsidies. That is what they have tried to do.

There is not only that. The Prime Minister in negotiations at the summit has been able to bring forward agriculture as Canada's number one issue. It is the first time that a Prime Minister, a leader, has made agriculture the number one issue on a country's agenda. Happily, it is being accepted by other countries as being sufficiently important internationally to examine at the summit. I think almost all Governments know that we cannot continue to drive down prices artificially by subsidy and then somehow have a viable agricultural community.

Farmers do not want to have subsidies. They do not want to come cap-in-hand to the Parliament of Canada for money for a commodity which they are producing and for which they should receive a fair return every time there is a crisis. Those are the realities. The NDP can argue all it wants. Those are the facts.

Let us now consider the moratorium. It is interesting when we consider the moratorium and farm financing to consider also a Bill passed by the NDP Government of Manitoba which would remove, for example, chattels against any loans taken for farm purposes. The Government there wanted support for such a proposition. However, a great many farmers were against it. It is quite evident why they were against it. It is because farmers see very clearly that they need a consistent line of credit with banking institutions in order to keep their operations going. They are in the business of agriculture. So what they were saying in Manitoba is that it might be a well-intentioned Bill, it might even be a Bill which is seen to be "against the banks", which is popular from time to time on the Prairies, but upon closer analysis they were concerned because the last thing they want is the cutting off or a reduction of that credit or the ability to obtain credit.

That is why the federal Government came in with a farm debt review board to see if we could not work out a common position, not only on the Prairies, but a common position by which all farmers could continue to operate while not jeopardizing their ability to obtain credit and the loans of the banking institutions could be repaid.

I would now like to talk about a press release put out by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association yesterday in which it is agreed that the moratorium had to be lifted. It points out that there has to be caution taken, obviously, so that people are not put into a situation whereby they will lose their farms. The Ministers have very clearly stated that that will not be the case.

What was involved was two types of payments. There were payments to financial institutions, including banks, credit unions and the FCC on the one hand, while on the other hand there were those who had the ability to pay at least something who chose not to pay in the hope that, perhaps, there would be an amnesty or whatever. It was not fair. It was not making the credit situation any better. Those are the situations, and I do not think we should put it any other way.

• (1320)

I am absolutely convinced, Mr. Speaker, that this Government's support for agriculture is very sound. I have already given examples of that, such as the FCC, the capital gains tax exemption, the fuels tax credit, the Special Grains Program, the Western Grain Stabilization Act amendments, and others.

The Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board announced just a week ago that there would be another $705 million allocated for payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

I was in Manitoba during that period of time and had occasion to speak to the grain farmers. They knew what the situation was, and they also knew about the payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. They were pleased that the two announcements came in and around the same time. It provided them with some form of assurance in respect of their crops.

I am pleased with the way in which our farmers have been reacting to the situation. Quite frankly, trying to create an even larger crisis than all of us recognize already exists because of world pressures is not doing anything at all to help the farming community.

I remain convinced that we must come to an international agreement, an international consensus, an international recognition that the kinds of subsidy programs now in place internationally are going to continue hurting our farmers, our economies, our international relations. It is for that reason that it is critical that the Prime Minister and others take this issue to the summit table. It is absolutely critical.

I am not using that argument to deflect what the Government should do, what the Government is doing, what farmers are doing; but, we all recognize that that is the absolute requirement.

I do not know whether or not Hon. Members recognize it, but 80 per cent of Manitoba's agricultural production must find a market outside Manitoba. Without access to the American markets, all of the subsidies in the world, all of the agreements in the world will be of absolutely no value. If we do not have access to international markets, the agricultural industry will suffer.

Of course there has to be protection in terms of supply-management and commodity prices—and we all recognize that. Everyone understands that. No one is blind to that. But, I wish, once and for all, that the Opposition, who can be as critical as they wish, would at least base their criticisms on fact. They can be as critical as they wish, but their criticism should be based on a recognition of the world situation. They should at least on occasion tip their hats to the reality that exists on the Prairies.

We hear a lot about western alienation. I think this debate on the western grain situation should demonstrate for all of us exactly how much Canadians of one region need Canadians of other regions.

Today it is the west. With the dairy policy, it was primarily Quebec. Both policies were right.

It is time that Canadians, no matter what the pressures, no matter where their region, recognized that we are one country, and they do. While we will fight for our regional positions, there is an over-riding larger consideration, that being the ability of Canadians from one region, as the tugs and pulls and pressures come, to help Canadians in trouble in another region. That is how this country has been built.

If this debate teaches us anything, it is that we are only strong when we recognize the need to work together.

I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, that my colleagues in government from other than the prairie region have gained an appreciation of what is happening on the Prairies, and I am particularly pleased that they have shown a willingness to approve costly measures to assist in the situation.

All we on the government side ask is that there be a recognition of those facts and that there be a critical analysis of what else could be done, rather than making politics more important than the health of the grain business.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it has been roughly thirty-seven and one half hours since I entered the Chamber to participate in this debate. With a short break that allowed some of us to catch a reasonable night's sleep, we now have the opportunity to continue the debate.

It is a very important debate. Quite frankly, it is a debate about the future of the Canadian farmer; it is a debate about the Canadian grain situation, about the family farm. It is not a debate, as some in this House would have us believe, particularly those on the government side, solely about the western Canada situation. There are farmers in Atlantic Canada; there are farmers in Quebec and Ontario; there are farmers on the Prairies; and there are farmers in British Columbia—and all are impacted by the decision of this Government to lift the moratorium on foreclosures.

It reaches out to those who are not directly tied in with the Farm Credit Corporation, that institution being the key element in this debate because of the decision to lift the moratorium on any foreclosures by it. But, as we all know, Mr. Speaker, in this market-place environment, if there are restrictions on one element, then, ipso facto, there are restrictions on the other sectors as well, the banks and the credit unions.

I wish to commence my contribution to this debate by reminding the House and those who have followed it of the steps taken to trigger the debate.

The first step was taken by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), that step coming in the form of a letter to the Speaker of the House of Commons, dated April 27 last.

I should like to take a few moments to read that letter into the record. Over the course of the debate, it has become apparent that there is a misconception on the part of some as to what the intent in requesting this emergency debate was.

S. O. 29

The letter reads:

April 27, 1987

The Hon. John Fraser P.C., M.P.
Speaker of the House of Commons
Room 222-N
House of Commons

Dear Mr. Speaker:

I am writing this letter to notify you that tomorrow I intend to rise under the provisions of Standing Order 29 to seek leave to adjourn the House for the purpose of considering a question of urgent and pressing necessity. That issue is the current crisis facing Canadian grain producers.

At the moment there does not appear to be any opportunity in the immediate future to have these issues brought before Parliament for a full and open discussion. Recent developments have however brought an urgency to this issue that might not have existed before. These include the following;

(1) Last week the Canadian Wheat Board announced that the initial price for Number 1 Canadian wheat would be 18 per cent lower than last year's price. This follows on last year's price which was about 20 per cent less than the year before. Taken together this is a very substantial drop in the price that grain farmers will be guaranteed for their crop and it will mean hardship for many farm families across Canada.

(2) It was announced today that the Farm Credit Corporation moratorium on farm foreclosures was being brought to an end as a result of a decision of the Minister of Agriculture. This will mean that for those families who cannot absorb the fall in the price of grain announced last week, bankruptcy will be the only option left open to them. This is indeed a sad situation and a direct attack on the viability of the family farm, particularly in Western Canada.

(3) At this time of year when prairie grain farmers are engaged in planting this year's crop it is extremely important that they have an idea as to whether or not they can expect a deficiency payment this year. So far the government has refused to give them its assurance.

Mr. Speaker I believe that these are sufficient reasons for granting a request for an emergency debate. The problems in the economy of Western Canada are severe and growing worse. The situation facing the prairie grain farmer needs immediate attention and I believe that granting an emergency debate so that Members of Parliament have an opportunity to discuss these issues would be wholly appropriate at this time.

And the letter is signed by Mr. Hovdebo, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, and as others in this country will be aware, the Speaker did deem the issue to be of an emergency nature and granted the request to hold an emergency debate on it. That debate started at 8 p.m. on April 27 last and went around the clock some 21 hours, to a point yesterday afternoon. This morning, the debate was resumed.

• (1330)

We feel very strongly that this is not just an opportunity to get up in the House to talk about farm issues, the survival of the family farm and various crops. It is not just a reason so we can have something to mail out to our farm constituents. We believe the fundamental purpose of this debate is to focus public attention and, therefore, government attention on the very serious situation that exists in rural Canada.

The moratorium is supposed to come off tomorrow, Friday, May 1, and we are hoping through this combined pressure, through the Members of the House of Commons and through farm groups and citizens across Canada that the Government will reconsider its decision. We hope it will announce some time today during the debate that, in fact, taking the moratorium off is wrong, and that it will stay in place for a period necessary to ensure that the appropriate mechanism is put in place for debt review and to allow farmers to get rid of their debts. They will not then be under the gun of the Farm Credit Corporation, the bank or the credit union. We are getting that support, Mr. Speaker.

I have two letters here, one which actually came before the debate. It is addressed to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney). It is from a very important agricultural group in Manitoba, namely the Keystone Agricultural Producers. Mr. Jack Penner, President, wrote the letter with copies to the Minister of State for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). I have had the opportunity of meeting with Mr. Penner on a couple of occasions at grain related conferences or Seaway conferences which he and I have attended. I have grown to respect the man. I also know that he has a direct involvement in the politics in western Canada. He has worked from time to time for the Minister of State for the Wheat Board in terms of his own political career. I want to read into the record the plea from the Keystone Agricultural Producers of last week:

> On behalf of grain producers in Manitoba, we call on your Government to announce, as soon as possible, intention to introduce a similar program for the 1987-88 crop year, with support levels at least equivalent to those under the 1986 program.
> We feel strongly that any such additional program should be based simply on acreages to keep it production neutral. The farm financial crisis is so serious that we feel action must be taken prior to the end of April to ensure grain farmers and the business community that the Federal Government is supportive.

What did the Government do? It pulled out the rug from underneath those who were able to keep the FCC at bay because of foreclosure. Mr. Penner's letter continues:

> A second important step should be a bold new initiative through the Farm Credit Corporation to save thousands of commercial farms from insolvency. In addition to new loan funds at affordable rates, the FCC should become a full service lender to the farm community. This we feel would provide the assurances required now by the farm community, in times when other lending institutions are threatening to withdraw services.

What does the Government do, Mr. Speaker? It joins in with the threats and pulls the plug. The letter continues:

> The CAP supports the initiative of your government in attempting to persuade the European Economic Community, the United States and Japan to discontinue the current trade war, which is seriously affecting the economies of other grain producing countries. Unfortunately, even positive results from these efforts will be too late to save many thousands of young farmers, with serious detrimental effects for rural towns.
> Your immediate and urgent attention to this matter is sought by the farmers of Manitoba.

As history will show, they did not get that support. In fact the opposite occurred.

I have another letter from the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool dated April 28, 1987. It is again written to the Prime Minister. It concerns the emergency debate on the farm economic crisis. Remember, Mr. Speaker, that this is one of the largest pool elevator groups in western Canada, one that has major holdings in Thunder Bay where a lot of the grains it handles are moved through my community. Mr. Stevenson writes:

> Saskatchewan Wheat Pool believes that the rural way of life and related service industries are in jeopardy.
> The Pool asks that all Members of Parliament recognize the very critical economic situation confronting Western Canadian families and communities. This crisis has far-reaching social and economic implications for the national economy, as well as for the West.
> We specifically recommend:
> 1. That programs be immediately developed through federal and provincial co-operation to keep families on their farms in productive capacities.
> 2. That early consideration be given to the acute need for a substantial deficiency payment for the 1987-88 crop year.
> 3. That government continue its efforts to restore sanity in the international grain market.
> Saskatchewan Wheat Pool continues to be prepared to work with government to achieve short and long-term solutions in the interests of the farmers and communities of Saskatchewan and Western Canada.

Those are two comments from two diverse farm groups in western Canada. Both clearly plead to this Parliament, and to the Government of Canada, to do something positive to protect their existence.

What are we talking about in terms of numbers when we talk about farm foreclosures? We have had a number of them quoted in this House. During the Standing Committee on Agriculture meeting on March 24 of this year the following information was given. Eight per cent of our farmers are insolvent. Based on 171,000 farmers that means over 13,500 farmers are considered insolvent. Some 23 per cent have major cash flow problems; that is in the magnitude of 53,000 farmers. Of the Farm Credit Corporation borrowers, 6,000 are more than two years in arrears. Can you imagine if that were one of us and it was a car or a house? It would be gone a long time ago.

There has been some compassion. The powers that have said no, that we should not be pulling the rug out from under these people. Give them a chance to continue to survive. The family farm is part of Canada. Farming is part of Canada. It is part of the reason we exist as a country.

As we developed the CPR west of Thunder Bay we were opening up more and more acres of farmland encouraging people to move out there to develop a sound economic basis to feed our country, to feed North America and finally to feed the world.

It is not just the western producer. It is not just the grain producer. First, in terms of the moratorium it is any farmer in Canada whether in Atlantic Canada, Quebec, Ontario, northern Ontario, New Liskeard, the Sault Ste. Marie area, the Thunder Bay area, the Slate River Valley, in Rainy River, or in British Columbia. All farmers are affected and all farmers are nervous. It is creating a lot of stress in the family, and I will come back to that.

I want to mention that it is not just grain per se or wheat per se, it is the corn producer, the soybean producer, the small grain producers in central and Atlantic Canada. They are affected by the deficiency payments. They need to know that when they put their seeds in the ground over the next couple of weeks that they will get enough money for the produce when they harvest it so they can pay the bills for planting and maintaining that crop. They would even like it if there was a little left over to put food on the table. They are not asking for the moon. They are asking for a decent opportunity to make a living in farming. They know the world markets are working against us. They know, whether we have the biggest crop in our history, that because of the international price that that price alone will not allow them to recover the cost of producing that grain.

• (1340)

We know it is a world situation and we have seen the response of the other countries. The European Economic Community is one of the biggest supporters of its agricultural sector in the world. In 1985, it provided support of $2.60 per bushel. That support jumped to $3.13 per bushel in 1986, an increase of 53 cents per bushel. The United States, in its effort to catch up with the EEC, has gone from support of $1.49 per bushel to $3.13 per bushel in 1986, an increase of $1.14. What was Canada's response? Two nickels a bushel is all we upped the ante. How can we help keep our producers producing if that is the kind of nickel and dime commitment we give to them? We are not asking that those figures be matched. We are just asking for sufficient funds for the producers to have confidence enough to survive.

I am not a farmer. I am not much good at even growing a garden other than to do the digging but my roots are in farming. My grandfather and his brothers homesteaded in rural Manitoba in a community now called Angusville which, I am proud to say, is named after them. My father was a farmer until he went off to war.

Many of the people in the community of Thunder Bay and the surrounding area moved to Thunder Bay from western Canada. They followed the grain to the Lakehead. There are literally thousands who work and live in Thunder Bay whose livelihoods depend on the viability of the western Canadian farmer. The fewer farmers there are, ultimately the less grain there is to move through the Port of Thunder Bay. The less grain that moves through the Port of Thunder Bay, the less grain that moves through the St. Lawrence and all the communities along it.

I would like to give the House an idea of the number of communities in eastern Canada that are touched directly by the resourcefulness and skills of producers in western Canada. In Thunder Bay, 2,000 people are involved in the grain-handling sector. Up to 2,000 people work on the lakers taking the grain from Thunder Bay to points along the Seaway. In Montreal, 175 people work in the elevators and their livelihoods depend on western grain. In Sorel, there are 43 people who depend on grain. In Trois-Rivières, there are 50. In Quebec City, there are 105 and in Saint John there are 50. In Halifax, there are 60 people who depend on grain. Here is the rub. In the riding of Manicouagan, there are 194 people, some in Port Cartier, some in Baie Comeau, whose livelihoods depend on grain being produced and sold at a decent price or at the very least sold somewhere in the world.

Yesterday morning at approximately 8 a.m., the Prime Minister spoke in the House. A number of us were quite surprised to see him here. However, we felt good that he was here because it meant the message was getting out. The Government was feeling the pressure and it had to have the Prime Minister respond. He reminded us that he is only a phone call away. Mind you, that was a phone call during an election in which there was a chance there would be a change in Saskatchewan. The Prime Minister wanted to do his best to help out his friends.

Today, yesterday and the day before we have been asking for some very specific assistance for Canadian farmers and the Prime Minister seems to be ignoring those pleas. Perhaps he will get an earful this afternoon when he meets with the premiers. We know that they too have been feeling the pressure. Although their meeting is not to deal with agriculture but with the Constitution, we would be very shocked to learn that they did not raise this extremely important matter with the Prime Minister.

We should not have to rely on phone calls. We should have a Government that is prepared to examine a sector like agriculture in the context of the world market and in terms of the Canadian need and say: "We have to do something, here is our plan. Let us protect those farmers who have loans with the Farm Credit Corporation and by doing so send a signal to the banks". Can you imagine what signal the banks are receiving today, Mr. Speaker? As soon as the foreclosure moratorium stops tomorrow, it will be open season on farmers. There are a lot of them who are in jeopardy.

Once again, it seems that the banks will get their way. Not so long ago, this broke Government that is so concerned about the deficit found $1 billion over a week-end. Now it cannot even say to the Canadian farmers who are under pressure from those very same banks that it will keep the wolf away from their doors and put in place a program that will allow them to get rid of their debt in a realistic way. The Government will not say that it will provide the supports that would ensure at the very least that farmers could get as much out of their products as they put into them.

I appreciate having the opportunity finally to speak in this debate. I had hoped to be the wrap-up speaker, Mr. Speaker, but I am sure you will be disappointed to know that I am not and that there are many more to come.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that I was able to return from western Canada this morning to offer a few comments on this critical situation. I was in Winnipeg last night and at the meeting I attended there were many members of the farming community.

I notice a few of my Tory friends across the way snickering at the fact that the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount would rise to speak on a farming issue. I would like to register for the record as probably many people in the House can that I in fact grew up on a farm only a few miles from this city. I spent all the formative years of my life on a small family farm in the Ottawa Valley between Cumberland and Orleans. I do not say that to add credibility to the remarks I will make because they will stand on their own merits. I simply say that many of us in Canada come either from farming backgrounds or have roots in farming backgrounds. I believe that fact reminds all of us of the importance of the Canadian farming sector, the backbone of every nation.

Often we tend to be somewhat complacent about farmers. Over the years, Canadians have grown rather accustomed to having good quality food at reasonable prices with little thought given to where that food comes from. The trials and tribulations of the farming sector, when it encounters them, are often forgotten. I hope that if this debate accomplishes anything, and I am not sure it will accomplish much to change the obdurate attitude of the Government, it will raise the consciousness of Canadians as they sit in their living rooms and at their dinner tables across the country reflecting somewhat upon the critical situation currently faced by western grain farmers and likely to be faced by farmers in other sectors as well.

Not many of us know a lot of rich and wealthy farmers. We know a lot of hard-working, dedicated people who love both the land and their occupation. In many cases farms have been in their families for generations. Others had dreams to be farmers and now find those dreams in jeopardy.

• (1350)

When the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) spoke some weeks ago in this House he said: "We will spare no effort". He was referring of course to the resolution of the farming crisis in western Canada. You will find at page 5450 of Hansard where our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in response to his own question of whether the Government of Canada would help the farmers of western Canada, that being the content of telephone calls he was allegedly receiving, said firmly: "Yes, we will help the farmers of western Canada". I ask him: What is the help? Where is the help?

We have grown rather accustomed, as has the Canadian public since the Prime Minister assumed office, to great noble declarations, but we have seen little action to give concrete expression to those declarations. At the risk of sounding cynical, it almost looks as though the way the Government and Prime Minister intend to provide that help is to drive many farmers from their farms. It is rather like the Spanish Inquisition where heretics were burned at the stake so they could move on to a better afterlife. More recently you will recall in the Vietnam War that famous declaration of an Army commander who said that he had to destroy a village in order to save it. Is what we are seeing today the destroying of the western farming sector in order to save it? That effectively is all we have seen so far.

It is not fair, and I am the first to acknowledge it, simply to criticize a very difficult situation.

[Translation]

It is not fair to criticize without offering alternative and concrete policies to remedy a situation that I, Mr. Speaker, can only describe as disastrous.

[English]

What are the problems in the farming sector in western Canada? In fact many of the problems are the same in the rest of the farming community. However, what are the problems that the Government can and should correct? Personally I believe the Government can do a great deal more. The Minister says that no effort will be spared. Let him live up to his word. I have a few suggestions to make.

First, the fundamental problem in the farming sector is the unhappy fact of falling revenue. Revenue has been in a disastrous downward curve. It is falling because of declining grain prices. We then have the convergence of those declining prices on the one hand with increasing input costs on the other. We know that the costs of fertilizer, fuel and labour have increased. An infinite number of costs have increased so as to make that convergence a reality. Most importantly, perhaps, in this current situation, are the financing costs. One of the questions the Government must immediately ask itself if it intends to spare no effort is simply this: How does the Government cushion those input costs, especially financing costs?

I listened to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) today, a Minister for whom I have considerable respect. He comes out of Manitoba and should know the situation well. I heard him making some declarations about the uninformed rhetoric in this Chamber. He then went on to make some of the most uninformed and stupid comments I have heard in this House from someone who should know better. He focused, for example, on the question of interest rates and went back to 1982.

Mr. Lewis: Those were sad years.

Mr. Johnston: I invite the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) to listen carefully. He went back and spoke about how high interest rates were then.

Mr. Lewis: Under your Government.

Mr. Johnston: He referred to the prime rate being something like 22 per cent. I do not recall whether it hit that or not but according to the data I have in front of me from The Bank of Canada, StatsCan, the FCC and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the prime rate in 1981 averaged 19.29 per cent, and in 1982 some 15.81 per cent.

Mr. Lewis: Averaged?

Mr. Johnston: If the Hon. Member would listen for a change he will be educated on the question of interest rates. To take a prime interest rate in isolation, as the Minister did, is really the height of demagoguery in this Chamber when we are dealing with a serious issue. In 1980 the bank prime rate averaged 14.25 per cent.

Mr. Lewis: Averaged?

Mr. Johnston: If my hon. friend will listen—

Mr. Lewis: Do you have a mortgage at the average rate or the highest rate, Don?

Mr. Johnston: —the FCC loan rate, 15 to 20 years, in 1980 was 13 per cent, or 1.25 per cent below the prime.

Mr. Lewis: Come on, Don.

Mr. Johnston: In 1981, as inflation increased and interest rates went up, the bank prime rate was at 19.29 per cent

Mr. Lewis: You did commercial law just like I did, so, come on.

Mr. Johnston: The FCC rate was at 14 per cent, or more than five percentage points lower than the prime rate. What is the prime rate today? As of last week it was in the neighbourhood of 8.25 per cent. Listen to this. The last Canada Savings Bond rate at which the Government goes out and borrows from the public, the Series 38 through 41, was 7.75 per cent last November. Yet here we have members of the Government bragging about the fact that the FCC rate is now something in the order of 10 per cent, and it was 11 per cent in the first quarter.

Mr. Lewis: Right, we are bragging about it.

Mr. Johnston: The Minister of Agriculture says he will spare no effort. I think one effort he should not spare is to walk over and have a word with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). That is not too difficult. There is no reason why the Government should be profiting in its loans to grain farmers during a period when grain prices were slashed 15 per cent to 25 per cent this year after an incredible 19 per cent to 26 per cent drop last year.

Exceptional and critical circumstances require an exceptional response from a Government that accepts its responsibilities. Yet we have had no response. We have had people bragging about the level of the FCC rate, which is absolutely outrageous.

I want to pick up the Minister of National Health and Welfare on another point he made. When we talk about costs and interest rates the real issue is the real interest rate. What is the real interest rate? What is the difference between the Consumer Price Index and the interest rate that anyone is obliged to pay? If we look at the situation in Canada we will find that when the FCC was lending at 11 per cent, the CPI annual rate was 3.9 per cent. That means the real interest rate for farmers was 7.1 per cent. The spread was never that high during the most critical periods of the recession in the early 1980s.

Mr. Lewis: The Liberal recession.

Mr. Johnston: I think the Government should absorb some lessons of history and go back and practise some of the policies that the Liberal Government not only preached but followed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1400)

Mr. Johnston: It is absolutely outrageous that when input costs are so high and there is one thing about which the Government can do something, namely, interest rates, it does not step in and cushion the impact of those interest rates on the farming community.

Mr. Fennell: Like you did during the early eighties when they were 22 per cent?

Mr. Johnston: Don't tell me I have to repeat it all again. This is like a lesson in—

Mr. Fennell: Spare us. You've embarrassed yourself anyway, Don.

Mr. Forrestall: Would you please be quiet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order.

Mr. Johnston: Let me ask a question which I hope the next Tory speaker, if the Government has the courage to put one up, will respond to. Is it an outrageous proposition to suggest that the Farm Credit Corporation, during this critical period, should lend to farmers at the same rate as it borrowed from the Canadian public on Canada Savings Bonds? Is that an outrageous suggestion? I do not think it is.

Mr. Forrestall: Did you ever do that?

Mr. Johnston: I am quite prepared to answer those questions in due course, but I ask the next Tory speaker who has the courage to stand to tell me whether that is an outrageous proposition. We are not impotent.

I referred a moment ago to the circumstances of grain farmers in western Canada who have seen their guaranteed prices fall 15 per cent to 20 per cent in the current year, 19 per cent to 26 per cent last year, and who are faced with interest rates at the level about which we are talking. Not one Member on the other side of this House would have to pay such interest rates on a five-year home mortgage yet our farmers are being obliged by the Farm Credit Corporation to pay interest at this level.

You know a lot about business, Mr. Speaker. Do you know any business which does not have an incredible equity base that could survive a 15 per cent to 20 per cent cut in its prices this year and a 19 per cent to 26 per cent cut in its prices last year? Farms which have a very substantial equity base and those which were inherited through generations and have had their capital costs amortized may be able to stagger through this period, but they will not get rich. All of the others that have any loans which they have been encouraged to take over the years by the credit corporation will find themselves faced with foreclosures.

That brings me to another question. Why in the name of God would the Government, given the circumstances which the farming community faces, lift the moratorium on foreclosures at this time? Only a Conservative could answer that question and I hope some of them will if they dare to stand.

This issue does not affect only Canadian wheat farmers. This is our great Canadian heritage, our great Canadian asset. Even the farms which survive this crisis are going to watch their assets erode because they have no available funding to do the important things which are necessary to preserve the quality of the farmland in western Canada.

You are familiar with the salinization problems which are taking place, Mr. Speaker. You know of the soil erosion problems. You are from the Edmonton area and you see it. You know how much of our western soil is blown away each year, and know of the expense of introducing the farm technology necessary to prevent that from happening and to prevent the saline conditions from increasing. These all cost money. The people who lose their farms are in one situation, but the people who stay on their farms do no have adequate resources to do the things necessary to preserve our great natural heritage, our great natural resource, for generations to come.

On the input cost side the Government can act, should act, must act. It can act quickly on the issue of interest payments and by getting rid of the ridiculous notion of introducing foreclosures at this time. It is admittedly more difficult on the revenue side because of the international situation. No efforts should be spared.

I realize I only have a brief moment left to speak, but I am sure I will get unanimous consent to continue because the Members are learning something which they obviously have not known before.

There is an opportunity here to do something concrete. The United States and the European Economic Community can be associated with our major problems. This crisis is effectively being driven by a price war. We know from this month's releases by the Embassy in Washington that the U.S. Trade Bill is once again introducing more measures that will be damaging to Canadian agriculture. For example, the Export Enhancement Program is being amended to expand the number of countries which will be offered U.S. agricultural products at subsidized prices. This has a direct impact on the health and welfare of Canada.

I know I have little time left and I want to make reference to a letter which my colleague, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), today sent to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). He said that it has been brought to his attention that the Department of Agriculture has a new agricultural trade subsidy initiative which will include measures damaging to Canada. They are proposing to include, under the Export Enhancement Program, an offer of 1.25 million metric tonnes of barley to Saudi Arabia. As you know, Saudi Arabia is a traditional Canadian buyer. If this is approved by the trade review committee of the U.S. administration it will mean a loss of $75 million to $85 million to Canadian farmers.

Where will this end? The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has said that this is a battle of national Treasuries but the Government has said it cannot afford this fight between Treasuries. What ground will we fight it on? The ground is surely at the negotiating table between Mr. Murphy and Mr. Reisman. Why is this issue not up front? Why is this not the primary item of concern in those negotiations? This is a critical period and we are not told how—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has more than expired. Does the Hon. Member have unanimous consent to carry on?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, millions of Canadians who are accustomed to tuning in just about now, especially the good people of Hamilton—Wentworth, may wonder what an MP from southern Ontario is doing participating in a debate on the grains crisis and the lifting of the moratorium on the FCC. It is a monumentally important debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) who preceded me talked about the courage of Tory MPs in getting up to speak. Since this debate began yesterday seven cabinet Ministers, including the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), and 25 Members of Parliament on this side, I being the twenty-sixth Conservative MP, have entered this debate. The Liberals have put up 12 speakers. That is courage. That shows the commitment we have to Canadian agriculture and to the importance of this debate.

Mr. Gauthier: You have 210 MPs. We have 40. That is proportionately higher. Stick around, we're not finished yet.

Mr. Scott: If the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) would stifle himself, I could continue.

• (1410)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to listen to what the Hon. Member is saying. I will listen to all other Hon. Members when it comes their time to debate.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): This is a monumentally important debate on a national issue. It is not just a western Canadian problem, it affects all of Canada's farmers.

I am delighted to be receiving so much attention from the Opposition because it gives me and other Hon. Members an opportunity to put on the record the importance of this debate.

I repeat that it is not just a western Canadian problem, it affects all of Canada's farmers. There are many small family farms in the 650 square miles of my Hamilton-Wentworth area. That is why Members of Parliament from across Canada feel it is important to participate in this debate so that we can put on the record the Government's commitment to agriculture and to all farmers across Canada.

I cannot help but repeat the reference that the Right Hon. Prime Minister made to one of his predecessors, former Prime Minister Trudeau. We were given an example of his attitude from his famous statement that he made when confronted with not dissimilar circumstances. He said, "Well, why should I sell your wheat?" After the former Prime Minister said that, apparently he was confronted by a number of farm leaders who said his statement was giving them a real headache. Mr. Trudeau then said, "What the hell, it may be a headache for you guys but it is not migraine". That was the attitude that the Prime Minister of the day and the Liberal Government of the day took toward the problems of Canadian farmers.

During the 1984 election campaign we promised a 16-point commitment to the farmers of this country. We have delivered on 14 of them. Since 1984 we have pumped $6 billion in initiatives into Canadian agriculture. The Government has given agriculture a priority that is unprecedented. I believe that our record is second to none. Of course, agriculture means about 1.6 million Canadian jobs.

In the recent Throne Speech we promised to spare no effort in seeking to protect the interests of Canada's farming communities in the face of unfair pricing and subsidy practices conducted beyond our borders. I will return to that question because those pricing practices beyond our borders are instrumental to the whole thrust of this debate.

We are providing the largest farm assistance package ever, with the billion-dollar Special Canadian Grains Program which is putting a billion dollars of new money into the pockets of our farmers. I am delighted that almost without exception every member of the Opposition who has spoken in this debate has recognized the importance of that much needed money to western Canadian farmers.

Our Government, led by the Prime Minister, successfully pushed for agriculture to be included in the negotiations under GATT. For the first time agriculture will be on the table. We are continuing to push for a better mechanism for settling agricultural trade disputes with the United States. Those negotiations are continuing as we speak.

We are seeking secure, reliable access for our farm products. The motion passed in the House of Commons on March 16 supports the negotiation of a trading agreement with the United States which will protect our agricultural marketing systems.

Since we came into office in 1984, we have introduced over 400 agricultural initiatives at a cost of nearly $6 billion. That is over one new initiative for every other working day. I think it is worth putting those initiatives on the record so that the people of Canada understand our commitment to agriculture in general.

We provided $200 billion in drought assistance for the western provinces. We abolished capital gains taxes on the sale of farm land up to $500,000. The House will remember the applause we received across the length and breadth of this country as a result of that move. The NDP voted against it. That iniquitous capital gains tax was imposed on farmers by the previous Liberal Government.

We established farm debt review boards, now operating in every province, assisting financially troubled farmers to come to agreements with their creditors to avoid foreclosure.

Mr. George McLaughlin, chairman of the farm debt review board in Ontario estimates that at least 55 per cent of the cases going to the board are being resolved. That is 55 per cent more cases being resolved, when there had been no hope before.

I think it is important to point out in respect of lifting the moratorium on the FCC that the FCC cannot simply move in and foreclose. The review board gives a stay of proceedings for at least 120 days, which provides some breathing space to farmers who are desperately worried, or worse, when one listens to some of the rhetoric coming from the other side during this debate.

We removed the federal sales tax on farm fuels and exempted farmers from the current excise tax. A rebate program reduced taxes on farm fuel.

A further initiative extended the program to effectively remove all federal sales and excise tax on diesel and gasoline farm fuel until January, 1988. When the excise tax was raised in the 1986 Budget, the exemption was also raised to keep farmers from being affected.

We established an agri-bond program to provide loans at reduced rates to farmers. There was an extension of the small business bond program for two years. Hearings were held on agri-bonds.

A moratorium was placed on FCC foreclosures until programs were operating to assist financially troubled farmers. The lifting of those moratoriums is the subject of this debate, and it is definitely the concern of the Canadian Government to make absolutely certain that through this crisis Canadian farmers are treated with the concern and compassion that any Canadian Government can muster under the circumstances.

An optional shared risk mortgage program through the FCC was announced. A commodity-based loan program was introduced in February, 1986. That rose to $300 million as of April, 1987. The FCC interest rate on five-year fixed term loans is at the lowest level since 1979.

We took action to assist farmers who were locked into high interest FCC loans. A five-year $80-million interest rate conversion program assisting 5,400 FCC borrowers was implemented.

Interest rates are at their lowest level in nine years. Every 1 per cent decline saves Canadian farmers $130 million a year.

We moved to expand the PFRA to national farm and forest rehabilitation legislation, to bring new technology into the hands of farmers and rural residents. A Private Members' Motion on the PFRA was referred to a Standing Committee.

National Soil Conservation Week was proclaimed in 1985, 1986, and 1987. Federal-provincial discussions on the PFRA and soil conservation are occurring on a priority basis.

In June last year we established the farm finance boards and the farm debt review boards were functioning by September 1. Many Members have referred to the Canadian Rural Transition Program which was established to assist farmers who choose to leave the farm to seek other vocations. Every eligible applicant has been assisted since September, 1986, and $46.6 million has been spent in the interest of assisting farmers who want to move to other vocations under the CRTP.

Section 31 of the Income Tax Act will be changed to reflect the principles of equity, neutrality, simplicity and certainty.

In applying Section 31, Revenue Canada officials were directed not to limit declared farm losses when farmers, for economic reasons, are forced to take temporary part-time work off the farm. Interpretation and enforcement of the Act has been relaxed to benefit Canadian farmers. We moved to amend the Advance Payments for Crops Act to double cash advance levels. The Act was amended, doubling the size of loans for advance payments back in June of 1985. Legislation was introduced to the PGAPA to enact emergency provisions more quickly and to ensure more equitable treatment.

• (1420)

We moved to amend the WGSA to make it more responsive to the immediate needs of producers. Amendments to the WGSA triggered a spring interim payment of $450 million in 1985, another interim payment of $580 million in 1986 and an even larger payment is expected for 1987.

We moved to establish a National Income Stabilization Program for the red meat sector. Here is where we get to the Canadian Cattlemen's Association news release. It supports tough decisions by agricultural Ministers, and I quote:

> The Canadian Cattlemen's Association supports the decision of Agricultural Minister John Wise to end the temporary debt moratorium on debts to the Farm Credit Corporation.
> The CCA views debt moratoria as a temporary measure and has never supported its use.
> CCA President Stan Wilson emphasized, "Our concern is that the distortions caused by debt moratoria do more damage to the farm credit system than any possible benefit to individual farmers".
> Mr. Wilson concluded, "As responsible farm leaders, we must do more than continually criticize these actions and decisions of our Ministers".

I hope members of the Opposition are listening. This fellow makes sense. Mr. Wilson continues:

> We need to take more responsibility for contributing to farm policy formation in Canada. It took great courage for both Mr. Wise and Mr. Mayer to make these decisions.

He concludes:

> As producers, we recognize that courage, and support the measures taken.

I can point out to my Liberal friends that that is another kind of courage which the Ministers have and which we as a Government are demonstrating.

In the very few moments that I have left let me point out that in establishing the Income Stabilization Program for the red meat sector, we asked that participating provinces engage in tripartite stabilization and produce between two thirds and the three quarters of Canada's hogs, fed beef and lambs. We are working with producers to establish the marketing system they desire. Tobacco producers asked for, and received, enabling legislation paving the way for a national supply management system. A broiler hatching egg agency was proclaimed in December of 1986.

Potato producers are working with the Government on a proposal for the Potato Marketing Agency. Public hearings are being held. A Government motion was passed in March of 1986 that:

> This House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States—while protecting our political sovereignty, social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry and our unique cultural identity.

There it is. The fact is that the Government is on record as protecting Canada's agricultural marketing system.

We are re-establishing a long term dairy policy. A new five-year dairy policy was announced endorsing supply management. That involves $1.5 billion in just over five years. We are protecting producers against injury caused by highly subsidized imports. The Government, as I said earlier, at the initiative of the Right Hon. Prime Minister, has made agriculture its top priority for the upcoming GATT talks. The Prime Minister successfully fought to have agriculture put on the table. The Meat Import Act was invoked in 1985 to halt imports of subsidized EEC beef. Legislative action to ensure the Act can be invoked will be taken if necessary.

Corn countervailing duties were made permanent. Grain corn imported from the United States will have a duty of 84.9 cents U.S. per bushel assessed against it.

Let me conclude by saying I have been around this House, either on the third floor in the Parliamentary Press Gallery, or on the second floor of the House of Commons, since 1959. Unless one goes back to the days of the distinguished former Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) back in 1959, when I came here and watched the Hon. Member in action as the Minister of Agriculture under the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker I do not think one has ever seen Government which has been more committed to Canada's agricultural sector than this Progressive Conservative Government. There is no Ministerial expertise anyone can name in any Government which I have watched since 1959 that can match the concern and confidence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr Mayer). There is no

Prime Minister who has demonstrated as much compassion toward farmers or is more dedicated to helping preserve the family farm than the present Prime Minister and the Leader of this country.

This crucial agricultural sector, this sector of the economy, does face difficulties from time to time, just as the energy sector faces bumps as a result of world prices, just as every other sector of the Canadian economy every once in awhile has to ride the roller-coaster of international pricing. However, these crises ride themselves out and I have the utmost faith in the efforts of Canada's farmers, their traditional dedication to the preservation of the family farm, and utmost faith in the realization of this Government that we must be determined to see the family farm through this crisis. We are proud of our record and we intend to build on it.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when I listen to the Conservatives speaking, I think of the movie "Back to the Future". All they ever do is refer to the golden years of 1959, the Diefenbaker era and the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) who was Minister of Agriculture. I think they should get Michael J. Fox to be their Minister of Agriculture then they could really go back to the future.

We have been told by the previous speaker that the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is dedicated to agriculture. All I know is that he does pay for his own groceries, although perhaps not for his expenses for renovations to his house or his Gucci shoes. He does pay for his own food and I suppose that is a step forward.

I suppose Hon. Members are wondering why a Member of Parliament from a working class riding in central Vancouver is rising to speak on an agricultural debate. I pose that question before some Conservative Members start heckling me about it. The answer is that my constituents do have to eat so they are concerned about what is happening on the family farm. Second, my constituents consider farmers as fellow working Canadians, and when one kind of working Canadian is in trouble, all kinds of working Canadians are in trouble.

I suppose our audience today and those people watching us here and on television, must be wondering what is going on? Where is Question Period? Where is the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent)? Where is all the action? What is this debate on farming? I was hoping that before he leaves the House the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott), who is the most skilled Member of this House—perhaps not when it comes to debating farm issues but when it comes to imitating politicians—he would entertain us a little with some of his imitations. He is well known for it. He did a good imitation of Mr. Trudeau when he said "Why should I sell your wheat?" Actually, it was a rhetorical question asked by Mr. Trudeau. He said "Why should I sell your wheat?" He then responded "The reason why I should sell your wheat is because . . . " I say that to be fair to Mr. Trudeau, not that we have been in the past or have any intention to be in the future.

I thought that the Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth might have entertained us. He mentioned that his Government had done a great deal in the area of farming, and I followed his remarks closely. He mentioned different agencies, red meat agencies and so on. I got lost, I must admit, although I am sure other people were able to follow. I did write down that a broiler hatching egg agency was set up. I give credit for that being done. I thought that the present Prime Minister just laid eggs. However, I understand this agency was more sophisticated, it was a broiler hatching egg agency.

I would like to return to the present to indicate why we are having this debate today and why there is not a Question Period taking place. I am a neophyte farmer, although I did have a farm once on Mount Lehman Road, in the Fraser Valley. I see the Hon. Member who represents that region is in his place across the way. It was a 20-acre farm on which we had some—

Mr. Nunziata: Marijuana plants.

Mr. Waddell: My friend suggests we farmed marijuana plants, which is not true, although I understand that crop is booming where the Hon. Member comes from. We farmed cows and eggs, if one can farm cows. We also had some experience with the tax system as well, which is why we know where it should be reformed.

I want to say where we are at here. As I understand it, and I will try to make this simple so that even a thick-headed person like myself can understand, we have a deepening crisis developing on the Canadian farm, especially over the last two years. There is a grain export subsidy war going on. In other words, the European Common Market, with a market of 312 million people, is subsidizing like mad by giving grants to its farmers. The United States has also started that up. The Reagan administration gave a great many grants to American farmers. Of course, philosophically, the Americans would like the market to handle everything, they being conservatives, but when push came to shove they gave their farmers a heck of a lot of money.

That has caused the price of Canadian grain to drop dramatically. In fact, it dropped 20 per cent in price last year and will drop a further 18 per cent in the 1987-88 crop year. Those figures were announced by the Canadian Wheat Board last week. This is part of the reason we have an emergency debate here in the House of Commons today.

Yesterday, the Government announced that on May 1 the Farm Credit Corporation will begin to foreclose on family farms. The Farm Credit Corporation lends money to farmers. As we all know, farmers in Canada are constantly in debt, borrowing to buy machinery and seed in order to plant their crops. They receive money later when they sell their crops. A moratorium was placed on the corporation by the Government some 18 months ago which prevented the corporation from foreclosing on farmers; that is to say, that the corporation would not go around grabbing family farms. So what does the Government do at a time when grain prices will drop another 18 per cent? True to form, the Government hatches another egg. It got rid of the moratorium on the Farm Credit Corporation thus putting many farmers in a panic.

We in the NDP are calling for, at the very least, an immediate commitment by the Government to provide Canadian grain farmers with a guarantee that total grain receipts for crops being planted now in the 1987-88 crop year will equal those of the 1986-87 crop year. That commitment will cost in the neighbourhood of $1.5 billion to $2 billion.

Members opposite say that the Government is working hard on the international front to bring about peace. Hon. Members will recall that I talked about the European Economic Community and the United States subsidizing their farmers, thus forcing down the price of grain. That creates a problem for our farmers. However, I say this to the Government. Be careful. You may be working hard in this area, but it would be wrong to assume that you are really going to get somewhere by trying to wait out the Reagan administration, which will be gone in 1988, or to wait out the European Economic Community. That is a fallacy because measures have to be taken now.

The view of members of the New Democratic Party, unlike the view of members of the Government who think that it is all a problem with the international community, is that as Canadians we can take measures to do things here in Canada.

I remember well Tommy Douglas, whom I had the pleasure of knowing. He once told me here in the House, where he was a Member of Parliament since 1935, that he stood up in the House day after day and said, "Look, we can put people back to work on the Prairies during the Great Depression. We can do things. We can help the farmers and the workers". Day after day the Government would get up and respond, "Sorry, we cannot do anything". Then Tommy Douglas told me that within 18 hours of war being declared Parliament sat all night and into the next day and enacted a series of measures that helped farmers and the workers to get back to work and so on.

We are not in a war today. That was an extraordinary situation then. The fact is something can be done if one has the will. We in the NDP believe that we can do things here in Canada. We do not have to rely on Ronnie Reagan or on the European Community. We acknowledge that we live in a global village, but we should still try to do some things here at home.

The Government has provided some assistance to prairie farmers. It gave them $1 billion, but look at the way it was done. This is the problem the Prime Minister has. A previous Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, looked smug for saying, "Why should I sell your wheat?" But the present Prime Minister looks smarmy and opportunistic. He gave $1 billion to farmers. Why did he give it? Because the Premier of Saskatchewan phoned and said, "I have an election going on in which the Conservative Government will be defeated. Please send the money right away". How did he give money to oil producers? By getting rid of the petroleum gas revenue tax. He did not do it right away, as promised. He waited until there was a by-election in Pembina when it looked as if the NDP would win the by-election and, bang, the grant came. Such actions catch up to those who take them. People see this as an opportunistic Government, which is why the Prime Minister's Party is at 24 per cent in the Gallup polls.

The Government has consulted farm organizations. Members opposite have said that. But it does not seem to listen to them. The Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth mentioned the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. Everyone knows that those cattlemen are big ranchers. What about the little guy who owns a small mixed farm and a few head of cattle? He is not represented by that big organization. He does not want to see the end of the moratorium.

Mr. Blenkarn: Cattle people are all in good shape.

Mr. Waddell: They are getting money, but not some of the smaller ones. I used to be a cattleman, my friend, as I said, in a minor way, and we used to always complain. Government assistance, though significant, was inadequate. It also came at an opportunistic and awkward time.

We know that the Government says it is fighting the deficit, but there are other ways of dealing with it. It could put in place a fair system of taxation so that it could collect more money, therefore having more to redistribute to save the family farm. Even while the Government provides some assistance with one hand it seems to take away money from farmers with the other through the imposition of increased taxes, service fees, freight rates and a whole host of other direct and indirect costs which must be borne by farmers.

The Government should not lift the moratorium until, first, it announces a deficiency program for the upcoming crop year and, second, until it addresses the broad question of the farm debt, which is about $25 billion, most of which is still held at the high interest rates that came in at the time the Liberal Government was in power.

I have heard members of the Conservative Party criticize the previous Liberal Government. We all agree that it had its faults. But why do we not get on and deal with the present? It seems to me that the Government can do something.

• (1440)

On April 1, 1985, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs tabled in this House a unanimous all-Party report, a report that contained several recommendations that could have been put in place to assist the agricultural community.

The first of those recommendations was that the Farm Credit Corporation be encouraged to write down loans. Nothing happened.

The second recommendation was that the Minister consider the issue of agri-bonds. Again, nothing happened.

I believe I heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) speak in the House about the Government implementing agri-bonds. But, when and how have they done that? It simply has not taken place. Certainly agri-bonds would be of assistance. It is something that the Government promised at Prince Albert, Saskatchewan during the 1984 election campaign.

Either or both of those suggestions, had they been implemented, would have alleviated the situation somewhat.

An Hon. Member: Oh, come on!

Mr. Waddell: I am trying to be positive. I am merely trying to suggest some action that could be taken.

This morning we listened to the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King) speak in this debate. He was the lead-off speaker this morning. However, he stayed in his seat yesterday afternoon, leading to the adjournment of the debate. The Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen took the traditional position of the Government side in this debate, that of defending the Government's record.

I managed to search out some material about what was happening in the Okanagan, and according to that material, he takes a different position when in the Okanagan. On one occasion while in the Okanagan he described the situation as being of crisis proportion, and he went on to say, and I quote: "It is the same story on the Prairies. They have the product, but they cannot get the money for it."

This same article goes on to talk about the Jones family. The Jones family bought a farm for $385,000 in my Province of British Columbia, the beautiful Okanagan. That breaks down to a value of $19,000 an acre. Today, that farm is worth $10,000 an acre.

The article points out that there was a federal Government moratorium on farm foreclosures for a year and a half; but that, even with that moratorium, 44 farmers found it impossible, finally giving up their lands to the Farm Credit Corporation.

I listened to my colleagues from the Prairies talking about suicides and depression among members of the farming community. I had not realized how really bad the situation in that regard was.

One of the articles I have here has to do with how the apple growers of the Okanagan were squeezed out of their markets by imports from Great Britain, the Granny Smith apples. We were even serving these apples here in the Parliamentary Dining Room.

When I first became aware of that program through British Columbia television, I made fun of it. It was almost like Mr. Trudeau saying, "Why should we sell your apples?" But in fact I now realize how serious that situation was. The fact is, the British Columbia apple growers had their product squeezed out of the market. We in Canada could have consumed Okanagan-grown apples rather than importing Granny Smith apples from the United States.

In this article, Mr. Jones, the farmer of whom I spoke earlier, says that while he may be walking away from his land, he refuses to stop farming. He says that he will lease his property from the Farm Credit Corporation if it cannot be sold, or find some other leased land on which to work. He goes on to say:

> We have a few options, but we don't know exactly what we will do. The situation will steer the course. If I were to pick up some property, on lease, I would stay farming. I don't have a lot of control over the situation with our debt, so there is not much point in worrying about it. Anyway, if you are a farmer, you get used to disaster.

One can get some glimpse of what it is like for the farmers to have to face these terrible problems, and the determination that they show.

The question I ask, Mr. Speaker, is, why would the Government at this time end the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loan foreclosures? That, it seems to me, is the worst kind of action to take at this time. It is indicative of the worst kind of logic, and it is typical of the Mulroney Government to be so insensitive and inconsistent.

According to my information, FCC loans in British Columbia number 448, of which 249 are more than two years in arrears, with a total value of $12.6 million. Does that mean that 249 farms are going to be seized? Again according to my information, 60 farms will be immediately affected by the lifting of this moratorium.

My concluding remarks, Mr. Speaker, will be on quite a partisan note. As I go through this I invite you to guess who wrote this policy. I am about to read the Executive Summary of a report published in May of 1986. This is something that has become the policy of the Government.

It reads as follows:

> The (blank) would recommend:—

And I will fill in the blank once I conclude this portion of my remarks. Once again:

> The (blank) would recommend:
> —government transition programs involving relocation, retraining, and support;
> —farm financial review boards be restricted to an advisory capacity with consideration to be given to borrowers of direct lending or provision guarantees to existing lenders where future turnaround of the operations is deemed possible;
> —continued improvement in farm management and financial information be promoted by creditors and government;

This is the policy of the Government. And who wrote it, Mr. Speaker? The Canadian Bankers' Association has written the policy of this Progressive Conservative Government, and they are following it. This Government is in bed with the big banks, as it is in bed with the big oil companies in allowing Amoco to take over Dome Petroleum. It ignores the small Canadian oil companies; it ignores the farmers; it ignores ordinary Canadians.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that a government that does that does so at its jeopardy. It is a Government that will be tossed out by the people at the next election. Unfortunately, that is two years away.

I urge this Government to come up with a real farm policy to assist those who are suffering so much. The Government will find support for such a policy in the cities of this country, on the part of those who consume the food and on the part of the working people who sympathize with the farmers.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the House Leaders, and I think you will find that there is unanimous consent to interrupt the emergency debate on agriculture to deal with four items, as follows: number one, the introduction and first reading of a Bill sponsored by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) relating to tobacco products; number two, the tabling of the Standing Committee report on International Banking Centres; number three, the tabling of the legislative committee report dealing with Bill C-41, an Act to amend the Judges' Act, the Federal Court Act, and the Tax Court of Canada Act; and number four, the tabling of a report by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) dealing with Public Service lay-offs.

Once those items have been dealt with, we will immediately return to the emergency debate on agriculture that is now before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that there have been discussions and we are agreeable to dealing with the four items as outlined.

Mr. Hovdebo: The New Democratic Party also agrees to that, Mr. Speaker.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, dealing with international banking centres, in both official languages.

It is the unanimous view of the committee that the real problem in developing international banking centres, as this country could well do, is in relation to the withholding tax, and thus the report makes extensive recommendations in respect of work to be done by the Ministry of Finance in connection with treaties dealing with the payment of money from one country to another through the banks of each country tax free and free of withholding tax. These would be treaties of the same nature as those currently in place in such places as Great Britain, the United States and Germany. We feel there is a real future for Canada, and the report makes those recommendations.

ADMINISTRATION

REPORT ON REDUCTION IN PERSON-YEARS OF PUBLIC SERVICE

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, on August 21, 1986, I promised the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I would report regularly to the Members of this House on the impact of person-year reduction in the Public Service. Considering this commitment and the statement I made before the House on March 2, 1987, when tabling the Government's Main Estimates for fiscal 1987-88, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, a report to Parliament on the impact of person-year reduction in 1986-87 on Public Service employees.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN GRAINS CRISIS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hovdebo:

That this House do now adjourn.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the reason Members in increasing numbers are participating in this debate, whether from rural or urban communities, is simply that we cannot understand why two days ago the Government would announce this rather cruel and insensitive measure to lift the moratorium on farm debt by the Farm Credit Corporation. Many Members got upset because one week after initial grain prices were lowered by 18 per cent, by almost one-fifth, 6,000 farmers who were at risk were put into immediate jeopardy as a result of these two announcements.

We cannot understand these developments. As the Leader of our Party put it in this House yesterday, we want a rationalization of them and we want to have a number of questions answered. As the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) put it yesterday, we on this side of the House believe that we need an announcement now of a deficiency payment sufficient to restore this year's prices to last year's prices and so guarantee to Canadian farmers the same returns as they received last year. That was the first point of our Leader.

Second, we on this side believe that not only must cash flow be maintained so that farmers when they seed, know what to seed and whether to seed, we also believe that the growing credit crunch and the avalanche of debt punishing Canadian farmers should be resolved soon in a meaningful way. We do not find it difficult to imagine that if the Farm Credit Corporation begins to go after certain farmers that that phenomenon will also be adopted as a measure by banks from which farmers have received loans. Therefore it is a measure that is not limited to some 50 farmers a month, which the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) made reference to two days ago in Question Period, it is a measure that could snowball and become a real threat at this time to the farming community.

The situation is one that has distressed us in the Opposition to the extent that I have just described. I submit that the roots of this decision can be traced back to November 1984 when the Minister of Finance (Mr.Wilson) made his statement at that time. Since then, systematically, one after the other, the Government has managed to alienate, irritate and damage a number of sectors in the Canadian society.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the laughing Progressive Conservative Member who just entered the Chamber, when the Government attempted to deindex the pensions of our senior citizens. That was one of the many measures tried by this Government since November, 1984. That measure was stopped, but there were others that could not be stopped and have been implemented. For instance, the imposition of the federal sales tax, that hidden tax which has been increased three times since the Government was elected.

It is not just a matter of deindexation of pensions or the imposition of federal sales tax; what about the restrictions imposed on workers who are unemployed and whose benefits will not be paid until certain severance pay and certain pension payments are exhausted? It is not only the unemployment insurance measures or the federal sales tax, you will also recall the constant and systematic increases in another tax, namely, the gasoline tax. Or, if you like, a measure that was just announced a few minutes ago by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), the systematic reduction in person-years in the federal Civil Service. This is another form of penalizing the public by way of reduced services to people who need federal services, in any daily aspect of life, from the applicants of Canadian citizenship to those who seek guidance and counselling in our employment centres, to those who apply for immigration, landed immigrant status, reunification, or sponsorship of a family member abroad, those who have to wait for weeks and months before they can be given an appointment.

It is these delays and the slowness of the federal machinery in implementing programs that exist and are approved by this Parliament that are the long-term, slow but inevitable result of measures introduced by the Government. We must see this measure that we are debating now for the second day with understandable outrage within the context of a general policy that the Government announced and somehow forewarned us and the public about way back in November, 1984.

In the case of the farming community, having suffered the reduction of 18 per cent in prices and, while attempting to survive despite that, being given this additional kick with the suspension of the moratorium, we see the farming community in a form of crisis that has been exacerbated by these measures we are debating today.

In essence what is emerging in the farming community, east and west, is a crisis that also includes a phenomenon that has been examined and identified in the last five years twice by Ottawa in a variety of ways. I am referring here to a problem which the farming community has to face and would like to resolve, if given the assistance that it requires by Ottawa, namely, soil erosion.

• (1500)

The House will recall that five years ago the Senate Committee on soil erosion produced a report entitled Soil at Risk. That was the first indication of awareness at the federal level of an issue that needs attention in order to facilitate a rather difficult transition problem in the farm community. Chaired by Senator Sparrow, the 1984 report brought up a number of interesting facts. One was that lost income to farmers as a result of soil erosion amounted at that time to $1 billion across the nation. That is an amount that has a staggering impact when heard for the first time.

Two years later, the Science Council of Canada followed up on this study and became preoccupied with the same issue. The Council felt that the farming community needed attention from the Government in Ottawa, in a variety of ways, never anticipating that the kind of measures we are debating today would be in store.

In 1986 when the Science Council reported, it estimated that the loss per year to the farming community by way of soil erosion had risen to the staggering figure of $1.3 billion annually. The Council also attempted to estimate the losses associated with soil degradation per hectare and even to define it in terms of net farm income. The figure the Science Council produced is worth tabling. Its conclusion was that the loss to the farmer per acre in 1986 was anywhere between $20 and $25 and the impact of soil erosion on net farm income amounted to some 38 per cent.

An additional refinement of these studies on soil erosion was conducted in southwestern Ontario. Here it turned out that soil erosion caused a 30 per cent to 40 per cent decrease in corn crop yields. We were told that the loss of one inch of soil could reduce wheat yields by 1.5 to 3.4 bushels per acre. We are dealing with a situation—the roots and causes of which would take some time to define—that, if anything, should demand the intervention of the federal Government in order to reverse a trend and help the economy and the income of Canadians whose livelihoods depend on soil and its tillage.

The studies to which I have referred have pointed strongly to the necessity of soil conservation. Last April, the need for a national strategy on soil conservation was defined at a meeting which included farmers, agricultural scientists, business men, policy makers and environmentalists from all provinces and regions of Canada. They met in Saskatoon to develop a so-called framework for a national action plan for soil conservation.

The most pressing issues limiting the effectiveness of current soil conservation efforts were identified at the meeting. One was production or the lack of environmentally sound and economically viable production systems supporting soil conservation. The second was technology transfer or the lack of co-ordination and the negative perception of conservation as an added cost rather than a long-term benefit. The third was marketing or the lack of strategies to decrease uncertainty of product prices and increase efficiency consistent with sound conservation practices. The fourth was research or the requirement for increased co-ordination and collaboration among federal and provincial Governments, universities, agricultural colleges, industries and farmers, a role that could be played very strongly and centrally by the federal Government. The fifth was education or the need to create an awareness of conservation among the general public and particularly the young and an increased emphasis on conservation practices for students of agriculture. Finally, there were the environmental effects, or the deteriorating quality of surface and ground water by sediments, nutrients and pesticides that are transported from agricultural land because of poor soil conservation. This must be understood, quantified and become the object of alternative policies as early as possible.

I would like to refer the House to a study conducted by Dr. D. A. Rennie which in 1985 estimated the cost of erosion to farmers in western Canada alone. He came to the conclusion that this amount would be some $440 million. To that he added the loss of organic matter amounting to some $326 million per year, and the cost of salinity amounting to some $212 million, for a total loss to western Canada alone of $978 million per year. This has been translated into 16.7 per cent of operating costs or to some 79 per cent of farmers' net income.

When we approach the question of the economic cost of soil degradation on a province-by-province basis, we come up with interesting figures which add up to a different total but, nevertheless, to a figure that has been worked out with great care, I am told. In British Columbia, the estimated annual economic cost of soil degradation amounts to some $45 million, in Alberta to some $429 million, in Saskatchewan to some $560 million, in Manitoba to some $21 million, in Ontario to some $90 million, in Quebec to some $114 million and in Atlantic Canada to some $23 million, for a total of $1.283 billion per year. As I mentioned earlier, this kind of degradation includes erosion, organic matter loss, acidification, salinity, drainage and compaction.

This over-all picture must be defined within the framework of this debate because it is an added economic crisis faced by farmers at the present time. One would have thought that a Government worth its salt would try to come to the aid of the farmer by realizing that when revenue is declining and there are gluts on the market, this could be the appropriate time for Government to provide certain incentives and economic shock absorbers to facilitate the initiatives required to bring the viability of soil back to where it was decades ago before intensive cultivation took place.

I want to reiterate what the Leader of my Party said in this House concerning the Liberal position in this debate. We want the Government to announce a deficiency payment sufficient to raise the return this year to farmers equal to last year's return. We want the Government to do it now so that farmers have some assurance that when they seed they will receive a return that will cover at least the cost of production. That is a very reasonable position.

In addition, we call for a rationalization of farm debt and revocation of the decision by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to lift the FCC moratorium.

Having said that, I would like to conclude by saying that if this debate is proceeding at the rate it is, with interventions from the most unexpected quarters, and I can assure you that there are not many farmers in the riding of Davenport, it is because we are profoundly upset. We do not understand the logic or politics of this decision. That is why we are rising in increasing numbers on this motion. We feel a strong message has to be sent to the Government on the eve of the Prime Minister's visit to western Canada. We hope that this debate will have some effect and register some messages with him so that next week he will have something to say to the farmers, east and west, which is sensible, humane, and takes into account their incredible economic plight.

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate on agriculture. The NDP referred to the urgency of this debate. I think it is high time we gave some recognition to the progress this Government has made in two and half years, compared with what the previous Government was able to do in 20. I also think it is high time we reminded opposition Members and the Canadian public that in two and a half years, this Government has fulfilled more than three quarters of its election promises. Earlier, I heard the previous speaker for the Liberal Party talking about the moratorium that was being lifted. Did it ever occur to them that a moratorium was necessary because of the poor administration of the previous Government, when interest rates for farmers went as high as 16 per cent?

When we came to power we had to deal with this problem. The previous Government never had the courage to face up to the banks and deal with the situation, and say they were going to introduce a moratorium until interest rates got back to levels that were reasonable and acceptable to farmers. During the election campaign, we talked about getting back to an average rate of around 10 per cent.

Well, we did it in two and a half years. We got back to an acceptable interest rate, and it is entirely normal we should consider lifting the moratorium. The Government, however, is not abandoning farmers in the process. On the contrary, it has taken steps to ensure that regional panels will examine, on a case by case basis, the situation of farmers who are in difficulty despite a return to normal interest levels. I am surprised that Members of the previous Government should be demanding reinstatement of a moratorium they never had the courage to introduce.

I am also surprised at the comments of the Member of the New Democratic Party who spoke earlier. In concluding his speech, he said that he could see nothing positive in the Government's actions. Since they are so blind to the obvious, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take advantage of the opportunity I have been given today to speak to this honourable House, and remind the Hon. Member and his colleagues of what the Government has achieved in the past two and a half years. It has been two and a half years since we came to power, after an election campaign in which we produced a document where our objectives were clearly defined. Nearly 75 per cent of those objectives have been met. I may therefore remind him that if he is looking for positive signs, there are plenty among the achievements I am about to mention.

At the same time, I take great pleasure in greeting our farmers in the riding of Richelieu. During the last election campaign, when I was canvassing door to door and at riding meetings, I found they were desperate and depressed because of the crushing pressures of interest rates and also because of the lack of a long-term dairy policy.

There are 800 dairy farmers in my riding who were looking for this kind of stability. There are also pork producers who were absolutely debt-ridden, and who today are all smiles. There are also sheep farmers and grain producers who were suffering again as a result of falling prices, and who were saved by the billion-dollar subsidy. Once again, this Government has acted responsibly.

The farmers I met last week at a meeting to discuss free trade, among other things, told me how pleased they were with everything the Government had been able to do for them in the past few years because, in 1984, the Farm Credit Corporation rate was 16 per cent.

I may also recall the problems farmers were having as a result of oil prices. In fact, it was the previous Liberal Government which brought down the previous Conservative Government during an historic vote in December, leading to an election that cost taxpayers $105 million, and all because of a promise that the 18 cent increase would be scrapped. And lo and behold, less than six months later, we had an increase of over 65 cents. In fact, our Party admitted during the election campaign that the price of oil was having a serious impact on Canadian farmers. Today, thanks to our Government's action, farmers have had some respite as a result of price controls, a drop in the price of oil and fuel tax rebates, either in the form of income tax rebates or direct refunds.

In 1984, Quebec farm producers were hoping to receive compensation for the 1983 drought. The previous Government had flatly refused to make any compensation payments or even listen to these farmers explain the problems they had in 1983 because of the drought. However, thanks to the new Government's awareness of these problems, millions of dollars were set aside for this purpose. In my riding alone, $1,200,000 in compensation payments were paid in connection with the 1983 drought. I think that can be seen as a very positive measure benefitting Canadian farmers, and especially those in Quebec.

Farmers had been waiting five years for a permanent dairy policy. They got one in less than a year with the Conservative Government elected in 1984.

The Liberals set up a Crown corporation, Canagrex, which, instead of helping farmers, has been a constant drag on their budget. Our Government has done a great deal for Canadian agriculture, directly contributing to the survival of many farmers.

I would also like to take this opportunity to say what the Opposition is afraid to mention, and I am referring to all the help we have received.

Signing the five-year policy cost the Government $1.5 billion. It was a commitment that was difficult to meet, in the knowledge that we were embarking on free trade discussions, but we nevertheless wanted to provide guarantees for our dairy producers.

The $500,000 capital gains exemption. This program has made it possible for farmers to sell to their sons or neighbours without having most of their profits taxed away. This program has made it possible for farmers to pass on the family farm to the next generation, something they wanted for many years. The capital gains tax exemption has had an extremely positive impact on the number of young farmers which has increased to twice or three times the number noted in the five or six years previous.

The Opposition was against this measure even before it was introduced, but nevertheless, it has been very successful. The Opposition talks a lot about morality. I suggest we call it political morality, and I think that political morality is reflected in acceptable interest rates. It means helping young people who want to take over the family farm. It also means a drop in the unemployment rate and investors who are investing in Canada as never before. Political morality is not the morality of the individual but the morality of a Party that takes charge and defends the interests of all Canadians by increasing their well-being.

For instance, FCC interest rates which were at 16.75 are now below 10 per cent. And we have all the case-by-case studies to help individual farmers.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) introduced 6 per cent programs for farmers in financial difficulty. Is that not an example of the positive factors the previous NDP speaker was looking for?

We introduced a shared-risk mortgage plan at a rate of 9.75 per cent. These measures had been called for by the Opposition, both by the NDP and the Liberal Party. We implemented these measures and today, they tell us we have done nothing positive. We set up a farm debt review board, and in my riding, a dozen cases have already been dealt with successfully, thanks to this board.

Mr. Speaker, we also introduced a diesel fuel tax rebate. Our farmers had been asking for this for years. It means that now they can get a refund, which will help them cope with their debt load and expand their operations. That was another concept people had been talking about for years, but the previous Government never had the courage to put it into practice.

We have compensated Quebec producers for crop losses, as I said earlier. In my riding alone, producers received $1,200,000. We have signed federal-provincial agreements with several provinces, including agreements worth $35 million with Quebec. Under the previous Government, misunderstandings and petty quarrels about protocol and precedence were the order of the day, and while constitutional debates and those same petty quarrels made the headlines, farmers were left to their own devices. All that changed when this Government came to power, and today, farmers are delighted with programs that are bringing in $35 million more for Quebec. I meet these people every week-end and talk to them in my riding. In fact, my riding has the largest number of dairy producers in Canada: 800 farms. These people say they are satisfied and, in fact, delighted with the attention they are getting from the present Government, which listens to them and consults and lives up to their expectations.

We have given $1 billion to help grain producers, and for the first time, the money has not been funnelled into one specific region. Funds have been spread across Canada, so that for the first time, Quebec's grain producers have received $37 million. This is a first, and it is very gratifying. I met with the mayor of Saint-David on the weekend, and he said that for him and his children, $55,000 meant he would be able to save some of his year's production, and he was very pleased.

Yet this man is not a fanatic nor does he support any particular Party. His objective remark to me: the agricultural producers of the Saint-David region are quite satisfied with the wheat output and the deficiency payments they will be getting.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on like this for a long time since the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) have successfully debated the implementation of 414 agricultural initiatives worth in excess of $7 billion. These are concrete achievements which attest to our sense of responsibility towards the Canadian agricultural community and the fact that we believe that agriculture is one of the key sectors of our economy. It goes to show that we intend to continue working along those lines.

Mr. Speaker, for the first time ever agriculture will top the agenda of the GATT negotiations. Thanks to the intervention of our Prime Minister, for once we will be able to give priority to the agricultural sector at the next GATT summit, proof positive that one of our first concerns over the past two and a half years has been agriculture and the farm community because we wanted to help them get out of the slump into which they had been driven by the previous Government.

Yet the Opposition still finds something to criticize. But what exactly is the agricultural program of the Liberal Party of Canada? What specific solutions do they have to propose? What are the solutions of the NDP—and I am talking about realistic solutions, not dream-like solutions which do not even take into account the Canadian Government's ability to pay?

Being more realistic, our Government is controlling the state's budget and expenditures and co-ordinating departmental activities to provide the best services possible at the lowest cost to invest billions of dollars in our agriculture to save our western grain producers, to help our Quebec producers and support our potato producers in eastern Canada. Each farm industry has been scrutinized by our Government, a true national Government, and we are proud indeed of its accomplishments and very positive actions. I do not share the opinion of the NDP Member who spoke before me, nor that of the Liberal Party Member who was eager to have the moratorium continued, something his own Government had not had the courage to initiate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me so much time. I hope the Government will continue its good work in the area of agriculture.

• (1520)

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in this debate, not because I represent a dominant farm sector of the country—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And not because you know anything about it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Well, that has never stopped me in the past. I have never known Members of this House to be hesitant about making a speech on a subject of which they have extremely limited knowledge. It is almost accepted that the less you know about many things, the better Member of Parliament you are.

Mr. Boudria: We're generalists.

Mr. Rodriguez: Everyone thinks that the only thing we farm in Nickel Belt is nickel. However, for the erudition and enlightenment of Hon. Members, there is one valley in Nickel Belt called the Chelmsford area which was the greatest and best potato-producing section of this country. Indeed, with all due respect to my colleagues from Prince Edward Island, the potatoes from Nickel Belt, and Chelmsford particularly, won many awards for being the best potatoes in the country. I know that Members opposite are scoffing at that, but it is a fact. That was some 30 or 40 years ago before Inco got at the soil, but I knew I would be able to bring that information into the debate. If we are not in that position any more, it is due to the other single industry that has grown up in the Sudbury area.

• (1530)

Some may ask, since I do not know much about agriculture why am I speaking? This crisis facing the farm community is not just a farm issue or a western issue, it is one that affects every Canadian man, woman and child. We have a moral responsibility to stand up and air the issue thoroughly.

I do not want to cast stones at the Government continuously. I am a reasonable person and I think they have done some good things. There is no doubt, as I read and listen to those who are knowledgeable on the subject, that there is a crisis. The Ottawa Citizen on April 28 contained a large headline: "Black Friday Looms For Farming Families". In The Windsor Star there is a large headline stating: "An Industry Gone Wrong". In the Business Day of The Toronto Star the headline reads: "One In Five Farmers Seen Leaving The Land". In the same newspaper there is the headline: "Thousands of Prairie Farmers behind $227 Million in Loans". Another article states: "Census finds farms falling in number".

Every time that one acre of farmland goes out of production in this country a little bit of Canada dies. I recall when I first began teaching in the St. Catharines area in the Niagara district I used to spend my summers going to the peach farms to pick peaches and subsidize my wages as a teacher. When I return there today I see highway. There are many small businesses along that stretch between Hamilton and St. Catharines where there used to be all sorts of canneries that primarily employed immigrant women to can peaches and pears. That has all disappeared. If the present trend of disappearing farmland continues, we will be a net importer of food in this country. That has very serious implications for future generations of Canadians.

Members on the government side who stand up to say there is no crisis are taking the ostrich approach.

An Hon. Member: Nobody is saying that. You are way off base.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Member says that no one is saying that. I am holding the debates from April 28. In a speech by the Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté), which appears at page 5405 of Hansard, he says:

> Mr. Speaker, it takes incredible nerve to ask for an emergency debate on the situation of Western grain producers.

He said that the NDP has an awful nerve to suggest that we should have an emergency debate on this question. I have listened to other Members opposite, including the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). He said that everything was fine. There are those who prefer to put their heads in the sand and say that there is no problem because the matter has been rectified. They suggest that the debt moratorium program which was introduced 19 months ago can be taken off.

Mr. Blaikie: When things are worse.

Mr. Rodriguez: We will get to that a little later.

We also see the Pontius Pilate approach, in which they wash their hands and say there is nothing more that can be done. They say that after all, they gave a billion dollars to save the "diviner" and cannot find any more money. Perhaps one solution is to give the farmers access to the PC Canada Fund. I hear Members say that the Government does not have any money for them and it has done as much as it can do.

Excellent speeches have been made on both sides of the House I have learned a lot from listening to Conservative Members who represent western ridings. It appears to me that the crisis hinges on three specific issues. One concerns the fact that the United States and the European Economic Community are subsidizing their grain producers to such an extent that the Canadian grain producers cannot compete. The second issue seems to be a problem with respect to removing the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation mortgages as of May 1, which is tomorrow. The third contributing factor to the crisis would appear to be that the Government has refused to make a commitment to a deficiency program for the upcoming year. Those three facts indicate to me that there is a crisis.

Let us consider the first matter. Can we blame the Government for that situation? To be fair, we cannot blame the Government because it is an international situation. I think the Prime Minister was correct when he said that he will take this matter to the appropriate international authority to discuss it. I think that is fair. The Government cannot do anything about that.

However, let us consider the Government's step to lift the moratorium on Friday. I suggest that the Government has to learn that timing is of the essence in politics. On Monday, when the press release was issued from the Department of Agriculture that the moratorium would be lifted as of May 1, the Government scheduled a debate on capital punishment. That debate continued for two days. Meanwhile, farmers who are experiencing these problems and living on the edge were getting notice that the moratorium would be lifted on May 1. I could just see them watching what Parliament was debating on television and asking what Members of Parliament were doing. What is really important, is it the noose or their livelihoods and their farmlands? It was absolutely incredible that when people are faced with these serious problems Parliament engages in a debate on something that had been decided in 1976. I think that the priorities ought to be rethought in this House and by the Government.

Mr. Brightwell: Why have you been stalling for a month? You wouldn't let business go ahead.

Mr. Rodriguez: There are issues which are extremely vital to Canadians. One issue was the drug crisis and the high price for drugs Canadians will have to pay as a result of Bill C-22. No self-respecting Opposition would avoid doing all in its power to ensure that that matter was thoroughly examined. In this particular instance we took the opportunity, and the Chair agreed that this was an emergency situation. Therefore, we have launched this debate on the whole question of grain producers and agriculture.

We know, for example, the Farm Credit Corporation only covers about 30 per cent of all farm mortgages across the country. Once the moratorium comes off on Friday, you can bet your bottom bippy, Mr. Speaker, that the private lenders—the banks and all the other private lenders—will move in like a bunch of buzzards.

Mr. Brightwell: They were before. You are dreaming.

Mr. Rodriguez: They took their lead from the fact that the Government clearly indicated that it wanted a moratorium on the debt.

Mr. Brightwell: You are dreaming, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: No banking institution is going to fly in the face of what is a clearly perceived intention of the Government. Once that moratorium comes off, they will be right there.

I think farmers, no matter where they are in the country, are listening to the Prime Minister, and I know he wanted to get up early so he could prove that he is like a farmer, working hard, knowing the early bird catches the worm, or whatever the saying is. He was up really early because he came down and joined in the debate.

Mr. Blaikie: Guccis and overalls.

Mr. Foster: At 8.30 in the morning.

Mr. Nunziata: Farming in Gucci shoes.

Mr. Rodriguez: Do not cast aspersions on the Prime Minister's dress. He said, "If they phone me up and ask for help, I will not let them down. Brian Mulroney will not let them down. I will be there". He said that.

Mr. Nunziata: Hallelujah, brother!

Mr. Blaikie: New carpets in the barn.

Mr. Rodriguez: He said, and I quote from Page 5451 of Hansard:

> It happened that we received telephone calls from western Canada for help—and I can tell you what the position of my Government was then, what it is today, and what it will always be: When western Canada asked for help, to the extent humanly possible, Brian Mulroney and the Government of Canada will say, "Yes". We are there to build a stronger western Canada and to build a stronger Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: You should put your glasses further out on your nose, John, if you want to imitate him.

Mr. Foster: You look just like Brian.

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to say to all the leaders in western Canada, and wherever else in Canada, Ontario and the Atlantic, you heard what the Prime Minister said. Pick up the phone and call now, today, and he will make a contribution.

Mr. Merrithew: Watch the old ticker.

Mr. Rodriguez: They have to phone. The Prime Minister said if they phone he will give help. A previous speaker asked what concrete suggestions the New Democratic Party can make? Here is one. I am appealing to Hon. Members opposite to extend the moratorium. Extend the moratorium tomorrow.

Mr. Brightwell: So the banks won't foreclose?

Mr. Rodriguez: So that the FCC will not foreclose on the farmers. To make it crystal clear to the private sector lenders, the Government should send them a message directly and that message is to follow the lead which has been given to the FCC, a moratorium.

Mr. Brightwell: No more loans for farmers after that.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is one suggestion we were asked for. We are not the only ones saying that. The Keystone Agricultural Producers from Manitoba are saying the same thing. They are saying the moratorium should be continued. We are not the only ones.

The third factor in the crisis is that the Government refuses to make a commitment to a deficiency payment program for the upcoming year. It did so a year ago with $1 billion. There is no problem with that and we give the Government credit. But the situation now is that prices are going to drop another 18 per cent. The condition still exists. In fact, it is exacerbating. Now is not the time to leave the farmers in a quandary.

I want to make a second suggestion to my colleagues opposite on the Government side. Why does the Government not give the assurance that the farmers will receive the same price for their product this year as they received last year? Why does the Government not give them that assurance? That is reasonable.

Mr. Blaikie: Eminently reasonable.

Mr. Rodriguez: I think that is what they have asked for. If we ran into some difficulty in our nickel industry in the Sudbury Basin, I would be the first one to argue with the Government to extend assistance, even though I have my biases about multinational mining corporations. Because it involves the economy of the community, I would be the first one on my feet. I urged the Government when nickel prices dropped, to stockpile nickel, in other words, to purchase the nickel the workers produced and guarantee the price so they could continue to work. I argued for the workers in the mining industry, so why would I not defend our brothers and sisters in the agricultural industry? It seems to me that that is the whole concept of solidarity. That is what it means. We are all brothers whether we work in the mines or in the fields. It seems to me that that is an investment which Canadians, and all opposition Members who have spoken, have urged the Government to make. It is politically wise and it seems to me it is one thing which would help the Government to raise its profile in the polls.

That brings me to my last argument. The bottom line is this. If the Government will not do it because it is eminently reasonable, will it at least do it because it is politically expedient? I give a promise that I will not go out and criticize the Government if they did that. I would not say it is because of political expedience. I would not critize the Government for that. I am prepared to give it credit. I am really appealing to the sense of Canadianism on the part of the Government. I am urging the Government to in fact realize that all Canadians want the survival of their agricultural sector.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am appealing to the Hon. Member. Another 30 seconds. He is over by a minute and a half now.

Mr. Rodriguez: If I could not convince Members opposite in 20 minutes, perhaps I could try once more in 30 seconds. I say to Members opposite, look, there is a crisis. If they watch the news and read the newspapers which are emanating from western Canada, and from other parts of the country where there are farming communities, they would recognize that there is indeed a crisis.

• (1550)

We on this side of the House have proposed two specific and, we recognize, short-term, proposals. At least they deal with the immediacy of the problem. After that we will have to go back to deal with the long-range and long-term problems. We would be right behind the Government in trying to reach a resolution to those long-term problems.

I make that appeal to the Government. I see that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader is in his place. He is busy talking to someone else at the moment, but I trust that he will convey this message all the way to the top. If he will not do that then I will have to go and use the telephone.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Am I to understand that we are to continue with debate, or is the House business question to be asked?

Mr. Lewis: I suggest that Your Honour continue with the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) as the next speaker.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, while I represent an urban riding in Winnipeg—St. James there are many people in my riding who are employed either directly or indirectly by the agricultural industry in Manitoba. I was born in the small country town of Morris, Manitoba, which existed primarily because of the agricultural industry around it. I have many relatives who are farmers. So I am quite aware of the importance of the agricultural industry in Manitoba and in Canada. I am very happy to be able to participate in this debate.

I am sure that Hon. Members recognize that the farming and agricultural industry is having difficult times at the moment. The Government of Canada is trying to do something about it, to the best of its financial and physical ability. I would like to comment on the importance of the agricultural industry to Manitoba since, according to Statistics Canada, there are some 39,000 Manitobans who are employed in this industry. It is the third largest industry in terms of employment in Manitoba. As well, it is the second largest industry in terms of dollar value in our gross provincial product. In actual fact, it is the fuel that powers the engine of the Manitoba economy.

Why do I raise these particular items with regard to the importance of agriculture to Manitoba in my comments? During my participation in this debate I will attempt to put before the House the record of the present Manitoba NDP Government, as well as its attitude toward agriculture. I will also put forward our Government's record to date since our election back in 1984.

As Hon. Members know, since our Government was elected in 1984, we have initiated 400 different grants and benefits to Canadian agriculture amounting to approximately $5.76 billion. In the two and a half years that the Government has been in power we have assisted agriculture to the tune of $5.76 billion. To me that shows a great deal of effort in terms of trying to preserve this very important industry.

I would like to remind Hon. Members of some of the programs that have been instituted by the Government. First, I would like to mention the special Canadian grains program, which has been mentioned before. Under that program $1 billion was needed to boost the cash flow of grain producers. Over 80 per cent of this money will go to western Canada. Then, there was the new grains deal that my colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), arranged with Russia. It is a five-year agreement that will see the purchase by Russia of at least 25 million tonnes of grain. We also entered into a new long-term agreement with Brazil which guarantees that that county will purchase between 750,000 tonnes and 1.5 million tonnes of wheat annually between 1986-87 and 1988. I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Portage—Marquette for the efforts he is taking on behalf of our farmers to sell their grain in a very difficult world market-place.

There was also the crop and livestock drought assistance which amounted to some $210 million, $150 million of which went to grain farmers hit by last year's drought and grasshopper damage. Then there was $60 million in drought assistance to livestock producers in western Canada. There was also a record interim pay-out under the Western Grain Stabilization Act of $705 million for the 1986-87 crop year. Last year's total pay-out in this regard was $859 million.

We amended the Western Grain Transportation Act. We rolled the rate back to an average of $6 per tonne while the rate projected by the Liberals was going to be $11 per tonne. Another very important program which we introduced was the commodity-based mortgages program. Commodity-based mortgages will be available at a basic interest rate of 6 per cent with a limit of 13 per cent being placed on them should the price of commodities rise again, which we hope will happen. That limit would only be reached if the price of wheat went from $3 per bushel to $6 per bushel. This is a very progressive and forward-thinking program which was introduced by our Government.

We know also that because of our Government's approach to the finances of the country and its determination to bring the deficit under control, and as a result of our economic guidelines, interest rates have dropped. Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act interest rates declined to 11.25 per cent from the level of 14 per cent on election day. In terms of the Farm Credit Corporation, five-year mortgages have fallen by 3.75 percentage points to 10.75 per cent.

What I would now like to comment on is what the Liberal Government did when it had the chance to try to assist agriculture, particularly with respect to interest rates. I direct these comments in particular to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who stated the other day what the Liberals would do and how. I ask the Hon. Member where he was when interest rates on farm improvement loans reached some 23.75 per cent. Where was the Hon. Member then? He was in the Cabinet of the Trudeau Government.

With respect to interest rates in 1987 the prime rate is 9.25 per cent, while the Farm Credit Corporation interest rate is 10 per cent. There is a difference of 0.75 per cent between the two. In 1981 the prime rate was 22.75 per cent while the rate at the Farm Credit Corporation was 16.75 per cent. There is a difference of 6 per cent between the two. Where was the Liberal Government in 1981?

With respect to the Farm Improvement Loans Act, a very important Act for farmers, the interest rate is 10.25 per cent, which is just 1 per cent higher than the prime rate. What was the interest rate when the Liberals were in power? It was 23.75 per cent. There is a difference of 12.5 per cent between 1981 and 1987. Where were the Hon. Members from the Liberal Party who were members of the Trudeau Government then? Where were they when Prime Minister Trudeau said in Saskatchewan, "Why should I sell your wheat?"

We have seen what the Government has done through the Canadian Wheat Board. It has gone out and found new markets and increased markets in these very trying times. Who really believes the Liberals when they stand up today and say what they will do if they formed the Government? Nobody. I tell Hon. Members that nobody in western Canada would believe them because they proved when they were in government that they did not do anything.

I would like to talk about the present Government in Manitoba, the Government formed by the New Democratic Party, and its attitude toward agriculture. As Hon. Members are aware, I am a member of the finance committee. Today we had representatives from the Economic Council of Canada before us who presented us with the Council's activities for the coming year, as well as the issues and reports with which they will be dealing.

• (1600)

One of the studies—and it is probably one of the key studies that we are going to deal with over the next year—is a study dealing with the future of the prairie grain economy.

This was a study requested by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and it is one that is jointly funded by the provincial Governments and private sponsors and the council itself. Those provinces providing funding are eligible to appoint a representative to sit on an advisory committee to this special report and study.

The Government of Saskatchewan contributed $300,000 toward the study and the Government of Alberta contributed $50,000. What did the NDP Government of the Province of Manitoba contribute to the study? Zero dollars.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

An Hon. Member: So much for the socialists.

Mr. Minaker: The Province of Manitoba is not even represented on the advisory committee, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I asked Ms. Maxwell, the Chairman of the Council, why it is that the Province of Manitoba is not a party to the study, and the answer I got was that it wouldn't contribute $50,000.

That is indicative of what the NDP thinks about the agricultural industry in Manitoba. It will not even put up $50,000.

An Hon. Member: So much for the NDP commitment.

Mr. Minaker: Why is it important that Manitoba should be represented? In addition to other things, this study will look at the diversification of the agricultural industry in western Canada, the grain industry in western Canada. Manitoba is leading in the field in this respect. Certain lands in Manitoba that had been used for grain production are now being used for other crops. To give some examples, on these lands there is now grown black beans, pinto beans, and peas. In addition, we have two potato plants in Manitoba, Carnation and McCain's, and McCain's wants us to grow peas and carrots. We are growers of grain for ethyl alcohol. We have an ethyl alcohol plant in Minnedosa. And, of course, we have our sugar-beet industry.

The Province of Manitoba should be represented on that advisory committee. It should be part of that study. Those conducting the study itself will be presenting their recommendations to the advisory committee, and that committee will thus have an input in terms of the direction the final report will take and its conclusions.

The Government of the Province of Manitoba has said that it has not got $50,000 to give to that study; that a seat on that advisory committee is not worth $50,000. That tells me that while the NDP Government makes promises about assisting agriculture, it doesn't do anything about following up on them.

What about our sugar-beet industry in Manitoba? What does the NDP Government of Manitoba think about sugar-beets? There is the opportunity for the Government of the Province of Manitoba to enter into a jointly funded program with the sugar-beet producers that would cost the Government approximately $2 million over five years, or $400,000 per year. This annual funding of $400,000 a year would go a long way toward helping the sugar-beet growers in Manitoba, not to mention the sugar-beet plant that is located in the riding of the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

And what is their answer? They refuse to enter into that agreement. If they were to enter into that agreement, thus keeping the sugar-beet industry going in Manitoba, that same Government would receive in taxes from the trucking industry alone $200,000 annually. That is the approximate revenue that would be returned to the Government through fuel taxes and income taxes. In addition, the Manitoba Sugar Company would be paying to the Government $550,000 in taxes. In other words, for an expenditure of $400,000 to save this industry, the Government would be receiving in revenue $750,000. And yet, it has refused to participate.

That attitude prompts me to ask where that Government's policies in support of agriculture are. It is for that reason that I say what we are seeing during the course of this debate is hypocrisy. Who is to say that the federal New Democratic Party would not have the same attitudes toward agriculture as is exhibited by the Manitoba NDP Government. The NDP Government of Manitoba in the last election promised to assist the agricultural industry in Manitoba. We have seen how it has assisted agriculture. It is not doing anything.

We cannot believe the federal New Democratic Party. We know how closely tied it is with its provincial counterparts. How can we believe that it would do anything different if it were to form a federal government—heaven forbid!—than the NDP Government of Manitoba is doing. That Government will not even pay $50,000 to help out the grain farmers of Manitoba or of western Canada. It will not put up $400,000 a year to assist the sugar-beet industry, notwithstanding that it would receive, in return, $750,000 in revenues. It is a Government, Mr. Speaker, that is obviously not interested in agriculture at all.

The Progressive Conservative Government recognizes the seriousness of the problems facing the agricultural sector. It recognizes the difficulties it is experiencing at the present time. As is indicated by the number of programs we have instituted since forming the Government, we want to see the agricultural industry thrive and grow. We have indicated, through action, that we do have concerns and that we are prepared to provide assistance, and we shall continue to do so, Mr. Speaker, for however long we form the Government of this country.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on a point of order.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader what business the Government intends to call tomorrow and for the beginning of next week.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, assuming the termination of this debate, we will be dealing tomorrow with Bill C-22, the amendments to the Patent Act. We understand that there is a disposition to move through Routine Proceedings in a routine way, thus giving us the full day on the report stage of the Patent Act. We anticipate that there will be full debate on that. That will then constitute the allotted day on the Patent Act, as decided by the House earlier.

At the present time, the contemplation is that on Monday we will be dealing with the legislation on financial institutions.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

[English]

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN GRAINS CRISIS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hovdebo:

That this House do now adjourn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), on debate.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this emergency debate with regard to the plight of the Canadian farmer. Needless to say, the farmer in Canada is in a desperate situation. Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, the very future of the Canadian farmer is in jeopardy, mainly due to the inaction of this particular Government.

Canadian farmers are in deep trouble, and the response of this Government, this Progressive Conservative Government, has been totally inadequate.

Over the last several weeks, the Government of Canada administered to the farm family in Canada a double whammy. First, the Government, through the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), announced that there would be an 18 per cent decrease in the price of wheat over last year. As you know, Mr. Speaker, that comes on top of a 20 per cent decrease that occurred last year.

In 1984-85, the price per tonne for Canadian wheat was $170. In 1986-87, the price of that same tonne of Canadian wheat had been reduced to $130. Today, Mr. Speaker, the price is $110 per tonne. The price of barley in 1984-85 was $125 per tonne; in 1986-87, $80 per tonne. This year, Mr. Speaker, it is at $60 per tonne—less than half of what it was two years ago. We have had the price of wheat go from $170 a tonne in 1984-85 to $110 per tonne this year.

The Canadian farmer, the Canadian farm family, is in jeopardy. In effect, the very heart of our nation is being pierced by the inaction of this particular Government.

First it reduced the price of grain. If that isn't enough, on Monday of this week, the Government announced that it would be lifting the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation mortgage foreclosures. A double whammy, Mr. Speaker. The price of grain plummets because of the policies of this Government, and then it turns around and lifts the moratorium on farm foreclosures. As a result of the lifting of the moratorium on FCC mortgages, up to 6,000 farms are immediately subject to foreclosure by the Farm Credit Corporation, and another 10,000 farms are in jeopardy.

• (1610)

One might ask why the Government decided on Monday to lift the moratorium. What message is the Government of Canada, through the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), giving to the farmers of Canada? The message is clear and obvious. The Government of Canada does not care. Is it any wonder, given the inaction of the Prime Minister of Canada and given the inaction of the Government, that the Prime Minister is the Leader of the least popular Government in Canadian history? It is not surprising.

Is it any wonder that the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), a Conservative Member of Parliament from Edmonton in western Canada, found it necessary to criticize the Government of Canada? He found it necessary to criticize the integrity of the Prime Minister because of the inaction of the Government regarding the problems existing in western Canada. Notwithstanding the very serious difficulties being faced by farm families in Canada, this Government, for no explicable understandable reason, decided to lift the moratorium and basically drive off the land 6,000 more farm families, with a potential of driving off 16,000.

The Prime Minister, wearing his famous Gucci shoes, blessed the House of Commons with one of his very rare appearances during this debate. What did he say to the House and through the House to the farmers in western Canada? He said precious little, but he did say:

When western Canada asks for help, to the extent humanly possible—

And then his voice deepened:

—Brian Mulroney and the Government of Canada will say, "Yes". We are there to build a stronger western Canada and to build a stronger Canada.

The farmers in western Canada are on their knees begging the Government of Canada to come to their assistance. The Prime Minister says all you have to do is pick up the phone and call.

Mr. Boudria: What is the phone number?

Mr. Nunziata: I will tell the farmers of western Canada what the Prime Minister's phone number is. It is 992-4211. I will repeat that, Mr. Speaker. It is 992-4211.

Ms. McDonald: And the area code?

Mr. Nunziata: The area code is 613. They can call collect because the Prime Minister of Canada is concerned, he says, about the plight of western farmers. So, pick up the phone, call 992-4211 and ask for Brian. Tell him, because he does not seem to understand exactly what is happening in western Canada to the family farm. He says that the Government of Canada is acting in the best interests of western Canada and in the best interests of farmers in western Canada. He invites the farmers to call and ask for help. The farmers do not have to call. If this Prime Minister was doing his job, he would understand what is happening on the family farm. How often has the Prime Minister, wearing his $700 silk suits and his Gucci shoes, visited western Canada?

Mr. Boudria: Eighty-four pairs of them.

Mr. Nunziata: Yes, 84 pairs of Gucci shoes. How often has he gone to western Canada? Our Leader, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), has gone there at least 32 times over the last two and a half years to talk to western farmers to understand what the difficulties are. The Prime Minister says he is going out next week to see exactly what is happening.

One would have thought that the Prime Minister would understand and that his western Members of Parliament would explain the very serious difficulties for the western farmers. We know that the western Conservative Members of Parliament have done absolutely nothing. They sit in the House here as bench warmers. They applaud the Government. They applaud the Prime Minister when the situation back home is desperate. Why have the Conservative Members of Parliament not explained to the Prime Minister the very serious difficulties that exist in western Canada, the very serious difficulties facing farmers?

For example, have western Conservative Members of Parliament explained to the Prime Minister that 9.9 per cent of farmers in Alberta are insolvent as of January 1, 1987? Have they explained to the Prime Minister that 11.4 per cent of the farmers in Saskatchewan are insolvent, and that a further 28.3 per cent of the farmers in Saskatchewan are having cash flow difficulties? Have they explained to the Prime Minister that 18.3 per cent of the farmers in Manitoba are having cash flow difficulties? It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that they have not. It is obvious that western Canadian Conservative Members of Parliament, with the exception of the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona, have done precious little.

We in the Liberal Party recognize the difficulties facing western Canada and, in particular, the western Canadian farmer. We in the Liberal Party are prepared to take the necessary action to ensure that the farmers in western Canada will be given the opportunity to continue a way of life that has existed since the very birth of our country. Our Leader, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, has made some very basic requests of the Government. First, it is important and incumbent upon the Government of Canada to immediately announce that it will continue the moratorium with respect to FCC mortgages. Now is the time to do it.

I must say at this point that it is somewhat ironic that on Monday the Government should announce that the moratorium would be lifted. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Monday was the day that the Government decided to start debate on the death penalty. What this Government in effect is doing is condemning the Canadian farmer to death. This Government ought to be condemned for its inaction to the plight of western Canada. We have said continue the moratorium. Now is the wrong time to lift the moratorium. It is important that there be some stability, some assurance from the Government of Canada that it will assist the farmer through these difficult times and by lifting the moratorium, the Government is sending the wrong message.

We in the Liberal Party have said, as well that the Government ought to guarantee to farmers immediately, now, as they are about to seed for the upcoming crop year, at a bare minimum the same return that the Canadian farmer received last year in order to assist the farmer to know when to seed, what to seed or whether to seed at all.

The farmers in western Canada are in a state of flux. They do not know what to do with the price of grain as it is today and with all of the other factors. They do not know whether they should plant a crop at all this year. We know, with the reduction in the price of grain by the Government, that a great number of farmers will be barely recovering the costs involved in carrying on with their farms. First, the Government should continue the moratorium. Number two, it should announce that farmers will be guaranteed the same returns they had last year.

• (1620)

As well, it is important that the Government announce that there will be a deficiency payment this year. We know that last year the Government announced a deficiency payment in the neighbourhood of $1 billion. One must ask, of course, what prompted the Government to provide that assistance to western Canadian farmers.

Mr. Boudria: A certain phone call.

Mr. Nunziata: Yes, it was a phone call, and no doubt the person who called dialed 992-4211.

Mr. Boudria: At 5 a.m.

Mr. Nunziata: And who was that individual who called?

Mr. Boudria: Oh, I think it was someone from Saskatchewan.

Mr. Nunziata: Perhaps it was the Leader of the Conservative Party in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Boudria: Could be.

Mr. Nunziata: He picked up the phone and said: "Brian, I need help". He did not say that the farmers of Saskatchewan need help, he said that he needs help.

Mr. Boudria: Political help.

Mr. Nunziata: He said: "I need political help. We're in trouble here. We're in the midst of an election campaign and unless you deliver to us, we will lose the Government".

So what did the Prime Minister do? He put on his Guccis, he flexed his muscles, he called up a few of his friends and said: "Well, we can't afford to lose an election in Saskatchewan, we had better do something". So they delivered. They did not deliver to assist the farmers. They were not listening to the farmers in western Canada, they were listening to the Premier of that province who was in the midst of an election campaign. There is no election campaign going on in western Canada right now. Does that mean that the Government, through the Prime Minister, will not respond to the plight of the western farmer? It seems obvious, because of the lifting of the moratorium and the announcement of the decrease in grain prices, that the Government will not do anything.

During the last election campaign, Conservative Members made a number of promises, and you know them as well as I do, Mr. Speaker. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has put together a list entitled "338 Tory Promises, the Tory Collection, 338 Commitments in the Election of 1984". Let us see what this book has to say about agriculture. The book lists promises made by Conservative Members during the last election campaign.

One promise made was to allow the Farm Credit Corporation to offer agri-bonds so that farmers will have access to reasonably priced funds. Did they deliver on that promise?

Mr. Boudria: No.

Mr. Nunziata: No, we know they did not deliver. We know as well that an all-Party committee recommended that they in fact do that and instead the Government turned a blind eye. The Prime Minister said: "Well, it's just another broken promise and what do they know in western Canada, we have broken so many promises". Another promise made by Conservative Members during the last election campaign in their thirst for power was to revise Section 31 of the Income Tax Act to reflect the principles of equity. That had to do with part-time farmers. Did they keep that promise?

Mr. Boudria: No.

Mr. Nunziata: No, another promise that was broken. As well, they promised to expand agricultural research and development by providing greater assistance for agricultural colleges, more funding for research and development and amending the tax policy to encourage private-sector investment. Did they keep that promise?

Mr. Boudria: No.

Mr. Nunziata: I could go on and on. There was another promise to allocate the necessary funding to assist producers in refinancing their loans at current prevailing rates. Did they keep that promise?

Mr. Boudria: No.

Mr. Nunziata: Another promise was to work to increase exports and stimulate production to meet those export demands. Did they keep that promise?

Mr. Boudria: No.

Mr. Nunziata: What did they do instead? They abolished Canagrex. Is it any wonder that the Conservative Government is in last place in popular support, not only nationally but in western Canada? Is it any wonder that the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona said to the Prime Minister: "I don't trust you any more and I don't want to be a Conservative Member of Parliament any more because you lied to the people of Canada, you lied to western Canada. You don't care about western Canada. You gave the F-18 contract to Quebec when it should have gone to Manitoba. You have given all these lucrative contracts to your friends and relatives when you have neglected western Canada".

The people of western Canada will not forget—

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the "blues" will show quite clearly that the Hon. Member who is now speaking called the Prime Minister a liar, albeit indirectly through the words he ascribed wrongly to the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour). In that event, might it not be appropriate for you as Speaker to call upon the relevant Member of Parliament to withdraw that remark?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) knows if he did that or not and if he did, would he please say one way or the other? If he did say it, would he excuse himself? I want to know whether he did or did not.

Mr. Nunziata: Far be it from me to offend the Hon. Minister and the Prime Minister by calling him a liar. It might have been construed as calling him a liar but I did not intend to do that. I did not intend to breach the rules of the House. However, if the Gucci shoes fit, wear them.

In closing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On that basis, the Hon. Member's time has now expired.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, as a Toronto Member, I am very pleased to be taking part in this emergency debate. I think it is important for those of us who live in cities, do not grow our own food and depend on agriculture to show our support in this real crisis that is being experienced.

I happen to represent a riding in Toronto, Broadview—Greenwood, which was in its origin as a European settlement an agricultural area. It was a farming area that supplied food to the City of Toronto, across the Don River. That, of course, was back in the old days when the Don River itself teamed with Atlantic salmon in the appropriate seasons. Now as an industrial and manufacturing centre, we largely depend on the agriculture of the west and the vitality of that agricultural sector is of course extremely important to us as consumers and of course to the entire Canadian economy.

I recently spent a week in western Canada. When I was in Edmonton and Calgary, I saw the plight of the people there who are particularly concerned about the petroleum industry. There is despair, confusion and anxiety as people contemplate their future with falling prices in that sector. From Alberta, I went on to Regina and Winnipeg where I found despair, anxiety and uncertainty about the future that was much more profound. There was a real desperation and a sense of crisis in Regina and Winnipeg over the matter we are debating today.

We know that grain prices are falling. In the case of wheat, there has been an 18 per cent drop on top of a 20 per cent drop, an absolutely staggering drop for farmers to have to face. The question one must ask is why this is and if this has been caused by some fault of the farmers. Are they not being productive? What has gone wrong? Why are farms failing? Of course, we know that it is not due to lack of hard work, effort, skills and productivity. It is simply a question of international markets which are entirely beyond the control of individual farmers.

We know how the political system works and we know that there are massive subsidies for agriculture in the United States and the European Community. The result has been, of course, expanded production there and falling prices on the world markets. This is occurring because those countries see agriculture as being very important and they have ensured that their own farmers will be able to compete and to continue in that way. It is absolutely important for their own economies. Those countries are very clear about the economic, social and political consequences of farm failures. They have massively subsidized that sector because they want to keep production up. The result, of course, is this enormous instability which our own farmers face, so far without any concrete, adequate solution proposed by the Canadian Government.

Yesterday morning, I listened to the speech made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Of course, it was a speech long on rhetoric. My goodness, I heard such free-flowing phrases of sympathy. The crocodile tears. The commitment in his heart to the west. However, the speech was totally bereft of any practical assistance, as was the Prime Minister's response and that of various Ministers when our Party raised these questions in the House.

One of two particular measures we have advocated, the moratorium on FCC foreclosures, was lifted on Monday. The response from the Government was that a moratorium has to come to an end some time or another. The question is when and why at this time of acute crisis? The moratorium was introduced for a very good reason and the situation remains the same. If you introduce a measure because of need, you should not withdraw the measure until the need has been met. We know that is not yet the case.

The other most pertinent issue is the question of deficiency payments. We have had an important deficiency payment, but we do not have any guarantees concerning what farmers will be given for this crop year. They are seeding without any expectation that they will be able to recover their investment. We call for at the very least an immediate government commitment to provide Canadian grain farmers with a guarantee that total grain receipts for crops being planted now will equal those of the 1986-87 crop year. That is, $1.5 to $2 billion.

Unfortunately, the Government response has been simply to cloud the issue and to suggest that farmers are now getting cheques in the mail. Those cheques are for last year's crop and it was a very poor payment, thanks to falling international prices. One of the purposes of this debate is to put the heat on the Government, remind it of the urgency of the situation, and see if we can get a firm commitment for practical measures.

The Government has not totally ignored this question. It has made some gestures. It seems to be aware up to a point. It is working on the international front to try and bring some stability to grain market prices. It has provided assistance to the farm sector through these payments which have only recently gone out. It has consulted farm organizations. Yet government policy on consultation seems to be, yes, Government listens, Ministers listen, meetings are held and organizations are called in for consultations, but what the organizations say is not translated into action. It is not implemented. So we have a pseudo-consultation, a process of listening, but it does not lead to respect for the proposals or their implementation.

Even while Government has provided some assistance on the one hand, it has been taking it away with the other. The Conservative Government has increased taxes that farmers, as do other Canadians, have to pay. It has increased service charges, freight rates, and of course a host of other direct and indirect taxes. The Government should not lift the moratorium on FCC foreclosures until it announces a deficiency payment program for the upcoming crop year and until it addresses the broad question of farm debt. Of course that is an enormous amount, something in the order of $25 billion across Canada. Much of that debt is still subject to very high interest rates. The Government must let farmers know where they stand now.

The crisis is growing. It has been developing over the last couple of years. Its effect on farmers has been devastating. We are beginning to get a lot of information about what it means for farm families and farm communities. Doctors are telling us that their farmer patients are coming in with more troubles than they have ever had before. We know more are going to psychiatrists. We know there have been more suicides as a result of despair. People are unable to sleep or even relax. They are constantly worried. They have no relief from those worries. The economic burden they bear is tough on the entire family. We as Canadians have to be extremely sensitive to this. We are one family together and when one region of the country is hurting as badly as this, we have to be extremely concerned.

I note that a professor at Brandon University reported to a committee on this issue with some absolutely dire statistics concerning stress. One in two farmers in the sample studied reported feeling chronic fatigue, frequent trouble in relaxing, forgetting things, and losing their tempers. One in three farmers experienced serious disruptions in sleep patterns, increases in family arguments, back pain, trouble in making decisions, frequent headaches, and deteriorating health. They also noticed increasing behavioural problems in their children.

These are the absolutely devastating effects of this situation on the people who have to face it. The suicide rate for farmers in Alberta is going up. A Canadian Mental Health Association study in Saskatchewan found 88 per cent of those surveyed said they experienced stress-related symptoms, including health problems, headaches, fatigue, insomnia, depression, anger and frustration. In some cases there was alcohol abuse. Suicide is the number one cause of death on farms in Ontario after machinery accidents. Suicides are one-third higher for farmers than the rest of the population. We are dealing with a group which has traditionally been considered the most problem-free, the one with a better, healthier life-style without the so-called stresses of urban life. Now we see the situation reversed. People who live on farms and who have to face these enormous financial burdens are under far more stress than city people. I think we should be much more sensitive to that problem and I wish the Government would take this as a real sign of crisis and begin to respond.

We have had communications, representations, proposals and recommendations from numerous people working in the agricultural community. Let me just refer to a couple which I think are particularly significant.

The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool believes that the rural way of life and related service industries is in jeopardy. They ask Members of Parliament to recognize the critical economic situation confronting western Canadian families and communities. This crisis has far-reaching social and economic implications for the whole national economy as well as for the west. They recommend that programs be immediately developed through federal and provincial co-operation to keep families on their farms in a productive capacity, and that early consideration be given to the acute need for a substantial deficiency payment for this crop year. Government should continue its efforts to restore sanity in the international grain market. Those are obviously very eminently reasonable proposals to be making. I am sorry that those proposals have not yet been acted on.

• (1640)

Keystone Agricultural Producers from Manitoba is another organization writing on behalf of the farmers of Manitoba with a number of similar very concrete proposals. They call upon the Government to announce, as soon as possible, its intention to introduce a program for this year's crop similar to the Special Canadian Grains Program of last year, with support levels at least equivalent to those under the 1986 program. I will not go into the details, but they are asking that they get at least the same kind of support they got last year in order to sustain them.

A second important step should be bold new initiatives through the Farm Credit Corporation to save thousands of commercial farms from insolvency. There should be new loan funds at affordable rates and the FCC should be a full service lender. I am sorry to say that instead of bold new initiatives, we see the lifting of the moratorium on farm foreclosures.

I am extremely disappointed with the response of the Government which is big on rhetoric, talks about its sympathy, wants to blame other people, previous governments, other governments and markets in the world economy, and yet is not willing to do the things which are within its power to do. There is no doubt that there are long-term solutions to be developed. There must be a long-term solution suitable to the politics of what is happening in Europe and the United States. However, in the meantime there are short-term solutions within the power of the Government. I call upon the Government to act now to deal with the immediate crisis facing agriculture in the west.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is not often I am called upon to speak in an agricultural debate, but I do not suppose I will be any more strange to this debate than the hon. lady who just took her seat. I am tempted to ask her how she and the tobacco farmers are getting on these days and whether her remarks apply to them as well as to the other farmers whom she is addressing.

Ms. McDonald: We are talking about wheat, John.

Mr. Crosbie: I wonder whether the hon. lady would agree with abolishing the CBC and devoting the proceeds saved to the grain farmer.

I want to address the transportation aspects of the current situation, primarily in western Canada. The Hon. Member wanted government action rather than rhetoric. The Government has acted again today. The Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and I have just announced a $64 million assistance program to help protect farmers from the statutory increase which was announced today by the Canadian Transport Commission in the 1987-88 western grain freight rates.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Under the legislation introduced by our predecessors and enacted here a few years ago, the Western Grain Transportation Act, the Canadian Transport Commission has to announce by April 30 each year what the freight rates will be for grain in the following crop year. The next crop year, as our western representatives here well know, will commence next August 1. The Canadian Transport Commission must announce the freight rates for the movement of grain in accordance with the formula and stipulations laid down in the Western Grain Transportation Act.

Unfortunately, it therefore announced this afternoon that the grain farmers' share of the rates to be received by the railways for the next crop year will increase from the $5.97 which they are paying in the current year to $8.32 per tonne in the next crop year. The mathematicians among us will realize that that is a 39 per cent increase, a very large increase in the producers' share of the cost.

In 1984-85, which of course was the last year in which our predecessors were in Government for the majority of the year, the total freight rate for the movement of grain was $25.32 of which the Government share was $17.62. At that time the shipper paid $7.70 as the producers' share of that rate. When we came into office three years ago, the producer had to pay $7.70 per tonne of grain moved. In 1985-86 the total freight rate was $28.03 of which the Government paid $22.03 and the shipper paid $6. That, of course, was the year after we came into office.

In the present crop year, 1986-87, the total freight charge is $30.94, of which the Government contributed $24.97 and the shippers contributed $5.97. That rate was calculated last year based on the estimated amount of grain to be moved in the then coming crop year. As it happens, there was an underestimation last year and a great deal more grain has been moved in the present crop year than was anticipated. Approximately 34 million or 35 million tonnes of grain will be moved through the system in the present crop year. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) points out that that is a record.

In June, 1985, the Government amended the original Western Grain Transportation Act to include a ceiling on the producers' share of the freight rate at $7.70 per tonne for the crop year 1985-86 and the present crop year and replacement of the former rate-setting mechanism with a new tally system.

Action was taken by the Government to ensure that a ceiling of $7.70 would not be exceeded for the last crop year or the present crop year. However, we are now faced with the situation that under the formula in the legislation the producers' share in the forthcoming crop year will be $8.32 per tonne. The Government has acted immediately because the present circumstances of our grain farmers are extremely unfortunate. There has been a decline, as we all know, in the prices they are receiving. The Government has acted in order that this increase will not have to be absorbed by the farmers. We will contribute $2 per tonne in the crop year starting August 1 to that increased cost to the producer.

The over-all cost of that increase in the freight rate was estimated to be approximately $74 million. The government assistance of $2 per tonne based on the estimate of the movement next year of 31.8 million to 32 million tonnes will likely cost the Government $64 million. Therefore, rather than a 39 per cent increase in the producers' freight cost, the actual increase will be in the area of 5 per cent.

It is a disappointment that there are only two people left on the opposition benches, one NDP and one Liberal. I know I am not supposed to comment, but it is so shocking that I cannot forebear to comment on the intense interest being shown in this subject.

• (1650)

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought it would only be fair for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), if he is going to talk about statistics, to at least remind the House that the opposition Members are outnumbered by about 20 to one. Also, he might care to comment on the quality of Members who are here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is debate. The Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am not talking about statistics, I am talking about individuals. There are approximately 140,000 or 150,000 grain farmers in western Canada. That is what we are talking about and that is why the Government is contributing another $64 million to their assistance.

I do not know how many programs we have in effect now, but there are at least five programs of special assistance that come to mind for western grain producers, including the Special Canadian Grains Program of $1 billion that was introduced a few months ago. I believe that $840 million of that was for western grain producers. This is another step in our long battle to assist the western grain producers in the troubles they are currently experiencing.

The effect of what we are doing will mean that the majority of those grain producers will not have an increase in their freight rate for moving grain this year in excess of 5 per cent, while a number of them—those who belong to the Western Grain Stabilization Fund—will have an increase that will be less than that. I believe the calculation of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board is in the area of 2 per cent.

It was bad news that under the formula in the legislation the Canadian Transport Commission had to make the announcement of this new rate for the crop year today, but the good news is that this Government, as always, is standing behind the primary producers of this country and is assisting them as much as it can.

I also want to point out to the House, in case anyone from the Liberal Party has the gall and audacity to participate in this debate, that when they were in office in 1984 the western grain producers to whom I am referring had to pay a rate of $7.70 per tonne for each tonne of grain they moved through the system. However, as a result of the action we are taking today, three years later, and despite the announcement of the Canadian Transport Commission of the increase they had to announce this afternoon, the western grain producers in the crop year that commences August 1 will have to pay not in excess of $6.32 per tonne to move their grain, or $1.38 less per tonne than they were paying in 1984-85. That is the essential point that Hon. Members of the Liberal Party opposite might keep fairly fixed in their minds in the event that any of them have the effrontery or temerity to speak further in this debate.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Speak in French, John.

Mr. Crosbie: I notice that my learned colleague from Ottawa-Carleton is here. He is not speaking because he is not in his own seat.

The result of this action that I am announcing today is that the cost of the freight rate to be met by the producer this year is an 18 per cent decrease from the rate that they paid in 1984-85, as we took office.

We will pay an average of $2 per tonne difference to the railways. The grain producer will deliver his product to the railway. The railway will show a freight rate of $8.32, but will also show a credit of approximately $2.00 per tonne on the invoice to the farmer so that the farmer will not have to pay $8.32 per tonne to have his product moved. He will have to pay a rate of $6.32 and the other $2 will be met by the Government of Canada.

If we had not taken this special step of implementing this new assistance program for these transportation costs, in the next crop year we would be paying about 75 per cent of the grain costs for the movement of grain on the basis of the projected volume of 32 million tonnes, which would have been $675 million in the next crop year for the Crow benefit paid by the Government.

With the additional $64 million that I have announced this afternoon with the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, the Government's share of the cost of moving the grain crop of western Canada next year will be in excess of 80 per cent.

The Minister of Agriculture, the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board and I certainly deplore the terrible fact that world grain prices are about half what they were five years ago. But certainly the program that we announced today will help the farmers with the cost of moving their grain.

We know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board are doing all they can to initiate discussions among the nations of the world most involved in the export of grain to attempt to get some rational approach to the problems that are facing grain producers around the world.

Discussions are continuing with farmers and provinces about the economic situation facing our grain farmers. I have no doubt that this will not be the last of the measures that will be announced by the Government for the assistance of farmers and agriculture during our term in office.

I have not had the opportunity to listen to the whole of this debate, but I am certain it has been remarked that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) has been very busy in Japan in recent days attempting on behalf of the Prime Minister to get the world grain exporters to deal with their problems. The Prime Minister himself has taken every initiative, together with the Ministers I have mentioned, to see that it tops the agenda at the world economic summit in Venice in June.

I suggest it must be admitted by anyone who is fair and makes any pretense to fairness or impartiality, that no group of people in the world could be doing more to assist the agricultural area and their own grain farmers than the Government of which I am happy to be a Member.

Mr. Boudria: Even if you do say so yourself.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not have many spare moments, as you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, but when I do I love to rush into the House to hear Members speak, particularly Members of the Opposition because that serves to convince me that I did the right thing when I left them many years ago.

In conclusion, and continuing to be as non-partisan as I usually am, I want to refer to an article "Down and Out on the Farm" that I happened to read in Maclean's magazine. I think it is the latest issue. I am not following agriculture closely because my own province is not a great grain growing province. In fact, I have never seen a report of any grain growing in our province. That is why I am looking to my hon. friend, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board to ensure that the Feed Freight Assistance Program is improved and that the plight of the livestock producers and the other producers in Newfoundland are recognized. In other words, I am scratching his back today. I hope he is going to tickle mine tomorrow.

This article is in an international magazine, and if you glance through it, Mr. Speaker, you will see various programs.

I recommend it to opposition Members. For example, I will give a quotation from the article, and I quote:

> As a result, for the first time in Canadian history federal assistance to prairie grain farmers will be almost as large as their total revenues from grain sales—an estimated $4 billion.

The Government cannot do much about the world price of grain other than the extraordinary methods which are under way to try to get President Reagan and other world leaders to deal with it. We cannot control the world price for grain. We cannot control the world price for oil, nor could our predecessors nor will our successors. For the next 1,000 years our successors will not be able to control the world price of grain or the world price of oil. However, we can control what programs we can produce to assist the farmers. As a result, for the first time in Canadian history, federal assistance to grain farmers is just about as large as their total revenues from grain sales.

The article lists a number of these programs such as an interim payment of $705 million from the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, which was announced last week by my colleague, the subsidies I have already mentioned today, almost $700 million for transporting grain to market, the picking up of the Canadian Wheat Board's loss for 1985-86 and the $1 billion Special Canadian Grains Program. I notice Mr. Kraft, who is an expert in the field, said:

> As a source of income for prairie farmers, the Government now is almost as important as all of their customers.

I think my announcement this afternoon is in line with those facts and that this Government is to be congratulated and supported in the many programs we have under way to help the afflicted grain farmers of this country.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I just wonder if the Minister would permit one brief question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) has the floor. There are no questions permitted.

Mr. Foster: By unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that everyone wants to get information—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there consent?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is no consent.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister did not just announce a 6 per cent increase in freight rates?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Laurier is on debate.

Mr. Crosbie: What a sourpuss.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, what the Minister announced was $64 million of aid to western grain farmers. That is what he just announced.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Laurier has the floor for debate.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I feel somewhat like a jack-in-the-box. I got up and down about six times on these points of order. Shall we try it a few more times?

I was quite astonished to hear the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) say we cannot control the world price of grain, but he went on to say that we can control the programs which are under our control. That makes a lot of sense, of course. He then listed a whole series of programs the Government has instituted presumably to assist farmers. However, he did not mention science and technology or research and development, which is one of the major failings of the Government. That is something for which the Government could do more for the long-term interests of Canadian agriculture and the Canadian farmer than any one of the other measures the Minister mentioned. I would like to refer to aspects of the question of research and development in my comments. Before I do so, I want to say a few words about the moratorium on farm foreclosures, the question of the Farm Debt Review Board and the possible debt restructuring program.

These measures, as I say, I regard in many cases to be temporary palliatives. I think what we have to spend a bit of time on in this House is addressing the long-term solutions, not the band-aids and not the half-baked measures taken by the Government in its two and and a half years in office.

What has precipitated the current debate, of course, is lifting the moratorium on farm foreclosures which has been in effect for the past 19 months. In this period, interest rates have come down, according to the Government, and that is the reason for lifting the moratorium on farm foreclosures. It has been pointed out to me by my colleague, our critic for agriculture, that real interest rates today are higher than they were in 1984. Of course the moratorium itself is nothing but a short-term solution.

Another short-term solution is the Farm Debt Review Boards. If we look at the statistics and at the facts, we see this mechanism has not been functioning well. In Ontario, I understand there are some 400 cases which have been considered by the Farm Debt Review Board. Agreement was reached in some 195 cases but only two agreements were actually signed. I look with particular interest at the question of the Farm Debt Review Boards because I served on the committee on agriculture two or three years ago in the last Parliament which studied Bill C-653, the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill was proposed by a former colleague of mine, the former Member of Parliament for Lambton Middlesex, Mr. Ralph Ferguson.

The Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act attempted to bring back a procedure that existed in the 1930s and which would allow a farmer to apply to a court for a restructuring of his debt. In the first instance, the farmer would be entitled to apply for a moratorium for a stay of proceedings, if you will, to stop his creditor from proceeding with a foreclosure. The court would be empowered to give the farmer a period of time in which to reorganize his affairs to seek alternative financing. In addition, I believe one of the features of that particular legislation was that the courts in certain extraordinary circumstances had the ability to write down debt.

The Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act was an attempt to come up with a viable permanent solution of which a farmer could avail himself. He would not have to seek a privilege, if you will, or go before a Farm Debt Review Board and try to get the co-operation of the banks. He could actually have a legal recourse which would be binding, of course, if granted by the court.

We got no action from the Government with respect to setting up this type of legally-binding mechanism. Indeed, there has been no action through legislation, specific legislation such as the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, or through amendments to the Bankruptcy Act. A procedure of this nature would introduce into Canadian law, or bring back into Canadian law, a procedure which exists in the United States. It is not something which is totally unknown or new in the United States.

Under the Bankruptcy Code of the Americans, I believe Chapter 11 of the Code, the owner of a business can ask for the protection of the court and be given a period of time to rearrange his activities, provided, of course, that there is some opportunity to continue a viable business and provided that the owner of the business convinces the court that his plans are viable or have some semblance or hope of success. That is a right under the law; it is not a voluntary arrangement.

I am sure that most Members of Parliament who have had contacts with businesses which have experienced financial difficulty from time to time understand the importance of having this type of provision in law. I am familiar with a number of businesses which have experienced financial difficulties due to extraordinary circumstances such as market conditions, the 1982 recession, or, say, problems in the steel industry, for argument's sake.

In such cases the creditors, banks in most cases, acted hastily. Bankers panicked. They called the line of credit. They pulled the plug on the company. Very often the owner of the business does not have the opportunity under the law to fight back. I am aware of circumstances in which owners of businesses have had to come up with extraordinary means in order to get the trustees out and in order to maintain a viable business. So it is absolutely crucial that this type of a mechanism be introduced into law, a mechanism which would apply to all businesses and not just to farmers. Of course, the situation of farmers requires some further assistance, further programs, and I would like to refer to the idea of debt restructuring in particular.

In that respect I am sure that Members of the House are now familiar with the ideas of the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, Mr. Garf Stevenson, who in a memo of March 13, 1987, which was sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on April 28, suggested that the Government consider a program of debt restructuring. In his memo Mr. Stevenson states that what he has been suggesting is the:

> —need to join in developing a method by which farmers with significant debt could temporarily relinquish title to some of their land while perhaps retaining title to the home quarter. The farmer would continue to operate the land under some lease arrangement. The producer hopefully would have the right to retain title at a later date by repurchasing the land or paying out the accumulated debt.

This type of solution obviously merits the immediate consideration of the Government so that some form of debt restructuring program can be introduced in short order.

At this point in my comments I would like to deal with the question of research and development which I do not think has figured too prominently in the debate up to now. In my comments I will try to be positive and appropriately critical. I know that Members of the Government say that opposition Members have nothing to say other than to criticize and, indeed, that we engage in debate for purely dilatory purposes. I would like to inject somewhat of a different tone and respond to those comments by making some remarks which I believe can be taken in a positive light.

As I said earlier, the Minister of Transport threw up his hands and said: "We cannot control the world price of grain". But he did not comment on the promises that were made by the Government prior to the last election in terms of research, promises which have been abandoned by the Government since taking office. We are all familiar with Canada's poor record when it comes to research and development. As the recent round table report of the Canadian Advanced Technology Association reminded us, we do things by halves in Canada. We do half the research and development. We have half the number of scientists and engineers, and I think that is being somewhat generous. We have half the investment and half the jobs. Prior to the last election the Tories promised to double spending on research and development. However, since taking office they have cut practically every form of assistance to research and development.

On a trip to western Canada last November, and I was back again in Manitoba for the high school science symposium in February, I visited a company in Winnipeg by the name of Hi-Qual Manufacturing which has developed a process to treat feed grains with anhydrous ammonia. The company has developed a machine—and I am reluctant to call it a machine, perhaps it might be better to refer to it as a contraption although that would not be doing justice to it either—which will automatically pick up a bale of hay, wrap it in plastic and treat it with anhydrous ammonia. This ammonia treatment swells and breaks down the outer lining or husk of the grain and adds protein to the feed. The purpose of the treatment is to produce a better feed, which in turn produces a healthier animal.

• (1720)

It is calculated that this can lead to a 20 per cent to 40 per cent savings in feedstock costs in an average year. In addition, it increases the digestability of the grain, thus permitting better finishing or fattening, with the result that the cow-calf operator will be able to raise the cattle himself rather than shipping them elsewhere.

This particular procedure costs $250,000 to develop, and its development came with remarkably little assistance from Government. Under the Industrial Research Assistance Program of the National Research Council, the developing company received some $14,000, enabling it to improve its communications and understanding of the technologies in other parts of the world.

It is forecast that this treatment will enable this company to obtain 5 per cent of the total forages market. Just to obtain a 5 per cent market share would require some 3,600 units operating at full capacity. That represents an investment of $60 million—and that is just the cost of manufacturing the equipment.

This kind of development in agriculture only results from an investment at the front end in research and development. There are many other examples I could refer to, such as Export Packers in Winnipeg, a company in the egg processing industry. That is a company that has developed a technology to extract enzyme from eggs, dramatically increasing the value of the ordinary chicken egg.

A study by the Food Sciences Department of the University of Manitoba observes that the potential for similar products is enormous. The problem, of course, is that we are not doing enough research and development in Canada. We are not doing nearly enough. We are only doing half of what our competitors are doing. We will not solve some of the desperate problems facing the agricultural industry, and our other industries, if we do not get more serious about research and development. We have to understand that in research and in science lie the beginnings, if you will, of the answers to some of the economic problems that we face.

I would hope that the Government, in considering the solutions to this crisis, would begin to address the question of research and development, and in doing so I urge it to remember the promises that it made during the 1984 election campaign.

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, the motion that we are addressing does indeed reflect a serious situation, not just for Canadian agriculture, and especially the growers of grain and oilseeds, but also for the suppliers of farm equipment, agricultural chemicals, as well as for the transportation sector and even the energy sector. In other words, Mr. Speaker, this debate involves not just one sector of our society but indeed every Canadian in virtually all areas of this great country. It is a social as well as an economic debate. The future of the Canadian family farm is not something that can be decided solely on economic terms.

Our farm families have come to mean much more to us, and to most Canadians, than simply being the providers of various commodities. These families also represent a way of life which is desirable for many Canadians, and is indeed a way of life which many of our young people aspire to for themselves and for their children.

I am not saying that farming is an easy undertaking. Nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, like many of the Hon. Members of the Progressive Conservative Party, it was my privilege, and my responsibility, to farm in southern Ontario, along with my husband and our two children. And, Mr. Speaker, I can personally assure you that, compared to my experience in the business world, farming is far tougher in its demands. Farming makes it easy to go broke.

I do not know of any other area in small business where one must try to survive by buying retail and selling wholesale. I do not know of many other businesses where the determination of the price of the product is so totally out of the producer's hands, or where the rate of return on equity can fluctuate so dramatically from season to season.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, these incredible Canadian families persevere. They continue against these substantial odds. I say that these families deserve our admiration and our respect, for these families represent the values that we most respect in our society—values that include hard work; values that include determination; values that demonstrate a love for, and respect of, our environment; values that find their reward in benefits that could never be appreciated by those who measure success solely in monetary terms.

In dealing with the farm families of Canada, we are not dealing with people who wish to become rich, with people who wish to make a killing at the expense of the taxpayer; rather, we are dealing with people who want to perpetuate a way of life—and the survival of that way of life may ultimately mean more to those of us who inhabit the urban sprawl than to these farm families themselves.

I have heard statements from all Parties in this House about the need to protect and preserve our Canadian cultural identity. That identity comes from our backgrounds, from our roots, and is reflected by our great Canadian poets, authors, and painters. It is a cultural identity which is forever tied to our land and to the present and former generations who have tamed it and nurtured it. So, when we speak of a crisis in Canadian agriculture, we speak of a crisis which is all-encompassing, one which is manifested in not just financial terms, but also social and cultural terms.

But, Mr. Speaker, to listen to the comments of many of the members of the Opposition, one would believe that this crisis has only suddenly come upon us; that perhaps it crept through the barn door—and who knows when; that it has only just decided that now is its moment to hurl its plague and the pestilence upon the farm families of Canada.

Well, I can assure the House, Mr. Speaker, that that just isn't so. This crisis, as it may in fact be rightly called, has been with us for a long, long time. This crisis was visiting our agricultural communities in various forms long before Confederation, and this crisis will be back on our doorsteps again, awakened by such factors as weather, market prices, world surpluses and interest rates, and by those two indomitable characteristics of the human spirit, greed and fear.

• (1730)

In listening to some of the comments made during this debate, one could easily be deluded into thinking that the problems facing our farm families are the direct result of either government action or government inaction, that is, depending upon your political persuasion. If that were in fact the case, we could cut off foreign aid substantially by offering the services of our colleague in the other place, specifically Senator Davey, to provide rain to those drought stricken areas of our planet that so desperately need the surplus grains that our world has but cannot supply. To all but the most idealistic among us, there are limits to what Governments can do. Our farm families know this. They know that problems created by the European Economic Community cannot be solved through unilateral action in Ottawa. They know that product prices must be affected by a world-wide surplus. They know also that many of the problems they face today could have been avoided by proper planning, by effective marketing and by good management.

Two and a half years is not a long time to spend on the land, but it is the time that so far has been allotted to our Government for proper planning, effective marketing and to implement good management practices.

Our government policies are addressing the challenges of Canadian farm families in effective and substantive ways, ways which offer long-term solutions, ways which meet with the approval of our agricultural community. First, Canada is taking the lead in seeking international solutions to an international problem. Canada played a lead role at the GATT meetings in Uruguay, and agriculture is now part of the main agenda of present and future GATT discussions.

Second, our Government has not been content to sit back and wait for these international negotiations to produce results. Our Government has provided tremendous financial support, support that is unprecedented to Canadian agriculture. This support to the Canadian farming community has been so well articulated by many of my colleagues that there is no need for me to simply duplicate their rhetoric. There is no need for me to mention the special Canadian grains program and the billion dollars it will provide to the cash flow of grain producers. There is no need for me to mention the special Canadian grains program. Everyone knows about the $705 million just announced under the Western Grain Stabilization Act to put money into the hands of farmers when they need it in time for spring seeding. No one should have to remind this House about the cash advances for unharvested grain that kept many farmers from going under in the fall of 1985 when their fields were wet and snow covered.

Our farm families know about this Government's record in amending the Western Grain Transportation Act and the announcement made by our Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) this afternoon. They know about the new commodity-based mortgages designed to take the heat off when commodity prices plunge around the globe. They know about interest rates and they know the interest rate coin too well. They still remember the other side of that coin, the side where they had to pay 20 per cent or more as a result of the policies and programs of the previous Government.

This debate may be important in emphasizing the problems of the Canadian farm community, but our farm families do not need to be educated about the value of our Government's policies. They recognize the benefits of what we have done and of what we are continuing to do.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, our Government has adopted a policy of marketing and is aggressively pursuing that policy on behalf of the farm families of Canada. This Government believes that it is its responsibility to sell Canadian grain. Through the distinguished efforts of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), Canada is positioning itself to take advantage of global marketing opportunities as the cycle changes and these markets turn around.

Negotiations have been completed on a new five-year deal with the U.S.S.R., a deal that will see 25 million tonnes of Canadian grains being sold and shipped to that country during the same period. Another 4.5 tonnes will be shipped to Brazil between now and 1988 as part of a new, long-term agreement. In terms of commodities, our Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board may go short on rhetoric but he sure goes long on sales. The agricultural management policies of this Government are clear, clear to anyone who cares to look.

First, the Government is dealing with the causes, not the symptoms. It is demonstrating leadership on an international basis. It is resolving a global problem at its very roots.

Second, this Government is providing interim support, support that is practical, support that is substantive, support that far exceeds that offered by any previous Government.

Finally, this Government is out there in the global marketplace hustling on behalf of the Canadian farmer and hustling successfully, bringing in the orders that are the only thing that will restore our Canadian farm families to vibrancy and economic health.

Our farmers will not be put off by political rhetoric. They will not be satisfied with interventionist programs designed by Government. Our farmers want action, action in dealing with offshore subsidies, action in helping them ride out the current market, action through aggressive marketing. In terms of action, our farmers are giving overwhelming approval to the initiatives and the results that this Government has achieved for them and will continue to achieve in the future.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed, I agree with the Hon. Member who has just spoken that the Canadian farmer does want action rather than just words from the Government of the day. Indeed, this is the whole purpose of the motion brought forward by the New Democratic Party that we have been debating now for a great many hours. The two specific actions that seem to us in all fairness that should be taken, if we do not want to see the Canadian farm family destroyed are, first, the action of not removing the moratorium on farm foreclosures tomorrow, of keeping the moratorium in place and, second, of giving grain growers of the West some assurance that the 1987 deficiency payments will at least equal those of last year.

The Hon. Member who has just spoken somehow leaves me with the thought, and I guess I get left with it every time I listen to a Conservative, that there has never been any Government involvement in the grain business in Canada, that somehow or other all that is needed is protection against subsidies that other countries are providing and, of course, we all would like to see that, but that no assistance be given to the grain growers themselves.

There have always been prairie farm stabilization Acts. There have always been deficiency payments. There was the Crow rate. There has been a very substantial amount of government involvement in agriculture in Canada's history. I do not suppose the Tories want to destroy the Canadian Wheat Board. Therefore, I really do not understand the plea that is made from time to time to have no government involvement when the Canadian economy itself is, as we well know, built on a good deal of government assistance and involvement.

The motion which covers two main points, keeping the moratorium on foreclosures in place and providing deficiency payments at least equal to those received in the previous crop year, describes the kind of action we were hoping the Government would take. Indeed, practically all if not all farm leaders in the country were hoping the Government would take that action. Instead, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), who was present a moment ago, announced that the freight rate increase triggered by the Act would in effect and in part at least be transferred to the farmers.

I should remind the House that last year, none of the freight rate increases were transferred to the farmers but this year they will be. On top of all the other increases in costs grain producers have to face, they will now be faced with the increase in freight rates announced by the Minister today.

I would like to remind the House of the price cost squeeze about which we are speaking. The House will recall that a year ago, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) announced a 19 per cent cut in wheat prices, a 28 per cent cut in barley prices and a 28 per cent cut in oat prices. This crop year, 1987-88, there was an announcement of further cuts. Wheat prices will be cut by 18 per cent, barley by 25 per cent and oats by 28 per cent. This will put prices for these products at levels similar to those of 1976-77, over 10 years ago. However, costs are about three times as high as they were that year.

To put it in specific dollar terms, prairie farm operating expenses and depreciation charges in 1976-77 were about $3.5 billion. The projected expenses and charges for 1987 are over $8 billion, yet prices are back to where they were in 1976-77. The Minister of Transport announced an addition to this today.

Speaking of the Minister, he comes from Newfoundland and was saying there were no grain growers there. He sort of implied that because of that, this was not a particular problem. This reminded me that one of the real problems is that the Government is not listening. This is a national problem, not just a western problem about which the Government really has not been listening. It consults but it does not pay much attention to what is being said.

One of the things for which farm leaders have been asking and waiting is a meeting with the Government to discuss possible deficiency payments for the 1987-88 year. In fact, that is the basis of the debate that has been going on for the last two days. Why will the Government not hold that meeting? Why will it not even set a date for it? The Government says it wants to consult but it does not even hold a meeting with farm leaders to discuss possible deficiency payments for the current crop year.

The lifting of the moratorium affects farmers in all parts of Canada including Newfoundland, though the Minister of Transport made no reference to that. Apparently he did not realize that that was part of the motion that is being debated. The lifting of the moratorium on farm foreclosures will obviously affect Saskatchewan most of all as well as Alberta and Ontario, but it will also affect the Atlantic Provinces and my own Province of British Columbia. Farmers will be going down the tubes after tomorrow when the FCC foreclosure moratorium is lifted.

I was astounded when I heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) say on The Journal last night that most farm organizations want the Farm Credit Corporation moratorium lifted. I consulted with my colleagues who are in touch with the leaders of farm organizations and they informed me that all three prairie Wheat Pools with over 100,000 members as well as the National Farmers Union are absolutely opposed to the lifting of the moratorium. I really do not know where the Minister of Agriculture was coming from when he made that statement last night.

If I may turn for a moment to British Columbia, the lifting of the moratorium on farm foreclosures will have an immediate serious effect on at least 60 farmers, many of whom are tree-fruit farmers. Ultimately, it may affect another 300 or more.

Let me put the statistics for British Columbia on the record. According to the Farm Credit Corporation, the number of British Columbia farmers in arrears is 488 and these farmers are in arrears to the tune of $15.7 million. Of those, the number of farmers who are two years or more in arrears is 249 with a total dollar value of $12.6 million in arrears, the bulk of the amount. Of those, the number affected by the lifting of the moratorium is 60. The reason I say the 60 will grow to more than 300 is because those farmers who are in arrears two years or longer are not likely to be able to survive as farmers in the Province of British Columbia.

I find rather incredible the implication of the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King) that everything the Government had been doing was fine and good and that British Columbia farmers were doing well. In fact, a good many of them are very seriously in debt. Indeed, that has become one of their major problems.

I would remind the House that according to the President of the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association, the problem with arrears is even more extreme than that shown by Farm Credit Corporation statistics. A few months ago President Geen said the accumulated debt tends to feed on itself. Those who have not been able to meet their annual commitment to the debt are getting into worse shape. We are going to see more people leaving the land, including third generation farmers.

• (1750)

The other reason that the problem is more serious than the statistics suggest is that most of the debt in B.C. is owed to the banks. Only a small proportion, about 2.7 per cent, of the FCC loans is to B.C. farmers. Dropping the moratorium tomorrow will be a clear signal to the banks to think of further foreclosures themselves. I do not have the figures of all the loans owed to the banks, but it is obviously a very great deal more than those owed to the FCC. The problem for the farmers of British Columbia is indeed serious and not to be lightly touched upon as the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen seemed to do.

I was listening to the Minister of Transport, and both he and the Minister of Agriculture seem to be taking their orders from The Canadian Bankers' Association. Today I read the background paper submitted to the Standing Committee on Agriculture about a year ago by The Canadian Bankers' Association. To summarize briefly, the association concludes that people are going to be forced out of farming. The family farm will not be able to continue and there is nothing much one can do about it. It is the way the market operates. They have no intention of seeing anything more than a few transition programs undertaken by Government. They make some very specious arguments. For example, the industry, while continuing to support agriculture, must also meet its obligations to depositors and shareholders. As such, the banks are strongly opposed to any government credit legislation that disrupts the lender/borrower relationship and retroactively changes contractual powers and obligations. The banks question the effectiveness of government subsidy or income-support programs due to their discriminatory and costly nature and often untargeted thrusts.

What a lot of gobbledegook. What they are really saying is that they want a totally free hand and they have no interest whatsoever in the survival of the Canadian farm and farm family, apart from some transitional programs.

They end their brief by saying proposals involving income support, target prices, agri-bonds, subsidized loans and interest rebate subsidies should only be adopted where long-term benefits clearly outweigh the costs. No consideration should be given to debt moratoriums or compromises.

That is The Canadian Bankers' Association, and the Minister of Agriculture seems to be taking his orders from them, both in lifting the moratorium tomorrow and in absolutely refusing to make any deficiency payment commitment to farmers for the next crop year.

I have noted the effect not only on grain farmers but, in my case, as far as the moratorium is concerned, on the tree fruit farmers, dairy farmers, and mixed farmers generally in my province. This is having and will continue to have a Canada-wide impact. Therefore, we urge the Government to set a meeting date now with the farm leaders of this country to discuss the grievous debt problem, revoke the lifting of the moratorium, and discuss the deficiency payment program for the 1987-88 crop year. Farmers must know now and the Government has said it will consult. If it does not want to see further deterioration of agriculture in Canada, it must meet immediately with the people concerned to discuss these problems.

This is not a new form of Government intervention. This is part of the Canadian practice of making sure that our agricultural economy is strong and that it will not simply go down the tubes as has happened to many individual farmers already. We are asking the Government to take these actions for the sake of all Canadians. We have a highly integrated economy in so many respects and what happens to farmers affects all of us.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 30, 1987

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this debate is really part of a cry for action on behalf of hundreds of thousands of Canadians involved in the western grain industry, the western grain economy. I think it can be said quite accurately that there are three cornerstones to the foundation of our economy. One surely is the western grain economy and our agricultural sector generally. The others are automobiles and forest products.

The Government has gravely weakened if not sold out a major part of our forest sector through its foolish and weak-kneed deal with the U.S. on softwood lumber. In that deal it quite unnecessarily caved in and agreed with the U.S. to impose an export tax on our sales of softwood lumber to the U.S. In the free trade negotiations now under way the Government seems ready to sell out, to undermine, to weaken another cornerstone in the foundation of our economy, the Canadian automobile industry.

I say this because the Government has not denied reports that it is willing to give up, in these free trade negotiations, the tariffs which exist on imports of cars and parts into this country from the United States. If this happens there will no longer be any way to enforce on the North American automobile companies which are subject to the Auto Pact the Canadian content and product requirements, the safeguards which are so important for the preservation of the industry and the jobs in it.

If there are no tariffs which can be imposed on the North American automobile companies, if they do not meet the production, content and job requirements of the Auto Pact, we will in effect no longer have an Auto Pact and our Canadian auto industry, one of what I have called the three cornerstones of the Canadian economy, will be gravely weakened and seriously damaged.

The Government also seems ready to sell out or weaken the Canadian auto industry in another crucial way. It refuses to insist, by means of law if necessary, that the new Japanese and Korean manufacturers setting up plants in this country play by the same rules as the North American manufacturers with regard to meeting requirements for production, content and jobs. As the Government continues to allow these plants to be set up essentially to put together parts and components imported from offshore, these plants will likely—and I say this with great regret—displace two or three Canadian jobs for every job they create.

This point was well made and confirmed in a speech made by Moe Closs, President of Chrysler Canada Limited, to the Canadian Club of Montreal yesterday as reported in the Montreal Gazette as follows:

> He said Canada's industrial base could be seriously weakened by all the offshore automobile investments in Canada because the Japanese and South Koreans don't play by the same rules.
> "I don't see anything fair about all these new auto companies being enticed to set up shop here without having to make the same kinds of commitments in jobs, purchases and investments the North American auto companies have always considered the price of admission".

This very important speech was also reported in La Presse of Thursday, April 30.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is important to quote a few paragraphs of this article which summarizes the views of a major Canadian automobile industry spokesman, Mr. Moe Closs, and I quote:

> The automobile industry is concerned abut the possibility of 40,000 layoffs in Canada, which represent 30 per cent of its total work force of 130,000, and the possible closing of one or two plants because of unfair competition from foreign manufacturers with the support of Ottawa, Toronto and Quebec.
> Moe Closs emphasized that each assembly plant of foreign manufacturers in Canada which does not meet the requirement of the Auto Pact (60 per cent of Canadian content) replaces three old jobs with one new job.

[English]

I pointed out how the Government, through its foolish policies, is weakening, undermining, selling out two key cornerstones in the foundation of the Canadian economy, our forest products industry and our auto industry. I believe Canadian farmers and Canadians generally can now well be afraid that the Conservative Government is getting ready to do the same thing with Canadian agriculture, especially the western grain economy. This puts at risk not only the foundation of the economy of the three prairie provinces, but a way of life, thousands of family farms and the survival of thousands of rural municipalities and small towns, the tax revenues of which depend on the ability of these farms and the families living on them to exist and pay taxes and to use their income to buy goods and services from businesses in these communities.

I think it could be said in light of recent events that western farmers, farmers generally, and Canadians generally could have a well grounded fear that the Conservative Government is abandoning Canadian agriculture, and especially the western grain economy.

When someone from an urban area of southwestern Ontario rises to speak on this kind of subject there are always those who ask why such a Member would rise to take part in the debate. It should be clear that Members of Parliament are here to work for the best interests of the entire country, not only for their own riding, community, or even their own region.

By virtue of being elected to serve in the House of Commons we are all compelled, in fact duty bound, not only to vote but to understand and give consideration to the needs and problems of our entire country; the needs and problems of the fishermen of Newfoundland, the forestry workers of northern Ontario and British Columbia—

[Translation]

—the needs and problems of workers employed in the Montreal East plants which are closing, those workers in the CN Moncton plants which, because of a lack of policy and support from this Conservative Government, are losing their jobs, on top of the several hundreds of jobs which have already been lost because of the unfair and inefficient behaviour of this Conservative Government.

[English]

We must understand that the purpose of a national Government and, therefore, of a national Parliament is to enable us all to work to help one another and provide, with a sense of sharing and compassion, a way of making the country work for all its people and all its parts to the mutual benefit of every one of its regions. Each Member in this House of Commons should be able to say that every part of Canada is part of his or her country. I hope that if and when the need arises, Members of Parliament from our prairie provinces or our Atlantic Coast will take an interest in the needs and concerns of my city and my region, just as I am anxious to do when it comes to the needs and concerns of their regions.

However, as the Member of Parliament for Windsor West I do have a concern about the needs of all of southwestern Ontario, especially the peninsula that makes up the County of Essex. I hope Members of this House are aware that the County of Essex is a very important agricultural area, as is the entire southwestern part of the Province of Ontario. In the County of Essex we have a tremendous industry growing cash crops for canning factories. We grow tomatoes, peas, corn and all sorts of fruits and vegetables. That is why major canning companies such as Green Giant and Heinz are located in my County of Essex.

In our region there is also a substantial dairy farming industry, and the growing of corn and wheat is very important in southwestern Ontario including the County of Essex. In fact, I was once told that southwestern Ontario is a major grain producer which grows more wheat than most of the Province of Manitoba,

Although I must say that the wheat growers in my area do not benefit from the support and protection of the Canadian Wheat Board. Agriculture therefore is of importance to the economy of Essex County, wherein the City of Windsor is located, and the entire southwestern Ontario region. It is a source of employment, not only on farms, but also in food processing plants. The people of my area are very concerned about the crushing burdens of debt and low commodity prices which face all too many farm families in Essex County and southwestern Ontario.

Together these two burdens of debt and low commodity prices, especially in recent months, have been delivering an unfair and, as I said, a crushing blow to all too many farmers in Essex County and southwestern Ontario, for whom not only their immediate livelihood but an entire way of life is as stake.

We have had a crushing blow in terms of debt and low commodity prices in my area, but there has been an especially heavy blow when it comes to the way these twin burdens have been placed upon the shoulders of farmers in western Canada and the western grain economy.

Only last week the Conservative Government announced that initial prices for wheat would be 18 per cent lower than those of last year. Now, just a few days after this bad news, the Government delivered another serious blow to western grain farmers—in fact, to farmers in my area and across Canada—by saying that as of tomorrow it will lift the moratorium, which has been in place for some 19 months, on foreclosure action by its Farm Credit Corporation on farmers in arrears on mortgages that they had obtained from that federal government agency.

One of the Ministers speaking in this debate said that the lifting of the moratorium would involve only 50 farmers per month or some 600 per year. If that is correct, it is still 600 farmers too many. The evidence is that the numbers will be much, much higher.

As has already been pointed out in the debate, some 6,000 of the 75,000 accounts with the FCC have been in arrears for more than two years. The experience with the FCC is that if a loan is in arrears for more than two years it almost invariably leads to foreclosure.

The Government has never explained satisfactorily why it was so heartless, insensitive, and uncaring as to lift this moratorium only a few days after it announced that initial prices for grain would be 18 per cent lower this year than they were last year. As I said, the lifting of the moratorium not only affects western Canada. It affects many farmers in my area.

I should like to refer to what Janice Vansickle, the agriculture reporter for The Windsor Star, wrote about this in yesterday's edition of that newspaper. She said:

> A day of reckoning is about to dawn for 110 farmers in Essex and Kent counties covered by a moratorium on foreclosures by the Farm Credit Corporation.

The article went on to say:

> Local farm leaders generally lashed out at the federal Government for removing the moratorium.

"It's a pretty ruthless step", said Claude Giroux, who stepped down last week as president of National Farmers' Union Local 309 . . . The removal of the moratorium indicates the Government is backing down on its commitment to help farmers through a period of crisis in agriculture, said Giroux—

The article went on to say:

The locals' new president, Roger Rivest, questioned the ability of the federal farm debt review board in Ontario to deal with a flow of FCC clients.

As we know, "the boards were put in place last August to act as mediators in credit disputes between farmers and their creditors". However, The Windsor Star went on to report:

Most farm leaders—believe they are not yet functioning properly and lack the authority to obtain legal binding agreements between farmers and creditors.

"The farm debt review board has no power," said Rivest.

In today's edition of The Toronto Star, George McLaughlin, Chairman of the Farm Debt Review Board for Ontario, said that "about one Ontario farmer in five will leave the land during the next five years". Mr. McLaughlin went on to say that he asked for "an 18-member board, up from the current 11, to handle the load". He does not have enough people to handle the existing load, not to mention the additional load which will be created when the FCC starts its flow of foreclosures.

According to The Toronto Star, Mr. McLaughlin also said that "the review board had already received 425 applications from farmers and completed 193 reviews. He went on to say that of those completed reviews, only five had been translated into firm legal agreements". That is not a very strong endorsement of the efficiency and the usefulness of the board by the very person which the Conservative Government appointed to chair it.

Obviously, farmers have to be sceptical about the value of these farm debt review boards. Farmers across Canada are being squeezed, not only by low prices for what they grow, but by the problem of debt. There is a strong reason the Government should continue the moratorium against foreclosures of FCC mortgages. It is the absence of an effective system to deal with the farm debt crisis. Farm leaders and individual farmers across the country say that the Government has not put in place an effective system for this purpose. We in the Official Opposition call upon the Government to say today, before the debate ends, that it will continue the moratorium on foreclosures of FCC mortgages.

The Government says that if it does that, the banks will be unhappy and that farmers who have their mortgages with the banks instead of the FCC will also be unhappy. The Government is not here to serve the banks; it is here to serve the people of Canada.

In these circumstances the Government should not drag down the clients of the Farm Credit Corporation to the level of pressure which is being imposed upon clients of the chartered banks, pressure that might be increased if the Government's moratorium on foreclosures of Farm Credit Corporation mortgages is raised. Instead, it should take action right now to get the banks to commit to having an equivalent moratorium on their mortgages so long as the Government's FCC moratorium is in place.

That seems to make more sense than to pull down the clients of the FCC in the agricultural community to the level of those farmers who may now be facing more pressure by way of foreclosure from the chartered banks.

In the face of the 18 per cent drop in initial prices of grain this year, surely the Government must commit itself today, before this debate ends, to putting in place deficiency payments to bring returns to grain farmers up to the level where they will be equal to those of last year.

Earlier in the debate the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) rose to his feet with a great deal of fanfare and said:"Oh, we are doing something. We are going to provide a subsidy of $64 million on freight rates for shipping grain". The 18 per cent drop in initial prices alone is worth $1 billion. While I am sure $64 million is welcomed, it is only a pittance or a drop in the bucket in the face of the reduction of $1 billion in income. Also, farmers will still have to pay $11 million to $12 million in increased freight rates.

All the Government has done is to go through a smoke and mirrors exercise, holding out the hope of survival to farmers, but as they get close to it, like a train moving away from them, it gets farther and farther away.

I conclude by saying that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in his trip out west should not be looking for photo opportunities. Instead, if it cannot be done in this debate, he must reinstate the FCC moratorium on farm foreclosures, introduce a proper debt restructuring program, and announce a real deficiency program for this year's crop. Nothing less will do, if the Government is serious about preserving one of the three crucial foundations of the Canadian economy—the western grain industry—and the way of life it represents.

We owe it to the people in the western grain industry to ensure that this debate does not end unless we get this type of commitment from the Government. I call upon the Government to show some small element of heart, concern, and caring, by making this kind of commitment. This is the very least it can do for the western grain economy, for agriculture generally, and for the entire economy of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1820)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization) and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to speak in this debate today. I did not intend to start this way, but I do want to deal with the moratorium the Opposition House Leader has called upon us to reinstate.

Let me point out to the Hon. Member that there are about 225,000 commercial farms in Canada, 75,000 of which do business with the FCC. After the moratorium is lifted, the FCC will deal with a potential 50 foreclosure cases a month. Only 20 per cent of these are in arrears, including some 6,000 that have made no payments for at least two years. This means that one-quarter of 1 per cent of Canada's farming community will potentially be affected by this moratorium.

I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the moratorium was imposed while programs to assist troubled farmers were being developed. Those programs include the interest rate conversion program that assists over 5,000 farmers, the shared-risk mortgage program, commodity-based loans and farm debt review boards. As well, the moratorium was creating a two-tier system in agriculture: those farmers who were protected and those whose creditors were not the Farm Credit Corporation and who therefore had no protection.

The lifting of the moratorium is supported by organizations like the Canadian Cattlemen's Association which talked about distortions caused by the debt moratorium although it sympathized as did others with our reasons for bringing it in in the first place. The association said that this was not a good solution because it provided no lasting benefit to Canadian agriculture. That is what I would like to talk about throughout most of my address to the House today.

It was interesting that in the first part of his address, the Opposition House Leader did not refer to farmers at all. He talked about the automobile industry, the forest products industry, fishermen and railway workers. Then he finally got around to talking about farmers. However, I did agree with him when he talked about being an urban Member from southern Ontario. I myself am a Member from Toronto. There are compelling reasons for people like me and the Hon. Member to talk about farmers, and those reasons are how important farmers are, not just to the Canadian economy but to every consumer in Canada, and the way of life they represent.

I feel particularly strongly about this because, although I am an urban Member, like many Canadians and probably many in this Chamber, my roots are with the land. My family farmed in Ontario for 150 years. My grandfather who owned the farm in 1929 came very close to losing it then because of the kinds of conditions we are seeing today. He was able to save it through hard work and community assistance, but it took him many years to pay for what happened to him in 1929. That is why we on this side of the House recognize the importance of farming to our communities and that all issues that affect farmers affect Canadians across the land.

I would like to point out how the situation facing Canadian farms affects women and their lives on the farm. Of course, there is nothing new about women taking active and equal roles on the farm, but two things have changed over the years. Farm women are now far more involved in the decision-making aspects of the family farm than they were years ago. Second, the structures on the farm have changed. When my grandmother worked side by side with my grandfather, they had help in the house, on the land and in the barn.

Now there is a wider public understanding of the contribution of farm women and how it has increased so much throughout the last generation or two. Women on the farm are now involved in all aspects of the farm business, from domestic activities to work in the fields. Studies show that 49 per cent of farm field work and 97 per cent of farm domestic work is done by women. Something that has not changed is that most farm women are responsible for keeping the books as well, just as my grandmother did.

One of the problems with the family farm today is that with increased pressure on families, more and more women are seeking employment off the farm. That creates additional pressures on farm women and their families. They are continuing to do the domestic work and the work in the barn and the fields. They are also taking jobs in town. Along with the lack of availability of help, that is leading to a greater dependence on child care, a need that must be met, a need to which the Government has been committed since its first day.

High quality child care is particularly hard to find in rural areas, particularly in the spring planting season and the fall harvest when care is sometimes required around the clock. At the same time, women working off the farm require year-round child care. The demands are diverse and our sensitivity to those issues has been expressed many times. I have been in touch throughout the past year with farm women across Canada to deal with how we can jointly find a solution to this problem. That is why when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has talked in the House and in public about our commitment to child care, he has always talked about flexibility. He knows that women in rural Canada have different needs than women in the cities.

Farm women have played such an important role throughout the history of farming, but so has this Party. In the history of Canadian farms, the Progressive Conservative Party has always had a strong relationship with farmers. In fact, I could say it is a relationship that is unique among Canadian political Parties. It was the Progressive Conservative Party that created the Department of Agriculture. It was the Progressive Conservative Party that founded the Farm Credit Corporation. It was the Progressive Conservative Party that set up the Canadian Wheat Board. It was the Progressive Conservative Party that established crop insurance. It was the Progressive Conservative Party that brought in the Agriculture Stabilization Act. It was the Progressive Conservative Party that set up the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation administration. The list goes on. I will bet you your very last bushel, Mr. Speaker, that if it is positive for Canadian agriculture, it was put in place by a Tory Government.

Let us now turn to some more recent history that has led to the problems Canadian farmers are now facing. The problems faced by farmers in Canada today arise out of both domestic and international occurrences. Domestically, the Canadian farming community was devastated by the economic conditions of the early 1980s when a Liberal Government was in power. I can understand why the Opposition House Leader did not talk a lot about farmers in the first part of his address. Interest rates in excess of 20 per cent crippled the farming industry. The economic policies of the Liberal Government contributed significantly to the large number of farm bankruptcies which occurred from 1981 to 1983. It was this attitude of the Government led by the then Prime Minister who asked why he should sell their wheat, that devastated the Canadian farmers. That is why the policies we put in place and the temporary moratorium were so needed.

The attitude of the former Prime Minister is not the attitude of our Prime Minister, our Party or our Government. Our record in agriculture is second to none. We have implemented a 16 point agricultural program that has been widely praised. As the Prime Minister stated in this debate, when Canadian farmers are in need, this Government responds. That is why we have committed $1 billion to assist grain producers. Without this program, farm income would have declined by 17.9 per cent this year. That is the kind of action we are prepared to take.

The Liberals would not sell our wheat. We are selling Canadian wheat.

• (1830)

In our Party we know that Canadian farmers are efficient. They are on the leading edge of agricultural technology. Throughout the world they have a record second to none. Our farmers are adaptable. Our farmers work hard while dealing with one of the most difficult climates in the world. But, of all of us closest to this great land of ours, we recognize that our farmers know of the richness of our country more than anyone else.

We are committed to selling Canadian wheat. We are selling 25 million tonnes of grain to the U.S.S.R.; 4.5 million tonnes to Brazil; and 2.5 million tonnes to Egypt. We are proud of the products produced by our farmers. We care enough not just to sell those products internationally but to drive forward for a better deal for Canadian farmers.

Last year we provided $150 million to grain farmers hit by the drought and by grasshopper damage. We provided $705 million under the Western Grain Stabilization Act, providing much needed cash to farmers for spring seeding. We have amended the Western Grain Transportation Act to protect farmers from sharp increases in freight rates. We have established a 10-year $700 million loan program to provide commodity-based mortgages. This initiative helps those farmers with substantial debt problems.

Earlier today my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), discussed in the House his new measure to protect farmers from the statutory increase in 1987-88 western grain freight rates. So when the Opposition House Leader said that farmers will spend more on freight, I think that for the record I should point out that when farmers deliver their grain to the elevator this year they will pay $6.32 per tonne on average in the upcoming crop year. That compares to a rate of $7.70 paid by producers in 1984-85 prior to the present administration coming to power. It is an 18 per cent decrease from what was paid by producers in that year. The federal Government will pay the average $2 per tonne difference to the railways.

Our Government established farm debt review boards to provide independent third-party review, thus assisting farmers who were having difficulties with their creditors. Providing this third-party analysis is an assistance and comfort in many cases that has been able to have an influence on a farmer's ability to keep his farm and to ensure the survival of the farm business.

The pattern is clear. This is a Government that understands the Canadian farmer. This is a Government which, throughout the history of the country and the history of the Party, has understood the Canadian farmer.

Let me get back to the international work that we have been doing to improve trade in agricultural products. We have been in the forefront of nations calling for new ground rules. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had agriculture discussed at last year's economic summit for the first time ever. That was an initiative of our Prime Minister. Our Prime Minister and this Government are going to bat for farmers hurt by protection in other countries, hurt by the fact that it is a deliberate policy in European communities to protect their farmers and to subsidize them no matter what the cost to the consumer.

We, as a Government, have involved Canada in the Cairns Group, nations formed to counter the power of the European Community, the United States and Japan. We are in the forefront of negotiations in GATT to stop the international trade war in agriculture. We are involved in trade talks with the United States that will be of great benefit to Canadian farmers. We know that our farmers can compete with any of those farmers in any of those countries if they are given a fair chance to do so.

On a political level, western Canadians and farmers have never been better represented in Cabinet, in Government and in caucus. I will not list the great extent of their involvement since the Prime Minister pointed that out to the House in this debate. However, I can say that when I look at our Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), our Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and our Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), and when I listen to the voices that they represent on behalf of Canadian farmers, as a Member from Toronto I am very proud to support them in their endeavours and to sit beside them in Cabinet and in this House.

On an economic level we all know the disastrous effects of the Liberal economic policies on Canadian farmers. Our Government's economic policies have had a positive effect on farmers, a stabilizing effect under enormously difficult circumstances for farmers and for this Government. But we have never, ever, betrayed our farmers, and we never will. I would like to remind Hon. Members that just by our general economic policies a 1 per cent decline in interest rates represents a savings to Canadian farmers of $130 million a year.

I am proud of our record in agriculture. We intend to build upon it. Traditionally, our Party has been the voice of Canadian farmers in Parliament, and this will continue. It will continue as long as this Government remains in office with its representatives, not just from western Canada but Members such as myself who come from downtown urban centres and who are totally committed to the Canadian farmer. We will keep working diligently to ensure a better life for the people on our farms, men and women, and to ensure that the children on the farms will have the right to inherit a stable and happy farm environment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to speak in this emergency debate today which concerns the current crisis facing grain producers. My Party, the Liberal Party, is concerned by the tremendous tragedy that is taking place in the western grain industry.

The Conservative Government has failed the producers, despite the good words that have just been spoken by the Minister. It is clear that the Conservative Government believes grain producers will have a great future in two or three years' time when the market turns around. But most western farmers are not very certain in their own minds whether that will be the case, because there has been absolutely no commitment of a deficiency payment for the new crop year. Farmers do not want nice words, such as those just expressed by the Minister. They do not want nice words for the future. They want money now. They need it, and they need it badly. They should get it from the Conservative Government.

Mr. Mayer: That is what they are getting. They are getting $1.3 billion in the next month. That is money. That is cash. That is now!

Mr. Ouellet: I realize that the Minister is very concerned and he is becoming very nervous. I certainly appreciate that he is very sensitive because it hurts. It certainly hurts—

Mr. Mayer: All I am trying to do is tell you what is going on so that you do not make a fool of yourself when you speak.

Mr. Ouellet: The Conservatives have made a mess of farming. It hurts them. Certainly this debate is a clear indication of how nervous and how desperate is the Minister.

Mr. Mayer: It is a clear indication of all the things that this Government has done for farmers.

Mr. Ouellet: Last year, when grain prices went down by 20 per cent the industry said that, in constant dollars, grain prices were at the same level as they were in 1933 under R. B. Bennett. Tory times are tough times. This has been said many times in the past. I think it has to be repeated today. Tory times are tough times. They certainly are for a great number of western farmers who must now realize that, because grain prices have gone down by a further 18 per cent this year. There is not only the 20 per cent reduction of last year to consider, but the additional 18 per cent which will take place this year.

Western wheat growers were saying to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), who is the Liberal critic for agriculture, that the crisis today is not so much with respect to price, although that is certainly a serious problem, but that the major problem is the uncertainty of government policy. They have said to my colleague that they do not know whether there will be a deficiency payment or a special grains program, and they do not know on what basis.

This is unacceptable because other governments are taking care of their farmers. They are letting them know exactly what they are going to do for them, or what they are doing for them now. This is not the situation with the Canadian Government. We know what the Government of the United States is doing for its farmers, and we see what is happening in Europe. Those Governments are providing all kinds of support and help for their farmers.

Earlier in this debate, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) indicated that he was going to take steps to reduce freight rates. In this regard, it is interesting to make some comparisons. In 1984, the freight rate was $7.70 per tonne. At this time, it would be $8.32 per tonne. Taking into account the $2 subsidy announced by the Government, the rate will be $6.32 per tonne. This subsidy on freight rates will reduce the cost to the growers some 8 per cent. Let me remind the Minister and others that the price of wheat in 1984 was $170 per tonne. The price for the 1987-88 crop year will be $110 per tonne, a difference of $60, or roughly 35 per cent.

If the Minister of Transport is serious about helping our farmers, if he really wants to do something, why does he not reduce freight rates by 35 per cent? We have had a reduction of 35 per cent in the price per tonne of wheat, and certainly the same reduction should apply to freight rates. If he were to do that, I would applaud the initiative of the Minister. But, all the Government can do after this two day debate is to come out with that kind of insignificant support.

It is incredible to me that this Government can make the claim that it supports our farmers. What it has come up with is a farce. We on this side of the House want to vigorously express our opposition to the lack of action on the part of this Government.

The U. S. Farm Bill is not going to be changed in the near future, and certainly not during the term of the Reagan administration. In addition, it is clear that the U. S. Export Enhancement Program will be strengthened, increasing yet again competition for Canadian Wheat Board sales.

As a result of the information we have received of late, and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), wrote to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and despite all the apparent goodwill, all of the niceties between the President and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), it is clear that American policies are hurting Canadian farmers and Canadian workers, and our Prime Minister is doing nothing about it. Yet, he tries to make us believe that he has a very special relationship with the President of the United States. Indeed, he has; he is selling Canada to the Americans at a very low price.

My colleague the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry today wrote the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I will take a moment to read that letter. It is as follows:

> It has come to my attention that the U.S. Department of Agriculture has today prepared a new set of agricultural trade subsidy initiatives that include measures of great damage to Canada.
> Specifically they are proposing to include under the Export Enhancement Program an offer of 1.25 million metric tons of barley to Saudi Arabia, a traditional Canadian buyer.
> If this measure is approved by the Trade Review Committee of the U.S. administration in the next week, it will mean a loss of 75 to 85 million dollars to Canadian farmers.

The Minister today spoke of providing $64 million for western Canadian farmers. A single sale of U.S. grain to Saudi Arabia will cost Canadian grain producers $85 million—much more than what the Government is prepared to give them today.

The letter goes on:

> This initiative certainly flies in the face of assurances apparently gained from President Reagan that he would be considerate of Canadian agricultural concerns—

Well, these concerns are not being given very serious consideration.

In addition to this sale to Saudi Arabia, we have recently been told that the Americans have negotiated a sale with the U.S.S.R. Under that agreement the Americans will sell to the U.S.S.R. four million metric tonnes of wheat, and for every three bushels of wheat bought by the U.S.S.R., the Americans will provide one bushel at no charge.

This is the type of endeavour that other countries are becoming involved in so as to sustain their agricultural industries, their farmers. We would like to see what this Government is ready to do to sustain our own farmers.

Unfortunately, the attitude of the Government thus far has been rather puzzling. If our agricultural industry is to survive in the face of international competition, we are going to have to provide more in the way of deficiency payments, more special grains programs, and more aggressive marketing.

In closing, I should like to refer to another aspect of government initiative that is, to say the least, a real slap in the face for our farmers. I refer to the decision taken earlier this week by this Government to lift the foreclosure moratorium imposed upon the Farm Credit Corporation.

This action will permit foreclosure proceedings to be commenced against those farmers whose Farm Credit Corporation loans are in arrears. FCC loans represent 30 to 40 per cent of long term debt in the agricultural sector, and we are told that 6,000 of the 75,000 accounts with the Farm Credit Corporation have been in arrears for more than two years. This has just been confirmed by the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) who spoke just before me. The history of the Farm Credit Corporation has been that if a loan is in arrears for more than two years it almost invariably leads to foreclosure. That means that 8 per cent of the Farm Credit Corporation loans are certain to face foreclosure proceedings.

The Minister of State for Privatization has just said, "Don't worry about this, we are only going to foreclose on about 50 a month". I believe that is what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said as well earlier in the week. That means that about 600 farmers a year will have to worry about foreclosures. This is incredible. I am not concerned about thousands of farmers, I am concerned about every farmer who has to face foreclosure. It is unacceptable for the Minister to say that we should not worry, that only 600 will be foreclosed upon. We should have a policy which protects every farmer and no foreclosures should take place. This is absolutely unacceptable. This kind of thing will not wash.

I believe that if the Government has lifted the moratorium on foreclosures, then it is lifted and it may apply to many thousands of farmers. The Government should take every step possible to prevent this from happening. It is certainly agony for farmers who have devoted years, their entire lives in some cases, and have planned great future projects for their farms, to see them go by the wayside because of the incredible misunderstanding or bad heart of the Government.

It has been said many times that the Conservative Government is very close to big business, the big multinationals, the big oil companies, and the big banks. Time and time again the Government has passed legislation in the interests of the prissante, the people who are rich and influential, but very seldom does the Government take up the interests of the poor, those who are in difficulty. I say to the Minister of Agriculture that this is the time to act. This bad decision could be cancelled, because it will only come into effect tomorrow.

Mr. Wise: Farmers don't want it cancelled. Farmers want it lifted.

Mr. Ouellet: Regardless of how the Minister wants to sugarcoat it, this is not the way to do it. The moratorium has been in place for 19 months. During that time the Government should have put in place a debt restructuring program to solve the plight of farmers. Had it put in place a proper debt restructuring program the moratorium would not be needed in place at all. However, the Government did not have such a program and the moratorium bought it time. The Government had 19 months to put in place a debt restructuring program which could work well. As the Minister knows, the things which are in place do not work. The situation is getting worse and worse.

In conclusion, the Leader of the Liberal Party put the situation quite clear earlier in this debate when he made a vibrant plea to force the Conservative Government to work for the farmers. On behalf of farmers he said that unless special programs are put in place to cope with it, we will see the loss of an entire way of life in rural prairie communities across the country. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said that action is needed now. I want to repeat his words.

The Government should come clean, give a commitment to a deficiency payment, stop foreclosures which will begin tomorrow, and put in place a proper debt restructuring program. If the Government does not do so the problems faced by western Canadian agriculture and agriculture in other parts of the country will be horrendous. People in this House, the Liberal Party, and many, many Canadians across the country who are concerned about agriculture are willing to make that commitment. The Government must make that commitment now to our rural communities. It is absolutely essential. I hope this debate has opened the eyes of the Minister and has opened his heart and his pocket, because the farmers desperately need money and they need it very soon.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I gladly participate in this debate. I want to refrain from rhetoric, place facts before the House, and deal with this matter in a manner which I hope will be helpful.

I am honoured to represent the constituency of Saskatoon West, which is a very important part of the great Province of Saskatchewan, a province which relies on agriculture, on a per capita basis, more than any other province in the country. I am very proud to represent a rural area in my constituency, although it has diminished over the years since I was first elected.

I am very proud of how many of our Ministers and Members have participated gladly in this debate. We have a record of which we can be justly proud in most difficult circumstances. I want to compliment in particular my colleagues, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). As a western Canadian representative in the House of Commons, I feel comfortable in Government with the representation which these two Ministers have given us in these important portfolios. I say that on behalf of my constituents.

The Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), who brought this matter forward, knows that farmers in Saskatchewan are not a bunch of dolts. They understand exactly what is going on. They follow the proceedings of the House of Commons very closely and are not taken in by the hysterical rhetoric which I have heard from opposition Members.

When the Liberal-NDP coalition brings forward a motion in an attempt to demonstrate that they represent western farmers, nothing could be further from the truth. It pains me and western Canadians to see Liberals stand up in this House and suggest that they are somehow interested in the plight of the farmers of this nation. Nothing could be further from the truth.

We heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) participate in this debate. I want to remind people that the Leader of the Opposition was the Minister of Finance in the Government of the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau. He had great influence in that Government. Where was the Leader of the Opposition when Mr. Trudeau asked western farmers, "Why should we sell your wheat?" and turned his finger on western Canada? He was silent. Now all of a sudden he has a newfound interest in the western grain farmer. This is not being believed at all in western Canada.

Our policy was developed in the tradition of John Diefenbaker with whom I had the great honour of serving, as did many of us in this House. The leadership which was given by John Diefenbaker with regard to western Canada is being continued under the leadership of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

• (1900)

Indeed it is a fact that the Prime Minister first came to Ottawa to work for the Minister of Agriculture in the Government of Mr. Diefenbaker, and that was the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). That was his exposure to politics in Canada. That has given him an abiding faith in the sanctity of the farmers of Canada.

I say to my colleagues in the House of Commons that I do not want to indulge this evening in anything except the facts relating to the very serious question facing farmers across the nation. On CBC this morning I heard the Hon. Member for Prince Albert, who precipitated this debate, complimenting the fact that the Government had taken initiatives in terms of international discussions to deal with the root problem of the difficulties facing Canadian farmers today, that is to say, the position of commodity prices in Canada.

I must compliment him for saying that. In fact, he complimented our leadership, the Prime Minister in particular, on the CBC farm program at six o'clock this morning. I give him credit for stating a fact which I think has not come out of any member of his Party during the course of the debate. He gave proper recognition to the role played by the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister of Agriculture, and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board.

What are the facts? We in the Government have come forward at a time of crisis and difficulty for western farmers in a way which any thinking Canadian would have to say was fair and reasonable and demonstrates our priority toward agriculture.

I should like to give some indication of comparative figures of spending, because the Opposition keeps talking about the money we should be spending. Federal support to agriculture in Canada in 1983 totalled $300 million. However, what is it now? It is anticipated that this year we will be spending something in the vicinity of $3 billion.

Mr. Wise: At least.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Three billion dollars at least. Does that sound like a Government, in comparison with what we experienced under a previous administration, insensitive to agriculture? Anyone who suggests the contrary is not telling the truth.

I should like to remind my colleagues of the situation in 1984 in respect of input costs. For example, what was the cost for farm fuel? In September, 1984, the cost to fill a 100-gallon tank was $115. Because my colleagues in Cabinet have been so effective and have been thinking about producers, in February, 1987, the cost was $40. This is a $75 reduction.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We must look at some of the fundamental problems, not only in agriculture, but also in small business. Average farmers, whom the Progressive Conservative Party have represented so faithfully and so well over the years, have been concerned with some of the root problems. We must remind ourselves of them.

What was the prime interest rate in 1981? What were farmers paying when they had to go to banks and credit unions for assistance to carry on their operations? Have we forgotten what it was? It was 22.75 per cent. What is it now? It is 9.25 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Do we remember these figures? I am not being partisan. I am being factual by showing the management of the Government and the Prime Minister.

What was the cost of a loan under the Farm Improvement Loans Act in 1981? The interest rate at that time was 23.75 per cent. Today it is 10.25 per cent. That is a 12.5 per cent difference.

We must ask ourselves why the Liberal-NDP coalition is raising this debate at this time. It is clear that the only reason is that it wants to prevent the passage of other government legislation. It has nothing to do with agriculture. Opposition Members want to stall the business of the House because they do not want to deal with Bill C-22 and other legislation in the House of Commons. This is not bona fide.

Mr. Foster: You want to put the price of drugs up.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think I have hit a responsive chord. The agricultural critic of the Liberal Party, who stands in the House to speak about agriculture, understands precisely what it is. I think the people of Canada should understand why we are here. They have given us a telling blow, but this time it was with the point of their chin. They are giving us on this side of the House an opportunity to remind Canadians—and we do it gladly—that we in fact have a commitment or priority to agriculture which has been unexceeded, quite frankly, by any other Government in the history of Canada.

There has been much talk about farm bankruptcies, but I think the fact is that it is a regrettable matter. We understand that. I know what it is like to go home and see farmers in difficulty, wondering what they will do this year and living in a situation brought on by international circumstances. I understand all that because I go home every week-end. I do not maintain, as do some Members, a residence in Ottawa or Aylmer. I go home and talk with these people, and I understand what they are saying. We are working as hard as we can, within our financial ability, to bring some relief to farmers.

Let us look at the number of farm bankruptcies under the Liberals. In 1981, there were 261 farm bankruptcies nationally. In 1982, there were 410, which was a 57 per cent increase; in 1983, 488, which was practically a 20 per cent increase; in 1984, 551, which was a 13 per cent increase; in 1985, 508, which was a 7.8 per cent decrease; and in 1986, 440, which was a 13 per cent decrease.

Mr. Foster: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I did not interrupt the Hon. Member. Is he not prepared to listen to my speech?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) on a point of order.

Mr. Foster: I wonder whether the Minister could explain why he is taking off the moratorium and starting foreclosures—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, you dealt with that point of order with the kind of certainty which I admire in a Speaker of your eminence. It was mischief. This man is twisting and turning in his seat, unable to hear the truth spoken to him.

Mr. Foster: Why are you taking off the moratorium if you don't want more foreclosures?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much your support.

I want to bring forward some facts, particularly to the attention of the agricultural critic of the Liberal Party. What has been the record? In the time we have been in Government, which has been something over two years, the rate for five-year Farm Credit Corporation mortgages dropped from 14 per cent in September, 1984, to 10.75 per cent in March, 1987.

Mr. Foster: They are 11 per cent, Ray, be honest.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why are the Liberals so intolerant? Why is the Opposition so intolerant? Why is it that Hon. Members opposite do not want to allow Hon. Members to speak their mind? I believe that is a principle of democracy.

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): What is your point of order?

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I thought the debate was getting longer and longer, and I just wanted to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the chair is being occupied now by a very fine gentleman.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Taylor): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I was on a roll and he actually managed to put me off by pointing out that you are very distinguished. He interrupted my discussion.

Let us look at the Special Canadian Grains Program of which I am particularly proud. Members of the Opposition ask what the Government is doing for the Province of Saskatchewan as if it were doing nothing, not taking its responsibility. Let me just tell the House what the Government is doing, what kind of cash is now being placed in the hands of Saskatchewan farmers alone. As a result of that $1 billion payment under the Special Canadian Grains Program, we in Saskatchewan will realize $415.6 million. Without that payment the farm income would have been desperate. By virtue of that payment alone, there has been an increase in the income of Saskatchewan farmers of 82.5 per cent. I think that increase is not insignificant.

• (1910)

The Saskatchewan portion of the Western Grain Stabilization Act payment will be $382 million. Rounding that off, $800 million in total that will go to Saskatchewan. That is not an insignificant amount of money that will be received by farmers within five weeks.

An announcement was made today on western grain transportation. While we are having this debate, the Government is routinely facing a very serious question brought on by Liberal legislation which forced the freight rate up substantially and dramatically by something in the vicinity of 39 per cent. Over the course of the last weeks and days, the Government was addressing this problem in the anticipation of a substantial increase in the cost of transporting grain. Today the Government responded to the increase brought on by the Liberal legislation which was passed with the support of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). We felt that the increase was not acceptable so we decided to make a payment in anticipation of the increase to ensure that no increase of any consequence is borne by the western farmer.

I do not see opposition Members congratulating us on taking this position. They are silent and they should be ashamed of themselves. If we are to have fair debates, I expect the Opposition to be critical at the proper times but when an action is taken by the Government which does bring relief, I would simply ask for fair play on the part of opposition Members. I would ask them to acknowledge such action.

The Hon. Member for Papineau spoke of representatives of big business and asked who represents it. I think he forgets the fact that his leader was on the boards of directors of many corporations including the Bank of Montreal and Canadian Pacific. I do not know who represents big business in the House, but I do not think the Minister of Agriculture does. I do not think the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), the Hon. Member from Sarnia, the Hon. Member from Sept. Isles or the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin) represent big business. Do these look like big-time bankers to you, Mr. Speaker? These are honest-to-God common people representing their constituents in a way of which I am very proud.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, has been there in times of adversity when we really needed expanded sales. I think a vote of thanks should go out to the Minister. He was educated in Saskatchewan. He went to the same school and the same university as I though he is a little smarter and a little brighter. We admire the way the Minister of State for the Wheat Board has, with the assistance of the staff of the Canadian Wheat Board, sold our grain in an unprecedented manner. This is a man with whom I am proud to be associated.

I can tell the House that the people of Saskatchewan understand what is going on. They are not taken in by silly games played by the Opposition. They are here to ensure that the Government is sensitive to their real needs. I guarantee you, Mr. Speaker, that as far as I and this Party are concerned, we are determined to help farmers across Canada.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, they talk about out of the mouths of babes. What I just heard from the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) makes babes sound as though they are speaking sense.

What we have just heard from the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West is bafflegab. I was not even supposed to be here. I am supposed to be away on a short maternity leave enjoying my family. However, when I saw this nonsense going on on the government side, I could not take it any longer. I had to come here to start calling a spade a spade and to speak for the record.

The Hon. Member invoked in solemn tones the memory of John Diefenbaker. At the same time, his own Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has appointed at the expense of the public purse Dalton Camp, the very man who did in the former eminent Prime Minister, the man who stabbed him again and again. Dalton Camp is now being paid to be chief adviser to the Prime Minister. I cannot believe that the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West would be able to talk about Diefenbaker while Dalton Camp is sitting in his cabinet room advising his colleagues. Dalton Camp is the kind of adviser who makes speeches like the one made by the Hon. Member for St. Paul's (Mrs. McDougall). We heard her describe herself as an urban Member and she admitted that although she had some rural roots, she was not that familiar with the current situation in farming. We also heard her say that the reason the Government will end the moratorium on farm foreclosures as of midnight tonight is because it does not want a two-tier system.

I believe a number of government Members were present when the Hon. Member for St. Paul's said that she did not want to have a two-tier system. Fine, the Conservative Government will be implementing a one-tier system and driving more farmers into bankruptcy. It is driving more family farms to end a great history. Is that the kind of tier this Party promised the people of Canada when it went to the voters on September 4, 1984?

With the departure of Bill Fox, perhaps we will get some new script writers. I certainly hope so. We heard the litany of former Liberal sins and we heard about interest rates back in 1981. I would like to ask Members on the government side what those same farmers are now paying in the spread. As any Hon. Member knows, the real cost of borrowing to farmers is the cost of the spread, not necessarily the interest rate. The cost of the spread has not been reduced substantially.

We heard what the former Liberal Government did and did not do. Presumably, on September 4, 1984, the people of Canada made a judgment and they gave a mandate to the Conservative Government, the largest mandate in the history of Canada. Now, almost three years later, we are seeing the Government's inaction on agriculture.

The Minister in charge of privatization read off a check list of monies that had been given to farmers in the form of subsidies or other goodies. It took the Government only 48 hours to come up with $1 billion to bail out Canadian banks. Yet the same Government dragged its heels for months on end until it was on the edge of an election in Saskatchewan. It took a call from the Premier of Saskatchewan to force the Prime Minister to change his mind and come across with some much needed cash for western farmers.

We know that the Prime Minister himself has flown over the western provinces more times than he would care to admit. Even though he has promised to go to western Canada next week, I suspect that he may decide to fly over again when he receives the most recent piece of news which is that today, the United States signed a 4-million-ton deal to sell wheat to the U.S.S.R. That 4-million-ton deal represents one-half of the annual Canadian wheat sales to the Soviet Union.

Where is the benefit accruing to Canadians as a result of our great relationship with the United States? The United States is undercutting our markets with the European Economic Community and with the U.S.S.R. At the same time we host the President of the United States to come here to tell us how we should be moving toward a free trade system, a free trade system which will destroy whatever semblance is left of our agricultural community.

There are promises and more promises that have been broken. You have heard, Mr. Speaker, from some of my colleagues today who have outlined the hypocrisy of a Government that came into power with 338 promises and then leaves all the work to the Opposition. It has left all the work to people such as the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) who time and time again in this House has stood in his place and asked the Government to come across. He has asked the Government to come across with a deficiency payment which will be equal at least to what the farmers received in the last fiscal year. He has asked the Government, because no firm restructuring program has been introduced for debt refinancing, to waive the decision to end the moratorium on FCC farm foreclosures.

The Hon. Member for Algoma, along with the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), the Leader of the Official Opposition, have travelled the country on a Liberal task force asking farmers what they think. So too we in the Liberal Party can be justly proud of another one of our members who has carried a one-man, one-woman fight across the Prairies in the person of our Senator Hazen Argue and his wife, Jean. Many of us know that he has taken to his trailer to go out to the small communities in Saskatchewan and Alberta to find out from the farmers and the farm wives themselves just what the Government can do to assist them. He has taken his fight even to the point of demonstrating before the American Embassy to ensure that the American Government starts instituting some fair trading practices so that we Canadians can compete on an equal basis.

I heard the Hon. Member for St. Paul's talk about the efficiency of Canadian farms and the efficiency of Canadian farmers. Nobody doubts that we have some of the most efficient farmers and most efficient farm production in the world. But when we are competing with subsidies in the United States and in other countries which are so great that our farmers cannot even recoup the cost of planting, then we know that this Government has to get in there and fight toe-to-toe to establish the principle of fair trading practices among nations. We talk about Canada being at the leading edge of the GATT negotiations. Yet we have seen what that has yielded for the Canadian farmer—a big fat zero.

Today, we know that the Prime Minister is meeting with his provincial colleagues. If I were a western Premier I would say to the Prime Minister: "Don't bother visiting us. Send cash. Don't bother, Mr. Prime Minister, showering us with more flowery promises, we have seen the 338 promises that went along with your election brochure and we simply do not believe you".

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture in a brochure which was given to all members at the end of January, 1985, cite chapter and verse the promises made by the Prime Minister when he was Leader of the Official Opposition. Times have changed and his tune has changed. We have heard the Government talk about the woes of past Liberal administrations. We have heard it again and again and again. It sounds like a broken record.

What the farmers want to know, and what the people of Canada want to know, is once given the largest mandate in the history of Canada when is this Government going to start to deliver for the little people? When is this Government going to start to deliver or is it simply going to chop off those farms that are now teetering on the brink? We heard the figures—it is only 50 a month, said the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State for Privatization. Some 50 farms a month will be going down the tubes as a result of an action which will be consummated at midnight tonight, and this Government has a chance to stop it now. It has a chance to follow through on its promise to develop a restructured debt capacity through the Farm Credit Corporation, until that restructuring has been carried out to place a moratorium on all FCC farm foreclosures.

I know that I could go on at length, but there are many other members of my Party who would like to call on the Government—

Mr. Mayer: Why don't you tell us what your policy is?

Ms. Copps: The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) asks me to tell the House what our policy is. I would like to tell the Minister that his policy should be an immediate move to assist those farmers—and he knows the situation because he is a farmer himself—who are not even recouping the cost of planting in the commodities that they are selling this year on the wheat market. That is the situation and he knows it. Yet he and his colleagues are prepared to move at midnight tonight with Draconian measures to force farms across the country into receivership and into foreclosure. So he does not have to shout across the House to members of the Opposition who were the only ones to force the Government into an emergency debate. What we would like to see is some action, a decision to end farm foreclosures, and also a decision with respect to a deficiency program. We have been asking him for weeks in the House—for months—to introduce a deficiency program at least equal to what was in place last year. To date we have heard a resounding silence from the government benches.

Where are the western Members tonight on the government side of the House? Where are they? Do they not care about their farmers? I see one Member over there who was recently occupying the chair, and a fine Member he is too. But we have to consider that here we are in an emergency debate in the House tonight considering a situation which could mean devastation for farmers across the country and with the exception of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) there is not a single Conservative western Member here in the House to speak for the farmers. I would like to challenge those—and the Minister of Agriculture looks around to check me up on my figures. Do I see a Member from western Canada?

Mr. Wise: You are wrong.

Ms. Copps: With the exception of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, whom I already mentioned in my remarks, where are the back-benchers from western Canada?

Mr. Mayer: Where are your western Members?

Ms. Copps: Those Members on the government side of the House have not spoken. Believe me, when we look at those Members in Alberta who were sent here in the grand wave of 1984 we know that they will be waving the next time, but it will be in the opposite direction.

Even though I would love to go on at length, I would like to yield the floor to other Members whom I am sure would like to add to this debate and who would like to prevail upon the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for the Wheat Board to cease and desist in their decision to end the moratorium on farm foreclosures. The Government does not have a system in place to assist those farms that are now teetering on the edge. We cannot afford to lose 50 farms a month. We cannot afford 600 farms a year. If the Minister has other comments, I prevail upon him to extend the debate and we will be happy to participate.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If Hon. Members extend to me the courtesy to speak again by giving their unanimous consent I would very much like to take an opportunity to address some of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: Sorry, we have too many speakers.

Mr. Mayer: I would be more than happy, with unanimous consent, to comply with the Hon. Member's very gracious offer to allow me to expand on some of the things we have been doing.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Ms. Copps: We have a long line-up. I want to hear people who make some sense.

[Translation]

Mr. Girard: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has suggested that Conservative Members are not interested in this debate. I think she ought to realize that 28 Conservative Members have already taken the floor, including 10 Ministers. No . . .

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I do not believe this is a point of order. It is a matter for debate which undoubtedly might be very interesting.

Debate. The Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

[English]

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the nature of the debate is becoming quite interesting. It is intriguing that we would sit and spend a great deal of time hurling invective back and forth across the House.

Ms. Copps: Invective!

Mr. Skelly: Pardon me, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) corrects my pronunciation, and that is very helpful. Her contributions are well known and respected in the House.

Ms. Copps: Thank you.

Mr. Skelly: What we probably could do as much as anything else is begin to look for solutions to a massive problem. Without becoming overly hostile, I must say that I listened to the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) make some comments about what a fine job the Conservatives have done throughout history. I am sure she mentioned that in order to give the House some direction in terms of coming to a resolution to this problem. As I recall, she talked about the Conservative Government putting in place, because of its great concern for agriculture, institutions such as the Wheat Board. She talked about attempts to obtain price stabilization, prairie farm rehabilitation programs and a number of things that rose out of the Great Depression.

• (1930)

Up to 1929-30, the Liberal Government had been in power. It brought us up to and beyond the bank of the abyss, and tore Canada apart from one end to the other. It created enormous circumstances complicating and making the Depression worse.

Unfortunately—and this is something the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) forgot to mention—between 1930 and 1935 we had a Conservative Government in power. In the first four years of the R.B. Bennett Government, the problems that had been inherited from the previous Liberal Government worsened. Under R.B. Bennett, we saw one of the greatest wreckages of the Canadian economy and Canadian agriculture in the history of this country.

In the last year of the term of that Government, the Prime Minister, R.B. Bennett, a Conservative's Conservative, suddenly said: "We have done all things wrong. Things have to be changed 180 degrees". And they came up with some of the most far-sighted solutions that this country has ever seen.

I believe R.B. Bennett suffered a heart attack early in that year and was unable to give his energy and direction to seeing those programs through to completion or to debate them during the following election campaign, and when the Liberals were returned to power, they cut many of them, with the result that it was many years before many of them saw their potential realized.

The point of the exercise, Mr. Speaker, is that the Progressive Conservatives, after four years of damaging activity, did come to recognize that their course of action was completely wrong. In 1935, the final year of their term, they made some of the most dramatic and important changes—changes that were designed to help agriculture, help alleviate unemployment, and generally improve the economy.

That is what was forgotten in the speech of the Minister of State for Privatization. Hopefully this Government will see the error of its ways and change its course, in much the same way as the R. B. Bennett Government changed its course in the final year of its term, and try to get something in place that will help this country and help agriculture.

The Comox Valley has some of the small amount of Class 1 agricultural land in the entire Province of British Columbia. There are some very hardworking and committed farmers in that valley, people who work their guts out in order to keep the family farm going, in order to keep agriculture an important part of the economy of that valley.

The Province of British Columbia, in a move to protect farmland, passed a land reserve program under which farmland would be protected. That measure was supported by the majority of the British Columbia population. But what it did for farmers was to remove other economic options for them. They had to farm.

Under the previous Government, as has been mentioned many times during this debate, we had great fluctuations in farm product prices, with always rising costs, the result being that farmers went into debt. We also had a period of extremely high interest rates.

I was quite interested in the remarks of the Member for Hamilton East (Mrs. Copps) when she said: "It doesn't really matter what the rate is; they are concerned about the spread".

Well, if a farmer is paying between 22 and 25 cents interest on every dollar that he owes and not 10 cents, or 10 per cent, certainly there is a great difference. While the interest rates are better now, for a period of time earlier in the 1980s they were so bad that the existing debt accumulated at an enormous rate, and the largest percentage of debt, in many cases, was the accumulated interest payments.

The Canadian Bankers' Association, an organization known as the true friend of the farmer and as the absolute supporter of the principle of maintaining the family farm in Canada, had some interesting insights when they appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture in 1986. They in fact advocated throwing farmers off the farm, throwing families out. They recommended a transition program for the purpose of relocating farmers, retraining them, and getting them off the farm—I assume to turn the farms over to corporate agriculture, something we have seen in the United States and in eastern Canada.

They also recommended that farm financial review boards be established. This is something about which the Government made a serious error. Had the Government, in legislation, provided a solid basis for those financial review boards, they would be an effective agency today. They could bring together the farmer and his creditors for the purpose of making a financial arrangement that was realistic, that was viable, that would preserve the family farm—everything that has been talked about during the course of this debate.

Had the Government given those review boards the teeth to make binding arrangements between the farmer and his creditors, it would have a better platform now on which to induce further financial assistance for farmers. It is absolutely critical to bring about a stabilizing agreement between the farmer and his creditors. That is absolutely crucial to any farm reconstruction effort that we embark upon.

What does the Canadian Bankers' Association say about that? "Absolutely not". It wants the financial review boards to have the power to give advice only. Well, I do not know of any banker in this country who takes anything by way of advice. He simply looks at his accounts and collects his money.

Review boards with the power to compel reasonable arrangements for repayment, payments that would permit the farmer to survive and allow him an income, are what is needed. Such boards would allow this Government the opportunity to make meaningful additions in terms of assistance programs.

There are the old promises that this Government made prior to coming to power. It talked about agri-bonds as a source of funding for farm loans. Those election promises have never materialized.

Another recommendation of the Canadian Bankers' Association: No debt moratorium. The Canadian Bankers' Association, a true friend of the farmer, has put together a prescription to destroy family farming, to put farmers off the land and replace them with large corporations, thus breaking one of the strongest foundations of Canadian society. We in this Party are not prepared to stand by and see that happen. That is why this debate is under way. Hopefully the Government, when this debate ends, will declare that this moratorium will continue until an effective policy is put in place.

Mr. Speaker, as it happens, before coming into the House, I was speaking to a farmer from my constituency. It would perhaps be interesting to review what happened in his particular circumstance. He will be one of the statistics when the Farm Credit Corporation lowers the boom. He meets a lot of the criteria.

Those on the other side of the House have said that only 50 farms a month will be affected by the lifting of this moratorium. When the Minister was asked how that could be, he said: "Well, the Farm Credit Corporation has sufficient staff to handle that number only".

Well, it strikes me that, just taking the criterion of the Farm Credit Corporation that anyone who is two years or more in arrears will be foreclosed, we are talking about thousands upon thousands of Canadian farms that will go down the drain. And one would assume that, the minute this moratorium is lifted, the other creditors, in order to protect their position, will push the button—

Mr. Mayer: That is not true, and you know it. You know better than that.

Mr. Skelly: Does the Minister wish to speak? If he has good news for our farmers, I would be more than pleased to take my seat.

I take it there is no good news, Mr. Speaker—and I feel very sad that he doesn't have some good news for our farmers.

Mr. Mayer: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer).

Mr. Mayer: As the Hon. Member is being so gracious, perhaps he would seek the unanimous consent of the House so that I could give some good news.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Skelly: That is truly unfortunate, Mr. Speaker. I, for one, would be more than prepared to hear what the Minister has to offer to assist farmers.

If it is not true that the Farm Credit Corporation can handle only 50 cases a month, then I would ask the Minister to put on the record what in fact the number is. I should like to know how many will be pushed over the edge each month.

It strikes me that once other creditors see the Farm Credit Corporation moving on a farm, and there are assets on that farm, other creditors, such as the bank—and the banks still have an enormous amount of outstanding debt on farms in this country—will push them over the edge in order to claim assets that they have nailed down. Other creditors would push them over the edge. Removing this moratorium tonight would put farmers in real jeopardy from their other creditors. The Farm Credit Corporation may not have sufficient staff at this time, but other creditors may start the entire process rolling and push them into bankruptcy before the Farm Credit Corporation gets around to exercising its options.

I believe this is one of the most ill-conceived and regrettable situations that we have seen in the House of Commons for a long time. Thousands of people will be affected by this. Other agencies will wish to begin the process of recovering assets from insolvent operations.

There was discussion earlier about policy which the Government should follow. First, it must not allow the moratorium to be lifted. Second, there must be some work with free trade. Farmers and the Canadian agricultural industry cannot be exposed to the direction in which the Government is travelling. Marketing boards and other such agencies have protected farmers for years. They have allowed them to manage supply, market demand, and keep prices at least somewhat ahead of production costs. If that is destroyed by free trade there will be no more Canadian farmers.

If Americans are allowed to ship milk into Canada below the price of Canadian produce, we can kiss Canadian dairy farmers goodbye. The same proposition applies to vegetable producers and orchardists. I think we are in for some very serious trouble across the board if a free trade agreement allows Americans to push their products into Canada and ties the hands of our marketing boards. There will be serious consequences. If financial institutions thought the Canadian Government was going to do that they would begin to grab the assets of farms before all was lost with the advent of free trade. This is a very serious matter indeed.

The first step must be the cancellation of the lifting of this moratorium. A debt review board must be created which would have the power to make binding agreements with creditors so that the farmers can continue to exist and earn sufficient income to feed their families while debt repayment is ongoing. That would ensure the existence of the farmer and is absolutely imperative. The Canadian Government must guarantee that free trade will not kill Canadian marketing boards and thereby the Canadian farmer. I do not think any reasoning Member of Parliament would want that situation to occur. Yet the Government has not said that it will protect the marketing board system and supply control system in the Canadian economy.

We all recognize that the Government, to its credit, has placed $1 billion at the disposal of Canadian farmers. It has made efforts to reduce freight rates. There is a certain amount of cynicism about the coinciding of the $1 billion program with the Saskatchewan election, but nevertheless, it was $1 billion which moved in the right direction. There is a multimillion dollar program on freight rates which is another move in the right direction. Unfortunately it is not enough. If we are to save the family farm and agriculture there must be a continuing injection of cash to relieve the debt burden of Canadian farmers. That is an absolute must.

Another item of importance is encouraging a rational approach to marketing areas which are not now covered so that farmers can have a price support system which will allow them to produce food for Canadians at prices above the cost of production. As an example, the potato industry in eastern Canada has an extremely important market in the United States. At the same time, potatoes are shipped from the United States to British Columbia and Alberta in almost unregulated amounts at unregulated prices which forces the price of Canadian products below the cost of production.

The anti-dumping tribunal in British Columbia imposed a tariff to stop that importation. The imports have now shifted to Alberta and the Alberta surpluses are now being pushed into British Columbia. Farmers are continually handicapped by the lack of control of potato marketing in Canada. There are many other such areas of concern. A national marketing board which is encouraged to develop the rational marketing of products in Canada would certainly be very useful.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, this moratorium must not be removed. The results would be absolutely chaotic. We must give teeth to the debt management review boards and allow them to make binding agreements between the creditor and the farmer which will keep the farmer on the land. More cash must be put into debt relief by both provincial and federal Governments. We must guarantee Canadians that free trade will not kill Canadian agriculture. Marketing boards must be left intact and given a free hand to manage the Canadian market. Where marketing boards do not exist to provide price and supply stability in the Canadian market they must be encouraged and developed.

Federal and provincial Governments must participate together in this and we must succeed if we want to keep in place something which we all support, namely, the family farm in Canada.

• (1950)

[Translation]

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this very important debate. However I am somewhat disappointed by some of the reactions of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who fled like a mouse a moment ago after stating in this House that times are hard when Conservatives are in office. Well, I must say I have an impassioned recollection of the time when the Constitution was brought home, when he was there, and when he proved to be one of the participants responsible for the exclusion of Quebec from the agreement. Today, at Meech Lake, they have been trying to redress these past mistakes.

That being so, I think the important thing now is to concern ourselves with western farmers. Earlier this week the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in the House: I rather doubt that the major newspapers of this country will give front-page treatment to this question. Sad to say, he was right.

Again today, after so many hours of debate by Members here in the House and given the fact that the three Party leaders want to help western farmers, I was disappointed and surprised that the vital question of western Canada farm community problems was covered in a few short seconds on English TV and not even mentioned on the French network. I must say this really does something to me. I cannot understand that our major newspapers and the media would choose to ignore the urgent problems of the residents of a large part of this country. Still, today's La Presse did carry a very interesting article by Pierre Gingras. Mr. Gingras acknowledges, as we do, that there are problems in the agricultural industry. The important thing is, however, that he also acknowledges in his article the work done by the Conservatives, by my Party, by my Prime Minister, by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and by my colleagues during the 30 months we have been in power, to help farm producers.

I remember that when I first came here, and I come from a rural riding, I was not an expert on agriculture. However, just about everything is produced in my riding. Some of my best friends are farmers, and I am in touch with them regularly. I have learned a lot about agriculture. Since this Government came to power, and my colleagues will agree, we have tried to correct the mistakes made by the previous Government with the support of the New Democrats. For two and a half days we have heard the Opposition criticize here in the House every procedure and measure introduced by the Government. They have criticized but they have failed to propose any new approaches to solve the problems of western farmers.

This afternoon, when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) announced that the Government would spend $64 million on the transportation of western grain, I saw opposition Members smile.

Mr. Gauthier: That's not true.

Mr. Ferland: It is true. Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, but that is what the Government did. It spent $64 million: $2 a tonne. That is what we have done.

Mr. Gauthier: It's not true. We'll talk about it later.

Mr. Ferland: Well, I never saw a Liberal who understood anything about agriculture in this House. We have had ample proof of that. For years, when you were in power, the agricultural industry was in the worst possible shape. You let rates rise—

Mr. Gauthier: The seventies were the best years. We sold—

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, when the Liberals had the floor and were talking their heads off, we suffered in silence. So I would ask opposition Members to return the favour, even if my comments fall somewhat harshly on their ears. How could they be expected to address the problems of the west when they only have a single Member from that area? And let's not forget that the Liberal Leader went out west 32 times in 18 days during the past three weeks. It is unbelievable. Maybe the Party bought him an airplane, but he sure is doing a lot of travelling out west. Thirty-two times in 18 days. That is really something. But maybe that is only media talk. I read that today in the papers.

The fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that I find unacceptable that those people there in Opposition are bent on destroying and will not recognize all the help this Government has been providing to farm producers. Just the day before yesterday, we were working with the Minister of Transport to try and find a way to reduce costs. It was unacceptable, of course, for the rates to go up 39 per cent while the price of wheat declined 18 per cent. It was unacceptable, and a solution had to be found. We found one: we are proposing to inject $2 per tonne in assistance, so that the increase will only be 5 per cent rather than 39 per cent. And they are scoffing at that. They suggest we do not want to help farm producers.

Mr. Speaker, since we were elected, in 30 months, we have taken more than 400 initiatives in agriculture alone. This is one area where we did not cut. Quite the opposite, we have been constantly adding funds for the farm industry. We invested nearly $7 000 million in agriculture, mostly in western Canada of course. There was the dairy policy that benefitted of course Quebec dairy producers. But those are tools that had to be provided to our farm producers, and we did so with very great pleasure.

There is also another aspect the Opposition does not seem to understand. As a Government, we have been working in constant consultation with producers, whether from eastern, central or western Canada. We always consulted them, and the proof is the farmers are pleased with the work we as a Government have been doing in this House. As far as I am concerned, I can state that I am very proud of the work done by my Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, and so on. All my colleagues did a tremendous job on agriculture, this is something that has to be told.

The New Democratic Member earlier referred to concerns over free trade, I must again remind him that a commitment was made here on March 16 that marketing boards are not on the table. And I personally remember seeing Liberals and New Democrats oppose that motion. This is really something. People may have a short memory, but I can tell you we will remind you of that. You voted against that motion. But we have stated on a number of occasions that marketing boards were not on the table. Do you think otherwise we would have introduced the kind of long-term dairy policy that had been requested for years by farm producers? Since 1981 we were calling for a long-term dairy policy, and we came up with it.

An Hon. Member: That had been promised by the Liberals.

Mr. Ferland: It had been promised by the Liberals with the support of the NDP, but it never came. We kept our promise and delivered the goods. That dairy policy would never have been provided had we had to negotiate a few months later. The dairy policy is not negotiable. The Canadian culture is not negotiable either. That was clearly stated. That is clear!

Mr. McCurdy: With the Tories the entire country is sold to the United States.

Mr. Ferland: Let me finish, you will speak when your turn comes. You will all have an opportunity to speak. The debate has not yet ended my friend. Take your time.

I have taken the liberty, Mr. Speaker, of reading over some speeches made by my colleagues opposite. We now have some 150 pages; or rather, yesterday afternoon at four o'clock, we already had reached 150 pages. Needless to say, I did not find the best speeches among the Liberals or the New-Democrats. I did not find in them any food for thought or any new idea. The Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) said at the beginning of his speech:

—I should like to take this opportunity to state the policies of the NDP—

I could perhaps say that "N" stands for narrow-minded, "D" stands for demagogues and "P" for professional, and this is the New Democratic Party. I did not find anything in that speech. He spoke 20 minutes but said nothing.

If I turn to another agricultural expert, the NDP member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), she said that in order to help western producers, we had to provide them with daycare centres. I do not think that western people need daycare centres this evening. What they needed to know was the announcement made this afternoon by the Minister of Transport, that is they will be given financial assistance of $64 million to help them move their wheat. That is the kind of assistance needed by farmers and it will be provided to them.

We have been carrying out negotiations throughout the world for the first time. There is a detail that is often ignored, Mr. Speaker, because the Opposition does not mention it. There was never a Canadian Prime Minister before the present Prime Minister who demanded that priority be given to agriculture in the GATT negotiations. And that was done at the Tokyo Round. But who asked for it and who did it? A Liberal Government would never have had the nerve to consider such a step. And they are the same people who went out west and laughed at western producers. We told the people in western Canada: We are going to work hard to sell your grain. We told eastern producers: We are going to try and help you sell your products throughout the world. We are going to try and end the world trade war. There is not a single farm producer in this country, Mr. Speaker, who would claim that Canada can sustain a trade war against the United States or against the EEC on grain shipments. I think everybody in Canada realizes, and farm producers certainly do, that if we really want to deal with the problems in the agricultural industry, we will first have to negotiate at the GATT level.

Meanwhile, we have to take action on a day-to-day basis. And as I said earlier, we have taken hundreds of measures in the past 30 months to help the agricultural industry, and I am thinking of apple growers in Quebec and British Columbia, of the new marketing boards that will be set up for potato producers, and so on. Hatchery egg programs have been set up at the request of farm producers. These are some of the things we have done and will go on doing, but listening to the empty speeches of opposition Members here in the House is not going to help the cause of agriculture in this country.

Quite the opposite, Mr. Speaker, it is by trying, and I would very much like, by the end of this debate, to hear the concrete proposals you will be coming up with and to hear also, when you tell us your concrete proposals, how much money is involved and where that money will be coming from. Because there are facts opposition Members seem to forget. You say: "Spend, spend, spend!" but you do not ask where the money will be coming from. This we found out when we came here in 1984, that little surprise of the $240 billion deficit. Except that now the debts have to be repaid. I appreciate that to a New Democrat paying one's debts is not important. Even if we were to mortgage the forty-second generation in this country, that is of no matter to them, because they will be dead. No problem. They will have had their way and let the others pay. But something else is required to manage the country soundly, to show that we are a responsible nation. And the proof we are a responsible nation is that interest rates came down. Why? Because we kept sinking the country lower into debt, or because we had realistic policies?

Mr. Robinson: What about the unemployment rate?

Mr. Ferland: The unemployment rate came down, my dear colleague.

Mr. Robinson: Only in Toronto.

Mr. Ferland: It is incredible how short your memory is, you New Democrats. Your kind of memory is nothing to boast about. Go back a few months, you will see what kind of unemployment rate and interest rates we had. What did you do on that side when people were paying 23 per cent or 24 per cent, when the price of oil was going up, when you established Petro-Canada on the other side. Throw billions at it. What we have today, this debate and the problems that the west experiences, result from all the stupid things you have done for years, from policies which had no sense whatsoever and were only designed to make you look good and make people dream. But you cannot sell dreams to Canadians. No one is more down to earth than a farmer, because when he gets up in the morning he looks at his field and thinks about ploughing it and working it. He does not have time to dream, he is a doer, while you, with your free-flowing phrases and your awe-inspiring dreams, you ruined completely the economy of western Canada. That is what happened.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): "Tighten your belt!" they were saying, but they were wearing suspenders.

Mr. Ferland: Of course. Trudeau could say: "Tighten your belt!", he was wearing small white suspenders underneath, to look good. Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, I think that what is important for western farmers and all farmers is to know that Conservative Members from eastern Canada support them in their work. I can tell you that as late as yesterday, MPs from Quebec were working with the Transport Ministers to find a solution to avoid loading even further western producers. I can say that our colleagues from the west were delighted to have our co-operation to solve their problem. We are confident that we will have similar help from the west should a problem develop in the east. In the meantime, they are the ones who need help, and we are delighted to be able to do something for them.

[English]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, why has this country become so aroused? Why is it that the House of Commons has now been involved in an emergency debate for three days? It seems that the Government struck a nerve in a way it has so far failed to do in any other thing it has done. The action it has taken has touched hearts and minds and has affected us deeply.

Tonight, the Government is to lift the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures. The lifting of the moratorium has touched the hearts and minds of Members of Parliament and it has certainly aroused the media. The media has reported this debate very fully, despite the comments made by some of my colleagues. The country is aroused because the issue comes down to a simple image which comes to mind, an image which all too many older Canadians hold in their minds from the Great Depression. It is the thought of farms being foreclosed on.

We recall the stereotype of a person dressed in a black suit with a long moustache and a black hat who went from farm to farm with writs of foreclosure in his hands. That image is still in the memories of people who lived during the last Depression and remember the stereotype of the heartless person who would come to the farm to throw the people out after all their lives, hearts and savings had been put into that farm.

We are not simply dealing with vast figures, we are dealing with the thought of a farmer waiting for someone to come and close down his farm at a time when other parts of the country are enjoying great prosperity. It so happens that I represent such a part of the country, the area called the Golden Horseshoe, though we certainly do have problems. It has touched the minds and hearts of people in every part of Canada to realize that, at what is supposed to be the end of the recession, we are seeing situations that remind us grossly of the terrible and bleak days of the worst part of the Great Depression of the 1930s.

The image we have in our minds is that there are people who are down and now we are kicking them. We heard that the Wheat Board announced that prices for 1987 would be 18 per cent lower than they were in 1986, but we knew that in 1986 the prices for wheat were 20 per cent lower than they were in 1985.

As if these blows to people who are trying to stay on the land and have committed themselves to improvements were not hard enough, within a day after the announcement of the reduction in prices the Government made the incredibly insensitive and unfeeling announcement that the moratorium on foreclosures would be lifted. That announcement means an open season on Canadian farmers, some of whom fought in wars, the heart of our country, the pioneers. That they will now suffer this kind of treatment is something that has touched the heartstrings of all Canadians.

What has brought on this debate? It was not another discussion about interest rates, it was this image in our minds. This image is what is hurting our consciences. We cannot go to bed at night without thinking that things like this could happen to us, and knowing that western Canadians will experience this kind of suffering.

Today the Government announced a reduction in the impact of the blow to farmers caused by new freight rates. Nonetheless, this announcement is still more bad news for farmers, because it amounts to an increase of about 6 per cent in grain freight rates. That is the net result of the so-called good news. The announcement still means that the cost of shipping grain is going up, not down. While the price of wheat goes down, freight rates are still going up and that is another bad piece of news. How could the Government, knowing that this bad news about freight rates was on the docket, then have proceeded to announce the lifting of the moratorium on foreclosures?

Canadians have been aroused by this heartless approach to human situations. It brings back to our minds the worst images of the Great Depression. It brings back to our minds the thought that the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall), who spoke to us a while ago, was able on an emergency basis to rush to the banks with $1 billion-worth of aid. She has not found in her heart a strong enough motive to rush to the Cabinet and call for an end to this attempt to lift the moratorium. Why has she not fought for those people who will suffer now? She was so anxious to save western banks that she found $1 billion. How about throwing $1 billion at western farmers?

We know that the Government did throw $1 billion at farmers in general. We also know that that was linked to an election in Saskatchewan—a very cynical kind of gift. Indeed, members of the Opposition, people from the west and western farmers have been begging and pleading for months, in fact, for years, for that type of assistance. It only came in time to help the Conservatives win a provincial election. That is hardly what people regard as being a responsive, compassionate reaction.

We find that what we are asking for at this moment, what we are calling upon the Government to do, is to stop the cancellation tonight of the moratorium on farm foreclosures. We are asking the Government to have some kind of compassion today and to go to the aid of those who are the weakest among us. That is what we are asking.

I do not think that my colleagues pretend that they have all the answers. Nor do I expect the Government to have all the answers. But the answers that the Government is giving are absolutely unacceptable. What the Opposition can say is that this step is heartless. When the Minister of State for Privatization talked about the fact that her family had been on the farm during the Great Depression and that they almost went under, but the thing that saved them was hard work, was she perhaps implying that it was hard work that was needed on the part of western farmers and maybe if they worked a little harder they too could save their farms? That is not acceptable. We know that many of the people who are facing foreclosure have certainly worked hard enough on their farms.

The problem is not that they are not willing to work. It is that the price of wheat has gone down, that the Government has taken away their protection which would give them a further chance to continue their businesses. This is what we are concerned about. This is the type of advice we can give the Government. A five-year old could give that advice to the Government, but it is lacking in compassion and concern for the people who are on the farms and who are facing the possible loss of their way of life, the possible loss of all the work that they have put in and that their parents have put into their family farms.

This is a very cruel moment in the life of the country, which is why this debate has been going on for so many hours. It has struck a nerve. It touches us personally to our hearts that we are living in a country of reasonable affluence and yet we are watching our fellow Canadians face such an unacceptable fate. For what? They do not deserve it.

This is a Government that apparently cannot get its act together. It is unpopular because it apparently cannot show that it has compassion for the people. I ask Hon. Members to consider the various steps that it has taken, whether it be with respect to patent drugs, which shows a lack of concern for senior citizens, or whether it is about the provinces which will have to provide more money for the cost of drugs. The Government has shown no compassion when it talks about cutting rural post office deliveries and eliminating rural post offices. Nor has it shown compassion when we consider the tax system which has, in effect, provided the most terrible blows to people who earn in the area of $15,000 per year.

When we look at the tax increases that have been thrown at these people since this Government has come to power we see that they have increased by 75 per cent while on the other side of the coin those who earn $100,000 find that their taxes have risen by only 4 per cent. That is not compassionate.

Peter Cook, who writes as financial critic for The Globe and Mail, when speaking about the action of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated that he has gotten away with raising personal income taxes by 19 per cent, sales taxes by 33 per cent, excise taxes by 18 per cent, and gasoline taxes by 120 per cent. These are enormous increases in taxes. Yet we have a quotation from the same Minister of Finance who has done this to the people of Canada made on August 28, 1984. He said:

> We have no intention of raising income taxes to Canadians. What we have to do is get down government—

He has got down Government. He has got it down on the people. He has certainly raised the taxes and completely broken his promise.

On March 1, 1985, the Minister of Finance said this:

> I don't want to increase taxes . . . A tax increase, certainly a general tax increase, puts a dampening effect on the economy and I don't want to see us do that.

When we look at the way he has structured the taxes he certainly has put a dampening effect on the poor. They are the ones who are paying the taxes while the Government has provided a capital gains relief of $500,000 in a lifetime for those who make much more money.

Yes, this is a Government which lacks compassion in some amazing ways. It seems to be able to come up at the most amazing times with destructive types of decisions that hurt the poor, that make the poor poorer and the rich richer. The small businessman sees higher postal rates. Independent oil companies see their businesses threatened and, in some cases, they have been driven out of business. We saw that sales taxes were imposed when the Government came into power at a rate of 9 per cent. They are now at 12 per cent. In addition, the Government has slapped some brand new taxes on items which relate to hygiene, drugs used by senior citizens and some children's foods. This tax of 12 per cent which the Government has slapped on is a sales tax which is put on to the backs of the poor.

The Minister of Finance has said that such sales taxes are regressive, yet he has resorted to imposing more taxes which hurt the poor because they cannot afford the same taxes that the rich can afford. In other words, if a tax of 10 per cent is placed on a product then a poor person has to pay the same amount of increase as does a rich person. That is why such a tax is regressive. In other words, the impression the Government continues to give, whether in the tax field, the business field or in the area of the Post Office—whatever it seems to touch—seems to hit the chord of hurting the poor, the beaten, the down-trodden. The Government seems to pick on them.

In the case before us the Government has taken the most obscene type of action we have ever seen. We see a situation in which it will foreclose or allow foreclosures on the family farms of hundreds and hundreds of Canadians. I have risen to speak on this matter because I know what is at stake. It is whether or not we have compassion. It is whether or not we will see from the Government a realization that, unless it changes its ways, it will not be at the rate of 24 per cent or 25 per cent support in the polls, but will drop even further, if that is possible, because people everywhere in the country, not just in the centre but even those in the west, will now come to the conclusion that the Government has no ability to show compassion. It seems absolutely unable to get its act together, especially in terms of the west. Even westerners are now losing confidence in the Government. That is too bad.

This situation is threatening our unity. We have always felt a sense that Canada was a whole country, a totality, and that when one part of the country was in need we came forward with equalization payments to try to balance out the situation. We followed the motto "bear ye one another's burdens". That is a compassionate concept. It seems in this particular situation that we are not willing as Canadians to bear one another's burdens at all. We see the Government letting everyone loose, and whatever happens to them the weak ones will fall behind and be eaten up. That is a policy of laissez faire, a policy which they literally are carrying out. In so doing, they conjure up in our minds an image from the Great Depression, the image of a Government that allows its farmers to be put to the wall.

A Government that permits foreclosures to take place conjures up the worst images we could possibly have. It is a Government that shows a lack of concern and compassion.

This Government, by its activity and its actions, is threatening Canadian unity. It causes people in the west to think that we in the east do not care. Well, we do. We in the east and in the centre of this country care about what is happening in the west. In this particular case, let it be understood that we do care. We do not want the west to think that there is no future with us; that we don't care, that we have no sensitivity. That is why this Government is indeed in a sense threatening our sense of unity. We must bear one another's burdens; we must care about one another.

Hon. Members opposite can smirk and laugh as much as they wish. They are going down further in the polls. The Hon. Members opposite are laughing at what I am saying. They are free to do that. The people in the west are not laughing, Mr. Speaker; we are not laughing. This is a matter of Canadian unity, Mr. Speaker; it is not a laughing matter.

We have to show concern for our western provinces, because the people in the west really do wonder about us. They wonder whether we easterners do care—and we do.

I conclude my comments with one last plea to the Government, to continue the moratorium on farm foreclosures. The lifting of that moratorium will take effect tonight at midnight, and I plead with the Government to respond to the Opposition, to respond to its own Members, to respond to the people of Canada and in fact continue the moratorium until it has found a better way to find some reasonable protection for our farmers.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in this landmark debate on the crisis facing Canadian farmers today.

I should like to start by paying tribute to my colleague, the Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), who initiated this emergency debate a couple of days ago. He is himself a farmer, and he has done a great deal to sensitize those of us in the NDP caucus who haven't been as aware in the past as we should have been of some of the problems and concerns facing Canadian farmers. I am pleased that he has shown this kind of leadership in the House, along with my colleague from, the Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), our spokesperson on agriculture. These two individuals have played a real leadership role, not just within our caucus, but in this House, in bringing to the attention of the Government the concerns facing the farmers across this land.

The crisis facing us relates to the decision announced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to lift the moratorium declared on September 17, 1985, on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures. It is of some significance that the Government has announced that this moratorium will in fact be lifted on May 1, tomorrow. And what is the significance of May 1? May 1 is May Day.

Mr. Speaker, the farmers of Canada are being hit with the lifting of the moratorium on May Day! May Day is the traditional symbol of distress. I think it is of considerable symbolic significance that this Government, on May Day, should be once again attacking the farmers of Canada by lifting the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures.

We heard earlier from the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall), "Well, you know, it is only a small number of farmers who will be affected; it is only one quarter of 1 per cent of the farmers who will be affected." We heard that from the Minister of State for Privatization, the same Minister who was heard some time ago to say that the motivating factor in our economy is greed. Well, it is not surprising that that Minister should exhibit such a heartless attitude toward those farmers who will be driven off the land as a result of this Government's decision.

I wish to put some figures to the statistic that the Minister so blithely dismissed. My colleagues have already spoken to the breakdown in the various provinces. I wish to speak for a moment about the national implications of the lifting of this moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures.

As of April 1 this year there was a total of 14,597 FCC loans outstanding, 6,000 of which were two years or more in arrears. Of the 6,000 that were two years or more in arrears, some 1,300 are affected by this moratorium. That means that 1,300 families may be driven off the land with the lifting of this moratorium. In some cases, their farms have been handed down from generation to generation, and as a result of this Government's heartless decision these people will now be driven off the land.

The Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) laughs. He laughs at the farmers who are being driven off the land. Well, he will have to answer to the farmers in his constituency for his laughter, and his contempt for their plight.

Even though this Government says that it is only one quarter of 1 per cent who will be affected, the reality is that it amounts to some 1,300 families.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine continues to laugh at the farmers of western Canada from behind the curtain. He hasn't even had the courage to speak out in this debate on behalf of the farmers in his constituency. He has been silent, Mr. Speaker. He has been totally silent on the plight of the farmers in Winnipeg—Assiniboine and he will pay the price for that at the next election.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk a bit more about these figures. We have heard from government Members that it will be "only 50 farmers every month who will lose their farms". My colleague from Prince Albert has actually made some inquiries of the Farm Credit Corporation, as a result of which he has learned that the FCC does not have the staff to send out the foreclosure teams to shut down the farms at a rate faster than that. What a disgraceful commentary on this Government's farm policies!

The reality, Mr. Speaker, is that the lifting of this moratorium is going to have devastating consequences on the farmers of western Canada.

It is not just the lifting of moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures that is going to have devastating consequences; it is also the fact that other financial institutions will take this action as a signal that it is open season on those who have defaulted on their loans.

Canadian farmers have accumulated debt in the order of $24 billion. Once the Farm Credit Corporation foreclosure moratorium is lifted, the banks and the other financial institutions will take it as a signal to move in, and yes, Mr. Speaker, it will be open season on farmers.

Last summer I travelled to my constituency by train, and I will never forget a family that boarded the train in Moose Jaw. They had lived on a farm that had been in their family for three generations, and they could no longer stay on that farm. They had been driven off their land and were travelling by train to British Columbia to try to make a new life for themselves. That destructive erosion of the family farm in Canada will be repeated in increasing numbers as a result of the Government's heartless decision to lift the moratorium on foreclosures by the Farm Credit Corporation.

• (2030)

Women on the farm have traditionally been among the hardest hit in times of adversity. Not only have women been forced to work off the farm to supplement inadequate incomes, they are increasingly being called upon to do work on the farm without pay. The work which was formerly done by hired hands is now done by women because farmers cannot afford to pay for hired hands. In addition, they continue to perform their traditional roles on the farm, which includes raising children. They are obviously working in partnership with their husbands in many cases, but the reality is that in too many cases it is women who are bearing the brunt of the burden.

As I said, women are being particularly hard hit. They lack retirement security, child care facilities, crisis shelters and women's centres. They are often faced with discrimination from lending institutions.

It is also important to note the harsh personal impact of the financial crisis facing the farming community. In terms of stress, for example, in Saskatchewan farm accidents account for 40 per cent of the fatalities despite the fact that farmers make up only approximately 20 per cent of the labour force. The suicide rate of farmers in Alberta in 1984 was 40 per 100,000 compared to a rate of 15.5 per cent per 100,000 in 1981 and compared to a rate of 18.1 per 100,000 for the rest of the population in 1984. The suicide rate was almost three times greater for farmers than it was for the rest of the population.

The Canadian Mental Health Association learned through a study in Saskatchewan that 88 per cent of the farmers surveyed had experienced stress-related symptoms including health problems such as headaches, mental fatigue, insomnia, depression, anger and frustration which sometimes led to communications problems and alcohol abuse. In Ontario suicide is the number two cause of death on farms following only machinery accidents. We can see that the personal toll of the crisis in the Canadian farming community is very great indeed.

I do not often make reference in the House to a publication called Western Report. Recently in its cover story Western Report dealt with what it called the death of the grain men. Inside it speaks of a requiem for the family farm, of why the small producer is being threatened with extinction. They talk about the attack on one of the country's most revered institutions, the family farm.

I would like to say a word about the family farm. I had the honour of serving as a member of the special joint committee which drafted the Constitution of Canada. I remember that during the course of that debate there was considerable controversy, which has continued to this day, on the question of the inclusion of property rights in the Constitution of Canada. The Conservative Members of Parliament who suggested that we should entrench property rights in the Constitution of Canada are now members of the Government which is driving farmers off their property.

I suggest that the Conservatives should show a little more respect for the property of farmers and for the families who are struggling to maintain their farms after generations. After all, 95 per cent of the farms in Canada are still family farms. I suggest that we show a little more respect for those farmers and their attempts to protect and preserve what is important to them, their property.

I suggest as well that we heed the cry of the Conservative Member of Parliament for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) who said that the west is being ignored by his Government. That Tory MP from Alberta has thrown up his hands in despair. He said recently that unless the Government gets serious about the problems of western Canada, he will leave that Party.

It is a rather sad commentary that in response to the Conservative Member for Edmonton—Strathcona, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) fired him as a Parliamentary Secretary and his colleagues from Alberta slammed the door and excluded him from the Tory caucus. We have not heard from that Member during this debate. He said as well that the Tory Government is creating jobs all right but is only creating them in downtown Toronto.

The plea of the Conservative Member of Parliament for Edmonton—Strathcona is being echoed across this land by farmers who are saying to the Government, "For God's sake don't hit us when we're already down". After grain prices dropped 18 per cent last year and 20 per cent the year before, and costs are going up, the Government kicks farmers in the gut on May Day. That is a tragic commentary on the Government's lack of concern for the farmers of our country.

I want to take a moment to speak about what New Democrats believe to be the two key priorities for protecting and strengthening the farm in Canada. First, it is essential that we continue the moratorium on foreclosures which was imposed on the Farm Credit Corporation in September, 1985, until a comprehensive debt reduction program has been put in place. It is important to recognize that many other farmers are not protected by this moratorium. They are at the mercy of private financial institutions, the banks. It seems as though the Canadian Bankers Association is writing the Government's agricultural policy. That association put forward five key points, each and every one of which was accepted by the Government.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has suggested that farm organizations wanted this moratorium lifted. That is an astonishing suggestion. The National Farmers' Union, the three prairie Wheat Pools, and many other farm organizations have said no such thing. Indeed, they have said the opposite. For example, Keystone Agricultural Producers based in Manitoba has said that the termination of this moratorium will make it much more difficult for farmers to get loans from banks and other lenders.

This is a particularly critical time for farmers because they are now planting their crops and at planting time they must borrow money to purchase fuel, seed, fertilizer and chemicals for the coming crop season. At this particular time of year farmers need even more cash. Keystone Agricultural Producers have said that the Government should not lift this moratorium.

• (2040)

The President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, Garfield Stevenson, said that the termination of the moratorium "is completely irresponsible and just not acceptable". Mr. Stevenson went on to say:

> I thought the Minister had more on the ball than this.

Those were the comments of the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. The President of the National Farmers' Union, Wayne Easter, said the following:

> I just can't understand why he would announce it now . . . Normally farmers feel a sense of optimism at this time of year . . . But this tears the heart out of thousands of farmers.

When the Minister of Agriculture states, as he did on The Journal last night, that farmers want the moratorium lifted, I must ask: Who is he talking about? He is not talking about Keystone in Manitoba. He is not talking about the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. He is not talking about the National Farmers' Union. He is not speaking for the thousands and thousands of farmers who are desperate and want to survive, not be driven off the land.

This brings me to my final comment in respect of the importance of a guarantee that the income of farmers will be at least at the same level next year as it was this past year. It is essential that farmers who are planting now have confidence that they will get a recovery from what is planted this spring and harvested next fall which is enough to cover their costs and enough, I would add, to ensure a decent standard of living.

This Government which has bailed out banks should surely recognize its responsibility to the farmers of Canada. I point out as well that other countries, including the United States, Japan, the United Kingdom, and the EEC, have recognized the importance of ensuring an adequate income for farmers.

In conclusion, I remind the House and those who are watching the debate that my Party was founded at the depths of the Depression in the 1930s. My Party formed the first Government in 1944 in the Province of Saskatchewan. One of the first acts which that Government under Tommy Douglas brought forward was a moratorium on debt for farmers. I am proud of that record of my party in defending farmers in Canada.

I am also proud that myself and my colleagues, led by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) and the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), are continuing in that tradition to defend farmers by calling upon the Government not to lift the moratorium and to ensure adequate income for Canadian farmers.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the temptation is too great for me to let pass the suggestion that I can think of no more appropriate Member than the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) to be speaking in the House about May Day.

Let me also note an irony, if I might, as I begin this debate. We have just heard the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) and the Hon. Member for Burnaby giving their views on farm matters. Let me perhaps introduce some balance to the debate by quoting the President of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, a western organization with a western based president, when he said: "The Canadian Cattlemen's Association supports the decision of Agriculture Minister John Wise to end the temporary debt moratorium on debts to the Farm Credit Corporation". CCA President Stan Wilson also emphasized: "Our concern is that the distortions caused by debt moratoria do more damage to the farm credit system than any possible benefit to individual farmers".

That is the voice of agriculture. They do not want damage to the farm credit system. They want the farm credit system strengthened, and they want the farm situation across the country strengthened, as do we. One characteristic about the farm situation in Canada, which is known to any of us familiar with agriculture, is that it is in a state of crisis now. That is known. That is recognized by every honest Member in the House.

However, another characteristic of the Canadian farm community is that it is made up, to a singular degree, of individuals who are honest, who are realistic, and who know that there are no magic solutions. They will have noted, as we did, that in this week alone in the Canadian House of Commons the New Democratic Party has proposed spending new billions of dollars on Dome Petroleum, has proposed spending new billions of dollars on the Post Office, and has proposed spending new billions of dollars on agriculture. Those are the three items proposed by that Party in one week.

Ladies and gentlemen—excuse me, Mr. Speaker, I have been away from the House of Commons too long—there may be disagreements here about how some of these problems can be resolved. However, there is no illusion among the agricultural community in Canada about the fact that the long-term solutions to the problems with which we are dealing will not come easily.

I had the good fortune—and I will not pretend to be a farmer—to grow up in an agricultural community in western Canada. One thing which is evident to all of us who had that experience is that when the farm community is in crisis, it is not a local or isolated crisis. It speaks of a region in crisis; indeed, to some degree, a whole economy in crisis. When there are problems in agriculture, they extend to every other part of the large rural community.

That is not something we read about. That is something that if one grew up in Viking in Vegreville, as did the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), or in Provencher, Manitoba; or in wartime Saskatchewan; in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; or in Drumheller, Alberta, or in High River, Alberta, as did Members of the Cabinet, one grew up knowing the realities. Because the Cabinet of Canada is composed today of men and women who grew up directly with the cyclical and deep problems agriculture faces, we understand that the problems will not be resolved suddenly. We understand that there must be a very serious effort on the part of the Government of Canada, domestically and internationally, to solve some of the problems.

It is not a matter of getting up and saying, as a former Prime Minister unhappily did, that he is not going to sell your wheat. We have an obligation to try to sell the wheat of the farmers of Canada. We have an obligation to try to achieve a better international trading system. We have an obligation, when there is a crisis in farm income, to inject money into the western Canadian economy and the whole Canadian economy.

The Government has accepted that obligation. We will continue to do that. Indeed, the record of the Government in terms of action on agriculture is unsurpassed in the last two decades or three decades in Canada. Most farmers understand that and respect that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I take part in this debate as both a western Canadian and as the foreign Minister of the country. I have been back in my constituency speaking, among others, to people operating centres for women in small towns like Whitecourt. There is a crisis there. There is the implication for farm families, as has been indicated by the Minister of State responsible for the Status of Women and others in the House. That is part of the reality.

The sense of crisis in Canadian agriculture is deep and is growing. In Barrhead and in Fort Assiniboine in my constituency, the price of barley today is in real terms about what it was in the 1930s. Some 50 farmers in Manitoba declared bankruptcy in the last year. In Saskatchewan there were 45. In Alberta there were 93. In Ontario there were 102.

Costs of production continue to climb as prices drop. A growing number of farmers have to work out to keep their operations going. Many individual farm families face the prospect of having to get out of agriculture. The problems are complex. Nobody, least of all farmers, pretends that there are easy solutions either at home or internationally.

The Government has acted on a wide range of agricultural issues. We have delivered relief from capital gains tax. We have frozen freight rate and elevator handling charges on grain handling and on grain transportation. We twice amended the Western Grain Stabilization Act so that it is now a true instrument for stabilization. We have established a farm debt review board. We have removed federal sales and excise taxes from farm fuels.

Last year, in the face of grave crisis, we committed $1 billion to grain producers under the Special Canadian Grains Program. Not counting that $1 billion expenditure, the budget for the federal Department of Agriculture last year was 60 per cent higher than it was the year before the Government took office. With all of that spending on agriculture, our over-all fiscal management has been so successful that the interest rates farmers pay are from 4 per cent to 5 per cent lower than they were three years ago.

Our calculations are that every 1 per cent drop in interest rates results in approximately $240 million for Canadian farmers. These actions are important. They are only part of the program for agriculture of the Government. The priority of agriculture in the Government is high and is growing.

There was a comment made by one of the Hon. Members opposite who talked about the need for Canadian farmers to have confidence about money which will be coming in next year. The projections for federal Government spending next year for support for western Canadian agriculture suggests that there will be more than $3 billion going from the Government, that is, in 1987 and to western Canadian agriculture. That means that western Canadian farmers can have confidence that in calendar 1987, there will be more money coming to them from this Government than there was in calendar 1986. That is simply a projection of reality and one that should be understood across Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I will speak tonight particularly about farm policy and foreign policy because if they were once separate, they now come together. There is a constant and a clear interlinking between what happens in foreign capitals and what happens in every farm across Canada. Every day, political decisions in Paris, in Washington, in Moscow and in other capitals affect the markets and prices for Canadian farmers. Mikhail Gorbachev is a very important man to the farmers in Fort Assiniboine and Barrhead in my constituency.

The common agricultural program of the European Community has done as much damage to the farmers of Alberta as the National Energy Program did to our oil workers. Let me talk for a moment about the European Community and the problems that have been built into the whole system of agriculture as a result of the policies of that Community.

The European Community has changed from a net importer to a major exporter of farm commodities. For example, in the crop year ending 1966, the European Community imported nearly 11 million tonnes of cereal crops. Sixteen years later in the crop year ending in 1982, the European Community exported well over 6 million tonnes. That trend has continued and it has continued because of a growing program of subsidy that has become a pattern in Europe and has been responded to by subsidies in the United States. It is catching the farmers of Canada, the farmers of Thailand and the farmers of other countries that are efficient in production but do not have giant treasuries to subsidize agriculture in a very serious domestic and international problem.

In 1958, the European Community exported only 23 per cent as much food as it imported. By 1985, the Community exported 60 per cent as much food as it imported. Even considering the fact that the Community had expanded its membership significantly over that period, increasing population by 60 per cent, that is a dramatic turnaround in food production and it has to do with subsidy.

European farmers receive prices for commodities which are as much as four or five times the world market price. For example, European farmers get the equivalent of $450 Canadian per tonne for Durum wheat when world markets indicate that is worth something just over $100 Canadian. Canadian farmers receive $130 Canadian for that. Another example is barley for which prices in my constituency are down to Depression year levels. European farmers get the equivalent of $400 per tonne of barley while the European Community sells that same barley for $80 per tonne or less on world markets. That means that the export subsidy alone on barley is five times the current world market price. That is the problem facing agriculture in this country and in others. The question is, what do we do about it.

That is a serious question. It is too serious a question for mere partisan division and debate. It is a very basic and serious problem. Let me tell the House about some of the things we are doing about it. We are acting on a number of fronts internationally.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we are seeking new markets for Canadian products. This of course includes traditional activities such as negotiating an agreement with the Soviet Union for the purchase of 25 million tonnes of Canadian grain over the next five years. Actually, despite a massively subsidized and fiercely competitive world grain market, we managed to increase our market share by nearly 2 per cent last year. It is true that prices were low, but we are better off increasing our market share even if prices are low, than losing on both counts.

This trade initiative also includes new sales to Egypt and Brazil and more possibilities in the Pacific Rim. We have food aid programs in Bangladesh, India, Pakistan, Ethiopia, Jamaica, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Tunisia, Peru, Senegal, Mozambique and Ghana. These programs have resulted in the purchase of $163 million worth of Canadian wheat, $47 million worth of Canadian flour, $61 million worth of canola and $51.8 million worth of other products.

Some of these development programs have modified the consumer and production habits of other countries, thus creating new markets for Canadian products.

We also promote agriculture related trade as often as possible, and we do so in two ways. One example is a recent visit to the Soviet Union by the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board and Canadian business people. That country is our biggest wheat buyer. If the Soviet Union would rather deal with Canada it is partly due to our reputation as a reliable supplier. The interest of the Soviets can also be attributed to the fact that we actively seek Canadian markets for their products so as to achieve a better trade balance. Progress comes slowly, but this initiative on the part of Canada is essential if we expect to continue to have access to the major market which the Soviet Union represents.

In another vein, we encourage Canadian agricultural service industries to expand their activities at the international level. Last September in Venezuela and Argentina I headed a delegation including representatives of Canadian agricultural companies. This enabled companies like Regina's Prairie Microtech and Calgary's Agriteam to explore new possibilities of trade and business markets in joint ventures in South America. This way, Canada's contacts in the agricultural sector are increasing in countries where new markets might open up for commodity harvests, technology or Canadian know-how.

Mr. Prud'homme: And in the Middle East.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There are possibilities in the Middle East.

Mr. Prud'homme: They are enormous.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There are possibilities in the Pacific, and this is a part of what we have to do as a country and a part of what we are now doing.

[English]

Most important, we are tackling head-on the fundamental international agricultural problem and that is the problem of international subsidy. It is as threatening to agriculture in the 1980s and 1990s as the drought was in the Depression. The agricultural trading system is in deep trouble with artificially depressed international prices, subsidized export competition and a growing proliferation of non-tariff import barriers.

We have two complementary goals. The first is to break the cycle of subsidy which has led to the trade war between Europe and the United States, a war whose casualties grow in Canada, in Australia, in Thailand and in a dozen other countries whose treasuries are too small to compete with the European Community or the United States. The second is to establish fair, firm international rules of trade in agriculture, rules that will increase the role of efficient producers and reduce the role of direct and indirect subsidies and protection.

Let me recount to the House briefly some of our experiences in the last year. Almost a year ago exactly, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and I were at the meeting of the OECD in Paris and we heard to our great surprise Ministers speaking for European Governments beginning to criticize the common agricultural program. That had not happened before. I must tell the House that the Ministers who uttered those criticisms were Ministers of Finance, not of Agriculture, the people who have to pay for the subsidy programs. However, that was an indication that there might be a possibility of change in European attitudes toward subsidy in the Community. We did not simply note that as a phenomenon. We came back to Canada, we sat down with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and we developed together the opportunity that existed for a country like ours to take advantage of these changes that were developing in the Community, to take advantage of the possibility of some self-questioning, to begin to break this terrible, crippling cycle of subsidy.

The Prime Minister of Canada took to the economic summit in Tokyo as Canada's principal emphasis in that summit the need to give priority to breaking the cycle of international subsidy in agriculture.

I have been to three economic summits. I know that not before—at least not before my experience—has there been a situation in which the President of the United States, the President of France, the Chancellor of West Germany and other leaders have been forced to defend practices which they themselves found difficult to defend in the summit context about agricultural subsidy. One of the European leaders who was there, and I will not identify the country, made a very significant comment. During a discussion that would not have occurred without the initiative of the Prime Minister of Canada he said that everyone recognized that this was a problem that everyone shared but that no one could solve on their own. Recognizing that, Canada proposed at the summit that we should try to solve it together.

We came away from the summit and tried to put in place a very special experiment in international relations. We tried to put together a special group of leading international experts who might in preparation for the Venice Summit coming up in June be able to identify subsidy practices in each of the summit countries on which action could be taken at Venice. We were making progress on that proposal. We had funding from foundations in Canada and the United States. We had agreement from several countries, including the United States. We had the enthusiastic interest of countries such as Thailand, Argentina and others. For a while we had the agreement of some European countries. Then one European country said that, no, they would not agree. The proposal then came apart. We were not able to proceed with what may have been—what had the promise of being—a Canadian breakthrough in this cycle of subsidy. That did not work. But it was very much worth trying, as it is very much worth trying for this country to find other means by which we can break the cycle of agricultural subsidy that is at the root of the problem being discussed in this House and the problem being felt on farms across the country.

We have acted on other fronts. I led the Canadian delegation to the GATT talks in Punta del Este, Uruguay, last year. In the past, agriculture has been a casualty of the GATT. It has been something that has been shunted aside when nations gathered together to deal with international trading rules. Well, this year that was changed. While there were many countries which took part in the change, one of the leaders in achieving that change was this country and this Government. We do not believe that the world can long afford to put agriculture to the sidelines. We do not believe that when new trading rules are put together they can treat agriculture as though it were unimportant.

Agriculture is essential. Fair trade in agriculture is essential. If we are going to achieve that then we have to have trading rules that are acceptable to and guide the practices of countries around the world. We have made a start on that. We have made a start on that in the GATT. But, again, there is much more that needs to be done. Again, this Government is exerting our leadership to try to ensure that we are able to make that type of progress.

There was a group established, as a result of an Australian initiative, with our active help. It is the so-called Cairns Group, a group of a number of countries such as Canada, in conditions such as ours, victims of the subsidy practices of the Community and of the United States, which gathered together in Australia to prepare for the GATT negotiations in Uruguay. Within three weeks that group will meet again in Ottawa at the invitation and under the chairmanship of the Government of Canada. We think that that type of pressure has to be maintained.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are signalling that my time is up.

Mr. Prud'homme: No, no, please go ahead.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I hear correctly that there is unanimous consent to allow the Minister more time?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, I do not believe there is. However, I am sure the House will allow the Hon. Minister a minute or so to complete his speech.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I will not abuse the generosity of the House. I appreciate the fact that there is real interest in what we are trying to do internationally. I very much hope that we will be able to make progress in the meeting that the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), along with my colleagues, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), will be convening in Ottawa.

There are two other important meetings coming up in the immediate future. One is the next meeting of the OECD in Paris in two weeks' time. The other is the summit in Venice. It is the intention of the Government to continue at Venice the initiative which the Prime Minister of Canada began in Tokyo, and to continue in the context of the economic summit to try to reach agreement on some progress against the practice of subsidy. We are not sure we will succeed. We know we are asking fundamental changes in practices and traditions that have grown up, particularly in Europe, but the size of the challenge should not turn us away. The size of the damage has to drive us to try to achieve some change. As we did in Tokyo, and as we did in Cairns and Uruguay, and as we will do in Paris, we intend at the economic summit meeting in Venice to try to get some progress.

The Prime Minister raised the matter at the meeting earlier this month when the President of the United States was here. He has raised it in a number of other direct conversations with other summit countries. We hope to make progress.

Finally, and not to abuse the time of the House, we have in the context of the OECD the grouping together of modern economies. We have suggested that there might be agreement on some basic principles regarding international trade in agriculture. We have been in touch with all of the Governments of the OECD and we have set forth some principles that we hope might be the basis of the approach we all can follow together as an alternative to the subsidy cycle that has been so devastating to our economy.

Those principles are, first, that agricultural policies must become more price-responsive. Second, support for agriculture should avoid production incentives. In other words, support should be for farmers and not for farming. Third, countries should freeze and seek to reduce governmental assistance measures that artificially depress world prices. Four, countries should not introduce new import barriers that are not already mandated by existing legislation. Finally, and this is essential to it all, these basic principles must be implemented by us all, together. As was set out at the Tokyo Summit, this is a problem we all face. None of us can solve it alone. But if we cannot solve it alone then a country such as Canada can at least exercise leadership in trying to get it solved. That is what we are doing and that is what we intend to do.

In the last year alone the Prime Minister has held three formal meetings with leaders of Canadian agriculture organizations. I do not believe that that has ever happened before in Canada. It will happen again prior to his departure for the economic summit in Venice because we have found before that in terms of the effectiveness of our case internationally and in terms of consensus at home it is very valuable to draw in the leaders of agriculture in this country.

So what the Government is doing in agriculture is continuing action at home that is unprecedented in recent decades. We are carrying out extensive and continuing consultation with farm leaders. We are maintaining a very vigorous pressure internationally to change the cycle of subsidy that is at the basis of our international agricultural problems.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in this very important debate on a crucial matter to the economy of Canada and, in particular, to the western economy. I want to begin by congratulating all of those Members who have participated in the debate because the subject matter is of great national importance and it ought to be debated in that way.

• (2110)

It was my hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) would have availed himself of the opportunity—and perhaps he would have had the time available to him—to talk about the recently announced sale by the United States of 4 million tonnes of wheat to the Soviet Union and what that sale will do to the price of grain in Canada and what it will do to the economy Canada.

It was my hope, too, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would have responded, in some measure, to the letter forwarded to him today by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

As that letter is now a public document, I should like to take a moment to read it into the record. It is as follows:

> It has come to my attention that the U.S. Department of Agriculture has today prepared a new set of agricultural trade subsidy initiatives that include measures of great damage to Canada.
> Specifically they are proposing to include under the Export Enhancement Program an offer of 1.25 million metric tons of barley to Saudi Arabia, a traditional Canadian buyer.
> If this measure is approved by the Trade Review Committee of the U.S. administration in the next week, it will mean a loss of 75 to 85 million dollars to Canadian farmers.
> This initiative certainly flies in the face of assurances apparently gained from President Reagan that he would be considerate of Canadian agricultural concerns, and I would ask you to immediately demand that this damaging measure by the U.S. administration be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker, those are just two initiatives with regard to the foreign policy aspect of this subject that I would have hoped the Secretary of State for External Affairs would have touched upon during the course of his remarks, and perhaps at another time, or indeed later in this debate, he may want to expound upon them.

Government Members have stood in this place and talked about some programs and some initiatives that have taken place over the last two and a half years. I have listened to their speeches quite attentively, both from my place here in the Chamber and through the Oasis system that is available in our offices.

Mr. Speaker, it is their job to talk about government programs and initiatives. The issue before the House in this debate is the present crisis and what the Government is prepared to do about it. I do not believe that on any side of this House any Member is questioning what the problem is.

No Member—and I may have missed the speeches of a few of the speakers in this debate; a great many have spoken—no Member has disagreed with the fact that there is a crisis situation in the western economy as it relates to grain producers. The question is: Does this Government have the political will to address the situation? But to cite the benefits, chapter and verse, is not going to help the farmers who are in a crisis situation today. And no doubt there are some benefits arising from such programs as the Rural Transition Program. The establishment of the farm debt review boards is another initiative that they hauled out.

The problem is that the Government, up until now, has been refusing to address the very serious crisis situation existing in the western Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, I know something about crises. I know something about setbacks. I know about property foreclosures. I have seen entire families and subdivisions of families move out of communities. We in Atlantic Canada know something about that.

What is required, Mr. Speaker, is not only goodwill, good intentions, or even a meaningful and dynamic record, but the political will on the part of the Government of the day to exercise its authority, both legally and monetarily, in order to address the situation.

Mr. Speaker, Canada has some 225,000 farms, of which 175,000 are commercial farms. The Farm Credit Corporation estimates that 8 per cent, or 13,000 farms are insolvent. Of those 13,000, 6,000 have not made any payments on their loans for at least two years. Some 52,000, or approximately 30 per cent of Canadian commercial farms are facing moderate to serious financial stress. Real interest rates paid to farmers are as high or higher than they were at their peak in the early 1980s. An example: The current real farm interest rate is about 6.57 per cent, while it was 8 per cent to 8.5 per cent in 1981.

Members opposite have said that only 600 farmers a year are going to be affected, or 50 a month. Mr. Speaker, do you realize the consequential effects of that? And I am thinking not only of the symbolism of the Government of Canada foreclosing on 600 farmers a year, but the consequential effects on the Canadian banking community, on unsecured creditors, on secured creditors. The trustees in bankruptcy will be the real winners when it comes to the moratorium on foreclosures.

Surely the people of western Canada and those individuals who have their loans with the Farm Credit Corporation are entitled to some sense of fairness. Mr. Speaker, I was part of a Government that was stupid enough to implement an audit program for fishermen of Atlantic Canada. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the lifting of this moratorium is just as stupid if not more stupid than what we did some years back.

It is really not appropriate to be partisan in this debate, but I can tell you that we paid dearly for that mistake, and I suggest that this Government will pay just as dearly as a result of this action against the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. Speaker, much has been said and much has been omitted in the debate which has taken place in the Chamber over the last two days. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was quite correct when he stood in his place and said that two amendments were made to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. But what Party in this House of Commons fought tooth and nail every step of the way for the implementation of the Western Grain Stabilization Program?

An Hon. Member: The Liberals.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, it was Jean-Luc Pepin, a former Minister of Transport, who initiated that legislation, legislation which was proclaimed into law under a Liberal Government.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs gripped his heart with his hand and said: "We can't be partisan". Yet he refuses to acknowledge fact, unequivocal fact, Mr. Speaker, in terms of who it was who proclaimed that law, the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

It is also intellectually dishonest and unfair, and, yes, not appropriate for parliamentarians even to debate this issue. On the one hand, we have government Members saying: "When you were in Government, you were the ones who caused the high interest rates. It wasn't the international situation. It wasn't the economies of the superpowers or of the European Community that had to do with interest rates; it was you, the terrible Government". Now that the tables have turned and the western grain producer is in this situation they look to the heavens, they look behind them, they look to the media, to the Opposition and, when they are really desperate, they look to the NDP. You cannot have it both ways. Parliament is a place to which men and women of good faith come to tell it like it is. We are here for one reason. Some may interpret it differently, but there is one unequivocal reason why all Members of Parliament are in this Chamber and serving in public life, and that is to serve.

The question is not one of what the problem is and not one of what the solutions are, but simply of where the political will is to exercise the authority which the national Government has on this issue. I can say proudly that yes, I have travelled to western Canada and no, I am not a farmer, but I have listened to their plea, I have heard their argument, and I sympathize with them greatly. They do not want any handouts from Government. They do not want to be on their knees. They only want an equal chance which the Constitution has guaranteed them. Instead we have heard rebuttals, deferment, and that they are considering it.

The latest gimic is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He is going to take two planes, four cameras, a couple of bearers in Gucci shoes and go to western Canada to make a whistle-stop tour. Does anyone want to make any wagers that the Prime Minister will be announcing a few cheques along the way? He is a political opportunist. Members may laugh, but if I am wrong they can come back into the Chamber and raise it. This is shameful.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has said clearly time and time again in the House, outside the House, in western Canada, in Atlantic Canada, in Toronto and in Montreal that the Government must announce deficiency programs so that farmers can make their plans for this and subsequent crop years. He has said that the Government must reinstate the FCC moratorium on farm foreclosures and that it must put a proper debt restructuring program in place. Those are three things that we do not have to ask the United States or the European Economic Community for. Canada can do those things today.

In concluding my brief remarks on this most important subject matter I say sincerely that I have listened to what Members from western Canada have been saying and I will continue to listen. I believe the way in which to solve this particular crisis is to show some real leadership domestically. You cannot go on the international stage and say one thing then do the opposite domestically. Canada must be consistent. That is why I raised in my initial remarks the conduct of our neighbours to the south who have continuously, since entering preliminary negotiations with regard to a free trade agreement, been giving it to us in the neck.

Let it be clear, Mr. Speaker, that I am not anti-American. I may be anti-United States administration, but I find the people of the United States to be a great people. I do not like it when a sovereign nation such as Canada is continuously and repeatedly confronted by the administration to the south which, for its own reasons, selfish as they may or may not be, singles out Canada and the sectors of our economy which are suffering as a result of the lack of leadership of the present administration. Much can be said and much more ought to be said. The Government will pay the price.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the Hon. Member who just finished speaking will not mind me pointing out a grave error which he made in his submission which again demonstrates the fact that the folks across the way are uninformed. He said that Jean-Luc Pepin brought in the Western Grain Stabilization Program.

Mr. Gauthier: That's not a point of order, that's debate.

Mr. Mazankowski: If he checked the facts he would find that he was in error.

Mr. Gauthier: It was Otto Lang, so he made a mistake.

Mr. Mazankowski: At least you know. Why didn't you correct him then?

Mr. Gauthier: Once in a while you make mistakes, too. I don't rub it in to you. I should, but I don't.

Mr. Foster: It was one great Liberal Minister or another.

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to participate in this debate. I had visions of not being able to participate in it because I was up in northern Saskatchewan when I heard about it and was afraid it would be all over by the time I got back. When I arrived yesterday afternoon the debate appeared to be over and I was afraid I had missed out. I am pleased to be here and participating now.

I was in Lac La Ronge in northern Saskatchewan participating in an agricultural meeting of the native population of northern Saskatchewan. It was a meeting of SIAP, the Saskatchewan Indian Agricultural Program, which is intending to expand the agricultural base.

My background is as a seedgrower and farmer from the northeast corner of Saskatchewan about 20 miles from where the trees start, north of which there is no farming. We grow a tremendous variety of crops and while we are certainly affected by the fight between the European community and the United States we have a bigger variety of markets. The crops of wheat, oats, barley, canola and flax seed have been affected very seriously as have other crops which may not be considered very important in the larger scheme of things in the prairie provinces.

However, dehydrated alfalfa, dried pea, lentils, fava beans, canary seed, some mustard and such, have been very seriously affected and did not qualify for subsidy under the special Canadian grains program, much to the disappointment of some of those growers. They grew many of these crops to relieve the over-production problem and were hoping to find a market for these lesser grown crops which cannot be grown in areas farther south.

Last year we had some good crops of grass seed and alfalfa. The prices were very good. There was a bright spot in that particular area. However, the biggest bulk of our acreage is in common crops. Certainly our farmers are hurting simply because input costs are very much higher than they are farther south.

Fortunately the Conservative Government has been able to help my constituents ever since it came into power in September, 1984. The very first time it helped was in an area in my constituency which suffered from a lot of rain and severe flooding. The Conservative Government subsidized these people to the tune of $7.5 million. Perhaps that does not sound like a great deal of money, but that particular area had been without crops for a good many years and the provincial Government also put up $7.5 million. This helped to save some of those farmers. They certainly appreciated it. I am sure some of them would not be there today had it not been for that particular help. Of course, they have participated in all the rest of the programs which most of the previous speakers have covered. I am sure you are quite familiar with them, Mr. Speaker.

There has been much rhetoric on the part of the Opposition about the lifting of the moratorium on FCC mortgages. I checked what some opposition Members have been saying about this particular matter. So far in my study of the "blues" I have found nothing that made much sense in terms of a solution on the part of the Opposition. As a matter of fact, one of the reasons I am here is because I became kind of angry sitting on a tractor one day and said: "I guess I'll have to do something about it". I got involved in politics simply because of some of the policies which were in place.

I know that members of the NDP have supported the Liberals. I heard much rhetoric from them about money going out of the country for various reasons. In 1982 when they changed the Farm Credit Act from being an assistance to farmers to a banking institution, the situation was made much tougher on farmers, simply because they were borrowing money on long-term agreements and at long-term interest rates which are very difficult for farmers to get out of. The New Democrats supported the Liberals on that particular one.

Since 1982 I believe $1.3 billion has been borrowed in the way of long-term money by FCC and over 50 per cent of the interest on that money goes to countries other than Canada. I wonder how the NDP can say that it supports farmers when all this money is going out of the country and not recirculating back to farmers. It is very interesting that they come to these conclusions when it suits them to be critical, forgetting some of the mistakes they have made themselves.

We must have a little optimism in the farm area. I know there are some sections in agriculture, particularly in western Canada, and in livestock in eastern Canada, which have improved the outlook of farmers. In western Canada the livestock industry is doing well. The cattle and hog industries are doing well. Grass seeds and other products such as lentils are doing well. It is not a complete bust in the over-all farm economy picture. Those who are prudent are able to survive. They are not able to make money but they are able to survive.

The hope of the recovery of farm prices is always there. There is only a slight difference between surplus and shortage. Not long ago in the House we worried about hog producers. There was much talk about supply-management and various short-term solutions. However, the United States came out with a 7 per cent decrease in the farrowing of hogs some three months to six months ago, and the prices have certainly increased considerably. The same could happen to the price of some grains, perhaps all of them. Who knows?

It is a pretty good thing that some of the previous speakers in the Opposition are not the farmers out there. It is probably a good thing that farmers are all busy in the fields these days and not watching this particular performance.

Mr. Mazankowski: What happened to all your socialist friends?

Mr. Scowen: I don't know. I should like to refer to some misquotes which I saw. For instance, I noticed that the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), from that hardrock country, told us how he was looking at a machine where they were baling grain to inject anhydrous ammonia into it. I think it was probably hay. I will not go into the mining business if he does not go into the farming business, and I think we will probably survive a lot better.

Another one I noticed was, somebody said that the price paid to grain farmers was down by 18 per cent. The truth of the matter is that the initial price is down by 18 per cent, and we do not know what the price will be.

I also saw in The Globe and Mail, and I guess that is where opposition Members get some of their information, a picture of a farmer and a big bird in the background, the Farm Credit Corporation. Over to one side was another little bird and a bag of seed. On that bag of seed, it said, "18 per cent decrease in subsidies". The truth of the matter is that there will not be an 18 per cent decrease in subsidies. In fact, if these prices do not improve, it will probably amount to about a 40 per cent increase in subsidies. It is an 18 per cent decrease in the initial price.

As the convict said to the judge, "No, noose is good news". I do have some good news. I have the pleasure of announcing today, for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), that the cheques for the initial payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act were mailed today. I have some figures here that will help put a little smile on some western farmers' faces. To Saskatchewan, my home province, 57,713 cheques were mailed out, to the tune of $382 million. That will be a big help to the economy of that particular province. To Alberta, 34,950 cheques were sent, to the tune of $184 million. To Manitoba, 20,589 cheques were sent, to the tune of $134,100,000. To British Columbia, 1,063 cheques were sent out, to the tune of $4.7 million making a total of 114,314 cheques being sent to the total tune of $705 million.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scowen: That is some good news for the Canadian farmer. That, along with the final payment, will help farmers in western Canada stay in business.

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to take part in this emergency debate, although I must confess that, contrary to the Minister, I am not a first-class expert in the area of agriculture. But there is no need to be an expert in that area to realize that the actions taken by this Government are typical of a Government which unfortunately does not care about the future of hundreds and even thousands of farm producers who are affected by them. And even if my friend who has just concluded his remarks could mention a few measures taken by the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, I do not believe they are adequate and will really solve the problem which has made this emergency debate necessary.

This emergency debate was initiated following the insensitive announcement by the Government Monday morning that it was ending the moratorium in effect since February 17, 1985, on the loans granted by the Farm Credit Corporation. It is a tragedy, Mr. Speaker, and it is not without reason that it was described as a historic event. With this decision, the Government is destroying the way of life of the family farm. It is attacking farmers at a time when they are already in a position of weakness, losing their self-reliance and have realizing that the Government is not going to help them at all. That is why they are calling on their elected representatives to emphasize their very severe economic plight and that of their families. They are asking for programs to be implemented right away. They are asking the Prime Minister to set up without delay federal-provincial programs which might allow them to remain on their farms, and more specifically to provide them right away with significant deficiency payments for the 1987-88 crop year.

In spite of all that, Mr. Speaker, the Government dares tell farmers and Members of this House that its last gesture will only have a slight effect on farmers generally. It dares say so when it knows quite well that in fact, its action could be disastrous for all farmers affected. However, there will not be any disaster, because as a result of pressures made by farmers in the three Prairie provinces, the Government will have no option but to make specific commitments on the matter. It will have no option, if it wants to continue to boast about everything it does for farmers.

In the first place, with respect to declining prices for various grains, farmers want to know what will happen during the 1987-88 crop year and whether the Government will maintain the level of agricultural assistance, and they want to be informed right now. The Government should tell them under what circumstances a deficiency payment will be made under a special grain program and what the amount of such payment will be.

As I said, the Government should clearly and unequivocally announce what assistance it will grant farmers during the current crop year. As a result of the measure hastily taken by the Minister when he removed the moratorium on foreclosures made by the Farm Credit Corporation, that decision has raised to an intolerable level the stress experienced by thousands of farmers.

The initiative taken by the Minister will allow foreclosures against farmers who are in arrears in the reimbursement of loans granted by the Farm Credit Corporation, loans which represent 35 per cent to 40 per cent of the long-term debt in the agricultural sector. There are arrears of over two years on some 6,000 of the 75,000 loans granted by the Farm Credit Corporation and in such a case the organization almost always decide to proceed with the foreclosure.

It is not 25 per cent, as suggested by the Minister responsible, but approximately 8 per cent of farmers who obtained a loan from the Farm Credit Corporation who are threatened with foreclosure. The Minister said that we should not worry, that there will be only some 50 foreclosures a month, that the staff of the Farm Credit Corporationm cannot do more and consequently, the number of farmers who have some reasons to fear foreclosure is restricted to 600. What a joke, Mr. Speaker. How can we know, as the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) asked, what are, among the 6,000 loans which could lead to a foreclosure, the 600 cases which will actually be foreclosed? That is what the bank manager will ask the farmer who is seeking a loan to continue his operation. If the manager tells him that the Farm Credit Corporation is carrying out foreclosures, the farmer will be able to reply that he should not be concerned about that, the Minister having indicated that there will not be more than 600 foreclosures a year out of 6,000. He may add that if he is the last one, his property will not be foreclosed before 10 years from now.

This moratorium has been in effect for the past 19 months. The Government should have used this time to devise a debt restructuring mechanism to help farmers. If it had acted then, there would have been no need for a moratorium, but the Government has failed to act and the moratorium was useful in gaining time.

In the meantime, however, no debt restructuring mechanism was set into place. In my opinion, we should continue the moratorium and take this opportunity to devise better programs.

Mr. Speaker, so much for the actions taken by the Government which are causing farm families to go bankrupt, filling them with anxiety and spreading distress as well as financial, economic and social destruction in the agricultural community.

Only a Minister of Agriculture perfectly insensitive to the reality of the situation could make such decisions. The Government did not consult the interested parties to try and find a solution. It has even failed to meet with the farm producers, as well as the representatives of both the federal and provincial governments, the farm organizations and the banking institutions.

When we asked in the House whether it would be useful to meet with the banking institutions which are holding 69 per cent of the loans to discuss this issue, the Minister in turn asked: Why should we do so? Why should we discuss the situation with the banks? We know why the Government should talk to banks. It is because all bankers today are telling themselves, when reading the statement made last Monday by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise): If the Government can foreclose, why can't we? They will start looking at their overdue loans.

When farmers start canvassing, looking for loans in order to produce, looking for credit for the coming crop year, how do you suppose those banks will react, Mr. Speaker, after the Government of Canada made that shameful and despicable announcement that it is lifting the moratorium and will let the FCC's mechanism shatter farm communities? This is an open invitation to banks and other financial institutions to follow suit. What is now preventing them from doing so? How could they feel obligated when the federal Government, which normally has a duty to look after farmers, when a public institution or at least what used to be one behaves in such a way?

We are faced with a crisis that requires immediate action to save family farms in western and eastern Canada. It is not good enough for Conservatives to refer to what they have done—they must solve the present crisis. They cannot rest on their laurels. This is not good enough, it will not help people through the current crisis.

Our Party urges the Government to do something. It must recognize that farmers are now in a very tight situation. It must recognize the emergency situation. Now is the time to act, not six months down the road. Farmers must be given a chance, they must be allowed to adequately plan their crops. Our Party urges an extension of the moratorium, to avoid unnecessary stress to farmers. Our Party also urges the announcement now of a price support program for this year's crop, in order that western and other Canadian farmers know where they stand. It is my hope that the Government will act before midnight, so that the odd hundred farm producers in Quebec who are facing foreclosure will not be penalized and hit by those foreclosures.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to take part in this emergency debate on the crisis our Canadian farmers are going through. Since I represent a city riding, one might wonder what kind of an impact my opinion can have, but as a Canadian woman I am concerned about the well-being of all our farmers.

The crisis our farmers are in right now will affect all of us at a certain point in time. We are all consumers and we all need a strong and healthy agricultural sector. I am glad that the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) mentioned figures in his remarks. Otherwise, the Government might have eluded the problem once again. The Hon. Member for Algoma suggested Tuesday night that the Government had to take a clear position and make a commitment to assist our farmers before it is too late.

On Canada AM this morning, the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board clearly demonstrated that the Government, by dropping the moratorium, really does not want to help farmers. Yesterday afternoon, the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) blamed the Opposition for its refusal to congratulate the Government on its initiatives on behalf of this sector of our economy. There really is not much reason to congratulate the Government. Canadian voters will keep in mind the horrible nightmare our farmers are going through because of this Government.

It is hard to imagine that a technologically advanced country like Canada can show such indifference to our farmers. Our farmers have always been proud to contribute to our economy, but now we penalize them by forcing them to abandon their way of life, their farm, and their means of subsistance.

That economic sector affects our daily life the most. Dairy products, vegetables and grain products are always present on our tables. It is high time we give back some dignity to our farmers.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made the electoral commitment to assist this sector of our economy.

They try to sweeten the pill in each Speech from the Throne through tax initiatives that are beneficial to farmers. Yet today, they blatantly turn around in order to better stab them in the back. Our farmers are discouraged.

Let us face the problem. Many farmers throughout the country and especially those in the west have financial problems for various reasons. According to the figures reported by Ralph Ashmead, Research and Development manager of the Canada Farm Credit Corporation, 68.8 per cent of our farmers have a stable financial situation; 23.2 per cent have cash flow problems whereas 8 per cent are insolvent. In Saskatchewan, 11.4 per cent of farmers are insolvent and in Alberta 9.9 per cent of them are. Those are, I believe, the two most deeply affected provinces. According to an article published in The Ottawa Citizen dated April 28, 1987, and I quote:

[English]

The average FCC loan is about $120,000. An average of 22 per cent of loans to western producers are in arrears, compared to 17 per cent in Ontario and 9.6 per cent in Quebec. In the Atlantic provinces, the percentage of loans in arrears ranges from 17 per cent in Nova Scotia to 33 per cent in Newfoundland.

[Translation]

Mr. Jules Modderman, of the FCC, said:

[English]

Only 2 to 3 per cent are in danger of losing their farms.

[Translation]

Only 2 per cent to 3 per cent is not serious for our friends in the Government. For the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker, it is far too much. It is easy for us, Members of Parliament, sitting comfortably in Ottawa with our generous salary, to say as that public servant did that only 2 per cent to 3 per cent of our farmers may lose their farms. It is easy to speak heartlessly about a bankruptcy when we are not personally affected. For our farmers, things are different. It is often a family farm handed down from generation to generation. Our farmers have developed that land with their hands like a sculptor has a work of art.

The Liberal Party is asking today that the moratorium that has existed for over a year and a half be maintained. This is the basis of all our social programs. In the past, we thought it right to assist the unemployed until they could find work. Today, when the price of grain is at the same level as in the thirties, the Government decides to end the moratorium. Why did the Government decide to do it now? Why did they say no to farmers? They did not say no to the two western banks that went bankrupt last year. Mr. Speaker, they have double standards.

When ordinary farmers are concerned, the Government has nothing to offer. This is the difference between the Conservatives and the Liberals. Only the polls and the rich are important to the Conservative Government, it does not care about ordinary people. Canadian farmers are facing the lowest wheat prices since 1933 and this is the time the Government chooses to end the moratorium.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced his decision one week only after wheat prices went down by 18 per cent. Wayne Easter, Chairman of the National Farmers Union had this to say to The Globe and Mail last Tuesday:

[English]

"I just can't understand why he (the Minister) would announce it now".

[Translation]

And he added:

[English]

"To lose your farm is the same as capital punishment. When they lose their land, farmers feel that the life has gone out of them."

[Translation]

I heard a Conservative Member say this morning that the Liberals were at the root of the problem. They keep repeating that same story since 1984. However, in this case as in most other cases, the responsibility rests with the Government which decided to end the moratorium one week after the fall in the price of wheat. This decision has all the trappings of a conspiracy, given that it comes from a Government with a majority large enough to do as it sees fit.

Since 1984, the Conservatives have afforded again an unwarranted level of protection to drug firms which are already billionaires. They managed to shore up two banks which had gone under while at the same time attempting to deindex Old Age Security pensions. And today, they are putting a large number of farmers out of business. All of this teaches us that the Government cares a lot about the haves but considerably less about the have-nots.

Mr. Speaker, it is a well known fact that the Liberal Party has always attempted to narrow the gap between the rich and the not-so-rich in order that all Canadian men and women might benefit from the collective wealth of Canada. We in the Liberal Party are of the opinion that it is only natural that those who are well off should help those who are less well off. Our unemployment insurance program is a case in point. It has often been said that the Liberal Party has an acute sense of political timing. The same cannot be said of the Conservatives. We would never have dared to do what the Minister of Agriculture has done. When things are looking bad is not the time to make them worse. When the price of grain is so low is not the time to lift the moratorium. The Government has a moral obligation to postpone the termination of this moratorium. The Government should show leadership and come up with a debt restructuring program to help our farmers.

History is bound to repeat itself, it would seem. Indeed, in 1930, a Conservative Government was brought to power with a comfortable majority by a disgruntled electorate. Five years later, that same Government fell. The Conservative Government ignored repeated requests by the unemployed for an employment policy, preferring to cause that famous Winnipeg riot. That was a Tory Government listening to the people in the 30's. This modern version of a Tory Government listening to the needs of the people decided to end the moratorium on farm foreclosures at a time when grain prices are at their lowest.

The signal the Government is sending, Mr. Speaker, is this: If your industry has a problem, do not expect the Conservatives to help you.

That is why I am now turning to the maple syrup industry. Mr. Speaker, the maple products industry also is on the verge of facing major financial difficulty. What is the Government doing? It is reviewing the situation with its friends down South.

Sugar-bush owners have been trying to get the message across for a long time. When will we decide to listen to them? When are we going to take their concerns seriously? Are we going to wait till an emergency arises? The emergency already is here, Mr. Speaker.

The Government is not interested in farm problems. This is what I tell maple producers: Do not wait, act now. Show your concerns. Make a lot of noise, because this Government is hard of hearing.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to leave Hon. Members and Canadians with a thought that was expressed by Mr. Gérard Fillion, that famous journalist who came from the Lower St. Lawrence, and I quote: "What is urgently needed is to ensure that farmers, who are both highly skilled workers and entrepreneurs, enjoy a standard of living similar to that of city dwellers with equivalent skills."

That Mr. Fillion wrote on May 12, 1943. And like the Union des producteurs agricoles, I say: Forty-four years after that statement was made, the challenge is still relevant.

[English]

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to participate in this debate. Having been involved in the dairy business all of my life, I can fairly well say that I have some knowledge of agricultural issues.

I have followed closely the Government's program of agriculture initiatives. I spent the first 25 years of my life on the family farm, and during the latter part of that period, was directly involved in its operation. I have also held office in local and area agricultural organizations in the County of Welland and in the region of Niagara. While Ontario does make a sizeable contribution to Canada's wheat and grain production, the Niagara Peninsula, where my riding of Welland is located, is best known in the agricultural industry because of its productive fruit and vegetable growing areas.

For instance, 90 per cent of all the grapes grown in Canada is produced in the Niagara Peninsula. The farming areas of Thorold and West St. Catharines in my riding of Welland have some of the finest and most productive vineyards in the country.

The Welland riding is also very dependent upon the agriculture industry and the western grain producers in particular, because of the presence of the Welland Canal which runs through the entire centre of the riding and, of course, is an integral part of Canada's grain shipping route to the East.

The canal is central to the western grain industry and the western grain industry is central to the economy of the Niagara Peninsula. The growth of the Cities of Welland, Thorold, and St. Catharines are due to the Welland Canal which was built primarily to provide efficient transportation for the western grain being exported to Russia and other parts of Europe.

In 1829 when the canal was first built it was called the grain lane to Europe. It provided the means to bring grain cheaply and quickly from the interior of the country to the St. Lawrence River and on to Europe. The canal made it possible for grain carrying ships to conquer Niagara Falls, making it possible to link the Canadian West with 2,200 miles of continued inland waterways to the Atlantic Ocean.

Since 1829, the canal had been rebuilt four times. It has gone from a 20-lock system to an 80-lock system, making it progressively easier to ship western grain in ever greater amounts in even larger ships across the Niagara Peninsula and up the St. Lawrence Seaway to their destination.

The Seaway's corporate plan indicates that the Welland Canal, without improvement, would not be able to handle increased demand that will be placed on it in the future, a demand placed on it primarily because of the increased need for shipments of Canadian agricultural products.

As part of the Government's commitment to the growth and prosperity of Canadian agriculture, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) announced last November the allocation of $175 million for the rehabilitation of the Welland Canal.

Again and again, in so many areas of government policy, agriculture appears as a primary consideration. Agriculture means jobs. It means a considerable number of jobs in my riding of Welland because agriculture has a domino effect on so many other industries.

When a strike recently left grain shipments sitting for weeks in silos in Thunder Bay, every available ship, including ships that had been out of service for over a year, was called into service to meet the requirements of the Canadian Wheat Board. One hundred and fifty to 200 ships were needed to move the grain and even with such a volume no bottlenecks appeared along the Seaway. The wheat was delivered on time. The co-operation of the shipping industry and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority was crucial to meeting the needs of the western grain farmers.

The $175 million improvement to the locks on the Welland Canal is proceeding at the present time. Between the closing of the shipping season last November and the opening of the season this spring, major reconstruction has taken place on Lock 7 in the City of Thorold, where a $7.5 million contract has been let. These locks are more than 50 years old. Over the next five to seven years, all the eight locks will be rebuilt and refurbished. The producers of this country, therefore, will be able to look with confidence to the canal and the Seaway as a continuing dependable and capable shipping route.

I am proud of this Government's record in agriculture issues. I am proud of the direction we are going in ensuring that agriculture is front and centre in the GATT negotiations and in our trade talks with the United States.

• (2210)

Canadian farmers can be sure that these trade talks with the United States will bring a good deal for Canadian agriculture or no deal will be made. With the importance that has been placed on agriculture by this Government, I am confident that the current economic slump in world grain prices will be weathered and our agricultural industry will emerge stronger with the persistent efforts of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise).

When our Government took office, many thousands of Canadian farmers were suffering from the devastation of high interest rates that characterized the last years of the former administration.

In an effort to assist many of these farmers, the present Minister of Agriculture introduced a moratorium so that no Farm Credit Corporation clients would be forced to leave farms while programs to assist them were being developed, and programs were developed. For instance, an $80 million interest rates conversion program administered by the Farm Credit Corporation assisted over 5,000 farmers. Rates have been locked in at 16 per cent and this program reduced these rates by some 4 per cent. The federal Government, therefore, subsidized the corporation loss resulting from the conversion program.

Our Government has given agriculture a priority that is unprecedented. Our record is second to none. Agriculture means jobs. About 1.6 million jobs. We promised in the recent Throne Speech to spare no effort in seeking to protect the interest of Canada's farming community in the face of unfair pricing and subsidy practice conducted beyond our borders. We are providing the largest farm assistance package ever. The billion dollar special Canada Grains Program is putting a billion dollars of new money into the pockets of our farmers.

This Government, led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) successfully pushed for agriculture to be included in negotiations under GATT. For the first time, agriculture will be on the table. Bilaterally, we are continuing to push for a better mechanism for settling agricultural trade disputes with the United States. We are seeking secure, reliable access for our farm products.

A motion passed in the House of Commons on March 16, 1987, supports the negotiation of a trading arrangement with the United States while protecting our agricultural marketing systems. Since we took office in 1984 we have introduced over 400 agricultural initiatives at a cost of nearly $6 billion. That is over one new initiative every other working day. I will enumerate some of those initiatives.

First, we provided $200 million in drought assistance for the western provinces. Second, we abolished capital gains tax on the sale of farm land up to $500,000. Third, we effectively eliminated all excise and sales taxes on farm fuels, saving farmers $185 million per year. Fourth, we established farm debt review boards now operating in every province and assisting financially troubled farmers to come to agreements with their creditors. Nationally, arrangements to save the farm have been made in over 50 per cent of the cases. Fifth, a new long-term dairy policy has been established. Sixth, we have new Farm Credit Corporation lending programs with the lowest agricultural credit interest rates since 1979. Seventh, lower interest rates are helping our farmers. Every 1 per cent decline represents a saving to Canadian farmers of $130 million a year.

Our Government has delivered, Mr. Speaker. The promises made during the 1984 election have materialized and more. They have been outlined over and over again by my colleagues on the government benches. They include, as I said before, 400 separate initiatives which will benefit Canadian agriculture by over $5.76 billion. Despite this, more help is needed. The Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) are continuing to consult with farm leaders to devise new ways to assist farmers in need, not only to assist them at home, but the Government is providing assistance in opening up new markets for Canadian wheat and other agricultural commodities.

The announcement today by the President of the Wheat Board of a $64 million assistance program to protect farmers from a statutory increase in the 1987-88 western grain freights and the allotment last fall of $175 million by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to rehabilitate the Welland Canal will assure grain producers of the continuing dependability of this historic shipping route are further and continuing indicators of the Government's commitment to Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak in a debate on the crisis situation facing our grain producers. In my riding, agriculture plays a very important role, but the industry certainly has its problems. If we are to understand the situation of our grain producers and the context in which they operate, I think we have to try and put ourselves in their shoes. Farmers have to get up in the morning, prepare their equipment, work all day, seed their fields and spend the whole summer working on their land, and at the end of the year, after the harvest, they are not even sure of recovering their production costs. And why not? There are a number of reasons.

First of all, we heard not long ago that this year, the price of grain will drop 18 per cent, and this comes right after last year's drop of 20 per cent. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, the feelings of a farmer who has to cope with this kind of situation. Or perhaps, try to imagine, in the very same situation, the professional or even Member of Parliament. We have to ask ourselves how many of us, how many workers would be willing to function in that kind of situation? How many workers would be able to work for a whole season and finally earn the kind of pay that has no relation to all the work and effort expended throughout the season? Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the kind of situation facing our farmers. They can look forward to a season of seeding, working the land, harvesting and then, no money in the till because they will not be getting any return on the work they have done.

Mr. Speaker, all this work will be done in a climate of uncertainty. Why the uncertainty? Whose fault is it? Certainly not the fault of the Canadian farmer.

The farmer in this situation is an innocent victim of circumstances, because there is a crisis . . . In fact, during the few days we have been discussing this problem, everyone has agreed that farmers are in a crisis situation. It is a crisis created by foreign governments' intervention in grain production. There is a subsidy war going on between the Common Market countries and the United States. Both parties subsidize grain production without any consideration for the world situation and without any consideration for the harm they are doing to Canadian producers. These governments want to grab the whole market, and they are pouring more and more money into their subsidy programs. And what is our Government doing? Well, nothing for the time being. The Government does not even want to ensure some kind of return. It does not want to provide payments to farmers who are about to seed their fields, payments that would at least cover production costs.

In Canada we already had a situation where some farm operations were experiencing serious difficulties. A number of them were on the brink of bankruptcy. This is why, in a move designed to relieve the stress felt by farmers, a moratorium was imposed on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures of farming operations. But now that we have just learned that wheat prices are going down, the Minister is telling agricultural producers that the moratorium will be lifted. From now on the Farm Credit Corporation of Canada will foreclose farming operations, those which are in financial trouble, of course. In an attempt to allay our fears, they say the FCC will be allowed to foreclose at the rate of only 50 a month, or almost 600 a year. Really, Mr. Speaker, it is a shame to let these farmers go bankrupt. A whole way of life is threatened.

Efforts have been made over the past two days to find a villain, to find somebody who might be blamed, to find somebody at whom we might point a finger. And I wonder, Mr. Speaker, what is the use of all this. Would the agricultural producer feel any better if he knew they have found someone to blame, that he can point his finger at somebody? This would not change anything at all in the present situation. These past few days, Mr. Speaker, they have tried to boast about what certain people did, including the Prime Minister, they bragged about the merits of certain programs, of course. If everything that has been said is any indication, it would seem that we should not even be going through this crisis. But the crisis is there, it is a fact. Every month we will see 50-odd farmers go under. We will see a way of life disappear gradually. And in all this tragedy, Mr. Speaker, there is the human tragedy.

Much has been said about statistics, about subsidies, about interest rates. Much has been said about a lot of things. There were only a few references to the human tragedy, men and women and children who will have to witness in sadness the seizure and sale of everything they own, their home, their house. Mr. Speaker, what are we going to do with all these farmers who will find themselves on a labour market where the unemployment rate is already rather high, too high for them to expect to find work and be able to earn a decent living? And all those families will experience conflicts because, in such situations, people's nerves are all on edge. People no longer have time to listen to one another. They no longer understand one another. They function in a serious state that leads to conflict. Of course, Mr. Speaker, in such an atmosphere, the Canadian family, the farm family will suffer and pay dearly for the crisis it is going through.

What about the communities that will be affected, Mr. Speaker? I can tell you about that because right now, in New Brunswick we are experiencing massive layoffs that could be called disastrous. You know all about it. We have lost, in the southeast area of New Brunswick, particularly in Moncton, some 800 jobs. Young families are without jobs. They must find another place to live, sell their possessions, because the area cannot absorb all those jobless.

It is as if a storm or a cloud brought over the community a sense of failure, of despair that is very difficult to shake off.

The same thing will happen in farming, Mr. Speaker. What will become of those who will stay, who will try to scratch a living? Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, the lifting of the moratorium will weaken the confidence of those people in the Government.

The timing is bad. It is very bad. The moratorium should have been maintained a little longer to allow the farming sector to get back on its feet. For some of them, even many of them, when things are back to normal it will be too late, they will no longer be there. They will be gone.

In my riding, Mr. Speaker, I have tobacco farmers and you know the situation they are in. The Government is asking them to diversify. They are being asked to go into new crops. I know they are watching what is going on here. Imagine their feeling, now that they realize that the Government is abandoning them at a time when they are most in need of help and assistance. They feel alone and they will not have the heart to go into new crops or even diversify their operations.

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, it is not easy. There is no magical solution, because if there were it would already be in place. The fact remains that we have a crisis situation. What we need, Mr. Speaker, is to restore farmers' confidence. We need to help them. They have to be supported for a little longer.

[English]

In closing, I plead with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to reinstate the moratorium on farm foreclosures for a while to try to regain the confidence of the Canadian farmer. I also plead with the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture to announce a deficiency program for this year's crop at least equal to what was given last year.

[Translation]

Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, for farmers it will be a summer of uncertainty and even despair. Mr. Speaker, I beg the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture to act in order to restore the confidence of our farm community in the Government, by taking some action which will reassure this industry.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to participate in this debate which is now in its thirty-second hour. I believe I am the forty-third Member to speak from this side of the House.

This has been a historic debate and it is appropriate that this day, April 30, will, I believe, also go down in history because of news we have just heard that tonight the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the 10 provincial Premiers have come to an agreement on the basis of which Quebec can enter into the Canadian Constitution. They will meet again in five weeks to ratify those arrangements. I think that is an issue we all care very deeply about in this country. I think it shows, with good will and willingness to accommodate different interests, how we can make some very significant progress. We are deeply heartened by what we have heard tonight of that progress.

I think in a sense the same thing applies to agriculture. The problems we are facing in Canada, particularly those affecting our grain farmers, will not be remedied by any one single solution, any one initiative, but only by a wide range of responses which people across this country and around the world must deal with.

Having had the honour just over two and a half years ago to be elected to this House by the residents of Capilano I must admit that I had very little background in agriculture. I have never been a farmer and my riding does not include farmers. I thought when I came to this august House that probably agriculture was one issue that I would not have to be too concerned about. There were many other issues of particular interest to my constituents on which I thought I would probably spend my time. How wrong I was. I became aware, perhaps for the first time in my life, just how fundamental agriculture is to the way in which the Canadian economy works and the way in which Canadian society works.

I think what I have found moving over the last 32 hours is the fact that Members from right across the country, on all sides of the House, from both urban and rural ridings, have taken part in this most important debate. It is an issue that we all feel very deeply about: the future of the farmers and farming communities of this country.

Perhaps those of us who are city dwellers take for granted the contribution of farmers. It is easy for us to go into a store and buy a loaf of bread, buy a cake, and not really think about the blood, sweat and tears that have gone into growing the grain used to create the product that we so quickly take off the shelf. We also perhaps grumble if it has gone up a cent or two in price. However, if we are to work as a society we know we have to understand the problems facing the farm community.

Over these last 32 hours I have heard some very moving speeches about the farm families and their situation today. Most important, I think it is very evident that this Government does not take for granted the contribution and importance of the Canadian farmer. We have heard time and time again over the last few days about the efforts this Government has made to provide assistance to the farmer and deal with the fundamental problems facing Canadian agriculture. I thought I would just try to summarize some of the points and the issues I have heard about over these last several days.

The problem facing the Canadian grain farmer is a two-part problem. One part has to do with the cost of production. We responded in a number of ways to that over the last few years. However, the major problem is obviously the price that the farmer receives for his commodity, a price which, as a result of international agricultural subsidies, has been dropping lower and lower. We all know that. Whatever kind of work we do, whether we are shipbuilders, small businessmen or anything else, if our costs are greater than the price we receive for our goods, we have a problem. So our efforts as a Government to deal with both sides of that equation have been multi-faceted.

We have also looked at the problem from the point of view of time, recognizing there are some short-term initiatives that we can take, have taken and will continue to take to address that facet of the problem. There are other facets of the problem which can only be addressed by middle to long-term approaches which will take some time to accomplish. It is well known that the agricultural industry contributes to the economy of this country, over $20 billion at the farm gate. As well, the agri-food industry in this country employs about one in every four workers and contributes about 18 per cent of our GNP.

Let us consider what approaches the Government has taken to deal with the problem facing farmers, particularly western grain farmers, with respect to short-term responses to meet immediate concerns. First, the House has heard repeatedly in the past few days that we have dealt with the issue of the removal of capital gains tax on the family farm. It introduced the special Canadian grains payment.

We have dealt with the fuel tax rebate to reduce the fuel input costs to the farmer.

The Government's over-all economic initiatives in dealing with government expenditures and sound fiscal management have meant a decrease in interest rates by over 4 per cent. We know that for each 1 per cent reduction in interest rates there is a saving to the Canadian farmers of some $140 million. This means there is $600 million less that Canadian farmers must pay to banks or financial institutions to support their operations than was the case a few years before the Government took office.

Other measures include the $64 million assistance program announced this morning by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) jointly with the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) to protect farms from the statutory rate increase in the 1987-88 western grain freight rates. Increased subsidies have been provided in this area because farmers would not be able to cope with those increases.

In 1983 the federal Government provided some $350 million in subsidies to Canadian farmers. That has increased in 1987 to $3 billion; made up of $1 billion in the special Canadian grains payment, approximately $1 billion in Western Grain Stabilization payments, and another billion dollars between the Western Grain transportation assistance crop insurance and other agricultural Stabilization programs.

The Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen) stated a few minutes ago that the cheques worth some $705 million for the Western Grain Stabilization Program are going in the mail today to farmers in Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba and British Columbia. That money will mean a great deal to the farmers as they begin their season's work.

The Government has consulted farm groups on a continuing basis. We have come forward with measures that have helped farmers considerably and certainly helped to create a much better environment than previously existed. In fact, it is expected that net revenues for western farmers will actually be up from $2.2 billion last year to $2.5 billion this year. That general improvement for western farmers is a result of the Government's assistance.

Let me deal with the middle and long-term solutions we must consider for other problems. This week, the Minister announced that there would be a change with respect to the Farm Credit Corporation, with the controlled phase-out of the moratorium, effective from May 1. Hon. Members will know that there are approximately 225,000 commercial farms in Canada, 75,000 of which do business with the FCC. About 20 per cent of the FCC clients are in arrears, including some 6,000 who have made no payments for the last two years.

The plan is that the FCC can deal with about 50 cases per month on a national basis. Therefore, about 600 to 800 farmers will be affected annually by the lifting of the moratorium, which represents about one-quarter of 1 per cent of Canada's farming community.

Let me emphasize that the lifting of the moratorium was only done after a range of other measures were put into place to assist troubled farmers. These include the $80 million interest rate conversion program, the shared risk mortgage program, the commodity based mortgage, and 10 year $700 million program of which about $100 million has already been taken up.

Farm debt review boards have been put in place to give farmers in financial difficulty access to an impartial review of their situation. Of course, there is the Canadian Rural Transition Program.

Earlier this evening the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) mentioned the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, a highly respected organization involved in the farming community which issued a press release this week supporting this decision by the Agriculture Ministers. In fact, Mr. Stan Wilson, the President, indicated:

> The decision by the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board to reduce the initial prices for prairie grain, and this week's end to debt moratorium, were tough, responsible, but realistic. We cannot pretend that world grain prices are higher than they really are and certainly no one benefits from the extension of debt moratoria while farmers sink deeper into debt.

He went on to say:

> As responsible farm leaders, we must do more than continually criticize the actions and decisions of our Ministers. We need to take more responsibility for contributing to farm policy formation in Canada.
> It took great courage for both Mr. Wise and Mr. Mayer to make these decisions. As producers, we recognize that courage, and support the measures taken.

I also support and applaud my colleagues for taking a difficult but realistic and correct decision.

Another important area with respect to the costs facing farmers is that of soil conservation. Recently, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) announced a special research facility of $6 million in a special program in Vegreville. We are familiar with the work of the Canadian Soil Conservation Council, the SWEEP program, and the $62.3 million in the PFRA. All of these initiatives and perhaps more will be needed in the future to ensure that Canadian soils remain productive and of high quality so that our farmers can be as efficient and productive as possible while reducing their costs and becoming more financially viable.

I want to conclude by briefly dealing with the issue of price. We have heard very often over these last 32 hours that the real problem with price is in the international sphere. We know that we must work to break the cycle of international agricultural subsidies. This cycle which is creating international havoc in the agricultural community must be stopped.

I am proud of the leadership that our Government, the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and our Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) are showing in leading this issue at the international scene.

Last year at the Tokyo Summit, the Prime Minister took a leadership role in bringing this issue to the fore and working in an attempt to get a response from his colleagues.

I had the opportunity to attend with the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the ASEAN Foreign Ministers' meeting in Manila. Again, we brought this issue to the fore.

Thailand, Indonesia and Australia have the same concerns. Out of that meeting the response that came was the development of the Cairns Group. Canada, through our Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, attended that first meeting last summer in Australia to work together with these 14 countries to try to come forward with effective ways to influence the international community to get rid of international agricultural subsidies. That work is going on at an increased pace.

• (2250)

We know that at the next meeting of GATT for the first time agriculture will be on the table and will be recognized as one of the most important items to be discussed at GATT.

Our trade Minister was recently in New Zealand for trade talks with colleagues from other countries. Again the issue of agriculture was at the top on the agenda, and from that meeting Canada will now be hosting a meeting of the Cairns Group at the end of May, bringing together representatives of those countries to continue our discussions and initiatives.

Just this past week our Minister for International Trade in Tokyo was lauded for her work, again at the quad round, of raising agriculture to a level of importance and getting international recognition for that. Our Prime Minister at the Venice Summit will be going back again to work with his colleagues. It will not be an easy process. It will not happen overnight, but by increasing international pressure, particularly, as we know, in the EEC and the common agricultural market which has created a lot of these problems for us, we hope and we will be working hard to continue to ask for fundamental changes in the international community because it is only in that way that we will ultimately be able to solve the problem that our Canadian grain farmers are facing.

As the Secretary of State for External Affairs mentioned in his speech, there are certain principles that must be followed in dealing with the international issues. Policies must be price-responsive and we must reduce activities which reduce world prices. First, the basic principles that can be agreed upon must be implemented by all because it will not work if only a few countries do it. This is an effort where all countries will have to work together if it is going to work for all of us.

When I think tonight of what has happened here in Canada where we have 10 provincial Premiers with widely differing points of view under the leadership of our Prime Minister who, after 15 years, have now come to an agreement about a vital national issue, the inclusion of Quebec in our Constitution, I guess I am heartened and optimistic that that same leadership of our Prime Minister and my cabinet colleagues will be lent and that we will see the kinds of changes occur in the international scene that will assist our Canadian farmers as well.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening patiently to the Members opposite during this debate telling us in the House just what great guys and gals the farmers are, telling us how they have worked hard and how they deserve such excellent treatment from their Government, also knowing what poor treatment they are getting from the Government. Not only are they getting poor treatment but it seems the Government is kicking them while they are down. The Government has brought an end to a 19 month moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures only one week after giving farmers the news that grain prices will drop by 18 per cent.

As one farmer has said, why give us the news that you are going to stop the moratorium on foreclosures now? Spring is the hopeful time of year. It is the time of year when we are planting and when we feel that things can change around. To tell farmers that they are going to have their prices reduced by 18 per cent after their prices were reduced by a tremendous amount last year, only to tell them that they are open to foreclosures again, is absolutely callous.

What we are going to have is many, many farmers losing their farms. This year alone there will be 6,000 farms eligible for foreclosure. Of these, 10 per cent will actually be foreclosed. There will be 600 farms closed this year. We have heard about the concern of this Government and how it wants to help the farmers. Yet, during this 19 month period of the moratorium on foreclosures, the Government did not arrive at a decision that would come to grips with this very serious problem. If the Government is so serious about helping the farmers, why during this period could the Government not arrive at a long-term solution? The Government went through a 19 month period sitting on the problem doing nothing about it, hoping it would go away, only to realize that the problem will not go away by itself. Instead of doing something, the Government just abandoned the farmers. That is treachery.

What is the situation in Canada? In western Canada of those with loans, 22 per cent are in arrears, in Ontario, of those with loans, 17 per cent are in arrears, in Quebec, of those with loans, 9.6 per cent are in arrears, in Nova Scotia, of those with loans, 17 per cent are in arrears, and in Newfoundland, of those with loans, 33 per cent are in arrears. The average loan of the Farm Credit Corporation is $120,000. It is absolutely mind-boggling how the Government feels that this problem is going to correct itself. This is a crushing debt. These are people who have actually followed the Government's programs, who have had faith in the Government, in what it has said, only to be led down the garden path.

Where is this friendship which the Government has with the United States and the European Economic Community? These two jurisdictions are stabbing Canadian farmers in the back, yet we are ploughing along merrily as if nothing happened. The Government is tra-la-laaing down the road as if there were no cares in the world. Does our Government feel it can jettison the farming community? What is it that the Government has planned for the farming community? It just cannot let a situation like this go on and on without winding up in a catastrophic state, but that is exactly what is happening. We need a debt restructuring program. We need some kind of solution.

We need a dialogue with the banking community. The banking community is owed almost $9 billion from farm loans and the FCC is owed almost $5 billion. This is not going to go away. What are we doing? We are driving people off the farms. Farms are being closed down. Now there will be more closings because of the Farm Credit Corporation's foreclosures. There are suicides and marriage breakups in the farming community. There is a tremendous concern among people in all walks of life for the farming community.

It is ludicrous to think that this will go away by itself. Do we want to keep people on the farms? If the Government does not, why does it not have the courage and the decency to say that this is not a concern of the Government, that it does not want to keep families on the farm?

• (2300)

If we are going to keep families on the farm, we cannot deceive them. We cannot turn on them. We cannot tell them one thing and build up their hopes only to bring their hopes crashing down at a time when they are most vulnerable. Farmers want the same prices as last year and they are entitled to that. What they are going to get for their crops is going to be less than their cost of production. How can the Government expect farmers to carry on like that?

Farmers want to know when they plant and harvest their crops that they will be able to survive. Can the Government actually tell them that? It has not told them that yet. Oh, sure, there are cheques going out from the arrangement which was made for the farmers last year. What about the situation in which farmers find themselves in this year? What is the Government going to do?

What is wrong with giving the farmers an undertaking? It is not fair to leave them dangling by their fingertips over a cliff the way the Government is doing. It is not enough to say that these problems are caused by the trade war, and the subsidies which are given by the European Economic Community and the United States to their farmers. It is of no use to say that this is too bad and we are working to fix it. This has been going on for months and what has happened? Certainly it is not going to have any long-term value.

It is of short term political value for the European Economic Community and the United States, but why can the Government not convince them of that? Where is the respect the Government likes to think it has in foreign circles? It is not being listened to. Can the Government not make the case that Canadian farmers are being decimated by the policies of the United States, the Government's very good friend which it is trusting implicitly in trade negotiations, that it is playing up to with the future of the wheat farmers and the future of our oil and gas reserves in western Canada?

The Government remains silent when people like Bruce Smart, the Under-secretary of Commerce of the United States, makes ridiculous statements about meeting to negotiate away Investment Canada because it may not agree with the position of the United States? He more or less said, "If we get rid of Canadian wheat farmers, that is less world competition for us". It is callous.

The farmers are referring to May 1 as black Friday. Why not? They have nothing to look forward to as far as the future of their loans which are in arrears are concerned. Those who have had their loans in arrears for two years are really fair game tomorrow for the Government's agency. Black Friday is less than an hour away. Do you not think that they realize that on the farm, Mr. Speaker? Do you not think that is something that is very well known to farmers?

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said that the controlled phase-out of the moratorium and removal of the ban will not precipitate an immediate flood of foreclosures. That is like saying that when one lets loose a plague we know it will be a while before we get it, but it is going to be just as devastating whenever we get it. How can anyone predict who is going to get it and when? Someone is going to get it immediately and that is the case with the farmers who are in arrears who will be subject to review and possible foreclosure.

I really fear for the east and the west of this country. I fear the Government is quite set in thinking that the prosperity of southern Ontario and certain pockets in Quebec is all that it wants to achieve. I do not really think it has any feeling for western Canada or even for Atlantic Canada. They certainly were great places to get seats in the last federal election but, of course, things are going to be different next time.

More important is the Government's attitude towards the people. If we abandon the people in rural communities and in our farming communities, this country is going to suffer greatly. We are going to lose a very valuable supplier of food, particularly grain, who will not be replaced. When farmers leave the farm they will not go back. It is just too expensive for them to begin again.

This is a Canadian tragedy. I really feel badly. I have a sense of hopelessness and helplessness that the Government is not heeding the warnings the farming community is giving. I can only hope that the Government will listen before it is too late.

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to participate in this debate which may well become historic. I must say it has been an interesting debate for the last number of hours. We have heard concern expressed by both sides of the House. I think people realize that agricultural hardship is not a partisan issue, it hits everyone. I do not believe opposition Members can claim they have the market on hardship and knowledge of the people who are facing these problems.

I was rather taken aback by the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) who has absolutely no idea of how the Western Grain Stabilization Program works in western Canada. The Government did not lower the price of grain. It set the initial price at 80 per cent of what it thought the market was going to be by fall. The price for grain could very well go up by fall. Therefore, the Government did not lower the price of grain. It set the initial price lower. It can only do that by law. The Government cannot go higher than 80 per cent of what it was told. I think the Hon. Member should take a lesson from his colleague from the New Democratic Party who is sitting with him now. Perhaps he could straighten him out on the Western Grain Stabilization Program and how it works.

I believe I am about the forty-eighth speaker for this side of the House. We have pretty well heard the whole gamut of problems in agriculture. I think both sides agree that there are no easy answers to these problems. There are those who feel we could throw another $1 billion and the problems will all go away. It is not that simple.

We heard the Secretary of State outlining our problems on the international market. We are being beaten into the ground by subsidy wars between the United States and the EEC which is having an affect on our prices here in Canada. I think it is grossly unfair for Members of the Opposition Parties to say this Government has not done anything, and is not going to do anything.

A number of Members who have spoken tonight have indicated the type of action the Government has taken and will be taking in the future. The Government has spared no effort, and will spare no effort on behalf of the agriculture community of Canada. The farm debt review boards are working. We have heard a great deal of discussion that they are not working and not going to work on behalf of the farmers. Each farmer in Canada has the right to appear before the farm debt review board. As has been pointed out, the review boards will be able to hear the cases of about 60 farmers each month. Therefore, approximately 600 to 700 farmers will have their cases reviewed this year. The rest will have to wait until the next year.

I think it is very unfair to say that the Government, because of the moratorium coming off, is going to drive tens of thousands of farmers off their land. That simply is not true. Those people who criticize the farm debt review boards are also criticizing the people who are serving on those farm debt review boards. There are outstanding ladies and gentlemen who are taking the time to serve on those boards and they deserve all the praise we can give them. Many of them are probably out right now, at eleven o'clock on a Thursday night, working with farmers, trying to solve their problems. I think we do a great disservice to those people who are working diligently in trying to solve the farm problems for the farmers.

We have had solutions from the farm debt review boards. Some have been accepted by the farmers and the farming community. They are going the last mile to try and keep farmers on the land. It is not a matter of them going in with the attitude that they are going to get this guy and kick him off the land and Government is going to take the property. That simply is not true. If you are going to be a member of the farm debt review board you have to show compassion towards agriculture and the farm community. That is the type of people we have on those boards. I do not think we are doing a service to those people when opposition Members get up and criticize the boards and the people who serve there when they are taking their time on behalf of Canadian agriculture.

I am sure that you realize, having listened to these hours of debate, that this is a very emotional issue. Agriculture today has serious problems. No one is denying that. One of the most disappointing things I think as far as farmers are concerned is that when they get on their tractors to plant their crops they think that things will be better by fall. They have done that in the past. Now they know that the market-place is not going to improve a great deal by the fall. When there is a U.S. corn crop in storage that is as big as a normal year's production, you cannot be optimistic. Market forces simply will not let prices rise. We have to give all the support we possibly can to the farmers this year and you can be assured that this Government will do that, as much as it possibly can. Federal Government spending on agriculture over the past two years has increased by 68 per cent.

We have heard a great deal about the western farmer and the problems they are having. Yes, the problems are very serious. Those of us from eastern Canada recognize that. However, we have farmers in Ontario who are having very serious problems. Our corn, soybean and wheat producers are facing the same kind of problems facing western grain farmers. It is not often recognized that these farmers have also received assistance from the Canadian grains program. Some $100 million came to Ontario last year through that program. Eastern grain corn, soybeans and barley were also covered under a stabilization program. Last year payments under that program totalled $55.8 million. Last year corn farmers in Ontario received 105 per cent of stabilization. That was unheard of. It has never been done before. We have gone the extra mile with people like corn farmers to make sure they have enough money to maintain viable operations.

I am sure that you, along with many other Members of this House, have had many visits from your constituents regarding farm problems. It is a gut-wrenching business. It is not a pleasant situation. Yet I have asked them how they got themselves into this problem. They said, because a few years ago things looked good. I am not going to stand in this House and blame the other Government. Everyone can make mistakes at one time or another. However, that is where the problem began. Many farmers became over-extended. They were told to expand, remodel, buy farms, because agriculture is going to be a good business. Even during the days of the PIK program in the U.S., payment in kind, when Americans were taking land out of production, what did our Government of the day do? It told farmers to plant more. Does that make any sense? That is where our problems began and we are still living with those problems today.

Some farmers today still have to live with interest rates set by the previous Government when it kept those rates at a very high level. They simply cannot maintain a viable operation on those interest rates. That is where the problem is. That is where most farmers got themselves into difficulty.

I am not going to prolong this debate. I know other Members want to give their views on the agricultural situation. This Government has been concerned. We have a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who has shown leadership. He has gone the extra mile for farmers. He will go another extra mile. We have a Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and a Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) who work hard day after day on this problem. They are still here tonight discussing the situation and listening to views from both sides.

This problem is not going to be solved by partisan rhetoric. It will have to be solved by everyone working together. This Government is prepared to work with anyone, at any time, in any place. The Minister of Agriculture meets daily with members of the agricultural community. We are trying to solve the problems but it is not going to be easy and the last thing we need is people in this House giving us partisan rhetoric without any solutions.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate on the crisis in the Canadian grain industry from the point of view of one representing an urban constituency in central Ontario. Very often the interests of producers and those of consumers have more in common than is generally considered to be the case. Furthermore, as a Member of the Canadian Parliament, each one of us has a constituency much broader than the electoral district in which we are elected. When a Canadian citizen anywhere is hurting, that is a concern to me. Our lives are linked economically and socially. As Members of Parliament we have a duty to legislate in the best interests of all Canadians, as far as we can.

As Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I have been involved in hearings for the last few days on the Auditor General's report concerning Agriculture Canada. The last report certainly stressed the importance of the agri-food sector. That sector as defined by Agriculture Canada includes not only agricultural equipment and supplies, farming, processing, wholesaling, retailing, restaurants and institutional food service activities, but also important associated industries such as transportation, finance, packaging and construction. It employs about 1.5 million people, 15 per cent of total employment in Canada. It contributes about one-sixth of our Gross National Product.

Consumers in Canada spend $40 billion annually on food. That expenditure represents some 16 per cent of their disposable income. Agricultural exports exceed $10 billion annually compared with imports of about $5 billion. Agriculture makes a major contribution to Canada's balance of payments and relies heavily for as much as half of total farm cash receipts on export markets.

Food processing is the largest processing sector in Canada with sales exceeding $40 billion and a workforce of 250,000. The food service sector employs around 360,000 people, while food retailers employ about 220,000. Decisions taken about agriculture impact on the lives of many, many Canadians over and above those living on the farms.

While the motion which brought on this emergency debate was called with respect to Canadian grain farmers, there are Ontario farmers, Newfoundland farmers, indeed farmers all across the country, who are also facing foreclosure. There have been changes in the farm sector in recent years which have presented serious challenges to farmers. On the whole, farms have become more capital intensive, more reliant on borrowed capital and therefore more exposed to the risk of adverse market forces.

• (2320)

Farmers have also become more reliant on the non-farm sector for fuel, fertilizers, chemicals and other production inputs. Fluctuations in international prices, as well as in interest and foreign exchange rates, subject farmers to further financial stress.

A recent survey indicates that 23 per cent of Canadian farms with $20,000 in farm sales faced severe financial stress in 1984, while a further 11 per cent faced moderate stress.

As the Auditor General pointed out in his report last October:

> Current market prospects suggest little or no growth in net farm income—in some commodity sectors there could well be a decline. As a result, a continued decline is expected in farmers' net worth in the immediate future requiring that very difficult adjustments be made.

That prophesy was certainly borne out. Last week we saw the price of grain drop a further 18 per cent, which followed a drop in price last year.

The Auditor General went on to say:

> Another important challenge facing the sector is the degradation of Canada's agricultural land which, as announced in a speech by the Minister of Agriculture, will cost about $1 billion annually. Most of this cost directly affects farmers in the form of increased chemical costs, lower yields and reduced international competitiveness.

He goes on:

> Domestically, the agri-food sector's two most critical and widespread problems are the farming community's financial difficulties and the sustainability of the land resource base. This stress is compounded by changing world markets. Internationally, the markets on which Canada is becoming increasingly dependent are at risk, with competition increasing and prices falling.

Those are some of the issues that were pointed out in the Auditor General's report last October.

Since then we have seen further deterioration in the international situation. The trade war between the United States and the European Common Market produced an artificial surplus and lower prices of agricultural products. There are the U.S. Farm Bill and the U.S. Export Enhancement Program which give export subsidies to American wheat and create more competition for Canadian Wheat Board sales.

As the United States attempts to protect itself from perceived European Common Market competition, there are times when Canada becomes caught in the crossfire. There are other times when our American friends shoot directly at our house. We do not see any great effort on the part of the Government to protect Canadian industries. The Government seems to be paralyzed as it waits for its trade agreement and fails to stand up for the interests of Canadian citizens.

There are serious problems facing our farming community and it is difficult to be clear about what the Government proposes. The Conservatives made a number of election promises in 1984. They have promised agri-bonds but we have not seen them. They promised to expand the agricultural sector research and development but the 1985 Estimates show $263 million allotted to agricultural research while the 1987 Estimates show a drop to $221 million.

At the GATT meeting in Uruguay last fall there was an agreement as a result of which, last February, the GATT organizers asked participating countries to develop some proposals concerning agriculture. Canada has not responded. Did the Government take any action at all?

A moratorium was imposed on foreclosures by the Farm Credit Corporation 19 months ago. There have been 19 months of inaction, with no attempt in that time to assist farmers to restructure their debts. It seems as though the Government sat for 19 months and hoped that the problem would disappear. Now, the moratorium will be lifted on May 1, in just one-half hour in most of Canada and in a few minutes in Newfoundland.

An article in The Ottawa Citizen on April 28 carries the headline: "Black Friday Looms For Farming Families". The article states that as many as 2,200 farmers are facing eviction. We are told that the Farm Credit Corporation can only process 500 to 600 actions in a year. What kind of cruel lottery will this be? Who decides which families will be foreclosed first?

We are told that if the corporation decides to go ahead with a foreclosure, the farm debt review board in that province will be notified and there can be a hearing. The farm debt review boards which were established last August have not exactly had rave reviews. In fact, most farmers consider them useless.

Comments being made by farmers now emphasize how cruelly betrayed they feel by a Government that has done nothing for 19 months and does not seem to have any intention of doing anything. One farmer said, "Normally farmers feel a sense of optimism at this time of year, spring. But this tears the heart out of thousands of farmers". The President of the Manitoba-based Keystone Agricultural Producers pointed out:

> At this time of year, many farmers are trying to borrow money to purchase fuel, seed, fertilizer and chemicals for the coming crop season.
> A farmer needs a lot more cash at this time of year than at any other time of year.

He pointed out that the termination of the Farm Credit moratorium will make it more difficult for farmers to get loans from banks and other lenders.

• (2330)

Grain farmers are generally considered to be suffering more than other farmers, but let us make no mistake that farmers generally in our country are in very difficult times. Lifting the moratorium with no plan, and just one week after the announcement that grain prices were dropping again by 18 per cent, seems both cruel and lamentably incompetent. The recommendations on what needs to be done are very clear. Surely the moratorium needs to be continued while, on an urgent basis, some method is found of restructuring debt and allowing farmers to continue. Surely even to this Government it must be obvious that it is in nobody's interest to have farmers forced off the land.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak at this late hour, although the subject is not a happy one. It is almost midnight, and parliamentarians continue to show their concern for the unhappy lot of our Canadian farmers. Mr. Speaker, this debate should not only make us reflect on the situation of our grain producers. I believe that anyone who is at all concerned about the future of our country should start asking some basic questions about the kind of country we want to build, the kind of life we want Canadians to have, and look back to the history of this country and consider the important role agriculture has always played in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, let us look at the situation facing farmers in this country and consider that thousands of Canadian families will go to bed tonight, wondering whether tomorrow will bring them a notice of foreclosure in the mail. Will the bailiff be at the door to take away their land? Will they still be able to send their children to the same school or will they have to move? If they do not want anyone to know what they went through, they will have to move way out, perhaps as far as the city.

Mr. Speaker, that is more or less what the situation is like, on top of all the technical considerations. It is a matter of survival, of pride and dignity for many families in Canada, and during the last 30 or 35 hours, the House of Commons has considered the situation of these people who, granted, are now a minority in Canada but a minority on whom all Canadians depend. I am therefore very disappointed to see the Government has failed to provide an appropriate response to the legitimate concerns of farmers across this country and their elected representatives.

Mr. Speaker, in a society as rich as ours, one starts to wonder about the priorities of this Government. During the past two years, we have seen a Government hoping that the problem would simply go away. There are people who owe money to the Farm Credit Corporation and who had gained some relief as a result of the moratorium on foreclosures. They thought that since the situation was not going to improve, they could at least try to refurbish their operations and try to survive, without the nagging fear that the Government would come and take their land away at the very last minute.

The decision made this week will have an impact on people who owe money to the Farm Credit Corporation, but in making this decision the Government is also sounding an alarm signal for all Canada's lending institutions. If the Government no longer has confidence in Canadian agriculture, bank managers across this country are going to be in a panic. Imagine all the calls from credit union managers wanting to withdraw lines of credit.

Mr. Speaker, this decision is like a symbol. It points to a complete lack of confidence in Canada's agriculture industry. And I know my colleagues will get calls from their constituents about the credit manager calling in the middle of the night or coming to their farms in a terrible panic, because it looks like Ottawa does not have much faith in the industry anymore. Mr. Speaker, we know this is going to happen and that it will have a domino effect.

I fail to understand why the Government, which had already announced a few days before that grain producers could expect an 18 per cent cut in prices, then chose to add insult to injury by announcing it would no longer guarantee loans that were in arrears. This is creating a terrible climate in the whole agricultural sector. Anyone who thinks only one region in this country will be affected is in for a big surprise, because the truth of the matter is that farmers across this country will be affected by this decision, and farms will be up for sale all over. There will be plenty of auction sale notices in La terre de chez nous. It will also have an impact, obviously, on the value of farm property. When you get a series of sales by the Farm Credit Corporation, automatically the adjoining land, and so forth . . . this is going to have a devastating effect on the value of farm land as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I feel embarrassed for Government Members who, after making their commitments as legitimate, elected representatives, especially those with western ridings, did not have the mental fortitude to object to the Cabinet's decisions. When Cabinet decided to lift the moratorium on foreclosures, there was not a single Conservative Member who had the courage to say it did not make sense that the timing was very poor.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) who was talking about the Constitution must be a little confused. We are talking about agriculture here tonight. It is a fact that in his riding as well as everywhere else, his Government's decision will have a disastrous impact on our farm economy as a whole. Instead of cracking corny jokes, I think he should show a little concern for what is happening to the farmers in his riding.

Well, Mr. Speaker, there is some kind of woodpecker on the other side, if only you could keep him quiet—

Mr. Ferland: They were starving when you were in office.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) on a point of order.

Mr. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you heard the term used by the Hon. Member as well as I did. I realize this debate is all about agriculture, but still he ought to refrain from referring to wildlife animals and be more relevant. My colleague from Portneuf is certainly not a woodpecker, but I think the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) did refer to my colleague from Portneuf as being a woodpecker. Mr. Speaker, I suggest he ought to talk only about agriculture. We are listening carefully. I think he should stick to the topic of debate and watch his language, particularly at this hour when thousands and thousands of viewers are listening to him, as he said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Given his experience in this House, I am sure the Hon. Member for Shefford uses nothing but parliamentary language.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that "woodpecker" is not among the unacceptable words.

All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that some people are thin-skinned. I can appreciate that. If I were the Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) or the Member for Portneuf I too would be touchy because I would feel guilty this evening. If I were in their shoes I would feel guilty about dropping a major sector of our economy like a hot potato. They are guilty of letting the Minister responsible for the Farm Credit Corporation behave like a heartless man. He does not lift a finger to prevent the seizure of farm lands where people have been living in dignity, yet in a few short months they will end up by the roadside. They know that, I trust they feel guilty, and I hope they will rise in a few minutes to apologize to their electors. The one thing I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that if we consider the measures which should be taken, the economic signals which ought to be sent to the whole farming community, it is definitely not by taking this kind of action that farmers will regain confidence, that we will ensure agricultural stability and proper land development—

• (2340)

Mr. Speaker, I heard my colleague talk about agricultural stability, yet they are about to foreclose. Some stability! Not bad, Mr. Speaker, they want to foreclose. This will prove to be a bonanza for Conservative lawyers, but what a sickening performance for the poor stiff who is only trying to earn an honest living.

Mr. Speaker, I would feel quite ashamed listening to these comments because this is hardly the time to make jokes in the course of a debate which is so important to people who will have no idea which way to turn in the coming weeks and months. Besides, everything is left in limbo, including the very nature of Canada's development because this is just another way of conveying the signal that the Government has lost faith in the agricultural community. That is the message you are sending out.

What you are doing now is making sure that farmers will realize the Government has dropped them, so we will end up in a situation where it will be ever more difficult to find people willing to put all their energy and give the best of themselves to develop Canada's agriculture. We are all aware of the exodus towards urban areas in recent years, Mr. Speaker, but we cannot afford the luxury of endangering our independence and self-sufficiency with respect to food production.

This is just one more very alarming aspect of the kind of signal being sent out, the lack of respect for the agricultural profession. The signal means that we are prepared to compromise the very future of the Canadian agricultural sector.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand, and neither could any reasonable Canadian, how the Government can announce an 18 per cent decrease in prices when we know that the price of wheat has gone down by over 50 per cent in the last four or five years.

Mr. Speaker, how many Canadian would calmly accept a 50 per cent decrease in their income? Yet, this is what has happened to farmers in Western Canada. I have visited western Canada many times myself, more often than the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), following the example of my leader. We, Liberals, want to be sensitive to the needs of western Canada. We want to make sure that we understand their problems. We want to make sure that their needs are expressed in the House of Commons, and this is why we have taken such an active part in this debate.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the guided tour which the Prime Minister will take during the next few days will incite him to reconsider the decision made by his government. I trust that his welcome throughout western Canada will make him understand the concerns and especially the feeling of frustration of western farmers. I find it unfortunate that we can not continue this debate for another three or four days until next week, at which time the Prime Minister could come back and report on his visit, if he's not too battered by then, because I believe that the situation is dramatic, as evidenced by the fact that this Parliament has spent 30 or 40 hours on this matter. The motion of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, is very much to the point—

An Hon. Member: It is not our motion.

Mr. Lapierre: —and I believe that any economic observer can certainly appreciate it.

The other element, Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Is it a Liberal motion?

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not even able to read his Hansard; he should try to learn. Oh! It is the Hon. Member from Portneuf or somewhere in that region. He has not realized that there are farmers among his constituents. If they saw him now, they would be pretty discouraged.

Mr. Speaker, if the Government is the least compassionate, it will realize that the decision to foreclose on farming operations is completely stupid at a time when the farmers will see their income decrease by 18 per cent. However, today before us, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) told these same people that their transport costs would increase by 5 per cent or 7 per cent. Mr. Speaker, the farmers will have to figure it out this evening and ask themselves how they will be able to begin seeding in coming weeks. Whatever the Government might say, their income will go down by 18 per cent, transport costs will increase by 5 per cent, and the threat of foreclosures by the Farm Credit Corporation is hanging over their heads. They are faced with an impossible situation.

The other aspect on which we should reflect is that the ones in difficulty today are the grain growers. However, what is going to happen tomorrow? As we have international prices for many products, as competition is fierce and as many countries subsidize their farming industry heavily, tomorrow it could be the Quebec pork producers who find themselves in difficulty, or else it could be our dairy producers, because with higher wheat prices, and so on, no one knows what will happen to Quebec farmers. Our colleagues who are now smiling at the problems of western producers should realize that Quebec producers might be the ones who will need the support of this House and this Government tomorrow. This is the essence of this country and this is why we sit in this Parliament. We have to ensure that the interests of the various regions are expressed in this House and we Liberals believe that there is now a serious inequity in Canada. We are convinced that the Government adds to this inequity by taking unreasonable action and we hope that it will finally come to its senses, because otherwise the situation will worsen and an increasing number farmers will leave the farm, which might threaten our independence and self-sufficiency. I therefore trust, Mr. Speaker, that my small contribution to this debate will raise the awareness of some of our colleagues and that, instead of laughing, they will rise in their caucus and say that such a situation is unacceptable and that our farmers deserve better. They should be able to rise and tell the minister responsible for the Farm Credit Corporation that he has lost his senses. They should be able to tell the Prime Minister: Go to western Canada and listen to the farmers; then propose new solutions because, if this goes on, it is obvious that an entire and very important sector of our economy will slowly disappear.

I therefore hope, Mr. Speaker, that all of us who have spoken on this matter have been able to make Government Members more aware of the daily tragedy we are witnessing in western Canada. We are asking one thing, that they at least go back on the decision these last few days as it will only make matters worse, not better.

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for giving me the opportunity to rise in this debate, or should I say this marathon. I would like to refer to the 1984 election. I listened very closely to the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre). To my knowledge, the Hon. Member, during the 1984 election, was with his colleague from Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and his former colleague for Saint-Maurice, who were travelling across Quebec saying all kinds of things, making all kinds of promises, except on agriculture.

Mr. Lapierre: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) on a point of order.

Mr. Lapierre: I am certain, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Plourde) is making an error and I would like to tell him that I have in my constituency a large farm component and they elected me en masse. This certainly means I made commitments to them and I need not remind him of the commitments we made during the last election. What they should do, however, is remember their own commitments and implement them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the same point of order, the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) has been running too much around the city, because if he had a look at what we are doing for agriculture, he would realize that our 16 points have been 80 per cent implemented. I think the Hon. Member for Shefford—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think we should proceed with the debate. The Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Plourde) has the floor.

Mr. Plourde: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) is in this House, you know very well he tries to give a show.

I was going to tell him this, and remind him of something the Hon. Jean Chrétien said against farmers during the election campaign, and I would suggest Jean Chrétien at that point was speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party. That sentence hit the farming community very hard in Quebec and Canada as a whole, and I quote: "Farmers, farm producers are damned cry-babies. The more they get, the more they want." So that has been the philosophy of the Liberal Party over these last 20 years, before 1984. That is what the Liberal Party thought of our farm people, the most important in my view of small and medium businessmen in Canada. This is how those people were treated.

Today, the Hon. Member for Shefford rises and says he does not feel guilty of the errors made by his Government. We have been in office for two and a half years, Mr. Speaker. We have been trying for those two and a half years to correct the errors made over 20 years. I suggest that for two and a half years, or during the election campaign as my colleague stated earlier, we made 16, not election promises but 16 commitments to our farming industry, and those 16 commitments we have honoured.

He said earlier he was travelling across Alberta, in western Canada. I understand that for the Hon. Member for Shefford. We have not seen him in this House for a year, Mr. Speaker, he is travelling to prepare the next election campaign. You see the point?

Mr. Lapierre: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Shefford on a point of order.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I suggest the Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Plourde) is either blind or is not here himself. Besides, he does not know our Standing Orders, because while dealing with an issue, a Member of the House should never mention the presence or absence of any of his or her colleagues. On the other hand, I can tell him that we are prepared to compare his record any time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup has the floor.

Mr. Plourde: In turn, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the Hon. Member for Shefford that when dealing with an issue, he should tell the whole truth, and not only part of it. I heard him say a while ago that there had been an increase in the grain transportation cost. He was not quite sure whether it was 5 per cent or 7 per cent, but he should have read his document to know that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has announced today a $64 million subsidy, which amounts to $2 a tonne. And that, my friend from Shefford should know, is less than the transportation costs which western wheat producers had to pay before 1984.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I should like just the same to mention that—I am ready for the Hon. Member for Shefford come election time—that in my Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup riding, there are 52 municipalities, including 49 rural ones with 898 farm producers altogether. I visit my riding regularly and I know these people. During that election campaign, we met a number of UPA organizations. You know that UPA stands for l'Union des producteurs agricoles. I know two such organizations in my own riding, namely the Union des producteurs agricoles de la Côte-Sud and the Union des producteurs agricoles du Bas-Saint-Laurent. You know what happens during an election campaign. These people invite political candidates to answer the following question: Suppose your political Party gets elected, what would be your commitments as a Government? Well, our Progressive Conservative Party had made 16 promises which we have fulfilled, and later on I will provide the House with concrete examples.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, we went to the general assemblies of these UPA producers and what did they tell us? In my Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup riding, there are for instance hog, dairy, cattle, grain and potato producers. All these people who had had open and honest discussions with the then candidate of the Progressive Conservative Party who are now their elected representatives are satisfied with the farm policies which this Progressive Conservative Government has implemented to help them earn a decent living, which is quite different from being treated as second-class citizens by former Liberal administrations before 1984.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the House of some of the commitments of our Party. For instance, let us take the case of the special Canada grain program. Under this program, our Government will share equitably among the 10 provinces, not only western Canada, a billion dollars to increase the cash flow of grain producers. Without this program, the net farm income which would have decreased by 17.9 per cent in 1987 will increase by 1.8 per cent. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) will continue their discussions with the various farm organization leaders to get their input as to the best way the Government could meet the future needs of Canadian farmers.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Pagé, the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, and the provincial UPA have congratulated our Ministers not only in personal letters, but also in newspaper articles and radio and television reports. What was the response first of the Liberal Opposition, then of the NDP? What did they do? They criticized this decision which had been universally accepted. I understand that it is the Opposition's role to criticize. However, what we have on the other side is a systematic attempt to destroy everything good we do. Yet, in their 20 years in power, the agricultural community was totally ignored throughout the country.

Let me quote another passage, Mr. Speaker. "Advance payments for crops. Amendments to the Advance Payments for Crops Act have made it possible to double the maximum level of advanced payments". In Quebec, in 1984, when the Liberals were still in power, what did they do when Canada was faced with the problems of drought, a condition which also affected Quebec? The Liberal Party did not solve anything. It was the Conservative Party, when we were elected, which provided former Minister Garon with some $20 million. You remember, he was the Minister who kept the cheque in his pocket for a week and a half. That is what the Conservative Party did.

Mr. Speaker, mortgages based on the prices of primary agricultural products are to bear interest at a prime rate of 6 per cent. Changes in the capital of the mortgage will be determined under a formula which takes into account the prices of primary agricultural products. Who set up the farm debt review boards? The Conservative Party. Legislation has been passed to set up farm debt review boards composed of people with knowledge and experience in farming and financial matters. They provide the agricultural community with an independent consultative third party review mechanism, and they assist in setting up voluntary arrangements between farmers and their creditors, in order to help ensure the survival of the farm business.

These boards have been welcomed in the agricultural community and constructive arrangements have been made in most cases, thus enabling farmers to remain in the business.

Mr. Speaker, there is also the Canadian Rural Transition Program. It was set up to help families who have to leave farming because of financial difficulties. As you know, those people did not receive any unemployment insurance benefits. If they went bankrupt, they only had welfare to turn to. The Conservative Government has now set up this Canadian Rural Transition Program to help farmers make the transition to a new career.

What about interest rates? Since we came in power, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has taken active steps to reduce interest rates, and not only in the agricultural sector. The drop in interest rates means that farmers have been able to save millions of dollars in interest payments through an interest rate which has dropped to a 13-year record low. The rate on guaranteed loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, which is the prime rate plus one percentage point, has been reduced from 16.75 per cent on election day to 11.25 per cent. Mr. Speaker, I think this is no small effort on the part of the Government, an effort that we can mention with pride especially if we bear in mind that the rate of the Farm Credit Corporation has also reached a record low since 1979. As far as I know, in 1979, the Liberals were in power. The FCC's interest rate has been lowered five times since we were elected, Mr. Speaker. Short-and long-term rates have dropped substantially, which translates into millions of dollars of savings for farmers; five-year mortgage rates have dropped from 3.75 to 10 per cent, which means that we now enjoy the lowest rates since 1979.

I could talk, Mr. Speaker, about the shared-risk mortgage plan or about the capital gains exemption. Yes, I will talk about the latter. We used to meet in our ridings farmers who had problems, and they would tell us: "What am I going to do with my farm? I cannot possibly sell it, I would pay too much taxes?" The Conservative Government solved that problem by granting farmers, in the 1985 Budget, a $500,000 capital gains exemption, effective immediately. It was a very efficient way of eliminating taxes on the sale of agricultural properties, most of which are sold with some capital gain.

Mr. Speaker, I will not go into international trade in farm commodities as this was brilliantly dealt with, this evening, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). However, I will talk about the fuel tax rebate. This is another initiative from the Conservatives. It is rumored that farmers will continue to benefit from that fuel tax rebate as it applies to all fuels for off-highway use.

Mr. Speaker, I know my time is fast running out, but I would like to come back to something which is very dear to me and was mentioned briefly by the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) a moment ago; it is the long-term dairy policy. I recall very well that during the 1984 electoral campaign, we were challenged by UPA members and dairy farmers who were asking us whether, if the Conservatives were elected, we would sign a long-term agreement regarding the dairy policy? It had expired in 1981 and the Liberals had been promising from year to year to renew it, but they never did. The Conservative Party, with the agreement of the Agriculture Minister, helped us. We signed that dairy policy and it had been said that the Government's $1.5 billion commitment to the five-year program will garantee the dairy industry a stability that had been lacking since 1981. Mr. Speaker, you know that means $750 million over five years for the dairy producers of Quebec who are said to control about 49 per cent of the milk production, let us say 50 per cent. We have also heard that the policy is based on the extension of the supply management system and on changes aimed at profitting the producers and the consumers. The list of controlled import products will be revised to include bulk powder mixes. Milk producers meeting the national needs will remain eligible for the federal subsidy of $6.03 an hectolitre.

Mr. Speaker, I could also tell you about the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. I think my time has expired.

Mr. Speaker, finally, I just want to tell people in my riding of Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup and to all farmers of the country that the Conservative Party is listening to them. You can rest assured we will be there to support them.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I stand to participate in this debate that was commenced by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). I want to thank him for giving us the opportunity to participate in a debate on what I think is one of the saddest and possibly most serious situations we have had in a long time.

Members will know that we are now into Friday, May 1, which many have called Black Friday for some farmers. It is black because, as of today, the moratorium that has existed for 18 months will be lifted. According to the statement by the Minister in the House the other day, there could possibly be some 6,000 farmers who will feel the economic consequences of this decision. Up to 50 a month, or 600 a year, are sure to be affected by the lifting of the moratorium on the foreclosures of FCC mortgages. I find that very difficult to accept.

I want to thank our critic for the Liberal Party, the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), who helped to organize our side for the debate and assist our Members in participating in what I believe has been a very interesting debate. I have learned much from this debate, most of which I have attended.

Some may ask what an urban Member of Parliament from downtown Ottawa would know about farming.

[Translation]

I am sure that the Hon. Member for Montréal—Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has learned something, as I did, because he too has been here almost all the time and even though we are both from the city, we have been able to follow the debate. We feel we have taken part in a general education process but also in a very urgent debate on the difficult situation facing farmers in Canada.

All Members are aware of the serious problems of farmers, particularly grain growers. We know that for the past two weeks, given the announcement of the 18 per cent decrease in prices and the lifting of the moratorium on farm foreclosures, western farmers particularly, since grain growing is very important in the west, are worried and upset and rightly so; they are certainly very upset because of that decision and they fear the impact it might have on their families, on their farms which in many cases, as we all know, have been inherited through generations and have been part of the family heritage for many years. It is a sad situation because we know that when we see a "For sale" sign, Mr. Speaker, it sometimes means more than that. It means perhaps that a sad story is unfolding because the farmer has not met his operational costs, his cash receipts are too small and he is forced to sell his farm and sometimes to go bankrupt.

For almost 33 hours, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues in this House and myself have been discussing two major topics; the 18 per cent decrease in grain prices and the Government decision to lift the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loans, which will lead to the foreclosure of some farms.

Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I am no expert in agriculture, but I worked on farms probably as much, if not more, as many Members in this House when I was a boy. The tradition was to send us to work on a farm, and like a number of youths during the 1940s and 1950s I went haying, stooking the grain—

Mr. Ferland: That's a long time ago.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, that's a long time ago, but I think the expression is still in use today, the difference of course being that in those days it was done by hand. It is true that I was still wearing short pants, but I had strong arms and our labour was cheap since we ate mostly eggs, for breakfast, lunch and dinner. The only decision we had to make was whether we wanted our eggs boiled, fried or scrambled. That was the way of life of poor people in those days and we accepted it—

Mr. Ferland: You were probably in good shape.

Mr. Gauthier: I certainly was. I was in good physical condition. I probably pitched as much manure, and milked as many cows as any one in this room, since I did that for at least 10 summers.

So I think I am one of those who can say: "I worked at it." I may not be an expert, but I worked at it and I know, Mr. Speaker, that is is hard work. I know the work can take a lot of time and can also be exhausting and that is why I am most saddened today, on this Friday, May 1, to take part in a debate which will cause dismay for some farmers, some farm families who, in 1987-88, will most likely be among the 600 who will be forced out of business through foreclosure by the Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to review what I have heard during this debate. I assure you it will not take too long. I will simply summarize if possible some points that have been made, because I have heard some good ones. I heard positive comments and other things which I think are instructive for us.

For instance, I heard the Prime Minister say yesterday morning: "We will answer every call from the west."

• (0010)

[English]

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was saying yesterday morning that he would answer every call from the west. The Prime Minister is going out West next week. I understand that he will be travelling to Red Deer, Lethbridge, North Battleford, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon and Winnipeg between Wednesday and Friday. Since he has invited Members and farmers to call him, perhaps his phone number would be helpful. It is area code 613-992-4211. If you live in Red Deer, North Battleford, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon and Winnipeg, please go out and tell him about your problem or call him, and I repeat the phone number, which is 613-992-4211.

[Translation]

He asked for it.

So, any problem should be looked after.

I have also heard the Agriculture Minister tell us in this House not to get excited, not to worry, that the matter is under consideration, that the Government will show sensitivity about possible foreclosures of farms of which there would be no more than 50 a month.

[English]

I want to repeat some of the main points made during the debate. The prices announced by the Canadian Wheat Board reflect the fifth straight decline, dropping 18 per cent from the 1986-87 prices. No. 1 wheat in 1984-85 was $170 a tonne; in 1986-87 it was $137 a tonne; and in 1987-88 it is $110 a tonne. No. 1 barley in 1984-85 was $125 a tonne; in 1986-87 it was $80 a tonne; and in 1987-88 it is $60 a tonne. These are the same figures given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) this afternoon. He was giving us his views. I appreciated the sincerity of them and I appreciate why international negotiations at this time were rather difficult because of the unfair competition given Canada by the United States and the European Economic Community in the trade war. These countries, we were told, protect their farmers with subsidies. We do not. Canada has kept its market share, but has done so on the backs of farmers who get much lower returns. U.S. farmers receive about $6 per bushel for wheat as opposed to $3 per bushel in Canada. Farm expenses continue to rise. For example, fertilizer costs, chemicals, machinery and fuel. Even the Tory House Leader, I see him rise, will want to contribute to this debate. Yes, he is in good spirits. Prices are lowest in real terms since the Depression, Mr. Speaker. I am just repeating some of the things that I have heard. The Secretary of State for External Affairs outlined them this afternoon and I thought he made a very interesting and good speech.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: I appreciated some of the things he said. I learned certain things that he brought to our attention.

In my view, there is no provision in the Budget right now for funds for a deficiency payment. The $1 billion allowed last year was only announced in desperation during the Saskatchewan election campaign. We heard repeatedly over the last 33 hours that farmers need to know now what their returns will be so that they will know what to seed, how much to seed, and so on. Many farmers are having trouble getting operating loans from the banks and cannot afford to seed. I could go on and read editorials, articles and press clippings in which it is quite evident that this situation is critical for many farmers. It is indeed a very serious situation.

The only guaranteed assistance the farmers have is the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, brought in by the Liberals, I remind the House, and fought—I repeat, fought—all the way by those Tories who are responsible for some of the difficulties these farmers are in. They opposed it systematically but now brag about it to all who will listen.

I want to read some of the correspondence which was received by the Government as of April 28, 1987. I have a letter signed by Mr. Garf Stevenson, President of the Saskatchewan Pool. Mr. Stevenson states in part:

> The Pool asks that all Members of Parliament recognize the very critical economic situation confronting western Canadian families and communities. This crisis has far reaching social and economic implications for the national economy as well as for the west.
> We specifically recommend:
> 1. That programs be immediately developed through federal and provincial co-operation to keep families on their farms in productive capacities.
> 2. That early consideration be given to the acute need for a substantial deficiency payment for the 1987-88 crop year.
> 3. That government continue its efforts to restore sanity in the international grain market.

These three points are indeed essentially what we have been addressing in this debate of some 33 hours. I want to address the question of the $64 million announcement made today by the Government. We have not received the press release as yet. I understand it is in the mail. However, from what we have been told in the House and what I have heard on television, there will be a payment of $64 million given to the transporters, the railroads, under the Western Grain Transportation Act. The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), in a speech on March 18, 1987, at page 4309, said:

> —it would be most helpful if the Government would make a commitment to freeze the grain freight rates, the part the farmer pays himself. Last year the Minister of Transport ordered the Grain Transportation Agency to roll back its estimate of some 31.5 million tonnes to something in the 27 million to 29 million tonnes range. In fact, it did roll it back to 28.5 million tonnes which resulted in an effective freezing of the freight rates.

We know that the freight rates rise under the Western Grain Transportation Act as railway costs rise, depending upon volume shipped. The Tories last year kept the rate from rising by forcing the Grain Transportation Agency to bring forward an artificial and unrealistic low estimate of grain to be shipped. Therefore, there would have been a huge 39 per cent to 40 per cent increase in shipping costs this crop year. The Government brought forward a $2 per tonne subsidy today on grain shipped which will hold the increase to 5 per cent. However, that 5 per cent will still have to be paid by the producer, the farmer, to the transporter, the railroad.

Freight rates as a percentage of grain prices continue to increase dramatically. Holding cost increase to 5 per cent, while decreasing price by 18 per cent is no great gift. I submit that this Government has not done anything today but play a game of smoke and mirrors, and the $64 million subsidy will not in any way affect, and I say that sincerely, this year's production and help the farmers.

I want to end my remarks on what I hope is a note of some optimism. I see three Ministers here tonight. In fact, I see a lot of Members who should be Ministers but they cannot all be Ministers. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister who is in the House to look again at this question of the moratorium on the Farm Credit Corporation. I ask him to be serious and do something. All of us have acknowledged there should be a prolongation of the moratorium. For God's sake, let us be reasonable. Have some heart and understanding and give the farmers what they want, and that is a prolongation of the moratorium.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege this morning to follow the Hon. Whip of the Liberal Party. I am delighted to understand from what he has told us that he has learned so much from this debate. His Party tonight has done an extremely fine job of catching up. It is trying to catch up with the other Party, that is, the New Democratic Party, and I notice from the record that each Party has had 27 speakers, so he did catch up. I would also like to mention, while I am at it, that we are now on our forty-sixth speaker, 11 of whom were Ministers.

The Hon. Whip for the Liberal Party also mentioned throughout his speech his ability to shovel manure and the importance of fertilizer to the farm industry. I would say that he may be one of the best people in this House in that area. I would like to commend him on his experience and the benefit it has been to him now that he is here in the House of Commons. I too shared that experience in my youth and in most of my life. I still live on a farm. However, I do not think I will catch up with the Hon. Whip of the Liberal Party.

I listened with interest to this debate over the last few days. It was reminiscent of the time when, sitting in this House, I went to the then critic for transportation who was carrying on a very strong and important debate on the Crowsnest rate. I said to the now Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski): "What is this all about?". He took me by the arm and said, "We are just about to have a meeting". The week-end before I had told my wife that I did not know what this Crowsnest rate was all about. By the time the Hon. Member for Vegreville had finished with me, I knew much more about the Crowsnest rate than I had ever intended to know, and it was a great experience for me. It gave me a real feeling of the importance of that debate in Canada's history.

It was the present Deputy Prime Minister and his colleagues from western Canada who led this debate. I heard that because of the Western Grain Transportation Act which was brought in, we have been able to keep this rate down to $6. I recall saying how bad this increase was going to be for the farmers of western Canada.

• (0030)

Mr. Mazankowski: They did not care.

Mr. Fennell: They did not listen to us.

Mr. Mazankowski: Foster was there. He did not care then and he does not care now.

Mr. Fennell: I knew then how important it was. I had an opportunity to explain to this House the importance to my constituency which borders on Oshawa. I say a great deal more about my industry in Oshawa than the Hon. Member who represents Oshawa and happens to be my neighbour. It was a very important discussion because we were afraid that if this rate got out of hand it could have a serious effect on industry in Ontario which supplied goods and services to the West.

I also remember other debates on the National Energy Program. I remember how one factory in Scarborough had to close down. It made nothing but half-ton trucks and it closed down for a year because of the NEP which imposed inequitable penalties on the West. I know it affected all of Ontario. It affected Kingston, the steel industry in Hamilton, and Algoma Steel in the Hon. Member's riding. It affected all of eastern Ontario.

I have heard the Opposition talk about what we have not done. I heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) tonight set forth in great detail all of the benefits we have brought to this country through—

Mr. Foster: How come everyone is going broke?

Mr. Fennell: I will tell him the reason everyone is going broke. The Minister explained it and the Hon. Member should have been listening. When interest rates were 22 per cent the farmers were going belly-up by the dozen every day. I knew those people. Do not talk to me about farmers getting into trouble. My friends in my community were affected. Your damned interest rates got out of control. You had no control, no voice in your Government to bring them down. I hate to hear the Liberals telling me what they did for the farmers when they did not do a damn thing.

This Party represents all of Canada. It represents the farm community. We have put up 46 speakers and very few were from the City of Toronto or the City of Montreal. Many were from rural areas.

Mr. Foster: What about Whitby?

Mr. Fennell: I come from a rural area so do not talk to me about Whitby. It is part of my constituency. I live in a rural area.

Talking about Whitby, I want to tell the Hon. Member what the Liberals did to the farmers in my riding. I want to tell him what they did to 18,000 acres of prime agricultural land in my riding. They drove farmers off that land because they decided they were going to build an airport in 1971.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fennell: Not only that, they went to Quebec and destroyed 98,000 of the most arable acres in the Province of Quebec. It was about 1 per cent of the total arable land. Yet it was our Party that took 80,000 of those acres and returned them to farming. It is our Party that will return most of the acreage involved in my riding. Do not tell me about my riding and what the Liberals did for farmers. You hurt the service industry, you hurt the co-ops, you hurt everyone. We will get the land back to its original owners.

We have a major problem in the industry because of the critical problem internationally. Today many farmers cannot afford to pay the rent for their land. It is not worth their while to seed that land. I even approached the manager of the airport property and said that possibly he should give it to farmers just to keep the weeds under control. He said that unfortunately, because of over-supply, farmers do not want to invest the money in planting. That is a tragic situation.

What happened? France is a prime example of what happened. They have done extremely well and produce abundant amounts of cereal grains. Right after World War II they were a net importer but now they are an exporter. Many other countries we have assisted to become self-sufficient are now net exporters of grain. We have to deal with that. We cannot afford to pay our farmers a subsidy of $320 a tonne. We are not rich enough. It is only those countries with a much larger tax base who can afford it. We have to make do with less. We are a very large country with a very small population.

Farmers have also been faced with a change in eating habits. Not as much grain is consumed today as there was 10 years ago. This is a serious problem and our Government is trying to deal with it and at the same time give some dignity back to the agricultural industry.

The announcement today that we have reduced the freight rate increase to 5 per cent was very important. Under the method set up by the Liberal Party that increase would have been about $11 this year as opposed to the $6 announced today. I was talking to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) before I came in here tonight. After I read a number of pages of what we had done for agriculture I turned to him and asked, what else are you going to do for the farmer? I sort of smiled and looked at him and said I have never seen such a complete list of assistance for the agricultural community in the eight years I have been here.

I am proud to be a Progressive Conservative. I am proud to be working with this Government. I am proud to work directly with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of this country who, I have said many times, will go down in history as the greatest Prime Minister this country ever had.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fennell: I am proud to be a Canadian. I am proud particularly to be able to speak about western Canada with the same feeling that I speak about my own area. They have suffered. Go back to the dirty thirties, the dirty seventies and the early eighties. They have suffered. I do not know how much more we can do but we must rationalize on an equitable basis.

The Opposition has talked about our removing the moratorium on FCC loans. In 1982 and 1983 we pleaded with them to do something to save these farmers. We put a moratorium on foreclosures and we put a review board in place. Not only that, we provided advance payments for crops. We provided crop and livestock drug assistance. We made a record interim payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. We have done more for the exports of this country than has been done in 20 years of Liberal Governments before us. We increased our sales to Russia, and have sold grain to Egypt and Brazil.

We have had to take numerous initiatives on behalf of the agricultural community because of the neglect of the Liberals while they were in government. The Liberals never cared about the farm community.

Unfortunately, the Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) is not here, because he is largely responsible for these initiatives. I want to congratulate him for his persistence in our caucus in expressing the concerns and views of western Canadians who are in agriculture. He is a western grain farmer and probably grows more grain than all the farmers in the Opposition combined.

Members opposite rose with a holier than thou attitude to talk about the dreadful things we are doing to farmers. The majority of the 46 Members from our Party who spoke in this debate are farmers or live on farms.

I want to say a few words about the capital gains tax. The capital gains tax exemption was a serious inequity. Someone from Toronto who owned a house worth $1 million and sold it for $2 million a year later would have to pay no capital gains tax. However, a farmer in my area who owned a $100,000 farm that became worth $200,000 had to pay capital gains tax. We rectified that terrible inequity.

The Opposition has spread fear throughout the country about what our free trade initiative will do to the agricultural community. I can tell the House that we will protect agriculture because we intend to maintain the good agricultural industry in this country.

When I met some 240 dairy farmers at a meeting I told them that while I cannot relieve their fears about what might happen, since they have suffered so much through different periods, I could promise that I would stand up for them and ensure that we would protect the marketing boards that had been put in place.

Mr. Prud'homme: Do you speak for your Party or for yourself?

Mr. Fennell: I am telling you what I have been told by the Minister of Agriculture. Supply management has been successful in this country and has even been adopted by many European countries. We cannot afford the subsidies that the Americans give their farmers because we do not have enough money. Therefore, we have developed another method and it is working. Those farmers left that meeting knowing that they have a Government that cares.

I had an opportunity to speak to 80 members of the feather industry. They included broiler chicken producers and egg producers. They were also very concerned, but I tried to allay their fears. I had a final meeting with a small group from the local durum agricultural association. I was somewhat complimented by the response I received when I asked why the meeting was so small. They told me that I had answered most of their questions already.

We have taken major steps on behalf of the agricultural industry and I am proud to be part of this Party and tell farmers in the rural communities in my riding that we have stood up for them and will continue to do so in order that they may become a healthy component of this economy.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to participate in the debate. There is absolutely no truth to the rumour that although I represent a rural community I was elected by the farm vote on a promise that I would not speak on agricultural issues. They sent me here to speak on those issues.

I want to say a few words about the participation in this debate. First, we heard some very knowledgeable speeches from members of the New Democratic caucus who represent the farming community. However, those knowledgeable speeches got off track when we heard from the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). He is a notable expert in rural items, who once told the House that his riding of Ottawa Centre was a microcosm of Canada. I do not know whether he is farming what he is throwing, but I point out that he is the Member who continually stands in the House to complain about the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption which the NDP has fought since we introduced it. There does not seem to be anyone in the NDP who realizes that the capital gains tax exemption was implemented immediately for farms because the Conservative Party realizes that the farm represents the pension of farmers when they retire. Day after day, members of the NDP complain about the fact that we have exempted that pension.

We then heard from the Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). I was moved when I heard her speech. I realized why she is put on so many travelling committees. Then we heard from the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) who went through a whole speech without moving an amendment. Subsequently the Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin) made one of his few speeches, while he is still a New Democrat, before he becomes an independent. That is the only Party he has not represented.

Having been somewhat caustic, I want to compliment my good friend, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), who commenced the debate. I have worked with him on the Public Accounts Committee and I commend him for his efforts in this debate, as well as the Members of his Party who represent rural communities. Had it not been for the NDP, this debate would certainly have collapsed because there was very little knowledgeable participation from the Liberals.

That brings me to the Liberal Party. I want to highlight some of the speeches made by their Members. We heard from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) whose knowledge of the rural community out west is basically from a 30,000 foot level as he flies back and forth between Vancouver and Ottawa. He stayed in Vancouver longer, before he sold his condo. Now that he has sold it, he does not take as many trips and is losing some of that knowledge of the rural community.

We then heard from the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). He is one of the two members in the western caucus, and he did a good job.

The Hon. Member for St. Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) spent 20 minutes denying that there were high interest rates during the Liberal depression. We listened to 20 minutes of explanations that simply did not wash.

• (0050)

Having said that, I want to compliment the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) who briefed his colleagues, and I am sure it was not easy. He hung here in the debate and I compliment him on his efforts.

There are two reasons this debate has been welcomed by the Government Party; because we had two things we wanted to get across. First, we have an excellent record to brag about as a Government in our efforts to assist Canadian farmers. We understand the problems. We do not have them all solved yet, not for a minute, but the effort and the steps have been there. Second, the west is finally fully represented on agricultural issues at the table, as a region and in the House. Members from all areas of Canada in our Party fully understand the problems of the western grain producer. We break bread with our colleagues from the west. We sit on committees with them. We participate in the House of Commons and there is absolutely not one Member of Parliament from the Maritimes, Quebec or Ontario in the Progressive Conservative Party who does not have an empathy with our colleagues from the west. We understand fully.

If I had one message I would like the people from the west to take from what I say it is this. The Members of Parliament from the central provinces, Ontario and Quebec, and they are here tonight, understand. There is no learning curve with us. We understand the problem and our Government, from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) down, has the full support of the Members of Parliament in the Progressive Conservative Party from Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces in the work they are doing on this problem.

The work is considerable. Because it has been referred to at length in this debate I will not walk the House through the details of the programs. There is however, a special grains program, there is crop and livestock drought assistance, there are interim pay-outs, the Western Grain Transportation Act amendments and the commodity based mortgages. All of these steps have been taken to help the west.

I would like to dwell on interest rates for a minute. We have worked as a Party to lower interest rates. We have saved farmers millions of dollars. Those steps have been taken. We have the Farm Credit Corporation rates at the lowest levels since 1979. Interest rates have been reduced five times.

With respect to farm debt review boards, legislation has been passed to set up these boards composed of people who have a knowledge of the agricultural community and have the experience in farming and financial matters to try to ease these tensions.

We have the Canadian Rural Transition Program. In my riding, this was referred to from time to time by my constituents, who are farmers. I got the best example a couple of weeks ago. On the seventh concession of Orillia Township in 1956 there were 21 farm families. Now, 31 years later, there are four farm families on that same concession farming the same amount of land. What has happened is that the ability of our farmers—and we should all be proud of this—to expand production and produce has increased faster than anyone's ability to find the markets and to be competitive in them. Being competitive in them is really the problem we are talking about today.

We have been at the forefront in calling for a new set of ground rules for international agricultural trade. The Prime Minister raised it in Tokyo as Canada's number one agenda item. We have been trying to get an informal international agreement on agricultural trade practices during the negotiations of the the new GATT rules. This may take years, but we have been there. We have made all this effort.

We know how our farmers are facing problems because our competitors are just out-subsidizing us. It is just not practical in this world where we have people who are hungry, not to get food to them. It is just not practical that we are competing with the European Economic Market and the United States which subsidize their producers. I do not think anybody in this House, no matter to which Party they belong, thinks that is a very effective way of doing things.

I went to the annual Simco County Federation of Agriculture meeting. Many Members of Parliament and Members of the provincial Legislature attended. A lot of briefs were presented at that meeting from the Cattlemen's Association, the corn producers, the egg marketing board, the maple syrup producers, the milk committee, the pork producers, the sheep producers and the wheat growers. We heard the briefs and we had a back and forth discussion. There was public participation. I was pleased to hear people tell us that they are in general agreement with the efforts of the Government, that they know what we are faced with and they are behind our efforts in trying to do something.

As I suggested earlier, we do not have all the answers and we have not won the battle. There is no question that our Government has made the effort to win the battle. We have a Prime Minister who time and time again is very, very vocal, and who has then followed his vocal comments with efforts to address the concerns of agriculture. We have a first class cabinet Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) from Ontario and his colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). They work in tandem.

It would be interesting if I were to tell the House just exactly how this ministry works. It works with complete co-operation between the two Ministers, along with the Parliamentary Secretary from the riding of Champlain, Quebec, to give it a Quebec focus. The Ministers have excellent staffs who always have time for Members of Parliament and their problems. They have a concerned Public Service staff backing them up.

The caucus is fully behind all of those people and the Prime Minister in their efforts on the issue. Let me say to the people who are suffering at this time that we do have an understanding of your problems no matter where you live in Canada. Speaking as an Ontario Member of Parliament, especially Ontario, we do have an understanding, and we intend to continue the good fight.

I want to finish my speech by complimenting everybody, the Speakers in the chair, Members at the Table, the pages, the staff, and especially the Hansard staff. With some exceptions, it has been Parliament at its best, and we have truly focused the concern of Canadians on this very important issue.

• (0100)

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that we have no further speakers. I would like to join in thanking you first, Mr. Speaker, for your extraordinary good presence and patience. I thank very warmly the people from the Table, all the staff, the Pages and those devoted people who take notes of all of what has been said, including the last speaker. Unfortunately, they had to take his speech also. But that is all right.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say it has been an important debate about a very basic and noble industry. We have talked about some of the concerns of agriculture and I think we have raised the level of awareness of all Canadians of the problems of agriculture. When one thinks about it, it is a very useful way to make use of the House of Commons, this very noble institution. It is almost an irony that we are here tonight talking about surpluses which are causing us problems when there are all kinds of people around the world who are hungry.

We have heard over 100 speakers representing all 10 provinces. We thank everyone who has had an opportunity to participate. There has been some political rhetoric and some very good speeches. May I say in many ways one of the most thoughtful speeches we heard from the opposition benches was from the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). I think it is fair to say that we all enjoyed what the Hon. Member for Saint- Denis had to say.

The debate has lasted over parts of four days and in many ways it has been an historic debate. I just want to join in thanking everyone who stayed with us, the House of Commons staff and everyone who participated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 29(13), I am satisfied that the debate has now been concluded. I therefore declare the motion carried.

This House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 a.m.

STATUS OF WOMEN

WOMEN'S EXPECTATIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, although Canadian women were delighted with the appointment of Mrs. Claire L'Heureux-Dubé to the Supreme Court of Canada, they realize that the Government has a long way to go before it fulfils its campaign promises with respect to women.

The Conservatives promised to double the number of women sitting on boards and councils, but we have not seen much progress. Not a single woman has been appointed to the War Veterans Allowance Board of Canada, for instance. The Conservatives promised that the Public Service would be a model of employment equity. However, less than 10 per cent of management appointees are women. On the Nielsen task force which recommended changes in all government programs, less than 10 per cent of the members were women.

The present Government has never said how many women were affected by job cut-backs.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian women want results, not just nice words, and we expect the Government to act accordingly.

THE CONSTITUTION

RESULT OF FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING—TRIBUTE TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer my congratulations to our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for his historic achievement yesterday at the First Ministers' Conference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lesick: Through sheer determination, overwhelming preparation, and hard work, the Prime Minister has managed to achieve a momentous agreement in principle to changes to the Constitution. He has displayed great sensitivity to the needs of the provinces and has included them in every step of the negotiations.

The provinces have gained new powers in many areas, including a voice in the reform of the House of Commons, the Senate and the Supreme Court. This in particular is welcome news to my home Province of Alberta. Premier Getty and all Albertans are ecstatic at the potential offered by Senate reform. This is indeed an example of the fact that the Prime Minister is listening to the needs of western Canada.

We are in a new era of federal-provincial relations. This constitutional agreement is a true example of effective federalism and I am proud to be part of a Government which has helped to achieve this historic agreement.

TRADE UNIONS

PARLIAMENT HILL OPERATIONS WORKERS—VOTE IN FAVOUR OF UNIONIZATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House to an historic moment in our history yesterday when Parliament Hill employees voted to join the union of their choice, the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

In a certification vote for which 537 employees were eligible, 82 per cent voted, and 72 per cent voted in favour of joining the Parliament Hill local of the PSAC. This overwhelming endorsement for the union demonstrates that the men and women who serve this institution so faithfully wish to have the same representation right which is granted to, and taken for granted by, so many Canadian workers.

The certification is the culmination of a five-year struggle to establish the collective bargaining rights of workers on Parliament Hill. Members of the NDP salute the persistence and patience these workers have shown in their efforts to establish their union. I fully expect these negotiations to be successful and to be followed by many others as all eligible staff on the Hill exercise their collective bargaining rights in the years to come.

THE CONSTITUTION

AGREEMENT IN PRINCIPLE PROPOSED BY PRIME MINISTER—UNANIMOUS SUPPORT OF PROVINCES

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, April 30, 1987, will go down in history as a memorable day for the Government of Canada.

The 10 provincial premiers, representing four different political parties, unanimously supported the agreement in principle proposed by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), which will allow Quebec to become a signatory to the Canadian Constitution, with honour and enthusiasm.

Thanks to the constant efforts of our Prime Minister and the unprecedented flexibility of his provincial counterparts, Quebec can now become a full-fledged member of this wonderful country of ours.

This historic agreement is good for all Canadians since it gives our federation more flexibility, a better balance and more safeguards, and makes for a more united, stronger and more equitable country. This historic event is in line with the political agenda of the Conservative Government, which has national reconciliation as one of its main priorities.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Quebec and the people of the riding of Chambly rise together to speak with one voice to the man who brought about this historic event, the Prime Minister of Canada and Leader of the Conservative Government, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney: Bravo and thank you! Mission accomplished!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PARTICIPATION OF QUEBEC AND UNITY OF CANADA

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, following the remarks of my colleague from Chambly, I should like to join all Hon. Members and congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the provincial premiers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lapierre: As you know, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the constitutional patriation process was an unfinished undertaking. I want to rejoice at the agreement in principle, but of course we will have to see all the details to make sure that everything is fine. Mr. Speaker, you would be aware of precedents or agreements in principle which were not necessarily ratified. Still, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you that as a Quebecer I think that the participation of Quebec in the Canadian Constitution is a prerequisite to the unity of this country. Progress in this matter which the newspapers and various media are highlighting is heartening, and hopefully it will be completed in the coming months.

In my opinion, this is not a partisan but a basic issue in the life of this country, and I can only rejoice.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

PARTICIPATION OF QUEBEC

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Last evening, Mr. Speaker, like all Canadian men and women I was particularly happy to learn that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the 10 provincial premiers have concluded an agreement in principle which will enable Quebec to adhere to the Canadian Constitution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: We know there are differences in this country as there are in any family, but the sign of greatness, the sign of real caring, is when each one of us, individual or province, puts our self interest aside for the interests of the whole.

True leadership was shown last night by the leaders of our country. Today I am proud to be a Canadian and a British Columbian in a country which can be, at long last, united. Each Canadian can stand a bit taller as we show to the world our strength, our unity, and our concern for each other.

All Members will join me in congratulating the Prime Minister and the provincial Premiers for this historic accomplishment, a hallmark in the annals of the history of this country.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA'S FUNDING OF MOZAMBIQUE NATIONAL RESISTANCE ORGANIZATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in Mozambique, South Africa funds and directs the terrorist organization known as the Mozambique National Resistance, or Renamo. Renamo creates violence, terror and destruction in a nation already suffering from severe drought, chronic poverty and underdevelopment after centuries of Portuguese colonialism. As a result, Mozambique has more than one million refugees, three and a half to four million people at risk of starvation, and the highest child mortality rate in the world. One child dies every six minutes.

In Canada we must understand the message: Apartheid kills. We must ask why our Government does not take stronger action against South African apartheid by imposing total sanctions against South Africa and giving the front line states the resources they need to defeat apartheid-financed guerrilla movements within their borders.

PARTICIPATION OF QUEBEC

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, April 30, 1987 will be a date to remember in Canadian history. Yesterday, a giant step forward was made in the constitutional issue, and as a Quebec representative, I am incredibly happy and proud of the agreement in principle reached by the 10 premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), which will enable Quebec to rejoin the constitutional family in the very near future.

I wish to underline the open-minded attitude of the premiers as well as the leadership, the performance and the determination of our Prime Minister which brought about a unanimous agreement, to the satisfaction of the Quebec Government and all the other provinces.

This agreement in principle is excellent not only for Quebec, but for Canada as a whole. It is factual proof that we have achieved national reconciliation.

SITUATION OF MINORITIES—PRESSING APPEAL FOR GENEROSITY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to put a damper on this collective rejoicing. The agreement in principle announced last evening makes me as happy as anyone else, but I would not want the majority, both in English Canada and in French Quebec, to forget Francophones outside Quebec or Anglophones within Quebec. I trust that this agreement will include provisions to eliminate on the one hand the quantification of rights for Francophones outside Quebec in our schools, and so on, and to extend linguistic rights as generously as possible on the other hand, so that all Canadians will be treated as first class citizens and feel proud of their heritage, without being subject in certain regions to restrictions and even sometimes to unwarranted prejudice.

RESULT OF FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING—TRIBUTE TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, last night we received word that an historic agreement had been reached which would finally see Quebec become a full partner in our Canadian Constitution.

The Prime Minister's determination and dedication have brought about an agreement in principle which will result in the Province of Quebec signing the Canadian Constitution, a milestone in Canadian history.

His skill as a negotiator allowed him to find common ground for agreement between the federal Government and the provinces that will not only accommodate Quebec but will strengthen our country and reinforce the bonds that tie our provinces together to form this great federation.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) deserves both our congratulations and heartfelt thanks for his outstanding contribution to this long awaited accord. I am certain my colleagues will want to join me in applauding the Prime Minister and the Premiers for their success.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SUPERMAILBOXES CONDEMNED BY THE HANDICAPPED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the handicapped appeared before the Government Operations Committee and stated that supermailboxes rather than door-to-door delivery are a derogation of their human rights. That may sound like a strong statement, but let us consider that Canada has signed an international declaration and has established a Charter of Human Rights, both of which guarantee access to the handicapped and a system that provides access.

The handicapped point out that systems that fail to provide full access do in fact discriminate. Mailboxes that can only provide service when the sun shines and not when the snow flies are discriminatory. They recommend generic services, services that are not vulnerable like specialized services, services that do not stigmatize.

S. O. 21

The handicapped call upon the House to move forward with regard to their rights, to ensure their human rights are respected, and to consult them when changes in systems are made.

PARTICIPATION OF QUEBEC

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian, a Quebecer and a Quebec-elected representative in this House, it was with considerable emotion and pride that I learned late last night that Canada's 11 First Ministers had reached an agreement in principle to bring Quebec into the Canadian Constitution.

After 10 hours of intense discussions, the First Ministers agreed to respond positively to Quebec's five prerequisite conditions. Moreover, this agreement in principle is consistent with the proposal submitted by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) to the provinces.

We should praise the many initiatives taken and the leadership shown by the Prime Minister of Canada in this matter, as well as the provincial Premiers' open-mindedness towards Quebec's conditions. April 30, 1987, which will remain from now on an important date in the history of our country, provides a beautiful conclusion to the 1982 incomplete efforts which had isolated Quebec from the rest of Canada.

Quebec joining the rest of the Confederation will truly make Canada a richer and more united country. The great and marvellous Canadian family welcomes Quebec!

CHALLENGE '87

DECREASED GRANTS TO GLENGARRY—PRESCOTT—RUSSELL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Last year, Mr. Speaker, my riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell received $378,997 under the Challenge 186 Program. This contribution was greatly appreciated by my constituents, for the unemployment rate in my riding was about 14 per cent. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Minister has decided this year to reduce this amount by some $100,000 to $283,990.

This decrease is altogether unacceptable, for the unemployment rate in my riding is higher now than it was last year. Glengarry—Prescott—Russell voters want to know what has happened to the $100,000 owed to their riding. Mr. Speaker, they want and need that money. The tourist office in my riding is about to close. A radio station will be unable to pay its employees holidays. Mr. Speaker, it is a catastrophe for my Glengarry—Prescott—Russell riding. I demand what we are entitled to. Glengarry—Prescott—Russell voters are entitled to their fair share, even under a Conservative Governent.

RESULT OF FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING—TRIBUTE TO PRIME MINISTER AND PREMIERS

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I stand as a Member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada in this Chamber today. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has concluded an historic constitutional agreement with the provincial Premiers. This is quite remarkable given Canada's history in this area. Congratulations and thank you, Mr. Prime Minister, for your leadership. Quebec's participation in the constitutional process fills a void and completes the process.

As a Nova Scotian, I am also proud of the pivotal role played by Premier Buchanan and other Atlantic premiers in these talks. Nova Scotians and Atlantic Canadians are proud of their political leaders.

To all our leaders I express congratulations for their maturity, sensitivity and determination. Finally, I welcome the Province, the Government and the people of Quebec as participating members in the constitutional process. You are an essential partner and indispensable part of the Canadian fabric. Once again, congratulations, Mr. Prime Minister. I look with even more enthusiasm to Canada's future.

ORGAN DONOR AWARENESS WEEK

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT URGED TO SIGN DONOR CARDS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday of this week, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) brought to the attention of this House the designation of this week as Organ Donor Awareness Week in Canada.

As members of the Canadian Medical Association, my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Bruce—Grey (Mr. Gurbin), the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin), the Hon. Member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) and I have made available to all Members an information package prepared by the CMA which encourages all Members of Parliament to play a leadership role by signing organ donor cards and encouraging their families and associates to do likewise.

As family physicians we are all aware of the life threatening situations which can be overcome through organ transplants. Donated hearts and livers can mean new and useful life to many facing certain death. The gift of a cornea can allow the blind to see again and skin transplants can mean less suffering for the severely burned.

A gift of life and renewed hope is yours to give and I urge all of you to consider signing and carrying with you an organ donor card. Do not stop there. Discuss the idea with family and friends, and pass along the message that we can all play a vital role in restoring health to many thousands of Canadians.

THE CONSTITUTION

RESULT OF FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER TABLE DOCUMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was an important day for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was a historic day for Canada.

[English]

I congratulate the Prime Minister and the Premiers for reaching an agreement which could mean that Quebec will formally sign the Constitution of Canada. This is significant and important. After all, my Party has taken a position in favour of further constitutional change to achieve this purpose. However, we do not know as yet exactly what was agreed to last night. Therefore, I want to ask the Prime Minister if he will table in this House immediately a document giving full details of exactly what was agreed to at the meeting last night at Meech Lake?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in regard to the question put by my hon. friend, I thought it was agreed among House Leaders that I would wait for the appearance of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition around 12.30 p.m., at which time the three Leaders would make statements with regard to this important matter.

However, I am happy to assure my hon. friend that any documentation with regard to last night's meeting will, of course, be made available. It was an agreement in principle on the important principles. Drafting instructions were given immediately to our respective officials which will translate, hopefully, into a constitutional amendment. At all times the House will be fully advised and there will be full opportunity for participation and debate on all aspects of any proposal.

QUERY CONCERNING DATE OF NEXT MEETING

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister inform the House when the next First Ministers' meeting will be scheduled to discuss the Meech Lake agreement? He promised to table a document, but when will the next meeting be held to discuss it?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last night I said my personal preference would be to have this meeting within the next few weeks. Some Premiers expressed theirs, saying they needed some time to consult their respective legislatures or the National Assembly, in the case of Quebec. In any case, I intend to ask the Premiers to meet as soon as possible to ratify this historic agreement.

• (1125)

IMPLEMENTATION OF MEECH LAKE AGREEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the information the Prime Minister has just given us about when the next meeting of First Ministers will be held, I want to ask him if he will give us more information today about the process that will be followed to implement the Meech Lake Agreement. There are documents setting out principles about which the Prime Minister has told us. We know that he will be making a statement later today in the House. However, the process is likely to be complex, and we would appreciate more details with respect to exactly what that process will be and of what it will consist.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I intend to touch upon the process in my remarks to the House at 12 noon or 12.30. Briefly, what is required is that, after drafting instructions have been given to our respective Attorneys General and officials, a meeting of First Ministers must take place to ratify and to ensure that that document faithfully reflects the agreement in principle. Resolutions then have to be placed before our respective Legislatures for debate and consideration, after which an official proclamation on behalf of the Parliament of Canada and the various legislatures will take place to give effect to the agreement that will be submitted to Parliament. Essentially, that is the procedure.

I tell my hon. friend that at all times there will be ample opportunity for all Members of the House to participate fully in what is an important dimension of nation-building for Canada, as the First Ministers themselves described it last night.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY WHEN DEBATE ON AMENDMENTS WILL BE HELD

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, as a proud Quebecer with a passionate faith in Canada, I am very pleased to see that apparently we have started to come out of the constitutional impasse, and I think that whatever is in Canada's interests should be welcomed without any hint of party politics.

As the Prime Minister just pointed out, the Constitution Act, 1981 provides that any amendment to the Constitution of Canada must be considered by Parliament. Could the Prime Minister inform the House today when the debate will take place?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously, as soon as possible, but at least two Premiers made it clear that they intended to submit everything to their respective legislatures for debate. I indicated that we should nevertheless act quickly to get everything finalized. I think that within the next few weeks, Parliament may be asked to consider all the relevant documentation.

SUGGESTIONS CONCERNING DEBATE ON CONSTITUTION

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): My thanks to the Prime Minister. Since there will be a debate in the House, there are two things we could do, and I would like to make a suggestion, with all due respect, to the Prime Minister and to the House. Perhaps it would be in Canada's interest, considering the widespread public interest in this matter, a foregone conclusion in Quebec, need I add, to take the following approach. First we could have a general debate to discuss the entire question, and this would be entirely aside from the obligation we have under the Constitution Act, 1981, to have debate. Subsequently we could have the regular, formal debate which could proceed very quickly when the time comes to sign. In this way, we could show the provinces that might still be somewhat reluctant the considerable support there will be in Parliament, and I don't think we should doubt the support is there until proven otherwise. When we look at all the details, the changes in the Senate and so on, it is clear that what we have here is history in the making, also thanks to previous action by the Prime Minister's predecessors—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: —and to the tremendous co-operation of the provincial Premiers, but I expect there may be some reluctance in some parts of the country.

Therefore, would the Prime Minister agree, in his wisdom, and I know he is wise in these matters—I try to be— that it might be wise to set the tone for the debate?

An Hon. Member: Say that again, please.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that was probably the greatest speech the Hon. Member has made since his comments on the agriculture question, which were brilliant as well. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made some excellent suggestions. I will look at them closely. I will discuss them with the Government House Leader, who will consult with his colleagues. One thing is certain: We intend to consider any suggestions that will enable Hon. Members and the House to be as actively involved as possible and will also enable the House to provide moral leadership for the country and for the other governments involved in the decision making process. I want to thank the Hon. Member for his comments.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

END OF MORATORIUM ON FORECLOSURES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the three party Leaders will be commenting at 12.30 p.m. on the successes of last night, let me simply say on behalf of my caucus that we recognize and appreciate the Prime Minister's hard work that resulted in an agreement yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: I would like to turn to another important issue at hand and that is, of course, as of this morning hundreds of farmers across Canada, perhaps in a sense thousands, will be concerned that now foreclosure proceedings will be initiated by the Farm Credit Corporation as a result of a decision taken by the Government.

In light of the fact that we spent three days and nights in a sense in debate and heard well over 100 Members of Parliament on all sides of the House, most of whom agree that there is a real crisis in the farm community for which we are seeking solutions, and in light of the fact that the farm crisis did not end with the debate, would the Prime Minister indicate now that his Government, sensitive to the concerns particularly of the western grain farmers, will reinstate the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right. We did have, I think, in many ways an historic debate that lasted over parts of four days which saw people participate from all 10 provinces right across the country. One of the most important contributions to that debate was made by the Prime Minister when he outlined the many initiatives that he has taken internationally.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: I think we all would agree that we are facing exceptional times in the Canadian grain and oil-seeds business, but from the many Members who spoke, the Hon. Member would have to agree that the Government has been responding in exceptional fashion to help Canadian farmers stay on their land.

Let me say that the Minister of Agriculture has put in place many things that will assist farmers who are in financial difficulties in dealing with the Farm Credit Corporation. None of us like to see personal hardship, but there are many programs that will assist people facing financial difficulties as a result of the exceptional times we face in agriculture.

ACTION TAKEN BY SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, can I suggest to the Hon. Minister that if he wants to help farmers who are experiencing crisis situations, particularly financially, the way to do it is to reinstate the moratorium which is exactly what happened 19 months ago. That is the way to bring relief to hard-pressed farmers experiencing financial problems.

A major concern expressed by Members on all sides of the House during the important debate—

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

Mr. Riis: It is part of the question—has to do with the fact that now the Government has sent a clear signal to the banks and other financial institutions that it is lifting the moratorium and will provide open season for the banks across Canada to start moving in on hard-pressed farmers.

Would the Minister of State for the Wheat Board rise and say that he is prepared to follow the example set by the Conservative Government in Saskatchewan? When it recognized there was a serious problem that Government decided to put a moratorium on all foreclosures, the Farm Credit Corporation, the banks—all lending institutions—so that we could keep the family farm in place during these difficult economic times.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Hon. Member is talking about. He does himself, his Party and Canadian farmers a disservice when he talks about sending signals of open season. That is simply not the case. He knows better than that.

Mr. Riis: He doesn't.

Mr. Mayer: Through the debate, if the Hon. Member had been listening, he would have found that there is a record amount of financial assistance going to farmers at a critical time of year. Just to say it again, $1.3 billion is going to western Canada between now and the end of May. That is a tremendous amount of money.

In terms of dealing with the situation, let me outline some of the things that have been done. There are shared risk mortgages available. We have commodity-based loans. The Farm Debt Review Boards are set up and there is a Rural Transition Program. For the first time ever we are breaking new ground in many of these areas. The Hon. Member will find that in a year from now many of those programs have worked extremely well to help farmers through a very difficult time.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET FARM ORGANIZATION LEADERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, let me come back to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister indicated in his speech the other day that when westerners call he will listen, take action and respond to their request whenever and wherever possible. The Prime Minister is going to western Canada next week. Will he make a commitment that when he goes there it will not be a PR exercise but that he will be sitting down discussing and negotiating with the leaders of the farm community and organizations of western Canada ways and means of resolving this very serious situation, not a PR exercise, but a working visit to western Canada to resolve this farm crisis?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have met with farm leaders on a regular basis. I believe—I may be wrong—that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I met groups in Vancouver, we had formal meetings in Ottawa and meetings with the farmers in Edmonton—I believe that I am the first Prime Minister in a long period of time to have met so regularly with farm leaders across Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: In terms of assistance to farmers, although I was not here yesterday, I was with my colleagues, of course, responding to requests for assistance. Sixty-four million dollars in federal assistance was granted yesterday for prairie grain farmers which was announced by the Minister of Transport. That is a pretty tangible further indication of our commitment to the well-being of farmers.

Mr. Riis: Are you going to meet with them?

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend asks if I am going to meet with farmers. It would never occur to me to go to western Canada and not meet with farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

SALE OF UNITED STATES WHEAT TO U.S.S.R.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for the Wheat Board. The House knows that this is black Friday. This is the day that the Government is starting to foreclose on thousands of farmers with FCC loans.

Yesterday the United States announced it was selling some four million tonnes of wheat to Russia under the Export Enhancement Program under which, last fall, the United States Government offered a subsidy of some $20 a tonne to the Russians. We can only assume that the Americans now are making this same offer, perhaps more. With this news, which is bound to depress world grain prices for all farmers including Canadian farmers, will the Government agree to giving a commitment to the farmers, or when the Prime Minister is in the west next week, to a deficiency payment and calling off the foreclosures today?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, there are so many questions to answer. Let me see if I can address the export enhancement sales to the Soviet Union. The Hon. Member will know that Canada, with the assistance of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, last year signed a five-year 25 million tonne grain deal with the Soviet Union. We are selling what we hope will be very close to a record amount of grain to the Soviet Union this year. We are doing very well selling.

Let me put it in context if I can. Two years ago the Americans sold six million tonnes of wheat to the Soviet Union. This year so far they have not sold any. For the Americans to sell to the Soviet Union is something we think that is normal given the fact that they have been major suppliers to the Soviet Union in the past.

Instead of having a black cloud over our heads—the Hon. Member talks about black Friday—there may be some optimism if the Hon. Member would want to look. To the extent that the Americans have sold a considerable amount of grain, it may take some pressure off the market and we may see an improvement in it. There is room for optimism in this announcement if the Hon. Member would want to take the little black cloud away from his head and look for something positive.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1140)

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, there is certainly a black cloud over the heads of the 6,000 FCC mortgage holders who are two years in arrears this morning, with the foreclosures going ahead.

U.S. EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday we learned that the United States is putting in place new measures under its Export Enhancement Program to subsidize 1.2 million tonnes of barley to Saudi Arabia which, as the Minister knows, is a traditional Canadian market. This could cost Canadian farmers some $75 million to $85 million in sales.

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs call in the United States Ambassador to see that the United States will stop this raiding of traditional Canadian markets with its Export Enhancement Program?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we do that on a regular basis. The Hon. Member will be pleased to know that we have already communicated with the Americans to let them know our concern in this area. The Hon. Member will also know that so far it is a rumour of an offer which has not been accepted.

The other interesting point to note in the over-all exchange—and perhaps the Hon. Member could choose to be a little optimistic—is that the Americans are basically sold out of barley. Unless there is something additional to the rumours, which there very well may be, we really do not see that this will have much of an over-all effect on the market, except to say again that it looks like—because of the good selling efforts of the Canadian Wheat Board and the support of the Government for the board in selling—and this is in direct contrast to what happened in the early seventies with the LIFT program—Canada has the potential this year to export a record amount of grain. Again, this is a certain amount of good news to Canadian farmers.

INTERNATIONAL NEGOTIATIONS ON MARKETING OF GRAIN

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board has told us on many occasions, as have the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that Canada is hoping to get out of the grain war situation and depressed prices through international negotiations.

I am trying to be optimistic this morning, despite the announcement of the Soviet purchase from the Americans. However, can any of those Ministers point out to me or give me some hard news that will tell me that these international talks, in which they have engaged, will be completed faster than three years to five years?

I note, for instance, that many of the initiatives do not even include the Americans and the Europeans who are the main players in the problem.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there has already been some movement in the common agricultural program of the European Economic Community; not as much as we would like to see, but some movement is better than none. There used to be none, and now there has been some movement in certain commodities away from their protectionist practices.

The Government has taken a very active lead under the direct and personal direction of the Prime Minister to force the issue at virtually every international conference and, when there is not an international conference that month, to call one.

There will be a meeting here in Ottawa later this month, presided over by the Minister for International Trade, of the so-called Cairns Group of Fair Traders in Agriculture. We will continue to maintain pressure there.

We have agriculture under the GATT. It was not under the GATT before. We hope we can make progress within the time limits the Hon. Member mentioned toward some solution of this cycle of subsidy which is the principal cause of the devastation and the uncertainty being faced by Canadian farmers today.

Mr. Althouse: I thank the Hon. Minister for that answer.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO GRAIN PRODUCERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, given that the Minister admits that it will be three to five years before such an international agreement could optimistically be possible, what financial assistance is the Government offering Canadian grain producers across the country to keep them competitive with their American and European competitors?

It will be at least three to five years before we can stop this stupid trade war which has been going on. The Cairns Group does not even include the Europeans and the Americans, so I think our producers want to know whether they will still be in business by the time the trade war has been brought to an end and there is grain peace in the world.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are two ways one can approach difficult problems. One can sit back and complain and trivialize the progress that has been made, and that is the position of the NDP.

The Hon. Member just got up and attempted to trivialize the fact that $1.3 billion will be in the hands of Canadian producers by the end of this month. That is not trivial; that is a very major contribution to Canadian producers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There was a day when the socialist Party believed in trying to take action internationally to solve problems. The Government is doing that now, doing that with effect, doing that with the United States, doing that with the European Economic Community, but not limiting ourselves to those major nations. The Government is also joining into active partnership with other countries like us—with Thailand, with Argentina, and with other nations which share our view that we must work together to break the cycle of subsidies.

AGRICULTURE

LIFTING OF MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He has surely been very busy over these last few days, and the announcement by the Minister of Agriculture that the moratorium on farm foreclosures was being lifted must have escaped his attention. So I would like to ask him whether he thinks that is the kind of signal we should be sending financial institutions at this point, whether that is the kind of support we want to give the farm community by sending as of today bailiffs to seize their lands, thereby causing a farm exodus.

I will therefore ask the Prime Minister whether he will consider discussing this anew with his Minister of Agriculture and tell him that his announcement makes no sense?

[English]

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that it did not escape the attention of the Prime Minister. He was here very early on Wednesday morning and played a major part in the debate.

Mr. Mazankowski: Where were you?

Mr. Mayer: As a result of that his Leader showed up.

Mr. McDermid: He got your Leader out of bed, and Broadbent was right behind him.

Mr. Mayer: Let me also say, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Agriculture has put in place many, many mechanisms to help farmers who find themselves in a period of financial difficulty and unable to meet their commitments with the Farm Credit Corporation. They are not treated summarily.

One of the reasons they are in this problem is the high interest rate policy followed by the previous Government. That is something we have addressed and now have interest rates down to an eight-year low as far as the Farm Credit Corporation is concerned.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT'S ALLEGED CONTRADICTORY ATTITUDE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister's comments will bring no comfort whatsoever to those who will be expecting the bailiffs over the coming weeks.

If there are as many programs as he suggests, and if there is as much help available to farmers, why is he then lifting the moratorium at this point? If, as he suggests, the farm industry has no problem why will he be foreclosing on thousands of farm loans? The question is: why is the Government sending conflicting signals? On the one hand, it says it has programs to help the farmers, and on the other it is sending bailiffs after them.

[English]

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, people in the farming community know that the Government is not sending out contradictory signals. They know that the Government is standing with them in an extraordinary time with some extraordinary measures. That is what people in the farm community know.

If the Hon. Member looks at the cases—and, if he has cases in his own riding, I am sure the Minister of Agriculture and I will be more than willing to look at them—he will find that one of the reasons, if he has some constituents in trouble, is the high interest rates when he was part of a Government which let the rates for farm improvement loans go way above 20 per cent.

RAILWAYS

GRAIN FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is either for the Minister of Transport or for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board.

Yesterday the Minister of Transport announced a 6 per cent increase in grain freight rates to be paid by grain producers. During the Crow rate debate, the Tories gave the impression that they would keep rates down for producers, and last year they froze those rates.

Why is the Government now reneging and raising freight rates?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the hon. gentleman asked that question. It is just as accurate and informative as are most of these questions.

Yesterday we announced an 18 per cent decrease from the freight rate paid by producers of grain in the year 1984-85 just before we came to power. After three years, we have reduced the price of grain to the prairie producers by 18 per cent and yesterday's announcement, together with the $64 million in assistance, will help them in their grain transportation costs. In the preceding two years, the rate—I do not have the exact figures here—was $5 and in this present crop year it is $5.97.

• (1150)

I believe our record shines in comparison with the record of any other Government of Canada. We have never had an NDP Government so we could see how dismal and abysmal their record would be.

INQUIRY CONCERNING GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the farmers will not see one penny of that $64 million of which the Minister is speaking. Most of the Tory Members who spoke in the recent debate committed the Government to assist the grain producers. Is this increase in freight rates a signal of the kind of assistance we can expect, the kind of assistance the Government will be giving to grain producers in the next year?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a signal of the Government's continuing interest in and support for the farmers of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The facts are that when our predecessors in the Liberal administration had the House pass the Western Grain Transportation Act, they projected that this year freight rates to the producers would be $13.67 under their legislation. Instead of that, the cost will be $6.32 as a result of our actions. Compare that to the fact that in 1984-85 the cost to the producer was $7.70, and $6.32 from $7.70 shows a considerable improvement of $1.38 per tonne. Still the hon. gentleman is not satisfied to do anything but complain rather than supporting the Government and encouraging it in what it is trying to do.

ENERGY

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On April 24, Amoco Canada wrote to at least one hopeful bidder on Dome Petroleum to try to intimidate that party into not making a bid for Dome Petroleum. The Minister's own officials were briefed over the Easter weekend as to the fact that letter would be sent.

Why is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources condoning this intimidation by Amoco Canada of potential bidders? Will the Minister not tell Amoco Canada and Dome Petroleum that the Government wants to review all possible bidders as soon as possible?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, under Canadian law, the Government is apprised through Investment Canada of take over proposals by corporations with foreign majority control. I repeat that through Investment Canada, this Government has received no proposal whatsoever at this time, so we are unable to take a position on a non-existing proposal.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION ON PROPOSED PURCHASE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, Amoco Corporation of Chicago will not allow its subsidiary Amoco Canada to issue one share to Canadians because it wants to retain 100 per cent interest in Amoco Canada so it can qualify for extensive tax benefits in the United States. How can the Minister allow Canadians to give away their resources without even getting equity just to allow an American multinational to get tax benefits in the United States? The Minister said that this deal would be good for Canada. How can he say that this is good for Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat once more that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is unable to make a judgment on a proposal that has not yet been received. But I can assure the Hon. Member that when the Government receives a proposal, either by Amoco or any other corporation with which Dome Petroleum is interested in reaching an agreement, this Government will take its responsibilities and ensure that Canadian interests are well represented and defended.

IMMIGRATION

LANGUAGE TRAINING FOR IMMIGRANT WOMEN

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration. Last week I was pleased to be able to accompany the Minister on a visit to Mosaic in Vancouver to see in action the important impact that the pilot program of English-language training for immigrant women was having in aiding these women to contribute to Canadian society, a program which had been recommended by committees of this House. However, funding for this pilot project and others ended yesterday.

Given the very beneficial impact of this program, particularly in British Columbia, will the Minister undertake to find funds to establish these programs on an ongoing basis in order to ensure that immigrant women have access to language training? This training makes such a tremendous difference in their futures and their children's futures in their new homeland.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, last month I visited a number of these projects not only in British Columbia but indeed in Ontario, Manitoba, and Alberta last month. I am excited by the progress the program has made and by the tremendous contribution it has had in integrating new Canadians into society and particularly members of target groups like women and seniors. I would like to commend the former Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, for putting this program into place. An evaluation is being done to see what the result has been and I can assure the Hon. Member that we will indeed try to find a way to continue the program in one form or another.

ENERGY

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO OF CANADA

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Government has stressed that it wants an open private-sector solution to the Amoco-Dome situation. How can this be possible if Dome and Amoco are preventing details from reaching the public and competitors, details that would permit them to make public bids that would be preferable?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we as a Government, through the principles we put forward, the parameters we established, and our actions have ensured that, while six months ago the only question being put about Dome Petroleum was whether the corporation would fail, we are now being asked in this House how many people can make a bid for Dome Petroleum. That is as a result of this Government's efforts, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, given that the Government has already intervened to stop Petro-Canada from playing a role in this potential purchase, will the Government take action and use its leverage to see to it that the information which is required by TCPL and others to make a public bid is available to them in order to keep Dome a Canadian-controlled company?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government's guiding principles in this area are to ensure that the bids are made by the private sector in Canada, or the private sector in the United States or any other country that may be interested. We do not want the bids to come from Finance Canada. In that context, the Government made its views clearly known and Petro-Canada took them into account. In the area of business operations, the Government has always given Petro-Canada a free hand.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL BANKING CENTRES—COMMITTEE'S REPORT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who has now received the finance committee's report on international banking centres. Does the Minister plan to follow the committee's recommendation to delay the setting up of IBCs in Montreal and Vancouver in order to deal first with the question of withholding taxes, a significant disincentive to any new business that might otherwise be attracted to IBCs in Canada?

• (1200)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have the report here and I have read it. I do not see any recommendation by the committee which suggests that we delay, pending study of the withholding tax question. I should point out that the withholding tax agreements between Canada and other countries are the subject of substantial negotiations which can take a considerable period of time. Since the Government's intention is to proceed with the establishment of International Banking Centres in Montreal and Vancouver, and since, as I understand it, the committee acknowledges that there are certain comparative advantages for international business activity both in Montreal and Vancouver, I see every reason for continuing as we have set out.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the evidence received by the committee made it clear that the 15 per cent withholding tax and high operating costs associated with it are the main barriers to Canada's further increasing its participation in international banking. If the Government is serious why not deal with this situation? Or, is the Minister saying he was not seriously interested in increasing international banking and that the limited Ways and Means motion we have before us was simply a public relations exercise for Montreal and Vancouver?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is far from what the Hon. Member has suggested. The committee has made two recommendations. One is to the effect that we should consider broadening the proposal. I think we have had a sufficient degree of discussion on whether or not it should be broadened. Our proposal is for loans and deposits and I believe that is sufficient.

The second recommendation deals with withholding taxes. I have been quite interested in the media conclusions drawn from this report. I think they reflect possible leaks of what the report was going to say rather than what it actually did say. I am not turning down out of hand what the report has said on withholding taxes. We will look at that and see whether there are ways of broadening our withholding tax agreements with other countries. However, I repeat what I said in my first answer: I do not believe that is a reason for delaying the Ways and Means motion now before the House.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

POSSIBLE BREACH OF LAW

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Attorney General of Canada. Yesterday the Information Commissioner revealed that following a complaint of possible political interference by the Prime Minister's Office in the release of information from the Department of External Affairs she turned over to the Minister evidence of a possible breach of the law. Can the Minister now confirm that he ordered an RCMP investigation into this possible breach, and will he explain to the House the precise nature of the alleged obstruction by the PMO apparently in relation to the Prime Minister's Asian travel expenses?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I of course was not at the committee meeting. The Hon. Member was. I have not seen the transcript. I have only seen press reports this morning and I am not clear as to what actually transpired with respect to relating specific instances to allegations by the Hon. Member.

Let me say this. It is not my practice, and I think the Hon. Member would agree that this is a proper approach for an Attorney General, to comment on investigations by the RCMP. I can tell the Hon. Member only that if such a circumstance were to arise I would immediately turn the matter over to the RCMP. The reality is that the RCMP are very jealous of their right to bring forward charges under any federal statute on the basis of their investigation. I can say that since I have been Attorney General there have been no charges laid by the police with respect to any aspect of the Access to Information legislation.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister will of course know that the Information Commissioner continues to investigate this matter and may be issuing subpoenas to officials of the Prime Minister's Office.

REPORTED INVESTIGATION BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): My supplementary is directed to the Solicitor General as the Minister responsible for the RCMP. Is he prepared to turn over all the evidence gathered by the RCMP about this possible obstruction by the PMO to the Attorney General of Ontario—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: —to avoid any possible perception of conflict which may arise from the Minister of Justice—

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Robinson: —which may arise from the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The master of innuendo. No wonder your Party is ashamed of you.

Mr. Robinson: —reviewing allegations of a possible breach of the law by the Prime Minister, his boss?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it amazes me that the Hon. Member continues to be the justice critic for the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The basic principle here is that one does not comment on these matters while they are under investigation. I want to give the Hon. Member this assurance. If there was a complaint against him involving an investigation by the RCMP I would refuse to answer on the floor of this House or outside this House as to the existence of the investigation. I believe every Canadian citizen is entitled to have their rights protected. If the NDP wants to involve itself in sleazy and underhanded accusations with respect to the integrity of the RCMP, it rests on their head. I wish the Leader of the NDP would show some leadership.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CONTRACT AWARDED TO ASTRA MÉCANIQUE—INQUIRY WHY COMPETITORS NOT INVITED TO SUBMIT BIDS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services and relates to a contract award.

Why did the Government of Canada not call for tenders before awarding a $680,000 contract to Astra Mécanique of Ville Saint-Laurent in April 1987 for the supply and installation of laundry equipment, especially considering the fact that certain competitors, like Laval's Équipements Calmek, had been previously assured that they would be invited to submit bids? Why were competitors not invited to submit bids, at least the other four from Quebec?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I received the letter of the firm's president. I answered yesterday and told him I intend to review this case personally.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: I am sure it will all come out in the wash.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE DOCUMENTATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister completes her inquiry concerning the untendered contract for laundry equipment will she consent now to table the results of that inquiry in the House of Commons so that all Members can be apprised of the reasons which led officials of her department or others to give this contract for $680,000 in that unusual manner, that being an untendered contract?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): As I just said, Mr. Speaker, I will review this case personally because I want to make sure the rules and procedure have been properly followed. I will be pleased to convey the results to Hon. Members.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the House that in view of some delays in Question Period I would ask its patience to extend Question Period for another minute or two. I am going to call on the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville, and the last question will be from the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park.

Oral Questions

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—LICENSING OF AZT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As he knows, there are now 1,000 cases of AIDS in Canada. Yet Dr. Solder of McMaster University says Canada has been less expedient than other countries in the licensing of azidothymidine or AZT. As of today no new patients will be treated with AZT.

My question is very simple. What is the hold-up and when is the licensing going to be provided so that AIDS patients will have access to at least that treatment?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that the Government of Canada has been very diligent in trying to provide AZT for clinical trial as well as for compassionate trial.

• (1210)

When discussions with Burroughs Wellcome were started one of the concerns was the matter of protection of patent in Canada, which relates to Bill C-22 which his Party strongly opposed. He cannot have it both ways. That is an example of why we need that type of legislation. With the Hon. Member's background he will know of the side effects of AZT. There are also toxicity and other issues which I will not go into.

The point is that we have had discussions with Burroughs Wellcome. The present circumstances will remain in effect until May 15. I have been informed by my officials as late as this morning that they believe that along with Burroughs Wellcome there will be a regime in place which will allow anyone who now has access to AZT to maintain that access after the middle of this month.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows very well that Bill C-22 has not a thing to do with the licensing of that drug. He knows as well that the same side effects are experienced in Africa, France, Israel and all around the world, so he should not use that excuse.

COST OF TREATMENT FOR PATIENTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows very well that it will cost $10,000 per patient. At this stage I will accept his assurance that something will be finally done by the 15th. Have arrangements been made to provide the money necessary to ensure that those patients will have AZT available to them at the expense of Governments rather than their personal expenditures?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Member can say what he will. He knows very well that the companies which have put a lot of money into the development of new drugs want protection of their intellectual property. To put it any other way is simply not to deal with reality.

The Member should also know that his Party and Canadians in general, as they are entitled to, do not want the Minister of National Health and Welfare to interfere in the process of clinical trials in order for a notice of compliance to be issued. He knows that. He will argue the exact opposite position with me on another drug tomorrow.

We know that AZT has had some positive effects in terms of prolonging the lives of AIDS patients and have therefore not been reluctant or dragging our feet. That is why the discussions are taking place.

With regard to pricing, when we started with AZT the cost was $25,000 per year. It is now in the $10,000 range. If we go the American route and give the product a licence the patient will be totally responsible. However, the Member will not say that. He does not like to say those things.

We are working on a regime under which the patient will be covered under Canada's universal health system. That is the point which the Hon. Member should make. He should not put forward points which he knows are patently wrong.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond, one question, and then the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park.

INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF TRENTON CAR WORKS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue and is with regard to the meeting which took place this morning between himself, the Premier of Nova Scotia, and the Right Hon. Prime Minister with regard to the Trenton Car Works.

Can the Minister indicate to the House what plan of action has been consummated by the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia in order to bring relief to the workers at that facility? While he is on his feet, would he also indicate the time frame within which they will be able to make a concrete announcement to the people of the Trenton Car Works?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me to respond although this is not within my ministerial responsibility, I am very glad to assure my colleague from Nova Scotia that it was a very satisfactory meeting. Substantial progress was made and I feel quite certain that we will have a positive announcement within a few weeks.

HUMAN RIGHTS

UKRAINIAN DISSIDENT DANYLO SHUMUK—POSSIBLE ISSUANCE OF EXIT VISA

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will know that Ukrainian dissident Danylo Shumuk was recently released after spending 38 years imprisoned in Soviet gulags for his activities on behalf of fundamental human rights in Ukraine. Earlier this week there were reports that Soviet officials are finally prepared to issue Shumuk an exit visa following years of representations and a personal intervention by the Minister during his 1985 visit to the Soviet Union.

As Shumuk has relatives in Canada who are anxious for him to join them here, can the Minister confirm whether the reports on Shumuk are true? If so, will he be allowed to come to Canada? Will the Minister assure Canadians that the Government will continue its leading role in pressing the Soviet Union to respect human rights and to release the thousands of political prisoners, dissidents and refusniks, still imprisoned by Soviet authorities?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome that question. I think all Members of this House will welcome the fact that I am able to confirm that Danylo Shumuk will be released from the Soviet Union. We expect that the exit visa will be granted in the very near future. That is important news, not only for the family of Danylo Shumuk, but also to the very many Members of Parliament and very many Canadians across the country who have taken a personal and active interest in his case.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that we will continue to work in other cases as we have in the case of Danyl Shumuk to seek the freedom from imprisonment of those citizens of the Soviet Union who want to leave that country and come to be with their families here in Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as was indicated earlier, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is not available at the present time. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be making a statement on the results of the discussions yesterday with the 10 Premiers. Might we agree to proceed with Routine Proceedings with the understanding that at approximately 12.30 we will revert to Statements by Ministers to hear the statement of the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the responses of the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the NDP. I think that has been agreed to by all Parties.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) for his courtesy in this matter. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is driving back to Ottawa from Montreal in order to respond to the statement given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He should be here shortly. I am very happy to confirm the arrangements which the Deputy Prime Minister has just mentioned.

In addition, there may be a disposition of the House to continue sitting past the ordinary time of adjournment for lunch, if necessary, in order that all three Party Leaders may have their remarks on the record without interruption.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I understand from discussions with our House Leaders that the suggestions made by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the House Leader for the Liberal Party are agreeable to our Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to the suggestions of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the House Leader of the Official Opposition?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present 18 petitions, 17 of which are signed by hundreds of residents of Winnipeg, and deal with Bill C-22. They state that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

I have another petition on the same subject signed by residents from towns of Garson, Erickson, East Selkirk and Selkirk in Manitoba. They state, whereas the proposed measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis, and whereas the proposal of the federal Government will result in higher costs to provincial government drug plans, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have five petitions today. The undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance common to your petitioners state that the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from less costly generic products. This will result in an increase of drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of many people to buy the drugs they need. They also state that the proposed changes to the Patent Act will directly affect all Canadians who are not protected by private or governmental medicare programs; that the Federal Government's proposals will raise the cost, already high, of the provincial health care programs; and that the changes to the Patent Act proposed in Bill C-22 are another example of the Canadian Government's concession to the free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of ordinary consumers.

Wherefore, the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase drug prices for Canadians.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOM

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present several petitions from residents of the federal constituency of Yorkton—Melville, including the Towns of Kansack, Wroxton, Pelly, Verigin. They are petitioning the House to support Motion M-37, allowing unborn babies to be protected by the Charter of Rights.

[Translation]

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition signed by 488 residents of my consituency who support Motion No. 37, the Private Members' Bill whose purpose is to include the rights of the foetus in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

[English]

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition duly certified, signed by some 40 St. Catharines residents petitioning Parliament to support Motion M-37 with a view to protecting unborn children under the Charter of Rights.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have 21 petitions to table today. They are signed by residents from Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

Whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private or governmental medicare programs; and whereas the federal Government's proposals will raise the already high cost of provincial health care programs; and whereas the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase in drug costs and prices, and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs; and whereas the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian Government's concession in the free trade negotiations with the United States at the expense of everyday Canadians, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposals of Bill C-22 for the negative effects it will have on Canadians, particularly the senior citizens and the poor of this country.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—MEECH LAKE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise to report to the House on the meeting of First Ministers yesterday at Meech Lake. I am honoured to inform the House that at about 10 p.m last night the Premiers and I reached unanimous agreement in principle on a constitutional package which will allow Quebec to rejoin the Canadian constitutional family.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This agreement enhances the Confederation bargain and strengthens, I believe, the federal nature of Canada. Although it remains to be formalized, it represents in the judgment of First Ministers from all political stripes and from all areas of the country an historic accomplishment.

The Meech Lake Agreement springs from the Canadian tradition of honourable compromise and is a tribute to the statesmanship and leadership that all First Ministers demonstrated yesterday at Meech Lake. Our task, simply put, was to settle a constitutional impasse which was incompletely resolved in 1981. Our task was to attempt to reconcile Quebec's distinct needs with the interests of all other provinces and the good of the country as a whole.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, at this time I am pleased to table the statement of principles that constitute the Meech Lake Agreement.

The essence of the agreement is as follows: We agreed to recognize the distinctiveness Quebec brings to Canada, which includes within it two main linguistic communities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We agreed to give constitutional protection to an expanded immigration agreement with Quebec and to enter into accords with other provinces, appropriate to their circumstances.

We agreed to entrench the Supreme Court of Canada and the requirement that at least three of the nine justices appointed be from Quebec, and to provide for provincial involvement in Supreme Court appointments.

We agreed that reasonable compensation be granted to provinces that do not participate in future national shared-cost programs in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if they undertake their own initiatives or programs compatible with national objectives.

We agreed that all provinces must approve changes to national institutions under Section 42 of the 1982 Constitution act, and that the Government of Canada will provide reasonable compensation in all cases where a province opts out of an amendment transferring provincial jurisdiction to Parliament.

[English]

We agreed that there will be annual First Ministers' Conferences on the Constitution and that the first will be held before the end of 1988 to discuss Senate reform, the fisheries and other items to be agreed upon. Until Senate reform is achieved appointments to the Senate will be made by the federal Government from lists of candidates furnished by the provinces. We are also entrenching in the Constitution the annual First Ministers' Conference on the Economy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Meech Lake Agreement is good for Canada, and good for Canadians.

It will unblock the constitutional reform process and enable Canadians to turn their attention to other issues such as Senate reform and fisheries.

Mr. Speaker, this agreement represents the best features of a vital federal system, one which I believe responds to the aspirations of Canadians in every corner of the country.

It reflects a spirit of partnership—and not one of endless federal-provincial power struggles.

• (1240)

[English]

The work of nation-building goes on. Shortly, officials will begin drafting a constitutional text which will reflect the Meech Lake Agreement. I shall be convening a conference of First Ministers within weeks, the purpose of which will be to seek formal agreement. On the assumption that a formal agreement is reached at the conference, the constitutional amending process will proceed. An amending resolution will be tabled in Parliament and in the legislative assembly of each province. Proclamation will follow once all the resolutions have been approved.

Mr. Speaker, Sir Wilfrid Laurier once said:

> The governing motive of my life has been to harmonize the diverse elements which compose our country.

Surely, that is the wish of every Member on all sides of the House. That is our policy, our purpose—building a stronger Canada for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, first I congratulate the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) as well as Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa and the other provincial premiers for their constructive work and the result achieved yesterday.

It is a happy day for Canada and for Quebec, particularly for all those who believed that our country would remain united by respecting the diversity of its regions and the equality of its citizens.

I have always believed that it was essential to the future of our country that Quebec be a major and leading partner of the Canadian Federation and a full-fledged participant in its evolution.

That is what I stated in an interview with Le Devoir in June 1986, and what has led the Liberal Party of Canada to adopt, at its convention last November a clear position on the place of Quebec within the constitutional agreement of 1982.

I must tell the House that the constructive work of the Liberal Opposition and of the New Democratic Party did contribute to create a favourable atmosphere and context for agreement.

Our Party held a democratic debate on a resolution dealing with each point of the agreement, and thus we showed that a national Party, with representatives of all regions of Canada, could reach a firm consensus which could be a reasonable basis for an agreement.

In addition, we refrained from politicizing this question in the House of Commons. I, as much as the Members of the Official Opposition and the New Democrats purposely avoided embarrassing the Government about this issue. We knew that the provincial premiers and the representatives of the Canadian Government were studying the views set forth by Quebec, and that it was desirable that the interests of the country take precedence over partisan considerations.

Also, we must admit that Quebec is led by a Government which is openly federalist, nationalist but federalist, and which believes in the future of our country. It is a Government which is inspired by positive nationalism, which is aware that there is a way to conciliate and reconcile the objectives of the preservation and defence of the French language and culture while guaranteeing minority rights.

I was also advised that the Premier of Ontario played a leading role in the definition of a consensus, a fact I should like to emphasize in this House.

I just heard about the agreement—I didn't have time to read the text on my way back from Montreal this morning—so I am not in a position to comment on the contents. However, I will say that recognition of Canada's linguistic duality, of Quebec's distinct position as the main, but not exclusive, source of French language and culture in this country, and of the multicultural character of Canadian society would seem to be a sound foundation on which to build our future.

A more specific definition of powers with respect to immigration will guarantee that Quebec and other provinces, if they so desire, will be in a position to enhance the balance between language groups.

The amending formula should also be changed to provide explicit guarantees that the status of federal institutions will not be modified without the consent of Quebec and the other provinces. In other words, the national interest must be served.

I would have to read the text. Perhaps the formula is too rigid for the future. We will have to look at this very closely.

We have recognized that spending authority is also a major concern. We intend to take a positive approach to the proposed text, while bearing in mind that because of this authority, Canada has today a social security and income support system that is among the most progressive in the world and the envy of many countries.

We shall therefore wish to ensure that nothing in the future will prevent the Government of Canada from improving the lot of medium-and low-income Canadians and to take action to guarantee greater social justice and equal opportunities for all Canadians.

The history of our country shows that our nation has evolved thanks to the reasonable nature of the aspirations of its citizens and the legitimate claims of both federal and provincial Governments.

This agreement will not be the last in our history. More progress can be achieved in relation with Senate reform and a clearer definition of some of the powers shared by the two levels of Government.

However, we recognize that, by taking its rightful place at the constitutional table, Quebec will continue to act as a catalyst for change and progress, and that there is some hope a better definition of the status of native Canadians can finally be achieved.

It is in this spirit, Mr. Speaker, that we shall take part in the coming debate on the resolution which must be passed by this House to implement the agreement reached by the Prime Minister of Canada and the provincial premiers.

[English]

In commending the Prime Minister and his colleagues, the First Ministers of the provinces, I want to say to him that the work accomplished yesterday was encouraging and constructive for the country. Bringing Quebec into our constitutional fabric, fully into the Canadian family, was an objective worth his time and worth the time of the First Ministers. We are very encouraged by the result.

I have not had an opportunity, nor have my colleagues, to study the text. As I said in French, I came back from Montreal when I learned that the Prime Minister would be making a statement this morning. We will, of course, have some questions to put to him and to the Government.

We are concerned, first, about the limitations on the spending power. Do they preclude national programs? Does this mean that in future a national child care program is impossible? What about a guaranteed annual income? Would medicare have been possible under the agreement now contemplated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the provincial Premiers, or unemployment insurance for that matter? We will want to study the text of the spending power very carefully.

How will the expansion of opting out with compensation affect the quality of services and the uniformity of services in Canada? Who will decide national objectives? Senate reform will now require unanimous approval. Maybe the amending formula, even affecting federal institutions, will be too tight and too rigid. Until that formula is resolved, of course, and until Senate reform becomes a fact, we now understand that the provinces will submit lists of potential Senators to the Prime Minister. There are a lot of sad faces over there, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think they have taken it very well this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Are we now, however, in a constitutional strait-jacket? Will we ever really see Senate reform? Will we ever see an elected Senate under the formula agreed upon between the Prime Minister and the provincial Premiers?

We will want to study, the language of the distinctive character of Quebec. Will it be in the preamble? Will it be in the body of the Constitution? Do we yet know how widely it will influence the interpretation of that Constitution?

The Prime Minister seems to have accommodated many provincial concerns. That is the reason for the success, I am sure, of the negotiations. We will want to know from him what the federal Government got in return and what it sought. Did it seek changes to Section 23, the minority language rights feature of the Charter? Did it seek to eliminate the "notwithstanding clause", Section 33? If these questions were not raised at Meech Lake, will they be raised before the final deal is signed?

The Constitution requires, obviously, parliamentary assent to the text as it is eventually drafted. The Prime Minister must bring that before Parliament, as the Premier of Quebec must bring it before the Assemblée Nationale and as the other provincial premiers must bring it before their respective legislatures.

Will this Parliament have an opportunity to debate these issues before the final test is negotiated and signed? It is clear that Parliament will have to approve whatever the final text is in order to give it constitutional validity, as will provincial legislatures. My question to the Prime Minister, which we will pursue over the forthcoming days is, will this Parliament have an opportunity for some input into the final text before it is finally signed?

That being said, Mr. Speaker, it is a notable day for Canada. The Prime Minister deserves to enjoy his weekend, despite some of the events that will be happening; but for today it is a very significant accomplishment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as someone who has participated in this House in the process of constitutional change in recent years, I do know something about the immense difficulties, in a country of our nature, that are involved for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the other Premiers of our nation. I too want to begin my comments by complimenting the Prime Minister and the Premiers for reaching an Accord that I hope will be seen, after final analysis, to be something that all of Canada can cherish.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Constitutional change is always a difficult process, especially in our country with its great economic and cultural diversity. In Canada, we must be sensitive to the needs of assuring adequate powers to provincial governments so that they can meet the needs of their quite different regions.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, there is a crucial necessity of ensuring that the power and the authority of the central Government is fully adequate, not only to carry out certain national functions important to all Canadians now, but also to be sufficient to enable the Government of Canada to initiate for the future in ways that can make our country even better. The need for a national child care program is a perfect current illustration of this point.

[Translation]

All Canadians know that the Premiers had the important and very special task of agreeing on proposals which would open the door to Quebec, the only province not to have signed the 1982 constitutional agreement.

The unique character of Quebec in Canada, the only province where the language and culture of the majority are French, is a fact which enriches the lives not only of Quebecers, but of all Canadians.

This fact must be recognized in the Canadian Constitution. Such is the policy of my Party.

[English]

The Prime Minister and the Premiers therefore had a very challenging task before them. All Canadians, I am sure, were pleased to hear that an agreement in principle was reached at Meech Lake last evening. The coming together of the Canadian family is desired by us all in this House and by all Parties and regions in our country. I compliment the Prime Minister and the Premiers representing such diverse regions, cultures and political Parties in reaching that agreement in principle.

I hope, like all Canadians, that when we see the fine print and study its implications our initial, genuine pleasure at the news of an accord will be sustainable. The Prime Minister will understand that my withholding of a complete endorsation of the agreement at this point is not at all churlish in nature, but rests entirely on the responsibility of my Party to study the details and the implications of what has been agreed upon. I deeply hope that such study will warrant wholehearted endorsation.

I would like to conclude with reference to one item in particular. In the accord, as the Prime Minister knows, there is a proposal to put in the Constitution specific commitments to meetings of the First Ministers on Senate reform and on economic matters. As one Canadian, I regret the complete absence of any reference to our aboriginal peoples. There was a conference, as the Prime Minister knows, that took place not long ago in this city in which we as a country and as political Parties failed to meet the needs and legitimate aspirations of our aboriginal peoples. I had hoped that there would have been a reference in the document that had been agreed upon to a commitment to carry on with such conferences in the future until the legitimate aspirations of our aboriginal peoples have been met.

I conclude, as I began, on a positive note, Mr. Speaker. I congratulate the Prime Minister and the First Ministers on this new beginning, and hope that when we see the final wording it will be an historic day indeed, and one that all of us will be able to look back upon with pride and with pleasure.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the course of the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), he did make reference to the statement of principles arising out of the Meech Lake meeting yesterday and his willingness to table the draft of those principles.

With the permission of the House, I would be prepared to have these tabled and appended to Hansard.

[Editor's Note: For draft statement of principles referred to above, see Appendix].

• (1300)

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 23 minutes beginning at one o'clock p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 12 (Mr. Orlikow, p.4936).

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the House will recall, I was defending Motion No. 12 when the debate last ended some weeks ago, and I believe I have four or five minutes remaining.

I should like to remind the House what is at issue with Motion No. 12. Basically what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has in mind is commendable. In his motion he is proposing to put in place in Bill C-22 a recommendation of Mr. Eastman who, in his testimony before the committee, pointed out that there were three shortcomings in the legislation. I will just review them very quickly.

The first one in his opinion was that we should allow the research and development ratio of individual firms to be revealed. His suggestions were ways of improving the legislation, so he was hoping the R and D ratio would be revealed. The second one was that the board should remove, if need be, the exemption from compulsory licensing from all the patents of firms with excessive prices, a power which is not in Bill C-22. His third recommendation, with which the amendment deals specifically, was to reconsider the transitional arrangements and allow firms which have compulsory licences to exercise them when they receive a notice of compliance. This amendment proposes to do precisely that.

As you will know, Mr. Speaker, because you have been following the debate very carefully, 153 applications were caught when the Government decided to stop the issuance of further licences or notices of compliance beyond July 27 of last year. I believe I mentioned to the House earlier that one of those drugs was a generic drug to take the place of the ulcer drug Zantac.

I also pointed out some of the economic advantages to the users of such drugs.

The Canadian Association of Consumers and the New Democratic Party feel that it is unfair and unreasonable for these 153 applications for licence to be stopped simply by a ukase from the Minister performing the ancient function of his art. The result will be much higher drug prices for consumers who will not have access to these 153 generic drugs which were on their way to being made available to Canadian consumers.

Motion No. 12 would correct that situation and would allow all these 153 applications, which are part way through the system, to be accepted and to receive a licence or a notice of compliance to make them available to the public.

In closing, I point out to Hon. Members of the government Party, who do not seem to be too interested in supporting this motion up to this point in time, that in effect Bill C-22 is retroactive legislation. I remind the older members of the Government who were here during the last Parliament that they made that particular point loudly and clearly. They rang bells and stormed the Speaker's chair as a result of a retroactive clause which was as reprehensible when the Liberals did it as it is when the Conservatives are proposing to do it.

I hope they recall their earlier rationalization and apply it to clear up this shortcoming in the Bill and to do away with an attempt by the Government to introduce what is in effect retroactive legislation. I plead for support for Motion No. 12.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 12. Mr. Orlikow moved:

That Bill C-22 be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 11 to 14 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"licence has been issued in respect of the medicine or a notice of compliance in respect of the medicine has been issued to a person other than the patentee."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

Motion No. 14.

That Bill C-22 be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 41 to 49 at page 12 and lines 1 to 10 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"41.14(1) Notwithstanding anything in section 41 or in any licence granted under that section, where a patentee of an invention pertaining to a medicine gives notice in the form and manner prescribed to the Commissioner, within six months after

(a) the date on which this section comes into force, where the notice of compliance that is first issued in respect of the medicine is issued after June 27, 1986 and before the date on which this section comes into force, or

(b) the date of the notice of compliance that is first issued in respect of the medicine, where the notice of compliance is issued after the date on which this section comes into force, that the patentee intends to make the medicine in Canada for the purposes of completely or substantially supplying the Canadian market for that medicine, the Commissioner shall, by order, declare that this subsection applies in respect of the invention, and in such case, while the order remains in effect, no person shall, under a licence granted under section 41 in respect of a patent for an invention pertaining to the medicine, have or exercise any right,

(c) where the invention is a process, to use the invention for the preparation or production of medicine, or

(d) where the invention is other than a process, to make or use the invention for medicine or for the preparation or production of medicine for sale for consumption in Canada, until the expiration of 10 years after the date of the notice of compliance that is first issued in respect of the medicine.

(2) Every patentee who has given a notice to the Commissioner under Subsection (1) shall provide the Commissioner with

(a) in such form and manner and at such times and subject to such conditions as are prescribed, information and documents concerning the medicine-making activity to which the notice relates; and

(b) such additional information or documents with respect to the matter referred to in paragraph (a) as the Commissioner may require, within such time as the Commissioner may specify.

(3) Where, after providing every person against whom an order of the Commissioner under this subsection is proposed to be made with a reasonable opportunity to be heard, the Commissioner finds that a patentee in respect of a medicine

(a) has failed to provide information or documents in accordance with Subsection (2),

(b) has not commenced making in Canada the medicine that is the subject of the notice under Subsection (1) within two years after the date of the notice of compliance that was first issued in respect of the medicine, or

(c) after the two years referred to in paragraph (b), is not making in Canada the medicine that is the subject of the notice under Subsection (1) so as to completely or substantially supply the Canadian market for the medicine, the Commissioner may, by order, direct that, effective on the coming into force of the order, the prohibition set out in Subsection (1) ceases to apply in respect of the medicine and, in any case where paragraph (b) applies, the Commissioner may also by such order direct that the prohibition set out in subsection 41.11(1) ceases to apply in respect of the medicine effective on the coming into force of the order."

He said: Mr. Speaker, in my view this is a very important amendment. It might well be called the "Michel Côté clause" or, better still, the "C. Joe Stettler clause".

Everyone who has followed the progress of this Bill knows of the great changes which occurred over the summer of 1986 after the Bill was almost introduced by the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on June 27, 1986, and was finally introduced by the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) on November 7, 1986.

There were several changes to the Bill, and three of them significantly weakened it. What was dropped were the requirements of manufacturers to manufacture in Canada in order to keep exclusivity. The penalty clause was softened for excessive prices, and the criteria used by the drug prices review board were significantly weakened by making the costs of making and marketing drugs a secondary criterion for determining costs.

What our amendment does is bring back the original clause in its entirety. For those who would like to see a Canadian drug manufacturing industry as opposed to one that exclusively imports its active ingredients, this amendment is worthy of support.

Attention was drawn to the matter when C. Joe Stettler, the head of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of the United States, disclosed on The Journal television program that he knew the previous Bill had been substantially changed or "toned down", as he put it.

Since the interview had been filmed a week before Bill C-22 was introduced, the question naturally became, how did he know? The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs kept insisting that he had never met with or never heard of C. Joe Stettler, and neither had his department.

Of course C. Joe Stettler does not have to bother to know the Minister. He can simply get the same information through his client organization in Canada, the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada, which is well connected enough to hire the likes of Government Consultants International and even the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in the Liberal Government, Judy Erola, so that this information is supplied to him with no fuss or protocol.

However, the lasting impression about the incident is that the Bill is being significantly influenced, if not written, in the United States. The Minister can maintain, as he does, that he knows of no U.S. influence on him, but the features of the legislation have been so shaped that the benefits are accruing to U.S.-based companies and the costs are being paid by Canadians.

Let me digress for a moment to point out to the Minister the objections made to the Bill by hundreds of organizations representing hundreds of thousands of people, despite the protestations of the Minister that they did not really understand what was involved. Despite all the pledges of the Minister that this Bill when enacted would not substantially increase the cost of drugs to ordinary people, until today they have been rejected by most of those organizations.

• (1310)

I would like to read from a letter sent to the present Minister by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops. This letter was written on April 22, 1987, and the bishops had this to say:

On behalf of the Episcopal Commission for Social Affairs of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops we wish to express our concern over changes to the Drug Patent Act (Bill C-22).

We have followed the debate on this legislation and have noted that the pressure to change Canada's generic drug laws has not come from the people of this country. Indeed, national organizations representing thousands of Canadians from virtually all sectors of society have been unanimous in calling upon your Government not to proceed with the proposed legislation.

> We add our voice to that call because we believe that this legislation, if enacted, would have detrimental effects on average Canadians, especially on the elderly and the poor. Thanks in large part to existing drug patent legislation, Canadians enjoy low prescription drugs prices and high standards of health care.
> The proposed amendments will cost Canadians hundreds of millions of dollars annually in drug price increases. The changes will also have serious implications for health care costs and for the future of Medicare in this country.
> We urge your government to resist the pressure from the multinational drug industry and from the United States Administration. At the moment in history when your government is negotiating a bilateral free trade arrangement with the United States, the people of Canada are watching vigilantly to ensure that the interests of the common good of the Canadian people are not sacrificed to market interests.

I will not continue reading because of time limitations.

That letter was signed by Paul J. O'Byrne, Bishop of Calgary, Chairman of the Episcopal Commission for Social Affairs. I hope the Minister will take the time to tell us his reply to that Bishop of the Catholic Church speaking for all the bishops, a bishop from his own city.

Just last week hearings were held by a committee of the United States House of Representatives which deals with questions of health. Let me read a couple of paragraphs from the report on that, which appeared in The Globe and Mail of April 22, 1987:

> Witnesses praised and condemned Canada's system during the hearing at which Harry Eastman, the Toronto economist who led a Canadian inquiry into the subject, testified that Canada's current rules have saved drug consumers millions of dollars.

Let me digress to point out to the Minister again that Professor Eastman has said repeatedly that the system we have in place has saved Canadians many millions of dollars. The article goes on:

> Subcommittee staff prepared a report showing that prescription drug prices in the United States have increased more than 79 per cent during the past six years and that the industry has spent only one of every three dollars from that increase on research and development . . .
> The consumer-oriented American Association of Retired Persons, however, praised the Canadian system as "an appropriate market-oriented model for moderating the trend in escalating prescription drug prices."

I say to the Minister that, as we have said all along, the Bill the Government is forcing through the House despite the representations of dozens of organizations will be a major blow to ordinary Canadians.

Let me return for a moment to the statement made by the former Minister in praise of the new policy of his Government. I quote from his press statement of June 27, 1986:

> Here are the specific changes we propose: patent-holding pharmaceutical firms in Canada will receive a phased-in period of exclusivity ranging from seven to 10 years. This, let me point out, is still less than the full patent protection which applies to other products.
> In order to be assured of this exclusivity, however, an innovative firm must manufacture the fine-chemical ingredients in Canada . . . While the previous policy encouraged the importation of fine chemicals, our new policy will encourage their direct manufacture in Canada.

That provision was disposed of between the time the former Minister proposed to introduce the Bill and the time the present Minister brought the Bill in. It went because the American Government put the pressure on the Minister and the Government caved in.

We say that this Bill is wrong. The amendment I have moved would improve the Bill and I would urge Hon. Members to support it.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak to this amendment to Bill C-22 moved by my colleague from the New Democratic Party. In the few moments I have before you call it 1.23, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that the intent of this particular amendment is to try to facilitate, as best one can under these very adverse circumstances, a Canadian pharmaceutical industry predicated on the viability of Canadian-owned firms.

As it now stands, the legislation makes it very easy for multinational corporations to come to Canada to participate in the pharmaceutical sector of the economy. I think the over-all objective of any public legislation, particularly when dealing with pharmaceuticals, ought to be to build on the pillars of a public policy. I feel that one of these pillars is that we provide fair prices to Canadian consumers, whether they be the sick, the elderly, the poor or those on fixed incomes.

Fair prices for Canadian consumers is one such pillar, but we should also try to provide incentives to those individuals who are trained in a profession. We want them to reap some of the benefits of their innovative works. As well, real dollars should be directed into research and development in Canada, not just mere quotations from the newspapers about the lofty intentions of multinational corporations.

In my view, another such pillar must be the facilitation of the development of a Canadian pharamaceutical industry. I think it is fair to say that there is not a country in the world that has developed a viable pharmaceutical industry based solely on the existence and operation of multinational corporations. In this instance we have an opportunity to facilitate with reason, as always, a Canadian pharmaceutical industry. I know that I, as well as Members opposite and Members to the left, can fully appreciate that Canada is not a major player in the world market. However, that should not lessen our will and desire to try and enhance our own pharmaceutical industry.

I think the amendment attempts to do that in a number of ways. Yet the Government, for whatever reasons, some of which have been alluded to and some of which have not, is reluctant to reward Canadian entrepreneurs, reluctant to give them a legislative framework to assist and enhance their opportunities in a Canadian market. If it did, that could very well mean Canadians would become leaders in this sector. Then they, too, would be able to export their products as well as the technology which went into formulating the various new drugs. The Government consistently and persistently refuses to try and assist in developing a policy along those lines.

In November of 1986 the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) said that for the previous four months he had an opportunity to fully review the draft legislation. He had consulted many interested parties and was convinced of its merits. The thrust of this Bill is the same as that announced in June with some modifications which I will refer to later. The Bill that the Government attempted to introduce in June had a few provisions which are not in the present Bill. However, it is very clear to all Members of Parliament that the philosophy behind the Bill is that of a giveaway of our pharmaceutical industry to multinational corporations wherever they may be based.

I note it is 1.23 p.m. I hope I can resume debate at two o'clock under your chairmanship.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 1.23 I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.23 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at 1.23 p.m., the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) had the floor and has three minutes remaining.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I support the motion of my colleague from the New Democratic Party. In the few minutes I have I want to reiterate for Members opposite that we must be concerned and must be prepared to take concrete and specific actions with regard to Canadianizing our pharmaceutical industry.

It is well and good to say that Canada must abide by certain international conventions, whether the Paris Convention of 1904 or the subsequent treaties with regard to the issue of intellectual property rights, but it should be noted that since that time many countries have taken it upon themselves to try to develop their own pharmaceutical industry based upon their human resources, and also to use the state as an instrument of public policy to achieve their objectives.

In this instance the Government of the day, as many have argued, is trying to appease its neighbours to the south. As I indicated last night on the debate on the farm crisis, I am not anti-American. I want to make that perfectly clear. I have great difficulties with the American administration, but I am not anti-American. It seems that in our dealings with that country we in Canada always seem to be taking it in the neck.

I think this is a prime example of a case in which Canada has consented, both intellectually and in practice, to the wishes of our friends to the south, thereby giving multinational corporations in the United States and elsewhere everything they have asked for while we in Canada are failing to achieve the goals and objectives which are necessary to make the Canadian economy vibrant and viable.

In the minute which I have remaining I want to congratulate my colleague from the New Democratic Party who put forward this amendment. As was said in the Committee on Bill C-22 which studied this legislation, it would have been nice if Members opposite had been in agreement with the objectives which we laid out so early in our deliberations. As time has progressed we have seen that the Government is falling prey to multinational corporations. I suggest, with great respect to you, Sir, that that may very well not be in Canada's best interests, particularly in the long term.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of Motion No. 14 placed before the House by my hon. friend, the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). It is a fairly substantial amendment which attempts to rectify some of the shortcomings of this Bill and bring back the rights of the generic drug industry to enable it to continue to operate as it did prior to the Government's decision of last July to stop 153 applications which were in the process of being accepted for additional generic drugs.

This entire exercise by the Opposition has been aimed at keeping down the cost of drugs to Canadians. The policy put into effect in the mid-1970s in this country to allow the manufacturing, under compulsory licence, of generic drugs has attracted attention around the world from consumers and health care personnel. It has been widely accepted as a good thing for the health care system in Canada as it provides relatively new patented inventions to consumers at a low cost. It also provided some protection to the patent holder because of the compulsory licence feature.

This initiative has attracted the attention of a wide range of Canadian society beyond the consumer association and some of the health care groups. It has attracted the attention of farm organizations like the Keystone Agricultural Producers in Manitoba, who have written to all Members of Parliament pointing out that the existing generic drug law has been good for Canadian rural residents. The Keystone Agricultural Producers speak on behalf of farmers and their families and point out that they have a double concern about what they believe is a flawed initiative.

They believe, as consumers of health services and drugs, that the generic drug law should remain as is and that the changes proposed in Bill C-22 should be dropped.

Their second concern as agricultural producers who use farm chemicals is that it has been a long-standing effort by farmers, through their organizations, to attempt to have on equivalent generic drug law and compulsory licensing for farm chemicals that they require in order to maintain the high productivity of Canadian farms.

The Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Agriculture has taken upon itself a special project to investigate farm input costs. One of those input costs that has received substantial attention has been farm chemicals and veterinary drugs. Virtually without exception, the witnesses who appeared before us said that from the farmer's point of view the farm chemical industry needs some legislation similar to the generic drug law so that there could be compulsory licences applied to farm chemicals. Some have also indicated that this should be extended to include veterinary medicines. These submissions to the committee point out that the farm community has a parallel concern in this area.

I also have a letter from the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, signed by Paul J. O'Byrne, Bishop of Calgary, Chairman of Episcopal Commission for Social Affairs. He has addressed the letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Leaders of the opposition Parties and numerous Members of Parliament. He points out:

> On behalf of the Episcopal Commission for Social Affairs of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops we wish to express our concern over changes to the Drug Patent Act (Bill C-22).
> We have followed the debate on this legislation and have noted that the pressure to change Canada's generic drug laws has not come from the people of this country.
> Indeed, national organizations representing thousands of Canadians from virtually all sectors of society have been unanimous in calling upon your government not to proceed with the proposed legislation.

That is, in fact, the case. No Canadian organization or group loudly called for these kinds of changes. The change seems to have come from south of the border where there is considerable pressure placed on the Prime Minister and his Government to create a legislative level playing field so that our drug laws more closely resemble those of the United States as a forerunner to a free trade arrangement between the two countries.

The letter continues:

> We add our voice to that call because we believe that this legislation, if enacted, would have detrimental effects on average Canadians, especially on the elderly and the poor.
> Thanks in large part to existing drug patent legislation, Canadians enjoy low prescription drug prices and high standards of health care. The proposed amendments will cost Canadians hundreds of millions of dollars annually in drug price increases. The changes will also have serious implications for health care costs and for the future of medicare in this country.

This point has been made by many groups and individuals across the country. It is not only the opinion of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, whose letter I am reading now. It goes on:

> We urge your Government to resist the pressure from the multinational drug industry and from the United States administration. At the moment in history when your Government is negotiating a bilateral free trade arrangement with the United States, the people of Canada are watching vigilantly to ensure that the interests of the common good of the Canadian people are not sacrificed to market interests.
> As the federal Commission of Inquiry on the Pharmaceutical Industry declared in its 1985 report, the Canadian compulsory licensing policy "can be thought of as a mechanism to provide socially optimal patent protection in the pharmaceutical industry that other countries might well emulate".
> Because the people of Canada affirm that this policy is not—and should never become—a trade issue, we urge you, in the name of Canada's most vulnerable citizens, to withdraw Bill C-22.

I believe the bishop has expressed the sentiments of hundreds of other Canadians, groups and institutions that have appeared before the committee, presented briefs, and written letters to individual Members of Parliament. The House will know that we have received petitions from hundreds of Canadians who have urged the Government to give up its effort to push through Bill C-22. I urge government Members to support this motion and reconsider the Government's decision to put forward Bill C-22.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the House this afternoon to deal very briefly with Motion No. 14 which was moved by our NPD colleagues. I feel it is a major otion because it would change significantly the Bill introduced in the House by the minister.

[English]

This amendment should probably be referred to as the Joe Stettler clause, because we know that the Bill went through great changes after the initial flawed attempt of the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Member for Langelier (Mr. Côté).

I remember the day when he was sitting at that end of the House and tried to introduce his Bill, but forgot the required Royal documentation necessary to present the Bill. This mistake was probably caused by the fact that he spent too much time that day at the press conference across the street and not enough time concentrating on what he should have been doing in the House.

Nevertheless, after that flawed attempt by the Government to introduce the Bill at that time, the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) brought the Bill in. It came out differently than the Bill of his predecessor. Mr. C. Joe Stettler, the head of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association, not of Canada but of the United States, said on The Journal television program that he knew the previous Bill had been substantially changed or, as he said "toned down". It is interesting, of course, that no one in Canada knew that but someone in the United States knew it well.

[Translation]

As Canadians, Mr. Speaker, we should ask ourselves what are we here for. Have we been elected to the House of Commons of Canada to protect the interests of Mr. C. Joe Stettler, President of the Association of Drug Manufacturers of America, or those of Canadians?

• (1420)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not usually call on a Member for relevance to a particular Clause, however we are now on a particular Clause and I would like the Hon. Member to stick with Motion No.14 (a)(b)(c) and (d) and tell me just exactly where the relevance is in what he is speaking about, particular to this motion?

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: With great pleasure, Mr. Speaker. I thought I had clearly indicated that the amendment proposed by our NDP colleagues was meant to re-establish this clause as it was before the intervention of Mr. C. Joe Stettler, an American who apparently was delighted with a change That is contrary to what we are trying to do now and was based on consultations with American interests and no consultation with Canadian interests. What our NDP colleagues, therefore, would like to do with our support is to re-establish the Bill as it was before the so-called intervention which I have just described.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you realize right away the importance of mentioning that Mr. C. Joe Stettler, of the Association of Drug Manufacturers of America, had been apparently informed of the proposed changes we are trying to reverse today.

That is the reason why I am trying to emphasize this fact. I am sure that if I went about explaining this even more slowly, the Hon. Member for Madawaska—Victoria (Mr. Valcourt) might understand, although I might have to go really very slowly. He would catch on very quickly, on the other hand, if the idea was to take money from the poor in my riding. This morning he was laughing his head off when we raised this matter. As the House can see, unfortunately, he has not changed much. Come election time, we will look after him.

[English]

I want to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that in June of last year, the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said in a statement that he wanted to bring it to the attention of the House, but of course all this could not happen because the Bill could not be tabled, as I reviewed with you, Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago. I am sure you remember it well. However, perhaps I should repeat it again so that the Hon. Member for Madawaska—Victoria understands because he understands a lot more slowly than most of us.

The Minister said in his statement:

> As I stated a moment ago, we are also proposing new incentives to encourage pharmaceutical fine-chemical manufacturing in Canada. Pharmaceutical production in Canada is today basically an assembly operation. The chemicals are first imported and then packaged into pills, capsules and other product forms. While the previous policy encouraged the importation of fine chemicals, our new policy will encourage their direct manufacture in Canada.

I could argue that the Conservative policy will encourage the manufacture by the multinationals, Americans primarily, at the expense of generic Canadian companies. That, of course, is the result of Conservative policy. That is really what I wanted to bring to your attention this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, in the few moments I had.

I would like to continue much longer because I know the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) would want me to do so. However, I am afraid I will have to end my comments right now so I can allow the Hon. Member from Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer) to make his contribution to this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 14. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 16.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

> That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by adding immediately after line 15 at page 13 the following:
> "(3) Subsection 41.14(1) does not apply in respect of any licence or application for licence under Section 41 where the Commissioner finds that the licence that has been obtained or is sought by a person is necessary to the utilization, for the manufacture and sale of a medicine, of a biological process patented by the person, or for which a patent has been applied, and the process has been invented and developed by the person in Canada to such extent as is prescribed."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment could well be called the "Cangene amendment" because it was inspired and suggested by a representative of Cangene, which is a new and successful Canadian biotechnology company located in Mississauga, Ontario. Hon. Members should know that we do not have very many biotechnology companies and even fewer successful biotechnology companies.

In an appearance before the committee, the officers of Cangene pointed out that they had organized and prospered so far under the present Canadian patent law and they now feared that they would suffer greatly because of changes to the law being made by Bill C-22. It was another twist on the story of Canadian companies, such as the generic drug industry, being penalized in the future for having grown up under existing Canadian patent law. They were particularly concerned about the switch from patents on a process to patents on products, which is what this Bill, if it passes, will do.

In the words of Dr. Robert Garvin, the vice-president for Research and Development at Cangene:

> On the verge of our success, you propose to change the rules. Under the new rules, the Cangene process, already successful with one, perhaps successful with others yet to be tried, will be useless. It will be useless because you, in the amendments, will allow product patents. The natural health giving proteins will become the private property of a single company. The process used to make that protein, the Cangene process, will be immaterial.
> Under your new rules or the rules proposed in the amendments, the battle for the market-place will move into the courtroom as it has in the United States. That will doom Cangene and Canada forever . . . from establishing a Canadian niche in the protein-based pharmaceutical manufacturing industry. Surely together we can write legislation which will not throw out the baby, Cangene, with the bath water.

That is what my amendment, Mr. Speaker, is trying to do. The committee was quite impressed with the presentation Cangene made and adopted an amendment to Section 41(1). It is meant to provide transitional arrangements for a period of four years in the case of microbiological processes intended for food and medicine.

• (1430)

This delay in the switch to product patents is to assist Cangene and other biotechnology companies to make the transition. However, this was only one of the proposals which Cangene made to the committee. Cangene also sees the value of compulsory licensing in its work, which is the purpose of the amendment brought forward here as Motion No. 16. It is restricted to the biotechnology area.

The purpose of the amendment is explained on page 14 of the Cangene brief to the legislative committee which dealt with Bill C-22. I quote from its submission:

> The question still remains whether the prohibition of product patents in the biotechnology field would be sufficient to encourage the development of Canadian research and manufacturing firms such as Cangene. In Cangene's view, although such a change would be an enormous step forward, some aspects of compulsory licensing might still be necessary, because of the necessity in many instances to rely on enabling patents in order commercially to market a product. A patent rarely stands alone. Without some access to compulsory licensing, even though Cangene might own the patent to make human growth hormone by its own patented special process, the use of certain aspects of that process, or even the bottling of human growth hormone, might require access to patents not owned by Cangene and only available through licensing.

I could go on to quote further from the Cangene presentation. However, obviously, I do not have time.

I would like to put on the record some of the views which were outlined by Dr. Eastman in his report on which, supposedly, much of this legislation is based, although most of the recommendations he made have been ignored and rejected. I would like to quote from the section in his report which appears beginning on page 348 and which is entitled: "Compulsory Licensing and the Growth of Generic Production in Canada" in which he states:

> The performance of the pharmaceutical industry in Canada does not differ significantly from that in other industrially advanced countries.
> Its level of research and development is comparable to the disproportionately low level prevailing in such countries as Australia, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, New Zealand, and the Netherlands. This contrasts with the very high level of research and development expenditures in France, West Germany, Japan, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, and the United States. The structural characteristics of the industry are everywhere similar as are, in consequence, the incentives to which firms are subject, their behaviour, and their performance.

To stray for a moment from Professor Eastman's views, it is interesting to note that most of the countries he mentions, which are not doing any more than we are, do not have our laws. They have the laws to which we will move and which were in place before 1969. In those countries the industry is still not doing much in the way of research.

I would like to continue to quote from Professor Eastman's views. He stated:

> Canadian federal policy, on the other hand, is indirect and seeks to affect the industry's performance by altering the conditions of competition at the manufacturers' level . . . That Canadian policy is currently all but unique among industrially advanced countries does not make it wrong. Indeed it can be thought of as a mechanism to provide socially optimal patent protection in the pharmaceutical industry that other countries might well emulate.

He then goes on to state:

> The new policy of compulsory licensing to import gave rise to a vigorous and growing generic sector of the industry . . . On the whole, compulsory licensing has caused no decline in the economic health of the patent-holding firms . . . Nevertheless, it is known that the generic sector was of negligible size in 1968 but contributed about 8 per cent of sales in 1983 and employed about 1,300 persons in 1982.

Professor Eastman concluded by stating:

> However, it should be kept in mind that the generic sector grew to significance in the industry because of the profitability of compulsory licensing and might well not have obtained a share of the post-patent market without that base.

We see that Dr. Eastman's view is that compulsory licensing is the corner-stone for the generic industry and is part of a policy "that other countries might well emulate." By supporting the amendment which I am moving today the unique Canadian system of drug patents will be strengthened for biotechnology companies. Given the tremendous increase and the almost unbelievable explosion of new research and development in other countries, the few companies operating in this country need every bit of assistance they can get. That is why I am moving this amendment.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the amendment put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). For the record I wish to read the amendment, because it is important that we understand that the amendment that is being put forward is being done so after having received some impressive submissions.

I think all members of the committee who studied Bill C-22 will agree that one of the most impressive presentations made to our committee was by Cangene. It was a succinct submission. Officers of the company were forthright in their presentation. They were very candid when they were questioned by Members of Parliament from all three political Parties. The amendment reads:

—Subsection 41.14(1) does not apply in respect of any licence or application for licence under Section 41 where the Commissioner finds that the licence that has been obtained or is sought by a person is necessary to the utilization—

I have read but part of the amendment.

It should be noted that in making its presentation to the committee Cangene spoke not only about the pharmaceutical industry in Canada but also about the biotechnology industry. We had other witnesses who came before the committee other than those from this particular corporation. The Science Council of Canada appeared before Members studying Bill C-22. Representatives from the Council talked about the biotechnology industry in Canada and its potential.

It ought to be remembered that if one is concerned with regional economic development, this is the sort of thing in which the western economy is very much interested. I know that this area is dear to your heart, Mr. Speaker. The people of Alberta have been attempting to diversify their economy. This is one high-tech area, the biotechnology area, in which they wish to become involved. Unfortunately, or fortunately, Cangene is not located in your constituency, Mr. Speaker, at the present time. Perhaps in the future it might be, I do not know.

However, I do wish to quote from the submission of Cangene, even though my colleague has perhaps already done so. When Dr. Garvin, the Vice-President for Research and Development at Cangene, was before the committee he said this, and it is worth repeating because its importance will become obvious to Ministers and to Members of Parliament quite readily:

> On the verge of our success, you propose to change the rules.

That is precisely true. Here is a Canadian corporation operating in a new and innovative sector of our economy, the biotechnology industry, and prospering under the present legislation, the Patent Act as it now stands without any amendments thereto. The company was reasonably successful and hoping to make major break throughs. Yet the Government has come in and said, "We are going to change the rules of the game for Canadian corporations". Dr. Garvin went on further to state:

> Under the new rules, the Cangene process, already successful with one and perhaps successful with others yet to be tried, will be useless. It will be useless, because you, in the amendments, will allow product patents. The natural health-giving proteins will become the private property of a single company. The process used to make that protein, the Cangene process, will be immaterial.
> Under your new rules or the rules proposed in the amendments, the battle for the market-place will move into the courtroom, as it has in the United States. That will doom Cangene and Canada forever . . . from establishing a Canadian niche in the protein-based pharmaceutical manufacturing industry. Surely together we can write legislation which will not throw out the baby, Cangene, with the bath water.

I come back to my initial intervention when I talked about the pillars of a Canadian pharmaceutical industry and the amendment submitted by my colleague on the left. You can see quite readily, Sir, that it is not merely opposition Members proposing amendments for the mere sake of debate. We have a legitimate corporation operating here in Canada with men and women employed in a very sophisticated complex industry who will now have their particular operation, if you will, cut because of the new changes in Bill C-22, hence the purpose of the amendment submitted by my colleague.

Again and again I must repeat, not for the purposes of trying to deafen Members opposite, who may be listening very carefully, but to try to irk them into rethinking and reconsidering their position with regard to the Patent Act and the pillars of developing a Canadian industry. This is one of them. I would have hoped that Members opposite would avail themselves of every opportunity to stand in the Chamber to support the amendment and the intent of it. As we have seen in the past, this has not been the case, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed Motion No. 16 stands deferred.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond) moved:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

Motion No. 40:

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 30 to 33 at page 23 and substituting the following therefor:

"medicine;

"(c) expenditures made by the patentee in Canada towards the cost of research and development relating to medicine; and

(d) expenditures to be made by the patentee in Canada towards the cost of research and development relating to medicine to the years 1990 and 1995 respectively."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I recognize the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, just to be clear, we are debating Motions Nos. 17, 18, 30, 39 and 40?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes.

Mr. Dingwall: But they will be voted on separately?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes.

Mr. Dingwall: I can only speak once, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is right, unfortunately.

Mr. Dingwall: I will have to put this in fast gear, then. These are amendments dealing primarily with the aspect of the operations of the Prices Review Board as set out in the legislation, Bill C-22. The motions that I have put forward, in particular Motion No. 17, require the industry to make quarterly reports to the board rather than at times at the discretion of the board. This significantly strengthens the watch-dog or monitoring capability of the board. Motion No. 18 allows the board outside of Canada to gather information on the cost of manufacturing medicines.

This amendment, in my view, has significant relevance with regard to the issue of transfer pricing, which I will speak about in a moment or two, and would allow the board to carry out meaningful investigation.

We have contended from day one that the prices review board as contained in the legislation is not constitutional. In questioning and in submitting a written argument to the Minister he refused to accept that argument. Having said that, there are some natural, in my view, amendments both substantive and consequential that ought to be in the Bill, or with the board anyway, even if it is found to be constitutional. That is a question for the courts to decide at some point. Our fear in this Party is that the constitutionality of the board will be challenged by multinational corporations and they will use this as a lever to delay or to protract deliberations and activities of the board.

Having said all of that, Mr. Speaker, clearly if you do have a board, which seems from the perspective of my Party to be in absolute contradiction to the philosophy of the Members opposite, particularly the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis), if the free market is to operate in Canada. I cannot for the life of me understand why the Conservative Government of the day would now want to put in the form of a regulation that the Prices Review Board monitor and advise on the pricing of pharmaceuticals in this country.

There seems to be a contradiction, because in 1983-84 the free market was advocated. In 1984 and in 1985 the free market was advocated. Now in 1986-87 it seems the reverse is advocated. I say that that is a contradiction. If the board is to be in place, if the courts do find it to be constitutional, it must have sufficient enabling powers within the substance and the make-up of the board to achieve the objective that it hopes to achieve.

If the board is to be limited to the parameters of Canada in terms of gathering information on the cost of what it will be for the manufacturing of the new drug, this in my view will prohibit and prevent the board from doing the job it was constituted to do originally, which is to advise and report on the cost of the manufacturing of the drug.

Many of these drugs in terms of ingredient, technology and the human resources that have gone into it may be located in various countries throughout the world. Canada has no leverage, no authority to say to multinational corporations who may be operating in Canada that we would like to see and have submitted an audited statement of the expenses and the expenditure program of the company in order to arrive at the figures they have quoted.

• (1450)

Why do I say that? It is because we were told in the legislative committee that it was upwards of $150 million to develop a new drug in Canada. I asked the multinational association, PMAC, to provide certain information on how it arrived at the cost of certain drugs. I was assured that I would receive that information, but I did not.

When I was in Washington I visited with the chairman of the subcommittee on environment and health which was conducting a study or investigation into the practising policies of pharmaceutical companies in the United States. We were led to believe from the information it had that the price was $50 million. When the chairman of a United States pharmaceutical organization was here in Canada, he was questioned on that matter at a press conference. I believe his statement indicated that it was something in the vicinity of $50 million for the manufacture of a new drug.

In order to get at the real cost of manufacturing a new drug, the board must have the powers in terms of being able to subpoena persons and information, wherever the information may be. However, as the legislation now stands, the board does not have the authority or jurisdiction to call for that information. If the Government is clear in its objectives, why would it want to hide the actual costs which go into developing and manufacturing new drugs?

Is it because the prices charged for particular drugs subsequent thereto will be very significant costs to senior citizens, the sick, the elderly, and those four million Canadians who have no drug program at all? If we knew the actual price predicated upon the information submitted, Canadians would have a better appreciation and understanding of why prices are what they are for certain drugs. I think it would be in their best interest to share that information with Canadians and with the board reviewing the prices, unless they want to hide it so that they can inflate their prices.

We are not trying to penalize anyone. We want to make certain that Canadian consumers will get a fair shake when it comes to the pricing of prescription drugs in Canada. These amendments would give the board a legislative authority and jurisdiction to obtain that information. At the present time the board does not have that authority.

We heard from a number of witnesses on the issue of transfer pricing. It is a very serious matter. Multinational corporations merely transfer prices from one jurisdiction to another. If the board does not have the authority to obtain that information, it will not be able to do the job which the Minister indicated he wanted it to do initially.

I hope Hon. Members will see the true value of these motions. I have not spoken on some of them because time is limited to 10 minutes at report stage. However, the amendments collectively would add immeasurably to the improvement of the Act if, on the hypothesis, that it is in fact constitutional.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Motion No. 40 standing in my name which substitutes the following:

> (c) expenditures made by the patentee in Canada towards the cost of research and development relating to medicine; and;
> (d) expenditures to be made by the patentee in Canada towards the cost of research and development relating to medicine to the years 1990 and 1995 respectfully.

The reasons I have moved this amendment are fairly easy to understand for those who want to try to understand the problems confronting us in Bill C-22. We have seen the problems in Canada in getting companies to live up to commitments made to Governments for government assistance. Those difficulties are as old as the CPR, or more than 100 years, and as topical as the financial assistance given to the company which manufactures Coleco toys in Montreal that closed after receiving substantial federal grants.

In this legislation we have already had the example of the drug manufacturing clause being cut from the Bill which was introduced last June because multinational companies did not want to manufacture in Canada. The present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), not having manufacturing to talk about, has instead emphasized the commitment of companies to increase research in Canada. In his words, one of the objectives of Bill C-22 is:

> To transform Canada's pharmaceutical sector into a world-class, innovative industry led by an unprecedented increase in investment and jobs in pharmaceutical research and development. The ratio of research to sales will double from the current level of under 5 per cent to 10 per cent by 1995, thereby directly creating an estimated 3,000 scientific and research related jobs and putting Canada at the forefront of leading nations in the pharmaceutical field.

Any person with an inquiring mind might be tempted to ask if we are being set up again with these promises.

After all, Dr. Eastman after his extensive studies in the pharmaceutical industry came to the following conclusion in his report:

> In the Commission's opinion, Canada is not well placed to become a major world centre for pharmaceutical research or for the production of active chemical ingredients.

We should not be surprised at that conclusion of Dr. Eastman. We were told repeatedly by the companies themselves that to develop a completely new, important, and innovative drug would cost anywhere from $50 million to $100 million. Obviously no company would do that in Canada unless it has assurances that if it did the patent and manufacturing would not only be for Canada. We know that the multinational companies will do very little in that regard.

However, Dr. Eastman's caution did not stop the Minister. In the view of the Minister, the grounds for stating that Canada would become "at the forefront of leading nations" is based upon the following quote:

> —extensive discussions with the innovative sector of the pharmaceutical industry from which the Government of Canada has received strong investment commitments . . . Specifically, the industry has undertaken to invest in Canada a growing percentage of sales revenues directly into R and D expenditures.
> As a result of the policy change . . . the industry is committed to increasing its current ratio of R and D to sales from 4.9 per cent to 8 per cent by 1990 and 10 per cent by 1995—a full doubling from the pre-policy level.

These commitments are not in the Bill. There is nothing in the Bill which would require the company to live up to these conditions, despite suggestions made by opposition Members and by many groups which appeared before the committee.

Since these commitments are not in the Bill, Dr. Eastman was forced to ask at committee for an amendment so that the drug prices review board could at least report the ratio of research and development to sales and the industry would know which ompanies were meeting their targets and which were not.

However, there is even more skepticism of a basic kind about the R and D commitments about which the Minister is so eager to talk. Paul Gorecki, an economist who worked on the Eastman Commission, told the committee the following:

> Unfortunately it is difficult to evaluate these undertakings because no data is provided. Under what assumptions is the growth in R & D likely to occur? . . . In the absence of answers to these questions and in view of the Commission's conclusions cited above one must unfortunately express skepticism about the projected doubling in R & D by 1995.

• (1500)

This amendment attempts to make the companies respond to the specific target years of 1990 and 1995. These are very important targets because if they are missed, reviews of the legislation can be triggered by Cabinet and by a parliamentary review.

There is the further controversy which has erupted over what constitutes R and D and what are really other kinds of research in marketing and clinical areas. We had long debates in committee about what constitutes research but, although we and many of the witnesses urged the Government to define research and development in the Bill, we were unable to convince the Government and it refused to do so.

The Minister's press release of December lists some 17 announcements totalling $770 million. Yet much of this money represents plant expansions that would be required in any case to serve a Canadian market that is doubling every five years. The research about which the Minister talked is clinical.

I would like to conclude by saying that we should remember what the Minister promised which was an expanded research effort which would create 3,000 scientific and research-related jobs and put Canada at the forefront of leading nations in the pharmaceutical field. That claim has its doubters, both over the number of jobs that will be created in scientific research and the quality of those jobs. That is what I am trying to pin down and get included in this Bill so we will really get the 3,000 jobs about which the Minister has spoken.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond) moved:

Patent Act

Motion No. 19.

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 12 to 14 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"(ii) any other patents of the patentee for inventions pertaining to medicine, whether granted".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. This amendment will put the Bill back into its June 1986 format regarding the powers of the board to repeal any of the patents held by a manufacturer sanctioned by the board. We must remember that the Government attempted to introduce draft legislation in June, 1986, but because of a procedural hiccup, it did not introduce it in accordance with the procedures of the House and thereafter introduced a Bill in the fall of 1986 in a somewhat different form from that of the original draft.

Instead of having the power to repeal only one patent, this amendment provides that the board would have the power to repeal patents that it had in the 1986 draft. This will significantly strengthen the powers of the board. There is no logical reason for this section of the Bill to have been removed by the Minister except pressure from brand name manufacturers. It makes no sense to weaken or reduce the enforcement options open to a regulatory body.

The board to which I have referred in earlier amendments to Bill C-22 has certain powers and one of the powers the board was to have according to the June 1986 draft was that, if it was found by the board on its determination that a company, multinational or otherwise, was in breach of the Bill, the board could exercise certain sanctions against the particular company in question. That particular company may have a number of patents and the board would have had the authority to remove those patents.

The legislation introduced subsequent to the June draft, the Bill that has been presented to the House by the Conservative administration, removes those sanctions. It allows the board to remove one patent without removing other patents. The authority the board may use in circumstances it deemed necessary has been relinquished. In my view and in the view of my Party, this certainly does not add to the functions or powers of the board.

By forming this board, we are acting as if it were to be used to make companies aware that if they breach the law or are in violation of pricing regulations, the board has the authority to remove those patents and so the companies would think twice. Their behaviour would be different. However, as the legislation is now written, a company that has 10 patents and is found to be gouging the public will have only one patent removed by the board because that is the only authority it has. We do not believe this is in the best interests of the administrative practices of the board.

• (1510)

I would think that regulatory agencies would want to have at their disposal a variety of sanctions they might impose. By restricting the board to only one action you restrict its effectiveness. If there was a violation, perhaps the penalty ought not to be the removal of that one patent. It may unduly affect the viability of the company concerned. Equally so, if a violation is of such significance that the only sanction available to the board is the removal of one patent, the board is again failing to achieve its objectives because it would not be allowed to remove more than one patent as may be called for a given significant violation.

This is not a mere partisan political issue. It is a fact of administrative law and regulatory practice that I would have thought Members opposite, particularly the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt), would subscribe to.

That is the pith and substance of this particular amendment. However, I again wish to recall for the benefit of the Chair that we still maintain that the constitutionality of this board will be challenged first and foremost by the multinational corporations. If the courts find they are constitutional, it would seem appropriate that the Government accept this amendment. If not, perhaps it should accept the argument and have the entire matter referred to the Supreme Court for adjudication of the constitutionality of this board.

I do not want to go on at length regarding the constitutionality because that issue will arise in a number of other motions and I know you will want to hear argument from all sides of the House on that matter.

Let me conclude with this. The Government is contradicting itself again and again. It advocated a free market and regulatory reform and it has now come full circle. It is doing away with compulsory licensing, which is a free market activity, so to speak. The Government is substituting regulation which it said it did not want. It talks about free market and is now intervening. I suggest that the law will not be effective the way it is drafted. Without this amendment it will be ineffective in attempting to achieve the goal of proper sanctions for those in violation of both the spirit and substance of the amendments to the Patent Act.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—ORDER OF PRECEDENCE OF MOTIONS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), I have a statement regarding Private Members' Business.

I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett) that he is unable to move his motion during the hour for Private Members' Business prior to May 11, 1987.

I have also received written notice from the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) that he is unable to move his motion during the hour for Private Members' Business prior to May 7, 1987.

It has not been possible to arrange an exchange of positions in the order of precedence pursuant to the Special Order of the House agreed to on February 20, 1987.

Accordingly, I am directing the Table to drop both items of business to the bottom of the order of precedence.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, and Motion No. 19 (Mr. Dingwall, p. 5643).

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 19, which we support, is almost identical to Motion No. 20 moved by the NDP. What it attempts to do is to reverse a Conservative change to the Bill which made a bad Bill worse. Back in June when the Government first attempted to introduce this very bad Bill it contained certain sanctions for drug companies which overcharged. The penalty was worded so that the patent was lost on any other patent of the patentee for an invention pertaining to medicine. In the November Bill, that was watered down to one other medicine. In other words, instead of losing all patents that pertain to medicine the company would lose only that which pertained to one other medicine.

That change reflects the influence which the American drug manufacturers have on the Canadian Government. It is a very clear illustration of the power of Mr. C. Joe Stettler, the well-paid and well-connected lobbyist on behalf of the PMA lobby in Washington. The fact that the Minister said he has never had a meeting with that lobbyist is incidental because the PMA is so well-connected here in Canada. It has its own lobbyists who were able to deliver the message to the Minister quite effectively.

In a CBC television interview which took place in advance of the tabling of the Bill in Parliament, Mr. Stettler was very forthcoming in pointing out to the Canadian public that changes had been made in the Bill in accordance with their desires. I would like to quote his words:

Some of the penalties on violated pricing were pretty stiff and they were toned down.

With this amendment we seek to return to the original wording in the June Bill. We would like to see a Bill which is not worse than it was originally intended to be. We would like to see a Bill which has not been interfered with to make it even more obnoxious to the Canadian people in order to satisfy the interests of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association in the U.S.

The U.S. companies now have a Bill they are very happy with, but it is not one that the Canadian people are going to be happy with. It will not in any way provide protection for them. It will result in higher prices for drugs and increased costs for provincial pharmacare programs. It is a vicious example of the way in which the Government bows down to the dictates of the American Government.

The very high percentage of foreign ownership of the Canadian drug industry is of major concern here. In 1981, of the 21 largest companies by sales, none was Canadian-owned. Foreign companies controlled about 92 per cent of the industry in 1972. Domestically owned companies supplied only 15 per cent of the Canadian pharmaceutical market in 1975 ranking us below countries such as Mexico, Iran, India and the Philippines. This information is from Dr. Joel Lexchin's book, The Real Pushers.

Between 1968 and 1979 the fraction of the Canadian market served by imports originating from parent countries or other subsidiaries abroad increased from 13.9 per cent of sales to 26.3 per cent while the fraction of the market served by the Canadian subsidiaries fell. Even in the late 1960s, drug manufacturing in Canada was minimal. Of all manufacturing, 85 per cent was confined to the conversion of imported material into final dosage form. In other words, we are taking the basic material manufactured abroad and only packaging it. That is the kind of manufacturing we did in the late 1960s. This is not good enough.

In addition, we should be aware of the extreme limitations which are put upon Canadian branch plants with respect to exporting abroad. Canada wants to be an exporting nation. We want to be able to export more than only wood products and grain products because we have a great deal of trouble with commodity prices. Presently Canadian branch plants in pharmaceuticals are not able to export because of foreign ownership and foreign control. Lexchin says:

The ability of Canadian branch plants to export drugs is also limited by foreign control. With most patents on drugs foreign-owned, subsidiary companies of the parent patentees control the market within their own jurisdictions. Export activity has to be confined to world areas where patents are not taken out; areas that are commercially insignificant. As a representative of a Canadian subsidiary in one U.S. company said, "We have so many plants all over the world I just do not know where we would export to."

This has led to the finding by the Department of Industry Trade and Commerce that Canadian subsidiaries are usually "not encouraged or permitted by the head office to assume responsibility for exports of their products". Our drug industry is dominated by foreign firms which dictated to the Canadian Government changes in legislation, which was wrong to begin with and worked against the interests of the Canadian public.

I urge the Government to accept this amendment which restores the original wording of the section so that we do not have a bad Bill made worse through interference by the American Pharmaceutical Association. I hope all Members will consider the implications of this Bill and support this amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 19 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Motions Nos. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 and 31 have been grouped for debate. Motions Nos. 21, 22 and 31 will be voted on separately. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 23 disposes of Motions Nos. 24 and 25. A negative vote on Motion No. 23 necessitates a vote on Motions Nos. 24 and 25.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

Motion No. 23.

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 48 and 49 at page 14 and lines 1 to 29 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) the costs of making and marketing the medicine; and

(b) the Industry Selling Price as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act."

Mr. Dave C. Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond) moved:

Motion No. 24.

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 12 to 29 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"tion;

(d) the Consumer Price Index as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act

(e) the direct costs of making and marketing the medicine; and

(f) such other factors as are prescribed or, in the opinion of the board, are relevant in the circumstances."

Motion No. 25.

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 21 to 23 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"price that is excessive, the Board shall take into consideration the following".

Motion No. 31.

That Bill C-22, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 6 to 17 at page 18.

He said: Mr. Speaker, these motions deal primarily with the matter I raised earlier of the constitutionality of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board. Bill C-22 establishes a drug prices review board with a mandate to keep future prices of pharmaceuticals down. Much has been made by the Government, and in particular the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), about the effectiveness of this board. Since the board is the only mechanism in the legislation to control future increases in the price of pharmaceuticals, it is important, in my view, to have a very close examination of the board's validity.

The powers given to the board are set out in subsection 41.15(2) of Bill C-22 as follows:

The Board may revoke the patent protection (exclusivity period) of an "excessively priced" drug as well as one other drug under patent by that patentee; or

The Board may cause the price of the "excessively priced" drug to be reduced to such an extent that the maximum price at which the medicine is sold is not excessive.

In my view each of these powers has very serious flaws. I would like to elaborate, for the purposes of this debate and to put them on the record, upon the reasons why I believe that the validity of these powers must be questioned.

With respect to the first power given to the board, the power to revoke a drug patent, such power is consistent with the power of the Commissioner of Patents over any other type of patent invention where there has been an abuse of patent privileges.

Unfortunately, however, the additional powers given to the board to revoke a patent on one other drug of the patentee is a power not given to the commissioner over any other patented invention or patent holder. This makes the legislation discriminatory in the sense that one group of patent holders, those holding pharmaceutical patents, is treated differently from other groups of patent holders, those holding other patented products or processes.

This may be contrary to Section 15 of the Charter which guarantees equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination. Furthermore, it could be argued that such sanctions constitute cruel and unusual treatment or punishment contrary to Section 12 of the Charter.

With respect to the second power given to the board, the power to fix a price at which a drug may be sold, this power as well raises a fundamental issue of constitutionality. By virtue of subsection 92(13) of the Constitution Act, 1982, the provinces are given the exclusive jurisdiction to make laws in relation to property and civil rights in the province. "Property and civil rights in the province" encompasses the whole range of legal rights between persons, including law relating to property, succession, the family, torts and contracts.

I pointed out earlier that it is my opinion that at the first instance when a company is called into question and the powers of the board are attempted to be utilized, the company will say that it is unconstitutional. Thereby, the effectiveness of the board will be put into question. It will take innumerable time in order for decisions to be made. The case will be protracted for a considerable time, thus enabling the situation to fester.

The price at which goods are sold is a matter to be decided between two persons. That is private law as opposed to a matter governing the relationship between a person and an institution of Government. It is therefore clearly a provincial matter.

I can assure the House that the multinational corporations will waste no time when a sanction is imposed upon them by this board to place it before the Federal Court in order to have its jurisdiction and authority questioned.

The extent of provincial jurisdiction over pricing was questioned in the famous anti-inflation reference case referred to the Supreme Court of Canada and decided in 1976.

The Anti-Inflation Act, 1975, on which the reference was based, instituted a program of wage and price controls to be administered by a federal tribunal. The scheme was temporary and the Act automatically expired at the end of 1978.

The Supreme Court of Canada held, by a majority of seven to two, that the Act was valid as an exercise of the federal Government residual emergency power. There was no question that the intent of the Act was indeed an excursion into an exclusive matter of the provinces, namely property and civil rights. However, the incursion was justified by Mr. Chief Justice Laskin as being a rational basis which was temporarily necessary to meet a situation of economic crisis imperilling the well-being of Canada as a whole and requiring Parliament's stern intervention in the interest of the country as a whole.

Clearly, the situation of the Patented Medicine Review Board is not the equivalent of what Chief Justice Bora Laskin said in the Supreme Court of Canada with regard to this particular matter.

This is a subject matter that comes under the provincial jurisdiction. This is not an emergency situation. It does not come to a conclusion within 16 to 20 months, but exists for an indefinite time.

On those three grounds alone, the courts are apt to strike down the constitutionality of this particular review board, thereby enabling multinational corporations which are in violation of the spirit and the law as it pertains to Bill C-22 to slip away in the darkness of the night or the brightness of the day because the Government refuses to acknowledge that this is wrong.

I know that Members opposite agree. I know that the majority of Members in the House want to support me on this amendment, but we know that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), and of course "Gucci-Gucci", the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), have made a deal with the United States, based on the auspices of free trade, that this legislation will go through.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, my Motion No. 23, if adopted, will tighten the price control provisions of this Bill. The Government has always implied that price control means that all drug prices will increase at the inflation rate. However, the Manitoba Government and others have pointed out that present price control criteria would justify any price increase, including those as high as 140 per cent. This amendment would tighten the criteria to increases of the industry's sales price index, not the CPI, which is a retail index for wholesale cost increases. Since the Government is pretending that it is giving inflation-only increases, then this amendment should be accepted.

I have already quoted from testimony given last week before a United States House of Representatives subcommittee looking at this whole question. It indicated that in the last six years the price of prescription drugs in the United States has gone up by over 79 per cent. That is substantially higher than the increase in the cost of living in that country. The same will happen here.

I also pointed out earlier that in the next few years we will face a host of new prescription drugs that will be brought on the market. While some of them will involve new processes that will give us better drugs, others will be modifications of present drugs so that the companies can charge higher prices. Despite all the arguments we have heard, the Government has used its power to force this Bill through Parliament at every stage. It has done so primarily because it knows how much opposition there is against the Bill.

Let me take a few moments to put on the record once again just a few of the objections and criticisms against the Bill.

Mr. Lewis: I know. The Conference of Catholic Bishops, copycat drug companies.

Mr. Orlikow: If the Parliamentary Secretary wants to speak instead of shouting from his seat, he should get up and speak. I know that if he rose to speak on this Bill he would show his ignorance and prejudice.

Let me take a few moments to quote a few newspaper editorials from one end of the country to the other, which outline their opposition to what the Government is proposing. The Toronto Star—

Mr. Lewis: There is an independent journal of record.

Mr. Orlikow: —on April 13 had an editorial with the headline: "Drug bill a bitter pill". The editorial states:

> Opposition MPs—Liberals as well as New Democrats—have fought the good fight against the bill, rightly arguing that its adoption will inevitably result in higher prices for prescription drugs.

The editorial concludes:

> Once the bill becomes law, how long will it take before Canada once again has drug prices among the highest in the world? And who's going to blow the whistle when the multinational drug companies don't live up to their glowing promises but continue to do their research and development in the U.S., Britain and Europe where their head offices are located? A Prices Review Board with no teeth? A federal government with no spine?

Let us look at an editorial in The Ottawa Citizen.

An Hon. Member: Let's hear it for Keith Spicer.

Mr. Orlikow: An editorial written this month contains the headline: "A bad drug deal closer to reality". It states:

> The Bill is defective and rests on false assumptions.

It goes on:

> . . . profits have not suffered unduly under generic competition.
> Andre's least credible claim is that higher drug prices will by themselves lead to more Canadian research.
> The existing system has proven its worth . . . The Opposition has been right to block the Bill. It is bad medicine.

If members on the government side do not want to listen to the editorials, let me quote a letter that was sent to the Minister by the President of Keystone Agricultural Producers, an organization in Manitoba which takes in all the farm commodity groups. The President of Keystone Agriculture Producers, Jack Penner, is a very good friend of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). I am told he has worked for and supported the Minister. Let me put on the record what Mr. Penner, on behalf of Keystone Agricultural Producers, said in a letter he wrote to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). He wrote:

> The KAP's concerns about the proposed amendments are twofold. Firstly, and most obviously, KAP members share the concerns of those who believe that extended patent protections, will, by limiting the ability of drug manufacturing companies to produce generic copies by means of royalty payments, raise the prices charged to consumers for pharmaceutical drugs to unwarranted levels. Farmers and their families are, of course, part of the general consuming public, and stand to be seriously affected in any such situation.

Then they raise another very important point which I think we ought to think about, given the debate we have had during the last few days about the desperate plight of western farmers. The letter continues, and I quote:

> Secondly, since many of the drug manufacturing companies which produce pharmaceutical drugs are the same companies which produce the chemical formulations used by agricultural producers in the production of primary food commodities, it is our belief that any measures which may be taken with respect to pharmaceutical drugs may have significant implications with respect to the production and pricing of pesticides.

We have spent many days this week talking about the reduction by 19 per cent of the initial price paid to grain producers. We spent days talking about the removal of the freeze on Farm Credit Corporation loans. Today we heard about the increase in the cost of transporting and moving grain which the farmers will have to absorb, and here we have another illustration—

Mr. McDermid: You also heard about the additional $64 million farmers received from this Government. Don't forget that. Read both sides of this story.

Mr. Orlikow: There is still 18 minutes to go, Mr. Speaker, in this debate, and if the Hon. Member from Ontario wants to get up and speak, I invite him to do so, because every time he opens his mouth and puts something on the record, he demonstrates again and again his ignorance, his prejudice and his lack of concern about people in western Canada and particularly farmers who are really suffering.

I say to the Hon. Member and to other members of the Government that instead of listening to the pleas of the pharmaceutical manufacturers, the multinational corporations, whose profits have been as high or higher than any other group in this country, instead of listening to their pleas and giving them everything they want, the Government ought to listen to the pleas and arguments of the hundreds of organizations, churches, community groups, labour groups, consumer groups and farm groups, all of whom have urged the Government to withdraw this Bill and to continue with the present legislation.

The Minister asks us to look at the public opinion polls. All the public opinion polls except the poll commissioned by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association, with a question it drafted—which was completely distorted—showed that the public is opposed to this Bill, and when the public gets a chance to vote in the next election, they will show the Government what they really think.
